The nearest village was five days away. It wasn’t as large as a city, but it wasn’t small either, which was perfect for his needs. Nobody paid attention to some of the most inconspicuous men he sent to gather supplies or information from the gossipy villagers. He had stressed to his men that they should not raise the villagers’ suspicions and to be extremely careful when they returned to their hideout. He knew they were being searched for high and low by everybody in connection to the Fire Lord and Kings Kuei and Bumi, but so far they had been lucky to remain hidden.

However, they had a close call a few months ago when a stranger had become suspicious of two of his men and followed them out of the village. Luckily, his men noticed and lured him in another direction before they took him by surprise and killed him, taking anything of value from the man’s person before burying his body deep in the woods. When his men returned with the tale and the loot, they had noticed what seemed like a Pai Sho tile depicting a white lotus among his belongings, but since no one had any use for it as the rest of the set was missing, it was thrown away.

Ping cleared his throat, bringing Jianguo out of his thoughts.

“Well, they ‘eard dat both da Fire Lord and Fire Lady were shot at with an arrow ‘bout two weeks ago,” the earthbender began slowly.

“What?” Jianguo growled as he sharply turned his head to stare severely at his follower.

“But they’re both fine!” Ping quickly continued when his leader glared at him as if was his fault.

Jianguo hummed before he again turned back around to absentmindedly observe his men. Who else wanted the Fire Lord dead? He was glad, however, that whoever it was had been unsuccessful. Zuko would die by his hand and no one else’s! Narrowing his eyes, Jianguo reached up to distractedly touch face. Although all the bruises had faded by now he could not forget the insult of being marred by the Fire Lord. He smirked as he then brought his hand down to slowly rub his thumb across his lips at the memory of another pair of soft lips beneath his. The stunning waterbender could not die before Jianguo had his chance to have her.
“What other information did they hear?” he asked as he glided his thumb across his lips before he again grasped his hands behind his back.

Ping scratched the dark stubble on his large, squared chin.

“Well, it seems dat da council is looking fer a royal concubine fer the bastard ta give ‘im an heir,” the earthbender continued.

A dark eyebrow rose on the firebender’s pale forehead. He did not notice that Chang had a similar expression on his face.

“Oh? Why is that?” he asked.

He could not imagine Zuko setting aside such a beautiful, passionate, and exotic woman as the waterbender for a boring and fragile noblewoman just to beget an heir.

“There are rumors dat da Fire Lady can’t git pregnant,” the earthbender responded.

Another noncommittal hum escaped the former general. He could not believe the feisty waterbender was unable to conceive children. Her body was made for it, as was her nature, if the rumors of her kindness were to be believed. He was more incline to believe the problem lay with Zuko. The idle thought gave Jianguo pause and a cruel smile spread across his lips.

A shiver of fear raced down Ping’s spine at the sight and he shifted uneasily in his spot before he let out a breath of relief when his leader turned and walked away without another word. Chang watched him go from the corner of his eye before he returned his attention to the training men.

Silently, Jianguo walked away from the cave and entered one of the many tunnels. With a ball of fire in his hand to light his way, he made it to the small den where his tent was set up as an idea formed in his head. He lit a few lamps before he made his way to the small, low table placed in a corner and sat down before it. Grabbing a piece of the cheap paper he had purchased, he placed it on the surface before he reached for the old ink brush and began to write as his cruel smile widened.

It seemed that Zuko’s life was not going as smooth as he must have hoped it would when he married the waterbender. Jianguo did not even have to come up with another plan to make Zuko’s life miserable for now since it seemed that it was being taken care of by the sad situation of him lacking an heir. Zuko would have no choice but to sire an heir with a concubine in order to ensure the line, though it would do no good since Jianguo planned to get rid of both Zuko and his descendants so they would not cause any problems for when Ozai took over. But before that happened, Zuko would lose the love of the waterbender once he took another woman to his bed to bear his child and he would be miserable because of it.

In the meantime, Jianguo would help increase Zuko’s misery by pricking at his male pride. He could just imagine Zuko’s reaction when he read his missive. Jianguo’s golden eyes glinted with a cruel satisfaction as he continued to write.

White, hot flames licked clenched fists as Zuko spun around to blast a bright ball of fire at an imaginary attacker. He was alone in the arena as he angrily practiced with his white fire as a way to let out his frustrations. His anger only increased, however, when his heated emotions caused him to lose his ability to bend it accurately. The white flames flared high before they lowered down to their regular red color. Zuko tried to force the white fire back but to no avail.

Frustrated, he decided to give it up for the moment and instead he marched toward the bench resting on the side and grabbed his dual broadswords. He swiftly strode back to the middle of the arena and began a difficult series of swordplay. As he thrust one of his flaming swords forward, Zuko imagined he was cutting down all the problems he was facing and the people who were pressuring him into doing something he absolutely did not want. Did his advisors believe he would gladly jump at the chance to have more women into his bed? He was nothing like his father who had no qualms in having multiples concubines service him!

Yet, the councilmen could not understand his aversion at the prospect of having another woman. Siring children with concubines was a common occurrence among the nobility, although these children were seen as illegitimate and had fewer rights and privileges as the legitimate children did. If, however, a nobleman’s wife was unable to conceive or if she only gave birth to daughters and no sons, the oldest male child birthed by his concubine would become his heir. Even a few of the past Fire Lords had been birthed by their fathers’ royal concubines when their wives were unable to produce children, although they were usually raised by the Fire Ladies and prohibited from spending time with their real mothers.

As he spun in a flaming circle while he slashed his swords to the side, Zuko’s thoughts shifted to the events that followed weeks after the assassination attempt. Because of his near death, the advisors were now even more vehement in their demand that he sire an heir as soon as possible, some even going so far as suggesting he bed multiple concubines so as to ensure he could at least impregnate one of them. He had not taken that suggestion well, to say the least.

He had the most renowned physicians of the Fire Nation come to the palace to see if they could do something regarding the lack of an heir. They had assessed Katara to the best of their abilities, but they had all agreed that they couldn’t find anything wrong with her, though they did admit current medicine made it difficult to prognosticate infertility with complete accuracy.

Zuko frowned. There had to be a way to get out of this situation! The anger was then replaced by fear as the memory of the assassination attempt on Katara’s life once again tormented him.

Weeks had passed without any other incident, but he had placed guards to silently watch over Katara without her notice in order to not upset her sense of independence. Of course, she had immediately suspected something and he had reluctantly confessed his actions when she confronted him about it. But damn if he did not do everything possible to keep her safe!

Katara’s family even sent him a letter a few days ago telling him they had heard about the Council’s demand for him to choose a royal concubine. Hakoda and Sokka had warned him that if he did not do something to ensure Katara’s complete happiness soon, they would not hesitate to bring her back to the Southern Water Tribe, using force if necessary. This was not what Zuko had envisioned their married life to be. He again hoped Katara was not regretting marrying him. His heart clenched at the thought as it always did.

No, he could not lose her! Not by an assassin, or by his advisors’ wishes, or even by Katara’s family. He would not lose her!

The sound of someone clearing their throat caught his attention and he spun around toward the sound. Panting slightly from his exertion, Zuko brought down his swords and raised a dark eyebrow on his perspiring forehead as he stared impatiently at the servant that had interrupted him. The servant trembled slightly at his lord’s dark look before he bowed as he held out a bound scroll.

“This letter arrived for you a few minutes ago, my lord,” the short man said quickly.

“Hm,” Zuko uttered as he held out his hand. He had ordered that any strange letters addressed to him should be given to him immediately.

The servant stepped forward and handed the letter to his lord. Zuko thanked him distractedly as he looked down at the scroll warily. The servant bowed before he quickly retreated. Zuko glared down at the scroll in his hand. He did not need to open it to know who it was from since it was just as indistinctive as the others he had received before. He quickly untied the dark string that held the scroll closed before he unfurled the paper cautiously, knowing that nothing good would come out of it. His eyes narrowed at the familiar writing before he began to read the short missive.
I heard the fools in your Council are looking for a concubine for you. Since it seems you have other things to worry about and soon will have another woman to ease your needs, why don’t you give me your wife? I would gladly take her off your hands. I already know how it feels to have her in my arms and I know she will be the perfect woman to satisfy my lust once I do have her in my bed. I heard you no longer have a need of her since she cannot give you an heir, so it shouldn’t be a difficult decision to give her to me.

However, perhaps the problem does not lie with her but with you. Perhaps you are the one who is sterile and you are taking away the lovely waterbender’s chance to bear children. Give me the waterbender and I will show her what a true man is like. I can do what you clearly cannot and plant a child in her. Perhaps even two or three.

Jianguo

A growl ripped out of Zuko’s throat and his eyes saw red as he clenched the paper in his hand. It burst into flames and quickly turned to ash.

Never! Katara is mine! Hell would freeze over first before Jianguo has a chance to harm her! he thundered in his head. And no one will father a child with Katara but me!

He knew Jianguo had sent the letter to taunt him and his hatred for the traitor grew to unknown bounds. With another growl, Zuko lifted his swords and imagined he was cutting Jianguo down as he slashed and struck the air in rapid successions. He continued even as his muscles strained with his efforts and sweat poured heavily down his face as he vented his rage, frustration, and helplessness.

All of these problems were putting a strain on his marriage to Katara. His wife rarely talked to him now and spent most of her time in the Fire Lady room. He knew he was not helping matters either since he no longer sought her out as much as he used to. He now tended to come to their rooms late at night when he knew she was sleeping after shutting himself in his study. He was ashamed to say that he had not made love to her for several days because he could not bear to see the depression and sadness in her lovely features, which was not helping with the issue of conceiving an heir. That was not to say he didn’t want her, crave her as he always had, but he did not know what to do to remedy this situation, which only increased his stress and anxiety.

He understood what his advisors were worried about since if he died without an heir, the royal bloodline would cease to exist and no one would be next in line to inherit the throne. There would be chaos as the noblemen fought to become the next Fire Lord unless Iroh decided to step up, but Zuko knew his uncle was not interested in becoming Fire Lord.
Zuko paused, panting heavily, as another thought crossed his mind that made his stomach clench painfully.

What if Jianguo was right? What if it was he that was the problem? What if...he really was sterile? The possibility stung his male pride so much that it almost brought him to his knees.

The Fire Nation was a patriarchal society, so if a couple was unable to have children, infertility was always blamed on the wife. It seemed he had followed along on his countrymen’s ideas because, although he did not believe Katara was barren, he had not thought the problem could lay with him.

Could he be the problem? Could it be because of him that Katara was going through a difficult time? Could it be he who was denying Katara the chance of becoming a mother?

But that still did not mean that he wanted to let her go! He did not want to give her up so she could bear some other man’s child! It would kill him if she were to be gone from his life.

With a vehement curse, Zuko threw his swords aside before he sat heavily down on the hard floor with his hands clenching the long, sweaty strands of his dark hair that had fallen from his topknot.

What should I do?

Azure eyes stared blankly at the darkening sky as the sun made its descent toward the horizon. A few stars were already twinkling as if they could not wait for the sun to completely disappear. A sad sigh escaped plump lips as the waterbender stared out the window of the Fire Lady bedchamber. The room was darkening at the fading sunlight, but she did not bother lighting the candles for the darkness seemed to accompany her gloomy mood.

For the past several weeks, she had been looked over by multiple physicians who all came to the same conclusion that they could not find the reason why she had not gotten pregnant yet. She was healthy and young, and her monthly cycle was fine. She did not suffer from any hormonal or sexual deficiencies. They recommended certain foods and teas that said helped increase fertility. Some had even recommended acupuncture. She had been reluctant at first to take any herbal blend since Yin-Min’s concoction had not worked, but Katara had tried them anyway in the hopes that these might work.

They didn’t.
Her monthly bleeding had just stopped two days ago.

She did not know what to do. She had not heard of any of the women of her family having problems conceiving. In fact, her Gran-Gran once told her that before the war their female ancestors used to give birth to numerous children. So what was wrong with her?

She sighed. Another day had passed where she only caught glimpses of her husband before he either retreated or she did, and her heart once again grew heavy with sadness, insecurity, and longing. She missed Zuko, she missed the times she would spend in his presence, but she was afraid of being near him. She did not want him to see the sadness that clung to her nor did she wish to see whether his eyes held pity or remorse. If she were to see those emotions in his amber eyes, she knew she would break.

She knew it was because of her that Zuko was having problems with his Court Council since he refused to heed their decree. And now that weeks had passed since the physicians assessed her and no heir was in sight, the advisors were even more insistent that Zuko take a royal concubine.

Katara pressed her forehead against the cool glass and sighed. She could not stop remembering Madam Fang Hua telling her that a Fire Lady’s most important duty was giving her husband an heir. It seemed everybody already thought she had failed that task.

By producing an heir, married Fire Nation noblewomen achieved prestige, financial security, and power. A barren wife was an unfortunate woman, for the inability of producing children not only denied her those privileges, but she had to watch as the son of her husband’s concubine was given the entitlements her own son would have been given. Jiao had told her that some women would secretly take on lovers to impregnate them and passed these children as their husbands’ own when they suspected it was their husbands who were infertile, just so they would not lose their positions and bring shame on herself and her family. But either way, they had no say when it came to their husbands’ concubines and illegitimate children. Another reason why noblewomen sought lovers of their own.

But that was not how Katara was raised. She could not agree to such heartless and vulgar deeds in a marriage. Although Water Tribe women were expected to give their husbands children, those who were barren were not mistreated or ridiculed because of it. Their husbands certainly did not cast them away for another woman. If a couple could not conceive a child, they would adopt an orphaned one or take in a youngest child from relatives who had too many children.

But her home was now the Fire Nation and things were different. And as Fire Lady she had a responsibility to carry out her duties as well as follow their traditions. She may be selfish for denying Zuko the chance to have a child with another woman when she could very well never be able to give him one, but she could not help it. The thought of Zuko being intimate with another woman, the thought of him siring a child with another woman, brought a sharp pain to her chest and made breathing painful.

However, Zuko rarely spent time with her now, much less touched her in any way whether innocently or sexually. This only made her feel more insecure and afraid. Was he tired of her already? Did he regret his promise of being faithful to her? Had a young, beautiful noblewoman captured his eye already and he was beginning to resent his barren wife for getting in his way?

Katara choked on a small sob at the possibility and she pressed a clenched fist to her mouth to suppress the sound. Then she narrowed her eyes and balled her hands beside her. She did not notice the ice crystallizing along the edges of the window as her emotions raged within her.

No! She couldn’t lose Zuko! She wouldn’t be able to live without him!

She looked back at the darkening sky with desperate eyes.

What should I do?

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

A few days later found Zuko sitting dazedly behind his large desk in his study, the documents laying on the wooden surface forgotten at the moment. His eyes glazed over as he recalled with perfect clarity the few times he had made love to Katara in this room. Desire flared to his groin as he remembered her flush features and cries of pleasure as she writhed beneath or above him. He wanted Katara so badly. He missed making love to her. Missed being deeply buried within her tight, wet body. Missed the sight of her blue eyes shining at him with equal emotions of passion and love.

Dammit, he just missed her! He missed her presence, her smiles and laughs, and her comforting arms.

But fear and uncertainty made him hold back and he cursed his cowardliness. He was afraid that she would tell him that she wanted to leave him, that she could not stand being with him any longer, that she was unhappy with him.

And what if he really was the one who was sterile? Would Katara still love him, would she still want to be with him, even if he could never give her children? He drew in a ragged breath at the pain he felt in his chest at the thought.
He knew he should have himself checked to see if he was the problem, but he was too ashamed and afraid to be told he could not father children. Yet, he knew he would have to, especially if it meant he could help lessen Katara’s worries.

A knock at the door brought him out of his thoughts and he called out gruffly for the person to enter. He watched impassively as the short-haired maidservant appeared with the same aphrodisiac tea his uncle kept sending him every week at the same hour. If it was not for his reluctance to alert his uncle about his bedroom problems with his wife, Zuko would have told the old man to cease his meddling actions. Zuko impatiently gestured for the woman to take the tray away as he had done for the past weeks before he dismissed her. The servant bowed before she silently walked out of the room with the tea.

Once the door was closed behind her, Zuko looked back down at the pile of papers on his desk. He refused to drink the tea for it would only turn him into a lustful beast that would not be satisfied until he completely and repeatedly possessed Katara. At the moment their relationship was not going well enough for him to attack her with his persistent desires.

Zuko read a couple of lines on one document before another firm knock interrupted him. Frowning, he called out a curt ‘enter’ as he lifted his head to see who was interrupting him this time. He watched as the door opened and Shen walked in before closing the door firmly behind him. Zuko almost slumped in disappointment when he realized it was not Katara as he had hoped. He wondered at the dark frown on his personal guard’s grim face and his eyebrow rose in inquiry.

“What is the matter, Shen?” he asked as he placed the paper he was reading down.

The Fire Lord’s curiosity grew when his noticed his usually unperturbed guard shift slightly with his hesitation. Shen’s frown had deepened and his gray eyes probed his lord’s face. Zuko slightly narrowed his eyes at his guard’s scrutiny of him.

“Your…present has arrived,” Shen finally said and his words were cold and rough.

“My present?” Zuko asked with a confused frown before a small smile appeared on his lips as he remembered.

Oh, right, he had forgotten about it. He hoped it would solve some of his problems.
“I’m glad it has arrived,” Zuko said with a small amount of anticipation coloring his tone. “I was beginning to wonder when it would.”

Shen’s gray eyes seemed to widen in disbelief before his frown turned dark.

“Where should we place your…present?” Shen asked between gritted teeth.

Zuko frowned at his guard’s tone as he leaned back in his chair. He thought for a moment before he replied.

“You can place it in my bedchamber,” he responded curtly.

He did not understand his guard’s reaction, but it was irritating him. He noticed Shen stiffen and he wondered at the angry expression on the older man’s face.

“As you wish, my lord,” Shen finally responded coldly as he gave a stiff bow before he turned around toward the door.

Zuko frowned after him as the door was once again closed. He heard a soft, feminine cry followed by the sound of falling objects outside the room, but Zuko did not pay much attention to it since he knew his guard would take care of it.

However, why was Shen angry? If Zuko wanted to use what he had ordered brought to him there was nothing Shen or anybody else could say about it. He made to stand up so he could look at what had been sent to him, but he decided to look after a few more of his documents. He would go look at it once he finished here.

Barely containing the urge to slam the door shut, Shen had angrily stepped out of the Fire Lord’s study and promptly crashed into the woman who was about to knock at the door. She cried out softly as the impact threw her backwards, causing her to lose her hold of the scrolls she had in her arms.

Quickly, Shen reached forward and grasped her arm to steady her. She looked up at him with wide, yellow eyes from a delicate, pretty face.

He watched as her porcelain skin turned a dark pink. With her embarrassment no doubt, he thought. He recognized her as being Physician Toshiro’s assistant. He had seen the tiny woman a couple of times whenever his lord or lady visited the infirmary, but had not paid much attention to her. She was too small and thin for his tastes. Besides, his eye had already been caught by one of the royal seamstress’s assistants, a tall, buxom woman with a sweet smile and a sharp wit, though she kept rebuffing all of his advances. Her resistance only made him want her more.

“I apologize,” he said as he let the small, young woman go.

“Ah, i-it’s o-okay,” she stammered as her blush deepened in color and she shyly averted her eyes before she again peeked at his face.

When he raised his eyebrow at her, she quickly looked down and he watched as her blush deepened and spread down her pale neck to disappear under the collar of her tunic. Indifferent to the woman’s shy reactions, Shen bent down and quickly picked up the scrolls she had dropped when he bumped into her.

“Ah, t-thank y-you,” she muttered as she grabbed the scrolls when he handed them to her after he straightened himself. She checked the scrolls carefully and sighed in relief once she realized they were not ruined.

“Physician Toshiro would have been displeased if I didn’t give these to our lord. Is Fire Lord Zuko busy?” she asked as she glanced uncertainly at the door.

The name of his lord brought Shen’s anger back to the forefront of his mind and he narrowed his eyes. He watched as the woman smiled timidly at him as her blush did not leave her skin. If he remembered correctly, this woman used to be one of Ozai’s concubines. That only made his anger spike.

“For the moment he is not too busy,” he said coldly.

He did not notice the woman flinch at his harsh tone as he turned away from her and headed down the corridor to do his lord’s bidding, despite his reluctance to do so.

Katara bid Uncle Iroh and her mother-in-law goodnight as she stepped down from the garden’s veranda. Dinner had been pleasant, but she would have enjoyed it more if Zuko had joined them, though she was not surprised that he did not show up. With a sad sigh, Katara made her way through the garden toward the palace. She paused as she turned her head to look at the cherry blossom tree beside the calm pond.
An ache formed in her chest as she remembered the times she had spent under the tree’s shade with her husband before her eyes glazed over when she recalled how Zuko had pressed her passionately against the tree as he kissed her senseless. With a shake of her head, Katara turned away from it and continued on her way to her room. There was going to be a full moon that night and she wondered how she was going to spend the hours until the moon’s energy waned enough for her to find sleep. She knew how she wanted to spent it, or better yet with whom, but she was sure Zuko would avoid coming to their room again.

The thought brought another ache to her heart before she narrowed her eyes determinedly. Then she would not wait for him to come to her and instead she would seek him out. She would seduce him, make him crave her again. She was tired of them dancing around each other. They needed to talk.

“Fire Lady Katara,” the sound of her name brought the waterbender out of her thoughts.

Katara looked up to see Jiao smiling gently at her.

“Hi, Jiao,” Katara greeted her maidservant with a friendly smile. “Where’s Ichiro?”

“I already put him to bed. He was very energetic today so he quickly fell asleep as soon as his head touched his pillow,” Jiao explained with a small laugh, her tone full of motherly affection for her son.

Katara ignored the pang in her chest as she laughed amusedly with one of the few women she considered a friend in the palace.

“I was actually searching for you, my lady,” Jiao continued with that same kind tone, “I was wondering if you would like for me to help you prepare for bed and keep you company for a while.”

Any other day, Katara would have decline the offer since it was usually Zuko who helped her out of her day clothes to ready for bed—though it definitely was not for sleep—but this time she would appreciate having a friend to keep her company until she gathered enough courage to go after her distant husband and bring him back to their room.

“I would really appreciate it, Jiao,” she responded.

Both women continued down the golden halls as Katara listened amusedly to Jiao’s stories of her son’s antics. They finally arrived at the long corridor that led to the royal couple’s rooms and Katara smiled when she spotted Shen and Kuo standing on either side of the huge, golden doors.

“Shen, Kuo, good evening,” she greeted with a smile as she finally stopped before them.

“Good evening, my lady,” both guards simultaneously responded as they bowed.

When they straightened, Katara frowned since they did not return her smile with small ones of their own as they usually did. Instead, their faces were grim and they were looking at her with what seemed like sympathy. Jiao also frowned when her husband did not smile at her.

Not liking their expressions, the waterbender looked away and made her way to one of the doors, but she paused when Shen quickly blocked her path. She looked up at him with a questioning frown.

“My lady…maybe you would like to spend the night in the Fire Lady bedchamber?” he asked gently, though the question sounded more like a request.

Another frowned marred Katara’s brow as she stared up in confusion at her guards.

“Why?” she asked.

“Please, my lady,” Kuo spoke up almost pleadingly, “It is for your own good.”

Alarm and uneasiness swelled within the waterbender. What were they talking about? What were they trying to hide from her? Or better yet, what were they trying to keep her away from? She needed to know and they were not going to stop her from finding out.

“Step aside,” she commanded firmly, “I demand to enter my own chambers.”

Shen and Kuo glanced at each other briefly before they looked back down at the determined Fire Lady. They shifted uneasily, hesitant, before they stood firm and refused to move.

“My lady, please—”
“I said step aside!” Katara snapped as her fear and apprehension flared at their resistance.

Again both guards hesitated, but the determined and fierce expression on their lady’s face let them know she was not going to give up. Jiao wrung her hands in worry as she wondered what was going on. By her husband’s and Shen’s averseness to let their lady in, Jiao knew that whatever was inside was only going to cause her lady pain.

Slowly, reluctantly, the tall guards moved away and Kuo just as unwillingly opened one of the large doors to let the waterbender in. Katara glanced at them both with a frown before she swept past them and entered the anteroom only to freeze in shock at what she came across.

Kneeling gracefully on a large, elaborate cushion a few feet away from the door was Mai. Makeup adorned her usually simple face and her long, black hair was arranged into an elaborate coiffure with many golden hairpins stuck to it. It was what the young noblewoman was wearing, however, that made Katara’s eyes widened in shock. Mai was not formally dressed as she usually was, but she was wearing a light, red robe, so thin Katara could make out the outline of her small, bare breasts. A smile had been sitting on the woman’s thin lips, but it had vanished as soon as the waterbender appeared. Mai narrowed her eyes and tilted her chin up haughtily.

“I thought you were Zuko,” the dark-eyed woman said vacuously.

“What?” Katara uttered as her mind ran sluggishly with her confusion before she narrowed her eyes as she firmly demanded, “Get out of my rooms. Now!”

Mai scoffed as she smoothed the thin material of her robe down her chest. She ignored the glares of the guards and the disbelieving stare the maidservant were sending her as they stood attentively at the door.

“You can’t order me around,” the dark-haired noblewoman said passively before a mocking smile appeared on her lips as she added, “Especially since the Fire Lord already ordered the guards to bring me here.”

Dread began to seep into Katara’s chest and her fierce stance faltered a bit.

“What are you talking about?” she asked angrily, though a slight tremor could be heard in her voice.
The smile on Mai’s lips grew into a triumphant smirk as she stared arrogantly into the waterbender’s apprehensive, blue eyes.

“Zuko has ordered for me to wait here for his pleasure,” Mai explained slowly, vicious triumph dripping from every word, “I am to become his royal concubine in order to bear him an heir…since apparently you failed at the task.”

A pained gasp escaped Katara at her words and she clutched at her chest.

“No,” she said brokenly.

_No, it can’t be true! Zuko can’t do this to me!_

Katara straightened herself and narrowed her eyes angrily at the placid woman.

“You’re lying,” she said with certainty.

Mai raised a mocking eyebrow as her smile turned malicious.

“Am I?” she asked cruelly before she looked up to stare levelly at the angry-looking guards, “Why don’t you ask the guards?”

Katara spun around to stare hopefully, desperately, at her personal guards. Her eyes darted frantically from one to the other as she waited for them to refute Mai’s words and prove that Zuko would never betray her. When they did not immediately respond and averted their eyes from her, her anxiety grew to the point where she thought she might start hyperventilating.

“Shen? Kuo?” she whispered.

Shen cleared his throat before he lifted his gaze to look sadly at her.
“Fire Lord Zuko ordered me to place his…present in his room,” he admitted softly, as if his soft tone would lessen the blow.

An anguished moan fell from Katara’s lips as she took a step back as if she had been physically struck.

_No. No! This can’t be true!_ she cried out in dismay, _Zuko would never betray me! Especially with...her!

Her whirling mind focused on the sound of Mai’s quiet laugh. Katara turned around to glare at her. Her hands hovered over her waterskin and the dagger strapped on either side of her waist. She wished she could use both to wipe that smirk from Mai’s face. Or better yet, use her bloodbending to kick the woman out into the streets.

“It seems Zuko was unable to forget about me,” the thin noblewoman said with an arrogant and vicious tone as she stared at the waterbender’s pained and angry eyes. “I will give Zuko a child and he will love me more than he has loved you. Then he will divorce you and cast you aside. He will make me his Fire Lady and our child will become the next Fire Lord.”

Katara felt as if her legs were about to give up on her at the despair and pain that was festering inside. This was what she had feared was going to happen. The day had come that Zuko had decided to do what was demanded of him as Fire Lord. He had chosen a royal concubine over his own wife. And there was nothing she could do about it. She felt tears gather at her eyes before she forced herself to hold them back.

No! This had to be a mistake! Zuko would never betray her! She was positive he would not hurt her in such a way. There had to be some sort of explanation. Feeling more confident, Katara ordered herself to straighten her back and raise her head.

“I am sure this is all a misunderstanding,” Katara said firmly, though a part of her wondered if she was just trying to convince herself.

“You can choose to believe that if it would make you feel better,” Mai responded passively as she stared uninterestingly down at her nails before she looked back up to smile cruelly as she added, “If you don’t want to get more hurt, you should leave now before Zuko arrives to take me to his bed.”

“It’s _our_ bed,” Katara growled out angrily, “And I’m sure he would do no such thing, instead he will throw you out. Zuko will never betray me.”

Without waiting for Mai to retort, Katara whirled out and walked out of the room before she attacked the woman. La, did she want to. She could not stand being in the same room with a barely clothed Mai while they waited for Zuko to appear to put everything back in its place. Jiao and the two guards glared one last time at the noblewoman before they followed after their lady. Katara felt Kuo and Shen stand worriedly behind her and she turned around to face them.

“Tell my husband that I will be waiting for him in the Fire Lady bedchamber once he throws…that woman out,” she told them before she turned around again and headed down the long corridor to the opposite end.

Jiao quickly followed after the silent waterbender. The servant frowned worriedly since she could see how tense her lady’s back was and how her hands clenched at her sides. There had to be a misunderstanding, there just had to! Fire Lord Zuko would not harm such a wonderful and loving woman as his wife!

They finally arrived at the Fire Lady’s quarters and Jiao rushed forward to light a candle to illuminate the slightly dark room. The sun was setting. She moved to start the fireplace, but the waterbender absentmindedly waved her away.

“Would you like anything, my lady?” Jiao asked softly as she watched the waterbender stand uncertainly in the middle of the large room.

“No, thank you, Jiao,” Katara spoke up, her voice sounding drained and anxious, before she said, “You can return to your son now.”

“But, my lady—”

“I would like to be alone,” Katara interrupted her softly before she added, “Please.”

Jiao hesitated a moment as she looked worriedly at the dejected Fire Lady before she gave a bow and reluctantly left the room, closing the door softly behind her.

As soon as she heard the door close, Katara began to agitatedly pace the room as she again got lost in her thoughts. She was sure Mai was lying. Somehow she had succeeded in entering the palace and the royal rooms and convinced the guards that Zuko wanted her there.

But then why did Shen say Zuko had ordered him to place Mai in his rooms?

She paused as pain gripped her before she shook her head. There had to be an explanation. She should have demanded to have Mai removed from the room, but Katara preferred that Zuko should be the one to chase the woman out once he found out what was going on. Maybe that way Mai could finally get it into her skull that Zuko didn’t want her. With a firm nod, Katara made her way to the window and stared out into the setting sun as she had been doing for the past few weeks.

The golden sun slowly made its descent, creating orangey and purple hues. Those hues then turned dark blue as the sun completely disappeared and stars appeared in the sky. The bright full moon rose high in the dark sky as the night grew long.

Katara’s confidence began to waver as the hours passed without a single glimpse of her husband. The candle Jiao had lit had extinguished and the room was plunged into darkness with only the silvery light of the full moon to lighten the place. Katara did not bother lighting another candle as despair consumed her.

Where was Zuko?

As the time passed without any sound of footsteps outside her door, Katara’s despair turned to rage and she glared into the night scene outside the window where she had not moved since she entered the room. The anger then turned into a sense of betrayal and she choked back a sob as she pressed a trembling fist to her mouth. Then that feeling of betrayal turned into overwhelming sorrow and she could not stop the tears that poured relentlessly out of her eyes.

Her heart lurched painfully in her chest at the thought that Zuko had not come to retrieve her because he was at that moment spending the night with Mai. Was an heir that important to him that he would betray her like this?

Why?!

With a cry of agony and fury, Katara fell against the wall beside the window as she slammed her fist against the wall before she slowly slid down the cold surface to curl brokenly against it as she buried her face into her knees. Quiet, gasping sobs escaped her constricted throat at the thought that Zuko was pleasuring and loving Mai like he once did to her. She could not stop imagining Zuko kissing Mai as their limbs entwined together and their bodies strained against each other.

“Oh, gods,” she sobbed as she clenched her eyes shut and rocked herself.

She did not think she could survive this. She felt like her heart was breaking. If Zuko indeed took Mai as his royal concubine, as his lover, Katara was sure she would die from the heartbreak. As the night lengthened, the waterbender’s quiet cries of anguish increased.
Earnest Consolation

The sound of booted feet echoed in the empty corridor of the palace as the Fire Lord hurried eagerly to his room. It was late, but he had been detained by an urgent matter with one of his generals telling him they had received news about a sighting of Jianguo in an Earth Kingdom village. Zuko had him immediately send men toward the continent, his inner fire flaring at the possibility of finally ending the traitor’s life. One problem was almost solved and another solution waited for him in his room. He could not wait to make use of it.

He finally rounded the corner to the corridor that led to his royal chambers and he increased his pace. As he approached the huge doors, he noticed that Shen and Kuo were still at their posts when it was so late at night. He wondered at the cold expressions on their faces as they glared at him. He raised an eyebrow at them, but decided to ignore them for something more important as he walked past them and reached for one of the doors.

“You don’t deserve a woman as kind as Fire Lady Katara,” the sound of Kuo’s angry voice stopped Zuko in his tracks and made him stiffen.

“Kuo,” Shen tried to shush him as he laid a restraining hand on the younger guard’s shoulder.

Kuo shrugged him off as he turned to glare at his fellow guard.

“You know you agree with me,” he said irately.

Zuko slowly turned around to glare indignantly at his guards. How dare they say such things to him? If he didn’t hold them in such high esteem for their loyalty to him through the years, he would have fired them on the spot or thrown them in jail.

“Why do you say that?” he growled out angrily.

“You’re a real bastard if you don’t realize you are making a mistake,” Kuo responded as he clenched his hands at his sides.

Shen’s eyes widened in horror at the insult his friend had just blatantly thrown in their lord’s face, even if he completely agreed.
Zuko took a menacing step forward, his face contorted in an infuriated expression, but he made himself stop before he killed his guard.

“I will deal with your insolence tomorrow,” the dark-haired lord growled out through gritted teeth before he turned around and quickly opened the door.

“Yeah, eager for your fun tonight,” Kuo muttered even as Shen painfully elbowed his side.

Zuko paused beneath the doorframe and was about to turn around so he could strike his impertinent guard’s face when the sound of rustling fabric coming from the anteroom caught his attention. Curious, he turned back to look into the room only to freeze at what he saw.

“Mai?” he asked confusedly as he stared down at her kneeling on a cushion a few feet away from him.

His shock and confusion then quickly turned into anger and wariness as he stared down at the woman who had tried to come between him and Katara in Omashu.

“What the hell are you doing in my rooms?” he demanded to know angrily.

He swiftly glanced around the room to see that, except for Mai, there was no one else there.

“Where is my wife?” he asked gruffly.

Mai lifted a hand to gracefully brush her rouged cheek as she stared at him with a small smile.

“The waterbender left to give us our privacy, Zuko,” she responded in a low tone.

He finally noticed what she was wearing—or wasn’t wearing—and he frowned. He was not at all tempted by what Mai was blatantly showing since Katara was the only one able to arouse him so completely. Even when she was wearing layers of clothing to hide her delicious curves. Again, he wondered where his wife was. A feeling of dread was beginning to grow in his chest.

“What are you doing here?” he asked her again in a cold and curt tone.

“I'm here to be your royal concubine and to give you an heir, of course,” she responded with certainty lacing her tone.

“The hell you are!” Zuko growled out as he glared down at her. Was this another of her schemes to separate him from Katara? He would never forgive her!

A frown appeared on Mai’s pale brow. After hearing news that the council was looking for a royal concubine to bear Zuko’s heir, she had immediately rushed back to the Fire Nation. If Zuko had to choose a concubine from the rest of the noblewomen, she knew he would choose her since he could not stand the other foolish women. She had arrived at the palace full of hope and presented her request to become his royal concubine. The servants and guards had looked at her distastefully as if they expected her request to be quickly denied. To their shock and to her delight, one of Zuko’s personal guards had appeared to reluctantly escort her to Zuko’s chambers to await his pleasure.

She had one of the servants she had brought with her immediately change her from her formal dress to the seductive, thin robe before she waited patiently for Zuko’s arrival. He had taken longer than she had expected, but what mattered was that he was finally here. However, she did not understand why he sounded so shocked and angry at her presence.

Dismissing the thought, she smiled as she gracefully stood up. The thin, red robe exposed her nudity beneath it and she pushed her chest out to entice him. Zuko, however, did not look away from her face and instead raised a mocking eyebrow at her. The noblewoman suppressed another frown when Zuko did not peruse her body as she had hoped, but she did not let that stop her.

“I am here for your pleasure, Zuko,” she spoke up as she tried to muster a seductive tone.

A snort escaped the firebender at her attempt.

“Why would I want you when I have Katara who, by the way, has given me the most incredible pleasure I have ever known despite her being a virgin when I first took her?” Zuko responded coolly.
Mai’s black eyes narrowed at his biting words. She did not want to hear him talk about his intimate moments with the Water Tribe bitch.

“You can say whatever you want, but you’re the one who asked for me to be brought here,” she retorted smoothly.

“The hell I did,” Zuko countered with a growl. He was sure he had banished her from the palace, much less from the private chambers he shared with his wife.

“Ask your guards,” the noblewoman told him as she indicated with her hand to the door. The movement caused the edges of her thin robe to part a little, exposing more of her chest.

“You’re lying,” the firebender said without taking his eyes off her face before he continued in a hard tone, “I don’t know how you managed to enter my rooms, but I will throw you out as soon as I find out what is going on.”

Spinning swiftly on his feet, the irritated Fire Lord stepped outside the room. He was relieved to see that his guards were still in their designated places, though they were still glaring at him.

“Why is Lady Mai in there?” he barked out the question.

The two guards’ angry expressions transformed into confused ones as they stared at the livid Fire Lord who was glaring at them as if they were at fault.

“You ordered for your…present to be brought into your room, and though I was reluctant to do so, I follow your orders, my lord,” Shen spoke up grimly.

Zuko’s brow furrowed into a deep frown at his guard’s words.

“I thought you meant another present I had ordered for my wife!” Zuko exclaimed through clenched teeth before he pointed a finger behind himself, “I did not request a concubine!”

He saw as relief spread across their faces and he narrowed his eyes at them.
“Did you really think I would betray my beloved wife?” he growled out furiously.

Shen and Kuo flinched and looked down, shamefaced, at their lord’s furious tone and expression. They were sure that if he wanted to he would have killed them at the moment for their doubts to his honor and devotion to his wife.

“I apologize for not specifying what present I was talking about in your study,” Shen spoke up guiltily as he gave a respectful bow. “If I did, this could have been avoided.”

Zuko sighed and pinched the bridge of his nose in his frustration.

“It’s not completely your fault, Shen,” the Fire Lord said gruffly, “I should have asked what you meant instead of assuming.”

“Please forgive our doubts, my lord,” Shen added contritely.

“We really thought you wanted Lady Mai to be brought to your rooms to…uh…” Kuo began before he trailed off meaningfully. Then in a more grim tone he added, “I also apologize for my rash words, my lord. I should never have spoken to you that way. I understand if I will be punished.”

Zuko frowned at him and the young guard straightened himself, his hands clenching in anxiety at his sides.

“You should be glad I hold you in such high esteem, Kuo, or you would have found yourself in a cell,” Zuko told him grimly. “I understand your feelings, so I will let it go because you showed loyalty and concern for my wife. However, if you dare act in a similar way again, I will not be lenient.”

Kuo relaxed slightly and bowed his head gratefully, knowing he had gotten lucky.

Zuko’s frown deepened as he remembered what Kuo had said before he apologized.
That feeling of dread grew within him as another thought formed in his head. If his guards truly believed he wished for Mai to be his royal concubine, did that mean Katara did as well? Mai said Katara had left to give them…privacy, but did Mai lie?

Agni, he hoped she lied.

“Please tell me Fire Lady Katara has not come to our rooms yet,” Zuko told them anxiously.

He felt his heart sink and he tensed when he saw his guards exchange glances and avoid looking at his eyes.

“Well?” he demanded with a growl as he felt panic swell in his chest.

“Fire Lady Katara arrived and discovered Lady Mai in your rooms dressed…like that,” Kuo finally spoke up.

“No,” Zuko breathed in denial.

He could just imagine what Katara must have gone through to discover another woman—his former girlfriend—dressed and waiting for his pleasure. Damn it! If their roles had been reversed, Agni knew he would have gone insane with rage.

“Why didn’t you make my wife stay and escort Mai out of the palace?!” he demanded to know angrily. He was so furious that he did not notice he took out the title to Mai’s name.

“As we said, we thought it was what you wanted, my lord,” Shen spoke up with a bit of a defensive tone. “We couldn’t disobey your orders…even if we wanted to.”

“Fire Lady Katara would have known that there was a misunderstanding, so why did she leave?” Zuko asked. He could feel his anxiety rising.

“The woman,” Kuo spoke up as he nodded his head insultingly at Mai who was looking silently at them from inside the room, “made Fire Lady Katara believe she has a right to be here, my lord.” He purposely did not add an honorific to the noblewoman to show how little respect he held for her. He and Shen had never liked the woman.

Zuko frowned at his younger guard’s words before he turned to look at his other guard when he spoke next.

“Our lady seemed sure everything was a misunderstanding,” Shen continued, “She asked us to let you know that you can find her in the Fire Lady bedchamber once you clear this matter up.”

“The woman told Fire Lady Katara she should leave before she got more hurt when you arrived to take her to your bed,” Kuo added.

The Fire Lord felt his ire rise toward Mai before he felt dread and apprehension at what Katara might be feeling and thinking at the moment.

“How long ago did my wife leave?” Zuko asked in a strained voice.

He watched as his guards once again glanced at each other as they shifted slightly and that dread festered and grew that it caused his heart to pound in anxiety.

“A little after dinner,” Kuo finally muttered.

Zuko cursed vehemently.

That was hours ago! It was almost past midnight!

Enraged, his amber eyes blazing in fury, Zuko whirled around and strode toward Mai, who took a step back at the violent expression on his face. She cried out when he grabbed her roughly by the upper arm, his grip hard, his hand almost painfully scorching her skin, as he glared furiously down at her.

“This is the last time I will tolerate your interference in my marriage to Katara!” he thundered wrathfully.
“If it wasn’t for that bitch you would still love me!” Mai hissed stubbornly as she returned his glare. “I would have been your Fire Lady! I would have given you an heir by now!”

“Silence!” Zuko roared as he violently shook her.

“I won’t allow you to insult my wife!” he growled before he harshly reminded her, “I already told you I never loved you! I love Katara and I will only love her. And you are insane if you think I would throw Katara aside for you!”

She tried to pull her arm away, but Zuko only tightened his grip and shook her once again. He was beyond mercy now. His blood was boiling in his veins in rage.

“Do you know why I sought you out those few times when we were together?” he asked cruelly, his golden eyes hard as flint. “It was because I didn’t want to use the local brothel, not because I enjoyed being with you. I didn’t want to hurt your feelings before, but now I am sick and tired of you trying to come between Katara and me. You are terrible in bed and I always dismissed our encounters without a second thought.”

“You lie!” Mai screamed in denial. She had never heard Zuko speak so much in her life and his words were cruelly digging into her heart.

“Ah, but I am only speaking the truth,” Zuko continued with that same malicious tone before his voice turned deep and husky, “But with Katara on the other hand…Agni, she is incredible. I can’t get enough of her. I want her all the time, in our bed, in the garden, in my study, anywhere. Every time I see her I want to rip her clothes off so I can make passionate love to her.”

“Shut up!” Mai screeched as she slapped his face with her free hand.

Zuko’s jaw clenched as he turned back with blazing eyes as his fingers dug harshly into her skin.

“You better pray that you have not irrevocably damaged my marriage to Katara or so help me I will make your life a living hell,” he growled through clenched teeth.

Without waiting for her response, Zuko roughly pulled her after him toward the door. He paused briefly to pick up the dark cloak she had placed on the low table before he hauled her after him. Shen and Kuo, who had been silently listening and watching the scene with satisfaction, quickly moved back. Mai resisted his hold as she dug her bare heels into the marble floor and pulled at his hand, but Zuko was relentless as he dragged her screaming and protesting out the door. Once they stepped out of the antechamber, the firebender thrust her out the door. Not expecting his actions, Mai tripped and fell on the floor. Not bothering to ask if she was okay, Zuko threw her cloak at her to partially cover her nudity.

The two guards watched the noblewoman fall without feeling any sense of sympathy before they looked up at their enraged Fire Lord whose golden eyes were blazing and his nostrils flaring in fury. They were reminded of their old temperamental prince from years before and they shivered. They hoped their Fire Lady forgave him or else there would be hell as their lord vented his anger at everybody and everything for his wife’s indifference to him.

Sitting up on the floor, Mai looked up with an indignant and livid glare. Zuko stood angrily above her as his body shook slightly in his rage.

“I don’t wish to see your face again as long as I live,” he told her coldly before he just as icily ordered, “Stay in Omashu.”

Dismissing her completely, Zuko turned to his guards who quickly straightened at attention.

“Remove her from the palace. She is never to be allowed in the palace again,” he commanded before he firmly added, “I am going to look for my wife.”

He did not notice his guards’ smiles as he turned away and quickly strode down the long, golden corridor.

“Zuko, you can’t do this to me!” he heard Mai scream, “Zuko!”

The golden-eyed firebender ignored her as he swiftly continued on his way. He hoped Katara had fallen asleep and had not noticed the time. As he entered the royal family wing, Zuko glanced out a window and froze. There was a full moon!

“Damn it!” Zuko cursed as he raced toward the Fire Lady bedchamber.

As he finally arrived, Zuko entered the dark antechamber and swiftly crossed it. He paused before the door that led to the bedroom, his heart pounding wildly with anxiety. He moved forward and leaned his ear against the door as he tried to figure out what scene he would come upon. When he heard nothing, Zuko frowned deeply. He did not know if that was a good sign or not. Squaring his shoulders, he reached for the handle and slowly opened the door. He peered inside and saw that it was completely dark. He went in, gently closing the door behind him, and scanned the dark and silent room.

“Katara?” he called out softly as he shot a spark at the fireplace. Flames quickly sprang up and illuminated the dark room.

He barely had enough time to dodge to the side in order to avoid a book striking his face. He jumped to the side as more items were thrown at him by an angry waterbender.

“How dare you?!” Katara screamed in rage, “How dare you come in here when you were with her?!”

“Katara, wait! Please, listen to me!” Zuko tried to reason with her as he ducked his head when a vase was hurled his way before it crashed against the wall behind him. “Let me explain!”

“You lied to me!” Katara continued screaming. “You lied when you said you would never betray me! You lying...” she shouted as she threw another vase, “cheating...” another book was chucked at his face, “...bastard!” she hissed as she picked up a candlestick and hurled it at him.

“Katara!” Zuko growled out her name as he evaded the objects, her words wounding him. How could she think that of him?

The blue-eyed brunette ignored him as she continued to throw anything she could get her hands on to keep him away from her. When she ran out of things, she used a water whip to keep him at bay when he tried to advance on her. She was feeling so much anger and pain, she did not care if she hurt him. She wanted him to know how angry she was at him. She wanted him to realize that she would never forgive him for what he had done to her.

Why? Why did he do this to me?! she cried out mentally as her pain increased to the point she felt she could not breath.

Zuko felt a small spark of anger ignite in his chest as she continued to refuse to listen to him, but that emotion quickly vanished when he saw Katara suddenly stop. He finally noticed that her hair was disheveled, her dress wrinkled, and her eyes were red from crying. It seemed as if all the rage had rushed out of her and was replaced by excruciating sorrow and pain. Her blue eyes began to glisten with unshed tears and her hands trembled at her side. Zuko felt his heart clench and he gasped sharply as if she had succeeded in physically wounding him.

“You promised to love me and only me,” Katara told him brokenly as she stared with anguish into his eyes. “Why did you betray me so?”

Her tears finally poured out of her eyes and trickled down her face. She began to cry silently as she continued to stare at him as if he had stabbed her in the heart with a dagger. More tears slid down her now colorless cheeks, wetting the enticing, soft skin he loved so much. Zuko felt his heart constrict with a painful ache at her heartbroken words. Her silent sobs were breaking his heart more than if she were to cry out loudly. He could sometimes detach himself to other people’s sorrow, but the sight of Katara in tears was something he could not bear.

He hated to see her in tears, but he especially despised it when he was the cause of those tears, of that sadness dimming her bright blue eyes. He felt bound to do anything and everything in his power, no matter the price, in order to stop her tears because he lived to make her happy.

As if her energy had been drained out of her, Katara fell to the floor on her knees where she continued to sob quietly. Her shoulders trembled slightly and her hands clenched tightly onto her robes.

“Katara!” Zuko cried out in alarm as he rushed toward her and dropped onto his knees before her.

He wrapped his arms around her shaking body and she desperately tried to get out of his hold.

“Don’t t-touch me! Leave me a-alone!” she sobbed chokingly.

Zuko felt his chest constrict painfully at her words and her aversion to his touch.

“No,” he told her firmly as he tightened his hold of her, albeit gently, in order to keep her from moving away from him. “You have to listen to me, Katara.”

She shook her head weakly as she continued to struggle to get out of his embrace. She knew she could make him let her go if she used her waterbending or her bloodbending, but the truth was that a small part of her, maybe a masochistic part, wanted to be held by him no matter how much he had hurt her. And it only increased her anger.

“It’s all a misunderstanding,” he tried to explain as he strained his neck in order to catch a glimpse of her eyes, but she refused to look at him.

“You’re lying,” she whispered before she brokenly said, “You were gone for too long.”

“I was caught up in something else…” Zuko began but was interrupted by Katara’s scoff.

“In Mai, you mean,” she hissed bitterly as she pushed her hands against his chest to move him away from her.

“No!” the firebender growled out, resisting her actions, before he pleadingly continued, “I was in an unexpected meeting with one of my generals regarding Jianguo’s whereabouts and I didn’t know Mai was in our room until a few minutes ago. Please, Katara, believe me.”

“I want to believe you, Zuko,” the waterbender said in a strained voice as she dug her fingers painfully into his clothed chest, “But it was your former lover that was in…our room.” She stressed the word in a broken sob.

“Mai can never be termed as my lover,” Zuko said firmly, “She can barely be called my former girlfriend. She was a person I shared an insignificant relationship at one point. She is nothing but an unmemorable past. It’s not my fault she refuses to forget me and move on.”

Katara didn’t respond, and when she remained silent for a long while, Zuko’s heart began to race in apprehension.

What is she thinking? he thought anxiously. Agni, her silence was killing him!

Finally she let out a long, sad sigh as she dropped her arms away from his chest and turned her head away from him.

“I want to go home. Back to the Southern Water Tribe,” she said firmly.
Zuko felt his heart wrench painfully in his chest and his eyes widened in shock.

“‘No!’” he shouted as he crushed her tightly to him. “This is your home! Please don’t leave me, Katara! Listen to what I’m telling you!” he pleaded frantically.

He pulled back slightly and frowned when Katara again pushed against his chest as tears continued to roll down her cheeks. He gently grasped her chin and slowly tilted her chin up so she could look into his eyes. The pain in those blue eyes of hers made him feel as if a flaming dagger had stabbed his chest. She then narrowed them and jerked her head away from his grasp.

“Why don’t you believe me?” he asked desperately as his hand fell back onto his lap.

Katara stared into Zuko’s amber eyes guardedly, unsure if he was just saying those words to pacify her, but when he continued to stare determinedly and unwavering into her eyes, she felt her doubts falter a little. She wanted to believe him so badly, a small part of her still did, but a bigger part of her was afraid that he might be lying to her just to spare her feelings. If their situation had been different, she would not have doubted him for a second, but the issue of Zuko begetting an heir no matter how he did it was a huge problem. It was his duty and she knew how serious Zuko took up his responsibilities to his nation.

“You’re accusing me of being unfaithful to you when it’s not true,” Zuko continued with a frown when she didn’t reply. “I can’t accept that you doubt my fidelity and love for you.”

“What am I to think when you rarely make love to me anymore and you avoid coming to our bed?” Katara responded heatedly, her blue eyes blazing.

“There’s a logical explanation for that,” Zuko replied with a deeper frown. “That isn’t a reason to jump to such conclusions.”

“Oh, really?” Katara retorted angrily with narrowed eyes. “What other explanation could there be for you to stop making love to me? I know just how passionate you are, Zuko, and if you aren’t coming to me, it’s obvious you would look for it with someone else. So why not with Mai?”

“We may have not made love as often, but why would you think I would be unfaithful to you? And with her?” the firebender growled out.
“What was I supposed to think when Shen told me you ordered him to place Mai in our room?!” the brunette hissed furiously as she glared at him. Her nails pierced her palms as the urge to strike him overwhelmed her at the memory. “What else am I to think when I find that half naked ...woman...in our room waiting for you?! Especially after she flaunted herself, right in front of me?”

Zuko’s frown deepened at her angry words and he felt his chest tighten in indignation at her questioning of his honor, but he told himself to try to see things from her point of view. She did not know what had been on his mind these past weeks, nor did she know what happened with Mai, and it wasn’t her fault his absence had made her distrust him. It was his for not having talked to her sooner.

“I didn’t order Shen to place her there,” he began to explain rapidly when she tried to get up, “He came to my study to tell me the present I had ordered had I arrived, so I told him to place it in our room. I thought he was talking about something else, not Mai!”

“Oh, really?” the waterbender asked skeptically.

“You can ask Shen and Kuo to tell you what happened when I arrived to find her there,” he told her confidently.

“How do I know they won’t lie because you told them to?” she asked hotly.

Zuko clenched his jaw, but again forced himself not to snap at her for her doubts.

“You know I don’t lie, especially not to you,” he growled. “Besides, if I wanted Mai as my concubine I wouldn’t have had her thrown out of the palace.”

When Katara continued to remain unmoved, Zuko frowned. He needed to convince her of his loyalty and of his love for her. Or, he could lose her.

“Katara,” he said firmly, and when she lifted her head to look at him warily, he softly added, “there is only one woman for me, and that woman is you. Have I not demonstrated it to you all this time?”

Katara stared unwaveringly into his golden eyes as her mind raced with his words. Memories of everything he had done for her, of his sweet gestures, his defense of her against the royal court, of how he had comforted her after Jianguo’s attack, of his support when she wanted to make herself stronger, even their heated discussions, flooded her mind.

“If it wasn’t Mai, what did you think was being delivered to you?” Katara asked cautiously, though she felt a bit of optimism at his words.

She wiped at her wet cheeks and Zuko quickly pulled out his silky handkerchief and handed it to her. She stared at his offering for a moment, feeling his intense stare on her face, before she slowly reached for it. When she grabbed the handkerchief, she heard his small sigh of relief. She quickly dabbed her eyes and cheeks. She hated it when she cried in front of him.

“It’s a book I ordered from the University of Ba Sing Se that’s said to have advanced medical techniques,” Zuko explained as he tucked a piece of her hair behind her ear. “I’m hoping that there’s something in it that would help us conceive a child.”

Katara’s hand froze at his words. A part of her wanted to remain angry and indignant for the hours she had suffered through uncertain agony, wondering what Zuko and Mai were doing, wondering why he had betrayed her. To her shame, another small part of her even wanted to make him suffer a little so he could understand what she had gone through. She wanted to lash out at him and at everything. To scream and rage until she had no more energy left, until everybody could understand her anger and pain. But her logical side told her that Zuko was telling her the truth and he had not known what was going on until a few minutes ago. He had not meant to hurt her and she did not want to purposely hurt him just to spite him. Yet, she still did not understand why he had not touched her in a while and that made her both sad and wary. And she hated feeling that way.

When it seemed his wife was lost in her thoughts, Zuko reached up to wipe her tears away with his thumbs before he gently cupped her face as he continued to hold her gaze. It made him more optimistic that she had not pulled away from his touch as she did before. He could see that Katara was beginning to believe him and he prayed to Agni that he could convince her to trust him again.

“Katara, if only you knew how much you mean to me, how much I love you,” he told her softly, earnestly, as he caressed her wet skin with his thumbs, “Please, don’t cry. I’ve never lied to you. I’ve never betrayed you and I never will.”

He paused briefly as he again tried to find the words to express his ardent feelings for his waterbender. Even after this whole year of being married, he still found it difficult to vocally express the tender, sentimental feelings he had for his wife. But he knew he had to if he wanted to make Katara believe him.
“Don’t renounce my love, Katara,” he continued gently, “Being with you is what makes me happy. I only love, want, and need you. No other woman makes me feel the way you do. Making love is something I’ve only done with you and no one else, especially not with Mai. It doesn’t matter what she says. We had sex a few times and that is it.”

He paused again as his gaze turned soft and passionate, and Katara could not look away. Her heart yearned to understand and wanted reassurance.

“But with you…gods, there are no words to describe it,” he groaned softly, “I’ve made love to you more times than I can count and yet I can remember every incredible encounter, each amazing moment, with perfect clarity. Please believe me. The feelings and sensations my body and heart experience with you is something that has and will never occur with anyone else.”

Katara felt her heart swell with every word Zuko uttered. She stared deeply into his golden eyes as her heart and mind warred with her anger. When Zuko continued to hold her gaze, almost pleadingly, doubt immediately vanished and was replaced by relief. With a small cry, she threw herself at him and he immediately wrapped his arms fiercely around her.

“Oh, Zuko, I’m so sorry. Please forgive me for doubting you,” she whispered remorsefully against his neck as she tightly clung to him.

“I understand why you would come to such conclusions after what happened,” Zuko told her softly as he soothingly ran his hand up and down her back.

He was mentally thanking all the gods that his wife still believed in him. He did not know what he would have done if he had lost her trust in him as well as her love. His wife pulled back slightly and Zuko reluctantly let her move away a little. He stared down into her face, but she averted her eyes as she stared at his chest.

“It’s just…I didn’t know what to think or believe anymore,” Katara said quietly. She licked her suddenly dry lips before she continued, “You’ve been coming to our room late at night when I’m already asleep. And you haven’t…made love to me in a while. I was beginning to think you didn’t want me anymore.”

Zuko frowned guiltily as she repeated her doubts. He could not blame her brief moment of doubt in him for it was his fault for making her feel as if he no longer wanted her in his life, even though it was unintentional. Zuko cupped her cheek gently and she looked up into his eyes once again.
“I apologize if it seemed like I was neglecting you,” he told her sincerely, “I just had so many things going on in my head and I didn’t know what to do to make you feel better with this whole situation about an heir. I’ve been trying to find a way to help us conceive. That’s why I thought the present Shen was talking about had arrived and I told him to place it in our room. I never thought the present he was talking about was Mai.”

Zuko almost spat the noblewoman’s name in his anger at her schemes.

At his explanation, Katara felt her stomach twist with remorse for doubting him. How could she have thought that he would hurt and betray her?

“I feel so horrible for judging you so quickly,” she said shamefully as she again averted her eyes. “How can you love such a doubtful wife?”

Zuko smiled as he lifted her chin up.

“How can you love such a neglectful husband?” he retorted gently.

Katara smiled at him as she leaned into his touch before a small frown marred her brow when Zuko removed his hand and cleared his throat as he looked away.

“What’s wrong?” she asked worriedly.

“There is another reason why I’ve been avoiding you…” he began in a quiet tone.

He was silent for a long moment that Katara began to feel her anxiety rising again. She watched as Zuko shifted uneasily as he again cleared his throat before he continued.

“I am ashamed at the thought that…I could be the one who is…sterile.”

“I don’t believe that!” Katara exclaimed assuredly as she cupped his cheeks so she could turn his face toward hers this time.
Zuko wondered why she sounded so assured of the fact that it was not him who was the problem.

“But I don’t want to find out if it’s true by you impregnating another woman,” she hissed out, her blue eyes flaring.

“I understand how you feel because I sure as hell don’t want to find out if you can become pregnant by some other man,” he growled out. He frowned darkly when he remembered Jianguo’s words from that letter.

“Why would I want to be impregnated by some other man just to see if I wasn’t barren?” Katara asked with a frown.

“You won’t,” Zuko ground out, “I will kill any man who tries to take you away from me.”

Katara smiled at his possessiveness. That was the man she loved and married. Her smile wavered and she shifted slightly, reminding her that they were still sitting on the cold floor.

“Would you…?” she began softly, hesitantly, as she stared into her firebender’s eyes, “Would you still say that even if I never give you a child?”

“Of course,” Zuko responded without any hesitation, “Besides, it is still too early to determine if we really could never have children.”

Katara let out a relieved breath and she relaxed her tensed muscles as she smiled at him. She watched as he returned her smile before he smirked wickedly at her as he stared intensely into her eyes. Katara shivered as her stomach clenched with need. She missed seeing that lustful look on his face.

“We aren’t helping matters either if we don’t make love constantly,” he rumbled huskily.

Katara shuddered in desire before she returned his smirk with a sultry smile.

“Then why don’t you make love to me right now, my lord?” she breathed out as she leaned against him.
Zuko felt heat flare to his groin. He loved it when she called him that when they were alone because it meant she wanted sex.

“Oh, I will, my lady,” he replied throatily.

He slipped his hand behind her head before he swooped down to kiss her lips in a fervent and loving kiss. They both groaned against each other’s lips as desire erupted within them. Mouths pressed hungrily, teeth grazed lips, and tongues stroked and twirled together. It was what both had been longing for, what both needed to reassure themselves of their affections and trust.

As he pulled away to catch his breath, Zuko moved them to their feet. With a smile on her lips, Katara slid her arms around his neck and pressed close against him as she lifted her face up to his. Zuko bent his head down and pressed his mouth back to hers. He grabbed her tightly about her waist, securing her close against him, as he savored the sweet taste of her lips. He took his time in claiming her mouth, unashamedly taking all she willingly offered to him, feeling every inch of her curves, from her breasts to her thighs, pressed tightly against his hard frame, her belly cradling his swelling shaft. He released her waist to trail his hands down her hips, sliding them around until he firmly cupped her lush backside. He heard Katara moan against his mouth as he squeezed and kneaded her firm globes before he lifted her to him so that his cock pressed tightly against her sex.

She drew back slightly from his mouth, not completely away, but enough so that her lips barely touched his, caressingly and teasingly so that their ragged breaths mingled together as passion ignited between them. She smiled as Zuko tried to capture her mouth once again, but she teasingly evaded him as she pulled slightly away from his embrace. She slid her hands away from his neck and ran them down his hard chest before she began searching for the ties that held his robes closed.

Zuko knew what she was trying to do, but it took him a while to force his wandering hands from touching her, from pulling her tightly against him. He watched her through hooded eyes as she quickly divested him of his clothing, pleased at the determinedly eager expression on her face as his flesh became exposed with the removal of each article of clothing. Once he was completely uncovered, she paused a moment to admire all she had exposed. Feeling his heart pounding and his cock throbbing, the firebender again forced his hands not to haul her toward him when her eyes hungrily touched every inch of his naked body.

With a satisfied smile, she stepped closer and kissed him at the same time she tightly grasped his painfully erect shaft. Groaning loudly, Zuko reached for her, but she caught his wrists and stepped back.
“Ah, ah,” she chided him seductively as she let go of his hands.

He watched as her hands began to slowly divest her of her clothing and his breath accelerated as her brown skin became enticingly exposed to his greedy eyes until she was completely bare before she stepped back into his arms. Unable to wait any longer, Zuko scooped her up and quickly carried her to the four-poster bed. He brushed aside the white, gauzy canopy curtains and pulled back the bedcover with one hand before he laid her down upon the bed.

Katara wrapped her arms around his neck as soon as he pressed his body against hers and slowly brushed her lips across his, barely touching them, before she slipped her tongue out to lick his upper lip. As soon as he opened his mouth for her, she slid her tongue inside. The energy of the moon was electrifying every inch of her body, causing heat to gather in her core in a molten pool.

Zuko groaned as Katara touched and caressed every inch of his mouth and his arms tightened around her. He moved his hand down and his fingers pressed against her pussy. He smiled when she moaned into his mouth and he began to firmly rub his fingers against her damp flesh.

“Mm, you’re so wet for me, Katara,” he purred huskily.

The waterbender whimpered against his devouring mouth at the maddeningly delightful touch of his skillful fingers.

The firebender shut his eyes and groaned at her cry as he rubbed up and down her slit, spreading her folds with his fingers, before he began to firmly press circles on her swollen nub with his thumb.

His touch was incredible, but it only seemed to intensify the raging storm wreaking havoc through every inch, every nerve, of her body. Any other day, she would have gladly let him do with her what he will, but at that moment she needed so much more. She needed him—all of him—and she was going to have him.
Zuko was about to reach down to spread his wife’s legs when she suddenly pushed against his shoulders and rolled over on top of him. He stared up at her as he lay flat on his back while she straddled his stomach with a seductive smirk on her lips. He felt his cock twitch when her wet pussy slid against his skin. He was usually the one who was more dominant in their encounters, but he loved it when she was on top and in complete control, for she touched him in the best of ways and gave him immense pleasure.

Katara smiled down at her husband as she ran her hands down his muscled arms. She crawled down over him, letting his straining length slide against her stomach while the chilly air teased her drenched folds. She could feel him straining for her, his shaft was hard and hot against her sex, but she wasn’t going to satisfy him that quickly. No, he needed to know something first. She was going to torture him with pleasure until his mind was completely overwhelmed with desire, with need for her and her alone.

Panting in anticipation and lust, Zuko gazed up at her, amber eyes rooted on luscious breasts before locking with darkening blue eyes. The Fire Lord groaned and closed his eyes when she leaned down and started to kiss and suck on his neck. She moved another inch down and she trailed her wet tongue down his chest. She sat back up and he watched as she lifted a hand up to her mouth.

She let out a cool breath against her fingers and a thin layer of ice coated them. Zuko gasped when she pressed her ice-tipped fingers against his hot chest, then he jerked when she circled them around his small nipples. She teased them for a moment before she pulled away, then she leaned down to engulf one of his nipples into the warmth of her mouth. Zuko’s head fell back at the amazing contrasts of temperatures and the sensation of her lips and tongue caressing him. She pulled away and trailed her lips across his chest before she captured his other chilled nipple into her hot mouth.

Katara smiled when her husband groaned her name. She continued to tease him for a moment before she continued to crawl down his body. His fingers clung tightly onto her hips and she arched her spine, stretching like a puma-cat over his prone body. His cock jerked and throbbed, trapped between her warm thighs, pressed against her slick folds, and she grinned down at him as he groaned from such sensual torture. She pressed against him, but moved quickly down when he tried to angle his hips in order to slip inside her.

“Not yet,” she murmured sensually, grinning when he let out a frustrated sound.

She trailed her lips down his chest and paused to press light kisses on the scar marring his abdomen, knowing how much it touched him when she caressed his scars, before she continued down her erotic path. She sat back between his parted legs and hungrily eyed his length straining for her touch. Looking back at his face, she saw that he was looking at her with lustful anticipation, his golden eyes dark and gleaming. Gazing back at him just as lustfully, she reached out and tightly grasped his turgid erection and pumped firmly.
“Hm, you’re so hard for me, Zuko,” she purred, repeating his earlier sentiment.

“K-Katara,” he groaned and his hips jerked into her touch.

The brunette basked in the glow of triumph at the groans and growls she elicited from her firebender. She continued stroking his length, switching from a slow, torturous pace to a fast and hard rhythm, before she brought her head down and licked his wet tip, savoring the salty taste of his essence. Another groan fell from his lips. Katara trailed her tongue along his length before she swirled it around the mushroomed head as a plan to make him insane with need surfaced in her mind.

“Yessss,” Zuko growled at the amazing sensation of her wet, warm mouth.

He watched as his waterbender lifted her blue eyes and locked them with his before she opened her mouth wider and pushed him deeper into her mouth that he felt his cock pass the back of her mouth and into her throat.

“Oh, gods!” he rasped loudly, his eyes wide and his chest heaving at the incredible pleasure. His hand instinctively cupped the back of her head to keep her in place. She had never taken him that deeply into her mouth before and he could only thank his lucky stars for her passionate nature.

Katara paused for a moment to adjust. She ignored her body’s natural reaction to dislodge the foreign invader as she pushed the mushroom tip further and further back into her mouth before moving her head back up. She heard Zuko groan her name and she sucked on his head, swallowing the drops of his seed that seeped out before she engulfed his entire length into her mouth and down her throat.

His hands grasped the back of her head more firmly, fisting her long hair tightly with his fingers, as she eagerly sucked his cock. He gasped when she increased her pace, striking him against the back of her throat before coming back up and repeating the excruciatingly pleasurable process. His eyes rolled back and he groaned her name when she again took the entire length of his girth down her throat that her soft lips tickled the hairs of his groin. He grasped her hair more tightly, unwilling to leave the warm wetness of her mouth, and she responded by pulling and massaging his balls. He had to clench his teeth to stop himself from coming right then and there.
Agni, could she be any more perfect? His wife’s hot, tight holes surely were gateways to paradise, the young Fire Lord thought dazedly. She was passionate and bold in their intimacy, which only heightened his pleasure and need. The blue-eyed waterbender who had shoved his shaft so far down her throat was surely a sex goddess. Truly, no mere concubine would be capable of eliciting such desire in his body nor capturing his heart so securely as Katara. He was completely and irrevocably devoted and infatuated with his waterbending wife.

Groaning and grunting as she continued to move her mouth over him, Zuko lifted his head to shoot a small flame from his mouth as he grabbed the bedsheets beside him tightly in order to release some of the tension building within him. The moaning and mewling sounds his wife made caused an exquisite blaze to shoot down his erection and his hips jerked up as his climax rushed to the surface. Suddenly his hips were pulled down by an invisible force and Katara quickly slipped her mouth away from his straining arousal before he could erupt in rapture.

“Wait...what?” he panted in frustration as he tried to force his hips to follow her, but he could not move them at all. He frowned at her, knowing she was using her bloodbending to keep him still.

She giggled huskily at his expression and he glowered at her. He just knew she was paying him back for all the times he teased her by stopping when she was about to orgasm. The vengeful but delicious minx.

Letting go of his hips, Katara licked her lips before she gave him a sexy smile that caused her husband to growl her name. Slowly, teasingly, she crawled back up his body, trailing her tongue on his heating skin as she went. Once she was straddling his hips, she lifted her head to gaze lustfully into his eyes before she kissed him hard.

Zuko groaned as he tangled his tongue around hers. Deliberately, his waterbender pressed her body against his so that their skin touched erotically and a strangled moan escaped his throat. Her skin was like flaming silk as she used her entire body to caress his. He felt as if his inner fire was going to rage out of control and incinerate the entire palace if she did not take him inside her soon. His heart started to pound as she reached a hand down to grasp his cock and pressed it to her opening.

He groaned a strangled, “Katara.”

Katara paused briefly at his desperate plea before she grabbed a fistful of his hair and angled his face up to hers as she stared deeply into his golden eyes.
“You are mine, Zuko” she stated firmly, throatily, “Forever mine and no one else’s.”

Then she swooped down to capture his mouth in a fiercely passionate kiss that stole his breath away. The possessiveness of her words and tone only intensified Zuko’s lust and need tenfold. He understood now what she was doing, what she needed from him—not just physically but emotionally as well—because it was how he had felt towards her many times before, and he was going to give himself completely to her need. He ravaged her mouth as hungrily as she did his, urging her silently to take him inside her, to make him hers.

Moaning, Katara pressed his tip inside her before she paused, then she slowly, very slowly, impaled herself on him inch by delicious inch, taking him in, relishing the sensation of being stretched, in the feeling of complete fullness. She heard Zuko groan his pleasure and her stomach clenched in lust. She continued easing herself on him until she was completely impaled and she squeezed her wet walls tightly around him.

Zuko’s tongue thrust deep into her mouth and his hips surged up into her, eliciting a pleased gasp from her. The feeling of her body welcoming him almost lovingly inside her was sheer bliss. They immersed themselves in the absolute connection of each other. The intense sensation overwhelmed them both as much as it had the first time they were joined.

Needing to touch her, the Fire Lord reached out to grab her hips, but he frowned when he found that he couldn’t move his arms. His eyes flew open when he realized that he couldn’t move his entire body from his neck down at all. He pulled away from her mouth to look at her questioningly and he saw her smirking wickedly at him.

“No touching just yet, my sexy firebender,” she purred as she ran her hands down his muscular arms.

“Katara,” he groaned as his heart pounded hard in his chest. Since it was a night of a full moon, he knew Katara would be more energized and aggressive in her lovemaking and he loved it, but dammit he needed to touch her.

Slowly, Katara lifted herself before she slammed back down over him. They both cried out at the pleasure. The waterbender pressed her hands on his shoulders and began to ride him hard and fast. She moaned loudly at the amazing friction of his cock sliding against her walls and his upper thighs slapping against her ass. She could feel her juices pouring out of her and onto her husband.

Unable to move, his body in utter control by his wife, Zuko could only watch as Katara rode him as if her life depended upon it. He watched as she threw her head back, her hair flying around her, her face contorted in pleasure, and wailed his name. His fingers twitched, needing to touch her, but even in her passion, Katara firmly kept hold of his blood. He could only admire her concentration and power. His eyes fell away from her face and became riveted at the delectable sight of her breasts bouncing at her movements before he trailed them down her body. He became mesmerized by the sight of his cock, glistening with her cream, disappearing and reappearing from her pussy. He could feel her juices sliding down his cock and coalescing on his groin. He panted harshly at the pleasure building and scorching within him.

Once she had established the rhythm she preferred, Katara let go of her hold of his blood, wanting him to participate in their lovemaking, needing him to enjoy the pleasure and connection with her.

“Touch me.” Her command came out as a hiss, which caused Zuko’s groin to tighten in lust.

She moaned his name when his hands immediately flew up to touch her. His large, calloused hands were like velvety fire—stimulating, rough, and reckless. They roamed all over her body all at once, stimulating, squeezing, and caressing her breasts, hips, and backside, kindling millions of electrifying sparks that slowly fused into a wild, immense inferno.

“Z-Zuko,” she panted and moaned, her breathing erratic and loud.

She leaned back over him until her breasts touched his sweaty chest and quicken her pace. Zuko growled out her name as she slammed down on top of him over and over, causing the mattress to shake and tremble. Neither one of them noticed nor cared, too lost in each other, in the moment, and their pleasure. Only with each other could they give this much. No one else could touch and hold, no other could so brazenly claim. No other could tear them apart.

As their bodies joined unreservedly, profoundly, in complete harmony, Zuko grabbed tightly onto his wife’s firm rear cheeks and pushed her harder onto him at the same time he surged his hips up into her. They both cried out at the pleasure, the sound of their skin slapping loudly resounded in the room, intermingled with their ragged breathing, and the rustling of the bedsheets.

Katara captured his mouth once again, melding her lips with his, just as her body did his. As their mouths and tongues touched, the waterbender let all the troubles from the past, the problems of the present, and the uncertainty of the future disappear to make way for the moment she was sharing with her husband, giving herself completely to him as he was to her.

This was what he had wanted this night, the absolute, unrestrained giving of each other. His hands touching, relishing on her soft skin, her beautiful curves. Her hands on his own flesh, her body—wet and hot—clinging securely onto him, embracing him, welcoming him deep into her body, into her heart.

Over and over, and over again.

Katara gasped loudly as she felt her orgasm approaching, her stomach tightening, and her passage spasming in anticipation for that glorious end. She pulled away from her firebender’s fiery kisses and gazed down into his piercing golden eyes with passion and need written across her flushed features.

“You are mine, Zuko!” she growled throatily, assuredly, her tone firm and commanding. “Mine!”

She impaled herself harder onto him at the same time he thrust his hips up and undulated under her.

“Ahhhhhh!” she screamed, arching her back, digging her fingers onto his sides as she felt herself shatter into a million pieces.

She heard him growl her name and felt his hands clamp tightly onto her hips, but all she could focus on was the devastating tidal wave that was ruthlessly drowning her in scorching ecstasy.

As his waterbender continued screaming her pleasure, Zuko shifted her through her orgasmic stupor and swiftly flipped her onto her back, planted his knees between her parted legs, and plunged himself again and again inside her as his sac began to tighten.

“My turn,” he growled out.

The sound of his baritone, rough and deep with desire, and the sight of him still thrusting into her, caused the fire of need inside her to flare back to life. She wrapped her legs around his pounding hips and threw her arms around his neck. When he seized her lips at the same time he brought a hand down between them to furiously rub her clit, Katara arched into him as another orgasm rolled through her like a rampaging hurricane.

“Oh gods, Zuko!” she wailed his name in utter euphoria.
Zuko gasped as her slick pussy tightened almost painfully around his throbbing cock. As she shattered in his arms, her scream muffled by their kiss, he let go, unwilling to break the connection that melded her pleasure with his. He pushed his shaft as deeply as he could go inside her and exploded into a blaze of ecstasy, relishing at the passion fusing their hearts and souls together.

“Katara!” he roared her name as his hot seed splashed continuously into her, his cock pulsing and twitching with the pleasure of it all, as he held tightly onto her, unable to let her go.

Moaning, the waterbender watched the almost pained expression on his face, enthralled at the sight of his tightly closed eyes and bared teeth, as rapture overwhelmed him. He held himself still and shuddering over her, and her heart pounded hard in her chest at the emotions swelling within her. At that moment, being witness to his vulnerability, watching the state to which she had reduced him to, made it more clear to her that he was completely and utterly hers. He was hers. Hers to hold, protect, touch, and most of all, love.

“Mine,” she murmured as her arms tightened around him.

“Yours,” Zuko rasped as his body finally relaxed from his incredible orgasm.

He gazed intensely yet tenderly into her azure eyes as he breathed her name between soft pants. When he bent down to brush his lips reverently, lovingly, along her face before kissing her lips, she knew he understood for it was how he felt as well. When he leaned slightly back to look at her, a few tears escaped her eyes.

“Don’t ever leave me,” she whispered, “Don’t ever stop loving me.”

“Never,” he intoned endearingly, ardently, as he reached up to cup her cheek, brushing one tear away with his thumb. “The day I stop loving you is the day I cease to exist.”

He leaned down to press his lips to hers, a kiss both tender and impassioned. She returned his kiss just as fervently.

“I love you,” she breathed against his mouth.

“And I you.”
The night was dark and the stars sparkled brightly in the sky. Since it was a full moon, they took advantage of the energy coursing through the waterbender to catch up on the time they had lost. She was like a night goddess, seductively calling out to him, making him lose his mind to need and desire, commanding he give her everything she wanted.

Throughout the entire night, the sounds of their lovemaking sounded in the room, proving again and again their unbreakable bond.

“Did ya hear ‘bout how da Fire Lord angrily kicked Lady Mai out of da palace yesterday when she tried to throw ‘erself at him?” a stableman asked the servants working in the huge kitchen as he ate a piece of bread with cheese.

“Yeah, I heard Shen and Kuo dragged her out kicking and screaming,” a short-haired maidservant spoke up with a small laugh.

“I knew Lady Mai was full o’ shit when she said da Fire Lord wanted ta make ‘er his royal concubine,” the old cook spoke up as he added more wood to one of the blazing ovens. “I didn’t believe ‘er for a second.”

The servants had never liked the haughty noblewoman. She had ordered them to do her every bidding and always treated them coldly and harshly as if they were animals and not human beings. They had been too glad at the news that the Fire Lord ended his relationship with her in order to pursue a better woman. Although they had been apprehensive at first with their new Fire Lady, wondering how she would treat them, they were happy to realize that the waterbender had a caring and compassionate heart. She treated them with kindness and for that they respected and adored her despite the fact that she was a waterbender from the Southern Water Tribe.

“Fire Lord Zuko would never throw out such a wonderful woman as Fire Lady Katara,” an older woman of the higher staff said as she carefully polished the wine cups. “It is so very obvious how much he loves his wife despite his taciturn personality.”

The stableman nodded, the short-haired maid frowned thoughtfully, the cook grinned before everybody immediately agreed.

“Speaking of which, has Fire Lord Zuko finally let Fire Lady Katara out of their rooms yet?” another young servant asked with a waggle of his eyebrows. “The Fire Lord canceled all his meetings and they’ve been locked up in there all day.”
The male servants gathered in the kitchen chuckled suggestively and the female ones giggled as they imagined what the royal couple was doing holed up in their rooms without bothering to make an appearance. Jiao had been sent for to take them a late breakfast and then lunch. The head cook was already preparing a large tray of food to be sent to them for dinner, which the short-haired servant and a younger maid were to take because Jiao had been given the day off to enjoy with her family since the Fire Lady didn’t need her.

“Well, I’m just glad that they are happily together again,” the older woman said with a smile.

The servants immediately agreed before they quickly rushed to their posts when a stern head servant entered the kitchen to check on them.

The servants, Iroh, Ursa, and Jee were glad to see that, although the royal couple returned to their duties the following days, they made time for each other at meals before retiring early to their royal chambers. They were all relieved that it seemed that whatever had troubled the Fire Lord and his wife had gone away and they were enjoying each other like newlyweds.

Zuko finally had the physicians check him to see if the problem might be him, which shocked and scandalized the Council when they found out. But the physicians had found nothing wrong with him and stated that he seemed capable of siring children. He had been skeptical of their response at first, thinking that maybe they were just saying so in order not to put the blame on their Fire Lord, but they had assured him they were being truthful. They had even bet on their lives that if he would bed a concubine at that moment, he would impregnate her immediately. Zuko, of course, had refused to take on that bet and believed their words. Unfortunately, the attention was focused once again on Katara.

One nice and warm day, after her practice with Ursa and Jee, Katara quickly made her way to the room she shared with her husband to bathe and changed for dinner. Zuko had promised to give her a romantic dinner for the two of them in the Royal Palace Garden’s veranda and she could not wait to be with him. It seemed as if going through those weeks of unwilling separation had made them crave being around each other constantly like the first few months of their marriage. She loved how attentive he was being and she was sure he equally enjoyed how much she showered him with her love and affection.

Her thoughts shifted as she remembered her lessons with Jee and Ursa that day. She had noticed that they kept stealing glances at one another when they thought the other wasn’t looking. She had been too preoccupied wallowing in her sadness and depression to pay them much heed, but now that she was feeling better she finally focused her attention on them. Her hopes rose for their mutual happiness that she could not help but give subtle hints about Jee’s feelings and Ursa’s possible acceptance to a new romance.
“Fire Lady Katara,” the sounds of Jiao’s voice and baby giggles brought Katara out of her thoughts.

The waterbender turned and smiled when she saw her maidservant quicken her pace to catch up to her. Ichiro, her son, bounced giddily in his mother’s arms.

“Hello, Jiao,” Katara greeted cheerfully.

When Jiao finally stopped before her, Katara reached out to tickle Ichiro’s chubby chin. The dark-haired baby squealed and laughed as he moved his arms in his delight.

“I haven’t seen you and Ichiro in a while,” the waterbender said after she cooed at the baby for a while.

“I apologize for being absent, my lady,” Jiao said as she smiled at her son’s antics, “Ichiro was sick for a few days and I couldn’t leave him in the care of anyone else. I’m sorry.”

“Don’t worry about it,” Katara responded, “I’m glad to see Ichiro is fine.”

“Thank you, but I really do feel bad for neglecting my duties,” the servant replied as she gave a small bow in apology.

“Again, don’t worry about it,” the brunette waterbender said as she waved her apology aside before a small blush surfaced on her cheeks as she muttered, “I’ve been too distracted to really notice anyway.”

La, she could not wait for more of those distractions—distractions caused by Zuko. Katara felt her lower stomach clench in need once again and a small grin appeared on her face.

A small, amused giggle escaped Jiao as she rocked her son in her arm.

“I know, just like the entire palace knows,” she said with a smile.
“Really?” Katara asked in mortification.

“Yes, but we are all glad to see both you and our Fire Lord happy again,” Jiao responded sincerely.

A small sighed escaped the waterbender as she began walking down the corridor, motioning for her maidservant to follow her.

“Things are better, but not as much as we wish because of the lack of an heir and the demand for Zuko to choose a royal concubine,” Katara said sadly.

“Do not lose hope, my lady,” the older woman said kindly before she softly added “And never fear that your husband would betray you. He loves you too much to hurt you in such a way.”

“I know,” Katara replied with a smile and her heart lightened in her happiness.

“Besides, there are other ways for Fire Lord Zuko to have an heir,” Jiao continued thoughtfully as she shifted her fussing son to her hip.

“There are?” the waterbender asked curiously.

“Yes, although the Court Council will continue to push for Fire Lord Zuko’s heir to be his own flesh and blood,” Jiao began before she continued, “But there is the option of adoption. Or perhaps Lady Ursa could have another child and Fire Lord Zuko can name his half-sibling his heir.”

Katara frowned thoughtfully as they continued walking slowly down the empty corridors. She had never thought of those options, though she was sure the Court Council will keep insisting Zuko sire an heir. She glanced at Jiao when the woman chuckled softly and she saw a grin had appeared on her friend’s face.

“Maybe General Iroh could sire another son,” Jiao said, “He still charms many women despite his age.”

Katara laughed and Ichiro gurgled happily when both women giggled for a few more seconds. The waterbender paused in her amusement when she felt Jiao leaned in close to her with a conspiring expression on her face.

“Kuo told me what happened that night with the misunderstanding about Lady Mai,” Jiao began in a low tone in case anyone heard her, “though he told me not to say anything to anyone.” She paused to roll her eyes as she continued, “He should know I would immediately tell my lady.”

The waterbender was grateful for her loyalty and she smiled.

“What happened?” she asked softly.

Katara had been curious ever since Zuko came to find her, but she had decided not to pester him too much once he reassured her of his love and passion for her. Jiao cleared her throat as she prepared herself before she began to talk. By the time they arrived at the royal bedchambers, Jiao revealed everything. Once Jiao finished by telling her how the Fire Lord threw Mai out of the room before he went in search of his wife, Katara felt her heart swell with love for her husband and the way he had defended their love and marriage. She wished she could have punched the arrogant noblewoman’s straight nose before she was thrown out.

“I hope Mai has learned her lesson,” Katara spoke up as they entered the bedchamber.

“One can only hope, my lady,” Jiao responded.

They laughed and Ichiro giggled and babbled with them. Jiao laughed as she cooed at her baby and Katara could only hope that she could one day hold her and Zuko’s child the way Jiao did her son.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Another week later found Katara and Zuko lying on their bed with her head resting on his chest and his arm wrapped around her middle. Unlike other times, they were both clothed, their coverlet drawn up to their chests to ward off the chill of fall. With his other hand, Zuko squeezed her smaller one, which she had laid upon the scar on his abdomen, in comfort. He heard her let out a small sigh. He could feel her disappointment and sadness, and his heart tightened in his chest with helplessness.

Her monthly bleeding had arrived that morning.

Another month of frustration.
Although she had tried to keep her mood up throughout the day, Zuko knew she was feeling discouraged, especially since the advisors had called them into another meeting later in the day to once again demand they stop being stubborn and do what was right for the nation. When they had attacked his honor and called him a disgrace, he had jumped up to his feet in anger and almost spat fire from his mouth at their words. Their argument had escalated to such a degree that the room had turned into a large furnace with everybody’s heated emotions. Katara had to intervene by dousing them all with water and scolded them. All the men, including himself, had felt properly chastised, but refused to relent. He knew if it had been any other situation, Katara would have laughed in their faces and defied their demand. But since this affected the welfare of an entire country, Katara was taking their demands really hard.

She had been silent since they had lain down on the bed and he wondered what she was thinking. Slowly, caressingly, he ran his hand down her side before he moved it up to play with her unbound hair, wrapping the soft curls around his fingers as he breathed in her scent.

Katara let out a soft sigh at her husband’s caressing hand and his warmth, but she could not silence her inner thoughts.

I hate being the cause of Zuko’s problems with his advisors and courtiers because he still hasn’t sired an heir. Or since I haven’t given him one.

She frowned as her heart ached at the last thought.

Since it seems as if I wouldn’t be conceiving children soon...or at all...I...can’t dismiss the idea of Zuko siring a child...with another woman.

She bit her lip. It might pain her to even think of having to share her husband with another woman, but she knew when she married him, she was not only marrying the man but his position too. And that position demanded a child, an heir.

If I didn’t have to see that...other woman...If he kept her far away from our rooms, I could almost pretend she didn’t exist. I could possibly bear it, if it meant that he would no longer have to be harassed by his people, his counselors.

Her frowned deepened and her chest tightened.

As long as it’s Zuko’s child, I would love it as my own. But once the woman gives birth to his heir, that woman would have to be gone from the palace…

But would that be fair? Could she live with taking a child away from its mother? She knew she could not bear the pain of being ripped away from a child she carried for nine months. Could she be that cruel to someone else?

And what of Zuko? If she allowed this to happen, would she begin to resent him? Would she start to hate him when she saw Zuko love a child that was supposed to be hers?

She sighed as she knew that was exactly what would happen. She would never be okay with the thought that Zuko had been intimate with another woman, that he had created something, shared something deeply, with another woman.

He was hers and she refused to give him up.

“Zuko?” she called out in a low, soft tone.

“Hm?” he murmured as he continued touching her hair.

Zuko’s fingers froze in her hair. Frowning, he brought down his hand to wrap it around her middle once again.

“Katara, there is nothing to be sorry for. This isn’t your fault.”

“I…this isn’t about…that’s not why I am apologizing,” she began. “I know your duty to your country. I know what you must do…even if it is without me. But…I can’t, won’t be okay with you taking a concubine. It’s selfish, I know, but the thought of sharing you with someone else…It kills me inside,” she explained in a strained voice.

Zuko rolled them over so he was staring down at her. Katara stared back into his warm eyes.
“I don’t think it’s selfish,” he told her, “It’s understandable.”

Katara frowned at him and opened her mouth to refute, but Zuko did not let her continue as he firmly shook his head.

“I’m glad that you want to help me, Katara, but I wouldn’t appreciate it if you were willing to throw me into another woman’s arms,” he said firmly.

“La knows I don’t want to!” the waterbender exclaimed heatedly before she paused, and in a quieter tone, she added, “But...I also don’t want to ruin your chance of fathering a child.”

“If you’re not their mother, then I don’t want children,” the Fire Lord replied adamantly, his eyes piercing and intense.

“But—”

Zuko swiftly leaned down and kissed her firmly, pressing his lips hard against hers to silence her. Katara stiffened at first, stubborn and upset at the whole situation, but gradually she relented and kissed him back. He kissed her softly, caressing her lips and tongue in a slow, tender dance as his hand roamed softly along her curves.

Zuko realized that Katara was saying these things because of her disappointment of waking up that morning with evidence of her monthly bleeding. But he wanted to dispel her doubts once and for all. When Katara sighed softly against his mouth and reached a hand up to grasp his long hair, the Fire Lord slowly pulled away and gazed down at her. The waterbender opened her eyes to look at him and her heart fluttered at his warm, intent gaze.

“Katara,” he said softly, his voice now a quiet plea, “can you see my point of view? Although I love the Fire Nation, I don’t want to bed another woman and father a child on her. The mere idea sickens me.”

Katara felt her mind ease at his words.

“I only want you, so no matter how much trouble and hassle the advisors and courtiers give me, I’m not going to do what they want,” he said firmly.
Katara sagged in relief beneath him before she smiled at him. Zuko was hers and the world would come to an end before she allowed him to be taken from her.

“I know,” she replied confidently, her blue eyes shining brightly.

“Good,” Zuko said as he returned her smile, glad to know he was able to lift her spirits.

He moved so he was lying beside her once again and brought her close to him. Katara sighed contentedly as she laid her head on his upper arm and wrapped her arm around his middle.

“I won’t give up without a fight, Katara,” he told her as he squeezed her waist, “I’m sure we will find a solution one of these days.”

Katara smiled at his confident tone as she allowed her fingers to absentmindedly trace the muscles of his abdomen. Her fingers softly caressed the scar etched onto his skin as her mind wandered to that day under the Catacombs of Ba Sing Se where she had proposed to heal Zuko’s scar with the healing water of the Spirit Oasis. She had not visited the Northern Water Tribe in a few years. Her fingers froze as another thought popped into her head.

“Why didn’t I think of that before?!” she exclaimed in disbelief.

“Think of what?” Zuko asked curiously.

The waterbender lifted herself so that she could look down at her confused husband. Her eyes were wide and excited and a large smile spread across her lips.

“The Northern Water Tribe is known for its healers!” she said excitedly. “I know of few healers from the time I visited the North Pole with Sokka and Aang. Maybe I can ask one of them for help. They might have a solution!”

Zuko’s brow furrowed as he thought over her words. The best Fire Nation physicians had been unable to find the problem and fix it, but perhaps they needed another type of healer with different medical methods.
“You’re right,” the firebender finally said as a smile curled his lips. “Maybe we can even make the trip to the Northern Water Tribe, just to escape court for a while.”

“Yes,” Katara replied enthusiastically. “I’ll send a letter with the request.”

Katara settled back against him and Zuko wrapped his arm tightly around her.

Could a possible solution be found soon?

Would they finally be able to hold their child in their arms?

As they laid wrapped in each other’s arms, their hearts felt much lighter as they thought of the possibilities.

Wary eyes darted around the kitchen, assessing the situation before making a move. The sounds of pots and plates being handled, combined with the head cook’s loud command for the kitchen staff to move faster, resounded in the huge kitchen. Other servants scurried back and forth, carrying trays with food out the door toward the family dining room where the royal family was waiting.

Nobody paid attention to the woman that innocently approached the teapot. It was always the same. No one spared a glance her way whenever she moved about the kitchen, nor did they mind when she sometimes helped them out with the food, and she was thankful for that for it made her task much easier. Someone called out to her and she looked up to give them a small smile as they passed her.

She looked surreptitiously around once again before she casually reached into the hidden pocket inside her tunic and extracted a small pouch. She quickly untied the strings and poured its contents into the tea before quickly hiding the empty pouch once again, watching as the contents mixed perfectly. She did not glance around again so as to not make others suspicious, and when nobody confronted her, she picked up the teapot and placed it on the table next to everything else that was to be taken up.

She suppressed a smile as she again glanced down into the teapot.

Soon.
Soon everything she hoped for would become a reality.
Two weeks of contentment—if not utter bliss—passed by for the royal couple as they waited for the book Zuko had ordered from the University of Ba Sing to arrive. After stalling for a while, Katara finally sent a request for aid to the healers of the Northern Water Tribe. Although she knew the old healers could help determine if there was a problem with either of them, Katara could not help feeling a little embarrassed to have them know she might be infertile. But she was willing to do anything that might help her and Zuko.

Although they spent more time with each other, the constant reminders of the Court Council and the requests of the nobility for Zuko to choose a concubine made their happiness incomplete. Despite that, however, they tried very hard not to let that bring them down. It certainly did not affect their more intimate moments and they were constantly at each other like they had been months before. They especially looked forward to that day of the week when Zuko drank Iroh’s aphrodisiac tea that forced them to spend half the day shut in their rooms enjoying each other’s bodies until the effect left Zuko’s blood.

Katara hummed in satisfaction as the sweet, soothing jasmine tea slid down her throat. She was currently drinking tea with Iroh in the private garden’s veranda as she listened amusedly to a tale of his youth. She loved the old man as her own uncle. He had been a great listener and companion during these past few, trying weeks.

“How is your plot to get Ursa and Jee together coming along, Katara?” he asked with a knowing grin.

The brunette’s eyes widened at his words.

“How did you know about that?” she asked incredulously.

Iroh laughed as he stroked the small beard on his chin.

“I am a very observant person, my dear,” he replied amusedly before he cheekily added, “Besides, I have experience because of Zuko and you.”

Katara shook her head as she grinned at him before she sobered up.
“Ursa and Jee are being very stubborn,” she muttered as she crossed her arms over her chest, “Jee’s madly in love with her, but he refuses to tell her, and Ursa refuses to believe she could have a second chance at love.”

“That’s understandable,” Iroh said in his usual calm tone, “Ursa is above Jee’s station, so it is logical he might think he doesn’t have a chance with her. And with her experience with Ozai, it’s also understandable why Ursa might feel hesitant to start a new relationship.”

“I know, Uncle Iroh,” Katara said sympathetically before she added hopefully, “But if she could only see that Jee is a good man and he loves her, she will be much happier.”

“I understand you want to help them, my dear, but you must remember that the heart is what counts,” Iroh advised her gently, “You should not be disappointed if they do not end up together, as you hope.”

“I know,” the waterbender replied with a nod as she took another small sip of her tea.

Iroh also took a sip of the jasmine tea, one of his favorites, and gazed attentively at his niece-in-law as she debated what cookie to eat next. He was extremely glad to see that both she and Zuko were content again, but he noticed that they were not completely happy. He had tried to talk to his nephew about their troubles, but Zuko had refused to say anything, just as Iroh had expected, so he had tried to comfort his niece-in-law as best as he could. Taking another sip, Iroh let out a pleased sigh at the delicious hot liquid before he placed his teacup down and looked back at the waterbender, who was now nibbling at an almond cookie.

“How are things nowadays, my dear?” he asked softly.

Katara took a quick sip of her tea to clear her throat before she looked up to give her uncle-in-law a small smile.

“Everything is better,” she began before she sighed as she continued slowly, “but I still feel bad that Zuko is getting harassed by the advisors because he refuses to take a royal concubine.”

She paused as she grasped the warm teacup in her hands and stared out into the garden.

“Sometimes I wonder if I’m being selfish for refusing Zuko the chance to have an heir with another woman when I might not be able to give him children,” she said quietly, sadly, and her hands clamped around the teacup.

Reaching across the small table, Iroh gently patted her hand.

“It is a complicated situation and an even more difficult decision, my dear,” he acknowledged sympathetically before he gently added, “But it is understandable to not want your spouse to bed someone else, especially since you come from a very monogamous culture. But you should not worry. Zuko would never heed the advisors if their ideas go against his morals and he would never sully his honor by dishonoring your marriage. Zuko loves you too much to hurt you in such a manner. He will find a way, you’ll see.”

She smiled at him and nodded before she had to suppress a grin as his last words reminded her of what Jiao had told her. She wouldn’t be surprised if Iroh were to father a child at his age, though the thought was both adorable and a little disturbing. She shook the thought away as she again smiled at the old man.

“You’re right,” she added, “And maybe because of your tea, Zuko and I will one of these days create a child.”

“Is my tea really helping that much?” Iroh asked with a surprised, raised eyebrow.

A small blush stole across the waterbender’s cheeks as she looked down at the yellowish liquid in her teacup as memories of those frenzied, passionate moments with her almost deliriously aroused, insatiable husband rushed to her mind.

“Thanks to your…uh…aphrodisiac tea, our, uh, intimate moments are…more intense and…well, let’s just say it really works,” she muttered bashfully.

“Oh? What—?” Iroh was beginning to ask, but he was interrupted when his nephew strode into the veranda.

Iroh and Katara glanced up to greet him, but their words failed them and their eyes widened at the huge smile of triumph on his usually impassive face.

“What is it, Zuko?” Katara asked curiously as she tilted her head to the side.
Zuko quickly walked toward her and sat down beside her as he placed a large, heavy tome on the table before them. Its green covering was a little tattered and the pages yellow, indicating how old the book was.

“The book I borrowed from the University of Ba Sing Se Library finally arrived this morning. This book is said to contain the most extensive knowledge of the human body,” he replied coolly, though his excitement could be detected in his tone. He opened the book where a tied piece of red silk marked the page and he pointed at a particular paragraph.

His smile widening, he added, “It has an entire section on reproduction. I’ve been going through it for a few hours and I found a section that mentions a concoction that can help with fertility. It is said to be highly effective.”

“Here, let me see,” the waterbender said as she motioned for the book.

Zuko passed it to her and she eagerly read the contents. Katara’s hopeful expression quickly disappeared as she finished reading and she sighed sadly. The mixture looked very similar to the herbs Yin-Min had given her before.

Zuko’s smile dropped at his wife’s sullen reaction and he frowned.

“What’s wrong, Katara?” he asked.

“It won’t work,” she said quietly as she handed him the book back.

Zuko’s frown deepened at her sad words and Iroh glanced at his niece-in-law curiously.

“Why do you say that?” the Fire Lord asked.

“The physicians gave me similar teas they were sure would work, but it obviously didn’t,” she muttered before she added, “Besides, I had been drinking a similar herbal blend to help with fertility that Yin-Min gave me months before.”
She sighed as she stared at her hands. She did not want Zuko to see her disappointment and wretchedness.

The frown on Zuko’s face only deepened more. Why did she not tell him?

“Since when have you been taking it?” he asked.

“Since our wedding night, before I agreed with Yin-Min a few months ago to stop taking it when it was obvious it wasn’t working,” Katara muttered sadly.

Zuko’s shoulders slumped and he gripped the thick book tightly in his hands after he closed it slowly. He had been sure this would have been the solution to their problem, but it seemed they were back to the same place as before. Mentally shaking his head, Zuko straightened his back, unwilling to give up. He was determined to find another solution.

Glancing briefly away from his suddenly silent wife, Zuko noticed that his uncle seemed to be deep in thought and he wondered what the old man was thinking about. His attention again shifted to his waterbender when she gracefully stood up and he glanced up at her with a frown.

“I just remembered that I promised to help Yin-Min today,” she said softly.

Before they could say anything, she quickly made her way to the opened doors and stepped down the veranda. They silently watched her go and Zuko let out a dejected sigh as he ran his hand over his pulled back hair. A few long strands fell over his shoulder at his action.

“What is on your mind, Zuko?” Iroh asked after a moment of heavy silence as he observed his frowning nephew.

Zuko was silent for a moment longer as he tried to keep his thoughts to himself before he let out another sigh as he looked up at his uncle. He needed to talk to someone and he knew his wise uncle was the best person to give him advice as well as some assurance.

“I don’t for a second believe that Katara could be barren,” Zuko began resolutely before he forced himself to continue, “But perhaps the problem lies with me.”
“What do you mean?” Iroh asked with a frown at his beloved nephew’s despondent tone.

“What if I’m the one who is…sterile?” the young man forced himself to say the dreadful word through clenched teeth.

“Nonsense!” Iroh exclaimed loudly as he waved his hand aside to dismiss his nephew’s words. “You are young, strong, and virile! The men of our family are known for their fertile seed. If it wasn’t for contraceptive potions, the world would have been overrun with our line by now,” the old man jested.

“Then why haven’t I gotten Katara pregnant?” Zuko growled out, ignoring his uncle’s poor joke.

“There must be a reasonable explanation,” Iroh said musingly.

Zuko frowned since he did not know what other explanation there could be.

“There is something else on your mind, isn’t there, Nephew?” Iroh asked when Zuko had remained silent for a long moment.

The Fire Lord frowned as he tried to give voice to his real great fear. He clenched his jaw and balled his hands as he continued to remain silent before he finally relented.

“Maybe…” Zuko began before he paused as he swallowed thickly. Clearing his throat, he continued in a low tone, “Maybe I’ve been too selfish in my desire to make Katara my wife, and now she is suffering for it. I…fear she will regret marrying me.”

Zuko watched as his uncle shook his head before the old man looked at him confidently.

“Katara may be going through a difficult time now, as are you, but I’m sure if she could choose between you and getting her old life back, she would definitely choose you,” he said calmly.

“How can you be so sure, Uncle?” the younger firebender asked exasperatedly as he again ran his hand over his head in his frustration.
“Because she loves you, Zuko,” Iroh responded simply.

Zuko paused at his uncle’s words before he sighed a little in relief as he felt his fear and uncertainties lessen. He looked at his uncle when Iroh gripped his shoulder and squeezed comfortably.

“Do not worry, Nephew,” Iroh said wisely, “There is still hope. After all, where there is life, there is hope.”

Zuko sighed again and nodded his head as he ran his hand down the elegant covering of the thick tome resting before him. It seemed he would have to return the book now since it was going to be of no help.

The Fire Lord and his uncle were silent for a long moment. The only sounds heard were the rustling of the trees’ leaves as a breeze swept by and the distant quacks of the turtle-duck family in the pond. The sudden sound of his uncle clearing his throat brought Zuko out of his thoughts and he glanced up at Iroh with a raised eyebrow.

“Katara told me my tea is working wonderfully,” Iroh spoke up.

Zuko frowned before he sighed.

“Yes, it works well,” he reluctantly admitted before he mumbled, “So well I always have to run to the royal chambers in search of Katara.” Then he dryly added, “I’m glad you only give it to me once a week or else I would not let Katara leave our bed at all.”

Zuko glowered at his uncle when Iroh chuckled loudly. After a few more chuckles, Iroh frowned as he scratched his head.

“Did I already give you the tea this week?” he asked in confusion, “I can’t recall.”

The Fire Lord gave him a look.

“You did,” he responded, “You always send the tea on Wednesdays.”
“Oh, yes, of course!” Iroh exclaimed, “How could I forget? I must be getting old!”

Zuko quirked a dark eyebrow as a response to his uncle’s comment.

“Anyway, you should definitely drink the tea next week, Nephew,” Iroh continued with a smile before he cryptically added, “I have a feeling that this time it will solve your problems.”

Before Zuko could ask his uncle what he meant, Iroh quickly stood up as he finished his tea.

“I think I will look for Katara and maybe cheer her up with a game of Pai Sho,” he said before he quickly retreated after he smiled at his frowning nephew.

Iroh stepped down the veranda and walked swiftly through the beautiful garden his nephew had commissioned for his wife. Stepping into the palace, the old man walked down a couple of corridors before he finally arrived at the infirmary. He paused when he found Katara laughing with Jiao and Physician Toshiro’s assistant. With a cheerful smile, Iroh walked into the room and the women immediately turned to smile at him as he greeted them charmingly.

“Katara my dear,” he said as he turned to his niece-in-law with a smile, “I was wondering if you wanted to play Pai Sho with this old man.”

“I’m sorry, Uncle Iroh, but I’m busy at the moment,” Katara said apologetically as she indicated at the supplies stacked on the tables.

Katara’s lips twitch in amusement when Iroh actually pouted at her. Jiao hid a giggle behind her hand and Yin-Min pretended to fix the items on the table to hide her smile.

“I will only relent to leave you alone if you promise to go shopping with me next week and visit my tea shop,” he said as he slipped his hands into his long sleeves. Then with another charming smile, he added, “It has been a while since I’ve gone on a trip with my favorite niece-in-law.”

“Uncle Iroh, I’m your only niece-in-law,” Katara said with a small laugh.
“And aren’t I glad for it?” Iroh replied as he returned his affectionate smile at the waterbender. “Please say you’ll come shopping with me.”

“I’d love to go visit your tea shop and go shopping with you, Uncle Iroh,” the brunette quickly agreed before she added firmly, “But you must promise not to go crazy with your purchases.”

“I shall endeavor to curb my impulses, my dear,” the old man said with a chuckle as the women laughed.

When they calmed down, Iroh turned to smile at Jiao.

“Would you mind telling the kitchen staff that the Fire Lady and I will not be here to eat lunch next Wednesday?” he asked charmingly.

Jiao smiled as she bowed her head.

“Of course, General Iroh,” she said.

“Excellent!” he exclaimed.

After a few more jesting remarks, the tea-loving, shopaholic old man left the room. With another laugh, Katara returned her attention to the supplies she had been cataloguing in Toshiro’s ledger while Jiao and Yin-Min stacked and stored the items.

“If you go out shopping with General Iroh, you might come home late,” Yin-Min remarked quietly.

“Oh, I’m sorry, Yin-Min!” Katara exclaimed as she turned to frown at the shorter woman. “I forgot.”

She had promised to teach Yin-Min some of the healing techniques she had learned in the Northern Water Tribe that did not involve waterbending.

“It is alright, my lady,” the pretty, tiny woman quickly assured, “You need to go out and distract yourself.”
“Thank you for understanding,” the waterbender said with a smile before she added, “Being out of the palace all day might distract me from everything.”

Yin-Min nodded sympathetically and Jiao smiled kindly. They were interrupted when Physician Toshiro and Advisor Chao entered the room as they bantered with each other. Katara smiled. She was sure if Iroh had stayed a few more minutes the three old men would have left the infirmary to badger each other some more.

Another week passed quickly with the royal couple enjoying more time together now that their misunderstandings had been dealt with. Sitting silently in his study, Zuko carefully read over the report of one of his generals regarding the progress of the newest recruits in the military. Although they were no longer at war, Zuko wanted to be prepared for any threat to his nation and family. He wanted his army to remain vigilant so they did not become lazy during this time of relative peace. A soft knock at the door brought him out of his thoughts.

“Enter,” he called out passively as he smoothed the papers on his desk.

He looked up and watched a servant enter with a tray holding the same teapot his uncle always sent him during this time of the week. Silently, he indicated for her to place it on an empty spot on the large desk before he resumed reading the document before him. The maidservant quickly placed the tray on the wooden surface before she bowed respectfully when he thanked her. She walked quickly toward the door and closed it behind her.

Zuko finished the paragraph he was reading before he glanced up to stare intently at the teapot. He remained unmoving for a while as he continued to carefully regard the innocent porcelain container.
What did his uncle mean by saying if he drank the tea this time it might solve their problem? As much as he tried to come up with an answer, Zuko did not know what to make of his uncle’s cryptic words.

He gave a small shrug. Well, it did not matter for now. The tea did help maintain his virility throughout the night so that he was able to make love to Katara many times, more than was possibly normal. Just thinking about the night ahead, about having Katara come undone in his hands in pleasure, about him achieving multiple incredible orgasms with her, made his groin tighten and a groan escape his mouth.

Swiftly and eagerly, the firebender reached for the tray and pulled it toward him. He lifted the teapot and poured the steaming, sweet-smelling liquid into the small teacup. He grabbed the teacup in his hands and brought it to his nose, inhaling the aroma for a moment, before he brought the rim to his lips. He took a sip and frowned when he detected a slight difference in the flavor before he dismissed the thought. In a few quiet sips, he finished drinking the tea before he placed the cup back on the tray.

Sitting back on his chair, Zuko closed his eyes and waited for that almost mindless lust to consume him. He waited for a few minutes before he opened his eyes and frowned in confusion when nothing happened. On the other occasions, the effect of the tea had been almost instantaneous.

Was his uncle messing with him?

Zuko narrowed his eyes at the thought before he quickly stood up from his large chair and strode toward the door. He did not need any aphrodisiac tea to make love to his wife and that was what he was going to do! He swiftly left his study and marched determinedly down the corridor toward the royal chamber he shared with his waterbender. He had barely made it to the guest wing when he saw Katara and his uncle round a corner. Shen and Kuo were following behind, their arms full with bags and colorful boxes.

“Zuko!” Katara exclaimed happily when she saw him approach them and she eagerly walked forward to meet him.

Zuko extended his arm and she quickly wound her arms around his and leaned against him with a large smile. He could see that she was excited and lighthearted and it made his heart ease at the sight of her enjoyment. He had become used to seeing the melancholic and distressed emotions in her eyes recently and he detested it.

“Where do you come from?” he asked curiously with a small smile.

“Uncle Iroh begged me to go drink at his teashop and then go shopping in the capital. I told you last night, remember?” Katara explained before she grinned at her uncle-in-law who chuckled. “But we returned earlier than we planned because Uncle said he had something important to look into.”

A small frowned appeared on Zuko’s brow. He had completely forgotten Katara had told him and wondered if their outing was the reason why Iroh did not give him the aphrodisiac tea because he knew Zuko would have gone insane waiting in his desire to possess his wife until she returned. He narrowed his eyes when his uncle winked at him.

“Did Mother not go with you?” the Fire Lord asked them.
“She did, but she decided to visit the garden for a moment,” Katara responded with a smile.

Zuko nodded to acknowledge her words.

“We should place our things in our rooms, my dear,” Iroh addressed his niece-in-law.

“You’re right!” Katara agreed as she turned to smile apologetically at the guards carrying their things.

They quickly returned her smile to let her know they did not mind.

As the small group resumed their walk toward the royal wing, Zuko wondered what his uncle needed to see to so urgently that he cut his shopping spree short. Zuko listened silently as his wife and his uncle continued to talk about their outing. Although he had been eager to lock himself and Katara in their room for the rest of the day, he was pleased to see she was having fun and debated whether he should escort her back to the city so Katara’s enjoyment could continue. Maybe they could visit the prestigious restaurant he had taken her to before. Or they could take a ride to the countryside to escape the bustle of the city for a few hours.

They paused at Iroh’s room to deposit his things before they continued down the long corridor toward the royal chambers. As they finally approached the huge golden doors, Zuko stopped in his tracks and stiffened. He lifted his arm to the side to stop Katara from moving forward. The others immediately stopped and turned to look at him curiously. Zuko narrowed his eyes as he saw that one of the doors was slightly ajar. His doors were always closed, his guards and servants made sure of that.

“The door is open,” he explained in a hushed tone.

Shen and Kuo immediately, but silently, placed their burdens on the floor before they took positions on either side of the royal couple while Iroh silently stood behind them.

“Stay here,” Zuko told Katara as he glanced down at her.
“I’m going with you,” she responded defiantly as she placed her hands on her hips.

Zuko suppressed a sigh at her stubbornness, but knew he could not force her to stay behind when she wanted to help. Besides, he would feel more at ease if she was at his side. With a nod of his head, Zuko moved forward and cautiously opened the door, his stance ready for any surprise attacks. When nothing happened, he stepped into the anteroom and the others followed quietly behind him. They scanned the area, but frowned when they found nothing out of the ordinary.

Zuko pressed a finger to his lips to indicate they should continue their silence before he motioned at the other set of golden doors that led to the bedchamber. Zuko glanced at his guards briefly and he knew his message was understood when they subtly shifted closer to their lady. Zuko turned back around and walked warily toward the doors. He paused for a moment as he tried to figure out if he could distinguish any strange noise coming from inside, but everything was silent. Zuko quickly pushed the door open and walked inside only to stop cautiously before he quickly moved Katara behind him when she tried to enter after him. The room was completely dark, the curtains of the balcony were tightly closed and even the fireplace had been extinguished.

Could this be Jianguo’s doing? Zuko stiffened at the thought and he felt his heart start to pound with adrenaline. He pressed back against his wife and she pressed herself against him as if she had thought the same thing.

Before he could command whoever was inside to show themselves, Zuko tensed when he heard something rustling in the direction of the bed. Narrowing his eyes, Zuko willed all the candles to light up before he shot a spark of flame toward the fireplace. Flames immediately sprang up, illuminating the room.

Zuko’s and the guards’ eyes widened in shock at the unexpected sight that greeted them. Since Katara was shorter and standing directly behind Zuko, she could not understand their reaction and she glanced at Iroh when she realized he could also not see what was going on, but it seemed like he knew anyway.

“What the hell?” Zuko exclaimed as he extinguished the flames in his hands in his confusion.

Sitting at the edge of the bed was Physician Toshiro’s young assistant, but what confused Zuko the most was her appearance. She had on a loose yellow robe that parted slightly in the middle to show her chest and a little of her small cleavage, her black hair was loose, and her legs were completely bare. She was smiling at him before she gasped softly when Katara finally stepped beside Zuko to see what the commotion was. Katara’s eyes widened and she gasped in surprise.
“Yin-Min?” the waterbender exclaimed.

“You should still be out shopping with General Iroh!” Yin-Min blurted out before she could stop herself.

“What?” Katara asked with a confused frown. What was going on?

“What are you doing in our room and sitting on our bed?” Zuko asked the small woman angrily.

Yin-Min’s yellow eyes began to water before she buried her face in her hands and began crying quietly. Her small body shook with her sobs.

Katara automatically moved forward to comfort her even though she was still confused, but her husband quickly grasped her arm to stop her. He turned to Shen and Kuo.

“Take her away,” he ordered them with a growl.

Iroh cleared his throat and everybody, with the exception of the still crying woman, turned to look at him. Katara again got the impression that the old man knew what was going on.

“Take her to the throne room,” Iroh said in his usual calm tone, “The advisors are already gathered there by my request.”

Zuko frowned but did not say anything as they watched Kuo and Shen step toward Yin-Min. They each grabbed one of her arms before they began escorting her out of the room.

“You can’t take her out with her just wearing that,” Katara spoke up with concern for her friend. Her mind still did not comprehend why Yin-Min was in their room.

“Believe me, my dear, you should not care,” Iroh told her enigmatically.
Before Katara could ask him what he meant, she watched as the guards took Yin-Min out before she and Zuko turned inquisitively toward the old man.

“Why did you summon the advisors?” Zuko asked with a frown, “Did you know this was going to happen?”

“I was not completely sure, but I had my suspicions,” Iroh responded as he stroked his small beard and stared into his nephew’s eyes before he added, “After all, I wasn’t sending you an aphrodisiac tea to your study all these months, but a calming tea.”

“What?!” Zuko and Katara exclaimed simultaneously.

Iroh nodded gravely at their disbelief.

“If you weren’t the one giving me that aphrodisiac tea, then who was?” Zuko asked with a frown.

Iroh was silent for a moment as he stared at his anxious nephew and niece before he let out a sigh.

“It seems that it was Yin-Min,” he finally responded.

Zuko frowned and Katara’s eyes widened in incredulity.

“No, that can’t be!” the waterbender said with conviction, “Why would she do that?”

“I don’t know, my dear,” Iroh replied calmly before he added, “When you mentioned that Yin-Min had been giving you a blend of her herbs that have been ineffectual and then when Zuko mention the aphrodisiac tea, I wondered at the possibility of a connection. It seemed too connected to be a just coincidence.”

“I thought I had seen her a couple of times,” Zuko spoke up with a thoughtful frown, “But I never paid attention to her or cared.”

Iroh nodded and Katara again frowned.
“I wanted to see if Yin-Min would do anything if she knew I was taking Katara out of the palace when she thought you had drunk her tea, Zuko,” the old man continued, “So I had Jiao change your tea last minute before it was brought to you.”

“That is why the tea was ineffective,” the young firebender observed.

“And why we returned early to the palace,” Katara spoke up as she thought things through.

“Yes, I wanted to see if we could catch her,” Iroh said with a nod.

“But why would she do that?” the waterbender asked with another frown.

“Only she can tell us,” the old man said.

There was a brief pause as the royal couple tried to understand what was going on. They returned their attention to the retired general when he cleared his throat.

“So going on a hunch, I had a servant boy follow her for the past week,” Iroh continued to explain as he slipped his hands into his long sleeves. “And…” he paused and cleared his throat again with a grim frown.

“And what, Uncle?” Zuko asked impatiently.

“The boy discovered that Yin-Min would put something in the tea we drank for dinner before the oblivious servants left the kitchen,” Iroh finally revealed and his lips pressed into a thin line to signify his concern and upset. “If my hunch is correct, it would do nothing to Zuko and me, and while it may have affected Ursa, I believe the true target was Katara.”

“What?!” Zuko growled out angrily and Katara’s eyes widened.

Iroh produced a small bag from one of his sleeves.
“The boy took the bag Yin-Min used to sprinkle the contents into the tea from her medicinal box,” Iroh continued. He opened the pouch and lifted it toward the waterbender as he asked, “Is this the same kind of herbs you took for the past year?”

“It…it looks identical,” Katara said slowly as dread began to form in her chest. What was going on? What did this all mean?

“What is it?” Zuko both impatiently and worriedly asked his uncle as he stepped closer to his confounded wife.

_Could it be poison?_ Zuko felt his stomach revolt painfully at the thought.

“I am not completely sure,” Iroh murmured before he added with narrowed eyes, “But I have an idea.”

Before they could asked him what he thought, Iroh interrupted them as he closed the pouch and placed it back inside his sleeve.

“Do you still have that book from the University of Ba Sing Se, Zuko?” Iroh asked.

Still frowning, his anxiety rising, Zuko moved across the room to pick up the book he had placed on the small table between the two chairs resting before the fireplace. He had continued to look through it for any possible remedy that could help them before he had to return it. He quickly walked back to his uncle and handed him the large tome.

Iroh took it and immediately began to search through it as the young couple waited anxiously for his explanation. They watched as he stopped at a particular page with a deep frown. Looking grimly at his nephew, the old man handed him the book. Feeling his chest tighten at the look on his uncle’s face, Zuko grabbed the book and began to read the page. His eyes widened and his stomach clenched as he finished reading.

“Why do you think this is the purpose of the herbs?” Zuko asked in a strained tone interlaced with rage.

Katara wondered at his reaction and she bit her lip nervously. What did Zuko read?
“In order not to get pregnant, concubines and prostitutes have ways,” Iroh spoke up seriously.

Katara became worried as she watched Zuko’s face darken. He clenched his hands so tightly around the book that she feared he might set it on fire and destroy it.

“What’s wrong?” she asked impatiently.

Without responding to her inquiry, Zuko tightly grabbed her hand while he held the book in the other.

“Follow me,” he said through gritted teeth as he pulled her after him before he turned to look at his uncle. “Have Ozai’s former concubines come to the throne room,” he ordered.

“I already had Jee look into that,” Iroh replied.

With a firm nod, Zuko quickly strode out of the room, tugging Katara after him while Iroh followed. Katara followed her tensed husband silently as her mind whirled with questions. Why had Yin-Min been in their rooms? What were Zuko and Iroh talking about concerning concubines and prostitutes? Yes, Yin-Min used to be Ozai’s concubine, but what did that have to do with anything? Her trust in her friend would not let her make the obvious connections.

They finally arrived at the throne room and they paused briefly when they saw that the advisors were already waiting inside. Zuko resumed his quick march and Katara quickly followed to catch up to his long strides. Zuko helped her sit down on her throne before he walked up the steps to the dais and sat before the roaring fire wall. Katara turned back to the advisors and she watched as they murmured curiously amongst themselves. She again wondered what was going on.

Zuko nodded at a guard standing at attention next to another set of doors that led into a small room. The guard bowed and quickly opened the door. The men quieted down when Shen and Kuo appeared with Yin-Min walking timidly between the larger guards. Katara frowned when she noticed that Yin-Min was still wearing that flimsy robe and she felt sympathy and a flare of indignation that the young woman was forced to remained dressed in such a way before a room full of men. Shen and Kuo finally arrived below the dais and made the woman kneel before their lord. Yin-Min trembled and looked around fearfully and Katara felt sorry for her. The waterbender looked up at her husband and she saw that he was looking at Yin-Min with an unreadable expression before he looked up to address his advisors, coldly dismissing the woman for the moment.
“I understand that you wish I take a royal concubine to give me an heir since my wife has not been able to conceive yet,” Zuko began.

Katara wondered why he had brought up this issue at this time and not asking Yin-Min why she had been in their rooms.

“Yet?” they heard Wei scoff before he continued with a sneer, “She might never be able to conceive.”

When his wife flinched at the man’s words, the Fire Lord glared darkly at Wei and this time the old man remained quiet at the murderous look.

“Again, I will say that it is too early to jump to such a conclusion,” the golden-eyed lord continued before he firmly added, “Either way, I will not be taking a concubine.”

The advisors immediately began to protest and argue, but Zuko raised a hand to silence them.

“I do not need one for I plan to explore every possibility for my wife and me to conceive an heir,” Zuko began smoothly before he added, “But the plan is moot as I have discovered what has been going on.”

The men murmured in confusion until Zuko returned his attention to the woman before him. Yin-Min blushed at his attention before cowering.

“Yin-Min, correct?” he asked and his cool tone seemed to be mixed with anger.

“Y-yes, my l-lord,” the woman stammered nervously.

“My wife has recently told me that you have gifted her with a blend of herbs to help with fertility since our wedding night,” the Fire Lord began.

“That is evidence enough that the Fire Lady is barren!” Wei spoke up as he stared accusingly at the Katara glared at him even though those words pierced her heart and she clenched her dress tightly in her hands. She wished she could throw a ball of ice at his face to shut him up once and for all.

“Keep your mouth shut, Wei! Speak again and you shall be punished,” Zuko growled out angrily, deliberately leaving out the old man’s title as advisor, before he turned his gaze back to the small woman. “Well?” he barked with barely restrained impatience.

Yin-Min jumped at his angry tone and she bowed her head.

“I-I did give my l-lady the h-herbs,” she began hesitantly, “B-but I stopped g-giving it to her when it was o-obvious it wasn’t w-working.”

She glanced briefly at the silent waterbender before she looked up at the intimidating Fire Lord.

“The h-herbs should have helped her c-conceive,” she continued before she looked down and wrung her hands nervously in her lap, “Although I know it will be difficult to a-accept it, I also believe that Lady Katara is b-barren.”

Katara gasped softly at her words and the men murmured quietly to themselves. The waterbender looked up at her husband with uncertain eyes. She saw that Zuko was looking at Yin-Min expressionlessly as he remained silent after the woman’s proclamation.

“Tell me,” he finally spoke up in a deceptively cool tone, “why did you give my wife such a gift?”

“Because I wanted to repay your kindness for rescuing me from my cruel family by giving you an heir, my lord,” she quickly replied with a bow of her head.

Zuko’s blank expression suddenly transformed into one of pure rage.

“If that is true, why were you preventing my wife from bearing me a child?!” he roared angrily and the fire wall flared up.
Gasping, Yin-Min cowered down and trembled in fear. All the men gasped in confusion.

“Zuko!” Katara exclaimed with wide eyes. How could he be accusing her friend in such a way when she was just trying to help?

“I-I n-never did s-such a thing, m-my l-lord!” Yin-Min stammered with a fearful whimper.

“Then what were you pouring in the tea my wife drank for dinner?” Zuko snarled.

Yin-Min’s yellow eyes widened.

“I-it is only a b-blend to help, m-my l-lady s-sleep,” the tiny woman tried to explain desperately, “I k-knew h-how stressed she h-has been and I-I only wanted to h-help.”

Zuko grabbed the book he had placed beside him, and momentarily parting the wall of fire, he threw the book down so that it landed on the cold floor before the woman.

“Open it to the marked page,” he ordered through gritted teeth.

Hesitantly, Yin-Min picked up the book and opened it to where the red string was placed between the pages. She began to read and they watched as her eyes widened and she blanched.

“I-it’s not t-true!” she yelled as she dropped the book as if it had scalded her.

“You dare lie to me?!” Zuko roared and again the flames sprang up in his rage.

Both Katara and the men were confused as to what they were talking about.

“My lord,” Katara finally spoke up as she looked at her husband, “Would you mind explaining what is going on?”
Zuko reined in his anger and he looked down at his confused wife, his eyes softening a little as he gazed at her. He knew what he was going to reveal was going to hurt his kindhearted waterbender and he mentally cursed the vile woman that continued to deny her wrongdoings.

“The reason why you couldn’t conceive,” he began in a much calmer tone, “was because this woman was not giving you a blend of herbs to help you conceive but one that prevented it.”

Katara’s eyes widened at his words before she looked at Yin-Min in shock.

“That is not true!” Yin-Min cried out, “I w-would never b-betray my l-lady in such a w-way!”

“We shall see if that is true,” Iroh finally spoke up in a neutral tone as he pulled out the small pouch from his sleeve and held it out for all to see.

Yin-Min gasped as she stared at it.

“W-where did you get t-that?” she stammered.

“Oh, so you recognize it?” Iroh asked with a raised eyebrow. “It was found in your medicinal box.”

The small woman’s eyes widened.

“You gave this mixture of herbs to Fire Lady Katara to make her believe you wanted to help her,” Iroh continued assuredly, “But you stopped giving it to her personally, not only to prevent any suspicions coming back to you, but also to make the Fire Lady believe she was truly barren and that nothing could help her.”

“That is not true!” the tiny woman again denied desperately. “Please, y-you must believe m-me!”

Her last words were drowned out by a firm knock at the doors. With a wave of Zuko’s hand, the guards posted beside the doors quickly opened them. Jee entered the room followed by four beautiful maidservants who looked around the room nervously. The admiral led them toward the Fire Lord’s dais and they all bowed before him as they stood beside the still kneeling Yin-Min.

“Were you all once Ozai’s concubines?” Zuko asked in a passive tone as he stared at them.

“Yes, my lord,” the four women replied as they kept their heads bowed down respectfully and with slight fear, for they all knew how temperamental their young lord could be.

“We are a few of the ones who decided to stay as servants when you gave us the choice,” the oldest one of the group added.

“Do you know this woman?” the Fire Lord asked as he glared down at Yin-Min.

The women finally glanced to the side to observe the trembling woman and they nodded.

“Yes,” the same woman from before replied, “She was one of the youngest among us.”

“And thus, one of Ozai’s favorites,” another woman added.

At their words, Yin-Min began to cry quietly. Katara frowned as she stared sympathetically at Yin-Min as she remembered the small woman’s account of her suffering under Ozai’s hands due to his depraved lust. How could Zuko humiliate Yin-Min in such a way in front of all these men? Yin-Min had only helped and comforted her, and now Zuko was blaming Yin-Min for her inability to conceive. She was a gentle and timid woman. She would never do such a thing to her. She was her friend.

“Please, my lord, stop,” Katara spoke up pleadingly as she again returned her gaze at her husband.

Zuko again looked at her and frowned.

“I won’t until everybody realizes that you have no fault in any of this,” he said firmly before he again turned his attention to the confused women. “Do you recognize this combination of herbs?” he asked.
Iroh stepped toward the women and showed them the contents in the bag. The women studied the herbs before they nodded.

“We do,” the youngest of them spoke up.

“Do you know what it is?” Zuko asked as he stared at them expectantly.

The women glanced at each other in confusion before they again nodded.

“It is a blend of herbs that all concubines take in order not to become with child,” the oldest one explained before she added, “Unless our…master wishes otherwise.”

Katara and the entire group of advisors gasped at her words and Zuko cursed darkly as his suspicion was confirmed.

Yin-Min sprang to her feet and pointed an accusing finger at the women who stared at her wide-eyed.

“They’re lying!” she screamed. “They never liked me! They have always hated me!”

Katara felt sorry for Yin-Min, but she was distracted when the other four women gasped in indignation at the yellow-eyed woman’s accusation.

“If you ask any woman in a brothel, she will recognize the blend of herbs!” the oldest woman hissed.

At the truth of her words, Yin-Min’s eyes widened and she froze in her spot. Katara felt her stomach ache at the woman’s reaction. No, it could not be. She could not be so blind as to not notice Yin-Min’s deceitful intentions. Katara had opened up to this woman. She had offered her friendship and understanding.

“Yin-Min?” Katara spoke up in a strained voice before she asked hopefully. “It’s just all a misunderstanding, right?”
Yin-Min remained silent and still before she straightened herself and slowly turned to look at the waterbender. Katara gasped at the woman’s sudden transformation from timid to fierce and angry.

“Shut up, you stupid Water Tribe bitch!” Yin-Min screamed furiously.

Katara’s eyes widened at her outburst and Zuko jumped up wrathfully from his elaborate cushion at the woman’s insult to his wife, but Yin-Min did not notice as she continued shrieking.

“If it wasn’t because you had bewitched my lord, he would have been mine!” Yin-Min accused heatedly as she glared hatefully at the speechless waterbender.

Zuko growled angrily, everybody else gasped, and Katara froze at the woman’s words.

“What?” Katara choked out.

“What did you say?” Zuko demanded angrily through clenched teeth.

At the sound of his voice, Yin-Min gasped before she turned around to drop herself before the Fire Lord and bowed her head.

“I only did it for your own good, my lord!” she explained fervently.

“My own good?!” Zuko roared disbelievingly before he darkly reminded her. “When I allowed you to become Physician Toshiro’s assistant, you promised me that you would never betray or hurt me.”

“And I haven’t hurt you!” she insisted pleadingly as she glanced up at him.

Zuko had to stop himself from gaping incredulously at the ignorant woman before he glared at her furiously.

“When you hurt Lady Katara, you hurt me,” he declared angrily.
“The waterbender doesn’t deserve you!” she responded stubbornly as she glanced briefly at the astounded Fire Lady to glare at her before she returned her pleading gaze to the handsome Fire Lord. “I wanted to help you see that you had made a mistake by marrying her! I could not let you taint the royal bloodline with that dirty Water Tribe woman!”

“And you made sure of that by giving the herbs to my wife so she wouldn’t conceive!” Zuko growled out as he glared at her.

“Yes,” Yin-Min unabashedly confessed before she rose to her feet.

They watched incredulously as her timid persona vanished right before their eyes. Her demeanor was replaced by a haughty and confident woman as she stared up at the Fire Lord with determined eyes and a raised chin. Katara could only marvel at the sudden transformation. Had Yin-Min’s uncertain and nervous behavior been an act all this time?

“Why would you do that?” Katara spoke up in a strained tone, “I thought you were kind and honest despite what happened to you. I…I thought you were my friend.”

Yin-Min let out a soft, mocking laugh and it made the waterbender flinch at the harsh sound.

“I knew if I played the role of the shy and emotionally scarred victim you would have felt sympathy towards me,” the woman sneered as she glared at the waterbender, “I knew that by telling you about my tragic past you would offer me your kindness and friendship. My behavior wouldn’t have made you suspicious of my true feelings or intentions.”

“So everything you said was a lie?” Katara asked with a growl.

How could she have believed her lies so easily? Sokka had once joked that one day her compassionate heart was going to bring her trouble and Katara was ashamed to admit that her brother had been right. She had given this woman her friendship just to have it thrown back in her face.

How could she? Katara thought with both anger and sadness. How could she do this to me when she knew how much I wanted a child? How could she let me believe she was my friend?! How could I have been so stupid?

Yin-Min was silent for a moment as she got lost in her thoughts before she responded.
“No, everything I said about my life was true,” she said in a cold and angry tone, “But I was never skittish and timid when Ozai still reigned. I knew that if I wanted to survive, I had to please him in any way he demanded, even if inwardly I loathed it.”

Katara watched as Yin-Min turned back to address Zuko. The blue-eyed woman gasped softly when she noticed the blatant lust and desire in Yin-Min’s eyes as she stared at Zuko and suddenly Katara understood.

“With time,” Yin-Min continued as she addressed the firebender in a soothing tone, “you would have seen that you made a mistake and the waterbender is not the right woman for you.”

“But you think you are?” Katara asked in a heated tone.

All this time she had thought that the man Yin-Min mentioned she loved was Shen, but it had been Zuko all along! And she had unknowingly encouraged Yin-Min to pursue him! But how could she have guessed that the woman was after her own husband?

Yin-Min whirled around at the waterbender’s question and she again glared at her.

“Yes, I am a better choice!” she exclaimed arrogantly, “I am from the Fire Nation and I come from a noble family even under my current circumstances.”

Then she turned back to the glaring Fire Lord and her expression softened as she gazed up at him in admiration and an obsessed longing.

“I’ve loved you for years, ever since I met you when you were still a prince,” she stated lovingly.

Zuko frowned at her words and he stared at her calculatingly as he tried to remember when he could have met her. He could feel Katara’s surprised stare, but he did not feel any alarm since he knew he had never slept with any of his sire’s concubines. When he noticed Yin-Min smile seductively at him a faint memory appeared in his mind. It was indistinct because it had not been of importance to him...

A few days had passed since he returned to the palace after that fiasco in the Catacombs of Ba Sing...
Se. He could not seem to be able to get the image of Uncle’s betrayed look and the Water Tribe girl’s hurt and angry expression from his mind.

He was making his way through the public garden one night when he heard a feminine cry and a few male chuckles. Curious, he followed the sounds and came upon two young noblemen and a young woman. One of the men was holding her against him, his large hand covering her mouth, while the other one was suckling at her breasts as he fumbled to untie his trousers. It was the sight of the woman crying and struggling violently against them that made Zuko realize he had not stumbled upon a secret tryst, but upon an attempted rape.

Angered at their dishonorable actions, Zuko coldly demanded the men to let the woman go. At first, the men scoffed at the command, but when they realized they were in the presence of the Crown Prince, they immediately dropped the woman and hurried away. Zuko tentatively approached the crying woman and asked if she was okay. The style and lavishness of her clothes and the heavy, though ruined makeup on her face let him know she was one of his father’s concubines. She nodded and thanked him and Zuko ordered her to immediately return to the harem. She gathered her ripped clothes around her and hurried back into the palace.

As he returned to his room to find rest the following night, he heard a soft knock at his door. Thinking it was a servant, he called for the person to enter. To his surprise it was the woman from the other night. Narrowing his eyes, he asked her what she wanted. She smiled seductively at him as she said that she wanted to repay his kindness for rescuing her from those men by pleasuring him that night, then she dropped her loose robe and stood naked before him.

His young body had been tempted by the sight, but he did not accept her offer since he refused to bed a woman his father used, so he impatiently dismissed her. She tried to persuade him by seductively walking up to him, but a dark glare from him let her know that he was not interested and was getting annoyed. Disappointed, she clothed herself again as she walked back to the door, but before she closed it behind her she purred at him that she would always be available for his pleasure. However, Zuko forgot the incident and the woman the next day since his mind was occupied with more important things...

“Ah, yes, I remember you,” Zuko finally spoke up with contempt dripping from every word, “You tried to seduce me one night when I was still Prince Zuko, but I refused you.”

Katara relaxed at his words while Yin-Min flinched at his cold bluntness.

“Once you became Fire Lord I quietly served you,” Yin-Min continued as she tried to plead with him with her eyes before she angrily added, “I tolerated Mai’s presence because it was obvious you felt nothing for the cold bitch, but then the waterbender had to come and ruin everything. She took you away from me!”
Yin-Min shook with her rage before she composed herself.

“But I said nothing and bid my time until you finally noticed me,” she added.

“You were the one who was giving my husband that aphrodisiac tea,” Katara realized with narrowed eyes, “You thought I would not return home until late, so that was why you were in our room today, in the dark, waiting for him to arrive.”

“Yes, I thought I could entice him to bed with me when he was under the powerful drug,” Yin-Min confessed as she again smiled seductively at the Fire Lord.

Zuko looked at her in disgust before he narrowed his eyes when a thought appeared in his head.

“That is why you would always appear outside my study whenever that tea was brought to me,” Zuko observed.

“Yes, but you proved to be stronger willed than I expected,” the small woman admitted as she balled her hands, “The aphrodisiac drink shouldn’t have allowed you to know what you were doing or care with whom!”

A small smirk appeared on Zuko’s lips at the woman’s frustration.

“That is because I only desire my wife,” he responded smugly.

She narrowed her yellow eyes before she smiled.

“If you had taken the tea today, you would not have noticed it was me in the dark,” she said assuredly before she added with a purr, “Once you realized how much I could please you, you would have left your good for nothing wife. You would have demanded I take a place in your bed. I would’ve become the only woman you’d come to and the only one you’d need.”

Her tone became more seductive as she ran her hands teasingly down her body. She did not care that the Fire Lady was glaring at her or that many of the men sitting behind her were looking at her lasciviously as she continued to stare lustfully at the glowering Fire Lord. Ever since he had saved her that night, she had loved him and when he had given her the choice to remain in the palace instead of forcing her back to her family—a family that did not want her—she knew she needed to make him hers. Unlike all the men she had crossed paths with, Zuko was the only one not to mistreat or hurt her. He had protected her. How could she not love him?

“I’d make you crave me like you’d never craved any woman before,” Yin-Min continued throatily as she cupped her small breasts and moaned before she ran her hands down her sides, “And with the waterbender not being able to conceive it would have been much easier to comfort you as your relationship deteriorated. I’d give you an heir, you’d banish the waterbender, and I would take her place by your side and our children would become the next descendants of the great royal bloodline. You would love me more than the waterbender.”

Both Zuko and Katara stared at the woman as if she had lost her mind while everybody else in the room murmured in shock.

“You really believe I would want you when I have a woman like Lady Katara?” Zuko asked with a scoff before he added, “Your aphrodisiac tea didn’t work to make me want you. I would never want someone like you. You pale in comparison to my wife. Besides, I would never bed, much less marry, a woman that my father has used as nothing more than a sex toy. You are nothing more than a deceitful whore. The lowliest prostitute would have more appeal to me than you.”

Yin-Min flinched as if he had physically struck her.

“How could you say that?” she exclaimed painfully, “I love you!”

“That is not my concern,” Zuko replied coldly before he angrily growled out, “And because of what you have done, I despise you. The very sight of you disgusts me.”

A gasp of pain escaped the small, pretty woman.

“Why?” she asked as tears began to gather in her eyes.

“You still dare ask?” Zuko replied incredulously before he furiously roared, “You made our lives miserable by making us think we would never have children! But worst of all, you hurt my wife by making her believe she was responsible and a failure! You hurt her by making her feel like I would cast her away for another woman in order to beget an heir. For that, I despise you and I will make you pay tenfold for every tear you made my wife shed with your stupid schemes.”

Katara felt her heart swell with love and gratitude for her firebender’s fierce defense and protectiveness toward her before she looked back at Yin-Min who was crying silently as she stared imploringly up at the vengeful Fire Lord.

“Why didn’t you give up when you saw it was hopeless you’d get my husband?” the Fire Lady asked with a raised eyebrow.

Yin-Min again spun around to glare hatefully at the suddenly calm waterbender.

“This is your entire fault, you stupid bitch!” she screeched as she pointed accusingly at the blue-eyed woman.

“Watch your tongue, you deceitful snake, or I will cut it off! You will not speak to the Fire Lady in such a manner!” Zuko bellowed in rage.

Yin-Min ignored the Fire Lord as she continued to glare daggers at the waterbender before she brought her hand daintily to her mouth, tilted her head back, and laughed shrilly. The royal couple, Iroh, Jee, and the rest watching the scene unfold stared bewilderingly at the crazed woman. Yin-Min paused in her laughter to smirk haughtily at the frowning waterbender.

“At least I will console myself with the fact that you will feel like dying at the thought of losing all your children,” she said cruelly.

“What do you mean?” Katara asked demandingly even though she felt her stomach drop with unease.

Yin-Min turned to look at the four former concubines and laughed again at the horrified expressions on their faces as her meaning dawned on them.

“The blend of herbs not only helps prevent pregnancy, but it also terminates an unwanted one,” Yin-Min explained with another harsh laugh. “It’s possible that you have killed your own children by taking that tea for an entire year.”
“No!” Katara screamed in pained denial.

The flames flared to scorch the high ceiling as the Fire Lord trembled in his rage.

“You bitch!” Zuko roared wrathfully.

Everybody was more surprised when the usually calm Fire Lady cursed vehemently as she leapt to her feet with rage in her cobalt eyes and ran toward the still amused Yin-Min. Before anyone could stop her, Katara raise her arm as she raced toward the suddenly nervous woman and struck her face with a clenched fist covered in ice. Yin-Min howled in pain as the painful impact threw her to the ground. Without skipping a beat, the furious waterbender leapt toward her, straddled her chest, and began to repeatedly strike the pretty woman’s face with ice-covered fists.

Everybody looked on in shock as they watched the enraged Fire Lady attack the woman before their attention was caught by their lord walking unhurriedly down the marble steps and stepping through the wall of fire. He reached the women, and after watching his wife hitting Yin-Min a couple more times, he finally grabbed the screaming Katara around her waist and pulled her away. Katara continued to tremble in rage against him, but she allowed him to press her against his chest.

Zuko looked down at Yin-Min and had to fight the urge to break the woman’s neck as she moaned in pain below them. Her face was almost unrecognizable with the bruises, cuts, and blood that adorned her once beautiful features. Zuko felt his blood boil in his veins with his rage at the thought that his children could have been killed, but what worried him the most was the thought that Katara would suffer more emotional pain once she calmed down from her wrath. He glared murderously at the crying former concubine. He would make her pay for the suffering she had caused them!

“You will be punished in the most excruciating ways for your deeds before you are given a public execution for treason and sabotage against the royal bloodline,” Zuko growled down at the woman.

A gasp escaped Yin-Min at his words and she painfully crawled toward him. She grabbed at his leg as she weakly looked up pleadingly at him. One of her eyes was almost swollen shut as tears ran down her cheeks.

“P-please, m-my l-lord,” she moaned with pain and fear, “H-have m-mercy.”

Zuko angrily kicked her away from him and she fell to her side with a pained cry.
“You do not deserve any mercy!” he thundered, “Did you have any mercy on my innocent wife and our possible children?”

Yin-Min began to sob and Zuko turned away from her with disgust as he held a suddenly subdued Katara tightly against his side.

“Take the vile creature away and lock her in the prison tower for her punishment before she is taken to her execution,” Zuko ordered his guards.

Shen and Kuo bowed their heads as they looked worriedly at their Fire Lady before they roughly hauled Yin-Min by her arms. She began to struggle weakly against their hold as she strained toward Zuko.

“You can’t do this to me!” she cried out, “Everything I did was for you!”

Zuko ignored her as he tucked Katara closer to him when he felt that she had gone suddenly still and quiet. He needed to take her to the sanctuary of their room. He looked up at his advisors who were watching the screaming woman being dragged out of the room. He flared the fire wall once again and the men quickly returned their attention to their lord.

“As you can see, my wife is not at fault for not giving me an heir yet,” he spoke up firmly, “I will never take a concubine. Now you know that everything had been that deceitful woman’s fault. Fire Lady Katara will be likely to conceive one of these days.”

He looked at the men darkly, daring them to argue with him. His advisors—with the exception of Wei who crossed his arms over his chest and sniffed—immediately agreed with his words before they looked apologetically and worriedly at their silent Fire Lady. It was not as if they disliked her, quite the contrary, many of them admired and respected her, but their concern for an heir had been more important.

He trailed off when their lady winced. Zuko frowned, but before he could say anything the sound of hurried footsteps caught their attention. They turned and saw Physician Toshiro hurrying toward the royal couple, his aged face distorted with concern and pain. When he finally reached them, he threw himself at their feet, not caring that the painful impact could injure his old knees as he pressed his forehead to the floor.

“My lord, I just heard the news about my treacherous assistant when I saw the guards dragging her away, and I can barely live with my guilt. My lord, my lady, please forgive this blind, old fool,” he apologized and his aged voice cracked with his remorse, “If I had not chosen her as my assistant, this would not have happened!”

Zuko motioned for Jee, who had been silent and grim during the entire incident, to help the old man up. Toshiro reluctantly allowed the admiral to help him to his feet, though he refused to meet his lord’s eyes.

“It’s not your fault for either Yin-Min’s and Kuro’s treachery,” Zuko told him confidently. “You could not have known about or prevented their schemes.”

Zuko saw pain flash across the old man’s face at the mention of Kuro, his former assistant whom he had treated as a son and had betrayed them. Toshiro bowed his head before he finally glanced at his lady when she did not kindly reassure him as she would normally do. The old physician frowned at the blank expression on her usually lively face. Before he could speak, his lord tucked his wife closer to him.

“I wish to be alone with my wife,” the Fire Lord said.

Without waiting for them to say anything else, he gently nudged Katara to walk with him toward the doors. He turned back to send his uncle and admiral a worried look before he turned back to his wife as his worry increased. They walked down the corridors in silence, both dealing with shock, anger, and sadness, until they finally reached their bedroom. Gently, Zuko led Katara to their bed and helped her sit on its edge. He knelt down before her and gazed up into her pained eyes as he tenderly grabbed her small hands with each of his large ones. The despairing look in her expressive eyes made his heart clench.

“How are you feeling, love?” he asked her softly as he caressed her delicate wrists with his thumbs.

Katara was silent a moment as she stared at him before she averted her eyes to their clasped hands.

“Does…does it make me a bad person for wanting Yin-Min to die for everything she’s done?” she asked in a faint whisper.
Zuko shook his head as he continued to soothingly caress her soft, brown skin.

“With that question it shows you still are too kindhearted, Katara,” Zuko responded in the same soft tone.

Katara shook her head quickly and she licked her suddenly dry lips as she held tightly to his hands.

“I…I wanted to kill her,” she confessed in an angry whisper, “I wanted to hurt her so badly when I attacked her. I wanted her to suffer just as we suffered these past months…I wanted to kill her with my own two hands.”

Zuko was a little surprised at her confession, but not disturbed by it. If it had been him, he would not have thought about it twice before he killed the woman.

“I wanted to kill her with my bare hands, too,” the firebender spoke up, and his calm voice shook with his anger, “But she does not deserve a quick death for what she did to us, to you. It is only just that she suffers the consequences for her actions.”

Katara took a deep breath before she nodded in acknowledgment to his reasoning before she tightened her hold of his hands almost painfully as she stared miserably into his golden eyes.

“Oh, gods, Zuko, I could have been killing our children by drinking that blend of herbs every day!” she cried out with a small sob.

Zuko quickly stood up and sat down next to her, pulling her shaking body tightly against his chest. Katara sobbed and whimpered as she clutched onto him desperately, burying her face tightly against his throat.

“None of this is your fault, Katara,” Zuko told her firmly as he held her tightly to him, “You didn’t know. You only wanted to give me an heir. Besides, since the herbs prevented pregnancies, there was very little chance that you would’ve been pregnant at all. I’m positive the herbs didn’t even give you a chance to conceive, so please don’t torment yourself, love.”

“It is my fault,” Katara whispered brokenly, “I’m the one who insisted you accept Yin-Min as Toshiro’s assistant. I’m the one who believed in her lies.”

“There was no way you could’ve known what she was like,” Zuko said assuredly, “Besides, she could have still done what she did as a servant.”

Katara continued to cry quietly against his neck as the events of the day overwhelmed her mind.

“We could have had a child by now,” she whispered sadly.

Tenderly, Zuko placed her on his lap and held her tightly against him.

“Everything will get better, you’ll see,” he told her resolutely as he gently caressed her back. “We’ll have a child soon. I promise that I will give you a child to hold in your arms.”

Katara moved back a little to give him a watery smile before she again buried her face on his neck as her sadness once again consumed her. Zuko held her against him as she continued to grieve over their would-be children, for the suffering and pain of these past months, until she finally cried herself to sleep. Zuko pulled back the covers and gently placed her down on the bed. He walked to their large wardrobe and pulled out a simple nightdress and his sleeping pants before he returned to his wife’s side. He carefully disrobed her from her elegant dress before he placed the nightdress over her. She frowned and murmured softly in her sleep, but did not wake.

Zuko quickly undressed himself and put on his sleeping pants before settling himself beside her. It was still early for sleep, but he did not care. He wanted to be alone with his wife and be there for her when she woke up. He pulled the blankets up to cover them before he brought her close to his chest. He leaned his head down and placed a lingering kiss on her head before he pulled away with a sigh.

He stared at her sleeping features and gently wiped the lingering tears underneath her closed eyes with his thumb. He had thought that by marrying Katara, he would be able to keep her safe and protected, but she had only suffered because of him. If he wasn’t so selfish, he would let her go so she could have a life that was not filled with so many hardships and so much pain. But he was selfish. He did not want to let her go, ever. He would not be able to live or survive without her.

All he could do was vow that he would try his hardest to help her through all the troubles, be at her side to protect her, support her in anything she needed him to, offer his comfort and strength, and ardently love her like no one else could.
Standing on a wooden dais in the main town square of the capital, Zuko watched with an impassive expression as the executioner stepped toward the wailing woman kneeling on a dirty mat made of dried grass in the middle of the marketplace. Thick red ropes were tied tightly around her torso and legs to prevent her from escaping. Zuko looked away and glanced to his side. Katara stood beside him, silent and rigid, as she stared passively at Yin-Min. Though he knew she tried to hide it, he could tell that it still saddened her that the woman she had thought was her friend would die that day for her betrayal. After a long debate with herself, Katara had decided to be present for the execution to see Yin-Min meet her just punishment. On Zuko’s other side stood Iroh with an equally impassive expression. Ursa had declined being at the execution and Admiral Jee had stayed behind in the palace with her.

A large crowd had gathered expectantly to watch the execution. News had reached the entire Fire Nation about the woman’s treachery against their lord and lady and they angrily threw insults at her.

After a week of painful punishment, the day had arrived for Yin-Min’s execution.

“Please, my lord!” Yin-Min begged desperately as she recoiled at the burly executioner’s approach.

Zuko ignored her pleas as he nodded at his guard standing below the dais. The guard cleared his throat as he unfurled a scroll before him and began to read in a loud voice.

“By the decree of Fire Lord Zuko,” the guard announced and the crowd hushed to hear his words, “this woman shall be executed for her treachery against Fire Lady Katara and sabotage against the royal bloodline! Her name shall be erased from the records of nobility and shall, from now on, be known as a treacherous witch! Her punishment will be drinking poison. A fitting punishment as she had used drugs on our Fire Lady.”

The crowd vociferously expressed their approval and Yin-Min cried out a denial.

“Please, my lord, don’t do this!” Yin-Min again pleaded as tears ran down her bruised face, “All I wanted was your happiness! Everything I did was because of my love for you!”

Zuko’s lip curled in revulsion and his eyes blazed in anger. If she really loved him like she claimed she did, she would not have made his life miserable by hurting Katara. Ignoring her pleas for mercy, Zuko nodded at the executioner. The big man wearing a dark costume and a grotesque mask stepped forward with a cup filled with poison and handed it to the crying woman. Yin-Min shook her head as she tried to back away, but the ropes impeded her movements.

When she continued to refuse the cup, the big man grabbed the back of her head and forcefully shoved the rim of the cup between her lips. He ignored her struggles as he tilted her head up and forced the dark, bitter liquid down her throat. Once the cup was empty he placed his large hand against her mouth to prevent her from spitting out the liquid. Once he was sure she had swallowed the poison, he let her go and stepped back.

They watched as Yin-Min coughed violently as she tried to claw at her burning throat, but the ropes stopped her. She screamed and doubled over in pain and thrashed her head from side to side.

Katara watched for a few more minutes as Yin-Min wailed and thrashed in pain before the waterbender looked away as she felt bile rise to her throat. She clutched onto Zuko’s arm and he looked at her.

“Are you all right?” he asked quietly in concern.

“I thought I could stay and watch her die, but I c-can’t,” she whispered as she stared at him, pleading him to understand.

Zuko nodded his head to show her he did.

“I will find you once this is over,” he told her.

Katara nodded since she could not find her words when Yin-Min’s pained screams and cries became louder. Zuko looked at Kuo and Shen and they immediately stepped forward. Katara slowly walked down the steps of the dais and the guards quickly took position on either side of her as they escorted her back to the royal carriage. As soon as she was settled, they headed back to the palace. Zuko watched his wife go.

Once she was out of sight, Zuko returned his attention to Yin-Min’s suffering. Dark blood began to pour out of the woman’s mouth and she writhed and screamed in pain on the ground. A few minutes later, she gasped one last time, stared imploringly at the uncaring Fire Lord, before she fell, limp and unmoving. The executioner stepped forward and pressed his fingers against her throat. A moment later, he stood up and nodded at the Fire Lord. The crowd cheered at the proclamation of the traitor’s death.
Without a word, Zuko turned away and stepped off the dais with his uncle following behind him. Guards immediately surrounded them as they marched toward the palace. Once they were alone inside the building, Zuko spoke up as they strode down an empty corridor.

“How did you know Yin-Min was behind this?” Zuko asked his uncle.

“I noticed that since you became Fire Lord that the woman always lingered wherever you were,” Iroh explained as he slipped his hands inside his sleeves. “Did you never notice?” he asked.

“No,” Zuko bluntly replied before he continued, “I didn’t even know she existed until Toshiro brought her to my attention, but even then, I never thought of her.”

He paused before he added softly, almost to himself, “I only have eyes for Katara. She occupies most of my thoughts.”

Iroh suppressed a chuckle at his nephew’s uncharacteristic admission and instead he smiled broadly.

“Yes, it is as plain to see as the sun rising in the east,” Iroh said amusedly.

Zuko glanced from the corner of his eyes to glare at his uncle who, as always, was unaffected by his ire. Iroh’s smile dropped and he frowned.

“Do you think Katara is okay?” he asked.

Zuko sighed heavily as he remembered her departure from the execution. He understood that Katara could not stand seeing another person suffering despite the hatred she felt for them. He was different. He had found a dark satisfaction in watching Yin-Min suffer as she died a slow and excruciating death. He was still experiencing a rush of satisfaction of knowing that the person responsible for Katara’s suffering was dead, so he decided to wait until he composed himself before he went to Katara. When his uncle cleared his throat, Zuko finally spoke up.

“No matter how much I say otherwise, Katara still feels partly at fault for taking the herbs,” he said with a frown.
Iroh shook his head and sighed.

“She just needs time to come to terms with what just happened,” the old man said wisely before he added, “I am sure she will put it behind her soon and will come out stronger for it.”

“I hope you’re right, Uncle,” Zuko replied.

Iroh’s serious mood suddenly shifted as a grin appeared on his aged face. Zuko cocked an eyebrow at him.

“I cannot wait to hear the delightful news that I will be a granduncle soon,” Iroh said with an excited chuckle.

Zuko smiled as he returned his gaze before him.

“I can’t wait either,” the young lord murmured softly.

Ursa watched sympathetically as her daughter-in-law left the private garden and returned to the palace. Katara had sought her out when she returned from the public execution and Ursa had gently held the young woman to her, as if she were her real daughter, while Katara silently lamented the events of the past months and hours. With a soft sigh, Ursa left the veranda and wandered absentmindedly toward her rose bushes as she thought about the problems her son and his wife had been facing. Hopefully things would be better now. She wanted nothing more than to see her son truly happy with the woman he loved. A small smile appeared on her lips as she thought about her future grandchildren. She had been forced to miss her children’s childhoods, and although it pained her that she could not do anything for Azula, she hoped she could make up for it by being there to watch Zuko’s children grow up.

Standing a few feet away from the pondering noblewoman, Jee watched as Lady Ursa distractedly caressed the petals of her roses. His eyes drank in her elegant beauty; her milky white skin, her long dark hair, and her womanly figure. He felt his heart pound in his chest as it always did when he was near her before he chastised himself when he felt his lower stomach tighten in desire. He had tried, determinedly, to stop any feelings for his lord’s mother from developing, but it had been in vain.

He had fallen in love with her and he knew nothing could change it. He had tried to hide his feelings from her, from everybody, and that was why he was sometimes distant from her. He knew she wondered at it, but he also knew he could not explain it to her. Yet, he was unable to be completely indifferent to her. Whenever she was sad, he tried to comfort her and whenever a nobleman approached her with greedy and leering eyes, he had scared them away. He could not stop both his protective and possessive feelings from showing, but luckily nobody had been the wiser—except for Fire Lady Katara. He had planned on living the rest of his life as Lady Ursa’s protector, secretly loving her without her knowledge, but his mind had changed with the recent events.

He had been deeply moved by the royal couple. Despite all the obstacles life had thrown their way, despite all the uncertainties and sorrows, the Fire Lord and his wife were able to overcome anything because of the intense love they held for each other. If, by some miracle, he were able to have a love as great as theirs with Lady Ursa, he wanted to do everything possible to have it.

Life was unpredictable. Perhaps one day something would happen to him, something fatal. He would give his life to protect Lady Ursa, without hesitation, and if he died saving her, he would be content. But he worried that she might never know of his devotion to her and how much she meant to him. It saddened him to think that she might never know just how precious she was, how wonderful a woman she was, and never know what it was like to have a man love her completely, honestly, and passionately. She might not return his feelings, she might even be disturbed by them, but he was prepared for her rejection. Although it would sadden him, he was even prepared to walk out of her life. He was even prepared with the possibility of incurring his lord’s wrath.

Squaring his shoulders and lifting his chin proudly, Jee determinedly approached her.

Ursa was brought out of her thoughts when she felt a presence behind her and turned around. She relaxed and smiled when she saw it was Jee, but she frowned curiously when she noticed the strange expression on his face. He was determined, resolute, but it was his eyes that rooted her to the spot. They were very intense as he stared deeply into her eyes—she had never seen such a look on him before—and it caused a strange sensation to run down her spine.

“Jee?” she asked hesitantly.

“Lady Ursa, there is something that I would like for you to be aware of,” the admiral began, his deep voice in a serious tone, “But first I would like you to know that I have valiantly tried to keep this a secret for a very long time.”

“Alright,” the dark-haired woman replied as she nervously clasped her hands before her.

“I know that I have no right in saying this,” Jee continued in the same tone, “I know that my station in life forbids me to feel anything but respect for you, you who are a princess and my lord’s beloved mother, but it has all been in vain.”

Ursa felt her heart start to pound in her chest as she listened to her protector, whom she had come to see as a friend, and whom she, just recently, began having feelings for. Feelings that went beyond just friendship.

“Jee…what are you trying to say?” she asked softly as she stared into his eyes.

She gasped softly when Jee moved forward and gently grabbed her hands and held them to his broad chest. Wide-eyed, she stared at their hands before she looked into his sincere golden eyes.

“I love you, Lady Ursa,” he confessed softly, “More than I thought I could love a woman.”

Another surprised gasp escaped the beautiful noblewoman.

“W-what?” she stuttered in disbelief.

“I love you,” he repeated, his tone more gentle than she had ever heard from him before. A rueful smile appeared on his lips as he stared down into her golden eyes.

“I know you cannot return my feelings,” he murmured sadly, painfully, “But I have come to accept that, and if you still wish for me to be your personal guard, I will continue to protect you with my life. I will not expect you to treat me differently because of my feelings for you. However, if my sentiments bother you, I will leave and never seek you out again, though it will pain me to do so.”

Ursa came out of shock the more she listened to him and her heart swelled in her chest with tentative joy and pleasure. However, it was the painful sadness in his tone at his last words that finally made her come out of her stupor completely. When she felt Jee begin to let go of her hands, she quickly grabbed his. It was his turn to look down at their hands in surprise before he stared curiously at her. He watched as a shy smile curled her lips and she stared into his eyes.

Her almost maiden-like shyness endeared her even more to Jee and he felt his heart ache in his chest with love for her.

“Lady Ursa…what are you trying to say?” he asked hesitantly, unknowingly asking the same question she did a moment ago.

Ursa was silent a moment as she tried to voice her thoughts and feelings before she finally gathered enough courage to speak.

“I…I also tried to fight against my heart,” she began softly, “I was afraid of exposing myself. I was afraid of being hurt again.”

Jee tightened his hold of her hands as if to protect her from whatever was distressing her. Ursa smiled at the gesture and it gave her enough courage to continue as she stared into his eyes.

“I have come to care greatly for you, Jee,” she began before she moved their hands so that this time they were pressed against her chest where her heart was beating wildly, “And if you give me more time, I am sure that one day I will come to love you more than I have loved any other man.”

Jee’s eyes widened impossibly large at her words. She was asking him to give her time so her feelings could solidify for him? It was more than he had hoped for! His heart expanded with joy at the thought that she could love him with the same intensity he did her, but then his happiness vanished to be replaced with sadness.

“Even if you do come to love me, it would all be in vain,” he murmured sadly.

“Why do you say that?” she asked as her pleasure diminished a little at his sudden change of mood.

Jee hesitated for a moment as he debated with himself whether he should tell her his biggest desire, but when she continued looking at him expectantly and with worry, he decided to brave on.

“I will only accept your feelings if you become my wife and nothing less,” he said firmly yet with a hint of uncertainty at her reaction.
Ursa felt her body relax with relief at the same time her heart jumped in delight at his words. She smiled at him.

“I am glad you feel that way because that is how I feel as well,” she told him softly, “I will not degrade myself to become any man’s mistress. I deserve better than that.”

“And you do,” Jee agreed with a firm nod.

Ursa’s smile widened a little before she frowned when she realized his mood had not lifted at her subtle acceptance to his roundabout proposal.

“What is the problem, Jee?” she asked with sudden nerves.

“Fire Lord Zuko would never allow a simple admiral to marry you,” Jee responded somberly, “And I respect him too much to go against his wishes, even if it would pain me that I would have to admire and love you from afar.”

Ursa frowned since she knew her son would not be happy at the thought of his mother remarrying and would not accept it. She loved her son and she did not want to upset him, but she was tired of being lonely, she wanted to love and be loved. If she rejected Jee, she knew she would never find such a wonderful man again, and the thought of losing him pained her.

“Zuko will not accept the situation at first, but once he sees how happy I could be with you, I am sure he will eventually relent,” she assured him.

Jee thought about her words for a very long time before he finally smiled and gave a small nod.

“I will try my hardest to make him see I will do everything possible to make you happy,” he replied fervently.

Ursa blushed in both shyness and pleasure. No one had ever looked at her so tenderly before—not even Ozai in the first few years of their marriage—and she found herself at a loss for words. The sudden thought of her first husband, however, made her frown before she stared diffidently at Jee.
“You do not mind that I have been previously married?” she asked tentatively.

“No,” he responded quickly and sincerely before he growled out, “Ozai doesn’t even have the right to be called your former husband. He didn’t deserve you.” He paused before he added in a gentle yet passionate murmur, “I will make sure to show you see what a true husband is like. I will treat you like the princess you are and worship you in every way.”

“Oh, m-my,” Ursa stuttered, blushing deeply as his ardent words made her think of moments filled with passion and heat. She felt her stomach tighten in long suppressed lust and she almost felt self-conscious. Trying to distract herself, she quickly asked another question.

“What about my children?” she asked, “Will you accept and respect them even though they are not yours?”

“I cannot truly answer for Princess Azula,” Jee responded slowly, carefully.

Although it pained her to acknowledge the fact that many people feared and hated her daughter for her atrocious actions, Ursa could not hold it against Jee. She accepted his response with a sad nod.

“As for Fire Lord Zuko,” Jee continued more easily once he knew she understood his sentiments regarding the crazed princess, “I already respect and care for him. Besides, with our positions, it is more if Fire Lord Zuko would accept me.”

Ursa smiled and nodded since she had already witnessed the mutual respect between her son and the admiral. It spoke well of Jee because there were precious few Zuko respected in that way. Jee smiled softly at her before he frowned when he saw her smile falter as she nervously shifted before him.

“Would you still wish to marry me if I told you that I don’t wish for more children?” she asked anxiously though firmly. “I do not think it fair for Zuko and Azula and I don’t want to hurt them anymore than I have.”

Jee was silent a moment as he contemplated her words before he finally came to a conclusion.

“Although it would please me for you to bear my children, I will accept your decision,” he told her sincerely before he added with a small chuckle, “Besides, I think I’m too old to be a father.”
Ursa released the breath she had been holding and laughed softly with him. Jee was only a few years older than her, and although they were not young, she believed that they weren’t that old either.

“If Fire Lord Zuko would not mind, it would please me to be a stepfather to him,” Jee continued with a thoughtful expression.

Ursa smiled at his words and hoped that Zuko could come to care for Jee just as much, even if he could never see him as a father. She would never force him to do so if he did not wish it. She was brought out of her thoughts when she heard Jee chuckle again as he gently tightened his hold of her hands.

“Besides, I think the palace will be filled with enough children once Fire Lord Zuko and Fire Lady Katara begin having them,” he said with a wink.

Ursa laughed in pleasure at both his words and his uncharacteristic playfulness. She quickly sobered up when Jee stopped and stared gently yet intensely into her eyes.

“I really do hope you come to love me just as much as I do you,” he said before he tenderly added, “My dear Ursa.”

The noblewoman felt her heart skip a sudden beat at the way he said her name without her title and she felt almost as shy as a young maiden being shown true affection from her suitor. In a way, she almost was. She held her breath when she noticed Jee slowly lean his face toward hers as if to give her time to move away if she wished, but she did not retreat, and instead raised her face toward him herself.

Jee smiled happily at her acceptance before he finally closed the distance between them and gently pressed his lips against hers for the first time. His tender kiss made her melt against him more than if he were to have passionately possessed her mouth. The sensation of her soft, trembling lips against his sent a shard of both warmth and pleasure down Jee’s spine. He felt as if he were a young man, wooing his young, innocent sweetheart. And in a way, it felt almost exactly like that.

A month passed after Yin-Min’s execution. After learning what happened, the Fire Nation people sympathized with the royal couple and what they had gone through. They were glad to know that the one responsible for preventing Fire Lady Katara from having children was dead. Many sent gifts and letters of good wishes to the palace while others went to the Fire Temple to pray for their Fire Lady to give their Fire Lord an heir soon to secure the royal bloodline. Feeling properly chastised, the Court Council had formally apologized to the royal couple for their part in the events and promised to wait for the birth of the heir for a few years if possible. Much to the disappointment and anger of the nobility, the council had also decided to retract their decree for the Fire Lord to choose a royal concubine, though that still did not stop the noblewomen from hoping the Fire Lord would choose one of them anyway.

Partaking in tea and pastries in the royal family sitting room after dinner, the Fire Lady watched in amusement as Iroh and Jee played Pai Sho. As usual, the older man was smiling while the admiral frowned deeply as he stared intently at the game board. Katara glanced to her side to see that her mother-in-law was also smiling amusingly at the men’s antics. Though, much to the waterbender’s pleasure, she could not help but notice that Ursa and Jee would steal quick glances at each other every once in a while, sending each other little smiles.

As winter approached, the climate in the Fire Nation had become chilly so they had agreed to sit inside the palace instead of the garden’s veranda. Katara could not help being a little amused at their small complaints to the cold weather. Although it was chilly, she was able to tolerate it very well since she was born in one of the coldest regions in the world. Katara tuned out what the others were talking about as she got lost in her thoughts.

After learning about what the Fire Nation people were doing to show their support, Katara found her depressed mood lifting and her guilt lessen. She could not dwell in the painful past any longer. She had to continue living and look forward to the future. But most importantly she could not continue to make Zuko worry. He had been patient with her for the past month and understood her when she told him she was not up for sexual intimacy at the moment, though she knew it was hard on him to not be able to make love to her. It was hard for her too. But she had also wanted to make sure that the effects of the contraceptive herbs were completely out of her system. She could not stand to be discouraged again. Her monthly bleeding had finished a few days ago and she was sure it was now safe for Zuko and her to have sex.

Now she craved it, she craved him. She missed being wrapped around his powerful body, she missed being the recipient of his ardent passion, and she missed the tender moments after their bodies were sated. She would not stress about getting pregnant anymore. She decided that she would just leave it up to the gods, even if that meant that she would conceive until years later.

She was determined to seduce her husband that night and give them both what they wanted—each other. Katara felt her stomach tightened in need and she bit her lip to suppress a moan. She surreptitiously looked up to regard the people around her with an embarrassed blush, but was relieved to see they were not paying attention to her. She needed to leave so she could start on her plan of seduction.

Clearing her throat delicately, she was able to gain the others’ attention. Smiling innocently at them, she stood up.
“I think I’m going to retire early today,” she told them, “Good night.”

The other three smiled affectionately at her as they bid her a good night. Forcing herself to walk in a normal pace, the waterbender glided across the spacious room toward the exit. Once she was outside, she quickened her pace down the corridor in search of Jiao. Zuko had left a few hours ago to inspect the capital’s military base and she knew he would be returning soon. It was still early in the day and she wanted Jiao to tell Zuko that she would be waiting in their rooms so that way he could go straight to their chambers and not be detained by their family or other matters. She smiled when she spotted Jiao heading toward the sitting room with more tea and cookies. After quickly giving the servant her message, Katara continued on her way with an excited smile and anticipation in her eyes. She was too busy imagining what the night was going to bring that she did not notice the knowing smile on Jiao’s face.

Katara approached the doors that led to the royal chambers in record time. She was relieved to see that Shen and Kuo were not at their post since they had gone with Zuko. She opened one of the doors that led to their bedroom and quickly closed it behind her.

She smiled when she saw that Jiao had already started a nice, blazing fire in the fireplace. The curtains were closed in order to keep the chill from outside at bay. The room was a little too dark for her liking. Searching for the long wooden sticks that were stored in the bathroom, Katara walked back into the room and approached the roaring fire. She lit the stick and carefully lit the candle resting on the mantelpiece. Throwing the stick into the fire, the waterbender picked up the lit candle and began lighting other candles around the room. Once she was satisfied that there was just the right amount of light, she moved toward the bed and turned down the covers.

Biting her lip, she began to slowly strip her clothes until she was completely naked. Folding her clothes neatly, she placed them in the basket in the bathroom to be washed before she walked back to the room. Taking off her fire crown, she gently placed it in the box she and Zuko shared. She picked up her hairbrush and carefully brushed her locks until her chocolate tresses fell down her back in soft waves. She looked at herself in the mirror of her dressing table and smiled at the sight she made. The only adornments on her nude body were the necklace and ring Zuko gave her.

Slowly she slid onto the bed and moaned softly when the cool sheets touched her heated flesh. Fixing her pillows, she leaned back against the headboard, placing her hands beside her and spreading her legs a little. Trying for a more seductive pose, she angled one of her legs up. When Zuko walked in she wanted him to see how willingly she was offering herself to him and he would know that she was ready and desperate for him to make love to her. She imagined the lust that would darken his amber eyes at the sight of her and she felt her heart pound. She could feel wetness rush out of her aching core and she again bit her lip. Anticipation and need curled in her stomach as she imagined Zuko touching every inch of her body with his strong, sword-calloused hands. She closed her eyes as she imagined him caressing her thighs, her hips, her sides, until he finally reached her aching breasts, she could almost feel it.
Her eyes flew open when she realized it was her own hands that were cupping her breasts. Slowly, she began to massage her mounds and she bit her lip, then she wedged her hardening nipples between her forefingers and middle fingers and pressed them together. She gasped and moaned at the spark of pleasure it ignited in her belly. She continued to rub her breasts and pinch her nipples until her heart was pounding in her chest and more of her aroused cream seeped out. Deciding that she needed more stimulation, more pleasure, the waterbender slowly, teasingly, ran her right hand down her flat stomach the way Zuko did. She closed her eyes and pursed her lips as she dipped her hand between her parted legs, feeling her drenched curls come into contact with her fingers, before she firmly cupped herself.

She paused for a brief moment before she began rubbing her palm against her wet sex, gasping and moaning at the sensation. She then ran her fingers along her folds, imagining it was Zuko’s long fingers, before she touched her swollen clit. Her hips bucked and she gasped before she began rubbing her now soaked fingers against her nub in furious circles. Her left hand was still cupping her breast and she began kneading it and rubbing her hard nipple in the same rhythm as her fingers buried between her straining legs. Panting softly, she slowed her pace and her fingers again ran along her wet folds, the sensation causing her stomach to quiver in pleasure, before she quickly inserted her middle finger inside her clenching pussy.

She circled her finger along her tight, wet walls and she almost understood why Zuko loved to bury his thick cock inside her. Moaning and panting heavily at the thought of her firebender buried deeply within her, Katara moved her finger in and out of her wet core. She frowned when she found it was not enough stimulation and she buried a second finger inside her while she continued pulling at her nipple with her other hand. Her hips surged forward and she threw her head back with a long moan. She frowned slightly when she found that two of her slim fingers were not the same width as two of Zuko’s. She debated whether to insert a third finger, but decided against it. Her mouth opened to allow her moans to escape as she continued to pump her fingers inside herself. Pleasure simmered in her belly and under her skin.

Oh, she hoped Zuko arrived soon!

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Zuko quickened his pace once he arrived at the outer doors to their royal rooms. After having dinner with two of his generals at the fort to discuss the recruits’ progress, Zuko arrived at the palace a few minutes ago only to have Jiao intercept him as he made his way to his study before he met with his wife and family. The maidservant told him Katara was waiting for him in their room. Frowning in worry, Zuko had asked her if she knew why his wife asked for him so urgently, but Jiao had just said she did not know. He barely noticed the knowing smile on the woman’s face as he brushed past her and headed to the royal family wing.

The young lord quietly entered the antechamber and wondered what Katara was up to. If only she were waiting for him for a night of lovemaking, he thought with a mental moan as he crossed the room. He shook his head to get rid of the hazy feeling of his lust. Katara had asked him to be patient until she was ready for intimacy again. She had wanted to make sure that the effects of the contraceptive tea were out of her system for good, so he was not going to rush her. He silently opened the door that led to their bedchamber and opened his mouth to call for her when he paused at the sound of Katara moaning softly. His eyes immediately darted to the bed and he froze in surprise at the vision of his lovely wife pleasuring herself.

Damn. What an incredible sight!

Zuko felt his cock immediately harden and push against the restraint of his pants. Did this mean she was ready for him to make love to her or was she just relieving some of her sexual tension as he had been secretly doing as he held her to him while she slept? He flushed at the memories before he shook his head as a wicked smirk curled his lips.

Closing the door quietly behind him, Zuko slowly walked across the room, careful of not making a sound and alerting her to his presence. He did not want her to stop what she was doing. He quietly stripped himself of his armor, clothes, and swords and soundlessly laid them on the floor. He quickly took off his fire crown and shivered when his long hair tickled his back. He placed his crown on their small tea table as he passed it. Katara had still not noticed his presence as she continued moaning and whimpering softly in her self-pleasure. His body was tense with his arousal and his cock throbbed as the slightly chilly air in the room hit him. He finally made it to the foot of the bed and stood silently, yet shaking slightly with need as he stared down at his wife.

She was leaning against the headboard and her eyes were closed, her face a beautiful contortion of pleasure. Her left hand was roughly kneading her breast and pinching her lovely nipple while her right hand pumped vigorously into her pussy. As he continued to watch the erotic sight, the firebender slowly ran his hand down his muscular stomach before he fiercely grasped his hard shaft. His mouth opened on a silent groan, pleasure skittering down his spine, as he began to stroke himself with slow, yet firm strokes. He watched as Katara bucked her hips when she pressed the heel of her palm against her clit and he pressed his thumb on his weeping tip before he spread the whitish liquid around the spongy head. He bit back another groan.

“Zuko,” he heard Katara moan.

He groaned mentally when she called his name in such a soft, desperate tone. He watched as a moment later a small frown appeared on her brow before she growled softly in frustration. Zuko could not suppress his smile as she tried to bring herself to release but could not achieve it. When Katara whimpered again in frustration, Zuko decided to help her along so in the long run they could both be satisfied.

“Are you imagining it is me touching you, Katara?” he asked her in a deep and husky tone.

Katara’s eyes flew open and she gasped in surprise at the sound of her husband’s voice. She had planned on watching his reaction when he first entered the room to see her naked and waiting for him, but it seemed that she got carried away. Panting softly, she paused in her actions and lifted her head to look at him. She moaned softly when she saw that he was naked and he was slowly stroking himself as he stared at her with an intense, passionate gaze. She slowly began to remove her hands from herself, but the sound of his disapproval stopped her immediately.

“Ah, ah, don’t move your hands away, my water nymph,” he commanded huskily.

The flush that had accumulated on Katara’s cheeks due to her pleasure darkened in hue at both his words and expression full of lust. Zuko knelt on the edge of the bed and crawled toward her, spreading her legs further apart as he stopped between them. His cock stood erect before him and a thin wet line of his whitish arousal ran down his long length.

“Were you waiting for me, love?” he asked. His tone was rough and filled with pleasure and need.

“Yes, desperately,” she responded breathlessly as she smiled coquettishly at him.

Zuko groaned at her earnest admittance. He did not need her to tell him in words that she was ready for him to make love to her; he could see that for himself. And he planned on making love to her all night long. It had been too long since they have been intimate and he craved it with his entire being. But first, he wished to see her finish what she had been doing.

“Touch yourself again, my naughty little wife,” he commanded her throatily. “I want to watch you bring yourself to ecstasy.”

Katara’s heartbeat picked up and her tight passage clenched around her fingers at his command. Without a second thought, she resumed her activities, but with more vigor this time as she tried to pleasure both her and her watching husband. She pulled roughly at her nipple and pumped her fingers rapidly inside her grasping center.
“Uhh,” she moaned and closed her eyes at the pleasure. “Ahh, mmm.”

“Open your eyes, Katara,” Zuko’s deep baritone demanded, “I want you to look at me while you pleasure yourself.”

The waterbender forced her eyes open and she locked them on his impassioned face. She noticed that his right arm was moving and she quickly darted her eyes down to where he knelt between her spread legs. She moaned and increased her speed as she watched her firebender roughly grasping his turgid shaft.

“Stroke your big cock harder, Zuko,” she demanded huskily as she smiled seductively at him.

Zuko groaned as pleasure ignited in his stomach and his shaft throbbed painfully when he saw that his wife was just as fascinated by watching him pleasure himself as he was by watching her. His half-lidded eyes looked down at her chest to see her frantically kneading her breast before his eyes trailed down her body to land on her furiously pumping hand. Her upper thighs were glistening with her juices as she coaxed more of the warm liquid from her body. Her moans combined with the wet sound of her fingers plunging into her warm depths made Zuko’s heart pound wildly in his chest and his shaft throb in excruciating need.

“Do you like that, my little waterbender?” he asked with a growl as he increased his pumps on his aching cock. “Are you imagining it is me kneading your breast, pinching your hard nipple, and fingering your tight, wet pussy?”

“Yes, Zuko, oh!” Katara mewled as she threw her head back against the headboard but continued to keep her eyes open just as he had demanded of her. She could feel her walls clenching with her impending release. “Zuko, I’m...so, uhhh...close!” she cried out as she plunged her fingers deeper and pressed against her swollen clit.

“Then let yourself go, Katara! Let me see you come!” the firebender growled as he grasped his cock almost brutally in his anticipation of seeing his waterbender achieve her climax.

Katara screamed as the dam broke and waves of pure ecstasy rolled through every inch of her body. Watching Zuko and being watched by him excited her so much that she was finally able to climax when she couldn’t before. Her hips bucked and her head thrashed from side to side as pleasure consumed her. She felt a rush of her juices coat her fingers as her walls convulsed and she moaned loudly. A moment later, she slumped back down on the bed, panting erratically and moaning softly.
Zuko had stopped his movements for he did not want to spend himself too early, but his breathing was equally as ragged. With a pleased and aroused smile, he admired Katara’s trembling, perspiring body beneath him. She had slid down in her writhing so that she was now half reclined against the headboard. He smiled in satisfaction at her when he realized she had managed to keep her eyes open and she was staring dazedly at him.

“Very good, my lovely wife, you did wonderfully,” he rumbled amorously, “I will forever cherish the erotic sight you provided me.”

Katara let out a small sigh of satisfaction and smiled at him.

“I’m glad I was able to please you as much as I pleased myself,” she said teasingly.

She felt her stomach clench once again when she saw a wicked smirk pull at her husband’s lips.

“Now, suck your drenched fingers, Katara,” he rasped huskily as he ran his left hand down her thigh. The rough sensation of his leather wristband caused her to shudder. His smile turned more lustful when she stared at him wide-eyed. “I want you to taste yourself. I want you to clean your fingers of every trace of your delicious juices.”

Katara felt her still sensitive core clench once more around her still buried fingers. Wanting to please her husband after keeping him at bay these past weeks, she slowly pulled her fingers out and brought them up to her face. They both gazed at her glistening fingers as she spread them a little, watching as her cream clung between them, before they looked at each other again. She gave him a small seductive smile and she heard him groan as he watched her expectantly.

His body almost rigid with expectation, Zuko watched as his wonderful wife parted her lips, stared passionately into his eyes, and slowly licked her wet fingers. His eyelids became heavy and his stomach tightened in arousal. She licked her two fingers one more time before she placed them entirely inside her mouth and sucked.

“Oh, gods, so hot,” the firebender groaned and he again pumped his straining shaft as he watched Katara suck her fingers clean of her essence.

She slowly slid the fingers out of her mouth before bringing them up to his lips. Zuko immediately opened his mouth and allowed her to slip her wet fingers inside. He groaned at her lingering taste. He ran his tongue seductively around her slim fingers as he stared into her darkened eyes. He could not take it anymore. He needed her to touch him and bring him to orgasm or he was going to go insane. He needed to have his cock in the paradise of her mouth next.

Katara could almost hear his need and she smiled sexily up at him as she pulled her fingers from his mouth. Then with those same two fingers, she beckoned him toward her.

“Put your cock in my mouth, Zuko,” she purred.

She watched as Zuko eagerly moved over her so that he was kneeling on either side of her. She looked up sultrily at him as he towered over her reclining body, his eyes dark with passion. He thrust his hips forward and her eyes darted down to his hard shaft pointing insistently at the fullness of her mouth.

The waterbender eagerly lifted her hand and caressed the reddish head, spreading the gleaming liquid leaking from the slit around the spongy tip, causing him to moan. She grasped his shaft and began to stroke the velvet hardness appreciatively. Before he could speak, she leaned forward and engulfed him in her mouth as far as she could go, swirling her tongue and moaning around his length.

Gods, it felt wonderful. He felt her smirk as she swirled her tongue around his head, and he gently thrust himself into her warm mouth with a growl. He could almost feel her amused triumph at his reactions as she backed away a little before she sucked him deeper into her wet mouth. He let out a small groan as one of her hands cupped his heavy balls and began massaging and tugging at them, alternating from gentle to almost rough caresses. He hissed her name when she began to bob her head over him and he placed his other hand on her head to keep her in place at the incredible pleasure.

Katara felt her stomach tighten in lust at the noises she was able to elicit from her passionate husband. With her tongue still pressed against the tip of his cock, she lifted her eyes up to his, and moaned at the incredible sight above her. His shoulders were tensed and the muscles of his upper body were rigid, except for his heavy pants and the soft rise of his chest as he breathed erratically. His mouth parted slightly, his head bent down toward her, his amber eyes gazed at her from under his lowered lids with an ardent intensity that stole her breath away. He looked so magnificent in his rapture that she felt her pussy tighten in need. With a loud moan, she began to suck him more firmly.

He felt her other hand, the one that was not occupied cupping his sack, slide its way up his thigh and around to stroke one of the cheeks of his backside before she pushed firmly against it to press him deeper into her mouth. He felt his groin twitch and his heart pound wildly in his chest.

He frowned slightly when she let go of his balls before he felt her slide her hand lower down between his thighs, caressing the skin below his sac. He froze when he felt her firmly rub two fingers on that sensitive spot at the same time she pushed his entire cock down her throat. Gasping, Zuko grabbed her head firmly, grasping almost painfully onto her hair, the pleasure almost too much to bear, as his cock jerked between her soft lips.

“Katara!” he roared loudly as his pleasure erupted down his spine and into his shaft.

The waterbender’s eyes widened when his hot seed burst into her mouth with such violent force that she could barely swallow it all as it slid down her throat. She continued sucking him off and rubbing her fingers on the sensitive spot below his straining shaft in order to prolong his pleasure and she smiled when he kept jerking his hips and chanting her name. Then he held himself still over her as he finished with two more spurts of his seed before he relaxed, panting heavily as he braced himself on the headboard behind her. She slowly pulled away and his still semi-hard cock slipped from her mouth, a thin string of her saliva trailing between his mushroomed tip and her swollen lips.

“Damn,” Zuko groaned as he dropped himself beside her, his eyes staring dazedly at the ceiling, his chest heaving with his pants, and his groin tingling with the aftershocks.

Smirking, Katara moved over him and placed a soothing hand on his sweaty chest, allowing him a moment to recover himself. She had been determined to seduce him and she wasn’t going to stop until they were both satisfactorily sated. When his eyes darted to hers a moment later, she gave him a sultry smile before she deliberately ran her tongue over her lower lip and moaned.

“Mm, you taste so good, Zuko,” she purred as her hand ran down teasingly down his chest to his abdomen.

At her words and touch, Zuko felt his cock harden once again. He smirked when his wife’s eyes immediately landed on his reawakening erection and she bit her lip. He was going to take advantage of this night to make up for the past month of reluctant abstinence.

Without warning, he rolled over and pushed her down beneath him, pinning her hands on either side of her head. His eyes hungrily roamed over her flushed face and breasts and Katara felt her breath accelerate at the almost feral gleam in his golden eyes. Intertwining their fingers together, Zuko leaned down and ran his lips along her forehead, cheeks, and jaw, savoring the softness of her brown skin, before he pressed his lips to hers. His mouth captured her moans and sighs as his fingers caressed her wrists and trailed down her arms before he slipped his tongue into her awaiting mouth to battle with hers.

Katara panted softly in mounting arousal when Zuko broke their kiss to skim his lips down her throat. The waterbender watched with darkened blue eyes as he moved lower, trailing his tongue along her skin before he cupped her breasts and kneaded them firmly in his sword-calloused hands.

Zuko slid his tongue and grazed his teeth around the curve of one breast while his hand squeezed and plumped the other. He enjoyed the softness of her skin and the delicious moans and mewls he elicited from his wife. As he continued to kiss and suckle at her breasts, his hand trailed slowly, teasingly, down her side before he reached between her legs. He relished in her moans when his fingers pressed against her swollen clit. He rubbed against it, causing her to buck and writhe beneath him, before he pushed two fingers into her wet warmth.

“Uhh!” Katara cried out as she threw her head back onto the pillow beneath her and her back arched into his touch. “Haaah!”

He pumped his fingers in a steady rhythm, forcing more of her cream to flow out to coat his fingers as his tongue and lips continued to caress her chest. He felt his chest swell with satisfaction when her shuddering breaths and moans reached his ears and her body trembled and writhed against him. He felt his cock throb in arousal and the need to bury himself inside her welcoming body almost overwhelmed him.

He pulled his fingers out of her and smirked when she growled her displeasure. He raised his head to gaze at her and when he saw her eyes lock with his, he lifted his hand and stuck his wet fingers into his mouth. He groaned at the delicious taste of her and he watched as her breath accelerated. Once he had cleaned his fingers of her juices, he forced her thighs further apart and settled his hips between them. They both groaned at the delicious friction of their groins pressing tightly together and they both thrust their hips in pleasure. Zuko bent his head down to once again kiss her chest. Katara angled her hips and moaned when his spongy head rubbed against her wet nub. She arched her back and moaned his name as her hands grabbed the back of his head to push him closer to her.

She sucked in a sharp breath when his lips closed around her hard nipple at the same time he pushed his cock into her. Hissing in pleasure, Katara surged her hips up, forcing his hard and thick length to sink deeper into her willing body.
“Agni, Katara,” Zuko groaned against her breasts as his hips jerked in rapture when she tightened her pussy around him and wrapped her legs tightly around his hips. It had been so long since they made love and she was even tighter than he remembered.

“Zuko, please,” she begged wantonly as her hands pressed tightly onto his backside at the same time she thrust her hips up. Her body was shaking with her intense arousal and she feared she would go insane if he didn’t bring her to orgasm. “Take me!”

Her desperate words made his blood boil in his veins and caused his shaft to jerk within the tight embrace of her wet passage. He could not thank the gods enough for allowing him to find such a wonderful and passionate woman for his wife. He loved everything about her, even her flaws. Although in his eyes she was pure perfection. He loved her mind and her personality, as much as he adored her exquisite body. Her soft lips, her round breasts, her curvy hips, her parted thighs and the damp curls that protected her wonderful sex all contributed to his infatuation, to his powerful libido. It called out to the primitive part of him, to the sexual animal deep within him that clamored for its mate.

The sound of her breathless call of his name and the sensation of her small hands pressing against his ass, her legs tightening around his hips, and her pussy clenching almost painfully around him quickly destroyed the last remnants of his control and made him focus solely on what was happening between them. Growling, he swooped down and seized her lips in a fierce and hungry kiss, which she returned just as passionately. When the need for air became too great, the firebender pulled back and gazed down into her beautiful features. The sight of her passion, need, and love written across her face, in her half-lidded blue eyes, made his chest tighten.

Agni, he loved this woman.

With a loud growl of her name, he slammed his mouth onto hers and began to thrust himself almost wildly inside her, needing to satisfy the intense feeling within him. He swallowed her mewls and cries of pleasure as her nails dug into his shoulders and her hips surged up to meet every one of his relentless thrusts.

“Zu-Zuko, ohh!” Katara cried out at the profound pleasure crashing into her. “Yes, yes!”

Her eyes took in the sight of her husband in his revelry as he used her body to pleasure him, just as she did his. She watched as his long black hair fell over his straining shoulders, a few strands sticking to his sweaty forehead and throat. His jaw was tightly clenched, his teeth slightly bared, his eyes screwed shut as he pounded her in a rhythm that was meant to usher their orgasms quickly to the surface. She knew he needed that release desperately because it was what she needed too and she tightened her limbs around him to hold him close to her. When he opened his eyes to gaze down at her, she gave him a loving yet sultry smile.
“I love you,” she breathed out throatily.

“Gods, Katara!” Zuko gasped as her words only intensified the powerful emotions sparking between them.

Grabbing her ass, he pulled her up higher so he could impale himself deeper inside her, plunging harder and faster until his muscles strained with the effort. He needed to fill her completely, to possess her entirely. To imprint the feeling of his body, his scent, his touch so powerfully into her skin, into her body, into her heart that she would remember him for all time. It seemed as if she knew what he was feeling for she pulled his tongue into her mouth and entwined it with hers, curling it around his as if she wished to fused them together. His breath hitched when she tightened her wet walls in an almost painful vise around his pounding cock, almost as if she was ravenously milking him for all she was worth. Groaning against her mouth, he kissed her back as fiercely as she did him, plunging himself mindlessly into her contracting warmth.

Katara moaned deeply into their kiss when she felt her husband thrust with an abandon that made her toes curl and stars appear before her eyes. She loved to have both Zuko’s cock impaled deeply within her core and his tongue shoved into her mouth at the same time. The feeling of having him doubly within her was devastating beyond description. When he angled his hips so that it touched that sensitive spot within her, she cried out as her thighs clench around his pounding hips and her pussy pulsed with her impending release. Flames erupted within her as his thick shaft continued to stroke that delicious spot. Clinging to him almost desperately, Katara knew he was close to his own climax because his movements became erratic, his hands tightened on her ass, and his groans became loud, deep growls. Then the world imploded and she was arching her back and writhing wildly upon the bed as ecstasy burned every inch of her body, rendering her mind blank except for the pleasure rushing through her.

“Zuko!” she screamed.

She heard Zuko rasp her name as he pressed his hips tightly to her, pushing his cock as deeply as he could go before he cried out as he exploded within her convulsing passage. The sensation of his shaft throbbing and jerking within her, of his hot seed splashing against her walls and overflowing her womb, and his amber eyes gazing deeply, intensely, into her eyes, as if touching the very depths of her soul as he came, triggered another small orgasm in her.

Zuko’s breath caught in his throat when his wife’s hot pussy contracted and spasmed more tightly around him as she climaxed once again, causing his hips to jerk as he finished spilling his seed into her welcoming body.
“Katara!” he moaned before he collapsed on top of her before he could catch himself.

He felt Katara cling tightly onto him and he relaxed against her, panting harshly against her throat as his body continued to tingle and shudder from his intense orgasm, just as hers was beneath him. Once his body calmed itself, the Fire Lord slowly pulled out of her and lay at her side, wrapping her tightly in his arms as he pressed her close to him.

They luxuriated in each other’s arms for a long moment, both enjoying the intimacy. Katara sighed softly and nuzzled against her husband’s strong chest as he gently ran his fingers through her soft hair, occasionally pressing his lips and murmuring softly against the crown of her head.

“I’m sorry,” she heard him whisper in her hair at the same time he tightened his arm around her.

“For what?” she asked softly as she lifted her head to give him a small frown.

He stared intensely yet sadly into her eyes and her heart ached at his silent suffering.

“I’m sorry for causing you pain,” he continued in the same low, dejected tone, “When I asked you to be my wife, I promised you that I was going to protect you, that I was going to make you happy… but you have only suffered.”

Katara quickly pressed her fingers against his lips to stop him and she gently shook her head. He frowned at her and the guilt in his amber eyes made that ache grow in her chest.

“Please, don’t think like that, Zuko,” she told him softly yet firmly, “Yes, I’ve gone through many hardships and much anguish this past year—we both have—but I knew life wasn’t going to be easy when I chose to become the wife and consort of the Fire Lord. And haven’t I come out much stronger through all of that?”

“Yes,” he agreed sincerely, though his mood had not changed at her words. “But you shouldn’t have to have gone through all those things at all.”

“Then, would you have preferred we didn’t marry?” she asked him quietly.
“Of course not!” Zuko immediately replied as he crushed her tightly against his chest as if to prevent her from being taken from him. “I can’t imagine not having you in my life. I enjoy having you by my side. I love you too much to let you go,” he told her fervently before he more darkly added, “Which just shows how selfish I really am.”

“But I don’t want you to let me go, Zuko,” Katara told him softly as she again lifted her head to look into his eyes, “I won’t be able to live without you. Yes, I’ve been hurt, but it wasn’t you who intentionally hurt me. Life is unpredictable and you can’t always stop me from getting hurt. What matters is that you are there to give me comfort, to help me become stronger, to remind me of your love for me.”

“And I will always be there for you,” Zuko promised firmly as he gave her a gentle squeeze.

Katara smiled before she leaned down to press a small, loving kiss on the grim line of his lips.

“Besides, the pain and hurt are almost inconsequential compared to the great happiness I experience being married to you,” she continued gently as she reached a hand out to softly caress his scarred cheek, “You make me happy, Zuko, more than I thought any man could, and I will never regret choosing you as my husband.”

Zuko felt his remorse ease at her words before he felt his heart expand in happiness and tenderness for his strong and understanding wife. If she had been any other woman, she would have left him at the first signs of trouble, but fortunately Katara was different, and for that he would always thank the gods for bringing them together. He vowed to cherish her until the end of his days.

Bringing his hand up, he cupped her cheek. She leaned against his touch and smiled at him, her ocean blue eyes gazing lovingly into his, before he lifted his head and kissed her with all the love and gratitude he could convey from his heart. Their kiss soon changed into one full of need and passion, and soon their bodies were once again joined and moving rhythmically together. This time they took their time to explore each other’s bodies, tantalizing one another until their pleasure flared to scorching heights, before they exploded into worlds of immense ecstasy.

Panting and moaning softly, they stared into each other’s eyes as their hearts slowed from their fast pace. They spent a few minutes just bestowing tender kisses on each other while their hands softly caressed one another’s bodies. It was a moment of gentle intimacy to express their innermost, affectionate feelings. With a soft sigh, Zuko pressed one more kiss on his wife’s moist lips before he gently pressed her against his chest and ran his fingers through her tresses once more. She sighed softly as well as she cuddled against him.
“Katara?” he spoke up softly after a moment of companionable silence.

“Mm, yes, Zuko?” she asked.

“Would you like to travel to the Southern Water Tribe to visit your family?” he asked her.

Katara again lifted her head to stare hopefully at him.

“Can we really?” she inquired excitedly, her eyes shining in her enthusiasm.

“So do you,” she replied.

“If we stay for the next month, I can finally see the Winter Solstice Festival you love so much,” he told her with a grin.

“Oh, yes!” the waterbender exclaimed, “You’ll love it, too!”

Zuko was silent as he listened contentedly to his wife describe one of her favorite holidays until she finally wound herself down.

“I love you,” she whispered as she curled her body once again against his powerful frame.

He smiled at her words and leaned down to kiss her forehead.

“As I love you,” Zuko sighed against her hair.

They fell into a peaceful silence as they held tightly onto one another. In their minds, they both thought that they would remember this night for the rest of their lives as a night where they came to the understanding that they would not let anything tear them apart.
Darkness may find a way to shadow their lives, but it would always turn to light, just as night always made way to dawn. And they knew, in the very depths of their souls, that for the rest of their lives, they would bathe in the splendor that dawn could bring. It was a night that emphasized the undying love they held for each other despite the obstacles life threw their way, and they gloried in the fact that they would do so, together.
The sound of happy chatter and enthusiastic laughter combined harmoniously with the lively sound of Water Tribe music, creating an exciting and jovial atmosphere. The full moon was large and bright, and millions of twinkling stars shared its space on the inky, dark sky. The Winter Solstice Festival was in full swing and there was added excitement to the event thanks to the presence of the Fire Lord and his wife, the Water Tribe Chief’s precious daughter.

Two months had passed since the incident with Yin-Min. Vacationing in the Southern Water Tribe, and visiting Katara’s family, really helped the royal couple cope with the terrible events that had happened to them. They would be returning to the Fire Nation the following week and decided to take this time to enjoy themselves before they had to return to their duties. The relaxed and amiable environment of the snowy city and its people made their worries lessen and provided them with a tranquility the royal couple was rarely able to enjoy in the strict and demanding environment of the Fire Nation Court. Katara and Zuko had mutually decided that they would not stress about an heir and would only enjoy each other for the moment.

Sitting around the marketplace, the royal couple watched the acrobatic feats of some waterbending performers in admiration. People all around them cheered and exclaimed their awe at the spectacle, while others enjoyed the various stalls selling delicious foods typical of the festival. Katara was sitting between Zuko’s long legs on top of some thick furs, her back resting against his solid chest, his arms around her waist, his hands clasped against her stomach. His relaxed posture and the fact that he was embracing her in front of her people, made her realize with happiness that he was more relaxed in her homeland than at his royal court. She had to find a way for them to have more vacation time so Zuko could relax more. He worked too hard for someone so young. Katara smiled and then clapped enthusiastically at a particularly complex move of one of the performers.

Zuko smiled down at his wife’s excitement. He was glad he had suggested they visit her homeland where she was more carefree and unperturbed by the troubles of court life. He wrapped his arms a little more tightly around her smaller frame and smiled contentedly when she leaned closer against him. They were sitting around a large table with Ursa, Jee, Sokka, and Suki. Hakoda was once again showing off his twin granddaughters to his friends. Jing and Ting, now a little over a year old, were a pair of energetic and mischievous girls that had their parents simultaneously amused and exhausted. Aang and Toph were playing at the games booths with the other youths. At another quieter part of the marketplace were Iroh, Pakku, Kanna, and other older members of the tribe reminiscing about their younger days as they played Pai Sho.

At another incredible move from the performers, the blue-eyed Fire Lady gasped in delight and squirmed excitedly in her place between Zuko’s legs. The waterbender felt her husband stiffen before he tightened his hold of her as he brought his face close to the side of hers.

“If you don’t stop squirming so much, my little water nymph, I’m going to carry you to our room in front of all these people,” he rumbled huskily in her ear, his breath warm against her chilly skin, before he pressed her closer to him and teasingly nipped her ear.

Katara’s eyes widened and she moaned softly when she felt his hardness pressing against her backside. As if to solidify his small threat, the firebender subtly shifted behind her, slowly rubbing his growing arousal against her. Katara stifled another moan that managed to sneak upon her. It was so hard to think straight and keep from squirming in desire while her delicious, manly firebender continually found reasons to brush that delightfully sexy body of his against hers. Her mind was getting a little fuzzy with arousal, but they were both distracted when they noticed Sokka and Suki stand up.

“We’re going to go check out the food stalls,” the blue-eyed warrior said, oblivious to the sexual tension radiating from the royal couple as he looked down and grinned at them.

“Uh, I’ll go with you guys,” Katara spoke up quickly, thinking that she needed to keep some distance from her husband before she dragged him to their rooms. It was too early for them to retire for the night.

She was about to stand up, but she gasped quietly when Zuko quickly pulled her back down and held her firmly against him.

“You better stay unless you want to embarrass us both, love,” he whispered hoarsely in her ear.

Katara felt herself blush, but she quickly cleared her throat and smiled innocently at her oblivious brother and not so oblivious sister-in-law.

“Uh, never mind,” she said.

Suki raised an eyebrow as she smirked knowingly at them; she and Sokka had been in the same situation before. Chuckling quietly, the auburn-haired woman winked at them which only caused Katara to flush even more. Sokka caught Suki’s actions and he frowned at her in confusion before he turned to look at his sister and brother-in-law. He noticed the deep blush on Katara’s face and the way Zuko was holding her tightly to him and his eyes widened as he finally grasped what was going.

“Ew, gross!” he groused as he dramatically covered his eyes with his hands. “Can’t you guys get a room?!!”
“You’re hardly one to talk, Sokka,” Zuko retorted dryly.

The women suppressed their laughter when Sokka spluttered and his cheeks deepened in color. Suki and he had been caught in one of the sitting rooms a few nights ago. Fortunately, they had been hidden by some furniture so the only thing that gave them away was their discarded clothes. Sniffing, the brown-skinned warrior crossed his arms over his chest and narrowed his eyes at the Fire Lord.

“Yeah, well, excuse me for not wanting to see you paw at my baby sister in front of everybody!” he groused.

“Oh, Sokka, please,” Katara said with a roll of her eyes. “Zuko’s hardly doing that. Compared to you, he’s subtle.”

“Ha! Subtle my ass!” Sokka guffawed. “When everybody can hear both of you screaming at night! You’re so loud the Northern Water Tribe must be able to hear it!”

“Sokka!” Katara and Suki exclaimed in unison and Zuko’s eyes widened in mortification.

Both Katara and Zuko felt themselves flush in embarrassment.

Sokka smirked at his embarrassed brother-in-law and Zuko narrowed his eyes at him before a small smirk curled his lips. Sokka braced himself.

“Well, at least you know the advice you gave me before our wedding worked and I’m able to please your sister so thoroughly that—”

Hands still clasped over his ears, the warrior turned and practically ran away. Suki shook her head at Zuko as she placed her hands on her hips.
“Thanks, now I’m going to have to hear him complain about how the Fire Lord is corrupting his baby sister,” she accused, though there was an amused grin on her face.

The royal couple chuckled as they watched the female warrior go after her embarrassed husband. Zuko pulled Katara closer, pressing her against his semi-aroused flesh with a small sigh as he placed his chin on her shoulder. Katara bit her lip to stifle her amused laughter. Without another word, they returned their attention to the entertainment.

Shifting her gaze around their table for a brief moment, Katara's attention quickly turned to where Ursa and Jee were sitting together. Her eyes widened in surprise when she watched Jee pluck a small, white flower—one of the few varieties that grew in the wintry area—from the small vase on their table and tucked it imperceptibly behind Ursa’s ear. A faint pink hue surfaced on the noblewoman’s pale cheeks as she smiled shyly up at the admiral, who was looking down at her with a tender look.

Wait. What? When did that happen? Katara asked herself in shock, unable to look away from the scene.

Well, she had been preoccupied with many other things over the past few months, so she had not paid much attention to them. But did it mean what she thought it did? Her hope for a budding relationship between her kind mother-in-law and the silent admiral grew. She needed to speak to Ursa immediately. The curiosity was eating at her!

She was distracted from her thoughts when she saw a Fire Nation soldier approach Jee. The admiral quickly moved away from Ursa and composed himself as he looked at the young soldier with an unreadable expression. The guard said something and the admiral gave him a brief nod. Jee whispered something to a frowning Ursa before standing up. He walked around the table and approached Zuko, whose attention had been focused on the performance. Sensing his presence, the Fire Lord glanced up with a raised eyebrow and Katara listened curiously.

“I messenger hawk has arrived at the flagship, my lord,” Jee informed him, “Would you like me to fetch it?”

Zuko frowned, wondering what it could be about. He hoped it was nothing serious. Before they left the Fire Nation, he gave orders that he was not to be disturbed unless it was an urgent matter.

“No, I’ll go look at it right now,” Zuko replied coolly.
He finally released Katara and made to stand up before he stopped and sat back down when he realized his body was still too excited from its earlier interaction with his waterbender. When Jee gave him a puzzled look, Zuko cleared his throat.

“Give me a few minutes and I’ll join you on the flagship,” he said stoically.

With a respectful bow, Jee turned around and headed to the docks.

“Is something wrong?” Katara asked as she looked up at him with a frown.

“I don’t know, but I hope not,” Zuko responded grimly.

Once his body finally calmed down, he squeezed her hips and brushed his lips against her ear.

“I can’t wait to have you alone in our room tonight,” he purred huskily.

He smirked when he felt the shiver that racked her body. With another squeeze of her hips, he stood up, smiled down at her, and then walked away. The crowd quickly made way for him.

Katara bit her lip as she watched him go. She admired the way his long dark hair swayed down his back and how striking his body looked in her tribe’s clothes. This time instead of being red, his parka and pants were a dark shade of blue and the fur lining it was dark gray like his boots. A thick sash of the same color wound around his waist. His parting words only made her more eager for the night to end so they could indulge in each other in the room that used to be hers. Blinking, the brunette shook her head to come out of her daze. Even after all this time, he still managed to leave her stunned and aroused. She glanced back at her mother-in-law, who was once again observing the performers, and she grinned.

It was the perfect opportunity.

Standing up, Katara walked around the table and sat down where Jee had been sitting. The older woman turned to smile at her. The waterbender returned the smile, though she was sure it showed her curiosity and excitement.
“So…you and Jee, huh?” the waterbender asked innocently.

Ursa’s cheeks flushed once again before she laughed softly.

“Oh, don’t act all surprised, dear,” Ursa replied amusedly, “Jee told me you knew how he feels about me for some time now.”

A large grin appeared on Katara’s lips.

“I did,” the younger woman confessed with a small laugh.

“Then why didn’t you tell me instead of throwing hints at me?” Ursa asked with an exasperated sigh.

“It wasn’t for me to tell,” Katara replied simply.

Ursa let out another sigh and nodded.

“You’re right,” she agreed. Finding out about Jee’s feelings from him personally was definitely much more romantic.

“I know how Jee feels about you, but what do you feel about him?” Katara asked softly.

Katara watched as a smile appeared on her mother-in-law’s lips and her golden eyes became equally soft and bright.

“I love him,” Ursa confessed sincerely.

“Really?” Katara asked with wide eyes.

Ursa nodded, the happy smile still on her lips.
“I would not have realized my feelings for Jee if you had not brought him to my attention, but I do,” Ursa continued, her tone soft and bemused, “I love him like I’ve never loved anyone before. Jee is a kind, patient, and strong man. He protects me, respects me, and makes me feel safe and cherished. He offers comfort when I need it, without expecting anything in return. I can see that he loves me for who I am and not for what he could gain by being with me…”

The golden-eyed woman paused before she nodded. Jee was completely different from Ozai. Although he was not as handsome as Ozai nor was he royalty—or even a nobleman—he was a better man than Ozai ever would be. His feelings for her were true. Her lips lifted in a smile—a genuine, blissful smile that lit up her gentle features.

“I have come to realize that what I once felt for Ozai was the love of a young girl for an idealized image of a dashing young man,” she explained in a thoughtful voice before her tone again turned tender as she continued, “But what I feel for Jee is something much deeper, much stronger, more complex and intense.”

Katara smiled happily and nodded for her to continue. The older woman smiled gratefully at the waterbender’s sincere understanding. It was nice to have another woman to talk to about such things. The sound of the excited crowd barely reached them as the two women focused on their conversation.

“I felt hurt when Ozai forced me to leave the palace,” Ursa continued with a frown before her hands clenched on her lap as she continued, “But if I were to ever lose Jee, I would not be able to bear it. I wouldn’t just be hurt, I would be devastated.”

“Jee will never hurt you,” Katara spoke up confidently as she pressed her hand on Ursa’s arm.

Ursa smiled and patted her hand in gratitude.

“I know,” she replied assuredly.

Katara watched as another soft blush stained the woman’s cheeks.
“Although Jee’s not as handsome as Ozai, he’s very good-looking…and an amazing kisser,” Ursa confessed shyly but delightedly.

The waterbender suppressed a grin at her mother-in-law’s bashfulness. It made her happy to know that Ursa was experiencing all the wonders of what true love can bring. She deserved it.

“Some say an amazing kisser is a prelude to their expertise in bed,” Katara teased with a wink.

“Katara!” Ursa exclaimed in shock as she glanced around them to make sure no one was listening, though there was a smile on her lips.

“What?” Katara replied innocently, though her large grin ruined the effect.

Ursa shook her head, but continued smiling, because, truthfully, she could not stop thinking about that moment when Jee finally made love to her. She had never thought about the subject of lovemaking so much before, not even when she had been married to Ozai, that it sometimes baffled her at how frequently her thoughts shifted to having Jee’s body pressed intimately with hers.

“So when did you two confess your feelings to each other?” Katara asked, snapping Ursa out of her thoughts.

“After the execution of that horrible woman, Jee approached me and said that he realized anything could happen and he’d regret it if he never told me what he felt for me. So he did. He confessed he fell in love with me as he guarded me,” the older woman explained with a soft smile.

Katara listened attentively as Ursa told her what else they said and how Jee understood when Ursa asked him to be patient with her until she could sort out her feelings. Then weeks later, when she was absolutely sure her feelings for him were more than just affection, she confessed she loved him too.

“That’s so romantic,” Katara said with a smile before she frowned as she carefully asked, “Are you two going to continue hiding your relationship?”

“Jee plans to ask Zuko if he can court me soon,” Ursa responded with a smile.
Katara grimaced slightly.

“Jee’s going to have a hard time getting Zuko’s approval,” she muttered.

Ursa winced at the truth of that statement. She knew her son would not be pleased with the news. A deep, dejected sigh escaped her as she glanced down at her clasped hands.

“I might have to give up on Jee if my son opposes our union,” Ursa said sadly but resolutely.

“But why?” Katara asked incredulously and she frowned.

“My children are the most important thing to me and I will not do anything that might distress them if I can help it,” the older woman said decisively before she more sadly added, “It will be hard to break things off with Jee, but I will do it if I have to.”

The waterbender’s frown deepened. She did not doubt that Ursa would sacrifice her happiness for her children. Did Ursa not follow Ozai’s order to murder Azulon and leave the comfort of the palace in order to save her son? Did she not continue to visit Azula in her prison even when the insane princess insulted her?

“I won’t let you do that,” Katara told her firmly as she reassuringly grasped Ursa’s hand, “I’ll make Zuko agree to your courtship with Jee even if I have to tie him to a chair.”

Ursa shook her head and gave the younger woman a small smile as she patted her hand.

“We both know how stubborn Zuko can be,” she said.

“I can be equally as stubborn as he,” Katara retorted.

Besides, I’ll not allow him to make love to me if it comes to that. He’ll agree to anything as long as he can have me, she thought with an inward grin before she frowned. Well, it’d be a sacrifice on her part too, but she would endure it as long as she could help Ursa and Jee.
Katara was brought out of her thoughts when she felt Ursa squeeze her hand briefly before she straightened. The waterbender followed her gaze and noticed that Zuko and Jee were making their way to their table. The two women exchanged a brief, understanding look before Katara stood up and sat on the spot she had been sitting on with Zuko previously. Jee smiled as he sat down next to Ursa while Zuko elected to sit next to Katara instead of behind her.

“Was the message urgent?” Katara asked with a worried frown at their unreadable expressions.

Zuko glanced down to smile reassuringly at his wife.

“One of my men wrote that they’ve found some signs of the rebels after all this time. They are going to continue to investigate,” he explained before he added more grimly, “I hope they have luck and Jianguo is careless, so they can finally capture him.”

Katara watched as his eyes grew dark with repressed anger. They had not heard one word of Jianguo and the rebels in so long, which only caused them to wonder what they could be planning.

Zuko glanced over in time to see a small body lunge itself at his chest. He almost toppled over onto his back in surprise before he caught himself. He glanced down in bewilderment to see large blue eyes and a wide smile on a small familiar face.

“Lien,” he greeted with a small smile even as he heard people gasp and murmur around them. He waved his guards away when they moved forward.

The little girl he had saved the last time he visited the Southern Water Tribe grinned at him, oblivious to the impropriety of addressing the Fire Lord so familiarly, as she sat beside him and began chatting to him as if they were the best of friends. It reminded him of Katara during the beginning of their friendship. Zuko glanced at his wife to see her grinning at him before he returned his attention to the little girl.

Katara suppressed her giggles as she watched Zuko try to follow Lien’s one-sided conversation. She could see that he felt a bit awkward, but even so, he gave the little girl his complete attention and was quick to answer her questions. The waterbender looked up to see Ursa and Jee smiling amusedly before she returned her gaze to the odd pair. A warm feeling spread to her chest at the sight of Zuko interacting with the little girl. It made her think of how he would act with their own children if they were to have them. She was interrupted from her thoughts when Lien included her in their—or more accurately, Lien’s—conversation.

A few minutes later, Lien’s worried parents finally appeared and apologized for their daughter’s actions, but they were reassured by the Fire Lord that he did not mind. They thanked him before they finally retreated with their daughter after she bid the royal couple a happy farewell.

When Zuko turned to look at her, Katara gave him a smile—a warm, soft smile that made her azure eyes glow. Mesmerized, he wrapped his arm around her and brought her close to his side. She let out a sigh as she relaxed against him as they returned their attention to a new form of entertainment composed of young women, dressed in ceremonial clothes, dancing to the beat of tribal music in honor of the winter solstice.

The celebration continued throughout the night with much cheer and enthusiasm. It was not until a few hours before dawn that the revelers finally made their way to their homes. After bidding their family a good rest of the night, Zuko firmly grabbed Katara’s hand and quickly steered them toward her old room. He had been holding his hunger for her all through the night and he was desperate to finally indulge himself in her body. Katara suppressed a smirk at his obvious intent, her heart pounding in anticipation, and she quickened her pace so that it was she who was pulling him after her. She grinned when she heard him chuckle huskily behind her at her eagerness. When they finally arrived, Katara swiftly opened the door and walked in with Zuko enthusiastically following her, closing and locking the door firmly behind them.

Just as Katara spun around to face Zuko, he grabbed her around the waist and pulled her toward him, clasping her tightly against his hard frame. Their mouths crashed together as their hands roamed each other’s bodies, hurriedly taking off the other’s clothes in a desperate attempt to press their hot skin together. Once they were both completely naked, Zuko pulled her roughly up to him, grinding his hard cock against her wet sex as she sucked on his lower lip and rubbed her breasts against his chest. The chilly air in the room only heightened their pleasure as it hit their hot flesh. He growled as he made to move them to the fur-covered bed, but Katara wiggled in his hold and he reluctantly let her go. They were standing on the large white fur rug placed before the small fireplace in her room and he watched as she sunk to her knees before him and grabbed his cock.

“Katara!” he rasped when she took him into her mouth and sucked him firmly.

He brought his hand to cup the back of her head and his fingers tangled in her soft hair as his hips jerked into her touch. His head fell back as she stroked him continuously into her mouth and her hand pulled and massaged his sac. When she moaned and pressed him more deeply into her hot mouth, he pushed against her shoulders to pull her away before he came much faster than he wished. When she looked up to frown at him, he ran his thumb over her swollen lips.

Katara felt flames of arousal flare within her at his words, but she shook her head. She wanted to pleasure him until he lost control of the sensations running through him. She wanted to see him stiffen and shake with pleasure. She wanted to hear him growl and moan her name.

“I’m not done with you yet,” she said.

Zuko smiled when she pouted at him, a sexy yet adorable pout. He gasped when she grasped his shaft and stroked him temptingly. He frowned slightly as he contemplated what to do to please both of them before a thought entered his head and he grinned eagerly.

“Not to worry, my sexy waterbender,” he murmured throatily as he gazed down at her, “We can have what we both want.”

Katara tilted her head to the side and looked up at him questioningly yet enthusiastically as she squeezed and caressed his erection. The sight of her still kneeling before him with his cock pointing at her face only increased the firebender’s lust.

“What do you mean?” she asked as she squeezed her thighs together to relieve some of the pressure in her core.

Instead of answering, Zuko lowered himself onto the rug and laid down upon his back, then he reached for her arms and gently pulled her up, urging her over him. Curious, Katara lifted herself on her knees and straddled his chest as she looked down at him in askance, wondering if he wanted her to ride him.

“Now turn around,” he demanded huskily.

Katara obeyed and carefully moved over him until she did what he wanted, still wondering what he had planned, yet anticipating whatever was to come, knowing it was just going to bring them more pleasure. Zuko grabbed her hips before she gasped when he suddenly dragged her back so that she was straddling his face. Her eyes widened as she stared down at his incredible body, his turgid length pointing at her face.

“Oh, gods,” she moaned once she realized what he planned and she felt her juices seeping out of her
She felt herself suddenly blush at the new position, though she knew it was irrational since Zuko’s face had been buried between her thighs many times before. She glanced over her shoulder, but she could barely see his eyes peeking around her backside as he caressed her hips.

“Zuko,” she whimpered as she wiggled her ass in his hold.

“Mm, perfect,” the firebender murmured as he pulled her closer to him.

His eyes hungrily drank in the sight of his waterbender’s swollen pink folds and engorged clit, watching as her juices leaked out of her contracting pussy. He would never get tired of such a sight as long as he lived. He pushed down slightly on her hips, forcing her to spread her thighs wider so she could be close to his face and he took a deep breath of her scent before he exhaled with a delighted sigh. With a husky purr, he stuck out his tongue and slowly slid it along her drenched folds to taste her musky sweetness. Her taste was simply delicious. He needed more. He heard her moan his name and felt her thighs shake on either side of his head. Smirking in pleasure, craving more of her, wanting to hear her breathless sighs and pleasured moans, Zuko held her hips tightly and trailed his tongue more firmly from her swollen bud, through her folds, before impaling it into her quivering entrance.

“Yes!” Katara mewedled at his erotic kisses.

“Zuko, mmm,” she moaned, her hips rocking back onto his face for more as her walls tightened around his tongue, trying to pull him deeper into her.

Zuko murmured her name against her wet pussy as pleasure erupted in his stomach at her calls. His cock throbbed, wanting her touch, but he was enjoying eating her out too much to be able to voice his need.

Katara’s body trembled and her heart pounded wildly in her chest as her husband’s skillful tongue and mouth lapped, licked, and sucked at her folds. When his lips touched her clit, she fell forward with a loud cry at the pleasure before she caught herself on his muscular thighs. Moaning and panting at the pleasure building fiercely within her, the brunette opened her eyes only to fix them on her firebender’s cock standing firmly before her. She watched in excitement as it twitched and bobbed and she licked her lips when she noticed his whitish arousal ooze out from the slit, evidence of his hedonistic delight for what he was doing to her.
Moaning, she grasped his shaft in one hand and squeezed. When he groaned and his hips jerked into her touch, Katara leaned down and engulfed him into her eager mouth, wanting to devour him as vigorously as he was her. She felt the muscles of his thighs quiver and jerk under her fingers just as hers were beside his head. She bobbed her head over him before she firmly sucked on his length, groaning when a flow of his arousal fell onto her tongue as her reward for her efforts.

Groaning against her wet flesh, Zuko’s hips surged up at the immense pleasure. “Yesss, just like that,” he growled huskily as he furiously slurped at her pussy. “Gods, you taste so damn good.”

He was lost in the sensation of her soft skin sliding against his, of her warm mouth surrounding his aching shaft, of her scent permeating his nose, of her sweet taste saturating his mouth, that he could think of nothing else but her. He wanted to tease her until she was begging for him. He knew she was going to reciprocate even more vehemently throughout the night since there was a full moon, so he wanted to take advantage before he surrendered to her exquisite torture. When her movements became more frantic, he spread her legs wider and clamped his hands to her thighs to keep her in place against his mouth, holding her helpless and trembling with the pleasure surging through her. His large hands slid up to grasp both of her luscious ass cheeks, kneading them roughly before he firmly spread them open as his tongue delved deeply into her pussy, rubbing insistently against her wet walls and sucking roughly on her folds, before moving furiously on her engorged clit.

“Oh, gods, ohhhh,” Katara groaned long and low as her hips pushed closer to his wonderful mouth. Her mind was too overwhelmed with the pleasure that she temporarily forgot to pay attention to his straining cock in her hands.

Zuko brought her neglect to her attention when he lightly smacked her bottom and thrust his hips up.

“Put my cock back into your mouth, love,” he growled against her drenched folds.

Moaning, Katara quickly brought her head back down and took him into her mouth. She let out a relieved moan when he rewarded her by sucking furiously at her sex.

Panting and groaning, Zuko kissed her folds before he pulled back slightly and reached a hand up between them. He thrust two fingers deeply into her spasming core and he watched in fascination as her pussy tighten around them just as she let out a loud gasp around his cock. He swallowed thickly, thinking that he might just come from the sensation of her walls contracting around his plunging fingers and from forcing her to voice her pleasure. As he continued to push his fingers into her, making sure to stroke her walls, he leaned forward to lick and suck her bud to rush in her orgasm. He could feel his own release building within him and he clamped his other arm on her lower back to keep her in place. Just the thought of her swallowing his seed as he came and the thought of her coming into his mouth at the same time caused a scorching fire to erupt within him.
Katara moaned around his length and she sucked on it almost mindlessly in her rapture. The pleasure was overwhelming and she was sure she would expire from the incredible sensations. Her muscles drawing taut, she writhed and undulated above him, firmly grinding her sex against his face as her hands tightened on the base of his cock, silently begging him to give her the released she needed. Katara’s breath hitched when she felt him curl his fingers inside her, stroking that sensitive spot within her that caused electricity to spark along her every nerve.

She felt her juices rushing out of her to coat his plunging fingers, which only increased her ecstasy. Helpless in the face of such pleasure, Katara ground her hips uncontrollably onto his face just as she pushed his hard cock deeply into her mouth and down her throat.

As his wife went wild above him, her thighs clamping tightly around his head, her juices gushing into his mouth, Zuko moaned loudly against her contracting pussy as his hips thrust uncontrollably as his orgasm exploded from him. Letting out almost animalistic growls of untold pleasure against her sex, he felt his cock throb and jerk inside her hot mouth as his seed burst out of him and down her throat. His vision darkened for a moment at the intensity of his euphoria, unaware of the flames of the fireplace leaping with his heated and intense climax, and his arm tightened around his trembling waterbender. Once the intensity subsided, he slumped onto the fur rug while his wife collapsed on top of him after she released him, both panting and shuddering.

After a moment, Katara sluggishly rolled herself away from him and dropped down at his side, unable to form a coherent thought at the incredible pleasure she had just experienced.

“Wow,” she said breathlessly as she stared at the ceiling above her. “That was amazing.”

Chuckling huskily, Zuko nodded as he licked his lips clean of any remnants of her essence.

“Definitely,” he replied huskily.

Once coherent thought returned to him, he finally noticed the chill of the room biting onto his cooling skin and was sure Katara was feeling it as well. He smiled at her dazed look. She seemed unable of moving, her body lethargic and thoroughly satisfied, so with an endearing smile, he scooped her into his arms and carried her to the bed. He placed her on it before he slipped in beside her.
When she hummed contentedly, Zuko moved so that he could look down at her. He was pleased to see the satisfied smile she gave him. Her large, blue eyes were shining with her pleasure, happiness, and love. He could only stare back at her in wonder at the immense feelings she created within him. He reached out a hand to caress her flushed cheek before he cupped it gently.

Katara felt her heart throb in her chest at the way Zuko was staring at her, as if she were the most precious thing in the world, and she reached up to caressed his cheek while running her thumb lovingly under his scarred eye. Golden eyes gleaming and intense, he brought his head down and pressed his mouth tenderly against her. She opened her mouth and moaned when he slipped his tongue inside to caress hers. Zuko groaned as he deepened their kiss, their mouths, tongues, and lips touching each other sensually, mingling each other’s taste that still lingered.

It did not take long for their arousal to resurface as they pressed tightly against each other, wanting to experienced that intimate closeness, that passionate intensity, that they had only felt with each other.

The energy of the moon revitalized the waterbender and the young lord found himself the recipient of her passionate lovemaking. She was relentless, demanding, as she sought her pleasure and his, using her waterbending or bloodbending to increased their sexual enjoyment, reveling in the deep groans and loud growls of her name. When Zuko thought he had completely exhausted himself, Katara proved him wrong. It was as if she was his aphrodisiac, one more powerful than any manmade love potion. Katara made sure to keep her husband completely overpowered by her sensuality and her skills until he was a mass of pleasured male flesh beneath her, smug in the knowledge that his body was absolutely addicted to her touch.

A couple of lovemaking rounds later, the royal couple lay panting and trembling after their incredible climaxes, their minds and bodies still overwhelmed with the intense emotions and sensations they experienced every time they came together. Turning his head to the side, Zuko saw that Katara was still recovering from her pleasure. Agni, she was incredible. If only his countrymen knew of the many advantages they could have with a waterbending wife, they would have overran the Water Tribes in search of one, he mused with a grin. Noticing that his wife was shivering from the cold, he covered them both with the many blankets and furs and wrapped her in the warmth of his embrace.

With a satisfied sigh, Katara snuggled closer to her husband’s warmth and body, relishing in their intimacy, glad to know that he craved her body as much as she craved his. After everything they had gone through, their bond seemed stronger than ever. She pressed a kiss against his chest and smiled when he responded by pressing her closer to him. They were silent for a moment as they basked in the afterglow before Katara felt Zuko’s chest trembling against her as his low chuckle reached her ears.

“What’s so funny?” she asked curiously.
“I think Sokka might be right,” he said, humor coloring his baritone.

“About what?” she asked.

“With the loud noises we just made, even the Northern Water Tribe must have heard,” he replied as his chuckles deepened.

“Oh, gods,” Katara groaned in mortification.

Now that she thought about it, her father tended to avoid making eye contact with her nowadays while he glared darkly at Zuko. Oh, her poor overprotective father. He must wish to be rendered deaf at those moments.

A soft laugh escaped her and the sound of their amusement echoed in the room as they shared more amusing and embarrassing tales of their childhoods. They talked long into the night until they both surrendered to the soothing embrace of sleep.

Katara smiled amusedly as her nieces tried to pull the golden ring from her finger before they gave up and waddled away to find some other form of entertainment. The rest of her family laughed before they resumed their conversation. Her father and Gran-Gran had been concerned by the news they had heard from the Fire Nation, but after she reassured them that everything was well, they had relaxed. Hakoda, Sokka, and Pakku had been pleased by the news of Yin-Min’s execution. But it was Gran-Gran and Suki that had brought up the issue regarding the next heir, saying that now it was only a matter of time before they heard the good news. Katara had only smiled and hoped they were right. Their conversation shifted to other things as they spent their morning together as they have done before Katara married Zuko and moved to the Fire Nation.

She really had missed all of them—even Sokka’s annoying antics. Jing and Ting were growing so big and were beginning to talk in small words. Suki had told her that Sokka had been hurt and had sulked for days when the first words his precious little girls had said and repeated for weeks were ‘mama’, ‘no’, and ‘yummy’ despite his efforts for them to say ‘daddy’. It was weeks later that they started calling him ‘dada’ and Sokka could barely contain his pride and smugness, much to Suki’s annoyance and amusement. Katara shook her head and chuckled. Her little nieces were spoiled rotten by their father, but luckily, Suki was there to keep them—Sokka included—in check.

When the elders began to talk amongst themselves about the friends they had talked to during the Winter Solstice Festival, the younger members reminisced about the entertainment and the food.
“Zuko really enjoyed himself during the festival,” Katara told her brother and sister-in-law with a smile. “I hope we can make it a tradition and visit every year.”

“Oh, gods no!” the warrior exclaimed. “I need my sleep!”

“What’s that supposed to mean?” the waterbender asked with a scowl.

“We had to listen to you and Lord Jerkbender going at it all night!” Sokka groused and shuddered dramatically. “I thought I was gonna be sick!”

Katara’s eyes widened in shock before she turned to look at Suki who was grinning amusedly and nodding. The waterbender glanced at her other family members in embarrassment. Luckily, her father, Gran-Gran, and Pakku were too distracted with the twins to overhear their conversation. Katara felt herself flush, though perhaps she shouldn’t be so surprised since Sokka had already brought up the issue before. She had not thought much about it when in her throes of ecstasy just as she was sure Zuko hadn’t. She did not think they were that loud. Well, it did not help that her old room was close to Sokka and Suki’s room.

“I thought my ears would start bleeding!” her brother exclaimed dramatically.

“He acted like they were,” Suki quipped in amusement. “I had to stop him multiple times from barging into your room to beat Zuko up.”

“Someone needed to shut him up!” Sokka growled as he crossed his arms over his chest. “La knows what things he was doing to my little sister!”

“May I point out that it’s none of your business,” the waterbender sniffed before she added, “Besides, whatever he does to me is because I let him—”

“Eww, Katara!” the warrior interrupted as he clamped his hands over his ears.

“What?” Katara said and grinned evilly when her brother told her to shut up.
If only her brother knew that the noises she and Zuko had made were because of the things she had done to her husband. Well, it was nice to know she was able to please Zuko that much, she mused with an inward laugh.

“Besides, take it as payback for the one time I almost walked in on you and Suki at the end of the war,” she added impishly. She laughed when Sokka turned a deep shade of red and gaped at her.

“You should’ve been sleeping!” he stuttered in mortification.

“With all that noise? I thought an animal was wounded and I wanted to help it,” she replied amusedly, though at that time she had been mortified to find out it wasn’t an animal making those noises. Luckily, she was spared from seeing something that would have scarred her for life when she had heard Suki moan Sokka’s name.

Her brother spluttered and stuttered in embarrassment and indignation, but Suki interrupted with a loud, amused laugh. Sokka crossed his arms over his chest and huffed.

“Whatever,” he sniffed before he sarcastically added, “I’m gonna see if we can build a separate house for when you and Zuko visit again.”

“Why, thank you, dear brother,” Katara replied with another small laugh.

Before Sokka could retort, their father asked what they were talking about.

“Nothing!” the two siblings blurted out.

Hakoda raised an eyebrow at their quick response, but Katara was quick to change the subject after she threw a small glare at her brother who in turned shrugged and grinned. Suki shook her head and pressed her lips together to hide her amusement. They spent a few more minutes talking and then decided to go their separate ways before they met up for lunch.

Humming happily, Katara walked absentmindedly down one of the ice corridors. She could not stop grinning at her brother’s complaints for having to hear his little sister and her husband ‘going at it’ the previous night. Now he knew how she felt having to hear Suki and him the past few years.
“Katara,” the sound of a smooth baritone brought the waterbender out of her thoughts and caused a shiver to race down her spine.

She turned around quickly and smiled when she saw her husband approaching her with a matching smile of his own.

“How was your time with your family?” Zuko asked as he finally came to stand before her.

“It was great!” she exclaimed.

She began to give him small details as she grasped his arm and they started walking down the corridor. He was both mortified and amused when she told him what Sokka had told her. Zuko had spent the time she was with her family with Iroh, which made her wonder where his mother and Jee were. She had thought of bringing up the subject of those two with Zuko last night, but she had been very distracted by other pleasurable things.

Katara was once again distracted when they saw Aang and Toph walking down the corridor.

“Someone is in a good mood today,” Katara observed with a smile as she watched the airbender almost skipping with his happiness.

“He should be after what we did last night,” Toph piped in with a wicked grin.

“Toph!” Aang exclaimed as he clamped his hand over her grinning mouth. His whole face turned red.

The royal couple’s eyes widened in surprise before they chuckled at the young airbender’s embarrassment and the earthbender’s amused satisfaction. Toph pushed Aang’s hand away as she smirked.

“What? It’s not like we actually had full-on sex,” Toph retorted wickedly.
Aang placed his hands over his flushed face and groaned in mortification, knowing Katara and Zuko could guess what Toph meant. But he sure did not regret the heavy petting and makeout session with Toph the previous night. It only made him more sure that they were ready to consummate their relationship in every sense of the word. But that did not mean he wanted the whole world to know it, gees!

“I was sure everybody would’ve guessed,” the small woman quipped before she asked the royal couple, “Didn’t you guys notice?”

“No, we were busy making our own commotion,” Zuko retorted arrogantly, “Which we were told was so loud we didn’t let others sleep.”

“Zuko!” Katara hissed. It was embarrassing enough that her brother knew.

She shook her head and smiled when Toph chortled loudly, Aang laughed, and Zuko smirked at her. Well, it was nice to know that they could joke about such things.

“Well, we’ll see ya guys later,” Toph said as she grabbed Aang’s arm and pulled him after her.

“I have a feeling it’ll be much later,” Aang quipped as he turned to throw a grin at the amused royal couple before he eagerly followed after Toph.

“Hm, why don’t we follow after their example?” Zuko murmured huskily as he grinned at Katara.

The waterbender laughed and shook her head.

“Insatiable,” she said.

“I didn’t hear you complaining about it last night,” he teased.

“Who said I was complaining?” Katara retorted throatily as she ran a hand slowly down his stomach and teasingly played with the edge of his parka covering his manhood. She stepped back with a grin when he groaned and reached for her.

“Later,” she said teasingly.

“Minx,” Zuko groaned before he added, “Fine. I’ll let you go only because I have other things to see to.”

“What other things?” she asked curiously.

“I’m on my way to meet Mother and Jee,” he responded coolly. “Jee asked if he could speak to me after the noon meal, but I decided to talk to him now. I wonder what he wants to tell me.”

Katara’s blue eyes widened. Was Jee going to ask Zuko’s permission to court Ursa? She hoped everything went well and she really hoped Zuko did not become too upset. As they approached one of the sitting rooms of the grand house, they slowed down and glanced at each other. They were heading to the room where Zuko had seen Katara and Aang embracing more than a year ago, thinking she had agreed to marry the Avatar.

Katara grabbed his hand and gave it a loving squeeze. Zuko looked down to smile at her as he squeezed her hand back in reassurance that the memory no longer bothered him. They resumed walking and soon they were stepping into the room, only to freeze in shock at the sight that greeted them. Zuko’s eyes widened and Katara gaped.

Sitting on the bench, covered in furs, was Ursa in Jee’s embrace, but what was more shocking was that Ursa had her arms tightly wrapped around the admiral’s neck while he had her head tilted down, his hand tangled in her hair as he kissed her deeply. Zuko shook himself out of his shock and marched furiously into the room.

“Get your hands off my mother, you traitor!” he roared angrily.

Jee and Ursa quickly jerked away with loud gasps before jumping to their feet with horrified expressions.

“My l-lord!” Jee stammered, his eyes wide in both alarm and mortification.
“Zuko!” Ursa exclaimed as her entire face turned pink in embarrassment.

With a growl, Zuko lunged himself at Jee and punched him across the face, knocking him down against the wooden bench. Jee winced at the painful impacts, but did not defend himself or retaliate. Both Ursa and Katara gasped and shouted for Zuko to stop. The young lord ignored them as he grabbed the older man by the front of his parka and hauled him to his feet, bringing him close to his angry face.

“This is how you show your loyalty to me? By seducing my mother?!” Zuko growled angrily as he glared into the admiral’s eyes.

Jee narrowed his eyes and he straightened himself out as much as possible within the angry Fire Lord’s grasp.

“I would never betray you and I would never do such a dishonorable thing to Lady Ursa,” he said firmly.

Growling, Zuko shook him and again ignored the women’s protests.

“Then why were you kissing her?!” Zuko shouted furiously.

Ursa stepped forward and tightly grasped her son’s arm, trying to make him let go of the admiral.

“Zuko, release him this instant!” she ordered him as she pulled at his arm.

Without looking at his mother, Zuko narrowed his golden eyes at his admiral.

“I am not going to let another bastard hurt you,” he said darkly.

“I don’t want to seduce Ursa,” Jee said firmly as he grasped Zuko’s wrists.

“Then what do you want?” the younger man asked through gritted teeth.
“I want to court her,” Jee replied in the same calm tone, yet there was a softness to it as well.

Zuko’s anger vanished and was replaced with shock. He stared disbelievingly at the older man who stared unwaveringly back at him. He let go of Jee’s parka and took a step back as his mind whirled with questions and misgivings. He had not been prepared for that answer.

Ursa quickly went to Jee’s side and Katara stepped next to her husband.

“You what?” Zuko asked incredulously as he stared with wide eyes at the older man and the way his mother and Jee grasped each other’s hands.

“The reason I wished to speak with you was to ask for your permission to court your mother,” the admiral said calmly as he clasped Ursa’s hand with both of his.

Zuko’s shock quickly turned to mistrust and anger. He grabbed tightly onto his mother’s arm and pulled her protectively behind him, away from the admiral who curled his now empty hand.

“Court her?” the young firebender sneered cynically as he narrowed his eyes at Jee. “What, you wish to be royalty? I didn’t know you were that ambitious, but I suppose most people would kill for the opportunity. But marrying my mother would sure make things much easier.”

“Zuko!” both women exclaimed.

Jee’s nostrils flared and his frown deepened at the young lord’s accusation, but he understood why Zuko would think such things. He knew convincing Zuko about his true intentions wasn’t going to be easy. He just hoped he wasn’t banished for his audacity to wish to marry the Fire Lord’s mother.

“Of course not,” the admiral began firmly, “Her status has nothing to do with it.”

“Sure it doesn’t,” Zuko replied sardonically before his glare intensified as he added, “You best forget your plans to raise yourself on the social ladder because I will never allow you to marry my mother. I won’t allow you or any other man to use and hurt her.”
“I will never hurt her,” Jee responded fiercely as he stared determinedly into the younger man’s wary eyes. “I am not Ozai.”

Zuko’s aggressive stance faltered for a moment at the admiral’s words. Those were the same words Zuko had repeated to those who mistrusted him when he first took the throne. Was he placing Ozai’s faults on Jee just as others had done to him?

“If it would make you trust that my intentions towards Lady Ursa are honorable, I won’t ask for my title to change,” Jee added assuredly. “I can retain the title of a simple admiral, if only I can be called her husband.”

Zuko stared at him incredulously. Katara mentally applauded Jee’s words, knowing he meant them. Ursa smiled as she stared lovingly at Jee who turned to stare sincerely back at her. Before he could stop her, Zuko watched as his mother stepped around him and once again clasped Jee’s hand.

“What?” Zuko asked as he returned his gaze to the calm admiral. “I don’t understand. Why else would you want to court my mother if it’s not for a royal title?”

He watched as the older man turned to look at Ursa and smiled tenderly at her.

“Because I love her. With all my heart,” Jee replied softly, sincerity ringing in his tone.

Zuko stared at him in disbelief, then at their joined hands, before he looked at his mother in bewilderment. Katara bit her lip to keep from pleading to Zuko to give them a chance. Ursa glanced at Jee briefly before she turned her gaze to her shocked son.

“Zuko, my son, I know this is unexpected,” she began softly, “but I love Jee and he loves me. It would make us very happy if you were to accept our courtship.”

Zuko stared at his mother, at her golden eyes pleading for him to understand, for a long moment before he slowly shook his head and backed away another step. He felt Katara touch his arm and he stilled.

“I…I need to think,” he murmured before he turned on his heel and rushed out of the room.
The three sighed as they watched him go before they turned to look at each other. Ursa reached out a hand and lightly touch the red mark on Jee’s cheekbone. Jee winced slightly, but smiled to reassure her as he placed his hand on hers.

“I’m sorry,” she said sadly.

“There is nothing to apologize for,” Jee assured her tenderly as he gently grabbed her hand, “I understand how he must have felt to come upon his admiral kissing his mother.”

Clearing her throat lightly, Katara gave them a small smile when they turned to look at her.

“I’m going to look for Zuko,” she said.

Before they could say anything, she strode swiftly out of the room in search of her errant husband. That surely was not the best scenario to ask for Zuko’s permission and acceptance, she thought wryly. She went to her old room they were sharing during their visit, but found that it was empty. She explored the rest of the house and asked her family if they had seen him, but he was nowhere to be found.

Frowning in worry, she left the house and stood outside. She surveyed the snowy streets and the people who were going about their business until she spotted a group of young women chattering and giggling softly amongst each other as they stared down one street. Narrowing her eyes, she quickly walked up to them. When they saw the waterbender approach them, the women’s chatter ceased immediately and they flushed and stared at her with wide eyes.

“Have you seen my husband?” she asked sweetly, though the sharp look in her blue eyes made them aware she knew they had.

“Ah, he went that way, Lady Katara,” one of the women quickly replied and they all pointed down the street.

“Thank you,” Katara told them with a smile as she turned away. She grinned when she heard them let out relieved breaths as she walked away.

She quickly realized this was the path that led to the small arena where she used to teach the children waterbending. Quickening her steps, she walked down the street, pausing briefly to reply to the people who greeted her. When she finally arrived at her destination, she scanned the area only to frown when she did not see Zuko. She took a moment to reminisce about the past as her eyes once again took in her surroundings before she continued on her search.

She paused briefly when she noticed a large set of footprints leading in the opposite direction. She smiled when she realized Zuko was heading to where the penguins lived, to the place where they had played with the children two years ago. She quickly followed after the footprints, her boots sinking slightly in the snow in her haste. She paused when Zuko finally came into view.

He was standing atop the small snowy hill where they had rolled down when he had caught her after that snowball fight. He was standing straight, his shoulders stiff, his hands clasped behind his back.
He was once again wearing a red parka and black pants and boots—his dark clothing and hair making him stand out strikingly in the white landscape. The golden fire crown nestled on his topknot glinted brightly in the noon sun. A soft breeze swept by and ruffled his long hair for a moment before it settled perfectly down his back. Katara admired his masculine physique for a moment, pleased to have such a fine male specimen as hers, before she made her way to him. She saw him stiffen when he sensed her approach before he relaxed when he realized it was just her.

“How do you feel?” she asked softly as she reached out a hand to touch his arm.

Zuko was silent a moment as he continued staring out into the distance before he let out a sigh.

“I don’t know,” he admitted gruffly. He looked down and narrowed his eyes at her. “You knew about them and that’s why you kept making all those hints,” he grumbled. “Why didn’t you tell me?”

Katara frowned at him.

“It was their secret to tell,” she told him, “Besides, I barely found out they confessed their feelings to each other last night.”

Zuko frowned at her words.

“Do you really think he meant it?” he asked after a moment of silence.

“What?” she inquired softly.
“That...that he loves her,” he responded.

“He does,” Katara replied assuredly.

“How do you know?”

“Because I’ve been observing him for the past year,” Katara finally confessed after a pause, “I noticed his reactions to her and to the noblemen who would approach her with leering eyes. I’ve seen the way he looks at her, when he thinks no one is watching him. It shows how much he loves her. He respects her and he’s completely devoted to her.”

Frown deepening, Zuko was silent as he thought over what his wife had said.

“Zuko,” Katara began before she let out a small sigh, “To be honest, I encouraged him to confess his feelings to her.”

“What?!” the firebender growled.

“I also encouraged Ursa to give love a second chance and hinted to her of Jee’s feelings because I knew she was also developing feelings for him.”

“You what?” Zuko shouted.

“I know I should have told you—”

“Then why didn’t you?” Zuko interrupted her angrily.

Katara placed her hands on her hips and frowned at him.

“Because I knew you wouldn’t have given Jee a chance and would’ve sent him away,” she responded unrepentantly. “Or am I wrong?”
Zuko opened his mouth before he shut it and pressed his lips together as he frowned at her, knowing she was right. He probably would not have listened to what Jee had to say and would have immediately dismissed him as his mother’s guard.

“But Jee refused to tell her what he felt for her at first,” Katara continued, her tone softening a little since she knew this wasn’t easy for her husband. “He didn’t want Ursa turn him away and he didn’t want to upset you.”

Zuko remained silent as he thought over her words. Now that he thought about it, he could remember instances where Jee’s feelings for Ursa were subtle but noticeable. How could he have missed that? Letting out a small growl, Zuko rubbed his face before he sighed deeply once again.

“I just got my mother back and now someone else is trying to take her away from me,” he spoke up in a low tone.

“First and foremost, Ursa is your mother and she would never cast you away for a man. She has told me as much,” Katara replied gently, “Second, you can’t be selfish. Is it okay for you to have a loving spouse while Ursa has to live alone? She is still young. She deserves to live happily with the man she loves and who loves her in return.”

Zuko remained silent as he thought over what his wife had said. She was right. It was selfish of him to want his mother to be only at his side. Besides, it wasn’t as if he were a child who needed his mother’s constant attention and care.

They remained that way for a long moment—the only other sounds that could be heard were the chirps of the penguins at a distance. Finally, Zuko sighed and his shoulders slumped a little.

“I just don’t want her to get hurt,” he said with a frown.

Ozai had hurt his mother deeply with his unfaithfulness and his indifferent treatment of her. And worse still, he had used her to do his dirty work in order for him to become Fire Lord before he forced her out of the Fire Nation to live alone in a dangerous place such as the Abandoned Fort. His mother had been through enough. He would never allow another man to harm her.

“Jee will never hurt her, especially after knowing what she has been through, he loves her too much,” the waterbender replied confidently, “He’ll take care of her. But he also understands how you would feel about his feelings for your mother, so that’s why he wanted to ask for your permission to court her. Jee is very loyal to you and he wouldn’t do anything that would displease you.”

Katara paused as she let her husband think about what she said. Zuko was silent as he mused over her words. He could not deny that Jee had been completely loyal and committed to him for years, even after the harsh way he had treated him and his crewmembers when he had still been a banished prince.

“I’m sure that if you oppose their courtship, Jee would back away,” Katara continued in a softer tone, “Jee would stop interacting with her and she would do the same in order not to hurt you…But then they would both be miserable.”

A frown marred Zuko’s brow as he thought over everything his wife had said. He knew Jee was a good man and he appreciated and even cared for the admiral. He did not want to be the cause for either his mother’s or Jee’s unhappiness. But still, the news was just so unexpected and he did not know how to feel about it.

“Besides,” Katara continued, “Jee asked to court Ursa, not marry her right away. That would give them more time to know if they are truly good for each other.”

“You’re right,” Zuko agreed quietly before he let out another sigh, “It would just be strange to have a…stepfather.”

“You and Jee have had a good relationship,” she replied, “Why would that change things?”

“I suppose that’s true,” the firebender murmured with a frown, “But I’m still not sure.”

“At least hear Jee out before you make a decision,” the brunette advised.

Zuko took a moment to think before he gave a brief nod. It would only be fair, besides, that way he could judge Jee’s sincerity. When his wife smiled gratefully at him, the young lord wrapped his arms around her and pulled her closer to him with a disgruntled expression.

“You must enjoy it when you always make me do what you want,” he grumbled as he glared halfheartedly at her.
Katara grinned up at him as she slipped her arms around his neck.

“You know you only do so when I’m right,” she replied amusedly.

She tugged his head down and kissed him soundly, nipping at his bottom lip and soothing it with her tongue, before pulling away to smile at him. Zuko licked his lips as he stared down at his waterbender, his golden eyes smoldering. He admired the way the cold brought a pink blush to her cheeks and her blue eyes glittered in the sunlight. Again, he felt the familiar stir in his loins at having Katara in his arms. His mind conjured the image of pushing Katara on the snowy ground and taking his pleasure of her and pleasuring her in return. The thought was intriguing, but he knew it would probably not be comfortable for either of them. He pressed a quick kiss to her lips before he reluctantly let go of her. He grabbed her hand and began walking them down the snowy hill.

“We better return to the grand house,” he spoke up, “Mother is probably worried sick right now. And I need to speak to Jee…and apologize…”

Katara squeezed his hand and smiled before she leaned against his arm.

“I’m glad I didn’t have to resort to desperate measures for you to agree to hear Jee out,” she said impishly.

“What desperate measures?” Zuko asked with a wary frown.

“I was willing to withhold sex until you agreed,” Katara replied simply.

Zuko stopped abruptly and turned to stare at her wide-eyed.

“You wouldn’t dare!” he exclaimed with a growl.

He scowled when Katara chuckled.

“I would if it meant the happiness of Ursa and Jee,” she responded truthfully.
She let out a soft gasp when her husband grasped tightly onto her hips and pulled her roughly against him. He lifted her slightly and she moaned lowly when he rubbed his groin against hers just as his lips touched hers in a hard, passionate kiss.

“You are lucky I want you so damn much, minx,” he growled huskily against her soft lips.

“I know,” Katara replied with a pleased grin as she pressed slow, sweet kisses against his mouth.

Zuko enjoyed her attentions for a moment before he sighed and placed her back on her feet, once again reluctantly letting her go from his embrace. After he talked to Jee and somehow figured out what to do, Zuko planned on absconding with his wife in her old room for the rest of the day.

“Come on,” he said as he grabbed her hand.

A few minutes later, the royal couple arrived outside the sitting room once again. When Zuko paused, Katara gave his hand an encouraging squeeze before she slipped her hand from his. Taking a fortifying breath, Zuko schooled his features into a passive mask and stepped into the room. He paused in his steps when he saw his mother leaning dejectedly against Jee’s chest. The admiral had a grim expression on his face as he rubbed her back consolingly and murmured softly to her. Clearing his throat, Zuko watched as they stiffened before they quickly separated and turned to look at him. Ursa’s eyes were large and hopeful, and Jee’s were resigned and cautious.

“Mom, why don’t you go outside with Katara for a bit?” Zuko asked. His tone was impassive as he stared at the older man. “I need to speak with Jee in private.”

Ursa opened her mouth as if to say something, but decided to heed her son’s words. She looked up at Jee and he smiled reassuringly.

“I will be waiting outside then,” Ursa said as she turned back to gaze at Zuko.

The young lord gave a small nod of his head at his mother’s words. Ursa moved gracefully forward, and as she passed her son, she touched his cheek briefly—a gesture of apology, supplication, and affection. Zuko’s expression softened and he reached up to gently grasp her hand. She gave his hand a squeeze before she let him go and followed Katara out of the room. Once the two women were out of sight, Zuko returned his full attention on the admiral, his eyes sharp and assessing.
Jee remained perfectly still, calm, and collected—though inwardly, he felt a nervous wreck. He had not planned for Zuko to find out about his wish to court Ursa by coming upon him kissing the young lord’s mother. Now he would have to work even harder to convince Zuko that his intentions toward Ursa were honorable. His cheek was still aching from Zuko’s strike, but Jee was glad that was the only injury his temperamental lord had inflicted on him.

“Since when have you had…feelings for my mother?” Zuko began in a neutral tone.

“Since a few months after you assigned me as her personal guard,” Jee confessed sincerely, without hesitation, “But I only acted upon my feelings for her recently.”

“Why is that?” Zuko asked skeptically as he raised one dark eyebrow.

“I tried to stop my growing feelings for her, for I knew it was not proper,” the admiral began, “But it was in vain. It seemed that the harder I tried, the more I grew to love her.”

Zuko relaxed a bit and nodded in understanding. The same thing happened to him when he had tried to forget Katara and the love he held for her only to have his feeling become more intense. The Fire Lord was silent a moment as he mused over everything Katara had told him before and what Jee was telling him now. He also took into consideration his mother’s pleading gaze and voice. Zuko acknowledged to himself that Jee was a good man, loyal and strong, but was he worthy of his mother? He just did not want his mother to get hurt, but he also did not want to get in the way of her happiness—if Jee turned out to be part of her future.

“Are you truly accepting of the fact that my mother had a previous marriage and has children from that union?” Zuko asked cautiously.

“Her previous marriage is in the past,” Jee responded without any misgivings. “Besides, I know Lady Ursa loves me more than her…first husband. I fell in love with her knowing her children were the most important things to her.”

Jee paused and Zuko watched his expression soften.

“You’re already important to me,” Jee added honestly.
Zuko stilled in surprise as he stared at the older man. His surprise only increased when he saw Jee was completely serious. Zuko frowned. The only true father figure he had had since his youth was Iroh, but if Jee married his mother he would become another father. Zuko did not know how to feel about that. His real father despised and mistreated him, after all. Mentally shaking his head, he decided to put that thought to the side for now.

“How do I know you wouldn’t hurt my mother?” he asked with narrowed eyes.

“I would do anything to keep her from harm and to keep her safe,” Jee again responded without any hesitation. His expression turned slightly dark as he continued, “She has suffered so much because of Ozai and I refuse to allow her to go through such horrible trials again. I will strive every day of my life to make her happy.”

Zuko inwardly approved Jee’s words, but remained silent as he continued to observe the older man before him.

“Although my mother understood it was acceptable for Ozai, as a prince, to make use of concubines, it had hurt her greatly,” Zuko began in a dark tone before he asked, “Would she have to expect sharing you with other women as well?”

“I will never betray her or cast her aside for another woman,” Jee answered quickly and firmly, his brow etched with a deep frown.

“Would you really not make use of the local brothel as your fellow officers do?” Zuko asked cynically.

Jee’s golden eyes narrowed irately and he clenched his hands at his sides.

“Why can you be the only one capable of faithfulness?” Jee asked through gritted teeth.

Zuko frowned before he grudgingly nodded at Jee’s logic. They stared intensely at each other for a long moment before the Fire Lord sighed.

“I can’t really force my grown mother not to pursue a serious relationship, as much as I’d wish otherwise,” Zuko muttered. With another sigh, he added, “I give you my permission to court my mother until either of you decide to go your separate ways or decide to do something permanent Zuko watched as Jee smiled exuberantly before the older man caught himself and resumed his usual serious expression. Jee pressed his fist to his open palm and bowed gratefully.

“Thank you,” he said sincerely and he straightened himself out to smile at the younger firebender. “I will make Lady Ursa happy, I promise you.”

The Fire Lord gave a regal nod of his head before his expression turned solemn and intense.

“I will hold you to that promise, but if you hurt my mother, I will personally kill you,” he threatened darkly.

Instead of taking offense, Jee only looked amused.

“I’d expect no less, my lord,” Jee replied with a small smile.

Zuko’s threatening expression vanished and he grudgingly returned the smile.

“We should go tell the women before they go crazy with worry,” Zuko said with a grin.

Jee chuckled as he followed the young man out of the room. He was thanking the gods that that meeting went better than he expected. Now he just had to prove to both Ursa and Zuko that he would make the Fire Lord’s mother a good husband, and hopefully, he could marry her soon.

As they stepped out of the room in silent understanding, Zuko thought that if he and Jee had an easy and respectful relationship now, maybe it would not be bad if Jee became his stepfather. Of course, it was still too early to tell, but it was a nice thought, nonetheless.

A few days later, the Fire Lord’s and Chief Hakoda’s families, as well as Aang and Toph, were enjoying a mid-morning picnic at the edge of the cliff that separated the ice city from the wintry wilderness. The Fire Nation family was heading back home later in the day and they were all enjoying the last few hours they had together before they had to separate once again. They were sitting on large, thick furs with baskets containing bread, cheese, and containers filled with a warm Zuko stood at the edge of the cliff as he watched their interaction. Katara’s attention was completely placed on her Water Tribe family as they surrounded her, reminiscing about hilarious childhood antics of both Sokka and Katara. Zuko had gracefully surrendered his wife’s company to them to give her more time with her family without him being in the way.

Zuko’s focus shifted to his mother and Jee whose attention was solely on each other for the moment. He watched as the admiral gently tucked a strand of Ursa’s hair behind her ear and she smiled gently at Jee as she gazed into his eyes. Zuko frowned slightly. He really needed to get used to the idea of them being together. The young lord looked away and returned his gaze to the expanse of the bare, snowy landscape. His mind returned to the incident of two years ago when he had saved Lien from the panther-wolves and Katara had saved him in return. A small smile curled his lips since it was that moment that made Katara finally realize her love for him. Good things did seem to come out of near tragic events.

His gaze once again returned to his wife and his expression softened as he watched her laugh—her blue eyes sparkling in her mirth—at something his uncle and Toph said. Zuko had never been more happy, satisfied and content in all his life than as he was at that moment. He was surrounded by family and friends who cared for him as much as he did them. And it was all thanks to Katara. He would forever be grateful to the gods for bringing her into his life.

Feeling someone approaching him, Zuko turned to see Hakoda stand beside him with a soft expression on his face as he also stared at his family. Both men did not say anything for a while before Hakoda spoke.

“Although I had my doubts about my daughter marrying you, especially after these trying months,” Hakoda began, “I can see that you do make her happy.”

The chieftain turned to smile briefly at his son-in-law before he returned his attention to his laughing daughter. Zuko was not offended by Hakoda’s first statement, and smiled at his last declaration and his trust in him.

“I will always strive to make Katara happy,” Zuko said softly yet firmly as his eyes drank up the sight of his waterbender. “She means everything to me.”

Hakoda’s smile widened, pleased to see how much the young Fire Lord loved his daughter. His smile faltered for a moment and he sighed wistfully as he stared out into the horizon.
“I understand how you feel, for that is how I felt for Kya when she was still alive,” the blue-eyed chief said melancholically.

Zuko reached out a hand to briefly squeeze Hakoda’s shoulder in silent support and apology before he let go. Hakoda gave him a nod of gratitude before he cleared his throat and shook himself out of his dark mood. The two leaders stood together in companionable silence—something that would have been impossible years ago—as they watched their family. After a moment, Hakoda chuckled at his son’s antics before he turned to smile affably at his son-in-law.

“Well, I better head over there before Sokka eats all the meat,” he said amusingly as he walked back to his family, snatching a piece of meat from his son’s hand as he passed him to sit next to Iroh.

The firebender inwardly grinned when Sokka protested his father’s thievery much to the amusement of his twin daughters. Zuko again returned his gaze to his wife, who was mercilessly teasing her older brother.

One day I’ll give you a family of your own, Katara, Zuko mentally vowed with a determined smile.

A few weeks had passed since the Winter Solstice Festival, and after a joyful and tearful farewell from Katara’s family, the royal family was once again in the Fire Nation. Much to Katara’s delight and Zuko’s reluctance, Ursa and Jee’s courtship seemed to be going well. Many of Zuko’s advisors and courtiers were surprised by the unexpected couple, but they did not argue against it since the Fire Lord had given his consent. The royal couple continued to enjoy each other despite the murmurs of the council concerning the lack of an heir.

Katara shivered slightly when a cool breeze swept past her as she stepped into the royal garden. Although the climate was not as cold as her arctic homeland, the Fire Nation’s winter season was still reasonably chilly. Katara took a deep breath of fresh air and sighed contentedly. She had had a busy morning dealing with a few charity proposals and she wanted to enjoy a bit of peace and quiet before she met her family for dinner. She had not seen Zuko since he woke her up that morning with a kiss that led to a quick yet sweet round of lovemaking. She had laughed when Zuko playfully told her she had made him late for his meeting. Smiling happily at the memory, Katara continue on her way on one of the stone paths lined with trees on one side. As she stepped onto one path, Katara froze before she darted behind a tree.

Catching sight of Ursa and Jee sitting on a stone bench under the thick leaves of a large tree, locked in a tender embrace, Katara broke into a wide grin. She watched as Jee leaned down slowly and placed a gentle kiss on Ursa’s lips before pulling away. The noblewoman blushed and smiled happily up at the admiral.
Aww, they are so adorable, the waterbender gushed mentally.

It was all Katara could do to stop herself from doing a little victory dance for her role in getting those two together. Rubbing her hands together in glee, she considered ways in which she could help their relationship progress faster.

“Katara.”

The low whisper made her jump in surprise, just before she felt her husband’s chest press against her back as his strong arms wrapped around her.

“What are you doing hiding behind a tree?” he murmured as he pulled her back against his hard frame.

“Nothing,” she responded quickly, even as her spine tingled in pleasure at his touch.

“Oh? Were you about to join my mother and Jee?” he asked teasingly.

He tried not to glance at the older couple looking softly into each other’s eyes, still oblivious that they had an audience.

“I was just passing by,” she explained innocently.

“Oh, really?” he said sarcastically, his low tone amused. “It seemed to me as if you were spying on them.”

“I just wanted to see if they needed more of my help,” Katara protested.

Ignoring her arguments, Zuko began to gently drag his wife away from the still unaware couple and back toward the palace.
“I think you’ve helped them enough, water nymph,” he said amusedly.

“Why must you ruin my fun?” Katara pouted as she tried to pull against his firm hold, planting her feet on the grassy ground.

“Leave them alone,” the firebender told her with a suppressed chuckle, “We wouldn’t want anyone to spy on our private moments, would we?”

Katara frowned, but before she could protest further he gently tugged on her arm, causing her to lose her balance and fall heavily against him. She glared into his amused, golden eyes and she halfheartedly smacked his chest.

“Why you domineering tyrant,” she scolded as she struggled in his grasp—even as she laughed quietly.

Smirking, Zuko restrained her struggles by pinning her arms between their bodies and capturing her lips in a heady kiss. When she moaned against his mouth, Zuko growled as he felt his body immediately respond in arousal. He leaned back only when his wife melted against his chest and struggled for breath. He licked his lips, savoring her delicious, sweet taste, and smiled wickedly down at her when she opened her eyes.

“It doesn’t seem like they need your help at the moment,” he said casually as his released her only to run his hands over her curves, causing her to muffle her moan by biting her lip. He smirked roguishly at her as he added, “I, on the other hand, need your immediate help with a very big problem.”

“Oh? What sort of big problem are you referring to?” she asked innocently as she pressed her stomach to his growing erection in a wanton manner.

Zuko groaned quietly and his hips bucked against her belly.

“We’ll have to go to our bedchamber for you to find out,” he replied huskily, amused by their playful flirtation. “If you don’t help me with this huge problem right this instant, I’m afraid I’ll go insane.”

“Right now?” the waterbender asked in a mock scandalized tone, even as her blue eyes glittered up at him.
“Right now,” the young lord declared in a serious tone, though the corner of his lips twitches with a grin.

Katara laughed as her husband eagerly grasped her arm and swiftly led her away from the garden and into the palace. With the manner in which they were constantly at each other, she could only hope that they would soon conceive a child.

Gray eyes watched as the light of the campfire cast shadows across the frowning face of his pretty girlfriend. Aang absentmindedly stroked Momo’s fur as he stared at Toph in wonder across the fire. They had currently set up camp on a clear spot of a mountain on their way to a village nestled within an Earth Kingdom mountain range. He had noticed that something seemed to weigh on Toph’s mind ever since they left the Southern Water Tribe weeks ago and he wondered what it could be. He had tried to convince her to talk to him, but she would brusquely tell him that she was fine and to mind his own business. Instead of being hurt by her words, he only grew more concerned.

Did he do something wrong to make her upset with him? He tried to recall if had done something that could incur her displeasure but he could not think of anything. Did she…maybe…not…love him anymore? His chest constricted at such a thought. He would be devastated if that were the case. If Katara’s refusal had hurt him, he was sure Toph’s rejection would kill him. He did not want to lose her. He loved her too much.

Frowning more deeply, the young airbender set Momo to the side. The small lemur chirped at his master questioningly before he flew toward a sleeping Appa and nestled on the bison’s head. Squaring his shoulders, Aang stood up and walked determinedly to where Toph sat staring unseeingly into the flames before sitting close to her side.

Toph stiffened when she felt Aang’s warmth and presence next to her, but she pretended not to notice as she continued twirling the four small balls of rock between her fingers. She hoped Aang didn’t ask her again to tell him what was wrong with her because she might just punch him.

Who was she kidding?

She loved him too much to hurt him…which was the reason she was avoiding him. Damn it. She hated feeling weak and emotional and that’s how she felt when she was around Aang. He made her feel vulnerable, soft, sentimental…female. And she hated that she didn’t completely hate feeling such a way with him.
“Toph?” Aang said softly as he stared into her scowling face. “Would you please tell me what is wrong? Please?”

Toph’s scowl deepened and she twirled the dirt balls more quickly. The soft manner in which he spoke to her always caused her cheeks to heat up and her heart to flutter annoyingly in her chest. Damn him and his stupid, wonderful voice.

“Please, Toph?” he asked more softly as he scooted closer to her so that their thighs touched. “You’re worrying me. I want to help you. Please?”

The small earthbender’s fingers stopped their rapid movement at the touch of his body, even though it was innocent and light. The balls of dirt fell from her control when she felt Aang press closer to her so he could cup her cheek and turned her face toward him. Although she could not see him, she could tell that he was looking worriedly into her face as he stroked her skin.

“Did I…do something wrong?” he asked anxiously.

“No!” Toph blurted before she could stop herself before she sighed. “You didn’t do anything wrong.”

“Then what’s the problem?” he asked with a frown.

Toph slowly pulled away from his gentle grasp and sighed. She was silent for a long moment as she debated with herself whether to let him know what was on her mind or not. What if he got angry with her? Worse, what if he decided he didn’t want anything to do with her? She scowled. She was no coward. And if he decided he could not forgive her and wanted to leave, then good riddance… though her heart would probably bleed with the pain. She grinned wryly at her melodramatic thoughts.

“Toph?” Aang’s voice once again brought her out of her musings.

The earthbending woman sighed before she straightened herself out. She turned in his direction and stared at the spot she sensed his face might be. Gathering her courage, she raised her chin.

“I was one of the reasons why Sugar Queen broke up with you and ended up with Sparky,” she confessed bluntly.
Aang frowned.

“What are you talking about?”

Toph let a puff of air escape her lips, causing her bangs to fly up her forehead.

“I helped Iroh bring Katara and Zuko together,” she continued more rapidly, her words tumbling out like a rock avalanche, “Me and Iroh did everything we could to make them realize their feelings. We knew they had feelings for each other, but they were too confused, afraid, or stupid to admit it, so we decided to help them along. Maybe I shouldn’t have intervened, but I wanted to help them. But I also know that because of that, you came out hurt in the end.”

Aang only stared at her in surprise for her outburst.

“So I guess what I’m saying is that...I’m sorry…” Toph mumbled as she clenched her hands on her lap, “I’m sorry for betraying you like that…”

When Aang remained silent for a long moment, Toph bit her lip and frowned.

“Is this what was worrying you?” he asked her calmly.

“Yeah,” she muttered.

“Well, you don’t have to worry about it anymore,” he told her soothingly as he reached out for her clenched fist. “I kinda had my suspicions.”

“You did?” she asked incredulously.

The grey-eyed airbender chuckled.

“You and Iroh weren’t exactly subtle about it,” he told her amusedly.
“You aren’t angry?” she asked with a raised eyebrow.

“I’ll admit that I felt betrayed and angry at first,” Aang confessed slowly before he continued more calmly, “But I knew that either way, with or without your and Iroh’s intervention, Katara and Zuko would have ended up together. Their love for each other is something powerful. Nothing could have stood in the way of that.”

“But maybe…if I didn’t intervene…you would probably be married to Katara right now…” she muttered. Her voice was strained in the end.

Her eyes widened when she felt Aang pressed a finger against her lips before he cupped her cheek.

“I don’t think I would be,” he interrupted her. “As I said, they would have ended up together either way.”

Aang paused briefly as his thumb caressed her soft cheek. Toph was so funny, strong, brave and smart. She was loud and blunt, but he loved her for it because it showed her honest heart. And even if she wasn’t traditionally feminine, she was beautiful to him. He felt like his heart would swell when she allowed herself to be vulnerable and soft with him, and it made him feel special. It made him wonder how he could not have seen how much he loved her before.

“Besides, I can’t imagine being married to Katara any longer,” he told her softly, truthfully, “I can’t imagine being with anyone that isn’t you, Toph.”

Once again, Toph found herself at a loss for words—a rarity for the brash earthbender. Love really did make people foolish, she mused. Her breath hitched when she felt Aang’s lips press gently against hers. Electricity raced down her spine and she pressed her lips more firmly against his. She smirked inwardly when he let out a low groan. He pulled away and she could feel his soft breath on her lips. It was moments like these that she wished she had her vision so she could stare into his eyes and see what emotion was behind them. However, she did not particularly need her sight. She could sense Aang’s emotions by the timbre of his voice, the beating of his heart, and his soft touch.

Aang stared into Toph’s lime-colored eyes, his heart beating wildly in his chest, before he leaned back down toward her face. He needed to kiss her again.

This time when Aang touched her lips, Toph wrapped her arms around his neck and brought him closer to her, slanting her mouth against his passionately. They moaned simultaneously as their mouths opened and their tongues danced together. They had shared passionate kisses many times, going so far as pleasuring each other with their hands without doing the whole act, which only aroused their desire for each other more. They fell back onto Toph’s sleeping bag, their arms wrapped tightly around each other, their mouths fused together.

“I love you, Toph,” he said breathlessly against her mouth. His lower regions were aching something fierce.

“I love you too, so make me yours. Now,” she moaned loudly as she brazenly pressed closer against him in order to relieve some of the ache in her intimate parts.

Aang’s breath hitched at her words—words he had dreamed Toph would utter so many times before. He pulled back to stare at her flushed face.

“Toph,” he groaned, “Are you sure?”

“I wouldn’t have said it if I wasn’t damn sure, Twinkletoes,” she growled as she pulled him back down with her. “Now shut up and make love to me before I hurt you.”

He could not help but chuckle at her command and threat. Yes, this was the Toph he loved and desired. He had no clue how to go about doing such things except for the basics, and he was sure Toph didn’t either, but he would make sure to make this a night she would never forget. Smiling, he bent down again to kiss her senseless.

Needless to say, it was a night of love…and lots of exploration and experimentation.

End of Part Eight Joyous Tidings

Soft humming filled the Fire Lady bedchamber as Katara arranged the bouquet of winter flowers in the porcelain vase placed on the small table near the large window. A little more than a month had passed since their visit to the Southern Water Tribe and her days were once again filled with all her duties and responsibilities. She enjoyed the work, especially since she was able to help so many people, and as time passed, she felt more confident in her role as Fire Lady. Even the Royal Council members were impressed with her abilities. Some of the noblemen and—women had begun to grudgingly accept the fact that the Fire Lord was not going to cast her away, so they were now trying to get into her good graces—much to her amusement and annoyance.

She was free for the rest of the day, so she decided to place fresh flowers in the Fire Lady bedchamber to pass the time before dinner. Ursa was with Jee once again and Katara did not want to disturb them. The blue-eyed Fire Lady rearranged one of the white flowers and stepped back to admire her work. A smile of satisfaction began to curl her lips, but a gasp of surprise fell from her mouth when strong arms wrapped around her from behind and pulled her into a hard chest. She immediately relaxed when she recognized the intruder’s touch and the scent of smoky sandalwood reached her senses.

“You should be careful sneaking up on me like that because next time I might react faster and accidentally end up hurting you,” she teased with a playfully huff.

She smiled when she heard and felt Zuko chuckle amusedly as he wrapped his arms more tightly around her.

“I know you will always recognize my touch, so I have no fear,” he retorted arrogantly as he kissed her ear and caressed one of her breasts over her royal robes.

Shivering in pleasure, Katara pushed her chest closer to his hand before she turned around in his embrace, wrapping her arms around his neck, a small grin lighting up her features. She rose on her toes and kissed him softly. Zuko sighed contentedly against her mouth and pressed her closer to his chest. They pulled away and smiled at each other.

“I didn’t expect to see you until dinner,” she said as she played with a long strand of his dark hair.

Zuko leaned down to continue placing small kisses on her soft face and lips.
“I finished all my duties of the day earlier than expected,” he explained distractedly before he added, “I wanted to spend the rest of the day with you…if you’re not busy, that is.”

Katara smiled happily up at him. They haven’t had time to spend an afternoon together for a long while, and she was looking forward to it.

“I’m not busy, I was just rearranging some things in here, but I would rather spend my time with my handsome husband,” she purred excitedly.

Zuko returned her smile before he kissed her again. He tightened his hold of her for a second before he let her go, placing her arm through his as he walked toward the doors.

“I was wondering if you wanted to have some tea with me in the veranda. The weather is nice today,” he remarked.

“I’d love that,” the waterbender assured eagerly as they left her chambers and walked toward the Royal Palace Garden.

The weather had been chilly and cloudy for the past few days. The sun had finally made an appearance that morning and they wanted to take advantage of it. There were still a few months left before spring arrived, which would mark another year of their marriage. They paused briefly to direct a servant to bring them tea and refreshments to the veranda before continuing on their way. As they stepped onto one of the stone paths winding through the garden, the royal couple stopped to admire the patches of flowers that still bloomed during the milder winter climate. They paused near the large pond under the cherry blossom tree to watch the turtle-ducks play in the water and enjoyed the warm sun on their skin. They stayed there for a short moment in companionable silence before they made their way to the veranda. As they approached, Zuko wrapped an arm around Katara’s waist and brought her close to his side, leaning his head down to breathe in her delicate scent.

She felt her inner walls clench and dampen as if preparing to accommodate his wishes. She loved it when the usually reserved and proper Fire Lord said naughty things to her. It just showed how much he desired her, how much he wanted and needed her.
“Only if you let me return the favor, my lord,” she purred sweetly as she deliberately ran her tongue across her full lower lip. “I suddenly feel the need to suck on something.”

Zuko groaned as he felt his groin tighten. He really could not have chosen a better wife.

“You can return the favor as many times as you wish, minx,” he replied throatily against her hair before he wickedly added, “And once we’ve satisfied our thirst, I will bury myself deeply inside you, just like I did on that rainy day a year ago, remember that?”

“Oh, La, yes,” Katara moaned, simultaneously replying to his question and voicing her need.

They were engrossed in each other so deeply as they arrived at the veranda that they did not notice that the doors were closed. They were always left open to let in the fresh scents of the garden.

His need for possessing Katara becoming more urgent, Zuko swiftly opened one of the sliding doors aside, while he kept his other arm around her, and eagerly guided her inside. They both froze in shock, however, at the sight that greeted them. Zuko’s eyes widened and Katara’s mouth fell open.

There on the floor, next to the low tea table, were Ursa and Jee kissing each other passionately. That was not the shocking part, but the fact that Jee was lying on top of her with one of his hands grasping her breast while Ursa’s hands were gripping tightly onto his hair, one of her legs wrapped around his waist. They were too busy devouring each other’s mouth to realize they were not alone.

At least they’re fully clothed, Katara thought absently when she turned to look at Zuko. She winced at the expression of shock and fury on his features.

“What the hell is going on here!?” Zuko bellowed angrily.

Ursa and Jee gasped loudly and they scrambled to pull away from each other.

“Zuko!” Ursa cried out in mortification.
“My lord!” Jee exclaimed in shock at the same time.

The admiral quickly helped the blushing noblewoman to her feet and they fumbled to fix their rumpled clothing as they stared wide-eyed at the scowling Fire Lord. Ursa moved to stand before Jee in order to hide the bulge of arousal in his pants. Her son did not need to see more than he already had.

“How dare you disrespect my mother in such a way when you’re not even married?!” Zuko growled loudly at he glared heatedly at the older man.

“I would never disrespect her—” Jee began indignantly, but was got off by Zuko’s scoff.

“Well, your intentions looked different from where I was standing,” the younger firebender accused.

“Zuko,” Ursa spoke up softly, though she was frowning, “We just got carried away a little, but we were not going to continue beyond that. Besides, I’m a grown woman and I know what I’m doing.”

Zuko spluttered since he could not refute her words.

“But you’re my mother!” he blurted out.

Katara could see that Zuko was still in shock and would have a difficult time processing what just happened and what might happened in the future between his mother and his admiral. She grabbed his arm gently, and when he looked down to stare at her, she gave him a reassuring squeeze.

“Zuko, you know Jee will never do anything to harm Ursa,” she told him firmly.

Jee stepped around Ursa (the embarrassing situation of them being caught by Zuko had quickly killed his arousal) and straightened himself out as he stared unwaveringly at his lord.

“I apologize for shocking you, but well…” Jee paused to clear his throat before continuing, “I couldn’t stop myself from expressing my feelings for Lady Ursa…in such a way.”
Zuko stiffened and spluttered angrily, but before he could say anything Jee continued speaking.

“I didn’t plan for things to escalate,” Jee confessed sincerely.

Not wanting to upset his lord even more and have him retract his permission to court—and hopefully marry—Ursa, the admiral assured him by saying, “I will respect you and Lady Ursa and will not take her to my bed until it is made official we will marry.”

“Until it’s made official?” Zuko growled out.

“There is no reason to feel offended, Zuko,” Ursa interjected, even as she blushed at Jee’s promise. “I am a mother. My virtue does not need to be protected. Once Jee and I are officially betrothed, we are free to express our feelings…more intimately.”

“Mother!” Zuko spluttered once again as he stared at her in shock.

Ursa’s blush deepened at her son’s reaction. She did not want to cause her son any pain or embarrassment, but she was a full grown woman who was no stranger to sex and she wanted to experience it with the man she loved. She knew it was just her son trying to protect her that had shocked him so much, since such things as sex outside of marriage were not uncommon among the Fire Nation nobility.

“I’m sorry, Zuko, but I love Jee,” Ursa said as she stared at her son, “I hope you can try to understand since you are married to the woman you love.”

Katara watched as her husband continued to stare wide-eyed at the older couple, his face red from both anger and embarrassment, then he sighed and ran a hand down his face.

“I need to leave,” he muttered, and without saying another word, he turned around and quickly walked away.

Ursa watched her son go and sighed sadly.

“I didn’t mean to upset him,” she said in a low tone.
Jee wrapped his arms tenderly around her and brought her close to his chest where she laid her head dejectedly.

“It is understandable why he reacted in such a way,” the admiral told her soothingly before he added contritely, “Perhaps it’s best that we use more private places for our...activities.”

“Yes, that would probably be best.”

“I’m sorry, we got a little, umm...carried away.”

“Don’t worry,” Katara finally spoke as she smiled reassuringly at them both, “I will talk to him.”

They thanked her quietly and Katara made her way down the steps and back onto the stone path. She walked through the garden quickly, but she could see that her husband was not in the garden any longer. She remembered also looking for him in the Southern Water Tribe after he caught his mother and Jee kissing and she hoped it wasn’t going to be a regular occurrence. She hurried back into the building and made her way to their room where she had a feeling she would find him brooding. Once she was standing before the second set of golden doors, she slowly opened it and went inside, closing the door softly behind her. Just like she predicted, she found Zuko pacing the floor before the fireplace, a deep scowl on his face.

“You should try to be a little understanding,” Katara spoke up as she moved toward him.

Zuko paused at the sound of her voice and looked up to frown at her before he continued pacing.

“It’s my mother we’re talking about,” he muttered as he again ran his hand down his face, “I don’t like the thought of her and another man…any man, being intimate. And I can’t unsee what just happened!”

Katara suppressed a sigh as she crossed her arms.

“You shouldn’t be upset with Jee for his actions toward Ursa,” she told him softly, “He’ll never hurt her or do anything she wouldn’t want.”

Zuko whirled around to glare at her.
“He was trying to seduce my mother while being unmarried to her!” he shouted angrily. “My mother!”

Katara raised an eyebrow at his words.

“If I recall correctly, and I _do_,” she began with a bit of exasperation in her tone, “you touched me and gave me pleasure _before_ we were married.”

Zuko stared at her with wide eyes before he shook his head and frowned.

“But...but she’s my mother!” he exclaimed stubbornly.

“And she’s also a grown woman,” Katara retorted as she placed her hands on her hips. “Do you expect them to live a celibate life while married?”

Zuko paused at her question before he scowled.

“Of course not,” he muttered. “I just don’t want to see it…” He shuddered and shook his head in disgust.

Katara bit her lip to keep from smiling at his sulking expression. She could not help but feel a bit amused at Zuko’s reaction. He acted like a father worrying over his daughter’s innocence. The thought made her pause. She wondered if Zuko would act the same way with their own daughter—if they ever had one. She sighed wistfully as warmth spread through her chest at the thought. She heard Zuko sigh loudly and she focused back on him to see him rubbing his face with his hand.

Zuko narrowed his eyes at his wife, who was obviously laughing at his expense. “How would you like it if you walked into a room and found your father on top of a woman and looking like...like he’s trying to eat her face?!”

Katara’s eyes widened at the thought. She had seen several of the older ladies—and some of the younger ones—eyeing her father. He hadn’t shown any interest in them, but that didn’t mean he wouldn’t one day find someone he cared for. The thought that she could walk in on him and some woman made her feel slightly nauseous. Zuko was right. Although she knew her father would always hold a special place in his heart for her mother, she didn’t mind the idea of him getting remarried, but having to witness something like that with her father... She shuddered at the thought.

“He had his hand on her…” Zuko continued as he cupped his hands in front of his chest before he dropped them to his sides. “And her leg was wrapped around…” He shook his head. “I really can’t unsee that!” he growled as he rubbed his temples.

“Okay, you have a point,” Katara responded, still a little amused at his reaction.

“But you still think I’m being an idiot, aren’t I?” he asked gruffly.

Katara let out a soft laugh as she moved toward him and wrapped her arms around his waist. He immediately wound his arms around her as he stared moodily into her smiling face.

“Only a little, my love,” she replied amusedly.

Zuko grumbled under his breath at her teasing grin, but did not push away from her.

“I should probably apologize to them,” he said.

“That would make them feel better,” she agreed as she gave his waist a squeeze. “Ursa doesn’t want to disappoint you and Jee doesn’t want to hurt you either.”

Zuko was silent a moment before he gave her nod. Suddenly, he scooped her up into his arms, making her squeal in surprise as she clutched onto his neck.

“What are you doing?” she asked as he strode swiftly toward their large bed.

Zuko smirked down at her as he pressed her closer to his chest.

“I believe we were interrupted from our pleasurable plans of the veranda,” he told her huskily. “I also wish to reenact all those instances we both recall so well where I touched you before we were married. And then I’ll make love to you now that we are.”
“Oh, are you going to make me scream, my lord?” she asked coyly.

Zuko’s smirk grew as he laid her on the bed and moved to straddle her.

“All night long, my enticing wife.”

A few weeks later found Zuko going through his paperwork in his study. After placing his seal on one of the documents, the young Fire Lord tiredly rubbed his temple and leaned back on his chair with a sigh. Maybe if he wasn’t so wary of being betrayed again, he would look for a personal scribe to help him. Standing up from his large chair, Zuko stretched his back and rubbed the back of his neck before turning around to stand at the huge window behind his desk. He stared absentmindedly at the scenery before him as he got lost in his thoughts.

Jee had approached him a week ago to officially ask for permission to marry Ursa. Zuko had only thought about his request for a minute before he gave his admiral his consent to marry her, since he could no longer deny that they both made each other very happy. Zuko did not care if Jee wasn’t a nobleman but a simple admiral, for Jee was a good and loyal man.

So once he and Jee worked out the details, Jee had happily thanked him before he enthusiastically went in search of Ursa to officially propose to her. His mother’s happiness and gratitude the following day made Zuko realize he had done the right thing. His mother may have another man in her life now, but she would always love and care for her son. Besides, Katara was right. Ursa deserved to love and be loved in return. The only thing that would have made his mother’s happiness complete was if her daughter could share in her joy, but sadly that seemed impossible with the hostile way Azula reacted every time Ursa went to visit her.

Zuko may have come to terms with the thought of his mother being married to another man, but he did not know how to feel at the thought that in a way he would be gaining another father. He had accepted the fact years ago that Ozai, his own sire, did not care for him and had come to think that he did not need a father in his life. Besides, he had Iroh. However, he did appreciate Jee. The man had been loyal and respectful of him for years, and Zuko had to admit that he did care for the admiral. But perhaps he was worrying over nothing. Maybe Jee did not even want to see him as a son nor wanted to be a father. The thought surprisingly pained him.

Zuko frowned.

_I don’t need a father_, he told himself as he had been doing for years.
A knock at the door interrupted his thoughts. Straightening himself, Zuko sat back down on his chair and called out a firm ‘enter’. The door opened and he looked up to see Jee walk in. Once the older man gave a respectful bow, he smiled at the Fire Lord.

“What is it, Jee?” Zuko asked as he set aside his paperwork.

“I was wondering if you would like to train in the arena, if you weren’t busy,” Jee replied.

Zuko looked at him thoughtfully for a moment before he nodded. He almost smiled when Jee visibly relaxed.

“I think firebending training would clear my head,” Zuko said as he stood up. “Let me change and then I’ll meet you in the arena.”

“Yes, my lord,” Jee responded quickly.

A few minutes later, the Fire Lord and the admiral were sparring in the large arena. Fire burst brightly between them as they tried to outwit the other, though Jee knew Zuko was going easy on him. Zuko forgot about his previous thoughts and worries for the moment, enjoying the exercise as they have done so many times in the past, before another thought appeared in his head.

Now that I think about it, Jee has sparred with me and taught me about my firebending more than my own father has, he mused as he evaded a fiery kick from the admiral.

An hour or two later, they finally decided to stop so they could bathe and change for dinner. They were commenting about each other’s moves as they wiped the sweat from their foreheads with the towels the servants rushed to give them. When Zuko was about to return inside, Jee cleared his throat and Zuko turned to look at him with a raised eyebrow.

“Actually, I was hoping to discuss something with you,” the older man said in a passive tone.

Zuko’s eyebrow lifted even higher before he gave him a nod to continue. Jee was silent a moment as he gathered his thoughts and tried to find the right way to say what had been on his mind for a long time now.
“Once I marry your mother,” Jee began carefully, “we’ll become family.”

“Yes,” Zuko replied cautiously as he masked his expression.

Jee once again fell silent as he stared seriously at the younger man and Zuko stared at him warily.

“Although I would understand if you continued to look at me as your admiral,” Jee continued slowly, “I wish that one day you could come to see me as a…father of sorts.”

Zuko’s eyes widened in genuine surprise.

“What?”

“Not only would it please your mother to see her son and her new husband get along well,” Jee explained softly, “I would also like to treat you as a son…if you would allow me to.”

Zuko, still shocked and unsure, continue to stare at him as he tried to gather his thoughts.

“Do you really?” the younger man asked, his tone wondering.

“I would not presume to interfere with your life and decisions, nor would I expect you to bow to my demands as a son should to his sire and call me father,” the admiral continued, “But I do wish to give you my support and give you my advice and guidance when you need it.”

Jee paused again as he stared sincerely into the young man’s uncertain eyes.

“I already care for you as a son,” he said truthfully.

Zuko stared at Jee wide-eyed. He felt like that small part of him, the neglected child in him, still wish to have a father to guide him, be proud of him for his achievements, care for his happiness, and love him. Yet, the cynical part of him, the hardened youth in him, was wary and certain he did not need such things. However, seeing the subtly hopeful and sincere expression in Jee’s eyes made the child part in Zuko exclaim more loudly.

“I…I appreciate your…thoughts,” Zuko finally said hesitantly, “but I’ve been living my life without the true influence or support of a father for so long, that I don’t know if I really want or need one. Besides, Uncle Iroh has always filled that role.”

Zuko watched as Jee’s hopeful expression fell and was replaced with disappointment and sadness that he was quick to mask with a blank look. Jee gave a single, understanding nod as he straightened himself out.

“I apologize if—”

Zuko shook his head to interrupt the older man.

“Don’t apologize for your sentiments,” the Fire Lord told him before he added, “Perhaps with time I will get used to the idea of seeing you as a…father. After all, I already respect you and looked up to you when I was younger.”

Jee’s careful smile, both hopeful and pleased, had Zuko smiling despite himself. If Katara was there, Zuko was sure she would be smiling proudly at him for giving both Jee and himself a chance.

“Thank you,” the admiral replied, “I look forward to it, my lord.”

A small smirk curled Zuko’s lips.

“If we wish to become closer as a family, you will have to call me by name, at least when not in public,” Zuko told him with a bit of humor in his voice.

Jee’s eyes widened before he smiled.

“You are right, my lor—uh, Zuko,” Jee corrected himself with a laugh. “That will take some time to get used to.”
Zuko chuckled. Talking much more lighthearted than before when their relationship had just been that of a lord and his subject, both men made their way to the palace to wash up before they met the others for dinner.

Off to the side, where they had been standing unnoticed for a while, Katara and Iroh watched them go with smiles on their faces.

“I’m glad to know Zuko is giving Jee a chance to be more than just his mother’s new husband,” the waterbender said happily.

Still smiling, Iroh slipped his hands inside his sleeves and gave a nod of his balding head.

“Although Zuko has me, he really needs a true father in his life to fill that empty spot in his heart that he tried to ignore for so long,” the wise old man stated softly.

Katara smiled before she frowned when she heard Iroh heaved a huge sigh.

“It saddens me to know Jee has replaced me,” he replied as he dramatically placed his hands over his chest.

The waterbender laughed softly as she wrapped her arms around her beloved uncle-in-law’s large middle.

“No one can replace you,” she assured him with a smile, “You’re still Zuko’s true father figure. Jee would just be another one. Besides, Zuko loves and cares for you more than anyone else.”

Iroh chuckled, causing them both to shake, and he patted her back warmly.

“No as much as he loves and cares for you,” he retorted as he grinned at her.

Katara let him go and flushed with pleasure at his words.
“I feel the same way about Zuko,” she replied with a smile before she teasingly added, “Though you come a close second.”

“Your grandmother would have my head if she heard you say that,” the old man replied amusedly.

They laughed, causing the servants and guards stationed in the arena to glance at them with both curious and affectionate smiles. Instead of exercising as they had planned, the Fire Lady and her uncle-in-law returned to the palace for a game of Pai Sho before dinner.

Katara suppressed a soft yawn as she woke up. Blinking the sleep from her eyes, she sat up and groaned. She felt a bit dizzy and tired. Maybe she should tell Zuko to limit their lovemaking for the following night so she could catch up on some sleep—though both her mind and heart protested at the thought. The waterbender stretched her arms over her head only to scramble out of the bed when her stomach roiled.

Covering her mouth with her hand, she rushed to the bathroom and barely made it to the garderobe in the corner before she threw up in the water closet. Once the sickness passed, she heaved and panted as she placed her hand over her sweaty forehead. With a groan, she stood up shakily and made her way to the bathtub to fill it with water to take a much needed bath. For the past few mornings she had raced to the bathroom to vomit every time she woke up. Luckily, she had been able to keep it from Zuko since she did not want to worry him and have people think she was becoming ill from all her work.

Once she finished bathing and entered the bedroom to change into her clothes, Katara dismissed what happened from her mind since she had many things to do that day. Jiao appeared a moment later to help her get dressed. When the servant finally placed the Fire Lady fire crown on her head, Katara admired her appearance in the full-length mirror with satisfaction before she made her way to the doors. As she stepped into the antechamber, she paused when she saw that another servant was preparing the table with food. Jiao went to help and the other maidservant bowed respectfully at the waterbender.

“Fire Lord Zuko wishes to eat breakfast with you this morning,” Jiao explained softly as she gestured at the table.

“Really?” Katara asked with a smile as she walked into the room.

Zuko and she had been very busy for the past few days, so they had not seen each other for most of the day until they retired to their rooms late at night. The doors that led outside opened and Katara’s smile widened when Zuko stepped in.
“Good morning, wife,” he greeted evenly since the servants were still in the room, though Katara could see the warmth in his eyes.

“Good morning, my lord,” the waterbender responded softly as she sat beside him on the low table.

Once Jiao and the other servant left them alone with knowing smiles on their faces, Zuko turned to Katara and kissed her deeply before pulling away to smirk at her. Katara grinned at him before they returned their attention to their meal. Zuko eagerly began to eat, but Katara looked at the food placed before her with a wary expression. She picked up her spoon, but the strong scent of the soup made her feel queasy and she leaned back, placing the back of her hand to her mouth to calm herself.

Zuko frowned as he saw Katara pale. He watched as she pushed her dishes away and only grabbed a piece of bread. He immediately stopped eating to look at her worriedly. He placed his hand on her shoulder and squeezed comfortingly.

“Are you feeling well?” he asked. His voice was deep with his concern. “They told me you’ve been eating only bread and tea for the past few mornings.”

“I’m fine,” she assured him with a smile as she reached up to squeeze his hand, “I’m just a little tired and stressed.”

Zuko’s frown deepened as he let go of her shoulder to caress her cheek.

“Maybe you should stay in our room today and rest,” he told her.

Katara shook her head vehemently and frowned.

“I can’t ignore my duties just because of a little fatigue,” she argued firmly.

The young Fire Lord could not help but smile at her proudly, though he still felt concerned that she might not be taking care of her health properly. He could see, however, that Katara was going to be stubborn and would not listen to him. Sighing, he returned to his meal with less enthusiasm. He would just have to ask his mother and Jiao to keep an eye on Katara for him.
Once they finished eating, they stood up and made their way to the door. They paused briefly to give each other a kiss before they stepped into the long corridor and headed their separate ways.

As the day progressed, Katara felt her tiredness increase, but she continued to ignore it as she went about on one of her charity projects. She planned on establishing a school for illiterate adults on one of the remote islands of the Fire Nation that consisted mostly of fishermen and their families. If everything went well, the school would be completed in a few months. Some of the councilmen had protested her idea, but she had managed to bring them to her side in the end. A few hours before dinner, Katara and Ursa were making their way to the garden for a break as Ursa recounted the outing to the river in the outskirts of the city Jee had taken her on the night before. Shen and Kuo were walking a few paces behind them to give them privacy.

A small, blissful smile appeared on the beautiful noblewoman’s face.

“I’ve never cared nor loved a man the way I do Jee,” she admitted softly, “Nor have I ever felt so happy...well except for when my children were born.”

“I’m glad to hear that,” Katara replied with a smile.

Ursa smiled at her kindly.

“I want to thank you, Katara, for opening up my mind and putting Jee in my path since I never would have thought there was a possibility,” the Fire Lord’s mother said softly.

“I just want both of you to be happy,” the waterbender replied sincerely.

They were just arriving at the garden when they met Iroh. He smiled brightly at the women when he saw them and he hurried in their direction. They returned his smile as they waited for him to reach them. He was holding a small pouch in his right hand.

“What do you have there, Iroh dear?” Ursa asked with a smile as she eyed the pouch curiously.
“It’s a new blend of tea I’ve wanted to try to see if I should serve it at the Jasmine Dragon,” he replied in his cheerful voice.

He untied the strings and opened the top to show them the tea leaves. Smiling indulgently at her uncle-in-law, Katara leaned down to gaze into the pouch. The strong scent of the tea made her suddenly dizzy and she placed her hand to her temple with a groan. She shook her head when her vision became a little blurry.

“Katara dear, are you all right?” Ursa asked with a frown when she saw her stumble back.

Iroh looked up in time to see Katara sway before her eyes rolled back. Gasping in alarm, he dropped the pouch, causing a few tea leaves to spill onto the marble floor, and grabbed her before she fell.

“Katara!” Ursa shouted anxiously.

Crying out their lady’s name, Kuo and Shen rushed forward in panic. Kuo, being much younger, took the waterbender from Iroh’s hold and lifted her unresponsive body into his arms.

“Quickly, let’s take her to her room!” Iroh ordered the young guard before he turned to Shen and added urgently, “Go fetch Physician Toshiro.”

Face grim and furrowed in concern, Shen bowed his head before he quickly headed in search of the palace physician. Ursa fussed worriedly over her daughter-in-law as they headed swiftly toward the royal bedchambers. Iroh quickly opened both set of doors to allow Kuo to walk in with the still unconscious waterbender in his arms.

“Place her on the bed,” Ursa instructed the young guard.

Kuo did as directed and stepped back once the Fire Lady was safely placed on the bed. Iroh stepped forward to remove her fire crown from her hair while Ursa hurried to the bathroom to grab a damp towel. When she stepped back into the room, Ursa rushed toward Katara and began to gently press the towel on her face. They watched as a moment later the cool water revived the waterbender, eliciting sighs of relief from the trio.
Katara groaned quietly in pain as she tried to focus on her surroundings. When did she get to her room? When she finally spotted Ursa, Iroh, and Kuo gazing worriedly down at her, she frowned at them in confusion. What were they doing in her room?

“Katara, how are you feeling?” Iroh asked her in a soothing voice as he pressed the back of his hand to her forehead.

“I’m fine, just a little tired and queasy,” she responded as Iroh pulled his hand back with a satisfied nod.

Ursa and Iroh stared at her for a moment before they glanced at each other, hope shining in their golden eyes. Katara did not notice their silent communication as she again pressed her fingers to her temples. Kuo gave a respectful bow before he retreated to stand post outside.

“What happened?” Katara asked.

“You fainted, dear,” Ursa replied with a gentle smile.

Katara frowned at her words before her cheeks flushed in embarrassment. She wasn’t the type of woman prone to fainting spells. What was wrong with her? She tried to sit up, but Iroh gently pressed his hand to her shoulder to push her back down. She frowned at him.

“Just rest, my dear,” Iroh told her gently, “Physician Toshiro is on his way to check you.”

The waterbender tried to protest, claiming that she was fine, but they would have none of it and insisted she remain lying down. Katara crossed her arms over chest and sulked. The other two smiled at her pout before they were interrupted when Toshiro rushed in with his medicinal box. Once he stood beside the bed, he placed the box to the side and gazed at his lady in concern.

“I’m going to inform Zuko about what happened,” Iroh spoke up as he moved toward the door to give Katara and the doctor some privacy.

“Please, Uncle Iroh, don’t tell him and disturb his important meeting with the Earth Kingdom dignitaries,” Katara spoke up, “I’m sure it’s nothing serious. I don’t want to worry him over nothing.”
A small frown appeared on Iroh’s wrinkled brow as he turned to regard his niece-in-law.

“‘I’ll tell him after the meeting then,’” he consented before he added, “Zuko would like to know what happened. I will see you later and I hope you feel better soon, my dear.”

Before Katara could speak up, the retired general walked away and closed the door behind him. Katara returned her attention to the old physician when he cleared his throat. Once he had her attention, he gave her an encouraging smile.

“Now, my lady, I would like to ask you a few questions,” he began.

The waterbender nodded.

“Have you been feeling ill before today?” he asked.

“I’ve been feeling tired recently,” Katara responded reluctantly.

“Just tired? Nothing else?” he inquired as he checked her pulse.

“Well, I do start feeling dizzy all of the sudden,” she muttered before she added with a grimace, “And sometimes I wake up with the urge to vomit.”

Toshiro paused as he stared at her intently.

“I see,” he said as he rubbed his chin. He was silent a moment before he asked, “How long have you had these symptoms?”

Katara frowned as she tried to remember. There was something nagging at the back of her head, but she ignored it.

“A few days, I think,” she finally answered.
“Hmm,” the physician uttered. “Have you been eating well?”

Katara averted her eyes and fidgeted with her fingers.

“I’ve only had an appetite for tea and bread in the mornings,” she confessed quietly. “But my appetite returns to normal later in the day.”

Toshiro was silent a moment before he glanced back at Lady Ursa. The noblewoman’s eyes were shiny with wonder, her lips curved into a small smile, and she nodded at him when she caught his eye.

“I believe my wife would be of more help in this case,” the white-haired physician finally spoke up.

“What case?” Katara asked, but the old man was already opening the bedroom door to ask Kuo to fetch his wife.

“Why did you ask for your wife?” Katara asked curiously when Toshiro returned to her side.

The physician smiled kindly down at her and Katara found herself relaxing despite herself, especially when Ursa patted her hand with a serene smile on her porcelain face.

“I cannot examine you...uh...more thoroughly since you are the Fire Lady and it is improper,” Toshiro explained.

“Why not?” the waterbender asked with an irritated frown. Why was he being vague?

Toshiro cleared his throat before he continued.

“Do you remember when your last monthly cycle was?” he asked politely.

Katara frowned at the sudden question before she thought about it. She tried to remember if she already had it this month, but she realized that she had not. She traced the days carefully. She gasped and her eyes widened. It was two months ago when she had her last monthly bleeding! A month after Yin-Min’s execution. How could she have not noticed? She frowned. All those months of disappointment had made her pessimistic. But could it be? Could she be…pregnant? After all this time? She could feel excitement swell within her before she ordered herself to calm down. She did not want to jump to conclusions and be disappointed in the end once again.

“It was two months ago,” she finally responded, her voice both hopeful and cautious.

Ursa and Toshiro smiled at each other, then at the blue-eyed Fire Lady.

“My wife can confirm our suspicions once she arrives,” the old physician said.

“Why do we need her?” Katara asked curiously.

“My wife is the royal midwife,” Toshiro explained proudly.

“Lady Yoon Hee helped me bring my children into this world,” Ursa spoke up with a fond smile.

They were interrupted by a soft knock at the door. Toshiro walked toward the door and opened it. He smiled and bade his wife to enter. Once he closed the door behind her, he bent toward her ear and spoke quietly to her. Yoon Hee’s small smile widened when her husband finished talking and pulled away. The grey-haired woman moved forward and bowed at the reclining waterbender who was looking at her expectantly.

“Good afternoon, my lady,” the old woman greeted. “My husband has just informed me about your possible condition. Would you allow me to examine you?” she asked kindly.

A faint blush appeared on Katara’s cheeks, but she gave a firm nod.

“Oh course,” the waterbender replied. She could not stop her heart from racing in anticipation, hope, and apprehension.

“Would you please wait outside?” Lady Yoon Hee asked the other two occupants in the room.
Ursa and Toshiro smiled and nodded as they headed toward the door. The old man closed the door behind them and Ursa went to sit on a cushion beside the low table in the antechamber. She pressed her hands together as they waited for their suspicions to be confirmed or refuted. Oh, she hoped they had happy news. Her son and Katara would be so happy and their life would be so much easier without having to hear the council’s complaints about the lack of an heir. The advisors had started grumbling about the need for an heir when Advisor Wei brought up the issue once again.

I can’t wait to hold my first grandchild in my arms, she thought with a wistful smile.

Ursa was brought out of her thoughts a few minutes later when the door opened and Yoon Hee bade them enter with a smile. As they stepped into the room, Ursa rushed toward her daughter-in-law to grasp her hand and look inquiringly down at her. Katara shrugged and smiled at her before she returned her gaze expectantly to Lady Yoon Hee.

“So would you tell me now what you found out?” Katara asked anxiously and she grasped more tightly onto her mother-in-law’s hand.

A wide, happy smile spread on the old woman’s thin lips.

“Congratulations, my lady, you are pregnant,” she said delightedly.

Katara’s eyes widened impossibly large and her heart skipped a beat at those words. Words she had despaired of never hearing. She stared intensely at the old woman, trying to see if she was joking, but Lady Yoon Hee continued to smile happily at her. The Fire Lady’s eyes began to fill with happy and relieved tears.

“I’m…pregnant? Truly?” Katara asked breathlessly.

Yoon Hee nodded and her smile turned kind and understanding.

“Yes, and by my estimation, you are two months along,” the old woman continued.

Katara’s head fell back onto her pillow, her tears finally falling, as she silently thanked the gods. After all this time, after all the disappointment and pain, she was finally pregnant. She was going to be a mother. She was going to give her beloved husband a child. She closed her eyes, a few more tears trickling down her cheeks, and she sniffled and laughed joyfully as she wiped at her cheeks.

I’m pregnant! she mentally chanted, still astounded at the news. Thank La!

“Congratulations, my dear!” Ursa exclaimed happily as she bent down to embrace her still stunned daughter-in-law.

Katara laughed softly as she returned Ursa’s hug, her mind racing with thoughts of her pregnancy and upcoming motherhood. Ursa pulled away when Toshiro cleared his throat. He smiled when they turned to look at him.

“Fire Lord Zuko will be ecstatic at the news once we tell him” he said.

“I’d like to be the one to give him the happy news,” Katara spoke up quickly with a smile.

The other three returned her smile and readily agreed to keep the secret until the royal couple decided otherwise.

“Thank you,” the waterbender said sincerely.

“It has been a long while since there has been a royal birth,” Lady Yoon Hee mused with a small laugh, “The Fire Nation will be overjoyed to know you and the Fire Lord will finally have an heir.”

They spent the next hour with Lady Yoon Hee telling Katara what was expected of her during the next few months and what to expect before her baby was born. Katara could not stop smiling as she listened attentively to the old woman.

“If you have any questions or concerns do not hesitate to seek me out,” Yoon Hee added gently.

“I can also provide answers and advice when you need them,” Ursa spoke up as she smiled at Katara.
“Thank you,” the waterbender replied, smiling at them all.

Katara raised an eyebrow when she saw a mischievous smile spread on Lady Yoon Hee’s lips.

“Before you and your husband ask, yes, you can still be intimate until you come closer to the date of the birth,” the midwife said with a grin.

The small woman turned to smile knowingly at her husband, who actually blushed, but was quick to cover it with an amused chuckle. Ursa placed her hand to her mouth to hide her smile.

Katara’s cheeks flushed with color, but she smiled inwardly since she knew that would be one of Zuko’s concerns. Oh, but she could not wait to give Zuko the news! How would he react?

“Well, we’ll leave you to your rest, my lady,” Toshiro said with a smile.

“Please don’t exert yourself too much,” Yoon Hee added with a bit more seriousness in her tone, “The first few months are crucial to the baby’s wellbeing.”

“I will be careful,” Katara promised firmly, her eyes blazing in determination and protectiveness.

“I will see you tomorrow morning, my dear,” Ursa said softly as she patted Katara’s hand before she added with a small laugh, “I can’t wait to see Zuko’s reaction when I see him.”

Katara smiled. They bid her a good night before they left, closing the door quietly behind them. Once the room was completely silent, a large, joyful smile lit up Katara’s features.

A mother! In just a few months, I’m going to be a mother! she exclaimed blissfully.

Smiling in wonder, Katara glanced down her body and placed her hands on her still flat stomach. She barely knew of the new life within her and already her heart swelled with happiness, protectiveness, and love.

“Hello there, baby,” she cooed softly, “It’s your mama. You have no idea how much we’ve waited for you. I can’t wait to see you.”
She was so happy. After so many months of disappointments and crushed hopes, she did not know how to handle such intense joy. She ran her hands over her stomach a few more times before she sat up. Carefully, she stood up, and when she was sure she wasn’t going to fall back on the bed with dizziness, she made her way to the balcony. She pushed the curtains aside and opened the doors. Sighing contentedly as a sweet-smelling breeze swept past her, Katara stepped onto the balcony and allowed the warm sun to bathe her skin.

She once again wondered how Zuko would react to the news that he was going to be a father. She could not wait to tell him.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

After leaving the throne room, Zuko made his way to his study with a deep frown on his face. The Earth Kingdom ambassadors had brought news that a couple of villages had been destroyed by the rebels, but they had not had any luck catching them. Knowing it was partially his fault, Zuko had promised to send those villages aid. The ambassadors had been pleased and grateful for his generosity. After all these years, they were coming to respect and admire the young Fire Lord.

Cursing mentally, Zuko wondered what Jianguo could be planning next. What was his aim in attacking those Earth Kingdom villages? Was Jianguo trying to make the Earth Kingdom turn against the Fire Nation after these few years of shaky peace?

Damn him, he growled.

He could not let Jianguo destroy all Zuko had worked for to regain his nation’s honor and to gain peace with the other nations. He could not let Jianguo’s plan bring any harm to Katara and their family. But the bastard was being careful in keeping himself well hidden and Zuko’s men had not had any luck finding him and the other rebels.

I should have killed him when I had the chance, damn it! he cursed for the millionth time as he opened his study’s door and walked in.

He was brought out of his thoughts when he noticed his uncle sitting on one of the chairs before his large desk. Masking his frustrated expression into an impassive one, Zuko closed the door and walked further into the room.

“Is there something you need, Uncle?” the young lord asked tersely.
Iroh stood up from his seat and walked toward his nephew with a small smile on his face.

“Now, Nephew, don’t be alarmed with what I’m about to tell you,” the old man began.

The Fire Lord stopped before his uncle and frowned.

“What’s wrong?” Zuko asked.

“Katara…”

Iroh was unable to continue for Zuko had grabbed him tightly by his upper arms and loomed over him.

“What’s wrong with her?” Zuko asked in alarm.

“Calm yourself, Nephew,” Iroh said calmly as he pushed Zuko’s hands away. “If my suspicions are correct, she is more than fine.”

“Stop with your cryptic words, Uncle!” Zuko growled out, “Tell me what’s wrong with Katara!”

“Katara was carried to your room after fainting in the corridor…” Iroh began.

Zuko did not wait to hear what else his uncle had to say as he raced toward the door and wrenched it open. The door bounced against the wall, but Zuko did not care as he ran down the hall toward the western wing of the palace. His heart was pounding hard in his chest as fear spread through his body. What was wrong with Katara? Was she terribly ill? Was she hurt? Katara was strong and healthy. She wasn’t the kind of woman who fainted at the smallest provocation. So that meant it must be something serious. No! He could not lose her! There must be an explanation.

Please be okay, Katara, he pleaded mentally as he rounded the corner to the royal wing.

He neared his rooms and saw that Shen and Kuo were stationed outside. They looked at him worriedly and his fear spiked. Shen quickly opened one of the golden doors for him. Zuko gave him a nod of thanks, but did not say a word to them as he quickly stepped into the anteroom. He was just approaching the other set of doors when he saw his mother, Physician Toshiro, and Lady Yoon Hee leaving the bedchamber. He wondered why Lady Yoon Hee was there as well.

“What’s wrong with my wife?” he asked desperately as he looked at each of their faces to see if he could figure out how serious the situation was.

“There is nothing for you to worry about, my lord,” Toshiro spoke up in a calm tone, a small smile on his lips. “Fire Lady Katara is fine.”

Zuko immediately felt his relief and his tensed shoulders relaxed. He let out a long breath and ran his hand over his pulled-back hair. Before he could ask any more questions, his mother stepped forward and patted his cheek. He wondered at the twinkle in her golden eyes and the happy smile on her lips.

“Go to your wife, my son,” Ursa told him gently, “She needs to tell you something.”

Zuko gave her a nod even though he eyed her curiously. They stepped aside to let him through and Zuko quickly entered his room and closed the door behind him. He immediately looked toward the bed, but frowned when he saw it was empty. He scanned the room, but Katara was nowhere in sight. He was about to make his way to the bathing chamber to see if she was there, when he noticed that the balcony doors were opened. He walked toward them and immediately relaxed when he saw her standing on the balcony with the coming twilight as the background. He stared silently at her back for a moment, admiring the feminine curves of her frame, before he swiftly made his way to her.

“Katara,” he called her name softly so as not to startle her.

He watched as she turned around to face him. His eyes widened and he was rendered speechless at the beatific smile on her lovely features. The setting sun behind her caused her chestnut-colored hair to turn reddish-gold.

“Zuko,” she said softly.

He mentally shook himself from his stupor as he walked closer to her.

“Are you all right?” he asked worriedly. “I heard you fainted.”
“I’m fine,” she assured him.

Zuko relaxed slightly, though he was still curious as to why she had fainted. He watched as she took a deep breath and placed her hands on her stomach.

“Zuko...I’m pregnant,” she breathed softly with a gentle smile, “I’m going to have your child.”

Zuko’s breath caught in his throat at her words, at the love and happiness he could perfectly see in her warm, blue eyes. Stunned, he stared at her for a moment as he processed the news. She was...pregnant? After all this time, their prayers were finally answered? His shock made way to a tentative joy. A wide, elated smile appeared on his lips.

“You’re pregnant?” he asked slowly as he continued to stare intensely at her. “I’m…going to be a father?” he breathed, mystified.

Katara nodded and her smile widened.

“Yes,” she responded softly.

At that simple word, Zuko’s chest tightened as a different kind of warmth spread through him, one of happiness and wonder. In a few, quick strides he was in front of her, cupping her face gently as he stared in fascination into her eyes. When Katara’s smile turned soft and tender, he wrapped his arms around her and pulled her closely to his body. Katara laughed quietly, joyfully, as she returned his embrace just as fiercely. His reaction had not only pleased her, but it had also made the small fear she had harbored at his possible displeasure to disappear.

Zuko pulled away slightly so he could gaze down into her eyes. Her azure eyes were shining with happiness and he felt his heart constrict with his powerful feelings for this woman. He reached his hands up to gently cup her face once again before he bent down to tenderly kiss her soft lips. They sighed against each other’s mouths before Zuko leaned back to smile at her. He wrapped her in his arms and held her tightly against him. Katara smiled as she rested her cheek against his chest, the sound of his heartbeat soothing to her ear.
They spent a few minutes of silence, wrapped in each other’s arms, to bask in the joyous news—a situation they had despaired of never coming true months ago. Zuko took a moment to reflect how happy he was at the news—not because the Royal Council would finally stop bothering him and Katara, but because he had made his waterbender happy, because he would also have someone else to love and protect. Pressing his lips against her hair, Zuko again leaned back to look at her face. Katara watched as a concerned frown marred his features.

“But you are truly all right?” he asked worriedly as he caressed her cheek, “How is the baby? How far along are you? Do you need anything?”

Katara laughed softly and she patted his hand.

“I’m fine, the baby is fine, I’m about two months pregnant, and at the moment I don’t need anything,” Katara responded to his rapid questions.

“I’m glad,” the firebender said with a smile before he added, “If you need anything, please let me know. I wish to help you as much as I can...even though I have no clue what to expect with a pregnancy.”

The waterbender laughed before she threw her arms around his neck and rose on her toes to kiss him deeply.

“Thank you, love,” she said as she pressed more kisses to his mouth.

Zuko smiled against her lips as he brought her body closer to his. He had no idea of what help he could be, but he was determined to be there for Katara and their child during this time. Their mouths opened simultaneously and they sighed when their tongues immediately twirled and caressed each other in a gentle dance. They pulled away and Zuko pressed her back to his chest.

“Didn’t I tell you I would give you a child to hold in your arms one of these days?” he reminded her softly.

“Yes,” Katara replied happily as she snuggled into him.

“Let’s go inside,” Zuko told her when a chilly breeze swept past them. “I want to hear what else Lady Yoon Hee said.”
Katara gave him a nod and a smile, and with his arm wrapped around her, they walked back inside to their warm room. A soft knock at the door caught their attention and they glanced at the large doors.

“I’ll go see who it is,” Zuko said as he let go of her.

He walked toward the door and opened one to reveal a smiling Jiao and another servant carrying trays with a teapot, cups, and plates with food. She bowed her head.

“Lady Ursa asked me to bring some food to my lady,” the maidservant said when the Fire Lord inquired of her presence.

“Thank you, Jiao,” Katara said with a smile. Now that she thought about it, she was very hungry after only eating bread and tea for breakfast and lunch.

“Please place the things on the table,” Zuko ordered as he indicated the table resting between their two reading chairs.

The two servants quickly arranged the things on the small tea table, and once they were done, they bowed once again at the royal couple before retreating to the doors. Before she closed the door behind her, Jiao turned to smile at them.

“Congratulations on the wonderful news, my lady, my lord,” she said sincerely.

She bowed her head when they smiled and thanked her before she closed the door softly behind her.

Katara made her way to the table and quickly sat down on her chair as she eagerly looked at the food before her. Zuko chuckled when she immediately dug in without even waiting for him to finish sitting down. As they ate, Katara told him everything Lady Yoon Hee had told her to expect of her pregnancy, plus things she had observed while Suki had been pregnant. Zuko would smile at some of the things and frown over others. Pregnancy was starting to sound even scarier than he had thought.

When Katara yawned a few minutes later, Zuko smiled at her as he stood up from his seat.
“Why don’t we go lie down?” he asked as he held his hand out for her.

Katara returned the smile and placed her hand in his, allowing him to help her up. She had not wanted to tell him she was tired, but he had noticed anyway. They washed up and changed into their sleeping attire before they lay on their large bed, still basking in the wonder of such wonderful news.

Katara sighed softly as Zuko ran his right hand gently up and down her arm. She felt his other hand caress down her body until it reached her midsection. She opened her eyes and held her breath when he placed the palm of his hand over her flat belly, where their babe rested. The action caused her heart to burst with intense emotions. She smiled as she reached down to cover his hand with her own. She looked up at him and saw that he was staring at her with a warm and awed expression.

“I never thought you could become more precious to me, Katara,” Zuko breathed tenderly, “but you have. More than you can know.”

Katara’s eyes softened at his soft words and she smiled lovingly at him. She knew what he was telling her without him having to explain. She was giving him a family, a loving home, something he had never experienced and thought he would never have or deserve. She raised her hand to caress his scarred cheek before she lifted herself slightly so she could press her lips to his in a soft, gentle kiss. Zuko cupped the back of her head and returned her soft kiss, safe in the knowledge that she understood him.

They pulled away and stared silently, yet intensely, at each other. Katara watched as a pensive expression came upon Zuko’s features and she wondered what he was thinking.

“I just thought of something interesting,” he finally spoke up.

“Oh?” she uttered curiously as she languidly caressed his muscular chest.

“You said you’re about two months pregnant, right?” he asked.

When she nodded, a smug smirk curled the firebender’s lips.

“Then I must’ve gotten you pregnant that night we made love after you stopped drinking Yin-Min’s herb tea, a month after her execution,” he told her assuredly, the smug smirk still sitting on his lips, “My seed must be that powerful and your womb that fertile for it to have taken root so quickly.”

The waterbender’s eyes widened at his observation before she smiled blissfully.

“You’re probably right,” she agreed and then teasingly said, “Which would just add more to your inflated ego, huh?”

Zuko chuckled at her words as he playfully tickled her side, causing her to let out a loud giggle. Katara squealed laughingly and squirmed beneath his ticklish touch as he increased his playful torture until her sides ached and tears rolled down her cheeks. Panting, she opened her eyes and looked at him when his fingers stopped. His sudden serious expression made her pause.

“Zuko? What’s wrong?” she asked quietly, worriedly.

“If that…woman hadn’t intervened in her ludicrous plot,” Zuko growled in a hard tone, “we would already be holding our first child.”

The hatred and sadness she felt by Yin-Min’s betrayal once again consumed Katara for a moment before she forcefully shoved the ugly feelings away. Yin-Min was dead and she could not hurt them anymore. Besides, Katara refused to dwell on painful past events and wanted instead to focus on a happy future with her husband and their child. With a soft sigh, Katara reached out a hand to smooth Zuko’s dark hair out of his brooding, golden eyes.

“There’s no point in thinking about that,” she told him softly, “What matters now is that we’ll welcome our first baby into the world in a few months.”

Zuko was silent a moment before he let out a deep sigh as he placed his hand over hers and pressed it to his cheek.

The waterbender returned his smile, but a soft yawn escaped her before she could stop it. Zuko smiled at her affectionately.
“Let’s sleep,” he murmured.

Nodding, Katara pressed a soft kiss on his lips which he returned with equal tenderness. Smiling, Katara rolled to her side so her back was pressed against him. Zuko sighed contentedly and he wrapped his arms around her. He spooned her smooth back and tucked his thighs underneath her bottom as he got lost in his thoughts about future events. A moment later, Zuko heard Katara’s soft breathing, indicating she had succumb to her exhaustion. He smiled as he brought her body closer to his. He held her gently as he continued to softly, reverently, stroke her stomach housing his first child.

Before, he used to wonder how he would react when he finally learned he was to become a father. Now he could see why Sokka had looked so ecstatic when he learned Suki was pregnant. It was an amazing thing. Zuko could not explain the immense joy, pride, and satisfaction he was feeling at the moment.

A thought suddenly sprang in his head and his hand froze over Katara’s belly. He frowned when his joy was suddenly replaced by fear and apprehension. He did not know anything about being a father nor how to take care of a child. What if he was a horrible father? What if he made a mistake?

He vehemently shook his head and he brought Katara closer to him, his hand pressing protectively against her flat stomach. His wife murmured softly in her sleep before she pressed herself closer to him. Zuko gently stroked her skin and she let out a soft sigh.

Katara would help him. He was not alone. He would strive to make his growing family happy.

His family.

The thought once again brought warmth to his heart and he sighed as he nuzzled against Katara’s hair.

“I will make both of you happy. I promise,” he vowed silently into the night as he allowed sleep to finally claim him, safe in the knowledge that everything was going well.
The energy of the dawning sun slowly woke up the Fire Lord from his restful slumber. Zuko sighed softly as sleep began to leave him and he smiled as he pressed his body closer to Katara, nuzzling his face against her hair and breathing in her sweet scent, as he did every time he woke up. His hand was leisurely caressing her side when memories of the night before began to surface in his mind. His eyes flew open as he remembered the wondrous news that Katara had given him.

She was going to give him a child!

He was going to be a father.

Zuko tightened his hold on his wife and he looked down at her sleeping face with a small smile curling his lips. They had moved during the night and they were now lying on their sides facing each other with Katara’s hands curled against her chest between their bodies. Zuko continued to gaze at her face, taking in the sight of her fluttering eyelashes and her slightly parted lips, and he thanked the gods for giving her to him. So much kindness, strength, beauty, and passion in one woman and she had assented to be his. He lifted his arm from around her waist and he reached up to gently tuck her hair behind her ear before he softly caressed her cheek. Katara sighed and murmured in her sleep and she nuzzled against his hand. Zuko smiled at her endearing actions before he brought his hand down to rest it on her belly.

Nestled safely in his wife’s womb was a child they had created together. He still couldn’t believe it. After all this time, they were finally going to be parents. In just a few months, they would be welcoming their first child. He ignored the dark voice that whispered in his mind, wondering whether he could be a good father, and instead focused on happier thoughts.

As he continued to watch Katara, he promised himself that he would not let any harm come to her or their child for as long as he lived. They had gone through much pain and sadness this past year, but they came out stronger through all of it, their love was stronger. And now that love and strength would be transmitted to their child.

Zuko watched as a moment later Katara gave a soft sigh before she sleepily fluttered her eyes open. Once she was coherent, she stilled when she realized he was awake. They gazed silently and warmly into each other’s eyes as their thoughts returned to the events of the previous night. Katara could see the subtle happiness and satisfaction in her husband’s amber eyes and her heart thumped elatedly in her chest. Gazing into her ocean-blue eyes, Zuko saw the same happiness within hers and he smiled.

“You look so happy,” he said quietly.
“I am,” she replied softly.

“So am I,” he told her sincerely.

Zuko watched as a serene smile curled the sides of his wife’s full lips, those lips he loved to kiss, lips he loved to feel when they caressed his skin. At the thought, Zuko bent his head down and pressed his lips against hers, kissing her softly, un hurriedly. Katara sighed against his mouth and she raised her hand to cup his scarred cheek. Her soft, loving touch on his damaged skin only intensified Zuko’s emotions. With a husky groan, the firebender moved over her and deepened their kiss, pushing his tongue swiftly between her lips to caress every inch of her mouth as his morning erection throbbed with need.

Agni, he wanted her. He pressed closer to her when a thought crossed his mind that made him pause. Could he still make love to Katara? What if he ended up hurting their child and Katara with his amorous actions? He hated when he had to wait to make love to her, but he would bear the sacrifice determinedly in order to not cause either any damage.

Sensing his restlessness, Katara pulled back to stare wonderingly into his face.

“What’s wrong?” she asked softly.

“Would making love hurt our child?” he asked tentatively, a small frown on his brow.

The waterbender smiled at his concern and she reached up a hand to smooth his frown.

“Our baby is strong,” she assured him. “It’s fine.”

“Are you sure you can take all of me in?” he asked, still unsure. “Are you sure I won’t hurt either of you?”

“I’m not some weakling, Zuko,” Katara replied with a bit of exasperation before she added more gently, “Lovemaking isn’t going to cause any harm, to either the baby or me. As long as we’re careful.”
Staring into her warm eyes, Zuko smiled in relief before he bent his head down to press his mouth to her awaiting lips. They moaned softly as they pressed their bodies closer together, their hands gently caressing each other’s skin.

Suddenly, Katara was pushing against his chest with all her strength. Startled, Zuko moved away in time for her to scramble from the bed. He stared after her in bewilderment as she ran to the bathing room. Did he do something wrong? Did he perhaps harm her despite what she had said? The sound of her retching reached his ears and he quickly jumped from the bed in alarm.

“Katara?” he called out in concern as he raced toward the bathroom.

He froze at the sight of her heaving above the bowl of the water closet before she slumped onto the marble floor, panting and moaning. She looked completely miserable and his heart constricted in his chest. She was only wearing a thin nightdress and he was sure lying on the cold marble floor was not good for her or the baby. Snapping out of his stupor, Zuko quickly gathered a washcloth and dipped it into the washbasin before he strode toward his wife. He gathered her trembling body onto the warmth of his lap and wiped her sweaty brow and mouth with the damp towel. Katara moaned and sighed as she curled into him.

“Are you all right?” he asked worriedly as he brushed her damp hair aside.

“I’m okay,” she assured weakly as she pressed her hand to her roiling stomach, “Many pregnant women have the same symptom.”

“How long does it last?” he asked curiously and in concern.

“It depends,” she replied as she summoned a bit of water from the washbasin.

Zuko waited as she washed her mouth out before throwing the dirty water into the garderobe bowl.

“It depends on what?” he inquired as he tightened his hold of her.

“On the woman, I guess,” Katara explained, “Some women don’t feel the sickness at all. Others only have it for the first few months, while others continue to have it throughout their whole pregnancy.”
“I hope you aren’t the latter,” he murmured.

“I do, too,” Katara responded with a feeble laugh.

“Was today the first day you felt this sickness?” he asked.

He raised an eyebrow when Katara averted her eyes and fidgeted with her fingers.

“Katara?” he pressed as he tilted her chin up.

“Um…I’ve been dealing with this for the past week,” she muttered quietly.

A frown appeared on Zuko’s brow and his chest constricted at the thought that his wife had been dealing with this alone.

“Why didn’t you tell me?” he asked her.

“I didn’t want to worry you when I thought it was nothing but a stomach bug,” she confessed with a small shrug.

Zuko’s frown deepened before he sighed. He passed the moist towel over her face one more time before he slowly stood up, lifting her carefully into his arms. He carried her out of the bathroom and to their bed where he gently placed her. Katara looked up to see him giving her a stern look.

“You will rest for the remainder of the day,” he told her firmly.

“What?” she exclaimed as she sat up on the bed to give him a small glare. “I’m perfectly fine!”

“You’ve been too busy lately,” Zuko told her as he frowned down at her, “You need to rest.”
“I told you that I’m fine!” Katara protested heatedly, “I don’t need to remain in bed.”

“I want you to take a day off,” he continued sternly.

When she continued to glare at him, Zuko’s expression softened and he sighed.

“Please, Katara, do it for your sake as well as for mine and our child’s.”

Katara’s irritation melted away and she felt warmth spread through her chest at his concern. This was just as new to him as it was to her and she could understand his anxiety for her safety and health.

“All right,” she consented with a sigh as she laid back down, “I’ll take the day off to catch up on some sleep.”

The relieved and pleased smile her husband gave her was worth it. Katara watched silently as Zuko walked to their large wardrobe. She admired his powerful, semi-naked body without any reservation, and when Zuko caught her looking, she grinned at him. She heard Zuko chuckle as he searched through her clothes. He pulled out a comfortable nightdress and walked back to their bed. He helped change her into the soft clothing before tucking the comforter up to her waist. She loved Zuko’s fierce and passionate side as well as his softer side—especially since he only showed it to her.

“Are you hungry?” he asked as he sat down beside her.

Katara grimaced when the thought of food made her stomach churn in protest.

“I think I’ll just eat some bread and tea for now,” she said.

The young lord frowned.

“That doesn’t sound sufficient enough for a pregnant woman,” he told her.

“For now that’s all I can handle,” she explained before she teasingly added, “But I’m pretty sure that further along my pregnancy, I’ll eat more than even Sokka does in one sitting. You’ll be disgusted by that as well as by the sight of me getting as big as a cow-pig.”

Zuko chuckled at her pout and he leaned down to kiss her lips before pulling away.

“You’ll still be beautiful,” he assured her.

Katara smiled at him.

“I really am lucky I’m married to a man with such a silver tongue,” she teased.

“Yes, I know how much my tongue _pleases_ you,” he retorted with a smirk.

“Insatiable,” Katara said with a laugh.

Another chuckle escaped the Fire Lord before he bent down to kiss her with all the love and happiness he felt in his heart. They pulled apart to gaze affectionately at each other. Zuko tucked a strand of her chocolate hair behind her ear before returning his gaze back to her blue eyes.

“I’m going to see that our breakfast is brought to the anteroom before I have to meet up with the ambassadors again,” he said with a small, apologetic smile.

“I understand,” Katara assured him.

“We’ll announce our happy news to the council tomorrow,” he told her. Then with a smug smile, he added, “I can’t wait to see their reactions as well as the great disappointment of the noblemen. I hope it gets them to stop pushing their daughters and sisters at me.”

Katara laughed at his eager expression since she was also excited to see the how the catty noblewomen would react at the news that they would now be unable to become Zuko’s royal concubine because his wife was going to bear him his heir in a few months.

“You sure sound happy,” she said amusedly.
Zuko’s grin turned into a genuine smile as he stared down at her. He grabbed her hand and lifted it to his lips to caress her knuckles before he brought it down and stared at her intensely.

“I am and I wish for the whole world to know that my beloved wife will bear me a child,” he said sincerely.

The waterbender smiled happily at him and she squeezed his hand. Zuko leaned down toward her and Katara lifted her head to meet his lips. They kissed a few more times before Zuko pulled away with a sigh. After getting dressed in comfortable trousers and a tunic, Zuko went in search of his personal guards or a servant to tell them to bring them their breakfast.

Once her husband left, Katara thought she should write a letter to her family to give them the happy news before they found out from someone else. Pulling the blankets aside, Katara got off the bed, and when she felt sure she wasn’t going to get dizzy, she made her way to the small writing desk they shared placed in one corner of the room.

Well, Gran-Gran, you will be happy to know that I will be giving you another great-grandchild to love, she mused as she remembered her grandmother’s words from not so long ago.

Her smile did not disappear as she composed her letter, thinking only of the happy news she would impart to her beloved family.

The following day Katara and Zuko regally entered the throne room where the advisors were expectantly waiting for them. The royal couple had enjoyed a lively meal with their family that morning. Iroh, Ursa, and Jee had continued to exclaim their happiness with the upcoming birth of their first child, though Iroh proclaimed that he had always believed they would be expecting an heir sooner rather than later.

As the Fire Lord and Fire Lady walked toward the dais, the advisors murmured quietly amongst themselves as they wondered at the reason for the sudden meeting. Instead of helping his wife sit on her grand cushion before he took his place on the throne, Zuko pulled Katara to his side so they both stood before the curious men. Only when the men began to fidget at the continuing suspense and silence did Zuko speak.

“I have called you all to this meeting to personally give you the good news,” the young Fire Lord began in a steady tone.
The men murmured their curiosity as they shifted their gazes between the royal couple. Sitting silently amongst his fellow advisors, Chao smiled delightedly since Iroh had already told him the news.

“What is the good news you would like to tell us, my lord?” Enlai, another of Zuko’s trusted advisors, spoke up.

Before Zuko could continue he was interrupted by Wei’s chuckles.

“Did you finally relent to take a royal concubine to bear you an heir?” the old advisor said with a suggestive leer.

Glaring angrily at the irritating man, Katara elegantly lifted her hand. She watched with satisfaction when the old man’s eyes widened in sudden fear and wariness and she knew he remembered the last time she had demonstrated her powers in the room. Amusedly, she slowly rested her hand on her husband’s tensed arm as if that had been her intention all along. Looking away from Wei, she glanced up at Zuko to see he was glaring hatefully at the old advisor. His jaw was clenched and his nostrils flared slightly with his annoyance.

“I have already made it perfectly clear that I will not dishonor my wife in such a way,” Zuko reminded them in a cold tone before he added more calmly, “Besides, I will not need a royal concubine now or ever.”

“What do you mean by that, my lord?” another advisor spoke up.

The men watched them with both curious and apprehensive expressions. They watched as a sudden smile appeared on their usually reticent lord’s face as he brought his wife closer to him and smiled down at her.

“Lady Yoon Hee has confirmed that my wife is currently carrying my heir,” he informed them.

Katara smiled at the happiness and pride in both his voice and eyes.

The advisors immediately began to exclaim their delight and relief and sincerely congratulated the
“We must announce the upcoming birth of the heir to the entire nation as soon as possible,” Chao spoke up enthusiastically.

As the men continued to express their relief, Zuko watched as Wei sat back and shrugged his shoulders indifferently. Zuko ignored the man as he focused his attention back to the other men as they started asking Katara how far along she was and when did she find out.

“Now that my wife will bear my heir soon,” Zuko interrupted them in a firm tone, “there is no need for a royal concubine. You will retract your decree about me needing one so the noblemen and their female relatives can finally stop bothering my wife and me.”

The men quickly agreed as they continued to exclaim that the Fire Nation throne was once again secure with the impending arrival of the next heir. Zuko again interrupted them to say he and Katara would be taking their leave. The advisors bowed to them respectfully and continued to congratulate them. Zuko quickly led Katara toward the doors, and once they were walking several corridors away from the throne room, the waterbender laughed.

“Well, that went well,” she said amusedly, “They were so happy they acted as if they were the ones who were going to be fathers.”

Zuko chuckled before he smiled down at her.

“True, though none are as happy as me,” he said.

Katara smiled warmly at him and she tightened her hold of his arm. Zuko stopped them and they stared intensely into each other’s eyes as they seem to usually do, studying each other’s emotions and thoughts without words being spoken between them. They did not know how long they were lost in each other’s gazes until they were interrupted by the sound of Jiao politely clearing her throat. They looked away from each other and turned toward the maidservant. Katara was smiling sheepishly and Zuko was again sporting his blank mask.

“What is it, Jiao?” Zuko asked with a raised eyebrow.

“Avatar Aang’s sky-bison has been spotted and will be landing soon, my lord,” she informed them.
“Aang and Toph are here?” Katara asked excitedly. “I can’t wait to tell them our news.”

“Then we should go greet them,” Zuko said with a smile.

They made their way to the courtyard and arrived just in time to see Aang and Toph finish climbing the long flight of stairs. Chirping happily, Momo trailed behind them. The airbender had his arm wrapped around Toph’s slender shoulder and was whispering in her ear. He laughed when Toph playfully punched his chest. Katara and Zuko glanced at each other and wondered at the blush on the usually unruffled earthbender’s cheeks. Sensing their audience, Toph’s eyes widened and she shoved Aang away from her, which only caused the airbender to chuckle more loudly.

Before Zuko could stop her, she raced toward the younger couple.

“Katara!” Zuko exclaimed in alarm as he rushed after her, afraid she would hurt herself in her condition.

He quickly caught up to her and pulled her back tightly to him. Katara squealed in surprise and Aang and Toph gaped in shock as they quickly approached the struggling couple.

“What is your problem, Zuko?!” Katara growled as she squirmed in his grasp.

“You should be more careful!” Zuko admonished as he turned her around to look at her sternly.

Katara let out a soft snort and she placed her hands on her hips.

“A little running isn’t going to do any damage,” she groused.

Zuko frowned, but before he could retort Aang interrupted them.
“What’s wrong?” the airbender asked worriedly as he glanced between the royal couple. Momo chirp as he landed on his shoulder.

His eyebrows rose on his forehead when Katara blushed deeply and Zuko smiled smugly. The three of them turned to regard Toph curiously when she started chuckling.

“You finally knocked up Sugar Queen!” Toph said with a grin. “It’s about time. Nice going, Lord Hotman!” she exclaimed as she impishly punched Zuko’s arm.

Zuko smirked as he wrapped his arm around Katara’s waist and brought her close to his side while Katara’s blush deepened.

“I was going to impart the news more delicately than that,” the waterbender replied dryly.

The other three chuckled at her disgruntlement.

“Congratulations,” Aang spoke up sincerely as he smiled at them both. “I know how long you’ve been waiting and hoping for this.”

“Thanks, Aang,” they replied happily.

“Yeah, congrats,” Toph piped in with a grin, “Enjoy your last months of freedom.”

“Geez, thanks, Toph,” Katara responded wryly.

Toph only grinned more widely. The earthbender lifted an eyebrow when she felt her boyfriend wrap his arm around her shoulders once again and lean closer to her.

“We can’t let Zuko and Katara outdo us, Toph,” Aang said both teasingly and suggestively.

“Shut it, Twinkletoes, before I crush something of yours that will guarantee you won’t have kids!”
Toph growled.

“But, Toph, you’ve told me many times before that you loved that part of me,” Aang said innocently, though his gray eyes were twinkling mischievously.

“Aang!” Toph shouted as she punched his arm in embarrassment. Ever since they started having sex, Aang had turned naughty. He really was a perverted monk. Not that she was complaining, Toph mused with a mental grin.

Zuko chuckled in amusement as Aang laughed and brought a scowling Toph closer to him.

“I don’t even want to know,” Katara said as she laughed and shook her head.

“Why don’t we sit on the veranda and have some refreshments?” Zuko spoke up when he noticed Toph aim a mischievous smirk at Katara.

“That sounds great!” Aang said excitedly.

He grabbed Toph’s hand and started following the royal couple. Toph grumbled under her breath, but allowed Aang to keep holding her hand. A few minutes later, the two couples were sitting on the spacious veranda, partaking in tea and a late lunch. Momo ate a few pieces of fruit before he flew toward the garden to explore. Aang and Toph recounted their adventures in the Earth Kingdom, occasionally making the royal couple laugh. During a more serious discussion, Aang told Zuko that they had not luck spotting Jianguo and the rebels, much to the Fire Lord’s disappointment. A while later, Zuko and Katara told them about the events of palace life.

“I’m glad the issue about the lack of an heir has finally been resolved and that horrible woman was caught before she could do any permanent damage,” Aang spoke up sincerely.

Katara swallowed and she glanced down at her teacup as the image of Yin-Min smirking cruelly at her flashed through her mind. Understanding her thoughts, Zuko grabbed her hand underneath the table and squeezed in comfort. The waterbender looked up to smile gratefully at him as she squeezed his hand back. It would never cease to amaze her how in tune Zuko was to her emotions as she was with his.

“Well, the bitch got what she deserved,” Toph said as she loudly chewed on a cookie. Then grinning impishly, she added, “Now Sparky’s gonna have a different kind of trouble dealing with a pregnant Sugar Queen. May the gods protect you.” She laughed.

“Hey!” Katara protested as she glared at the earthbender.

Zuko and Aang chuckled.

“I’ve dealt with war and vengeful enemies,” Zuko spoke up with amusement in his tone, “I’m sure I can handle this.”

Katara turned to fiercely scowl at him as Aang continued to chuckle.

“Dealing with a super cranky Katara and a crying baby is sure gonna take all your patience...as small as it is now,” Toph continued with a grin.

This time, Zuko frowned at her words since admittedly it was something he could not stop thinking about. He really didn’t have any experience with infants or how to be a father. As if sensing his unease, Katara squeezed his hand in support.

“So, how long do you plan to stay?” Katara asked, changing the topic.

“We’re thinking a week,” Aang replied, “But we’ll return when it’s time for your baby to be born.”

“That’d be fun,” Toph said with a chuckle before she added, “Hopefully Sparky doesn’t faint like Snoozles did, though that would be hilarious.”

As the others laughed, Zuko squeezed Katara’s hand in gratitude for the change in subject and she squeezed it back. However, he could not stop his fears and uncertainties from resurfacing.

What if he really was bad at being a father? What if he made a mistake? What if he turned out like Ozai?

“Have you heard the news?” a bubbly feminine voice asked.
“What news?” another feminine voice inquired with curiosity.

“About the Fire Lord and his wife, of course!” the first voice exclaimed excitedly.

Placing the exquisite fan back down on the display table, Mai straightened as she unconsciously tilted her head in the oblivious women’s direction. She was currently shopping for a new fan in one of the prestigious shops of Omashu, though she was mostly doing it to relieve her boredom and not because she needed another fan. Ever since Jet stopped their trysts, Mai had found herself with too much time on her hands and dark thoughts in her head.

The two women had been gossiping together when Mai had entered and had not notice her as they were standing behind a small stand with their backs turned to her. Mai was always attuned to any gossip that brought her news of Zuko. It was the only way she found any information about him with her living in Omashu with her parents, especially now that Zuko had banished her from the palace.

She clenched her hands and her eyes narrowed in suppressed anger at that humiliating moment when she had offered herself as his royal concubine. She could still not believe he refused her—and so vehemently! How could he still prefer the waterbender? How could he want a woman with no prestige or noble blood? A woman who many believed could be barren?

“What about them?” Mai heard the second woman ask.

A small smirk appeared on Mai’s thin lips. Did Zuko finally decide to forsake the waterbending wench? Was he now looking for a royal concubine to bear him an heir? Even possibly a new wife and Fire Lady? Mai pretended to keep looking at the items before her as she moved closer in order to hear the other woman confirm her thoughts.

“You still haven’t heard? Why, it’s all everybody is talking about!” the other woman said with enthusiasm, deliberately stalling in order to prolong the suspense.

Mai felt her temper rise. Why couldn’t the idiotic woman get to the point?

“I wouldn’t be asking if I knew, now would I?” the woman’s friend said with a loud giggle.
Mai glared at the women’s heads that were visible above the short stand. After living all this time in Omashu, Mai could not stand the frivolous Earth Kingdom noblewomen, and did not try to hide her contempt for them, which in turn, made them dislike her.

“Well, I just heard from my father, who is one of King Bumi’s advisors, if you recall,” the first woman began with a haughty giggle, “that Fire Lady Katara is finally pregnant with Fire Lord Zuko’s heir!”

Mai’s incredulous gasp was drowned by the second woman’s delighted squeal.

“Really?” the second woman finally replied.

No! Mai mentally exclaimed in dismay.

“The Fire Lord must be so happy,” the woman continue, “Everyone could tell how much he loves his wife the last time they were here, although he tried to hide it. It was so adorable.”

“I know, right?” the first woman replied, and then with another giggle she added, “Who wouldn’t notice, what with the loud noises they made at night? It’s no surprise she’s pregnant!”

No! Mai hissed angrily.

It could not be! It had to be a false rumor. Zuko cannot be having an heir with Katara! Mai grasped onto the small table before her as she felt her stomach squeeze painfully in horror, anger, and disappointment. She was the one who was supposed to bear Zuko’s child! She was the one who was supposed to be married to him! Not Katara!

How could Zuko do this to her? How could he ignore the love she had for him? How could he not see she was a better choice?

A soft gasp made Mai snap her head up. The two women had rounded the small stand and were now staring wide-eyed at her. Schooling her features into her traditional blank expression, Mai slowly straightened herself and stared indifferently at them. The women quickly composed themselves and fake, sweet smiles appeared on their powdered faces.
“Oh, Lady Mai, we didn’t see you there,” the first woman with light green eyes spoke up pleasantly. “I suppose you have heard the wonderful news? The Fire Lady isn’t barren after all and she will be giving the Fire Lord his first child. Isn’t that nice?”

“Yes, they must be so happy,” the other shorter woman added with a little smile, “And they’re both so good looking. Their children will be just as beautiful.”

Mai knew they were trying to get a rise out of her, but she would not give them the satisfaction. Instead, she brushed her hair away from her shoulder, the movement causing her long sleeve to fall a little and reveal the weapons hidden underneath. A small smirk stretched her thin lips when their eyes widened in slight fear.

“They would be if their blood weren’t tainted with the barbaric and primitive blood of their Water Tribe mother,” Mai replied dispassionately.

The women gasped indignant, but Mai ignored them as she turned away and gracefully walked out of the store. She ignored the people on the streets as she made her way to the grand house where her family resided. How she wished her father would resign his position as ambassador so they could return to living in the Fire Nation where she could be close to Zuko.

Although outwardly her appearance looked the same, inwardly she was seething with the news she had just heard. She did not believe—she refused to believe—that Zuko truly loved the waterbender. He was just infatuated with the exotic looking wench and nothing else. Once he grew bored of Katara, he would come to realize that the only woman for him was Mai.

But now the bitch was pregnant. Why couldn’t Katara really have been barren? Damn it. It would be harder for Zuko to cast Katara aside now that she was carrying his heir. Mai knew his honor would not permit him to do that.

So she hoped.

Hoped that by some chance Katara lost the brat.

And her life in the process.

“The men say they heard some interesting news at the village.”
Golden eyes flickered to the tall Dai Li agent and the large-jawed earthbender standing patiently to the side. Jianguo slowly rolled up the letter he had just finished reading. He could feel Ping shift impatiently at the entrance of his tent at the stretched silence, though he knew Chang was standing perfectly still without him looking at them. He placed the scroll inside the small chest where he kept his correspondence and locked it. He scowled as he thought about what he had just read. He did not want to keep stalling from taking Zuko’s life and woman, but for now, he would have to wait for further instructions. At least he made sure Zuko knew he was still out there by attacking those villages. Once he finished what he was doing, Jianguo finally looked up to stare levelly at the earthbenders.

“What sort of news?” Jianguo asked with a raised eyebrow.

The bulkier earthbender coughed and shuffled his large feet. Chang remained impassive, his green eyes steady, his stance unruffled.

“They ‘eard dat da Fire Lord finally planted a brat in the wa’erbenda’s belly,” Ping finally informed his leader.

Jianguo’s eyes widened before he narrowed them pensively. Well, that was to be expected after the news spread that the Fire Lady wasn’t actually barren, but had been given a contraceptive tea by an insane maidservant that had been obsessed with the Fire Lord. And the servant had been Ozai’s former concubine, no less! Ha, life sure was amusing.

“So Zuko finally managed to impregnate the lovely waterbender, hm?” Jianguo mused to himself.

He wasn’t surprised at the news. Who would be able to resist bedding the gorgeous Water Tribe woman? Hell, even he, Jianguo, could not get the waterbender out of his mind and he had barely touched her that one time in Omashu. Zuko sure was one lucky bastard to have such a woman in his bed every night. And now Zuko’s wife was carrying his offspring.

It was perfect.

Now there was something else to threaten Zuko with. Not only would the bastard have to worry about the safety of his wife, but now he would worry about keeping his heir safe. And if Zuko was given a choice between the two to keep safe, who would he pick?
His wife?

Or his heir?

A cruel smile curled Jianguo’s lips, causing Chang to frown and Ping to shift nervously.

Life sure was interesting.

The sound of rushing feet echoed loudly in the silence of the empty streets. The cloaked individual looked warily around him as he tried to stick to the shadows. His breathing was coming out in harsh panting breaths due to his exertion and terror. He needed to reach the Fire Nation Palace. He needed to inform the Fire Lord about what he had accidentally discovered a few minutes ago.

Pushing his long white hair out of his eyes, the old man breathed a sigh of relief as the palace came into view. He was about to dash out of the alley and out into the main street when something dropped down in front of him, blocking his way. A gasp escaped him and he jumped back in fear and anger as he stared at the lithe man standing before him. A dark cloth hid the much younger man’s lower face and in his gloved hand he held a long and sharp knife.

“Now what do we have here?” a new voice sounded from the other end of the long alley.

The old man whirled around to face the newcomer. He saw that it wasn’t just one other person, but two and they were also masked and holding knives. Thieves? The old man brought the hood of his cloak down to better hide his face. His eyes darted around for a way to escape, but he knew he was trapped. He just had to hope that they did not know who he was and what he was doing.

“What do you want?” he asked the younger and taller man in a calm tone.

“You know what we want,” the man that spoke before replied as he casually ran his gloved finger along the edge of his knife.

“If it’s money you want, then I’ll give you whatever sum you tell me,” the old man said, his tone deep and composed, though inwardly he was afraid.
He would give them his entire fortune as long as they let him go so he could warn the Fire Lord.

“Money is not what we’re looking for,” the masked man responded as he continued playing with his weapon.

“Then I don’t understand what is it you want,” the white-haired man replied with a bit of exasperation.

“Tsk, tsk,” the young man mocked as he waved his knife from side to side. “Did you really think we didn’t notice you spying on our master and that you’re on your way to warn the Fire Lord…Advisor Chao?”

Chao’s eyes widened in terror as comprehension dawned on him. Damn it, he had been found out! He had thought no one had noticed him as he slipped from the prestigious club the upper society of the city frequented. It was so late most of the patrons had been roaring drunk or too engrossed in their gambling games to pay attention to their surroundings. It was for this reason that Chao had accidentally come upon a drunken conversation detailing the next move against the royal family. Chao had been too concerned with reaching the Fire Lord in order to expose the real traitor that he had not been careful, and now that mistake was going to cost him dearly. His heart began to pound wildly in his chest and cold sweat ran down his face.

“You really should have minded your own business, old man,” the speaker said with a sigh of mock pity as he and his partner advanced.

The old advisor opened his mouth to scream for help, but before the sound could escape a gloved hand covered his mouth in a hard grip as the third man that had blocked his path rushed forward. Chao struggled against his hold, but the man was younger and stronger than him. Chao froze in fear when he felt the edge of a knife press against his neck.

“Tsk, tsk, old man,” the same speaker mocked with a chuckle as he stood before Chao. “I promise if you don’t struggle, we’ll make this quick and painless.”

Chao felt his chest heave in great pants as his terror mounted as he heard the men laugh. He knew he was going to die and there was nothing he could do. His fear was suddenly replaced with anger at the fact that he had been caught before he could reveal the real traitor, that bastard, then it was followed by anguish at the thought that he could do nothing to prevent his lord and lady from being harmed.
Life was so cruel.

He prayed to Agni that his death could be avenged one day and that the traitors could be punished for all the harm they have caused and continued to cause Fire Lord Zuko and his family.

As the men closed in around him, Chao bravely squared his shoulders. He closed his eyes, cleansing his mind, wondering if he would be reunited with his loving wife, as he felt the knife slit his throat.

Zuko frowned as he found himself walking along a long, dark tunnel. He could see a light straight ahead of him, but as much as he walked toward it, he could not seem to reach it. Just when he was about to give up the light suddenly appeared closer to him. Zuko paused before the exit to the dark tunnel in bewilderment. He could hear cheers coming from the other side of the white light. Curious, he straightened his shoulders, and without any hesitation, he stepped through.

He winced as his eyes adjusted to the sudden light of many torches. He surveyed his surroundings and noticed that he was standing on a rectangular arena with thousands of spectators shouting from the stands on either side. He frowned at the familiarity of the place before his eyes widened in horror. He noticed the crowd’s attention was focused at the center of the arena and he knew what he would find before he followed their gaze.

There, on the floor, was a younger version of him with tears streaming down his anguished yet unblemished face. He could hear himself crying, pleading for his father’s forgiveness. Frozen, heart twisting painfully in his chest, Zuko wrenched his eyes away from the boy and focused on the silhouetted form of his father. It was a nightmare he had had many times after the incident, yet every time he relived it, he could still feel the pain and terror.

“Please, Father,” the boy pleaded as the larger silhouetted form advanced slowly on him, “I’m sorry I spoke out of turn!”

“You will fight for your honor,” the deeper voice of the Fire Lord spoke up coldly.

The younger Zuko pressed his forehead to the hard ground and trembled.

“I meant you no disrespect. I am your loyal son,” Zuko heard his younger self repeat the words.

“Get up!” Zuko screamed angrily at his younger self, “He doesn’t deserve your pleas! He doesn’t deserve your respect! He’s not worth it!”

But it did not matter how much he shouted, his younger self did not listen to him and continued pleading to his father, his hands and knees pressed painfully against the hard floor.

“You will learn respect…” they heard the deeper timbre growl.

Zuko’s heart began to pound in anxiety at the words he knew by heart and the pain that was going to follow.

“Get up!” Zuko roared again.

He watched as the boy raised his tear-streaked face to his father and Zuko followed his gaze as he anticipated seeing his sire’s cruel, cold eyes.

They both watched as the still silhouetted Fire Lord, bare-chested and massive, advanced intimidatingly toward the young boy. Then the man stepped away from the shadows, the flames harshly illuminating his hard features, and stood a few steps away from his crying son.

Zuko sucked in his breath. He felt as if had been punched in the gut and his body stiffened, for standing there was not Ozai but an older version of himself—the scarred side of his face menacing, unforgiving, and unmistakable.

No! Zuko thought in disbelief and horror as he watched himself approach the boy—the boy who must be his son.

No! This was his fear! His fear of becoming like his father! His fear of hurting his own child!

“Please, Father,” he heard his son whimper in fear.

Zuko watched in dread as the older version of himself approached the boy with a cold expression on his scarred face. Zuko tried to jump forward so he could block his older self from advancing, so he could protect the boy, but he could not move. His feet seemed stuck to the floor. He could only watch in mounting horror and helplessness.
“No! Stop!” he screamed, but they did not hear him.

“…and suffering will be your teacher,” older Zuko finished harshly as he raised his flaming fist and brought it down toward his frightened son…

“No!” Zuko roared.

“Zuko! Wake up!” a feminine voice cried out in concern.

His eyes flew open and darted wildly around, his heart pounding frantically in his chest, his stomach painfully clenched in horror. His breathing was loud and harsh, his hands were tightly clenched at his sides, and he could feel sweat beaded on his forehead. He relaxed slightly when he finally realized he was not in the arena, but in his bedchamber.

“Zuko,” he heard the voice of the person he loved the most in the world and he closed his eyes and exhaled shakily.

He focused on her soothing voice and touch as she caressed his face and hair before he again opened his eyes to look at his wife. She was leaning over him, her brow furrowed and her blue eyes filled with worry as long strands of her hair fell onto his chest.

“Katara,” he breathed out in relief as he wrapped his arms around her and crushed her to him.

He rolled them over so he was lying over her and he buried his face on her chest, the sound of her heartbeat soothing to his ear. She crooned to him softly as she caressed his hair and pressed a kiss to his head.

“Do you want to talk about it?” she asked quietly.

Zuko did not say anything immediately. He squeezed his eyes shut as the nightmare resurfaced in his mind along with his fear, uncertainty, and concern. How could he tell Katara what was on his mind? What if he scared her? He clutched her closer to him, pressing himself tightly against her, letting her warmth and sweet scent surround him.
Katara remained silent as she held her husband to her and waited for him to speak. Zuko rarely allowed himself to be vulnerable with her. He always strove to be strong for her, but she appreciated the moments when she was the one who gave him comfort and strength. Finally, after what seemed like forever, Zuko’s harsh breathing returned to normal and his heartbeat slowed down, but he still did not relax and instead remained tensed. Finally, he relented and began to quietly recount his nightmare with his head still pressed against her chest. Katara could only listen to him in horror and concern.

“Then, when he turned around,” Zuko continued, his voice becoming more anxious, “it was not my father that stood before the boy…It was…me.”

He paused and shuddered, pressing himself closer to her as if he could escape the nightmare.

“I was the one who was punishing…my son,” he whispered hoarsely. “I was the cruel father.”

The frown that had appeared on Katara’s brow when Zuko began to recount his nightmare deepened at the distress in his voice as he finished. She could feel his tensed muscles beneath her hands and the rapid beating of his heart. She mentally cursed Ozai for emotionally scarring his son as deeply as he did physically. Slowly, lovingly, she ran her fingers through his messy, dark hair.

“Don’t worry, Zuko,” she told him softly, “It was just a nightmare. It’s not real.”

Zuko frowned as he tightened his hold of her. Would she still say the same thing in the future?

“What if…?” he began quietly before he let out a shaky breath, “What if it was a…forewarning? What if I’m not a good father? What if I…hurt our child?”

“You won’t,” Katara responded firmly, assuredly.

At his wife’s confident tone, Zuko raised his head from her breasts and looked intensely into her eyes, searching for reassurance in her blue depths.

“How can you be so sure?” he asked in a low tone.
“Because you are nothing like your father,” she replied as she reached out a hand to cup his scarred cheek, “Because you are a good and honorable man. Because you love me and will never make me unhappy by harming my child.”

She paused briefly to reach down for his hand and placed it gently over her slightly swollen stomach, right where their babe rested. His hand immediately curled protectively over her belly and she smiled mentally.

“And because I know you will love our child, Zuko,” she finished softly as she stared unwaveringly into his golden eyes.

Zuko was silent a moment as he mused over her words. She was right. He was nothing like his father. Ozai was cruel, unloving, and selfish. Zuko was not like that, especially because of Katara. His child was not even born yet and Zuko already loved him or her. How could he hurt something he loved?

At those thoughts, Zuko let out a deep sigh and his body relaxed as he gazed down wonderingly down at her.

“You’re right,” he murmured before he whispered softly, “What would I do without you?”

Katara smiled at him, and instead of responding, she lifted her head and kissed him. Zuko sighed softly against her tender mouth as he lifted his hand from her stomach to caress her smooth cheek.

They made slow, sweet yet passionate love that night. Their bodies pressed tightly together, their mouths tasting each other’s souls, their arms holding each other close until they reached that glorious end together.

A few minutes later, Katara was sleeping peacefully against his side, her head on his upper arm and her hand over his chest, as Zuko kept watch over her. One arm wrapped around her and his other hand placed over hers on his chest, Zuko glanced down to gaze at her belly where a small bump was now visible. That was the place where his child was sleeping—a child that he would love, guide, and protect.

A sudden fierce protectiveness and love for his unborn child surged through him and he splayed his fingers over Katara’s stomach. Katara and his child were the most important things to him now.
Zuko allowed himself to relax—his nightmare completely forgotten—and he pressed a kiss to Katara’s head before he allowed sleep to take hold of him with his arm curled protectively over his wife’s belly.

He would protect his family.

He would do everything possible to keep them from any harm.

He would even give up his life to keep them safe.
Sitting behind the wall of fire in the throne room, Zuko listened attentively to the reports of his advisors. Trade with both Water Tribes and the Earth Kingdom were better than ever. The colonies were prospering admirably. The Fire Nation people were ecstatic with the news that their beloved Fire Lady was carrying the next heir. Things were progressing well and peace seemed to be reigning, yet Zuko knew better than to let his guard down. Jianguo and the rebels were still out there and would not stop making trouble until they were caught. The fact that they had not heard from them only made his apprehension grow. What could they be planning next?

“My lord,” one of the advisors spoke up when it seemed the meeting was about to conclude.

“Yes?” Zuko replied with a raised eyebrow, wondering what issue the man wanted to bring up next. He had learned to be wary every time someone spoke up when he was just about to leave.

“We were thinking of beginning a search for caretakers and tutors for the future heir,” the old man said. “We need to start interviewing all those who apply for the position before the heir is born.”

A frown appeared on Zuko’s brow. He should have expected this issue to be brought up. Ever since he began to walk, he had been thrown into the care of various caretakers to keep him out of trouble and tutors to teach him about Fire Nation culture, history, and traditions as well as court etiquette and his duties as prince and heir. Not to mention training to be a great firebending warrior. However, not once had his father made time for him; to teach him anything or to get to know him. Zuko had learned nothing from his sire. If it wasn’t for his mother, who loved and cared for her children, just as Iroh did, Zuko would have grown up in the care of total strangers, as was tradition. The only function of the heirs to the throne was to insure the royal bloodline. They were meant to be seen but not heard.

Zuko did not want such a lonely upbringing for his son. Yes, his son. Ever since that horrible nightmare Zuko had begun to refer to the child growing in Katara’s womb as such. He could not explain it, but he was positive Katara was going to give birth to a male heir, though he would be equally happy if he was wrong and it turned out to be a girl. He wished for a daughter one day, one that would look like her beautiful mother. She would be the most pampered princess in the world if he had his way.

He did not want any of his children to grow up neglected and have a hard and lonely childhood. He did not want to be a distant figure in their upbringing—he wanted to be part of their lives. He also knew Katara would never hand over the care of their children to strangers.
The sound of someone clearing their throat brought Zuko out of his thoughts. Mentally shaking his head, Zuko focused back on the old advisors who were looking at him expectantly. Zuko mentally scowled at the almost bored expression on Wei’s wrinkled face. Looking away, he observed the other men. He frowned when he noticed that Advisor Chao, his most trusted advisor, was not present. He rarely missed these meetings. Could he be sick?

“I have decided that my heir will only need one caretaker for the times that Fire Lady Katara and I are too busy,” Zuko spoke up coolly, “I am sure my wife will want to take care of our heir like a mother should.”

The men immediately murmured in disapproval.

“Once my heir is old enough,” the Fire Lord continued, “the tutors can begin teaching him about Fire Nation history, culture, and court etiquette. However,” he paused briefly to fix a serious look at the men, “I will teach my son about his duties as heir to the throne and I will also be the one to train him to be a warrior and a firebender.”

_If he turns out to be a firebender, Zuko mentally added._

There was a possibility his son could turn out to be a waterbender and Zuko was sure Katara would want to teach their son everything she knew. However, as much as he wished otherwise, he knew there would be problems if his heir turned out to be a waterbender. Chao had told him a few days ago that a few of the advisors—Wei specifically—were already expressing their displeasure at the possibility. He was sure the councilmen and the royal court would argue vehemently against having a waterbender as their future Fire Lord. He frowned.

There was also a possibility the child Katara carried was a girl. The advisors could refuse to allow his daughter to be his heir because of her gender. But Zuko planned to bring up their past acceptance to Azula becoming Fire Lord, to try to ensure his daughter’s position. But even if the councilmen argued and ranted about either outcome, he would fight for his heir’s rights no matter what.

He was looking forward to his impending fatherhood and the things he could teach his heir. He did not have a solution for the possibility his son or daughter turned out to be a waterbender, but he was determined to find one.

The men again murmured in shock.
“Such a thing is unheard of!” Wei exclaimed, scandalized. “It goes against our traditions!”

“There are some traditions that need to be changed,” Zuko spoke up coolly.

A long moment passed as the advisors continued to argue against his decree, Wei being one of the most unyielding. Zuko wished Chao could have attended this meeting since the advisor would have backed him up and at the same time would have persuaded his fellow advisors to change their views. However, the men finally agreed—reluctantly—since Zuko was adamant about his idea and would not change his mind.

Satisfied with his plan, Zuko stood up and dismissed the men. Zuko had just stepped down a few steps from the dais when the doors were suddenly opened and a guard hurried in. A deep frown appeared on Zuko’s brow just as he felt his stomach clench in dread. There was always bad news when somebody barged into the throne room unannounced.

“My lord,” the middle-aged guard greeted as he knelt on one knee with a fist against the floor before the fire wall.

“What is it?” the Fire Lord asked impassively.

“A corpse has been discovered a few hours ago,” the man continued in a serious tone, “The body has been identified as...Advisor Chao.”

“What?” Zuko exclaimed in disbelief.

The other advisors gasped loudly and started speaking over each other until Zuko barked at them to be silent.

“We have brought the body in case you wish to take a look, my lord,” the guard added solemnly.

Zuko’s frown deepened before he gave a firm nod. They watched as two more guards walked into the room with a stretcher between them. The men murmured as they stared at the body covered in a white sheet. Zuko quickly stepped down from the dais and parted the wall of fire just as the guards stopped before it. He stared down at the outline of the body before he reached for the sheet and pulled it down. Zuko inhaled sharply as he stared at the gory slit along the man’s throat. Dried blood clung to the pallid skin and at the corner of his mouth. He had harbored the hope that perhaps the guards had confused Chao with the dead man, but he could not mistake the identity of one of his most trusted advisors.

No, this could not be. Who would want to kill Chao? The advisor was a good and peaceful man.

The Fire Lord clenched his hands tightly in anger before he forced himself to calm down. Regrettably, he slowly pulled up the sheet and covered the lifeless face once again. He bowed his head over the body and said a prayer for Chao’s soul before he looked at the guards with a grim expression.

“Where was his body discovered?” Zuko asked gruffly.

“He was found in a gutter in an alley close to the palace,” the guard replied.

“Who killed him?” Zuko growled out angrily, “Do you know?”

“It seems Advisor Chao was robbed on his way from one of the prestigious clubs in the city sometime last night. A few witnesses have come forth to testify that they had seen him at the club late into the night, though they could not be sure at what time he left.” The guard continued, “His clothes and shoes were stolen, and he was left with only a simple cloak as cover. Any money or jewelry he might have had is gone.”

“Damn it,” Zuko cursed as his hands once again clenched into fists.

Was Chao really killed by thieves? But then, who else would want him dead? Chao did not seem to be a man who had enemies nor was he a violent person who provoked others.

The old men began to talk amongst themselves with deep frowns on their faces and lamentable shakes of their heads. It wasn’t uncommon for thieves to come upon unsuspecting noblemen on their way home in the middle of the night.

“Did you find anything else?” Zuko asked, “Any clues that might lead to the murderer?”

“We found three different pairs of footprints that indicate that it was not done by one thief alone, but unfortunately, we were unable to find anything that could give us a lead,” the guard responded and bowed his head apologetically.

Zuko ran a hand down his face and let out a long, sad sigh. He ignored the lamentations of the old advisors. Chao did not deserve to have his life ended in such a way. How was he going to give Iroh the news? His uncle and Chao had been very good friends. Luckily, Chao was a childless widower with no other family members, so Zuko did not have to impart the sorrowful news to his family. That was always the hardest part.

“Make sure the body is prepared for a proper funeral,” the Fire Lord finally spoke up with another weary sigh.

“Yes, my lord,” the guard said with a bow of his head.

Zuko again ignored the men’s conversations as he got lost in his thoughts. He was not looking forward to imparting the tragic news to his uncle.

With sorrowful eyes, Iroh stared down at the body of one of his closest friends. Chao had been prepared for his funeral, his body clothed in a formal white robe, the slit in his throat hidden by the high collar. His skin was devoid of any color, but his expression was almost serene. If he didn’t know any better, Iroh would have thought his friend was sleeping.

When his nephew had imparted the news to him a few days ago, Iroh had been unable to speak for a few minutes, unable to believe his friend of so many years was dead. He had still harbored the hope that perhaps there was some sort of mistake, but once he came face to face with Chao’s corpse, he knew he needed to accept the truth.

Why was life so cruel? Chao was a good man. He did not deserve such a fate.

He heard a sad sigh coming from his side and he glanced up to see Toshiro wiping at his eyes. Both he and Toshiro had decided to spend a few minutes alone with Chao, reminiscing about their past and friendship before the funeral started. He was the one who went in search of the palace physician to give the man the sad news. Toshiro had been shocked as well and had asked to be left alone to mourn his old friend. Iroh had only nodded sadly as he watched Toshiro lock himself in his small study.

“I am still in shock,” Toshiro spoke up softly, almost angrily. “If only he had stayed at home that night, if only he hadn’t gone to the club, he would still be alive.”

“Fate can be a cruel mistress,” Iroh responded somberly. “How could he have known what awaited him?”

“I know,” Toshiro responded with a sigh. “He wasn’t supposed...He didn’t deserve to die like this.”

Iroh did not say anything. What was there to say? Chao could not be brought back to life and they could not turn time to prevent his death. They were silent for a long moment before Iroh spoke again.

“All we can do know is remember him with fondness and hope he is happy in the afterlife,” the retired general said.

“Yes, you’re right,” the physician murmured.

Silence once again fell on them. They remained watching over Chao’s body until it was time for the funeral.

Life sure was unpredictable, Iroh mused as he stared down at his friend’s lifeless body.

A few weeks later found Zuko and Jee in the Fire Lord’s study. Chao’s funeral had been a sad event to the few closest to him, and disappointingly, nothing was found of the thieves that had murdered him. Iroh had been saddened at the news of his old friend’s unfair death, and he and Physician Toshiro had a private moment over their friend’s body to recall the past and their youthful days. The loss affected them greatly, but life had to move on. Zuko only wished he could find the thieves and enact revenge against Chao’s murderers.

Currently, the Fire Lord and the admiral were looking over a new report about Jianguo and the rebels, though nothing new was given. Zuko angrily slammed his fist on the large desk.

“It’s as if the bastard is taunting us,” Zuko growled as he threw the document on the wooden surface. “He lets himself be sighted before he completely disappears.”

“Maybe Jianguo is just letting us know that he is still out there and hasn’t given up,” Jee spoke up calmly, unfazed by the Fire Lord’s temper.

Zuko growled angrily. Not for the first time did he wish he could have killed the bastard in Omashu a year ago when he attacked Katara. Zuko quickly dismissed the thought for he did not want to remember what both Katara and he went through during that time. He had to find Jianguo and end life miserable life. His growing family would not be safe until the rebel was dead.

The men were interrupted from their discussion when the door was suddenly thrown open. They quickly looked up to see Katara march in with Ursa trailing worriedly after her. Jee caught Ursa’s eye and they smiled briefly at each other before they returned their attention to the irritated waterbender.

Zuko sat still as he watched his wife move swiftly toward him. She was wearing a tight blue tunic and dark fitted pants that she usually wore when she practiced her waterbending or archery. It was always such a pleasure to watch Katara’s generous breasts slightly bounce as she approached him—it was just as magnificent as watching her lovely backside when she walked away from him. He shook his thoughts away when his wife finally stood before his desk in a rigid stance and glared down at him with blazing, blue eyes. Zuko stared at her silently since he knew perfectly well what had her so upset.

Jee stood up from his seat and bowed to the Fire Lady, but Katara only spared him a quick nod as she continued glowering at her husband—her pigheaded, arrogant, controlling husband.

“Good afternoon, Katara,” Zuko greeted calmly as he sat back on his chair, “Is something wrong?”

“You know perfectly well what’s wrong,” Katara hissed angrily as she placed her hands on her hips.

It was a stance Zuko had become used to for the past several weeks. His wife had been very hormonal lately. Her moods shifted so rapidly that it left him bewildered and uncertain most of the time.

“I just found out that you have prohibited me from waterbending!” Katara growled out loudly. “The guards wouldn’t even let me enter the training arena!”

“I just don’t want you to strain yourself in your condition, Katara,” Zuko tried to explain himself.
“I was just going to do a little exercise!” the waterbender shouted as she crossed her arms under her breasts, “It isn’t like I was going to fight anyone!”

Zuko watched as she took a deep breath to calm herself, but continued to glare at him. He loved the way her eyes flashed with temper, which reminded him of how they looked in more passionate moments. Agni, he could become forever lost in the azure depth of her eyes that would greet him every morning and gaze up from beneath him almost every night. But he knew now was not the time to think of such things with his angry wife glowering at him. He was sure that if he said the wrong thing, she would freeze him to the ceiling. He was brought out of his thoughts when he heard his mother delicately cleared her throat.

“Zuko, a little exercise is good for both mother and child as long as it is moderate,” Ursa explained gently.

The Fire Lord frowned deeply. Maybe he was being a bit too cautious, but he never had to deal with this before, he did not know much about pregnancies and was still learning. He just did not want Katara and their son to get hurt if he could help it.

“I’m sorry...” he began but was cut off by his wife’s angry huff.

“Don’t think a simple apology will save you,” she said heatedly.

Zuko’s temper flared a little at her words and the fact that she had interrupted him. The royal couple did not notice that Jee and Ursa had backed away a little to give them privacy.

“Katara—”

“You made a decision that concerns me without discussing it with me first!”

Frowning, Zuko opened his mouth to retort, but Katara once again did not let him speak as she agitatedly slashed a hand in the air, her eyes still holding his in an indignant glare. Her cheeks were flushed with her anger and her chest heaved with her high emotions.

“You have no right to dictate what I can and cannot do, Zuko,” she reminded him firmly before she loudly hissed out, “Especially when it involves something extremely important to me, such as my waterbending!”
“I…” Zuko began before he paused as a deep frown furrowed his brow.

As he mused over her words, he realized that she was right. He had been high-handed in his decision. He had not stopped to think about her feelings or about what she thought. When she had confronted him that night as the Painted Lady, he had promised her that he wouldn’t do so again; that he wouldn’t make decisions without her input. But it seemed that he had failed.

He was just still not used to including other people into his plans because he had been alone for so long. He had never had anyone to be there for him, to help him out. Even after a year of marriage, he was still making mistakes, and falling into old habits, but he thought he was getting better. He hadn’t excluded her from his decision out of malice or because he thought she couldn’t make her own decisions. He had just wanted to keep her safe. But he could see why she would be angry. He would be too if someone told him he couldn’t firebend. He let out a sigh and ran his hand down his face before he looked up into Katara’s eyes with an apologetic expression.

“I’m sorry, Katara, truly,” he said sincerely.

Katara eyed him warily for a long moment, refusing to forgive him so easily. He needed to understand that it was not okay for him to think that he could dictate her life, that she would meekly accept his decisions regarding her life and her person without questioning him. Before she could explain it to him, he spoke first.

“I didn’t mean to be overbearing,” the Fire Lord said quietly, “I didn’t think my actions would be taken that way. I was just trying to keep you safe.”

The waterbender was silent as she wondered about his sincerity and found that his eyes did not lie as he stared unwavering back at her.

“So you can understand why I’m angry?” she asked tentatively.

“Yes,” Zuko responded with a nod before he more softly added, “I just…Agni, Katara, I don’t want to lose you or our child. It would kill me.”

Katara’s anger quickly vanished at her husband’s heartfelt, quiet confession and his worried frown. She felt her heart give an almost painful squeeze at the slight tremor she had detected in his voice. He wasn’t trying to be a jerk nor was he trying to be high-handed. And she could also understand that Zuko was still learning to be more open in their relationship. It wasn’t as if she never made mistakes either. He was just worried about her health and that of their baby. How could she be angry at him for that?

Smiling, Katara walked around the desk and hugged him to her. Even though they were not alone, Zuko wrapped his arms around her waist and held tightly onto her to take comfort.

“I promise I’ll take things easy so you won’t worry,” she told him sincerely.

“Thank you,” he replied through a relieved sigh before he added, “And again I’m sorry for not talking to you first. I didn’t think.”

“I know. It’s okay,” she said softly.

The Fire Lady leaned down to press a quick kiss on her husband’s dark head before she let him go. Zuko looked up to see her smiling at him before she patted his cheek and walked around the desk.

“All of the sudden I’m craving something sweet,” she said with a twinkle in her eyes, “I’ll see you at dinner.”

And just like that, the pregnant waterbender breezed out of the room with an amused Ursa following after her. Zuko looked after his wife in bewilderment before he shook his head and smiled indulgently. His wife’s quick mood swings sure kept him on his toes, but for once it seemed her emotional instability was working in his favor. Jee chuckled as he sat back down.

“Pregnant women are something else,” the admiral commented amusedly as he grinned at the young lord, “You’re going to have your work cut out for you, Son.”

Jee paused and his eyes widened just as wide as Zuko’s at the word he had accidently uttered. They stared silently at each other for a moment, each trying to gauge the other’s thoughts and reactions, before a small smile appeared on Zuko’s face.

“Indeed,” the young lord replied.
Jee visibly relaxed and he returned the smile. No words were needed to convey the acceptance and understanding between them.

“Have you and Mother set a date yet for the wedding?” Zuko asked curiously.

The young firebender no longer had any problems with the upcoming event. He could see how much his mother and Jee loved each other. He was sure Jee could make Ursa happy.

“Ursa and I have decided to get married after your heir is born,” Jee responded in a calm tone, though Zuko could detect the anticipation in his tone. “She wants to focus on Lady Katara’s pregnancy first.”

Zuko nodded and smiled again. He raised an eyebrow when the admiral started chuckling again.

“Who knew I would be gaining a son and a grandchild in the same year?” Jee mused with a grin.

The younger firebender let out a low chuckle.

“And that I would be gaining a son and a stepfather as well?” Zuko added amusedly.

Their chuckles resounded in the study for a few more moments. Life was strange, indeed.

Katara was pleasantly woken up by the feeling of Zuko caressing her body and gently kissing her lips. With a soft sigh, she slowly opened her eyes and she graced her husband with a sweet smile. He returned her smile as he moved his fingers up to caress her smooth cheek. Zuko had woken up a few minutes ago, but instead of getting up, he continued lying on the bed as he watched his wife sleep. Now that she was finally awake, he allowed his morning arousal entire control. He wanted her again.

He was feeling really good this morning and making love to his water nymph was going to make him feel even better. He leaned his head down and kissed her passionately, slipping his tongue inside her hot mouth. Katara moaned and she wrapped her arms around his neck, causing his need to rise. Murmuring against her lips, he moved over her just as his hand grasped her naked breast. Suddenly, she forcefully pushed against his chest and jumped from the bed.
Falling back on the mattress, Zuko sighed wistfully when he heard the vomiting sounds coming from the bathing room. His son really knew how to thwart his father’s fun, he mused wryly. It was rare now for them to make love in the mornings because Katara always got morning sickness. Fortunately, she was always up for sex when they retired to their bedroom after dinner. Hopefully, their activities could resume that night before he went insane with need. A small smile on his face, Zuko stood up from the bed and followed after his wife without bothering to put on some clothes to cover his nudity.

When he entered the bathroom, he saw her retching in the water closet, her smooth legs curled under her. She was naked and he was sure the floor was cold. As he approached her quickly, the scent of her sickness assaulted his senses, but he ignored the smell since he was partially responsible for her condition. He held her long hair away from her face with one hand while with the other he ran calming circles on her naked back until she finally stopped a moment later.

“Are you okay?” he asked her softly when she leaned back and panted.

“Yes,” she croaked as she placed the back of her hand against her sweaty forehead, “For the moment.”

Zuko waited to see if there would be a repeat performance, but when it didn’t appear he went to their bedroom to grab a cup and fill it with water from the nightstand, then he grabbed a box of cleaning powder before returning to her side. She was still sitting and trembling on the floor when he handed the cup to her. Katara gratefully took the cup and rinsed her mouth a couple of times. She pinched a bit of the crushed powder and rubbed it over her teeth in order to clean them and freshen up her breath. She really loved this invention. The powder was made up of crushed rock salt, mint, and other ingredients. She made sure to rub the powder thoroughly before she again rinsed her mouth.

“Are you ready to get up from the floor?” he asked once she set the cup aside, “It’s cold.”

She gave him a weak nod. Zuko quickly scooped her up into his arms and gently sat her down on the edge of the bathtub. He picked up a washcloth and dipped it into the washbasin before returning to her. Sitting beside her, he pushed her hair back and began wiping her face with the damp cloth.

Katara sighed gratefully at the cool sensation. She really disliked feeling so weak in the mornings. And she especially hated it that Zuko had to see it.

“I’ll get your bath ready,” the firebender said a moment later.
He stood up and began to prepare the bathtub, filling it with water from the faucet and warming it with firebending. When he reached for her, she shook her head.

“I can do it,” she muttered.

“I know, but I want to help,” he replied softly.

Without waiting for her to say anything else, he stepped into the tub and helped her in before placing her on his lap. Katara sighed contentedly at the warm water touching her skin and her heart warmed at her husband’s tender care. He had been patiently taking care of her each morning when she was sick, and even though she had tried to dissuade him, he had been persistent in helping her. She really was a lucky woman.

After they finished their bath and dried themselves off, Zuko carefully carried his wife back to their room and gently sat her down on their large bed. Katara looked up to smile at him.

“I must be the most pampered, pregnant woman ever,” she said with a grin.

Zuko let out a chuckle as he sat down next to her.

“You would be if you’d let me,” he replied in amusement.

She laughed as she noisily kissed his jaw. Zuko cupped the back of her head and kissed her mouth properly before pulling away to smile at her.

“What’s your schedule for today?” he asked her.

“I have another lesson with Madam Fang Hua regarding proper care of the heir,” she responded before she added with an eye roll, “And then I have to meet with a few noblewomen.”

A small frown appeared on Zuko’s brow.

“I’m not sure I want you to continue seeing them after the things they said to you when they were vying to be my royal concubine,” he said. Disgust dripped from his voice at the last word.

Katara let out a small sigh and shrugged.

“Not all of them are bad,” she amended, “Besides, if I slight them their husbands might take it out on you.”

“I don’t care for them. I care for you and your feelings,” he replied seriously as he reached up to caress her cheek.

“Don’t worry,” she reassured him as she placed her hand over his, “I’m sure they will behave.”

Before he could say more, she distracted him with a kiss.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

A few hours later, Katara was regretting not listening to Zuko as she listened to the noblewomen’s subtle insults. There were four older women and six younger ones. They were currently drinking tea and eating light refreshments in the public garden. Now that they did not have a chance to become Zuko’s royal concubine (not that they had the slightest chance in the first place), they seem to be taking out their disappointment on her. Katara, however, refused to let their mean comments get to her and retorted just as sharply. Their conversation shifted to other issues before they started asking her about her pregnancy. Katara proudly replied to their curious questions as she caressed her stomach. While she was not showing yet, her clothes hid her very small bump.

“Fire Lord Zuko must now keep his distance from you due to your condition,” one of the older women mused.

The waterbender did not miss the way the woman glanced at her young daughter sitting next to her. Katara knew they were thinking that now was their chance to snatch the Fire Lord’s attention. She almost rolled her eyes at their foolishness; instead she smiled brightly at them.

“Quite the contrary,” Katara told them smoothly, “my husband is very attentive to my every need and comfort.”

The married women gasped at her words.
“Truly?” one of them asked incredulously.

Katara nodded and could not suppress a smug smile from curling her lips. She tried to hide it by taking a sip of her tea.

Baffled, the older married women glanced at each other. Their husbands avoided them during their pregnancy and sought their sexual needs to be met by their concubines. But the Fire Lord still refused to take a concubine, ignored propositions from many women to be his lovers and mistresses, and only wanted his waterbender wife. It was unheard of! The young women could not help but be jealous of the Fire Lord’s deep devotion to his wife. What was so special about her?

One of the young women cleared her throat delicately. She had tried everything in her power to make the handsome Fire Lord notice her, but all her efforts were in vain. She could not understand why. She was considered to be one of the most beautiful women in the capital. She had dozens of lovers fighting for a place in her bed, and yet the Fire Lord never spared her a glance. It infuriated her. She faked a sweet smile when the blue-eyed Fire Lady turned to look at her.

“Would Fire Lord Zuko really appreciate a child of mixed blood?” the woman asked maliciously even as her smile held on her gorgeous features, “Could it even be a firebender?”

Katara felt herself stiffen slightly at the young woman’s words. Seeing the waterbender’s reaction, the woman’s smile turned cruel.

“Maybe it will be born abnormal because of its mixed blood,” she said with a mock sad sigh as she picked up her teacup.

She gasped when she suddenly found herself unable to move. Her hands shook when it seemed as if an invisible force was trying to move her arms. She cried out when her arms moved without her consent and she splashed her tea onto her chest. The other women gasped in shock before they turned to see a deceptively polite smile on the Fire Lady’s face, though there was a dangerous glint in her azure eyes that made them stiffen in fear. Suddenly, they all felt their bodies being forcefully held still.

“Be careful about what you say about my child,” Katara told the woman calmly, though there was an edge of steel in her tone.

The women gulped in fear, finally understanding that they had finally tested the limits of the usually peaceful Fire Lady.

“If all of you do not change your attitude, I will be sure to discuss with the Fire Lord proper punishments for such treasonous comments about the heir to the throne,” the waterbender threatened evenly.

The women stared at her in speechless wonder. They let out small whimpers when her grip on them tightened a little more.

“After that punishment is doled out, you will face a protective mother,” the Fire Lady added in a hard tone, her blue eyes flashing dangerously at them as she stared at each of their terrified faces. “Believe me when I say, my wrath is something you should be scared of.” She narrowed her eyes at them as she forced the entire group into stiff, upright positions, their arms pinned to the sides of their bodies.

The women cringed in fear, and if they could have, they would have cowered under the waterbender’s angry glare. One of the younger women started to sob in terror.

“Do I make myself clear?” Katara asked more firmly.

They all quickly nodded, even the sobbing woman and the drenched noblewoman still holding her cup in her captured hands. They had no doubts that the Fire Lady would be unmerciful if anybody dared to insult or harm her child.

“Good,” Katara said with a sweet smile before she finally let go of their blood. “If you’ll excuse me, ladies, I have other duties to attend to.”

“Of course, Fire Lady Katara!” one of the women quickly spoke up and they all deferentially bowed their heads to her when she stood up.

With a regal nod, Katara turned around and walked away from the garden. A few paces away, Kuo and Shen stepped up on either side of her as they made their way back to the building. Katara felt satisfaction swell in her chest that she had finally put the petty women in their place. A moment later, her mood suddenly changed and she frowned as she thought over the beautiful woman’s words. Would Zuko be okay if his heir couldn’t firebend? Or that it turned out to be a waterbender?

She continued to agonize over the thought as the day progressed, even though she tried to stop thinking about it. They had been too preoccupied with just conceiving an heir they had not discussed other issues. She needed time to herself to think things through, so she went to the Royal Palace Garden and sat under the cherry blossom tree near the large pond.

That was where Zuko found her hours later when his wife did not show up for dinner. He let out a relieved breath to see she was all right as he quietly approached her. He felt his heart expand with different good emotions as he admired her form.

Due to his state of joy and pride, Zuko was in a good mood. His beloved wife was pregnant with his child. Nestled in the safety of her womb was a precious little life, evidence of their love for each other. He could still not believe his fortune and he constantly rubbed his hand over the small bump on Katara’s belly to reassure himself he was not dreaming. His entire purpose was centered on his wife and their child. He was obsessed with their safety and happiness. But along with his concern and elation there was another unpredicted outcome due to her condition, it robbed him of his thoughts and control.

He wanted her.

It was both disconcerting and enjoyable.

Zuko shook his head to clear his thoughts as he focused again on his wife. He frowned when he finally noticed the expression on her face.

“Katara,” he called out her name softly.

Katara jumped and she looked up to see her husband looking down at her worriedly. She smiled at him as he arranged his royal robes and sat down beside her.

“What’s wrong?” he asked in concern.

“Nothing,” she muttered, her smile faltering a little.
“Katara,” he stressed with a frown.

The waterbender sighed at his tone, wondering why she kept trying to hide things from him when she knew he would eventually pry it out of her. When he continued to gaze at her expectantly, she reluctantly told him what the women had said. Once she finished she glanced up at her husband to see an angry expression on his face.

“I don’t want you to see those women again,” he growled out heatedly.

“It doesn’t need to come to that. They won’t bother me again,” Katara assured him firmly. “I made sure of it.”

“Good,” he replied with a firm nod.

He saw her fidget nervously again and he reached out a hand to gently grasp her hand.

“What is it?” he asked.

Katara hesitated for moment before she straightened herself as she looked Zuko in the eye.

“Can you really accept our child even if he or she turns out to be a waterbender and not a firebender?” she asked quietly.

A deep frown marred Zuko’s brow at her words. Katara felt herself flush at the disapproval and hurt in his eyes.

“How can you ask me that?” he asked as he narrowed his eyes at her.

Katara glanced away in shame.

“I’m sorry,” she whispered.
Zuko reached for her and pulled her swiftly onto his lap. He held her tightly with one arm while with the other he grasped her chin and gently raised her head so they could look at each other.

“I love you, Katara,” he reminded her firmly yet gently. “What makes you think I would not love the child you bear me?”

Feeling her eyes water a little at his tender words, Katara relaxed against him. With a happy sigh, she wrapped her arms around him and pressed a kiss of both apology and joy on his strong jaw. Zuko again raised her head and he bent down to kiss her softly. Their mouths and lips caressed each other tenderly for a moment, silently communicating their thoughts without words. When they pulled away, they stared quietly into each other’s eyes.

“But what will happen if our child turns out to be a waterbender?” she asked hesitantly, knowing they had to discuss this issue sooner rather than later. “What would the advisors say?”

Zuko let out a sigh as he turned his gaze to the serene pond. He had thought about the issue a lot the last couple of weeks, but as much as he tried, he could not come up with a solution. The royal council had already obliged him in a lot of things, such as allowing him to marry a Water Tribe woman and make her his Fire Lady. But he was sure that they would draw the line when it came to a waterbending Fire Lord. It would just go against everything that made up the Fire Nation. A firebending Fire Lord was the symbol of Fire Nation pride, power, and tradition.

“I was meaning to talk to you about that,” he said quietly before he continued in a careful tone as he turned back to look at her, “Before his death, Chao had told me that some of the advisors are already against the idea of a waterbender as heir to the throne.”

A frown marred Katara’s brow as her hands went to protectively cradle her stomach.

“So what does that mean?” she asked.

“If our first child turns out to be a waterbender, the most likely solution would be that the throne would go to our second or third child, whichever one turns out to be a firebender,” he replied slowly as he gauged her expression.

Katara bit her lip. Although she didn’t like it, she understood why it would have to be that way. It only made sense for a firebender to rule over the Fire Nation.
“But what will happen to our first child if he or she turns out to be a waterbender?” she asked quietly as she ran her hand gently over her belly.

The Fire Lord placed his hand over hers, curling both lovingly over the tiny swell of her stomach.

“He or she would still be prince or princess of the Fire Nation,” he told her reassuringly. “Even if they don’t become heir, they will still have all the privileges of being the Fire Lord’s child. They will lack in nothing, especially not love.”

Despite the sadness in her chest, Katara smiled at his last words. Their firstborn would always be loved by his or her parents no matter what. Even if they weren’t the heir, they would still be important.

Zuko relaxed slightly when he saw her small smile. He kissed her mouth gently before he tucked her to his chest and placed his chin on the crown of her head while Katara snuggled into him. They remained silent, enjoying their companionship as they stared at the frolicking turtle-ducklings and koi fish in the pond. Caressing Zuko’s hand that was now resting on her stomach, Katara smiled as she visualized him doing the same when her belly was more round.

“Do you prefer a girl or a boy?” the waterbender asked curiously, her tone soft and wistful.

“Ever since that awful nightmare, I’ve been referring to our baby as our son,” Zuko admitted with a small chuckle.

“Really?” she asked.

She felt Zuko nod against her head and she pulled back slightly to look at his face. The anticipation and warmth in his expression caused her heart to flutter in her chest.

“For some reason, I am positive the baby you carry is a boy, but perhaps that is because I want a son that I can care for and guide as I was not,” Zuko continued, his tone soft and wondering as he tried to explain his feelings.

Katara hummed at his words as she caressed his large hands wrapped around the small bump on her stomach.
“Would you be happy if it turns out to be girl?” she asked carefully.

“Of course,” Zuko immediately responded with a smile. “I want a daughter as beautiful, kind, and fiery like her mother.”

Katara smiled happily up at him and again kissed his chin. He smiled down at her as he caressed her cheek.

“I hope this baby is a boy who will grow up as handsome, honorable, and strong like his father,” she said warmly.

A large smile appeared on Zuko’s face and he tightened his hold of her, one of his hands caressing her small bump as he was wont to do since its appearance. His wife’s waist was still narrow, but he could not wait to see it expand as their child grew in her womb.

“Hopefully he doesn’t inherit your personality,” Katara added with a teasing grin.

“Hey, you married me, didn’t you?” he growled playfully as he attacked her neck with loud, wet kisses.

Katara squealed at the ticklish feeling and laughed as she squirmed against him.

Stopping, Zuko leaned down to kiss her lips once again. As he pulled away to gaze into her face, he was almost blown away with the radiant smile she bestowed on him before she burrowed herself into his chest. Wrapping his arms protectively around her, Zuko reveled in the moment and the sensation of having the woman he loved, who was carrying his first child, in his arms. He never knew he could be this happy, this content, with his life. And he had to thank Katara for giving him that.

He did not know what he would do if he ever lost her or their child.

Katara felt as if she were floating on a cloud. She was nearing the end of her third month, and so far, everything was perfect. After being made to believe she was barren for so long, she was finally going to give Zuko an heir and she was soon going to be a mother. Ever since he had learned of her pregnancy, Zuko was even more gentle and attentive toward her. She could not help but find it adorable how he fretted over her health and comfort and their baby’s wellbeing.

She was on her way to the city to visit the remodeled orphanage. She was looking forward to spending some time with the children. They were always so happy to see her when she visited them that they practically crawled over each other so they could sit next to her. However, Takeo, the green-eyed little boy from before, always remained attached to her side. She could not understand how some people could be so heartless as to abandon their innocent children. She could not imagine ever abandoning her own child. At the thought, the waterbender pressed a hand to her belly and immediately felt her heart warm up.

“Are you ready, my lady?” Jiao’s voice brought her out of her thoughts.

Katara looked up to see her maidservant smiling at her action. She returned the smile and nodded.

“Where’s Ichiro?” she asked.

“I left him in the care of one of the older servants,” Jiao replied as she shifted the small boxes in her arms. “He sees her as his grandmother and loves spending time with her.”

“Aww, that’s nice,” the waterbender said. She watched as Jiao tried to balance the boxes and she quickly reached out to take a few.

“Here, let me help.”

“No, my lady, I can do it,” Jiao exclaimed quickly as she tried to take the items back.

“Don’t worry, they’re not heavy,” Katara responded assuredly as she evaded the woman’s hand.

Jiao stopped herself from shaking her head and smiled instead. She still needed to get used to the fact that her lady was not a pampered noblewoman who did not lift a finger to help others. Luckily, Kuo and Shen had already placed the rest of the boxes in the carriage, so she and her lady did not have to carry too much. The packages contained pastries of various kinds that the Fire Lady wished to gift the children of the orphanage. She had even gone so far as to help the cook as he made the treats, which only endeared her more to the servants for her efforts and her kindness.
With a smile, they made their way down the long flight of stairs to the awaiting carriage in the courtyard. They could already see Shen and Kuo waiting for them on their komodo rhinos. The huge metal doors opened and they watched as several men rode in.

Katara paused in surprise when she saw Zuko arrive on his huge, black mount with a few of his guards. He was supposed to return late in the night from his inspection of a nearby village. She smiled in delight as she hurried down to greet him.

Zuko dismounted from his komodo rhino and a stableman stepped forward to take the reins and lead the animal away. He greeted Shen and Kuo with a nod and they returned the gesture with a bow of their heads. Zuko turned toward the stairs and smiled when he saw his waterbender descending them quickly with Jiao following a few paces behind her. It seemed he arrived just in time before his wife left for her duties. His heart skipped a beat when he noticed she was smiling brightly at him. He walked forward and began to climb the marble steps so he could meet up with her halfway and help her with whatever she was carrying. He wanted to exchange a few words with her before she left to see to her duties.

Katara’s smile widened when she saw the smoldering look Zuko was aiming at her as she came closer. She was just a few feet away when the step she had just stepped on suddenly crumbled under her. She cried out when she felt her ankle twist painfully as she lost her footing and tumbled forward, the boxes flying out of her hands.

“Katara!” Zuko shouted in horror as he saw her fall.

“My lady!” Jiao screamed behind her as she dropped the items in her fear.

Zuko rushed forward and caught Katara as she bounded on three steps with a pained cry. The boxes fell and bounced around them. The pastries rolled down the steps or splattered, staining the white marble. Terribly shaken, Zuko held her tightly to him as Jiao, Kuo, Shen and a few other servants rushed toward them in alarm.

“Katara, are you okay?” the young lord asked worriedly as he frantically ran his hand down her back.

He tensed when he heard her let out a pained moan as her fingers tightly clutched his clothes.

Trembling, Katara sucked in a sharp breath. Her side and back hurt from where she had struck the hard marble stairs. Suddenly, a piercing pain in her lower stomach made her cry out. Pressing against Zuko’s chest, she curled into herself as she clutched onto her stomach when the pain increased. Her eyes widened and her heart clenched painfully in her chest with fear and anguish.

No! she mentally screamed.

“What’s wrong, Katara?” Zuko asked her worriedly, his tone strained and frantic.

“It h-hurts!” Katara cried in pain and terror as she pressed her hands to her stomach. “My b-baby! Please, save my baby!”
“Please, save my baby!”

Zuko sucked in his breath at the anguished cry of his pregnant wife sobbing in his arms.

No!

They could not lose their child!

“Bring Lady Yoon Hee to my room, now!” he barked to the people who were worriedly surrounding them.

They jumped at the Fire Lord’s thunderous voice and a few servants immediately went in search of the midwife. Gazing back at his wife, Zuko cupped her cheek and turned her so he could see her face. The pain and fear in her wide blue eyes made his heart constrict in his chest.

“Hold on, love,” he told her softly, though the quiver in his voice betrayed his own anxiety. “Lady Yoon Hee will know what to do.”

Katara did not respond as she continued moaning and clutching at her stomach. The pain was unbearable, but it was the fear of losing her baby that robbed her breath and caused dread to fill her heart.

Zuko carefully picked up his crying wife into his arms and glanced down briefly at the spot where she had slipped. He frowned at the crumbled step before he quickly carried her back up the stairs. Jiao, Kuo, and Shen worriedly followed close behind him. The sound of Katara moaning distracted him from his suspicions and he climbed rapidly up the steps, trying not to jostle her too much. He felt his heart constrict at her every moan of pain and sob of fear.

When they finally arrived at their royal rooms, Zuko rushed through the antechamber with Jiao following behind, while his guards waited anxiously outside. Once inside the bedchamber, Jiao rushed to pull down the bedcovers. With a grateful nod, Zuko carefully placed Katara on their bed and sat down next to her hip. He watched frantically and helplessly as she curled to her side.
Tears ran down Katara’s cheeks as she moaned at another sharp cramp. She could not lose her baby! She already loved him so much. Her heart was breaking at the possibility that she might lose him or her. Should she use her waterbending? Would it work? What if she caused more harm than good? No, she could not risk it. Lady Yoon Hee had to know what to do! Oh La, what if she already lost her child?!

“Please, Zuko, save our baby!” she cried as she looked up desperately, wildly, into his anxious eyes. She knew there was nothing he could do, but it was as if her tormented mind sought assurance either way. “Save him! Please!”

Zuko grasped her hand as his heart wrenched in his chest at her distraught plea. He did not know what to do! But he did know that her distress might cause more harm to their babe.

“Try to calm down, love,” he told her softly as he reached out his other hand to caress her hair. “Don’t worry. Lady Yoon Hee is on her way. She will make sure to save our child.”

She better, Zuko thought grimly as he squeezed his wife’s hand.

He could not lose his son, not after all his dreams of taking care of him, not after they thought they would never have a child. But most importantly, Katara would be devastated. Then another fear surfaced in his mind that it robbed him of his breath. What if he lost Katara too? He had heard many women died of complications during pregnancy and childbirth.

No! he roared in denial. I can’t lose her! I can’t lose either of them!

His grasp on her hand tightened so much the distraught waterbender looked up to stare at him.

“Don’t lose hope, Katara,” he told her beseechingly before he whispered, “Please.”

Through her pain and worry, Katara could see Zuko’s anguish and she squeezed his hand in comfort and understanding. The gesture made Zuko clenched his eyes shut and he bowed over her hand.

Where was the midwife? Just when he thought he was going to go insane with worry, there was a quick knock at the door.
“Enter!” Zuko barked.

He frowned when he saw that it wasn’t Lady Yoon Hee who entered but Physician Toshiro.

“Where is Lady Yoon Hee?” Zuko demanded to know.

Toshiro bowed his head apologetically, his thick eyebrows scrunched together.

“I’m sorry, my lord, but my wife is not in the palace at the moment—”

“What?!” the Fire Lord roared when Katara whimpered in pain. “Where is she?!”

“She went to visit our daughter and grandchild,” the physician stammered at the Fire Lord’s anger. “If I had known she would be needed today, I wouldn’t have let her go.”

When the Fire Lord’s face contorted into an expression of both rage and anxiety, and the Fire Lady whimpered in pain even more loudly, the physician hurried to assure them.

“If you would allow it, I can examine Fire Lady Katara—”

He was interrupted when there was another knock at the door. Zuko growled out a loud ‘enter’ as he held tightly onto Katara’s clenching hand. They watched as Lady Yoon Hee hurried into the room with her supplies. A servant followed behind her, carrying a tray with a teapot already filled with hot water. Jiao, who had been hovering close to the Fire Lord and her lady, hurried to take the tray, which she set on the small table before the fireplace. She looked expectantly at the midwife, hoping there was something she could help do for her lady. The other servant glanced worriedly at the royal couple before she bowed and exited.

“Yoon Hee!” Toshiro exclaimed in surprise before he added in a more relieved tone, “I didn’t expect you to come back until tomorrow.”

“I decided to return early,” the old woman responded absentmindedly as she hurried to the table and placed her things near the teapot. The woman poured the hot water into a cup and then opened her medical box. She pulled out a pouch and sprinkled a small amount of powder into the water before she quickly walked to the anxious Fire Lord and his wife.

“Lady Yoon Hee, you have to save my wife and child,” Zuko ordered her fiercely as the older woman approached the bed.

She nodded her head firmly as she stepped to Katara’s side. Reluctantly letting go of each other’s hands, Zuko stood up to give the old woman room.

“My lady,” she said coaxingly as she brushed her hand across the waterbender’s forehead, “Please, drink this. It will help with the pain.”

With a nod, Katara took the teacup and carefully sipped the concoction until the older woman told her it was enough. The waterbender fell back on the mattress and groaned. She could feel small beads of sweat accumulating on her forehead with her stress and pain.

“Can you tell me what you are feeling?” Lady Yoon Hee asked gently.

“My lower stomach,” Katara breathed in both pain and terror. “It…it hurts.”

Lady Yoon Hee frowned, but did not say anything else as she began to gently probe Katara’s abdomen. Her actions caused Katara to wince and moan in pain and a few tears trickled down her cheeks.

Standing silently to the side, Zuko clenched his hands in helplessness as he heard and saw his wife’s pain.

“Do you feel any rush of wetness between your legs?” Lady Yoon Hee asked methodically.

Katara shook her head. “No.”

“Was there any excessive bleeding after the fall?” she asked again.

Katara glanced at Zuko and he answered in the negative. The woman nodded and relaxed a little.
“I need to check you to see if there is any damage,” the gray-haired woman added before she told Jiao, “You will assist me.”

“Of course!” Jiao replied immediately as she stepped forward.

“I will wait outside,” Toshiro spoke up. He bowed to the royal couple before he hurried to the door, leaving his wife to work.

Lady Yoon Hee turned to the agitated Fire Lord and said in a calm tone, “If you could just step out for a moment, my lord, I—”

“No,” Zuko growled out defiantly as he stepped forward to grab Katara’s hand. “I am staying with my wife. I will not leave her to deal with this alone.”

Through her pain, Katara felt her heart swell with love for her husband. Would he still say the same thing if she lost their baby? The thought made more tears trickle down her wet cheeks. No, she couldn’t lose her baby. Her child had to live! Suddenly, she started feeling faint and tired, and her eyes began to shut. She panicked as her vision began to become hazy. What was happening?

Lady Yoon Hee relented to the Fire Lord’s demand since she did not have the time to argue with her stubborn lord. Besides, she knew he was deeply worried. It was endearing to see how much the fierce Fire Lord loved his family. She knew he would not be the same if he were to lose either his wife or child, and the Fire Nation would have to pay for that. She had to save the Fire Lady and their heir.

Zuko watched as Katara’s eyes fell shut and her hand suddenly went limp in his grasp. He felt his heart stop cold in his chest. What was wrong?! He was reminded of her doing the same when she had died briefly in his arms in that shallow river. His breath accelerated with panic and fear.

“Katara!” he cried out in alarm as he fell to his knees beside the bed and desperately clutch her hand even more tightly.

No! He could not lose her! He would not be able to bear it! Then he whipped his head to the side to glare at the midwife.
“What is wrong with her?!” he asked both furiously and fearfully.

“Calm yourself, my lord,” the old woman responded soothingly. “The tea I gave her was to make her sleep so she would not harm herself or your child further with her high emotions.”

Closing his eyes, Zuko slumped in relief and pressed his fist to his mouth to suppress a sudden sob.

Thank Agni.

“I need to examine her,” Lady Yoon Hee spoke up gently.

Zuko nodded as he glanced back at Katara. Slowly, he stood up and moved back so the midwife and Jiao could work. He stood rigidly as he watched the old woman examine Katara. He kept his gaze on the midwife’s face to see if he could gauge anything from her expression, but he could not decipher anything. He felt his anxiety grow to the point he felt he might go insane with worry and fear as the time passed. He did not know how long it had been since Lady Yoon Hee began her examination, but the Fire Lord felt like it had been hours.

When the midwife finally moved away to clean her hands once again, Zuko let out a shaky breath and ran his hand over his head. Restless, he grabbed one of the chairs before the fireplace and placed it beside the bed. Then he sat down and grabbed Katara’s small hand in his as he waited for the midwife to tell him how his wife and child were. When she returned, Zuko glanced into her face anxiously.

“Is my son all right?” he rasped.

_Please say he’s all right_, he mentally pleaded.

The old woman smiled reassuringly and Zuko felt some of his tension lessen.

“The baby is fine, my lord. Thankfully, he has not become unattached from his mother’s womb, so with a bit of rest and time, he will become strong again.”

Zuko nodded, though he did not really understand much. The only thing that mattered was that his son was fine. With a sigh of relief, he looked back at his sleeping wife and caressed her hand with his thumb. A moment later, he helped Jiao remove Katara’s formal robes and fire crown. He winced at the bruises already forming on her skin from her fall. Lady Yoon Hee had Jiao place an ointment on the bruises and Zuko again helped her place Katara into a comfortable nightdress before tucking her back into the covers.

“I will let you both rest, but I would like to be called when Fire Lady Katara wakes up so I can give her further instructions,” Lady Yoon Hee said.

Zuko nodded agreeably.

“Thank you, Lady Yoon Hee,” he told her sincerely.

She smiled, her wrinkles appearing more pronounced around her dark eyes.

“I’m just glad I decided to return early,” she said softly.

Zuko did not want to think about what would have happened if she had not. He turned to the silent Jiao who was staring worriedly at her lady. “And thank you, Jiao.”

Jiao bowed her head.

“My lady is a strong woman,” she said with an encouraging smile. “She will pull through this.”

Zuko glanced back to regard his sleeping wife and nodded.

“I know,” he breathed before he looked back at the maidservant. “Please have someone send a message to the orphanage that my wife won’t be able to visit today.”

“I will, my lord,” the servant responded.

“Your family is waiting outside. Would you like them to enter?” the midwife asked softly.

Zuko shook his head.
“No. Please tell them that my wife and the baby are fine and are resting. I will see them tomorrow.”

The midwife nodded. She understood he wanted to be alone with his wife for the moment.

“Do not worry, my lord,” she told him with a gentle smile. “Your family will be fine. Very soon you will be holding your firstborn in your arms.”

The thought caused warmth to spread through the firebender’s chest and he graced the old woman with a small smile.

“Thank you.”

The woman smiled again, and with a bow, she grabbed her things and left the room, followed by Jiao who closed the door gently after her. Before Zuko could do anything else, there was another knock at the door. Frowning at the interruption, he called out curtly for the person to enter. He watched as Jee stepped into the room and closed the door softly behind him. He glanced in concern at the motionless Fire Lady before he returned his attention to the frowning Fire Lord.

“I’m sorry for intruding, but there is something I must discuss with you,” the admiral began in a grim tone.

Zuko had a feeling he knew what Jee wanted to discuss and his frown deepened. He took one look at Katara’s sleeping face before he walked toward the older man so their voices wouldn’t disturb her rest.

“It’s about what happened earlier,” Zuko spoke up, his tone hard, “The step crumbling underneath Katara wasn’t an accident.”

Jee reached up a hand to rub his knuckles against his sideburn before he sighed.

“Yes,” he replied somberly, “There is no possible way the marble step could have crumbled so easily and at the precise moment she stepped on it. Someone must have tampered with it. But who, we don’t know.”
“An earthbender,” Zuko hissed out, his eye narrowing. “Who else could have done it at so far a distance?”

“I thought of the possibility,” the older firebender responded as his eyebrows furrowed, “But why would an earthbender want to endanger the Fire Lady’s life?”

Zuko’s frowned deepened. One possibility could be that the Earth Kingdom was seeking to start a new war with the Fire Nation by harming the Fire Lord’s wife and heir, but he was sure that wasn’t it. The trade and relationship between both countries were better than ever. It had to be the rebels’ doing. Who else could want to bring harm to his family? However, as much as he hated the thought, Jianguo would not want to kill Katara because he was determined to have her for himself. Zuko gritted his teeth at the thought before he frowned pensively. Did Jianguo perhaps decide Katara no longer interested him and decided to get rid of her just to hurt Zuko? Or was he merely trying to harm the baby to drive a wedge between them?

There were so many questions and not enough answers.

“Did you find anything leading to the possible culprit?” he asked gruffly, though he already knew the answer to that.

Jee shook his head slowly and frowned.

“The only people in the courtyard at the time where a few guards, servants, and stablemen,” the older man began. “I had them questioned, but they all said they knew nothing and none of them are earthbenders.”

“He must have hid himself among them,” Zuko thought as he rubbed at his forehead before he growled out, “And in the confusion he must have made his escape.”

Jee did not say anything as the Fire Lord silently raged, knowing there was nothing he could say that could fix things.

“Double the protection of the palace. No one is to enter or leave without being inspected first. Any suspicious people or activities should be immediately brought to my attention.”
“Of course,” Jee replied with a bow of his head.

“They will not get away with trying to harm my wife and child,” the Fire Lord growled low in his throat.

After a few more directions from the Fire Lord, the admiral bowed before he quietly retreated. Once the door was closed, Zuko clenched his hands tightly against his sides, smoke curling between his fingers as his anger flared.

How dare they target Katara while in her condition? The bastards were heartless monsters and they needed to be put down. But they would not stop until he released Ozai from his prison and gave up the throne to his sire. He could not let that happen. Perhaps he should have Ozai executed? Wouldn’t their plan fail if the man they wanted to put on the throne were dead? But he had a feeling it would only make things worse. They had made it clear they did not want him as their Fire Lord.

He sighed and rubbed his face as the emotional strain of the past few hours settled heavily on his shoulders.

He turned back to the bed and sat down on the chair, his eyes immediately landing on his waterbender’s features, caressing every inch of her face with both anxiousness and tender care. He glanced down to the small bump on his wife’s stomach, imagining the little baby within her, clinging to life despite what happened, before he glanced away. He reached inside the covers and gently pulled Katara’s arm out so he could grasp her hand. He brought it to his lips and closed his eyes when they pricked with unshed tears.

He could have lost them both.

The thought tormented him for a few long moments. He could save Katara from flying arrows and lightning, but he would not have been able to save her from a miscarriage. He was useless. He quickly shook the dark thought away.

But he had not lost them! Relief and happiness appeared on his face a moment later. They were both safe, albeit fragile at the moment, but alive. He thanked Agni as he took vigil over his sleeping, pregnant wife, waiting for the moment when he saw her blue eyes again, waiting for the moment when he would hold his child in his arms.

“You idiot!” a masculine voice growled into the dimly lit room. “You shouldn’t have waited so long to execute our plan! Now everything is ruined!"

“How was I supposed ta know da Fire Lord was gonna show up early?!” another voice replied gruffly as he shrugged off his cloak.

The earthbender, a short man with indistinguishable features, sniffed when the scent of animal manure floated to his nose. Pretending to be a stableman was harder than he had realized. Luckily, no one had questioned him as he worked, and in the confusion of rushing toward the Fire Lady’s help, nobody had noticed as he slipped away.

“Damn it, we were so close!” the first voice growled. “If the Fire Lord hadn’t showed up early, the waterbender would’ve lost the brat for sure.”

“It was a stupid idea in da first place,” the earthbender retorted with a snort before he added, “‘Sides, ya know Jianguo wouldn’t have been happy if da waterbenda had died.”

“I don’t give a damn about what Jianguo wants,” the other voice hissed. “He has done nothing but fail. He almost got himself caught in Omashu because he couldn’t wait to make use of the waterbender. If he had let the head on his shoulders and not the other one guide him, the plan to kidnap the Fire Lady to ensure Zuko released Ozai in exchange for her would have worked!”

The earthbender watched disinterestedly as the other man continued to rant. He really didn’t give a rat’s ass about their plans or their dream of putting Ozai on the throne. All he cared about was the money. Once the man paid him, he was hightailing it out of the Fire Nation and back home in the Earth Kingdom before somebody recognized him. If they fought amongst themselves, it really wasn’t any of his business. They could kill each other, for all he cared.

“Anyways,” the earthbender cut in, “I did what ya wanted, so I’d like me money now.”

The other man stared at him in disbelief before he started cackling. The earthbender frowned.

“Do you really think I’m going to pay you after failing in making the waterbender miscarry?” the man sneered.

“Hey, it ain’t my fault da little brat decided ta keep living,” the earthbender retorted, “I did what I was told, so give me my money!”
He narrowed his eyes when he saw a smirk appeared on the man’s face.

“Oh? Even if you have succeeded, do you really think we can let you live?”

“What’s dat supposed ta mean?” the earthbender growled as he raised a menacing fist.

“You aren’t loyal to our cause, so you can easily reveal our plans if you get paid well enough,” the other man replied casually as he flicked imaginary dust from his pristine clothes.

Before the earthbender could move he felt someone grab him from behind. His eyes widened when he felt something sharp slit his throat. He gasped and his hand flew to his neck as blood gushed out before he fell onto the floor. Gurgling, he watched as a tall figure in dark clothes stood over him with a bloody dagger in his hand before everything went dark.

“What a fool,” the first voice spoke up with an unaffected tone as he watched the earthbender bleed to death.

Now it was going to be more difficult to get rid of Zuko’s heir because everybody was going to be in high alert to keep the Fire Lady protected. No matter, they could always use the brat against Zuko once it was born. Yes, perhaps that would best. He smirked as a plan began to form in his mind.

Then glancing toward the dark-clad individual, he waved a dismissive hand in the air. “Get rid of the body.”

“Yes, Master.”

With a soft groan, Katara slowly opened her eyes and was met with the dawn’s light streaming gently into the room. Disoriented, she made to raise her hand to press it against her head before she realized someone was holding it. She glanced to her side and saw that Zuko was sitting on a chair, his upper body resting on the bed, her hand securely grasped within his. He was still wearing his royal robes and his fire crown. He looked very uncomfortable in that position. Why was he sleeping like that instead of next to her on the bed?

She lifted her free hand to press against her temple. Her mind felt hazy and she could not understand why. Bringing her hand back down, she reached over and caressed Zuko’s dark hair.

“Zuko?” she called softly and squeezed his hand.

At the sound of his wife calling his name, Zuko’s eyes snapped open and he immediately straightened himself. He looked at her frantically and with concern.

“Are you okay? How do you feel?” he asked worriedly as his eyes darted to every inch of her face to observe her expressions.

A small frown appeared on the waterbender’s brow. Did something happen? She searched her mind for the answer, and when she finally recalled what happened, a loud gasp escaped her. Her hands flew to her stomach and she clutched it desperately, her hands pressing against the small bump with shaky fingers.

“My baby! Is he okay?” she asked frantically as her eyes locked anxiously onto her husband’s golden eyes. “Did I...lose him? Oh gods, Zuko, tell me I didn’t lose him!”

“Shh, love, calm down,” Zuko softly hushed her as his hands reached up to gently cradle her cheeks. “Our baby is fine. Just a little weak at the moment, but he’s still alive.”

“Truly?” Katara whispered as she stared at him with anxious and hopeful eyes.

“Lady Yoon Hee assured me it was so,” the firebender replied reassuringly, “But she said you should still be careful and that you must rest until the baby is strong again.”

At his words, Katara slumped back onto the pillows beneath her. Unable to contain her relief, tears pooled in her eyes and trickled down her cheeks.

“Oh, Zuko,” she breathed shakily.

Zuko gently wiped her tears with his thumbs before he wrapped his arms around her and bent his head down to kiss her trembling mouth. He pulled away and buried his face against her throat, silently thanking the gods that she was truly all right.
“I was so afraid I would lose you both,” he murmured against her skin, his voice both soft and husky with his emotions, before he roughly ordered, “Don’t scare me like that ever again.”

He knew what he was saying didn’t make any sense since it wasn’t as if it what happened was her fault, but damn, he loved her too much to be able to live without her.

Katara smiled softly against his hair, understanding what he truly meant and what he was going through. She wrapped her arms around his strong shoulders and nodded.

“I promise I won't scare you like that again,” she said, knowing it would ease his worries just to hear her say so.

Without any more words, they held each other close, mutually giving comfort and reassurance to one another. A moment later, Zuko slowly pulled back and caressed her smooth cheek as he stared into her azure eyes.

“I have to let Lady Yoon Hee know you’re awake,” he said.

Katara nodded and allowed him to move away from her embrace. She watched as Zuko walked toward the doors and stepped outside before she again ran her hands over her stomach in relief and joy.

Zuko stepped out of the antechamber and was relieved to see that Shen and Kuo were standing one either side of the doors. They turned to regard him with worried expressions, which transformed into relieved ones when their lord assured them their lady was all right.

“Please find Lady Yoon Hee and bring her here,” he said.

Kuo bowed his head and hurried down the corridor to follow the Fire Lord’s orders. With a nod aimed at his other guard, Zuko closed the door and walked back toward the bedroom. Once he stepped inside, he returned to Katara’s side and sat on the chair, taking her hand once again in his larger one. He returned her smile and squeezed her hand.

The waterbender noticed Zuko’s tired, red eyes, the dark circles under them, and the light stubble “Did you sleep on the chair all night?” she asked with a frown.

Raising a hand to smooth his hair back, Zuko gave a slight shrug.

“I don’t even remember falling asleep,” he replied. When he saw Katara’s frown deepened, he squeezed her hand as he added, “But I don’t care about my discomfort. You and the baby are the only things that matter.”

Before Katara could reply, she was interrupted by a soft knock on the door. When Zuko ordered for them to enter, they watched as the midwife opened the door and stepped inside. Seeing their expectant expressions, the old woman smiled gently at them as she walked toward the bed.

“How are you feeling, my lady?” she asked softly.

Katara took a moment to study her body.

“A little tired and sore,” she admitted.

“Do you still feel pain?”

“Only a little.”

Lady Yoon Hee nodded and smiled reassuringly when both the Fire Lady and her husband looked worriedly up at her.

“That is normal. If the pain had gotten worse, then that would be a cause to worry,” she explained before she added, “Now I need to examine you just to make sure everything is all right.”

Katara nodded at her and Zuko stood up so he could give the midwife room. Lady Yoon Hee spent the next few minutes examining her and smiled reassuringly at the worried couple once she finished. She moved to once again place ointment on the waterbender’s bruises, but Katara stopped her and said she would heal them with her waterbending. Zuko voiced his concern that she might overexert herself, but Katara assured him it wasn’t hard and the bruises would heal much faster. Zuko didn’t argue since he didn’t want to see her in pain. As she healed her bruises, Katara wondered if she should use her waterbending to help her baby before she decided not to. She had never done such a technique before and she didn’t want to risk accidentally hurting him.

Once Katara was changed into a new nightdress and Lady Yoon Hee had moved away to wash her hands, Zuko sat back down on the chair near the bed and stared at Katara wonderingly. She smiled at him reassuringly before they turned to look expectantly at the midwife.

“Nothing seems to be out of the ordinary,” she told them as she dried her hands with a small towel. “It is fortunate that the Fire Lord was able to catch you quick before you got really hurt. If you had tumbled down any more steps...the situation could have been worse.”

Zuko swallowed hard at the woman’s words. If he had not decided to return home early, he would not have been there to save Katara. He would have probably come back home to the news that his wife had fallen down the stairs and lost their child. Katara seemed to be thinking the same thing because she looked at him and reached out to take his hand, squeezing it reassuringly. He squeezed her smaller hand back and they smiled at each other in relief.

“The baby is still not out of danger yet,” the midwife added in a more serious tone as she stared firmly at the Fire Lady, “You will need to repose for a few days, perhaps a few weeks, in order for the baby to become stronger. You cannot do any strenuous activities and should avoid anything that might cause you any stress.”

“I will make sure she rests,” Zuko spoke up determinedly as he stared intently at his wife.

Katara opened her mouth to retort, but let out a resigned sigh instead. She would have been annoyed at any other time at her husband’s overprotectiveness, but this time she decided not to let it bother her since she knew he was worried for both her and their child. Besides, she would not do anything that would endanger the life of her baby.

“I promise that I will take it easy until you deem it prudent for me to continue my activities,” Katara told the midwife as she pressed her free hand over her belly.

“I will come to examine you every day to see your progress,” Lady Yoon Hee said as she began to prepare another tea. “Hopefully you will be able to leave your rooms soon.”
Once the tea was ready, she handed the teacup to the Fire Lady and told her to drink it. It was a calming tea that would also help with the pain. As soon as Katara finished the tea, the midwife bowed at the royal couple and quietly left the room after telling them to call her if anything came up. Once the older woman left, Katara slumped back onto the pillow beneath her and sighed.

“I’m going to be bored out of my mind,” she grumbled.

A small chuckle escaped the Fire Lord at his wife’s small pout. Now that they were assured their child would live, Zuko felt like the heavy weight that had settled on his chest since the previous day had been lifted off him.

“Don’t worry, I’ll keep you company. And I will ask Mother, Uncle, and Jiao to keep you company when I have to see to my duties.”

“Fine,” Katara replied with another long sigh.

Zuko chuckled again at her unenthusiastic response. He understood her reluctance. His wife wasn’t one to sit idly, she enjoyed going about doing one thing after another, and having to suddenly be stuck in their room would be torture. He would just have to make sure she enjoyed herself when he was by her side. He squeezed her hand and grinned at her when she turned to look at him.

Katara once again noticed the dark circles under her firebender’s eyes and the weariness she could see in his expression. With her free hand, she patted his side of the bed.

“You need to rest too,” she told him softly. “Come and lie down.”

“I don’t want to disturb you,” he said with a small worried frown.

“You won’t hurt me by lying down next to me,” she responded as she again patted the bed invitingly. “You need to catch up on some sleep.”

Zuko easily relented. He did need some sleep and he also did not want to leave Katara’s side. Standing up from the chair, he walked toward the doors. After telling his personal guards to send a message to the councilmen that he was postponing their meetings until the next day, he returned to the bedroom to change into some sleeping pants. Then he moved to his side of the bed and slid inside the blankets beside his waiting wife.
Katara sighed as Zuko slipped one arm beneath her shoulders and carefully brought her close to him. She placed a hand over his warm chest, feeling his heart beat softly underneath it, and smiled when he nuzzled her hair. They remained pressed close to each other, neither of them saying a word, letting the silence soothe their worries and lull them to sleep, feeling like this near tragedy brought them even closer than ever.

Katara frowned as she critically eyed the frame hanging before her. It was a painting that depicted a pair of dragons, flying gracefully close to each other, their long tails intertwined together. Zuko had explained to her that the dragons were a mated pair and they were communicating their happiness by performing a ritual dance. She thought it was adorable, so she decided to exchange it with another painting so she could see it better. She was standing barefooted on one of the chairs so she could take down the painting.

She was bored out of her mind.

She had been confined to her bed for a few weeks and until recently Lady Yoon Hee had only allowed her to move around the room. Ursa, Iroh, and Jiao kept her company whenever Zuko was busy, but she was restless. She hated being inactive. She wanted to go outside and feel the sun on her skin. She had been able to do some of her work that only required paperwork and it was frustrating. She missed going about her duties as Fire Lady and exercising with her waterbending. Fortunately, the midwife had told her that she might finally be able to leave the room and go about her activities in a day or two now that her child was out of danger. Katara felt happiness blossom in her chest as she reached down to rub her swelling belly. In about five months she would finally hold her and Zuko’s child in her arms.

Smiling at the thought, she returned her attention to the painting before her.

That was how Zuko found her and he felt his heart stop in his chest at the sight of her standing on top of a chair, trying to pull a painting down from its place on the wall. He was about to shout her name, but at the last minute he stopped himself so he wouldn’t startle her and have her lose her balance. Grumbling mentally at her stubbornness, he quietly marched up to her and grabbed her firmly around the waist.

Katara squealed in surprise before she was turned around to see a displeased frown on her husband’s face. She hadn’t heard him come in. She placed a hand over her rapidly beating heart and scowled at him.

“Zuko! Don’t startle me like that!” she yelled.
Zuko ignored her scowls as he narrowed his eyes at her.

“Do you like to give me heart attacks with your propensity to put yourself in danger?” he growled out softly.

Katara huffed and crossed her arms over her chest.

“I was perfectly fine,” she retorted before she added grumpily, “I needed something to do before I went crazy with boredom!”

“You could have asked me or a servant to help you,” he replied gruffly as he swiftly scooped her up into his arms and carried her back to their bed.

“I’m pregnant, Zuko, not an invalid,” she grumbled, but made no move to struggle from his grasp.

“I know that,” he consented. “But you are only now healing from a slip from a single step. Can you imagine my fear in seeing you balancing on a chair trying to lift something heavy?”

Katara sighed as she realized that he was only worried.

“I know that you are independent and like to do things for yourself, but there is no need to move this yourself when the palace is full of servants!” he continued, getting agitated again.

“I don’t want to turn into one of those pampered noblewomen!”

“No one is asking you to, Katara,” Zuko said exasperatedly before he more softly added, “Think of the baby. All it would take is being a little off balance and you could have fallen over. Isn’t his safety worth being a little more careful over the next few months?”

“Of course, it is…”
“Then please don’t be so stubborn about this!” Zuko said heatedly. He took a deep breath, trying to calm himself. “I...I can’t go through that again. I can’t lose you two,” he added in an anguished whisper.

Katara’s vexation left her immediately at his words. He wasn’t trying to be overbearing like when he tried to stop her from waterbending; he only wanted her to take extra care with herself and the baby. She also realized that he was right; it would only have taken a single moment of clumsiness for her to have fallen from the chair with devastating results.

Maybe she had been stubborn in trying to prove that she could still do everything she used to. Was her sense of independence worth her baby’s health, his life? She would do anything to protect her child. Even swallow her pride. Besides, it was only to be for five months.

“Alright, I won’t climb any more chairs and will ask the servants to help me move the painting. I promise to be more careful.”

“No more lifting heavy objects?”

“No more lifting anything heavier than a scroll,” she said with an eye roll.

“And you’ll cut back on your duties as Fire Lady?”

Katara narrowed her eyes and drilled a finger into his chest. “Don’t push your luck, Fire Lord.”

Zuko chuckled at her. He knew she wouldn’t consent to the last one, but he had to try.

As he settled her on the mattress, the waterbender once again crossed her arms and glowered at him. He returned her intense stare before he let out a soft sigh.

“I know my overprotectiveness may seem extreme, but I just can’t help it,” he tried to explain himself in slow, careful words. “I’ve realize that for everything else in life, I have a say. I can change things to my satisfaction, but when it comes to my pregnant wife I feel...useless. If fate were to decide to...take our child away from us,” he paused for a moment to take a shaky breath before he continued in a strained voice, “I won’t be able to do a single thing to prevent it.”
Katara felt her heart constrict in her chest at his distressed words and the anguish in his amber eyes. Even after weeks have passed, Zuko was still traumatized by the near miscarriage and he was even more protective of her. It wasn’t just their child’s life that he worried over, but hers as well. The thought of losing them both must have been doubly stressful and terrifying for him. And the fact that he had admitted his fear, his vulnerability and insecurities, only made it more real how much he loved her and their child and how determined he was to keep them from harm.

“I just don’t want anything to hurt you or our baby,” he said in a quiet tone as he stared adamantly into her eyes. “I...I don’t want to go through that fear ever again.”

Katara’s eyes softened at his words and she opened her arms invitingly to him. Zuko quickly took off his boots and royal robes before he crawled into the bed with her. He lay down carefully against her, resting his head on her chest and curling one arm over her belly as she wrapped her arms soothingly around him.

“You’re not going to lose either of us, Zuko,” she assured him softly yet with a firm tone to her voice. “As long as I take care of myself, the baby and I will be well once he’s ready to be born.”

Her husband was silent for a long moment as he held her tightly against him. Katara could feel that there was something else troubling him and she frowned.

“What’s wrong, love?” she asked.

He did not immediately respond to her question, but when he did, his arm tightened even more around her.

“I haven’t been able to stop thinking about the possibility that I could...lose you during childbirth,” he confessed almost in a whisper, as if he spoke any louder it could become a reality. “I was so eager to put my child in your womb that I didn’t stop to think that you could...die giving birth to—”

Katara quickly placed her fingers over his mouth to stop him. When he pressed his lips together, she moved her hand away and ran it caressingly through his long, dark hair.

“Stop thinking such things,” she told him firmly before she more softly asked, “Or would you prefer that our child never came to be? That he never be born?”
“Of course not!” Zuko exclaimed loudly. His heart ached that she would think so. “I don’t want to lose our baby either.”

“And we won’t,” she assured him. “I’m strong and healthy. I’ve gone through many hardships and I will overcome this as well. Women have been giving birth for centuries and will continue to do so for centuries to come.”

Zuko relaxed against her at her words and he nuzzled his face against her soft breasts.

“You always know how to put me at ease.”

Katara grinned.

“Someone has to drag you from your dark corner,” she teased.

Zuko chuckled, his mood much lighter than it was a moment ago, before he sighed as she continued to stroke his head, her nails gently scratching his scalp.

“I will still continue to worry, though,” he mumbled.

“I know.”

Zuko lifted his head and they stared silently at each other. He reached up a hand to caress her smooth cheek.

“I can’t help you carry our baby, but I can keep you safe,” he said firmly, “I will keep you both safe.”

Katara smiled as she gently touched his hand.

“I know,” she replied before she added in a more casual tone, “I was thinking of asking Gran-Gran to visit and help me with my pregnancy as well with the birth. I’m sure Lady Yoon Hee is a gifted midwife, but I’ll feel even more at ease if I had my grandmother’s help too.”
“Of course. That’s a great idea,” the firebender quickly agreed. With the help of two experienced midwives, Katara would be better taken care of when it came time for her to give birth.

When she smiled at him, Zuko moved forward and kissed her softly on the mouth before he pulled back to see her azure eyes twinkling back at him. He observed her glowing face and soft lips as he thought of how much his waterbender meant to him. His eyes traveled down and paused attentively on her breasts. There were slightly bigger due to her condition and very sensitive. They had indulged in each other once the midwife had told them it was safe for them to do so, as long as they were careful. He could not help himself from caressing and kissing her swelling mounds whenever he had the chance. He could not wait to touch and suckle them when they became fuller and heavier as her pregnancy advanced.

He felt his desire flare to life and he looked back to his wife’s eyes to see that they had darkened a little and her lips were slightly parted as she stared intensely at him. With a soft groan, the Fire Lord kissed her hungrily, pushing his tongue past her lips, relishing in her sweet taste. He slowly untied the strings that held his wife’s light robe closed and slipped a hand inside to gently cup her naked breast. He grinned when she softly moaned his name. He pulled back slightly to catch his breath when he heard her gasp sharply, but not in pleasure. He looked at her in concern as he noticed her wide eyes and he wondered if he had hurt her.

“What’s wrong?” he asked as he backed away a little.

Katara did not respond as she frowned a little in confusion. For the past two weeks she had begun to feel a gentle fluttering in her stomach, almost like butterfly wings. She had felt it again, but this time, the feeling was a little stronger. When she felt something nudge against the side of her stomach, her eyes widened in awe once she understood what was going on. She could feel her baby moving!

Zuko watched in curiosity as joy spread across his wife’s face as she placed her hand on her swelling belly. He raised an eyebrow when she swiftly parted her robe to reveal more of her nude body. Smiling, she grabbed his hand and placed it over the left side of her stomach. He glanced at his hand and then back at her, not understanding what she wanted, but then he felt something nudge against his hand. A surprised gasp escaped him and his eyes quickly darted to where his hand rested against Katara’s stomach.

Katara’s smile widened when she felt her baby move again and she felt elated tears gather in her eyes. Now it seemed even more real that there was a little life inside her, nestled below her heart, evidence of the love between her and Zuko. She watched as Zuko’s surprised expression turned into one of wonder as he gently rubbed his hand against the hard bump on the side. She smiled happily when a large smile curled his lips when their son pressed against his father’s hand.
Zuko could not describe the happiness and awe that swept through him at the thought that his child rested within his beloved wife’s womb. He felt his fear subside a little at the knowledge that their child was truly alive and moving, and he rubbed the spot tenderly.

“Hello, baby,” Katara spoke up warmly as she stared at Zuko’s caressing hand, “Can you feel your papa?”

Zuko felt a bolt of pleasure, pride, and contentment coursed through him at the title. Scooting down, he leaned his face close to Katara’s stomach.

“Hello, little one,” he greeted softly, “Your mama and papa are eagerly awaiting your arrival.”

He chuckled lowly when he felt the baby nudge against his hand.

At his tender words, Katara once again felt tears pool in her eyes. She shouldn’t be surprised to see this new side of her husband. She had no doubt that Zuko would love their child more than his own life. Zuko crawled back up to kiss her softly, caressing her lips tenderly with his, silently communicating his happiness.

“I love you so much, Katara,” he breathed as he stared intensely into her eyes.

Katara smiled.

“I do too. With my whole heart.”
Katara smiled indulgently as she watched Zuko fuss over her as he helped her settle down at the low table in the veranda. She waited patiently as he carefully propped and arranged the pillows and cushions around her, so she would be more comfortable. Now in her sixth month, her belly was more pronounced and she was always exhausted lately. It was also difficult for her to move around, which only caused her emotions to flare from angry, to sad, to frustrated, and back again. And it hadn’t helped when she had found out Zuko had placed even more guards to watch over her. It was only after he explained his suspicions of what happened at the stairs that she saw his reasoning and calmed...slightly. If someone was out to cause her and her baby harm, then she would accept the added protection.

But really, she had not expected her pregnancy to turn her into...well, a hormonal bitch, as Toph had bluntly called her when she and Aang visited last month. Katara was a little embarrassed to admit that she cried over the smallest things, and she lashed out at Zuko for no reason or sometimes woke him up in the middle of the night because she craved something to eat, which was usually something that could only be found in the Southern Water Tribe. At first her extreme mood swings and weird cravings had bewildered him—even frightened him a little—but Zuko became used to them and tried very hard to be patient and understanding with her, even though she knew he sometimes wished he could rant back. It only made her love him even more, during those moments she wasn’t annoyed with him, that is.

Sighing softly, she glanced to the other people sitting around the table. She was having tea with her mother-in-law, Uncle Iroh, Gran-Gran, and Pakku, who had arrived about a month ago to lend her support. The old woman had been extremely worried when she had found out Katara had fallen and almost miscarried. She had even scolded her granddaughter for not calling for her sooner. Katara had really missed her grandmother and was very grateful for her steady and loving presence. Hakoda and Sokka had sent her messages stating that they couldn’t leave their duties in the Southern Water Tribe during the rest of her pregnancy, but they assured her they would visit when her time came closer for her to give birth.

The sound of Zuko’s voice brought the waterbender out of her thoughts.

“Do you need anything else before I leave?”

Katara turned to give him a smile.

“No, I’m fine,” she assured him. “You should leave now before you’re late for the meeting with King Bumi’s dignitaries.”
The firebender gave her a brief smile and a nod.

Sitting on the waterbender’s left side, Kanna observed her granddaughter’s husband with both amusement and awe as he fussed over his pregnant wife. He either seemed oblivious to what he was doing or he did not care that he had an audience. Who would have thought the taciturn, temperamental, almost frightening Fire Lord could be so sweet and attentive? Her granddaughter really could not have chosen a better man. She glanced to the side to see her own husband nodding approvingly at the young Fire Lord and she suppressed another amused smile. Maybe she shouldn’t be surprised to see Pakku’s reaction, seeing that she had also married a reticent man who also turned out to be very sweet. It delighted her how protective Pakku was of his favorite student and step-granddaughter.

Sitting across from Pakku, Iroh watched with equal amounts of amusement and delight at his nephew’s uncharacteristic actions. Katara had really changed him from the harsh, almost uncaring man he used to be before. Iroh had given up his room, which was closest to the royal chambers, so it could be used as a nursery for the baby. The remodeling was coming out well, though Katara wanted to keep her baby in their room until she or he was older. Zuko agreed, even though it went against tradition. Seeing the way they gazed and interacted with each other, the old prince had no doubt that their deep love for each other would transfer to a fierce love for their own child.

Oblivious to the others’ thoughts, Zuko reached out to run his hand gently over Katara’s rounded belly before he rose to his feet with a satisfied nod. He bid his wife and the rest of their family farewell before he left the veranda to go about his business. Once he was out of sight, Katara turned to grin at her mother-in-law.

“Maybe now I can take a look at those requests for charity works,” she piped up enthusiastically.

Ursa laughed softly and shook her head as she reached for a small pastry.

“Katara dear, you should take it easy.”

The waterbender laughed as she wiggled into her pile of pillows and cushions.

“You should tell that to your son,” she replied amusedly with a roll of her eyes, “He worries so much, I’m afraid he’ll collapse any moment now.”

The older ladies chuckled, Pakku cracked a grin, and Iroh laughed loudly.
“That’s what men do when they find out they’re going to be fathers,” the Dragon of the West explained as he poured more ginger tea. “We can’t help but worry and fuss over our pregnant wives. I was the same way, if not worse, when my wife was pregnant with Lu Ten.”

He sighed melancholically as his fingers curled around his teacup and his shoulders slumped a little. Even after all these years, their absence still brought a pang to his heart. “May their souls rest in peace.”

He smiled thankfully when Ursa squeezed his arm in comfort.

Kanna nodded as she took a sip of her tea before she said, “Women worry over their health and men become obsessed with becoming providers and what they can offer to their legacy.”

Ursa could only smile as she listened to the older generation provide their wisdom. She could not add anything to their views since she didn’t have experience with such devotion. Ozai certainly did not bother with her comfort or health during her two pregnancies. He mostly ignored her and sought his pleasure with his concubines. He had barely even spared a glance at his newborn children. She mentally shook her head. She did not want to think about the past or about her former husband. What mattered now was that she had finally found a good man who truly loved her. She knew that if it had been Jee she was married to while she was pregnant, he would have acted differently. She smiled at the thought. But she was glad to see her son was a good husband and expectant father.

Smiling, Katara nibbled on a cookie as she listened to the elder’s words, caressing her swollen stomach with her free hand. She knew she was a lucky woman to have a good man like Zuko as her husband. He was so attentive, gentle, and affectionate. He was also very curious about her pregnancy and the development of her body and that of their child. And the sex was amazing too, especially since it seemed as if her sensitivity had increased with her wants and needs. She was insatiable and Zuko enthusiastically took advantage of that.

He especially loved to touch her swelling breasts, using any and every excuse to fondle them with both his hands and mouth. Yes, the sex was great.

Uncle Iroh asking her a question brought her out of her thoughts and Katara blushed lightly before she cleared her throat and took a sip of her ginger tea. Hm, maybe Zuko’s meeting could end early today…?

She grinned.
The following week found Zuko and Katara lying sated in each other’s arms after a couple of rounds of lovemaking. Fortunately, the waterbender no longer woke up to any morning sickness, so they were able to enjoy such mornings more often—and afternoons, and evenings, and nights. Zuko was supposed to have left their room an hour ago to attend the monthly meeting with his generals, but instead he had been entrapped within his wife’s possessive and lustful clutches for most of the morning, buried beneath silky sheets, limbs tangled together, skin pressed intimately close.

Zuko did not want to admit it, but Katara was wearing him out a little with her increased libido—and that was saying something considering his own sex drive. She wanted him all the time, anywhere and everywhere. She had even gone so far as to come into his study at random times of the day and pulling him out of his meetings, demanding he satisfy her immediately. His advisors quickly learned never to intervene unless they wanted a frustrated, lust-driven pregnant waterbender freezing them to the ceiling. Wei was the first to learn that the hard way, much to Zuko’s sadistic satisfaction and amusement. He never would have imagined that pregnant women would be so crazy for sex, but his wife certainly sought it whenever she could. He had even gone so far as to hide from her so he could get some rest, much to the amusement of Uncle Iroh and Gran-Gran. But even though he had sometimes lost feeling in his legs after she was done with him, he would not deny he enjoyed their every encounter.

Katara languidly drew imaginary patterns on her husband’s muscular chest as she rested against his side. She was utterly satisfied for the moment and she could not help but grin at the way Zuko had gulped when she had straddled his hips as soon as he had woken up and told him to brace himself. It was equally amusing how he had laid there beneath her as if his bones had melted once she finished them off. She sighed contentedly as her firebender ran his fingers through her hair as they basked in comfortable silence, watching the morning sunlight spill into their room.

“Have you thought of a name for our baby?” the waterbender asked curiously as she continued caressing his chest.

“I’ve thought about it, but I haven’t been able to come up with a good name yet,” the Fire Lord responded, his tone both husky and soft from their morning activities. “Do you have something in mind?”

“Not yet,” Katara responded with a small frown before she continued, “Maybe we could name our baby after your cousin Lu Ten, or if it’s a girl, after my mother Kya?”

Zuko was silent a moment as he thought over her suggestion before he shook his head, his hand still playing gently in her long hair.
“No,” he replied before he added more slowly, “I do appreciate the idea of keeping their memories alive, but I’d like for our son to have his own name, unique to him alone, so he won’t have to live up to his ancestors’ standards.”

Katara thought about it before she smiled.

“You’re right,” she agreed before she added teasingly, “You sure are very confident it’s a boy. I almost wish it’s a girl just to prove you wrong.”

Zuko chuckled as he reached down to gently caress her rounded belly.

“I wouldn’t mind if I turned out to be wrong and we have a daughter, but I’d bet my fire crown this first child is a boy,” he said confidently.

A soft laugh escaped the waterbender.

“We’ll just have to wait and see.”

Chuckling, Zuko lifted her chin and bent down to kiss her soundly on her grinning mouth. Katara’s giggles soon turned into soft moans as Zuko’s tongue slipped past her lips and slowly, teasingly, began to explore her mouth. Their breathing increased and their bodies pressed close together as desire exploded between them. Katara let out a breathless moan when Zuko pulled away from her mouth so they could catch their breaths. Even after all this time, they could not get enough of each other.

Panting, cock erect and throbbing in lust, Zuko moved so that he was hovering over his wife who looked up at him from half-lidded eyes. He could not believe he still had the energy for another round after the way his wife had pounced on him earlier, but the bewitching water nymph was too tempting for him to ignore. He admired the image she presented, the way her chocolate-colored hair spread beneath her on the pillow, the way her cheeks flushed from the pleasure, the way her chest heaved as her passion rose.

“Are you ready for me again?” he asked huskily.

A small snort escaped the brunette.
“Make love to me before I hurt you,” she replied firmly before she reached up to pull him down and captured his smirking lips.

They kissed each other hungrily, their lips and tongues making loud, wet smacking sounds before they pulled apart to catch their breaths. He bent down and pressed slow, soft kisses along his wife’s jawline before he trailed his lips down her smooth neck. He licked and gently nibbled the lines of her collarbones just as he reached both his hands up to cup her breasts, enjoying the increased fullness of her soft mounds as her pregnancy advanced. Her normally large breasts were huge and he loved it! Agni, his waterbender was perfect.

Katara suppressed an amused chuckle as her husband once again became wholly focused on her breasts before a soft moan left her when Zuko latched his mouth onto her right nipple, flicking his tongue insistently at the sensitive tip. She groaned and her hand fisted in his long, dark hair as he sucked a little roughly on the hard peak while he pinched the other one between his fingers.

“Zuko, mmm, uhh,” she panted as her body shifted restlessly beneath him. Her wet core was aching and throbbing, demanding to be filled and thoroughly pleasured once again. “Zuko.”

The firebender suckled more fiercely at her hardened nipple at the breathless, yet commanding sound of her voice calling his name. Her rounded belly brushed against his abdomen, once again reminding him that he had to be more careful in his passion for his wife in her current condition. Even though they couldn’t be as rough in their lovemaking as before, it was still just as intense and pleasurable. He gasped then groaned when Katara insistently rubbed herself against his hard shaft.

“Katara,” he rasped as he bucked his hips against her, wanting, needing more of her flesh against his own.

Impatient now to be inside her, to feel her soft body welcome him in a wet, tight caress, Zuko nudged her thighs further apart and quickly settled himself between them. Bending down to kiss her hungrily once again, Zuko grasped his stiff erection and rubbed it slowly against her slick folds. She was already so wet from their earlier orgasms, so foreplay was unnecessary, but he still made sure to press his weeping tip against her swollen nub a few times, causing her to moan and whimper in pleasure against his mouth, before he slowly slipped his swollen head inside her.

With an impatient hiss, Katara lifted her hips at the same time she pressed her hands against his ass and impaled herself on him until he was buried to the hilt, heavy balls pressed tightly against her backside. They both groaned their satisfaction at their joining and Katara reached up to grabbed his head so she could kiss him more fiercely. Zuko growled her name as she sucked his tongue and nipped his lips, her body straining desperately against him. Without any more stalling, Zuko pulled his hips back until only his mushroomed tip remained within the heaven of her core before he slowly plunged forward.

“Ahh, ohhh,” Katara mewled as she threw her head back and clutched tightly onto his shoulders as he moved within her in a steady rhythm. “Yes!”

“Agni, you feel so good, Katara,” he groaned in a deep, husky growl that made the waterbender’s toes curl.

Zuko panted heavily as he continued to impale himself within his wife’s lovely body. The sensation of her wet walls clinging snugly around his cock never ceased to amaze him. He made sure to keep his body from crushing her as he pleasured her by pressing his hands on the mattress on either side of her. He became mesmerized by the sight of her breasts gently bouncing and jiggling with his movements. With a low growl of her name, he leaned down to engulf one stiff nipple into his mouth while one of his hands stroked and caressed her soft, tanned flesh while his other arm held him up.

Eyes falling closed, Katara arched her back in pleasure as his mouth teased one overly sensitive breast while his other hand fondled the other mound with gentle, titillating squeezes. She had already orgasmed multiple times that morning, but his warm, sword-calloused hands on her soft skin stirred her body, despite how sensitive her nerves were. She loved these moments of slow, tender passion. Her hands roamed his back, admiring the lines of his skin, the broadness of his shoulders, the sensation of his muscles flexing underneath her hands as he impaled himself within her, her name falling from his lips in a tender, amorous plea.

Zuko closed his eyes and clenched his jaw when he felt his end approaching more quickly than he had anticipated. Electric sparks seemed to be regenerating all over his body as his pleasure mounted and his movements became a bit more desperate and fast. Reaching down, wanting to bring Katara to release first, he gently rubbed his fingers against that sensitive nub that made his wife go crazy.

Katara gasped as her husband’s ministrations began to pitch her over the amazing brink of orgasmic euphoria. She kissed him hard, moaning against his warm, skillful tongue before she shattered into a million sparks of pure bliss. Feeling utterly consumed, she threw back her head and loudly cried out Zuko’s name as his arms pressed her closer, tighter against his body as his hips moved desperately against her.

“Katara!” Zuko growled as he drove himself deeply within her as he exploded in ecstasy.
The waterbender gasped as the sensation of her husband’s hot sticky seed spilling within her still convulsing passage elicited another small orgasm out of her. Crying out his name again, she arched her back, swollen belly pressing against his navel, as she clutched his strong shoulders as her pussy clenched tightly around his throbbing cock.

“Zuko, oh gods!” she screamed as her hearthammered wildly in her chest before she slumped back onto the mattress.

Heaving, Zuko held himself completely still over his panting wife as his orgasm shuddered through him before he relaxed, barely catching himself from falling atop of her in a boneless heap. He carefully pulled out of her before he dropped himself beside her equally pleased body, draping one arm over her belly and resting his head on her breasts, waiting for their minds to come back from their blissful clouds.

After a moment of comfortable silence, Zuko let out a sigh and squeezed her middle gently.

“I should get ready for my meeting with the generals,” he finally spoke as he made to leave the bed.

Katara’s fingers tangled in his dark strands as she held his head close to her breasts, unwilling to let him go.

“Not yet,” she almost whined. She knew she should let him go to his meeting now, but she was too comfortable at the moment.

He shifted against her and lifted his head to look at her with an arch brow.

“You know I have to go attend to my duties,” he murmured softly.

“I know,” Katara replied with a sigh as she finally let go of him and carefully rolled to her side, facing away from him. “I should get up too and go about my own duties...as limited as they are right now.”

Zuko chuckled quietly as she looked over her shoulder to pout at him and he leaned down to press his lips against her pouty ones. Pulling away, he gently patted her bare bottom before he got out of their messy bed. When she rolled onto her back to continue pouting at him, the young Fire Lord chuckled.

“We both know you’re going to seek me out anyway,” he pointed out amusedly.

Katara’s good mood returned and she grinned at him.

“Better be prepared, dear husband.”

Waking up spooned to Katara’s body was always an incredible feeling for the young Fire Lord. It made him wonder how he ever slept without her before she came into his life. He rested silently against her back, listening to her soft breathing as she continued her slumber, just enjoying the peaceful moment. He lifted his head a little and his eyes took in the more obvious differences in Katara’s body.

She was on her eighth month now and her stomach was more extended. They now limited their lovemaking for fear that he would hurt Katara and their babe with their passion, but also because it was sometimes uncomfortable for Katara. And although it did not bother him in the slightest, her increased girth made her self-conscious. He thought her body was beautiful, especially since it was changing to make room for their child. Katara got much more tired easily, because sitting and sleeping were uncomfortable for her and she never got much rest. The baby seemed adamant to make himself known with painful kicks, and her mood swings were almost terrifying. But despite that, he could see how much it excited and warmed her to have their child growing within her. He tried to help her out as much as he could, though it upset him that there was nothing he could do to take away her pains and discomforts.

He reached down to softly caress her rounded belly and smiled gently when he felt a small pressure against his hand a moment later. It still amazed him to see the development of his unborn child within his wife’s womb. It was a fascinating, awe-inspiring thing. And to think that he had a part in it. He paused when he saw his wife’s small, brown hand settle upon his paler, larger one. Smiling, he intertwined their fingers together as they rested them gently over her swollen stomach. He lifted his head to see her looking at him over her shoulder with a small, tender smile upon her soft, plump lips. The sparkle and warmth in her azure eyes had him bending his head down to press his lips against hers. When he pulled away, he saw that her smile was still in place.

“Waking up with you in the morning is the best feeling in the world,” Katara breathed happily.

Zuko smiled. It was as if she had read his mind. He leaned down to kiss her again before he pulled away from her and rose from their bed. He grinned when she rolled to her back and frowned at him.
“Let me get our bath ready,” he told her.

The radiant smile she gave him made him chuckle and caused warmth to spread through his chest. The water nymph really had him wrapped around her finger. He could only imagine what a daughter of theirs would reduce him to.

As her husband turned and walked toward the bathing chamber, Katara relaxed back into the soft mattress. Her hands automatically went to caress her large stomach and she cooed at her baby. The sensation of Zuko’s hand on her belly and their child stirring within her had woken her up from a restful sleep that she was thankful for. Sleep was often uncomfortable these days and she needed to relieve herself more often than usual. So when she did finally fall asleep, she would often wake a short while later to use the water closet. Her ankles were very swollen and her lower back was killing her. But she was determined not to let any of that destroy that happiness and excitement she felt at the thought of having her first child in her arms.

When she heard her husband walk back into the room, her eyes drank in the sight of his perfect naked body, caressing every ridge and flex of muscle and inch of alabaster skin, before she looked back to his handsome face. She grinned when she saw he was smirking at her.

“Ready for your bath?” he asked as he approached her.

“Yes!” the watebender exclaimed as she slowly rose from the bed.

She squealed when Zuko swept her up into his arms and carried her to the bathroom.

“Zuko!” she exclaimed with a scowl, “I can walk perfectly fine!”

“I know, but this way is much faster,” he teased as he looked down her.

“Are you saying I’m slow?” she growled.

The only response she received was a quiet chuckle, which increased when she indignantly smacked his bare chest. She soon forgot her irritation, however, when he stepped into the steaming bathtub and carefully sat down, bringing her gently upon his lap. They both let out simultaneous sighs of pleasure as the warm water touched their skin. They remained sitting in silence, just enjoying the warm and pleasant atmosphere, breathing in the calming scent of the bathing oil Zuko had poured into the water.

A moment later, the firebender stirred and reached for the soap and sponge on the shelf carved into the wall. Katara let out a low, contented breath as Zuko began to gently run the lathery sponge along her shoulders and arms. She smiled, her heart doing a little flutter in her chest, when Zuko passed both the sponge and his soapy hand along her extended belly. Once he was satisfied that he had cleaned her body, he began to wash her hair. Another small groan of pleasure escaped Katara’s throat when she felt him gently scratch her scalp.

Really, he was the best husband a woman could wish for and he was all hers. Although she knew his temper was sometimes tested, he was always patient with her as her pregnancy advanced. He tolerated her erratic mood swings and the strange cravings. He had even asked Gran-Gran and Lady Yoon Hee for any advice on what he could do to make her more comfortable. Gran-Gran had advised him to massage her ankles, feet, and back, which he did determinedly, eager to please and help his pregnant wife. A fact she appreciated immensely.

Once he finished bathing her and himself, Zuko carefully helped her out of her tub. Katara stood patiently as he made it his purpose to dry every inch of her with soft dabs of the towel. She grinned when he frowned at her when she used her waterbending to dry her hair. With a huff, he rose his body temperature to dry himself off and Katara watched as steam rose around him before she laughed when his long hair puffed up a little before it settled back down. This time he did not protest when she refused to be carried and walked—or rather waddled—back into their room.

“Ugh, I’m starving,” Katara exclaimed as she quickly looked through her clothes. She made a face as she pulled out a large and flowy robe. It seemed she had to have the palace seamstress make new clothes every few months to accommodate her growing belly. She didn’t fit in her old clothes anymore, much to her chagrin.

“Jiao knows she should have our breakfast ready unless she wants an angry waterbender chasing her down,” Zuko replied with a chuckle.

“Oh, ha, ha, Zuko,” Katara responded sarcastically as she threw him a halfhearted glare, “If you don’t shut up, it’d be you having an angry waterbender chasing you down.”

“Wouldn’t be the first time,” the firebender muttered as he pulled on his dark, pointed boots.

“What was that?”
“Nothing.”

“Hm, I thought so.”

Zuko shook his head and grimaced. He could just hear Sokka laugh and say “Totally whipped.”

Once they were both dressed, they made their way to the antechamber, where sure enough, Jiao already had their breakfast laid out. They greeted the maidservant and she replied happily with a smile and a bow before she retreated to give them their privacy. As soon as they sat down, Katara reached for her chopsticks and began to eat enthusiastically. Eating more sedately, Zuko watched with both amusement and contentment as his wife exclaimed her delight with their meal.

“Ah, this tastes so good,” she moaned as she bit into some spicy eggs.

Zuko smiled behind his teacup. He had noticed that Katara craved spicy food more than she ever had before. His mother had told them that she had been the same way when she had been pregnant with him. Zuko allowed that to confirm his suspicions that Katara was carrying a firebender and hopefully a son.

A large smile spread on the waterbender’s lips as she watched the children from the newly rebuilt orphanage swarm around her and Zuko as soon as he helped her down the carriage. The woman in charge of the orphanage hurried over and bowed respectfully to the royal couple as she escorted them to the new little garden in front of the building. They had come to visit the children as well as bring them some treats. It was the third time Zuko had decided to come with her and Katara had a feeling it was mostly because he feared someone might try to target her again. But for the past months since that terrible incident, nothing suspicious or untoward had occurred. Zuko had even told her than there hadn’t been any sightings of or word from Jianguo. It worried her to think of what the vile man could be planning, that coupled with the questions of who could have tried to have her lose her child caused her some anxiety. But she was determined not to let that rule her life or her thoughts for long as she focused most of her attention on the coming birth of her first child.

Katara grinned at the way Takeo, the little green-eyed boy, followed Zuko around, just as he had been doing since the first time the Fire Lord visited. As soon as the Fire Lord had been introduced to them, Takeo had attached himself to the firebender’s side and began asking him a multitude of questions that had the taciturn Fire Lord looking at the small child in wide-eyed confusion, but Zuko had soon relaxed and was answering the boy as best as he could. When they saw that the scarred Fire Lord wasn’t as intimidating as they had first thought, the rest of the children had gathered around him to the bewilderment of the firebender and the amusement of the waterbender.
They spent an hour with the children where Katara told them a story to their insistence before they decided to head out. The children whined at their departure, but perked up when they were promised another visit later in the future, but this time with the newborn heir accompanying them. As the royal couple made their way to their carriage, where a group of guards kept watch, Zuko turned to smile at Katara.

“Would you like to have dinner at our favorite restaurant?” he asked.

“That sounds great!” the brunette exclaimed just as her stomach gave a loud growl.

She blushed and cleared her throat while Zuko chuckled under his breath.

Once Zuko told the driver of their new destination, they settled in the carriage as it traveled toward the capital. A moment later, they were seated in a private area of the restaurant with the short owner once again bowing and exclaiming profusely over their patronage. Now that Katara was the Fire Lady and carrying the heir to the throne, the owner practically tripped over himself to make sure everything was to her satisfaction. A few servers immediately rushed forward to pour them tea. Katara was amused when the proprietor gushed over her pregnancy before fretting over her comfort, going so far as to asking if she wished for them to bring a more comfortable chair, which she politely declined. Once the royal couple was left alone, they looked at each other with amused expressions.

As they waited for their food to arrive, Katara took a small sip of her tea as she glanced around the prestigious restaurant, observing the people who were seated a few feet away from them. Instead of the glares and condescending expressions she had received the first time she had been in the restaurant, the nobles seemed more accepting of her, some even tried to get a curious glance of her pregnant stomach.

“It seems like it was just yesterday you brought me here for the first time,” she remarked with a smile as she brought down her teacup on the table.

“And yet many things have happened since then,” Zuko responded as he grabbed her hand in his, intertwining their fingers together, as he glanced down warmly at her protruding belly.

Katara smiled at him, squeezing his hand. The moment was interrupted when the servers arrived with their food, causing Zuko to pull his hand back and clear his throat as he slipped his passive mask back in place. Laughing inwardly, the waterbender turned her attention to their meal with relish.
They ate in comfortable silence with the occasional comment about one thing or another. Zuko was once again pleased when he observed Katara going for the spicy dishes. Soon they had finished their meal and they were being ushered out by the enthusiastic owner of the restaurant. Not wanting to end their day so soon, Katara proposed they walk a little through the marketplace. Zuko did not like the idea at first, worried someone would try to harm her once again, but Katara told him it would only be for a few minutes and they were surrounded by guards. With a resigned sigh, Zuko agreed. He really couldn’t say no when she looked at him with her large blue eyes shining so hopefully.

When they spotted the royal couple making their way through the marketplace, people immediately swarmed around them, congratulating them on their upcoming parenthood and complimenting and cooing over Katara’s rounded belly. The Fire Lady smiled and blushed at their zeal while the Fire Lord looked on with pride before the guards began to usher the excited crowd away. Zuko walked silently beside his wife as she admired the items presented at the various stalls and smiled at the flustered vendors as they fell all over themselves. It was only until she began to feel tired that Katara agreed with Zuko to head back to the palace.

They were just rounding a corner to head to their carriage when three people almost bumped into them. Katara’s eyes widened and Zuko’s narrowed into slits when they recognized the individuals. Standing with Longshot and Smellerbee on either side of him, Jet looked at the royal couple in surprise before he coughed and straightened himself out, running his hand through his messy hair.

“Fancy meeting you here,” the freedom fighter commented with a roguish grin, though it was obvious he was trying to avoid looking directly at Katara.

Zuko brought up his hand when Shen, Kuo and a few of his other guards stepped forward to remove the strangers. The guards looked at him uncertainly, but stepped back, although they remained alert and wary.

“What are you doing here in the Fire Nation?” Zuko asked with a dark frown.

Pulling out his wheat stalk for a moment, Jet shrugged as he motioned for his companions to give him some privacy. Smellerbee and Longshot frowned at him before they reluctantly walked a few feet away.

“I’m actually here on a job,” the freedom fighter leader said casually.

“A job?” Katara asked.
“Yeah, this Fire Nation bastard stole some jewelry from some pompous, filthy rich noble from the Earth Kingdom. I came in search of the guy to take the stuff back for a big reward,” he responded as he placed the wheat stalk back to his mouth.

“Did you find the man?” the brunette asked.

An arrogant smirk appeared on the freedom fighter’s face. “Not yet, but the bastard won’t know what hit him when I do.”

Jet finally looked at the waterbender and he felt his chest tightened at her loveliness before he mentally scolded himself. He was adamant about forgetting her and his feelings for her and that was what he was going to do, dammit. His eyes lowered and landed on her pregnant belly, visible despite the dark red, formal robes she was wearing. Sadness and wistfulness assaulted him for a moment before he squashed the feelings. A small smirk appeared on his thin lips when he saw the firebender place a possessive arm around her middle and glared at him.

_Some things never change, huh?_

“Congratulations,” he said.

Zuko and Katara were surprised at his sincerity. They glanced briefly at each other before they returned their attention to the freedom fighter. They could only assume he had given up on the waterbender since he hadn’t once tried to flirt with her since they had been talking. Katara placed her hand on her stomach and smiled widely while Zuko stood next to her with a proud aura.

“Thank you,” they both replied.

They watched as Jet’s smirk vanished and a more solemn expression appeared on his face.

“You guys should watch out for Mai,” he warned them in a low tone, “She’s set on gettin’ Zuko back.”

“And how do you know that?” the firebender asked with a raised eyebrow.
They watched as Jet shifted uncomfortably and rubbed the back of his neck as he glanced at Katara before looking away.

“I...Back in Omashu...I tried to help her separate you two,” he admitted with a small shrug before he cleared his throat and added, “And we were...lovers for a while.”

“Huh,” the waterbender uttered before she glanced to her husband.

Zuko arched an eyebrow as he stared at the uncharacteristically abashed freedom fighter. Mai claimed to love him and yet she had no qualms about having lovers while she chased after him? Not that he cared, for Katara was the only women that mattered to him. But that showed exactly how superficial her feelings were towards him. But maybe one of her new lovers could finally make Mai see that she was better off with someone else? However, Jet’s next words dispelled those hopes.

“She’s obsessed with Zuko,” Jet continued before he muttered under his breath, “Though I can’t understand what’s so good about the bastard.” He shrugged when he noticed the firebender glaring at him. “She’s set on taking you back no matter what it takes. The woman’s crazy, I tell ya.”

Zuko let out a snort.

“I’d like to see her try taking Zuko away from me,” Katara spoke up with a low growl as she crossed her arms below her breasts. She did not notice the amused looks both men gave her at the image she presented with her large belly.

“You know there is nothing she can do to take me away from you,” Zuko responded as he pressed her close to his side.

“Too bad that fact doesn’t sink into her stubborn brain,” the irritated waterbender retorted.

Jet watched as the firebender gave her middle a gentle squeeze and Katara looked up to smile at the Fire Lord. The freedom fighter frowned at the ache the image of them interacting caused in his chest. His eyes once again settled on the waterbender’s swollen stomach and he clenched his fists. If only he had not allowed his vengeance against the Fire Nation take hold of so strongly that he was willing to kill innocent people, Katara would not have been disappointed with him and he would have had a better chance of winning her heart. It could have been his child she was carrying and him holding her to his side.
But it was too late. He could see how much she loved her husband—the word made his gut roil—just as he could see how much the scarred firebender loved her, and now she was going to give him a child.

Shaking himself from his thoughts, Jet cleared his throat and the couple turned to look at him as if they had forgotten he was even there. He suppressed a scowl at being ignored and instead smirked.

“Well, then, I’ll be on my way. Still need to catch that thief,” he drawled. “See ya around.”

“Hopefully not,” the firebender retorted.

The freedom fighter let out a laugh as he raised his hand in a casual salute and turned around. He glanced over his shoulder to look at Katara wistfully one last time before he forced himself to turn back and walked away. He was joined by his comrades and they disappeared around another corner.

“Well…that was unexpected,” the waterbender commented.

“Hm,” was Zuko’s only response as he thought over everything Jet had said before he refocused his attention on his wife.

“Don’t you have someone else to bother?” an annoyed Fire Lord asked wryly as he leaned back against his large chair in his study.

“You should be grateful I’m giving you such great advice!” Sokka exclaimed with a sniff across from him.

“Sounds more like horror stories than advice to me,” a paler-than-normal Avatar muttered from the chair next to the Water Tribe warrior.

“What? I’m just telling you guys how childbirth is and what to expect!” the blue-eyed man retorted.

“But didn’t you faint when Suki was giving birth? How would you know?” Aang asked with a Zuko watched in amusement when his brother-in-law spluttered in indignation. Aang and Toph had arrived about a week ago and Hakoda and the rest of Katara’s family had arrived three days ago in order to be present for when Katara gave birth. Currently, the Water Tribe Chief was playing Pai Sho with Iroh and Pakku in the Royal Palace Garden while the women of the family accompanied Katara to another lesson with Madam Fang Hua. Jee had accompanied Ursa to once again visit Azula, though Zuko knew his mother’s efforts to reconcile with her daughter were going to be in vain once again. There were times when it seemed as if Azula was warming up to their mother before she lashed out. He had offered to go with her, but his mother had refused since having them visit Azula together seemed to anger her more.

So now he was stuck listening to Sokka recount the horrors of childbirth. He really did not need to hear about it. He was already a nervous wreck, worrying over Katara and the baby’s well-being. But he could not deny Sokka’s antics—as annoying as they could sometimes be—and Aang’s calm and cheery personality did make him forget his worries a bit.

“Well, who wouldn’t get a little queasy when they see a head coming out of—?”

“I really don’t need the visual, thank you,” Aang interrupted quickly.

“Ha! And you’re mocking me about my reaction when you can’t even hear about it!” Sokka guffawed before a mischievous grin split his face. “Just imagine when you knock up Toph and she’s ready to pop out your baby and—”

“Ahhh, I’m not listening!” the airbender said in a sing song voice as he pressed his hands to his ears.

Chuckling, Zuko could only shake his head at their antics. Sokka was interrupted from his detailed descriptions when they heard a loud commotion outside the door. They looked up just in time to see the door flung open as Katara walked in with Gran-Gran, Suki, and Madam Fang Hua following agitatedly behind her. Toph strode in after them with a grin on her face.

The Fire Lord’s eyes roamed over his wife’s form, heavy with his child now at her ninth month, and felt pride and satisfaction settled on his chest before he returned his gaze to Katara’s face when she finally stood before his desk. A frown marred his brow at the anger he could see in her expression and became worried. She was close to her time now and Lady Yoon Hee had said that extreme emotions or stress could cause Katara to go into an early labor. He turned a dark look on the short Fire Nation noblewoman who bowed stiffly at him as the rest of the women gathered around his desk. Sensing things might turn messy, Sokka and Aang stood up from their chairs and slowly slinked into the background. They had both been on the receiving end of Katara’s temper before and neither wanted to repeat the experience.

“Katara, please try to calm down,” Zuko told her softly, pleadingly. “You know it’s not good for the baby to get too upset.”

Katara glared at him for a moment and she watched as he gulped, but she took a deep breath as she placed a hand on her lower back. Her feet were swollen, her back was killing her, and she had a feeling she would have to once again go relieve herself soon. As if on cue, a compressing force slammed into her bladder and she grimaced. She could not wait for the baby to be born. But now Madam Fang Hua was annoying her with her damn, stupid traditions.

“What’s wrong?” Zuko asked as he turned to look at Gran-Gran.

The older tribeswoman had been of great help these past couple of months—even if she enjoyed teasing him unceasingly and embarrassingly most of the time. But he endured it since it made his wife happy to have her grandmother with her. And admittedly, he found Kanna’s teasing amusing as well.

“Madam Fang Hua wants Katara to start looking for a wet nurse for the child,” the blue-eyed old woman spoke up with indignation.

“But I want to breastfeed my own baby!” Katara added heatedly as she defiantly crossed her arms and glared at the noblewoman.

Zuko squirmed in discomfort at the topic since he had never had to think about it before. Vaguely, he heard Aang and Sokka cough uncomfortably. He glanced to the side and noticed that Toph was smirking in his direction, no doubt enjoying his discomfiture. Suki stood next to the short earthbender with her arms crossed over her chest in silent support of her sister-in-law.

“It is tradition for the Fire Lady and noblewomen to have wet nurses,” Madam Fang Hua argued, her tiny body stiff and unyielding.

“That is because those women care more about ruining their figures than they do their own children,” Kanna replied with a huff.
Madam Fang Hua opened her mouth to retort against such harsh words, but she did not have a chance to speak because the Fire Lady interrupted her.

“In my tribe, breastfeeding is a sacred bond between mother and child,” Katara said with pride and determination. “I will not have another woman take care of my child’s most basic need.”

“You tell her, Sugar Queen!” Toph piped in.

The blind earthbender grinned when she felt the old noblewoman turn to glare at her. Ah, how she loved riling people up.

Madam Fang Hua continued to argue about what Fire Nation tradition dictated while the two Water Tribe women retorted with the benefits of breastfeeding with side comments added in by an amused earthbender and an annoyed Kyoshi warrior. Zuko wisely decided not to intervene and just sat uncertainly on his chair, watching the women argue back and forth. He glanced to Sokka and Aang, but they just shrugged. He scowled at them. They were completely useless! It was only when the old noblewoman turned to him pleadingly, did he decide to say something.

“We will not need a wet nurse, Madam Fan Hua,” he said calmly yet firmly.

“But, my lord! It’s tradition!”

“If it is what my wife wishes, I will not go against her,” Zuko continued firmly. “I will not take away her privileges of being a mother and I’m proud that she wishes to take care of our child herself instead of hoisting the responsibility to some other woman.”

Katara beamed at him happily. Gran-Gran and Suki nodded their heads approvingly and Toph gave him a thumbs up.

“Now that we’re on this subject,” the waterbender added as she stared at her husband, “I don’t want a stranger to be my child’s nanny, so I propose to have Jiao to take on the job.”

The old noblewoman gasped in shock.
“But she’s just a mere servant!” she exclaimed. “It’s tradition for a high class nanny to take care of the royal heirs!”

“I don’t care for that,” Katara replied hotly before she again addressed Zuko, “I trust Jiao and I know she would do a great job looking after our son while we have to attend to our duties.”

Zuko was silent a moment as he contemplated Katara’s words before he nodded.

“I agree. Perhaps you should ask Jiao what she thinks.”

“I will,” Katara replied with a satisfied smile.

Madam Fang Hua sighed in defeat.

“Very well. If it is what you both wish,” she reluctantly conceded.

With a bow, the small old woman made her way out of the room.

Kanna let out a chuckle as she looked teasingly at her granddaughter’s husband.

“Very smart of you to agree with us, young man,” she said amusedly.

“I do value my life,” Zuko responded in a serious tone.

Katara giggled while Kanna and Suki let out a loud laugh.

“Take note, boys,” Toph replied with a chuckle as she smirked at Aang and Sokka.

“Geez, Lord Jerkbender, you just had to one-up us, huh?” Sokka groused.
“It’s not my fault I’m a better husband,” Zuko responded seriously, though a smirk curled his lips.

“Ha! You wish!” the blue-eyed warrior exclaimed before he turned to his amused wife. “We all know I’m the better husband, right, Suki?”

“I really don’t want to get involved in this,” the female warrior responded.

“Hey, what’s that supposed to mean?!”

With a laugh, Suki turned around to head out of the rooms.

“I’m going to check on the twins,” she said as she threw a last grin at her frowning husband.

“Come on, Suki, you’re really crushing my ego here!” Sokka groused loudly as he quickly followed after his wife.

“Ah, the joys of marriage,” Toph said with humor.

“I think I’ll be the best husband ever, right, Toph?” Aang piped in cheerfully as he wrapped an arm around his girlfriend.

Toph let out an amused snort before she shrugged off his arm.

“I don’t have time for this,” she drawled as she marched toward the door.

“Toph! Are you saying I won’t?!” Aang called out with a small whine as he quickly rushed after her. “Toph, wait up! You have to explain yourself!”

Kanna and the royal couple watched them all leave with amused chuckles.

“Well, I’ll leave you two youngsters to yourselves,” the old woman said as she smiled at them. “I’m going to look for my errant husband. I have a feeling I will find him with that wicked uncle of yours.”

The royal couple laughed as they watched her make her way to the door. With one last smile and a wink, Kanna close the door after her. Katara turned back to smile at her husband.

“Thank you for supporting me on this, it’s important to me, Zuko,” she said warmly.

“You know I always will.”

Returning her smile, Zuko stood up and walked around his desk toward her. He wrapped his arms around her and embraced her to him. He smiled when her rounded belly got in the way before he pulled back to gently caress it. Katara placed her hand over his and she lifted her head for a kiss. Chuckling, Zuko leaned down and pressed his lips to hers in a slow, soft kiss.

“Besides, how could I deny my son anything?” he whispered in a low tone.

Smiling, Katara reached both her hands up to cup his face before she brought him down to kiss him more firmly.

be silly talking to her stomach, but she could not help the elation she felt at the thought that she would soon hold her child in her arms. Sure, she was nervous at the upcoming event, but her happiness eclipsed that.

A small gasp escaped her when two strong arms encircled her from behind and large hands rested above hers.

“Hello, beautiful,” her husband’s velvety baritone murmured against her ear.

Suddenly conscious once again of her figure, Katara tried to hide her body from his gaze by wrapping her arms around herself. She felt so ungainly and huge in front of him, but Zuko did not allow her to move away from him and instead placed his chin on her shoulder so they could look at each other through the mirror. The waterbender huffed.

“How can you call me that when I’m as fat as a cow-pig?” she pouted.

Zuko lifted an eyebrow at her.

“You’re not fat, you’re pregnant,” he replied matter-of-factly before he added with a smile, “And you’re the most beautiful pregnant woman ever.”

Katara’s sudden dolefulness uplifted and she laughed joyfully as she snuggled back into his hard frame.

“It’s too bad you can’t be rewarded at the moment,” she said playfully.

“Why not?” he asked with wide eyes. “Lady Yoon Hee said it was okay for us to keep having sex as long as we’re careful.”

“I’m not really in the mood right now. Your son’s constant kicking has tired me out.”

_Not to mention my feet are aching and my back is killing me,_ she thought to herself.
Zuko let out a dramatic, mournful groan.

“He must hate me,” he sighed.

Katara laughed.

“Oh, come now, Zuko. Don’t exaggerate,” she told him amusedly as she lifted her head to press her lips against his jaw.

Smiling, Zuko leaned down and kissed her mouth. He pulled back and his hands lingered over her stomach, as they always did, before he released her. He helped her into a flowing, soft nightdress before he went to take a quick bath, which ended up taking a little longer because he had to release some of his sexual tension with the help of his hand. The sight of her naked, even large with child still turned him on. Once he was finished with his bath, completely dried, and with black sleeping pants on, the firebender walked back to the bedchamber. He saw that Katara was sitting before her vanity and she was slowly brushing her hair. Quietly, he made his way toward her until he stood behind her, placing his hands on her shoulders. Their eyes connected in the mirror and they smiled at each other.

“Here, let me brush your hair,” he said softly as he took the brush from her hand.

Zuko swept her long, brown locks aside and bent down to press a lingering kiss to the nape of her neck. The sensation of his warm lips brushing softly over her skin sent shivers through her and she sighed in pleasure. Satisfied, Zuko let her hair sift out of his hands and began brushing the chestnut-colored tresses.

Katara hummed as he ran the brush slowly along her hair while his other hand caressed and smoothed it down. She relaxed at the soothing sensation, the gentle and firm strokes, and let out a contented sigh as she closed her eyes. They remained in comfortable silence, letting the tranquil and pleasant moment surround them. He brushed her hair until it was a glistening mass of chocolate waves cascading down her back. Then to the waterbender’s surprise he began to braid her hair into a long plait, making sure not to let a single strand be out of place, before he tied the end with a ribbon.

“There,” he said as he took a step back to admire his work before he gave a satisfied nod.

Katara pulled the braid over her shoulder to examine it before she grinned up at her husband through the mirror’s reflection.
“Who knew you would be such a good handmaid?” she teased with a chuckle.

Zuko let her laugh for a moment before he pulled gently on her braid until she fell backwards against him. He nudged her head up and then he kissed her until all thoughts of laughter fled from her mind. When he pulled away, he grinned when he saw that Katara had been rendered senseless with his kiss. With a low chuckle, he lifted her into his arms before she could protest and carried her to their bed.

A contented sigh left the waterbender when she was laid down upon the soft mattress. Her lower back hurt and her ankles and feet throbbed in pain, but she decided to turn her focus on her husband instead as he slid in beside her. She snuggled against him when he wrapped an arm beneath her shoulders. She asked him about his day and she listened attentively as he gave a brief account of his duties, laughing amusedly when he grumbled irritably about whoever had annoyed him this time, which admittedly, were a lot of people. When he asked her about her day, Katara launched into an enthusiastic narrative about the baby items she and Ursa had commissioned and the blanket Gran-Gran was weaving for her great-grandchild.

Zuko watched silently as his wife continued her animated chatter. He glanced down at the swollen belly pressing against his side, and again his chest tightened with both excitement and concern. Any moment now, Katara could go into labor and he could not help feeling worried at the thought that something might go horribly wrong. He made sure to remain at the palace at all times now so he could be by her side in an instant the moment their child decided to enter the world.

Katara paused in her story as she saw her firebender’s face turn soft as he reached a hand down to rub her extended womb. She watched in silent wonder as he scooted down to gaze intensely at her stomach. She felt tears pool in her eyes at the devoted way his hands tenderly cradled the sides of her belly before he leaned down to press a kiss right on the center of the mound. Even through the silky cloth of her nightdress, his warm breath seeped through to caress her skin, causing her to shiver pleasantly. Despite his taciturn personality, his temper, and emotional scars, her husband could be so sweet sometimes and it only made her love him more for it. Despite his insecurities and doubts, his dark past and his relationship with Ozai, she was positive that he would be a great father for their children.

“Katara?”

The sound of his baritone brought her out of her thoughts and she looked back to his face. His golden eyes were gleaming with quiet pride and happiness, but she could also detect that fear and worry he tried to hide.
“Yes, Zuko?”

It was not hard to guess what he was thinking about by the slight furrow of his brow and the tension of his jaw. He had already expressed his fear of losing her or their child during labor before and she knew he would not stop worrying. Reaching for him, she smoothed her hand over his head, twining the long, dark strands through her fingers before she cupped his face.

“Don’t worry, Zuko. Everything will be fine.”

His frowned deepened a little before he let out a quiet sigh as he leaned toward her touch.

“How are you feeling?” he asked her quietly.

“I’ll admit I’m a little scared and nervous,” Katara replied sincerely, knowing she couldn’t lie to him. “But I’m more excited than anything. After all this time, after being made to think I would never have children, the thought of giving birth to this baby of ours makes me very happy.”

Zuko was silent a moment as he contemplated her words before he gave her a small smile which seemed to warm her heart. Katara returned his smile, noticing how the tension lessened from his face and shoulders.

Kissing her rounded stomach one more time, the firebender moved back to lie beside her, gazing silently and intensely into her blue eyes before he leaned forward to kiss her lips. Sighing softly, Katara’s eyes fluttered closed at the sweet kiss he bestowed on her and she slid her arms over his strong shoulders and around his neck to press him closer to her. Wrapped in a warm and tender embrace, their tongues slowly tangled together, their breaths intermingling, as their lips brushed caressingly against each other. Both enjoyed these kinds of kisses when there was no other intention but to simply feel connected to one another. As much as they relished the sexual aspects of their relationship, there was just something about the simplicity of just kissing, of just holding each other close, that made their bond much more real, much stronger.

Their soft moans of gentle passion turned into sighs of quiet contentment as their lips disconnected. They gazed silently into each other’s eyes as Zuko brushed the back of his fingers along one of her rosy cheeks before he tucked a piece of her hair behind her ear. When she smiled at him with a gentle warmth, Zuko felt his heart constrict in his chest. Golden eyes once again fixated themselves on his wife’s belly. He placed a tender yet protective hand to her stomach, caressing the place their son rested, curled safely within his mother’s womb. Everything had to come out well. He had to believe that.
Katara smiled when Zuko tucked her close against him as he did every night and she let out a small sigh of pleasure as she snuggled, as much as her pregnant belly allowed, close to his warm side. With a flick of his wrist, he snuffed out the candles and they were plunged into semi-darkness as the light of the moon streamed into their bedchamber. It was the middle of summer now and it was too hot to have the fireplace lit.

“Sweet dreams, love,” she heard him whisper as he brushed his lips against her temple.

Her heart fluttered.

“Sweet dreams,” she responded as she placed her hand on his chest, over his steady beating heart.

Two days later found Katara sitting among a large pile of cushions beneath the cherry blossom tree in the garden, enjoying the warm weather. She was having a picnic with Gran-Gran, Ursa, Iroh, Toph, and Suki. Jiao was with them, watching over Jing, Ting, and her son Ichiro. Jiao had happily accepted the position of the heir’s caretaker since she would also be able to take care of her own son and the position paid better since it was highly sought after. She was very grateful to her lady.

Katara felt very happy having her family at her side, supporting her and helping her as much as they could during the final weeks of her pregnancy. She would be even happier once she had her baby in her arms. Zuko was extremely anxious but excited as her time approached. Caressing her large belly, she wondered when that time would come.

Laughing at something Iroh and Toph had said, the waterbender grimaced when she felt another small pain along her abdomen before she relaxed when it went away. She had been woken up by a similar pain, but since it hadn’t appeared again until that moment, she had not been alarmed by it. She rubbed her stomach as she thought of Zuko’s promise to spend the rest of the day with her after his meeting with his advisors and the Water Tribesmen regarding the peace treaty concluded. She had wanted to be present, but to her embarrassment she had fallen asleep a few minutes before it started. Zuko had not wanted to disturb her rest, so he had decided not to wake her up. She grumbled, but decided not to let it bother her.

Another small cramp rippled across her stomach. Thinking a little walk would help, Katara tried to stand up, but to her annoyance, was having a bit of difficulty. She smiled in gratitude when Jiao rushed forward to help her up. Just as she turned to thank her maidservant, she felt a sudden rush of water slide down her legs.
Everybody froze as they stared down at her suddenly wet robes in surprise.

“Um, I think my water broke,” Katara said, finally shattering the silence.

“No shit, Sugar Queen.”
“The baby is coming!” Kanna exclaimed excitedly, and a little worriedly, as she quickly rose to her feet and rushed to her grimacing granddaughter. Placing an arm around her for support, Gran-Gran turned to a wide-eyed Jiao. “Quickly, go get the Fire Lady chamber ready.”

Jiao nodded quickly and rushed off after Suki promised to look after Ichiro.

“Toph, go fetch Lady Yoon Hee,” the old woman ordered.

“Yes, ma’am!” the earthbender said as she marched back toward the building, but not before sending an encouraging grin toward the Fire Lady.

Katara let out a small gasp as she felt her first contraction before she relaxed. Ursa and Iroh crowded worriedly around her.

“Are you in a lot of pain, dear?” Ursa asked softly as she took hold of her daughter-in-law’s other arm.

“Not at the moment,” Katara replied as she took a deep breath, her hands clutching her stomach. The tightening on her belly had lessened already.

“Can you walk to your room?” Gran-Gran asked. “It might take a while for the baby to be ready to be born. Walking will help ease the pain a little.”

“I...I think I can,” the waterbender responded with a nod.

Oh La, the moment had arrived for her baby to be born! Nervousness suddenly consumed her and it took all she had not to panic. She had to be strong.

Kanna and Ursa both took hold of each of her arms to support her and they slowly made their way toward the Fire Lady bedchamber where it was the custom for the Fire Ladies to give birth. They paused a couple of times to wait until Katara’s contractions subsided before continuing. Iroh and Suki, towing the twins and Ichiro with them, followed after the three women. Iroh kept the waterbender distracted with his chatter and Katara focused on his calm yet cheerful voice.

Finally, they arrived at the Fire Lady’s chambers. Suki stayed in the anteroom with her twins, who were curious by the adults’ reactions, and Ichiro, who looked wonderingly at the new people he had been left with. Eventually, the two-year-old twin girls ignored the adults and decided to explore their surroundings and Ichiro, a year younger than them, tagged along. In the meantime, Katara, Ursa and Kanna, with Iroh following behind, entered the bedchamber where they saw that Jiao had pulled back the bedcovers, tied the canopy curtains to the posts, and had placed clean sheets on the bed. She also had water heating in the fireplace in a large pot.

Katara gasped and groaned quietly when another contraction hit her.

“We should get you into more comfortable clothes,” Kanna said as she ran a soothing hand along her granddaughter’s lower back.

“I believe that is my cue to leave,” Iroh spoke up. Smiling encouragingly at his niece-in-law, Iroh gently grasped her hands and squeezed. “Be strong, my dear. I look forward to getting my first glimpse of my first grandnephew or niece. One of many I hope!”

He winked and Katara could not help but laugh as she squeezed his hands back.

“I should let Zuko know his child is about to be born,” Iroh added.

“Perhaps it’s best we don’t disrupt his meeting when it might take a while for the baby to arrive,” the waterbender mused. Another sharp pain hit her and she grimaced. She really wanted Zuko to be there with her, however.

“Nonsense!” the old man exclaimed as he allowed her to squeeze his hands more tightly as the pain coursed through her. It reminded him of his departed wife doing the same thing when she was giving birth to Lu Ten. “Zuko would rather be here with you than in some boring meeting. Besides, he will be upset if we didn’t let him know as soon as possible.”

With another reassuring smile, the old man released her hands and walked back towards the doors. Ursa and Kanna quickly helped the pregnant waterbender out of her wet robes and into a comfortable nightdress before helping her settle onto the bed. A few minutes later, Lady Yoon Hee bustled into the room.
“How are you feeling, my lady?” she asked with a kind smile.

“How are you feeling, my lady?” she asked with a kind smile.

“Fine...at the moment,” Katara replied with small grimace.

“I will examine you to see how things are progressing, alright?”

“I will examine you to see how things are progressing, alright?”

“Yes,” the waterbender answered with a nod.

“Yes,” the waterbender answered with a nod.

As Lady Yoon Hee moved to wash her hands and asked Kanna how long ago the water broke, Ursa stepped to her daughter-in-law’s side and smiled gently at her.

As Lady Yoon Hee moved to wash her hands and asked Kanna how long ago the water broke, Ursa stepped to her daughter-in-law’s side and smiled gently at her.

“I will let them to their work, but I will keep coming back to check up on you,” the Fire Lord’s mother said softly as she brushed the waterbender’s hair aside.

“Thank you,” Katara responded with a smile.

“Thank you,” Katara responded with a smile.

With an encouraging squeeze of her shoulder, Ursa quietly left the room. Lady Yoon Hee moved back toward the bed and carefully pulled up Katara’s nightdress so she could examine her. She and Kanna had come to an agreement of who was going to do what as they prepared for the birth, but it was decided that Gran-Gran would deliver the baby since she was related to both the mother and child. Once she had concluded her examination, the midwife covered Katara’s legs once again and smiled gently.

“I believe that it would be a long while before the baby is ready to be born,” she explained. When she saw the Fire Lady frown, she added, “You must best be prepared for a long labor, my lady. This is your first birth, and from my experience, first birthing can be long and tedious.”

Another contraction hit Katara and she grit her teeth, nodding that she understood. When the sensation passed, she slumped back onto the bed with a soft pant. She could only imagine how much more painful it would be once the baby was truly ready to leave her womb.

“Would you like to walk a little?” Gran-Gran asked gently.

“Yes,” Katara replied with a small nod.
Yoon Hee and Kanna helped her to her feet, standing on either side of her as they paced around the room.

Katara once again ran her hands over her stomach. Soon she will finally hold her first child in her arms. How would Zuko react when he found out she was in labor? Another contraction hit her a few minutes later and she exhaled sharply before the sensation passed. She hoped it didn’t take too long.

Sitting behind the fire wall in the throne room, Zuko listened with satisfaction as one of his scribes listed the revisions that had been done to the peace treaty between the Fire Nation and the Southern Water Tribe. Sitting across from the row of councilmen, Hakoda gave a nod of approval once the man finished speaking. On his right sat Sokka with a grin on his face and on his left sat Pakku with arms crossed and expression solemn as always. Aang sat next to the Water Tribe men in calm silence while Momo dozed off on his lap. Jee stood at attention near the doors.

“Are these revisions to your satisfaction, Fire Lord Zuko, Chief Hakoda?” the old scribe asked as he looked up from the scroll.

Before either man could voice their approval, one of the doors was opened and Iroh entered with hurried steps. Everybody turned to look at the old prince in curiosity. Up on his throne, the Fire Lord raised an eyebrow when he noticed the excitement in his uncle’s eyes and the concern on his face.

“Uncle, is something the matter?” Zuko asked in a calm tone, even though his chest was constricting in worry. Did something happen to Katara?

A large smile curled the old man’s lips as he slipped his hands into his long sleeves.

“Your wife has gone into labor a moment ago, my lord,” Iroh replied calmly, “Your child is about to be born.”

Iroh had barely finished speaking when Zuko sprang up to his feet and dashed down the steps, parting the wall of fire with a swift flick of his hand, before running out of the room. The men stared after his quickly retreating figure in surprise before the room erupted into loud exclamations of excitement.

“The heir is coming!” one of the advisors shouted.
“It’s about time,” Wei sniffed, which earned him a glare from the Fire Lord’s family.

“Quickly, we must let everybody know of the good news!” another exclaimed and a few of the men hurried out of the room.

Iroh watched them go with chuckles of amusement before he cheerfully dismissed the other men still chattering amongst themselves. He turned when he felt a presence behind him and found Hakoda frowning down at him.

“Is my daughter okay?” the blue-eyed chieftain asked in concern.

“She seemed perfectly fine when I saw her,” Iroh replied soothingly. “She was laughing at my poor attempts at humor.”

Hakoda relaxed.

“That’s because I’m the master of jokes, but I am willing to take on an apprentice,” Sokka said to Iroh.

Iroh grinned, either from the comment or from the elbow Aang shoved into the warrior’s side, only he knew. Sokka yelped in a rather high pitch that caused the airbender to laugh.

“I can’t wait to meet my third grandchild,” the chief announced proudly and puffed out his chest, ignoring his son.

“I’m going to be the coolest uncle ever!” Sokka piped in arrogantly as he punched a fist into the air.

“Nope, I’m going to be way cooler!” Aang replied with a grin.

“Ha! You wish! I’ve already had two years of practice being the best dad ever,” Sokka exclaimed with a haughty sniff.
“Yeah, but I’m the Avatar,” Aang replied with grin, “He or she will be more impressed having the Avatar as an uncle!”

Sokka opened his mouth before it shut close with a click as he frowned.

“Yeah, well...I’m still more awesome!” the blue-eyed warrior huffed.

Rolling his eyes at their antics, Hakoda shook his head with a smile before he turned toward the door with Iroh, Pakku, and Jee following quickly behind him.

“Hey, wait for us!” Sokka cried out as he and Aang hurried after them with Momo chattering excitedly above their heads.

Running as quickly as he could toward the royal bedchambers, Zuko felt his heart race in both anticipation and concern. It was time. His child was ready to born! Was Katara all right? He hoped he had not missed anything. When he neared the double golden doors, the firebender threw one of them open, raced across the anteroom, before opening the other set of doors a little more carefully. As he walked into the room, he froze in his tracks when he saw it was dark and completely empty.

“What?” he muttered in confusion before he felt his heart stop in his chest.

Where was his wife? And the baby? Did something wrong happen?!

He pressed a fist to his mouth as horrible scenarios flashed before his eyes. Oh gods, he couldn’t lose them! Panicking, Zuko raced away from the royal chambers in a desperate search for his wife. Just as he was running down the long corridor in growing anxiety, Iroh and the rest of the men rounded the corner.

“Zuko, what’s wrong?!” Hakoda asked in a panic when he saw his son-in-law’s wild eyes and desperate expression. He grasped the agitated firebender’s shoulder and squeezed shakily. “Oh La, did something happen to Katara?!?”

“She isn’t in our room!” Zuko shouted as he made to bolt down the corridor.
“What? What happened to her?!” Sokka exclaimed in shock.

Aang’s eyes widened in anxiety while Jee and Pakku frowned darkly.

Iroh quickly stepped in front of his nephew and firmly grasped his upper arms before he could sprint away.

“Zuko, calm yourself,” Iroh told him calmly yet firmly, “Everything is fine. Katara is in the Fire Lady bedchamber. It’s tradition for the royal heirs to be born there.”

At his uncle’s words, Zuko took in a deep, shaky breath and ran a hand over his head. He felt his tense body immediately sag in relief. Of course. He had forgotten. Agni, he was just nervous. He never had to deal with this before.

Nodding his head in understanding, Zuko waited until his uncle released him. Without waiting for the others to say anything else, the Fire Lord hurried toward the Fire Lady rooms with the others following quickly behind him. As he stepped into the antechamber, Zuko saw his mother, Toph, and Suki sitting around the low table with the twins and Ichiro playing at a corner.

“How is Katara?” Zuko asked his mother as he walked further into the room.

“She is fine, just in a little pain at the moment,” Ursa responded quickly when she noticed her son’s worry.

Nodding, Zuko did not wait for her to continue as he walked swiftly toward the other set of doors, knowing she would answer the questions from the other men who had piled into the room. He needed to see Katara for himself in order to calm his fears. He needed to make sure she was truly all right. Throwing the doors open, Zuko burst into the room, startling the older women and causing Jiao to almost drop the teapot she was holding.

Kanna and Yoon Hee turned to the Fire Lord and scowled at him, but he ignored them as he stared at his wife leaning against the headboard. He did not even notice that Jiao rushed forward to close the door behind him. Katara’s eyes were closed and she was grimacing in pain, and his heart constricted. A moment later, she relaxed and opened her eyes with a loud sigh. When she finally noticed him standing at the entrance, a bright yet slightly pained smile spread across her face.
“Zuko,” she said softly.

At her call of his name, the Fire Lord immediately rushed toward her and wrapped his arms around her despite her large belly getting in the way.

“Katara,” he murmured in relief before he pulled back slightly to look worriedly into her face, his eyes scanning her expression as he sat at her side.

“Don’t look so glum, Zuko,” she teased him with an exhausted smile, “Our baby is ready to greet us. We’re about to be parents.”

At her words, the firebender relaxed and gave her a large smile as his chest expanded in satisfaction and excitement. He leaned toward her and pressed a soft kiss to her smiling lips. He pulled back quickly when he heard Kanna clear her throat loudly. Zuko turned to frown up at the old woman whose hands were placed on her hips.

“You should wait outside until the child is born, young man,” the tribeswoman said firmly.

“I will not leave Katara alone,” Zuko responded firmly, his expression stubborn and firm.

Lady Yoon Hee stepped up next to Kanna as she also looked down sternly at the young firebender.

“A birthing is no place for a man, my lord,” she said calmly yet just as firm as the other woman while Jiao stood silently in the background.

Zuko opened his mouth to retort, but a small groan of pain coming from his wife interrupted him.

“Katara!” he shouted her name as he turned back to look at her in concern.

He grasped her hand and she squeezed it tightly as she stiffened. The two old women glanced at each other. They knew the sight of his wife in pain was only going to agitate the Fire Lord, which would in turn agitate Katara, something she needed to avoid at this time. They watched as the waterbender relaxed back into the pillows and panted softly while her husband worriedly asked her if she was okay.
“Please listen to us, Zuko,” Gran-Gran spoke up firmly, “Lady Yoon Hee and I will take care of things.”

Zuko once again opened his mouth to deny their request, but Katara squeezing his hand had him turning his attention to her once again.

“I’ll be fine,” she told him soothingly as she stared reassuringly into his golden eyes. “You should listen to them.”

The waterbender watched as her husband frowned. Her grandmother and Lady Yoon Hee were very traditional and it would only make them uncomfortable if Zuko remained while they worked. She wanted him to be with her as she brought their first child into the world, but she also did not want him to witness her struggles since it would worry him and there was nothing he could do to ease her pain.

“But I don’t want to leave you to deal with this alone,” he told her softly as he squeezed her hand and brushed a sweaty strand of her hair behind her ear.

Jiao and Yoon Hee gasped at the way she addressed the Fire Lord, but Zuko was not offended since he was used to her bluntness. Besides, she was family.

“Gran-Gran,” Katara admonished gently when Zuko frowned at Kanna.

The old blue-eyed woman sighed at the young couple’s expressions before she dropped her arms to her sides.

“Fine,” she relented, “You can keep her company until her time comes.”

Zuko’s tensed shoulders relaxed and he smiled at the old woman.
“Thank you, Gran-Gran,” he said sincerely.

Both Katara and Kanna grinned. He had been referring to her with the affectionate name ever since the older woman arrived months ago.

Silently, Zuko rose from the bed and took off his royal robes until he was only clad in a light tunic and pants. He then grabbed a chair placed in a corner before carrying it back to Katara’s side. The fire was burning low since the summer evening was hot and the windows had been opened to cool down the stuffy chamber. Placing the chair down next to the bed, the firebender immediately grabbed Katara’s hand, which earned him a tired smile from his wife.

Katara groaned when a painful contraction ripped through her body, causing her forehead to become drenched in a fine sheen of sweat. Panting and moaning, she could barely hear Zuko’s soothing baritone and feel the caress of his hand on her messy hair. She could not wait for this baby to be born.

For the next few hours they talked about this new point in their lives, their upcoming parenthood, and their hopes for their firstborn and their growing family. Other times Zuko would read to her, their hands always clasped together, which Katara would tightly clench when a contraction hit her. Zuko would wipe the sweat from her forehead and neck with a damp towel or helped her walk to relieve the tension and pain. As the night dragged on, Katara would doze off fitfully, but would always be awaken by another contraction. Occasionally, Ursa or Suki would step in to check up on Katara before leaving to update everybody else waiting anxiously outside.

The young Fire Lord did not notice the pleased and awed smiles from the older women, his thoughts focused entirely on his laboring wife. Nor did he notice their exasperated but amused expressions when he asked them multiple questions when something new happened.

“Have you seen the new nursery yet?” Katara asked her husband as she clutched at his arm as they once again walked slowly around the room.

Dawn was just a few moments away.

“Yes,” Zuko responded with a smile. “It came out wonderfully.”

“I’m glad y—ahh!” Katara’s loud, pained cry interrupted her and she hunched over, placing a hand on her lower stomach and clasping tightly onto Zuko’s arm until her nails were digging into his flesh.
“Katara!” Zuko exclaimed in alarm as he wrapped an arm around her to steady her.

Kanna and the midwife immediately rushed toward the waterbender.

“Quickly! Place her on the bed!” Kanna ordered.

With a nod, Zuko swiftly scooped up his groaning wife into his arms and hurried over to the bed, gently depositing her on the mattress. She immediately latched onto his hand and he ignored the pain of her tight grasp when another contraction hit her just as Yoon Hee stepped forward to check her. When Katara slumped back with a pained groan, he watched as the midwife lifted Katara’s nightdress up and prodded between her legs before giving a firm nod of her graying head.

“It is time,” Yoon Hee announced, “The baby is ready to leave its mother’s womb.”

At the midwife’s words, Katara’s eyes flew open and she gazed down upon the large dome of her belly. She felt overwhelmed with relief, happiness, and fear. Her baby was coming! But what if something went wrong?! She felt her heart pound in both anticipation and terror, but when she sensed Zuko staring worriedly into her face, she forced herself not to let her fear show. She did not want to worry him more than she knew he was. Looking up to his anxious eyes, she smiled at him and squeezed his hand.

Zuko returned the gesture. He was equally torn between feeling ecstatic at the thought of finally holding his firstborn and feeling afraid that something terrible could happen. Spirits, he did not know what would become of him if he were to lose either Katara or the baby. Or heaven forbid, both. But he had to have faith that everything would come out well. Agni could not tear his family away from him. Besides, Katara was a strong woman. She had endured many hardships and came out triumphant in the end. Childbirth will just be another of those moments.

“It is time for you to step out, young man,” Gran-Gran’s soft, understanding voice reached his ears. “Lady Yoon Hee and I will handle things. Everything will be fine.”

Zuko wanted to argue to let him stay with Katara, but he knew his attitude would not help matters. Besides, he did not want to add any more stress on Katara or upset her in any way. Resigned, Zuko leaned down and pressed his lips against his wife’s sweaty forehead as he squeezed her hand before he pulled back slightly to gaze into her pained, blue eyes.
“Please be strong, love,” he whispered as he brought her hand to his lips. “For our child. For me.”

Katara felt tears pool in her eyes at his softly uttered words. She knew he was still worried he could lose both her and their child. She felt her heart swell with love and affection as she stared into his burning, golden eyes.

“I will,” she finally replied, her tone reassuring, firm, and determined, “You will have your firstborn in your arms soon and I will be fine. I swear it.”

Zuko smiled at her resolute words. Even while still in the pains of her approaching labor, his wife was as strong and fierce as always. Agni, he loved this woman. Leaning down to kiss her briefly yet tenderly on her mouth, he reluctantly rose to his feet.

“I will be waiting for both of you,” he said with a firm nod.

With one last squeeze of her hand and a lingering look, Zuko turned and walked toward the door. Katara watched him go through pained eyes, and once the doors were closed behind him, did she let out the anguished moan she had been holding back as another contraction slammed into her, forcing out the air in her lungs. Gritting her teeth, Katara panted loudly as she leaned back against the pillows and stared dazedly at the canopy of the bed.

“It won’t be long now,” Gran-Gran assured her kindly as she patted her moaning granddaughter’s knee as she stood between them, while the midwife and Jiao readied themselves to help bring in the heir.

Just as Kanna spoke, another painful contraction rippled across Katara’s lower body and forced a loud cry from her throat. The contractions were now coming faster and they left her with little chance to recover between them. She was entirely focused on the furor of the birth that all thoughts fled from her mind as she endeavored to pull forth all her strength into bringing her first child safely into the world. There was a part of her, however, that was petrified at the thought that all her efforts would come to nothing. Gritting her teeth, she banished the thought from her mind. She could do this. Both she and her baby would pull through and they would greet Zuko together soon.

“That’s it, Katara,” Gran-Gran’s soothing voice penetrated the fog in the waterbender’s mind. “You’re doing fine. You will need to start pushing when the next contraction starts. Remember to pull your knees close to your body and push for a count of ten.”
As she felt another contraction coming, she did as instructed, a cry of agony the only sound that escaped the Fire Lady’s mouth. The contractions were approaching even faster now and she had little time to rest between pushes. Even though she had helped many women in childbirth, she had not really understood what they were experiencing. But now she truly did and it was overwhelming. Everything centered on bringing forth the new life within her at all cost, even her own life.

In the Fire Lady antechamber, the anxious family waited for news as they watched the Fire Lord paced in agitation. Every time Katara’s pain filled shouts resounded through the doors, he would wince and clench his hands or rub at his face in frustration and concern. Almost everybody had dozed off as the night progressed. But Zuko had not so much as sat down as soon as he was forced out of the bedroom a few minutes ago and he had been awake with Katara the entire night. Ursa and Suki had tried to reassure him that everything would be fine, but he would only nod absentmindedly. Sokka, Toph, and Aang had tried to engage him in their banter to distract him, but he had ignored their attempts. Iroh had brewed tea for all of them as they waited, but Zuko did not even touch the teacup his uncle had tried to give him.

“Come, Zuko, why don’t you sit for a moment?” Hakoda asked as he watched his son-in-law stare intensely at the closed door as if he could force them open by sheer will.

“I can’t.” the young firebender responded with a shake of his head.

“It might take a while longer for the baby to be born,” his mother added softly, “Why don’t you have some tea with us?”

Zuko again shook his head and stubbornly resumed his vigil before the closed doors. Ursa sighed and turned to frown worriedly at Jee who gave her a reassuring smile.

“Was I this bad when Suki was giving birth?” Sokka whispered to Aang and Toph.

“Yeah, but at least Sparky looks manly in his panic,” was the earthbender’s amused reply. “Not to mention he was able to stay on his feet the entire time.”

“Hey!” Sokka groused indignantly while Aang and Suki laughed quietly.

“She’s right, though,” the airbender said with an amused grin.
“Shut it, Aang,” the blue-eyed warrior growled as he glared at his friend before a smirk appeared on his face. “Just wait until you’re the one waiting for news while Toph pops out your baby.”

Aang stammered and his entire face flushed a deep red color. Sokka guffawed before he cried out in pain when Toph smacked the back of his head.

“Shut up!” the small earthbender hissed even as her cheeks tinted pink.

Suki could only shake her head at their antics and chuckle in amusement as she glanced at her daughters who were sleeping on a pile of cushions at a quiet corner. Kuo had arrived hours ago to pick up his sleepy son while they waited for Jiao to be done with her duties. The older people watched in amusement as Toph bashed Sokka’s face with a cushion when the warrior made another teasing remark.

Zuko, however, did not pay them any attention. Another scream from Katara had Zuko clenching his hands and grimacing. He squashed down the urge to rush in there to assist his wife. He was tense with worry. Katara was in pain, and he wished with an intense desperation to go to her, but he knew he would just be kicked out of the room by the older women. Tradition dictated that his place was to wait outside since childbirth was the women’s domain. So all he could do was wait in anxious impatience until he was allowed to enter.

While logically he knew that the troubles and pain Katara was going through at the moment was natural since it meant the birth of the child they had conceived with the love they held for each other, the irrational part of him did not care. His beloved wife was in pain and he hated anything that caused her pain. Katara was a strong woman and hearing her agonized cries and screams made him want to retch, or set something on fire, or punch someone, or...anything as long as he could do something! He hated the fact that there was nothing he could do, that he had no control over the situation. All he could do was wait while his wife labored to bring their child into the world. And he hated it because she was the only one suffering.

The dawning sun was just rising over the horizon, tinting the dark sky with soft golden and violet colors, when suddenly Katara let out a loud, long scream. Zuko froze, the sound causing his back to stiffen. Then there was only silence and his heart stopped in his chest when his ears did not pick up any other sound. What happened? Right when he felt he was about to break, the shrill wail of an infant pierced the air and his body almost sagged in relief.

He released the breath he had been holding and his heart raced at the sound of his child’s first cry. He quickly stepped toward the door and waited anxiously to be let in while everybody else in the room began to talk all at once. The baby continued to squall and Zuko could not help but simultaneously grimace and grin at his heir’s lusty cries.
“The child has quite the pair of lungs,” Pakku commented wryly.

“Must’ve inherited it from Sugar Queen ‘cause I can’t imagine Sparky howling like that,” commented Toph with a chortle.

“Oh, you’d be surprise how much Zuko cried,” Ursa spoke up with a fond smile. “He was especially loud when he wasn’t fed on time.”

“Mom,” Zuko groused when everybody else laughed.

He ignored everybody once again and he fixed his golden eyes on the wooden door as he waited. It felt like hours had passed before he saw the door finally opening.

He watched as Kanna, Lady Yoon Hee, and Jiao stepped through. Jiao was carrying a basket with what he assumed was soiled sheets and cloths. His heart stopped when he saw that some of them were stained with blood. Alarmed, his eyes immediately scanned their expressions, needing to know that both his wife and child were all right. The women smiled at the expectant Fire Lord as he waited for news.

“Congratulations, young man,” Kanna was the first to speak, her voice proud and soft, “You’re the father of a healthy baby.”

Zuko’s breath hitched in his throat.

_I’m...I’m a father!_ he mentally exclaimed.

“Is my wife okay?” he asked anxiously.

“She is fine,” Kanna assured him. “She did well. However, she is in a lot of pain, as to be expected, and she is really tired. The birth was long and it took a toll on her, but fortunately, there were no complications.”
Zuko again felt his tension lessen.

“Can I see them now?” he asked while everybody else celebrated behind him.

“Of course, my lord,” Yoon Hee said with a gentle smile.

Smiling, the women stepped aside to let him through. Zuko, unmindful of the others, rushed past them and closed the door behind him. He knew the others would want to see Katara and the baby, but he needed this moment alone with his new family before he had to share them with everybody else.

His eyes immediately darted toward the four-poster bed to where his wife was resting. She was reclining on some pillows and her eyes were closed. He almost panicked and his heart squeezed painfully in his chest when she did not open her eyes, but he relaxed once she looked up at him with a tired smile.

“Katara,” he breathed through a constricted throat.

Approaching the bed silently and carefully, Zuko did not remove his eyes from the sight before him. Soft rays of the morning sunlight spilled into the room and illuminated Katara sitting upon the bed. She was clad in a fresh nightdress and her long hair had been neatly braided. Her cheeks were still flushed and her hairline was still a little damp from sweat. Her azure eyes and the lines of her face reflected her slight pain and exhaustion, and yet, she had never been more beautiful to him than at that moment and the sight of her struck him to his very center. Now, seeing her survive childbirth, seeing how she exuded pride and joy over her accomplishment, only reinforced the depth of his love for her. He was so overcome with emotion than he felt choked up. Was this how all men felt after their wives gave birth?

“Katara,” he repeated her name reverently.

“Zuko,” she answered, still smiling tiredly.

Once he finally made it to her side, he reached out a shaky hand to brush her smooth, flushed cheek before tucking a strand of still damp hair behind her ear. He leaned down and kissed her softly, before pulling back to press his forehead against hers.
“Thank you,” he whispered hoarsely, “Thank you for keeping your promise to come back to me safely.”

Katara felt her heart squeeze in her chest at his heartfelt words.

“I promised we were going to be fine,” she replied in the same hushed tone.

Unable to contain the relief and joy he was feeling, Zuko pressed his lips to hers, vaguely noticing that she had opened her mouth to say something else. He had planned on only giving her a short, sweet kiss, but the rush of emotions he was experiencing made him deepen the kiss until they were kissing each other passionately. He kissed her thoroughly and would have continued tasting from her lips if it wasn’t for a soft sound coming somewhere from between them that penetrated his mind.

Pulling back immediately, he looked down and finally noticed the small bundle in his wife’s arms. Agni, how could he have forgotten? He sat down on the mattress beside Katara and looked down at the bundle expectantly before he glanced at his smiling wife.

“We have a son, Zuko,” Katara whispered softly, her tone conveying her euphoria and wonder.

“A son,” Zuko repeated in awe and his eyes widened as he again stared at the bundle. He had been right?

He watched with bated breath as Katara pulled back one edge of the blanket and revealed a small, red face. A small tuff of raven-black hair covered the tiny head, but it was the bluish eyes staring back at him that caused Zuko’s breath to hitch as all his worries seeped out from him and in its place was only elation. This small little person was his son...their son and he was beautiful.

“He’s perfect,” Zuko whispered in admiration. He felt pride and warmth spread through his chest.

Lifting his hand, Zuko slowly, hesitantly reached toward his son before carefully touching the soft baby curls. Eyes still wide, the firebender traced a finger down the smooth slope of the baby’s skull before rubbing the soft cheek. His son wiggled slightly as he continued to stare up at him. Zuko remembered Kanna saying that all babies were born with the grayish-blue eyes and he wondered if the color would stay blue or if they would change into his own golden color. He hoped they stayed blue like Katara’s.
Katara smiled. Now that her husband was there with them, she decided to thoroughly check her son. Carefully, she unwrapped the blanket so that she had an unobstructed view of her firstborn. Just like every new mother before her, she subjected her baby to a thorough examination as she counted all ten fingers and toes, smoothed her hand over his pinkish skin she was sure would turn as pale as his father’s, and checked his ears, mouth, and nose.

Zuko watched as his wife inspected their newborn and he found himself following her examination with equal attention.

Once she was satisfied, Katara quickly wrapped her baby snuggly in the blanket so he wouldn’t be cold and looked back to his face. The sight of her son staring into her eyes made her heart constrict in her chest. Silently, she stared into the bluish eyes in wonder as she ran a finger along his soft cheek before she tenderly touched his dark hair that was so much like his father’s. It seemed her son had inherited most of her husband’s characteristics and it made her happy. She wished, however, that her son retained his blue eyes.

She was in awe. She was now a mother. The birth had been extremely painful and she had at one point almost thought that she was about to pass out from the overwhelming agony. But now that she had her son in her arms, the pain, the fear, and everything else was like a distant memory. She had only met her son for a few minutes and she already loved him with all her heart. She felt a deep connection to him that she had never felt before and a fierce love for him erupted in her chest.

Snapping from her thoughts, Katara looked up to see her husband gazing at them in quiet pride and satisfaction and she smiled.

“Here, you should hold him,” Katara said softly as she lifted her arms toward her fascinated husband.

Zuko hesitated as he reached for his son, afraid that he would drop him or hurt him, but he could not deny the fact that he wanted to hold him. He listened intently as Katara told him how to hold the baby. As soon as his son was in his arm, Zuko immediately brought him close to his chest as emotions once again swamped him.

He stared down in awe into the little face of the baby he and his wife had created together. His son stared intently back at him through large eyes and Zuko lifted one hand to once again rub the smooth cheek. He felt his heart swell in joy when his son nuzzled against his finger and cooed.

“Aww, he likes you,” Katara murmured softly before she cooed at the baby. “Say hello to your papa.”
Zuko’s heart fluttered at the name. Now that he was holding his son in his arms it only made the fact that he was someone’s father become much more real. And soon his son would be calling him “papa”. The emotion that was coursing through him at the moment was something he had never felt before. The love he held for his wife was one thing, but the love he felt for his own child was something so vastly different. He had only met his son for a few minutes and already he had become the most important person in his life. Zuko vowed to protect and love him always.

“Hello…son,” he murmured softly and his voice broke with emotion as he stared into the bluish eyes.

A soft sound from his wife had him looking up to see her smiling at them, tears gleaming in her large, cobalt eyes. Looking back down at the precious bundle in his arms, Zuko smiled when he realized his son was still staring at him. Unlike the loud wails from moments before, the baby was now silent and calm.

“My son…Kazuhiko,” he said and he again looked at his wife, waiting for her reaction to the name.

“Kazuhiko,” Katara repeated softly, testing the word. “First, harmonious prince.” She nodded in approval and smiled at her son. “It’s perfect.”

They smiled at each other before laughing quietly when the baby cooed loudly.

The newly named Kazuhiko suddenly scrunched up his little face and he began to fuss in his father’s arms. Zuko glanced down at him in alarm before he looked at Katara in concern.

“I think our little prince is hungry,” Katara said with a soft smile aimed at them both.

Zuko carefully placed Kazuhiko on his wife’s chest and kissed her cheek before sitting back. He watched as Katara opened her nightgown and placed their son against her now bared breasts. The baby rooted around until he finally found her nipple and latched onto it before he began to drink greedily. Zuko saw Katara wince a little, but she just smiled at the hungry baby. Kazuhiko’s tiny hand kneaded his mother’s soft breast as he ate, his eyes drooping a little. Zuko felt awed at the sight.

Silence permeated the air as the new parents proudly watched their son. When the baby finally had enough, Katara carefully burped him against her shoulder. When she brought him back into her arms, they saw that he had already fallen asleep. They smiled indulgently down at their son.
The sound of Katara’s soft yawn made Zuko look up at her and he frowned in concern at the exhaustion in both her eyes and face. And although she was not showing it, Zuko knew she was in pain.

“You should rest,” he told her quietly as he reached up to smooth down the damp hair at her temple. “You deserve it after all that.”

“But the baby—”

Zuko quickly interrupted her protest as he gently placed his thumb on her lips.

“He’s sleeping now,” he said softly, “And he has me and all his family here to keep him safe.”

At his words, Katara finally allowed the tiredness to wash through her and she lay back against the soft pillows with a fatigued sigh. She smiled when Zuko carefully picked up their son from her straining arms and brought him close to his chest. It made her heart warm up at the gentle manner in which Zuko handled their child. Her husband carefully leaned down and kissed her gently before smiling at her.

“I love you,” he whispered, his tone both tender and intense.

“I love you, too,” she replied with a smile.

Relaxing into the pillows, Katara sighed and closed her eyes. Not a moment later, she fell into a deep slumber. Zuko watched her for a moment, unable to take his eyes away from her. After placing a kiss on her forehead, he forced himself to stand up so he could show off his son to the rest of their family he knew would be waiting anxiously outside.

As soon as he stepped into the anteroom, everybody jumped up, eager to meet the new addition to the family. They began to ask questions, but a stern look from the Fire Lord had them toning down their excitement once they realized the baby was asleep.

“I would like for you to meet my son, Kazuhiko,” Zuko said in a low tone so as to not disturb the baby’s rest, but everybody could hear the pride in his voice.
They approached quietly and surrounded the proud father and his son. Hakoda nodded his head in approval while the women exclaimed softly over the baby’s cuteness.

“He looks just like you when you were born, Zuko,” Ursa spoke up with a gentle smile as she stared down into her first grandchild’s sleeping face.

Zuko smiled as his eyes once again became riveted to his son’s face.

“It seems like he might have Katara’s blue eyes,” he said.

He chuckled quietly when Katara’s family beamed with pride. For the next few minutes, Zuko allowed them to fuss over the sleeping baby. Ursa was the first to hold Kazuhiko and Jee watched her with a small smile. Then it was Hakoda’s turn and he smiled widely down at his first grandson. When it was Iroh’s turn, they all watched as a melancholic smile curled his lips as he stared down at the tiny baby.

“My grandnephew will surely grow up into quite a handsome man,” Iroh mused before he added with a grin, “Just like his granduncle!”

Everybody chuckled quietly at his words. When Iroh moved toward Zuko to hand the baby back to him, the young Fire Lord stopped him from moving away. Iroh glanced up curiously at his young nephew.

“You know you will be more of a grandfather to my children than an uncle,” Zuko told him sincerely, “After all, you are like a father to me.”

Zuko watched as tears gathered in his old uncle’s eyes and he smiled when Iroh smiled widely at him.

“Thank you, Zuko,” Iroh said happily.

A few minutes later, Zuko returned with Kazuhiko to the quiet bedchamber. Agni, today just had his emotions all over the place. He walked toward the bed and smiled down at his sleeping wife. He cradled his slumbering son for another moment, still marveling at the fact that he was now a father.
After everything that had happened, after all the hardships, even after Yin-Min’s treachery, Katara and he were finally parents. His child seemed so tiny, so delicate in his large arms, but Zuko vowed to help him grow big and strong, and if Kazuhiko turned out to be a firebender, Zuko would train him to be a firebending master just like him. And one day this little person would take his place and become Fire Lord to a mighty nation.

Staring silently into Kazuhiko’s face for a moment longer, Zuko carefully placed him on the crib that he was sure Jiao had moved close to the bed. It had been created by one of the best carpenters in the capital, made of an exquisite mahogany wood, and had already been placed in the room weeks ago for this precise moment. Zuko held his breath when his son whimpered a little before relaxing when Kazuhiko let out a little sigh and went back to sleep. Carefully moving the chair closer, the young Fire Lord sat and exhaled deeply as the past day finally caught up with him. He had not slept for an entire day and yet he could not seem to take his eyes away from the two people that he held closest to his heart.

It was at the moment, as he watched over his small family, that Zuko realized he had done the right thing in going against his father during the war and defying his country’s traditions by marrying a Water Tribe woman, a woman he married for love and not one for convenience. And this—his wife, his son, his family—was his reward for his efforts. They were the most valuable of treasures and he vowed to love, cherish, and protect them until his last dying breath.
Katara smiled at Jiao as the maid made sure everything was perfectly in place on the elaborate royal robes the Fire Lady was wearing. It was a dark maroon silk, trimmed with black and golden designs, but it was looser than what she usually wore in order to hide her still rounded belly. Her stomach wasn’t as pronounced as when she was still pregnant, but it had yet to return to its normal size.

Three weeks had passed since Kazuhiko’s birth. Zuko had wanted to wait until she was recovered before they formally introduced the heir to the Fire Nation, as was tradition. She and Zuko had been awake since dawn to make sure everything was in order for the celebration. Katara still felt twinges of pain and soreness, but they were not as bad as the first few days. Her waterbending had been able to heal some of the damage, but her body had to do the rest of the work.

In her time at the Northern Water Tribe, she learned that the water’s healing power can treat abnormalities or injuries to the body, but couldn’t really do much for a normally functioning body. Despite the stress she had put on hers by carrying Kazu for nine months, female bodies were designed for that purpose, and reacting exactly as it should after giving birth. Thus, there was nothing ‘wrong’ with her that her waterbending could fix.

There was still some bleeding and cramps as her womb contracted to its normal size. Her breasts filled with milk to feed her growing baby, her nipples raw and overly sensitive, often uncomfortable when they were too full. Not to mention taking care of a newborn was exhausting. She knew it would take some time to return to normal and get used to taking care of a newborn. But despite all that, she could not be happier.

Hearing a soft coo coming from the crib next to her side of the bed, Katara smiled as she immediately made her way toward it. She smiled fondly as she stared down at her son, who waved his chubby arms in the air when he saw her leaning over him. Reaching down, she caressed his smooth cheek and rubbed his belly. He had woken up and already been fed, which was why she was finally getting ready for the event.

Jiao, along with her other duties, had been of great help the last few weeks, giving her advice and help without being overbearing or intrusive. Katara knew the maid would make a great caretaker for Kazuhiko once he was a little older.

Katara laughed softly when Kazu, the nickname they had taken to using instead of his full name, grabbed her finger and held on tightly. Her heart swelled with love as she gazed down at him. At just a few weeks old he already looked so much like his father, and she knew he was going to grow up into a handsome man. She would have to make sure to keep the horde of young women from throwing themselves at him, she mused with both amusement and distaste.
Kazu shook her finger and she smiled as she stared into his bluish eyes. She really hoped that as he got older, his eyes would remain the same shade as her blue eyes, which would show her mark on him. But she knew that with mixed heritage babies, eye color wasn’t set at birth as it was when a child had two parents from the same background. No matter what his eye color, she loved him more than she ever thought possible.

She had despaired of ever having children, of never knowing the joys of motherhood, and because of that fear, her son was even more special and precious to her. She did not know what she would do if anything were to happen to him.

“My lady, I need to fix your hair. It’s almost time for the ceremony,” Jiao’s voice sounded behind her.

Jiao smiled softly.

“I understand. I couldn’t keep my eyes off Ichiro when he was born,” the maid said wistfully before she added with a small laugh, “Although he didn’t want to admit it, I’m sure it made Kuo jealous.”

Both women laughed at her husband’s antics before they started comparing their sons’ qualities and exclaiming over their cuteness with motherly pride. With one last caress of Kazu’s tuff of dark hair, the waterbender walked toward her vanity and sat down on the plush stool while Jiao picked up the brush and began to work. From the reflection of the mirror, Katara could see her son still waving his hands in the air.

A moment later, they heard one of the large doors open and they looked over to see the tall Fire Lord walk in. Katara eyed him appreciatively in all his finery. He was wearing a black formal robe trimmed in gold, a thick sash in deep burgundy wrapped around his waist, and his golden fire crown nestled neatly in a small topknot. The rest of his long dark hair fell smoothly down his broad back. His eyes darted to the crib before he glanced back to her.

“Are you almost ready?” Zuko asked his wife as he watched Jiao work on her hair.

“Almost,” Katara replied.
Seeing that the women were occupied, Zuko walked toward the wooden crib and looked down. He smiled at Kazu when the baby finally noticed him, and began waving his arms and kicking his tiny feet in excitement. His wife’s blue eyes on their son’s face made his heart warm with affection and he hoped they stayed blue, though he would not mind if they turned golden like his own. However, from what he had seen, eye colors seem to be connected to the element a person could bend, so he was beginning to wonder if he should perhaps hope Kazu’s eyes changed to gold.

Although he would not mind whatsoever if Kazu turned out to be a waterbender, Zuko hoped he was a firebender, just so his son would not have to deal with the royal council and the Fire Nation citizens opposing his right to the throne. Fire was the element of the Fire Nation, which was why its rulers were called Fire Lords. He was sure the citizens would not be pleased with having a waterbender rule over them, especially since not many years had passed since the end of the war.

Zuko frowned darkly at the thought, wishing there was some way he could go against their opposition, but knowing there was nothing he or Katara could do. It was just the way the world work. Either way, Zuko planned to train Kazuhiko to become a magnificent warrior, a great heir to the throne, and an honorable man. Zuko could not wait until Kazu was old enough to be trained for all those things. It was still too early to tell which element the little prince would be able to bend or if he was a bender at all, so for now he decided to worry about the issue when it presented itself and just focus on his time with his newborn son for the moment.

He was still adjusting to being a father. The many nights where Kazu would wake them up with loud cries and wails were exhausting for both Katara and him. It was harder for him to distinguish why their son was crying, but Katara seemed to instinctively know if he was hungry, needed a diaper change, or just wanted to be held. When it seemed as if he had finally settled down and they could go back to sleep, Kazu would only start crying again. But despite the sleepless nights, they could not be happier with their son.

He was especially excited, however, at the prospect of being able to play with Kazu once he was a little older. Zuko remembered how he had wished to play games with his father when he was young. He recalled one time in particular, when he was about five years old, when he had run to his sire to ask him if they could play a game. Ozai had pushed him away and sneered at his childishness before ordering him to return to his caretakers. From then on, Zuko had learned not to bother his father with such things. He did not want his own son to have the same sad childhood.

Zuko promised himself that Kazu would never have to worry about getting his attention or approval, or wonder if he was cared for and loved. He would definitely never have to worry about being forced into an Agni Kai. Smiling, Zuko reached down to run his finger softly along Kazu’s cheek before grinning when his son immediately grasped his finger within his small fist. It still amazed him to know he had been part of creating something this precious, something this sweetly innocent. He almost wished that Kazu would never grow up so he would never know of the ugliness of the world, of pain, fear, and horror, but alas, life did not work that way. Besides, there was also much wonder, joy and happiness in life if one were to look for it, or as was his case, if he had someone to share it with. He wanted Kazu to have such happiness one day.
Silently watching from the mirror’s reflection, Katara felt her heart expand as she saw her taciturn husband chuckle softly as he picked up their son with tender care. She loved how gentle Zuko was with the baby. He held him to his chest as if Kazu were the most fragile, the most valuable, of treasures. She knew Zuko still thought he was going to make a mistake and he wasn’t really confident about his parental skills, but his efforts were what truly mattered. He actually cared about being part of their son’s life. And the love and protectiveness he felt toward Kazuhiko was obvious to anyone who saw him interacting with his son.

“Katara?” her husband’s baritone snapped her from her thoughts. “Are you ready to leave?”

She finally noticed that Jiao had already left after she finished styling her hair and had already placed her fire crown on her head. Smiling, the waterbender stood up and walked toward her two favorite men with slow, careful steps. She wasn’t completely healed as of yet.

“You look beautiful,” Zuko told her with a smile as he watched her approach.

Katara let out a small laugh.

“That’s probably because I’m no longer as huge as a komodo rhino anymore,” she teased.

“You’re exaggerating,” he said passively before he teasingly added, “You were only as big as a cow-pig.”

“Shut up,” Katara mockingly growled as she playfully slapped his shoulder, which caused him to chuckle.

Laughing, Katara leaned up on her toes and he leaned down to take her offered lips in a deep kiss. They pulled apart to grin at Kazuhiko when he gurgled between them, flailing his fists in the air.

“Shall we go?” Zuko asked his wife as she cooed at their son and tickled his chin.

“Yes,” Katara replied with a firm nod.
Soon they were walking down the palace corridors with Kuo and Shen following silently behind the royal family. Although they had tried to remain stoic during their job, Katara had, on several occasions, caught the two guards making funny faces or cooing at the heir when they thought nobody was looking. Seeing Shen, the more serious of the two, making goofy expressions to humor the little prince made the Fire Lady chuckle.

Just as they neared the grand balcony that overlooked the city, they met up with their families, Aang, and Toph. Having them all together during the announcement was a display of the peace between all nations to the citizens of the Fire Nation. Iroh and Hakoda immediately stepped forward to hold the baby and frowned at one another when they ended up bumping into each other because of their eagerness. The small group laughed as the baby’s maternal grandfather and his paternal ‘grandfather’ seized each other up.

“Come on, everybody is waiting,” Zuko said as he brushed past the two men with Kazu in his arms.

Smiling, Katara immediately fell into step with him while everybody else followed after them. Before stepping out onto the balcony, Zuko handed Kazuhiko to Katara. Schooling his features, Zuko placed a hand on his wife’s lower back and they walked steadily forward while the others followed their lead. As soon as they stepped to the railing of the great balcony, they gazed down at the crowd waiting to get their first glimpse of the new heir. As soon as they were spotted, the multitude of people immediately began to cheer. Kazu fussed a little at the sudden noise, but quieted when his mother rocked him soothingly in her arms.

Zuko raised his arm and waited until the clapping and cheering slowly began to dwindle into a quiet hush.

“Good citizens of the Fire Nation,” he proclaimed in a loud voice so he could be heard. “I, Fire Lord Zuko, proudly stand before you today to present the much awaited addition to my family. My beloved wife, Fire Lady Katara, has gifted me with a healthy son.”

He paused when a cheer rose up from the crowd, which increased in volume when their Fire Lady smiled widely at them. Turning to Katara, he carefully picked up his son from her arms before turning back to the awaiting crowd. Zuko continued speaking once everybody was silent again, knowing that they were waiting to hear the heir’s name.

“I present to you my heir and your future Fire Lord, Prince Kazuhiko!” he announced loudly and proudly.

“Long live Prince Kazuhiko!”
The gathered crowd immediately exploded into uproarious cheers and applause that had the little prince fussing in displeasure at the loud noise. Inwardly chuckling, Zuko once again handed the baby to his wife before addressing the cheering crowd.

“Go forth and celebrate this most glorious day!”

Satisfied with the people’s reaction as they continued to applaud exuberantly, the royal couple turned away and walked back inside the opulent palace with their family following behind.

“That went well,” Katara said with a smile as she soothingly rocked Kazu in her arms until he settled once again.

“Now we just have to introduce him to the royal court,” Zuko replied dryly.

“Let’s see how many people suck up to us this time,” the waterbender quipped with a laugh.

“I’m not looking forward to that,” the Fire Lord muttered as he casually flicked a long dark strand of his hair over his shoulder, causing Katara to grin at him.

Soon they were standing at the dais in the already crowded banquet hall. The nobility craned their necks and elbowed each other out of the way so they could have their first glimpse of the heir. The Fire Lord raised a hand to motion them to silence and the people immediately quieted in curiosity. Standing amongst the crowd, the royal couple’s family watched on with pride and joy. The nobility watched as their Fire Lord turned to their lady, who carefully handed the child to him, before turning to face the room.

“I come before the Royal Court of the Fire Nation to present to you my son and heir,” he announced in a strong, loud voice as he carefully held up the baby for everyone to gaze upon. “Prince Kazuhiko.”

The crowd bowed their heads respectfully before applauding, some enthusiastically and others politely. Zuko suppressed an amused eye roll and Katara smiled widely when Sokka, Toph, and Aang whistled and cheered boisterously, ignoring the disapproving frowns the older nobility sent their way. Holding his son close to his chest with one arm, Zuko took Katara’s hand in the other and helped her down the dais.
As soon as they reached the bottom, the crowd surged forward and surrounded the small royal family. They enthusiastically congratulated the royal couple and exclaimed over the heir’s cuteness. Zuko felt pride swell within him at how his son was completely unfazed by the gathered crowd and instead just stared at them. He would occasionally coo, which caused the noblewomen to fawn over the little prince, much to Katara’s amusement. After a few more minutes of their exuberance, Zuko finally excused himself and his family so they could take a much needed breath of air.

As they made their way to where their family was sitting, the royal couple smiled when Lady Yoon Hee and Physician Toshiro approached them. The older couple bowed respectfully before smiling once they straightened themselves.

“Congratulations my lord, my lady,” Toshiro began amicably before he turned to the waterbender. “How are you feeling, my lady?”

Katara smiled at his concern.

“Much better, thank you.”

“My wife told me it was an easy birth,” the old physician added kindly before he frowned, “That is good. It would have been devastating if something had gone wrong.”

“Yes, but fortunately everything came out well,” Yoon Hee spoke up as she smiled reassuringly at the younger couple.

“Yes, and now you have a beautiful baby boy,” Toshiro agreed with another smile as he glanced down at the baby resting in his father’s arms. He chuckled when the royal couple beamed with pride.

After conversing for a short while, the physician and his wife bowed their heads and excused themselves so the royal couple could greet their other guests. Zuko and Katara were stopped a few more times by other members of the nobility wanting their first glimpse of the heir before they finally made it to the area where their family was sitting.

As she held Kazu in her arms, Katara could not help grinning at everybody’s antics. She did not know who was more proud of the baby—Zuko, her father, or Uncle Iroh as they fought over each other to get Kazu’s attention. She exchanged an exasperated and amused look with her mother-in-law and Suki, who returned her look with a smile and a grin. Sokka was once again teasing Aang and Toph about the possibility of their future babies as he stuffed his mouth with food from the banquet table. Aang was beet red and kept shifting in his seat while Toph—almost equally as red—narrowed her eyes into dangerous slits. When Sokka made another embarrassing remark with subtle suggestions on how the Avatar could get his earthbender with child, Toph finally had enough and grabbed the back of the tribesman’s head and smashed his face into his plate.

“Ow!” Sokka cried as he held onto his sore nose and turned to glare at the short earthbender, ignoring how everybody else laughed at the food plastered all over his face. “Geez, maybe you shouldn’t have kids. You’d be such a violent mom!”

“As long as they don’t act like your stupid ass, I’ll be a great mom,” Toph sniffed.

“Ha!” the blue-eyed warrior exclaimed as he wiped his face with a napkin. “Those poor kids. I feel sorry for them already.”

“Shut up!” Toph growled as she again smashed his face into his food.

“Ack!” Sokka choked before he lifted his head to once again glare at the earthbender as pieces of food dripped down his chin. “Stop doing that you crazy woman!”

“I’ll stop when you stop being an idiot,” Toph retorted as she crossed her arms over her chest.

Sokka once again cleaned his face, muttering about all the delicious food that had been wasted, before he turned to the still blushing Avatar.

“Run while you still can, Aang,” he said seriously, “Maybe it’d be best if you embraced your traditions and become a celibate monk. Save yourself the trouble.”

“What did you say?!” Toph growled as she raised one fist up threateningly.

The others laughed at them while Zuko shook his head and grinned. One would think Sokka would have learned his lesson not to tease and embarrass Toph if he wanted to avoid any physical pain. Before Sokka could reply to the earthbender, however, he was interrupted by Aang’s shy yet sincere voice.
“I can’t be a…celibate monk. I’d die without Toph,” he mumbled then flushed even more when he realized everybody had heard him. When his girlfriend’s eyes widened and her whole face turned red, the airbender hurriedly added, “And Toph would be a great mom…just sometime later… in the future…”

He cleared his throat and rubbed the back of his neck nervously when everybody gaped at him, but he was more interested in Toph’s reaction. Would she accept his indirect proposal of their future together? The short woman snapped her mouth shut as she stared in his direction for a moment, and Aang felt his heart start to pound in anxiety, knowing she was gauging his sincerity through his vibrations. A moment later, Toph grinned as she wrapped an arm around his neck in her version of an affectionate hold and Aang immediately relaxed.

“You’re stuck with me now, Twinkletoes,” she said with a chuckle that Aang found endearing, but sounded evil to everybody else.

“You guys are made for each other, alright,” Sokka muttered with a roll of his eyes, but was luckily ignored by the younger couple as they grinned goofily at each other, not that Toph could actually see his grin.

“Leave them alone, Sokka,” Suki told him firmly as she stared at her husband intensely, though her lips twitched in amusement.

“Fine!” the young man groused as he threw his hands dramatically in the air. “No sense in wasting more food anyway.”

The others laughed as they resumed with their meal. Glancing at each other, Zuko and Katara smiled. The Fire Lord discreetly placed his hand on his wife’s thigh, not as a sexual overture, but as a form of contact meant to convey and receive comfort and contentment. Katara carefully cradled their son with one arm as she reached down to gently squeeze her husband’s hand with the other before returning it to its previous place to help her hold Kazu.

A few hours later, Katara noticed that her son was becoming restless and she knew he was getting hungry and sleepy. She thought it was best if she made their excuses and leave before Kazu began to demonstrate his displeasure with loud squalls and wails for everyone to hear. Leaning closer to her husband, she quietly told him she was retiring to their room for the night and to please explain her absence to their guests. Zuko glanced down to see Kazu beginning to fuss and he nodded his head in understanding.

“I’ll join you once I’m finished here,” he told her quietly.
Nodding, Katara smiled at him before she turned to bid goodnight to their family who repeated her sentiment with indulgent smiles aimed at the baby boy. Zuko helped her stand and he watched as his wife and son made their way to the doors. Shen and Kuo appeared immediately by their lady’s side to escort her and the baby to their royal chambers. Once they were out of sight, Zuko decided to quickly say goodbye to the guests so he could be with his family in the privacy of their room.

He went around to once again thank the most prominent of the nobles and his advisors for attending his heir’s presentation while biding them a good rest of the day. He resisted the urge to roll his eyes or snort at the obvious flattery many of them employed to get into his good graces. Just as he was about to head toward the exit, a round figure stepped in front of him. Zuko felt his irritation flare when he realized it was Wei. The advisor had not done anything suspicious as of late, but he was still annoying and a pain when he argued against any of Zuko’s ideas.

“Congratulation on your son, Young One,” the old advisor began with a bow and a smirk on his thin lips. “It is a blessing your wife wasn’t really barren and finally gave you an heir. She really makes beautiful babies.”

“Oh, of course,” Zuko responded in a smooth tone that hid his annoyance with the advisor. “She’s a beautiful woman. I’m sure my heir will inherit his mother’s other qualities not just her physical beauty.”

“Ah, but of course,” Wei responded easily.

Before the old advisor could say anything else, Zuko interrupted him with a sharp, “You will excuse me, I have other more important matters to attend to.”

Without another word, Zuko strode past Wei, who was scowling, and resumed his sedate walk toward his destination. Wei was still a thorn on his side and did not hesitate to irritate and anger him, but unfortunately, the old advisor had not done anything bad to merit him to be dismissed from his post. And although Zuko still had his suspicions of Wei consorting with the rebels and their plot to set Ozai free, there still had not been any evidence that would indicate his involvement and treason.

A deep frown settled on the young Fire Lord’s face as he made his way toward the royal chambers. Months had passed and there still had not been any word about Jianguo or his whereabouts. The traitor had not even sent him another letter to taunt him like he had done before. What could Jianguo be planning? The silence only made Zuko’s sense of impending doom to heighten, for he was sure the bastard had not given up on his plans to infiltrate the Fire Nation.

After Kazuhiko was born, Zuko had woken up a few times in the middle of the night with a muffled shout, an enraged snarl on his lips or a horrified expression on his face, as nightmares of Jianguo sneaking into the room to harm his family haunted him. He would immediately check to see if Katara was still sleeping next to him before he would swiftly check on Kazu to reassure himself that the boy was safe before he would return to Katara’s side to press her tightly against his body. Sometimes Katara would wake up at the sound of his quietly distressed moans or his movements and she would wrap him in her arms to comfort and reassure him. It only infuriated him more that there was nothing he could do and that he had been unable to capture Jianguo after all this time. It made him feel like a failure.

Shaking his head, Zuko dispelled his dark thoughts once he realized he was standing in front of the golden doors that led to their chambers. He opened the doors and crossed the anteroom. Once he stood before the other set of doors, he knocked lightly to alert Katara to his presence before quietly opening one of the doors. He stepped inside, closing the door softly behind him, and immediately searched for his wife. When his eyes landed on her, a smile stretched his lips as she gave him a welcoming smile. She was sitting on their bed with her back against the headboard, holding their son to her exposed chest. She had changed from her formal robes and was now wearing a comfortable, flowing nightdress.

Silently, the firebender walked toward them. However, his smile faltered a little at the exhaustion he could detect in his wife’s eyes. Either because she had to wake up to comfort or feed their son in the middle of the night or because of her discomfort and pain from the birth, Katara had not been sleeping well. He had tried to rush to Kazu’s side whenever he started to fuss before he woke up Katara, but Zuko was not always successful, especially when it wasn’t his chest that the baby wanted to latch onto. But most of the time, it was because some innate motherly instinct always alerted Katara that her son needed her at the smallest sound Kazuhiko made.

“I thought you would’ve stayed at the celebration a little longer,” she spoke up softly.

Zuko shrugged as he reached up to remove his fire crown before placing it next to hers in the ebony box.

“It became boring once you and Kazuhiko left,” he replied as he smoothed down his long dark hair. “Sokka was starting to get drunk, though, and I decided it was best I left before his teasing brought down a bloodbath from a vengeful Toph.”

Katara laughed quietly at his playful tone before quieting down when Kazu fussed a little and scrunched up his nose as he suckled at her breast. The waterbender watched as her husband removed his royal robes and searched through their large wardrobe to pull out a pair of dark sleeping pants. Her eyes roamed over his lean, muscular frame before glancing back down to her feeding son to distract herself from the path her mind was leading to. She looked back up when she felt Zuko settling onto the bed next to her and she reveled at the warmth that radiated off of him and the masculine scent that reached her senses. She smiled at him warmly before she once again looked down at her son when he began to knead her breast with his tiny fist as his gummy mouth sucked more furiously at her nipple.

Zuko chuckled at the concentrated expression on Kazu’s small face as he drank up his mother’s milk. Sitting closely side by side, the new parents gazed down affectionately at their son, still awed that they had created this adorable, little being. Once he was satisfied, Kazuhiko detached himself from his mother’s reddened nipple and yawned softly. Smiling, Katara lifted him up to her shoulder where Zuko had already place a soft cloth, and she gently patted his back until the boy burped. Once that was finished, the waterbender gently brought him down upon the mattress between his parents and tenderly rubbed his belly to lull him to sleep. A moment later, Kazu’s eyelids grew heavy and he let out a little, contented sigh as he fell asleep against his father’s hip.

Smiling, Zuko looked up in time to see Katara stretch her arms and back as she gave a tired yawn. His breath hitched as his eyes landed on her swollen breasts, heavy with milk, and he could not help as he stared ravenously at them. He felt his arousal spike as her soft mounds bounced at her movements, the dusky peaks teasing him, and he felt his mouth water. He tried to steer his thoughts to something else, but he could not help himself.

It had been a while since he had made love to his waterbender. Felt her writhing beneath him or rocking sensually above him. Her wet silky walls enveloping him as they wrapped themselves around each other as they strove for that glorious end. He closed his eyes and took a deep breath as the memories just made his arousal even harder. He needed to stop. He had to wait until Katara was ready to make love to him again. After Kazuhiko’s birth, his wife had not been amenable to being touched because her body was still recovering. She was exhausted, irritable, and uncomfortable most of the time. The constant demands of a newborn and her duties as Fire lady took a toll on her. Even though Zuko really tried to help there was only so much he could do, and he understood sex was the last thing on her mind. She had insisted on pleasing him a few times with those wonderful hands and that amazing mouth of hers whenever Kazu had been looked after by their other family members or Jiao. Most of the time, however, Katara was so exhausted that she would immediately fall asleep when her head touched her pillow and one time, much to her embarrassment, when she started to jerk him off. He had not had the heart to wake her up, so he had to shut himself in the bathing room to finish what she had started.

But damn, he wanted her so badly.

Once he felt he was in control of his desires, the firebender opened his eyes to see Katara tuck her breasts back into her nightdress, a part of him lamenting their disappearance. In an attempt to calm his thoughts and heated blood, Zuko stared down at his sleeping son and gently caressed his soft dark hair.

“I’ll put him in his crib,” he said quietly as he carefully picked up the slumbering baby.
Katara slowly knotted the ties back in place and smoothed her clothes down as she watched Zuko walk toward the wooden crib. He gently deposited their son in the crib, a small smile on his lips as he stared proudly down at Kazu. Carefully, Katara slid down so she was lying on her back in order to ease her strained muscles and suppressed a tired groan. She felt like all her energy had left her that day, which she knew was common for women after giving birth.

Katara sighed as she stared at Zuko. She had seen the lust in her husband’s golden eyes and was glad that he had not acted upon his desires. Oh, she wanted him, but she was not completely healed and she was not yet comfortable with her body to stand naked before him. Her stomach was bigger and not as firm as before and she felt self-conscious about it. Not to mention the stretch marks that now marred her once perfect skin. She knew Zuko would not mind, he had told her many times during her pregnancy that he found her beautiful, but she could not help it. She wanted to exercise first in order to restore her body to the way it was, at least as much as possible, before she was comfortable enough to once again let Zuko see her naked again.

She knew the wait was affecting him greatly, so she had insisted on using her hands and her mouth to relieve him of his sexual frustrations. He had protested at first and felt a little guilty that he was the only one receiving pleasure, but she did not mind. Pleasuring him pleased her immensely. She loved it when she was able to make him go crazy when she stroked him with her hands or pushed his throbbing cock deeply down her throat. It made her feel extremely smug and powerful when she reduced him to a mess of thoroughly pleased male flesh, causing him to utter incoherent, half formed sentences that were made up of her name, the pleasure she was giving him, and how he could not wait to take her over and over again. Her cheeks would flush and her body would tingle when he began to utter dirty, naughty words about how he would take her. Katara shook her head and took a deep breath, calming her thoughts. Just a few more weeks and then she could have him.

She let a smile touch her lips when Zuko walked back toward the bed and climbed in next to her. He propped himself on his elbow as he lay on his side to smile down at her as he lifted his other hand to tuck a strand of her hair behind her ear.

“Kazuhiko’s presentation was a success,” the firebender spoke up coolly, though pride and pleasure colored his tone.

Katara smiled up at him.

“How could anyone not be affected by Kazu’s adorable cuteness?” she said with a quiet laugh.

“That’s true. Even Wei admitted our son was a beautiful baby,” Zuko replied smugly, although he decided not to repeat the rest of the old advisor’s words.
“He must be jealous he could never create such beautiful babies like us,” the waterbender said with an impish chuckle.

“We should thank the gods Wei has never reproduced. At least, as far as we know,” he responded passively, though humor danced in his eyes, “Can you imagine?”

The brunette laughed. They talked more in length about the presentation and what people had said about the little prince. Zuko could not help chuckling when Katara groused that thanks to him, Kazu would grow up just as handsome as his father, and she would need to keep an eye for salivating fangirls ready to sink their claws into him.

“Just wait until we have a daughter and she starts being surrounded by amorous suitors,” she retorted teasingly. She grinned when Zuko immediately frowned darkly at the thought.

“I will throw them in prison before they can get near her,” he growled, his eyes narrowed at the thought of any man panting after a daughter of his.

Katara rolled her eyes and laughed at him. Zuko glowered at her for her amusement, but soon he was laughing along with her.

“Now you know how my father must feel about you!” she teased.

She grinned when he grimaced at her words.

“As much as I would love another child, I’d rather we wait a few years from now,” Katara told him truthfully with a grin. “One crying baby is enough.”

“I completely agree,” Zuko replied with a low chuckle.

Sighing softly, he caressed her cheek once they calmed down and stared at each other.

“I hope we have a daughter next,” he said in a soft tone, “One as beautiful, strong, and smart like her
The blue-eyed waterbender’s smile turned tender and wistful at his wish. It made her heart swell and warm at the knowledge that Zuko wished to have more children with her, even though she had already given him his heir. He didn’t just want to do his duty to their nation, but truly wanted to build a family with her. How could she not love this man? She was the luckiest woman in the world.

Zuko observed the love and tenderness in his wife’s blue eyes and he leaned down to gently press his lips to her sweet, soft ones. When he pulled back, he caressed her cheek.

“Thank you,” he said, his tone low and affectionate.

“For what?” she asked.

“For accepting to be mine, for making me yours,” he replied, “For giving me a family.”

A smile appeared on Katara’s lips as she reached up to cup his scarred cheek. “I’m grateful to you for the same reasons and much more.”

Unable to help himself at her words and the look in her eyes, Zuko leaned over her to capture her mouth in a deep, passionate kiss. He meant to kiss her briefly, especially since he could see that she was tired and needed sleep, but when she opened her mouth to him while her hands tangled in his long hair, he deepened the kiss and pressed himself tightly against her. When she moaned softly and licked at his lower lip, the firebender’s need became too great, too urgent, that he forgot his promise to wait for her until she was ready for him. His hands began to feverishly roam along her curves while he sucked on her tongue and lips, murmuring her name.

Katara was enjoying Zuko’s kisses and caresses as her body warmed in desire, but she was snapped from her daze when she felt him begin to pull up the hem of her nightdress between their bodies. With a gasp, she moved away from his lips and placed a hand on his chest to stop him when he tried to follow her mouth.

“Zuko, wait,” she panted softly. “I can’t…Not yet.”

Zuko immediately leaned away from her and looked down at her guiltily. He had completely lost control.
“I’m sorry,” he rasped and winced at the roughness of his voice.

“Don’t be,” she told him firmly, “You didn’t do anything wrong.” She paused before she added with a grimace, “I just…”

“I know,” Zuko assured her, “I know I need to be patient. You just gave birth and you need time to heal.”

Katara bit her lip as she distractedly drew imaginary designs on his naked, muscular chest.

“It’s not just that…” she trailed off before she added, “By body…is not the same as it was before.”

“That doesn’t bother me,” he replied with a small frown, “Especially since the changes in your body are due to you bringing our son into the world.” Then more softly, he added, “I will always love you and your body no matter what. But I’ll be patient until you feel comfortable.”

“Thank you, Zuko,” Katara told him with a soft smile before she slipped her hand between their bodies so she could cup his semi-erect shaft, causing her husband to groan almost inaudibly. “But if you want, I can—”

“No,” Zuko forced himself to say and he shook his head.

He wanted it, gods, he wanted her touch on him, but he did not want to be selfish. Even if she was willing, he could not dismiss the fatigue in her eyes nor the dark circles under them. She was barely getting any sleep as it was and demanding she see to his needs wasn’t going to help matters at all.

“You need some sleep,” he told her softly, “Today was a busy day.”

“I can sleep once I’ve pleasured you,” she purred quietly, steadfastly.

Before Zuko could protest again, she rubbed his erection more firmly through his clothes, smiling when he gasped her name and he grew harder in her hand. His hips automatically rocked into her touch while his breathing accelerated and she knew she had him where she wanted him. She appreciated his concern, but she missed being intimate with him. Even if they could not actually go through the whole act of lovemaking, she wanted to give him at least this. Murmuring his name, she lifted her face and he immediately leaned down to capture her mouth in a desperate kiss as she continued to stroke his covered length. When she finally slipped her hand inside and grasped him, the firebender moaned quietly at the touch of her soft skin.

Smiling, Katara gently stroked him for a moment, listening to his quiet panting breaths and strained callings of her name. She glanced down between their bodies to see that their movements had caused the mushroomed head of his cock, red and swollen, to peek out from the edge of his sleeping pants. Licking her lips, she pressed her thumb along the weeping tip and gently rubbed it along the small slit, spreading the moisture along the entire head, causing Zuko to let out a loud groan of pleasure as he jerked in her grasp.

They froze instantly when a soft sound came from the crib and they held their breaths, waiting to see if Kazuhiko woke up with loud cries. When no other sound reached their ears, they relaxed and smiled wryly at each for forgetting they were not alone. With a sigh, Zuko moved to lie back down next to Katara, but she did not let him pull away from her. He looked down both questioningly and hopefully into her eyes. The few times she had pleasured him had been when Kazu had been in the care of someone else and they were alone because she—and him as well— did not feel comfortable engaging in such intimate acts with their son in the room. He watched as she gave him a small, sultry smile and he instantly felt his shaft jolt in lust.

She pressed against his chest and he moved away with a small frown when she carefully slipped from the bed. He watched as she stood up and turned to him with that same seductive smile before she held out her hand for him. Zuko immediately grasped her hand and slid from the bed so that he was standing next to her. He groaned softly when she pressed her entire body along his entire frame and pressed a kiss against his throat. She was torturing him.

“Can you grab one of the bedsheets, please?” she asked softly as she pulled slightly away from him.

Swallowing thickly, Zuko nodded his head before he quickly pulled one of the sheets covering the bed and placed it over his arm. She smiled as she once again grasped his hand and walked away from the bed. Intrigued, and painfully aroused, Zuko followed her without question. They paused briefly to make sure Kazu was still sleeping before moving again. The firebender grinned when Katara led them to the doors toward the antechamber and finally understood what she was doing. When they stepped into the other room, Zuko quickly set out to light a few candles while Katara carefully closed the door. She made sure to leave it slightly ajar so they could still hear the baby in case he woke up. When she turned back around, she laughed quietly when she realized her husband had already gathered a pile of cushions and placed the sheet over them as he waited eagerly for her.

Her eyes drifted lower, taking in his magnificent physique, before landing on that part of his body that she craved but still could not truly have for the moment. She let her lips curl into a smile at the sight of him hard and bulging prominently in his pants.

“Katara,” he rasped her name in a strained tone.

The waterbender glided toward him, both smug at his great need for her and eager to pleasure him. When she finally stood before him, Zuko quickly wrapped his arms around her waist and pulled her flush against him as he bent down to crash his mouth against hers in a heated kiss. As their tongues curled around each other and they sucked each other’s lips, the dark-haired male slowly rubbed his throbbing erection against his wife’s stomach, needing more stimulation to satisfy his raging desires. He moaned approvingly into her moist mouth when her hands reached for the hem of his sleeping pants, caressing the skin of his hips, before she quickly pulled them down so that they fell around his ankles. As he stepped away from them, Katara gently pushed against his naked chest and he fell upon the covered cushions with an excited groan.

Katara moaned at the sight of her husband panting in arousal, sprawled on the pile of cushions in all his naked glory, his golden eyes dark and intense as he stared up at her, imploring her to touch him and bring him to orgasm. Again, her eyes drifted to his cock to see the thick length protruding almost proudly from his groin, straining for her as a thin line of his liquid arousal slid down the shaft. She glanced back to his face to smile sultrily at him.

Heart pounding in his chest, Zuko watched with bated breath as his enchanting water nymph lowered herself slowly to her knees and he parted his legs eagerly so she could crawl between them. He moaned softly when she placed her hands, soft and warm, on his knees before slowly, almost teasingly, running them up his thighs, so close to his throbbing shaft needing her touch. He found it erotic that there he was, nude and almost vulnerable, while Katara was fully clothed as she built up the suspense.

“Mm,” she murmured softly as her fingers gently kneaded his upper thighs, “You’re so hard, Zuko.”

“Please,” he could not help but moan almost pitifully.

Damn, he needed her touch and fast. He could not take the suspense, the need coursing almost violently in his veins, any longer. If he wasn’t afraid of hurting her in her current condition, he would have already taken control and taken his pleasure from his lush wife. But he also could not deny how aroused her actions made him as she took her time. He cried out when her hand finally grasped his length in a tight hold and stroked him firmly a couple of times.

“Shit,” he moaned, unable to stop the curse from slipping from his mouth.
Katara chuckled quietly. She loved it when she reduced the proper and refined Fire Lord to a moaning, desperate man as she overwhelmed him with pleasure.

“What do you want me to do, Zuko?” she asked in soft purr.

“Take me into your mouth,” he demanded hoarsely.

“Mm, with pleasure, my lord,” she purred with gleaming azure eyes.

She stuck her tongue out to lick up the wet line of his seed from the base of his shaft up to the head before engulfing him snuggly into her mouth and began to suck him firmly.

“Yessss,” Zuko hissed as he reached down to place his hand on the back of her head. “So good.”

Damn, why did he even bother protesting in the beginning? Panting softly, he glanced down to see her looking intently at his face as she bobbed her head up and down, her right hand stroking the base of him as her tongue swirled around the rest of his length submerged in her wet, warm mouth. He groaned when she pulled back a little, watching as his cock, slick with her saliva, slid from between her plump lips. He gasped when she gently sucked on the swollen head before he choked when he felt the tip of her tongue tease the slit, causing a few more drops of his seed to leak out. Then she engulfed him into her mouth as far as she could and his eyes rolled back at the immense pleasure.

“Yes, yes, just like that,” he growled lowly, a part of his brain knowing they needed to be quiet.

Katara moaned around the hard length as she used her tongue to press against the underside of him. The immense pleasure on her husband’s face and his suppressed groans and growls were making her body heat up in arousal. She squirmed and pressed her thighs together to relieve the throbbing of her clit. She could feel her aroused juices seeping from her and saturating her silky undergarments as desire slowly raced along her veins. She whimpered, in both need and disappointment, that she had to wait a couple more weeks before she could actually feel the pleasure of Zuko penetrating her, filling her to the brim.

When Katara began to move her mouth over him faster, Zuko glanced back to her flushed face in rapture before his eyes drifted down her neck to her covered chest. Remembering the sight of her breasts, swollen with milk, made his arousal flare and caused his groin to tighten. He wanted to see them, but he wasn’t sure if Katara would be comfortable since she had told him she was still self-conscious with her body. Slowly, he removed his hand from the back of her head and slipped it down toward her chest. His action made Katara pause before she pulled back, slipping his still hard shaft from her mouth, to look at him.

“I want to see your breasts while you suck me,” he groaned as he stared lustfully into her eyes as his fingers twitched, “Can I?”

Katara hesitated for a moment, but when Zuko continued to look at her pleadingly, she felt her resolve crumble and she gave him a silent nod. Only when she gave him an encouraging smile did Zuko’s fingers quickly went to work to unravel the ties holding the top of her nightdress closed before pulling the edges aside just enough to reveal her chest.

Zuko’s breath hitched as her breasts spilled out, tempting him in their full softness and delightful bounce. Murmuring her name in quiet reverence, he reached out with both hands to gently cup the mounds and carefully knead them, wanting to be gentle with them since they were currently the source of nutrients for their son. His eyes became riveted to the hard, swollen nipples and he swallowed thickly as the thought of latching his mouth to them made his cock throb. He wondered, not for the first time, what her milk tasted like before he quickly dismissed the thought. He was not sure if Katara would be okay with him suckling on her while she was breastfeeding their son. Yet, he could not stop thinking about it. Maybe he could ask her once she was fully recovered.

His thoughts immediately scattered when his waterbender began to caress his shaft in her hand with swift, firm strokes.

“Gods, Katara!” he exclaimed loudly before immediately cutting himself off, earning a grin from her. With a low growl, he bent down to capture her mouth in a fierce, passionate kiss as his hands squeezed her breasts a bit more firmly, eliciting a soft moan from her that he swallowed into his mouth. Mind hazy with lust, Zuko pulled back and swiftly grabbed her about the waist before hoisting her up and turning them around so that she was lying back on the cushions beneath the silky sheet with him leaning over her. Before she could utter a word, he once again kissed her, sucking on her lips almost wildly as he pressed his body closer to hers. He hissed when his bare chest touched her sensitive breasts. Pulling away once again, Zuko slowly crawled up her body until he was straddling her sides, his fully erect cock, still slick from her earlier ministrations, pointing at her face. The firebender grabbed each breast within one large, warm hand and looked down at her with obvious need and lust.

“Can I?” he asked again, his voice rough and husky, as he stared down into her eyes. “Can I pleasure myself with your breasts?”
With a small moan, Katara nodded her head as she placed her hands on his hips before sliding them around to his ass to pull him closer to her.

“Yes, oh gods,” the waterbender mewled as heat erupted in her belly at the thought.

Groaning, Zuko spread his knees a little more so he could lower himself closer to her chest. He held her gaze for a moment before looking down to admire the sight of her breasts once again. He would never tire of the sight and touch of them as long as he lived. Grasping each mound more firmly, he placed his cock between them before pushing them tightly around his shaft. With a soft groan of her name, Zuko began to move his hips. His eyes rolled back at the sensation of his erection rubbing against such warm, soft flesh. Forcing his eyes open once again, the firebender looked down to watch as his swollen tip disappeared before popping back out to point at her throat. He gasped when he felt Katara grab his ass more tightly and helped him rock himself between her breasts.

“Damn, Katara,” he cursed again between clenched teeth as he felt his end approaching. He could not hold out for much longer. He needed the release so badly.

Pressing her breasts even more firmly so that they created a tight vise around his cock, Zuko began to jerk his hips wildly, sweat running down his face and body at the effort, the pleasure building within him. He heaved great pants as a tingle began to grow at the base of his spine and he knew it wouldn’t be long before he achieved that glorious ecstasy.

“Ka-Katara…” he panted roughly, brokenly, his pleasure robbing him of any coherent speech, “I’m…going to…”

“That’s it, my love,” Katara purred as her hands tightly grasped onto his backside, “Come for me.”

At her words, Zuko stiffened as a massive euphoria erupted in his groin and all over his body. He bit his lip roughly to keep himself from roaring his pleasure as he shot his seed onto her chest. Releasing one hand from her breast, he reached down to roughly stroke himself as his cock continue to throb and spurt whitish liquid, coating her throat and her breasts with the copious amount of his incredible release. His pleasure only increasing when his wife actually opened her mouth to capture a few stray sprays of his seed.

“Katara, gods, Katara,” he chanted as he wrung his shaft for all it was worth until the sensation of his strokes became almost painful on his sensitive flesh. Then with a deep groan and an intense shudder, he collapse beside her, heaving and panting as if he had been sparring.
Swallowing the few drops she had been able to catch, savoring his taste, Katara watched as her firebender drew one arm over his face as he tried to keep his heavy pants from becoming too loud. Mm, the sight of him looming over her as he used her breasts to pleasure himself, combined with the enraptured expression that had contorted his face as he came, had been wonderful to witness. She glanced down at herself and could not help but moan as she remembered seeing big spurts of his whitish fluids splashing continuously all over her chest. She reached up a finger to trail his seed along her chest and noticed how thick and sticky it was and realized her poor husband really needed that release, before she glanced back to him. Waiting patiently for him to calm down, ignoring the cooling sensation of his release on her skin, she reached over to soothingly caress his heaving chest.

At his wife’s soft touch, Zuko removed his arm from his face and turned his head to look at her watching him with pleased, hooded eyes. His focus shifted to her still exposed chest to see her wonderful breasts coated in his seed. By the large amount that he had released, he realized how desperate he had been. He could not help admiring the sight of her brown skin covered in his whitish semen, finding the contrast of colors erotic. Relaxed and thoroughly pleased, Zuko shifted to his side and pressed his lips softly against hers as he tenderly placed his hand on her waist.

“Agni, you’re amazing,” he breathed against her caressing mouth. “I want to return the favor so badly.”

Katara moaned softly against his lips and squirmed as she found her arousal flaring at his words.

“Can you, please?” she pleaded throatily.

Zuko leaned away to stare eagerly into her eyes.

“Can I?” he asked.

“Well…I can’t be penetrated right now,” she said slowly, a little abashed all of the sudden, “But…maybe…”

“With pleasure,” he immediately replied with a husky groan, understanding what she meant.

Capturing her mouth once again, he slowly traced his hand down her body, feeling her tense up a little. He knew she was not ready to completely bare her body to him, so he made sure to only slip his hand beneath her nightdress.
Katara’s breath accelerated when she felt him trail his hand up her thigh, over her pelvic bone, and across her lower belly. Before she could feel self-conscious, her husband slid his hand down so that his fingers touched her curls before moving another inch lower. She gasped into his mouth when he pressed one finger on her swollen bundle of nerves.

“Zuko, haaah,” she mewed as her hands grasped onto the back of his head so she could kiss him more fiercely.

She cried out softly when he pressed more firmly before he began to rub gentle circles on that extremely sensitive bud. She was too focused on the pleasure building within her that she forgot about the slight twinges of pain in her core. She moaned his name when he began to gently suck on her tongue before she arched her back when he rubbed his fingers more firmly. Pleasure immediately exploded throughout all her nerve endings and she cried out into his mouth as she came.

Zuko’s eyes widened in surprise at how quickly his wife had come undone and he pulled his head back to watch her thrashed her head and writhe against him. He continued to stroke her to prologue her orgasm before stopping when she grasped his wrist as her hips jerk almost uncontrollably. Then with a soft gasp, she collapsed back onto the cushions with soft pants and moans. Pulling his hand away and covering her legs once again, Zuko continued to watch her, mesmerized by the pleasure writ all over her beautiful face, as he waited for her to open her eyes once she came down from her high. Once she did, she looked at him with a languid and satisfied smile.

“Are you okay?” he asked softly.

“Yes,” she murmured drowsily. “That was wonderful.”

Zuko smiled as he caressed her cheek. Now that his mind wasn’t clouded with lust, he could once again see how exhausted she was. Stubbornly, she lifted her head so he could kiss her. Chuckling, he obliged her.

“I can’t wait for when you’re ready for us to make love again,” he growled softly, passionately, as he continued to press kisses on her moist lips. “I can’t wait to touch every inch of your body, to taste your sweet juices on my tongue, to bury my cock deep inside you.”

Katara moaned, her heart racing in her chest, as she pressed kisses to his amazing lips at the ardent words he uttered.
“Keep in my mind, by beautiful water nymph,” he murmured huskily, “nothing will stop me from making love to you when you are completely recovered.”

He gasped and moaned when Katara nipped at his lips as she ran her hands sensually down his back.

“Believe, my love, nothing will stop me from taking pleasure in satisfying my need and desire for you and your amazing body,” she whispered throatily against his lips.

Zuko felt his groin twitch at her promising words, her caressing mouth, and the desire in her sapphire eyes. He kissed her deeply once again before he forced himself to calm down his raging need before he lost complete control once again. With a soft murmur of her name, he softened their kiss until they were just caressing each other’s lips, their lust simmering down.

He pulled away when his wife let out soft yawn. He smiled when she gave him a sheepish smile. It reminded him of how truly exhausted she was. Zuko kissed her once again, softly caressing her lips, as his hand slowly rubbed her side. Katara moaned softly since the rhythm of his slow and gentle kisses stirred a low flame in her body.

Silently, Zuko stood up and put on his sleeping pants once again. Then he reached down to wrap Katara in the bedsheet and picked her up, smiling again when she yawned as she burrowed into his chest. Extinguishing the candles he had previously lit, Zuko quietly entered the bedroom, careful of not waking up their still slumbering child. He gently deposited Katara on their bed before making his way to the bathing room so he could grab a damp towel and a dry one. Returning to the warmer room, he cleaned up the mess he had made on Katara’s chest and was unable to stop the smug smirk on his face. He suppressed a chuckle when Katara rolled her eyes as she tied her top before letting out another yawn as she made herself comfortable on the soft mattress. Depositing the dirty towels in the bathroom, Zuko quickly made his way to the bed and slipped in beside his wife, pulling the blanket over them.

A soft sound coming from the crib had them freezing and holding their breath, waiting for the inevitable squalls of an angry baby, before relaxing when Kazu let out a soft sigh and did not utter another sound. They laughed softly as they looked up to grin at each other at the luck of having a few more moments of peace. With one last kiss, Zuko moved away so he could lie back down at her side, wrapping an arm around her and pressing her to his side. Katara sighed softly as she snuggled close to him as a comfortable silence descended upon them. Wrapped in each other’s arms, they fell into a restful slumber.

Unfortunately for the pair of lovers, fate had other plans. Four weeks after Kazuhiko’s birth, Zuko had received a message from King Bumi informing him that all of the other world leaders had agreed to converge in Omashu for a meeting to commemorate the seventh anniversary of the end of the war, discuss events of the world, and to draw up a new peace treaty. Zuko had been reluctant to give orders for the airship to be readied for his departure toward the Earth Kingdom city. His son had barely been four weeks old and his wife was still recovering, so Zuko had been reluctant to separate from his family so soon, but he had no choice.

Despite what had almost happened in Omashu the last time they were there, Katara had wanted to go with him, but Kazu had gotten a fever—a mild one, fortunately—and she had to stay behind to look after him. There was a part of him that was glad Katara was unable to go because the thought of her returning to the place that had traumatized them both was almost unbearable. However, he knew that if she had been able to join him, Katara would have demonstrated that she was stronger and she no longer lived in fear of that horrible moment in their lives.

After a sentimental farewell with his wife and young son, whose fever seemed to have lessened a little, Zuko had determinedly boarded the airship with Hakoda and Aang—who had also been summoned—and they left the Fire Nation. Sokka had decided to accompany them as future chief of the Southern Water Tribe. Zuko wanted to settle things quickly and return to his family. After several days in the air, Zuko, his father-in-law, Sokka, and Aang finally arrived in Omashu where they were immediately greeted by the mad king of Omashu, Chief Arnook, and King Kuei.

The following weeks were spent in arguments, debates, and discussions about the remodeled peace treaty. Several Earth Kingdom dignitaries had declared the peace treaty the Fire Lord and the Southern Water Tribe Chief had signed when Zuko married Katara a potential threat. If war were to erupt once again, the Fire Nation would have a strong ally with the Southern Water Tribe. Which could then bring the Northern Water Tribe to aide their sister tribe, which would leave the Earth Kingdom at a great disadvantage. This accusation had immediately angered both Water Tribe Chiefs and the Fire Lord. It wasn’t until Zuko had fiercely stated that he would never start another war and that was why he was in agreement of drawing up a new peace treaty with all nations that had the others backing down. Aang, King Kuei and King Bumi had immediately spoken up in his defense and stated that they believed him. After that, things had gone much more smoothly.

A few days ago the issue of Jianguo and the rebels had been brought up and Zuko had to push down his rage and humiliation when he had to admit that he had still been unable to locate the rebels’ whereabouts. They had then discussed the matter for a while, each making suggestions and stating theories, but nothing concrete had come out of it. Especially since months had passed since the last time any of them had heard anything of Jianguo and his men.

A deep frown settled across the Fire Lord’s face as he once again wondered what the bastard could be planning. Currently, he was having dinner with everybody else, but he was honestly not paying attention. Before he had left the Fire Nation, Zuko had taken precautions with the safety of his family. He had appointed additional warriors to guard both the palace and prison tower where Ozai was being held. He did not want to leave anything to chance while he was not there to protect his family.
A small sigh escaped his lips as the thought of his wife and son once again brought a small pang to his chest. A month had passed since he had to leave them behind and he missed them terribly. This was the longest he had gone without being at Katara’s side since their wedding night two years ago. He had become so used to having Katara sleeping next to him, her warm, soft body pressed to his side, the sound of her soft breath reaching his ears. He had even gotten accustomed to waking up in the middle of the night to Kazuhiko’s loud cries and rocking the baby in his arms to calm him down or bringing him to Katara so she could feed him. But now that he was sleeping in the guest room by himself, the silence was almost depressing and he sometimes stayed awake at night at the sudden overwhelming loneliness that settled over him.

He had not wanted to miss a single moment of his son’s growth. It fascinated him whenever Kazu did something new and he could not help the surge of fatherly pride that would swell in his chest. Although at first he had been unsure of himself, Zuko found himself being more confident in his interactions with Kazuhiko. He loved holding his son’s little body close to his chest, looking down into the bluish eyes that seem to gaze into his with wonder, feeling the love and protectiveness that would surge in him when Kazu would coo and smile (even though Katara had told him it was probably gas). Zuko never would have thought that he would embrace fatherhood so well and he looked forward to when his son was old enough to be taught new things. Katara and he had sent each other several messages and he devoured her letters, memorizing everything she had to say about Kazu’s growth, which caused both happiness and regret that he was missing it.

And then there were those erotic dreams he had of his wife when he was finally able to find some sleep only to have to pleasure himself in order to relieve his sexual frustration so he could fall back to sleep. It had been months since he had made love to his wife and he was desperate for her. Gods, he wanted her, craved her. He missed having her moaning and writhing beneath or above him in her pleasure, missed being deeply buried in her sweet, welcoming body. But it was more than that. He missed the connection they shared in those intimate moments, the closeness and the feelings the surged between them.

He missed his family. Maybe he should have been pleased to finally have time some time for himself, away from the ‘constant demands of a wife and infant.’ The other men in attendance did not make it a secret of how much they were enjoying being away from their homes, nagging wives, and rowdy children. Some had blatantly showed off their concubines or the mistresses they had brought with them. Others had boasted of their time spent in a few of the prestigious brothels of the city, exclaiming their delight over sampling new and young flesh.

But for Zuko, it was the complete opposite. Perhaps it was because he had been alone for most of his life, but finding himself away from home was almost unbearable. Now that he knew what it was like to have a loving family to love and protect, whom he knew returned the sentiment, he found it difficult being away from them. And although his body was craving sex, Zuko could not stomach the thought of bedding a woman that was not Katara. Besides, he refused to disrespect her and break the trust between them for a brief moment of physical pleasure. Agni knew how devastated and enraged he would be if he were to ever find out Katara had sought pleasure with another man while they were away from each other. But that would never happen. He trusted his wife completely.
He sighed as an image of Katara came to him and he was suddenly filled with longing. In his mind, he could see Katara rocking a sleeping Kazu to bed while singing him a Water Tribe lullaby, the setting sun illuminating their silhouettes.

Agni, how he missed them both.

“Seriously, I don’t understand how you can stand living with Snoozles,” Toph’s irritated voice made Suki and Katara grin, “He’s such an idiot.”

“Ha, did you forget that you had a crush on him years ago?” Suki teased as she cleaned her metal fans with a cloth. The sound of baby coos reached her ears and the female warrior glanced to where her daughters were playing with her nephew. “Girls, be careful with your cousin.”

“Yes, Mom!” the twins girls exclaimed quickly. They were leaning over the baby’s crib, which was placed on one side of their Aunt Katara, as they showed off their toys to him. Not that the month old baby was interesting in them. He seemed to be focused more on the girls’ faces and the sounds they made.

“Yeah, I don’t know what I was thinking,” Toph replied with a grin, “Luckily, I came to my senses.”

Katara laughed while Suki rolled her eyes good-naturedly as she continued with her task. The three women and the children were currently spending their time on the veranda as they waited for dinner to approach. Ursa, Jee, Iroh, Kanna and Pakku had been invited to attend a small gathering at one of the houses of an older gentleman of nobility that Iroh considered a friend. Even after months had passed after Chao’s death, everybody could see how much the old prince missed his closest friend, despite his cheerful attitude. It was unfortunate that they never found Chao’s murderers.

Katara was leaning over the low table, looking over some of the petitions from the people as well as other projects she was working on. So far, all the charity works she had proposed, such as the schools and remodeling of the city orphanage were showing much progress, which in turn, made the people appreciate their Fire Lady even more. Toph and Suki were keeping her company and lending a hand with Kazu while his mother worked.

A little over a month had passed since Zuko and the other men had left for Omashu. The earthbender and the female warrior had wanted to go with Aang and Sokka to the summons, but had agreed to stay behind to keep Katara company and help her out as much as they could. It made Katara appreciate them even more.
As she rolled one of the scrolls up, a small sigh escaped the waterbender. She missed Zuko. She wanted him to be there with her and their son, especially in these first months, but she knew he had to leave. If he had disregarded the summit, he could have been accused of rejecting the proposal of a new peace treaty and the alliance with the other countries would be threatened. So with a sad and encouraging smile, she had bid him goodbye and watched as he reluctantly boarded the airship with her father, Sokka, and Aang while she stayed behind to look after Kazu. Luckily, his fever had been mild and he had recovered quickly.

The sound of her son cooing in his crib, made her glance at him once again, a smile spreading on her lips. She reached over to touch his waving hand. She could not take her eyes off of him or stop the need to hold him close to her bosom, wrapped in the protection of her arms. She loved his sweet baby smell, the warmth of his baby soft skin, his quiet coos, and his unconscious attempts at smiles. Although she knew that was probably due to gas, as she had told Zuko, she mused with a mental chuckle. She could not wait until the time came when he really smiled or laughed, which she was told wouldn’t occur until he was a little older. She could not wait for when he was finally able to call her “mama”.

Her smile faltered a little. She knew Zuko had not wanted to miss a moment of being with Kazuhiko and it only brought a pang of sadness to her chest. But she reasoned that he still had the following years to spend with their son. Smiling once again, Katara caressed the little prince’s hand a moment longer before she focused back on the table and produced a clean sheet of paper. With a wistful smile, she began to compose another letter for her husband, hoping he was well and longing for that moment when he returned to her and their son.
Tenacious Longings

Silently, Zuko moved around the bookshelves of the Omashu Palace’s library in search of a book to read. It was late at night and he could not sleep despite the busy schedule he had that day, so he had decided to read for a few hours or until he succumbed to sleep. Sokka, Aang, and he had agreed to wake up early the next morning to train before the next meeting after lunch, but Zuko knew that he would be the first one up even if he only had a few hours of sleep. After all, he did rise with the sun, he mused with a smirk. Katara certainly knew that fact very well. He also knew that both men were missing their own women and children (except Aang in the latter) as much as he missed Katara and Kazu, and that they found it difficult to sleep. Of course, unlike him—who kept his longing to himself—Sokka would not stop sighing pitifully or whining about how much he missed Suki and his daughters. All he, Aang and Hakoda could do was listen to him in slight amusement as the warrior dramatically voiced his longing—which was usually when he had too much to drink during dinner.

Zuko once again focused on the volumes before him, but found none of the titles interested him. He continued to walk along the shelves until he came to one end. Absentmindedly, he pulled out the last book on the shelf that was level to his face and pulled it out, opening it to browse idly through its contents. Finding it uninteresting, Zuko moved to place it back only to notice that something was wedged all the way to the back of the shelf against the corner.

Curious, the firebender reached inside and grabbed the object, finding that it was made of smooth leather. Pulling it out, Zuko looked down to see that it was a book. It was slim compared to all the other tomes and, by the creases at the spine, it looked like it had been handled a lot. It was wrapped in a dark mulberry-colored leather with no title written along its surface. Intrigued and wondering what it could be about, the golden-eyed man placed the larger book back before making his way to one of the plush chairs in the room where a candlestick was lit on a small table beside it. Settling on the seat, Zuko opened the first page.

His eyes widened and his mouth fell open in shock at what greeted him. There before his eyes was an image drawn in ink of a couple engaged in a sexual act. He quickly shut the book, his heart racing, intending on putting it back in its place, before curiosity won the better of him. He looked around quickly to ensure he was alone before he slowly opened the book again. The man was on top of the woman who had her legs wrapped around his waist. The image was amazingly detailed; from the man’s genitals to the woman’s womanhood, even their facial features, although simple, expressed the pleasure and passion they were experiencing. Feeling his skin prick in sudden arousal, Zuko shifted his eyes to the page beside the image to see there was writing. Curious, he began to read and his eyebrows rose when he realized it was an explanation of the image, detailing what such a position entailed and what to do for each partner to achieve ultimate pleasure. He flipped the next page to find another image of the same couple, but with the woman sitting on top of the man this time while he lay back. More writing covered the next page.

“Huh, it must be one of those erotic instructional manuals I heard the crew talk about,” Zuko mused as he finished reading the entire passage. He had never actually seen one before and he found it both amusing and disturbing that he found such a book in King Bumi’s library.
Unable to help himself, Zuko began to study the following pages, aware that the more he saw and read, the more aroused he became. His cock was straining in his trousers and he had to shift several times to relieve some of the pressure, which only caused sparks of pleasure to shoot up his spine at the sensation of the cloth rubbing against his over sensitized flesh. He found that Katara and he had engaged in several of the positions already and memorized the ones they haven’t done yet for future reference. Gods, he was torturing himself, especially since he could not do any of those things without Katara, but he was too intrigued to stop.

As he flipped to another page, Zuko froze and his eyes widened at the new image. The man was sitting with the woman on his lap with her back pressed to his chest, but it was where the man’s shaft was placed that had Zuko’s groin tightening almost painfully. Instead of being in the woman’s core, the man’s length was buried in her other, tighter hole. He had heard a few things about anal sex, but it wasn’t talked about as much since it was said to be painful and uncomfortable for the one receiving it. Instantly curious, Zuko began to read the following description. It gave advice as to how to first introduce the act by starting with inserting smaller things, such as fingers, to stretch out the area and that for the first penetration a woman should sit on the man’s lap in order to control the penetration and speed as she adjusted to the feeling. It also greatly emphasized using a lot of lubrication or else it would be too painful for the woman and might even cause damage.

Zuko glanced back to the image, imagining it was him with Katara on his lap, impaling her tight ass on his cock. He felt his hard shaft throb at the thought and he lifted his eyes to the dark ceiling to calm himself, but found he could not banish the image. Shuddering, Zuko reached down to slowly rub himself through his clothes.

He couldn’t help but wonder, would Katara be adverse to the act? Would she let him breach that forbidden entrance? How would it feel for both of them?

He had to ask her. She might say no, and he would completely understand and respect her decision, but he needed to bring up the subject and see what she said. Hopefully, she would be willing to give it a try. Damn, just the thought had him almost coming in his pants.

Breathing heavily, Zuko placed the book on the table next to him, opened to that stimulating image, and looked around himself again, listening for any late-night wanderers that might be sneaking along the corridors. Once he was satisfied that he was alone, he glanced down to the obvious bulge in his pants. Biting his lips, he hesitated for a moment. Maybe he should leave the library so he could indulge himself in the privacy of his guestroom. Granted, it was the middle of the night and everybody must be asleep, but one never knew if someone else decided to look for something to read because they could not fall asleep either. It would be beyond embarrassing if someone walked into the room and accidentally caught him masturbating.
He looked back at the book and hesitated a moment longer before deciding to take it with him to his room. Picking it up, he swiftly rose from his seat and winced slightly at the uncomfortable constricting sensation of his erection. He adjusted his pants before putting out the candles, then he quickly left the library with the book held tightly in one hand as he headed to his guestroom, feeling his arousal increasing, his blood still racing in his veins as anticipation of what he was about to do tingled along his body. He breathed a sigh of relief when he didn’t come across anyone. It would have been difficult to hide the bulge in his pants or the flush he knew had surfaced on his face. Once he was in the privacy of his room—the same guestroom he had shared with Katara on their last visit—he placed the book down on the mattress as he willed a few candles to light.

Slipping his tunic over his head and taking off his boots, Zuko quickly threw them aside and climbed onto the bed, settling himself against the headboard. Grabbing the small book, he quickly flipped through the pages until he came to the one that had captured his attention and imagination. He placed it back down next to him, opened to that intriguing page. He looked away self-consciously, suddenly feeling like a teenager delving into something he shouldn’t. He snorted. He was a married man, for Agni’s sake.

He glanced back to the book, his eyes becoming riveted to the erotic image, which caused another fantasy of Katara and himself in such a position. Images of her danced in his mind—of her sultry, blue eyes, inviting smile, and exquisite naked curves—and he found that he could not wait, knowing it was pointless to fight his arousal at this point. His need was painful, almost aggressive. It had been far too long since he had found release with his wife and this would have to do until he could slip inside of her.

Groaning almost inaudibly, he continued to stroke himself though his clothes. His knees bent a little at the growing sensation, as blood continued to swell in his shaft, while every part of his body tensed and strained for satisfaction. His breath coming faster, heart pounding, he quickly reached down to his waist to undo the ties that held his trousers up before pulling down the edge so that his shaft sprang out. Panting, he reached down to grasp his painfully erect cock. By the minimal light of the candles, he could already see his swollen tip glistening with his arousal.

Without further preamble, the firebender grasped onto his shaft in a tight fist and began to slowly pump the length.

“Gods…yes…” he groaned hoarsely.

As he dragged his hand back up, he drew a circle around the tip with his thumb before dragging the foreskin away to reveal the reddish, mushroomed head that throbbed with his excited arousal. His breathing grew ragged, low groans and growls erupting from his clenched teeth, as he stroked himself over and over. He pulled away a moment later so he could grasp onto the hem of his trousers to pull them down his hips before kicking them over the bed with his foot. Impatient, he grabbed his shaft once again and fisted it tightly as he continued with his strokes.
Stretching out his legs and spreading his knees apart, he reached down with his other hand to firmly squeeze and massage his heavy balls as he continued to drag the other up and down his thick length. He noticed a bead of his precum seeping from his tip and knew it would be over soon. Letting go of his sac, he bent over the bed to grab his tunic from the floor as he continued to stroke himself with his other hand and frantically searched through an inner pocket before pulling out a silky handkerchief. He glanced at it, his eyes taking in the designs of red and blue flowers, his wife’s name stitched at a corner. She had given it to him before his departure along with a loving kiss. He brought it up to his nose. He could just make out the sweet perfume she sometimes wore on special occasions and breathed it in deeply, imagining she was there with him, touching him, whispering sultrily in his ear, gazing at him with both love and lust.

He dropped his head back against the headboard, arching slightly and jerking his hips, as he changed his rhythm to a faster, almost furious speed, as he lost himself in the heat of the moment and allowed his imagination go wild. He closed his eyes as he pictured Katara straddling his hips, crying out his name, her breasts bouncing as she repeatedly impaled herself on him, perfectly in rhythm to his hand’s vigorous pumps. He imagined her cobalt eyes dark with wanton hunger, her long, wavy hair swaying around her, her brown skin glistening in the candlelight as she rode him with absolute abandon.

“Ka…Katara…uuuhhh,” he rasped in a low moan of longing and rapture as he pressed his wife’s handkerchief to his gasping mouth. “Yes…yesss…”

Dark strands of hair stuck to his temples and neck with his sweat as he struggled to muffle his growls and groans of pleasure, even if he was in the privacy of his guestroom. Then he pictured them once again, positioned like the image in the book, his shaft buried deeply in her rear entrance, her bouncing herself on his lap, hearing her gasps and cries of immense ecstasy, his name falling from her lips like a prayer.

“Katara! Oh gods, Katara!” he hissed through gritted teeth as his hips arched and his body convulsed at the intense pleasure.

He barely had enough time to cover his tip with the handkerchief as he spurted his hot, sticky seed into the silky fabric, imagining he was emptying himself in his wife’s tight ass. His eyes rolled to the back of his head as waves of almost excruciating ecstasy erupted within him in a few powerful jolts that robbed him of his breath as he basked in the aftermath of self-gratification. Once the intensity subsided, he collapsed against the headboard, moaning and gasping in large gulps of air.

Slowly, his heavy pants subsided and his heartbeat returned to normal as the illusion he had created faded away, leaving behind only glowing embers, as his mind returned to reality. Opening his eyes, he glanced back to see that his semen had sodden the handkerchief.
“Damn,” he cursed as his eyes quickly scanned the dark room, though he knew he was the only one in there.

Loosening his grip on his now flaccid member, he grimaced slightly as he carefully lifted the soaked fabric, heavily saturated with his seed. He would definitely wash it himself, and once he saw his wife, he would definitely thank her for her gift. Careful of not letting any of the fluid drip, Zuko rose from the bed so he could clean up in the bathing room and took a moment to steady himself as his legs shook a little.

His attention once again shifted to the slim book, the cause for his lapse of control, and he stared at the erotic depiction a moment longer before he shut the book with his unoccupied hand. He debated of whether he should return it to its hidden spot before deciding to keep it with him for the moment. There were still a few weeks before he could return to the Fire Nation, so he had plenty of time to finish the book. The new knowledge he had gained made him even more impatient to return home.

He smirked.

He could not wait to enlighten Katara.

Zuko frowned as he left his guest room and headed toward one of the gardens of Omashu’s Palace for a breath of fresh air. The meeting that day had been nothing but petty arguments amongst a few Earth Kingdom governors, which had given him a headache, which then caused his mood to darken so noticeably it made the men sitting near him fidget uneasily. Fortunately, King Bumi had noticed as well and decided to call for a break, but not before making a jesting remark about preventing bloodshed. Zuko had frowned and a few men had chuckled nervously, but Hakoda, Sokka, and Aang had laughed uproariously along with the mad king.

Dismissing the thought, he took a deep breath of fresh air before exhaling loudly as he allowed the evening sun to warm his skin. He only had about an hour to himself before he had to make an appearance for dinner before he could retire for the night. Another meeting was to be held tomorrow to review the revised peace treaty. If everything went well, they would probably be able to return to their homes in another week at the latest and perhaps in a few days at the earliest. Hakoda had told him that he would accompany him back to the Fire Nation to pick up the rest of his family before returning to the Southern Water Tribe since he had been away for too long. Zuko had assured him he would take his family for a visit once Kazu was old enough to travel. The blue-eyed chieftain was excited at the thought of showing his first grandson the wonders of the wintry country.

The sound of light footsteps caused Zuko to turn sharply to see who was intruding upon his precious quiet moment. His eyes widened and he stiffened at the person that was standing calmly before him before he quickly composed himself and resumed his usual passive air.

“Mai,” he said dismissively.

It was not the first time they had crossed paths since he had arrived in Omashu, she had always accompanied her father whenever the ambassador sought an audience with the Fire Lord to report how the relationship between the Fire Nation and Omashu were going. Zuko, however, had barely spared her a greeting, much less a glance and now it was the first time they had been alone. He was still upset with her over what she had done months before when she had entered the royal chambers, seeking to entice him to take her as his royal concubine. It still angered him whenever he remembered Katara’s fury and anguish when she had thought he had taken Mai as his concubine. He had come so close to losing his wife and he found he could never forgive the noblewoman.

“Zuko,” she greeted softly.

“What are you doing here?” he asked impassively, ignoring the way her dark eyes roamed his frame.

“I was hoping to talk to you,” she replied.

Zuko frowned. He had had a feeling he knew what she was going to say and why she had sought him out.

“There is nothing you have to say that would interest me,” he told her firmly.

“Zuko, please,” she beseeched him as she spread her arms a little for understanding. “Please don’t be upset with me anymore.”

“Can’t you see that because of what you did, I almost lost Katara’s trust?” he asked her, anger slipping into his passive tone as he glared at her. “She could have left me, thinking I had betrayed her.”

“It would have been for the best,” Mai responded in her usual monotone, unrepentant of what she had done and uncaring of what could have happened.
“How can you even say that?!” the firebender growled angrily, his teeth clenched tight, his hands balled into fists.

“She doesn’t deserve you if she would leave you for something so insignificant,” the noblewoman replied as she took a step closer to the tall Fire Lord. “I, on the other hand, would forgive you for anything. I would not have faulted you for you seeing to your needs with other women. You are a virile man, after all. It’s only natural that your appetites be large and varied.”

Zuko could only stare at her in incredulity. A snort escaped him at her attempt on flattering him to get on his good side. It seemed she was agreeable to how most marriages of the nobility worked, where affairs were common and even expected. But she really did not know him at all if she thought that he had the same views. He did not want such a farce of a marriage nor did he want to be like his father, who cared little for his wife. To him a marriage was supposed to be a partnership, were the couple strove to help each other out, to give each other comfort, support, and affection. Trust and faithfulness were vital for such a marriage to work. That was why Katara was the perfect wife for him. Because she shared his views, because she understood him, and wanted the same things he did.

“Oh, is that because you, yourself would have found your own lovers to dally with?” he finally asked sardonically.

“Oh really?” Zuko replied, his tone hard and sarcastic, “Because isn’t that what you’re doing now while you claim to love me?”

“I-I don’t know what you’re talking about!” she hissed angrily even as she shifted guiltily.

“There’s no reason to lie when I know the truth,” the golden-eyed man told her as he casually crossed his arms over his chest and stared at her with a raised eyebrow. “Jet confessed that while he was scheming with you in your pathetic attempts at separating Katara and me, he had been one of your lovers.”

The noblewoman stumbled back a step as if his words had physically struck her and her dark eyes widened in mortification.

“T-that…that bastard!” she hissed indignantly, “He’s lying!”
“And what reason would he have for lying about such a thing?” he asked her passively. “It doesn’t matter because I don’t care who you sleep with or what you do with your life.”

Hurt flashed across Mai’s face and her hands clenched into shaking fists at her sides.

“Truly, Mai, you can have all the lovers you want, I really don’t give a damn,” Zuko continued smoothly before his tone turned hard, “But I will not sit idly by if you ever try to come between Katara and me again. Especially now that she had given me a child. I won’t have you destroying my family.”

At the mention of his son, Mai seemed to perk up, which immediately put the firebender on high alert. He watched as she slowly took a few steps toward him and he looked at her warily.

“Ah, yes, I suppose I should congratulate you on your heir,” she said in a quiet tone as her slow steps finally brought her within arm’s reach of the Fire Lord, “Even if he’s a half-breed.”

“Watch your tongue,” Zuko growled furiously as he glared angrily at her, looming almost menacingly over her. “I won’t have you insulting my son.”

Mai paused and quickly closed her mouth at Zuko’s fierce reaction, sensing that the topic of his son was sensitive and would only go badly for her if she continued to insult the new heir’s mixed ancestry. Truthfully, she was a little surprised at the protectiveness and pride she detected in Zuko’s tone in regards to the child. She had thought that he did not like children and only begot one because it was his duty, not because he actually wanted one.

She did not like children and had no use for them. She barely tolerated her own little brother. If she had married Zuko, she had planned to give him the heir he needed and then hoist it off to caregivers and tutors while she and Zuko focused on each other and their roles as rulers of the Fire Nation. It seemed she had been wrong. She refused to think Zuko’s sudden attentiveness to his fatherhood was all because of Katara.

Suppressing a sneer, the noblewoman bowed her head slightly as if to acknowledge his words, but she did not take her eyes off his as she gave him a small smile. An idea formed in her head.

“I’ve heard women take a while to recover after giving birth,” she said instead.
Zuko frowned at the sudden change of topic, though he had a feeling he knew where she was going with it. She would find out soon enough that he would not tolerate it.

“How long has it been since you’ve been with a woman?” Mai asked, her tone low.

She took one step closer, watching his reactions to her words, to her proximity, but to her frustration, his expression revealed nothing. He may talk about fidelity and all that nonsense, but he was a man, and what man could resist temptation when it was presented so brazenly? She would entice him to her bed, make him forget the water wench’s touch, make him go crazy for her and only her. Then he would take her back to the Fire Nation to make her his royal concubine. Now that he had his heir, he had no more use for Katara, he no longer needed to seek out the bitch’s bed. And if she played her cards right, she could even have him annul his marriage to the waterbender and marry her instead. She would make a much better Fire Lady.

“Your body must be craving sex,” she continued, trying to moderate her tone into a seductive purr just like that arrogant Jet had taught her during their trysts. “I can give you what you want. Just take me to your guest room and I’ll make you feel good. Just imagine the things I could be doing to you.”

“Unfortunately, I remember all the things you could do to me and trust me, it wasn’t very good,” the firebender responded cruelly, as he looked down at her with an almost bored expression on his face.

He was sick and tired of her pathetic attempts to entice him into bed. It was small of him, but he took some pleasure in watching her get upset at his response. Wanting to make his position perfectly clear, a thought came to mind.

“Or do you have something new you think would sway me? Something new you learned thanks to all those lovers you’ve taken?”

Mai had never been good at seduction and her current attempts were not doing anything for him. Besides, after two years of marriage, Katara was a master of seduction and he knew that no other woman could compete with her. And although masturbating wasn’t as good as the real deal, the erotic book he had found before and secretly sneaked into his room, did help take the edge off as he imagined various ways of making love to Katara.

At his words, Mai frowned deeply, pushed aside her anger and embarrassment, and quickly replaced it with a sultry smile.
“Why don’t you just let me show you?” she asked throatily as she reached out a hand to stroke his chest. “I promise you’ll enjoy yourself.”

Sneering, Zuko quickly grasped her wrist and jerked her arm away from him, causing her to wince slightly at the sudden move as she stumbled a little.

“I never knew you were this stubborn,” he growled out as he released her wrist as quickly as if it were a poisoned object.

“I will never give you up!” she hissed at him as she straightened herself out.

“When will you get it into your head that I don’t want anything to do with you?” Zuko exclaimed in exasperation before he added, “After having experience such immense pleasure with Katara, after receiving her unconditional love and comfort, nothing you have to offer will make me betray her.”

“You were mine first,” she repeated stubbornly.

“I already told you I was never yours,” he growled. “And if I had known you were going to be this way, that you would bring me so much trouble, I never would have accepted you as my girlfriend.”

“How can you say that?!’ Mai gasped in pain, “Why can’t you see that I love you? That I can’t give you up?!”

Zuko sighed and resisted the urge to pinch the bridge of his nose in frustration. She had asked the same thing so many times already and he always gave her the same answer regarding his feelings for Katara. He really was out of patience with the noblewoman. Not even their past friendship, if it could even be called that, could make him feel sympathy for her now. He did not understand why she kept chasing after him after everything he had told her. He had said cruel things to her and had even manhandled her out of his royal chambers to get her to back off. Yet, nothing worked. How he regretted ever being in a relationship with her.

“Enough. I don’t have time for this,” he said curtly as he stared at her darkly.

“How do you really think Katara is faithfully waiting for you?” she replied with a sneer.
“What is that supposed to mean?” he asked with narrowed eyes.

“Do you really think she’s waiting eagerly for your return?” she continued, “Think about it. You’re away from home and she’s alone. She could be easily welcoming another man into her bed in your absence. Or multiple men. There are, after all, several handsome noblemen who could satisfy her every pleasure and—”

“Silence!” Zuko roared as he took a menacing step toward her. “I won’t have you saying such things about my wife! She’s an honorable woman and she would never betray me.”

“Can you be sure about that? You’re not there with her to see what she’s doing,” she said and then with a cruel smile, added, “Don’t tell me the thought hasn’t crossed your mind?”

“Not once,” he replied quickly, although inwardly his confidence faltered a little.

The thought had never occurred to him before, but now the possibility that Katara could be easing her sexual frustrations with someone else began to fester in his mind. Men weren’t the only ones capable of infidelity when they were away from home; women could seek their own lovers while their husbands were away. And it had been months since Katara and he had fully engaged in sexual activities. He was sure she must be feeling frustrated since they had been unable to make love while she had been healing after the birth. He was the one who had benefitted from their foreplay, he mused guiltily. The thought of his wife betraying him with someone else while he was away brought an immense rage and excruciating pain that it caused his chest to tighten and his breath to freeze in his throat.

No.

He mentally shook his head and frowned at himself. No, Katara would never betray him. How could he think she would for even a second? She loved him too much to hurt him in such a way. Her character would never allow her to commit such dishonesty. She was unwavering when it came to her ideals and honor. He knew she was keenly longing for him as he was for her.

Agni, he missed her.

And he missed Kazuhiko.
Yearning for his family once again strongly assaulted him, but he took a steadying breath and squared his shoulders. Soon he would see his family again, but for now he needed to focus on his duties as Fire Lord before he could return to them.

“You can say whatever you want,” Zuko finally spoke in a much calmer tone. “It doesn’t make a difference since I know the truth.”

Mai opened her mouth to say something else, but the firebender did not let her speak.

“I will be returning to my family soon,” he added firmly, “And while I wait for that moment, I will certainly not waste another minute with you, so don’t bother looking for me again.”

He turned on his heel to leave her and return to the palace, but Mai quickly latched onto his arm to stop him. Growling, he turned his head back to glare at her for her audacity.

“Please, Zuko, just give us another chance,” she pleaded.

Zuko sharply jerk his arm to break her hold of him as he continued to glare at her over his shoulder.

“No,” he told her firmly before he added, “Just give up, Mai, before you hurt yourself even more. Why don’t you allow yourself a chance with one of your lovers or perhaps start anew with someone else?”

“Never,” she hissed.

“Then it’s your loss,” he replied blankly as he once again turned away and swiftly headed back to the building without a backward glance.

Mai watched his retreating figure in silence even as her hands clenched at her sides. No, she could not lose him. She had invested so much of her time—four years of her life—in him and she was not about to lose him or the title of Fire Lady because of a mere Water Tribe wench or even a mutt of an heir with veins tainted with his mother’s primitive blood. There had to be a way to win Zuko back.

Lifting her chin high and smoothing down her dark hair over her shoulder, the noblewoman calmly walked away from the garden and back toward the house her family was staying in in Omashu. So preoccupied with her thoughts she was, she did not notice the pair of eyes that watched her go from the cover of the shadows.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

“You gotta be fuckin’ kidding me!” Jet growled out angrily as he stomped his way through the streets of the Fire Nation capital.

He ignored the people that threw angry glances at him when he rudely brushed past them as he made his way to meet up with his companions. He had been inquiring nonstop about the man that had stolen from the rich Earth Kingdom noble, but he had been unsuccessful after all this time. Where could the elusive bastard be? Maybe Longshot and Smellerbee found something. He had been in the Fire Nation for far too long for his liking and he wanted to return to the Earth Kingdom. He was surrounded by too many damn firebenders and Fire Nation citizens that it set his teeth on edge. But the nobleman had promised him and his friends a huge reward if they caught the thief and brought him back whatever he had stolen. It must be something extremely valuable or sentimental for the nobleman to pay such a heavy reward.

He was brought out of his thoughts when the excited buzz of a crowd drew his attention. He looked around himself and finally noticed that a crowd had gathered a few feet away from some kind of fancy restaurant. Curious, he walked closer and elbowed his way through the sea of people, ignoring the curses they threw at him as he made his way to see what the commotion was about. He stepped to the front and glanced around. There was a group of guards surrounding an impressive carriage and he watched as an older soldier with thick sideburns, probably one from a higher rank judging by his uniform, opened the carriage door. The man handed down a beautiful woman with dark hair that was graying at the temples and they smiled at each other. It took him a moment to realize it was Zuko’s mother and admiral, whom he had seen the last time they were all in Omashu. He watched the woman turn toward the interior of the carriage to carefully cradle a baby that had been handed to her. Jet’s eyes widened when he saw Katara step out of the carriage with the admiral’s help before she turned to her mother-in-law to grab the baby and press the child close to her chest.

He felt his heart clench at the sight of Katara staring down lovingly at the baby’s face. It was her child. And Zuko’s. The heir to the Fire Nation. He had not been in the capital when the royal couple had presented their heir to the citizens, so he had not thought much about it. But seeing them now only brought home the fact that he had lost any chance with Katara completely.

He had heard the Fire Lord had to leave to Omashu on some business and he wondered if Katara was feeling lonely. Maybe he could secretly pay her a visit and keep her company? He quickly shook his head to get rid of the thought. Katara had made it perfectly clear she would not betray her husband for him. Besides, he did not want her to hate him for causing her trouble with his persistence.

He barely paid attention as the master earthbender and the Kyoshi warrior and her twins stepped down from the carriage since his sole focus was on Katara and the lovely image she presented of motherhood. When they took a few steps toward the opulent restaurant, the crowd waved excitedly and called out to the Fire Lady. Jet watched as Katara turned to smile amicably at the people. His breath hitched when their eyes locked and he watched as she gave him a small smile and a polite nod before returning her attention to her son and her companions. They entered the building and she did not glance back.

Jet let out the breath he had been holding before he turned away and once again fought his way out of the throng of people, needing to get away. If he had not made that mistake so many years ago, all of that could have been his. He mentally shook his head and hardened himself, reminding his stupid heart that he had to let her go and he had to move on with his life. Katara belonged with Zuko now and she had given him a son. Although he loathed admitting it, they belonged together and they were happy.

He wondered if one day he could be too.

In a hidden cave, somewhere in the Earth Kingdom wilderness, a man with unremarkable features waited almost nervously for his leader to speak once he had finished his report.

“Interesting,” Jianguo finally spoke with a low chuckle, “So Lady Mai is still chasing after the infuriating whelp.”

The other man, dressed in black clothes and a wide straw hat painted in black, nodded his head. Standing perfect straight next to him was Chang, whose expression revealed nothing despite what they had heard.

“Yes,” the spy replied, “The woman had tried several times to approach him before he returned to the Fire Nation, but he always rebuffed her advances.”

“How pathetic. I kind of feel sorry for her,” Jianguo said with another mocking laugh.

The spy laughed nervously while Chang remained silent.

“Go have some food and a drink with the other men,” their leader said as he dismissed the smaller man with a casual wave of his hand.
With a bow, the spy quickly turned around and left the stone cave that served as Jianguo’s room where his tent was set up. Chang watched him go out of the corner of his eye before he returned his attention to Jianguo who seemed to be deep in thought.

“Interesting indeed,” the firebender murmured absentmindedly.

How fortunate for him that he had sent out his spy as soon as word reached him that Zuko had arrived in Omashu. Jianguo had decided not to leave his hideout to make his way there, knowing that with so many world leaders around with their multiple guards, it would be hard for his small army to breach the protected city just so he could get to Zuko.

Even though he really wanted to kill Zuko and reinstate Ozai on the throne, and in the process make the waterbender his, Jianguo knew he needed to come up with something good. Which was why he had not made a move in a long time nor had he sent any taunting letters to Zuko. He knew the silence must be getting to the bastard and he reveled at the thought that Zuko was afraid, wondering what was going on and when he would strike next. And now that Zuko’s heir had been born, there was something else to hold over Zuko’s head. Who should he use against Zuko? His wife or his son? Or perhaps both?

Ah, the possibilities.

But first, he needed to come up with a plan that would not fail him this time. He wanted to end this once and for all. He was sick and tired of waiting for what was rightfully his. Jianguo stroked his chin, ignoring Chang standing silently behind him.

“Do you have a plan?” the former Dai Li agent finally asked.

“Hm, not yet,” Jianguo replied before he turned to grin at the man, “Don’t worry, Chang. You’ll get the pretty maidservant under you soon.”

He laughed when the earthbender frowned at him. Jianguo knew Chang was as obsessed with the Fire Lady’s maid as he was of the waterbender, though the Dai Li agent hid it much better. Sobering up, the former general frowned.

“However, after what the spy has said, an idea is starting to form in my head,” he confided as his mind worked through the problem.
“I should hope so,” Chang responded bluntly, “The men are starting to get restless.”

“I know,” the firebender growled as he narrowed his eyes.

A few men had marched up to him, demanding payment and threatening to expose his whereabouts, but he had quickly gotten rid of them with a sword through their chests and had Ping dispose of their corpses before the other men were aware of what had happened.

He may not have gotten lucky in capturing Zuko in Omashu this time, but he had learned something interesting.

“So Lady Mai is still trying to get Zuko to take her back, hm?” he repeated.

A woman scorned was said to be feared, but a woman obsessively in love with a man could be just as terrifying. He smirked as he absentmindedly rubbed his chin.

And he planned to take of advantage of that.
A soft smile appeared on Katara’s lips as she stared at her son with a warm, gentle gaze. Kazuhiko, who was lying on a blanket spread out on the grass (the same blanket Gran-Gran had made before his birth), stared back at her with a wide smile of his own. His little hands flailed in the air as he cooed and gurgled contently, before his focus shifted to Ichiro, who was holding a rattle up to the baby’s face to get his attention. Katara and Jiao chuckled when Ichiro looked up proudly at his success. The now almost two-year-old boy seemed fascinated by the little, babbling creature and enjoyed making Kazu laugh or prompting him to imitate any funny facial expressions he made. Ichiro did a sort of growling sound and the baby tried to mimic him.

“Look, Mama!” the little boy exclaimed excitedly.

“He’s a smart baby, isn’t he?” Jiao replied with an indulgent smile aimed at her son.

“Yea!” Ichiro agreed before he pouted.

The women laughed quietly at his pout, knowing it sometimes exasperated the boy that Kazu couldn’t play like him. Smiling, the waterbender reached down to rub Kazu’s stomach.

“In a few months, he’ll be able to play with you more,” she assured the little boy.

That statement seemed to perk Ichiro up and he returned to making funny faces at the little prince.

The two women looked away from their children and smiled at each other. They were spending their time in the Royal Palace Garden after lunch with Katara’s family and Toph. Jee had accompanied Ursa to once again visit Azula while Iroh, Kanna, and Pakku decided to spend the rest of their day playing Pai Sho. Suki and her daughters went to explore the capital shopping district with Toph grudgingly following behind.

At the moment, Katara had a rare break from her Fire Lady duties, which also included a few things that she had to oversee during the Fire Lord’s absence, and she wanted to spend it with her son. Enjoying the shade the cherry blossom tree provided, she sighed in contentment as a fresh breeze swept through the garden. She glanced briefly toward the tranquil pond where she could just make out the koi fish swimming languidly in the clear water. Ichiro had excitedly fed the turtle-duck family a few minutes ago, so the little creatures were now resting in their nest hidden within a bush.
Now at three months old, her little prince enjoyed playtime more and she basked in his delighted smiles and babbles. She no longer had to support his head as much and when he was on his stomach, he was able to lift his head and chest. In a month or two, he would be able to roll over and move around more. Kazu liked to grasp anything within his reach and he loved shaking his toys or swatting at objects dangling in his face. Katara had also noticed that he closely tracked objects that interested him and focused intently on faces. Her heart always squeezed with pride and affection, he was able to recognize her every time she came to pick him up from Jiao’s care after she had completed her duties for the day. She loved singing to him or reading to him, the sound of her voice seemed to please him.

Her smile faltered a little. Kazuhiko was three months and her husband had missed two months of their son’s early stages of life. She knew it had been inevitable since Zuko, as Fire Lord, had responsibilities that he could not ignore.

It had been almost two months since she last saw her husband and she missed him. Missed his quiet companionship, his steady support, and his rare playful banter he only let her see. And La, she missed his body. It had been months since the last time they had made love and she craved him with a desperation that was almost embarrassing. She was sure he was suffering as much as she was, which, much to her shame, made her occasionally wonder if he was easing his sexual frustrations with another woman while he was away. Then she would berate herself for her thoughts, telling herself to trust him and that he was an honorable man that would never betray her. He loved and respected her too much to hurt her like that.

She was completely healed now from giving birth and she had begun to waterbend again. She had also continued her lessons in archery with Ursa and she was proud to say she was a fairly good shot now. She also had hand-to-hand combat matches with Jee or Suki and bending spars with Toph, who enjoyed taunting her with annoying phrases more than challenging her with her earthbending. Once, Toph had teased her by asking if she was being more aggressive with her waterbending because she couldn’t jump Zuko’s bones whenever she wanted. Katara had retorted by asking the same question since Aang was also gone. She had laughed when Toph’s face turned red and she spluttered before she growled for the waterbender to shut up.

Thanks to the exercise, Katara was able to trim off the fat she had gained during her pregnancy and firmed her skin. She lessened the visibility of the stretchmarks that had appeared with her waterbending and had also done some exercises that Lady Yoon Hee had recommended to strengthen and tighten her vagina. Except for a little widening of her hips and fuller breasts, she looked the same as before she became pregnant. She now felt more comfortable and confident about her physical appearance and she could not wait to show it off to her husband and make love to him when he finally arrived.

A small sigh escaped her lips as longing once again sprang in her chest as she caressed Kazu’s dark hair. Zuko had sent her a message to let her know they had concluded the summons and he was finally on his way to the Fire Nation and would arrive soon. She hoped he did not take too long to come home to her and their son.
“Katara.”

The sound of that familiar and beloved baritone caressing her ears made her heart skip a beat before it started pounding rapidly in her chest with hope. Was her longing making her imagine things? Snapping her head up, her eyes widened in delighted surprise. Walking toward her was Zuko with a small smile curling his lips, his golden eyes warm and intense as he held her gaze.

“Zuko,” she breathed.

He opened his arms and she quickly sprang to her feet before she rushed forward to embrace him tightly. He wrapped his arms just as tightly around her and when she looked up, he leaned down to press his mouth against hers. With an elated moan, she pressed herself closer to his chest.

The soft clearing of a throat and a quiet childlike giggle interrupted their moment and they quickly drew apart. While Katara smiled sheepishly, Zuko coughed awkwardly as he caught the smiles Jiao and Ichiro were trying to hide. He had not noticed their presence since his entire focus had been on his beautiful wife gazing so affectionately at their son. Thinking of his son, Zuko’s eyes darted to the baby gurgling and babbling atop the blanket and he felt his chest tighten in anticipation of having his son in his arms once again.

Knowing the royal family must wish to be alone, Jiao stood up as she gently grabbed her son’s hand to urge him to stand with her. With the Fire Lord’s arrival it meant her husband had returned as well and she was excited to go to him. Ichiro pouted as he reluctantly allowed his mother to pull him up, he wanted to keep playing with the little prince, but he knew better than to throw a tantrum before the regal Fire Lord.

“Welcome back, my lord,” the maid said with a small bow and then with a smile she added, “Ichiro and I are eager to see Kuo again.”

“Thank you and I believe Kuo went in search of you and Ichiro in your rooms,” Zuko said in a cool tone.

At the mention of his father, the little boy’s pout disappeared and he smiled widely. With another soft smile, Jiao bowed at the royal couple before she and her excited son took their leave in search of Kuo. Once they were out of sight, the waterbender melted into her husband’s warm embrace once again.
Her throat tightened when she felt his strong arms wrap tightly around her to bring her close to his firm frame, his warmth seeming to seep into her body. She breathed in his smoky, sandalwood scent and held him even tighter as she pressed her face into his chest. La, she missed this.

“I’m so glad you’re here,” she whispered, “I missed you so much.”

“Katara,” Zuko breathed her name in a soft murmur as he buried his face in her soft hair, relishing in her sweet scent and the feel of her body in his arms. “You have no idea how much I missed you.”

He leaned away and Katara glanced up to look at him. They stared silently into each other’s eyes, reading and analyzing what they could see from each other’s expressions, before their faces closed the small distance at the same time. The contact of their lips, of the sweet, chaste touch after being away from each other for so long, brought a shudder and sighing breaths from both as happiness surged between them. A loud coo from a few feet away caught their attention and they pulled away to glance at the wiggling baby with affectionate smiles. Smiling down at his wife, Zuko grasped her hand in a gentle hold as he stepped closer to their son. They each sat on either side of the blanket and Kazu immediately gurgled happily at having attention once again.

When his son’s eyes locked with his, Zuko’s breath caught in his throat. Two months had passed since he had left and already he could see some changes from the small infant he had held in his arms before. Not only was Kazuhiko bigger, but he seemed more active as he waved his tiny hands fiercely in the air and kicked his feet vigorously, but most astonishing was how aware he seemed. Zuko could see how Kazu’s eyes seemed to examine his face as they stared at each other and the firebender wondered if his son somehow realized he was staring at his father.

Pride swelled in his chest along with sadness and a pang of regret for having missed watching his son grow in the past two months. As if sensing his thoughts, his wife reached out and gently caressed his scarred cheek. Zuko glanced up to see her smiling softly, if a little sadly, at him and he returned her smile before he again looked down at their son.

Seeing he had the man’s attention again, Kazuhiko cooed loudly before a large smile broke on his small face. The sight of that genuine smile caused warmth to spread in Zuko’s chest and his lips to curl in a grin of his own. Dispelling his sudden melancholy, the firebender reached forward to gently caress his son’s hair and cheek before chuckling when Kazu grabbed his finger and shook it vigorously with a happy gurgle.

Katara smiled as she watched her husband interacting with their son and she felt her heart swell with happiness and love. Zuko was back and now their little family was complete once again. She could not help the immense joy that spread through her whole body. Still chuckling at having his finger tightly caught, the firebender reached with his other hand to lightly tickle Kazu’s stomach. The dark-haired baby let out a squeal of laughter and Katara’s eyes widened in surprise and wonder.

Hearing her small gasp, Zuko glanced to his wife with a curious expression.

“What’s wrong?” he asked.

“No, nothing’s wrong,” Katara quickly replied as she smiled at him, “It’s just it's the first time I’ve heard Kazuhiko laugh.”

“Really?” Zuko asked excitedly as he glanced back down to smile at his son. “I’m glad that I was here for his first laugh at least.”

Smiling in understanding, Katara placed her hand over his where he still had it resting gently on Kazu’s belly. They were silent for a moment as they watched over their son, whose attention shifted to one of his toys that tinkled when he shook it. A moment later, Zuko asked his wife about anything he had missed while he was away and she told him everything from when Kazuhiko first began to smile to her Fire Lady duties. Then they began to discuss Zuko’s journey to Omashu and what had transpired during the negotiations. She became as indignant as he and Hakoda had been at the Earth Kingdom representatives’ accusations.

“I wish you could’ve been there,” Zuko chuckled at her angry huffs, “You would’ve put them in their place.”

Another chuckle escaped the Fire Lord at his waterbender’s annoyance. He loved how defensive and protective she was of him and he knew she would be even more so when it came to their son. May the gods protect any who dared mess with Kazu, for they would not only find an enraged Fire Lord in their hands, but a fiercely protective waterbending master.

“So did anything else happen in Omashu?” Katara asked curiously as she tickled Kazu’s chin, causing the baby to let out another laugh that caused her to grin in delight at the new sound.

When her husband did not immediately respond, the blue-eyed woman looked up at him with a small frown.
“Zuko?”

“I…well…” he began before he let out a sigh.

Katara felt her heart begin to pound in anxiety as she waited to hear what Zuko had to say. Different scenarios flew through her head, some more horrible than others, and she swallowed thickly, but decided to let him speak before she jumped to conclusions.

“What happened?” she asked quietly, though she could not completely hide the apprehension in her tone.

Zuko detected that she was becoming upset and he quickly sought to remedy the situation.

“No, nothing bad happened,” he firmly stated as he held her gaze. Only when she relaxed slightly, did he continue, “I just thought I should be honest and tell you that I was accosted by Mai.”

“Again?” the waterbender growled angrily.

“Jet was right when he told us Mai is determined to break us up,” he said as he tiredly rubbed his temple.

He decided not to bring up Mai’s accusation that Katara was unfaithful to him, since he knew it would never happen. He trusted his wife more than anyone else in his life.

“Did she try to seduce you again?” Katara hissed with blazing azure eyes.

“Yes,” Zuko confessed truthfully, “But she didn’t succeed.”

Katara stared into his unwavering, golden eyes before she gave a nod, knowing he spoke the truth. Despite her trust in him, the small part of her that had harbored her doubts relaxed. While she trusted him, it was nice to hear his assurances for herself. Her thoughts shifted to Mai’s actions and the waterbender clenched her teeth. If she had gone to Omashu with Zuko, she would have probably pulled the noblewoman’s hair out of her head for trying to seduce her husband! Again!

“Why can’t she get it into her head that you’re mine?” Katara growled with narrowed eyes.

Zuko shook his head and sighed.

“I never imagined she would be this obsessed,” he said with a frown, “She just doesn’t seem like the type of person to care much about things. I figured that she would’ve moved on to search for something better.”

“Well… I can’t say I blame her,” the brunette mumbled, “I don’t know if I would be able to let you go either.”

“But I wouldn’t want you to let go of me ever,” Zuko replied steadfastly. “I’m yours as much as you’re mine.”

A smile spread on Katara’s lips at her husband’s resolute words since she had the same sentiment. She leaned forward to press a kiss to his firm lips, smiling when she felt him immediately soften at her touch. Another coo from Kazu had them pulling apart to grin at each other before they returned their attention to their son who waved and kicked from where he laid between them. Zuko shifted so he was lying down on his side, propped up on his elbow, so he could play with his son better. Picking up the rattle Ichiro had been using before, the firebender shook it before Kazu, which caused the baby to laugh as he attempted to reach for the fascinating toy. The next few minutes were spent discussing the few things that had sprung up during Zuko’s absence that needed his attention and Kazuhiko’s antics during the last two months.

Kazu once again held tightly onto his father’s finger and Zuko chuckled. He had never thought he would one day be sitting there playing with his son nor did he think he would embrace fatherhood so easily. Granted, there were still many things he needed to learn, but he thought he was doing a fairly good job so far. It still amazed him to see this small being—who resembled him so much—this little life he and his wife had created with their passionate and intense love. It humbled him to know he was part of it. For years, he had thought he didn’t need a family, but now he could see that he could not live without them. And his family, his happiness, was all thanks to Katara.

His heart swelled with intense love for his waterbender. He lifted his head to look at her leaning against the trunk of the cherry blossom tree, only to realize that she was already staring at him, her ocean-blue eyes soft and gentle. They gazed silently into each other’s eyes, their feelings for one another swirling in their depths and charging the air between them, as they were wont to do. They were interrupted from the sudden spell by their son’s sudden loud fussing and angry squalls. Katara smiled and Zuko chuckled as they gazed down at their fussing child.

“I think he’s hungry,” the firebender stated amusedly.

Sitting up, he swiftly picked up his crying son from the blanket. He smiled when Kazu quieted a little as he gently rocked him in his arms. The baby stared up at him for a moment before his small face scrunched up and he let out another angry cry. Zuko could not help but chuckle.

“His appetite is just like his father’s,” Katara teased with a giggle as she quickly untied the top part of her robe so she could free her breast.

“Better than the insatiable one of his Uncle Sokka,” the Fire Lord retorted in amusement as he handed the baby to Katara when she held out her arms to him.

Once she had taken hold of the baby, Zuko moved over so he could sit beside her, resting his back against the tree trunk.

“So true,” the waterbender laughed as she brought her fussing son to her chest.

Kazuhiko’s cries immediately subsided as he found his mother’s nipple and latched onto it, sucking furiously, trying to get her milk to let-down in order to drink her milk. His sucking slowed as her milk flowed and satisfied his hunger. As her son grew older, her breasts produced more milk, which made it uncomfortable as they swelled before his normal feeding times. Katara gazed down at her hungry son with a loving smile as she reached up to caress his soft cheek. She loved holding him to her, to press him close to her heart. The moments when Kazu would stare into her eyes as she held him caused a pang of love and protectiveness to swell in her chest. With a fond smile, Katara began to hum softly in contentment.

Zuko smiled as he watched their son feed, who would occasionally make satisfied little sounds as he kneaded his mother’s breast with his tiny hand, his brow furrowed in concentration. Caressing the baby’s hair with one hand, he leaned down to kiss his son’s head before pulling back to continue observing his family. There was nothing as fascinating or endearing as watching a mother feeding her child. Kazuhiko really was a beautiful baby, with dark hair and almond-shaped eyes like his father. Reaching out, he held Kazu’s small foot while he ate and he smiled in amusement when the baby lazily kicked his foot. Returning his gaze to his son’s face, Zuko felt his heart expand when he saw that Kazu was staring at him and he stared back, enthralled. A moment later, Kazu’s eyes shifted to the rustling leaves above them as he continued to nurse.
Now that he didn’t have his son’s attention, Zuko’s gaze shifted to Katara’s other exposed mound as she lowered the other side of her top in order to switch Kazu from one breast to the other. It was fortunate that they were the only ones in the private garden for he sure as hell did not want anyone else to gaze upon what was his. He swallowed at the sight and quickly glanced away before his thoughts carried him to other less innocent paths. He loved his son, but he could not wait until he had Katara’s breasts all to himself again. Once again, the image of him placing his mouth to his wife’s nipples to see what her milk tasted like surfaced in his mind before he tried to shake the thought away. It had been so long since they had been intimate and Zuko could not help wanting to run his hands all over her body, exploring her new curves and caressing her softness as he sheathed himself inside her. He cleared his throat.

“I love our son, but he has taken my place too much recently,” he found himself confessing out loud.

“Why, Zuko, are you jealous of your own son?” Katara replied with an amused giggle.

“No,” Zuko quickly replied before he quietly mumbled, “Well…a little.”

The Fire Lady could not stop the grin that appeared on her face at Zuko’s confession. She could hear the pout in his tone and it was amusing to hear it from the usually stoic Fire Lord. She chuckled quietly before a mischievous smile curled her lips, which Zuko missed since he was once again gazing at Kazuhiko. A plan was forming in her head that involved finding someone to look after Kazu for the night so she could show her husband how much she had missed him. She could not wait.

Oblivious to his wife’s thoughts, Zuko watched as his son’s eyes began to droop a little as his sucking became slower. Kazuhiko really was a gorgeous baby. A comfortable silence settled over them and Zuko wrapped an arm around Katara’s lower back as they continue to watch the little bundle of joy they had created. The firebender contemplated on how content he felt at this moment with just his wife and their son, sitting beneath the cool shade of the cherry blossom tree in the tranquility of their private garden. This was what he had missed and longed for during those two months he was separated from them in Omashu.

A few minutes later, Kazu detached himself with a soft coo and Katara gently brought him up to her shoulder to burp him before bringing him back down against her chest. The Fire Lord smiled indulgently when their son let out a contented little sigh as he cuddled against his mother’s warm chest before promptly falling asleep. Zuko watched as Katara smiled and lifted the baby’s curled fist to kiss it as she stared tenderly down at him. The sight caused warmth to spread through Zuko’s chest and he thought about commissioning a family portrait to immortalize such a sweet scene.

“It’ll be dinner time soon,” Katara spoke up softly, so as to not disturb the baby’s slumber.
Zuko nodded as he glanced briefly at the setting sun.

“I haven’t seen my mother or uncle since my arrival. No one else,” Zuko stated just as quietly. “I was eager to see you and Kazuhiko.”

The waterbender looked up to smile at her husband whose arm was still wound around her.

“They had things to do, but they’ll be happy to see you returned,” she said.

Another nod was Zuko’s response.

“Sokka and Aang were also impatient to see Suki and Toph,” the firebender added with a chuckle.

“If you had let us know ahead of time you were arriving today, everybody would’ve been here to greet you,” she stated.

“Blame that on Sokka. He wanted it to be a surprise.”

They chuckled quietly.

“Do you have anything planned after dinner?” the waterbender asked a moment later as she gazed at him from under her lashes.

If he had looked up to see her expression, Zuko would have understood her meaning.

“I planned to look through some paperwork before my meeting with the advisors tomorrow,” he replied, “But other than that, the rest of my day is free.”

“Can you meet me in our room once you finish?” the waterbender asked and smiled when he looked at her.
Zuko returned her smile and agreed, wanting to spend more time with his small family. He missed his wife’s impish expression as he caressed his sleeping son’s hair before he pressed a quick kiss to Katara’s temple, not realizing that his wish to possess his waterbender once again was going to be granted very soon.

Katara inwardly smirked, knowing that her husband would have left his work for another time if he knew what she was planning for them. But duties came first and she also had to prepare. Perhaps she could ask her mother-in-law if she could look after Kazu for a few hours since she knew how much Ursa loved spending time with her grandson. She would have asked Jiao, but Katara didn’t want to interrupt her time with Kuo so soon after his return. Same thing with Suki and Sokka. And she really couldn’t ask Toph either for the same reasons and also because the small earthbender would protest being saddled with the job of babysitter. Once Kazu was older, he would be placed in Zuko’s old childhood bedchamber that would solely be his.

“Here, I’ll hold him,” Zuko’s voice brought her out of her thoughts as he reached for the slumbering baby.

Once he had carefully taken a hold of Kazu, Katara quickly retied her top before grasping his hand so he could pull her up. She gathered the baby’s toys and put them inside the small basket that had been placed aside before picking up the blanket and folding it neatly and putting it on top of the toys. Once done, she looked up to smile at her silent husband.

“Ready?” he asked.

Katara nodded with another inward smirk.

“More than ever.”

Zuko walked swiftly down the golden corridor as he headed to his room, eager to spend more time with Katara and Kazu. After a jovial dinner with the entire family, including Toph and Aang, Zuko excused himself to retreat to his study in order to look through some of the documents that urgently needed his attention. It had taken longer than he had wished, but he had eventually finished and was now making his way to the royal chambers. Hopefully, Katara was still awake, though he would understand if he found her sleeping, the demands of both their son and her Fire Lady duties were exhausting.

During dinner, he had caught Katara giving him teasingly, alluring smiles, the intensity of her azure eyes as they locked with his golden ones setting him on fire and making him clench his wine cup tightly. But just as quickly she would look away to talk to the others as if her eyes had not burned him to cinders and left him aching and bewildered. Now that he was by her side again, his desire for her had increased to the point that he had been unable to stop the fantasies that sprang in his head while in his study. One reason why it took him so long to go through his paperwork.

Agni, he wanted her.

He wondered when they could finally make love again. Once again, images of what he had seen and read in that erotic book (which he had reluctantly returned to its hiding place) sprang in his head. The vision of him and Katara engaging in anal sex surfaced in his mind, as it had repeatedly over the past two months, and he stifled a groan as the thought made his groin tighten. He shook his head and took a deep breath to calm his arousal. He planned on asking Katara about the possibility of them finally making love if she was still awake, if not he’d just ask her tomorrow and hope that time came soon. He didn’t even know if she was fully healed yet.

As he reached the royal chambers, he found the two nights guards that Jee had personally appointed at their posts. Since they needed their well-deserved rest, Shen was dismissed to spend the day as he pleased while Kuo spent the rest of the day with his family. After quietly dismissing the night guards, Zuko quickly opened one of the golden doors and crossed the antechamber before opening the other set of doors more carefully, not wanting to wake Kazu if he was sleeping. He quietly closed the door behind him before turning around to survey the room, noticing that the fireplace and some candles were illuminating the room, making him realize that his wife was probably still awake. His eyes shifted to the massive bed and he froze, his breath hitching in his throat at the sight that greeted him. Katara was reclining against the headboard, completely naked, her long chestnut hair unbound and falling around her shoulders. Her lovely legs were splayed open as she stared intensely at him through half-lidded eyes. Her delicate fingers slowly rubbed and circled her swollen bud while her other hand massaged her full breast and pinched her dusky nipple. Her pink sex was entirely bared for his perusal. The sight reminded him of the other time he had found her like this and he groaned quietly. Her folds and upper thighs were completely wet with her juices and Zuko swallowed thickly as he felt his cock immediately harden in arousal. The Fire Lord stood in silent fascination, a fierce hunger thundering through him as he watched his wife move her hand down to slip one finger into her dripping entrance.

“Oooh,” she moaned as she added another finger and slowly pumped them in and out of her. “Mmm, Zuko, that feels so good.”

The sound of her breathless moan spurred Zuko into action and he quickly began to divest himself of his clothing as he continued to watch Katara pleasure herself as she stared at him with a wanton gleam in her blue eyes. Zuko reached for the ties of his trousers before he froze and his eyes darted to the spot where Kazu usually rested only to find that he and the crib were not there.
“Kazu?” he inquired in a strained voice as he turned back to his tempting wife.

“Ursa agreed to look after him for a few hours,” Katara responded before she breathlessly added, “I need you, Zuko. So, so much.”

“Gods,” Zuko groaned heatedly at the desperation in her tone.

His hands almost ripped at the ties that held his last article of clothing up in his eagerness to join his wife. When his pants fell around his ankles and his cock sprang free, the waterbender moaned louder as she increased the pace of her fingers. She licked her lips as she stared hungrily at his turgid flesh.

“You little minx,” Zuko purred huskily as he began to slowly crawl up the bed toward her. “You were planning this all along.”

“I wanted your welcome home gift to be a surprise,” she crooned sensually as she watched him move closer to her, “Surprise.”

“Best surprise ever,” he growled throatily.

He raked his eyes all over her lush body, taking in her fuller breasts and hips with fascination. The sight of such womanly curves only caused his shaft to throb painfully. Agni, he needed her. His body, tight as a bowstring, burned to bury himself inside her wet, welcoming heat.

Panting softly in both pleasure and anticipation, Katara watched her husband stalk toward her on all fours, a predatory glint in his golden eyes, causing her wet walls to flutter against her pumping fingers. He spread her legs wider apart so he could settled between them before he pressed his hard body flat against her smaller form, causing them both to groan at the sensation of skin against skin. He thrust his hips once and it caused her fingers to sink deeper into her. He smirked when she let out a small gasp.

The waterbender watched with bated breath as her husband stared down at her for a moment before he quickly cut the distance between them to capture her lips. With a loud moan, Katara moved her hand away from her sex so she could clutch his long hair tightly with both hands, her fingers digging deeply into the strands as he kissed her hungrily. She returned his ardent kisses just as fiercely, and when he slipped his tongue inside her mouth, she wantonly sucked at it and curled hers around it. She groaned his name into his mouth when he wrapped his arms tightly around her and massaged his thickly engorged cock along her wet folds, so close to where she wanted him to be.

La, she missed this, she missed him. She wanted him like never before. It had been months since he had touched her and she craved him so desperately. She had pleasured herself a few times while he was away, but it was never enough and only left her longing even more for him. She felt him slip a hand between their bodies and she cried out when his fingers began to play with her sensitive clit.

“Ohh, haaa, mmm,” she moaned as she moved against his skillful fingers. “Yes, so good.”

Then he thrust two fingers inside her and began to pump them slowly, but firmly, pressing against that sweet spot inside her, making her bow her back in immense pleasure.

“How!” she whimpered loudly as she wiggled beneath him, undulating her hips so that his fingers sank deeper and her thigh pressed firmly against his shaft, “Please. I want you inside me.”

Zuko groaned at her words and he almost succumbed to what they both wanted, but he held himself back—barely. He had not touched her or tasted her in months and he wanted to reacquaint himself to her amazing body, to her delicious taste, before he finally took her. Forcing himself away from her mouth, Zuko closed his eyes and panted hard as he tried to rein in his straining arousal. He reopened his eyes when he felt Katara touched his scarred cheek and he stared down into her darkened eyes.

“I want to taste your sweet pussy first before I bury myself inside you,” he growled throatily as he gave her a wicked smirk.

“Oh, yes, yes,” the waterbender purred enthusiastically as she arched against him, his dirty words causing her stomach to tighten as they always did.

Groaning, Zuko leaned down to kiss her one more time before he pulled away to latch his mouth onto the fluttering pulse of her neck, causing her to mewl his name. He breathed in the sweet scent of her hair, realizing that she had taken a bath before he arrived, and he greedily lapped at her clean skin as he continued to move his fingers within her. He moved down so he could plant moist kisses and gentle nips along her throat, shoulder, and collarbones. Removing his fingers from inside her, he slipped them into his mouth and moaned at her taste as he wrapped his tongue around them. He heard Katara call his name and he slipped his fingers out with a loud, wet sound. He kissed down her skin once again until he arrived at her wonderful, heaving mounds. He cupped both within his large hands, pushing them together and up, and he licked her cleavage before deciding to worship them more thoroughly later; he was desperate to bury his face between her luscious thighs.
He continued his descent down her body, stopping briefly to kiss and lave her navel. He could feel Katara squirming in anticipation beneath him and he knew that if he did not hurry she would take matters into her own hands and take her pleasure of him regardless of what he planned. Before he continued further, however, his mind once again flashed to that book he had read and thoroughly studied. Perhaps now, while Katara was completely aroused, she would be more open to his suggestion about incorporating anal sex into their intimate moments. Gods, he hoped she was amendable to the idea.

Katara had been biting her lip as she waited breathlessly for Zuko to bury his face between her thighs only to frown when he crawled back up her body. He looked down at her with an intense expression that caused heat to flare throughout her nerve endings. Before she could ask him what he was thinking, her firebender cupped her face and leaned down to take her lips in a passionate kiss that left her breathless and aching beneath him.

“K-Katara,” he rasped huskily before he swallowed, “Before we continue…I wish to…discuss the possibility of us…trying something…different.”

“Like what?” Katara asked breathlessly.

She always loved it when they tried new things and she felt her core clench in both arousal and eagerness. However, there was something in his tone along with the slight hesitancy in his eyes that reached her dazed mind that warned her that what Zuko had in mind was probably something she would not be agreeable to. A small frown appeared on her brow.

“I’m willing to try new things with you,” she told him sincerely. “As long as it doesn’t involve us hurting each other physically or….sharing each other with a third person,” she added in a hard tone.

During one of their visits to the palace to have tea with Katara, a couple of the younger noblewomen had boasted about their sexual exploits, even when she frowned at them. One woman had said she had a lover who loved to inflict pain by striking her with his hand or using a blunt object such as a cane on her. A few other women had even talked about how their husbands loved to bring in one or two of their concubines into their intimate moments with their wives. Another woman had even boasted that she had attended an orgy a rich noble had hosted at his house. Katara had only stared at them in incredulity. She knew everybody had their sexual preferences, but there were just some things she definitely did not wish to try.

“Hurting you is definitely not a turn on,” Zuko replied with a deep frown before he growled, “And I will never agree with us sharing each other. You are mine and I am only yours.”
“Good,” Katara purred as she cupped the back of his head and brought him down to kiss him. When they pulled away to catch their breaths, she asked, “So what do you have in mind?”

Zuko swallowed again as he stared down into her inquisitive eyes. Gods, she was so beautiful and he needed her so very badly. He wanted to make every part, every inch, of her exquisite body his and there was still one place that he had not touched yet. Would she let him? Would she give her everything to him?

“Zuko?” she asked in a strained moan and she shifted beneath him.

“I…uh, well…” he began slowly before he continued a bit more strongly, “One night, while I was browsing Bumi’s library, I came across one of those erotic instructional manuals I mentioned to you before. And well, I came across something interesting that I thought would make our sex life more… thrilling.”

“Oh?” Katara asked softly as she sensually ran her fingers down his back, smiling when her husband groaned softly at her touch. “Did you come across a new position for us to try?”

“Uh, well, you could say that,” Zuko replied slowly as he continued to watch her expression, admiring the flush on her cheeks caused by their earlier ministrations, “I’m referring to… anal sex. And I was wondering if you would be okay with us trying it…”

“Anal sex?” Katara repeated slowly, a small frown appearing on her brow as she thought about what Zuko had said.

She had heard about it, but it was mostly about how unpleasant and painful it could be. Some people even though it was taboo or gross. She really didn’t know much about anal sex, honestly, to say what she thought about it. Would it be painful if she and Zuko tried it? But then again, she had been told losing her virginity would be extremely painful, and although it did hurt, it wasn’t as bad as they had made it out to be. Maybe if she and Zuko tried it, it would be pleasant? She bit her lip.

How would it feel? To have Zuko’s shaft inside that part of her body? Would it feel good or would it be too painful? After all, her husband was a well-endowed man.

She shifted again in uncertainty as she thought about the issue. Yet, she could not deny that she had been curious about the act ever since she had first heard about it. A couple of the noblewomen had talked about their experiences with anal sex. A few had heartily enthused about how enjoyable the act was and how much pleasure they had achieved from it. She had felt herself flush in embarrassment, less from their frank discussion but more at her interest at their words. But she had dismissed the thought since she didn’t think Zuko would be interested in it and she didn’t know how to introduce that to him. But now that he was, she found herself more and more excited by the idea.

She focused again on Zuko and realized he was still looking at her. There was an intense, hot gleam in his golden eyes that demonstrated his eagerness and arousal, but he was patient as he waited silently for her reply. She relaxed a little as she made her decision. She was willing to try it. If it did hurt and she didn’t like it, she knew Zuko would immediately stop and she trusted him to be gentle with her as they forayed into this new adventure. Besides, Zuko always strove to bring her the most pleasure possible and she knew this would not be any different. That last thought, about the immense pleasure she could experience if only she allowed it, was what finally made her speak her thoughts.

“Um, okay, we could try it,” she replied as her fingers moved restlessly over his back, suddenly unsure on how to proceed, “So…how do we start?”

Zuko felt his entire body flare with heat, his cock throbbing in lust, at her acceptance and it was all he could do to stop himself from devouring her mouth and sinking his body inside her warmth with his exuberance. Instead, he leaned down to gently, sensually, kiss her lips as he slowly rocked his hips against hers. Simultaneous moans rose between them at the amazing sensation the friction caused. He appreciated that she was willing to try new things, but it was the complete trust she placed in him with her body, with her heart, that made him love her so much. Pulling away from her skillful mouth so he could finally answer her question, Zuko panted heavily as their bodies continued to rock erotically together.

“I actually won’t be penetrating you today,” he told her huskily before hurriedly adding when he saw her frown, “The book stated that lots of preparation was important before actual anal sex in order for the experience to be enjoyable.”

“Okay, so what do we have to do?” Katara asked breathlessly as she sensually rubbed her body against him, her stomach tightening every time the ridge of his cock slid against her bud. She felt her sex clench when she saw a wicked smirk overtake her firebender’s handsome face as he slowly rocked back against her.

“You just relax,” he growled throatily, “I’ll make sure you feel good.”

Before Katara could ask him how he planned to do that, she was distracted with the passionate kiss he bestowed on her that left her mind dazed and her body tingling in arousal. All too soon, however, he pulled away from her lips, causing her to groan her disappointment, but not a second later, his mouth was attached to that sensitive spot on her neck that made her squirm and gasp against him. He continued to press more sensual, soft kisses down her body and her stomach quivered when he moved closer to her moist heat.

“Zuko, please,” she could not help but moan in frustrated arousal.

Instead of replying to her plea, Zuko settled himself between her legs, pushing her thighs further apart to reveal his sweet haven, the place he most desired to be. He hungrily eyed his wife’s swollen folds, glistening with her arousal, before he glanced up her body to see her watching him over her heaving breasts. He suppressed a smirk when he noticed her breath speeding up as he moved his mouth closer to her sex. He inhaled deeply before letting out a loud sigh at her heady scent, feeling his mouth water and his cock throbbing at the thought of tasting her.

Then without further preamble, he slipped his tongue out and slid it up from her clenching entrance to her sensitive clit.

“Yes!” Katara cried out, her body jerking at the amazing sensation.

Pressing his palms against her upper thighs to keep her widely open for his pleasure, Zuko began to rapidly and roughly lap and suck at her swollen folds. He made sure to apply more pressure to her opening and her swollen bud by using his tongue and lips. His efforts were rewarded by his waterbender’s moans and cries and the writhing of her hips as she tried to move closer to his face.

“I’ve thought of nothing but throwing you down and eating you out while I’ve been gone,” he growled throatily as he gave another firm suck of her clit. “And once I’ve drunk up your juices to my heart’s content, I will bury my thick cock deep inside your tight, wet pussy and fuck you until you can’t walk for days.”

“Yes, please, haah,” Katara moaned at both his dirty words and the anticipation of him following through with his promise.

“Ohhh, gods, Zuko!” she cried out her husband’s name when he covered her slick folds entirely with his mouth as he thrust his tongue as deeply as he could inside her. Her eyes rolled back when she felt him rub against her walls, the sensation of his hot breath and wet tongue only causing the fire in her lower stomach to flare to dangerous levels. She bucked and undulated under him, trying to gain more pleasure and usher in that delicious ecstasy. La, she needed him so badly!

Pulling back to catch his breath (only a few inches since Katara’s hands were deeply buried in his hair), Zuko licked his lips to savor her taste as he watched as a fresh gush of her cream seeped out from her and leaked down her bottom to lubricate the puckered hole he had been fantasizing about for months. He could not wait any longer. He needed to touch that part of her.

Katara’s eyes opened and she gasped when she suddenly found herself being flipped onto her front. She could feel her stomach quivering and core throbbing with the sudden loss of stimulation, but her arousal flared at the anticipation of Zuko entering her from behind. She moaned deeply when she felt his large hands grab her hips and pulled them up so she was on her knees.

“So lovely,” Zuko growled throatily as his eyes lustfully roved over the curve of his waterbender’s ass as if she were presenting all of its lush glory for his viewing pleasure.

Katara moaned and shuddered when she felt him run his hands up and down her back before sliding them under her as he pressed his chest along the length of her back. She heard him murmur her name as he moved her long hair aside and pressed desperate kisses along her neck and shoulder. He leisurely moved his hands over her stomach before moving them up, slowly, teasingly, until she felt she was about to burst with the anticipation. She arched her back and moaned when he finally grabbed her breasts and squeezed them firmly.

“Oooh, mmm,” she moaned deeply as she pressed her ass against his cock, wanting to have him inside her already. She smiled in triumph when he bucked his hips against her and groaned. A frown appeared on her brow a second later, however, when she felt him suddenly move away from her. She looked over her shoulder questioningly and she watched as a roguish smile curled his lips.

“You’ll have me inside you soon, Katara, but not yet,” he purred huskily as his hands continued to stroke her rear cheeks.

Before Katara could voice her disappointment, a throaty moan escaped her throat when Zuko swiftly leaned back down and plunged his skillful tongue back inside her wet passage. Her fingers dug into the mattress beneath her and her eyes rolled back when Zuko latched onto her clit and began to roughly suck on it. The amazing sensations caused her belly to tighten and her thighs to shake.

“Y-yes, yes, Zu-Zuko, oh!” she whimpered.

Zuko pulled back as Katara’s cries and moans intensified. His eyes became riveted by the sight of her ass. His wife’s backside was perfect and he loved to touch it as much as he did her breasts. Her cheeks were round and firm thanks to her waterbending training, but still fleshy that he could grab and fondle them. He also loved the tantalizing little dimples at the base of her spine. His attention shifted to her swollen folds, wet with her juices and his saliva. The sight of her pink pussy surrounded by the rich, brown skin of her ass cheeks always fascinated him. Licking his lips, he continued to stare for a moment longer before his gaze traveled and settled on the little puckered hole nestled between those exquisite round cheeks. He felt his shaft pulse with his arousal at the thought of one day slipping himself inside there. He took note of the large amount of his precum that was leaking down his turgid length and coating his heavy sac and he knew his body was desperate for orgasm after so long without making love to his waterbender.

When Zuko didn’t continue, Katara let out an impatient little hiss. She wiggled her butt to entice her firebender to continue giving her pleasure, knowing how much he loved it when she did that. A smile stretched her lips when she felt him kiss her right cheek and then her left before the sensation of his hot breath on her drenched skin caused her muscles to tense in anticipation of his mouth pleasuring her sex again. Instead, she felt a tentative flick of his tongue on her anus. Her eyes widened and she stiffened, suddenly uncertain.

“Are you okay?” he asked. His tone was soft, but his voice was rough with need.

He was caressing her rear cheeks and thighs, and she knew he was waiting for her to give him a sign that he could continue. Katara forced herself to relax. She had told him she would give anal sex a try and she would. Even if she ended up not liking it, she could say she at least tried. Besides, she was really curious.

“I’m fine,” she replied before she sultrily purred, “Touch me, Zuko.”

At her words, Zuko relaxed and slowly let out the breath he had been holding as he waited for her response. He had been prepared to back away if she decided not to continue, but he thanked his lucky stars that his wife was willing to see where things went. He vowed that he would pleasure her so thoroughly that she would beg him not only to take her pussy but her ass as well.

He caressed her lush cheeks once more before he spread them widely as he leaned back down. He heard her gasp his name as he slid his tongue from her clit, through her folds, and then back to her anus. The juices he had coaxed from her body earlier had coated the puckered hole nicely, which would make this first foray into anal sex go more smoothly. He flicked his tongue a little more firmly against the tight bud and he felt her tense again.

“Relax, Katara,” he purred reassuringly, “I’ll make you feel good. I promise.”

Katara once again forced herself to relax, telling herself that instead of thinking of how unpleasant anal sex could be, she should think about the pleasure she could derive from it. She bit her lip when she felt Zuko once again lick her ass, pressing the tip of his wet tongue even harder. The sensation was strange and unfamiliar, yet not displeasing. It might have been crude, but it felt good. It was wet, soft, and oh so hot. He continued to lick her there longer until her body gradually relaxed before he returned to pleasuring her clit and her pussy with his tongue. He continued to alternate between the three until the pleasure began to make her moan loudly and insistently rock back against his mouth for more.

Just when she thought the sensations couldn’t get any better, Zuko slipped two long fingers into her pussy and began to pump them furiously while he probed eagerly at her smaller entrance with his tongue.

“Ahhh, gods!” Katara screamed as an orgasm crashed into her, sending her spiraling into a world of ecstasy that blanked her mind from everything except the pleasure she was experiencing. Her eyes rolled back when Zuko continued to finger her core until everything below her waist, from her groin to her thighs, were completely drenched in her juices.

Then she collapsed back on the mattress, panting heavily and moaning incoherently as her body shuddered uncontrollably, her mind blank from the euphoria she had just experienced. Wow, Zuko had only used his mouth to stimulate her ass and it was incredible. How much more pleasurable would it be when he used his fingers or cock? A moment later, as her body eventually relaxed, she became aware that Zuko was gently caressing her backside and murmuring against her hair.

“Good?” she heard him ask.

“Amazing,” she groaned quietly as she looked over her shoulder to stare at him. “More,” she demanded sultrily.

Zuko grinned down at her, her eagerness only causing his arousal to blaze higher. Gods, he loved this woman. He would never tire of giving her pleasure if she would always look at him with such desire and love in her large, blue eyes.

“Get on your knees again, Katara,” he ordered huskily as he pulled away from her back.

The brunette swiftly did as he asked, her core clenching in wanton anticipation of what else her husband would do to her. Resting her upper body on the mattress, she once again wiggled her ass in the air to entice her firebender to continue giving her pleasure. She jumped and cried out loudly when Zuko crashed his face into her soaked sex and began to eat her out as if he were dying of thirst.
“Oh, La, Zuk-o-o, mmm!” she moaned as her fingers clenched the sheets beneath her.

When his tongue moved to once again probe her tighter opening, Katara enthusiastically rocked back into him. A gasp escaped her when she felt a gentle smack on the left cheek of her rear. She loved it when he spanked her. He always made sure to do it firmly, not enough to be painful or to leave red marks or bruises, but enough that it left a pleasant sting. She pushed back against his face and was rewarded with another smack that only made the pleasure mount higher. She knew he was telling her to remain still, but what he was doing to her felt so good, it was hard not to move. She was forced to comply to his wishes when he stopped licking her, but as soon as she remained still he rewarded her by taking a long sweep of his hot tongue from her clit to her anus, which he probed with the tip of his tongue.

“Ooooh, g-gods, so good,” she hissed and her mouth dropped open in immense pleasure.

The sound of Katara’s moans only increased Zuko’s pleasure. His body felt ready to burst as his desire to bury himself in his wife’s tight, wet heat grew into an inferno of lustful need. He continued to devour her before he reached his hand between her legs. Without removing his mouth from her, he began to stroke her slick folds with his fingers until they were completely drenched with her juices. Then he slowly slipped them up and pressed them lightly on her anus. He felt her tense once again, so he did not move his fingers and focused instead on sucking roughly on her clit. Once she was moaning and straining against him, he began to gently circle the forbidden hole.

Katara’s eyes widened at the strange sensation. But just like with his tongue, the feeling—although unfamiliar—was pleasurable. He was stimulating new nerve endings she had not realized she had before and it felt damn good. Her firebender continued to gently rub against her anus for a moment longer, while he sucked and licked at her bud and folds, and it took her a moment to realize he wasn’t teasing her but was actually concerned of hurting her.

“It’s fine. Go ahead,” she whispered breathlessly.

Zuko pulled his face away and swallowed hard. He really hoped he did not hurt her, not only because he feared she would never want to try anal sex again, but because he hated to cause her any sort of pain. He made sure to gather more of her juices on his long digit before he slowly began to insert his index finger inside the previously untouched opening. He heard her suck in her breath. Just as he expected, she was so incredibly tight that it made his entry difficult. But luckily, her natural lubrication was extremely helpful, the second time he pressed forward he was able to slip his finger in.

Katara groaned lowly and bit her lip. The sensation was odd, but not at all painful as she had been expecting, so she was able to relax. She felt Zuko slowly pull his finger back and she held her breath. When he pushed inside her once more, her breath escaped her in a loud moan. After a few more slow strokes, his finger began to move much more smoothly. Having his finger moving in that part of her body was strange, but she could not deny it felt really good.

“Zu…o-ooh, Zuko,” she moaned gutturally as her fingers clenched restlessly at the bedsheets and her body trembled. “More, please, uuhhh, more…”

Pulling away from flicking her clit with his tongue, Zuko pressed his mouth against her right cheek as he continued to move his finger within her.

“Does that feel good?” he growled huskily, “Do you like my finger inside your ass, my naughty water nymph?”

“Y-yes, gods, yes!” she mewled as she pressed back against his finger.

Zuko groaned at her quick and honest reply. Reaching up with his other hand, he massaged her entire sex with his palm until he was completely covered in her warm cream then he brought it down toward his painfully erect shaft. A deep growl escaped him as he began to roughly stroke his turgid length from the base to the mushroomed tip. The combination of Katara’s juices and his own fluids increased his stimulation. Panting heavily from the pleasure, Zuko pulled out his finger to collect more of her juices. Just as he brought his mouth back on her clit, he gently inserted two fingers inside her tighter back entrance.

Katara let out a high-pitched cry at the sudden increase in pressure and pleasure. The multiple sensations her body was experiencing were quickly marshaling her into another orgasm. Her toes began to curl and her lower stomach began to coil tightly as she waited almost desperately for that release. It only took a few more thrusts of Zuko’s fingers and a few more licks and sucks of his tongue to send her over the edge.

“Ahhhh!” she screamed as her body convulsed as pleasure rushed all over her body.

Zuko slowed the strokes on his cock as he watched the way Katara’s pussy clenched repeatedly, as if trying to grasped onto something, while her anus clamped tightly around his pumping fingers. What an incredible sight. He could only imagine how amazing it would feel when it was his length wedged in there instead of just his fingers. When Katara began to whimper, he stopped and carefully removed his fingers, knowing how sensitive she sometimes became. Instead of collapsing back onto the mattress, his wife held her lovely backside high in the air. She was moaning softly and panting slightly, so he decided to wait until she was ready to go at it again.
He began to tenderly caress her ass, hips, and thighs. It seemed like she really enjoyed his touch on her forbidden ring and he could not wait for them to experiment until the moment finally came when he could plunge his cock deep into her ass. He was distracted from his thoughts when he noticed Katara look over her shoulder to give him a seductive smile.

“Zuko,” she throatily called his name.

“Yes, love?” he replied huskily.

“Fuck me,” she demanded in a purr, “Now.”

Another surge of burning need coursed through his veins and the firebender felt his cock throb at her dirty words. He loved it when she lost all inhibition and spoke to him in such a manner because it showed how much she wanted him. She must have been as starved for sex as he had been for the last couple of months.

“With pleasure,” he rumbled deeply as he settled himself on his knees.

He watched as his naughty waterbender once again wiggled her ass teasingly, invitingly, at him. His eyes drank in the sight of how her juices had poured heavily out of her, leaving shiny, wet trails down the insides of her beautiful thighs. He grabbed her hips and she wiggled in his hold. He softly smacked her right cheek once again and chuckled deeply when she only moaned and pushed herself back against him. Groaning, he rested his cock against the line of her ass cheeks and ground himself against her wet flesh.

“Can you feel how hard I am for you?” he growled and smirked when she moaned in response.

Moving closer, he leaned over her and covered her back with his chest as he buried his face in her hair. He continued to grind his erection against her as he began to gently suck on her neck before he moved to lick the shell of her ear. He felt as if his entire body was on fire and he knew the only thing capable of quenching such fierce need was his wife.

“Now, Katara,” he rasped huskily, “I’m going to fuck you.”

Katara threw her head back and wailed her pleasure when Zuko thrust his cock deep inside her wet pussy. Simultaneous moans of pleasure fell from their mouths after being so long away from each other. Then he began to pound roughly into her. Her earlier orgasms had slicked her passage wonderfully so that her husband’s fierce thrusts only heightened her pleasure. She moaned when Zuko began to suck at the sensitive spot on her neck and she knew he was going to leave a mark. He licked the area a couple of times before he dragged his lips up to graze her earlobe with his teeth, sending delicious shivers down her back.

“Ka-Katara…uhhhh, I missed being inside you so damn much,” he grunted roughly as he slammed his hips against her ass, causing a slapping sound to sound around the room.

“So good, so good,” Katara chanted. Her eyes clenched shut and she moaned at the spectacular sensation of his heavy balls striking against her clit. She began to rock her hips back against him, wanting to feel more of him, to feel every inch of him penetrating her.

Zuko’s eyes widened as he felt his orgasm approach more quickly that he had anticipated, but before he could slow down, he felt Katara clench her wet walls tightly around him as she came once again with a loud wail.

“Katara!” he shouted as he found his release.

His eyes rolled back at the incredible pleasure as his hips continued to jerk. His cock throbbed and pulsed as large spurts of his seed heavily coated his wife’s tightening pussy. He glanced back down as he continued to slowly pump into her.

“Damn, you made me come too fast,” he growled as he gave her ass another gentle smack at the same time he gave one final hard thrust.

Katara gasped and her back arched as her core contracted more tightly around the thick length at the double sensations. She shuddered and moaned at the pleasurable feeling of Zuko emptying himself inside her.

Once the mind-blowing pleasure subsided a little, Zuko slowly pulled himself out. He was not at all surprised that he had not completely softened even after he orgasmed. He had gone a long time without his wife and his body was ready for another round. But this time, he would take his time making love to Katara now that he wasn’t as desperate for release.

Mind still hazy from her earlier orgasm, Katara noticed that Zuko was no longer pressed to her back.
“Turn over, Katara,” she heard him purr huskily, “I want to see your face when I bury myself into you again.”

Katara quickly rolled over onto her back and smiled sultrily up at her husband, eager for another round. It wasn’t even a night of a full moon, but she was feeling very energized. She spread her legs enticingly and ran her hands down her body.

“Fuck me again, Zuko,” she mewled wantonly.

The firebender crawled back over her and leaned down to capture her mouth in a slow, sensual kiss that had them moaning softly against each other. Zuko continued to caress her lips for a moment, alternating from gently nibbling on her lower lip to curling his tongue around hers as he felt his shaft once again harden fully. When Katara’s breath accelerated and her moans escalated, Zuko pulled away from her delicious mouth to smile at her, admiring the way the light of the fireplace danced along her delicious brown skin. He kissed the tip of her nose, kissed each of her cheeks then her mouth before he trailed his lips down her throat. He pulled back slightly to once again admire the fullness of her breasts. He felt his mouth water and he licked his lips. Would she be adverse to him sucking at her nipples? To him tasting her milk?

When her husband buried his face on her breasts before he cupped them firmly in his hands, Katara moaned his name and arched her chest into his touch. A loud gasp escaped her when she felt Zuko’s hot breath against her hard nipples before he engulfed one into his mouth. She groaned and her head thrashed from side to side as he suckled her firmly, using the tip of his tongue to press against her sensitive peak, which caused a sharp tingle to shoot down to her clenching pussy.

“Zuko,” she whimpered as her hands buried themselves into his long dark hair. The feeling of the silky sheets beneath her and his sensual touches on her sensitive breasts and nipples only intensified the sensations rolling through her.

Groaning, Zuko opened his mouth more widely, covering the whole areola, and sucked gently. Katara’s back bowed and Zuko’s eyes widened as a warm liquid seeped into his mouth. Leaning back, he licked his lips and found that the slightly creamy substance tasted delicious, delightfully sweet.

“Z-Zuko…do that again,” Katara whimpered as she squirmed beneath him. She missed having Zuko suckling at her breasts. It was definitely a different and much more arousing experience now that her breasts were so sensitive. It was odd that the feeling was so similar to breastfeeding, but with her body fully aroused, his mouth on her breast only fueled her desire.
Panting in arousal, Zuko moved himself so that he was lying between her thighs, spreading them open further so she snuggly cradled his hips. He hissed as his aching cock slid against her folds, slick with both her juices and his seed, and it was all he could do to restrain himself from plunging into her. Not yet.

With a groan, he clamped his mouth around her entire nipple and sucked more firmly as if he were dying of thirst. She cried out and jerked into his touch, her hands holding tightly onto his head. The firebender moaned loudly as more of her sweet milk hit his taste buds, and he eagerly swallowed every drop. There was no part of his wife that wasn’t delicious, he dazedly mused. Wanting to prolong the intimacy, he slowed down until his mouth was caressing both her exquisite mounds and nipples while his hands ran teasingly over her curves as he slowly rubbed his shaft along her folds, making sure to press the head of his cock against her sensitive clit, until she was writhing wildly, restlessly beneath him.

“Zuko, please!” she cried out as her hands moved down to tightly grasped onto his backside, trying to force him inside her.

With a loud ‘pop’, Zuko let go of her other nipple and lifted his head, licking his lips to savor her sweet taste. Then he fiercely kissed her mouth before he trailed his lips along her cheek. He gently nibbled her earlobe before he softly sucked it as his hands reached up to roughly squeeze her breasts and pinch her nipples, causing a few more creamy drops to leak out, which he fervently licked clean.

“Please what, my wanton waterbender?” he purred against her breast.

“I need your cock inside me!” she demanded, as she lifted her hips to press insistently against him. She grinned when he rasped her name and bucked against her. Even when he was being the more dominant of the two, she was still able to control him.

“As you wish,” he growled amorously as he ground his turgid erection against her before he huskily demanded, “Lift your legs, Katara. Spread yourself wider for me so I can sink my cock inside you.”

With a groan, Katara immediately did what he told her, lifting her legs and pressing them tightly on his shoulders, moaning when she felt him slide his length along her wet slit, occasionally rubbing against her sensitive bud.

Zuko glanced down between them and watched as the large tip of his shaft stretched her clenching entrance. He slipped another inch deeper, slowly entering her, wanting to draw out the moment as much as possible. Once he was entirely immersed within her wet warmth, Zuko leaned forward and pressed his forehead against her, murmuring her name.
“Mm, doesn’t that feel good?” he asked huskily as he pulled his head back slightly so they could look into each other’s eyes, their panting breaths intermingling between them. “Nothing can compare to that incredible feeling when I first enter you. The way your pussy, so wet, hot, and tight, clenches around my cock…” he paused as he gave a shallow thrust, which caused her to moan, jerk her hips, and tightened her inner walls, “Uuh, yes, just like that. Incredible.”

Then without further ado, he rammed his aching shaft so forcefully into her willing body that a loud slapping sound resounded in the room along with her loud gasp and his husky groan. She arched her back and he grabbed her thighs to keep her in place as he slowly withdrew, teasingly rubbed her entrance with his mushroomed head, before he slammed himself back in.

“Yes!” Katara screamed as she threw her head back and her hands grasped on the sheets beneath her to anchor her from slipping into the raging storm brewing within her.

“Damn, Katara, your wet pussy clenching my cock feels so damn amazing,” Zuko growled out as he rammed himself inside her over and over again.

Gods, the way he talked while he took her with wild abandon was almost enough to make her come again. His pupils were dilated so much only a ring of gold was visible around them as he stared down at her.

“Faster, Zuko, harder!” she demanded as she wildly bucked her hips.

Obeying her command, Zuko growled when Katara began to thrash her head and jerked her hips up to his as she wailed his name. Grasping her legs, he moved them away from his shoulders and lifted them high over his head as he pounded into her with a fast, powerful rhythm. His breath came out in ragged pants as he felt her pussy cling tightly onto his throbbing length as if unwilling to let him go. The erotic wet, squelching sounds that sounded from between only made him speed up. Agni, he could not get enough of her. She was like a powerful drug that he could not live without.

Katara’s heart was pounding rapidly in her chest as pleasure surged throughout her entire body. Zuko’s hands grabbed her hips tightly as he continued to move within her and she relished the sensation of his thick shaft deeply penetrating her, of her sex pressing intimately against his pelvis, of his ragged breaths echoing in her ear. Calling out his name, she pressed back against him at the same time she clenched her walls tightly around him, knowing she drove him wild when she did that.

Gasping, Zuko felt his end approaching and he grit his teeth to stave it off for just a moment longer.
He slowed his movements, intent on prolonging his waterbender’s pleasure and driving her to the highest pinnacle of ecstasy. Each time they came together, he had feared that the almost delirious desire she inspired within him would weaken or disappear, but he had come to realize that the more they learned of each other and the more they shared their bodies with each other, the greater the flame of passion, of their love, became.

He leaned down to once again suck at her right nipple, drinking in the sweet milk, as he made deep, hard thrusts within her drenched core. Her moans became wails and broken pleas for him to go faster, to end her torture and give her that wonderful release her body was craving. No matter how much he tried to be strong, hearing her beg always crumbled his resolved. He could deny her nothing, especially when it would bring his own pleasure.

“Ka-Katara,” he rasped heatedly as he felt his sac begin to tighten with his impending orgasm. He quickly slipped a hand between their straining bodies and began to roughly rub her engorged clit. That was all it took for the waterbender to tumble into the scorching waves of ecstasy. Zuko growled when he felt his wife stiffen beneath him before a piercing wail escaped her throat as she chanted his name. Even as he felt her pussy ripple around him and her body jerk, he could not stop himself. He needed to wrench every drop of her rapture out of her before he surrendered to his own. He continued pounding into her at the same time he firmly pressed against her oversensitized clit, prolonging her release. His wife sobbed and writhed wildly underneath him in an almost desperate need to escape the sensual torture he was inflicting on her until her body once again tensed as another orgasm crashed through her.

“Oh, gods, Zuko!” she wailed as her hands clawed at his back, her body writhing violently beneath his larger frame, before she slammed her hips against him so that he sunk deeply into her.

With a hoarse cry of her name, Zuko stilled above her before he spilled his seed almost violently inside her with jerky movements of his hips. He shuddered as spurt after spurt of his semen burst from his body to heavily flood Katara’s clamping core. He felt as if the whole world had gone up in flames with the force of his orgasm.

Katara moaned as she clung onto her firebender’s perspiring back. Every time her pussy constricted, she felt him groan hoarsely as he ejaculated more of his hot seed inside her until she was so full his semen was leaking out of her. She felt as if her womb was warmer than usual with the amount of his fluids pouring into her. It felt very thick and sticky, clinging to every inch of her walls, and she knew how much her husband had needed that release.

Once his pulsing cock stopped spurting his hot essence into her, Zuko moved her legs back down against his hips before he relaxed against her soft chest. He nuzzled his face against her throat and soothingly kissed her neck, feeling her frantically beating pulse as he shuddered and moaned beneath him. Once his body relaxed, he leaned back slightly to smile down at her, watching as she return it with a dazed one of her own.

“Have I ever told you how beautiful you are when you come?” he panted as he reached up to brush a few sweaty strands of her hair behind her ear.

“Many times, but I’ll never get tired of hearing it,” she quipped as she ran her hands soothingly down his back.

Zuko chuckled as he bent down to press a gentle kiss on her swollen lips.

“I love you,” he whispered.

“And I love you.”

With an angry hiss, Mai slammed the door to her room shut. She had just come from a social gathering of Omashu’s nobility and she had to endure hearing more gossip about how lovely a family the Fire Nation royal couple and their newborn son made. It had angered her the first time she had heard news of Zuko proudly presenting his heir to the Fire Nation citizens and she hated hearing more about it. How could Zuko claim any kinship to a brat born of that Water Tribe wench?! Why couldn’t the bitch have died at childbirth and taken the brat with her?

Now it would make it more difficult for her to take Zuko back. And she could not do much after being banished from the palace. At least she was still allowed in the Fire Nation, she thought bitterly. How was she supposed to make Zuko take her back if she could not get near him to entice him into her bed and make him leave the waterbender for her?

Angrily, she threw a few shuriken against the wall to the right before she took a deep breath to regain her composure. A true noblewoman did not allow emotions to control her. Yet, it seemed as if the tight control she had over her emotions that she had been taught since childhood was slipping more and more. She hated it. She hated what she had become. Hated how her life had turned into. She had everything planned out; she would marry Zuko and enjoy the privilege of becoming Fire Lady. But it had all crumbled to the ground when the waterbender returned into their lives. It was all Katara’s fault and Mai despised her.

With angry jerks, she pulled her hair free from its buns and walked toward her wardrobe to change for the night. If only there was a way that she could take back all that was supposed to belong to her.
“What can I do to get Zuko back?” she asked herself as she frowned into her room.

“Perhaps I can help you get what you want,” an unfamiliar masculine voice said cajolingly.

The noblewoman narrowed her eyes at the unexpected voice and she whirled around with weapons in her hands as she eyed the intruder in her room. It was a middle-aged man with broad shoulders and a strong frame. He was leaning casually against her windowsill as he eyed her silently. But it was the smirk on his lips and the gleam in his eyes that caused the woman to tighten her grasp on her weapons.

“Who are you and what are you doing in my room?” she asked blankly, though a slight tremor betrayed her uneasiness. “Get out or I’ll end your life.”

The man chuckled at her threats as he moved away from the window to take a couple steps further into the room.

“You could try, but I assure you, you would be dead before you so much as move a muscle,” he stated arrogantly as he casually produced a flame in his hand. “Or you could choose to listen to me instead and not be harmed.”

Mai narrowed her eyes suspiciously as she studied the man standing in her room with a confident smirk on his face. Something clicked in her brain and her eyes widened when she realized she had seen his face before. Not personally, but in the many wanted posters that were spread through the Fire Nation and its colonies, as well as in Omashu.

“You’re Jianguo. The wanted rebel leader,” she stated with a frown as she shifted uneasily. What did the traitor want with her?

“Ah, how observant of you, Lady Mai,” he responded with a chuckle before he gave her a mocking bow, “I am Meng Jianguo, former general of the great Fire Nation.”

“I can’t believe you have the audacity to return here after you attacked that village near Omashu,” Mai said, ignoring his introduction as she tried to move closer to the door.
“Ah, well, circumstances brought me back,” he responded with a shrug and a nonchalant wave of his hand.

“You do know I can have the authorities arrest you, right?” she spoke up as she took another step to the door, but froze when the man raised a mocking eyebrow at her attempts.

“Oh, but you won’t do that,” he replied with another assured smirk, “Not after you listen to my proposal.”

Intrigued at his words despite herself, Mai eyed him calculatingly as she debated whether to listen to him or find a way to call her household guards to capture him. Maybe if she succeeded in capturing the rebel, Zuko would be so grateful to her that he’ll lift her punishment and allow her to return to the palace.

“What kind of proposal?” she inquired in a neutral tone.

Another mocking smirk appeared on the man’s face.

“It has come to my attention that you desire to have Zuko back,” Jianguo began as he nonchalantly ran his fingers through his hair, “I’ll help you get him if you help me in return.”

Mai frowned.

“What do you mean?”

“We are trying to reinstate Ozai on the throne as our true Fire Lord and dethrone Zuko.”

Stiffening, the noblewoman narrowed her eyes at his words.

“Why would I help you do such a thing?” she asked tersely. “I, after all, wish to be Zuko’s Fire Lady.”

With another shrug, the man casually began to walk around the room, occasionally picking up trinkets as he passed. Mai watched him both warily and confused as the silence stretched on. Her fingers twitched as she tightened them around her kunai. Perhaps she could kill him now while he was distracted. She made to move, but froze when the man looked over his shoulder to grin mockingly at her as if he knew what she had been thinking. She clenched her teeth. Damn it, she should have acted faster. She watched as the firebender dropped one of her fans disinterestedly on her vanity before he slowly made his way to her.

“Truthfully, we had planned to kill Zuko at first to get him out of the way,” Jianguo replied coolly, “But if you help us, we are willing to let him live if you take him far away and make sure he doesn’t cause any trouble. If not, we’ll just kill him as soon as the chance presents itself.”

Mai clenched her hands around her weapons and frowned.

“Think about it,” the rebel continued, his tone coaxing and smooth, “Zuko will live and you will have him all to yourself after all this...as long as you make sure he never returns to the Fire Nation.”

The dark-eyed noblewoman shifted uncertainly as she listened to his words and imagined the possibilities. Surely Zuko would rather run away with her than be killed.

“What about Katara and the heir?” she asked.

He smiled. A sadistic smile that caused a shiver to run down the woman’s spine.

“Oh, don’t you worry. I’ll take care of the waterbender and the brat.”

Mai remained skeptical as she processed everything the firebender had told her. What should she do? Should she believe what he was telling her? She stiffened when he frowned deeply at her.

“I don’t have all day to wait for your response,” he growled before he added a bit more smoothly, “Will you help us, yes or no?”

If she refused, would he kill her? She shifted uncertainly before she could stop herself. When he raised his eyebrow once again, she forced herself to relax and not show her uneasiness. She could go along with their plans for the moment and see how things panned out. Perhaps something would happen to get rid of both the rebels and Katara. She smiled inwardly. That way she could keep both Zuko and the title of Fire Lady. And she would do anything to get him back. After a moment, she gave a silent nod of acceptance as she retracted her kunai back into her sleeves.

“Very well. What is your plan?” she asked blankly.

Jianguo smirked. What a foolish woman. Her obsession with Zuko was really making her desperate that she was willing to side with them. His spy had been correct when he had informed him of how the noblewoman had accosted Zuko when the insolent whelp had visited Omashu and how she had stubbornly tried to get Zuko to take her back even when he kept rejecting her. Jianguo really couldn’t blame Zuko for dropping her. She was nothing compared to the exquisite beauty that was the blue-eyed waterbender. But after hearing his spy’s report, a plan had formed in his head that he was sure would finally make them succeed in their ultimate goals.

Oh, he knew the noblewoman was in no way loyal to them and was probably planning to double-cross them, but it did not matter since he needed her for his plan to work. How surprised would she be when she found out he would immediately kill Zuko when he had him before him?

His smirked widened.

He could not wait.

End of Part Ten
A few days after the men’s return from Omashu, the royal couple, their families, and friends were enjoying a light lunch in the private garden’s veranda. Katara smiled as she watched Zuko entertain Kazu with the baby’s favorite rattler while he continued conversing with Iroh and Hakoda about the new peace treaty. Sokka was busy playing with his twin daughters and sending silly grins at Suki, who would roll her eyes but returned his grins with affectionate smiles. Aang and Toph were huddled together, whispering and chuckling under their breaths, not really paying attention to anybody else. Ursa and Jee were talking quietly together and smiling at each other. Kanna and Pakku just watched everybody with amused smiles as they silently drank their tea.

At the sound of Kazu’s laugh, Katara returned her attention to her son and husband. Kazu tended to laugh and smile more these days and everybody had made it their purpose to produce those precious sounds as much as possible. Since his return, Zuko had been very attentive to their son’s needs and moods, and although he did not say it, she knew he was trying to make up for his absence. Though most of the time he could not figure out why Kazu would cry or fuss, he tried his best and determinedly learned for future instances. Zuko was exceedingly pleased with his son—it was obvious to anyone who saw them together—and it warmed her heart to watch how her reticent husband interacted with their baby.

Oblivious to his wife’s thoughts, Zuko glanced down and smiled at Kazuhiko when his son grasped the toy out of his hand and vigorously shook it with a joyful squeal. He loved making Kazu laugh and he hoped he would always be able to make his son happy. He looked up when he heard Jee suddenly clear his throat and he watched as his mother smiled bashfully at everybody. Although it seemed she was addressing all of them, she was looking directly at her son.

“Jee and I have decided to marry a month from now,” she announced with a pleased smile.

“Oh, that’s wonderful!” Katara exclaimed happily as she reached across the low table to grasp her mother-in-law’s hand and then Jee’s.

Everybody else immediately congratulated them. Iroh and Kanna even exclaimed it was about time. Ursa thanked everybody, but her attention was still solely focused on Zuko as she anxiously waited for his reaction. He smiled as he also reached across the table to grasp her hand.

“Congratulations, Mom. I wish you much happiness,” he said sincerely before he turned to give Jee a serious look, “You better make her happy or else.”

“I think that’s what I told you when you married Katara,” Hakoda remarked with a chuckle that had
“Are you practicing for when you have a daughter, Zuko?” Iroh asked amusedly and he turned to wink at Katara.

The waterbender laughed while Zuko gave his old uncle and father-in-law glares, which did not bother either man as they grinned back at the Fire Lord.

“You should start preparing for when the twins grow up, Snoozles,” Toph piped in with an impish grin.

“Ha! My girls are too good for any man,” Sokka sniffed arrogantly. “You’ll always stay with Papa, right, girls?” he cooed affectionately at his daughters, which caused them to giggle.

“That’s what you say now,” Suki spoke up with a chuckle, “Just wait until they hit puberty and you have to deal with all those emotions and hormones and—”

“Suki!” Sokka shouted as he covered his ears and stared at his wife in horror.

“What? Don’t tell me you expect them to remain toddlers forever,” Suki said in amusement.

“No, but geez, come on! I don’t need to hear about it!”

“Well, you’ll be hearing about it soon enough,” she teased her husband and then smiled at her daughters. “Right, girls?”

“Yes, Mama!” the blue-eyed twins immediately replied, even though they really didn’t understand what their mother had said.

Sokka pouted at their fast response and then yelped when the twins tugged playfully (painfully for him) at his hair. “Ouch! Careful there, I don’t want to be bald before my time like your uncle Aang.”

“Hey!” the airbender exclaimed indignantly even as Momo chattered excitedly on his master’s bald head. “We all know that’s by choice!”

“Yeah, yeah, whatever,” Sokka replied with a casual wave of his hand while he tried to fend of his daughters with the other and ignored the others laughing at his expense.

“I will make Ursa happy, Zuko,” Jee finally spoke up after everybody had calm down.

Zuko looked at him and nodded seriously before both men smiled.

“A month won’t be enough time to plan a party, uh, wedding,” Sokka piped in and then pouted when his daughters left him in order to go play with Momo.

“We decided we want a simple ceremony with only close family and friends,” Ursa explained as she looked up to smile at Jee.

“Then we can stay until the wedding,” Hakoda said before he smiled sadly at his daughter, “But we will have to return home soon after that. I’ve been away from the Southern Water Tribe too long and I can’t neglect my duties any longer.”

Katara smiled softly as she reached over to squeeze her father’s arm.

“We’ll come visit you once Kazuhiko is a little older,” she promised him and Zuko nodded beside her.

“I’ll have to see about building you and Zuko your own home, so the rest of us can sleep,” Sokka remarked teasingly in order to lighten up the mood.

“Sokka!” Hakoda snapped while Katara simultaneously shouted, “Shut up, Sokka!”

“What?” the blue-eyed warrior asked with mock innocence before a mischievous grin curled his lips, “Seriously. Nobody needs to hear that shi—”

A slap to the back of the head by Suki cut off his words, causing the twins to giggle and Momo to chatter loudly.

“Ow!” he yelped as he turned wounded eyes toward his wife, “That hurt!”

“Really, Sokka, you’re one to talk,” Suki told him bluntly, though there was a twinkle in her eyes.

Sokka’s face turned red while everybody else once again laughed at the young man’s expense.

Zuko sat back and watched his mother, his wife, and the other women talk about the upcoming wedding preparations while the men made small talk, mostly throwing teasing remarks at Sokka. He could see the happiness between his mother and Jee, and Zuko was sure that the admiral would make her happy. She deserved it after the misery of being married to Ozai. His sire would never understand what he had lost due to his greed.

The young Fire Lord once again glanced at his son, who was lying on his blanket between his parents. When Zuko caught his attention, Kazu gave him a big toothless smile. Returning the smile, Zuko tickled his son’s chin and the baby cooed and gurgled happily as he waved his arms in the air.

Never in his life had Zuko felt this content as he spent time with his wife, his son, and their family in such a peaceful moment. He was pleased at the happiness that surrounded those he cared for the most. It was times such as these that made it feel like everything was right in the world, even when he knew it wasn’t so. He frowned. Jianguo was still out there, and until the traitor was dead, Zuko would never feel at ease.

Shadows danced along the dark, cold walls and the sound of booted feet echoed almost harshly throughout the silent passageway. Zuko arrived outside Ozai’s prison cell and frowned, wondering why he bothered coming when he knew it was just going to waste his time. But the captain of the prison guards had sent him a message stating that Ozai wanted to speak with him and wouldn’t stop his demands. Curious about why his father wished to see him, Zuko decided to oblige, and after finishing with his meetings for the day and letting Katara know where he was going, he made his way to the prison tower with his group of personal guards.

Nodding to the prison guards posted on either side of the entrance, Zuko produced a key and unlocked the steel door. He didn’t need to look back to know Shen and Kuo were standing at attention. Entering the darkened room, Zuko slowly closed the door behind him and waited for his eyesight to adjust to the one torch burning near the door. He heard rustling coming from across the room and he warily stepped forward toward the bars that divided the space. Impassively, he watched as Ozai stood up from his thin pallet and sneered at him.
“Ah, so good of you to heed my message so quickly,” the former Fire Lord greeted mockingly as he casually flicked a strand of dirty hair over his shoulder.

Zuko ignored his sneer as he stared coolly at his disgraced father.

“Get to the point,” he spoke up passively, “I’m a busy man and don’t have time to waste on the whims of a criminal.”

Ozai narrowed his eyes and growled at him before he closed his eyes and breathed deeply to compose himself. Zuko watched him with a raised eyebrow. Looking at his son once again, Ozai shrugged as he nonchalantly strolled along his cell.

“The guards won’t stop talking about your…heir,” the older man said.

Zuko narrowed his eyes and stiffened slightly.

“What about him?” he asked gruffly.

Ozai looked up to glare at him briefly before he gave another shrug.

“Although we have our…differences, the child is still my grandson,” he began.

Zuko scoffed loudly.

“Your past words were clear enough that you feel differently,” he growled out.

The former Fire Lord’s response was another shrug as he once again brushed his long hair back.

“I may have objected to your marrying the waterbender, but now that she has given birth to your child there isn’t anything that can be done about it,” he responded simply.
“Why are you bringing up my son?” the younger man asked warily.

Ozai turned to pin his gaze on Zuko.

“I want to see the boy,” he stated firmly. “He is, after all, my first grandchild.”

“I will never let you near my son,” the firebender growled out and straightened himself to his full height to glare menacingly at his father.

“I have every right to see him as the boy’s grandfather!” Ozai hissed.

“You lost that right a long time ago when you scarred your own son and banished him from his home just because he stood up for those poor soldiers that were going to be slaughtered like cattle,” Zuko ground out fiercely.

It was Ozai’s turned to scoff and he waved a hand in the air as if what Zuko had said was inconsequential.

“You’re still whining over that?” he asked.

The firebender’s nostrils flared at his words.

“Could you not see it was for the best?” Ozai continued with a frown. “We became rulers of the mighty Fire Nation! I don’t see why you’re so hurt. I provided you with all the luxuries of a prince, didn’t I? You should be grateful I just burned you to teach you a lesson instead of killing you.”

Zuko clenched his jaw so hard it almost hurt as he resisted the urge to punch his father across his face with a fiery fist just so he would know how painful the experience was. Just so he would see that what he had done against his own son was horrific. How could his father not see how much he had hurt him? Not just physically, but mentally and emotionally. He had only been a pubescent boy when it all happened. Not only did he have to deal with half his face being in excruciating pain, but he had to face the fact that he had been thrown out of the only home he had ever known by his own father. He was only ‘teaching him a lesson’ because Zuko had been disrespectful. And yet, he lavished Azula with praise when she did something cruel.
“Why couldn’t you be more like your sister?” Ozai asked with a sneer. “Now she was someone I was proud to call my child.”

The younger man stiffened at such callous words.

“Can’t you see I grew up wondering what was wrong with me because of your preference for Azula and your indifference of me?” Zuko growled out, his eyes blazing in ire and hurt.

“So?” Ozai scoffed before he added in a hard tone, “I grew up the same way when Azulon preferred Iroh and loved him more, but I did everything possible to become greater!”

“By rejoicing in your brother’s defeat and the loss of his son?” Zuko stated just as harshly, “By killing your own father to ascend the throne?”

“If you wanted my approval you should’ve been a more competent son,” Ozai retorted instead, “You should have vied for my approval at all costs against Azula.”

“I couldn’t. Not at the expense of others.”

Another scoff escaped Ozai’s throat.

“That is why Azula had my approval,” he said cruelly, “She wasn’t a weak, sentimental fool like you.”

“And that is why Azula is the way she is now,” Zuko growled.

“I made her into one of the greatest warriors of her generation!” Ozai shouted.

“A warrior who had a complete breakdown! You brought up your own daughter to be a cruel and ruthless psychopath!” Zuko roared as he stepped closer to the cell bars to pin his father with an angry glare. “Parents aren’t supposed to be like that. They aren’t supposed to cause rivalry between their children.”
He paused briefly to gather his composure, cursing himself for allowing Ozai to rile him up. Why, after all this time, could he not let go of the pain and rage he felt at his father’s indifference? Gathering himself up, the firebender’s expression became passive.

“I will never allow any of my children to feel like they are less than their siblings,” he firmly vowed, “I will love them all equally because they would all be unique and special in their own way.”

The older man scoffed as he muttered under his breath about sentimental fools.

“I refuse to allow you to meet my son,” Zuko stated coldly, “I don’t want him near a cruel man like you.”

Ozai’s face contorted into an angry snarl as he stalked toward the cell bars so he could also glare at Zuko.

“The boy needs a true warrior in his life, not some pathetic, weakling like his father.”

But Ozai ignored him and sneered.

“The boy already shares his mother’s dirty Water Tribe blood, what could be worse?”

The words had barely left his mouth when Ozai had to duck out of the way when a fireball was hurled at the spot where his head had been a second before.

“Do not insult my family!” Zuko roared angrily. “My son is perfect, even if he turns out to be a waterbender and not a firebender.”

“Ha!” Ozai scoffed, “But would the Fire Nation welcome a waterbender as their Fire Lord?”
Zuko’s jaw clenched, but he forced himself not to ball his hands into fists and give his father the satisfaction of knowing how his words had affected him. He would love his son no matter what element he bent, but he knew it would be difficult to convince the council, the nobles, and the citizens to pledge loyalty to a waterbender.

“If there is nothing else, I’ll be taking my leave,” he said instead, his voice carefully void of any emotion. “I have things to do.”

“Wait!” Ozai shouted quickly.

When Zuko turned back to frown at him, Ozai neared the cell bars. The younger man had expected to see him glaring, but instead he was surprised to see his father’s expression soften a little.

“Ursa. Bring her to visit me. I want to see my wife.”

“She is no longer your wife,” the firebender stated and then with a smug smirk, he added, “She is too busy to bother visiting a pathetic, dirty prisoner of war.”

“What is she busy doing?” the older man asked with narrowed eyes.

“She is preparing for her wedding to my most trusted admiral,” Zuko stated smugly.

“What?!” Ozai roared furiously as he clenched the steel bars and pressed his face against them so he could glare at his son, “You lie!”

“It’s true,” Zuko responded passively, “In a few months, she will be marrying a good man who will treat her like she deserves and appreciate the wonderful person she is. Someone who truly loves her and wants to make her happy. She’ll be happy with Jee.”

“Jee?!” Ozai screamed angrily, “That miserable nobody?!”

“Jee is a good man and he truly loves Mother and wants her happiness. He even wishes to be a sort of father to me.”
“I will not allow it!” the former Fire Lord raged as he shook at the unmovable steel bars, “Ursa is mine!”

“Not anymore,” Zuko replied impassively as he stared at his enraged father behind the cell bars. “You lost your right to be her husband when you ordered her to kill your father and banished her from home, making everybody believe she had died.”

“She is still my wife since she’s alive,” Ozai insisted.

“No, she isn’t,” Zuko replied coldly, “I made sure your marriage was terminated the moment I brought her back to the Fire Nation.”

“How dare you?!” the older man growled.

“It is what she wanted,” Zuko continued.

“I need to speak to her! Bring her to me now!”

“She won’t come visit you.”

“I’ll find a way out of here to take her back!” Ozai roared furiously, “And then I will kill the rest of you before I regain my rightful place on the throne! Mark my words, boy! I will find a way!”

“You will do no such thing,” Zuko growled as he stepped closer to glare menacingly at his sire, “I will kill you before you hurt any of my family and friends.”

Without another word, the young man turned on his heel and made his way back to the large door.

“I demand you bring Ursa to me this instant!” Ozai screamed after him, but when he did not receive a response, he shouted, “I should have killed you when I had the chance, you ungrateful bastard! You are no son of mine!”
Zuko stiffened, the words cutting deep, but he forced himself not to show it, to dismiss the hurt such a rejection caused, as he looked over his shoulder stare coldly into his sire’s eyes.

“And you are no father of mine. You are nothing. You have been replaced as the ruler of the Fire Nation. Replaced in the hearts of the people. Replaced in the heart of the woman you still pine for. No one cares about you,” he growled in a low tone. He did not care if his words were cruel. There was a part of him that wanted to hurt the man back. “Don’t make any more demands to see me because you are no more than a lowly prisoner to me.”

He ignored his father’s shouts and curses as he opened the door and stepped through. He could still hear the screams as he closed the door and locked it. He turned to the silent guards positioned on either side.

“If he makes any other demands, ignore them. He doesn’t deserve anything.”

“Yes, my lord.”

A moment later, Zuko and his group of personal guards were riding back to the palace. He could feel Kuo and Shen staring curiously at his back as they rode behind him, but he ignored them. His emotions were raging and it was all he could do not to command his komodo rhino to move faster. Instead, he held a tight grip on the reins and sat straight as they rode at a steady pace. Once they reached the palace courtyard and the stable hands rushed to take their mounts, Zuko dismissed his men and swiftly climbed the steps toward the elegant building.

As Zuko walked down the long, decorative corridors, Ozai’s words continued to resound in his mind. He paid no heed to the sound of his boots’ heels hitting against the marble floor or the servants that scurried out his way at the sight of their obviously angry Fire Lord as he made his way to the royal chamber. He needed to change and calm down before he met his family for dinner.

How could Ozai not see how much he had hurt his family? How could he not acknowledge the wrongs he had done? How much more selfish and cruel could he be?

Once he entered his room, he paused when he saw that Katara was there. She was sitting on her cushioned stool in front of her vanity and she was brushing her hair, wearing a light robe, and he realized he had just missed her bath. He had thought she would be back later since she had been overseeing the construction of another school, this time for illiterate adults. The advisors had once again been against the idea because they believed the common people being illiterate would stop them from rising above their station. Katara, however, had insisted that everybody should be given the chance to learn and better themselves. Besides, she had added, an educated people made for a better country. He could not be more awed and proud of his wife’s ideas.

Katara turned in her seat and smiled at him as she continued to brush her long, chocolate-colored tresses. Something must have shown in his expression because her smile faded and she placed her brush down.

“Are you all right?” she asked. “How did it go with Ozai?”

“Not good, as always,” he growled out as he finally moved away from the doors and made his way to the stand where he usually placed his armor.

“What did he want now?” the waterbender asked with a frown.

“He had the audacity to demand I bring Kazuhiko to him so he could meet him,” Zuko replied with a scoff.

“What?!” Katara hissed. “I will never allow that…man near my baby!”

“Those were my thoughts exactly. He also wanted Mother brought to him. When I refused both requests, he became angry.”

Something in his tone alerted Katara that there was more to it and her frown deepened.

“He said insulting things, didn’t he?” she asked.

“It doesn’t matter,” he replied quietly as he took off his breastplate, though he could not disguise the anger in his tone.

“Zuko…”

With harsh, jerky movement, Zuko tugged at the ties that held the lower part of his armor on as he interrupted her by angrily saying, “I can’t believe such heartless men like Ozai exist.”
“I’ve thought the same thing as well.” Katara responded quietly, a tinge of bitterness touching her tone.

The firebender turned around to see her clench her hands as she stared off towards the balcony and he knew she was thinking of her mother’s murderer. He frowned darkly and his jaw tightened. The ire he was feeling toward Ozai only seemed to increase at the thought that it was essentially his father’s fault his beloved Katara had lost her mother. Ozai had hurt so many people, besides his own family, and the former Fire Lord did not give a damn. Zuko once again felt shame that they shared the same blood.

Katara blinked and shook her head, dispelling her dark thoughts. Zuko was the one who needed her at the moment. She finally noticed that her husband’s frown had deepened and he had paused in his task after placing his swords in their place. Concerned, she stood up and made her way to him to help him put his armor away, thinking of ways to make him feel better. Maybe they could spend some time with Kazu in the garden before dinner.

Zuko watched intently as his wife approached him, observing how the thin robe she wore molded enticingly to her every curve, admiring the manner in which her unbound breasts bounced and her hips swayed, and he licked his lips as he felt his lust flare within him, fueled by his already high emotions. When she was finally standing in front of him, Zuko grabbed her hips and pulled her roughly to him, eliciting a surprised gasp from her. His mouth crashed roughly against hers, cutting off the quiet sound. It was a kiss fueled entirely by dark emotions—angry and unashamedly greedy. He kissed her fiercely, hungrily, needing some comfort, needing her as a balm to his hurt, resentment, and anger.

Katara fisted her hands in his long hair, grabbing the back of his head to firmly pull him down to her, as she returned his kisses just as ardently. She smirked when he let out a low groan as she nibbled at his lower lip and wantonly sucked on his eager tongue. She did not question his need nor did she bother to stop him to remind him dinner would be served soon since she wanted him too. She could also feel that he needed this and she would always do everything in her power to make him feel better, to pull him from the darkness that sometimes surrounded them. They pulled apart to catch their breaths and Katara moaned when he licked the shell of her ear before he leaned away to stare at her.

“Kazuhiko?” he asked, even as his hands roamed along her waist and hips.

“He’s with our family,” she replied breathlessly as her hands hurriedly grasped and pulled at the ties that kept the last of his armor on him until it landed at their feet with loud clanging sounds.
Assured that their son was being looked after, Zuko was painfully eager to make love to his wife and he kissed her once again. Suddenly, his father was forgotten and the anger and hurt he had been feeling disappeared, as more primal desires surfaced to take their place. He kissed her fiercely, but it was the almost savage way she kissed him back that caused him to rip her robe from her body before pushing her back against the wall. They barely missed crashing against the stand in their frantic passion.

They pulled back slightly to catch their breaths. Panting harshly with arousal, Katara watched as his amber eyes, dark with his lust, took a long sweep of her naked body, lingering on her swollen breasts, before his mouth was devouring her lips again. She let out a loud moan when he pressed his hard body tightly against her softer one. Her breath seemed to leave her when his chest crushed her sensitive breasts and his erection pressed against her stomach, causing a rush of wetness to gather at her core. Fire raced through her veins, her heart pounded wildly in her chest, and it was all she could do to cling onto his shoulders at the lustful hunger that was drowning her in its sweet inferno.

Zuko suddenly pulled away from her mouth and Katara opened half-lidded eyes to see him staring down at her with such a dark intensity that caused her stomach to clench in need. She knew it wasn’t going to be a gentle loving, but hard fucking. She could sense that Zuko needed this. He needed an outlet for his anger and pain. He needed to feel in control and she would give it to him by letting him manipulate her body as he desired. And although he wouldn’t say it out loud, she knew he sought to feel needed, to feel wanted. And oh, how she wanted him. Was already so wet for him. She was so hot for him, needing to feel him so badly, that she’d let him do anything to her.

He must have read her compliance and eagerness because his eyes soften for a moment before they darkened once again. A small cry of pleasure left her mouth when she felt his hand cup her sex.

“Mm, you’re burning up for me, aren’t you, Katara?” he whispered huskily, his warm breath coasting along her wet, swollen lips as his fingers glided against her slick folds. “You’re so wet and I’ve barely touched you.”

The waterbender cried out again when he slipped a finger into her. Her legs automatically moved further apart to give him more access and she was rewarded with another finger, which caused her to arch her back and moan his name.

Zuko watched in satisfaction as his wife’s head fell back against the wall and her hips rocked against his thrusting fingers. She was so wet, warm, and tight as always and he could not wait to be inside her. His eyes once again fixated themselves on her glorious breasts and he leaned down to take one dusky nipple into his hot mouth. He felt her jerk against him as she let out a long moan and he began to roughly suck at the peak. He groaned loudly at the wonderful taste of her sweet milk coating his tongue and he opened his mouth wider to suck her more fiercely to taste more of her.
“Zuk-oo, please,” she moaned brokenly as her hips rocked desperately against his fingers, “I need you.”

“Don’t worry, I’ll give you what you need,” he murmured throatily against other nipple, “I’m going to fuck your sweet, little pussy. Is that what you want? You want me to fuck you?”

Katara was so overwhelmed with need that she found it difficult to answer him. The only thing she could do was moan and nod her head vigorously as she undulated her hips against him, wanting his fingers to go deeper. But when she felt him about to pull out, she cried out a loud “Yes!”

Humming his satisfaction, Zuko pressed his thumb against her clit and rubbed firm circles over the swollen bud as he increased the pace of his fingers. He felt a gush of her fluids coat his hand and he rasped her name. He moved back to her face and pressed his mouth against hers once again.

“You’re definitely…going to get fucked tonight…my naughty waterbender,” he growled between panting breaths, “But first, I need to feel you come…on my fingers. And once you do, I’m taking you to our bed…and while I look into your eyes I’ll make you come with my hard cock.”

His dirty words and his fingers’ movements were all it took to send Katara over the edge. She screamed and her body convulsed, her hands gripping tightly onto Zuko’s upper arms as pleasure erupted all over her body.

Breathing harshly, Zuko felt his shaft throb painfully in his pants as he watched his beautiful wife’s face contort in varying degrees of pleasure. He swallowed thickly at the sensation of her slick walls clenching around his still pumping fingers. When Katara slumped against him, Zuko kissed her soothingly. But it wasn’t long before they were kissing each other fervently. When he felt Katara’s hand grab his covered length, Zuko couldn’t wait any longer and he hauled her away from the wall and into his arms. He was barely aware that she was trying to rip his tunic off, her own desires captivating her, as he moved them to their large bed.

He deposited her onto the mattress and began to tug at his tunic while he kicked off his boots. Katara sat up and helped push his trousers down his legs, eager to have him within her arms and body again. Once he was completely nude, he pounced on her. He molded his body tightly to hers, relishing in the deep moan that the contact of their naked bodies and sensation of warm skin produced from her. He grabbed her hands to press them on either side of her head, interlocking their fingers intimately, loving the way her hips cradled his, even as he continued to attack her lips with kisses.

“Zuko,” Katara demanded as she raised her hips wantonly. “I need you, now.”
Usually, Zuko liked to tease her until she was moving desperately beneath him, her blue eyes glaring at him to give her what she wanted. But not now. He was in no teasing mood. He was overcome with passion and lust. He needed to sheathe his aching shaft within the welcoming heat of her body.

“As you wish,” he purred huskily.

Zuko moved back onto his knees and he quickly spread her legs widely to accommodate him. Rocking his hips, his turgid length prodded the glistening opening of her wet pussy, nudging against her clit a few times, before returning to her entrance. He moved her legs so one was propped over his shoulder and the other daggled over his arm. Zuko thrust into her, hard and deep. Her back arched as she received him and she cried out her delight as his thick shaft stretched and filled her. He pulled her body closer and began a fast rhythm that elicited loud, broken whimpers from his waterbender.

It was hard, raw, and needy. There was a desperate need to be consumed by her passionate fire, and to be equally soothed by her loving heart. He needed to find solace and he knew the only place he would find it was with Katara. Only she—his wife, friend, and lover—could make him feel better. Be better.

Zuko leaned over her, making her curl her body, and Katara watched through dazed eyes as he looked deeply at her face. Then he kissed her with such a passionate fury, with a desperate need that was almost bruising, and yet only made her feel loved and needed. Cherished. She responded to him with equal fervor, kissing him just as violently, letting him use her body as he wished.

“Haah, mm, yesss,” she panted.

The firebender felt his heart clench at the open honesty and understanding he could detect through Katara’s kiss and her body’s movements, and he felt the need to be even closer to her. Moving her legs down and wrapping them around his pounding hips, Zuko pressed his chest against hers. He buried his face in her neck, nipping and sucking at the sensitive spot below her ear as he continued to drive into her. She gasped and moaned her pleasure, thrusting and undulating her hips, her hands grabbing at his backside and pressing down, to meet his merciless plunges.

Like stormy waves crashing against the shore, their bodies moved—persistent and fierce. The need, the lust, consumed them entirely that it quickly brought their release to the surface.

“Oh, gods,” she whimpered as she dug her nails into his perspiring, flexing back, before she chanted disjointedly, “I need… I need…”
“Is this what you need?” he asked roughly as he drove so deeply into her he could swear he had breached into her womb.

A keening sound erupted from her lips and her limbs tightened almost painfully around him.

“Yes, oh gods, yes!”

There was something about her voice, about her body, when it responded to what he was doing to her that always drove him crazy with shameless hunger.

“Zu-uko, I’m going…to come!” she panted breathlessly.

“Come on my cock, Katara,” he growled fiercely, “I want…to feel your warm cream…all over me.”

“Zuko!” she whimpered as she stared desperately into his eyes.

“I know,” he rasped as he continued to pound into her, “Squeeze me tight…gods, yes…just like that.” With a loud growl, he buried himself deeper, his sac pressing tightly against her backside.

With a piercing wail, the blue-eyed brunette found her release. Zuko’s breath hitched as her drenched walls constricted around him and soon he was following her into his own climax. He erupted into a myriad of almost devastating shudders, groans, and emotions as her rippling passage sucked every last drop of his seed. With one more jerk of his hips and a final spurt of seed, Zuko collapsed onto his side, bringing Katara with him. Panting harshly, bodies still twitching, they held onto each other tightly, feeling the other’s pounding heart against their chests. They were spent, but they basked in the moment of the strength of their bond and the need they had for each other.

It wasn’t long before Zuko was kissing her again—not as desperately as before, but still as passionately—and Katara knew he was still trying to forget what had happened in the prison tower. She returned his kisses, her hands running soothing circles along his back, as she murmured his name, a quiet inquiry of concern that he quickly silenced by pressing his mouth more firmly against her lips. The act only made her want to help him even more, to make him forget his troubles, to please him. A thought sprang into her head that would do just that and it made her stomach quiver in anticipation for the pleasure that could await them both. Cupping his cheeks, Katara pulled away from his ravaging mouth, breathing heavily as she looked into his suddenly frowning face. She kissed him sweetly once, twice, and then pulled back to see his eyes had glazed over once again.
“Zuko,” she said breathlessly before her voice lowered into a seductive purr, “how about we do something you have fantasized about for a very long time?”

Zuko’s eyes widened and he sucked in his breath.

“Are you talking about…anal sex?” he asked before he huskily added, “Please say you are.”

“Yes,” she replied throatily, “We both want it, after all.”

Zuko’s breath caught in his throat at the words his wife uttered, which he had dreamed of hearing ever since he had found that erotic book.

“A-are you sure?”

“I wouldn’t suggest it if I wasn’t,” she responded with a wicked grin.

With an elated groan, Zuko crashed his mouth to hers, sucking at her kiss-swollen lips, and plunging his tongue inside to tangle with hers. Her words had hardened his erection to an almost painful degree and it was all he could do not to pounce on her and take her ass. He wanted it—gods, did he want it—but he did not want to hurt her with his eagerness. Instead, he slowed his kisses until he was caressing her mouth with tender touches while his hands worshiped the fullness of her breasts and the luscious curves of her hips until she was moaning softly against him. He gave her a few more kisses before he leaned away. He almost smiled when she growled as she tried to follow his mouth and pull him back to her. He gave her one more kiss to satisfy her before gently untangling himself from her wonderful grasp.

“I’ll be right back,” he told her in a deep, raspy voice.

She gave him a confused look, but nodded anyway. Smiling wickedly at her, the golden-eyed man slid from the large bed and swiftly walked toward their large wardrobe. Rummaging around in an inner drawer, he grabbed the bottle of oil he had purchased a few weeks ago for this very occasion. The erotic manual had given a few suggestions on which oils or lotions would be best for lubrication and he was able to find this one. Taking a quick breath to steady his erratically beating heart, he closed the doors and turned around. He moved toward the bed and gazed down upon his gloriously naked wife who was staring equally as lustfully at his naked body. He hesitated for a moment as he debated how to start this, mentally going over the information he had gathered from the book, before deciding on a position the manual had suggested that would make things easier for a woman for her first time having anal sex.

Katara was wondering what was going through her firebender’s head when she saw him turn on his heel and once again walk away from the bed. Frowning in confusion, she propped herself up on her elbows so she could see where he was going. She watched as he walked toward the full-length mirror in its corner. He picked it up before quickly returning to her. He placed the mirror on the floor toward the end of the bed before he turned to her with lust-filled, amber eyes.

“Come here,” he purred as he gently grabbed her ankles and dragged her down toward the edge of the bed. “Turn around and get on your hands and knees.”

Heart racing frantically in her chest, body tingling in anticipation, Katara quickly complied and moved so that her knees rested on the edge of the bed with her backside upturned to his hot gaze.

“Hm, so lovely,” Zuko murmured as he cupped her round cheeks, giving them gentle caresses.

Knowing how much she loved it when he spanked her, Zuko splayed one large hand across her backside, lightly slapping the enticing flesh. He watched as his wife rocked her hips back to his touch with a soft moan.

“More,” she purred.

Complying with her wishes, the firebender raised his hand and brought it back down to one cheek and then the other. When she moaned, he smacked harder, causing her to bow her back with a pleasured cry. He watched as her rich, brown skin reddened prettily under his palm. Zuko groaned quietly at the sight of her glistening pink pussy becoming an even more soaked mess with her fresh juices and his dripping seed.

“Zuko,” she sighed delightedly as she wiggled her bottom in the air before she looked over her shoulder to smile at him.

Her long hair fell like chocolate waves around her and her cheeks were a lovely shade of red as she stared at him in an enamored daze. Agni, she was wonderful. The way she gazed at him always made him feel as if he were the best lover in the world. He held her stare for a moment before he lowered himself so that he was kneeling on the floor, his face in level with her sex.
Katara turned back around and bit her lip when his hands rested on her thighs, before she felt his breath on her drenched sex. His hands caressed her up and down her thighs before he moved them further up to squeeze and knead her round cheeks. Her eyes fluttered and she moaned when he spread her folds with his thumbs before his tongue dipped into her quivering core. She let out another louder moan when he then flicked and lapped at her sensitive nub before sucking it into his mouth.

A deep groan erupted from Zuko’s throat at the taste of their mixed passions and he roughly lapped and sucked at her folds. He then began to rub firm circles on her anus which caused her to cry out and bucked her hips back into his face. Unable to contain his need any longer, Zuko kissed each of her cheeks before he stood back up, reached down for her, and flipped her onto her back. Feet still planted on the floor, he lowered himself over her, spreading her legs wide as he plunged himself inside her aroused body.

“Ohhh!” Katara gasped as he filled her completely, feeling his heavy sac slap against her backside before she moaned when he began a relentless rhythm. “Mmm, uuhhh!”

Zuko grunted his pleasure as he speed up his thrusts, loving the way her slick walls, filled with his warm seed, clung to his aching cock at the same time her hands grabbed his ass to drive him deeper into her as she pushed back, matching him stroke for stroke. Wet, smacking sounds rang loudly into the bedroom to complement their moans and groans.

“Oh gods, t-that feels…so good,” she panted breathlessly, her voice conveying the pleasure that was overwhelming her.

She removed one of her hand from his backside and the firebender felt her fingers reach between her legs and touch the place where they were joined before she went lower. The pads of her fingers touched his sac as he slapped against her and he felt his breath hitch, but then her fingers moved up again to coat them in her cream. When he felt her walls squeeze him and heard her small gasp he knew she was rubbing her sensitive bud.

“Zuko…Z-Zuko…I’m about to…”

“Not…yet,” Zuko grunted amorously, “Not until I’m…inside your ass.”

A gasp escaped the waterbender when her husband suddenly lifted them and turned them around before he sat at the edge of the bed with her straddling his hips. He didn’t miss a beat as he continued to drive up into her at the same time he brought her down upon his thick shaft. Katara grabbed onto his shoulders as she whimpered her pleasure and need. Just when she thought she was about to hit her peak, Zuko pulled out of her with a harsh groan.
They panted hard against each other and Zuko almost smiled at the glare his wife was giving him. He had to pull out. He had felt her passage rippling with her oncoming climax and he knew he would have finished too soon if he had remained inside her. He kissed her lips passionately to appease her and leaned away only when he felt her melt against his chest. Grabbing the bottle he had set aside on the mattress, Zuko opened it and quickly poured a generous amount of the slippery oil onto his straining cock. He reached down to smear it all over his length and around the thick head, making sure not to miss a spot, until he was completely slick with the combination of the oil and their own fluids. Watching over her shoulder at their reflection, Zuko admired the image they made, before he reached down between her cheeks to rub more oil on the puckered hole. Once that was done, he leaned forward to kiss her before pulling back.

“Okay, take me inside you,” he groaned.

“The book had many different positions for anal sex, but it said that this position would make things easier the first time,” he explained as he caressed her hips before he added with a throaty growl, “Plus, I want you to be the one to take me inside your ass.”

“Um, okay,” the waterbender said uncertainly before she squared her shoulders. She could do this! Holding onto his shoulders, she lifted herself a little by pressing her knees on the mattress. She moaned when Zuko grabbed onto both her rear cheeks and spread her open. Glancing over her shoulder, she saw her bare sex, dripping with his semen, and she licked her lips. Zuko shifted and she gasped when the tip of his shaft nudged against her smaller opening.

“Katara,” Zuko rasped, “Please, take me inside you before I lose my mind.”

Suppressing a smirk at his desperate plea, Katara reached between them to grab his turgid length. Taking a few quick breaths, she carefully pressed the head into the tight ring of muscles at the same time she lowered herself down. She bit her lip and her features pinched a little at the twinge of discomfort, but she did not let it deter her. Feeling Zuko’s fingers lightly kneading her cheeks, she took another breath before she pushed herself down until the large tip breached her entrance. She stiffened and closed her eyes at the sudden twinge of pain, but it disappeared as soon as it happened and she relaxed.

“Are…you okay?” he asked softly as he kissed her temple.
“I’m…fine,” she replied as she lower her head against his neck, trying to ease the discomfort.

It didn’t hurt now, but it definitely felt strange, so she took another moment to gather her bearings. Zuko was still pressing kisses along her face and murmuring equally sweet and dirty words, and she appreciated that he was giving her the opportunity to go about this new adventure at her own pace.

Kissing her cheeks and gently massaging her ass cheeks, Zuko breathed heavily at the feeling of his tip inside her. Just having that part of himself there felt amazing and he could only imagine how much better it would feel when he was buried all the way in. His muscles were tense from anticipation and concern that he would hurt her or that she would regret it. His thoughts scattered when he felt her move another inch lower and his breath stopped when he felt her walls tightly constrict his engorged length.

Katara eased herself down her husband’s thick shaft little by little until she had finally lowered herself all the way down to the base of his cock. She grunted a little and held still, trying to adjust to the sudden fullness, hoping that after she got used to the feeling the experience would be amazing.

Zuko, on his part, clenched his eyes tightly at the amazing sensations. She was so warm and tight and it felt so good, even with them not moving. Panting, he reopened his eyes and looked at the mirror as he spread her cheeks wider. His breathing accelerated at the sight of his cock buried deeply in her tight ass, his heavy balls pressing tightly against her sticky sex. His fantasies didn’t come close to the reality.

Breathing deeply, Katara lifted herself a little before sliding back down, vaguely hearing Zuko’s groan as she focused on what she was feeling. She then moved her hips back and forth, side to side, experimenting with her movements. She squeezed her inner muscles around his hard shaft, and she gasped at the highly pleasurable sensation as it stimulated her anal passage. She lifted herself and then lowered herself back at the same time she once again squeezed. Zuko let out a loud groan and she felt a spark of pleasure ripple up her back, which caused her to increase her movements slightly.

“Ka-tara…uhhh, you feel…so amazing…” he moaned hoarsely before he tentatively asked, “Do you feel the same?”

“Yes,” she whispered passionately, her voice low with pleasure and wonder. “It’s strange…but good.”

Zuko’s groin tightened at the sensations as she once again moved up and he gasped when he returned to the tight warmth of her ass. When she squeezed him again, more tightly, his eyes widened when he felt a bit of his seed leak out as his orgasm surfaced too quickly. He grabbed her hips firmly and held her still, his heart pounding wildly in his chest.

“Wait…I need…a minute,” he groaned as he dropped his face to her shoulder before he huskily added, “Or else…I’ll be coming in your ass.”

Their previous foreplay and the tight feeling of her muscles around his painfully hard cock, not to mention the thought that he had finally claimed all of Katara’s orifices, only brought forth his climax faster than he wished. He wanted to enjoy the moment longer and he refused to have it end before Katara could really enjoy it.

Katara groaned at his words and felt fire erupt in her stomach at the thought of Zuko emptying himself in her once untouched hole. She loved it when he came in her core and she could only imagine how much she would enjoy it if he did so in her back entrance.

“Go ahead…it’s okay,” she purred against his scarred ear, nibbling wantonly at the shell as her arms wrapped around his neck.

The firebender swallowed thickly, her words almost undoing him, but he grit his teeth and held himself back by sheer will.

“The book doesn’t recommend it,” he replied breathlessly, thankful that the distraction had made his release recede. “It’s harder to clean up.”

He felt Katara pull away and he looked up to see her raising an eyebrow at him.

“Did you forget who you’re married to?” she asked. “I’m a waterbender, so…” She trailed off meaningfully.

She watched as Zuko flushed sheepishly.

“Oh. Right.”
Katara laughed softly at his expression, which she found endearing. Even at their most heated, passionate moments, her husband was still able to make her laugh with happiness. It only increased the love and lust she felt for him.

Zuko frowned. He was not sure if he should feel upset or pleased that his wife was amused, even when she had his hard cock up her ass. As he watched her giggle, he felt both his shaft and his heart throb at her clenching, tight walls and her wonderful laugh. She cupped his face and kissed him sweetly, and he sighed against her mouth.

“You are so adorable.”

Zuko scowled and opened his mouth to argue, but Katara decided to cut him off by grinding onto him and once again squeezing her muscles firmly.

“K-Katara,” he moaned long and low before he gasped an “Oh, gods, yes.”

Katara felt her arousal flare at the pleasure written on his face and she slowly began to slide up and down his length. Her mouth dropped open as the friction caused nerve endings she didn’t know she had to burst into a myriad of feelings of intense pleasure. There was no pain, only the wonderful feeling of being so full, of having a part of Zuko inside another part of her that no one had touched before.

“Zuko…” she whispered sultrily against his panting lips, “I want you…to come in my ass.”

Growling at her words, Zuko grabbed tightly onto both her cheeks as he slowly thrust himself up into her, following her movements, and causing her to throw her head back with a low cry.

“I will fill you up nicely, wife,” he growled wickedly, “Don’t you worry.”

He heard her gasp and felt her push back down against him harder, causing him to grunt sharply. Agni, it was incredible. He would always love burying himself in her wet pussy, but her ass felt good too. Grabbing her butt more firmly within his large hands, he spread her open and helped her bounce up and down his cock. His eyes watched, fascinated, at the vision of her brown cheeks shaking with every thrust, of his shaft—glistening and slippery with the lubrication—slipping from her tight hole before disappearing once again. It made a couple more drops of pre-cum leak inside her with every pleasurable stroke. Gods, he was not going to last much longer.
Wanting to usher Katara’s climax closer to his, Zuko lowered his head and hungrily latched onto the entirety of her right nipple, sucking roughly and furiously, causing her to cry out his name and increase her pace, alternating from bouncing and grinding on him. He groaned when her deliciously sweet milk flowed into his mouth and he swallowed greedily. He felt as if he were burning with a fever, sweat ran down his back and stuck his hair to his neck, as he thrust his hips desperately.

Katara grabbed his head as she chanted his name over and over again. La, she felt like she was going to explode. She then switched from moving up and down to grinding back and forth, and she mewed when his thick cock scrapped against her nerves endings and the walls of her anus. She was so close in achieving her ultimate pleasure, but she was not quite there yet.

“Zuk-oo…p-please,” she moaned incoherently as she looked down.

Her firebender raised his eyes to hers without removing his mouth from her breast and the sight of the lustful hunger in his eyes, which were so dilated she could barely see the gold, caused the empty walls of her core to flutter.

“Please…haaah…” she begged again. “Uuhh.”

She felt him remove one hand from her backside before a loud cry fell from her lips when he reached between them and began to roughly rub her clit. Then he swiftly inserted two fingers inside her drenched pussy and began to move them inside her in a fast and hard rhythm.

“Ah, ah, ah!” she cried at every thrust of his fingers, of every stroke of his cock inside her ass, and every suck of his mouth on her nipple.

The new sensations were almost too much, her mind and body were overwhelmed with so much pleasure it was almost painful, but she never wanted it to end. Her fingers dug deeply into his shoulders and she bounced vigorously on top of him. The sound of her cheeks slapping against his thighs and the wet sounds of their sex only spurred her on. A particular powerful thrust of his hips directed a bolt of pleasure searing through Katara’s body that it caused her to wail his name in a broken plea for more.

Panting roughly as he sucked her other nipple, Zuko increased the pace of his fingers as he felt his sac begin to tighten in preparation for orgasm. He was so close, he knew he would not be able to hold back. Lifting his head up, he caught Katara’s gaze, her blue eyes dark and half-lidden. They stared at each other, their breaths intermingling as they moved against each other. The intimacy of their position only increased their arousal and their mouths pressed hungrily together.
“Come for me, Katara,” Zuko whispered at the same time he pressed his thumb on her clit, curled his fingers, and firmly brought her down on his cock with the other.

“Zukoooo!” the waterbender screamed when her orgasm crashed into her with the immense force of a tsunami. All the sensations caused her body to writhe and shudder wildly.

Zuko watched as she arched her back, her hair flying behind her and her breasts jutting up, as her orgasm ripped through her. His breath caught in his throat at the sensation of her tight passage squeezing almost painfully around him. It was too much. With a roar of her name, he grabbed both her ass checks as he surged into her, pumping his seed heavily into her still clenching walls as his vision blackened at the intense pleasure his body was experiencing.

Katara’s eyes rolled back and she whimpered as she felt his seed, hot and sticky, spurting inside her ass. The sensation was new and amazing since she was feeling the familiar touch of his warmth filling up a place previously unknown. It was incredible, the way his cock pulsed and throbbed within her, that it caused her to climax a little once again.

Zuko gasped when he felt her tighten around him like a vise, as if she were trying to pull every last drop out of him. His hips jerked when the sensation wrenched a few more gushes of his semen, causing a little to leak out of her and down his balls. With a strangled moan, he dropped his head back onto her shoulder while he felt her collapse against him. Their heavy pants echoed loudly in their ears, their warm breaths tickling each other’s flushed, perspiring skin, as they tried to catch their breaths and calm their racing hearts. It was a long moment before their bodies finally relaxed.

“Are you okay?” he found himself asking for the second time as his hands gently massages her round cheeks.

“Uhh, yes,” was Katara’s dazed reply. Her body was still tingling from the magnificent orgasm she had just had. She could feel Zuko’s seed inside her as his semi-hard shaft still stretched her anal walls. It was so warm and she felt so full. But it was the manner in which he held her to him that made her heart flutter in her chest.

Relieved that she had enjoyed it as much as he had, Zuko nudged the side of her head with his nose. When she lifted her head, he pressed his mouth to hers and kissed her languidly, slipping his tongue to gently curl around her own. Wanting to feel her tighten around him one more time, he smacked Katara’s ass hard. She gasped and jolted, and he groaned when her tight passage clutched him strongly before she relaxed.
“Mmmm, that was good,” she hummed against his caressing mouth.

“You love getting your ass spanked, don’t you, my lovely wife?” he rumbled as he nibbled at her lower lip.

“I love everything you do to me, my sexy husband,” she purred rapturously.

“Hm, well, your sexy husband wants to see how much you loved him inside you,” he growled huskily.

With a soft moan, Katara wiggled against him and he spanked her once again before he grabbed onto both her cheeks and carefully lifted her up. They both let out simultaneous moans as his cock slipped out of her little by little. They both look back at the mirror and they watched with equal fascination as her anus contracted and a little of his essence peaked out.

Zuko held his breath when he saw Katara reach down and dip a finger inside to coax more of his seed out, eliciting a quiet moan from her at the sensation and a growl from him at the visual. Still spreading her ass cheeks widely apart, a thick stream of his whitish fluid poured out of her and slipped down to coat her swollen sex before dripping down onto his lap.

“Damn, I can’t wait to do that again,” he rasped.

“Mm, me too,” Katara replied dreamily before she turned back to him, smiling at the dazed expression on his face as he continued to look at their reflections. She deliberately clenched her anus and she grinned when he swallowed thickly.

He reached for her again and she giggled when he growled as she quickly slipped onto the bed beside him. Huffing, he laid down next to her, but reached out to brush her hair away from her face.

“We need a bath,” she stated.

She almost smiled when he frowned.

“We have to meet everybody for dinner,” she reminded him, “And I have to feed Kazu.”
The thought of their son going hungry snapped Zuko from his amorous thoughts and he quickly sat up, about to move them toward the bathing room. But before he could do so, Katara grasped his arm and pulled him back down next to her. She cupped his cheeks and he looked at her to see her eyes had softened in concern.

“Do you feel better now?” she asked.

Her question reminded him of why he had prompted this impromptu lovemaking session and he hummed when he realized he had completely forgotten his visit with Ozai. He no longer felt angry or hurt, but rather sated and content, all thanks to his waterbender. She was like a safe haven, a light in this world of darkness. For that reason and much more he treasured her. Leaning forward, he kissed her softly before pulling back to stare into her azure eyes.

“Yes,” he replied sincerely before he added, almost reverently, “What would I do without you?”

He pulled her into his arms and they remained in comfortable silence as they just held each other close. He sighed softly as she snuggled into him. He always found pleasure in just holding her to him, soaking up her warmth, feeling her hands caress him with touches that were not meant to arouse, but to convey how much she loved touching him, how much she loved him.

“I love you so much,” he said quietly, “You know that, right?”

“Just as much as I love you,” was her soft reply.

Zuko tightened his arms around her as his mind wondered back to his sire’s words. If Ozai had not taken Ursa’s feelings and presence for granted, he would not have lost her. He would have seen that life could be good if you shared it with someone special. But Ozai did not see that in his blind pursuit for power and now it was too late. She had found a better man in Jee.

He felt Katara press her lips to his chest. His father may despise him, but he had the love of a wonderful woman. Not only that, but he had a son he was sure would love him too. Because Zuko would love and care for Kazuhiko like Ozai never did him.

And that was what really mattered.
Staring expressionlessly at the servants bringing in her trunks, Mai stood in the middle of her room as her mind raced with thoughts, ideas, and plans for the future. But most of all, she kept hoping she had made the right decision. Once everyone but one person had left, she turned expectantly to the man standing silently near the windows. Dressed in the uniform the guards of her household wore, with a helmet covering his face, no one would have guessed they were looking at a traitor. Mai watched as the man removed the helmet and smirked at her.

“Well, that was easier than I had thought,” Jianguo said as he brushed back his dark, graying hair.

Still smirking, he made his way to where the noblewoman was standing, staring at him blankly. He stopped only when they were close enough that their chests almost touched. Even if the woman did not show it on her face, Jianguo could see the apprehension in her eyes. His smirked widened.

“I should have sought your help much earlier,” he cooed as he reached forward to brush the back of his hand against her cheek.

He laughed when she knocked his hand away and glared at him. Shrugging, he moved away from her to stare outside the window once again, taking in the empty streets.

“Maybe you should have,” Mai finally replied to his earlier comment before she added with a hiss, “If you had, Zuko would’ve been mine sooner and wouldn’t have married and impregnated that Water Tribe wench.”

The rebel leader’s plan had been much simpler than she had thought. He had asked her to pass him and some of his men as her guards and servants and return to the Fire Nation. No one would think of inspecting the people of her household once they landed in the Fire Nation. Her father was a respected nobleman and no one would suspect his daughter to be smuggling rebels inside the country.

Although she had been banished from the palace, she could still remain at her townhouse. And because it was so close to the palace, it would make things easier for Jianguo’s plan to work. She inwardly frowned. He had not exactly explained his plan in great detail, but all she cared about was securing Zuko for herself. And if Jianguo did something she wasn’t agreeable to, she would immediately hand him over to the authorities. Maybe then Zuko would thank her for capturing the rebel and he would forgive her.

She was distracted from her plans when she sensed Jianguo moving toward her once again, the sound of his borrowed armor echoing in the room. He had done so a couple of times during the journey to the Fire Nation, standing so close to her they could almost touch, but he never did anything beyond that. It unnerved her, which she had a feeling was what he wanted. He stopped in front of her with a satisfied smirk on his lips. She eyed him warily, her hands itching to pull out her weapons.

“Do not worry, Lady Mai,” he said smoothly, “If everything turns out well, we will both have what we want.”

“And the waterbender is one of those things you want,” she sneered.

Jianguo’s smirk widened.

“A man would do anything to have a beautiful woman such as the waterbender as theirs,” he said lecherously.

Mai’s eyes narrowed and she grit her teeth, suppressing an angry hiss from escaping her mouth. She could not see what the waterbending bitch had that drew men to her.

Staring down at the glaring woman, Jianguo chuckled at her jealousy. There were few things that seemed to get a rise out of the impassive noblewoman, but the waterbender definitely was one of them. And she should be jealous since she could never compare to the exotic, blue-eyed brunette. With another chuckle, he turned away from her and made his way to the door.

“I could stay and tell you the reasons why I desire the waterbender, but I have more important things to see to, like meeting my informant.”

A small frown appeared on Mai’s brow.

“Advisor Kang has been caught a long time ago and he’s dead,” she reminded him.

Jianguo looked over his shoulder to grin at her.

“Ah, that’s the beauty of it,” he replied, “Even I had been ignorant of the truth for a while.”
“What do you mean?”

Jianguo turned back to open the door.

“It’s really none of your business,” he responded casually as he walked out.

Mai glared after him. Before he closed the door, the man looked at her.

“I’ll keep in touch with you to explain your next part in the plan,” he said smoothly before he closed the door.

Mai’s hands clenched as her glare intensified.

“Arrogant bastard.”

Dark, golden eyes watched as the old man walked around his room, getting ready to retire for the night, but he was not alone as a woman helped him into his sleeping robe. The individual wondered if he should perhaps return another day when the old man was alone, but then he saw the woman leave after kissing the man on the mouth. Quietly, he opened the window and stepped down into the room. A breeze swept in, causing the thin curtains to sway for a moment, before the window was closed once again.

“Nice to see you again,” he greeted mockingly.

He watched as the old man stiffened before he whirled around with a gasp. Then he straightened himself out and glared.

“Jianguo!” he hissed in a low tone, “What are you doing here? You’re supposed to wait in the colonies!” He glanced back toward the door with a worried look before turning back to glare at the younger man.

“I was tired of waiting,” Jianguo growled as he took a step further away from the window. “Almost three years have passed since we threatened Zuko and yet he’s still Fire Lord!”
“Whose fault is that?” the old man scoffed as he crossed his arms over his chest. “You had many chances to capture him, to force him to our demands and you failed in all because of your obsession with the waterbender.”

Jianguo growled and he took a menacing step forward, which caused the other man to take a step back out of reflex.

“What about you?” Jianguo asked angrily, “You are in his presence most of the time and you haven’t done anything either. Instead, you have others do the dirty work for you! They’ve all lost their lives because of it and you would have too if you weren’t so good at hiding your tracks.”

The other man shrugged and waved his hand carelessly.

“Someone has to keep an eye on the whelp, besides if it wasn’t for me you would still be living in the streets and wouldn’t have the chance to regain everything you’ve lost.”

The firebender growled. The old man turned away and walked toward the low table on one side of the room. He sat down and poured himself some tea, ignoring the impatient man standing a few feet away.

“Would you like some tea?” he asked and took a sip.

“No, I don’t want any fucking tea,” Jianguo growled scathingly, “You should’ve told me sooner that you had used some other aristocrat, Kang or whatever his name was, to take the blame for the failed message instead of letting me think you died.”

The other man shrugged as he took another sip of his tea.

“Zuko was being suspicious of everybody. I had to be careful. I couldn’t send you messages until it was safe to do so,” he explained. “And by placing some evidence in Kang’s home, all suspicions fell on him.”

“Well, after all that,” Jianguo said, “Why didn’t you tell me about your plan to make the waterbender lose her child?”
The old man sipped again and sighed.

“It was a desperate attempt, but now I see it was a bit too hurried and foolish. We could now use something else besides the waterbender to make Zuko obey us.”

“She could have died!” Jianguo shouted angrily.

“A pity if that had happened,” the man replied with a shrug, “But she didn’t die.”

“She can’t die yet,” the rebel leader growled, “Not until I’ve had my chance to enjoy her.”

A tired sigh left the old man’s lips and he rolled his eyes.

“Well, now you’re here, it’s best we finally finished this,” he said. “Once and for all.”

“My thoughts exactly.” Jianguo smirked. “And I have the perfect plan.”
Standing silently at the construction site, Katara smiled proudly as the school for illiterate adults she had proposed months ago went underway. If everything went according to plan, the school would be ready in a few weeks or so. She could see a few of the villagers from outside the capital stare in awe as the building was constructed. She still smiled at the memory of their surprise and gratitude when she had arrived months ago to let them know they would have the opportunity to learn.

Her smile turned to a frown when her neck pricked with that sensation people sometimes got when they felt as if someone was watching them. She scanned the small crowd that had gathered, but she could not see anything suspicious. Her hand moved discreetly toward her waterskin, feeling her heart accelerate a little in sudden adrenaline, as her eyes once again took in her surroundings. She was accompanied by a large group of guards, but still she remained on high alert.

When nothing happened, she forced herself to relax so she could talk to the one in charge of the school’s construction. Perhaps it was nothing and she was just being overly suspicious.

“Are we almost there yet? I’m starving!”

“You already had a snack!”

“But that was half an hour ago!”

Katara and Zuko suppressed their amused laughter as Sokka continued to whine and Suki continued to scold him. The waterbender sometimes thought that Sokka got chastised by Suki more than their daughters did. When her brother made a sudden teasing remark toward his wife, Suki playfully smacked his chest. It caused Kazu, who was currently being held by his father, to let out a loud giggle, which caused his parents to finally succumb to their amusement.

Kazuhiko and the two couples were riding in one of the royal carriages toward their favorite restaurant. The rest of their family was riding in other carriages. Sokka had pouted when Jing and Ting had left him in order to ride with Aang and Toph so they could play with Momo.

A few minutes later, they arrived at the prestigious restaurant Zuko and Katara liked to frequent when they wanted to leave the palace for a while. Zuko handed Kazu to his wife so he could help them down, but also so he could make sure his guards were already on guard around them before his family exited the carriage.
Once she stepped down, Katara smiled at her husband before she cooed at her gurgling son while the rest of their family alighted. Zuko took her elbow and they walked toward the large building. As they made their way, the waterbender stiffened slightly when she once again felt as if she had someone’s eyes on her. She paused, causing Zuko to stop and look at her curiously. Katara brought her son closer to her and she glanced around.

“Is something the matter?” Zuko asked in concern as he also began to scan their surroundings.

Except for the usually excited crowd that stood on the sidelines at the sight of the royal family, there didn’t seem anything out of the ordinary.

“I don’t know,” Katara murmured quietly, her brow furrowed slightly. She didn’t know how to explain herself. There were a lot of people staring at them now, so she didn’t understand why she felt strange.

Why did she feel so paranoid?

Suppressing a tired yawn, Katara softly closed the large door behind her as she slowly made her way further into the bedchamber. She had stopped by Kazu’s nursery to breastfeed him and to play with him a little before reluctantly leaving him to Jiao’s care. The nursery was where Kazu spent his days when his parents were busy, but he still slept in their room during the night. He had gone down for a nap, so Katara decided to relax a little before she had to continue with her duties for the day. The past few days had been hectic with all her projects, but that did not bother her. She loved what she did. But it was that odd sensation of being watched that continued to plague her that made her tense all the time. She had thought of telling Zuko about it, but she did not want to worry him. Especially since nothing unusual had happened.

A sound coming from the bathing room reached her ears and she froze. Narrowing her eyes, one of her hands hovered over her waterskin while the other fingered the dagger strapped to her side. She felt her heartbeat race as the strange feeling of dread she had been feeling recently resurfaced. Before she could demand whoever was in her chambers to show themselves, she saw Zuko step into the room dressed only in dark trousers, a damp towel hanging over his shoulders. Zuko paused and raised an eyebrow when he noticed her offensive stance. Relaxing, feeling her heartbeat ease, Katara continued forward with a wry smile.

“Weren’t you supposed to be in a meeting with the advisors?” she asked. “I thought you were a thief sneaking around.”
“The meeting was postponed until later today, so I trained instead,” he responded as he watched her make her way to the bed. “I just finished taking a bath.”

“That’s nice,” she replied distractedly.

Zuko’s eyebrow rose again at her nonchalant reply. He watched as she threw herself onto the bed and buried her face in her pillow with a groan. The firebender frowned. Katara had been up very early over the past few days to oversee the construction of another orphanage in a town a few miles away from the capital and also attend to several of her other projects. It didn’t help matters that Kazuhiko had kept them up the previous night due to an upset stomach. But he knew she enjoyed what she did. However, he had noticed that she seemed edgy and distracted recently and it made him wonder why. He had tried to ask her, but she had responded that it was nothing.

“Are you done for the day?” he asked as he made his way to her side of the bed and sat down next to her hip.

“No,” was her muffled response. “I have to go through the citizens’ petitions and then I have teatime with several of the noblewomen.”

Zuko suppressed a chuckle at her unenthusiastic tone at the last part. Even after all the time they’d been married, Katara still barely tolerated the noblewomen. She had made a few friends, but for the most part, she only endured the others’ presence. He couldn’t blame her since he, himself, could not stand most of them. Or their husbands. The thought of being married to one of the women made him shudder, but luckily he didn’t have to worry about that horror anymore now that he was married to Katara. The sound of her letting out another groan again brought him out of his thoughts and he focused on her lounging form.

His eyes roamed down her body, from her head, down her back, and settled on her lovely backside. He licked his lips as he recalled all those instances that Katara had let him play with her ass. They had only engaged in anal sex twice so far and he found his body heating up at the thought of her letting him inside her back entrance again. But he was not sure if Katara would be up to it at the moment. He glanced up to see that she had her eyes closed, but she was frowning. Once again, he could not help but feel as if she had something heavy on her mind. He opened his mouth to ask her to talk to him before he closed it. He didn’t want to add any more stress with his insistence. Hopefully she would come to him with her problems soon. For the moment maybe he could make her feel better by massaging her back instead, just as he used to do when she was pregnant. They had a few minutes to themselves before their next meetings. He had checked up on Kazu before his shower and his son seemed content being in the company of Ichiro and Jiao.

Katara cracked one eye open when she felt Zuko’s large hands on her shoulders. Before she could ask him what he was doing, she let out a pleased moan when he began to knead at a particular sore spot. She closed her eyes and sighed when his hands massaged down her back, pressing down as he went, before moving upward to once again knead her muscles.

“Mm, that feels nice,” she groaned.

Zuko felt his groin twitch at her moans, but he firmly shook his head and focused on massaging her back. He paused briefly when an idea formed in his head.

Katara’s eyes opened when she felt her husband suddenly tug at her clothes.

“What are you doing?”

“I’ll be able to massage your back better if you take off your clothes,” was his smooth reply.

“You’ll use any excuse to get me naked, huh?” she replied impishly.

She laughed when he threw her a wicked smirk as he continued to pull at her formal robes. Lifting herself slightly, she helped him pull her clothes down so her back was exposed. Before he could ask her, she removed her breast binding, flinging it to the side, before settling back onto her stomach. A massage definitely sounded nice. Perhaps it would help her mind relax.

“I’ll be right back,” she heard him say and she lifted her head to see him walk to the bathroom.

Zuko quickly made his way to the built-in shelve next to the marble tub. He searched through the bottles of soaps and bathing oils before grabbing the one he was looking for. While he had every intention to only give her a massage, this lubricant would be useful should the mood change. He walked back into the bedroom and toward the bed, the glass bottle in his hand. A grin stretched his lips when he saw that his wife had completely divested herself of her clothing and was lying on her stomach completely nude. Now that she was naked, Zuko knew she would be receptive to sex. He stopped next to the massive bed and he let his eyes rove over her bare body, traveling down her smooth back, her round backside, and down her tone legs. His golden eyes wandered back to her upturned ass, lush and glorious, and he licked his lips. He couldn’t get enough of his waterbender’s perfect curves.

“Well? Are you going to massage my back or just stand there?”
At his wife’s playful question, Zuko’s eyes moved toward her face to see her smiling sultrily up at him, her cheek resting on her folded arms. Grinning, he placed the bottle aside before going to the ties that held his pants up.

“It’s not fair if you’re the only one naked, right?” he asked as he pushed them down.

“My thoughts exactly,” she replied as she smiled at him.

Her eyes roamed down his muscular chest and stomach, admiring his perfectly sculpted body, before settling intently on his shaft. She licked her lips when she saw that he was semi-erect, knowing it would not take long or much for him to become fully hard. She knew that with them both being naked the massage her firebender had planned would turn into something even better. She couldn’t wait. Not only did she need the sexual release, but she wanted her thoughts to focus on something else than her sudden paranoia. Her husband was definitely something she loved to focus on. And she knew he wouldn’t need much convincing.

Stepping out of his trousers, Zuko climbed onto the bed, resting his knees on either side of her legs while she moved her long hair aside. He grabbed another pillow and placed it under her ankles, thinking she would be more comfortable that way. He settled over her and once again admired the smooth skin of her back, bottom, and thighs before he picked up the bottle. He was no professional masseuse, but he had a vague idea of what to do. Besides, he knew his wife would enjoy it no matter what he did as long as he touched her. Pouring a small amount of the bathing oil onto his palm, Zuko rubbed his hands together to warm the oil before placing them on the bottom of her back.

“Mm,” Katara let out a small moan as Zuko began to lightly knead her muscles and rub her flesh.

The sensation of the bathing oil coating her skin only heightened the pleasurable feeling of her husband’s hands on her body. Using the whole of his hands, he started from her lower back and moved upward, applying slight pressure, and slowly bringing his hands down the outside of her back with a light touch. He alternated between rubbing the back of her neck and her shoulders, pressing down along her entire back, and even massaging her arms which she had placed at her sides. He repeated the gliding, even strokes for a few minutes, increasing the pressure a bit, until she felt entirely relaxed and content. Then he increased the pressure by using shorter, circular strokes, kneading and rolling her skin and muscles with his fingertips, palms, and knuckles. The sensations were so wonderful, she could not help letting out a few, soft moans.

Zuko felt his breathing accelerate and his body warm up as he continued to touch his waterbender’s body, but it was the sounds she was uttering, those moans that resembled the ones she made during lovemaking, which caused his length to harden fully. By the relaxed manner her body rested beneath him, he thought he had massaged her back sufficiently, so now it was time to pleasure her body in a different and more satisfying kind of way.

Picking up the bottle once again, Zuko poured a generous amount of the sweet-smelling oil along her spine, causing her to gasp softly at the cool contact. Squirting more of the liquid onto his palm, he rubbed his hands briskly before placing them on her round backside. He began rubbing the oil all over her back and luscious ass until her brown skin was slick and glistening under the candlelight.

“So lovely,” he murmured.

The visual was too much. He needed her so badly that he knew he could not prolong their foreplay.

As if reading his thoughts, Katara looked over her shoulder to smile sexily up at him at the same time she gently wiggled her ass underneath his kneading hands.

“I need you, Zuko. Touch me,” she moaned.

With a low growl, Zuko moved down her legs and quickly grabbed her about her waist, but before he could pull her up, she had swiftly moved onto her knees herself so that her backside was upturned to his hot gaze.

“Rather eager today, aren’t you?” he asked huskily.

“When aren’t I?” she retorted with a throaty laugh.

“A fact I’m forever grateful for,” he replied with a chuckle, which died in his throat when he felt her grab onto his turgid erection and give him a firm stroke.

“Same here,” she purred.

Zuko allowed her to give him a few strokes, feeling his lust mount higher, before he moved her hand away. He moved himself lower until his face was in level to her ass. His eyes drank up the sight of her swollen, pink sex and glistening backside before he leaned down to kiss each of her cheeks. He kissed the back of her thighs, slowly making his way to where she wanted him most and buried his Katara moaned loudly at the amazing sensation of his tongue and lips licking and nibbling her folds and engorged clit. Her hands grabbed the pillow beneath her as she pushed back insistently against his face. She gasped when he gave the left cheek of her ass a gentle smack to make her hold still. She ground against him one more time out of defiance before complying, which immediately earned her a long sweep of his skillful tongue from her sensitive bud to her puckered hole. She moaned and shuddered at the pleasure her body was experiencing. Her eyes rolled back when Zuko pressed his tongue more firmly against her anus and gently teased the tight opening.

“Oh gods, Zuko,” she cried out when he grabbed both her cheeks and spread them wider for easier access.

She moaned and gasped when he alternated in teasing both her ass and her hot, eager pussy, which was completely soaked in the juices he was coaxing from her. Then he slipped two fingers into her slick core and pumped slowly but firmly. She was so focused on her pleasure that she didn’t realize he had moved onto his knees until she felt him pour more of the oil onto her ass. She gasped when she felt the cool liquid slide down the line of her backside to coat her anus and drip down her slit to his pumping fingers.

“Z-Zuko, uuuhh,” she mewled.

The Fire Lord rubbed the extra oil all over her ass before he trailed his slippery hand up her back. He slid it around to grab her breast, giving it a gentle squeeze as he continued to slowly stroke his fingers against the clenching walls of her passage. He teased her nipple for a moment before he moved his hand across her chest to gently stroke and pinch her other nipple until both peaks were hard as pebbles. He smiled when she let out a loud moan.

He slipped his fingers out of her clenching pussy, smirking when she let out a frustrated growl. Gathering more of the oil and her natural lubrication, he trailed his hand up her drenched slit until he reached the tight ring of her back entrance nestled between her lushly enticing cheeks. Feeling his cock aching and dripping pre-cum, Zuko began to rub firmly against her anus with his finger. Using his thumb, he pressed it against her clit at the same time he push his finger past her tight opening. He felt her jerk against him as she gasped his name.

“Oooh, Zuko, so g-good!” the waterbender moaned into the room.

A small cry of pleasure fell from her lips and her body arched when she felt him slip his finger another inch into the puckered hole of her ass. She closed her eyes and panted softly in mounting pleasure as she felt him drape himself over her back.

Zuko groaned huskily at the sensation of her slippery and smooth back sliding against his chest and stomach. He pressed eager kisses along her neck as he continued to slowly pump his finger. When she began to rock her hips against him, he inserted another finger, thrusting them firmly. She brought her head back, exposing her throat to him as she looked at him with half-lidded eyes. He leaned down to bestow hungry kisses on her plump lips, along her jaw, and to her ear.

“You really like my fingers in your ass, don’t you?” he asked with a husky growl as he nipped her earlobe before soothing it with his tongue.

“I like… your fingers anywhere on…and in me,” was her passionate response as she ground herself harder against his hand that it caused his fingers to slide deeper into her ass. “But I love your cock more.”

Zuko growled as he increased his rhythm.

“Don’t worry, my naughty waterbender,” he whispered throatily against her ear, “When we have more time I’m going to plunge my cock into your tight, little ass. I’m going to fuck it so good that you’ll beg me to do it again and again.”

“Mm, I could beg for it right now,” she replied seductively.

“Gods, you’re going to be the death of me,” he groaned.

He wanted to succumb to his desire of possessing her ass once again, but they did not have the time. They had to get ready soon to continue with their duties of the day and he wanted them to have lots of time for them to enjoy anal sex.

Katara smirked at the words her firebender had uttered so many times before during their passionate lovemaking. Her smirk disappeared and her mouth dropped open in pleasure when he began to play with her clit with his other hand. She closed her eyes and bit her lip when she felt the tell-tale sign of her impending climax. She frowned when he suddenly pulled both his hands away, but before she could demand he continue, she felt him grab her hips at the same time the tip of his shaft pressed against her pussy. He quickly thrust his shaft inside her, slamming his hips against her ass so hard that it caused loud slapping sounds to echo in the room.
“Oh gods!” she screamed her pleasure as her fingers dug into the pillow beneath her.

She felt him place his hand between her shoulder blades, urging her to press her upper body to the mattress so that her bottom lifted higher in the air as he continued to pound into her. The friction of his thick, hard shaft sliding against her walls caused her stomach to clench and tighten as the fire of lust rushed through her veins.

Panting harshly, Zuko glanced down between them, watching as the plump cheeks of her beautiful ass jiggled and bounced with his frantic thrusts. His cock, slick with her cream appeared and disappeared from within her pink sex while her anus clenched with his every thrust. The visual caused his cum to leak out of his cock to coat the inside of her tight, hot pussy with his every stroke and he knew he would not last long. Wanting to give her more pleasure, Zuko slowed his pace slightly and he pressed his finger back against her puckered hole. He slowly slipped it inside and he smirked triumphantly when her loud moans reached his ears as her tight ring relaxed. He continued to drive his engorged shaft into her tight passage as his finger moved to the same rhythm of his hips.

Katara gasped and her hands tightly clenched the pillow beneath her at the incredible pleasure, loving the wonderful friction. She began to push back against him, wanting to meet his deep strokes, needing the stimuli on both her entrances in order to bring on the orgasm she could feel hovering on the edge.

“Zu-Zuk-oo,” Katara moaned incoherently, “Please, I’m…so…close.”

Wanting to please her, Zuko slipped his other hand around her hip and began to firmly rub her slick clit at the same pace of his thrusting cock and finger.

Katara’s eyes rolled back and she let out a scream as her orgasm ripped through her body, causing her to writhe wildly beneath her husband’s unrelenting body.

“Zuko!”

“K-Katara.”

Zuko’s breath caught at the incredible sensation of her walls clenching tightly against his length. He pushed her down so that she was lying on her stomach and began thrusting deeply inside her as he felt the pressure draw up in his heavy sac. Just as he felt his climax approaching, he pulled out and placed his cock between the valley of her ass cheeks, pressing them against his length with both Katara, still in the throes of her earlier orgasm, moaned and gasped his name repeatedly when she felt the ridge of his shaft rub pleasurably against her sensitive anus. She felt her ass rock violently as he picked up speed and slammed his hips against her as he continued to furiously rub himself between her cheeks.

Zuko, mind hazy with lust, felt his cock tighten almost painfully as his wife’s plush ass cheeks, slick with the bathing oil, her juices, and his pre-cum, provided a wonderful massage. He gasped when he felt Katara firmly grab his backside, her nails digging into his flesh, as she slammed her ass against him. That was all it took. Roaring her name, he stiffened and pressed both her round cheeks firmly against his pulsing shaft as spurt after spurt of his seed left him. His orgasm was long as thick jets of his semen coated her beautiful, olive skin.

Katara moaned and shuddered as she felt her husband’s hot, sticky seed spatter between both her cheeks. She could feel every twitch and spurt of his cock as his hips jerked against her. Then with a gasp of her name, he collapsed against her back, which was glossy and very slippery with their perspiration and the bathing oil. She felt him nuzzle against her hair before peppering her ear and cheek with languid kisses as their panting breaths resounded in the otherwise silent room.

“Mm, that was wonderful,” Zuko heard her sigh once they caught their breaths before a small yawn escape her, “But now I’m very sleepy.”

He brushed her hair aside and pressed kisses along her neck and shoulder as he raised his body a little so he wouldn’t keep crushing her. She looked over her shoulder to regard him with a sleepy smile and he leaned down to give her a soft kiss.

“Sleep,” he muttered gently, “We have some time to ourselves before we have to attend to our duties. I’ll wake you up so we can bathe.”

“Okay,” she mumbled.

Not a moment later, Zuko heard her soft, even breathing. He frowned. She must have been more tired than he realized. He had thought of once again asking her what was on her mind, but it seemed he would have to wait for another time. Smiling affectionately, Zuko lifted himself so that he was kneeling between her legs. His eyes took in the erotic sight of his whitish seed coating his wife’s rear cheeks, her anus, and her glistening folds and he felt his groin twitch.
We’ll continue this later, he told himself with a smirk.

Carefully getting up from the bed so he would not disturb her, Zuko went to the bathing room to grab a damp washcloth and cleaned himself off. Grabbing another one, he returned to his sleeping wife’s side. He gently wiped her sex before he cleaned off his seed from her backside, so she could be more comfortable while she slept. If he thought she would allow it, he would wish to leave the evidence of his pleasure on her forever. But if he kept seeing her covered in his semen he would be waking her up for another round when he knew she needed a well-deserved nap.

Depositing the dirty cloth in the bathroom, Zuko climbed into the bed and lay down beside her, spooning against her back. He smiled when she sighed and snuggled back against him.

This was the life. He had a wonderful wife who loved him and an endearing son he adored.

What more could he ask for?

“Aww, he’s so cute!”

“Look! He smiled at me!”

“Our cousin is smart!”

Katara smiled as Jing and Ting grinned proudly at Takeo and the rest of the orphaned children who were cooing over the little prince. She was sitting on a chair in the tiny garden with Kazuhiko in her arms, surrounded by the enthusiastic children. Ursa and Suki were standing behind her, chuckling at their actions. Kazu would stare widely at the new faces and when he smiled or laughed, it sent the other children into their own bouts of laughter.

It was the second time they had visited the orphanage and it seemed like Kazu was still fascinating to them. Zuko had accompanied them the first time, but he had to inspect a disturbance in one of the military grounds on the outskirts of the capital that day. She hoped it wasn’t anything serious.

Her thoughts immediately shifted as she once again felt as if she were being watched. She lifted her head slightly and warily scanned the area surrounding the building. But, just as the last couple of times she had done so, she could not spot anything suspicious. She brought her son closer to her chest while one hand hovered over her waterskin. She had brought a large group of guards to accompany them to the orphanage and she knew it would be hard for their group to be defeated what with a master waterbender and a Kyoshi warrior along with the guards, but the children could be hurt if they were attacked.

She frowned at her thoughts and once again scanned their surroundings, taking in the trees on all sides. If only Toph was with them, she would have been able to detect if there was someone lurking in the shadows. But the earthbender and Aang had gone off together with Appa and Momo to have some fun. Iroh, Kanna, and Pakku had gone to visit his teashop. And her father and brother had decided to accompany Zuko and Jee.

“Is something wrong?” Suki asked. “You seem distracted and tense.”

The waterbender did not need to look back to know the female warrior had her hand to her metal fans, ready for any trouble.

“Katara dear?” Ursa questioned in concern.

Katara shook her head and looked up to give them a reassuring smile.

“It’s nothing,” she replied calmly, though inwardly she still felt a sense of unease.

She frowned. Perhaps it would be wise to have her guards check the area just to be safe. She caught the eye of the captain and nodded her head to indicate she wished to speak to him. The guard quickly stepped forward at his lady’s bidding, pausing only briefly for the distracted children to make way for him, before standing by her side. Once she gave him the order, the man nodded before he called for a few guards to follow him to inspect the area while he had the others stay behind to guard the royal family.

A loud gurgle from Kazu had her looking down at her son and she brought him protectively to her chest, even as she put on a happy face for the other children who smiled and talked to her with their childlike innocence. Perhaps now that she was a mother she was being paranoid, but she still kept a close eye on the forest. Kazu began to fuss a little, as if he could sense his mother’s unease, and she immediately cooed at him to soothe him.

Maybe it was nothing and it was all in her head, but no harm would fall on her child while she lived.
Hidden in the shadows of a large tree’s thick foliage, Jianguo silently watched as the exotic waterbender rocked her child in her arms and cooed at him. Motherhood sure became her. Too bad the little brat would have to go. He was not going to take care of some other man’s offspring. Perhaps if the waterbender really pleased him, he would keep her and give her more brats to dote on.

He was rudely ripped from his fantasy when he saw a guard approach the Fire Lady. He watched as the guard nodded before he called for a few of the other men to follow him to the edge of the forest. He cursed under his breath.

He had noticed the blue-eyed brunette glance to the place where he was hiding, but when she had not raise the alarm, he had decided to remain and watch a little longer. But now it seemed as if she was sending her guards to check the area. It was not the first time he had spied on her when she left the palace and he had noticed that she seemed to sense his presence. So he had had to be extra careful not to be caught. He would only stare at her for a moment before he retreated. Oh, he was obsessed with her, but that did not mean he would allow himself to lose his head.

He stealthily dropped from the tree, making sure to stay close to the ground and hidden within the bushes. He cursed his luck as he moved further and further away from the noise of the searching guards and the laughing children. She was heavily guarded and with her waterbending, he knew he would have a hard time capturing her by himself. It was for the best anyway since he had somewhere else to be at the moment.

But he would only need to be patient a bit longer. Soon he would have her.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

The Fire Lord and his group rode steadily through a path in the wilderness, the sounds of their mounts’ hooves hitting the ground and the banter between Sokka and Hakoda were the only things breaking the silence. Zuko suppressed a smirk when Hakoda made a teasing remark about his son’s toddler years that had the young warrior blushing brightly and yelling at him to stop. Zuko glanced to his side to see that Jee was trying to hide his amused smile by brushing his hand across his mouth. Shen and Kuo rode in front of the Water Tribe men and Zuko could just make out the younger guard’s shoulder shaking a little with laughter. The rest of his guards rode behind their Fire Lord and the admiral.

They were on their way to inspect one of the military bases. It wasn’t far and they could still see the capital behind them from a distance. They were also close to the prison tower. His lip curled in barely suppressed anger at the reminder of what had happened there the last time he visited.

Shaking his head, Zuko’s thoughts once again returned to the missive he had received the previous day. The captain stationed there had sent him a message that some strange things have been happening and he would like for the Fire Lord to check it out. A frown appeared on his brow as he wondered what it could be.
“The Fire Nation has some nice countryside,” he heard Hakoda remark.

Sitting up straight, Zuko nodded.

“It does,” he replied proudly.

“How’s it different from any other forest in the Earth Kingdom?” Sokka piped in with a scoff before he dramatically pointed to his left, “Look, there’s a tree! And another one! Oh, and look! Another tree!”

Zuko was unable to stop himself from rolling his eyes. He could just feel his guards glaring at the bored warrior’s head. The Fire Lord watched as the chieftain look over his shoulder with an apologetic grimace.

“I apologize from my son’s idiocy,” he said seriously.

“Dad!” Sokka exclaimed.

“No worries. I’m not the one who has to live with him,” Zuko responded coolly.

“Hey!” Sokka groused as he looked over his shoulder to glower at his brother-in-law and the chuckling guards. “Well, I’m glad I don’t have to live with you either! What with the way you and Katara go at it! Luckily, the rooms at the palace are soundpr—Ow!”

“That’s enough!” Hakoda growled as he once again smacked the back of his son’s head, almost causing him to topple over his ostrich-horse.

Zuko felt himself flush a little as he glanced at the chieftain from the corner of his eye, ignoring his men’s amused chuckles.

“What? I was just saying!” the blue-eyed warrior whined as he rubbed his stinging head.
“You’re one to talk with the way Suki and you carry on,” Hakoda sniffed. “I’m surprised Suki hasn’t given me more grandchildren.”

“Dad!” Sokka exclaimed with a mocked scandalized gasp before he grinned as he added, “Why do you think Suki and I are at each other all the time?”

“I walked right into that one,” Hakoda groaned, causing the group to let out a few more chuckles.

The sound of approaching komodo-rhinos had them immediately cutting off their laughter and they straightened on their mounts, their postures alert. A moment later, four large animals appeared with riders on their backs. The group relaxed when they recognized the captain of the base and three soldiers.

“My lord,” the captain greeted with a bow of his head once he and his men had stopped before the Fire Lord’s group. “We came to escort you to the military base once we received word that you were on your way.”

Zuko gave him a nod of acknowledgment as he urged his komodo-rhino forward, the others quickly mirroring his move.

“What is going on that you need my presence?” he asked with a raised eyebrow.

“Things have been disappearing from the base storage,” the captain immediately explained as he rode on the other side of the Fire Lord.

Zuko frowned, wondering why that would need his presence. The captain or someone of higher rank could see to that issue.

“What has gone missing?” he asked.

“It was food at first, but nobody paid it much mind. But then we noticed that a week ago weapons and armor began to disappear as well.”

His words caused everybody to frown.
“That is not all,” the man continued and he shifted uneasily on his saddle, “Three days ago, a few of the men on patrol went missing…and they were found dead yesterday.”

“What?” Zuko growled.

“Their throats were slit open and they were left out in the open,” the captain recounted grimly.

“Out in the open?” Sokka asked with a frown

“It is as if whoever did this wanted us to find the men,” the captain added. “They were completely stripped of their armor. Not only that, but we found cloths bearing the Fire Nation emblem stuffed in their mouths…”

“What could that mean?” Hakoda asked.

“A warning?” Jee asked grimly.

Zuko felt his body tense as a foreboding feeling swept through him. Agni, could it be the rebels? But how? There were wanted posters everywhere, they could not stepped into the Fire Nation so easily, especially Jianguo. Or could it just be another group of people just wanting to cause trouble? He clenched his jaw.

Something whizzed by his head and a second later he heard one of the captain’s men give a pained cry. Zuko’s head whirled to the side to see an arrow protruding from the man’s eye and out the back of his skull, blood pouring heavily down his face. A heavy silence followed as they watched with shocked eyes as the body slowly slid to the side before it fell limply to the ground.

“Ambush!” the captain yelled.

“Protect Fire Lord Zuko and Chief Hakoda!” Jee ordered with a loud roar as he unsheathed his sword.
The guards quickly surrounded the two leaders and the Southern heir just as a small group of men, dressed in black with cloths bearing the Fire Nation emblem covering their faces, fell from the trees and sprang from thick bushes. They rushed forward with swords and flaming fists and loud cries. The two groups collided and the battle ensued.

A few of the guards were pulled from their mounts and killed with swords to their chests, but for the most part the Fire Lord’s group easily dispatched the attacking band of unknown men. The captain sent a flare of fire high into the air, hoping his base or even the prison tower would see and send reinforcement. Hakoda and Sokka, the only non-benders were holding their own perfectly, using weapons and fists to knock out their attackers.

Zuko had run a man through with one of his flaming swords when he was suddenly tackled from behind. He grimaced when he fell hard on the ground, but he quickly recuperated and sent his attacker flying back with a large fire blast to his chest. Quickly jumping to his feet, he swept his flaming broadswords to the side and calculatingly eyed the new men that had approached him. They hesitated a moment before they sprang at him.

“Long live Fire Lord Ozai!” they roared as they attacked.

Zuko did not show his surprise at their words as he countered their attacks. With a few intricate moves, he was able to cut off one of the men’s heads and slashed another’s across his stomach. He did not stop to think of the carnage as his only focus was his survival and that of his men. A few men were already lying dead or dying on the bloody forest floor. He would growl in anger whenever one of his men was felled and swore vengeance.

Could they be the rebels from the colonies? Could it be Jianguo’s doing? But where was he and the earthbenders that usually accompanied him?

He did not have time for more questions when two men lunged at him. Just as he was able to defeat them, he felt someone sneak up on him from behind.

“Zuko!” he heard Sokka and Hakoda yell his name right as he jumped sideways.

But he was not quick enough and a sharp dagger slashed across his upper right thigh, the only part unprotected by his armor. He grimaced and grunted, but did not let the pain affect him as he spun around, his swords flaming brilliantly, and cut the man down. Once the man fell, Zuko whirled around to fend off another attacker, ignoring the pain and blood seeping from his wound that didn’t feel that deep.
“Retreat!” one of the attackers suddenly yelled.

The men immediately turned and ran back deeper into the forest with loud exclamations of “Long live Fire Lord Ozai!”

“After them!” Zuko roared as he raced forward, “Don’t let them escape!”

He and the rest of his men gave chase, keeping a close eye on the retreating backs of the rebels. A second later they disappeared. Zuko and his men slowed down once they realize they had lost them.

“Damn it,” Zuko cursed. “They must have had earthbenders waiting to take them underground.”

“But why didn’t the earthbenders attack us?” Sokka asked, his breath labored from the fight. “Really, what was the point of attacking us if they were just going to leave right away!”

“We should go see if any of our men are still alive,” Jee spoke up. “Maybe we can find one of their men alive and we can bring him in for interrogation.”

Zuko was about to reply when he suddenly started feeling dizzy and the wound on his thigh began to throb excruciatingly. He shook his head, trying to clear his suddenly hazy thoughts. He blinked when his vision became blurry and the world started to spin and become darker. What was wrong with him? A simple cut should not affect him that much. His legs began to tremble beneath him and he stumbled a little, causing the men to immediately pause in what they were saying and doing to look questioningly at him.

“Zuko?” Hakoda called out.

“Hey, man, are you okay?” Sokka asked worriedly as he watched his brother-in-law sway on his feet and shake his head.

He cried out and quickly stepped forward to catch Zuko when he suddenly collapsed. The men immediately rushed toward them, shouting their Fire Lord’s name. Sokka was forced to lower Zuko to the ground and they crowded around him, worried and wondering what was wrong since they could not see any serious injuries.
“Something is terribly wrong,” Hakoda remarked as he stared into Zuko’s extremely pale complexion and his labored breathing.

His eyes landed on the small wound on the younger man’s thigh, watching the blood stain the red fabric a darker red. He frowned and then his eyes widened as a thought entered his head.

“Oh La, I think that dagger was laced with poison!” he rasped.

His words caused the men to exclaim in horror and panic.

“We have to take him back to the palace!” Jee said urgently as he helped Sokka lift Zuko up.

“I’ll take him on one of the ostrich-horses!” Kuo spoke up quickly. “Fire Lady Katara would surely cure him!”

“I’ll go with you to protect your back,” Shen spoke up firmly.

“Yes, take a few more men with you in case those men try to attack the Fire Lord again,” Jee added.

The men quickly agreed and Kuo rushed to mount Sokka’s ostrich-horse. Sokka and Jee handed him the unconscious Fire Lord and helped place him over the animal’s back in front of the young guard, while Shen and a couple of guards mounted their own animals.

“Hurry!” Hakoda urged.

With a firm nod, Kuo pressed his heels onto the animal’s side and was soon swiftly racing back toward the palace with the other guards following him, while those left behind stared worriedly after them.

“We have to gather our fallen men,” the captain spoke after a moment with a mournful sigh.
They had just arrived back to the scene of the small battle when another group of riders appeared. Their armor indicated they were prison guards.

“We saw the signal and rush over as quickly as we could,” one of the soldiers spoke up as he and the new arrivals scanned the bloody scene with solemn faces.

Jee stepped forward and explained what happened, causing a few men to frown at the news that their Fire Lord had probably been poisoned. A few minutes later, the captain and the prison guards had agreed to remain behind to take care of the dead bodies while Hakoda, Sokka, and Jee rode back to the palace.

“This was obviously their plan,” the southern chieftain spoke up with a dark frown. “All they wanted was to get close to Zuko to poison him.”

“But that just doesn’t make sense,” Sokka said, “They could have just kill him instead of just wounding him…unless they wanted his death to be very painful so they poisoned him…which still doesn’t make sense.”

“And what about the missing things and the dead men the captain mentioned?” Jee spoke up.

“For now all we can do is hope Zuko comes out okay,” Hakoda replied with a deep frown. “Not only would the Fire Nation, maybe even the world, suffer for it, but it would devastate Katara.”

Sitting on a thin pallet and leaning against the cold, stone wall, the former Fire Lord frowned at the commotion he could barely hear from behind the thick steel door. He wondered what was going on, but shrugged. It wasn’t like he cared. Absentmindedly, he flicked a long strand of hair away from his face as his mind once again wandered to what his life used to be like before his defeat under the hands of that child-Avatar. With nothing else to do but stare at the same four walls, his memories circled around his head over and over.

Where did it all go wrong? He had everything planned out. From taking the throne from Iroh, to disposing of his father, to managing the war better than his ancestors. All he had to do was wait for Sozin’s Comet to arrive in order for its power to enhance their firebending so they could burn the Earth Kingdom to the ground and finally rule over the world. He had miscalculated though. The Avatar was still alive, but he had been assured when Azula told him Zuko had disposed of the boy. And that had been his mistake.
He gritted his teeth and his nostrils flared. He could not get over the humiliation of him, the mighty Phoenix King, being brought down by a snotty-brat. And to make matters worse, his firebending was stripped from him! Oh, because of that, he would admit he lost his mind for a couple of months, unable to cope with his loss of power and his foiled plans, but eventually his mind returned to its former clarity. Which was both a blessing and a curse since he was able to think rationality but was also lucid enough to realize he was stuck in a prison cell, treated like a lowlife criminal.

And the only person to visit him, except for the guard that brought him his food, was the disgrace he called a son. He sneered. How he regretted not getting rid of Zuko when he saw what a pathetic weakling he was. If he had, Zuko would not have betrayed him to join the Avatar to dethrone him. If he had, he would be ruling the world as the Phoenix King.

But he had been a fool and allowed Zuko to live. And the only reason he did was because of Ursa. Because he knew she would hate him forever if she ever found out he had killed her beloved son. He sighed as his thoughts once again settled on his wife, the only woman he could admit—at least to himself—he had ever loved. She was unlike the women he was used to. When their marriage had been arranged, he had been captivated by her beauty and her sweet, kind nature. Nobody had looked at him the way she did during their courtship and their early years of marriage nor had anyone cared for him like she did. So he had been unable to stop himself from falling in love with her. Granted, his kind of love wasn’t perfect and he had not been a good husband to her, but in his mind she was his and he had the right to use her as he saw fit.

Knowing she would do anything to keep her precious son alive, he had proposed for her to kill his father in exchange for Zuko’s life. He had wanted to make sure nothing could be traced back to him if it were discovered that there had been foul play. After the deed was done, he had sent her to the Abandoned Fort. Even if nobody believed him, he had done so to protect her. If it had been suspected that she had murdered Azulon she would have been executed, so he kept her away from the palace. And the Abandoned Fort was the last place anyone would have looked for her. He had planned on bringing her back in a few months, but other things had caught his attention, such as being crowned Fire Lord, ruling the Fire Nation, and planning a war against the other countries.

He had not realized so much time had passed since he had also been distracted by his concubines. That was another issue he had with his wife. He cared for her, but she never understood or accepted his need for other women. Which only made him seek them out more when she suddenly stopped allowing him into her bed. Her indifference had hurt and her absence had been felt, so he had taken it out on his concubines throughout the years.

But now Ursa was no longer his wife. Zuko had seen to it. Ozai narrowed his eyes. And now she was preparing to get married to some other man! A growl escaped his throat and he punched the floor on either side of him. No, she couldn’t! She was his! Just like the Fire Nation was his! And he would not let anyone else take them away from him!
The sound of the steel door being unlocked caught his attention and Ozai immediately schooled his features into a calm expression, staring coolly at the door. It was about time his meal was brought in. He watched as the door opened and a figure stepped through before quickly closing the door. Ozai frowned when he saw the guard was not carrying a tray with food, but what seemed like an extra set of armor.

“Where is my food?” he asked coldly.

“Ah, always so demanding, my lord,” the other man replied with a chuckle.

The former Fire Lord frowned at the words, but also at the familiarity of the voice. Curious, he stood up and casually walked toward the cell bars separating the room to get a better look of the man’s face. He watched as the guard walked closer and his eyes widened once he recognized him.

“Meng Jianguo,” he stated.

“It’s been a while, my lord,” Jianguo greeted as he gave a slight bow.

“What’s with the commotion outside?” Ozai asked.

“Just a little distraction to make things easier for your escape.”

“My escape?” Ozai said with raised eyebrows before he smirked. “Ah, now it makes sense why Zuko was asking me about you. I’m glad to know I still have loyal subjects.”

“Of course, you are, after all, the rightful ruler of the Fire Nation,” Jianguo replied smoothly before he handed the extra armor over. “We must hurry now that the guards are distracted.”

Ozai grabbed the offered clothes, wondering what kind of distraction the former general had caused to be able to sneak into his cell. But now was not the time for questions.

“I will be forever in your debt, Jianguo,” he said as he began to divest himself of his dirty prison clothes. “I would grant you anything you wish once I regain my rightful place in the throne.”
Jianguo smirked.

“All I ask is that I be reinstated to my previous station in life and the military…Oh, and Zuko’s wife,” he began.

Ozai’s eyebrow lifted at his request, while Jianguo’s smirk turned into a sinister smile.

“And the chance to end Zuko’s life.”
Dedicated Vigilance

People scrambled out of the way with startled exclamations or angry curses as the two ostrich-horses raced through the streets. The two riders ignored the insults that were hurled their way as they rode by, their entire focus on the injured man they were protecting. The Fire Lord’s personal guards breathed sighs of relief when they finally arrived at the gates of the palace.

“Open the gates!” Shen shouted at the guards patrolling along the wall as he pulled on the reins of his agitated mount. “Quickly!”

Recognizing the two guards and noticing it was their lord that was injured, the sentinels quickly signaled for the doors to be opened.

Kuo worriedly glanced down at his lord, whose breathing seemed to become more labored and his skin paler. He hoped they had not arrived too late for Fire Lady Katara to extract the poison. He did not want to think about what would happen—not only to the kind Fire Lady and the little prince—but the entire country if Fire Lord Zuko died. He could not stop himself from feeling guilty. It was his job to protect his lord and he had failed.

“Don’t blame yourself,” he heard Shen speak up gruffly.

Kuo glanced toward his partner to see the older man frowning darkly.

“It’s both our jobs to keep him safe, so it isn’t just your fault,” Shen added when Kuo was about to protest. “Don’t lose hope. Our lord is healthy and strong and he has a waterbending healer as his wife. She will save him.”

“You’re right,” Kuo answered with a firm nod.

He was comforted by the words, having seen the waterbender do miraculous things with her healing. The younger guard glanced back down to observe the Fire Lord’s condition. They had to believe their lord would survive.

The gates were finally opened and Kuo urged his mount forward with Shen following close behind. People were already standing around the courtyard, curious about the commotion. The two guards stopped near the long flight of stairs that led into the grand building. Loud gasps and exclamations rose from the gathering crowd of servants and guards as they recognized their lord lying unconscious over the ostrich-horse’s back.

“What happened?!”

“Is he still alive?!”

Multiple questions were asked as the people crowded near, causing the agitated animals to shy away.

“Stand back!” Shen ordered firmly as he waved them impatiently away while he tried to calm his mount, “Give us some space! We need to get the Fire Lord to Fire Lady Katara!”

Dismounting quickly, the older guard hurried over to Kuo to help him with the unconscious firebender with the assistance of another soldier.

“Kuo! Shen!”

Both guards looked up to see Jiao pushing her way through the crowd of worried servants. Ichiro was holding her hand and his eyes were wide in alarm at the sight of the unconscious Fire Lord.

“Jiao, have Fire Lady Katara meet us in their royal chambers!” Kuo urgently told his wife.

The maidservant glanced in concern at the Fire Lord before she picked up her son and rushed off in search of her lady.

Placing one of Zuko’s arms over each other’s necks, Kuo and Shen quickly carried their lord up the long flight of stairs. The gathered crowd watched them go, murmuring worriedly and wondering what had happened, unaware of the upcoming chaos.

Katara smiled amusedly as Kazu cooed up at her while he tried to put her onyx pendant into his mouth. She gently pried his fingers off the pendant before he chewed on it, causing him to frown up at her. Chuckling at his indignant look, she distracted him by waving his rattler near his face. Immediately forgetting the shiny stone, the little prince giggled as he reached for one of his favorite toys. Once within his grasp, the boy began to wildly shake the toy, causing his other family members “He’s getting more active these days,” Pakku spoke up while Iroh and Aang made funny faces at the happy baby.

“Just wait till he learns to crawl and walk,” Kanna said to her granddaughter with a low chuckle. “You will be ready to pull your hair out.”

“Is that what Dad made you want to do?” Katara asked amusedly as she rocked her son in her arms.

“Yes, but you and your brother were almost as bad,” Gran-Gran added.

“I can just imagine them causing havoc in the tribe.” Toph piped in with a grin.

“Yes, it’s the reason why I have so much gray hair!” Kanna exclaimed with a laugh.

“That explains my graying hair,” Iroh spoke up with an amused chuckle as he turned to wink at Ursa. “Your son had me chasing him everywhere to make sure he didn’t hurt himself.”

“That’s just old age,” Pakku replied dryly.

“Old age says the old man,” Iroh replied with a mock humph that caused everybody to chuckle.

Katara, Ursa, and Suki had come back about an hour ago from the orphanage to find Iroh, Pakku, and Kanna playing Pai Sho. Aang and Toph arrived only moments ago, and by the secret smiles they sent each other, Katara had a feeling she knew what kind of fun they had gone in search of that morning. It still amazed her that Aang was having sex now. Even when they had been together, she could only see him as that young boy she had released from the iceberg. But he had definitely grown up if the satisfied grin on Toph’s face was any indication. Shaking her head with a smile, she returned her attention to her son, who was now being entertained by a curious Momo.

They were waiting for the men to arrive so they could have dinner, but it seemed Zuko’s business at the military base was taking longer than expected. She hoped it was nothing too serious. She had already fed Kazuhiko, and was enjoying her time with her family without the feeling of being watched. Although, she had kept it from him she thought it was best she told Zuko her concerns just in case. Perhaps it was really nothing, but it was better to be safe than sorry.

“How are the preparations for the upcoming wedding coming along?” Suki’s question brought Katara out of her concern. “Girls, let your cousin play with Momo,” she gently admonished her daughters.

The twin girls—who were about to grab Momo away from where he was sitting and chirping at the cooing baby—drew their hands behind their backs and smiled sheepishly at their mother and amused aunt.

“Everything is coming out well,” Ursa replied with a smile.

“Jee is impatient to get married, huh?” Toph asked with a waggle of her eyebrows.

When Ursa’s smile widened a bit, the rest of the group chuckled.

The sound of hastening feet had them looking toward the veranda’s doors to see Jiao rush inside with Ichiro running at her side. Katara felt herself stiffen at the worried expression on her maid’s face and she brought her son protectively to her chest.

“What’s the matter?” the waterbender asked with a small frown.

“My lady,” Jiao began breathlessly as she made a short bow which her son mimicked, “Kuo and Shen have just arrived. They are carrying the Fire Lord, who seems to be injured and unconscious, to your chambers.”

“What?!” Katara exclaimed in horror while Ursa gasped loudly.

“What happened?” Iroh and Aang asked at the same time.

“I-I don’t know,” Jiao stuttered as they all stared intensely at her.
“I must go to him!” Katara said as she quickly stood up, handing Kazu over to a shocked Suki. “Please look after him!” she shouted over her shoulder as her heart pounded in fear and concern. Ursa followed quickly after her.

Everybody else looked on worriedly, wondering what had happened. The Fire Lady vaguely heard them voice their concern as she and Ursa rushed away from the veranda and toward the building.

“I hope it’s nothing serious,” her mother-in-law said agitatedly.

“Me, too,” Katara replied as she felt her chest constrict at the thought of Zuko suffering a fatal wound.

How had he gotten hurt in the first place? How long ago did he get hurt? She needed answers, but most of all she needed to see him to assuage the festering concern and dread rising within her.

They rounded a corner and immediately stopped when they almost bumped into Wei and two other advisors.

“Where is the Young One?” Wei growled as he placed his hands on his hips, his large belly sticking out. “We have been waiting for him for hours to start the meeting! He just made us waste our day!”

“My husband didn’t make it to the meeting because he was injured,” the Fire Lady replied in a cold tone as she narrowed her eyes at the old advisor.

The other two men took a step back at her look before they frowned as her words registered, but Wei crossed his arms and let out a humph.

“Well, I supposed we’ll have to wait until he recovers,” he grumbled and shrugged.

Katara did not reply as she walked around them. She did not have time for them or for Wei’s impertinent manner. She had to see her husband. The two women arrived at the royal chamber just in time to see Kuo and Shen placing Zuko on the bed where he remained unmoving.

“Zuko!” they both cried out as they rushed toward him.
The guards moved aside to make room for the women. Katara immediately sat next to Zuko and cradled his face in her hands as she softly called his name, worried when he did not respond. She grew more anxious as she took in his complexion and the way his chest rose and fell quickly with his labored breathing. Snapping herself from her rising panic, the waterbender stood up so she could examine him thoroughly. She needed to heal him.

Her eyes quickly scanned his body for injuries and landed on a strip of cloth bound around his upper thigh. Blood had soaked the dark fabric. She untied the cloth and opened the thin rip on his trousers, caused most likely by a dagger. She frowned. The cut was not that deep, and although he had lost blood, it wasn’t enough for him to look this bad.

“What happened?” she asked as she reached for her dagger strapped to her hip.

“We were ambushed,” Shen replied gruffly as he watched her work.

“We don’t know who they were, but they were intent on getting to the Fire Lord,” Kuo replied just as seriously. “There were so many and we were unprepared for an attack…We believe the weapon used to injure him was laced with poison.”

“Oh no,” Ursa gasped as she stared worriedly down at her unconscious son.

Heart in her throat, Katara did not respond as she had ripped the fabric further apart so she could see his wound better. She sucked in her breath at the sight of the dark veins spreading up his thigh. The poison was making its way to his heart. She wasn’t sure if the poison had already affected other organs. She could not lose him! She had to extract all traces of the poison before it was too late.

She bit her lip. She had never done something like this before. What if she failed?

She straightened herself and ordered herself not to give up. She would try everything she could to save him. Poison was another form of liquid. If she could bend water, snow, sweat, and blood, she will be able to manipulate poison as well. She just hoped it wasn’t too late.

“She straightened herself and ordered herself not to give up. She would try everything she could to save him. Poison was another form of liquid. If she could bend water, snow, sweat, and blood, she will be able to manipulate poison as well. She just hoped it wasn’t too late.

“Help me remove his clothes,” she ordered the two guards, who quickly moved forward to do her bidding.
While the men did their work, the waterbender turned to her worried mother-in-law.

“Please go and get the washbasin,” she said.

With a nod, Ursa made her way to the bathing room. She was consumed with worry for her son’s life. She knew what poison could do to a person, and depending on the kind used, Zuko could die an excruciating death. But she had faith in her daughter-in-law. Katara was a great healer and her love for Zuko would prompt her to do everything in her power to save him.

Katara picked up Zuko’s hand as she gazed down worriedly at his pallid face.

“Please be strong, Zuko,” she whispered fervently.

Letting go of his hand, she moved toward his legs. Gathering some water onto her hands, she placed them over the festering wound. She took a deep breath and closed her eyes as she willed her healing powers to come forth. The water covering her hands began to glow as she concentrated.

A knocked sounded at the door and everybody but Katara turned toward the sound. Kuo quickly moved forward to open the door. Physician Toshiro stood outside, worry creasing his already wrinkled face.

“I came as soon as I heard about my lord,” he said as he entered with his medicinal box. “Where is he injured? Or have you already healed him, my lady?”

“He was poisoned,” Katara responded just as Ursa returned to the room with the washbasin.

When the old man’s eyes widened before his eyebrows furrowed in concentration, Katara knew he was trying to come up with a way to combat the poison.

“I will use my waterbending to extract the poison,” she added when the physician moved to search through his medicines.

Toshiro nodded as he closed his box.
“It will probably be faster that way.”

“I will ask for your assistance if I need it,” the waterbender told him as she turned back to her silent husband while Ursa looked on hopefully behind her.

The guards and the physician reluctantly retreated outside to give the waterbender space to work and concentrate.

A deep frown marred Katara’s brow as she focused on distinguishing the foreign substance from his blood. It took a moment for her to finally differentiate the liquids. The poison was thicker and it was moving slower through his veins. She frowned when she realized it was spreading in multiple directions. She needed to work fast before the poison reach his organs, especially his heart.

Pulling one hand back, a thin line of a black liquid flowed out of the wound. She vaguely heard Ursa’s small gasp as she turned quickly to deposit the poison into the washbasin. She stared at the dark liquid in anger, wishing whoever was responsible for hurting her husband would fall dead. Shaking her head from such vengeful thoughts, she turned back to Zuko.

Sweat beaded her forehead as she worked to extract every last trace of the poison from Zuko’s system. Since he had arrived unconscious, it could only mean the effect of it had been quick, but since he was still alive, she could only hope she got it out of his system soon enough. She was also afraid that it may have already caused damage to his immune system.

It was only after she could not detect any more poison did she finally pull back, feeling a little lightheaded for concentrating so hard. Surrounding her hand with clean water, she used it to quickly seal the cut on his thigh before depositing the water into the basin. She watched as it mixed in with the dark poison before she looked away to smile faintly at her agitated mother-in-law.

“Would it help if I brew him an antidote?” Ursa asked quietly as she stared at her son.

“I’m not sure, but I don’t think it’d hurt,” the brunette replied.

The older woman gave a firm nod as she picked up the dirty washbasin.
“I will throw this out and then I will make him the antidote. It would be so much easier if I knew what kind of poison was used,” she murmured. She would just have to make an antidote that worked against most poisons and had healing properties.

She watched as Katara watched Zuko, her brow furrowed deeply and her teeth worriedly biting her lower lip. She looked exhausted.

“You did your best and Zuko is strong. We must have confidence that he will pull through.”

“You’re right,” Katara said, although part of her was not as confident. What if she had not done enough? What if she had missed something? She shook her head. She had to believe everything would come out well.

“I will let the others know,” Ursa added as she hurried toward the doors with the washbasin.

Once the older woman closed the door, Katara sank down onto the bed next to Zuko’s side. She once again picked up his hand, hating the slightly cooler feeling of his normally hot skin. As she stared at him, at his almost lifeless expression, she felt her breath hitch and her eyes sting as worry once again consumed her. What if she lost him?

“Please, Zuko,” she whispered desperately as she stared into his closed eyes. “You have to live. For Kazuhiko. For me.”

Later that night, on the streets of the capital, people speculated about the rumor going around that the Fire Lord was injured. No one knew exactly how he had gotten hurt or how serious it was. Some rumors even said that he was on the verge of death. In their speculations and concern, the citizens did not pay attention to the two men walking among them.

Both wore ragged cloaks with traveling bags over their shoulders, and straw hats covering their faces. They kept their voices low, even though one of them was gesticulating angrily with one hand.

“Zuko can’t die yet,” Ozai hissed as he glared at the man next to him from beneath his hat. “Not until he hands over the throne to me.”

“Don’t worry, my lord,” Jianguo responded smoothly as he guided them through the streets where it was less crowded. “The poison wasn’t powerful. Even a simple antidote could help him. Plus, I know the waterbender will heal him. We just needed to incapacitate him for a while. With Zuko ill, everybody would be more worried over him than searching for you.”

“Hm, I doubt it,” Ozai said gruffly as he took in their surroundings.

It had been years since he had stepped out of his prison cell and it was nice to be free again. Although, he knew it was too soon to count victory yet, much less enjoy it. But he swore that he would never go back to that dirty cell.

“Where are we going?” he finally asked.

They had not said much as they made their escape from the prison tower and toward the capital, but as soon as they knew they would not be caught, Jianguo had told him everything, except for where they were heading.

“We found a good hiding place for now,” the former general replied absently as he stared at a group of young women chatting on the other side of the street. When Ozai made a displeased sound, he turned back to grin at the former Fire Lord. “With the woman who was supposed to be your daughter-in-law.”

“Oh, really?” Ozai hummed in mild surprise before he sneered mockingly, “Mai is willing to betray him? My son sure has good taste in women.”

“He sure does with the waterbender,” Jianguo responded before he mentally added, Which is why I’m going to take her from him.

Ozai made a noncommittal sound since his thoughts had once again returned to Ursa. He would get her back along with the throne. A miserable nobody like Jee did not deserve her. She was meant to be his and only his. He just had to convince her of that and together they would rule the Fire Nation and the world. He just had to come up with a way for Zuko to die without getting blamed for it, for he knew Ursa would never forgive him for hurting her precious son.

“We’re here,” Jianguo’s whisper reached his ears.

Ozai looked up to see the home of his former governor. He turned slightly and was immediately greeted by the sight of the palace just a few feet away. How he longed to live there once again. To enjoy the luxuries of royalty, sleep on a real bed and not on a filthy pallet on the floor. He could not wait to regain his power and rule the world with an iron fist.

Jianguo motioned for him and he silently followed the other man to the back of the large house. They entered through the servants’ door and Ozai sneered at the thought that he, the once and future Phoenix King, had to sneak in in such a manner. Fortunately, they did not come across any servants or guards as they made their way through the halls.

A moment later, Jianguo opened a door and they walked into a sitting room. Ozai glanced around the opulent room before a movement caught his eyes. He turned around to see Mai looking at them blankly before she gave a small bow.

“My lord,” she greeted emotionlessly.

“Hm,” he hummed passively as he looked her over.

She had not changed much from the last time he had seen her. Uninteresting, really.

“You were right, Jianguo,” he said as he turned to the other man with a raised eyebrow.

Jianguo immediately caught his meaning and grinned.

Mai, not understanding the implication, frowned before she schooled her features back into place. She had forgotten how intimidating Zuko’s father could be. She hoped she wasn’t making a mistake.

“Anyway, when is our friend arriving?” Ozai asked as he threw his hat and cloak toward a chair.

“Later tonight,” Jianguo responded, “He did not want to raise suspicions if he was found missing.”

“Very well,” Ozai replied as he walked toward the window to gaze out toward the palace.

Soon. Soon he will get everything he rightly deserved.
And he will punish those who had defied him.

In the following three days, Katara remained by Zuko’s side. He had not woken up and it seemed the poison had still affected him since he had a high fever. Toshiro had come in a few times to check on his lord. He had given Zuko a potion to induce him to throw up any residue of the poison. Zuko had vomited a couple of times after that, but not recently, so it made Katara hope any trace of the poison had been expelled. Toshiro then advised her to feed him light broths to keep him hydrated and nourished, but that would not upset his stomach.

Sweat plastered Zuko’s dark hair to his forehead and coated his entire body. She had braided his long locks to keep it away from his neck and she kept him mostly exposed except for a sheet to cover his groin. His face was extremely flushed, completely different from the pallid completion it was when his guards had brought him in. She made sure to keep him cool by misting his body with waterbending or by wiping him down with cold, wet cloths.

His fever was raging and she hoped that was a sign that his body was fighting the lingering effects of the poison. However, she was also afraid the long fever would damage his brain. She had seen it happen a few times when she had been a child and she did not want that for her husband. So she did everything she could to keep him cool and comfortable.

Even though she had tried not to think about it, she felt what had happened to Zuko could be her fault for not saying anything about feeling as if she were being followed and watched. She did not know if the two even correlated, but she felt that if she had voiced her suspicions Zuko would have taken better precautions.

She had not left his side since he was brought in and ate and slept sparingly only because her family urged her to do so. Her worry was too great to think about herself. She feared she would lose him if she left his side for a moment.

Jiao would bring Kazu in to be fed and spend some time with his mother for a few hours. Ursa and Iroh also spent a lot of time with her and Zuko, their worry just as strong as hers. Aang, Toph, and her family sometimes came in to keep her company and help in any way they could.

Her father and Sokka had explained the ambush in more detail and it only frustrated her more to know such men were out there. Who could they be? Another rebel group? They already had enough to worry about with Jianguo and his men. Her eyes widened. What if Jianguo was behind it? And if it were, how did he even enter the Fire Nation without being seen. Her eyes narrowed and she clenched her hands. Either way, they will pay for daring to hurt her husband and almost make her son grow up without a father.
Iroh had told her that Jee, Shen, and Kuo had gone out several times to look for the men who had attacked Zuko, but hadn’t had any luck finding them. However, she had a feeling there was something else, but Iroh and Jee were hiding it from her. The only reason she could think they were doing so was because they wanted her to focus on Zuko’s health.

The night before she had been startled awake by Zuko’s shouts. The fever was strong and he was plagued by nightmares. He had thrashed around and cursed incoherently. She had to grab onto him, talking to him soothingly and caressing his hair, until he finally calmed down. She could not help worrying that the fever did not seem to go down. She hoped it broke soon.

She wanted to see Zuko’s golden eyes staring at her with that combination of love and passion he held just for her. She just wanted him to be himself again. She hated seeing him so ill.

The sound of Kazu babbling immediately snapped her from her thoughts. She looked away from Zuko’s face and turned around to see Jiao standing near the chair with Kazuhiko in her arms. She had been so lost in her thoughts, she did not hear them enter the room. Her son smiled and reached out his arms for her.

“It is time for his meal, my lady,” Jiao said softly.

“Oh, yes,” Katara replied as she glanced quickly at the window to see it was already afternoon.

She opened her arms and Jiao walked forward. The baby cooed happily as he reached for his mother and she cradled him in her arms.

“Thank you, Jiao,” she said as she smiled down at her hungry child.

“I will return later with your dinner,” Jiao responded kindly.

At Katara’s nod, the maid walked away and softly closed the door behind her. The waterbender opened up her top and placed Kazu to her chest. He was certain to fall asleep soon, but she enjoyed having her son in her arms. He would not remain an infant forever, so she cherished these moments as much as possible, especially with everything that was happening. As her son continued to eat, Katara looked back at Zuko, feeling her throat tighten and her heart constrict. She grabbed onto his hand, hot and limp within her grasp, and she squeezed.
Everything would come out well.

She had to believe that.

“You have to save my wife and child!”

The loud shout immediately awoke Katara from her restless sleep and her head jerk up from where it had been resting on the back of her chair. Her eyes flew toward the bed to see Zuko thrashing about, an angry expression on his face. She quickly jumped from her seat and rushed toward the bed. She grabbed onto his arms, trying to keep him from harming himself. He kept shouting and it took a moment for her to realize he was remembering that time she almost miscarried. He was ordering Lady Yoon Hee to save them.

“Zuko, shh, it’s okay,” she called to him soothingly, “Kazu and I are fine.”

But he did not hear her as he continued to scream and curse. She watched as a moment later his expression morphed into an anguished one.

“Please…I can’t lose them,” he whispered in agony.

Katara felt her eyes prick with tears at his distressed tone, but firmly held them back as she tried to calm him down. This had happened many times since he had been injured and she was despairing. In his sickness, Zuko kept having dreams and nightmares about the past. He would sometimes recognize Katara and apologize for his mistakes. Other times, he would ramble about their happy moments and the pride he felt for their son. Other times, he would say that he needed to get up to protect his family, which was when she would need Kuo or Shen’s help to restrain him.

There had been a couple of times, however, that he seemed lucid enough to talk to her or interact with Kazu. Those times were the worst because it would raise her hopes up, thinking that he was finally better, only for him to revert back to sleeping fitfully or having nightmares. She did not understand why the fever had not broken yet. She had tried everything, but nothing seemed to be helping.

There were times when she just wanted to break down and cry from the fear, worry, and exhaustion. But she held back. She was stronger than that. Besides, Zuko and Kazu needed her. For them she could endure anything.
Katara hummed softly as she wiped down Zuko’s body with a damp cloth. He was still restless while he slept, but he hadn’t had any nightmares the previous night. His skin felt a little cooler, so she hoped that meant his fever was breaking. Even though he was lying right there before her, she missed him.

She pushed down the sheet covering him so she could wash his lower parts. She started with his feet first and slowly moved up his legs. When she moved toward his upper thighs and groin, his length twitched and became semi-erect. She ignored it since it had happened a few times before. It was just his body reacting naturally to the touch.

Her thoughts returned to her conversation with Iroh that morning and she frowned. He had told her that Wei had begun to stir trouble again. This time he was telling the other advisors that it would be best they start looking for someone else to rule the Fire Nation as regent until Prince Kazuhiko came of age.

Katara narrowed her eyes angrily, knowing he had dismissed her as a candidate because of her heritage. But what angered her most was that Wei already thought Zuko was going to die and was already making plans. She growled under her breath.

Zuko wasn’t going to die. Not if she could help it. She won’t let him die. He couldn’t die. He was young and he had so much to live for. Their son could not grow up without his father. And she needed him too. She did not know what she would do if she were to lose him.

Oh gods, I can’t lose him. I can’t, she thought despairingly.

She was snapped out of her thoughts when she felt her hand being grabbed. She looked down to see Zuko’s larger hand enfolding hers. Her eyes flew toward his face to see him looking intensely at her.

“Zuko,” she whispered, unsure if he was lucid this time.

“I won’t leave you or Kazu,” he rasped softly.

It was then she realized she had been talking out loud and he had heard her. Tears gathered in her eyes, but she sniffed and held them back as she smiled down at him, squeezing his hand in acceptance and comfort. She watched as a moment later a smirk curled his lips as he moved her hand toward his stiffening erection. Her eyes widened as she looked down at their hands before she looked at him with an uncertain frown.
“I’ll prove to you I’m not ready to die,” he purred huskily as he wrapped her hand around him.

Automatically, she tightened her grip a little and he let out a quiet groan. He pulled her closer so that she was hovering over him, his breathing coming a bit more erratic. He frowned when he realized he was too weak to do much, but damn he had been woken up by Katara touching him and hearing her words. He needed both the release and to reassure her that he will live.

“Zuko, no,” Katara murmured as he weakly tried to lift her dress up her thigh with his other hand, “You’re ill. You shouldn’t strain yourself.”

“I want you,” he groaned hoarsely as he squeezed her hand tighter around him. “Make love to me, Katara.”

Katara tried to ignore his pleas and protested that he should rest, but the feeling of him in her hand, of the passion and need in his eyes and voice, eventually destroyed her resolve. She wanted to forget her troubles for a moment, to lose herself in mindless pleasure. She wanted—needed—the comfort of being intimate with him.

Heart beating rapidly in her chest, and stomach tightening in lust, the waterbender swiftly stripped herself of her clothes before she leaned forward to press her lips to his. He opened his mouth for her, and with a quiet moan, she dipped her tongue inside to tangle it with his. He whispered he loved her through their kiss and she felt her heart ease with his words and her troubles melt away from her.

A moment later, she felt his mouth slacken beneath her and she pulled back a little to catch her breath, but when she looked to his face, she realized he had fallen back asleep. His face was relaxed and his breathing had evened out. She stared at him incredulously before she shook her head and smiled. He had aroused her to the point she had wanted to climb on him and ride him hard, uncaring of his current state, and he fell asleep on her. Well, at least it seemed he was getting better now if he had wanted to have sex with her.

She straightened herself and resumed cleaning him, trying to make her body relax and forget her arousal. Once finished with her work, she glanced back to observed Zuko’s peacefully sleeping face. It was the first time she had seen one on him since before he was poisoned and she felt hope swell in her chest.

Wanting to be close to him, she moved around the bed and climbed on, lying against his side. She reached forward to caress his hair and cheek. She smiled in relief when she realized his skin was no longer burning up. She pressed a quick kiss to his lips before snuggling close to his side. She heard him murmur her name in his sleep and she felt her smile widened.

Everything would be okay.

The sensation of fingers caressing her cheek slowly brought Katara out of her deep slumber. She blinked slowly as her mind returned to the waking world only to find herself staring straight into Zuko’s face. The early morning sunlight illuminated his sharp features nicely and she felt her heart throb in her chest. He was awake and was staring at her as intently as he had the previous night. Once he realized she was awake, a small smile curled his lips as he grazed his fingers gently over her lips. She pressed a kiss to his fingers and smiled at him.

“You’re back,” she breathed happily.

Her heart felt lighter and her body, which seemed to have been constantly tense during the week, relaxed back onto the soft mattress. La, she did not know if she should cry or laugh at knowing he was all right, that he had survived, and that he would not leave them. She could not wait to tell the others.

Zuko watched as a myriad of emotions crossed his wife’s face before she scooted closer to him to bury her face against his neck. He slowly wrapped his arm around her, enjoying her sweet scent and soft, curvy body. He frowned, however, at the feeling of weakness that beset his whole body. His head felt a little hazy as well. What happened to him? And what did Katara mean by her words? His frowned deepened as he tried to remember. His eyes widened when flashes of the ambush rushed through his mind.

“What happened?” he asked, his voice cracking a bit at the dryness of his throat. He coughed a couple of times and grimaced.

“Hold on,” Katara said as she moved away from him and stood up.

Zuko weakly lifted his head to watch her fill a cup with water before she returned to his side. He reluctantly allowed her to help him drink when his hand shook at the effort. Once he was done, she placed the cup down before she helped prop him up against the headboard, fluffing the pillows and making sure he was comfortable. He gave her a small smile, although inwardly he was frowning at the feeling of helplessness. Why was he so weak? How long had he been ill to have his muscles feel so stiff?
“What happened?” he asked again.

Before Katara could answer him a knock sounded at the door.

“Just a minute!” Katara called out.

Zuko watched silently as she threw a sheet over his lower half before she rushed to don a nightdress. He was disappointed to see her delightful naked form disappear, but perhaps it was for the best since he wouldn’t be able to do anything about it with how terrible he felt. He would just have to content himself with the thought that he would be able to make love to her once he was better. Hopefully soon.

A moment later, one of the large doors was opened. Jiao walked in quietly with Kazu in her arms. She paused when she saw her lord was awake. She smiled at him and at her lady, whose previous distressed face was now smooth with relief and happiness. She walked forward and the waterbender met her halfway to take the little prince in her arms.

Kazu let out a happy squeal at the sight of his mother and Katara smiled affectionately as she pressed a kiss to his cheek. She looked up to smile at Jiao.

“Can you bring us breakfast? Something light,” she said, “Oh, and please let our family know my husband is finally awake.”

“Of course, my lady,” Jiao replied with a smile.

With a bow, she retreated to the door. Kuo would be happy to know the Fire Lord was better.

“Can you bring Kazu here?” Zuko called out. “I want to see him.”

“Let’s go greet your papa,” Katara cooed at the baby as she hurried over to Zuko’s side.

Holding her son carefully, the waterbender climbed back onto the bed to rest beside her husband. Kazu smiled at the sight of his father and waved his hands in the air before blowing bubbles with his lips. Zuko chuckled as he reached up to playfully tap his nose, which caused the baby to blink before he tried to grab the long digit. They chuckled loudly when Kazu tried to chew on it before his face scrunched up and he began to make small fussing noises.

“Time to eat,” Katara said as she opened up her nightdress enough to expose her breasts.

She pressed the baby to her chest and he immediately latched onto the nipple, sucking hungrily. While he ate, Zuko caressed his hair and smiled at his wife. They were silent a moment, enjoying the quiet family time. Katara then briefly recounted what had happened since he was brought in and Zuko could not help feeling both guilty and grateful for her constant vigilance.

“When the fever didn’t go away… I was afraid,” she admitted quietly as she stared into Zuko’s eyes. “I just couldn’t fathom the thought of losing you.”

“You won’t lose me,” he replied firmly yet softly. “I can’t leave you and Kazuhiko.”

Katara smiled at him and reached out to grab one of his hands. He intertwined their fingers and gently squeezed. She only let go to burp Kazu against her shoulder once he finished.

A moment later, Jiao and another maid arrived with their breakfast. Once everything was settled, the servants left the royal family alone. As they ate, Katara told him what Iroh had said Wei had been telling the advisors.

“The idiot,” Zuko growled before he added pensively, “But that is an important issue. I will have to see to have you appointed regent until Kazu comes of age if anything were to happen to me.”

“I hope it doesn’t come to that,” Katara responded before she firmly added, “You will not die on me anytime soon, you hear?”

“Yes, my lady,” Zuko replied with a low chuckle which then turned into a small laugh. “I can’t wait to see Wei’s reaction when he sees I’m still alive, though.”

Katara chuckled and shook her head. Kazu giggled from his spot between them before he began to chew on his fist. Zuko watched as a moment later his wife’s happy mood changed into a somber one as she absentmindedly rubbed their son’s belly.
“What’s wrong?” he asked.

“I…can’t help feeling like this is…my fault,” she finally responded in a low tone.

“What do you mean?” Zuko frowned.

“For the past several weeks, I felt as if I was being watched,” she explained slowly, “Like I was being…followed. What if whoever seemed to have followed me was the same person or people who attacked you? What if I had told you about it sooner, we could have prevented all of this? You wouldn’t have gotten hurt…”

Zuko shook his head and grasped her hand gently.

“It’s not your fault,” he told her firmly before he added with a little growl, “But I’m upset you didn’t tell me sooner you felt you were being watched and followed. What if you had gotten hurt?”

“But it was you who was hurt,” she whispered bitterly as she glared down at her lap, “And I could have prevented it—”

“Katara,” Zuko interrupted her firmly as he grabbed her chin and nudged her head up so she could see him, “It’s not your fault. We don’t even know for sure if they even relate. But either way, we will take the proper precautions for when you go out.”

“The same goes for you,” she said just as firmly.

Zuko nodded. Another knock sounded at the door and Katara called out for them to enter. They watched as Jee walked in before closing the door behind him.

“I am glad to see you are better,” Jee said with a small smile.

“Thank you, Jee,” Zuko replied before he turned to look at Katara, “I’m sure that has a lot to do with my wife.”
“You are correct. Lady Katara had not left you side since that day,” Jee responded with a nod of his head.

Zuko smiled at her before he frowned.

“Promise me you will take a much needed rest today,” he said softly.

“I will,” Katara replied since she was suddenly feeling all the restless nights catch up to her.

“The rest of the family is on their way,” Jee spoke up when they turned back to look at him. Then in a more serious tone, he added, “We were unable to find the men who attacked us, but I think I know why they did.”

Zuko frowned and he felt Katara tense beside him.

“The day of the ambush, the captain of the prison guards was found dead,” Jee began slowly before he growled, “Ozai’s cell…was empty.”
“I’m perfectly fine,” Zuko growled as he stubbornly crossed his arms over his chest. “I can go back to work.”

Sitting against the headboard with a few pillows propped up against his back, Zuko glowered at his wife. Katara was standing next to their bed, her hands on her hips, her features unmoving, as she glared resolutely back at him. Zuko frowned more deeply. He was sick and tired of lying in bed like an invalid. He wanted to leave the room and get back to work; he could not neglect his duties any longer.

“You’re not leaving this bed until you’re fully recuperated,” she told him firmly. “I will not have you getting sick again from exhaustion and stress just because you didn’t take care of yourself.”

Zuko grumbled as he glared at her, but she did not relent and glared right back, challenging him to defy her. They both knew she could make him stay by using her bloodbending, but she was giving him the chance to make the choice. With another low grumble, the firebender uncrossed his arms and leaned back against the pillows.

“Fine,” he muttered reluctantly, although he knew she was right.

He wanted to think he was all right, but he knew his body was still weak from the fever. He just hated being cooped up with nothing to do. Now he knew how Katara must have felt when Lady Yoon Hee confined her to the bedroom after the near miscarriage. He winced at the memory before he firmly shoved it away. When Katara smiled at him in satisfaction, he automatically smiled in return. He wanted to be stubborn about it, but knew he should listen to her because she was the healer (not to mention his wife) and she knew what was best for him.

“I’m going to see about dinner before I get Kazu from Jiao,” the waterbender said. She leaned forward to press a quick kiss to his lips before straightening herself with a grin. “Have I told you you make an adorable patient?”
“Please don’t call me that,” Zuko groaned which caused her to laugh and playfully pinch his cheek.

“Then stop pouting,” she teased.

“I do not pout!” he growled.

Katara laughed before she squealed when he grabbed her arms and pulled her swiftly down to crash his mouth to hers. She moaned when he sucked on her lower lip before his tongue swept along the seam. But before she could deepen the kiss, he pulled back and let her go. A smug grin curled his lips at her flushed face.

“You’re adorable when you blush,” he purred huskily. “Especially when I make you blush when I’m sucking your breasts. Or how red your face gets when I’m fucking you.”

He grinned when his dirty words only caused her to become even more flustered. She shook her head and smiled at him before trying to step away. He pulled her in closer and from his angle on the bed, easily nipped her breast, his teeth grazing her nipple. Her eyes closed automatically to enhance the sensation.

“I can’t wait to have you under me, so I can watch your face when I make you come. Or maybe I’ll bend you over, so I can pound that perfect ass of yours.”

He moved his hand down her back, caressing her bottom gently before pulling back and giving her a firm smack. Katara moaned and shivered. She was so tempted to strip right then and there and straddle him. She took a deep breath and stepped away from him.

“Stop distracting me,” she said with a shake of her head and a husky laugh as she moved away from him and headed toward the doors.

Damn, she was hot and bothered. Her core was already wet, causing her silky undergarments to stick to her slick skin. It had been so long since they had sex and she wanted him bad. But now was not the time. She opened one of the golden doors, but before she stepped out, she turned around and firmly added, “And don’t you dare leave this room!”

“Are you going to drag me back if I do?” he asked amusedly as he once again reclined back on the pillows.
“Don’t think I won’t,” Katara replied with another laugh before she added, “I’ll be back soon.”

When she closed the door behind her, Zuko shook his head and smiled. It seemed she was even more overprotective and cosseting now that she was a mother. Not that he minded her attentions toward him or her concern for his welfare. What he did mind was that he could not go out to search for Ozai. Yet.

Glancing toward the opened balcony, he frowned darkly at the sky. He could not believe Ozai had escaped. It seemed while everybody had been worried for his life and looking for his attackers, someone had broken Ozai free in the confusion. The captain of the prison and the guard responsible for taking Ozai his meals were found dead. The latter had been stripped of his uniform, not doubt to serve as a disguise for Ozai.

Jee and the others were now looking for him, but they had found nothing to lead them in the right direction. It was as if he had just vanished. Where could he be hiding? And who helped him escape?

His hands balled into fists.

He was so angry and it was mostly because he felt powerless. He had been unable to stop Ozai from escaping and he had no idea where he could be. They had to capture Ozai and those who helped him. Zuko had to keep not only his family, but the Fire Nation safe. And with Ozai on the loose something horrible could happen.

The sound of the door opening brought him out of his thoughts and he turned away from staring unseeingly at the balcony. He watched as his wife entered with their son in her arms. Behind them followed a few servants carrying trays of their dinner. He remained silent as Katara directed the servants where to place the items while she rocked Kazuhioko who had begun to fuss a little, letting everybody know he was hungry.

As soon as everything was settled and the servants left, Katara sat down on the chair next to him to breastfeed their hungry son. He smiled when she simultaneously reached for a dumpling with her chopsticks while she held Kazu to her with the other arm. He watched them for a moment, his own chopsticks held loosely in his hand, until Katara noticed he wasn’t eating.

“Are you not hungry?” she asked with a small frown.

Shaking his head, Zuko reached for some noodles as he smiled at her.

“I am,” he replied simply.
Katara leaned back a little as she stared at him inquiringly.

“Is something the matter?” she asked softly.

“No,” he replied quickly, not wanting to worry her.

When she raised an eyebrow at him, letting him know she didn’t believe him, he let out a sigh as he placed his chopsticks down.

“I’m just worried about what Ozai could be planning,” he confessed as he stared darkly down at his plate before he looked up at her. “I need to get better quick. I need to find him, so I can keep you and Kazu, and everybody else safe.”

“I understand,” the waterbender said softly as she grasped his hand and squeezed gently, offering him her support and comfort. “But just remember you’re not alone and you have lots of people who will help you, including me. We will find them, you’ll see.”

“I hope so,” he replied in a low tone before he added with a smile, “Thanks.”

“You’re welcome,” she said, returning his smile before she teasingly added, “Now eat if you want to be big and strong.”

Zuko rolled his eyes playfully as he picked up his chopsticks once again.

“You should be saying that to our son,” he said as he took a bite of a spicy dumpling.

“It works for his father just as well,” she laughed before she looked down to coo at her nursing son, “Isn’t that right, Kazu?”

Eating more noodles, Zuko watched his wife kiss their son’s head and caress his cheek with her fingers while Kazu stared up at her adoringly. Zuko felt his chest constrict and his hand clenched the chopsticks tightly.
They were why he needed to get stronger, they were what he needed to protect, what he needed to fight for—his son, his wife, their family and their country. He needed to protect the Fire Nation, so that one day his son might grow up to lead and protect their people when he no longer was able to. He needed to ensure that Kazuhiko and any future children he had with Katara not only survived but thrived.

They had to find Ozai and the men who helped him escape as soon as possible. He needed to keep his family safe.

Once Katara deemed him fit enough to leave their bed, Zuko immediately took up his duties once again, zealously trying to find a way to capture his father. Two weeks passed since Ozai’s escape, and although Zuko had men searching all over the Fire Nation, they hadn’t had any luck finding him.

On the first meeting with his advisors Zuko brought up Wei’s suggestions about finding a regent. While the other men groveled and swore they had been against the idea, Wei had shrugged and asked what was wrong with making plans for if the worst happened. Zuko had glared at him, although he begrudgingly admitted he was right, before he declared that if anything were to happen to him his wife will become regent until his son was old enough to rule. The men had quickly agreed since the Fire Lady had proven herself capable of handling such responsibilities for the past year.

Currently, the royal family and their friends were in the large dining hall, enjoying their dinner, although their usual jovial mood was subdued due to what had occurred the past weeks. The only ones who were untouched by the worry in everybody’s minds were the twins and the little prince who were being entertained by Momo.

“Are you and Jee still going to go ahead with your wedding?” Kanna asked when there was a lull in the conversation.

At the tribeswoman’s question, everybody turned to look at the couple sitting by each other. Ursa and Jee glanced at one another before they nodded.

“Yes,” Ursa responded quietly. She felt Jee squeeze her knee comfortingly under the table and she looked up to smile at him before she turned to regard her son and his wife. “But we decided to get married sooner than we planned.”

“How soon?” Katara asked.
“In a week,” the golden-eyed woman replied softly.

“Wow, that is soon,” Sokka remarked around a mouthful of chicken.

“Who knows what Ozai has planned and we want to get married before...anything happens,” Jee added, “Once we heard of his escape, we decided to get married as soon as possible. We were only waiting for Lord Zuko to be well enough to attend.”

Everybody turned grim since it was what everybody had been asking themselves. What did Ozai plan to do now that he was free? The suspense of not knowing had everybody on edge. Zuko frowned darkly. His mother’s wedding should be a joyous event, but now it was clouded by Ozai’s disappearance. Would his father ever stop hurting his family?

Iroh cleared his throat and smiled when he had everybody’s attention.

“Well, either way, we won’t let Ozai ruin our daily lives,” he said calmly as he poured himself more tea. “We will go ahead with the wedding and it will be wonderful.”

Iroh smiled at Ursa as he poured her more tea. Ursa returned his smile, though inwardly she could not stop herself from feeling uneasy. Ever since she had learned of Ozai’s escape, she had been unable to stop remembering his words the last time she saw him.

“This is not over, Ursa. I will reclaim you and the throne, one way or the other. Mark my words.”

Her fingers gripped the warm teacup tightly as she felt a shudder run down her spine. She didn’t think his true objective was her, after all, he sent her away from his life. Yet, she could not stop worrying that he would do as he had said. He was the type of man that would never let someone else have what was ‘his’. And while she was sure he didn’t love her, it didn’t matter as he would ruin her happiness out of spite because he thought he had the right.

She glanced at Jee to see him pause in eating to return her stare. He gave her a questioning look before he smiled reassuringly. She again felt him squeeze her knee comfortingly. His touch relaxed her and brought a rush of warmth and affection to her chest.
She wanted to marry Jee as soon as possible, not just only as a precaution, but because she loved him and wanted to be tied to him for the rest of her life. She knew he felt the same and it only reinforced the fact that they were meant to be together. She reached her hand down to squeeze his hand gratefully.

She would not let Ozai ruin her happiness ever again.

Wandering the streets of the capital, Jet frowned as he listened to the news. Apparently, the Fire Lord had been attacked and had been gravely ill after being wounded. There were many different speculations as to what truly happened and he wondered how it had happened and who had attacked Zuko.

He honestly didn’t care if the scarred bastard had been killed, but he knew it would sadden Katara if Zuko were to die. That and there was the possibility a tyrant – or Ozai himself – would try to take over the Fire Nation while the grieving widow and her orphaned son were vulnerable. So he supposed he should feel glad Zuko had survived.

It was still difficult not wanting or longing for Katara, but it was getting easier as time passed by. It helped a little that he was focused on the mission to capture the jewel thief. And it really helped when he got drunk and spent time with women at the brothel before Longshot and Smellerbee forced him away.

Unfortunately, he had still not captured the thief, which infuriated him. He wanted to return to the Earth Kingdom, he was tired of being surrounded by all these Fire Nation assholes but he had to finish this business first. Luckily, they had found out that the thief had gone to the capital and was hiding somewhere. All they had to do was flush him out and capture him.

Jet rounded a corner, barely avoiding bumping into a group of old men who cursed at him, and realized he had gone in the wrong direction when he came upon the palace. He slowed down as he neared the large building, his eyes scanning the high walls surrounding it and the little he could see of the red tiled roof. He wondered which part of the palace Katara was in at the moment.

In his distraction, he did not notice there was someone standing in his path, also gazing at the palace, until he crashed into them. He moved back with a curse and a glare, which turned into a smirk when he realized who it was.

“Ah, Lady Mai,” he greeted her charmingly even though she had turned to give him a blank stare. “I didn’t expect to see you in the Fire Nation.”
“The Fire Nation is my home,” Mai replied simply as she glanced back briefly to gesture to her house. Her face did not show her surprise at seeing her former lover near her home.

The freedom fighter raised an eyebrow when he noticed her house was so close to the palace. Was she still trying to get to Zuko?

“Still haven’t given up on the bastard, huh?” he drawled as he lazily chewed on the wheat stalk between his teeth.

“It’s none of your business, now is it?” she replied with bored eyes.

“You’re just wasting your time,” he reminded her with a careless shrug of his shoulders. “You should really focus on finding someone else. You’re only gonna hurt yourself.”

“I don’t need you to tell me what’s best for me,” she hissed angrily. “I know what I’m doing.”

Before he could say anything else, she brushed past him and walked toward her house. Jet stared after her with a pensive frown on his face. He watched as she paused briefly to stare at the palace once again before resuming her walk.

His frown deepened.

He did not know why, but he suddenly got a bad feeling.

Mai entered her house and immediately headed to her room. She passed the room where Ozai was hiding and glared at the door. The man was insufferable whenever she had to be in his presence, so she tried to avoid him as much as possible.

Ozai and Jianguo convened almost every day in the room to plan their next steps and she was always left out, except to be told what part she would play in. She still did not completely understand what they were planning to do to take back the throne, and she hated not knowing. It made it much more difficult of whether to choose to keep helping them or go to Zuko to tell him everything. She still wasn’t sure which would be to her favor. What she did know was that Ozai could not be Fire Lord again.
Once she stepped into her room and firmly closed the door behind her, her thoughts returned to her unexpected encounter with Jet. She narrowed her eyes angrily as she started to remove her weapons.

How dare Jet lecture her? He was just as obsessed with the water wench and was just trying to hide it. Why else would he be roaming outside the palace? She did not feel comfortable having her former lover so close to the man she was trying to win back. She was sure it would upset Zuko if he found out about her trysts with Jet or any of her other lovers. She narrowed her eyes. Jet better not blabber about their past encounters to anyone.

Once she had removed all her weapons from within her sleeves, she carefully began to take out the pins from her dark hair, making herself forget her intimate moments with Jet. He wasn’t important, after all, even if she had found pleasure in his arms.

Her thoughts return to what had happened before she ran into the former freedom fighter. She was angry that she could not step into the palace because she was still banished. She had gone to see if she could enter the grounds and was stopped by the guards and asked to leave. Other nobles had stopped and stared at the scene, some of the bitchy noblewomen whispering about her to each other, and even hidden behind their fans she could see their smirks. She had been so humiliated, but she did not let that show as she walked away with her head held high.

She could not believe Zuko was still punishing her for something so inconsequential. Most likely Katara was forcing him not to lift her banishment. The petty bitch.

But soon, she would get everything she wanted.

She just had to be patient.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

The day before Ursa and Jee’s wedding had everybody scrambling around, preparing for the small ceremony. Only a few of Ursa’s close friends from the nobility and friends Jee made in the military had been made aware of the sudden change of the wedding date. Zuko had made sure to have his guards on alert for any disturbance the following day. No one was to enter the palace except those who were invited to the wedding.

“Has anyone seen Zuko?” Katara asked as she playfully tickled Kazu’s stomach.

Everybody was gathered in the garden, sitting near the pond, taking a break from the wedding preparations. Well, everybody except for Zuko. She knew his meeting with a few governors must have ended already, so she wondered where her husband could be. He had been so busy catching up with everything he had neglected while he was sick that she worried he was pushing himself too hard. Even so, she always admired his drive and the fact that he didn’t let anything deter him from his responsibilities.

Her son let out a few giggles as he tried to grab her fingers. She smiled affectionately, the sound of his laughter and the sight of his smile always brought a rush of love and warmth to her heart. He was just a few months old and she already loved him so fiercely. There was nothing she wouldn’t do for him. Zuko had told her he felt much the same, so she could understand his anxiousness to find Ozai and those who sided with the former Fire Lord in order to keep Kazu safe.

“I think I saw him heading toward the training arena,” Hakoda responded as he smiled down at his grandson.

“Hm, he’ll miss dinner,” Iroh remarked as he sipped on his tea. He had brought his favorite teapot and a few cups to share the new sweet jasmine tea he discovered. “He sometimes forgets the time when he trains, especially when he has something on his mind.”

“Yeah, he’s desperate to find Ozai,” Sokka spoke up from his spot next to Suki, who was watching their daughters play by the pond, “Not that I blame him. Who knows what Ozai could be planning?”

Aang, who was sitting next to his friends, clenched his hands. Was this his fault for deciding to spare Ozai’s life? He felt Toph nudge his shoulder and he turned to her to see her frowning at him before she mouthed the words “Stop blaming yourself”. It still amazed him that she could sometimes tell what he was thinking without him having to say anything. He nudged her back to show he understood and she grinned at him.

Katara frowned as she caressed her son’s soft hair. Iroh was right. Zuko would keep on training until he dropped from exhaustion if nobody stopped him. She needed to go check on him and make sure he was all right. They had not spent much time together since he had been well enough to leave their room since they have been so busy. This was a good opportunity to correct that.

“I’m going to look for him,” she said before she addressed her mother-in-law, “Do you mind looking after Kazuhiko for a little while?”

“Of course I don’t mind. I always love spending time with my grandson,” Ursa replied with a smile as she reached for the gurgling baby.
“So do I,” Hakoda added with a grin.

“Don’t forget about me,” Iroh and Kanna piped in simultaneously.

“And Pakku and Jee and everybody else,” Toph drawled before she grinned at the waterbender. “Go find Lord Hotman. I’m sure what he really needs is a different kind of training.” She waggled her eyebrows.

Everybody (except for Hakoda and Sokka) laughed and Katara shook her head, although she could not help the small smile curling her lips. Zuko wasn’t the only one who needed a little physical exertion.

Once she was sure her son would be looked after, the waterbender made her way to the royal chambers. She changed quickly out of her formal robes and into her training clothes. Gathering her hair into a braid, she left the room and headed toward the training arena. She arrived to see Zuko training vigorously with his white fire. She stood in awe for a moment, admiring his strong form and his firebending skills. It still amazed her to see him bend at such a high level of firebending, although he always made sure to use it only sparingly. He did not want others to know how well he could bend white fire in case news reached Jianguo’s ears somehow.

A worried frown appeared on her brow a moment later when she observed how hard he was pushing himself. Sweat ran down his naked chest and back, veins popping along his arms at the strain he was putting on himself. She knew he was still stressed over the whole Ozai situation. She walked forward silently and watched as he paused when he spotted her, his chest heaving as he tried to catch his breath.

“Would you like a sparring partner?” she asked with a grin as she uncorked her waterskin, using one hand to bend a string of water out of it.

Still panting from the exercise, Zuko smiled at her. He had thought she had arrived to stop him and tell him he needed to rest. But it seemed she knew he needed an outlet for his frustrations and anger, and he appreciated that she wanted to help him with that.

“I would like that,” he replied with a nod. “It’s been a while.”

“Well, don’t think you can beat me or that’ll take it easy on my little patient,” she taunted as she twirled the tendril of water around her form.

“Wouldn’t dream of it,” he responded with a chuckle.

His laughter was cut off when his wife snapped her water whip at his chest so suddenly that he barely had time to dodge it. He heard her laugh as she prepared herself for his retaliation. He grinned. He loved it when they sparred.

For the next hour or so they sparred like old times, their movements almost fluid as they danced around each other, yet powerful as they tried to make the other surrender. When they paused to calculate their next move and catch their breaths, Katara noticed he appeared exhausted, which made sense since he had been training hours before she arrived.

“We should continue this another time,” she spoke up through panting breaths, “It’ll be dinner time soon and I need to feed Kazu.”

Zuko relaxed his stance and nodded. He was getting tired, but he had not wanted to end their time together, but she was right. Although, he had a feeling she had noticed his fatigue and was also trying to spare his pride. She knew him too well. Though that didn’t mean she didn’t like to tease him about his ‘overblown ego’ sometimes, he thought with a small grin.

As they made their way to their rooms to bathe and change for dinner, they talked about the progress in the search for Ozai, or lack thereof. They also discussed the issue of Jianguo and the rebels. They had not heard from them in a while and it caused them uneasiness at the lack of news. They had talked about the possibility of Jianguo’s silence and Ozai’s escape being correlated and it only increased their worry and confusion. A silence fell between them as they lost themselves in their thoughts.

“Ursa and Jee look excited for their wedding tomorrow,” Katara remarked, wanting to lighten the mood, if only a little, as they finally entered their chambers.

Zuko nodded and then smiled.

“They are good for each other,” he said, “Mother deserves to be happy.”

Reaching out for Katara’s arm as she passed him, he pulled her swiftly to him, causing her to let out a surprise gasp at the sudden move before she eagerly pressed herself to him with a smile.

“Just like us,” he purred as he bent down to kiss her.

Katara let out a small laugh as she returned his kiss, teasingly nipping his lower lip and smiling when he groaned. When he tried to deepen the kiss, she pulled back with a grin.

“Go get the bath ready,” she said as she playfully pushed him toward the bathroom.

“Fine,” he replied with a mock sigh before he wickedly added, “Only because I want to have your wet, naked body against mine.”

“My thoughts exactly,” the waterbender responded with a chuckle as she followed after him.

She watched as he filled the large tub with water before heating it with firebending. She slowly stripped herself of her sweaty clothes as her eyes roved the strong muscles of his back, licking her lips at the way they flexed as he moved. It had been a while since they had made love, having to wait until he recovered from his illness and then having to catch up to the responsibilities they had neglected.

Once the water was steaming nicely, Zuko turned back to his wife to see she was already naked and her long hair falling loosely around her. He watched as she gave him a sultry smile before she moved toward the marble tub, her delectable breasts bouncing with each sway of her hips as she went. He felt his groin tighten in arousal and he swallowed hard. Even after all this time of marriage, he could not get enough of his waterbender’s glorious, naked body or the pleasures she gave him. She stepped into the warm water and sat down with a pleased sigh before she turned to smile knowingly at him. She raised one hand and beckoned him forward with a finger.

Zuko hurriedly stripped himself of his pants and stepped into the tub behind her. As he sat against the marble edge, he spread his legs so he could cradle Katara between them. He wrapped his arms around her and pulled her back to his chest. With a sigh, she snuggled up to him as she placed her hands over his arms. Zuko dropped his head to place a soft kiss on her neck and another on her shoulder. He had missed having these moments with her and he cursed Ozai and whoever helped him for making him lose time with his wife and son. He frowned. They even invaded his thoughts at the most unwanted moments.

“What’s wrong?” he heard Katara asked as she ran her wet hands soothingly along his arms.
He was silent a moment, debating whether to keep his concerns to himself, before remembering his promise that he would not keep things from her. His fingers twitched against her skin.

“I can’t help feeling as if something bad is going to happen,” he confessed in a low murmur.

Katara turned her head so she could see him.

“You have made sure to have the wedding ceremony heavily patrolled in case Ozai shows up at our gates,” she reminded him softly.

“I know,” he responded as he absentmindedly reached for the soap and began washing her shoulders and back. Then in a more husky tone, he added, “How about we focus on more pleasurable things instead, hm?”

“I won’t say no to that,” Katara responded impishly before gasping softly when his hands cupped her breasts.

Wanting to distract both of them from the worry and stress, she turned around to wrapped her arms around his neck, straddling his lap in the process. He let out a soft groan as she pressed her hot center against his growing arousal. She swallowed his moan into her mouth when she kissed him hungrily.

“It’s been a while,” she murmured wantonly against his caressing lips. “I need you.”

Zuko let out another groan at the amazing sensation of her soft, wet skin sliding against his. His hands reached down to tightly grab her glorious ass and pulled her roughly against his straining erection.

“Gods, Katara, I need you so badly, too,” he growled huskily.

Without another word, their mouths crashed hungrily together while hands roamed desperately over each other’s bodies. Their moans, groans, and sighs combined with the sounds of splashing water as they made love as if it were the last time they would have a chance to do so.
Once finished, they rested against the tub, wrapped in each other’s arms, luxuriating in the soothing, steaming water, reveling in the pleasure still thrumming through their bodies. After a while, they roused themselves enough to finished bathing. When they stepped out of the tub to dry themselves off, Katara wrapped her arms around Zuko’s middle. The firebender returned her embrace.

“Don’t worry,” she whispered softly as she stared into his golden eyes, “As long as we have each other, everything will be fine.”

Zuko stared into her soft, blue eyes before nodding. He did not say anything as he leaned down to give her a small kiss, although inwardly, he could still not stop worrying that something would go wrong.

Mai narrowed her eyes, one of her hands fingering the hidden weapons beneath her sleeves, as she listened to Ozai mock her about not being to hold his son’s affections. She had been summoned to their meeting in one of the farthest sitting rooms in her house, and Ozai had lashed out at her for her remark about his failed marriage to Ursa. She knew she should have held her tongue, but his antagonism against Zuko had flared her normally passive temper. When she did not respond to his taunt, Ozai shrugged.

“Even so I don’t understand your obsession to such a weakling,” he said gruffly.

Mai grit her teeth while Jianguo laughed. She could not stand the former Fire Lord. He was so arrogant and cruel. She almost wished she had not agreed to let Jianguo hide Ozai in her house. But she endured it as long as she got Zuko in the end.

“No wonder Ursa is marrying another man,” she found herself muttering, unable to stop herself from firing back.

“Watch your tongue,” he snapped as he glared at her.

When news had reached them that the Lady Ursa was marrying the Fire Lord’s trusted admiral the following day—sooner than was previously planned—Ozai had flown into a rage. He had destroyed the room he was staying in so badly it was unrecognizable. Mai was sure that if he had his firebending, he would have burned her house down and killed everybody in it.

“Do you remember your part of the plan?” a new voice interrupted before the former Fire Lord lost more of his temper.
At the question, Mai turned to the old man looking at her with a raised eyebrow. She returned his stare with a look of contempt. She was still surprised to know he was the traitor behind everything. When he had first arrived in her home late that night, she had frowned at the white-haired man in confusion, trying to understand why he was there. When he had asked after Ozai and Jianguo, she had been unable to stop herself from gaping at him in shock. No wonder he was never caught, for Zuko never would have suspected him. She had to hand it to the old man—he knew how to manipulate those around him by portraying himself as a kind-hearted, old man.

“I know my part,” she replied simply, her tone and facial expression showing nothing of what she was thinking.

The white-haired man nodded derisively at her before he dismissed her and addressed the other two men in the room.

“Good. Hopefully everything goes as planned,” he said meaningfully.

He threw a pointed look at Jianguo. The former general glared at him.

“As if you haven’t made any mistakes,” Jianguo growled, “You’re lucky your plan to have the waterbender lose her child and her life failed. You knew I want her and you risked her life multiple times. I also heard about that man who shot at them with arrows during that festival she organized and he failed.”

The old man shrugged.

“That honestly wasn’t my idea. The crazy fool, whoever he was, acted on his own,” he confessed.

“Too bad he didn’t kill Zuko,” Jianguo sneered.

“Zuko can’t die yet,” Ozai reminded them firmly, “He needs to surrender the throne first. We don’t have enough men to overthrow him or start a war.”

At his warning look, the other two men stopped their argument and bowed their heads.
“Luckily, the waterbender didn’t lose her child,” Ozai continued as he rubbed his chin, “We have something else to use over Zuko. Grandson of mine or no, it doesn’t matter.”

Mai shivered at the cold and cruel tone of the former Fire Lord. It was hard to think Zuko was related to such a monster.

“It won’t be too hard,” Jianguo responded gruffly.

“Do not underestimate them,” the old man warned, “Especially the waterbender. She knows bloodbending. I’ve seen her use the power a couple of times and it is incredible. We have to be careful.”

Jianguo grunted, knowing the old man was right. He would just have to make sure he kept the waterbender’s chi suppressed when he captured her. It wouldn’t do to be killed by his own sword because she could manipulate his blood.

“Get ready,” Ozai said firmly as he gazed out the window to observe the palace behind the protective walls. The sun was setting and it made the large building almost shine. He narrowed his eyes. “We have a wedding to stop.”

He looked away from the palace and turned to regard their informant. The man had done wonderfully in fooling Zuko and everybody else. Even he had not suspected the old man was on his side. He really thought the man disliked him for burning Zuko’s face since the man had voiced his outrage at the outcome. He supposed he could not blame him for having a soft spot for an injured boy. Yet his greed did not stop him from wanting to overthrow Zuko in order to stay wealthy.

“I hope you have everything ready,” he said commandingly as the old man returned his solemn stare, “Physician Toshiro.”

A smiled spread across Toshiro’s wrinkled face.

“Everything is ready, my lord.”
“It wasn’t easy to procure these uniforms,” Toshiro said calmly as he watched the small group of men look down at the skull helmets in their hands.

They had already donned the rest of the palace guard uniforms Toshiro’s men had been able to steal from the barracks. They had been sneaking the uniforms out one at a time for the past weeks. They had come quite close to getting caught once or twice, but his men were trained in the art of stealth and deception, so they had been able to leave the palace grounds undetected.

“They will do for our purpose,” Ozai responded as he glared out the window of the storage room they had sneaked into. “We have to stop this ridiculous wedding and finally finish this once and for all.”

“Do you know where they will keep the heir during the wedding?” Jianguo asked as he casuallystroked the skull mask. “Our plan won’t work otherwise.”

“Yes, I overheard the waterbender tell her maid to spend the time of the ceremony in the garden,” the old physician responded.

Jianguo was the only one who noticed the look of eagerness that flashed across Chang’s face before the former Dai Li agent schooled his features. Jianguo suppressed a smirk. Chang had scolded him countless of times over his obsession with Katara, but he himself desperately wanted the pretty maid. But soon they would both get what they want.

“Are ya sure the Avatar and his woman won’t cause trouble?” Ping spoke up, his gruff voice wavering in his uncertainty as he shifted uncomfortably in the borrowed armor that was a little too small on his large frame. “Wat if it doesn’t work?”

“One of my men assured me he poured the sleeping potion in their morning tea. He was extra careful, considering what happened with the waterbender’s tea months before, the food has been closely monitored. But because of the wedding everybody was distracted in the kitchen today,” Toshiro assured him. “They won’t cause you any trouble. Just make sure you find the right room.”

“I ain’t stupid,” the earthbender growled at the old man, but settled down with a muttered curse when Jianguo gave him a sharp look.
Toshiro ignored him as he addressed the former Fire Lord.

“Zuko placed multiple guards around the perimeter of the palace and the banquet hall, so I’m sure a few extra guards roaming the halls won’t be noticed,” he continued before he addressed the others, “Just try not to give yourselves away before it’s time.”

Before the others could respond with a scathing remark, Ozai spoke up.

“I thank you for your loyalty through the years, Toshiro. You will be greatly rewarded once I’m Fire Lord again. A noble title sounds about right. You and your lovely wife won’t have to work ever again.”

Toshiro bowed gratefully, although he suppressed a wince at the mention of his wife. If Yoon Hee found out about his role in this entire scheme she would leave him or hate him forever. She was a good woman who did not condone any kind of violence or disloyalty. She would be horrified of the things he had done, of the many people he had disposed off. That was why he had done everything possible to keep her blissfully unaware of the happenings. He had almost panicked when Jianguo had unexpectedly showed up just after Yoon Hee had stepped out of their room.

It had been difficult to watch her get close to the royal couple after helping bring the heir into the world, but he had needed the royal couple’s complete trust in him and his wife’s midwifery skills accomplished that. He knew Yoon Hee would be saddened at the news of the royal family’s demise. His wife was too kindhearted. But, soon they would be able to enjoy the remainder of their days living the luxurious life of nobility. He was respected for holding the position of Palace Physician, but he was still beneath the nobles. He wanted a higher position and the respect a noble title would bring him. Their children, grandchildren, and future descendants would benefit from his cunning.

“I thank you, my lord,” he responded smoothly. “All I did was bid my time and make Zuko and the others trust me.”

It had not been hard since they had no reason not to trust him. And it helped that Zuko immediately suspected Wei of everything thanks to the animosity they had for each other because of Wei’s previous alliance to Ozai.

“I heard you came quite close to being discovered when you got drunk at the club,” Jianguo spoke up with a sneer.
Toshiro frowned at his words. That had been a lapse of judgement on his part. He usually did not partake in alcoholic drinks, but he had been frustrated with their constant failures and he had wanted to enjoy himself a little. And because of his mistake, he had lost a close friend. He swallowed at the guilt that assaulted him before he forced the feeling away. Chao’s death was unfortunate, but he had discovered too much and had to be sacrificed for the greater good. He could feel Jianguo’s smirk mocking him.

“I would think you of all people should know we all make mistakes,” he retorted in a cool tone.

Jianguo growled and took a step forward, but Chang place a restraining hand on his shoulder, which he shrugged off sharply.

“Enough of this,” Ozai said harshly as he placed the helmet on his head, sliding the skull mask in place to hide his face. “We have to end this farce of a wedding. It’s time for our just rewards.”

While the other men put on their helmets, Ozai once again glanced out the window as he lost himself in his thoughts.

Soon, Ursa, he mentally vowed, I will have you and the throne back. And nothing will stop me.

Katara smiled as she watched Zuko pretend to eat one of Kazu’s toys, causing the baby to cry out indignantly before he laughed delightedly when it reappeared in his father’s hand. Now at five months, Kazuhiko was able to sit up for a couple of minutes. He had already mastered keeping his head up and rolling over.

At the moment, he was sitting on Zuko’s lap, his back resting against his father’s arm as he tried to snatch his toy back with happy squeals of laughter. Katara loved watching her husband interact with their son since he showed a soft, playful side she had rarely seen before. It was good to see him have a little fun after the stress and worry over the past few weeks since Ozai’s escape.

She had just fed Kazu and was just finishing getting ready for the wedding ceremony. They had eaten their breakfast in their room while everybody else got ready for the event. The small ceremony was going to be held in the banquet hall in a few hours and only their family and a few close friends of Ursa and Jee were going to be present.

Zuko had made sure not to invite any of the other nobility nor the advisors since he didn’t trust Wei. Although they had tried to keep the event as quiet as possible, they knew servants talked, so Zuko had made sure to have guards patrolling the area and the main gate. They didn’t think Ozai or Jianguo would dare to enter the palace to stop the wedding without an army behind them, but he had wanted to take the extra precautions.

“He’s getting more active these days,” Zuko said as he quickly caught Kazu when the boy lunged himself toward his other arm so he could grab his toy.

“I know,” Katara responded as she smiled proudly at her son who was now chewing on the toy when his father relented and gave it back to him. “Soon we’ll be chasing him down the hallways and making sure he doesn’t eat bugs.”

“Is that what you did as a kid?” Zuko asked with a low amused laugh as he took a sip of his tea.

“No!” Katara huffed and playfully smacked his arm as she passed him. “But Sokka did!”

She laughed when he spilled the tea, which would have gone all over the tea table if it wasn’t for her waterbending. She made a show of twirling the liquid in front of them before depositing it back in his cup. Zuko quickly placed it on the table while Kazu laughed excitedly. Smiling at her firebender’s playful glare, Katara sat down on the other chair and took a sip of her own tea.

“Why am I not surprised?” Zuko chuckled before he added, “Well, I guess that’s better than the bugs Azula used to incinerate and all the flowers she used to stomp on as a child.”

Noticing his mother, Kazu raised his arms toward her and she reached forward to take him into her arms. She gazed down into his smiling face. She once again felt a pang of disappointment as she stared into his eyes. They were starting to change from the deep blue from when he was born to a more murky color. Ursa and Kanna had mentioned that he would probably end up with golden eyes like his father. It was not that she minded her baby having golden eyes, but she had hoped he would have her blue eyes since he already took on more of Zuko’s features than hers. Although she did still held out hope that he would have her hair. His soft, dark hair was becoming curlier the longer it grew. It really didn’t matter though, she loved him with all her heart, no matter what he looked like. She cuddled Kazu close and kissed his cheeks, making him giggle happily.

“You cuddle him too much,” Zuko said as he took another careful sip of his tea. “How would he ever learn how to walk?”

“You’re just jealous,” she teased.
“You know me too well,” he responded with a low chuckle.

They laughed together, for a moment forgetting the dread that hung over them. A knock at the door caught their attention and Zuko called out for them to enter. They watched as Jiao walked in with a smiling Ichiro trailing beside her. She bowed to the royal family, the little boy clumsily imitating his mother.

“It is almost time for the ceremony,” Jiao reminded them with a small smile.

“Thank you, Jiao,” Zuko responded as both he and Katara stood up. “Are the guards already in place?”

“They are waiting outside, my lord,” she responded.

“Good.”

The royal couple walked toward the maidservant and her son. The waterbender handed the little prince over to his caretaker.

“I fed him a few minutes ago, so he should be good for a couple of hours. But just in case, smashed bananas are his favorite,” Katara informed her.

Kazu was now able to eat certain soft foods as an introduction to eating other things than just breastmilk or as a temporary substitute for when she could not immediately breastfeed him. Jiao nodded that she remembered.

They had decided to have Kazu spend the ceremony in the garden with Jiao and Ichiro. They were sure the two boys would get bored during the event and fuss. Zuko had arranged for three guards to accompany them and keep them safe. They had invited Jing and Ting to spend time with the boys, but the twin girls had wanted to see the wedding and Suki had allowed them to stay as long as they behaved.

“Once the ceremony is over, you can join us for the wedding feast,” Zuko added.
“Yes, my lord, my lady,” Jiao replied with a smile. “Don’t worry and enjoy yourselves. I wish the new couple a very happy life together.”

“Thank you.”

Katara leaned over to kiss Kazu’s cheek before moving aside so Zuko could do the same. As they passed them, Zuko reached down to playfully ruffle Ichiro’s hair.

“Make sure Prince Kazuhiko behaves,” he told the boy with a chuckle.

“Yes, my lord!” the young boy exclaimed before he seriously added, “I take care of lil’ prince!”

The adults suppressed their amusement at the toddler’s seriousness. Katara tweaked his nose and his serious mood was forgotten when he laughed. They left the royal chambers and nodded at the masked guards waiting outside for the prince and his caretaker. As they walked closer to the banquet hall, Katara looked up to smile at Zuko.

“When I went to see Ursa this morning she was looking very beautiful in her wedding robes,” she mentioned happily. “She sounded so excited when I talked to her before Gran-Gran reminded me I had to go feed Kazu.”

“I’m sure she looks wonderful,” Zuko agreed with a smile.

He had talked to his mother the night before and she had been saddened at the thought that she could not share the day with Azula. It did not help that her previous visit with her daughter had not gone well. Zuko wondered how Azula would react if she knew their father had escaped. He shook his head. Now was not the time to think dark thoughts.

“I went to see Jee for a moment and he was both excited and nervous…especially because I threatened him that he better take care of her.” At the arched look from his wife he only shrugged and added. “He better take care of her.”

The Fire Lady let out a small laugh.
“Just like my dad did to you, huh?”

He chuckled. “Where do you think I got the idea?”

Zuko let out a snort and mumbled something under his breath, causing the waterbender to laugh some more. Grinning, she wrapped her arms around one of his and leaned against him.

“It’s good that you’re practicing now for when our daughter marries,” she said teasingly.

Zuko frowned down at her.

“I would rather not think of that so soon,” he muttered.

Then with a wicked grin, he placed his hands firmly on her hips and pulled her close to him.

“We should keep trying for that daughter, though,” he murmured as he bent down to kiss her neck.

Katara let out a giggle as she allowed him to press more kisses along her throat before he pressed his lips to hers. The sighed simultaneously as their mouths caressed the other’s and their tongues danced sensually together while their bodies pressed intimately close. The sound of someone clearing their throat immediately made Zuko let her go as if she had scalded him. The waterbender looked up with a sheepish expression while the Fire Lord cleared his throat. They watched as Iroh and Toshiro grinned amusedly at them.

“You know, I’m not even fazed about catching them like that anymore,” Iroh said amusedly as he grinned at his friend.

“I don’t think anybody is,” Toshiro responded with a low chuckle.

“We aren’t that bad,” Zuko grumbled.
“I beg to differ,” Iroh laughed.

“We should hurry up,” Katara interrupted as she felt her cheeks heat up.

“Oh yes!” Iroh exclaimed as they started walking toward the banquet hall once again. “I’m so happy for Ursa and Jee!”

“Today will be a day to remember,” Toshiro added with a small smile.

Katara found his statement odd since the wedding ceremony wasn’t going to be a big event, but dismissed it as unimportant. The royal couple watched as Iroh turned to knowingly grin at them over his shoulder.

“By the way, I’m glad you two are working on giving me more grandchildren.”

He laughed at their flushed faces.

Ah, how he loved to tease the young people.

“Come on, Toph, we have to hurry up,” Aang yawned as he slowly finished putting on his shoes.

Toph, already dressed in her formal robes, dropped herself back on the bed, causing Momo to startle at the sudden dip of the mattress. The earthbender pulled the blanket up to her chin and rolled to her side. A large yawn escaped her. Momo chirped as he crawled on top of her, his bat-like ears twitching as he cocked his head to the side.

“I’m still sleepy,” she mumbled. “Give me five more minutes.”

As soon as she finished the last word, she began to snore. Aang shook his head and frowned. Why did he feel so tired and sleepy? Sure, he and Toph had made love a few times the night before, but they made sure to get plenty of sleep for the ceremony and the feast. They had breakfast in their room a few minutes ago, so they shouldn’t be so sleepy so soon.
His eyes widened. Had someone slipped something into their tea or food? He wouldn’t put it past anyone in the palace, not after what happened to Katara and Zuko with the physician’s crazy assistant.

Shaking his head, heart pounding in sudden alarm, he tried to rush toward the door to call for help. But after a couple of steps, he felt his body suddenly become sluggish and his vision blur. He leaned against the chair Toph had been sitting on before, trying to keep himself up, trying to keep his eyes open, but instead he slid down toward the floor, causing the chair to scrape against the floor with a loud screeching sound.

From a distance, Aang heard Momo chatter worriedly near his head, but he did not pay him much attention since his focus was on the door that was slowly being opened. He watched dazedly as two pairs of dark boots appeared. As if from a long distance, he heard the murmur of male voices as he watched the boots slowly approach him before darkness took him.

“Look, Mama!” Ichiro cried out delightedly, watching the dark-haired baby follow him by scooting on his bottom.

Jiao smiled as she watched her son interacting with the little prince. They were so adorable. She had begun to think about having another child, a little brother or sister for Ichiro. As she watched, she was sure he would make a wonderful older brother. She smiled at the thought. She would bring up the subject to Kuo later that evening once the wedding ceremony and feast were over, perhaps after they made love in the privacy of their room.

The children and she were sitting on a blanket underneath the cherry blossom tree. The weather was pleasant, the sun shining brightly in the clear blue sky. They had fed the turtle-ducks for a while before the children were distracted by other things.

She looked up at the sound of approaching footsteps to see one of the guards walking toward them. The three guards had stood near the entrance to make sure no unwanted visitors stepped into the garden. She frowned. Was he coming over to tell her something wrong? The wedding ceremony couldn’t be over already.

The tall guard stopped a few feet away from the edge of the blanket she and the children were sitting on. Jiao became unnerved when the man did not say anything and just stared at her behind his expressionless skull mask. Feeling anxious, Jiao picked up the giggling prince into her arms and stood up to face the silent guard. Her son stood up next to her in confusion.

“Is something the matter?” she asked softly, trying to keep the trepidation from her tone. He was one of the palace guards meant to protect the royal family, so she knew he was trustworthy. But for some reason, she couldn’t help but feel like something was wrong?

The guard did not reply immediately and she felt herself tense. As if sensing her unease, he spoke.

“I need you and the prince to come with me,” he answered calmly, his voice slightly muffled by the mask.

Jiao frowned. Was her lady calling for her to bring Prince Kazuhiko to her? But no, that could not be it. They would be interrupting the wedding ceremony. No, something was definitely wrong. She backed away a step, making sure to keep her son next to her side. She could feel Ichiro looking up at her questioningly, but she did not look down to reassure him as she stared uncertainly at the guard.

Sensing his mother’s unease, Ichiro hid behind her and peeked at the man as he held onto her skirts.

“We will go in now,” Jiao said. “You don’t need to escort us.”

Protectively holding the prince in one arm and grabbing her son’s hand in the other, Jiao made to move around the guard. She tensed when he quickly blocked her path.

“You will come with me,” he said firmly.

Jiao swallowed. Something was definitely wrong. She tried once again to move around him, but this time he reached forward and grabbed her arm, making her lose hold of Ichiro. She gasped when he pulled her against him. She instinctively tightened her hold of the baby so she wouldn’t drop him. The prince began to fuss at the jolting movement.

“What are you doing?!” she hissed angrily as she tried to break his hold of her arm. “Let go of me!”

“No,” was his firm response as he tightened his grip.

Seeing his mother’s distressed face and her struggles against the stranger, Ichiro became frightened. What was happening? He began to cry as he rushed toward his mother, fistling her skirts, trying to pull her away from the mean man.
“Let her go!” he cried.

“Be quiet, brat!” the masked man growled as he tried to pull Jiao and the prince after him.

“Don’t call my son that!” Jiao shouted as she struggled even harder.

Ichiro’s sobs and Jiao’s angry tone made Kazu start crying. Jiao looked desperately in the direction to the entrance to the palace. Why were the two other guards not coming to see what the commotion was about?

“Son?” she heard the man hiss.

She looked back to see him rip his skull mask off to reveal narrowed, green eyes. She gasped in horror at the familiar face before her.

“You!” she exclaimed in dismay.

It was the earthbender from Omashu. The one who had been fighting the other rebels in order to rape her. She shuddered in disgust and fear.

“How did you get in here?! What do you want?!” she cried out as she renewed her struggles, but it was difficult since she was trying not to hurt the wailing prince.

“I’m taking you and the prince with me,” Chang replied, ignoring her struggles as he stared darkly at the crying little boy tugging at her clothes.

“Help!” Jiao began to scream at the top of her lungs. “Help us!”

She desperately glanced toward the palace building as the man began to drag her. What happened to the other guards?
Chang ignored the woman’s screams as he pulled her tightly against him. He needed to escape before the loud noises caught someone’s attention. The whole plan would be ruined then. He wrapped his arms around her back, effectively trapping her and the sobbing prince between their chests.

“I finally have you,” he whispered in her ear.

Jiao gasped when she felt the ground open up beneath them before they dropped down. The last thing she heard was her son screaming for her before darkness surrounded them.

“Mama!” Ichiro cried out again when he saw the hole close up just as suddenly as it had appeared.

He dropped himself to the spot where his mother and baby Kazu disappeared. Big tears ran down his cheeks and sobs racked his small body as his mind tried to understand what had happened.

His papa! He had to get him! He would know what to do!

Ichiro jumped to his feet and ran back into the building as fast as his small legs could carry him. Papa would bring Mama back. And Kazu too. He had to!

As he approached the entrance to the palace, he noticed two of the guards from before lying on the floor. Their eyes stared at the ceiling as red liquid spread beneath them. Frightened at the sight, Ichiro ran past them and down the long corridor. He rounded a corner and stopped, broken sobs escaping his lips as he frantically looked around. He was lost. He did not know which way to go to find his father. He tensed when he felt someone approach him from behind. Frightfully, he slowly turned around to see another guard looking at him.

“What do we have here?” the man asked.

Before Ichiro could feel relief at finding help, the man reached forward quickly and grabbed him by the front of his shirt, lifting him roughly from the ground. Ichiro’s eyes widened in fear and large tears ran down his cheeks as the man chuckled evilly.

“You, boy, will be our way to escape.”
Sitting in the front row, with his family members beside him, Zuko smiled at the happiness that surrounded his mother as the wedding ceremony progressed. Jee looked smitten as he returned his bride’s smile, his eyes unable to move away from her face, which caused both Zuko and Iroh to grin at each other.

They did not notice the distracted look on Toshiro’s face, who was sitting next to Iroh. However, his wife noticed, and Yoon Hee nudged his arm questioningly. He gave her a reassuring smile before he returned his attention to the ceremony. He could not afford to make others suspect his behavior or everything he had worked so hard for would be ruined.

The crowd laughed softly when the fire sage had to repeat his question to a distracted Jee, who flushed deeply as he muttered a quick apology.

Zuko thought about how he had not liked the thought of his mother remarrying because he felt like he was going to lose her again when he had just gotten her back. But he could see that had been selfish of him. His mother deserved someone special to spend her life with, someone who would make her happy. And she would be with Jee. Now she would marry a man that truly loved her and respected her like she deserved.

He frowned as he once again glanced at the two empty seats next to Sokka and Suki. He wondered briefly where Aang and Toph were and if they would show up late. He had asked a servant to go look for them in their room, but the servant said it had been empty. He would not be surprised if the couple had decided to go to the marketplace before the wedding started and simply lost track of the time.

He returned his attention to the ceremony. A moment later, he felt Katara grab his hand as the fire sage linked Ursa and Jee’s fingers. The Fire Lord glanced at his wife and returned her smile as he squeezed her hand, also remembering their own wedding. The fire sage removed the intertwined strings and placed them in a golden bowl as another fire sage handed him a candle.

Before the flame could touch the linked strings, a spark of fire hit the bowl, causing it to fly from the startled fire sage’s hands. The bowl fell to the ground with a loud bang that was accompanied by the crowd’s shocked exclamations.

“That’s enough of such foolishness,” a deep voice spoke up from the back of the room.

Everybody quickly turned around to see a small group of guards standing by the doors. Zuko and a few others sprang to their feet in outrage at the interruption. What was the meaning of this?! Zuko would fire them for such insolence! They watched as the man in the middle took a step forward and removed his helmet, while the man to his right did the same. Shocked exclamations rose from the crowd when Ozai and Jianguo’s faces were revealed.

Ursa gasped loudly and her eyes widened at the sight of her former husband. She heard Jee curse before he moved to stand protectively in front of her. But she could not look away as her heart sank in dread. How did Ozai even get here? What did he want? She clenched her hands angrily. Why did he have to ruin such a joyous moment for her?

“Guards, apprehend them!” Zuko roared at the guards standing near the windows as he made to move forward with flaming fists, Katara close at his heels. Sokka, Suki, Hakoda, Iroh, Pakku, and the other guards followed them.

“Ah, ah, you don’t want the boy to be hurt, do you?” Ozai told them as he motioned behind him, causing them to stop in their tracks.

Two men stepped aside and another of the men lifted a struggling Ichiro into the air to the horror of everybody else in the room. His cries were muffled by the cloth tied around his mouth.

“Ichiro!” Kuo cried out in panic as he rushed forward, but Shen quickly grabbed his shoulders and held him back. “Let my son go, you bastard!” he shouted furiously at the man restraining the boy.

“How dare you!” Zuko growled angrily as he glared at Ozai and Jianguo.

“He’s just a boy!” Katara hissed as her fingers twitched at her sides, but she hesitated only because she wondered where Kazu and Jiao were if these men had Ichiro.

“Kazu,” she heard Zuko whisper beside her, feeling him stiffen at the same time she did, and she knew he was thinking the same thing.

“You need to hear me out before you do something you will later regret,” Ozai said smoothly as he stared levelly at an angry-looking Zuko. “I’m here for a…compromise.”

“A compromise?” Zuko sneered as his fists tightened in sudden dread.
“This little scheme has taken too long,” the former Fire Lord continued as if he had not been interrupted. “All I want is for you to willingly hand over the throne to me.”

Zuko scoffed as he glared at his father. He could hear the people murmuring uncertainly around him. What was Ozai’s game? How did they enter the palace without being caught?

Katara ignored the disgusting leering looks Jianguo was throwing at her. How she wished she could wipe that arrogant smirk from his face and make him suffer for everything he had done. She could end everything right now. All she needed to do was use her bloodbending to subdue them. She moved her hands, concentrating on their blood, intent on bringing them to their knees, when Ozai shifted his attention to her.

“I wouldn’t try that, waterbender,” he said in a cool and superior tone. “You think we’re such fools as to make ourselves vulnerable to your bloodbending?”

Katara’s eyes widened. Behind her and Zuko, Sokka was cursing under his breath while Suki quietly asked where Aang and Toph were. The royal couple exchanged a quick glance. How did they know about her ability?

Ozai allowed a small smirk to appear on his lips.

“In exchange for the throne, I will not harm your precious son,” he informed them.

The royal couple froze, fear raising up their spine at his words.

“Where is he?!” Katara screamed furiously as she took a step forward.

Water rushed toward her outstretched arm from the large flower vases decorating the hall as she readied herself to attack, her mind only focused on getting her son back. Zuko grabbing her arm and Ichrio’s cry of pain as the man holding him shook him made her stop.

“One more step and the boy dies,” Jianguo spoke up cruelly.

“I have my grandson in my custody,” Ozai continued with a casual wave of his hand, “As well as his pretty nursemaid. No harm will come to them…yet.”

“Jiao,” Kuo gasped.

“I’ve also captured the Avatar and his earthbender.” Ozai said before he added with a sneer, “I will make the brat pay for what he did to me. I can’t have the Avatar ruining my plans again.”

“Let them go,” Zuko growled, even though he knew such a command was worthless. Ozai had the upper hand, as much as he loathed admitting it. He had a feeling he knew where Ozai was going with this.

“I will release them if you forfeit the throne permanently and name me the rightful ruler,” Ozai commanded firmly as he stared at Zuko. “Or else your son and the others die by the end of the week.”

Zuko growled as he moved to attack, but he froze at another cry from Ichiro and Katara’s warning grip on his arm.

“If any harms come to me, my men have orders to kill your son,” Ozai added gruffly before he said with a sinister smile, “That means you will let us leave without a fight.”

The royal couple glared at him in mounting rage and helplessness.

Smirking, Ozai took a few steps forward and paused as he set his eyes on an angry Ursa.

“I have come back for you, Ursa,” he told her firmly, “Just like I promised I would.”

“She’s not going anywhere with you!” Jee growled as he moved closer to the noblewoman. “I won’t let you hurt her ever again nor will I let you take her away from me.”

Ozai narrowed his eyes at the admiral, his teeth almost bared in an angry snarl before he turned back to his former wife.
“Ursa, come with me now or our grandson dies.”

At his words, Ursa stepped away from Jee, evading him as he reached for her arm. She moved stiffly toward Ozai, knowing he would be true to his word. She would not let anything harm her grandson if she could help it, even if it meant her own safety.

“Mother!”

“Ursa!”

She heard Zuko and Jee call after her as she walked down the aisle, feeling everybody’s eyes on her as she made her way toward a now smug Ozai. She ignored his smile and his outstretched arm as she stopped next to him. She stiffened when he wrapped an arm around her and pulled her tightly against his side.

“Much better,” he murmured, pleased.

She could not stop the disgusted shiver that ran up her spine.

Ozai looked up to smirk at the furious expressions on Zuko, Jee, Katara, and Iroh’s faces.

Jianguo’s mocking laugh caused everybody to look his way. A sneer rested on his mouth as he stared at Zuko.

“I tried to warn you that your happiness would come to an end,” he taunted.

He ignored the younger firebender’s glare as he shifted his attention to the glowering waterbender. A leering smile appeared on his face that caused the royal couple to stiffen.

“One final condition, if you want your son back, you have to give me your wife,” Jianguo told Zuko in a smooth, expectant tone.

Katara’s eyes widened at his words, feeling her chest tighten in sudden fear as memories flashed in her mind, before she forcefully shoved them away. She would not be afraid. She was stronger than that. She was stronger than before, and she would not let him make her fear him ever again. But she would do anything in order to keep her son safe, even if it meant surrendering herself. Her hands clenched at her sides in impotence. She felt Zuko stiffen next to her, heard him curse angrily under his breath, knowing that he knew what she was thinking and knowing that he would refuse to sacrifice either Kazu or her.

As if knowing what they were thinking, Jianguo’s smirk turned triumphant, his dark eyes promising horrible things as he looked into Katara’s wary eyes.

“You have until the end of the week to get everything ready for my taking back the throne,” Ozai interrupted as he brought a rigid Ursa closer to his side. He could feel her locking eyes with Jee, making him tremble in anger. He wanted to take her away quickly. “If you don’t heed my words, you will find your son’s body at your doorstep.”

“Bastard,” Zuko growled as his body shook with impotent fury. How he wished he could attack them, break their necks with his bare hands, run his swords through their dark hearts, but the threat to Kazuhiko’s life forced him to remain rooted to his spot. He could not risk it.

Katara’s fingers shook at her sides as she forced down the urge to take control of their blood, make them suffer for daring to take her child away from her. How could Ozai be so cruel to his grandson, to a mere baby? Then again, he had been cruel to his own son when he had been just a boy. The gods could not let such a monster win.

Once he knew he had made his point, Ozai moved himself and Ursa toward the door. Ursa looked back with panicked eyes to watch her son and Jee looking desperately after her. She could not bear the anguish in their eyes, so she tried to send them a reassuring smile, even though she knew they would not believe it.

Jianguo and the other men followed after them. Ichiro was still being held by one of the men, causing Kuo to lunge forward only to have Shen pull him back once again.

“Ichiro!” he shouted, “Let my son go!”

“We will take the boy with us,” Ozai said uncaringly, “As assurance that we will not be attacked. If we are followed, he will die. But to show our good faith, we will leave the boy behind once we leave the palace.”
Kuo growled as he struggled against Shen’s firm grip.

Somehow, Ichiro managed to loosen the cloth around his mouth as he desperately looked back at his father.

“Papa!” he cried in fear, “Papa!”

His fearful cries seemed to rip through everybody’s hearts as they watched helplessly as the small group backed away from the large hall, closing the large doors behind them. Kuo hung his head as he slumped in Shen’s hold. His partner could only look at him in pity while the other guests murmured uncertainly as they watched the royal couple and their family still staring at the closed door.

“Oh gods, Zuko, what do we do?” Katara whispered in despair as she clutched his arm.

Zuko placed his hand over hers as he looked at her.

“We will find a way to bring them back, I promise you,” he told her firmly.

He grasped her hand tightly and she squeezed his just as tight.

“We will find them,” Zuko said grimly as he glanced back at the doors before he added darkly, “Ozai and Jianguo will regret this.”
Taking a sip of her tea, Mai disinterestedly glanced around the large sitting room she had started to frequent since her arrival in the Fire Nation. It was slightly dark since she had ordered her servants to close the heavy curtains, only a couple of candles and the fireplace lit the room. She wanted to enjoy her solitude now that Ozai and Jianguo had finally left. She wondered if their plan on infiltrating the palace had succeeded or if they had been captured. If so, she was prepared to come up with an alibi in case they decided to divulge the fact that she was helping them. She even had one of her trusted servants on the lookout to see if palace guards were heading toward her home.

A frown appeared on her usual passive face, part of her realized that she was beginning to lose her composure. Usually, she would have just moved on from a problem and not let it affect her so much, but she was incapable of letting Zuko go. A part of her hated her weakness, yet another part of her was determined not to lose him and the plans she had dreamed of for their future, admittedly ever since she was a child sneaking adoring glances at the young prince.

She took another sip as her mind wandered to the past, remembering the time Zuko had once visited her home all those years ago. He had barely returned from his exile and he had still seemed unaccustomed to his new life, as he was unsure on how to react with her servants' eagerness to please him. He had seemed distracted even then. She should have realized sooner that his interest was beginning to wane. If she had, she would have tried harder to make him love her as deeply as she did him.

She narrowed her eyes as her fingers tightened around her teacup before she relaxed them, smoothing out her features once again. It didn’t matter. This time, she would try harder to tie him to her. All she had to do was wait for Jianguo’s plan to work in her favor. She was still debating if it would be to her advantage to continue to help the rebels or if she should tell Zuko their plans. The only reason she had not gone to Zuko immediately was because she knew there would then be no one to dispose of Katara and her mutt.

A commotion from outside the room had her glancing blankly at the closed doors. The sound of a baby’s cry had her frowning as she gracefully set down her teacup. A moment later, one of her most loyal servants hastily opened the doors to admit the Dai Li agent that seemed to shadow Jianguo. Mai’s attention was then focused on Zuko’s most trusted maidservant, who was carrying a crying baby in one of her arms, while Chang tugged her after him with the other.

“Please!” the maidservant pleaded above the child’s wailing, “Let us go back! He needs his mother. He’s hungry!”

“I won’t take you back,” Chang replied gruffly as he moved them into the room, “So you better find a way to quiet the boy.”
Mai watched passively as the Dai Li agent made her servant scurry out of the room with a dark look before he returned his attention to Jiao, who was looking at him in both fear and anger as she tried to calm the baby down. Once the doors were closed, Chang turned to regard the silent noblewoman.

“I trust you have everything ready?” he asked in an emotionless tone.

Jiao looked in the direction to where their kidnapper was facing, fear of the unknown making her stiffen. She had not recognized the large building since they had come in from an unfamiliar garden. Their mode of travel had been disorienting as darkness and the scent of dirt surrounded them. She never wanted to experience it ever again.

She let out a gasp of disbelief as she watched Lady Mai stand up, carefully smoothing down the edge of her dark robe as her dark eyes landed on the little prince in her arm. Jiao finally managed to rip her arm from the man’s grip as she instinctively brought Prince Kazuhiko closer to her chest to protect him. She knew the problems the noblewoman had caused between her lord and lady, so she did not trust her. But she never would have thought Mai would be on the rebels’ side.

“How could you betray our lord?” Jiao asked in desperation.

A small sneer appeared on Mai’s face before she blatantly ignored the woman as she turned her attention to the child. She did not need to explain herself to a mere servant.

The baby let out another loud cry and Jiao rocked him soothingly in her arms, cooing to him softly, hoping to calm him down.

Unable to curb her curiosity, despite her animosity, Mai moved closer toward the servant and the baby. She ignored the manner in which Jiao took a step back as she cradled the child protectively against her chest. She stopped in front of them and raised an eyebrow, daring the woman to defy her. She watched as Jiao hesitated before she reluctantly allowed her to see the child’s face, which was sweaty and red from crying, small patches of dirt smudged his face and clothes.

“So this is Zuko’s son and the water tribe wench’s,” Mai stated passively as she gazed down at the fussing baby.

Noticing her presence, the child’s crying slowed, a few hiccups and sobs remained as he stared at her curiously. Mai could see the resemblance to Zuko, the raven hair, light skin, and the almost golden eyes, and it brought a pang to her heart. But she could also see the marks of Katara with the way his hair curled at the ends. It was likely he would have his mother’s wavy hair and not straight hair like his father.

She sneered. This could have been the heir she could have given Zuko if only he had not let himself be bewitched by Katara. She clenched her hands at her sides, trying to ignore the way her stomach twisted with her anger and sadness.

As if sensing her dark emotions, the baby scrunched up his face before he began to cry once again, loud and piercing wails that made Mai wince.

“Shut him up!” she hissed commandingly at the maidservant.

“He’s just a baby and he’s hungry,” Jiao responded with a small glare at the cold woman as she rocked the little prince in her arms and spoke soothingly to him. If she could, she would have fed him herself, but she had weaned Ichiro of her milk a few months before he turned a year old.

“Perhaps we can find some milk in the kitchen,” Chang spoke up in his neutral tone when he saw that the noblewoman’s glare intensified. He stared fixedly at Mai when she glanced his way. “The boy can’t die yet.”

At his last word, Jiao brought the child closer to her chest as she stared fearfully at the man who stared passively back at her. Even though his expression revealed nothing, she could detect something intense in his eyes that made fear rise within her.

“Take them to the kitchen then, before they alert the whole household and the neighbors,” Mai ordered with a dismissive wave of her hand as she turned back toward the tea table.

Chang turned toward the door and motioned for Jiao to follow. Jiao hesitated, not trusting him in the least, but the sound of Prince Kazu’s whimpers prompted her to move reluctantly toward the man. Her thoughts returned to her family. She hoped Kuo had found Ichiro and she hoped they could be rescued soon.

As soon as the doors were closed behind them, cutting of the child’s cries, Mai closed her eyes and let out a deep sigh. She poured more tea into her cup as she lamented the way things had turned out. Everything would have been perfect if only Katara had not visited that summer two years ago. How she hated that bitch! Katara took everything from her and she would pay.
Once Katara and her brat were eliminated, Zuko would need some consoling and Mai would be there for him. He would come to see that she was the only one he needed and that she was best for him. She once again ignored the voice inside that mocked her weakness.

A moment later, she heard the door open again and she glanced up, already identifying who it was by his self-assured footsteps. She stared impassively as Jianguo walked toward her, his stolen armor making loud clanking noises, and a part of her lamented the fact that he had not been captured. She hated his arrogance and the patronizing manner in which he treated her with.

“Is everything in place?” he asked as he dropped himself on the cushion beside her, taking a long drink of her tea without permission.

She suppressed a disgusted sneer as he placed the teacup down carelessly on the table.

“Yes,” she replied calmly, “I sent my most trusted servants to my country house to accommodate Ozai and Ursa. I also told my guards which rooms would be best to hold the prisoners.”

“Good,” Jianguo responded as he brushed his graying hair back. “I will be making my way there tonight. You will remain here with the heir, in case we are followed. Make sure to keep him hidden, and please, try not to bring attention to yourself.”

A scoff escaped the noblewoman before she could stop it.

“I’m not stupid,” she hissed.

He waved her words aside as he poured himself more tea.

“Wait two or three days before making your way to your country house with the brat,” he said before shrugging.

A smirk curled his lips and Mai tensed.

“Soon. Everything we want will be ours.”
Ursa stared placidly before her, her back straight, her hands placed rigidly on her lap, as she felt the carriage jolt for the fifth time since she had been forced into it. The curtains were drawn, so she could not see where they were headed, but by the state of the road and the silence outside the carriage, she had a feeling they were heading toward the countryside.

As soon as Ozai had taken her from what would have been her wedding, she had been rushed toward the garden. Two guards had laid dead at the entryway as they passed by and she had sent a silent prayer for their souls. As soon as they stepped into the garden, the man holding Ichiro had let him go, which had surprised her since she had not thought Ozai would have kept his word. She had stared into the little boy's frightened face before an earthbender had submerged them into the ground, to her consternation.

They emerged somewhere near the outskirts of the capital where two more men waited with a non-descriptive carriage. She had hesitated, sudden fear of what Ozai planned to do with her making her wish to flee. If only she had not stopped carrying her bow and arrows. But then again, these were men trained in combat and she did not have a chance of defeating them. But still, she had to find a way to escape and return to her son and his family. To Jee.

It seemed Ozai had read her intentions because he had firmly grasped her arm and forced her into the dark carriage. She sat as far away from him as she could manage in the small space, but that had not deterred him as he sat down next to her. She had not spoken a word to him since then and refused to even glance his way. Fear and anger made her hold her silence.

She couldn’t help but wonder what was going to happen. What did he plan to do with her? And how was her grandson? And Aang, Toph, and Jiao? She would never forgive Ozai if he harmed Kazu or any of her family. She still had not forgiven him for what he made her do, for what he had done to Zuko, and for the way he had raised Azula. Her hands clenched in her lap.

She hated him.

She had hoped never to see him again after her last visit to his prison cell. She had believed that he could never again harm her or her family. She had been wrong. She dreaded what he planned to do to them.

Ozai once again glanced at his former wife. No, not former. She was still his wife despite what the law said. He would never accept Zuko as Firelord so any declarations made by him were moot. He once again took in the small differences the years had brought on, the slight graying at her temples and the barely visible lines near her eyes. But she was still beautiful, poised, and graceful. A true lady worthy to rule at his side.
She had been a loving wife during the first few years of their marriage. She had been so gentle and caring toward him, something he had not been used to before. His father had been a cold man and his mother had not really bothered to spend time with her two sons. So he had basked in the love Ursa showered him with, and soon enough, found himself falling in love with her. But he was an ambitious man with a large appetite and he found it perfectly reasonable that he would seek out pleasures with other women. Ursa had not understood and soon began to withdraw from him. He had made the mistake of making her leave the palace, but now he would not let her go. She was his.

“I know you’re angry about the things I’ve done,” Ozai finally broke the silence, making her stiffen even more, “But I will make it up to you. Once I become Fire Lord again, I will treat you like a queen.”

Ursa resisted the urge to scoff at his words. They were only false promises. She was no longer the naïve young woman he had known before. She now knew the kind of man he was and she did not trust him. She remained silent, refusing to acknowledge him.

“You cannot possibly want to marry that lowly admiral,” he growled angrily at her continued silence.

“Jee is a better man than you would ever be,” Ursa retorted sharply, his insults making her angry as she glowered at him.

Ozai glared at her, but she returned his glare even as she waited for his retaliation. She would not put it past him to strike her. Their eyes remained locked—his commanding her submission, hers challenging him. Ursa saw his gaze soften a little, reminding her of how he used to look at her in the beginning of their marriage, and she immediately looked away. That expression caused more fear within her than his anger.

“You’ll see that I’m the only man for you,” Ozai said, his voice softer and cajoling as he leaned closer as he had done when they were younger, when she still loved him and was receptive to his advances. He needed to get her back. “You belong to me.”

“Not anymore,” she replied in a firm and cold tone as she looked back at him, “You lost that chance when you bedded other women. When you made me murder your father to save my son. When you banished me from home. When you scarred our son. When you drove our daughter crazy trying to live up to your expectations. I don’t belong to you.”

Ozai clenched his jaw at her words and the hateful gleam in her once gentle eyes. She turned away from him again and it caused a bitter taste to his mouth. He was not used to her contempt. He missed her warm and loving personality. He wanted that back and he would get it one way or another.

“Where is my grandson?” her sudden question snapped him from his thoughts.

The former Fire Lord leaned back against the carriage wall as he returned his gaze in front of him.

“Don’t worry. The boy is fine,” he assured her with a wave of his hand. “You will see him soon.”

Ursa narrowed her eyes. How could he act so nonchalant about kidnapping their grandson, a baby not even a year old? Kazu needed his parents.

“Please, Ozai,” she forced herself to plea in a soft voice as she tentatively laid a hand on his arm, “For the love you once held for me, please let us return home.”

“No,” he growled firmly even as he gently grasped onto her hand. He tightened his grip when she tried to pull away. “I need the boy as leverage to make Zuko hand over the throne. And you are mine. I’m not letting you go.”

Ursa managed to break his hold and she frowned at him.

“What is your plan if Zuko were to do as you ask?”

Ozai was silent a moment and her heart quickened in fear.

“I will banish Zuko, Iroh, and all their little friends from the Fire Nation,” he responded smoothly.

Truthfully, he was planning to have them all killed so they would not try to rebel against him, but Ursa did not need to know for he knew she would never forgive him for it. She gave him a skeptical look, which he returned with a neutral one.

“What about Katara?” she asked.
The former Fire Lord shrugged.

“She will be given to Jianguo as a gift for his help,” was his casual response.

“I won’t let you do that to her!” Ursa hissed angrily.

“I have to keep my men happy,” he replied uncaringly, “Besides, she’s just a lowly water tribe woman.”

“And you’re just a heartless bastard,” she cursed him.

She knew she had surprised him when his eyes widened. She had never uttered such words in his presence before. But he needed to see that she was not the same person, that she would not just stay back and let him do what he wanted. And he was gravely mistaken if he thought Katara would meekly surrender to any man’s wants.

“Zuko will come up with a way to save his family and his country,” she vowed.

Ozai scoffed.

“He’ll have to catch me first and he doesn’t know where we are,” he told her, “So he will hand over the throne and the waterbender will hand herself over in order to save their son. Then I will rule the Fire Nation once again.”

He paused and looked at her intensely.

“And you will be my Fire Lady, so you better get used to the idea.”

Ursa looked away and balled her hands into tight fists.

She hoped Zuko was able to find them and deal with Ozai once and for all. As awful as the thought was, the world would be a better place if Ozai wasn’t in it.

Dazed, gray eyes opened slightly as pain exploded in his head. Aang let out a groan as he felt his stomach roll in sudden queasiness. His disorientated mind registered the fact that he was slung over someone’s broad shoulder, his eyes staring at the back of whoever was carrying him. He turned his head to the side, watching as he was carried down a dark corridor and then down some stairs. The light from a torch caused dancing shadows along the walls and he felt himself become dizzy. He closed his eyes and groaned, feeling sick. What was wrong with him? What was going on? He could not move a muscle.

He heard the sound of a wooden door creaking open. He barely made out that they were in a dark room before he was roughly thrown to the ground. He let out a grunt of pain as he struggled to make sense of what was happening. Why did he feel so horrible? So weak?

The sound of mocking laughter reached his dazed mind. Slowly, Aang rolled to his side and looked up to see a large, bald man leaning over him with a torch in one hand. He did not remember ever seeing the man before, but he could not mistake the evil glint in his eyes.

“Look at da mighty Avatar now,” the man said with another loud laugh as he reached down to poke the airbender right on the center of the arrow tattoo on his forehead.

Aang swallowed an angry curse at such disrespect as he tried to get his bearings. Who was this man? What did he want? He tried to blow a gust of wind at the man’s face to get him to back off, but to his bewilderment, nothing happened. His eyes widened. Why wasn’t his bending working?

Ping laughed at the pathetic attempt.

“Don’t botha tryin’,” he sneered, “Yer bending has been suppressed. Can’t have ya ruinin’ everythin’.”

Aang felt dread rise within him at the stranger’s words. He immediately tried to call forth the three elements, but to his horror, nothing happened. He swallowed hard, feeling his chest constrict, as he once again felt that horrible sensation of having his chi blocked, like it had been all those years ago. But this was much worse. Then he couldn’t reach the avatar state, now he couldn’t bend at all! No, this couldn’t be happening. It must be just a terrible nightmare. But he could feel his panic rising as he found himself unable to call forth his bending abilities once again. Another mocking laugh from the man had Aang looking up with a dark glare. He glanced down toward his trembling hands to see stone manacles encircling his wrists.
“W-hat…do you…w-want?” he croaked through a dry throat, his words slurred as if he were drunk.

A grin appeared on Ping’s face.

“Ye’ll find out soon enough,” he responded with a shrug, which caused the flames on the torch to jump. “In da meantime, ya should be good if ya dunna want yer pretty girlfriend ta get hurt.”

Toph! Aang cried out mentally and struggled to get to his feet.

He yelped when the man kicked him back down with swift kick to his side. Aang panted through the pain before he looked up to glare at the man.

“D-don’t touch her,” he growled.

Ping did not respond and instead grinned maliciously, causing the airbender to stiffen in sudden dread.

Without another word, Ping turned on his heel and walked back toward the door. He did not look back as he slammed the door shut, effectively cutting off the light. Aang heard the sound of the door being locked and he cursed under his breath. He was left to seethe and worry in the dark room.

What was he to do now?

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

The day following the disastrous wedding ceremony, news had spread about Ozai’s escape, the little prince’s and his grandmother’s kidnapping. The capital was in an uproar, from the marketplace to the outskirts of the city, from the nobles’ townhouses to the commoners’ homes, people wondered what would happened now.

There were rumors that Ozai was demanding the throne in exchange for Prince Kazuhiko’s life. Some wondered and feared that Fire Lord Zuko would give in to Ozai’s demands. They were happy with Zuko’s reign and were afraid to return to the rule of a cruel, power-hungry lord. A few, however, old loyalists to Ozai’s rule, rejoiced at the thought of their nation returning to its former supremacy. The two opposing sides had a few arguments that led to fights that were then broken up by the royal guards.
It made the royal family wonder how the people knew what had happened since they had tried to keep the events a secret as not to cause chaos and hoping they could resolve things before word spread. Obviously, their plans had failed since everybody knew. It was obvious there was a rat among them, but who could it be? One of the servants or guards that saw the whole thing? Zuko had those that were present during the ceremony interrogated, but they all denied having spoken.

Their biggest question, however, was: how had Ozai, Jianguo, and their men managed to enter the palace without being caught?

The royal couple and their family were gathered in the Fire Lord’s study. Since they could not all gather at his desk, they were sitting on cushions in the middle of the floor. Kanna had decided to keep an eye on Sokka and Suki’s twin girls while the others convened. They had been in the privacy of the study for hours, discussing their next steps.

“My men and I were out all night looking for any tracks, but we found none,” Jee spoke up, his face and voice grim.

Zuko and Katara glanced at each other and frowned. They had found out the same thing after they had roamed the streets of the city in their alter-egos in search of any clues of where their son and the others could be. To their disappointment and anger, they were unable to find anything. It was as if Ozai and his men had disappeared into thin air.

“They have to be somewhere,” Zuko growled as he glared down at the nation’s map spread before them.

“And it must be somewhere close,” Sokka said as he studied the map with a serious frown on his face. “It would explain why they were able to disappear so quickly.”

“They have former Dai Li agents with them,” Katara added as her hands clenched on her lap, “They’re able to tunnel their way through the ground and appear elsewhere.”

Sokka frowned as his mind worked through possibilities while everybody else murmured.

“That could mean they could be miles away,” Hakoda said gruffly.
“Or they could be hidden somewhere close,” Iroh spoke in a contemplating voice as he stroked his small beard.

“Why do you think so?” Zuko asked him expectantly.

“We’re all wondering how they were able to infiltrate the palace,” the old general said, “And we’re all thinking that they must have had helped to do so…What if whoever helped them enter, is hiding them at their home?”

“But who?” Suki and Pakku asked at the same time.

“If it’s true, then it has to be someone from the nobility or from a high position,” Zuko replied with a dark frown, “Most servants and guards live palace on the grounds are in the barracks.”

Silence covered them as they all turned to look at Zuko as it dawned on them who could do betray them.

“Do you think it could be Wei?” Katara asked. “We all know he has done many things to make our lives difficult.”

Zuko’s frowned deepened.

“My suspicions immediately fall on him, but I’ve had men watch him for months and they haven’t found anything incriminating,” he responded.

“He could just be really good at hiding his tracks,” Sokka suggested.

“Or it could be someone we least expect,” Hakoda added.

They fell silent again as the chief’s words resonated within them. Who could the traitor be?

“Something must be done,” Zuko finally broke the silence with a low growl. “We have to bring my son and mother home. And we can’t forget Aang, Toph, and Jiao. Who knows what Ozai is doing to them. He has so much resentment against Aang for defeating him and talking away his bending.”

Katara’s hands clenched so tightly, her nails dug painfully against her palms as rage and impotence assaulted her once again, as it had when Ozai made his demands. She had to get her baby back. He needed her. She didn’t care what she had to do in order to get him and the others back to safety.

“We have to think of something soon,” Iroh said grimly, “There are only a few days left and if you don’t hand over the throne, Ozai is very likely to keep his promise and…dispose of them all. We can’t let either thing happened. Everybody would suffer.”

Zuko and Katara flinched at the thought of their son, a bright-eyed, happy baby whose laughter warmed their hearts, being killed so ruthlessly.

After a few more discussions, they decided to convene again after lunch, hoping this time they could come up with a plan.

With a heavy silence between them, the royal couple decided to return to the privacy of their room. Zuko opened the door for them and Katara walked inside while he closed it behind him. The waterbender walked toward their bed without a word. She picked up the blanket Kanna had made for Kazu and she sat down heavily on the mattress. She placed the blanket on her lap, rubbing her fingers along the soft edge before she placed her head on her hands.

Zuko felt a lump in his throat as he looked at her anxiously from where he stood near the fireplace, unsure of what to do and say to lessen her sorrow. He had held her to him the previous night as she cried for their missing son. He had told her countless times that they would get their son back, but they both knew there was a possibility they wouldn’t, which only made their hearts feel heavier.

As soon as Ozai, Jianguo, and the others were out of sight, he and Katara had gone in search of Kazu and Jiao, hoping Ozai had been bluffing and Jiao managed to hide them. But, just as they had expected, they didn't find them anywhere in the palace so they raced toward the gardens with the others following. Two of the guards meant to keep them safe were found dead at the entryway, making them guess that the third one must have been one of Jianguo’s men. How could they have missed that?

Fortunately, Kuo found Ichiro at the spot the boy said his mother and the prince had disappeared from before. By his limited description of the man who took them, they knew it had been Chang, which only made Kuo cursed angrily before he stopped himself, needing to hug his crying son protectively to his chest.
Jee had looked forlornly at the ground, his wedding robes useless as he whispered Ursa's name.

Bringing himself out of his thoughts, Zuko looked into the fire, his hands balling at his sides. He had failed in keeping his son safe. His wife, son, family and country were in jeopardy because he did not kill Jianguo when he had the chance. He should have had Ozai executed as soon as the war ended. All of this could have been avoided. But now it was too late.

His dark thoughts scattered when he felt Katara wrapped her arms around him and hugged him from behind, pressing her cheek on his back. Her warmth, softness, and sweet scent made his body relax a little and he pressed back against her.

“It’s not your fault,” she whispered softly yet with a firmness to it.

“I can’t help but feel it is,” he murmured darkly as he continued to stare at the dancing flames.

“You made sure the palace was protected,” she reminded him. “You took every precaution possible. We had no idea Ozai and…Jianguo,” she growled the name, “could sneak into the palace so easily. They must have had someone help them.”

Zuko soaked up her words, feeling his guilt lessen a little if not completely. He still thought he could have done something to protect Kazu, his mother, Aang, and Toph. But she was right about them having had help. How could they have entered the palace without anyone suspecting something? Granted, they were wearing armor, but they had to have snuck into the armory to have taken them. Unless they stole it from actual guards. He frowned. Could they have killed them too? He would ask his captains to make sure all the palace guards were accounted for. He did not look forward to imparting more bad news to grieving families, as he had to do to the relatives of the guards found dead near the garden.

"You're right," he finally spoke up when he felt her squeeze him gently.

He turned around and wrapped his arms around her as he stared into her eyes. He could see that her worry had not lessened, but she had still wanted to offer him comfort, which he appreciated. What would he do without her? He could not lose her too. He could not give up either Kazu or Katara. It would devastate him. They needed a way to thwart Ozai's plans.

He frowned. "But who could have helped them?"
He reluctantly let her go when she pulled away from his embrace, a deep frown marring her features.

"I don't know," she groaned in anguish and ran her hand through her hair.

She moved away from him to once again sit dejectedly on their bed, pulling Kazu's blanket to her and pressing it against her lips. This time Zuko followed her and sat quietly beside her, feeling the pain and fear just as strongly as she did. He took her other hand and she intertwined their fingers together, needing comfort as well.

"I feel like there’s a vise is squeezing my heart," she whispered, her voice cracking a little in the end, "What if Kazu is cold, hungry, sick? What...if they are hurting our baby? Oh La, Zuko, I would die if anything happened to him. And I would feel so guilty if anything happened to Ursa, Jiao, Aang, and Toph, too."

"I know," Zuko responded sadly as he squeezed her hand, "I feel the same way."

"Perhaps..." she began and paused to let out a shaky breath. The words she was about to utter next made fear and disgust spring in her chest, "Perhaps...if I turn myself in...Jianguo would let them go —"

"No!" Zuko growled loudly.

"I would if it meant their safety," Katara argued firmly, even though her voice shook a little.

"I know," he responded more quietly before adding desperately, "But I can't lose you too. I can't lose any of you. I can't."

He ran a hand over his head and growled in frustration, his golden eyes reflecting his conflict.

"Just like I can't hand over the throne to Ozai. He will destroy the world."

He let out go of her hand to clutch his head.
"I don't know what to do," he whispered anxiously, admitting his shame.

Katara wrapped her arms around him and he let go of his head to return her embrace, both trying to offer and receive comfort.

"There has to be a way to save them all," the Fire Lady said softly.

"I hope so," he responded somberly as he laid his forehead on the crook of her neck, "Hopefully we can find a solution before anyone is hurt."

Katara felt him pull away and she looked up to see him staring at her with a determined glint in his amber eyes.

"Once we find them, I will make Ozai and Jianguo pay for daring to put our family in harm's way," he vowed in a dark and fierce voice that Katara had no doubt he would.

"They will feel my wrath, too, if any harms falls on Kazu," Katara vowed just as fiercely before her worry once again assaulted her. But what if they didn't make it in time to save their son and family?

Reading the worry and fear in her, Zuko pulled her closer to his chest and rocked her gently in his arms. In the time since their wedding, they had shared a wonderful companionship, an ardent love, and immense happiness, which increased tenfold at the birth of their son. However, it was moments such as these that served as a cruel reminder that they could not take their happiness for granted. He felt his chest tightened and he brought her protectively to him.

The reality of the situation overwhelmed him. Any wrong move from him and Katara and Kazu could be gone. They would be taken from him forever. His heart clenched and he swallowed thickly at the thought of a life without his wife and son. Without his family and friends. He had come close to losing Katara twice and he never wanted to feel that unbearable anguish ever again. He knew it would be worse if he lost his son.

It would break him.
Aang woke up with a start, his heart pounding hard in his chest, his eyes darting around in search of danger. His nightmare receded slowly, leaving him disoriented and confused. When his panicked mind finally registered the fact that he was in a dark room and he was alone, he forced himself to relax. In his nightmare, he had been facing off against Ozai, as he had done years ago, but this time Ozai was the one taking away his bending abilities. Showing no mercy, his gold eyes showing his intent to kill.

Aang shook his head vehemently, trying to forget that image, but groaned instead when the movement made his stomach roil. He pressed a hand to his mouth to keep himself from throwing up. His forehead was sweaty, but his palms felt cold and clammy. And his vision seemed to swim before him. At least, it felt that way since he couldn't really see in the dark room. Had they slipped him something else to keep him sedated while he wasn't aware? He felt worse than before.

The fact that he couldn't feel his chi or summon his bending made things even worse. He frowned. However, his main concern was Toph. Was she okay? He feared the things they could be doing to her. If only he could escape and go look for her, but without his bending he could not do anything. He had never felt so weak and powerless before.

The previous night, after the earthbender had left him, Aang had tried to break down the door with his own strength, which wasn't much considering his weakened state. The only thing he managed to do was bruise his shoulder against the thick, wooden door. He was hungry and thirsty and he wondered if they planned to starve him to death.

Not wanting to fall into a depressed mood, the airbender forced himself to his feet. He swayed a little as dizziness assaulted him, making him press his hand to his mouth again and take deep breaths. Once the feeling passed, he took a few steps forward, wanting to keep himself awake. His mind raced with different ways to escape, but his muddled head could not seem to focus. He paced around the room for what seemed like hours before he heard the lock at the door being opened.

He whirled around, assuming a defensive stance, even though his vision swam in front of him and his legs trembled. He watched as the man from before entered the room with a torch in his hand. The sudden bright light made Aang flinch as pain exploded in his head. He blinked a few times before he was finally able to see.

Ping had a smirk on his face before he moved aside.

Aang glared at him before his eyes shifted to the door when another movement caught his attention. His eyes widened when he saw Ozai standing under the doorframe, looking at him with a passive expression, his golden eyes cold and hard. He looked older than he remembered, but still the same. Aang found it disconcerting to see such resemblance between Ozai and Zuko, but he knew the resemblance was only physical. Their personalities, not to mention their morals and honor, were completely different.

He narrowed his eyes and he flexed his fingers.

"What do you want?" he rasped angrily. He had to swallow hard to keep himself from coughing from a dry throat.
The former Fire Lord's own eyes narrowed.

"So the child-Avatar is all grown up," the older man said mockingly as he looked him over before a slight sneer appeared on his face as if he were unimpressed. "How I lost to you, I will never know."

"What do you want?" Aang repeated firmly.

"I can't have the Avatar ruining my plans," Ozai spoke up in a smooth yet menacing tone and it brought Aang back to their fight years before. "I won't let you ruin my chances of taking back the throne in case Zuko decides not to give into my demands and it comes to a battle."

"You won't win," the airbender croaked assuredly.

Ozai glared at him before he allowed a small, cruel smile to touch his lips.

"How does it feel to suddenly find yourself unable to bend?" he asked.

Aang pressed his lips tightly together, unwilling to let the man know how disconcerting the feeling was and how much he hated it.

"It feels horrible, doesn't it?" Ozai said heatedly as he took an angry step forward, "Now imagine that, but ten times worse. So much worse, you almost would wish you were dead." He ground his teeth together as he wrathfully growled, "I will make you suffer for what you did to me."

Aang felt himself stiffen in sudden fear, his mind flashing back to his nightmare.

Ozai took a deep breath to compose himself.

"But I am willing to compromise," he said, his tone once again passive.

Aang gave him a skeptical look that Ozai ignored.

"I will let you and your woman go, if you give me back my firebending."

Aang's eyes widened at the request before he frowned deeply.

"I don't know if that's even possible," the airbender responded with a shake of his head.

"You were able to take it away," Ozai growled angrily, "So you can certainly give it back to me."

"Why?" Aang asked bluntly.

The former Fire Lord was silent for a long while that it caused Aang to frown more deeply and shift uneasily.

"I can rule the Fire Nation without firebending, but it's the ultimate sign of strength to the people," Ozai responded simply.

"I wouldn't be so sure about that," Aang said sarcastically, "With or without your firebending, you have no right to the throne."

Ozai hissed as he took a few menacing steps toward him.

Aang forced himself to stand his ground and prepared himself to be struck, but then Ozai stopped and pivoted around. Aang watched warily as the older man paused with his back to him, not saying a word. Then Ozai turned around to regard him silently, his face a cool mask, a stark difference from the anger he had shown before. Aang frowned, unable to read his intent. Without saying anything, Ozai motioned for the other man with a lazy wave of his hand.

Ping moved swiftly forward, and before Aang could react, punched him in the stomach without warning. The airbender gasped for breath as the painful blow forced him to his knees. Panting and clutching his stomach in pain, Aang watched as booted feet stopped in front of him. He looked up to see Ozai staring unmercifully down at him.

"Even if I never regain my firebending, I will still rule the Fire Nation as Azulon’s rightful heir," he said confidently, "There are some who are still loyal to me." He paused briefly to glare down at the younger man. "You better find a way to return my firebending if you don't want your earthbender to be hurt beyond repair."

Aang lunged at him, but Ozai skillfully sidestepped him. Aang whirled around to throw himself at the man in a rage, but he was met with a punch to the face from the large earthbender. Aang crashed to the ground with a pained grunt, disoriented from both the drugs and the blow. He tried to get up again, but Ping pushed him back down with a foot pressed to his back. Aang coughed and wheezed when Ping pressed his foot even harder, almost enough to cut off his breathing.

"Don't…you touch her!" Aang screamed through the pain.

Ozai smiled cruelly down at him.

"Then you better find a way to restore my firebending...Avatar."

Katara, you should eat something," Zuko tried to cajole his wife into touching her food, "Do you want me to ask for the cook to make you something else?"

"I'm not hungry," was the waterbender's solemn response as she poked at her food with her chopsticks while she simultaneously petted a dejected Momo on his back.

Ever since Aang had been taken, Momo had followed Katara and Zuko around. His usually energetic spirit was gone as he worried over his friend. Even Appa, who was being kept in the stables, was morose. They would sometimes hear him moaning sadly in the middle of the night. It was heartbreaking. Sokka and the twins made sure to visit the large sky-bison every day, but it was obvious that Appa wanted Aang.

Zuko frowned before he glanced at Hakoda who was frowning just as deeply. They were all eating their meal in the royal couple's anteroom, wanting their anguish and plans to remain private.

"Please, Katara," Zuko insisted pleadingly as he stared at her worriedly.

Katara could hear the concern in her husband's voice and feel the worried looks their family members were giving her, but she just could not bring herself to eat. She had lost her appetite since Kazu had been taken from her. She could not stomach the thought of her eating a good meal while her child went hungry. Besides, Zuko had barely ate anything either. She frowned as she glanced at him worriedly, to see he was doing the same.

Another day had passed since Kazu, Ursa, and the other's kidnapping and they had not found a single clue as to where they were or where Ozai could be hiding. The week was almost over and they had begun to despair. Underneath the table, her hands bunched her dress tightly on her lap as she once again felt her sorrow, fear, and guilt resurface. She paused when she felt a large, warm hand cover one of her fists and she looked up at Zuko.
The Fire Lord had been watching his wife since they sat down. He could read her thoughts through her silence and the expressions that sometimes slipped onto her face. During their meeting the previous night, Zuko had wondered if it would be best he hand over the throne in order to have his son and mother back, but Iroh had convinced him that Ozai would probably break his deal even if he were to do so. After all, Pakku added, Ozai would want to get rid of any obstacles to the throne, and being the legitimate heir to it, Kazu would have to be removed. Zuko and Katara had winced at the old man's blunt words. Sukú had then mused that since Kazu was already being an heir to the throne, Ozai might decide to keep him and raise him as his own. And if he were to win back the throne, he would either banish or kill Zuko and Katara and they would never see Kazu again.

Zuko found that idea to be even worse, for he knew Ozai would try to raise Kazu to be as cruel and uncaring as him. Without any love or affection. He knew from experience how painful that could be. He carried around scars from the way his father raised him, beyond just the obvious physical one. It wasn’t a life he wished his son to have.

They had agreed that they needed to continue to find a way to capture Ozai, Jianguo, and their men. But how? And who was the traitor amongst them? They needed to be careful.

A knock sounded at the door, causing everybody to pause what they were doing to glance at it. Zuko bid whoever was outside to enter. They watched silently as Physician Toshiro walked in, a kind smile on his old lips and a tray with a porcelain teapot in his hands.

"Here is the calming tea I was talking about, my lord," Toshiro spoke up softly and moved forward when Zuko nodded at him. "This should help with any insomnia."

Zuko thanked him as the old man knelt beside Katara to offer the tea to her. Katara briefly frowned at her husband, but turned back to smile gratefully at the old physician. Zuko had told him about her trouble sleeping and eating and the physician had promised to brew a medicinal tea to help with both. Zuko had not eaten or slept well either, not with the constant fear and worry he was in.

"Thank you, Physician Toshiro," she murmured before she pointedly added, "I'm sure my husband would like some as well."

Zuko did not bother protesting at the look in Katara's eyes. She was determined he would drink the tea as well and he knew it was because she was worried for his health too. Silently, he nodded and the physician poured him a cup. Toshiro had been very helpful over the last two days and he was grateful for the old man's help and encouraging words.

While he and Katara sipped their tea, Zuko watched as their other family members around the low table continued their meal. The mood was subdued, even Sokka and his twin daughters were sitting quietly, their boisterousness restrained by the circumstances. He glanced at Jee to see him looking expressionlessly at his plate. Zuko placed the teacup down and frowned darkly. They were all worried at what Ozai could do to Ursa now that she was in his clutches. He balled his hand into a fist. Ozai would pay with his life if he hurt his son, his mother, or his friends.

He needed to find a way to get his family back.

But what would happen if he were unable to do so by the end of the week?

"Hello?! Is anybody paying attention? I said I'm hungry!" Toph shouted obnoxiously and pounded loudly at the door for the tenth time that day.
She paused a moment to see if she could hear any approaching footsteps, but to her irritation she heard nothing. She was being ignored once again. She cursed under her breath as she gave the door a hard kick out of anger and frustration. She winced and bit her lip to keep herself from yelping at the throbbing pain exploding in her bare toes. She continued to curse as she reached down to massage her foot.

When she had woken up, feeling as if she had the worst hangover ever, she found herself in total darkness. Not the darkness that she was used to, but one much more terrifying. She had realized in the most horrible way that she didn't have her earthbending. Not only could she not escape wherever she was, but she was completely blind. She hated the feeling since it brought back dark memories of her childhood from before she found the badger-moles. She hated feeling so lost and vulnerable. After exploring the area, she found she was in a room with no windows and random boxes and items placed everywhere. She guessed it was a storage room.

What was going on? Where was she? And where was Aang? He had been the last person she had seen back in the guest room in the palace. Was he all right? Feeling her frustration and fear rise within her, making her feel as if she were suffocating, Toph began to yell at the top of her lungs and pound at the door more frantically until her fists began to throb in pain.

Suddenly, the door was thrown open and the unexpected force flung her back. She landed on the ground with a grunt of pain, but immediately sprang to her feet at the loud sound of booted feet angrily approaching her.

"Shut yer trap!" she heard a man growl.

Even though she did not have her bending abilities, she refused to be cowed. Toph squared her shoulders and faced the direction where she heard the man talking from. She jutted her chin out and narrowed her eyes.

"Maybe I would if I knew what was going on and was fed while at it!" she snapped.

"Yer in no position to demand things, girly," Ping grunted as he glared at the short woman who was glaring back at him, though looking at a spot over his shoulder.

"Don't call me 'girly', asshole," she hissed.

She tensed when she heard him take a step toward her.

"If ya don't comply we'll hurt yer boyfriend," he threatened.

Toph's eyes widened in sudden panic. So they did have Aang? Why?

"What did you do to him?" she demanded to know. "Where is he?"

"He's alive…" he began before he cruelly added, "barely."

Toph could just hear the smirk in his tone. With a curse, she lunged at him with a raised fist, but he knocked her back with his hand. He laughed mockingly when she stumbled backward with a vehement curse.

"If ya make any more noise, I'll hurt yer boy worse than before," Ping warned as he smirked at her.

Toph clenched her hands tightly and grit her teeth, resisting the urge to rub the sting on her cheek where he had smacked her. She wished she had her bending, she would crush him with boulders until every last one of his bones broke for daring to hurt her, but especially for hurting Aang. His laugh had her growling under her breath.

"Yer so pretty when you're quiet," he cooed.

Ping laughed when she spat in his direction. Without another word, he walked back to the door and closed it loudly behind him.

Toph's shoulders slumped when she was once again left in the oppressing darkness and silence. She hoped Aang was okay. Her eyes widened. Were the others captured too? She hoped not. She had to find a way to escape.

She had to find Aang.

And kick some bastards' butts.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

In the silence of his study, Zuko grimly set aside the parchment he had been reading before he lost focus. He was too worried about his son and his mother to pay much attention to his work. He glanced at the piles of paperwork on his desk and felt the weight on his shoulders increase. He knew that as Fire Lord, he had responsibilities that he needed to see to for the good of the country. But as a father, son, and friend, he just could not find it in himself to concentrate on his duties. Which made him feel guilty for putting his personal affairs before the greater good of his people. But, his worry for his family, especially his son, overrode that.

Even though he had tried to remain firm in his decision to never surrender the throne to Ozai, he had begun to waver in his resolve when no sign of Kazuhiko, Ursa, and the others appeared. His advisors had begun to ask the same question countless times. Would he really give up the well-being of an entire country for the sake of rescuing his son?

Even though he had evaded the question by firmly assuring them it would not come to that, inwardly he knew the answer was yes. He would give up anything for his family. He would even give up his own life if it meant keeping Katara and their son safe. Which is why he was trying everything in his power to find everyone and bring Ozai and Jianguo to justice.

And Katara was determined to do so as well. He had been worried about her the last two days, she had taken their son's kidnapping harder than anyone, but the previous night, after telling her about his guilt and worry, her resolve seemed to strengthen. She was even more determined to find Kazu, Ursa, and the others as well as keep the Fire Nation safe from Ozai's cruel clutches.

At her insistence, they had dressed as the Blue Spirit and the Painted Lady and left the palace in the middle of the night. Just as they had the first night of the kidnapping, they roamed the city and the outskirts in search of any clues as to their son's whereabouts. They had silently visited every seedy place, from taverns to brothels, and abandoned cabins in the woods. But to no avail. They had even snuck into Wei's home since Zuko still believed him guilty. But they had only found the old advisor snoring loudly in his opulent room.

They had returned home when dawn began to approach, empty-handed and disheartened. But it was Katara that had assured him they would find their family, her tone both firm and hopeful. It turned dark and cold as she vowed to make Jianguo and Ozai pay for taking them in the first place. He had never been more in awe of his wife's fierce determination, at the way her blue eyes blazed with such powerful resolve. She had always been a strong woman, but motherhood had made her even more protective of those she cared for, especially Kazu. He had no doubt she would make anyone regret hurting him.
Thinking of his wife and son had him glancing at the two paintings decorating his large study. The one of his waterbender smiling prettily at him hung on the same wall, but although he loved that painting, his attention fixated on their family portrait. Katara was smiling serenely, yet her happiness was unmistakable as she held their son in her arms who was smiling toothlessly. The painter had even captured Zuko's pride as he sat next to his wife in their matching red royal robes, his hand placed on her thigh.

He felt his heart wrench in his chest before he narrowed his eyes in determination. That would not be the last image he ever saw of Kazu.

Turning back to his paperwork, the Fire Lord decided to continue reading, knowing he could not neglect his duties. He had a meeting with the advisors in a few minutes and he knew he would be hearing from all sides on what he should do about Ozai's demands. Although they had not straight out said so, he knew the majority of them wanted him to refuse Ozai's demands, even if it meant sacrificing his son, Ursa, Aang, and Toph. He clenched his teeth before he forced himself to calm down. It was moments like this when he wished Chao was still alive. The advisor would have sided with him completely and tried to make the others see his point of view.

Surprisingly, during the last meeting, Wei had backed him up and even agreed it would be a bad idea to let Ozai win for he would destroy the Fire Nation and kill every last one of them. Of course, he had ruined it by saying offhandedly that he and Katara could just beget another heir. Zuko had almost lunged at the man in rage, but managed at the last second to maintain his composure.

He had asked Katara to join him for this meeting, so he was waiting for her. Even through her constant worry and sorrow, Katara had continued with her duties and let him know she would be listening to a few of the people's petitions. Surprisingly, or not so surprisingly because the people loved both Katara and Kazu, the people had wished them luck in finding their son and believed them capable of defeating Ozai as they had done years before. Zuko hoped their good wishes and trust were not in vain.

A knock on the wooden door had him looking up from the paper in his hand. He frowned. Who could be disturbing him? Katara would have just walked in. Could it be good news? Or bad? Curious, he called for them to enter. He watched as a guard opened the door and bowed before walking in.

"What is it?" he asked.

"My lord," the young guard began as he shifted uncertainly, his armor clanging softly with his movements, "Lady Mai wishes to see you. She is waiting at the gates."

Zuko's frown deepened. He had not even realized she was back in the Fire Nation. He rolled his eyes and pinched the bridge of his nose. What did she want now? He was in no mood to listen to her. Before he could order the guard to deny her entrance, the man spoke.

"She insists on seeing you, my lord," he added quickly, "She says she has some important information."

At his words, Zuko immediately straightened.

"Information? What kind?" he asked rapidly, feeling hope grow a little in his chest.

The guard shook his head.

"She says she will only impart the news to you."
Zuko frowned.

If she truly had information for him, then he wanted to hear it. Could it be possible she knew where Kazuhiko and the others were? Or perhaps where Jianguo and the other rebels were hiding?

"Bring her in," he ordered simply.

The guard bowed and immediately left. Zuko steepled his fingers together, hoping she had real information and wondering how she could have come across it. A few minutes later, another knock sounded at the door before it was opened, revealing Mai in an elegant, black outfit. Her face, as usual, expressed nothing of her feelings or what she was thinking.

Zuko watched her enter and close the door behind her with a passive silence. The last time they had seen each other, he had angrily thrown her from his room. He had still not forgiven her for what she had done. He could have lost Katara’s love and trust because of her. But he was willing to momentarily let it go if she did, indeed, have the information he was looking for.

"What kind of information do you have?" he asked directly, his tone impassive.

Mai frowned inwardly. It seemed he was still angry with her since he did not even bother with a greeting. She looked around the room without a response. She paused when she noticed the portrait of the waterbender. She suppressed a sneer before she glanced back to Zuko sitting behind his desk. She could not help admiring his imposing frame and handsome features, feeling her body react to him.

She had decided that perhaps it would help her win Zuko’s favor back if she told him where his son and mother were and what Ozai and Jianguo planned to do. She hated both men and did not trust them. She just had to make it seem like she was a victim in all of this. That she was willing to risk her life to help Zuko find his son. Surely, he would be grateful for that? Then it would be easier to get him back.

"I don't have all day to wait for you to talk," Zuko spoke up gruffly at her silence. "What information do you have for me?"

"It's good to see you again, Zuko," she said instead as she took a couple of steps closer toward the desk.

"That's far enough," the firebender warningly told her.

Mai paused, but she did not let his curt words deter her.

"That's far enough," the firebender warningly told her.

"I've missed you," she added in an uncharacteristic soft tone.

"I don't want to hear it," Zuko responded gruffly, his eyes narrowing.

"Please, Zuko, just hear me out," she continued as she stared unwaveringly into his glowering, golden eyes, "All I ask is that you give me a chance. Give...us a chance…"

"If this is why you're here, then I will ask you to leave. Now," Zuko interrupted her firmly.

Mai bit her lip, her hands clenched at her sides, deciding if perhaps she shouldn't push him too far at the moment. But it was hard. She was tired of waiting.

Suddenly, the door opened. They turned to see Katara pause in the doorway with Momo perched on her shoulder. Zuko looked at her anxiously as he watched her staring blankly at them. He hoped she did not think anything was happening between Mai and him since he knew how it must look to have his obsessed ex in his study.

Still rooted at the entrance, Katara silently observed the scene before her. She could feel Mai glaring at her, but her focus was on Zuko who was looking at her worryingly. Anger rushed through her body toward the noblewoman before she forced herself to calm down. There were more important things to worry about, like finding her son, than getting jealous over something that had happened years ago. Besides, she trusted Zuko and knew he would never betray her. So there must be a reason why he had allowed Mai to enter the palace once again and she was curious to know what that reason was.

"Katara," Zuko called out to her, still unsure as to what she was thinking.

He wanted to blurt out that she had nothing to worry about since he loved her, but he did not want Mai to witness their interactions. He was relieved when Katara gave him a small smile after she closed the door behind her. She walked gracefully forward, barely glancing at Mai as she passed her, before she stopped to stand proudly beside Zuko's large chair. They glanced at each other briefly, but that quick moment conveyed their connection and understanding before they silently glanced back at the noblewoman.

Mai returned their stares with a neutral one of her own. She had seen the look in their eyes when they glanced at each other, saw the trust in the waterbender and the tender relief in Zuko. She felt sick. But she did not let any of her thoughts show, even though inwardly she was seething that her chance to speak to Zuko privately had been destroyed.

"I'll ask you again what kind of information you have," Zuko spoke up, not missing a beat even as Momo jumped from Katara's shoulder to land on his.

Momo's large, green eyes stared warily at the tall woman. The flying-lemur had not left the royal couple's side since Aang's disappearance.

At his words, Katara perked up and she felt hope expand in her chest.

"Is it about our missing family?" she asked as she stared intensely at the dark-haired woman. "Do you know where Kazuhiko is?"

Mai looked into the waterbender's hopeful eyes and felt her chest tighten a little in sudden sympathy despite herself. She could not imagine what it would feel like to have her child taken from her and have his life threatened. However, she quickly hardened her heart. She would never know since Katara took away any chance of her having a child by ensnaring Zuko.

But she could have everything she wanted back. If only Ozai and Jianguo won. They would take care of Katara and her brat. She just had to make sure she was able to escape with Zuko and then she would have him for herself. She would give him another child to replace the one he had lost. Ignoring Katara's question, Mai looked back at Zuko.

"I lied," she responded smoothly, "I don't have any information. I just wanted you to see me and I knew you would only do so if you thought I had any news."

She was unfazed when she was met with two pairs of glaring eyes.

Zuko gritted his teeth, feeling anger swell within him at her ploy. How dare she play with them like that? Before he could growl at the woman to leave, he heard his wife speak.

"Get out," she ordered in an icily calm tone, her blue eyes blazing in her rage as her fingers twitch at her sides.

How dare she? How dare she raise their hopes up? How dare she try to seduce Zuko while they were grieving over their missing son? She had never hated the noblewoman as much as she did at the moment. Her hands itched to smack the unrepentant expression from Mai's face.

"You heard my wife," Zuko added darkly as he glared at Mai, "Leave."

"Zuko, wait-"

"I don't want to hear it," he cut her off angrily as he finally stood from his chair.

Momo chattered at the sudden movement, but settled down as he wrapped his tail around the firebender's neck while he and the blue-eyed female glared at the other woman.

"I already lost what little patience and consideration I might have had for you," Zuko growled bluntly. "You were banished from the palace and I looked passed that, was willing to lift the banishment if you were willing to help us find our family."

His amber eyes darkened as his hands balled into fists on his desk.

"I had hoped you would have changed, become less selfish, but I see that is not the case. I can't believe you would be so cruel as to use this horrific circumstance for your own gain," he said in a cold tone before continuing when Mai tried to speak, "Do not darken my doorstep again. Come back and I will banish you from the Fire Nation, not just the grounds."

Zuko was beyond enraged. How dare she dangle hope in front of them and then act as if nothing was wrong?

Mai's eyes widened at his words, but she continued to return their glare, feeling angry and humiliated for being forced out of the palace once again. Yet, she knew she would be unable to change his mind with Katara in the room. She was running out of patience, but she knew she had to be careful and not be hasty if she wanted to win in the end. Without another word, she turned around and walked toward the door. As she opened it, she told herself that Zuko would feel differently when he lost everything and all he would have left would be her. Then he would see she was all he needed. She closed the door loudly after her.

Once the noblewoman was out of sight, the royal couple turned to each other. Zuko pulled Katara tightly to him as he sat back down on the chair, arranging her comfortably on his lap. Momo flew to land on the table when Katara wrapped her arms around her husband's neck and pressed her forehead on his scarred cheek, trying to fight the tears of frustration and disappointment from falling. Crying will not help things.

"What...what if we never get Kazu back?" she whispered after a moment, finally voicing their fears.

Zuko pressed his lips against her head as he ran a soothing hand down her back.

"We can't give up now," he told her softly, "We have to keep trying...for both our family's sake and the Fire Nation's."

Mai walked calmly down the golden corridors of the palace as she made her way to the exit. Inwardly, she was consumed with her anger and frustration with the whole situation that was now her life. Perhaps it would be best if she gave Zuko up now. A frown slipped onto her passive face as she mulled over the idea. She hated being ignored. She hated feeling rejected. She was worth more than that.

She thought back on Zuko’s last words. Perhaps she had ruined her chances with her hasty visit.

She straightened herself out. She refused to admit defeat, however, and let Katara take everything that rightfully belonged to her. She just had to remind herself that all these obstacles and hardships will be rewarded in the end. She just had to be patient a bit longer.

As she passed one of the unoccupied sitting rooms, she heard her name called and paused. She turned around to see Toshiro walking toward her, a guileless smile on his face she now knew was a farce. Had he been following her?

"Lady Mai, how nice to see you," he greeted in a kind voice Mai knew was fake, "I have not seen you in a long while. I trust you are well?"

Even though his smile and voice conveyed a sweet, caring old man, his eyes told a different story. He was glaring at her, trying to gauge her reaction. She knew what he was really asking. He was trying to see if she had told Zuko anything. She smothered a sneer. She would bet he would be running in panic to save himself if she had. Instead, she politely nodded her head as a servant passed them.

"I am well, thank you," she said blankly, "I am getting ready to take a vacation to my country estate."

"Oh, that's nice," he replied and she could just make out the way he relaxed, "Well, have a pleasant trip."

He bowed and she reluctantly returned the gesture. When they straightened, he smiled at her before he moved forward.

"Betray us and you die," he whispered harshly as he moved past her.

Her face did not show any reaction to his words as she continued down the hallway as they parted ways.

The two of them did not notice the pair of eyes that watched from the shadows of the dark sitting room.
Jiao hummed softly as she rocked the little prince in her arms trying to soothe him even as her eyes constantly darted toward the locked door in apprehension. Prince Kazuhiko had been fussing for a few hours, unable to find rest, even though it was past his nap time. He had at first refused the milk and bananas she had found in the kitchen until his hunger finally made him eat. She knew he missed his parents and his mother’s milk.

As she gazed down at the baby now dozing in her arms, her mind once again returned to her son. She hoped he was okay, sleeping and eating as he needed even without her there to be with him. And she worried about Kuo, too, knowing he was probably out looking for her as desperately as she knew the royal couple was looking for their son. She prayed he wouldn’t do anything rash, their son needed him if she wasn’t going to make it. She knew the prince was the important prisoner and she was merely here on a whim, and thus expendable. No matter what, she would try to keep Kazu safe, even if it caused her her life. Not because he was the prince and she had sworn fealty to the Fire Lord and Lady, but because she loved him, almost as much as she loved her son, and she couldn’t live with herself if she did any less.

She and Kazu had been taken to a room at the far end of the grand house and locked inside for two whole nights with Chang bringing them food and water on occasion. She had been given a uniform the household servants wore, which she reluctantly put on because hers had been stained, and after two days was starting to smell and feel sticky. They had also been given a small basin with water and a small bar of soap to clean themselves. She had barely slept because of the baby’s cries, but also because she feared the former Dai Li agent sneaking inside and catching her unawares.

She was not ignorant to what the man wanted from her and it made fear spread through her at what he could do. It brought back memories of the horrible day in the mountains near Omashu. She shook her head. She refused to go through that ever again, knowing this time the man would probably stop at nothing to have her. She shuddered in disgust.

If only there was a way they could escape or a way for her to contact someone for help. But the heavy, wooden door was locked as was the window. Once they had been left alone the first day, she had rushed to the window to see if she could catch someone’s eye, but unfortunately, the window faced a wall and she had not seen anyone pass below. And by the darkness that was seeping into the room, it seemed they would be spending another night there. She felt despair creep up on her. What were they to do?

Prince Kazu began to stir from his restless sleep and began to make small whimpering sounds. Jiao rocked him more gently in her arms and hummed more soothingly. She relaxed a little when he began to fall back asleep. A sudden knock on the door had her tensing up. The door opened slowly and she stood up from the chair she had been sitting on near the window. She backed away closer to the wall, bringing the baby close to her chest. She watched as Chang walked in and she felt her heart race in fear.

Chang paused as he stared at the woman that plagued his thoughts. He frowned at the apprehensive look in her golden eyes. He did not like to see her cowering away from him.

“Come. It is time for us to go,” he ordered.

“Please let us return home,” Jiao pleaded before she hurriedly added, “I’m sure Fire Lord Zuko and Fire Lady Katara will reward you greatly if you take us back to the palace.”

The man remained silent for a moment and Jiao felt a sliver of hope that he was considering her words.

“No,” he replied firmly.

Jiao felt that hope vanish and she looked at him desperately.

“Why not?”

“If I remain in the service of Ozai and Jianguo, I will be rewarded more richly. They promised to give me a noble title,” he told her simply before he added in a huskier tone, “Above all, I will have you.”

Jiao felt a spark of anger at his disregard for what was right and his insistence of having her. He didn’t even know her! He did not know her true self like Kuo did. Chang only saw her resemblance to his past love and she refused to be placed under someone else’s shadow.

“I am not your dead lover!” she blurted out angrily.

Chang’s green eyes widened at her outburst.
“How did you know about Aiko?” he asked quietly.

“It doesn’t matter,” she responded with a hiss, “I won’t replace her because I am not her!”

He moved quickly toward her and she backed away with a gasp until she bumped against the wall at her back. He stood close to her and she stared at him wide-eyed. He reached forward to cup her cheek, but she angrily moved her head away. Her actions did not deter him as he reached forward to cup each side of her head with his hands, effectively trapping her and forcing her to look at him.

“I know,” he murmured softly as his thumbs caressed her cheeks. “You may look similar in appearance to her, but you are very different in personality.”

“If you can see that, why not let me go?” she asked tentatively, his closeness making her sudden bravado disappear. She pressed the still sleeping baby closer to her, keeping him safe. She wanted to rip herself from the man’s unwanted touch, but she was afraid of his retaliation and of hurting Kazu in her struggles.

“I like your sweet and caring nature,” he responded as he glanced down pointedly at the sleeping baby in her arms. He looked back into her fearful eyes and more softly added, “If you give me a chance I will make you very happy. You will see that you are meant for me.”

His words once again made anger rush through Jiao’s chest. With one hand, she pushed hard against his chest. When he took a startled step back, Jiao took advantage to escape his invasive presence and moved away from him. Her sudden movement, however, woke up the baby and he began to fuss a little. Jiao cooed at him even as she glared at Chang. When he made to move toward her again, she took a step back.

“Stop,” she hissed before she firmly added, “I am happy with my husband and our son. And I want to go back to them.”

Chang’s eyes narrowed angrily at the mention of her husband. How he wished he could have killed that firebender when he had the chance.

“The boy I can tolerate for you, but the firebender will have to die,” he growled. “You are mine. You will see that soon.”
“Never,” she hissed, even though the thought of Kuo dying had her heart clenching in her chest.

“We’ll see,” he replied.

They glared at each other for a moment before Chang took a breath to compose himself. Now was not the time to discuss this. They will have plenty of time later. Once everything was settled, he would do everything in his power to seduce her, to make her love him.

“We have to leave,” he said.

He made his way to the door and opened it, motioning for her to follow. Jiao hesitated, unsure of where he was taking them, but thinking she could probably have a better chance to escape if she left the room. She looked down at the baby in her arms to see he was looking at her before he began to squirm in discomfort. She shifted him in her arms so that he could look over her shoulder.

Slowly, she moved toward the door and stepped out. Before she could even think about making a run for it, Chang firmly grabbed her upper arm and guided her down the dark hall. They remained silent as they walked down several corridors until they stepped into the sitting room Jiao had seen before.

Mai stood in the middle of her sitting room, directing two of her servants to place the remaining luggage into the carriage waiting outside. Hearing their approach, the noblewoman turned to regard them with a bored glance. She ignored the way the maidservant glared at her as she focused on Zuko’s son, who was looking around curiously at the commotion. She sneered before she looked away to look at Chang.

“Must you bring so many things?” the former Dai Li agent asked in his usual calm tone.

“I need to make it look convincing that I’m staying at my country house for a vacation,” she replied flatly, “in case anyone sees me leave my house.”

Mai’s attention once again settled on the dark-haired baby who was now chewing on his fist with a small frown on his face. She was still seething over the interaction with Zuko and Katara. She wanted to make them suffer for their treatment of her and what better way than keeping their son away from them? She looked away from the child and focused on making sure she had not missing anything.
She thought back to her encounter with Toshiro. It had been foolish of her for forgetting that the old man worked there. She had not counted on coming across the traitor. She had to be careful since she had no doubt they would kill her if she betrayed them. She frowned, wondering if perhaps she should have refused to help them. But it was too late now.

“The carriage is ready, my lady,” one of her loyal servants spoke up quietly.

Mai waved her away as she looked back at the other two.

“It is time to go,” she said passively as she moved toward the doors.

There were only three more days for Zuko to decide to heed Ozai’s commands. Would he let Ozai take over the throne in order to save his son’s life? Or would he instead choose the throne to save the Fire Nation from Ozai’s cruel power?

It didn’t really matter to her as long as she got Zuko in the end.

Aang groaned out in pain when Ping punched him in the stomach once again. He could feel blood leaking from a cut on his forehead and a split lip. One eye was almost completely swollen shut. He was hanging from the ceiling, metal chains wrapped around his wrists above the stone manacles that were suppressing his bending. The strain of holding up his own weight pulled painfully on his arms and shoulders. If he had his bending abilities, he could have blown the man away with one breath.

A few hours ago, he had been pacing the room, wondering what they planned to do to him. Now he knew. Ozai, Jianguo, and Ping had arrived and the latter had chained him up, ignoring his questions about what they wanted and about Toph’s well-being.

Then the first blow came.

He had lost count of the time and punches. Instead, he tried to focus on calming his mind, thinking mostly of his friends and especially Toph, trying valiantly to ignore the pain throbbing through his whole body.

“Stop,” Ozai’s command cut in like a knife.
Ping immediately stopped and backed away, panting from the exertion and rubbing his raw knuckles.

Aang swallowed, even though his throat was dry, and licked his chapped lips as sweat and blood stung his eyes. He heard Ozai’s footsteps before his boots came in sight to his still good eye. He winced when Ozai grabbed his chin and forcefully lifted his head up.

“Are you now ready to return my firebending to me?” he asked in a cold tone.

The chained airbender glared at him through his good eye, breathing hard through the pain wracking his body.

“I...I already told…you,” he rasped painfully, “I don’t...know how.”

Ozai’s eyes blazed and his lips curled back in disgust and rage. Without warning, he snapped his hand forward and backhanded the airbender across the face.

Aang gasped in pain as his head snapped to the side at the force of the blow. Pain exploded from his cheek all the way to his head, causing his vision to darken for a moment.

“Then you better try,” the former Fire Lord growled as he turned away. “Keep at it until he decides to cooperate,” he ordered Ping.

“Yes, my lord,” the large earthbender quickly replied.

“Even if...I did...I will never give it back to you,” Aang managed to hissed out through the pain, “You would destroy the world.”

Ozai paused before he looked over his shoulder at the suspended airbender glaring at him from one eye.

“Oh?” Ozai responded with a mocking raised eyebrow, “Even if it means your little woman’s life?”

A cruel smile curled his lips when the young man bit his lip and remain silent.
“Think about it,” he said before he continued toward the door that Jianguo had opened for him.

Without another word or backward glance, they stepped out and firmly closed the door behind them. Aang did not stop glaring at Ozai’s back until they disappeared before he slumped tiredly, wishing nothing more than to fall into a deep sleep and forget the pain and torture. Never had he imagined he would be suffering such pain nor that it would be Ozai, whom he had defeated years ago, be the one to be inflict it on him. He had naively thought peace would reign after Ozai’s defeat. How wrong he was.

Panting in pain and exhaustion, Aang found himself wondering if perhaps it would have been best if he had killed Ozai all those years ago. He closed his eyes and hung his head in shame at his thoughts. He welcomed the respite from the blows and he hoped Toph and everybody else were okay.

A dark chuckle snapped him from his drowsiness and he lifted his head up to look at the earthbender that had remained behind.

“We’re not finished yet, Avatar,” Ping said mockingly as he cracked his knuckles.

Aang’s gray eyes widened before he again let his head fall forward, closing his eyes once again.

He just needed to rest.

Jet silently wandered the dark streets of the capital, focused more on his thoughts than on the path before him. It was late at night and there weren’t many people around, and if he happened to pass any, they ignored him as they scurried to their homes at the change of the weather. Dark clouds had settled in the sky, blocking the moonlight and the stars. A cold wind had picked up, indicating that it might rain.

He had heard the news about the prince’s kidnapping and the rumors going around about Ozai’s demands. He could only imagine how devastated Katara and Zuko must be feeling at having their son’s life threatened. But would Zuko hand over the throne in exchange for his son? Or would he do what was best for the world and refuse? Either way, both decisions were difficult. He was glad he wasn’t in the scarred bastard’s situation, though he did feel bad for Katara.

He shook his head and decided to think of something else. He had been on the jewel thief’s trail all day, but it had run cold, so he had decided to try again tomorrow. He was tired and he was starving. However, there was another reason why he was roaming the streets of the upper class instead of heading back to the seedy tavern he was staying at with Smellerbee and Longshot.

For some reason, he could not stop thinking about his encounter with Mai. There was just something about the encounter, perhaps the determined manner in which she had gazed back at the palace that made him think something was wrong. Why he felt that way, he didn’t know, but he had decided to check out her house just to satisfy his curiosity and quiet his suspicions. He had long ago learned to trust his intuition. It had saved his life more than once.

Once he came in view of the noblewoman’s impressive home, the freedom fighter paused near the shadows of an alleyway to take in his surroundings. Most of the other houses were quiet and there were only a few people hurrying down the deserted streets. Looking around to make sure he wasn’t being watched, he stealthily moved toward the house, making sure to keep to the shadows. As he got near, he could hear voices and the sound of a moose-dragon on the other side of the tall wall.

He went around until he came to the back of the house before silently jumping onto the edge of the wall. He nimbly landed in a garden, quickly running toward the cover of a tree. He glanced around warily, confused as to why they weren’t any guards around. He moved silently forward until he reached the edge of the large house. He climbed onto the roof, and crouched low as he made his way toward the front where he had heard the noises. As he got nearer, he could see the light of torches as the sounds reached his ears once again.

Lowering himself onto his stomach, he peeked over the edge of where the roof curled up into an elaborate design. It was the courtyard and a few servants were strapping boxes and other items on a carriage tied to a moose-dragon that shook its head impatiently. He frowned. Did Mai decide to return to Omashu?

He shrugged as he observed the commotion below him. It seemed it had all been in his head and he had blown things out of proportion. What did he expect Mai to do? He shook his head. He had wasted his time while he could have been back at the tavern with a warm meal in his belly and maybe a comely wench in his bed. He was about to crawl back the way he had come, but he paused when he saw Mai exit the house.

He frowned once again as he watched her a moment before shrugging. Seeing nothing unusual, he was about to move back when the sound of a baby’s cry caught his attention. Curious, he looked back to see a maidservant carrying a baby and trying to calm it down by rocking it in her arms while Mai watched them. Jet’s eyebrow rose in surprise.

Was that Mai’s kid?
His eyed widened when a distressing thought entered his head. That couldn’t be his child too, right? He looked more intently at the fussing baby, but he couldn’t make out any features from such a distance and the darkness didn’t help. He felt a little panic starting to form at the thought that he could be a father. He had never really given much thought to it, but he felt like he couldn’t just abandoned a baby if it was his, even if it was unplanned and Mai was its mother.

He narrowed his eyes. Why didn’t she tell him they had a kid when they saw each other? He frowned once again. Unless it wasn’t his, but another of her lovers. Relaxing a little at the thought, he observed the baby more closely. He was no expert, but he was pretty sure it was too young to be his since his last tryst with Mai had been more than a year ago. He nodded in satisfaction.

He didn’t think Mai would have kept a bastard child with her, though. She just didn’t seem like the motherly type. And with her trying to get Zuko back, Jet would have assumed she would get rid of her indiscretions to achieve that. He shrugged. Oh well, not his problem.

The baby’s crying increased and he watched as the servant desperately tried to calm it down.

“Shut the brat up!” he heard Mai snap.

Jet frowned at her coldness. Poor kid, stuck with such an uncaring mother.

“He needs his parents!” he heard the maidservant exclaim in what he assumed was exasperation, “Please, let us go!”

He watched as Mai glared at the woman. His frown deepened at the servant’s words, raising his curiosity. So the child wasn’t Mai’s? Who were his parents then and why did Mai have him? He focused more on the maid, his eyes scanning her features by the minimal amount of light from the torches. She looked familiar. Where had he seen her before?

“Please, let us go back to the palace!” the woman pleaded desperately.

His eyes widened once he realized who she was. She was Katara’s maid! He had seen her following Katara in Omashu’s Palace. He frowned. What was she doing in Mai’s house? He was distracted from his thoughts when he saw a tall man with a long braid take the maid’s elbow and firmly yet carefully lead her toward the awaiting carriage.
“We already told you we’re not letting you and the prince go,” the man said gruffly.

Jet’s eyes widened as it finally clicked into place. The prince?! Then the baby was the missing son of Katara and Zuko! He narrowed his eyes. What the hell was Mai doing with him? He should’ve trusted his gut instinct sooner. He didn’t know what the fuck was going on, but he needed to let Katara and Zuko know Mai had their son.

Just then the dark clouds finally opened up and a heavy rain started to fall. He watched as the man quickly helped the maid enter the carriage before he moved aside to let an indignant Mai enter. As the servants hurried to tie the last belongings, the tall man entered the carriage and closed the door, shutting out the rain.

Jet blinked away the water from his eyes as the rain quickly soaked his hair and clothes. He remained still as he watched the carriage move forward and the gates were opened. Once the carriage passed through, the gate was shut behind it. Quickly, Jet moved from his hiding place and dropped down from the roof, racing toward the wall.

Once he has dropped down on the other side, Jet moved silently through the dark alleyway, water splashing under his feet and falling down his face. Just as he was about to near the other side, something dropped down in front of him. Jet managed to jump back at the last moment before he crashed into whatever had blocked his path. He pulled out his hook swords as he watched a hooded man straightened himself out, a short sword in one hand. Jet tensed when he heard someone else dropped down behind him, effectively trapping him. He glanced quickly over his shoulder to see the other man hidden beneath a hooded cloak.

“What the hell do you want?” Jet growled as he turned back around and narrowed his eyes at the man standing before him. His hands tightened on his swords as he moved into a defensive stance.

“Seems our master was correct in having the cold woman’s house watched,” the stranger said with a casual drawl, “Although, we were watching to see if she was gonna betray him. We weren’t expecting a spy.”

“Who the fuck are you?” Jet asked gruffly.

The men laughed and he growled under his breath, clenching his teeth in anger, as his fingers twitched on his swords’ hilts.
“That man that’s going to kill you,” the man replied as he nonchalantly glanced down at his sword. “You know too much...so you must die.”

“I’m not that easy to kill,” Jet drawled before he lunged forward first, swords at his sides.

The man quickly parried his strikes before lashing out with a swipe of his sword. Jet easily moved aside and raised his hook sword only to jump back when the other man attacked him. He cursed when they began to simultaneously drive him back and it took all his concentration to deflect their strikes. He cried out when one of them managed to slice his thigh.

He jumped away and grit his teeth as pain raced up his spine. He ignored the sensation of warm blood seeping down his leg as he attacked once again. He grinned when he ripped through the arm of one of the men, who cursed vehemently under his breath. Gaining confidence, Jet began to drive them back, occasionally throwing in insults when they failed to land a blow. He was doing well defending himself as he tried to move around them so he could escape the alleyway, but then another man showed up and joined the other two. Jet began to panic when he began to lose ground.

He cried out when one of them sliced his back and another ran his sword through his side. One of his hook swords was knocked from his hand, but he spun around fiercely, determined to keep fighting with the other, but he was met with a fist to the face. The blow knocked him down and he fell on the hard floor with a loud grunt of pain.

“Master Toshiro will be pleased to know the spy has been disposed of,” he heard one of them say.

“We must finish this quickly,” the first man said.

Jet blinked when black spots danced in front of him before staggering back to his feet. Another slice at his leg brought him to his knees with an anguished yelp and an angry curse. He forced himself to stand back up and keep fighting. He would not die on his knees!

The sound of the heavy rain and thunder blocked the sounds of clashing swords and pained cries as red blood and dirty water ran down the dark streets.

Staring out the window, Ursa watched the rain fall. She had remained near the window for what felt like hours, trying to come up with a way to escape, but so far none of her plans had worked. As soon as they had arrived at the country house (she still didn’t know who it belonged to), Ozai had forced her into the opulent room. A trunk had been brought in with expensive clothes for her. She wondered where he had gotten them. He would stay with her for hours and had meals brought in for them, but she would not acknowledge his presence. He would then leave the room angrily at her rebuffs to his advances and sweet words.

Her thoughts once again focus on her family and Jee, worried for their distressed minds. She could not help worrying over Kazuhiko. Every time she asked about her grandson, Ozai would only tell her not to worry and that he was fine. His uncaring tone made her so angry and made her want to lash out at him. But she refrained from doing so because she knew his retaliation would be more painful and then she wouldn’t be able to escape and find Kazu if she were injured. Worse, she feared he would retaliate and hurt Kazu.

She frowned as she thought about her son. She just knew he was probably blaming himself for what was happening. And no doubt Jee was doing the same. She wanted to return to them. She wanted to forget that all of this had happened. She just wanted her and her family to be safe and happy.

She heard the door open and she tensed. She turned around warily, already knowing who it was. She stiffened further when she saw Ozai. It was late and she feared she knew what he wanted to do and why he was in her “guest room”. She did not say anything as he closed the door firmly behind him. He approached her slowly, his eyes looking at her intensely. She clenched her hands beside her while she tried to discreetly see if there was something she could use as a weapon. Unfortunately, she had already found out that anything she could pick up had been removed.

Ozai frowned. He could see her thoughts and it hurt. He missed seeing her pleased expression whenever he would come to her in their early years of marriage. He wanted her, but he had not touched her since her capture because he didn’t want her to resent him. He had wanted her to fall into his arms because of her own passion and need. But all his seductive efforts and romantic gestures had been ignored.

He was tired of waiting. It was time he got what he deserved and take what was rightfully his. She may fight it at first, but he was sure that she would surrender to her pleasure and enjoy his touch as she had once has many years ago.

Wanting to break the silence, Ursa spoke up.

“What do you want?” she asked coldly.

“You know why I’m here,” he responded huskily.
She narrowed her eyes.

“I do, but you must also know my thoughts about that,” she replied icily.

Ozai moved swiftly toward her, crowding her near the window as she tried to back away from him. He cupped her cheek, but she quickly knocked his hand aside and glared at him. He frowned.

“Why can’t you see how much I love you?” he asked with a low growl.

A small scoff left her lips.

“You have a strange way of showing your love,” she said sarcastically.

“My way is just different.” He shrugged.

“If your kind of love is to bed other women, make me kill your own father to save my son, banish me from my home, and kidnap me and our grandson, then I don’t want it,” she replied scathingly.

“I won’t believe you prefer a nobody like Jee,” he growled angrily.

“I do,” she replied firmly, “He is a better man than you.”

He narrowed his eyes at her and she tensed, but did not stop glaring at him. Then a smirk appeared on his face. She gasped when he grabbed her and roughly pulled her to him, one of his hands grasping the back of her head so that she wouldn’t look away from him. Her body tensed since she could feel his breath on her lips.

“I’ll have you changing your mind once I remind you of how good our intimate moments were,” he groaned throatily.

He crashed his mouth to hers and kissed her hard. She began to struggle against his hold, trying to push at his chest with all her strength, as she fought to keep her mouth closed to his invasive tongue. Ozai ignored her struggles as he dragged her toward the bed. He eagerly threw her on the mattress and quickly settled on top of her when she tried to escape.

“Let me go!” she screamed at him as she tried to kick at him and buck him off her.

Ursa managed to slip a hand out and she slapped him angrily. He blinked at the pain before he glared down at her.

“I am not one of your whores!” she hissed furiously, her eyes blazing.

“I know, which is why I haven’t bedded any since my escape,” he responded smoothly as he grabbed both her hands and pinned them next her head. He groaned at the sensation of having her beneath him. Her struggles were only making him more aroused as she rubbed against him. “I want you more than I ever did them.”

“I don’t want you!” she screamed, “Let me go, Ozai!”

“Oh, you’ll want me soon enough.”

He bent his head down and again roughly covered her mouth with his. Ursa eyes widened in fear when he began to rip at her clothes, his hand roughly grasping one of her breasts, making her wince in pain, before he grabbed her backside. As she struggled against his unrelenting mouth, he slid his hand down and began pulling her dress up. No, he couldn’t do this to her! She began to panic since she could not throw him off of her. Tears of frustration and fear gathered at her eyes.

Ozai drew back to catch his breath and looked down to see her. Her clothes were ripped around her and her long, black hair was in disarray, but she was glaring at him with watery eyes filled with hatred.

“If you rape me, I swear to Agni, I will never forgive you,” she said in a cold and hateful tone, “I will hate you more than I do now.”

Ozai frowned at her words. He was going to ignore her as he bent down to kiss her again, but when she moved her head away he paused. He decided not to risk it. He wanted her love him again, not hate him. He wanted her so badly, his body was aching with lust, but he wanted her affection more.
He glared down at her, angry that he couldn’t have her...for now.

He moved away from her and stood back up. He watched as she quickly drew a bedsheet to cover herself as she sat up.

“You will change your mind,” he said assuredly.

“Never,” she hissed.

Before Ozai could retort, a knock sounded at the door. He looked up to glare at the wooden door and whoever dared to disrupt his time with his wife.

“What do you want?” he growled out.

“The heir has arrived, my lord,” Ozai heard one of Jianguo’s men say.

Ursa immediately rose from the bed and rushed toward the trunk with new clothes.

“I will see my grandson,” she said firmly as she glared at him over her shoulder.

Ozai shrugged as he smoothed down his graying hair. He decided not to tell her that the boy would have to die eventually. She continued to glare at him and he knew she wanted him to leave so she could redress. He did not bother telling her he would see her naked soon.

“I will have the man outside escort you to the sitting room once you’re presentable,” he said as his eyes unashamedly raked her form.

When she did not reply, he turned away and headed toward the door. Once he was gone, Ursa pressed a hand to her mouth and shuddered in disgust, thanking all the gods that he had stopped before...She shook her head. She quickly washed her mouth and neck where he had touched her, but had no more time to completely wash herself. She was anxious to see her grandson. She hoped he was all right.
Once she was dressed, she left the room. As expected there were two men waiting for her outside. Lifting her head high, she walked down the corridor and they quickly followed after her. They guided her through a few more halls before she was escorted to the sitting room Ozai had mentioned. She froze when she saw Mai standing in the middle of the room, while Ozai and Jianguo sat on a sofa. Ursa stared at the noblewoman in confusion.

“What are you doing here?” she asked.

Mai’s eyes had widened when Zuko’s mother had appeared. Before she could respond with an excuse, Ozai spoke up.

“Why, this is her home, my dear, and she was kind enough to let us stay for the moment.”

Ursa gasped in shock before she clenched her teeth in anger.

“You traitor!” she hissed as her hands clenched at her sides, barely resisting the impulse to slap the younger woman in anger. Instead, she coldly said, “I knew you weren’t good enough for my son. I’m so glad he found a much more worthy woman as Katara for wife.”

Mai narrowed her eyes at such words, but remained silent. There was nothing she could say to mollify the older woman. Besides, her opinion did not matter to her.

Ursa’s attention shifted when she heard the sound of a baby’s soft whimper and she turned toward the entrance. She watched as a man ushered Jiao in with Kazu in her arms and she felt her heart ease.

“Kazu! Jiao!” she exclaimed as she rushed toward them.

Jiao smiled at her in relief before handing the baby over to his grandmother when she lifted her arms toward them. Kazu smiled happily at the familiar face and he snuggled close to her with a happy gurgle. Ursa felt her heart clench at his innocence. How could Ozai wish his grandson, such an innocent baby, harm? She rocked Kazu in her arms as she looked at the maidservant.

“Are you both okay?” she asked softly, ignoring the stares from the others in the room.
“We’re unharmed,” Jiao responded as she glanced hesitantly at the Dai Li agent before she returned her attention to the Fire Lord’s mother, “But the prince hasn’t eaten much or slept well.”

“He must miss his parents,” Ursa murmured sadly as she reached up to caress his soft hair.

She glanced back to Ozai to see he was talking to Jianguo while Mai stood near a window, looking blankly out into the dark, rainy night.

“Ozai won’t win,” Ursa whispered so only Jiao could hear her, bringing Kazu closer to her chest. “We will find a way to escape.”

If she had to kill Ozai herself in order to keep everyone safe, she would. After all, what mother wouldn’t do anything to protect her family?

Katara stared sullenly at the rainy sky from one of the veranda’s small windows, feeling her anxiety rising as the day came to a close. They only had two more days to give in to Ozai’s demands in exchange for Kazu and the others’ return. No matter what they did, they were unable to find them. She didn’t know what to do! Not knowing how her baby was faring was killing her.

She blinked when she felt someone touch her shoulder and she turned around to see Zuko looking worriedly down at her.

“You weren’t in our rooms, so I got worried,” he said softly, rain soaking his hair.

“I needed to get away for a while,” she replied in a low tone.

Their room held so many memories of Kazu and she could not stomach the thought of never seeing him again.

“I understand,” he responded.

Katara stared into his face, seeing the same pain in his eyes she knew he must see in hers. She felt herself crumbling a little, despite her wish to remain strong, and she leaned into his chest, wrapping her arms around him and clutching at his damp clothes.
“I am afraid,” she whispered.

“I know...so am I,” he answered just as softly as he held her tightly to him. Then in a broken tone, he added, “I don’t know what to do.”

Katara tightened her hold on him and closed her eyes, wishing she knew the answer to their problem. They remained in silence for a moment as the rain continued to fall heavily outside, beating at the wooden roof.

A soft sound near the closed shoji doors caught their attention and they tensed. They broke apart and glanced at the shoji doors when the scratching noise sounded again. They glanced warily at each other before they moved cautiously forward, ready for a fight.

Zuko lit his fist on fire before looking back at Katara, who already had a waterwhip at the ready. She gave him a firm nod and he turned back around. Reaching out slowly, Zuko grasped the edge of the door before quickly sliding it to the side. They jumped back when a wet and bloodied figure slumped onto the floor. They stared down at the individual in shock and confusion, but before they could move, the person lifted his head and gave them a pained grin.

“Finally found ya,” he rasped.

“Jet?” Katara asked in alarm as her eyes scanned his beaten body while at the same time Zuko frowned down at him. She looked up at her frowning husband. “Help me sit him up.”

Despite the animosity between Jet and him, Zuko immediately did so and they managed to lean Jet against the wall, water and blood spreading on the matted floor.

“Oh, La,” Katara whispered in horror as she saw more of his wounds. How he was able to move around at all in such a state was perplexing. Without another word, she gathered water to her hands and immediately began healing the worst of his wounds.

Jet groaned in pain and he pressed his bloody hand against his bleeding side where he had received a deep cut before sighing in relief when Katara’s healing water soothed the pain.
“What are you doing here?” Zuko asked gruffly. How did he even manage to enter the palace without being detected? And why was he so injured?

Jet’s dark eyes stared at him before he looked at Katara.

“I...know who has your son...”
“Who has him?!” Katara cried out anxiously, forgetting for a moment about Jet’s wounds as she clutched desperately at his bloody tunic. When he did not respond immediately to her question, she shook him. “Who has my son?!” she asked more loudly.

“Katara,” Zuko interrupted firmly as he gently grabbed her arms. “He passed out.”

Finally noticing that Jet’s eyes were closed, Katara’s shoulders slumped in disappointment, letting out a distressed groan, before she slowly released his tunic. She closed her eyes and took a deep breath as she tried to regain her composure. She had almost finally known the whereabouts of her precious son, but it seemed like they would have to wait some more. Why were the gods so cruel?

“We’re going to have to wait for him to tell us,” the firebender sighed in exasperation as he rubbed at his face. Why were things never easy? Narrowing his eyes, he darkly added, “He better not be lying…”

“We should move him to one of the guest rooms, so I can heal the rest of his wounds,” the waterbender said quickly as she stood up to face her frowning husband. “The faster he recovers, the faster he would be able to tell us where Kazu is.”

With the help of Kuo and Shen, Jet was safely placed on a guest bed a few minutes later with Katara immediately working on healing the rest of his injuries. She frowned and winced at all the cuts and bruises she discovered. She was amazed that Jet was still alive and was able to move at all in his condition. The loss of blood alone should have killed him. She supposed she shouldn’t be surprised since he had survived that horrible incident in Ba Sing Se years ago. Nonetheless, she was grateful for his resilience for now they would have an idea where Kazu and perhaps the others could be.

“Whoever attacked him wanted to kill him,” Zuko observed quietly as he watched his wife use her waterbending to close a particular deep cut on Jet’s side. If it had been years before, Zuko would not have cared if the rogue died, but now he hoped with all his might that Jet survived. They needed to know where to find Kazuhiko. He wondered if Jet perhaps also knew where his mother, Aang, Toph, and Jiao were being kept.

The Fire Lord glanced at the window and stared at the darkness beyond, the sound of the heavy rain disrupting the silence in the room. They did not have much time left. They needed to rescue Kazu, Ursa, and the others now before it was too late. He clenched his hands. He would make Ozai and Jianguo pay for putting his son, a young infant with no fault whatsoever, in harm’s way.

It seemed like hours had passed before Katara finally moved back as she wiped at her forehead with her arm. Gently lifting Jet’s head a little, she used her waterbending to coax some water down his throat to keep him hydrated. Once finished, she placed his head back on the pillow and let out a tired sigh. Zuko glanced down at the unconscious man before he looked questioningly at his frowning wife.

“I have healed all his wounds, but he has lost a lot of blood and needs time to recuperate. We will have to wait for him to regain consciousness,” Katara explained as she placed a damp cloth over Jet’s forehead. “I will have a servant bring him some food and more water.”

Biting her lip, she turned to look at her husband. The firebender felt his chest constrict at the almost timid hope in her azure eyes.
“Could it be real? Have we finally found the answer to our prayers? Will we finally have our baby back?” she asked. Her voice was just above a whisper as she started intensely at Zuko as if she were afraid speaking any louder would make their chances disappear.

Zuko quickly moved forward and pulled her gently to him. She pressed herself against his chest, her hands clutching at his back as she let out a shaky breath. Zuko tightened his hold and he closed his eyes.

“I hope so,” he responded softly into her hair, feeling his chest constrict once again. “I would forever be thankful to Jet for helping us find our son.”

A knock sounded at the door and they pulled apart. They frowned at each other, wondering what it could be this time. Zuko called out for them to enter and they watched as the door opened and Shen took a step inside.

“My lord, someone wishes to speak with you in private,” the guard announced in a solemn tone.

Zuko and Katara frowned. Who could be asking for a meeting so late at night?

“Have them make an appointment. I am busy at the moment.”

Shen cleared his throat, causing the Fire Lord to raise a dark eyebrow.

“They insist to meet with you now,” he stated before quickly adding when he saw his lord narrow his eyes, “They say they have important information that you must know before it is too late.”

The royal couple glanced at each other. Could it be about Kazu and the others? Katara gave a firm nod as she placed her hand on Zuko’s arm. They needed to know, even if it turned out to be about something insignificant. They could not afford to miss any opportunity for any news. Zuko’s frown deepened before he also gave a slight nod.

“Bring them in,” the Fire Lord ordered.

Shen bowed before he retreated. A moment later, an individual entered the room, a dark, heavy cloak hiding their identity. The couple looked at the hidden person warily, their bodies tensing at the possibility of danger even as Shen and Kuo entered after the individual and stood at attention. Before they could ask the person to reveal themselves, they lifted the hood away from their face. Katara’s eyes widened in surprise and Zuko frowned darkly as Wei stood silently before them.

“What do you want?” Zuko asked gruffly. Was he here to gloat about their sorrow?

“My, such manners,” Wei tutted.

When he saw the Fire Lord’s eyes narrow and the waterbender frown darkly, the old advisor sighed before he straightened himself out. He might not get along well with the young lord, but now was not the time to antagonize him. He did not miss the fact that Zuko’s personal guards were standing behind him, ready to attack or apprehend him at a word from the royal couple.

“I know who the traitor is,” Wei stated without preamble.

“What?” the Fire Lady asked.

“What?” the Fire Lady asked.

“Do you now?” Zuko bit out sarcastically.

Wei narrowed his eyes and puffed out his chest.
“I am here to prove once and for all that I am not the traitor as much as you want to believe,” the old man growled out.

Zuko glanced at Katara and she looked at him equally perplexed before he returned his stare at the advisor. He did not know what to make of this sudden situation. He had suspected of Wei for years, but he had never found any evidence against him. He had thought the old man was just really good at hiding his tracks, but could it be that he was truly innocent after all? Or was he trying to fool them in order to throw off their suspicions? Or, after all this time, would they finally know who the real traitor was?

“Alright,” Zuko finally spoke. He was still suspicious, but he was willing to listen in case Wei was telling the truth. He would do anything in order to rescue his family. “Who is the traitor?”

A small smirk appeared on Wei’s face, making the numerous wrinkles around his sagging jowls to become deeper.

“It’s someone close to both of you and you never realized it…”

“Just get on with it!” Katara hissed in exasperation at the same time Zuko growled, “Out with it!”

The old man huffed before he straightened himself out.

“Toshiro,” the advisor said simply. “The traitor is Toshiro.”

A couple of miles away, Jianguo stared unseeingly at the rainy night outside the window. He was in the room he was temporarily using in Mai’s country house. It was definitely an upgrade from the disgusting tavern rooms he had been forced to sleep in after his exile. The rain became stronger and he sneered.

He hated rain. Fortunately, the Fire Nation was only plagued with the accursed weather for a month or two.

It felt good to be back in his homeland and he could not wait to return to his previous extravagant life. He would definitely take advantage of the riches, food, and leisure once Ozai regained the throne, but most of all, he would greatly enjoy the waterbender in his bed.

He was interrupted from his thoughts of the future when the door was suddenly thrown open. He turned around with a glare, but quickly schooled his features when he saw Ozai stepped into the room. Ozai was scowling darkly and Jianguo knew he was in a foul mood. He had a feeling Lady Ursa had rebuffed him again. He did not say anything, however, as Ozai stalked forward to stand angrily next to him, glaring out the window. They were silent for a moment before Jianguo decided to be the first to say something.

“Zuko has two more days to make a decision. Would he really give up the throne?”

“He will,” Ozai responded gruffly, “He is a sentimental fool. He will hand over the throne in order to get his son and friends back. Once he sees that he has no choice, he will proclaim me as the true ruler of the Fire Nation and step down. Once everything is settled and every precaution taken to ensure the throne is truthfully mine, I will make a show of setting them all free to appease those loyal to Zuko.”

Jianguo grinned.

“But then they meet a tragic accident as they leave the country,” he added.
Ozai nodded, but did not verbally respond. Ursa would not be able to blame him since he technically would not be killing Zuko himself.

“Is everything prepared for my coronation?” Ozai asked.

“Yes. All we need is Zuko to make it official.”

“Good.”

Ozai turned around and made his way to the door. Before he opened it, he looked over his shoulder.

“Once everything is over, dispose of Mai,” he ordered in a neutral tone. “She is an annoyance and not truly loyal to us and our cause.”

Another grin spread across Jianguo’s face.

“Gladly, my lord.”

Ozai nodded, but did not verbally respond. Ursa would not be able to blame him since he technically would not be killing Zuko himself.

“Is everything prepared for my coronation?” Ozai asked.

“Yes. All we need is Zuko to make it official.”

“Good.”

Ozai turned around and made his way to the door. Before he opened it, he looked over his shoulder.

“Once everything is over, dispose of Mai,” he ordered in a neutral tone. “She is an annoyance and not truly loyal to us and our cause.”

Another grin spread across Jianguo’s face.

“Gladly, my lord.”

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

“Toshiro?” both Zuko and Katara repeated in confusion as they stared at Wei.

The Fire Lord narrowed his eyes and took a menacing step forward.

“Are you trying to make fools out of us?” he growled angrily. “Toshiro is a loyal man who has been of great help to us. Unlike you, who has antagonized me whenever possible.”

“You are a fool for not seeing what is in front of you!” Wei hissed heatedly, his double chin quivering in his agitation.

He ignored the Fire Lord’s furious glare and the Fire Lady’s icy glower as he puffed out his chest. He knew his words could have been punishable, but he also knew that the royal couple was curious as to why he would accuse Toshiro when they did not immediately advance toward him. He looked at the young lord straight in the eye.

“Think about it! One of his assistants tried to kill you and the other tried to seduce you and keep the Fire Lady from bearing you an heir…” Wei continued in a calmer manner, “Don’t you find that strange?”

The royal couple frowned at his words and glanced silently at each other, trepidation suddenly gripping them like a vise.

“It can’t be,” Katara spoke up with a shake of her head. “He has helped us so much…”

“That is how he gained your trust,” Wei retorted gruffly before he continued with a disgusted sneer, “By playing the caring and kind old physician. I’m sure he was privy to many things others were not as he was close to both of you.”

Zuko’s frown deepened as he went over Wei’s words, his thoughts flying from one place to another. On one hand, he did not trust Wei and believed he was trying to steer their suspicions on someone else. Yet, on the other hand, Wei brought up some good points. Two of Toshiro’s assistants tried to target them and when they were discovered, they were quickly disposed of. Kuro had been killed in his prison cell just as soon as the man had relented to let them know who was behind the plot to kill the Fire Lord. Yin Min had been executed shortly after her treachery was discovered. Did the physician really not know their plans, especially Kuro’s, whom Toshiro said he saw as a son? Did he not know what concoctions Yin Min was making in his infirmary? He frowned when more disturbing instances began to slowly enter his mind.

Toshiro was close to them, he was present to many private conversations and plans that they had only spoken amongst themselves and then suddenly the entire country knew. If he remembered correctly, Toshiro was there when Wei began to insinuate his infatuation with Katara at his birthday celebration years ago, which reached Jianguo’s ears, which led to the rebels using Katara’s safety against him.

There was something else. Something that had been nagging at the back of his mind for some time now ever since he found his mother… Zuko’s eyes widened.

Now he knew why the letter that his mother had shown him at her cabin at the Abandoned Fort looked so familiar as did the letters in the chest found in Advisor Kang’s home. It was Toshiro’s handwriting! Yes, he was positive the writing styles were the same. He had seen the writing many times from going over Toshiro’s medical ledgers! How could he not have realized it sooner?

His eyes narrowed before he slowly shook his head. Still, there had to be an explanation. He just could not believe Toshiro would betray them in such a way. He had trusted the man so much…

“Zuko?” he heard Katara call out as she grabbed his arm.

He looked down to see she had a disturbed expression on her face. Her blue eyes were wide and distressed. Was she also linking the possibilities? Could it be true or was Wei lying and trying to make them doubt Toshiro’s loyalty? It was moments like these that he wished Toph was present so she could use her skill in detecting lies.

“He’s tellin’ the truth,” they heard a voice rasp.

They turned quickly toward the bed to see Jet slowly sit up as he coughed a few times. Wincing, he absentmindedly placed his hand on his side where the deep gash had been previously before it was sealed. Realizing his wounds had been healed, the brown-haired man hummed before he looked up to grin at Katara.

“Thanks, gorgeous,” he purred.

“Don’t start,” Katara warned with a frown while Zuko glared at him.

Jet raised his hands in surrender.

“Sorry. Force of habit.”

Ignoring his words, Zuko moved toward the bed so he could better gauge Jet’s reactions.

“What did you mean by he’s telling the truth?” he asked.

“The men who attacked me…” Jet began slowly, “They mentioned somethin’ about their master Toshiro being pleased to get rid of the spy. They were so sure of their victory ‘cause they were caught off guard when I renewed my attacks and managed to kill two and knock the other one out.”

Everybody’s eyes widened at his words.

“Why did they attack you in the first place?” Katara asked as she tried to make sense of all the information being thrown at them all of a sudden.
Jet shifted on the bed and cleared his throat.

“I went to Mai’s house,” he began to explain.

When Katara and Zuko raised their eyebrows, he held his hands up.

“It’s not like that!” he exclaimed, “I went to investigate!”

“Investigate what?” the firebender asked.

“Well, I bumped into Mai a few days ago outside the palace, and well…I don’t know how to explain it, but there was somethin’ about her manner that made me suspicious. I don’t know why, but I decided to go to her house tonight and check it out,” he continued with a frown. “I watched from a roof as she loaded her stuff onto a carriage and then I saw the servant girl that followed you around in Omahu.”

He looked at Katara as he said the last sentence and he watched her eyes widen.

“Jiao?” Katara asked and Jet nodded. The watebender glanced behind her to see Kuo looking hopefully at Jet and she could tell it was taking everything the guard had not to start bombarding Jet with questions.

“She was carryin’ a baby,” the freedom fighter continued, “who I heard a man mention as the prince…”

A loud gasp escaped Katara’s mouth while Zuko let out a low curse.

“Mai has our son?” Zuko asked furiously, his hands clenching tightly at his sides.

Before Jet could respond, Wei interrupted with a loud cough that made the other three turn to frown at him.

“The reason I started to suspect Toshiro is because I overheard him and Lady Mai exchange some words when she was at the palace a few days ago,” the old advisor stated, “I heard him threatened her if she betrayed them. I assume he meant the rebels.”

“That bitch!” Katara raged icily with blazing cobalt eyes, unaware that the other four men took an unconscious step back as she turned to look at her irate husband. “She knew all along about the rebels’ plans when she came to see you! She has Kazu! And she didn’t say anything!”

“We will make them all pay for betraying us,” Zuko vowed fiercely, his jaw clenching tightly as he tried to rein in his rage. Mai especially will regret her betrayal. He will show no mercy. He returned his attention to Jet. “Is she still at her house? Do you know where they are headed?”

“They were about to leave when I decided to head here before I was attacked,” the dark-eyed man responded before he slowly shook his head, “I don’t know where they are heading, though”

“If Toshiro is truly helping the rebels, he would know,” the waterbender stated.

“I am going to call for a meeting, no matter how late it is,” Zuko proclaimed with narrowed eyes. “Toshiro will be interrogated and will be tried if he truly is the traitor amongst us.” He looked at Jet and then at Wei, “You two will be our witnesses.”

“Guards should be sent to retrieve the bodies of the men who attacked Jet,” the Fire Lady spoke up, “Surely one of them could be recognized.”
“The man I knocked out,” Jet spoked up, “If he has not woken up yet and escaped, he could also be used as a witness or something.”

“You are right,” Zuko hummed before he gruffly added, “I will have men retrieved them before the traitor finds out what happened. I will have Jee retrieve the evidence we were able to find so far and have Shen and Kuo escort Toshiro and Lady Yoon Hee to the palace with the excuse that we need their medical skills.”

“You think Lady Yoon Hee is also involved?” Katara asked with a frown.

“I don’t know, but it’s best we cover all the possibilities,” the Fire Lord said, “And if they both turn out to be traitors…they will pay dearly for hurting our family.”

Several loud knocks awoke the sleeping physician and his wife. Toshiro opened his eyes and frowned. Who was interrupting their sleep so late? Yoon Hee murmured next to him as she slowly sat up.

“What is it?” she asked as she rubbed at her eyes.

“I don’t know,” Toshiro replied as he rose from the bed and moved toward the door. “What is the matter?” he asked whoever was on the other side.

“It is I, master,” replied one of the three servants they kept, “The Fire Lord’s personal guards are waiting outside.”

“Why?” Toshiro asked warily.

“They said it is a medical emergency,” the servant responded nervously, “They said you and Lady Yoon Hee are needed immediately.”

“Oh no,” Yoon Hee murmured as she quickly got up from the bed and began to look for formal clothes to put on.

Toshiro grumbled under his breath. He was tired and he did not appreciate being awakened in the middle of the night to go attend the royal couple. However, if he refused, they would become suspicious since he was supposed to be a “loyal” subject and all.

After telling the servant to let the guards know they would be out in a moment, Toshiro followed his wife’s example and began to dress. Once they were ready, they left their room and headed toward the entrance of the house. As they stepped outside, they were quickly ushered into a carriage by the guards. Did the younger guard glare at him? He must be imagining things.

“I hope it’s nothing too serious,” Yoon Hee spoke up softly as she stared out into the darkness.

Toshiro did not respond as he suppressed a tired yawn. He wondered if the men he had sent to watch Mai’s house found anything suspicious. He did not trust the noblewoman, especially after he found her leaving Zuko’s study. For that reason it was best he told Lord Ozai and Jianguo that they should get rid of her before she betrayed them.

He was confident that they would succeed in their plan. Although Zuko loved the Fire Nation and would do anything to protect its people, he would never sacrifice his son for it because he loved his son even more. He will hand over the throne to his father in exchange for the young prince. Toshiro had not doubt about it.
Once they arrived at the palace, the old couple stepped out of the carriage and headed up the long flight of steps into the building. Toshiro headed toward the royal chambers, but stopped when the older guard stepped in front of him. The old physician looked at him with a raised eyebrow.

“They are expecting you this way, Physician Toshiro,” Shen said as he extended his arm in the opposite direction.

Toshiro frowned, but before he could ask anything, his wife immediately headed in the direction the guard pointed to and he had no choice but to follow. A few minutes later, they were standing before the doors that led toward the throne room. An apprehensive feeling seized Toshiro, but before he could think of an excuse to leave with his wife, the guards opened the doors and ushered them into the throne room.

The old physician’s eyes widened when he immediately saw the Fire Lord and Fire Lady sitting on their thrones with Iroh, Jee, and their other family members (minus the twin girls and the waterbender’s grandmother) next to them. He frowned when he saw that Wei and the other advisors were also present. There was a young man with messy, dark hair he did not recognize sitting languidly next to a glowering Sokka, a barely discernible smirk on his lips. He swallowed thickly when he realized they were all staring silently at him. He took a deep breath and told himself to calm down and not to jump to conclusions. He needed to act the kind, innocent old man. He and Yoon Hee moved forward and bowed before the royal couple. Toshiro discreetly lifted his eyes toward the Fire Lord in order to gauge his mood, but the wall of flames impeded most of his view. Before they could say anything, the Fire Lord spoke.

“A have a question for you, Physician Toshiro,” Zuko began in a deep voice that carried throughout the great throne room. “Are you a loyal servant to me? To my Fire Lady and family? To the Fire Nation?”

“Of course I am, my lord,” Toshiro immediately responded with another bow. “I am your humble physician. You and the Royal Family have my unwavering loyalty.”

There was a long pause after his words and Toshiro frowned slightly. He could feel the waterbender’s cold stare and the Fire Lord’s intense glare from the other side of the wall of fire. Chief Hakoda and Master Pakku were staring at him blankly while Sokka and his Kyoshi wife were glaring at him. He glanced briefly at Iroh to see the former general looking directly at him with an unusual blank expression. The old physician could feel beads of sweat beginning to form on his forehead as the apprehensive feeling increased before he looked away.

“How did they figure it out?! They must be bluffing!” Zuko motioned to Jee and the Admiral stood up, setting down the chest that had been recovered from the deceased advisor’s house and opening the lid to reveal the letters within.

Toshiro opened his mouth, closed it, and then frowned. He cleared his suddenly dried throat as he tried to come up with an explanation.

“Some people’s writing can be similar and—”

“Really?” Sokka interjected with a cynical laugh, “What a lame excuse.”

“Excuse me?” Toshiro sputtered indignantly as he glared at the Water Tribe warrior. “Why you little —“

“Why did you send men to watch Lady Mai’s house?” Zuko interrupted, quickly changing the topic and causing the physician to falter.

Toshiro felt his hands begin to shake as his fear rose. How? How did he know about that? He slid his hands into his sleeves to hide their shaking as he tried to come up with a way to get out of this situation.

This could not be happening! He had been so careful! Was he perhaps dreaming? All his careful planning could not be failing him now!

“I-I did no such thing,” Toshiro stammered, “Why would I do such a thing? I don’t know Lady Mai that well!”

“Really?” the Fire Lord responded gruffly, “Advisor Wei says that when Lady Mai came to the palace last time, he heard you say to her that she will die if she betrayed you. Why would you say that to her if you don’t know her that well?”

“That’s a lie!” the old man shouted as he turned to glare at Wei, “Advisor Wei is trying to incriminate me when we all know he is the one plotting against the Royal Family!”

Wei hmphed loudly and the other advisors murmured amongst themselves. Yoon Hee stared uncertainly at her suddenly agitated husband.

Sitting next to Jee, Iroh was frowning deeply, not wanting to believe his longtime friend was a traitor, but his nephew had been sure of it when he knocked on his door a few hours ago and told him everything. It could not be true…

“We have another witness who is sure of your treachery,” the Fire Lord continued darkly as he motioned for the dark-skinned man to stand up.

Everybody in the room watched as Jet stood up casually and brushed his hands down the borrowed tunic he had been given as if to make himself more presentable. Without further preamble, Jet launch into his story and recounted what had happened at Mai’s house a few hours ago. When Jet got to the part that he forced his injured body toward the palace, Toshiro interrupted loudly.

“You don’t look injured at all!” he blurted out as he pointed an accusing finger at the young man.

Jet scoffed as he crossed his arms over his chest. “Did you forget the Fire Lady’s a waterbendin’ healer?”

“It is my word against those of an unknown ruffian,” the old physician sniffed.

The freedom fighter shrugged uncaringly at the insult.
“Why don’t we ask one of your men?” Jet asked nonchalantly. “We retrieved the bodies of the ones I managed to kill. I’m sure someone would be able to recognize them.”

Toshiro frowned as he glanced at his wife. Yoon Hee would immediately recognize them as well as the men who frequented the club since he used them as both servants and bodyguards. But the men were dead and could not betray him. He could give the excuse the men had been plotting without his knowledge.

“Oh, and one of them is still alive,” Jet added casually when the old physician did not respond. “I’m sure he can prove my story once he regains consciousness…if he values his life.”

Toshiro’s eyes widened in sudden panic as he returned his gaze toward the Fire Lord and then toward the silent Fire Lady as his mind raced with excuses.

“I believe the young man is speaking the truth,” Yoon Hee spoke up in a broken tone.

Toshiro whipped his head around toward his wife in shock while the men murmured in surprise.

“What do you know of this?” Katara asked softly, her brow furrowed deeply. She hoped that Yoon Hee was innocent. She did not know if she would be able to handle another betrayal.

The older woman closed her eyes and took a shaky breath. She could feel her husband staring at her, but she did not return his gaze as she looked back at the Fire Lady.

“One night…I heard a man talking to my husband in our room. I paused at the door to listen. I could not really make out what they said, but I found it strange. When I finally entered the room, the man was gone and Toshiro acted like nothing was out of place.” She paused and took another shaky breath as she clenched her hands together. “I tried to ignore it. I didn’t want to believe my husband was doing anything treacherous…”

Toshiro’s eyes were wide in surprise. He had not thought his wife had known Jianguo had been in their room. As soon as they heard the door opening, Jianguo has quickly slipped out the window and he had tried to pretend as if nothing was amiss. Yoon Hee has not said anything as she stepped into the room, so he had thought they had not been discovered.

“Were you aware of your husband’s treachery?” Katara asked in a solemn tone. “Were you also a part of their betrayal?

“No! My wife is innocent!” Toshiro exclaimed loudly as he whipped his head toward the royal couple and blurted out, “She didn’t know what I was doing!”

Yoon Hee gasped loudly and everybody stared at him in shock. Toshiro’s eyes widened at his outburst. He could feel everybody’s accusing glares, but he could not look away from his wife’s pained expression. He closed his eyes and bowed his head in resignation, knowing he had practically admitted his deceit. He knew that if he wanted to prove his wife’s innocence, he would have to confess his crimes.

He clenched his teeth in anger and powerlessness. How could this be happening? They had been so close to their ultimate goal!

“It is true,” he finally admitted, “I had been conspiring with Jianguo to release Lord Ozai from prison and reinstate him on the throne…”

Iroh and Katara’s eyes widened in shock while Yoon Hee and the advisors gasped. Wei’s triumphant exclamation that he was correct was ignored as everybody turned to look up at the Fire Lord sitting behind the wall of fire.

At the old physician’s words, Zuko narrowed his eyes and clenched his hands into tight fists, a few sparks flying out in his anger. How could Toshiro betray them like this? How could he have deceived them in such a way? However, most of all, how could he have been so trusting and blind to the man’s schemes?

They listened in silence as Toshiro told them about the letter he had sent Ursa all those years ago in order to keep her at the Abandoned Fort and how he had planted the box with letters from Jianguo in Advisor Kang’s home to redirect suspicions on him. He recounted how he had told Jianguo about the Fire Lord’s feelings for the waterbender in order to use it against him, and how he had enlisted Kuro, his former assistant to help him kill the fake messenger from the colonies and dispose of Advisor Kang. He still did not know how Kang found out about his schemes, but he knew he had to get rid of the advisor before he talked to the Fire Lord.

“I had not been lying when I said that I had thought of Kuro as a son,” Toshiro continued, his voice sounding resigned, “I had planned on rewarding him greatly if everything went according to plan. I had a feeling that suspicions would immediately fall on me when it was found out the messenger died of poisoning, so I had Kuro lie and say that Advisor Kang had enlisted his help and promised to release him from prison in exchange. However, I found out he was about to confess the truth, so I had no choice but to have him killed…”

“Did you also know about Yin-Ming?” Katara spoke up in a detached tone when the old man paused.

“Yes,” Tohiro responded, “I had found out about her obsession with the Fire Lord and about the contraceptive tea she had been giving the Fire Lady, so I subtly began to encourage her actions, thinking that perhaps the lack of an heir would sway the Court Council to choose a new ruler.”

“Like Ozai,” Zuko stated darkly.

“My near…miscarriage at the palace steps…” the Fire Lady began in the same detached voice, “Were you responsible for that…?”

Toshiro lowered his gaze at her questions, feeling his wife’s horrified stare.

“I…yes. I hired an earthbender and…” he trailed off. “It was a mistake…”

“You will pay for putting my wife and our child in danger,” Zuko growled out furiously.

“You’re a monster,” Katara hissed, her blue eyes blazing, her hands clenching tightly in barely suppressed rage.

Toshiro had been partially responsible for those months of misery when they thought she could not conceive and he was responsible for causing her to almost lose her son. He even had the audacity to act as if he had been worried when Zuko had carried her to their bed when she was in so much pain and full of fear. She could not stomach the sight of the old physician. She had trusted him!

“Were you also responsible for Chao’s death,” Iroh’s soft voice broke the silence after the waterbender’s words.

Toshiro winced as he reluctantly moved his eyes towards one of his closest friends. He swallowed at the expression of disgust on Iroh’s face.

“That was a mistake,” the old physician rasped, “I didn’t want to kill my friend, but he had discovered my true identity. He had to be silenced before he reached the palace with the news…”

Iroh closed his eyes and slowly shook his head, unable to believe one of his closest friends was the traitor all along. He would never forgive him for Chao’s death, but most of all, he would never forgive him for what he had done to his family.

Zuko could see his uncle’s pain before he returned his attention to the traitor, his own mind whirling with anger and questions.

“What is Mai’s part in all of this?” he asked heatedly, “Why does she have Prince Kazuhiko?”

Toshiro explained everything and each word caused both the Fire Lord and Fire Lady’s rage to mount higher and higher against the noblewoman’s actions.

“Where are they headed?” Zuko asked angrily, his golden eyes blazing in fury.

When Toshiro did not immediately respond, the wall of fire pulsed and the room turned sweltering hot.

“Tell me where Ozai and Jianguo are hiding unless you wish for your execution for your treachery to be extremely painful,” Zuko growled out, his dark tone implying a painfully, torturous death.

At his wife’s quiet sobs, Toshiro closed his eyes and relented. What was the point of keeping silent now? He had been found out and he doubted Lord Ozai or Jianguo would come and rescue him after all he had divulged. If anything, he would try to spare his wife any more pain for what he had conspired to do.

“Lady Mai is heading to her county house with the prince,” he finally said, “That is where Lord Ozai and Jianguo are hiding and where they are keeping Lady Ursa, Avatar Aang, and Lady Bei Fong.”

Katara let out a deep sigh of relief. Now they knew where their son was! Now they could go get their family back! The waterbender looked up to stare at her silent husband through the blazing flames.

“Why did you do it?” the Fire Lord asked in a hard tone.

“I…” Toshiro stammered and his face flushed, “I was tired of working for others. I wanted to live the life of nobility and wanted my daughter and grandchildren to have the same.”

Zuko narrowed his eyes at the old man’s words. He caused all this pain for such a petty wish? How…pathetic.

“If you have petitioned it to me, I would have gladly given you a noble title for all your years of service,” he said coldly before he added with a growl, “But now you will pay for the things you have put my family and innocent people through.”

In a loud and resounding tone, the Fire Lord declared, “I, Fire Lord Zuko, condemned you to death for the crimes you have committed against the throne. May Agni have mercy on your soul, for I will not.”

Toshiro paled and Yoon Hee slipped slowly to the floor, sobbing brokenly. The physician moved to console her, but she shied away from with him, causing him to stop and drop his arms beside him in defeat.

Motioning for the guards that stood at the door, Zuko ordered loudly, “Arrest him, but keep him secretly hidden in the palace until we capture Ozai, Jianguo, and his men. Nobody is to leave the palace either, until they have my permission.”

He ignored the advisors protests as he watched his guards escort a suddenly quiet Toshiro out of the throne room, who only turned around enough to look regretfully at his wife who could not bear to look at him. He had his other guards escort a still crying Yoon Hee and the advisors to guest rooms, still ignoring their protests. He could not risk Ozai and Jianguo finding out they knew where they were hiding, and thus, give them a chance to escape.

The throne room became silent when everybody was removed except for the royal couple, their family, the Fire Lord’s personal guards, and Jet. Zuko stood up and quickly walked down the marble steps, parting the wall of fire with a single wave of his hand. As soon as he stepped through, Katara was in his arms, her body shaking in barely controlled anger.

“I can’t believe he betrayed us in such a way,” she hissed.

“He will regret his actions,” Zuko responded in a grave tone, his eyes narrowed before he added softly, “We can finally have Kazu back.”

“Yes,” Katara responded resolutely as she looked up to stare unwaveringly into his eyes.

They stepped back from each other when everybody crowded around them.

“What is our next move?” Hakoda asked what was in everybody’s mind.

“We bring our family back,” Zuko replied determinedly, his amber eyes blazing as he looked at everyone’s resolved expressions. “Tonight, we will make the rebels pay for taking to them away from us.”
Hello! Once again, I apologize for the super late update! It's been a pretty hectic and eventful couple of months. I know I said there were going to be two more chapters left (including the epilogue). However, this chapter turned out longer than expected, so I decided to split it and upload what I have so far, so I don't keep you guys waiting longer.

Enjoy!

Dark clouds hid the moon from view and heavy rain continued to drench the Fire Nation as the royal couple, along with some of their allies rode through the woods. As soon as Toshiro had been arrested for his crimes, the royal couple, their family, and several guards had immediately gotten ready and left the palace grounds on ostrich-horses toward Mai’s country house. Although Katara had advised against it because of his previous injuries, Jet had insisted on accompanying the group. Sokka and Suki had asked Hakoda and Pakku to remain in the palace to watch over Kanna and the twins. They didn’t want to leave them unprotected and knew the two men would do anything to protect their family. The men had agreed, also promising Zuko to make sure nothing untoward would happened while they were away from the palace.

Grim silence and anticipation settled heavily among the group as they rode swiftly forward. When they were a few miles away, Zuko ordered the group to stop. Once he knew he had everybody’s attention, he told the guards to stay back for a few minutes while the rest of them continued. He did not want to alert the rebels of their presence and they would mostly likely notice them if they moved as a large group.

Jee and several of the guards frowned at the command, not wanting to let the royal couple to be left unprotected when they faced the rebels. Seeing their unease, the Fire Lord explained that he preferred to come upon the rebels unawares in order to reduce the chance of the hostages coming to harm. He and the Fire Lady will go first with Iroh, Sokka, Suki, Jee, Shen, Kuo, and Jet. The guards eventually agreed to take care of anyone who got by them and would also serve as backup.

“If we need immediate assistance, I will send a signal,” Zuko continued in a grave tone, his golden eyes glinting as he looked in the direction of the country house before he looked at his wife and the others. “Let’s get our family back.”

Without another word, the smaller group urged their ostrich-horses forward. A heavy silence settled among them as the group rode on, determination blazing within them in their desire to rescue their loved ones.

A white blur suddenly dropped down on Katara’s ostrich-horse’s head, causing the waterbender to let out a startled gasp and to unintentionally jerk back, while Zuko and everybody else jumped in surprise. They stared down into big, green-eyes and large ears.

“Momo?” Katara muttered in confusion.

“What’s he doing here?” Sokka asked as he frowned at the lemur who only cocked his head to the side. “I’m pretty sure I left him in the girls’ room.”

Katara opened her arms and the lemur immediately flew forward and cuddled against her chest with a chirp before he disengaged himself in order to land on Zuko’s shoulder. His fur was soaking wet, but that did not seem to bother the little creature. The Fire Lord frowned, but still reached out to scratch Momo’s chin.

“He must have escaped and followed us,” the firebender mused with a sigh.

It wouldn’t be convenient to have Momo accompany them in this mission, but they did not have time to turn back around to take him back to the palace. Besides, he felt a little bad for the little guy. Both Momo and Appa seemed depressed ever since Aang was kidnapped. Momo jumped away from his shoulder to once again land in Katara’s arms where he curled up against her.

“Well, keep moving,” Katara spoke up as she flicked her reins, urging the ostrich-horse to quicken its pace. Zuko and the others quickly followed her.

Katara’s hands tightened on the reins of her mount as she forced herself not to rush forward, absentmindedly brushing Momo’s fur as she focused ahead of her.

She wanted to punish those who had dared to take her baby away from her, but she knew that a hasty move could cause the life of Kazu and the others. She would not put it past Ozai and Jianguo to harm them in order to save themselves. She worried that any of them could be hurt, especially Kazu, whom Ozai saw as a threat for the right to the throne, and for Aang, whom she knew Ozai hated for defeating him and stripping him from his firebending all those years ago.

She refused to think that they could come upon them not being alive. Just the thought of losing her son made her chest tighten painfully. Kazu had to be alive! They all had to be alive. She had to believe that they were for she would not be able to bear it if they were otherwise…

“Well, Katara,” her husband’s low voice brought the waterbender out of her thoughts and she turned her head to look at him, blinking the rainwater from her eyes.

Zuko had been silently watching his wife since they had separated from the guards, watching as her hands clenched and unclenched around the reins, a frown on her face as the rain plastered a few strands of her hair to her cheeks. When she turned to him, he could almost see the despair in her blue eyes. He wanted to reach over and pull her to him to offer his comfort, but he knew now was not the time. They needed to reach the country house while it was still dark and time was of the essence.

“We will find them,” he said instead as he felt the others in the group turn to look at them. The determination in his tone and the gleam in his eyes gave Katara strength and hope.

“I know,” she responded just as determinedly as she held his gaze, “And we will bring them home.”

Looking back ahead of them, Katara felt the pull of the rainwater around them pulse through her, feeling its soothing energy dispel her fears, and she allowed her element’s power to course through her body. If they had dared to hurt her son, Ursa, Aang, Toph, or Jiao they would feel her wrath.

The rain continued to fall as the group continued silently in their path, unaware that a pair of eyes watched them from the shadows before disappearing underground.

Deftly twirling one of her shuriken with her fingers, Mai stared unseeingly outside the window of her lavish room, absentmindedly listening to the sound of the rain. She had not bothered to light any candles as she stood by the window, ignoring the chill of the darkened room. She was still dressed in the traveling robes she had been wearing since she left her town house, her weapons still hidden within her sleeves, as she remained vigilant.

It was late, but she could not seem to be able to fall sleep. She had been on edge ever since she had arrived at her country house with the boy and his nursemaid. An apprehensive feeling had begun to fester in her chest when she had caught Ozai staring vacantly in her direction while Lady Ursa had greeted her grandson earlier that night. Although his expression revealed nothing, the fact that he had been looking at her made her hackles rise. The uneasy feeling had only grown as the night went on and she could not seem to dispel her disquieting thoughts.

Once again, her thoughts returned to the decisions she had made and where they had currently led her. She knew her love for Zuko had steered her toward making some irrational decisions, especially siding with Ozai and the rebels. She had justified her actions by telling herself that everything she did was in order to have Zuko return to her so they could be happy together. Now, however, she was beginning to regret her decision in not telling Zuko everything when she had last seen him at the palace. If only Katara had not shown up to ruin everything.

A small sigh escaped her as she continued to absently twirl the sharp weapon. All she could do now was wait and see how things played out. She just hoped that everything came out the way she wished so she could finally have what she deserved…so she could finally be happy…

A movement from outside her window caught her attention and the shuriken froze in her hand. She watched as a figure emerged from the shadow of the trees and her eyes narrowed in suspicion. Although she could not see very clearly in the dark, the individual’s clothing identified him as one of the former Dai Li agents now in Jianguo’s employ. He moved quickly toward the house and she knew by his rapid movements that something was wrong.

A small frown appeared on her brow before she straightened herself out. She replaced her shuriken back into its place within her sleeve and silently made her way toward the door. She needed to find out what was going on. This was, after all, her house.

The feeling of dread seemed to seep into her bones as she left her room and headed down the dark hallways.

“They what?!” Jianguo’s angry shout made the former Dai Li agent wince and take an involuntary step back.

“Are you certain?” Ozai asked in a calmer tone, although an edge of steel could be detected in his voice as his eyes narrowed.

Standing on the side with a bleary-eyed Ping, Chang frowned deeply at the Dai Li agent’s report. Chang had been woken him up a couple of minutes before with the bad news and once he had heard the report, Chang had immediately rushed to give the news to Jianguo. It was fortunate that he and Jianguo had ordered several men to keep a perimeter near the house, in case they were found out. Chang’s eyes shifted toward the door of the sitting room as it was opened. He watched as Lady Mai entered without a sound and silently surveyed the room. He looked back toward the others, but they were not paying any attention to her.

“Yes,” the other earthbender replied quickly to Ozai’s question. “We spotted the Fire Lord…” he trailed off and cleared his throat at the man’s glare, “uh, the usurper and several guards heading this way. His uncle and his waterbending wife were with them, along with several of her family members, if I am not mistaken.”

At the man’s words, Mai’s eyes widened in sudden panic. Zuko and the others were on their way? Did he know she was involved with the rebels? No, this could not be happening!

“Dammit!” Jianguo cursed as he rubbed at his face in frustration. “How did they know where we were?!”

His attention was caught by Mai’s figure near the doorway and his nostrils flared.

“You told them, didn’t you?” he accused her heatedly. “I knew we couldn’t trust you!”

“I did no such thing,” Mai replied coldly before she added with a calm she did not feel, “Why would I still be here, if I had betrayed you?”

Ozai narrowed his eyes and Jianguo growled under his breath.

“Perhaps Toshiro was discovered,” Chang spoke up when it seemed Jianguo was going to advance angrily toward the noblewoman, giving the other men pause at his words. “He is the only one who knows where we are hiding.”

“Perhaps,” Ozai finally spoke before he turned to regard the firebender, “However, now is not the time to speculate. We have to escape before they reach the house.”

“How long before they get here?” Jianguo asked the former Dai Li agent.

“Less than an hour,” the man replied, which earned a curse from the firebender.

“I will gather Ursa and the boy right now,” Ozai said gruffly, a deep frown on his face, “Prepare to depart in a few minutes.”

“Of course, my lord,” Jianguo responded grimly as he watched Ozai walk quickly toward the door.

Mai shivered involuntarily when Ozai gave her a hard look as he passed her. What should she do now? Should she try to make a run for it?

Jianguo turned to Chang, Ping, and the other earthbender and frowned. He should have ordered more of the earthbenders to remain near the house. There were not enough earthbenders to be able to submerge them all in the ground. They will need to escape using the few ostrich-horses they had.

Turning to the other earthbender, Jianguo ordered, “Have the men engage Zuko and the others in battle. Whoever manages to kill the bastard and capture the waterbender, will be greatly rewarded.”

“Yes, sir,” the man said with a slight bow before leaving the room.

Chang frowned at the order. He had a feeling Jianguo knew the men were probably going to be defeated, but needed them to serve as a distraction in order to give the others enough time to escape and be far from reach.

“Chang, Ping, make sure some ostrich-horses are ready and enough provisions are gathered to last us for a few days,” Jianguo ordered them as his mind raced to come up with ways to turn their situation around. “Oh, and Chang, do bring along the pretty maid. We will need her to look after the brat…for now.”

The green-eyed man’s frown deepened at his words, but he gave a nod as he moved toward the door with Ping following behind him. He had placed Jiao in his room, and although he had wanted to make her his, he had decided to give her more time when she had looked at him with fear and hatred in her eyes.

Once Chang and Ping were out of the room, Jianguo turned to regard Mai.

The noblewoman forced herself not to show her trepidation as she returned his stare with a blank one, her fingers itching to retrieve her hidden weapons. She half expected him to accuse her of betraying them again, so she was surprised when he smiled.

“You should get your things ready if you’re coming along with us,” he said as he moved toward the door.

Mai started at him incomprehensively.

“You want me to come with you?” she asked with a raise eyebrow.

“If you’d like,” he responded with a casual wave of his hand, “Or you can remain here and try to explain your presence to Zuko.” He shrugged. “I’m sure that will go over well.”

Mai frowned and her hands convulsed slightly at her sides. She did not trust him, but at the same time, she knew she could not remain in the house. She would go with them for now and find a way to escape or perhaps make it seem like she had been kidnapped and had no part in any of this…She hoped.

“Very well,” she responded dispassionately, even though inwardly she was perturbed by the whole situation as she watched the man leave the room.

As soon as he was out of the woman’s sight, a slight smirk appeared on Jianguo’s face as a plan formed in his head that would not only aid them in buying them some more time, but would also finally rid them of the noblewoman.

Ursa watched anxiously as Chang handed a sleeping Kazu up to Jiao, who had been placed on top of an ostrich-horse. Jiao immediately brought the child to her chest and looked toward the older noblewoman. Before Ursa could even think of ordering Jiao to escape with the baby, Chang swung up behind the maidservant, effectively trapping her as he grabbed the reins.

Jiao stiffened noticeably, her arms tightening slightly on the baby. She hunched forward to move slightly away from the man, but also to keep the infant from becoming soaked from the rain. She heard the little prince fuss a little before quieting down.

Ursa stared worriedly at her grandson, hoping he did not get sick. Shifting her attention to Ozai, she frowned as her hands clenched helplessly at her sides. Ozai stood silently next to her while Jianguo ordered some men to place several bags on four ostrich-horses. His barked orders, the men’s hurried steps, and the fact that it was the middle of the night made it obvious that something was amiss.

Ozai had refused to tell her anything when he had hastily woken her up a few minutes ago. He had ordered her to dress and gather Kazu, who had been sleeping next to her. She had been firm in having her grandson stay with her when it had been time for bed. She had wanted to make sure Kazu was safe by having him at her side since she did not trust Ozai or Jianguo.

Once she had finished dressing and had wrapped Kazu in several warm blankets, Ozai brought them out to the courtyard, where Jiao had been waiting anxiously for them with Chang and Mai. Ursa had glared at the cold noblewoman, but Mai had only stared at her inexpressively before looking away.

She was not sure what was going on, but Ursa had a feeling that somehow their whereabouts had been discovered and now Ozai and Jianguo were trying to escape. Hope surged in her heart at the thought that Zuko, Jee, Katara and the others were on their way to rescue them. However, would they make it in time? She tried to think of a way that would help Zuko and the others know where they were going, but she didn’t even know where they were heading.

“Everything is ready, my lord,” Jianguo’s voice brought her out of her thoughts.

“Good, let’s leave immediately,” Ozai responded.

He did not give her time to move away as he grabbed her arm. He paused to whisper something to Jianguo, who nodded, before he lifted Ursa up on the ostrich-horse, quickly swinging up behind her before she could think about escaping. Ursa stiffened as she felt the touch of his chest against her back and his thighs against hers as his arms went around her to grab the reins. If it had been years before, her body would have reacted in pleasure to his closeness. Now, however, his presence made her stomach churn in disgust.

Jianguo and Mai mounted their own ostrich-horses, but before they moved forward, the former turned toward the large, bald earthbender waiting with the other men.

“Ping, retrieve the Avatar and meet us at the nearby port,” he ordered.

“What about da blind girl?” the man asked gruffly.

“Dispose of her,” the firebender ordered uncaringly.

“Allrighty,” Ping answered with a sinister grin.

Simultaneous gasps escaped Ursa and Jiao at his words, their eyes wide in horror, but they were unable to say anything else when the men harshly pressed their heels against the ostrich-horses, prompting the animals to race forward into the silent, dark woods.

As the royal couple and the others rode closer to the estate, the Fire Lord ordered them to dismount and walk the rest of the way. The heavy rain suddenly slowed to a light drizzle before it completely stopped. A few minutes later, the clouds parted slightly and moonlight dimly shone on their path. Like silent shadows, they moved stealthily through the woods before stopping at the edge to survey the large house.

It was quiet and dark, no visible light could be seen within the building nor was there any sign of anybody nearby. A cat-owl hooted somewhere close to them, but there were no other sounds to disrupt the night. Zuko’s eyes scanned the ground, the walls, and the rooftops, but could not see any movement.

“Something doesn’t seem right,” Katara’s low whisper echoed his thoughts as her eyes narrowed.

Uncorking the waterskin tied to her side, she weaved the water around her arms. Momo perched on her shoulder, his ears twitching back and forth, his nose wildly sniffing the air as if he sensed the sudden tension.

Jee, Shen, and Kuo were standing at attention behind the royal couple, their bodies tensed and ready to fight. Jet hummed as he casually chewed on a single stalk of grass, even though his hands moved to quietly pull out his hook swords.

“It’s too quiet,” Sokka observed with a frown.

“Shouldn’t they have placed some men to keep watch?” Suki added as her hands tightened on her metal fans.

“Could Toshiro have lied to us?” the waterbender asked, a frown marring her brow as she looked at her husband.

“Perhaps they knew we were coming,” Iroh murmured while Jee and Jet frowned grimly at his words.

Zuko remained silent as he again scanned their surroundings. Something definitely seemed off...It felt like they were being watched…His eyes widened.

“They know we are here,” he whispered harshly as he slowly pulled out his dual broadswords at his side.

He had scarcely finished his sentence when a whizzing sound disrupted the silence. Katara barely had enough time to bend water into an ice shield to block the arrow that was aimed at Zuko’s chest. A loud crackling resounded as the arrow imbedded itself into the ice. Momo let out a screech and flew up into the cover of a tree’s branches. Katara’s heart raced in both fear and anger. They could have killed him!

Zuko blinked and the group had only a moment to stare in shock at the arrow before Katara quickly melted the ice to form a waterwhip, flinging the arrow far away into the foliage.

“Stand ready!” Zuko ordered as he brought his swords forward after he shot his wife a grateful look.

So much for the element of surprise, he thought irritably as he quickly scanned their surroundings.

The group rapidly moved into a tight circle with their backs against each other, moving into defensive stances, as they stared out into the dark woods around them. They stared warily into the darkness where the arrow had come from, their muscles tense, and their weapons at the ready.

Silence permeated the air for what seemed like a long moment before it was suddenly broken by loud shouts as men started to race from the trees or spring up from underground.

The small group stood their ground as the rebels advanced forward before meeting them head on. Iroh, Jee, Kuo, and Shen managed to send several men flying back with large blasts of fire while Katara lifted others into the air with water tentacles before flinging them to the side. Zuko, Sokka, and Jet cut several of the rushing men with their swords, with the Fire Lord occasionally using firebending to attack and defend.

Suki flipped and swerved among the rebels, disarming or injuring those who dared to attack her with her metal fans or swift kicks of her feet. She dropped low to the ground when a firebender punched a fireball at her before springing back up, throwing one of her metal fans at his face as an idea popped into her mind. He cried out at the painful impact and Suki took advantage of his momentary distraction to flip over his head and land behind him.

With quick jabs of her fingers, she struck several of his chi points just as she remembered learning from Ty Lee when the acrobat has joined the Kyoshi Warriors years ago. She grinned in triumph when the man crumbled in a boneless heap at her feet, his eyes wide in both fear and confusion. She was not as proficient in chi blocking as Ty Lee, but Suki used the technique whenever she could as more men appeared. She smirked when she caught her husband smiling dazedly at her when she passed him before he had to quickly jump back with a curse when a rebel tried to lop his head off. She rolled her eyes good-naturedly when he gave her a sheepish grin after he defeated the man before she attacked another rebel. She had missed the rush of battle, and although motherhood had kept her busy, she had never stopped her training. It was definitely paying off now.

Zuko destroyed a boulder that was hurled his way with a fire blast before spinning around to cut down a man with a flaming sword, ignoring the rebel’s cry of pain as he spun around to counter a fire attack from another firebender. If he was not mistaken it appeared as if many of the rebels were wearing Fire Nation military armor, he had a feeling were the ones previously stolen from the military base. He glanced briefly around him to see how everyone in his group was doing and was glad to see they were holding their own. Jee, Shen, and Kuo were working together to defeat several firebending rebels, while Sokka, Suki, and Jet worked together to engage some earthbenders in battle. Iroh was, as usual, a one-man army, taking on a bunch of firebenders and earthbenders on his own. The Dragon of the West was definitely in full form tonight.

Gritting his teeth in frustration, the Fire Lord kicked a rebel in the chest before blasting an earthbender back with a fire blast. He could not see Jianguo, Chang, or Ozai among the rebels. He was sure they had sent these men out to attack them as a distraction while they escaped. They could not afford to waste time while the lives of his son, mother, and the others were at risk!

Raising his arm, he shot a fireball high into the air, hoping his waiting guards would see the signal and hurry to assist them. The light from the fire cast a red glow over the fight before it faded, casting them in the moon’s silvery radiance once again.

Slashing a man’s torso with his flaming sword, Zuko watched as Katara incapacitated several men by aiming ice spikes at their legs. He knew his wife was focused solely on saving their son and family because she would usually try not to cause physical harm to anyone if she could help it. He could not help admiring her form as she fought with blazing blue eyes, bending her element gracefully yet fiercely.

Bending the large amounts of water available to her due to the rain, Katara raised her arms, eyes narrowed, and formed an intimidating wave that made several of the rebels pause to gawk at it in terror before it slammed into them, knocking them back to the ground or against trees. In the same breath, Katara froze the water, effectively trapping them. Without wasting any time, she gathered more water to her and prepared for the next attack.

“Poor bastards,” she heard someone drawl next to her and she turned her head to see Jet grinning at her, his wild hair plastered to his head with sweat.

“I know just how that feels,” he said with a slight chuckle when she raised her eyebrow at him. Then with a wink, he added, “I’m just glad it’s not me this time!”

Without waiting for a reply, he turned around and raced away to continue fighting.

With a wry smile, Katara returned her attention to the rebels. She cursed under her breath when a few firebenders managed to melt the ice encasing them and charged at her with angry roars. She countered their attacks and drove them back with her waterbending or, if they got too close, with strikes of her palms or feet as she had learned in her training.

A moment later, she found herself standing back to back with Zuko as more men suddenly appeared.

“There are too many,” Katara hissed as her eyes darted to the men approaching them, “We don’t have time for this! We need to find Kazu!”
Before Zuko could respond, the sound of thundering steps reached their ears before their guards burst from the trees with loud battle cries. The rebels froze briefly before they tried to regroup as they shifted their attention to the newcomers. Steel rang against steel, fire collided with both fire and earth, and pained cries filled the air. The soldiers started pushing back against the rebels who were beginning to either flee or fight with a terrified desperation.

They watched as the retired general did a series of firebending moves, punching fire blast after blast to destroy several boulders that were being thrown at him by who appeared to be a former Dai Li agent. Before Katara or Zuko could move forward to help, Jet suddenly appeared behind the agent and ran him through with his hook swords before he was off to disarm a large man who was wielding a club.

“Go inspect the house while we finish the rest of the rebels,” Iroh told the couple as he finally approached them. Sweat ran down his brow and there were several smudges on his face and clothes, but, otherwise, the old man was unscathed. “Perhaps we are lucky and Ozai did not have a chance to escape.”

“We’ll come with you,” Sokka added as he and Suki stopped next to his sister.

“Hey, what’s Momo doing?” Suki’s sudden question had them looking in the direction she was pointing.

They watched as Momo flew toward the house, circled a spot a few times, before landing on the wall bordering the building. He chattered for a moment as he stared at them.

“I think he wants us to follow him,” the waterbender said as she looked at her husband.

They gave each other a simultaneous nod before they raced toward the house, keeping an eye out in case any of the rebels slipped through the guards and attacked. Luckily, the soldiers, Iroh, and Jee, along with Jet, Kuo, and Shen kept them occupied.

“Hey, wait up!” Sokka called out as he and Suki ran after them.

Please be okay, was the thought that crossed the royal couple’s minds as they ran toward the house.

The sound of clashing weapons and loud shouts made Toph perk up from her restless sleep. She cocked her head to the side with a frown. Was there a battle going on outside or was she imagining things? How long had it been since she’d been trapped? It felt like it had been weeks and her worry over Aang and her own situation made things worse.

She sprang to her feet, eyes narrowed as she tried to strain her hearing to make more sense of the noise. Although it was faint, she was pretty sure those were the sounds of battle. Although it had been almost six years since the end of the war, she would never forget those sounds as long as she lived.

But who was fighting against who?

Was it perhaps Zuko and the others against the rebels?

Ugh, if only she had her earthbending! Not only would she know for sure, but she would also be able to help fight the bastards who dared to take Aang and her as hostages!
She paced agitatedly in the darkness and cursed when she almost tripped on the metal bowl she had been given with her meager meals. She gritted her teeth and clenched her hands. If she had her bending, she could have metalbent the bowl and shoved it down that idiot earthbender’s throat…

The sound of hurried booted feet alerted her to someone coming to the locked door and she tensed. She knew by his heavy footsteps that it was the idiot earthbender that brought her meals and taunted her with Aang’s safety. Her hands curled into tight fists as her eyes narrowed in sudden apprehension.

She had to do something in order to escape and find Aang!

Stretching her arms out, Toph walked carefully yet quickly toward a stack of crates she had previously discovered. With nothing else to do, she had explored her dark surrounding in the hopes of finding something to help her escape and had only discovered several useless boxes. Touching the wood, she silently walked around the edge until she was sure she was standing behind the stack to hide from view. She held her breath when the door slowly opened, creaking in an almost eerie manner, before it was closed. She heard the man step in before he paused and cursed, most likely because he couldn’t immediately see her.

“Where are ya little gurl?” Ping called out in an almost singsong tone.

He moved his torch from one side to the other as he surveyed the dark room with the crates and boxes piled neatly everywhere before he placed it on the wall sconce beside the door. When she did not immediately respond, he let out another low curse. He did not have time for this! He needed to retrieve the Avatar and escape before the royal guards made it to the house.

“You can’t escape, ya know,” he taunted as he moved slowly closer to the center of the room where the girl usually slept. “Why don’t ya come out now? I won’t hurt ya…much.” When the girl didn’t respond, he growled impatiently, “I don’t have time for this shit! I need ta meet da others at the port.”

Toph narrowed her eyes when she heard him walk closer to where she was hiding. It was now or never! Pushing with all her might, she pushed against the crates, fearing for a second that her plan would not work when they did not budge. However, they finally gave way and began to tumble forward. Hearing a surprised curse followed by a pained cry above the crash, Toph knew they had fallen on the idiot. Without waiting another second, she scrambled through the mess, blindly finding her way toward the door.

She cried out when a hand clamped painfully on her ankle before she was pulled down. Gasping, she crashed down on the hard floor, which knocked the breath out of her when her chin struck the ground. She shook her head as the impact made her ears ring and her head throb.

“Ya little bitch,” she heard him growl.

Ping angrily pushed the boxes away from him with his free arm as he held onto the girl’s ankle. Luckily, the boxes weren’t filled with heavy things or else he would have been in trouble. Still, how dare she try to ruin his plans!

Regaining her wits, Toph’s eyes widened when she felt him dragged her toward him.

“Let me go, asshole!” she growled as she kicked her other foot out.

She grinned when her foot connected with his face, hearing just as much as feeling as she broke his nose with a loud crunching sound. The man howled in pain as his grip loosened. She didn’t waste any time and scrambled to her feet as her heart raced with adrenaline.
She needed to escape!

She made it a few steps before she crashed onto a crate, which knocked her onto her back. Cursing, she made to stand up when she suddenly felt a heavy weight settle on top of her and large hands gripped her throat. She gasped for air and her eyes widened in panic when the pressure increased.

“You’ll pay for that!” he wheezed through his broken nose, but she barely heard him as she struggled to intake oxygen as he tried to crush her windpipe.

She coughed and gasped as she thrashed about against him, her nails scratching at his hands and arms, before she started punching at his face. He laughed cruelly at her struggles and it only fueled her anger and desperation.

No. No! She could not die like this!

She was Toph! The greatest earthbender and only metalbender in the world and she would not let some idiot be the end of her!

One of her hands searched blindly on the ground, desperately searching for something, anything, that could help her get him off her so she could breathe. Her lungs burned fiercely and her head felt heavy. Somewhere in her desperate mind, she thought she could hear an animal’s frightened squawks. Was she going crazy? Suddenly her fingers brushed against metal. Without thinking, she grasped onto it.

She brought the metal bowl forward and struck the man on the side of his head with all her might, just as she felt herself about to lose consciousness…

It had been easy to infiltrate the country house since it seemed that all the rebels were fighting outside instead of guarding it. However, that only increased the royal couple’s urgency to find their family. The fact that no one had tried to stop them once they entered the building reinforced their fears that Ozai and Jianguo had managed to escape. They had decided to split up and search the large house in the hopes that one of them could reach their family much more quickly than if they looked together as a group.

Zuko’s frown deepened when he came upon another empty room, feeling his hope dwindling and his anger and fear rising. Those bastards had better not hurt his son or mother. Turning on his heel, he left the room and headed back toward the main sitting room. It was obvious that no one was in the house and that Ozai had escape. He needed to meet with Katara and the others. They could not waste any more time. They had to see if they could figure out which way they had gone. However, who knew where that could be? They could have gone in many different directions and if he and the others went the opposite way, they could lose their family forever…

His dark thoughts were interrupted when he saw Katara round a corner. He saw the apprehension in her eyes increase when she saw that he was alone before she walked quickly toward him.

“They are not here,” he said anxiously before she could speak, “We’re too late.”

“They couldn’t have gone too far,” she responded softly yet steadfastly, her expression hopeful, “We can probably catch up to them if we head out now.”

“Yes, but which way could they have gone?” he asked as he ran his hand through his hair as he felt his desperation grow, “What if we never find them…”
"Zuko," Katara called out firmly as she reached out to grab his hands.

He blinked at her firm tone before staring into her unwavering eyes, feeling her warm, soft hands gently squeeze his.

"We can’t lose hope now," she told him softly, "We will find them."

"You’re right," he replied determinedly as he squeezed her hands back, pushing his dark thoughts away as he stared resolutely into her eyes.

They could not give up now. Not without a fight.

"Hey you guys," Sokka’s voice made the royal couple release their hold and turn to look at him.

"Did you find them?" Katara asked hopefully.

"No," Sokka replied with a sigh. When he saw his sister and brother-in-law frown in defeat, the blue-eyed warrior quickly added, "But I think Momo found something in the kitchen! Come on!"

He didn’t wait for them to ask any question as he turned around and quickly headed down the way he had come. Zuko and Katara gave each other a brief glance before they swiftly followed him.

They met up with Suki on the way, who also did not to find anyone, and the four headed toward the kitchens. Soon they were entering the big, empty room to find Momo chittering loudly as he hopped from side to side and scratched at a large wooden door. When he noticed the group staring at him, the lemur flew toward Katara and landed on her shoulder. He made a series of quick squeaks and chatters as he tugged at her hair before he flew back to the closed door.

"I found him doing that a few minutes ago," Sokka spoke up.

"It seems he wants us to go through this door," Zuko said as he moved forward, prompting the others to follow him.

Momo paused his chatter when he saw the firebender stand next to him before jumping up to land on the man’s shoulder.

Zuko unsheathed one of his swords as he reached for the door handle while Katara got her water ready and Suki and Sokka pulled out their own weapons. Bracing himself for an attack, the firebender pulled the door open only to be met with a flight of stairs leading down into darkness. Before any of them could stop him, Momo jumped off Zuko’s shoulder and flew down, quickly disappearing from view.

"Let’s follow him," the Fire Lord said grimly. Could their family be hidden somewhere down there?

Lifting his hand and producing a flame, he moved forward and started descending the stairs with Katara following close behind him. Sokka and Suki followed silently behind the pair, carefully stepping on the steps with the minimal amount of light provided. They had barely reached the bottom when the sound of Momo’s loud, panicked screeches caught their attention. They raced forward down a long, barren corridor with several closed doors before they found Momo desperately scratching at a door.

"What’s he—?" Suki’s question was cut off by the loud sound of a metal thud followed by a man’s pained cry.

Without another word, Zuko thrust the door open and they rushed forward only to pause in horror at the scene before them. Toph was curled on the floor with her hands clutching her throat, coughing painfully and wheezing as she tried to breathe. Crumbled in a heap next to her was Ping, who seemed to be bleeding from a wound on his head and a broken nose.

“Toph!” they cried out as they rushed forward, Katara’s hands already glowing in healing water.

They knelt down around her and stared anxiously at her while Katara’s hands hovered worriedly over her. Momo chittered as he patted Toph’s cheek.

Hearing their voices, the small earthbender rolled onto her back and cracked a small, pained grin as she felt her body relax, relieved that she had been able to defeat the man who tried to kill her and glad to her friends had found her.

“Hey guys,” she coughed fitfully before she croaked, “Took you long enough.”

“Are you badly hurt?” Zuko asked worriedly as he helped her sit up, noticing the stone manacles around her wrists. So that was how they must have subdued her.

“Did he…?” Katara spoke up slowly before trailing off, unsure how to ask what Ping had done to her. She shot a glare at the unconscious man, her fingers twitching in anger, even as she wrapped her healing water around Toph’s throat.

“Nah,” Toph responded as she brushed her hair out of her face, sighing at the soothing water. “The asshole just tried to strangle me before I bashed his head.”

“Served him right,” Sokka sniffed as he and Suki glared at the man.

“Is Aang not with you?” Katara asked in concern as she scanned the dark room.

Toph’s shoulders slumped as she shook her head.

“I haven’t seen him since I woke up here,” she replied before she growled out, “They better not have hurt him…”

Before they could ask her any more questions, Momo started chattering again and jumping up and down near the entrance of the door to get their attention.

“What’s he hollering about?” Toph asked with a frown since she could not ‘see’ what was happening. Her right hand automatically touched the stone manacle around her left wrist where she could feel it chaffing her skin.

“I think he wants us to follow him again,” Suki responded before she asked, “Do you think the others could be locked up down here, too?”

“Let’s find out,” Zuko responded grimly before he turned to Toph. “Can you walk?”

“Yup, I’m fine,” she replied with her usually brazeness as she rose to her feet with Katara’s help. Her brashness faltered slightly and she grabbed tightly onto the waterbender’s arm. “I…I can’t see where I’m going though…” she muttered angrily.

“Don’t worry. I got you,” Katara responded. Before Toph could protest or feel indignant, she added, “It’ll only be temporary until we can get an earthbender to take off the stone cuffs.”

Toph was silent a moment before she nodded.

“Fine,” she huffed. “Let’s go find the others.”
“Hold on,” Sokka piped up.

They watched as he quickly rummaged the crates before finding some rope. They immediately understood his intent when he began to tie Ping up. The bald earthbender groaned in pain, letting them know he was still alive, before he quieted down once again. Once he knew he had tied the rope securely so the man would not be able to escape, Sokka nodded at the others after he picked up the torch that Ping had hung near the door earlier.

Once he realized the humans were following him, Momo gave a chirp before flying down the dark corridor once again. The small group, with Katara leading Toph, left the room and walked down the cold, silent hall. They had walked by a few doors when they once again heard Momo’s calls before coming upon him jumping excitedly in front of a door.

Once again leading the group, Zuko stepped forward and opened the door, stepping quickly through with a sword at the ready, only to abruptly halt at the gruesome sight he encountered.

The others paused when Zuko suddenly stopped before he let out a low curse, but they could not see since his tall frame was blocking their view. Momo had immediately flown inside once the door had been opened.

“What is it?” Katara asked anxiously. Her concern only increased when he did not respond, but instead let out a disturbed shout of “Aang!” as he rushed forward. Her eyes widened in dismay when she finally saw what had agitated her husband.

“Oh, La,” she gasped in horror, her hand flying to her mouth, while she heard her brother and Suki sharply suck in their breaths.

Hanging from the low ceiling by chains wrapped around his wrists was Aang. Even with the minimal amount of light, they could see his bloodied and bruised face. His eyes were closed and his chin fell toward his chest, making Katara fear the worse.

“What is it?” she asked before trailing off. She could not finish the sentence.

Zuko felt his stomach tightened in worry when he finally reached Aang, frowning at the multiple, visible bruises and cuts on his face and wrists. As if sensing his master’s injuries, Momo had landed by Aang’s feet instead of his shoulder or head as he was prone to do. Letting out a sad chip, the lemur reached out to pet one of the airbender’s legs. Shakily, Zuko pressed his fingers at Aang’s throat, holding his breath as he tried to feel for a pulse. He relaxed when he felt it, although it was slow and almost faint.

“He’s alive,” he said as he looked over his shoulder at the worried group.

“What is it?” Toph asked loudly, although her tone wavered slightly in fear at Katara’s initial horrified exclamation. She frowned when the waterbender didn’t respond to her as she asked her to hold on to Suki so she could check on Aang. “What’s wrong?” she asked as she squeezed Suki’s arm once she felt Katara walk away.

“Aang’s been…” Sokka began before his words got stuck in his throat.

“Injured,” Suki finished for him, although the word ‘tortured’ seemed to hang in the air.

Zuko moved to the side to allow Katara some space so she could examine the unconscious airbender.
while he critically eyed the chains holding Aang up. He looked over his shoulder to address Sokka.

“Can you see if Ping has the key with him?” he asked the frowning warrior. “If not I’ll try to break the chains.”

Sokka nodded before he quickly left the room with the torch in hand. While they waited, Zuko grasped Aang’s middle to support his weight, while Katara examined the rest of the airbender’s body. She murmured that she didn’t think he had any broken bones, but she worried at the amount of blood coating the front of his shirt. They could hear Suki murmuring reassurances to a suddenly silent Toph.

A few minutes later, Sokka returned, waving a key in his hand, as he moved swiftly toward them after handing the torch to Suki. Zuko held Aang up while Sokka worked in unlocking the chains.
Once the chains were removed, they both eased Aang down to the floor so Katara could continue healing him. Suki guided Toph closer and they both knelt down next to Sokka.

At the back of the royal couple’s mind, they despaired at the thought of their son and Ursa slipping further away from them as time passed, but they also could not leave Aang while he was injured and unconscious. When Katara pressed her healing water on Aang’s head, he suddenly let out a pained moan, his brow furrowing slightly.

“Aang!” Toph exclaimed at the sound as she blindly searched for his hand. She sighed in relief when she felt him squeeze her hand, although the grip had been weak.

Hearing her voice as if from far away, Aang groaned again before he slowly opened his eyes, wincing at the pain that exploded in his head.

“T-Toph?” he called out feebly.

He blinked when his vision finally focused, although one eye was almost completely shut. He blinked again when he saw his girlfriend and the others staring worriedly down at him. Was he imagining things? The last thing he remembered was the pain from the big earthbender’s relentless blows. Did he lose consciousness? He felt a small, furry paw touch his cheek and he turn his head to see Momo’s large, green eyes peering into his.

“Hey buddy,” he rasped, still disoriented and almost positive he was hallucinating. He focused back on his friends and smiled shakily. “Hey guys. I knew you’d find us.”

“Of course,” Zuko responded as he lightly squeezed his shoulder before he asked in a low tone,
“Was this my…Ozai’s doing?”

Aang swallowed as memories of beatings flashed through his mind before he firmly shoved them away.

“He wanted me to give him back his firebending,” was his simple response.

“The bastard,” Zuko growled low in his throat as his hands clenched.

“Did you capture Ozai and the others?” Aang asked the firebender.

He turned to Katara when he felt her hands stop. He saw her bite her lip and frown before she continued healing the cuts on his face.

“Something’s wrong,” Toph stated as she cocked her head to the side.
“They have Kazu and Ursa,” Katara responded, her tone sounding almost defeated, “We searched the building, but weren’t able to find them.”

“You have to go look for them now!” Aang exclaimed as he tried to sit up only to collapse with a pained gasp.

“We can’t leave you like this,” Katara replied even as her heart yearn to go look after her son.

“I’ll be fine,” he said as he grabbed her hands to stop her healing. “You guys need to go rescue your son and Lady Ursa.”

“Aang,” the waterbender said as she felt her eyes prick with tears at his selflessness before she told herself to calm down. “We don’t know where they have gone,” she said in almost a whisper.

“I think I know where they’re headed,” Toph spoke up with a pensive frown, “The asshole that tried to kill me said something about how he needed to meet with the others at the port.”

She ignored Aang’s horrified question of “who tried to kill you?” as she turned her face in the direction she had heard Zuko speak.

“Does that help?”

“Yes,” the firebender responded as he stood up, his eyes narrowed. “The closest port to here is about two days away.” He turned to his wife, his golden eyes blazing in anticipation. “If we hurry, we might be able to catch them before they board a ship.”

Katara was about to follow his example before she looked back at Aang’s bruised and bleeding face. The healer part of her told her she needed to look after the injured, while her maternal instincts told her to look for her son.

As if sensing her conflict, Suki placed her hand on Katara’s shoulder.

“Don’t worry. Sokka and I will stay and look after Aang and Toph,” she said softly.

“Yes,” Sokka agreed before he urged, “You should hurry and catch up to them!”

“Thanks, guys,” the waterbender said as she stood up next to her husband.

After telling each other to be careful, the royal couple left the room and raced back up the stairs. Just as they stepped out of the house, they came across Iroh, Jee, Shen, Kuo, Jet, and a couple of guards.

The group frowned when they saw the couple shake their heads. They briefly explained that they found Aang and Toph, although the former was badly injured, and Sokka and Suki had stayed behind to help them. Jee explained that they and the soldiers were able to subdue the rebels. Zuko ordered the guards to take the injured Avatar and Master Bei Fong to the palace to have their injuries seen to. Then he ordered them to apprehend Ping and force him to remove Toph and Aang’s stone restraints as soon as he regained consciousness.

“We believe that Ozai and Jianguo have taken Kazu and Mother with them toward the port,” Zuko continued.

“We’re going after them,” Katara added.

“We’ll come with you,” Iroh said, his usual jolly face sporting a deep frown.

“Let’s finished this,” Zuko said in a dark tone as he and Katara headed toward their ostrich horses with the others following behind them.

They would rescue their son and Ursa.

Ozai and Jianguo could not get away. They needed to be punished for what they had done.

Once and for all.
