Tale Of The Underground

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Rating</th>
<th>Explicit</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Archive Warning</td>
<td>Graphic Depictions Of Violence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Category</td>
<td>F/M, Gen, M/M, Multi, F/F</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fandom</td>
<td>Undertale (Video Game)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Relationship</td>
<td>Papyrus/OC, Asgore/Gaster, Sans/Grillby, Papyrus/Reader, Sansby, Gaster/OC, Papyrus/OC/Gaster</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Character</td>
<td>Sans (Undertale), Papyrus (Undertale), Asgore Dreemurr, Toriel (Undertale), OC - Character, W. D. Gaster, Undyne (Undertale), Alphys (Undertale), Grillby (Undertale)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Additional Tags</td>
<td>Reader Is Not Frisk, Reader Is Not Chara, Reader is OC and named as such, Ecto-Tongue (Undertale), Skellysex, Bonezone, Probably fucktons of shenanigans, also adorable fucking papyrus, Skeleton Bros and Gaster are not Canon, Symptoms of Radiation Poisoning being used, Warning: Sensitive content in Chapters 3/6/13, Ecto-Genitalia (Undertale), NSFW in later chapters, Sans is a little shit sometimes, Papyrus is too sweet for life, Technically acts of terrorism occur in this fanfic, skelepreg, Skeleton Pregnancy (Undertale), labor, Childbirth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stats</td>
<td>Published: 2016-08-09 Completed: 2019-04-23 Chapters: 166/166 Words: 1254766</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Tale Of The Underground

by AutobotNightStrider, Silverwingprime

Summary

The barrier had been destroyed, monsters set free from their century-long prison. They had freedom at last, yet Monsterkind was slow to accept this truth. The idea of freedom after so long was almost surreal- But there were still the few monsters that wanted to go, to see just what their beautiful world came to become. After a long discussion between the great king, accompanied by his great advisor, and the officials of the cities closest to the great mountain that hid the monsters away, Monsterkind was given the opportunity to grow under the warm sun, within the safety of foster homes.

But that is not all. Along with dealing with the reintegration of monsters into society, and fighting for them to get basic human rights, the barrier dropping released concentrated magic back into the world. For those humans who descended from monsters, it poses an interesting problem when long dormant magical genes and cells are reactivated violently. Humans and monsters really aren't all that different- but not everyone can see that.

Book 1: Chapters 1-75.

Book 2: 76-155
Strider's notes: So this is a collaboration between Silverwingprime and myself, and it's actually being done in the form of an RP. It's... surprisingly easier to write out like this, rather than sitting down and actually belting out chapters. Odd, huh? Anyways, welcome to TOTU, chapter one. There's probably going to be a lot of sex that happens, a mild bit of horror at one point or another, racism, and a whole other slew of shenanigans. :D Welcome folks, and I hope you're in for the long haul. As it's being done in RP style of writing, it does take some time to get it written out, edited, and whatnot. As it's also in RP style, you can probably expect some odd... thought mixes, or what have you. You'll know them when you see them.

SilverWing Notes: Almost nine years of roleplaying and this is the first time I ever actually publish my writing, I couldn't have chosen anyone better than Strider, as we also had a second story a long time ago that we wanted to publish. I can't wait to see how things go along as this story develops.
Chapter 1

The barrier had been destroyed, and monsters set free from their centuries-long prison only a short time ago. They had freedom at long last, and yet Monsterkind was slow to accept this truth. The idea of freedom after so long almost surreal to them- and the idea of monsters to most of humanity was a terrifying prospect.

But there were still the few monsters that wanted to go, to see just what their beautiful world came to become, just like there were some humans who weren’t as terrified, and intended to welcome Monsters to their world with open arms. After a long discussion between the great king, accompanied by his great advisor, and the officials of the cities closest to the great mountain that hid the monsters away, Monsterkind was given the opportunity to grow under the warm sun, within the safety of foster homes, protected by their human guardians.

Papyrus Aliquam Gaster was proud to wear the royal guard armor he donned on this day. Armed with a bone spear, he happily escorted the latest group of monsters to the clan camp being constructed for the monsters. It was the beginning of a simple village by the Mount Ebott River.

He walked through the camp, even after the carrier carts stopped, greeting builder and pre-settled monsters alike as he approached the largest of the homes. This home belonged to the kind woman who had donated her land to Monsterkind to build and grow on. Many called her an angel, others a miracle worker. He called her his friend, and was honored enough to call her that.

He soon came to the door and reached up, rapping his bony knuckles against the wooden door. He had a warm smile on his face, and a cheerful orange gleam in his sockets as he waited for her to answer.

Tokiko Nara was the first grandchild of the Nara clan heads- and had inherited the large plot when her grandfather had passed away, despite the fact that she wasn’t full blooded Japanese. The family had been here for a long time- probably since the days before the barrier had been erected. As such, she’d been able to do what she wanted with the plot of land, since it was the newer age. No one was required to stay at the clan compound anymore, and so all eight of her brothers, and her mother and father had moved out once she’d reached the age to which she could have run it on her own.

For the most part, the hundreds of sprawling acres of forest, rivers, and fields had been mostly untouched. Some of it was being logged for more housing- the compound itself was not nearly large enough to house all the monsters that she really would have liked to in the long run- but a lot of it was still undisturbed, or being used for her Apiary. Other than her passing hobby as an author, Toki had to make money somehow. Making honey was a lucrative pastime- and she had a natural talent for not being stung.

Since the barrier dropped, the magic that had been released had made the bees ultra busy. As a result, she was kept even busier between helping purchase food for the new monsters arriving, and tending to her hives.

It was little wonder why she was feeling so run-down by everything. She was growing ever more pale, even for a half Japanese woman, as the days wore on. But she wouldn’t trade it for the world. The tales of yore had been true- monsters did exist, and they were an absolute delight to talk with. Of course, not all humans were in agreement with her.

Speaking of monsters- she recognized the sound of bone on wood by now. A smile stretched her lips, and the spindly woman came to answer with a happy gleam to her dark eyes. She pulled back the door, opening it with a welcoming grin. Toki had taken the time to actually make something of herself this morning- though that only amounted to pulling the inky locks of her hair into a loose ponytail and making sure that the bags under her eyes were sufficiently covered by a careful application of some foundation. “Papy!” She beams, overjoyed. “Come in, come in. I trust you’ve gotten everyone here safely?”

"Haha, indeed Miss Nara!” He said happily, entering the home once he ducked his head enough to get inside. Being seven foot six was a little... merciless to your head if you forgot to duck. "It's good to see you are doing well, even with everything you've so kindly done for us monsters. I’m certain you've been very busy- you must be exhausted!"

Her doors were tall- her father, according to her mother, had been a giant of an American, before she’d remarried another, shorter man. When Toki had shot past her mother’s meager height by age ten, they’d agreed to remodel the house to something a little more height friendly. At six foot tall, Toki had readily needed it. And, watching Papy duck into her doorway, Toki was pondering the need for yet another expansion to make it a bit more monster-friendly.

“Oh please, Papy, you know I prefer being called Toki.” His joy is met with another smile. “Would you like to set your things in your room? And yes, I’ve been doing well. It’s been very busy, between my hives and everyone here, but it’s nice to see the compound being put to good use again.” She tried to keep everyone fed and happy- but it was cramped quarters until the actual full sized houses could be built around the modernized compound. “I’m glad everyone’s gotten here safe though.” With the rumors she kept hearing over the radio and news stations on the television… The novelty of the monsters was fading off for some people across the world, and, naturally, the bigots and racists had to rear their ugly heads and cause problems.

Those kinds of people brought shame upon the human race.

"No need, mi'lady! Duty calls and I packed light.” He replied with a soft 'nyeh heh heh', before he pulled a small closed Tupperware from his pack and offered it to her. "Here!"

Of course he did. She shakes her head at his antics- he took his job more seriously than a lot of other people she knew- and gives him a fond smile. The smile shifts to befuddlement when she’s presented with Tupperware, to which she lifts up so she can peer in it. “Spaghetti?” She blinks, before her smile grows. She would pay for it later, but she would most definitely try it. “Ah! You told me you would bring me some of your famous spaghetti! I’ve been so excited to try it.” She gushed happily.

"I certainly hope you enjoy it, Miss Toki! It's only fair that the great caretaker of Monsterkind has fine dining once in a while to keep her on her feet." he said with a smile, "That, and I kinda made too much last night, so I had leftovers.” He admitted, rubbing his head with a soft laugh.
She gives him a wide smile and laughs alongside him. “I don’t know, Papy. Can there ever be too much spaghetti?” It tasted damn amazing, but never agreed with her in the long run. She chuckles gently and motions for him to follow her to the kitchen. “Come- I haven’t had lunch yet, and I’d wager you haven’t either. Care to share some with me? I’ve got some pastries I made that we can put some honey on to go with it. Sound good to you?” Toki would need the sweet sugars to keep her energies up, after all. She had some stuff to get done today- and most of that rhymed with cleaning out all of her hives and making sure the bees had food.

"Oh, I would love to!" he said happily, "But only for a little while, I do have to hurry home, after all!"

Of course he did- he was so busy, like one of her bees hustling from flower to flower to make it home in time. “Of course,” She smiles widely. He’s guided into her kitchen, which is much more monster friendly. It’s obvious she does a lot of babysitting of some of the young ones in the houses around them. A children’s table has been purchased, and has colorful drawings on it and draped over the chairs that surround it in one corner of the kitchen. She guides him to the granite counter top, surrounded by tall chairs, and carefully goes to put the Tupperware into her microwave to heat. She dances to the counter next to it, grabbing some simple tarts she’d made, and grabbing one of her many jars of honey she makes. She sets herself to preparing the tarts- more than they need. The rest are going out to the monsters and workers outside that are so diligently building houses for them.

“Hey, Papy? Can you grab me the plates please? I had one of the taller monsters helping me in here a while back, and they forgot I’m not quite as tall as some of you. It’s in the cupboard above the sink.” Which was well above her grabbing range. She usually had to grab a chair to get it- which is hilarious, because she’s tall for a human.

He smiled at the sight of her happiness, and then he blinked, "Ah! Of course, Miss Toki!" he reached to the cupboard and pulled the door open, reaching in and collecting them with little hassle. "Here we are!"

Toki thanked him with a smile, and began piling tarts onto many plates. She left two plates empty- and soon she put the steaming spaghetti on the plates, not bothering to split it evenly between the both of them. She took the lesser amount, and collected a few extra tarts to make up for taking less, before fetching forks. The plates are set on the table, before she wraps the other honey-tart filled plates up to be sent outside later. “Well, lets eat. It smells amazing,” she admits, her stomach growling eagerly. She takes a seat on one of the tall, wide chairs, and motions for her friend to join her. “How have you been in the Underground? Besides busy, I mean.”

"I've been good! Father has been a fantastic leader for the western districts, and Brother has really stopped being so lazy!" He said happily.

“That’s good.” She nods. The mouth full of spaghetti sends pleasant tingles down her throat, and she hurries to swallow it down so she can eat more. In-between bites of pasta, she takes bites of her tart, enjoying the sweet flavor of the honey and the bland, moist cake that it’s spread on. “My little brother is perpetually lazy too.” She grins, watching him happily. It was always so cool seeing the monsters eat- some swallowed whole, some chewed, it always varied. And how a Skeleton ate without having a stomach was a magical mystery to Tokiko, but she always enjoyed mysteries. “It always took so much prodding from my siblings to get him to get into mischief with us. I’m very convinced that laziness is not something that goes away forever.”

He let out a happy 'nyeh heh heh heh!' at that. "They are pesky, but brothers! Fantastic regardless?"

“Fantastic regardless.” She nods with a laugh. “Nara as a clan are generally lazy though. It comes in varying degrees of severity. My dad always said I was high strung- I enjoy lazing about with the best of them, but I much prefer to be doing things.” Her stomach cramped a bit as she finished her spaghetti, and finished up her tarts. “Your spaghetti was fantastic, Papy. Did you enjoy the tarts?”

"They tasted fit to be eaten by a king!” He replied with a happy 'Nyeh heh heh!

“Good.” She smiles. “Because I was thinking of sending back a crate of honey with your caravan, if you’d like. I think everyone downstairs,” She taps her foot on her floor, silently referencing his home, “would love to get a taste of what the outside can offer. Is that okay with you?”

"Oh, that would be wonderful! I know Father will enjoy the offer of something sweet!"

She nods with a smile, and collects the plates once he’s finished eating. She settles them into the sink to soak- because Honey is many things, and a bitch to get off of the china is one of those things- and turns around to offer him a hum. “I'll make sure a crate is ready for when you leave then. When do you depart?” She’d need to get it packed- she had all the supplies, and she could get it done pretty fast. Not monster-fast, but human fast was good enough.

"Well... I don't think I had a specific ordered return time." he said with a cheeky look, almost one to match that of his brother's.

She can’t hide the laugh that eases her soul. He was always so busy, running to and fro. “Then I’m going to ask you stay and relax a bit. You’re always so busy- but lets get that honey packed up for you first. I’ll get busy and completely space out on doing it otherwise.” She edges past him in the kitchen, and then laughs lightly. “Make sure you leave your spear out here, yeah? Honey jars are fragile, and I will be very grumpy if I have to try and mop up spilled honey. It sticks worse than glue, I swear.”

That said, she leaves him to follow as she leads them to her pantry. The door opens, and on one side is normal foods. The other is loaded with jars and jars of honey, some aged, some still needing time to age to the perfect sweetness. She moves to drag out a travel crate, and begins collecting jars for the trip back. The constant up and down motion makes her head spin some, but she toughs it out to work on packing them safely.

"Nyeh heh heh... Alright...! I suppose I shall help you! A royal guard must also do his best to be a gentleman! Especially to one such as yourself!" He left his spear out, coming into the room to help her.

“You are very sweet,” She smiles. “Probably sweeter than any honey I could make, really.” She stays lower, letting him hand her the jars from the upper shelves. She packs them in, padding them with biodegradable- and edible- packing peanuts. The crate fills up quickly, and soon she’s settling the lid on and using her packing tape to make sure that the top wont open, and the side panels wont open up under the weight. Glass is tremendously heavy with honey in it.

Once it’s together, she hefts it into her arms and stands. She staggers lightly as her head spins, and she sighs as she braces against the shelf behind her. The crate wobbles, but she steadies it with a heft of her arms. Stood up too fast- she hated doing that. “Well, here’s your honey, mister gentleman.”

With a startled noise, he moved quickly and carefully took the crate, "Now, now!" He said quickly, setting it down nearby, before he checked her worriedly. "Are you alright? You staggered pretty roughly there!"

She let him take the crate- idly noting that he didn’t struggle with its weight like she did, much to her amusement. Toki swallows and nods with a smile. Her head swims a bit more, but she’s fine enough as she reaches out to pat his arms reassuringly. “I’m alright, Papy. It’s a human thing- if we stand up too quickly we get dizzy or if we’re not feeling well. It’s not a constant thing, and we only sometimes fall down. I’m pretty used to it.” She admits. “I’m alright, I promise.”

"Regardless! I say you rest!" He insisted, proceeding to pick her up next.

Well, that’s not what she was expecting. She squeaks, fingers looping into his armor as she’s snatched up. “Ah… Thank you? I’ll rest for a bit, but I do have more honey to collect today, and hives to clean.” And many other things too- but she didn’t have the heart to tell him all of them. So Toki smiles and laughs softly, feeling hilariously tiny in the large skeleton’s hold as he hefts her upwards. “I’m not a feather, Papy, so let’s go park it on the couch. You remember where the living room is, right?”

"Of course I do! The great Papyrus has a fantasti-!" He's promptly cut off as his head runs into the arch over the door.

“Ah! Papy!” She leans up, using one arm on his armor to heft her upper body up so she can reach and puts her hand on his skull. Toki gently rubs over where he clocked himself something good, making a soft clucking noise in the back of her throat. “[If you keep running into doors, you’re not going to have such a fantastic memory, you goofball. Let me see- I don’t think you hit hard enough to hurt yourself, but I don’t want to see you hurt.”

The solid wood of her doorframe hardly has a dent- but that sort of sound on bare bone did not sound pleasant. She’d broken a toe on these frames- she could only imagine what they could do to a bare skull.

"Nyeh... I-I'm okay!" he insisted, smiling at her gently as he carried her to the couch. "The great papyrus cannot be so simply defeated! Not even by a door-frame!" he assured her, carefully arranging her on the seat and then sitting beside her.

Once she was seated, she was up on her knees anyways, carefully tugging him down as she eases lightly against his chest. She can see the spot he bonked- a little bit of the stain from the wood had tinged his skull. “Still, Papy, you need to be careful. I don’t know about you magical skeletons, but hitting our heads as hard as you tend to could seriously hurt us. Our bones aren’t as strong as yours are. Speaking of, your skull doesn’t look cracked- but still be careful.” The concerned look on her face is, she hopes, enough to sway him to be a little bit more careful.

He smiled a little, and wrapped his arms around her. Armor certainly wasn’t the most comfortable to recline against, but bone wasn’t much better. ”Tut tut! I'm worrying about you. I don’t want you getting concerned about me! The great Papyrus can take more than just a simple hit on the skull!”

“Still, Papy, you’ve got to be careful.” She relents, and relaxes down against him. Papyrus was a very cuddly person. Toki was too- she’d grown up the eldest of six boys, and all of them had loved big sister cuddle times. It was practically unavoidable, sort of like now. She just sighs and settles as best she can, idly humming. “I always worry- and I’m realizing I’m going to need to renovate the house again. Taller doorways is rapidly becoming a must have.”

"Nyeh heh heh... I'd pity our wonderful king if he was to hit his head!" he laughed softly, "But he'd be so kind, he wouldn't care!"

She laughs softly. “Asgore was very kind,” She nods in agreement. “But he didn’t come inside. He couldn’t get through the front door. We had our lunch out on the lawn. I never thought I’d meet a king, y’know. He was really cool though.” And he had enjoyed her tarts. Honey, as she gathered, was not something the Underground had in spades.
She sighs and settles her head against his shoulder. Inky hair spills over his armor, and she notes that some of the strands fall between the bones of his arms.

He let out a soft laugh, and then he smiled and reached, gently pulling her hair from his arm. "Mm~"

"Sorry about that." She gathers her hair from his fingers, and leans back enough to coil it up into a bun. A quick shift of her hair tie, and soon it was in a sloppy pile, but out of dangling reach. "Hair sort of goes everywhere. I should probably get it trimmed again, honestly."

He smiled and tucked a few strands behind her ear. "Nyeh heh heh! I think it's nice like this!"

Toki can't help but laugh softly, watching as he tucks them behind her ear. The gloves over his fingers brush against the cartilage hoops that decorate the rim of her ear, and she smiles lightly. "I enjoy having long hair." She admits. "But it does get in the way, and sometimes I don't have the energy to braid it every day. The bees like to get tangled in it if I leave it laying flat."

"Why don't I braid it for you?"

His offer was really unexpected, and she blinks up at him in befuddlement. "You know how to braid?" Not all humans knew how to braid- let alone a magical being that didn't even have hair. "You're welcome to braid it if you want!"

"Don't mind if I do!" He repositioned her in a comfortable seat, grinning happily at her back. "May I take your hair tie?" He asked.

She nods softly, and reaches up a tired hand to untangle it. Messy black hair falls free, pooling about the middle of her back. She offers him the white elastic band, and gets settled so he can work over her hair. "Of course you can!" She laughs gently. Facing away from him as she is, she takes the moment to reach up, rubbing at her eyes with a hidden yawn. Welp. There goes her foundation. Eh. Makeup was cheating anyways. Most humans had the dark circles- it wouldn't stand out if she did too.

He smiled and took the band, running his hands through her hair even so gently. He pulled her hair into a long ponytail, and then stroked her hair a little longer before starting to braid it.

Her hair was pretty easy to work with in the long run of things, really. Toki’s hair was pretty straight, only some of the shorter hairs curling and frizzing. She relaxes as his fingers work, propping her chin on her palm as she slouches. He’s better at it than she thought she would be- and Toki finds her eyes drifting shut pleasantly as his fingers work over her hair.

Who’d have thought that skeletons could be good at playing with hair? Or at least making it relaxing, particularly with his battle gloves on.

After skillfully twining the lengths of hair together, he secured it. Papyrus smiled and moved it to drape it over Toki's shoulder. "There we are! All done~"

Her eyes lifted again, dark circles visible below them, once her hair was braided and draped over her shoulder. She shifted back, turning to face him once more, and a smile stretching her lips. "Thanks, Pap. I guess there's nothing that the Great Papyrus can't do, is there?" There's no sarcasm in her voice either- he'd proven capable of doing most anything. Except ducking through doorways.

She shifts and leans back into the couch, slouching into his side with a warm smile. Her back makes a series of popping noises- slouching always did something odd with her spine, but it always felt heavenly after keeping a much healthier posture.
He let out a quiet 'nyeh heh heh' as he wrapped his arms around her. "My dear lady, you must rest!" There might have been some quiet scolding in his voice. "I'll gladly stay here while you sleep, so use me as a pillow if you so wish!" A bright smile widened on his face.

She laughed softly and leaned into him. "Alright, Papy, alright. I'll nap for a little bit- but I do have stuff I need to do today. Wake me in an hour?" She motions to the clock on the wall, where he could check the time if need be. Toki’s legs curled up onto the couch, and the tall woman did a wonderful job of folding up into something much smaller than she actually was.

The bones against her side weren’t the most comfortable to nap on, but Toki was a Nara. She would surely bring shame to her ancestors if she couldn’t manage to nap anywhere, any time, at the drop of a hat.

He looked up at the clock. Once he figured out the time, he smiled and nodded once. "Of course, Good night, Miss Toki~" He said happily.

She can’t help the laugh that bubbles forth. "It’s not even noon, you great goober. But I’ll have a good nap. If you want to turn on the television, the remote is to your left.” Noise wouldn’t bother her, really. Already her eyes were drifting closed, and she was content on snagging a nap leaning against him. She shifts, snuggles closer, and drapes her arms around him so they don’t get squished against her chest.

He smiled down at her, and returned the 'hug' that seemed to be given to him, before he reached and took the remote into his hand, going to take a peek at what was on TV.

The first thing that comes on is cartoons; as the television and all of it’s human marvels seemed to mystify the monster kids, it proved to be an effective way to keep them out from underfoot for hours at a time. She hadn’t changed it over from the last time that she had watched the young ones.

The Amazing World Of Gumball began to play quietly from the speakers.

“Dude, have you noticed that your voice has changed?”

“What, you mean how I sound like a man and you squeal like a piglet on helium?”

True to the context, the voice cracked upon the next sentence. “You take that b-back!”

“Sure, when you ask me like a man.”

“I AM a man!”

“Really? Because right now you sound like a mouse who’s parachute won’t open.”

Toki settled to sleep to the hilarious sound of whatever critter it was lose it’s shit in the highest pitched tantrum she had ever heard.

This was hilarious. Papyrus let out the quietest, 'nyeh heh heh heh~' he could muster.

Toki wouldn’t even stir. Her breathing evens out, dark lashes framing the dark circles under her eyes, and a soft snore wafts up from where she’s cuddled to his armor.
Chapter 2

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: So, chapters are going to be updated as we get them done. Some might be cranked out in days- some might take a week or more. Also from the 26 to September 3rd, we won’t be posting any updates. I’ve got a friend from out of state coming, and I’ll be spending a lot of my time with her. If we think of it, we’ll save a chapter for Silverwing to post while I’m gone.

----

Silverwing Notes: So far I love how this is turning out, but to clear up any confusion you may gain while reading

Caeruleus is the name of the Sans in this story, though it’s his middle name used as a first, so ‘Sans’ may occasionally end up being used instead throughout the story. Chapter 2 in particular, ‘Sans’ starts being used about halfway in, but rest assured, it’s the same character.

Same with Aliquam being used for Papyrus

---------------

Strider Editing Notes (6-10-18): We’re going through slowly and editing the story. Caeruleus is going to stay as Sans’ middle name, so eventually the whole story will just have Sans written as the first. Same with Papyrus- with Aliquam as his middle name. It’s going to be a process though, because there’s a lot of chapters, and only two of us to edit it. Anyway, enjoy reading. Don’t be confused if you see Caeruleus somewhere though, or a Quinn or an Ali- I’m trying to get them all, but it’s not feasible for one person.

Papyrus had managed to stay for dinner that night, which she had mildly demanded after his sweet self had helped her move the bee hives and get them damn near spotless in nearly half the time it usually took, but had had to leave shortly after. She’d sent him out with his crate of honey, and seen the caravan off when he’d had to go, before retreating inside to handle some more legal stuff over the phone. She was also thrilled that she did, indeed, manage to keep from him the lack of good reactions her body had to some tomato-based products.

The following week went smoothly enough- they only had two hiccups. One had been an incident with a worker who reported some less than stellar wood that had been delivered. She’d handled that swiftly over the phone, giving the company CEO the ass chewing of a lifetime, and switched to ordering the stuff they couldn’t get local from over seas. More pricey, but some of the foreign companies were eager to interact with monsters. Some even offered deals on bulk supplies. The second had been a nasty phone call from some people from the Humans Against Monsters, warning her against accepting more monsters. She’d told them where to stuff it, and then hung up.

And at the end of that first week, the first sector of actual housing was up. It was nearest the compound, and the first families that had come there got first pick of the houses. The next sector was scheduled to be finished in a few more weeks- but Toki was enthusiastic. Winter was three or four months away- and the summer nights were pretty chilly. Having heating and proper housing for everyone would be better.
Everything was on a roll, and going well enough that she only had minimal stress. To her disgruntlement, the dark bags under her eyes continued to grow and grow, until she looked damn near bruised.

Naps didn’t seem to help, either. Though the naps were usually amazing, and she did feel more rested after. Toki sorely needed the rest- she was supposed to baby-sit tonight. The adults- monsters and some of the human workers who were building- were gathering in one of the houses tonight to play some card games.

Naturally, Toki had offered to watch the kids for the night. It was a nickelodeon show marathon night anyways, so they would all be engrossed in seeing the new episodes coming out.

So it was little surprise when she woke up, face down at her kitchen table, with some billing papers stuck to her face, and her dark hair spread over the table. She had only closed her eyes for a second… But with a Nara, a second was all it could take.

"Heheh... S’Bout time you woke up, Doll." Came a voice from nearby, before an empty pair of eye sockets came into sight, accompanied by a wide, fixed grin on the monster's face.

The noise that comes from her throat is nothing short of a deflating whoopee cushion- because half-asleep Toki is not a fully aware Toki. The stool she’s been seated on dumps her out as she flails backwards, sending papers flying.

She lands with a thump, and a muffled curse as the eye sockets and grinning skull disappear over the top of her table.

“That’s even better than the whoopee cushion in the hand trick!” The skeleton laughed as he came around the counter top, kneeling beside her to check on her condition. "Hey, you okay?" He asked next, speaking clearly despite his teeth not moving from their closed position.

That was… weird. But magic was strange- how he talked without opening his jaw was beyond her.
Toki pressed a dainty hand to her chest to calm her pattering heart, the other bracing on the ground.
“You probably scared a couple years off my lifespan, but other than that, I’m good.” Dark eyes peered up at the kneeling skeleton, making the dark circles under them stand out more. Other than being bone tired, she wasn’t harmed. Startled and spooked, yes. But sometimes skeletons could be spooky and scary when they were unexpected. “Maybe a bruised tailbone too. And… uh, I think you’re standing on one of my billing papers.” They were, she had to admit, a great instant-wakeup though. Better even than a cup of coffee.

The empty eye sockets were filled with light as pupils appeared in the skeleton's eyes, and he gave a chuckle, the grin growing on his face. He slowly then stood up and peeled the paper from his foot.
"This looks complicated."

“Sans Caeruleus Gaster, I swear to everything that is holy, you are going to be the death of me if you keep scaring me. And then you have to deal with Papyrus when you do.” She huffed, and shifted onto her knees. Still, the smile on her lips takes the sting from her words. Agh. Her ass. The wooden floors were unforgiving to human flesh. Toki doesn’t bother getting up- she hides a wave of dizziness by picking up the scattered papers. “Ah, bills aren’t really that hard. At the start yeah, but it’s all about how you balance your money to make it stretch. These are bills for the lumber I’ve had to import.”

"Oh yeah, I’m so scared." he chuckled, watching her to make sure she wasn't too badly hurt. Other than the dark bags under her eyes and pale tinge to her skin, she’s relatively healthy looking.
Once they’re all collected, the pale woman plants a hand on her table and hauls herself up with a tired groan. She steadies herself on the surface, and then sets her papers down. “What prompted this visit?” She’d officially met him once, but he had only popped up on occasion to scare the bejeebus out of her, or to let Papyrus know he needed to be back sooner. “Oh! Did the crate of honey I sent with Papyrus make it to the Underground alright?”

Upon being given the questions, Sans grinned.

"Just thought I’d come deliver some supplies for you." He told her. "As for the honey, yeah. Al made sure to share it well enough with everyone."

She fixes her seat and takes the bill back from Sans with a tired smile. She nudges another over for him to take a seat upon, and then wanders to the fridge to collect a drink for herself. “Would you like anything to drink? I bet your mouth is bone dry if you were waiting for me to wake up. I’m glad the honey got there though. It was awfully sweet of you to deliver news and supplies.” She’d need to prepare another crate to send to everyone. But it could wait for now; she had an unexpected guest to entertain after all. “Did you get to try any of it? If not, I could make up some honey tarts for you to try.” She could whip him up some honey tarts if he wanted- she needed to make some for the kids anyways.

Monster kids were enamored with the honey tarts- though apparently they weren’t as energizing or rejuvenating as the magic infused ‘monster food’. Toki hadn’t actually tried any of that yet- she wasn’t sure it was good for human consumption, and would rather the kids get the meals better suited for their own nutrition.

He chuckled at that, "Sure, why not. Love that you've been practicin' your puns, by the way. " He said, sitting down with a grin. "Got any ketchup?"

“I’ve been trying, but I’m not very good at them yet.” She admits shyly. She putters around the kitchen, and collects a few tarts, slathering a good helping of honey on top. She doesn’t bother making any for herself- she’s too run down to really benefit from the sugar at this point. She does, in fact, have ketchup. She fetches her bottle from the fridge once the tarts are finished- including the extra ones for the hoards of little ones that she’s going to be watching later- and sets in front of him his tarts, his ketchup, and a glass for him to pour the ketchup into. Toki settles across from him, a glass of water in hand, and casually scrubs her fingers across her eyes tiredly. “It’s probably not as good as the type you’ve got in the underground, but store-bought ketchup isn’t bad.”

"Well I'm proud of you, regardless, sounds like you're really putting your funny bone to good use." He purred, taking the ketchup and poking the nozzle into his mouth. "Mmh."

“Well aren’t you just humorous, sugar.” A smile tugs at her mouth and she can’t help the snort that leaves her. “Guess you didn’t need the glass.” She laughs softly, and turns back to her papers so he can eat without her ogling him. It was rude to stare, after all- and she hadn’t seen him open his mouth since they met.

She purses her lips, finding another company who would have liked to jack up the price. She scanned down the price, comparing the quality of goods with where she was getting from in other places, and frowned. Ugh. She must have missed this one earlier. She was only recently teaching herself what was good lumber and what wasn’t- she was a beekeeper, not a forestry nerd after all. A drawn out sigh leaves her, and she sips her water as she scans the page, frown growing. She’d need to make the call to them shortly.

He chuckled softly, enjoying his ketchup for a little longer before he lowered it to the table. "Is everything okay?" He asked after noticing her upset aura.
“Nothing’s ever fully okay.” She sighs. Idly, she waves the paper. “I’m a beekeeper by trade, so I’ve had to do research on the types of wood and materials I’ve been buying to build houses for everyone. All of this stuff is pretty new to me. I’m finding out that some of the places I’ve made orders to be less truthful about the quality of the wood. I managed to cancel those orders and gotten them switched to a better supplier. Well, except this one, apparently. I’m going to have to call and have a word with whoever runs the business. This sort of wood here isn’t something that would survive the winters here. First time a branch slams into it, we’d have a hole in the house.” She groans, head thudding down onto the table. She was pretty run down, doing all of this on her own, and it showed in her posture and energies. “I’ll work on it though. I’m going to have to double check all of my orders and keep an eye on them.”

"I could see about makin’ a couple o’ deliveries for you." He offered. "Plus I could ask around for some hints or advice. I happen to know a few things about buildin’ and keepin’ a house.”

Toki blinks up at him slowly for a minute, before she nods hesitantly. “The deliveries of goods would be helpful. Any advice you hear along the way would be infinitely helpful too, really.” She does motion a finger out the window though, pointing at the large number of builders skillfully putting together houses in a plethora of sizes. There were some massive monsters, after all. “I think we’ve got the building bits down though. The only thing I need to actually schedule to be remodeled is my doors- because I swear to god your brother is going to brain himself one of these days.”

She props her elbow on the table and her chin into her palm. Dark, tired eyes gaze at his eye sockets and she hums a small thoughtful sound. “Sorry about any grumbling you might hear- I’m just a bit run down. Keeping up with everything and keeping it all in order on your own is exhausting.”

He laughed at that. "Hey, don’t worry about it!" He assured her. "Also, if you think it’s bad with Pap, you should see how my old man suffers.” He snickered as he remembered how much his father would abhor going through doorways before they fixed the house.

A fond smile crosses her face, and she chuffs a soft laugh. “I haven’t met your dad yet, but I imagine he’s probably in the same boat as King Asgore was. We had to have lunch on the lawn- he nearly got stuck in the door.” She had never seen a goat-monster blush before, and it was a sight ingrained deeply into her brain. Toki hums, and gives Sans a more serious look. “Hey. I want you to be careful while you’re out and about making deliveries or getting information. Spread the word to Pap, and the other caravans. I got a call a few days ago- from some anti-monster group. I told them where to shove it, but humans can be terrible creatures. I just want you all to be careful, okay?”

"Hey of course, Doll." He winked at her. "Humans are scary and all, but they can’t do shit against a Boss Monster like me!” He laughed.

“You haven’t seen some of the advanced weapons.” She smiles dryly, pale cheeks dusting a light pink at his wink, but keeps a serious look on her face. She idly points a finger to the honey treats that he had yet to consume, reminding him in passing that he did have treats to nibble. “Guns for one. They’re probably faster than you can move. But anyways, not all of you are boss monsters, you know? It’s the monsters that can’t defend themselves well that should be warned. The guard’s here know- they’re keeping an eye out for me but we’re keeping it quiet so as not to scare the children and parents. Still… You guys have been underground for a long, long time. I don’t think you understand the capacity for cruelty that humanity can have.”

He glanced at them with a soft ‘oh yeah...’ and took one. He listened to her as he started to consume the sweet treat. By the end of her speech, he shook his head. "Oh, trust me, doll... You’d be surprised just how well I do when it comes to dodgin’ blows." The assurance came easy from him. "Well, once we get more residents up here, I may just take up role as a guard.” He told her cheerfully.
“You’d be welcome here as a guard.” She nods with a hesitant smile. “We’re growing larger here every day.” Eventually they’d probably become a legitimized city in their own, if the population kept growing. Or at least considered a small town- and would probably need to name it if it came to that. Still, she frowns at him. “If you’ll be here long today, I’ll show you my rifle. Bullets are hard to see, and even harder to dodge if the one wielding the gun has good aim.”

"I've gone up against a knife before," he shrugged loosely, "a gun cant be that bad." He chuckled, before he patted her shoulder. "Well, don't worry about not-so-little old me," He purred, "I'll make sure to come out on top if it means protectin’ everyone, especially you.”

The large, bony fingers that patted her shoulder did nothing to ease her nerves. He really didn’t understand the concept of guns, did he? She would definitely need to teach him about them- and all of the monsters as well, come to think of it. They needed to be prepared for what they would come up against. It took her a moment to register the charming purr that accented his last words- and the brilliant flush that blossomed over her face embarrassed her. She wasn’t anyone worth protecting, really.

Toki didn’t get the chance to expand upon the importance of gun-knowledge and his lack of it. The back door opened, and the quick pitter-patter of paws announced the arrival of a little houseguest.

Thumper was one of the monster children she habitually babysat. The little boy was as sweet as he was fluffy- but he had a stubborn streak a mile wide. Thumper was clad in a pair of overalls, his gray fur standing out against the dark denim. His feet were bare- and she was glad of it as he barreled into her middle with almost enough force to bruise her skin.

She hid a pained grunt, and instead stroked a hand over his head as he whimpered in her lap. She smoothed his ears down, blinking at purple eyes as his soft nose twitched in distress.

“Miss Nara, I was bad. I dared Twitch,” Who was another bunny monster she babysat, “to climb one of the trees…”

“The ones I told you not to climb?” She gave him a firm look, eyes briefly glancing to Sans to let him know that their little gun-safety talk was not over. She didn’t hesitate, standing up and propping the heavy child onto her hip. He settled easily- she’d gotten wide hips from her dad’s side of the family- and nodded into her neck.

There were some trees in her ‘back yard’ area of sorts that were ones that had been there for centuries. They were ‘family heirlooms’ of sorts, and were impossibly tall and hard to climb. They also offered the best view of the little village that was sprouting up- so naturally it had several children wanting to climb them.

“Yeah… Twitch is stuck. She’s afraid to climb down now.”

“You did good in coming to get me, Thumper. Lets go get Twitch, okay? I’ll be right back, Sans.” And then she’s heading out the door, mind shifting gears onto getting Twitch down.

"If this is a rescue mission, then I don’t see why I have to stay behind.” he chuckled as he followed her, knowing his magic would make this job a lot easier.

“It’s not so much a rescue mission as a retrieval one. Again.” She didn’t particularly care if he followed- but it was presumptuous to assume he would in the long run, hence giving him the option to opt out. Toki hefts Thumper slightly higher, and her long legs make the trek through the house and out to the family trees easily. There’s a small gathering of bunny monsters at the base, and they’re looking upwards.
She spots Twitch near the top, her light pink fur a sharp contrast to the bland green leaves of the tree. Pursing her lips, she sets Thumper with the rest of the little ones and makes her way to the trunk.

The young rabbit monster didn’t linger with the others- he latched onto the nearest other adult he could cling to. Which happened to be Sans’ leg, as the little rabbit watched the top of the tree nervously.

“Twitch, sugarplum? You stuck up there, baby girl?”

“Uhuh… ‘s far down.”

And it was. Toki had grown up getting into similar such situations, until she got tired of watching her dad get the ladder every time she had climbed up. She hadn’t climbed it in years- but honestly, how hard could it be? “Alright, Twitch. You stay put, all right? I’m coming up for you.”

Toki cracked the knuckles of her fingers loudly, discarded her house slippers at the base of the trunk, and then began to work her way up the tree through long familiar handholds.

How hard can it be… Sans rolled his non-existent eyes and then chuckled and reached to ruffle Thumper's fur. "Be careful, Toki."

“Ha! I’ve only fallen out of here twice! I’ll be fine, Sans.”

Toki made her way up swiftly, slipping a couple times when the old bark gave below her bare feet. She squirmed up until she could reach Twitch- but was unprepared when the terrified rabbit monster leapt into her chest with an upset sound when the wind rattled the branches roughly. She didn’t even need to coax her- the rabbit wanted down, obviously.

Sharp claws caught on her ribs as the young monster latched onto her chest, driving the air out of her lungs with the force of her grasp. Toki braced herself with one hand, the other coming around the trembling bunny. She managed to snag a thin dangling branch, but otherwise would have gone over backwards out of the tree.

“Hey now,” She smiled, “I’ve got you. You, ah, you’re going to be alright, Twitch.”

“Not comin’ up again…” The sulky words were muffled by Toki’s chest, but she got the gist of them easily enough anyways.

“See to it that you don’t,” She chuckles softly, tugging on the branch to try and pull herself upright again.

There is an ominous crack as the branch breaks, and then a shrill noise of Twitch’s cry, which is mirrored by the bunnies tittering down below. Toki doesn’t scream- but she does curl her arms around the child and hold on because OW those are branches whipping across her back and sides, and that is the ground rapidly approaching.

There might have been a startled noise that came from between his teeth. With the realization of the danger, Sans’ eye socket lit up bright blue and he lashed a hand out, power whirling outwards and turning both Toki’s and Twitch’s souls blue as he caught them in his magic.

The sudden stop from their fall was jarring- but it was more so the sheer burning that overtook her soul that hurt the most. Whatever Sans was doing- whatever it was that was making his eye glow like that- it burned to high hell, like something was shoving a hot spear through the very center of her person. She shivered, gooseflesh pebbling up across her pale hide, pain flashing briefly across her face.
Her arms tightened around Twitch as a thin sheen of sweat broke out across her forehead. She was upside down, but she shot Sans a shaky but grateful look as she was lowered down.

“That… WAS SO AWESOME!” Thumper all but bounced next to Sans, watching the skeleton save Twitch and his babysitter with the blue magic.

He slowly lowered them to the ground and let them go once they were close enough to the ground.

"Are you alright?"

Toki landed with a soft thud on the grass, and her breath whooshed out of her lungs. She sat up, taking deep breaths as the burning sensation lingered. The little rabbit’s claws had scratched her through her shirt, but she hurt more inside than she did outside. Her arms trembled faintly, and she stroked a hand down Twitch’s back with a soft croon. “We’re alright.” She nods shakily to Sans.

“Thank you. Twitch? Sugar? You alright?”

“U-u-uhuh.”

Ah. Tears. Toki gives a fondly bemused smile, and simply strokes a hand down the little one’s back. She makes a vaguely aborted motion to get up, but instead just stays sitting until her limbs stop feeling like overcooked noodles.

“That was AWESOME! How did you do that? Is that blue magic? That’s SO COOL. Can you lift anyone? Can you lift me? Is it FUN?” Thumper has pulled the gaggle of little ones into bouncing around near Sans- all of them mirroring his excited cheers. Now that the danger had passed and no one had splattered on the ground, the trauma was out of sight and out of mind.

"Hang on there kiddos, lemme check on Toki real fast, then I’ll answer your questions.” He moved for her, slightly faster than his usual lumbering gait.

The kids pouted, but did stay put. They knew better than to crowd around a monster that had gotten scared- bunnies could be ferocious when they felt cornered.

Toki focused firstly on Twitch, soothing the bunny until she let her go. Once the pale pink bunny had settled back in her lap, Toki smoothed her hands over her cheeks and looked her over firmly.

“You look like you’re alright. Are you going to do it again?”

“N-no, Toki…”

“Then I’m not going to scold you. That scare was punishment enough. But if I find you guys climbing them again, I will tell your parents.” And it wasn’t an idle threat either- Toki was a notorious ‘tattler’ when it came to misbehaving little ones. When Twitch simply sniffed, Toki gently patted her head, and let the bunny up. “Go play, okay? I’m going to lay here and let my heart catch up with the rest of me.”

Twitch got up, hugged Toki roughly around the neck for a moment, and then hopped to her friends. The children were sufficiently distracted from the adults as they began to grill Twitch on what it felt like to be levitated, and what it was like up that high, and the like.

Toki lay back in the grass with a grimace, hair and clothes askew, and peered up at the tall skeleton.

“Looks like you’ve got fans.”

Sans sat besides her, his ever-present grin revealing nothing. "Very true by the looks of it. But first I’m gonna at least make sure you're okay."

“I’m alright,” She smiles at him wryly. “I’m laying down- nothing can be bad when you’re laying down. I have some scratches from Twitch, but scratches heal. Besides that… Is your magic supposed to burn? Blue doesn’t make me think fire- but that was sure warmer than I expected it to be.”

"No... That shouldn't have hurt a bit." The tilt to his smile changes, and it takes her a moment to translate that to meaning that he was worried. “Any idea why you'd have some sort of reaction to it?”

“No? Besides me being under the weather… Maybe magic just isn’t supposed to be used on humans like that?” She shifts and sits up slowly, face flushing lightly as her vision wavers. Alright, that’s not normal. What the hell. “I am mildly dizzy.”

The silence is alarming. Sans looked at her, pupils small and faint. Planting his hand on her shoulder, he guided her down onto the lawn again. "Easy... easy..."

“Sans, really,” She gave him a dry look. “Humans get light headed at random. I did spend several seconds upside down and floating- that does odd things to the human body. I’m not going to break if I sit upright.” Still, she closes her eyes with a sigh, air rolling from her nostrils as she remains flopped in the grass. It’s summer, and the patch of shade they’re in is practically chilly.

He looked down at her, and then he sighed. "I'm going to get you somethin' to drink, alright?" though he didn't really wait as he stood up to go back.

“Make sure it’s not Ketchup, and I’ll take it.” Of course Toki isn’t likely to remain laying there while he’s gone- but as he heads back for the house, she contemplates not moving. Still, laying there like a lout wasn’t going to make her any better. She rolled over and clamored onto all fours, waving at the kids lightly. “Go play, you guys. Sans and I need to talk- and you lot need to stay away from the trees.”

“Alright, Toki!” The mob of children bounced from the yard, and she had an inkling that they probably were not done with Sans.

She watches them go, and then wobbles up onto her feet.

He came out after a little with some lemonade, a worried frown now on his face rather than his trademark grin.

She hadn’t technically moved from that spot, though she was upright now. Ish- more like bent at the waist staring intently at some grass, and wishing it would stop doing strange things in her vision. The door opening and closing draws her gaze, and she waves faintly. “Lemonade? Good choice.”

He came over and sat beside her, holding the straw out to her, “Here, thought you may need this...”

He didn’t know much about this feeling, but he had some knowledge about this... plus a straw was always helpful.

Toki stayed standing when he sat- she was wobbly and had a feeling she probably should sit somewhere that she didn’t have to get up from any time soon. The lemonade is appreciated, and she leans to take a sip from it. She’s not dumb enough to take the glass- she’d probably drop it with as unsteady as her limbs feel. “The sugar always helps.” Toki agrees lightly. It was sweet and tangy and delicious. “Thanks, Sans. For catching me, and for the lemonade. I’ve fallen out of that tree before- the landing sucks.”

He nodded gently. "You're doing monsterkind a great service, I’d hate to let anything happen to ya’." He assured her warmly.

She swallows another mouthful, and then makes to straighten up. “Eh, something’s bound to happen sooner or later. I am only human, after all. Trouble tends to follow us in spades. Thanks for your concern though- you're sweeter than you let on, y'know?"

Toki grimaces lightly as she straightens, and then offers a wobbly hand to help him up. “C’mon, lets go inside before the kids remember their questions and mob you.”

He laughed and nodded, declining her hand before moving to get up by himself. "I'm admittedly a bit of a softie," he smirked, following her inside. "Heh, but uh, don’t worry about the kids, doll."

She makes it to the kitchen, and collapses down onto the stool. She shivers, goose bumps running rapidly up and down her bare arms as she watches him shut the door behind them. “I’m softer than you still- in more ways than one. Hence why I’m usually volunteering to watch the kids, monster and human alike.” She takes the lemonade glass from him, setting it carefully down on the table, and lets her head thud onto the cool wood. She groans quietly.

"Careful now," He hums. “You know, my old man is a doctor, I could see if he’d be alright with making the journey to come see you.”

“Isn’t he usually busy though?” She lifts her head to give him a tiredly curious smile, hair spilling over her shoulders in messy loops. “I mean, if he doesn’t mind, sure. If not, it’s no bother. I have to get another doctor in the city anyways.” The one she’d had since she had become an adult had proved to be horrifically monster-phobic, and she wasn’t going to support such bigotry. "It's probably easier for me to drive to town than it is for him to make a several-day trip here." Though with the dizzy spells, it was probably not nearly as safe.

"He can shortcut like I can. It'd only be a day at the longest.”

“Shortcut- Oh! Your instant-Toki-scaring trick.” She snorts lightly and laughs. “Again, if he’s busy, it’s not a problem. Would he know how to treat a human patient? Monsters and humans are similar, but we’ve got our differences.” Like them being composed of magic- and humans being fleshy, meaty squish bags that bruised easily.

"I'm sure he would." He nodded once more. “Yeah.”

“Then if he’s got a free moment when you head home, I wouldn’t mind you asking.” She smiles wryly. “Having a magical teleporting doctor would be nifty. No more three hour drives to the city, yeah?” They were a long ways out from most civilization. The fire department was an hours drive away, and the police just a little farther- but she did have neighbors between there and her estate.

Smiling, Sans made a mental note as he nodded a few times. "Of course. And my old man is a good doctor. A damn good one, really. I'm sure you'll like him."

“I’m sure I will. Think he’ll like me?” A smile is given to him, and she shifts in her seat, finishing her lemonade and then going to put the glass in the sink. To her credit, she doesn’t wobble, though her legs feel weak and unstable. Taking a deep breath, she steels herself, and turns to him with a wry smile. “Now back to our previous conversation. If I was feeling better, I’d take you out back right now and show you just what guns are, and why they should not be placed anywhere near the same category as a knife fight. Right now, I’m more likely to probably shoot myself in the foot again, so for safety’s sake, we’ll have to postpone that.”

She leans over to instead turn on the kitchen television, which is tuned to the news station. This particular channel is mostly about the monsters and some monster named Mettaton- who was apparently a rapidly growing celebrity among the humans- so it’s no surprise when it clicks over and general talk about monsters happens. She puts it on mostly for background sound- to drown out the loud sound of someone using a jackhammer to break up some rocks.
The volume is low- but Sans is closer to it than Toki was, so she doesn’t bother turning it up. She’s not sure how hearing works for skeletons, but she doesn’t want to deafen him.

The news caster looks perturbed by something, and she strains her ears to hear what he’s saying. “-been cases of humans coming down with what looks to be like radiation poisoning in the area around Mt. Ebott. The doctors say that some of the earliest cases seem to be… I don’t even know how to describe it.”

A picture of a little girl flashes on the screen- sickly, pale, with dark circles under her eyes- and then it’s the same girl obviously sometime later, but with scales blossoming across her cheeks. She looks healthier, like whatever happening is healing her.

He noticed and cocked an eyebrow that seemed to just linger over his face. ".... Magical mutation?" He questioned quietly. He then realized something suddenly, and he looked over his shoulder to look to Toki... This... this was definitely a plausible variable.

Toki looks befuddled. “If there was some actual radiation happening, it would be happening to everyone within range of the mountain. Radiation isn’t selective.” Her bees would have rapidly died off, a sure sign that something was wrong. She leans over to turn it up slightly.

“Akitoki Akizawa is the brilliant MD who began to notice the changes. He’s unable to be here with us today, but he did send us a few bits of information. It says here, that they don’t actually have any detectable radiation. He also says that those afflicted with monster mutation have a genetic difference from those not afflicted. Akitoki has yet to release information concerning what this difference is, but he thinks he might be able to pinpoint the exact genetic anomaly if he can get a base test from what he hypothesizes is the cause of the mutations.”

The lady next to the man clears her throat, and shakes her head. “No word on if King Asgore has been made aware of this, or of Akitoki’s desire for a sample of monster DNA.”

"There was a request of a monster doctor sent to the king, and he has answered that he indeed has a doctor he can offer to give advice, however, there has been no word from said 'Doctor'.”

Sans clenched his fists slightly and he sighed, turning away from the TV.

Toki grimaces and turns it off. It’s not hard to see that it’s upsetting him- and she’d rather not deal with an angry skeleton. Papyrus she isn’t sure is capable of ever getting angry, but Sans… Well, the ones that smile are the ones to watch out for.

She hesitates, wobbling in place, and then steps forward to place her hand on his shoulder. “He’s probably busy, Sans. Humans don’t do well with… radiation poisoning. Or poisoning of any type, now that I think about it. I imagine he’s swamped trying to keep all of those poor children alive.” It all seemed sort of unreal- and she was obviously confused, despite her attempts to soothe the larger monster.

"They’re talking about my dad... I can tell..." he growled quietly.

“Well… They’re probably concerned for a good reason. The sort of symptoms those people are dealing with are sorta… scary, to be honest.” She recalls the sharp burn of his magic in her body, and the hand on his shoulder trembles slightly. “I don’t see what’s bad about them mentioning your dad though. They didn’t say anything bad about him.”

"By mentioning he's given only silence could easily be twisted to say he doesn't care about humanity.”
“Technically they said they had no word yet- which means that Akitoki hasn’t released everything to them yet. They had only a few notes- which means they’re very vague at best.” The room seems darker to her, and it takes her a minute to figure out why. She steadfast ignores it, and gently bumps his shoulder with her fingers to distract herself away from it. “Why don’t you pop home and let King Asgore know about the news broadcast?”

Sans blinked once, and then he nodded. “R-Right... I’ll tell Pops to stop by when he gets the chance.” He then turned and gave her a gentle hug, smiling in a softer way. “You be careful, Toki” he told her firmly.

As he looped his arms around her- even with his plush jacket, she could feel the hard bone and magic what was his body below- she shivered faintly and returned the hug warmly. She never really noticed- but like how humans radiated warmth, the monsters seemed to radiate a type of heat too.
“I’ll be alright, Sans. I know my limits.” She gives him a wide smile. “Tell Papyrus I said hello, and to not be a stranger. It’s awfully lonely without you guys around sometimes.”

He chuckled at that and pressed his closed grin to her forehead. The smooth bones left a small dent in her soft skin where he left his kiss, before he took a step back away from her.

"See ya, Doll~"

He didn't move, but the next time she blinked, he was there no longer.

Toki lasted a few more minutes in the kitchen, before her stomach clenched and she had to scurry to the bathroom as it rebelled.
Toki made it through the night of babysitting by the skin of her teeth. Thankfully the children believed that she was sore from being tackled up in the trees, and were on their best behavior. She spent the evening between watching them, and hiding frequent trips to the bathroom while they watched the news about all of the people who were getting sick.

She’s not certain they believed her about the heat bothering her insides- and it occurred to her much later that night that they could probably hear her retching in the bathroom.

The woman was fine enough the following day though, and that seemed to calm the innocent worried titters that the children’s parents kept making. Tokiko was not the only tattletale- and children were known to gossip when they were concerned with something. She had many adults checking in on her through the day- and the honest kindness of these monsters warmed her soul.

She was watched well into the evening, when she finally convinced them that she was all right, and that it was probably just stress eating at her.

Toki was glad too, because come the following day after- marking two days past Sans’ visit- a large clump of inky hair came free from her head and spilled across the floor. She had been quick to pick it up and toss it away, worry nibbling at her soul. With the constant chatter of dubbed ‘MRS’, she was beginning to doubt that it was just stress. Cases of MRS, or Monster Radiation Sickness, were growing in number as more and more people had contact with the area around Mt. Ebott, and the monsters that ventured further and further to foster homes across the county.

She made the decision early in the morning that she’d make the trek to the doctors in a couple days. If Sans’ and Papyrus’ father hadn’t visited by then, it was obvious he wasn’t going to.

Despite the fatigue and lightheadedness she kept experiencing, and lack of appetite from continual nausea, Toki still had things to do. So she set out around noon to go check on the beehives, toting out a bottle of water to stay hydrated, and her large container of supplemental honeybee food for her colonies. Her stomach churned, her vision swooned, and her legs shook, but damn it all, no one knew her bees as well as she did.

She waved to one of the wolf-like guards that patrolled the forest as he was heading back towards the house, getting one in return. He would keep an eye on her, she figured. Toki might have been an adult by human standards, but all of the adult monsters still treated her like she was a fragile child at times.

They swarmed her clothes as she approached, lingering for a moment before giving her space. Some still brushed through her hair, fuzzy bodies tickling along her skin as they investigated her. She didn’t doubt that they could smell that something was wrong with her- there were studies that had bees trained to detect cancer by the smell of someone’s breath, after all. She set to pouring out the measured amounts of food, leaving it atop each hive as she made her way down the rows.

Toki made it down the rows and back to the start of her hives, before her stomach lurched. A sour taste filled her mouth, and she hurried to set her supplies down and get away from the hives. She made it a few steps, before she gagged, and vomited.

Thick and irony, a wave of blood filled her mouth and spilled down into the pale grass.

"TOKI!" Without warning a worried yell cut the air and the familiar form of Sans was at her side, a hand on her back as he squatted to see her face. "Holy shit, are you okay??" It wasn’t so much a question as it was a demand, and the worry in his voice was palpable. "That's not normal for humans, is it?!!"

She had a hand curled into her hair, keeping the dark strands out of the way. Toki would probably have jumped out of her skin if she hadn’t been mid-heave, and it took her a minute of choking to clear her throat enough to answer him. “Humans aren’t supposed to vomit blood.” Her voice is raw, teeth and lips red with stuff that’s supposed to be in her veins, not in her stomach. She chokes again, gagging on another wave, and nudges him away so he doesn’t stain his footwear with the growing splashes of blood.

Toki at least manages to avoid splashing him with it, and regrets sucking a breath in through her nose. The rich, tangy stench of blood does not belong with the sour odor of stomach acids. It leaves her coughing, struggling to stay standing against a rush of fatigue.

"Tsk... How unfortunate..." There was a new voice speaking now, a man’s voice, deepened with great age and greater concern. This voice definitely belonged to someone older than Sans.

"It seems the situation at hand is more dire than you had explained, my son." A pale white hand reached and gently hooked two knuckles on her chin, tilting it upward. She’d come face to face with a monster she could only compare to a beast. He was currently lowered beside her, but if he were to rise to full height, she’d guess he’d easily pass Sans by a foot at the least.

"We don’t want any of that going up your nose. Stars above know that would burn something nasty, hm?" Soft purple eyes maintained eye contact with Toki as he raised a handkerchief up in his unoccupied hand, carefully wiping her face so the smell of blood was residual alone. He then turned the cloth in his hand and held a part of it over her nose. "No doubt some went up your nose, blow please."

Toki could only presume this man was Sans’ father- particularly when he calls him outright as his son. They didn’t really look similar, but she imagines it’s hard for a skeleton to really look like anyone. She swallows thickly as her face is cleaned, and gives him a curious look as she leans into the cloth. Blowing her nose into someone’s hand was not something she ever expected to have to do again- not since she’d been but a toddler with a cold. Still, she does, and there’s some relief to the burning in her throat and nose, and to the smell that she can’t shake from her nostrils.

“I wasn’t this bad when Sans left. This is the first time it’s been blood that I threw up.” She rasps, a shiver trembling over her. The addition to new people out and about has stirred the bees, and a few of them wander close hesitantly. She’s not sure if they really know her as safe or not, but she’s not eager for them to decide they don’t like the extra people around. Her brothers always got stung whenever they came out with her. “And, ah, yeah. It’s burns pretty bad anyways.”

Toki’s stomach hurts- but there’s nothing left for her to heave up now that it’s all splattered on the ground. She coughs though, and shakily straightens. Her water bottle is in her pocket- and she takes a moment to take a mouthful, swish, and then spit out the pink tinged water. “You might want to watch your feet. Human blood stains something fierce.” And she’d feel bad if either of them got it on them- how would one even get blood off of living bone?

"Then it means that perhaps I still may be able to do something about it." He said softly. At the warning of the blood, he only chuckled softer yet. "I'll be alright. Blood on your feet is only as bad as mud; a good scrubbing will get it out of skin with no issue. However, right now I’m more concerned about you." The handkerchief was tucked away and he instead moved his hands into a supporting position to hold her. "Come, we must get you inside. If your case of MRS is this severe, than I have only so much time before you become immune to my treatments."

“Blood doesn’t come off floors half as easy as it does your feet then.” Wood was absorbent- and carpet even more so. Toki isn’t ultimately hard to support- she might be tall and wide-boned, but she was mostly a twig. Didn’t make her wobbly legs any stronger, but probably made it easier for him.
She hesitated, and made use of Sans’ shoulder to step around the puddle of gross on the ground. “It’s treatable?” Toki wobbles, and her bottle of water falls from her fingers. Oh well. The grass needed watered anyways. “Is it even MRS?” She hadn’t shown any signs of change- no extra hair in places it shouldn’t be, no new body parts, or scales, or anything of the sort.

Sans ended up picking her up, holding her close, as he made sure she could see his father who indeed was a good two feet taller than his son.

"That is what I suspect it to be. Your symptoms seem to be consistent enough. It could not be radiation poisoning alone, due to the concern that it indeed would cause an effect on more than just you." He explained, "I need to further look into this, into you, before I’ll be able to come up with any more conclusions."

Toki could not help but feel that she was surrounded with horrendously strong giants. “You are all ridiculously tall.” She coughs slightly and bites her lip as she leans into Sans. Being carried by a skeleton is not a particularly pleasant experience in this circumstance- but she makes due. Besides, he can walk straighter than she can. “The humans that I’ve heard of on the news didn’t have any actual signs of radiation.” She adds lightly. “Uh… If it helps your conclusions any, it got worse when I had to be caught with magic. It, ah, burned to be snagged with it.”

The purple gaze moved to Sans, questioning him silently.

"Yeah, Pops. I had to catch her last time I was here with my magic."

"I see.” That was all that was said by the taller, before he strode ahead. In gaining distance ahead of them, it revealed a long skeletal tail that followed behind the taller monster, armed at the end with a strong, sharp looking blade.

Toki watches him walk ahead of them, and then looks up at Sans. Blood is flecked on her lips again-no doubt brought up from her throat when she coughed. She’s warm in his arms- but she feels cold too. “What does he prefer to be called, by the way?” The one holding her was pretty fluid between being called Sans or Sans as far as she knew. He never hinted that one or the other bothered him.
The tail on the taller one worried her briefly- because that was sharp, and long, and he was probably going to knock over so many things in the slightly cramped floor space of her house.
He smiled down at her. "You could call him Gaster if you wanted to. In his career, you've got a few to call him, knowing him, though; he won't insist you call him 'Doctor Gaster.' You're a good friend of his boys', so chances are he won't mind you using his first name."

After making sure the taller monster didn’t run into the door in that moment, Sans looked back to Toki. "His name is Tenebris."

She smiled up at him sweetly, but it faded to a grimace as her empty stomach twisted and cramped.
Looping her arms around her middle, she gives him a pale-faced smile. Nothing left to vomit- but if she gags in his arms, she’d never live down the puns. “Tenebris huh? Pretty sweet name. I’ll stick with Gaster for now though, until he says otherwise.”

She watches the taller monster for a minute, as they all file inside her house, and squirms slightly.
“Where are you going to put me at?”

"Well, he'll either want you on the couch or the table. Either way, he'll have a bucket for you in case you get close to puking again."

“Couch.” She says lightly. “We can move the coffee table to give you all more space.” She was also cold- and her shivering was growing noticeable, and it felt like it was shaking her down to her bones.
There were blankets there that she could wrap around herself to keep warm with. “Gaster,” she calls out a bit louder. “Bucket’s are in the closet next to the hallway.”

There was an 'Ah.' from the doctor as he got into the closet and pulled out a pair of buckets, keeping one nearby as he brought the other to where Sans was laying Toki down on the couch.

"Where’re the blankets, doll?" The younger of them sounded so worried about her while helping Tenebris move the table back so he could have enough room to kneel down.

However, she no longer needed to answer as the taller shed his coat and draped it over her, the coat immediately embracing her with the gathered body heat of the doctor.

Her smile is flashed to Gaster as well- though she’s certain it is not a pretty one- and she tucks his coldest coat over herself. She can still taste the blood on her teeth. His coat is warm, and the large size of it pretty much swallows her. “The blankets are there, behind the glass door- but I’m alright for now.
Thanks, Gaster.” It was an entertainment center that had once been a case for holding her brother’s stereo system- and it now kept the dust off the plush blankets inside.

Toki kicks off her slippers and tucks her legs in under her body, thankful she had decided to wear pants today instead of shorts. The short-sleeved shirt was unpleasant though. Her slippers are shoved under the couch where neither of the boys will trip over them, and she takes a minute to pull a hair tie from a table next to the edge of the couch. She’s got little doubt she’ll be puking again. The cramping sensation keeps tingling over her- and she wont deal with getting blood in her hair.

Her fingers come away holding another clump of black hair, and she sighs.

He reached and slowly mimicked her action, combing his gloved hand through her hair, though he donned a surprised look when the hairs came all too easily. "Oh dear..." he looked at the threads, then he brushed them off his gloves and opened his medical bag, pulling out what he needed to get her vitals. Starting with her pulse, a stethoscope is put over non-existent ear canals before he rested the other end on the inner crook of her elbow.

Her pulse is quick and fleeting- a rapid dubthubdubthub sound through the stethoscope. “I looked up some symptoms of radiation poisoning- and they really do line up with what’s happening.” She admits quietly. She rolls the inky locks between her fingers, before brushing them out of her hand. Some of them drift, and cling to Sans’ shorts as hair is wont to do. “The vain part of me is going to miss my hair- the sane part says it was time for a hair cut anyways.”

He let out a quiet chuckle at that, before he took her temperature using an old mouth thermometer to gage the heat.

She obediently stays silent and keeps it under her tongue. Eventually, it shows her internal temperature to be resting a little over one hundred degrees. “You know they make more accurate ones, right? They go in your ear and beep once they’re done.”

"Yes, I know. But I’ve been trapped underground for over three hundred years. I don’t exactly have the most up-to-date medical equipment by human standards.”

She grimaces. “Ah, sorry. That was insensitive of me.” She shifts, burrowing deeper into his coat. A soft clicking noise leaves her as her teeth chatter in a shiver, and she tucks her fingers into her armpits.

He chuckled softly and dismissed it with a soft shake of his head. Gaster then began to dig into his medical bag, finding what he brought with him. "Now, if the symptoms are consistent with radiation poisoning, one would think that you use the same remedies. Unfortunately, that isn't the case for this. This is magical in origin.”

“Well, I’m getting the feeling that it’s definitely magic.” She shifts, dark eyes wandering between the both of them. “There are chairs if you’re more comfortable sitting, or you can take up the other half of the couch, Sans. Crouching can’t be comfortable. Anyways, I started feeling tired after the barrier went down. I sort of assumed it was stress- I’ve been working a lot. What do you think can help at this point?”

"The best I can suspect off the bat is taking a magic suppressant into consideration. But there are side effects to look into as well..." He said, thinking about it. "Never once before did a human have an issue with magic intake or discharge..." he murmured, "It’s fascinating.”

"Yeah, Pops. It’s also fuckin’ nervewrackin’ seeing how bad it’s affectin’ Toki." Sans commented from where he was pulling himself a chair, seeing how Tenebris was comfortable enough where he was.

“Well,” she sniffs slightly, “It’s not like the human doctors can help me- so you’re welcome to try what you want to on me. Everyone needs a place to start when dealing with something new and foreign.” She shifts, groaning faintly as her stomach twists. “The doctor from the news cast said he thinks it’s something in our DNA that sets us apart from the other humans. He’s tested us against the other humans.” It’s left unsaid that he hasn’t tested the MRS affected human DNA against a monsters. Do monsters even have DNA? “Think the magic causes us anomalies to… I dunno, irradiate?”

They both tensed at that, and exchanged a look.

"Do you think it’s possible?"

"You tell me, Pops..."

The older man sighed through his teeth, his brows furrowing in thought. "It's possible,” he concedes, “but this would be countless generations of genetics we’re looking into..."

“Humans breed fast. Up until recently, we died pretty young, so we had a lot of kids early, and our kids would have kids, and so on and so forth.” She adds lightly, knowing they’re probably not up to date on all of the human histories. “I… Think I have a family tree in the attic, if it would help you.”

"Where can I find it?" Sans asked.

Her brow furrows, and she actually has to pause and think. When HAD she last seen it? It probably had been back when her grandparents still owned the house. She didn’t go up there often— but she remembers her grandpa telling her tales about how their family used to be super strong, and that they could fight with inhuman abilities and the like back in the ye-old days of yore. It…”Should be in an old trunk on the green rug. He used to tell us about it when we were younger— said we were descended from a ‘demon’ or something of that sort. Back in the old days, everything was a demon if it looked weird enough though."

He nodded and disappeared quickly, coming back about ten minutes later with the book. "A demon… could be a monster…"

Ten minutes is a lot of time for one to be gone, but not much had changed. The bucket at the side of the couch is closer than it was before Sans had left, and Toki’s curled tiredly into the back of the couch, nearly hiding her face in the jacket. She was heavily nauseated— but her body wasn’t quite ready spew.

The paleness of her skin is accented with a flush to her cheeks and forehead, and her eyes are slightly glassier as she looks up at him. “It’s possible. There are no pictures in there, but there are names and dates of death, and who was born from whom. It hasn’t been updated in years— my brothers and I should be the last entries.”

Tenebris took the book once Sans returned. He opened the book, looking back four hundred years, muttering names as he scrolled through them until he came upon one that stopped him. “Ah…”

Toki doesn’t really respond besides a groan. That telltale sour taste is finally bubbling up into her mouth, so she’s quick to carefully disengage from the coat she was loaned. It pools around her legs as she leans over the bucket with a displeased noise, entire body shuddering until she heaves. The once pristine bucket stains red again, and she groans quietly. “This is officially worse than the time I got hung-over and ruined my mother’s collection of silk fans. Wha- what does it say, Gaster?”

"Naria Vaega. Does that name sound familiar to you?"

She spits bloody spittle for a minute, coughing against a wave of agony from her middle. “Y-yeah, ‘s one of my ancestors, right? She’s around the first pages. Never thought much of it— thought she might have been a foreign bride in the family. Why?”

"The Vaega family was a family of skeletal monsters."

Toki just… squints. Suspiciously. And is getting mental images she probably should not be having of her infinity times great grandmother. “Okay… How do… Skeleton monsters even… Er…” She doesn’t even finish that thought. She shifts, and wipes her mouth on the bottom of her shirt for the lack of better places to wipe it, and then settles back down gingerly. “I guess that solves the question of having a monster in the family?”

He nodded, "That means you possess Monster genetics... you could be going under a mutation that flared when monsterkind and our magic was freed."

“And how does a human become a skeleton? I’ve already got one inside of me.” Would her insides become her outsides? What a… daunting thought. Toki huddles under the coat again and shivers heavily. “I… Wonder if my family’s dealing with the same… Might be different. I’ve got a slightly different genetic makeup than my siblings. Different dad than them.” Who’s to say she didn’t get the monster gene from both sides? Her dad wasn’t around anymore, so she couldn’t really ask, but…

"... Only time will tell, I’m afraid."

Well... There was nothing to do with that, it seemed. She grimaced and rubs her arms lightly, and another shiver takes over. “I guess so. Here’s to hoping I survive that long, then. Humans aren’t designed to... well, deal with this sort of stuff long term.” She moves a hand in a general motion of her body.

He nodded slowly, then he sighed and reached, setting a hand on her shoulder, "Heh..."

Toki sighs softly and offers the both of them a tired smile. “Heh.” She mirrors Gaster’s sound with a soft hum. “Probably going to need to let the government official people know what’s going on.” And to make sure that the land is KEPT by the monsters if something happens and she dies trying to make the change. Going from a human to a skeleton is not physically possible while still living- she’d have to die, decompose, and hope her corpse reanimated.

Well... Not in the sense of a zombie, but something similar. It’s not like she can just grow new body parts. She’s still got flesh, and vessels, organs and tissue... All things that a skeleton lacks completely in its entirety. “Aw man, I still need to go clean the hives...” She had things to do, darnit. She couldn’t just spend all day vomiting blood into the blood bucket.

"If something is going to happen to you, make it that you give your land to all of Monsterkind in your will... there is no leeway for interference that way without inflicting worldwide extinction of monsters." He murmurs softly.

“That’s my intention.” She gives him a crooked smile. “I’ve got to get it cleared through all of the government loopholes though.” Technically as the sole owner- and with no heir to claim it- she could do whatever she wanted with her hundreds of acres. “Might as well do it before I get worse... Can you guys give me ten minutes alone to get this done?”

She needs to grab her cell phone. She’s got Simmons on there somewhere- he’s the one acting as her connection into the various governments.

He nodded and stood. "Sans."

"Course, Pops." And the two stepped out for a while, giving her space to get this handled.

Toki’s soul throbbed once they left- because damn it, she didn’t want to die. She wanted to stay, and to be happy, and to just... be. But this wasn’t something they could stop- and it wasn’t something she could have prevented. Like her mother used to say, there’s no use crying over something broken.
Clean it up, and move on as best you can.

So, she takes a deep breath. Steadies the quivering breath that escapes. And digs out her phone to make the call.

“Hey, Simmons...? I’ve... Well... I’ve got MRS. I need to make some changes to my will. I’ve been looked at by Doctor Gaster- and well, it’s up to him to share what we’ve found, but... Y-yeah.
It... might be fatal. It’s not the sort of change that a human can safely make.”

Scales and fur was one thing- that could grow, that could form. How could you lose the things that keep you alive and still function?
“Can you call my brothers? I don’t have the energy to deal with my family right now. Yes— I’m sure I want to leave the land to the monsters— my family didn’t want to run this place anyways. Better it go to someone who needs it, rather than someone who would abuse it. Yes. Yes. I want everything— even the bees— to go to them. The house, my finances, everything. I mean, if I survive, obviously this would be pointless but…”

“It’s alright, Simmons. Shit happens, you know? I’d rather it be me dealing with this sort of change than a little kid. I’ll be alright.”

“I promise.”
Chapter 4

Chapter Notes

Strider's Notes: So shit's going to get pretty serious here soon. As in like, super, super shitty type of serious. Fires happen, and just... Jebus. :D I'm so looking forwards to writing it out, you guys have no freaking idea. Silverwing is amused at my eagerness to torment characters. Anyways, enjoy this little bit of relaxing fluff. We've decided that we need mandatory fluff chapters every so often, so this is mandatory fluff number one. :)

Strider Editing Notes (6-10-18): Again, if ya'll want to help, I would love it. It's going to be a long process working through this, and I honestly don't know how long it's going to take me to do this, or if I'll give up half way through and just end up fixing only names. There's a lot of editing to do- but if we can get it fixed up, TOTU will probably one of the finest stories on the dark side of the internet.

"I really must thank you for inviting me back, Madame Toki." Tenebris said with a smile. He was seated in the grass not far from the beehives, his black coat missing from his frame to reveal a light cream-colored turtleneck that hugged his form. He held a thermos in one hand, resting it on his lap as he watched her tend to her bees.

This was also a business visit, to make sure she was doing okay, but he wasn't about to tell her that, and give her a reason to remember why she was worrying so much.

The two scant days since the blood incident had not boded well for Toki- someone at the government station had leaked her condition to the public, and therein the monsters in the compound found out. They treated her like she was cracked china- and that the slightest mishandling would shatter her. Of course, she didn’t let it bother her. To monsters, humans must seem hopelessly fragile.

"It’s good to have you back.” Her face was pale and drawn, dark circles bruising under her eyes. She had a black beanie pulled over her head- most of her hair was gone, and her scalp was cold- and she was dressed in a green sweater and long pajama pants to ward off her constant chills. Still, she smiled with a brightness that shined like the moon as she leaned against one of the hives. She works on untangling a ball of bees from a spider web. The mass is buzzing and humming in her hand, and it tickles her palm slightly. Once they’re freed, she lets them fly off. Dusting her fingers, she pads slowly back towards him, intent on resting. She could do her normal stuff- she just had to take breaks often. “I haven’t gotten to see much of you lately. How are things in the Underground?”

He offered her the thermos, having brought some of his favorite Orange Blossom tea to share with her. His purple eyes were glowing gently and his smile was one in the same. "Things are well. My sons are as busy as ever, but I suppose it could be considered a good thing with how things are going now. I myself am hard at work as well, but I’m glad I was able to put time in for coming to see you."

She takes a seat next to him in the grass, the dry blades tickling her toes as she kicks off her shoes. Toki accepts the thermos with a smile, and takes a small sip. She can’t stomach much today- but liquids have been all right. “This is quite good tea. Orange Blossom, right?”
She takes a droplet of the sweet tea, and lets it sit on her finger for a wandering honeybee to visit. It lands, and gathers the sweet droplet gently. It always mystified her brothers how she could do this—they called her the bee charmer. “It’s better that they’re busy. It’s not easy seeing your friends sick and being unable to help. I’d rather they not have to see me like this— but I’d never tell them no to a visit. What’s your latest project? If you can tell me, that is. Without tarnishing some confidentially act, or something.” She blushes in embarrassment, takes another sip, and hands the thermos back once the bee leaves her finger.

He nodded. "It is my favorite. And trust me, my boys wont hesitate to visit when they have the chance. Sans more often than Papyrus."

He then took the thermos and took a long drink before he leaned back, "As for my project, I suppose I can tell you, there’s no harm. I am currently working on a project to aid my own health. Though I am awfully close to a breakthrough, I can feel it.

“Papyrus has a long way to travel. Sans can just pop in.” She smiles lightly, and shifts. She eases down onto her elbows, grimacing as her insides ache, and then sprawls boneless in the grass. She watches him lightly, and then smiles. “I didn’t know you were sick, but I’m glad you’re close to a breakthrough if you are. You’ve got my best wishes for you to succeed, Gaster.”

"It's less an illness and more a minor physical condition. However it will not be an issue soon enough." He chuckled softly.

“That’s good.” She smiles warmly. She wouldn’t pry further than that— it was rude to do, after all. Toki stretches out further in the grass, arching her back as she enjoys the sunshine warming her. It was probably too hot to be out in such winter gear in the middle of August- but Toki would be careful. If she started to overheat, she’d urge him into the shade with her. “Out of curiosity, can you get overheated? You or the boys both, for that matter actually."

"They are mostly immune to the elements. I cannot overheat in the traditional sense, so to speak, but I still have a dermal layer that can sustain burns. However I don’t have as many nerve endings, so it would not hurt as badly as it might for a human."

“Huh. So no heat-sickness for you then! That’s probably for the best- I don’t think I could haul you inside if you got heat-sick.” She blinks up at him, and then laughs softly. “So you can’t get as bad of a sunburn? You’re one lucky monster, Gaster. Humans burn after prolonged exposure to sunlight, and it’s a terrible experience. We get all red, our skin hurts, and sometimes it even blisters and peels. We usually use a lotion called sun block to help block the sun’s rays, though.” She didn’t own any though— Toki was usually pretty tan by this time of the year. “Sunlight can even change our skin tone. Check this out!”

She tugs the bottom of her shirt up, exposing pale and creamy flesh of her belly, and rolls her sleeve up. Even as sickly as she looks, her arms are a noticeably darker shade than her middle. “I’ve got what people call a ‘farmer’s tan’.

"Epidermal burns caused by the ultraviolet rays of heat expelled by the sun." He repeated gently, examining her tan line with great interest. "Fascinating."

Toki laughs softly, making her middle bounce against her arm, before she shifts and tugs part of her loose sweater down. The neck stretches— so she can free one shoulder out to show him the definitive line where her tank-top strap usually rests. “That’s the most scientific way to ever explain a tan, Gaster. But yes— and once the skin is pretty tanned, it doesn’t burn as badly. It only gets darker.”

He let out an interested purr as he slowly reached up, but had hesitated before his gloved hands made contact. "May I examine it further?" he asked, looking to her with a small smile.

"Sure." She squirms lightly, making sure the shirt wouldn’t snap back up if she let go, and then relaxed slightly. Her skin would be slightly smooth- though with odd, pebbly spots on it. They were old scar tissue; from when she had been a dumb kid who hadn’t wore proper clothes to go swimming. She’d blistered horribly, and had never gone swimming again in anything less than a t-shirt.

He ran his hands over them, then let out a discouraged hum and backed up. However it was only to remove his gloves. It revealed his ghost-white hands, each finger tipped with a sharp claw. The most noticeable feature of his massive hand were the matching holes in his palms. "I sometimes forget I’m wearing these." He murmured, giving a chuckle. "And by sometimes, I mean very often."

He slowly neared once more once his gloves were tucked away, and his hands returned to her shoulders. His touch was now more gentle, but also more thorough as he took in the texture of her skin. "Fascinating…" He whispered gently.

Her curiosity is evident in her face. How the heck did he function with those holes in his hand? Things just had to fall through those- eating popcorn would be so frustrating. Or holding a can of soup- would it get stuck? Still- Toki was raised better than to blatantly ask how he got them. “Well, if you wear something long enough, it becomes second nature to have it on. You begin to not notice it.” He’s gentler with his claws than she thought he’d be- but she’s thankful. The monster kids sometimes forgot their own strength- and her scratches weren’t healing anymore. One of the kids had offered her ‘monster candy’ or something to help heal them- but she had to turn them down. If it was magical food, she had no idea how it would respond to the MRS.

“Humans can be pretty cool.” She chuckles. “The little bumps you feel are scars. I wasn’t always the most careful kid, and I got badly sun burnt one summer. I learned my lesson about swimming in proper swimming gear.”

"Mmm... I wear my own scars, though I am not sure we inherited our scars in the same way." He chuckled, reaching up to tap against the scar on his face under his left eye, or rather, beside what was actually a crack in the bone-like facial structure.

The hard sound that comes from his face is startling. Almost like tapping porcelain together- or some type of pottery. Stone maybe? It’s some sort of hard noise that she doesn’t bother trying to really identify. “I don’t want to come off as rude, but... How did you even get those?” And the holes in his hands- but that’s left unsaid. “Did you get those in... I think the monster kids call it a confrontation? They were practicing safe ones a while back.” The glowing hearts that had been visible were... Weird.

He chuckled, "It's not rude, nor an issue, it's not a scarce question I receive." He then sat back and reached up, a hand holding over his chest. "No, these are not the result of a confrontation."

After a moment his hand glowed and he slowly pulled it from his chest, pulling from it a light lavender soul. It hung upside down, as monster souls do, but his was damaged. There were two small holes in the soul, matching the two holes in his palms. "You see... I may be the father of Sans and Papyrus, however, I did not have a mate birth them."

And hopefully, after this, she wouldn't see him, or his boys, differently.

"I created them in my laboratory.”

The look on her face is only describable as puzzlement- because she has no idea what the hell the upside down heart is. It's pretty and lavender, though. Still, she sits up slightly, tugging her sweater back into place as a shiver shakes her. Blasted chills. “Oh. Well, there’s nothing wrong with that. Humans do something similar sometimes when couples can’t have children on their own. You love them all the same- it doesn’t matter how they’re made so long as they’re loved.” A warm smile is given to him, and she tilts her head curiously. “So this is probably a pretty dumb question, but… What exactly did you just pull out of yourself?”

He smiled gently at her kind words, and his soul glowed a little with his happy emotion. However at the next question, he chuckled. "That which makes a monster everything they are... their soul.

His… Soul? Huh. A lot of humans didn’t think the soul existed, and there were some who did. And here, before her, was proof that souls- at least monster ones- did indeed exist. “Wow.” She looks a little in awe of it- mostly because he literally just popped his soul out like it was nothing major. “That’s… Actually really cool. The color matches your eyes- it’s really pretty. It would make sense then, the children using those in their confrontations. Do souls tie into… I think they called it ‘Hp’, or something. Health points?” That sounded like something out of a video game, to be quite frank. But magic was real- so whose to say that magical beings didn’t operate on a different spectrum than non-magical beings do? “Do humans have souls like monsters do?”

"Thank you, Miss Toki. That is quite sincere of you. It’s Hope Points, actually. Some call it health points, but for the most part we refer to it as hope points. If a soul has a certain condition, however it could cause problems with one's Hope Points." He then held a hand over her chest, “Yes, humans have souls too, though they are far more different... if you’d like, I can show you”

“Problems?” She blinks. “That sounds alarming.” The hand that hovers over her chest is… Well, probably disconcerting to anyone who wasn’t curious about his or her soul. She nods vigorously, and shifts to an easier position. “I’d love to see it. It’s not going to hurt, is it?” It isn’t hard to recall the feeling of Sans’ magic burning through her body when he caught her- and imagine that it would probably be infinitely worse being directly on her soul. Speaking of… Would it even be human shaped? Or something in between, since MRS was actively trying to change her body into something other than human.

"No, it wont hurt at all." he assured her. His fingers twitched before his hand glowed and he slowly began to pull her soul outward, coaxing it out gently.

It was a slightly uncomfortable tugging sensation behind her breastbone, before the skin began to slow. Slowly, an upright green heart slid from her flesh, and floated out towards him. It pulses brightly, though it has more than just a few dim spots in it that signify the general pain that her body is in most of the time now, and hovers in place. It’s warm, and seems to radiate heat outwards like a small space heater.

She blinks at it. “It’s… green and upright? Huh… Really kind of cool looking. Are all souls different colors?” Hers didn’t match her eyes- She had brown eyes, instead of green. That sort of vivid green would make for weird eyes on a human anyways.

"More or less. There are different traits in a human's soul, and whichever trait is dominant is that which dyes their soul." He explained, cupping her soul in his hand gently. His gaze was focused on keeping the soul in a stable aura, but it, and his smile, was very gentle.

She… can feel that? It doesn’t touch him directly, but she can feel him cupping it. Sort of like holding a blanket tight, and feeling someone brush against it. It’s very detached, and sort of strangely muted. Toki figures it’s whatever he’s using to hold her soul out of her body like that. A shiver runs down her spine. “Any chance you know what green means then?”
"I do." He smiled at her. "Green is the color of kindness."

Toki smiles back up at him, but her eyes remain on her soul. "Somehow, that really doesn't surprise me." A soft laugh leaves her- kindness, of course. Given all that she’s been trying to do, it really does not surprise her in the slightest. "What are the dark spots on it?" she inquires, lifting a finger to point at one of them. She doesn’t touch it- because she’s not really sure what will happen if she touches her own soul.

"I have concern that those dark spots are the result of the conversion caused by the MRS you are suffering from."

Her soul gave a thoughtful pulse, and she watched it intently. "That would make sense, actually. It seems to pulse when I’m thinking… it’s probably representing what it’s doing to my body. MRS isn’t a walk in the park, sadly."

"Unfortunately. I do wish there was a way to make this easier for you, but this is a new epidemic…"

"Nah," she waves a hand lightly, and sits upright. Without her soul in her chest, she feels… cold inside. It’s weird. The longer she looks at it, the more she thinks she can see a… health bar? She’s not certain on that. "Being sick isn’t supposed to be easy- and neither is completely changing your body’s form. At least by studying it, we can be prepared for if this sort of stuff happens in other parts of the world too, once monsters start to spread past this part of the country."

"We are everywhere, even other countries." He chuckled, carefully returning her soul to her chest. "I meant in mass amounts. Currently, we’re the ‘monster capital of the world’." Toki gives him a wry smile, and shivers as her soul enters her chest again. A yawn pulls from her lips, and her wry look changes over to a tired smile. "So, how common are green souls?"

He chuckled softly, and offered her his hand. "So far, since monsterkind was sealed underground, you're the second I've seen."

"Really? Huh. Guess we’re fairly rare then. That’s kind of sad, actually. The world needs more kindness in it." She took his hand, and let him help her up. Without the gloves on, his hands felt weird. Warm, solid, but weird compared to a human hand. Tokiko eased onto her feet, and grimaced as her legs trembled and her head spun. She really wished her legs wouldn’t shake. She could take everything else but the leg shakes… Okay, not being dizzy would be great too. Going from sitting to standing always made her feel faint. "Ready to head indoors? As nice as the sunlight is, I probably shouldn’t be getting too much of it with my inability to heal." Blisters can lead to blood poisoning, after all. "Ah, feeling light headed too. I enjoyed being outside though."

"I wouldn't say rare, more that I just haven’t gotten out enough yet." he chuckled, but he noticed her shaking legs and he reached to support her. "I've gotcha... Yes, let's go inside..."

She gives him a soft laugh and a bright smile, and leans into his support. She's not going to turn it down- because darn it all, going weak at the knees is so cliché that it makes her want to laugh at herself. "Well, we’ll have to get you out more. For now, let's go inside. I can make us some honey-tarts, and we can finish enjoying that thermos of tea."

"Mmm, Honey Tarts sound divine." He rumbled happily. "Thank you very much." Carefully lifting her up, he carried her in to the house, and pushed the door closed behind him with a careful foot. Once in the kitchen, he knelt and carefully set her down on the ground. "There we go." He purred. She gives him a smile as he simply totes her inside, and goes from using him as a support, to using... the counter. “Sans told me you enjoyed the honey I sent back to the Underground.” She gives him a wide grin. “I’ll make a big plate of them for us then.” Weak or not, it’s not hard for her to get the tarts, and start slathering copious amounts of honey onto them.

And weak or not- Toki enjoyed cooking for friends. She could nap later- she had food to make, and good company to enjoy.
The days rolled on and on, with Toki handling various things as they popped up. She didn’t get to take much time to relax, even as sick as she was. She had interviews with newscasts that she’d had to do- arranging for a small time pro-monster news crew to be here for the big unveiling of the first completion of an entire monster-home district had not been an easy feat. The unveiling also doubled as a celebration for the monsters coming in- a welcome to their new home in the human world.

Everything would be wrapped up and finished today- and monsters would be moving in and officially choosing which house they wanted during the celebration come dusk.

With the threats coming in more and more often from the group ‘Humans Against Monsters’, or HAM as Toki called it, they’d had to recruit extra security. The news of her condition had spread of course- and she’d answered several small news stations that she didn’t look different outside because it was suspected she was to become a skeleton monster- and HAM had caught wind of that news really fast.

Naturally, they left very cruel messages scrawled on the walls of her compound in the middle of the night.

They’d had to take more precautions- because it only took one escalation for threats and graffiti to become something much more violent.

So for the upcoming celebration, Toki had enlisted the help of several human guards, and monster guards to help keep the peace. The last thing she wanted was for someone to sneak in and cause trouble- but she had an inkling that it would happen anyways. There was no plausible way to run background checks on everyone who would be there.

It was simply too tiring, and she didn’t have the energy or the resources to do it herself.

All of her energy was being used in scrubbing the walls of the outer gates- because someone had drawn some very lewd and crude things pertaining to her, the builders, and some of the very nice wolf-guards. Despite the entire extra help from both humans and monsters, whoever was causing mischief knew what they were doing. They struck between guard shifts, and the wolf-guards could never seem to catch the scent.

Behind her, filed carefully along the road, were a few blatant protestors doing what usual protestors did. It wasn’t a big crowd- but they seemed gathered because of the news van that was lingering in one of the parking spaces.
Toki tuned it out, and focused on scrubbing. She wanted these walls to be spotless for when King Asgore and his entourage got here. They’d kept quiet about the King coming- because high profile monsters were a new favorite target of HAM. For the most part, she had the walls scrubbed clean- but there was a very persistent and poorly drawn monster penis that would not get off of the wall.

"Tsk. Now that’s just insulting." There was suddenly a sour-toned voice beside her as Sans appeared. He stepped into her field of vision before glaring at the graffiti. His gaze drifted to hers shortly after. "Here, take a breather, doll. Lemme take care of this."

To Toki’s credit, she didn’t startle as badly as she thought she would. She manages to keep a hold on the scrub brush, and casts him a wry look. "It was worse before I started. If they want to graffiti my walls, at least they could do a good job with the art, you know? I know plenty of children who draw better than they do." She hesitates, but hands over the scrub brush without too much of a fuss.

Drying soap-damp hands on a towel, she reaches up to adjust her beanie. She was missing so much of the total amount of her hair now that it was just simply easier to keep the bald patches hidden than to try and cover them with what remains. “Thanks, Sans. I’ve been at it for a couple hours now. Getting a little bit tired.”

The protestors behind them shift, making noises with their pickets, and a chant picked up as Sans is recognized. “Skeletons belong Underground! Skeletons belong Underground!”

He nodded gently and leaned to gently press his teeth against her forehead. At the chanting, his left eye flickered for a moment before a wall of bones suddenly rose upward to form a blockage between the protesters and the duo.

"Tsk, tsk, tsk, so impolite." Sans' pupils appeared and he looked up to see Papyrus walking closer, the younger brother having been the one to summon the wall of orange tinged bones.

The touch of his teeth to her forehead was a cool relief against the fever that persisted in plaguing her. She smiled up at Sans, gaze flitting to the side and completely missing the flash of eyes as the orange-ish wall of bones created a nifty blockade.

Papyrus was in his armor again once more, but he had a serious look to his usually bubbly expression. He was no doubt in the royal guard state of mind.

"Miss Toki, I am very sorry you have to deal with such a hoard of ignoramuses." He sighed as he reached them, giving a small bow and offering a hand to her. "But it is good to see you are well."

"Papy,” She smiles at him, and takes the offered hand, “It’s good to see you too. I’m doing as well as I can, really.” She didn’t actually look well at all- she looked like death. Her face was drawn, cheeks sunk in, eyes dark and tired, and she was paler than the creamy walls that made up the entrance to the compound. Her hand was even thin in his- her skin pulled tight over her bones with almost a dehydrated look, since she was hurling up blood fairly frequently. She looked and felt almost like fragile porcelain. "Don’t mind them, please. They’ve been at it since this morning- they’ll tire themselves out sometime or another."

The protestors let out some disgruntled noises, but chattered among themselves. They weren’t quiet- but Toki did well to ignore the steady chatter of slander that reached her ears. Being called a monster in human skin didn’t bother her- because technically she was becoming one.

Lifting her hand, he pressed his teeth to her knuckles before he slowly let her go again, he then turned and strode over to the bone wall. Naturally, he was able to see over it with his height. "You are all actively immature and rude, I must ask you to leave us in peace, and do not return." he requests calmly.
Toki just smiles to herself—because these skeleton boys can be right gentlemen when they try—and goes to try and snag the scrub brush back from Sans. If he wasn’t going to actually remove the faded dick from the wall, she was going to finish it before the sunlight drove her to fainting. If she could get it done and get inside, the protesters wouldn’t have anything to fuss over, and eventually would grow bored and hot in the heat of the day. “Gimme the brush, Sans. Lets get this done, and then go inside. They can’t bother anyone inside of there from out here.”

Behind the barrier of bone, the protesters look equal parts amused and disgusted. “It’s talking to us.” One of them murmurs to the other.

“The road isn’t private property, skelefreak.” One of the larger men calls back. He hefts his picket sign, and taps it on the edge of the road. “You and your monster squad can’t do shit to make us go away. We’re not breaking any trespassing laws yet.”

"Pft. Fine.” He reached and instead of just giving it to her, Sans put his hand over hers and began helping her with scrubbing the graffiti off.

"You are correct. However, though you are not trespassing, you are disturbing the peace of the residents upon said road. I would hope to assume you are mature, responsible humans, even with this childish ploy you have going on, and you would come to realize the error of your ways if confronted properly.”

Toki can’t help a small giggle at Papyrus’ words. He sounded like such a disappointed teacher, and most humans are not ready to handle that sort of tone. She pauses though, as the graffiti pretty much just wipes away with Sans’ help. She frowns, and looks at her hands once it’s gone. She really didn’t have the arm strength she thought she did anymore, did she? A few moments with the monster’s help, and it was gone. She’d been scrubbing that dick for the better part of fifteen minutes.

The protesters just pause, because… Well, how exactly were they supposed to respond to that? The majority of them shift uncomfortably; picket’s lowering slightly as they look to each other. Only one speaks up, and it’s the tall man from before. “The only resident that’s supposed to be on this stretch of road is about to become a filthy mother fucking monster like the rest of you heathens. Once she abandons her human skin, she’ll be no better than the beasts that she houses.”

"At least she is still kind and considerate towards those around her. She's been dealing with your unorganized banter this long, has she not?” He replied simply.

“We all know that once your kind are out of the foster system, you’ll be taking over our homes, and our jobs. Hell, looks like you’re already taking our men, our women, and our children too. Everything would have been fine if your kind hadn’t stepped foot from under that mountain. Kind and considerate mean nothing. You can be kind and considerate to a dog, but it will still bite you on the ass when you turn around and think you’re safe.”

Toki’s lip curls, and she gathers her stuff. The wall is clean enough, so she lets Sans carry things, and heads over to Papyrus. She loops her arm through his and tugs lightly. Very lightly- she’d tug harder, but she’d probably lose her balance and fall. “Come on, Pap. Lets go inside- if they want to stay out here in this heat and act like numbskulls, let them. They’ll be gone this evening when the monster security comes by anyways.”

"They will only turn and bite if you strike them.” He replied simply, turning with her. "Very well, let us return inside.”

She tunes out whatever is said next, as she leans into the skeleton slightly, and reaches out to tug Sans with them as well. The sounds of the irritated protestors fade as the walls block the sound out, and she releases them with a quiet sigh. Her beanie is pulled off so she can run a hand through what’s left of her hair, before she stuffs it back on her head. She looks tired and drawn, dark eyes sad. “I’m sorry you guys had to see that. They’re pretty riled up since the first district is fully completed. Eighty houses can hold a lot of monsters. Are you guys excited to see the big unveiling?”

"Damn right we are."

"Father was thrilled when he heard about it."

"He said he’d be here to see it."

She’s glad that they handle the change in conversation well enough, and takes her supplies from Sans. She goes to place them in one of the sheds, and then leans on the wall to catch her breath. “I’d offer you guys a peek at them, but that’d be unfair to everyone else who hasn’t seen them all yet. Speaking of- I thought you both were supposed to be here later tonight with the rest of the group that’s coming?”

"Pap couldn’t wait." Sans shrugged with a laugh, shoving his hands into his pockets with a simple grin. He watches her lightly, white pinpricks in his eyes keeping careful watch perchance she were to drop.

“Miss me that much, huh?” She teases him with a warm grin, eyes twinkling lightly. “I’m joking, of course. I’d be excited too. You three are getting a house too, right?”

Papyrus let out a quiet 'nyeh heh heh' and nodded. "Of course! Father might stay underground, but I know that brother and I will certainly take up residence here!"

She nods and smiles slightly. “I figure your Dad might have made trips back and forth, if he didn’t end up just picking one spot. Out here is a bit out of the way for a lab, or any of the science stuff that he does. Would you boys like something to drink?” She was starting to get light headed again, and was in dire need of some water. She’d love something besides water, but anything else but the occasional drink of tea seemed to send her running to spew up blood.

Toki shoves off from the shed, and ambles slowly for the house. She needed some water even if the skeleton boys didn’t, and she had full intentions of at least getting some of them, and then getting a start on the tarts. She’d asked what everyone wanted her to bring for the celebration- and her honey tarts were literally the only thing they asked for, if she had wanted to bring something along.

"Are you sure you should still be up, Toki?" Sans asked after a little of watching her, his grin deflating slightly with concern for the human.

"Yeah. You look like you’re ready to pass out." Papyrus agreed, stepping forward and carefully resting his hands over hers, his form coming to cup her own.

She pauses when the boys speak, and tilts her head up to give them tired smiles when she’s pulled to a stop. She rubs her fingers gently over Papyrus’s gloved hands, and grips them with the strength that she has. There’s a lot she’d like to say- that it’s probably time to face the reality of the fact that she’s not getting better, and it’s starting to look like she probably wont get better- and some of it probably flashes in her eyes. But she sighs- she’s not going to ruin their night by making them face the truth of what’s happening to her body. Instead, she gives them a warm smile, and a soft laugh. “I’m just dehydrated. Once I can get some water in me, I’ll be right as rain, I promise.”

Sans gave her a weak, sad smile.

Papyrus just shook his head. "No, Miss Toki... You won't be... You're so sick... And we're both…"
honestly terrified for your sake.” He whispered, turning her to hold her close, one arm moving to support her in case she felt weak or faint.

Toki doesn’t fight his hold. She leans into him with a slight tremble- and part of her wants to cry, because it is honestly scary what she’s had to go through. She gathers herself instead of crying, and loops her arms around him in a gentle hug. If she were to break down, she’d give up. Keeping busy and keeping herself focused on anything but what was coming was what kept her from shattering. “I know, Papy. I know. It’s… It’s scary to be this sick. At this point in time, I’m trying to do what I can with the time that I have left. Humans don’t come back from being this sick.” Humans just didn’t turn into skeletons either. Not even magical skeletons.

His hold didn’t loosen, but it began to tremble as he held her tighter. "Don't try to do it alone, please..." He pleaded quietly.

It occurred to her that the skeletons were not used to seeing a sick human. She knew that it had been a human that broke the barrier- but as far as she knew, the kid was healthy and happy up at the mountain with the King and Ex-Queen. When monsters got sick, it obviously wasn’t anything like what they were seeing in the sick humans, or he might not have been so terrified. She bit her lip, and gently rubbed her hand down his back. His armor was hard under her fingertips, the bones rattling below it with his trembles, and her dark eyes watered insistently as her soul ached for her friend’s plight. “Papyrus.” She said softly, trailing her hand up to gently stroke his cheek. The bone was warm under her fingers, and she gave him a reassuring smile, trying to soothe him as best she could. “I’m not alone, am I? I’ve got you, and Sans, and everyone here.”

He let out a few soft sounds as he tried to keep his composure, always having been the emotional one, but at her words, he gave a smile and a small hiccup, a hand reaching up to sandwich her own between his cheek and his palm. "Nyeh heh... you also have our father... and the King..."

“I do,” she smiles. Her fingers gently rub against his cheekbone as he keeps her hand trapped, and she makes a soft, soothing noise to help keep him composed. She’s not sure how a skeleton can hiccup, but that was the most adorably heart-wrenching sound she’s ever heard. “I’ve got everyone, and everyone has me too. For as long as I’m here.”

He nodded slowly, and then felt Sans trap them both in a hug, his skull nuzzling into Toki’s neck. Well there go the waterworks. As Sans traps her between them, Toki shivers, and buries her face into Papyrus’ chest. The armor is hard and unforgiving, but she needs it to center herself and help calm her down. Her eyes sting, and she’s thankful that armor doesn’t absorb tears like cloth can. Monsters really are too kind for this world, she thinks. “Are you both okay?” To her credit, her voice is steady, and she manages not to let a sniffle escape.

"We're fine... don’t worry about us.” Sans said softly, before he sighed and slowly turned her, giving her some fabric to cry into as he held her close, his warm hoodie now her pillow.

She’s not hard to turn, and she latches onto him with a shaky sigh. The hoodie is softer than Papyrus’s armor, and she simply lets herself have a short cry into the warm and plush surface. It doesn’t help much- just makes her eyes sting and her middle ache- but it eases some stress in her. Toki never was one for masks- she was generally an openly honest person. But even she needed to keep up the façade that everything was alright- because if she cracked too much, she’d break down and not know how to build up again. “I always worry,” She says softly once she manages to bring herself under control. “You monsters… you’re all too kind for this world, you know that?”

"Heh... shucks kid." Sans chuckled, stroking her head slowly. "Thanks."
Papyrus let out a soft laugh, hugging her tighter from behind. "Nyeh~"

Toki lets out a soft laugh, and squirms softly between the both of them. Humanity did not deserve the kindness of these monsters, honestly. “Okay. Before I start crying again, I really do need to get some water and get started on tonight’s Honey Tarts. I’d hate to put you to work since you just got here, but do you both mind helping me in the kitchen today?"

"We'd love to help!" Papyrus exclaimed with a smile.

"Anything for one of our favorite humans." Sans commented with a chuckle, his grin returning to its usual placement.

Toki smiles and laughs, and manages to wiggle free of them to head for the front door. “I’d love the help of my favorite skeleton brothers. C’mon. I’ve got twelve trays of tarts to make. Think that’ll be enough? Papyrus, remember to duck, please."

"Should be. Each tray is about... twenty tarts right?" Sans questioned as he followed, while Papyrus let out a soft laugh at her warning.

“Each tray can hold twenty five tarts, actually.” She guides them in with a wide smile, and leaves them to shut the door. Toki’s first stop in the kitchen is to grab a glass of water and down it, before she goes to fetch the jars of honey that they’ll need. The tarts themselves are already made- and are piled up on the counter. They just need to add the honey, which she needs to fetch from the pantry.

Sans and Papyrus eventually got her to sit down and let them take over finishing up the tarts while she enjoyed some ice water and a couple nibbles of some saltine crackers. She was glad when the crackers managed to stay down- because Papyrus was already far too upset with this situation for him to witness her painting the porcelain throne a gory red. With the help of the skeletons, they managed to get the trays of tarts done in an hour or so. After the tarts, Papyrus had commandeered her kitchen, and begun making his specialty.

So while he made probably more spaghetti than she’d ever seen before, Toki had hijacked Sans and had him help her clean up a couple of the spare bedrooms on the upper floor. As the night wore on, the kids would need someplace to crash that was warm and away from the festivities, so Toki had already agreed to play host to all of the children for the night, while their parents were busy enjoying life and getting their houses picked out and moved into.

Come dark, when the party was ready to start, Toki was beyond exhausted. Her eyes were dark, and her body slow, but there was a glow about her, lit beneath her skin that showed just how happy she was about getting things done and spending time with the skeleton brothers. She had a tray of tarts balanced in one hand, and was holding the back door open for the brothers to exit with their armloads of goods. It was a short jaunt from her compound out to the newly completed one, but it was a walk she was excited to make.

Already, she could see the soft glow of lights that had been strung high above the newly made streets, and her soul sang eagerly in her chest. She couldn’t wait to see everyone’s faces when they saw their new homes.

“Papy, really, I’m not broken- I can carry a pot of spaghetti, I promise!”

"No, no, Toki, it's perfectly fine! I will get it myself" he insisted, "I want to anyhow." He assured her with a smile to combat his brother's grin.

"On that note, you sure you got those tarts, doll?" Sans questioned, looking back over his shoulder at Toki rolls her eyes with good humor, and nudges the door closed again after they step out. “I’ve got the tarts just fine, Sans. If you’re that worried, you can do your little shortcut for the rest of the tarts once we get there. Now c’mon, you’re going to love it.”

She’d guide them out of her compound, and to a side one. It opens up into wide roads; each road laced with strings of lights that hang overhead. The houses would be large, built for even the biggest of monsters to visit, and she would guide them through them down towards the heart of the ‘neighborhood’. She’d asked that they leave a good hundred feet of grass, which could be used to make a park of sorts for the kids. For now, it served as a great way to host the celebration. As she goes, she keeps an eye on the skeletons to see their reactions to the lights.

The duo looked around, their eyes glowing with joy and awe as they saw the beauty of the new neighborhood. "Oh wow..." Sans murmured under his breath.

Toki just smiled wider. Their excitement was obvious, and the human hummed happily. She guided them to several long tables that had been brought out of storage, and carefully got things situated. Several monsters were bringing stuff out too- she’s not sure what all sorts of food was being made, but it was being brought out and set on the buffet table all the same.

“Welcome to the start of a new life, boys.” She laughs.

Her laugh is interrupted by an exuberant young rabbit running right into her leg, and latching on like a leech. Thumper grins up at her. “Toki! You made honey tarts, right?”

“I sure did! Why, you excited?”

“Well yeah! Your tarts are almost as good as monster food!”

“Well, that’s a high compliment isn’t it?” She ruffles his ears gently, and shoos him away. “Once everyone’s here, you can have as many tarts as you want. For now, go play. I heard that Mister Dubros is bringing in a swing set for you guys- why don’t you go help him get it set up?”

The rabbit just beams at her, nuzzles her leg, and goes bounding off to go find the friendly builder.

Content, Toki watches him run off, before turning to the skeletons. “So, which house do you two have your eye sockets on?”

They exchanged a look, and then looked towards a home that had closely resembled the one they had underground. "I actually handed in the blueprints for that house... If we wanted to move anywhere, it'd be there.”

She watches for a moment, and then nods. It was pretty near the park, but closer to the main street than anything. “Then it shouldn’t be a problem. Your dad should be getting here with the King soon, right? Everyone will be free to start choosing houses once everyone’s here.”

"Wonderful!” Papyrus said happily, clapping his hands together eagerly.

Sans chuckled warmly, his eyes catching on something approaching. "Hey, speak of the devil." Sans pointed for his brother and human companion to see the familiar tall, thick silhouette of Tenebris, his tail swaying back and forth behind him as he approached. However, Asgore was nowhere to be seen.

“Gaster!” Toki cheerily smiled at him, and moved to meet him half way. “I’m glad you could make "Well, yes," he rumbled, "Unfortunately, there was a small complication. Young Frisk had grown ill, and Asgore had to stay behind to take care of them. As a result, he sent me to begin our festivities."

She nods slightly. "Frisk probably caught a summer cold. They’re pretty common near the mountains. Poor dear. They should be okay in a couple days. Well… Asgore will just have to make it to the next big event. Maybe he can bring Frisk next time too.” Ever cheerful, Toki beams up at Tenebris and tugs her beanie further down onto her head. “C’mon, Gaster. Once everyone knows Asgore won’t be here, we can kick off the festivities and everyone can eat.”

“And drink!” One of the larger wolf guards had asked to have the day off to be with his family, and Toki had never been one to deny them the right to taking time off. He had two large barrels of some sort of alcohol- Toki could vaguely make out the word Grillby’s on the side of the caskets- slung over each shoulder. Behind him was his mate- a sweet little sheep monster, and their little rug-rat clinging to her wool. “Can’t forget the alcohol. Grillby makes the best booze. You still on for watching the pups?”

“Of course, Wolfen. I don’t mind watching the children at all.” She smiles, waving as he goes to deposit the kegs next to one of the tables.

Gaster smiled once, and lets her lead him closer to the table.

"Hahaha" The sheep gave a giggling bleat. "Wolfen, remember you promised to baaahave yourself." The tone of her voice was playfully stern, and she gave another soft laugh.

“I’ll show you how I baaahave myself later tonight.” Thick furry brows waggled down at his mate, and he nuzzles his snout to the puff of fur at the top of her head.

Toki giggles. “Keep the PDA down, you two. You’ve got kids you don’t want to traumatize. Anyways, everyone’s here. Gaster? You want to make the announcement that it’s time to eat, and let the celebration begin?”

She squeaked in surprise and reached up, patting his face with one of her hoof-like hands.

Tenebris gave a nod, and then smiled as he approached the podium, clearing his throat before he opened his arms. Everyone had begun to gather, having spotted Tenebris easily over top of the shorter monsters and humans. "Ladies and Gentlemen! If I may have your attention for just a moment!"

Toki smiles as the chatter of the growing crowd dims down. More monsters begin to hedge onto the grass, and they all look up at Tenebris eagerly. Toki hedges out of the way- because it’s going to be stampede for food once he’s finished his speech- and goes to settle gingerly against the base of one of the park’s few trees. Papyrus and Sans are on their own out there, but she figures they’ll find her once they’ve gotten their food and are ready to eat.

"I must speak for His Majesty Asgore, as he was forced to stay home so his dear child would not be alone in their time of need. Therefore I, Tenebris Gaster, welcome you all to the beginning of Monsterkind's new home!"

The undulating crowd around the makeshift podium lets out a loud cheer, and mirth and happiness is visible on several faces. Once they’re dismissed, they pretty much swarm the buffet. Sometime during her chat with Gaster, Sans must have went and got the rest of the tarts, because the where there had been one platter, a stack was in it’s place.
Toki laughs, propping her hand in her chin as she watches excited children and adults take portions of both the magic infused monster cuisine, and the none magic human food. Happiness bubbles in her soul- because how can one not be so happy when there’s such hopeful faces and happiness among the masses?

Tenebris was proud to see everyone so happy. He took up a cup of tea and approached Toki, smiling warmly at where she lay under the tree.

"Toki. I cannot thank you enough for everything you've done for us."

It doesn’t surprise her that Tenebris is the first one to make it to her. She gives him a smile, and pats the spot next to her as the crowd ebbs off with their food. “Any decent human being would have done the same, Gaster. I’m glad I could help though. Seeing everyone so happy… It’s all worth the struggle to see it done.” She motions to his lack of plate with a thin hand, and chuckles as the smell of his tea wafts down to her. “Are you not hungry? Papyrus made some spaghetti. It’s near the Honey Tarts.”

He sits down and chuckles. "No, I’m not hungry, thank you though..." He sipped his tea with an odd rumbling purr. "I just thought I’d check on you before I went to take a walk." he murmured.

“That’s sweet of you.” She smiles slightly. “Between you and the boys, I’ve got eyes on me everywhere, yeah? Oh! When you got here, there weren’t any protesters outside, were there? I figured they’d have gone home before dark, but sometimes humans break from the norm.”

"I do not think so, but I can never be too sure when it comes to humans." He sighed.

“If they’re still there, it’s not a big issue. The protesters just stand around and hold up angry signs. It’s the graffiti that’s a problem- children’s eyes don’t really need to be seeing the sort of stuff they keep doodling on the walls.” Toki tugs her bottle of water from her pocket and takes a sip, scrubbing a hand down her face. “How have you been, by the way?”

"I've been well, very busy, but well enough regardless." He replied. "Though I am very glad I had the chance to come see you again."

“Busy is better than being bored. Bored minds wander to strange places.” Toki reclines against the bark of the tree, nearly dropping her water bottle as her fingers slipped. “I’m glad you came to visit again, and that you got to be here for the grand opening of the first settlement. You said you were going to go for a walk, presumably after your tea?”

"Indeed, my dear." He purred. "Must enjoy the little things before I dedicate my time to a long walk."

She nods along dutifully. “Of course, of course. Might I suggest a walk along the river when you go? It’s a bit of a jaunt, but this time of night leaves the stars reflecting on the water in a wonderful way. I used to go swimming there at night with my brothers when we were younger.”

"Oh yes. Of course." He smiled around his tea. "I'll definitely stop there..."

Toki just smiled, before the wind was driven from her lungs. She coughed slightly, and looked down at the impromptu dog pile she was under. Thumper grinned up at her unrepentantly, with Twitch and a whole gaggle of other children draped across her legs. Most of them have obviously finished eating- and some of it is clinging to the whiskers on their faces. “Didn’t Mister Dubros have you guys for a while?”

“He forgot some of the tools he needed for putting it together at home.” The soft pout on the bunny’s face was far too cute to be legal, but here it was nonetheless. “He promised he’d bring them tomorrow and we’d get to help build it then, when it would be easier for him to see. Do humans have trouble seeing in the dark?”

She affectionately pats his head, and is content under the pile of children. An amused look is flicked to Gaster, because she knows she looks most at home either surrounded by kids, or bees, and both tend to be an amusing sight. Her glance is also an apology- because he probably did not expect for their quiet talk to get bombarded by oodles of children. “We do, yes. Why do you think we have lights everywhere? Unless the moon is at it’s fullest, humans can’t really see very well. It can be pretty scary in the pitch black.”

“Really?” Twitch leans up, nose twitching curiously. “Then how come you live all the way out here? It’s really dark for a human to be out here.”

Toki smiles. “The dark never bothered me, sweetheart. I’m very careful when I go outside at night, and always take something that provides light when I do.”

Tenebris chuckled and snapped his fingers. Long tendrils lashed out and wrapped around the monster children, swinging them around as if they were on swings. "Hopefully this will prove as a decent collateral to the delay." he chuckled.

Toki caught her breath once the children were lifted off, and her smile bloomed wider at the peals of laughter that left them. Obviously the children approved- and their laughter was acceptance of his words. “Magic is so cool. You can just create instant entertainment for kids- sounds like perfect babysitter material there.”

"I haven't taken care of small children in centuries," he chuckled, "but it seems this old dog knows some good tricks." Tenebris gathered himself off of the ground, walking over to one of the nearby trees. He tested some branches, then the shadows looped around a especially strong one and left the children to swing on them.

“At least a few, right?” As the gaggle of monster children are entertained, Toki gathers her feet under her, and staggers upright. She dusts off the seat of her pants, and flashes him a quiet smile. “Thank you. They’ll be entertained there for at least a few minutes.”

At least, until they decided they wanted Toki to dust off her collection of Disney movies again. She figured that’s how they’d pass the time until it was time for the kids to sleep. The rooms were all prepared of course, and the parents would be bringing the children to their new homes in the morning. It gave them time to get things set up, and spend time as couples in their new house.

Tenebris smiled to her, "Do you want me to accompany you to take care of anything?" he asked, "Or would you prefer I go ahead and take care of my own thing first?"

She just laughs softly and shakes her head. “No, no, you go ahead and go enjoy your walk. I’ve got the kids- we’ll go watch a movie. I was thinking about-”

“LION KING!” She’s not certain which of the kids shouted it, but Tenebris’ shadow tendrils are abandoned as they flock off of the makeshift swings to bounce at her feet. It was a tossup of which were the kid’s favorites thus far. Lady and the Tramp was one they watched a lot- and Lion King. They hadn’t even made it to the sequels of either movies yet.

“The Lion King works!” She covers another laugh with a soft cough, and lets the excitable young ones tug at her fingers. Monster children are stronger than most human kids- so they’re slowly beginning to herd the sickly woman away from the festivities and towards the road to her house.
“Don’t worry, Gaster. I’ve got the kids- you go enjoy your walk, and enjoy the peace and quiet. Will you tell Papyrus and Sans that I’ve been kidnapped to a night of movies by adorable little monsters?”

"Chances are they'll join you." He chuckled, the tendrils returning to his cloak, "But of course. You enjoy your movie."

“You enjoy your walk, and tell the boys to get settled into their house before they come looking for me- Ah, Thumper, gentle please, you’ll dislocate my thumb if you keep tugging on it.”

The gray bunny makes an impatient noise, but relents, and soon the tall human is being tugged out of sight. The gaggle of children fade off, and the lights inside of Toki’s home turn on again. When the children are gone, the adults head for the kegs, and begin filling tankards so they can drink and begin choosing their homes.

They end up watching through The Lion King, and half way through the second one before the yawning of the children makes Toki grow tired herself. The collection of kids are herded up the stairs, put through nightly rituals, and then tucked into the prepared guest rooms that had all the extra beds in them. She didn’t even have to read them a story- they’d tuckered themselves out with the day’s excitement, and with the sugar from the treats at dinner burning out of their systems, they were ready to drop like logs.

Toki wasn’t far behind them- she stopped only to go downstairs and let one of the guards passing by know that she and the kids were off to bed, so that their parents would be able to be told.

Once she’s in bed though, Toki finds herself tossing and turning. She’s tired, but she keeps getting too warm, and then too cold. The sounds from the district are louder than she was used to. Booming laughter, someone singing, and no doubt a lot of drunken shenanigans did not make for a quiet night. It drowned out the usual silence of her household, though she didn’t mind at this point. Thumper was a loud sleeper.

It was probably an hour or more after the kids were set to bed that Toki was beginning to drift off. The day had been good, for all that it started out long. The children were happy, the parents were happy, just… Everyone was happy. It made her happy. She’d enjoyed the smells of freshly finished paint, and the smells of the food. Even if she couldn’t stomach it, everyone had put their best foot- or paws and hooves in some cases- forwards and displayed a large variety of food for everyone to try.

Something tingled at her nose, and Toki stirred. What… Was that? That wasn’t…

Was that gasoline? And smoke?

She sat up sharply, eyes taking in the dark substance rolling up from under her door. The moonlight shows a reflection of some sort of liquid on her wooden floors, and panic hits her.

Toki scrambles out of bed, and throws the door open. Her nightgown was singed as flames billow inwards, drawn by the sudden access to fresh oxygen.
Chapter 6

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: I personally enjoyed writing this. It was a lot of fun getting the fire scene done- because really, it is absolutely horrifying to even envision it. It pleases me that i managed to get it down accurately. heh. If i had any artistic talent, i'd draw Toki holding the beam up, in all of her gruesome horrifying appearance. Me doth think that the little monster children are going to need several months of therapy- and that the adults are probably not going to be much better.

The hallway was wreathed in flames, floor and ceiling burning. The crackle of it filled her ears just as the smoke flooded her lungs. The wood was old, and old wood burns fast. Already the support beams were groaning, splintering with showers of sparks and raining pieces of burning tinder. She choked and coughed, and painted the floor red for half a second as her stomach upended against the sudden surge of smoke and pain from the fire on her gown.

Her first thought was of the children in the rooms down the hall. Her second was of how to get the children out. Obviously if the fire was up here, going down was not an option. The guest rooms had small windows- suited only for small children to make use of- but one of them had been sealed a while back due to some rain leakage. She would handle it when she got there.

But the hall floor was a sea of fire, and the smoke was making her gaze swirl. Toki didn’t have long to think about it, seconds at most, before the green of her soul tinted a different color as a burn of magic and determination filled her and made her choice for her.

On shaky legs, she thrust her feet into the burning puddle of liquid, her mind focusing on only one thing. She had to save the children. She was scarcely aware of a high pitched keening noise- it made her ears scream and her stomach churn, only until she realized that it was her own voice making those noises. The flames felt like they were being intentionally drawn to her, being sucked towards her like some vortex hell-bent on turning her into the human torch.

It burnt the insides of her throat when she involuntarily gasped, and it was all she could do not to rush over the unstable floor.

Under her feet, the floor creaked, and she had to step fast and carefully through the agonizing liquid fire rolling over her toes as sections of it gave way, and the fires of below reached up to lick at her feet. Shortly, that pain faded as the nerve endings in her feet were simply burnt away.

She shoved her shoulder against the first door, and wrenched it open when it proved that the knob wouldn’t turn under her fingers. The fire burned up her back, and her gown seared to her flesh as she opened the door to frightened children. The burst of oxygen spent, she wasted no time in bustling into the room.

Blackened fingers curled around the lip of the window, and she yanked it open. Her lungs heaved, and she hacked and coughed, managing to lift each terrified child up and shoving them through the window.

“Go down, go down,” She rasped to them in a panic, not even certain she was actually speaking words so much as forcefully thinking them- she had another room to go to, another room of children to save, and she needed to go faster. Toki willed the shaking of her limbs to still, and shook off a crust of skin that fell from her fingers. Below the drop off of the slanted roof below should have been shrubs- they would be okay. “Go, go, go.”

In record time, the room is empty, and ablaze. Below her, she can hear panicked shouts, and monsters, forced sober by the sudden shock of something so unexpected, are crowding around. She can see one of them reaching up and taking children from the roof- and it’s Wolfen, his gaze panicked as he fails to spot his pups amongst the ones on the ground and on the roof.

“Floor isn’t stable,” She catches herself rasping, “Stay down, stay down, I’ll get them, they’re in the other room.” Rasping or mouthing, she can’t tell. She has more to get- and she meets the wolf-man’s gaze as the fire swallows her lower body and bursts out the window to engulf the roof.

He looks positively horrified at her visage, but hope is there in his yellowed gaze.

It fills her with determination.

She turns back, body numb to the fires that have scoured her pale flesh to a hellish black, and disappears into the flames again to go to the other room. This door gives easy, and she has to stop the panicked movements of one of the children. It’s Thumper- he tries to dart into the hall, but she has to stop him because…

The fire bursts over her back, and he screams in her stead as the fire burns through her middle. She can feel something hot dripping down- blood, she thinks, as the fire catches inside of her. Toki can’t breathe, can’t think- because she’s running on that single-minded motivation.

Save the children.

The fire bursts from inside of her ribs, and she pays it little mind as she loops blackened fingers around the child’s arm. Her fingers are thin and hard- little more than burnt bone now, she sees. Whatever magic she had in her veins was doing its purpose of making her last wish done.

The children scream- some at her, some at the fire, some at the ghastly colored flames that are spewing from between ribs that should never have been visible. Some form of ghastly magic is drawing the fire and twisting it into something more- something that fits the rushed deeds of wild magic.

The window is a problem- it won’t open, and she can’t make it do what she needs it to. She can vaguely see her reflection- and something white and distinctly bone is bubbling from her head. Her scalp is burnt, and it sloughs off in rapid flakes as what she thinks are long prongs beginning to sprout. They seem to be growing from the fire that’s bubbling out of her eyes and ears, searing away any sort of charred flesh she has left.

She doesn’t care. There is a shattering of glass, and she’s shoving lambs and pups and little bitty singed bunny monsters out the window as fast as she can. When she comes to what she thinks is the end, she glances back on a whim and spots the singed gray fur of Thumper.

He gazes at her with something caught between horror and terror, and Toki can’t bring herself to feel bad in this moment. She misses out on voices calling to her, begging her please to come down, to get out of the fire- because she has to lunge for the little rabbit.

His shrill scream echoes again, as the main support for the roof caves. The burning log comes down, and agony splits her skull for what feels like an eternity. Her legs brace with what strength she has,
and she looks down at him with eyes that are no longer there. The beam sits perched between two long horns, and wedged in a crack that splits open the black-burned skull.

Her mouth opens, fire-warped teeth letting out a billow of flame that sears her face black, and she tries to speak. Burning green eyes seem to terrify the boy more. “Get… out… Please…” She can’t hold the support beam forever.

Over the roaring din of the fires around them, the sound of claws on wood was unable to be mistaken for anything else. The wood of the window frame cracked and rumbled, before it burst inwards.

"TOKIKO!" A beastly roar was unleashed as burning wood was shattered under the weight of impact, and Tenebris came into her vision. Purple eyes were glowing brightly with the surge of magical energy running though his body, but as he came closer, a look of shock painted his expression and dimmed the brilliant glow just faintly.

This woman, it was Toki... but it wasn't... Then he realized... Her transformation was nearly complete; all that was left was...

His thoughts quickly were torn away from that as he crawled forward and snatched the child from under her, holding him in a few tendrils against his chest as he grabbed the beam. "Is Thumper the last child? Are there any more in the house?" He demanded.

She didn’t even flinch, though Thumper cried out and had tried to shy into her leg. His fur burnt, and she couldn’t get him off until Tenebris managed to pull him away. Thumper’s screams were growing weaker as he was unable to get the air he needed to supply them. The support from the larger monster helped ease the beam’s weight off of her, and she pried her skull free with an awful sound of bone grating against wood. The crack glowed a vague green as the last of her eyes melted free of their sockets, leaving behind glowing green dots that stared at him as she remained with her arms and body holding up the other half of the burning beam.

She didn’t speak, as the burnt flesh of her throat fell down to the floor. Instead she nodded. The fire billowing from her mouth garbled something, but it was tangible enough to be understood. “He is the last.”

Good enough to be heard... But this was terrible, her magic was literal fire and in this situation, it was overwhelming her body and everything around them... she had to get secluded, but he had to get her out...

... He had never done this before, but to hell with it. It was his only chance

"Toki, You need to climb into my abdomen!" he ordered. "My torso is hollow, and you're small enough to fit with Thumper, but you need to hurry!" His hands were searing with pain, and his feet were in the same, but for their sake, he held on... he had to get them out of here. "Do not question me, just do it!" He barked after a surge of fire sent heat through his cloak and into his back. OW.

Toki wasn’t fully there. The dull glow of her eyes made it obvious that she was very lost to her magic- but there was enough of her left to give him a firm look. She reaches out to take Thumper into her burnt black claws, leaving the support beam to splinter and fall. It cracks against her humorous as she takes the weakening rabbit- and as ordered, Toki clamors inside of the long, dark slit that split open the front of Tenebris.

There was a brief part of her that wondered how he managed to hide such a long hole in his body under the fabric of his turtleneck, and if it rubbed awkwardly or not.
Once she's cleared from the danger, he helps her climb into the cavity, and then lowers his turtleneck around them. Behind him, the beam brings the wall down, leaving him to create a new exit. "Watch Thumper, I need to cut off the oxygen to put you out... You can lift the hem of my clothing, but only when we're out of the smoke!" he told her. It took a flex of his magic, and there was the burning agony of fire being trapped inside of his body with no way out. It lasted only for a few seconds, before smoke furred out from under his tunic.

His words are lost on her ears- all save for “Watch Thumper”. She doesn’t breathe, she doesn’t move, and the rabbit trapped in her ribcage is hardly jostled as he moves.

That handled, Tenebris was quick into lowering onto all fours. He ducked the beam as it fell, and charged the wall that would put them in front of the house...

Outside, the wall exploded outward as Tenebris flew out of the second story hallway, a massive wave of fire coming after him.

He flew a short distance given his velocity and hit the ground hard, no doubt breaking something as he landed and rolled a few times before he stopped, limp and on his back. Though that look like it could have seriously hurt those inside his chest, the powerful shield over his chest protected them from the outside, and a layer of ectoplasmic flesh cushioned the inside.

Upon Tenebris' body coming to a stop on the ground, Aliquam and Caeruleus appeared and came running for him, both of tem shouting to their father in hopes that he was all right.

When he falls still, and her magic gutters and dies off inside of her chest, Toki follows through with the rest of his orders. Her flames are spent, having sucked up what oxygen was inside of his body rather rapidly, and it leaves her dull and blackened inside of him. Her claws reach out, and she eases the turtleneck up from the inside, to let air in for Thumper. It takes a bit of rousing, but soon he’s gasping again, and crying as he clings to her sternum. Her bones are hot and brittle, and it feels like he’s burning himself, but she can’t seem to make him let go.

She’s so tired… But she has to get out. One arm around the trembling rabbit, Toki uses the other to try and ease herself out of Tenebris’ abdominal cavity. She can’t find anything to grasp… Without her magic to urge her into action, it seems impossible for her to move. She doesn’t manage to get his shirt all the way up, before she’s drawing her arm back in to ease Thumper out of her ribcage, and onto the outsides of her ribs.

His little claws scratch at her bone, but Toki doesn’t have the energy to fuss.

The movements under Tenebris’s clothing were noticed and while Caeruleus lifted up the turtleneck further to allow more oxygen into his chest, Aliquam worked a hand into the burned cavity and came upon the singed fur of Thumper first. Coaxing him from Toki wasn’t as easy as he hoped, but the lure of fresh, cool air was enough to have the rabbit loosening his hold after some gentle coaxing.

Papyrus pulled him from his father’s abdomen, cradling him close for a moment. "Miss Toki, hang on!" Thumper was then passed to Cae, who set him down slowly, letting him catch his breath.

Ali knew he had to be careful with moving her, so he started by pulling her feet out. However he hissed in pain as the heat radiating off of her bones burned through the gloves covering his own.

Wait... Bone?! He tensed and moved with a more panicked vigor. He was gentle still, ignoring the burn of heat through his gloves as he eased first her feet, then her legs, and then up to her rear out of the long cavity. "SANS!"
Cae came around the other side of his father’s large frame and kept her body moving until finally her head was removed. She was laid carefully on the ground next to Tenebris, and the brothers sat back a moment and just looked at her in shock.

"Oh my god... oh my god..." Caeruleus whispers of horror filled the silence.

Toki’s sockets had drifted shut sometime during the extraction. She was so tired, and everything hurt... She hardly felt a thing as she was guided out, her bones and joints limp and nearly lifeless as she was extracted from Tenebris.

There were spots of white bone, the color that it should be, smattered here and there on her form. The vast majority of her body was burned so black that she nearly blended in with the grass. Around her, it sizzled slightly, burning under the extreme heat of her bones. Her humorous was cracked, where she’d caught it on the burning beam, but it did not glow like the large split curling around her left horn.

Jagged teeth were interlaced, charred skin still clinging to the bone of her face and to various other parts of her body. The green glow of her irises was faintly visible beneath the bone-lids of her eye sockets. A large strip of skin- and what was obviously the remains of her night gown- stretched across a couple of her ribs, literally seared to the bone. Behind her sternum, her soul pulsed brightly, still agitated into view by the recent use of her magic.

It was a dim green- and on top of the massive amount of damage to her body, her soul’s hp bar was on display. It read horrifyingly low- ten hp, out of a thousand. If Tenebris had been any later, she would have turned to ash. It refused to be coaxed out of her chest cavity.

Almost immediately Aliquam's hands began to glow and he leaned down, hugging her without moving her from the ground. His hands moved and from behind her body his magic took hold of her soul, unleashing healing magic that would raise her HP back up. While he did that, Caeruleus checked on their father.

Tenebris wasn't dusted, so he still had HP left, but his hands and feet were burned, the inner lining of his torso cavity was irritated with lesser one-degree burns. He no doubt had broken the shoulder he landed on, but looked like his head was all right. He was just unconscious.

"SOMEONE COME HELP US!" the older brother turned and yelled to the nearby crowd.

A good portion of the crowd was in motion, rushing to get buckets to keep the blaze from spreading. They were bringing water from water taps, from the river, from wherever they could get it to try and stop the blaze from crossing the dry grass and burning everything to the ground. The camera crew that Toki had hired to air parts of the celebration were dropping their gear and rushing to help the monsters in putting out the blaze.

From the crowd, Wolfen’s mate came bustling. She’s harried, wool a mess, as she rushes towards the group. Obviously she’s been running, and she’s got her soot-covered children tightly entangled in her wool to keep them safe and with her. She bypasses Thumper’s mother, who had come to collect the hysterical boy, and drops to the ground beside the wounded. Sharp eyes look over Papyrus and his work, and deems him good enough to keep the wounded soul stable. From a basket she has with her, she pulls linen wraps, and burn salves. “I’m Bo. None of us know healing magic good enough to treat either of their wounds,” She says in a soft, apologetic tone, “But I can bandage and set his shoulder. Aliquam- can you keep her stable until I have finished your father?” She’s already in motion, lurching the large monster’s shoulder bones back to where they needed to be, and then binding them tightly so the broken bones don’t drift apart again. His hands are next, and she’s using steel wool to scrape the burnt flesh off.
Best to be done while he’s unconscious. The burnt flesh peels off, leaving behind raw, bleeding wounds, that are rapidly slathered in burn salves, and then tightly wrapped in clean linens.

Ali nodded slowly and stayed close to Toki, his hands staying firm against her as he poured as much healing magic as he could into her body.

Tenebris thankfully was deep enough in unconsciousness that the worst of his reactions to the pain were a few mere twitches of his hands. Though that pain would no doubt worsen when she did the same to his feet.

And worsen it would. She wouldn’t even bother with pretenses- Bo would sit astride his legs to keep them pinned, and scrub his feet down to the soft, un-burnt flesh. Once his feet and hands are all wrapped and bound, she would coat the inside of his chest cavity with the same burn salve, and then wrap him with bandages to make sure it stays covered and so nothing can get in. “Papyrus is the best we have in terms of healing magic right now,” She says softly. “Until we can get healers here, this is all we have to work with. Sans- take Tenebris to my home. He needs to rest and remain immobile.”

Tokiko isn’t quite as lucky to remain unconscious. As her hp is brought up slowly, her eyes crane open, and dim green peers up at Aliquam. Her teeth part, sharp surfaces grinding slightly as she exhales. Magic is still creating all of the organs that she would need access to, so her breath is shaky and unstable. “Pa-py-rus…” She rasps, ash drifting out of her mouth with her exhaled words.

"...!" He pulled back at hearing her and he looked down at her, eyes glowing a distressed orange. "Miss Toki... oh my stars," he whispered, "It's gonna be okay, you're gonna be okay…"

"We need to get them back to the underground, where they can heal under the constant supervision. We can bring the healers back with us, but it'd be better to get them where they'll be safe." Caeruleus told Bo, "I'll see to it that a proper caravan wagon is prepared, but I’m not risking either of them.” he growled.

Toki isn’t sure she believes him- because everything hurts, and she feels so tired. Her eyes dim for a moment, before she forces them brighter. “They… okay? Ch… children?” She’d gone through all of this to make sure they were okay… They had to be okay…

Bo gives Caeruleus a firm look. “Under any other circumstances, I would have you take them on one of your shortcuts… But I don’t think Miss Nara would survive that sort of trip. It’s not gentle, and her soul is not strong enough after such a violent change over to handle it. Please. I will watch your father if you want to go get one of the caravans set up, but you either need to bring a healer here and make due with what we have, or set out now. Magic or not, if infection sets in, neither of them will be in a very good place. Fires are not good things to have happen.”

Caeruleus nodded, and in the blink of an eye, was gone to prepare the caravan.

"The children are okay, you saved them all!" Ali praised as he pressed his forehead to hers. "You're a hero."

Toki’s sockets dimmed as he pressed to her, and a pleased noise leaves her. The kids were safe. “Good… Good.” The determination that drove her fades off, and exhaustion and agony take over. Her eyes dim to black, and then the sockets close again. Hero? No, she wasn’t a hero.

Bo watches her with a sad smile, and gently brushes her fingers up one of the long horns of the Nara. Her eyes train on the skeleton’s chest, and she examines her heath bar. “It’s steadily going up, but not at the pace it should be. She needs to get all of this off of her bones.” The black burnt substance on the woman’s body was disconcerting, but it was also not healthy. It was seared to the bone- and the woman didn’t have the hp currently for her to try and scrub it off with the steel wool.

Aliquam kept one hand working on healing her while the other reached to start and pick the remains of the flesh from her bones.

That makes Toki stir, and a pained groan leaves her. She squirms slightly, joints grinding with the gunk mucking them up. “Hurts…”

Bo nudges Aliquam’s fingers away, and gives him a firm look. “Not here. Focus on raising her hp first. When she’s in a more sanitary location, you can remove the burnt parts. The air is filled with smoke and no telling what nasty things- it will get on the bone and do her no good if you clear it away now.”

The soft sound of hopping draws near, and Thumper’s mother approaches. Her son is on her hip- his burns are bandaged, and his eyes watery and upset as he gazes down on his rescuers- and her other arm is laden with two large blankets. “It’s not much, but… It should help to lay them on something softer.” She rests the blankets by Tenebris, and looks uncertainly to the Skeleton at his side. “Is… that really Miss Toki?”

“It is.” The sheep collects the blankets and carefully begins to ease Tenebris over one. He’s large, but she’s stronger than she looks. “We knew she was changing- and I think her magic did this to her to save her. Aliquam- put her on the other blanket. Her bones should be cool enough now not to burn it.”

He nodded once and laid the blanket down. Carefully moving her, Papyrus tried to make sure that she wasn’t jostled. "I've got you." he whispered gently.

Bo let Papyrus move Tokiko over, and tended to her own patient. She curled his tail up on the blanket so it wouldn’t drag the ground, and took a moment to sit back.

The house behind them was mostly fallen down. Black smoke curled into the air, but the monsters had been successful. The fire hadn’t spread, and the ground between the burning house and the rest of the compound was soaking wet. Bo stands, and glances to the younger skeleton. “Your brother should be back in a few moments. I’m going to go make sure no one else got burned- will you be alright to stay with them until Sans returns?”

He nodded, leaning down and pressing his teeth against Toki's skull in a soft, worried-sick kiss as he waited for his brother.

Toki’s too out of it to even feel it. Her soul dims as her consciousness fades, leaving Papyrus essentially alone with two unconscious monsters as he waits.

Caeruleus returned after a while, a caravan set up to transport both wounded back to the underground. Toki was easily moved, but they had to get help to load Tenebris in with her. The other monsters were more than eager enough to assist, and with several of them lifting him, Tenebris was settled in just as gently as the lady skeleton was.

After a few hours on the road, though it could have been more, Caeruleus could see Tenebris’ eyes starting to open. He looked groggy and dizzy. "Pops... easy...." He rested his hand gently on his uninjured shoulder to keep the large monster from sitting up.

"... Sans... T-Toki..."
"She's alive... so is the kid... you saved them both, you know..."

"... Good..."

Toki wouldn’t be far from him, if he were to glance around. She looks much the same as when she went in, minus the flames billowing from inside of her body. There are wet cloths draped over parts of her bones, trying to soften up some of the char that is stuck so tightly to her, so they can remove it without damaging her. Her hp is a little higher, but keeps fluctuating, edging up and down as her body tries to heal itself over time, and as her wounds keep preventing it. A long, wet cloth is covering the glowing wound bisecting her skull, and wrapped around her humorous to keep movement from fracturing the bone further.

The steady rasp of her breathing is the only sound she makes.

"..." Tenebris could see her, and he didn't like what he saw... He slowly tried to sit up, but Cae kept a firm hand on his shoulder to keep him in place.

"Don't move, Pops... We think you broke your shoulder..."

"Sans... Where are we going?"

"We're going back to the underground."
Chapter 7

Strider notes: So we managed to finish this, and i had a little bit of time while my bestie is here for me to upload it. The next chapter will probably be a week or more out- We need to plan, plot, and have time to execute it.

A speedy few days of traveling and the caravan arrived to the Underground castle. Aliquam carried Toki inside with utmost caution, while His Majesty, Asgore Dreemurr, carried in Tenebris. As he was one of the scarce few capable of carrying the massive monster, it was up to the king to heft the scientist.

Both wounded were treated, and then moved to a recovery suite inside of the castle. Toki was rested gently atop the large bed in the middle of the room, while Tenebris rested in a recliner against the wall of the same room.

She hadn’t woken up since she’d fallen unconscious, and it had unnerved some of the doctors. Monsters who fell down like this did not usually wake up- and they had hoped that she would have roused during the scrubbing of her bones.

Alas, she hadn’t. She’d remained still and silent, save for the occasional flexes of her limbs as they scrubbed into her joints. She came out looking better than before. She was mostly a pristine white now, save for a few spots where the bone was permanently scorched. Her horns were one such thing, the long arcs of ivory stained black at the ends. Her claw-like fingers and toes were another. She was mostly healed as well, though the large crack that split her head would not fully close. It scarred over, leaving a forever mark of the incident in which she made her final change.

They had rested her on the bed and left her bare, more out of desire to let her bones get some fresh air without being covered in the burnt remains of her human flesh.

Tenebris couldn’t sleep... not like this... He’d occasionally stare at his hands, before looking to Toki, scolding himself on how he could have done better... He didn’t even realize the danger until it was too late.

The fire had been unexpected- he’d patrolled around, and he wasn’t even sure how the humans managed to get past him. It wasn’t until the column of smoke lifted into view above the trees that he realized it wasn’t just fire-place smoke that he was smelling.

No, the place where the children and their human host were housed was burning unnaturally fast. He made use of his long legs to shorten the distance between him and the crowd of monsters taking children down from the roof. He scanned over them quickly, and found that they were missing one.
"Where is Toki?"

"She helped the children out safely, but she's still inside!"

"WHAT?!"

Tenebris could hear his soul speed up with those last three words, and he turned, running towards the ground floor. The doors were burning- but they were barricaded too. He didn’t have time to tear through it- or even wonder who would barricade a female and children inside of a house that was on fire- not with the base support structure of the house beginning to creak and groan.

He managed to get himself on the second floor roof when he felt the house tremble, he could then feel a powerful wave of magic, one that told him that's where he would find the human. A child’s scream echoed- that had to have been the reason that she hadn’t tried to get out, it had to have been- and his body lunged forward, roaring the name of the woman who he had come in to save.

"TOKIKO!"

He grit his teeth, then sighed and pressed his face into his hands. Tenebris had been healed, yes, but the healed parts of his body were raw and tender and still wrapped in bandages.

He wasn’t alone to his musings for long. Toki stirred, and the soft clack of bone on bone sounded as her legs shifted and bumped together. Her teeth remained clenched tight, but a groan pulled out from behind them. In her chest, her soul sped up, rousing to an awareness she hadn’t had since she had gone under.

Her skull rotated as she woke, the long horns scraping on the pillows she’d been rested against, and it was the unfamiliar sensation that had her socket’s opening. Her pinpricks were a dark gray color, and they blearily focused on the ceiling above her.

He lifted his head as she made a noise, glancing to her, before promptly sagging his shoulders and sighing in relief. "Oh thank the stars..." He scrubbed his palm over his face briefly, before he smiled at her from his seat, "Toki..."

“Gaster…?” Her teeth remained closed despite her words, and the skeleton shifted to sit upright. The rattle of bones was unfamiliar- and it took her a second to remember that last time she’d seen herself she had been on fire- burning hot, fire, oh god it had burned and how was she still alive she had been-

The rattle of bones shaking disturbed her inner panic, and her pinpricks settled on her lap as she struggled upright. Her bones were trembling, and something was rapidly picking up pace behind her sternum as panic flooded her. She… She… She was bone, but she wasn’t supposed to be bone.

She’d made the change…?

He noticed her trembling and for a moment moved to comfort her, though quickly found himself regretting it as pain erupted from his bandaged feet. "Ghnn... damnit...." he slowly sat back again, just kept his gaze on her. Soothingly, Tenebris murmured to her. "Easy now, Toki, it's okay." he told her. "You're safe now..."

"I was... I was on fire. Everything was burning, and it hurt..." Her rattling doesn't stop, and she stares down at her fingers. The bones didn't look human- they tapered to sharp, claw like points and were black at the tips, like a burnt candle. "You got us out. Th... Thumper and me, that is. You got burned... Are you okay?"

She traced her fingers up her femur, and made note that she could still feel everything, like she still had nerves in her fingers. The bone under her palms was warm and smooth, if slightly scratched from the rough scrubbing it had gotten to remove the burned on pieces. It tickled, her touch, and she was made very aware that she was very, very naked sitting on this bed. She's not sure if it's easing her panic or making it worse. "... Why am I naked?"

"Your clothes were burned and sticking to what flesh remained, it had to be removed. But, there is clothing waiting for when you're ready to get around again." he answered. "As for me, I'll be fine..." he then chuckled and lifted his hands, displaying the bandages. He might have been mostly healed, but everything was raw and it still hurt like the blazes. "Just may need a little help lighting my pipe for the next few days." he jested.

A shaky laugh pulls from her, and her mouth opens the first time. The interlocking teeth are spaced evenly apart, some of the fangs longer than the others, but each paired with an equal sized one on the other side. As her laugh fades and her mouth closes, her teeth make a peculiar noise, like flint on stones. Sparks burst from them for a split second, before disappearing.

She grimaces, the sharp fangs of her mouth flexing as her expression shifts, and she covers her mouth with her hands as the pinpricks of light disappear from her eye sockets. Her chest glows a soft, distressed green, and she tries to cover it with her other hand. Toki adjusts herself on the bed, and carefully comes to sit at the side. She feels very exposed, and absolutely terrible about the burns on his limbs, and completely uncertain about the fact that her mouth just emitted sparks. "I think we can cover your pipe being lit. Ah... I'd like to get dressed all the same. I don't... know if it's different for monsters, but being naked in front of someone is not usually comfortable for a human." Unless that someone was their lover- then that was different.

He noticed the sparks and blinked once. That was... odd. Sighing, Tenebris carefully flexed his feet, putting them against the ground for a moment before he shakily got up. "Very well..." he sounded in pain as he limped over to the bed, leaning against it for a moment to steady himself. "I shall have someone bring you some clothing, once I can get out there..." he said the last part quieter, wincing in pain still.

Okay, yeah, no, panic aside, that was a sound of pain and it made her soul wrench tightly in her chest. Toki scrambled up, and realized that she was more top heavy than she expected and remembered ever being, and ended up stumbling onto her hands and knees as she attempted to assist him. "Gaster, you sit down!" Her voice wavers slightly, but is thankfully firm, and her pinpricks are back as she peers up at him. "Just tell me where clothes are, I can find them! Or have someone bring them or whatever, just sit!"

"Ngh..." he slowly sat down on the bed, then he sighed and looked at her. "I'll give someone a call, they'll bring something over."

Toki took a moment to get her feet under her, and then wobbled upright. She glanced down at her body- at the bare bones with nothing holding them together- and let her mind burn with befuddlement. Magic was so... odd. "If you have your phone on you, you could use that..." She murmurs softly. Her fingers wander up, and she checks out her face as best she can.
“… Do I have horns? Or did I hallucinate that in the fire?”

"You do have horns." he told her with a smile, "They are rather amazing looking." he reached up and gently took one of her horns in his hold in one hand as he pulled his phone from his coat pocket.

Toki reached out to take his phone for him, as she remained standing before him. Really, she needed to get used to this new center of gravity. She’d always been a human to adapt and roll with what happened to her- and she could have a good cry over her trauma later, when no one was around. His bandaged hands around her horns were an odd sensation, and her spine rattled in what she supposed was the skeleton equivalent of a shiver. She located his contacts easily enough, and held it out for him to select whom he wanted to call. “… How exactly am I going to get clothes? All of… all of my stuff went up in flames.”

It seemed to hit her then, the gravity of what happened- it was all gone. Her home, her memories there… Gone, lost in the flames that had consumed her body and soul. Her pinpricks dimmed, despite her attempts to hide her sadness, and her soul quivered behind her sternum. The bright green, still human shaped soul pulsed with a sadder tone.

He reached and set a hand on her shoulder to comfort her, before he pointed to 'Caeruleus'.

She shifted a little under his hand- because it felt strange to have his hand on bare bone- before she tapped Cae’s name. It took her a moment to get it- claws are not conductive to proper phone use- but soon she had it ringing, and settled it carefully into his hand so he could talk privately. She took the moment to calm herself, gathering her emotions and soothing them as best as she was capable of.

He took it and held the phone to his head, cradling it against his skull. "Caeruleus? Yes, she's awake."

Without warning, the door to the room was pushed open with a loud BANG, and the familiar large boned form of Caeruelus came bustling in. "TOKI!"

Toki spooked at the sudden bang, sparks flying from her teeth as her name was shouted. She reached a hand up and rubbed at what she thought was where her hearing originated. How loud. “Channeling your inner Papyrus, Cae?” The tease falls from behind her mouth without her attempting to stop it, and she hesitates as she turns to face him.

She looked a lot different now- and she couldn’t really recall him after the fire. Had he seen what she’d been turned into? The only face she swore she saw had been Aliquam. He’d been right up in her face, she thought. With his hands… warming something in her chest, or something. She wasn’t certain.

He doesn’t reply, just comes over and hugs her tightly. "You're awake" he whispered, voice tired and relieved. "You're awake... thank the stars.”

She shivers as her bones are pressed to his jacket, but she doesn’t squirm away. Toki leans into him, and loops her arms around the width of his chest. “I'm awake,” she murmurs back softly. Her face burrows into his shoulder, and she hesitates, realizing she has horns and should probably be careful not to poke his face with them.

He didn't look to care. He was too busy holding her close as he stroked her head, between her horns. "... Aw Toki.... F-Fuck..."

“It’s okay,” she soothes softly. Her fingers cling tighter to his jacket, and a rattle escapes her body, betraying her unrest. “Ah- ow. Easy on my skull please. There’s a spot that’s sensitive.” It would be the large scar that runs over part of her skull.

He noticed and moved his hand to the other side, stroking there instead as he pressed his teeth against the front of her skull, "I was so fuckin’ worried, Toki..."

“I… I’m sorry I worried you…” She whispered quietly into his jacket. Her rattling continued, and her teeth ground unintentionally, making distressed sparks pop across his coat.

There was a soft sound that bubbled out of his chest, and Toki was unable to identify what it was before his arms tightened around her more. "... It's not your fault."

“I know it’s not.” Her ribs protest the tightness of his grasp, and she wiggles slightly. “It's not yours either, Sans. I’m okay now. I feel better than I have since the barrier dropped. The fire… was not okay, but… it did solve one problem?” Namely, it forced her through the rest of the change, and she wasn’t wasting away anymore.

His teeth clacked against the top of her skull again, and he nuzzled them against her shortly after. "It... heh... it did..."

Her rattling eases off finally, and she risks a chance to peek up at him. Soft green pinpricks expand and contract at him as she flicks her gaze over his face. “So… Ah… did you bring clothes per chance? It’s a bit drafty in here.” He was very warm, but it was still a principle thing. Monster she might be, but she was human on the inside. Er. Soul side, rather.

He nodded, shedding his hoodie and handing it over. "Here.”

That wasn’t quite what she had in mind, but Toki wasn’t going to be turning down clothes at this point. She accepts it, and slips it over her shoulders. Given the size difference between her build and his, it swims on her. She zips it up, and buries herself in the warm fluff inside. The excess fabric that isn’t being held up by her bones dangles down, and hits about mid-thigh. There. A little bit more proper than being completely in the nude. “Thanks, Sans.” A pleased noise reverberates inside of her rib cage, and it makes her pause. A… purr? Or a bone rattling like a purr. Whatever it is, it is a pleased noise and she likes making it.

He smiled down at her and both males seemed to repeat the sound back at her. "You look so cute in that~" he chuckled, Tenebris nodding in agreement.

Her cheeks light up with a green glow, and she ducks her jaw into the edge of the coat to hide her flush. Her chest makes the noise again in response to the two monsters in her company, and Toki can’t help but smile regardless. “It fits you better, but it’s comfortable. The lining is very soft.” She shifts, and pads back towards the bed. She pats it- because there’s more than enough room on it for the three of them to be seated- and then draws her limbs up into the coat. Effectively leaving only her horned head and hands visible, Toki peers at him and hums. “So… What happened after Gaster got us out? I’m a little… foggy after that. I remember seeing Pap’s face.”

"We immediately got you two to the underground.” Sans answered, not bothering to sit. His hands slipped into the pockets on his shorts.

“Well, I figured that. I don’t know any human facility that looks like this one. This is far nicer than any hospital I’ve been to. But… I meant, did the fire spread? Everyone’s houses are okay, right? Did anyone find out who set the fire? There was gasoline all over the floor when the smell of the smoke got me up.” She recalled Pap telling her the kids were alright- but now her concern fell with their homes. They weren’t homeless, were they? She hoped her beehives were alright too. Her apiary was her livelihood- without it she wouldn’t be able to afford to have her house rebuilt.
"The homes are alright. Everyone managed to stop it before it could spread- they even managed to save your bees," he chuckled softly.

By his lack of answer for the latter part of her question, Toki perceived that no one had been found yet. Her mouth curled into a frown, and then opened with a sigh. “I’m glad that no other homes were burned, and that my apiary is alright.” There are too few bees left in the world now- they need all the care that they can get. Toki shifts under the coat, her femurs brushing as she adjusts her legs against the warm lining. “How long have we been here?”

"A couple of days." he answered with a shrug.

“Days?” The ridges of bone above her sockets lifted, and she gave him a befuddled look. “I’ve been asleep for days? Is that normal for monsters?”

"No."

She frowns, and rubs her arms through the jacket. Her bones rattle again, and her pinpricks flick down to stare at her hands. “That’s usually called a coma in humans.” She mutters quietly. “Not all of them wake up from them.” She might never have woken up.

"It may have just been the time your body needed to finish the transformation," Tenebris explained softly, “It may have been necessary for your body.”

She rubs her arms again, sinking down more into the fluff of the inner lining. “It might have, yeah.” A sigh leaves Toki, and she glances back to Cae. “I’ve been out of it for a few days- I’m going to need to get back. I have to handle the insurance claims for the fire, and organize a cleanup. I doubt anything survived it, but I’d like to see if any of the stuff in the attic survived.” She had a lockbox in there with her most important things- and those were designed to handle fire. It also had emergency cash- because her bankcard had probably melted into a lump of plastic in her wallet.

"You're not going anywhere." Caeruleus informed her sternly.

Her mouth opened slightly, as she processed what he said, and then her brow ridges furrowed at him. “Excuse me? I do need to go home, Sans. I can’t just leave everyone to deal with the fallout of the fire. My hives have to be tended, things need to be cleaned, and I have to call my family to let them know I’m okay… I can’t just stay here.”

"You're not going yet is what Sans is trying to say," Tenebris reassures her easily, casting his son a sharp glance. "We'll return home together, alright?"

"The longer I wait, the harder it’s going to be to get the insurance going." Her gaze flits to Tenebris, and the green dots slide down to the bandages around his hands. Guilt gnawed at her- he was only singed because he came to save her. Toki sighs, crossing her arms over her knees and resting her chin on them. The action is familiar- but the way her chin sits in the space between her radius and ulna is almost alien in comparison. “I also do need to find my lockbox. It has emergency money in it, along with important files. The money would be useful at this point- I cant exactly just keep your jacket and go commando under it, can I? But alright- I can wait for you to get better, Gaster.”

"They wont give you flack for the time if we say you were comatose." Caeruleus commented with a snort.

Tenebris simply sighs.

Toki nods, and glances to him. Hesitantly, she opens her arms, requesting a hug from the larger skeleton. “Thanks, guys. We’ll just have to keep it quiet that I was awake. Insurance people are Caeruleus was all too eager to step forward and embrace her again, hiding his face in the fabric over her shoulder.

It was a little awkward, with him kneeling on the bed to join her hug. She rubs her small fingers over his shoulder blades, the bone feeling strange without his coat to cushion them. “I’m sorry I scared you guys.”

“You’re okay now, though...” Tenebris rumbled, “That’s all that matters.”

“I suppose so.” Her agreement is light, and she nuzzles her face into Sans shoulder with a quiet sound.

Sans is quick to nuzzle her in return, too relaxed, too happy, to do anything more than that.

She shifts and gently nudges him so he sits on the bed. Toki’s an affectionate person by nature- so she ends up snuggled into his side, with her head against his shoulder. “If I’m gonna be here for a while, I am going to need actual clothes. Your jacket is warm, but it is a little short for my tastes. Don’t need to be flashing people if I bend over, y’know?”

Boy did he ever know. Sans laughed quietly. “Yeah... I’ll go and get those for you.” He released her, getting to his feet and glancing over to Tenebris. "You need anything, Pops?"

"I’ll be alright. Just get her the clothing she needs."

Toki retreats back inside of the jacket, and watches them quietly. The green glow in her sockets is warm, as she looks on. “I’d tell you what size of clothes I wear, but I don’t actually know now that I don’t have meaty parts. A long shirt or something that has draw-strings will work well enough.”

"Don’t worry about it. I’ll figure something out for you."

She nods. “I’ll keep the jacket until you get back, if it’s all the same.”

"Hey, no problem, doll." Caeruleus flashed her his usual grin, and turned to stroll casually out of the room.

Tenebris reached and set a hand on her shoulder. "We were all very worried about you, Toki." he said gently.

With Sans gone, Toki sighed again. She eased Tenebris’ hand off of her shoulder, and cradled the bandaged limb gently so he wouldn’t hurt himself. “I know you were. I was pretty worried too. I wasn’t sure I was going to make it out of that fire- but I had to save the kids. I don’t even think I could have stopped myself from trying to save them, even if I had tried.”

"You saved every last one of them, you know.” Pride was there in his voice. "My wounds are nothing. The pain of the loss of even a single child is far greater than that which I am suffering right now,” He murmurs.

A soft laugh leaves her, bubbling from behind sharp teeth. “I had your help with Thumper, if I recall correctly. But I tried.” Her fingers gently explore his hand, the bones touching lightly over the bandages covering them. His hands were massive compared to her own hands- she’d always had lady fingers, as her mother used to call them. Her fingers were not much thinner without the meat on them, actually. The skin over her knuckles had always been pretty thin. Probably why they had burnt off so fast. “Heh. Burning alive only hurts for a short while, until the nerve endings are burnt away. I would do it again and again to keep those children safe. Children are precious. I actually wanted to have a couple of my own some day- but I never found the right guy."

He nodded gently, smiling at her. "Just because you are a monster does not make it impossible, you know. There's still a chance."

“I know that,” she chuckles softly. She releases his hand, and fists her own in the jacket covering her knees. “I’m just not sure how that all works. I’m sure you’ve seen how human biology works by now. I know other monsters have kids. I’m just not certain how a skeleton is supposed to have more little skeletons.” She pauses, ponders for a moment, and then shakes her head. “Or how any of that stuff works, actually. I’ve only knowingly been a monster for a short while. I’m not even sure how I’m actually going to eat. I know we can, because Papyrus inhales his spaghetti like it’s the last meal he’ll ever have, but the actual doing so is very befuddling.” She went from being made of fleshy bits of skin and muscle, to being made of bone and having absolutely nothing that she knows how to work.

"I will explain these things to you in time," he purred gently, "Rest assured, my dear, once things settle down, I will inform you of all you need to know."

If she had lips, she’d have pursed them. Instead, she furrows her brow ridges at him, and nods. “That’s not ominous at all. But thanks, I guess. Hell, I thought thirty two was too old to have ‘the talk’, but I guess one is never too old to learn basic biology.” Accepting most of his answer for now, Toki instead switches gears. “A serious question though- Do skeletons actually need to eat, or is that just a social habit?” It had taken serious prodding on her part to get Sans to eat solids- but he was always down to hijack her ketchup and guzzle it.

"Thirty two, huh? In skeleton years you're but a youngling," he chuckled, "As for eating, it's merely a social habit, not necessary to our survival." he explained.

“In human years, that’s over half of a lifespan. For some, they can live longer. My family lived to be quite old- probably from our heritage, now that I think on it.” She flashes him a vague smile, and tilts her head. She braces her chin on her palm, stretching her neck and- ahh, sweet relief. The not so quiet crunch of her vertebrae crackling sounded loudly. A pleased noise leaves her. At least she can still do that as a skeleton. “Huh. That’s... Well, that makes sense. I suppose food wouldn’t really do anything for something not there. So how does that work? The eating, that is. Does the magic or whatever just dissolve it?” Because she was actually hungry- but she had a human soul still. Humans had to habitually eat- and if she had a stomach, it would certainly be growling.

He didn't react as badly as his boys would, but Tenebris shuddered at the popping of the bones, "Nh... W-Well... Monster food is a lot more different than human food, it dissolves into pure energy upon reaching the 'stomach', whether it's a physical stomach or one of figurative speaking." he explained.

Toki prided herself on being observant, and she noticed that shudder almost immediately. What on earth could have caused that? She arched a brow at him in silent inquiry, rotating her wrist to stretch and crack joints that had been still for far too many hours, and nodded along to the rest of his explanation. “I see... I never did actually try monster food. That sounds a lot more efficient than human food.” Human food required a lot of digestion, and most of it came out the other end. She frowns slightly. How on earth did they eat human food then? Because she knew for sure that her honey-tarts were not magic infused- and she’d seen Papyrus eat one before.

Monsters were so confusing.

More tiny flinches and shivers at those.... sounds... "We all thought that." He chuckled softly, once he recovered from his reaction.

“I can understand that. I guess I can understand why Sans likes ketchup so much. Non magical liquids are probably easier to handle than solids.” That was twice now. What was- was it her bones making those noises that disturbed him? “Uh… Gaster? Does popping my joints bother you?” It was louder now, without the blood and muscle to mask the noises that they had used to make before.

Gaster shakes his head negatively, and chuckles softly. "No, no, it doesn't bother me." he assured her, smiling gently. "It's just an odd sound for us."

“Oh. I’ll try not to do it too often around other monsters then.” She gives him a wide smile, and plays with the zipper of the jacket. The metal is slick against her bones, and it takes focus to be able to grasp at it with the smooth bone.

"Oh, no. Not around all monsters, just us more... Skeletal entities." he assured her, before he smiled wider. "You look adorable in his hoodie."

“It’s, ah, really big. Or I’m really small now. I feel a lot smaller without all the flesh on my bones.” She flushes though, brilliant green spreading over her face and teeth grinding as she clicks them together. Toki buries her face in the fluffy lining of Sans coat, and hides her flush.

He laughs gently and reaches to pat her shoulder. "There, there, you'll get used to it."

Toki captures his hand again, and gives him a surprisingly dirty look as she settles them gently in her palms. “Gaster, your hands hurt. Patting my bones is probably not the nicest thing in the world- you’re going to hurt your burns if you keep doing that. But yes- I’ll get used to it. It’s probably going to suck- now I don’t have skin in the way to keep me from breaking my toes when I stub them on the corners of coffee tables.”

He let out a soft rumble as she caught his hands and he took her words into consideration, lowering them to rest them in his lap once he was let go. "Thank you for your concern, miss Toki." he purred softly, leaning instead to place a soft tap of their foreheads together. "Unfortunately, since you don’t have that skin, there's nothing to stop said toes from disconnecting upon impact." he then laughed quietly as he sat back, tail swaying slowly beside him.

“Someone’s got to watch out for you goons.” She quirks a smile at his words, and leans forward to let him press his forehead to hers. The smooth curve of her horns had very little feeling in them, but near the base of them was proving to be quite sensitive. When he leaned back, Toki paused, and her feet poked out from the inside of the jacket. “Wait, wait. My toes can literally pop off? Does it hurt?” Could it even go back on? Because she had a hilarious idea if limbs could pop on and off without much pain, and her target lay with her brothers. Whenever she got to see them again, that is.

"I had to comfort Papyrus many a times when his arm came off. It was painless, both in removal and replacement, but it scared him every time.” He laughed.

She chokes on a laugh, and wiggles her toes. Huh. They were pointy like her fingers were. “I can imagine so. Thanks for warning me. I’d probably have been spooked if it happened without me knowing it could.” She shifts, and finally squirms one of her legs free from the jacket so she could investigate it. She looked mostly like a human skeleton from what she can see. Except for these pointy bits. Human finger bones and toe bones round off and are generally not claw-like. Investigating her kneecap with her fingers makes her ribs rattle, and she cant help laughing. Of course- her knees had been ticklish as a flesh being, so they had to be ticklish as a bone monster too. “Speaking of Papyrus- I’m surprised he hasn’t burst in here yet. Is he still in the Underground?”
Tenebris just chuckles, watching her as she investigates her limbs. "Yes, but I last saw him in the kitchen."

"Of course he’d be in the kitchens." She laughs softly, and carefully hops off the bed. Rolling her ankles curiously, she hums, and moves around. “My center of balance is off.” She notes curiously. “I feel very top heavy.” Probably because there were no muscles or organs helping hold her rib cage up- now everything was on her spine.

"You'll get used to it, your magic will aid in stabilizing you."

“I’m not entirely sure how to work my magic, to be honest. I can sort of feel a… hum? It feels like a hum in my bones. I dunno how else to describe it.” It was sort of like when one’s heart got to racing, and they could feel the blood rushing through them. Only, it wasn’t going ninety miles per hour- only a slow, calm pulsation through her. She wondered if it responded like a heart rate.

"Your pulse, no doubt." he chuckled, reaching and holding his hand over her chest once she wandered closer. "We more skeletal entities don’t have blood to pulse, but we do have our soulbeat, so you are no doubt feeling, and hearing, that."

“That is actually fascinating.” She glanced down where his fingers hovered over her sternum. It was really weird- she could actually see all of her feet. She hadn’t seen all of her feet since puberty hit. “So how do I call up magic? I’d rather not have any accidents. I’m not even sure what sort of magic I have, now that I think on it.” She pauses, and her sockets narrow. Brows furrowing, Toki places her hands on her hips, and stares off at nothing. “I… Remember burning from the inside during the fire. Like the fire was being drawn inside of me, and then being made from inside of me at a later time. Was that my magic?”

"That was your magic, yes. You look to possess an elemental capability. Fire, to be specific.”

Toki’s mouth popped open, before a dry laugh left it. A shiver rattled up her spine- she really didn’t want to have fire based magic, considering she had been alive, conscious, and unable to resist the urge to help children while she had burned alive. She sighed, and her hand came up to cradle her forehead for a moment as she went back to pacing and trying to get her legs to work properly in conjunction with her new center of balance. “That is morbidly ironic, you know.”

"Sadly." he agreed quietly.

“Horribly, terribly ironic.” She repeats tightly. God, what the hell was fate thinking with that- she’d rather have water or something else besides fire oriented magic. Fire could do so many terrible things, and she’d witnessed them first hand. Yeah, she’d saved all of those kids- but that sort of experience stuck with you.

In more ways than one, in a horrible twist of ironic humor that fate seemed to have. Another rattle travels up her spine, and reverberates in her ribs. She was literally going to be stuck with fire-based magic for the rest of her existence. She couldn’t ever escape that. She’d be stuck with the thing that had burnt her home, burnt her body, and probably damn near killed her. She’d felt her flesh bubble and scorch away, charring into lumps of coal that were shed like the scales on a snake. She might not have felt pain after a certain point- but one is always aware when their insides spill across the floor.

It took her a few moments to realize that she was going to have a panic attack no matter what she did. Slowly, Toki sunk into a seated position by one of the walls, and did a very good job of disappearing inside of the coat until she could calm herself. It did little to muffle the rattling.

Why did she have to retreat where he couldn't reach her painlessly... with a groan, Tenebris moved onto all fours, coming closer before he rattled quietly, pressing against her gently.

The thick coat did well to block out the outside world, but Toki still felt when Tenebris pressed against her. The thick thrum of her soul drowned out most of his rattling, the pulses coming fast and erratic. Toki had never had a panic attack before- but she’d seen them often enough to recognize the signs.

She wasn’t entirely sure how to handle having one- and hiding away until she calmed down seemed to be easier. But… “You shouldn’t be up,” She manages to stutter into her knees.

He smiled and nuzzled her gently, wrapping his arms around her as he settled down. "I know. I don’t care."

She wasn’t sure if skeletons could cry, but if they could, then Sans jacket was going to have a glowy mess of tears staining the inner fur. She kept her sockets shut so she didn’t have to see if she was making a mess or not. “You monsters,” she murmurs, “you’re all too damn kind for this world. I… I’ll be okay, I just… I need a minute. It’s… The thought of…” Of her magic being fire based.

"I'll see if I can come up with a magic suppressant." he murmured, "Okay?"

She sniffs- and marvels briefly because she should not be able to make those noises without a nose or the ability to produce snot- and shakes her head. “I… I need to know how to use it eventually. It… it’s probably not good to use a magic suppressant for the rest of your life, is it?” Particularly when your bones were held together by your magic.

"It depends on the HTM..." he murmured softly, hugging her firmly, "You don’t always need your magic."

“I don’t even know what HTM is.” She sniffs again, and ends up leaning into the larger monster. Her arms slowly fill out the sleeves of the jacket again, and glowing green eyes peek at him from under the hood. Yes- skeletons can cry it seems. Magical glowing green tears, in fact. “I know I don’t… But I don’t want to be afraid of it either.” Being afraid of yourself was not healthy- for you, or for anyone around you. "If I'm afraid of it, it'll be that much harder to control. I don't want to hurt anyone."

"It stands for 'Human turned Monster.’” He told her, reaching and using the bandages on his hands to wipe her eyes. "Then once I have recovered, I will help you hone your magic abilities,” he purred gently, "You will learn to overcome your fears."

She flaps her sleeves at his hands in a scolding manner, and ducks her chin into the jacket. Magical tears probably weren’t sanitary for wounds, even covered ones. “Ah, gotcha. I... don’t imagine a magical blocker on a skeleton is a good thing. Aren’t our bones held together by our magic?” Very slowly, the rattling of her ribs was dying down and calming as her panic faded off.

“... Well yes that is true." he chuckled quietly, "though I’m sure that isn’t the same kind of magic we are talking about.”

“Probably, yeah. I don’t know much about magic, to be honest. Just that it exists, and apparently people can be elementally inclined with it.” Toki shrugs, and glances down to her chest. “And that it’s tied to the soul… Out of curiosity, is my soul still human?”

"Mostly." he answered, "There is modification that came with your transformation, but for the most part, you are still human at your very core."

That just raised a whole slew of questions then. How did a monster body operate with a human soul?
Would she die at a human age, or monster age? So many questions, and hardly enough brain space to ask and retain the answers to them all. “Huh… That’s actually pretty nifty then.” She peers at her chest, and taps her breastbone with one of her fingers. “How do I pull my soul out? It was pretty nifty last time you showed me it. Think all the dark spots are gone?”

"You think about it, and hold your hand in front of your chest, releasing magic from it as to coax your soul from its place. It'll be easier since it will be yourself trying to summon your soul." he chuckled, before he took a moment to think. "The spots will probably be gone, but I cannot promise anything pre-examination."

She nods. Brushing the hood of Sans coat off of her head, Toki straightens. She’d been more aware of the soul thing after Gaster had showed her the first time- and she recalled the feeling. Cupping her hands about the middle of her sternum, she feels for it, and urges it out into her hands with the pulsing that she feels through her bones.

At first, it doesn’t move. It takes a few tugs mentally, and then her soul slips from behind the coat like a bubble. The shape of it is still upright- and undeniably human instead of monster- and looking better than before. It’s the same green as before, but… brighter? Brighter, she thinks. It’s like the green of the grass on a warm summer day, glimmering with several sun-lit hues. Green isn’t her favorite color- but damn, that was a decent looking soul. There are a couple spider web cracks on one edge of it- and they’re tinted a suspicious red that makes her think she knows exactly what caused them- but overall it looks healthy. She holds it out to him, and catches a flash of some numbers. “Hp… 1000/1000?” She isn’t sure if that’s a decent number or not, but she nudges it out for him to take. “At least the dark spots are gone? It looks brighter too. It was actually easy to get out.”

He looked at the marks, and then blinked slowly. "1000? That's rather impressive for a HTM..." he said quietly, before he reaches and carefully cups the soul in his own magic so that he could examine it. "These cracks are concerning..." he murmured.

“They weren’t there before the fi… the fire.” She watches him take her soul, and decides that it is an odd sensation to have another’s magic tracing along it. “Is it? I haven’t heard much about the other HTM’s that made it. I know the little girl made the change without too much problem. What’s the average HP that you’ve been informed of so far?”

"The highest I saw before was in the 700 range." he replied.

Toki nodded. “That seems a bit more normal. Do monsters run in that usual range too?” She reaches out a finger to her soul, and brushes her claws over the cracks slightly. Her arm darts back with a hiss as a sensation akin to her experience with fire flashes over the culmination of her being. “Okay ow, ow, ow, no touching the cracks, good lord.”

"Yes..." he watched her reaction of pain and he set a hand on hers. "Perhaps we should put that away for now." He suggested gently.

She stills when he set his hand on her own, so he didn't hurt his fingers. Glowing pinpricks flit to his face, and she nods. Her fingers are quick to take her soul back, and she edges her soul back into her body. "I... didn't expect that to hurt. Is that normal for cracks to hurt?"

"No... Those cracks aren't normal either..." Concern laced his voice thickly.

Her soul flutters in her chest, and she gives Gaster a nervous look. "Souls are pretty serious business. Will the cracks heal?" Or did she just end up with a faulty soul from the change over?
"I hope so, this is... new." He murmured, "Perhaps development and accommodation to your body will either heal them, or help us find out how to."

Toki nods and sighs. She leans into him again, fully uncurling from Cae's jacket. "Perhaps... I guess I'm in your care until then. You guys know souls pretty well. There's no soul specialist among the monsters, is there?"

"I'm your best shot for one." he admitted, his arms securing around her comfortably.

She just leans into him, taking the comfort he has to offer. "Then you and I will work on it. Ah... let's keep the cracks quiet from the boys for now, okay? They worry too much."

Tenebris nodded once, and sighed gently. A smile tugged at his mouth as he nuzzled her head, "You're very brave, you know that?"

"Am I?" Her defining feature was kindness, according to what he told her before. "Sometimes I sure don't feel it."

"Well you are," he purred, "I'm proud of you."

A warm smile tugs at her mouth, and she allows it to blossom. "Thanks. I'm proud of you guys too. You all managed to handle this better than I thought you would." now that the panic is gone, she feels otherworldly exhaustion settle over her bones.

Gaster smiled softer and pulled her close so she could rest against something softer than the wall behind them.

She wasn't exactly heavy to move, and so she was settled gingerly against him. Toki yawned, teeth clicking together and making sparks. "Is it okay if I just... close my eyes for a bit and rest here?"

"That's okay," he purred gently, "Go on ahead."

She just sighs softly and nods. Her head tucks into his side, mindful of her horns, and she closes her eyes. Toki hadn't ever been the type to feel narcoleptic, but damn did she feel it then. Panic was exhausting, and she found herself drifting off swiftly.

Tenebris smiled gently for a time and held her close while she rested. Slowly, he lifted his head and looked out with a frown towards the door. "I know you're there, my son. How much did you see?"

“A bit.” Sans stood there with a small selection of clothes in his arms. He scratched the back of his neck nervously, fingers dragging over his spine and along his skull. His usual grin was turned down into a frown. "Those cracks, pops... those aren't fuckin’ normal..."

"I know."
Strider's Notes: Heh, thanks for being patient, guys! It took us some time to get the chapter finished after my bestie left, but we've got it done. :D Anywho, Toki's shutdown is actually based off of a PTSD experience I had to help a friend through. He shut down- and it took gentle touches, talking, and a change in location to bring him out of it. He went catatonic on me- It was actually kinda scary. Anyways, enjoy!

Snip

With the last cut by his medical scissors, Tenebris unwrapped the bandages from his hand to examine the thicker scar tissue that now donned the underside of his claws. A small flex of them, and he smiled, before he lifted up one of his feet, going to remove the bandages from them next.

He took a moment, though, to look up at Toki, who had stayed with him for some tea and to talk with a familiar face.

"How do you feel, miss Toki?" he asked.

"I should be asking you that." She's not sitting far from him. Rather, she's watching him intently to make sure that he’s actually okay enough to be taking those bandages off. Monsters heal fast, she muses as she sips at her tea.

She crosses her legs, and worries her claws at the hem of her shirt for a moment. It’s a bit big on her-and the v-neck is designed for a monster with breasts, obviously- but she enjoys the dark navy. She’s got a pair of pants on, and they fit her wide hips nicely. Bare toes wiggle at her as she glances to them. “I’m alright. I feel a bit… cooped up, I guess. I haven’t seen much of the Underground. I’m a naturally busy person, so all of this being stationary is driving me a little batty.” She was always doing things at home- and there wasn’t much she could do here in the castle.

He hummed softly in thought, and set to unwrapping his feet. "Well, how about while I look over the surface town with Aliquam, Caeruleus shows you around the Underground?"

“I’d enjoy that.” She nods. “Do you think he would mind showing me around though? I heard from some of the topside kids about a place called Waterfall… Something about glowing rocks? Oh! If you’re going back to the topside village, can you check on my bees please?”

"He won't mind at all!" he said with smile, "and of course, I’m not sure if they'll like me, but I’ll check on them."

“If you’re sure… I’ll ask him when you’re done with your feet.” She adjusts herself in her seat, and resumes watching his progress. “If you’re worried about getting stung, you can check the main shed. I’ve got bee suits in there- though I don’t… really think you’ll fit.” He had a tail, and was much, much larger than she was. Toki nods, and finishes her tea. She was still befuddled on how she ate, but chocked it up to ‘magic’. She certainly enjoyed her tea- she might not have needed the food, but it was something normal for her, and right now, normal was much needed. She still felt like she was 'hungry' at times- and wondered if that had something to do with her being a HTM, verses an actual monster. Humans needed food—maybe she did for powering her magic? She hadn’t gotten around to talking to Gaster about it though. “All you need to do is see if the food dishes are full. If they’re too low, you can top it off with some of the food from the shed. If they’re at least half full, they’ll be fine for a while yet.”

“Duly noted,” he rumbled softly. "Thank you." Once his bandages were undone, he rested his feet on the floor and sighed lightly.

“Do your feet feel alright?” Toki sets her cup on one of the tables, and gets up. Moving in front of him, she offers her hands to help him up. She’d rather he test his weight safely, rather than falling and hurting the scars on his hands.

"Yes, they feel quite fine." he rumbled again, reaching to take her hands. Tenebris slowly pulled himself up and adjusted his footing as he tested his legs.

He was quite heavy, but she didn’t really have muscles to strain under such weight anymore. Once he was up, Toki let him balance as needed, and then gently gave a tug on his hands. “Lets see how you walk. Moving is an entirely different challenge from standing.” She would know- She still sometimes wobbled and lost her balance when walking. Being top heavy was really, really shitty.

Tenebris nodded and took a few steps, flexing his claws between each step.

She watched him carefully. He was doing pretty well, she wagered, and he didn’t seem to be in pain with his steps now. Guiding him along as he and Sans had done for her, Toki worked him in a small lap around the room. She let him on his own once they made one round, and let him practice as he saw fit. “Are you going to be alright on your own for now? I’d like to go find the boys…”

"Yes, I’ll be alright, I need to go and find his majesty at any rate.”

Toki nods, rocking slightly on her heels as she shifts her footing. She hasn’t bothered with shoes-mostly because they didn’t have any that would fit the sharp ends of her toes- and she’s not going to bother with it even if she’s leaving the castle. “Alright. I’ll send Pap your way when I find them.
You take it easy on your legs, Gaster.”

"Thank you" he smiles to her and leaves the room, heading down the hall to the left.

When she’s certain he’s safe enough, and isn’t going to face plant in the hallway, Toki exits the room and makes her way down the hall to the right. The castle is pretty big- but all of the rooms are pretty open, and she’s bound to hear where the skeleton brothers are as she walks along.

It isn’t long before she comes upon them- in a place she’d been told was the ‘Judgment Hall’. She’s not entirely certain what it was used for, but Toki honestly didn’t care. They’re talking quietly next to one of the pillars, and Toki does her best not to sneak up on them.

The bare bones of her feet are slick on the tile, and she has to sink her claws into one of the beautifully sculpted support pillars to keep her balance when she stumbles on a small flight of stairs.
Her fingers make a shrill screeching noise, like fingernails on a chalkboard, and her fall is stopped abruptly by her firm grip. She gives the boys a sheepish look. “Sorry if I startled you.”

They both looked surprised, but they both were also quick to come over and check on her, make sure she was okay. "Hey, it's quite alright," Aliquam said with a smile, "Are you okay?"

“Guys, really, I’m fine.” She flaps her hands at them lightly, and makes her way down the rest of the stairs. Each skeleton gets a warm hug, and a gentle smile. Much like Sans, she’d found that keeping her mouth closed while speaking was generally easier- turns out her teeth were a lot like flint. “Bare bone is pretty slick on tile. I really need to sweet talk someone into getting me some flip-flops or something so I’ve got steady traction.”

She really needed something that had traction, but that she wouldn’t ruin with the sharp parts of her feet. Toki had an inkling that she couldn’t just trim away the points of her toes. They weren’t actual toe nails, after all. That was her bone. “Anyways, I came to find you both. Gaster went to meet with the king- his hands and his feet look much better, and he’s walking around just fine without his bandages now- and I told him I’d send you up when I found you, Pap.”

"I’ll getcha’ some slippers. They're the best." Sans smirked, a chuckle bubbling from his chest. "I bet I have a pair somewhere."

"I suppose I could go and find him." Papyrus murmured ponderously, before he gave a nod. "All right, thank you~" He gently nudged her skull with his with an affectionate clack, and then began at a swift stride for the throne room.

Toki watched the tallest of the brothers’ leave with a warm look, before casting a green gaze over to Sans. Rocking on her heels, she stuffs her fingers into her pockets and flashes him a warm grin.

"So… I was talking to Gaster today, and he might have hinted that maybe you’d show me around the Underground if I asked nicely. So… will you?"

"Like you even need to ask!" Caeruleus rumbled in reply

“Well, I sort of did need to ask.” She gives him a wry smile. “You’ve all been keeping a pretty close eye on me. Anyways, is there any way we can check out Waterfall? Some of the topside kids told me about how it has glowing stones and flowers that can talk. Is that actually true? Or was I given a tall tale?"

"Of course!" he said with a laugh, "C'mon, I know a shortcut."

She links her arm with his, which is odd since he doesn’t have any definitive biceps for her to grasp, and arches a brow made of smooth bone up at him. “I know your shortcuts. Instantly teleporting there is cheating though, Sans. I want to see everything I can- not just instantly be there. Walking is fun- and I could sure use a good long walk about now. Unless it's like, a day-long walk there. In that case, teleport away, and I'll get my walking urges out of the way while we're there."

He chuckled, letting her link arms with him easily. "Alright then, fine, we'll walk."

She nods up at him, pleased. Letting him guide her along, Toki tunes out most of the castle view. She’d seen most of the view from the castle- and a vastly empty city was not all that interesting to keep looking at in the long run of things. “So, I’ve heard only a little about some of the places here- what am I gonna see when we get to Waterfall?"

"Well, I guess we’ll see the glowing pools, the Echo flowers?"

“Echo flowers? Those are the talking ones, right?”

“Yeah."

“They sound really nifty. I really want to see the glowing rocks. One of the kids says there’s a room that looks like the stars- I’d love to see that too.” The walk to the elevator goes pretty quick- they’ve both got long legs, after all. As they’re entering it, a thought crosses her mind. “So how exactly do you guys have power down here?"

"The CORE" he answered, "I'll show it to you when we pass through Hotland."
Hotland must have been another one of the places Underground. “Huh. The CORE sounds pretty nifty if it can power everything here.” She leans against him as they go down, and she picks up the vague din of… A restaurant? Or some sort of busy place. When the doors open, it looks like… A hotel? “… You guys have a hotel?”

"It’s a Geothermal Generator, we actually just cut through the upper parts of it." he chuckled, before he looked at it with a nod, "Yeah, the MTT hotel."

“That’s actually super cool. Humans don’t have anything nearly like that. We’ve got nuclear reactors and that sort of stuff- but nothing so… environmentally friendly, I guess?” She eyes the place curiously- because everything was square and completely tacky looking- before spotting the exit. Discretely, she tugs him towards it. “Well… This place is… nice?” She tries to be polite about it- but there is no saving grace for that square robot fountain that was making a mess of one of the carpets. All of the robot memorabilia was actually a little intimidating, and made her more than just a little uncomfortable.

"Hehe, you can be honest, it's kinda homely." he chuckled deeply. "Mettaton was sure he was doing things right. Hint: he wasn't."

“I, ah, don’t want to be rude.” She makes a face, elbowing him gently. “But yeah, he’d do well to visit some of the human ones for references. It’s… a good effort though?” Guiding them around the puddle, she eyes the door. It’s… vaguely shaped like him too. Goodness, this Mettaton had some weird obsessions. She nudges the door open, and guides them out.

Heat hits her like a bulldozer, and she realizes that this must be Hotland. Unless this was like Greenland and Iceland, and this was actually Coolsville or something like that, she was very certain that they had walked into Hotland.

Air in the cavern was scorching, and it warmed her bones almost pleasantly for a moment. It was dry and desolate- but not as dark as she’d expect for a cave. “This must be Hotland, huh? Well, whoever named this place named it very literally. It’s very…” It takes her a few steps out to realize why- and she locks up, sentence cutting off abruptly.

The red glow of the magma bubbling and hissing looks very, very much like how her floors did, and now the heat around her is similar to that night as well. Each bubble and pop of the magma over the edge reminds her of how her skin had boiled away, warping and charring until there was nothing left.

Panic flutters through her chest- and she has no where to go, no where to run, because the hotel was in Hotland and fire was everywhere, she could feel it over her bones, in her bones, burning her from the inside and reducing her to nothing but ash all over again-

Empty sockets stared out at the magma. The stillness of her bones was not matched by the panicked fluttering in her soul.

Sans had chuckled at her commentary and almost didn’t realize her panic until he detects her soul flutters. When she stilled from tugging him along, he’d taken a couple steps forwards, assuming she’d been looking at something. "Hey, Toki?" he asked, doubling back and reaching up to cup her cheekbones. "Are you okay?"

Under the low v-cut of her shirt, the rapid fire fluttering of her soul is visible. She’s still, almost like a mannequin, and her sockets are empty as his hands cup her cheeks. She rocks slightly in place, balancing unconsciously to keep from going boneless. Toki is not present.
"Hey... HEY!" he stepped forward and picked her up effortlessly, carrying her back to the cool atmosphere of the Hotel. He set her down on the cool stone-esque floor and set his hand on her cheeks again, leaning in to press his forehead to hers as his eye began to glow, "Toki, snap out of it...!"

She was limp in his grasp, like a marionette without it’s master, or a monster that had suddenly Fallen. The panicked fluttering of her soul speeds up for a moment, nearly thudding right out of her chest as her body recognizes the change in temperature from outside to inside. Cooler air. Still warm, still scary, but cooler than the fire’s that had ensnared her. The bone that touches her own is even cooler. Toki’s sockets remained empty for a while, until the glow from Sans’ eye all but barged it’s way right into her very skull.

Slowly, her pinpricks appeared- pale and colorless, but still there none the less. The cooler temperatures were helping ground her- and the sensation of fire crawling up and down her bones was fading.

Thankfully the lobby was mostly empty- only a few disinterested though curious employees peering at them over the counter. No one would bother them- leaving the skeletons to sort themselves out as they saw fit.

He patted her cheekbones a few times, then he sighed and he pulled her into a tight hug. "Toki... It's okay..." he murmured, "I'm here, and there's no danger."

Her eyes remained dim, and her frame limp as she was eclipsed into his hug. Her arms hung limply. The familiar plush coat of his jacket was warm- but not a bad warm. Slowly, she rubbed her cheek on it, mind latching onto the feeling of the fibers of his jacket against her bones. “H...Heard it...” She murmured faintly against his coat. The burbling of the terrible fountain was driving away the hissing pops of the magma- and with the flash of the terrible memory fading, she was returning. "Was so..."

"Shh... shhh..." he stroked her skull a few times, giving an occasional clack to her forehead and cheekbones with his teeth to keep her attention away from unpleasant thoughts. "That's enough, you don't need to think about it anymore... I'm right here and you are too..." he assured her.

The stimulus draws her mind away from its unpleasant places, and her pinpricks brighten to a light mint color. She wasn’t burning- she wasn’t burning, and neither was he. They were okay. It was cooler in here- she could feel the damp stone under her feet from the leaking fountain. She could feel him holding her- feel his bones against her bones. Slowly, her arms come up and she clings to him tightly.

“I... I’m sorry... I don’t... know why that happened...” The magma hadn’t even done anything except do what it does. The bubbling and the popping and the crack- NO. No. She couldn’t draw back down onto it. No, no, no, no. “I... I cant. The magma. I cant.”

He shook his head gently, "I know, I know... I should have realized that it would affect you..." he murmured, clacking her head again with his teeth. "I'm sorry, Toki..."

“S’not your fault,” she murmurs. It wasn’t- it wasn’t his fault that magma was a problem. It’s not like she knew- and most people don’t know their triggers until they stumble upon them by accident. She shifts in his arms, and spots the clear glass door that makes up the front of the hotel. Through it, she can see the fires and the glow from the magma. She sucks in a hurried breath, and tucks her face back against his chest. “Ah... Can... Can we... We skip here please?”

"Yeah, Doll... Don't worry" he loosened his arms own to a gentle hug for her sake, then his grin slowly returned. "I know a shortcut."

Him and his shortcuts were exactly what she needed at this point. Toki nodded, and remained clinging to him. “I’m s… sorry… I’ll… I’ll be okay once I’m away from the fire.”

He nodded once with a reassuring grin. "Of course" He scooped her up and turned towards the door to the resort. A flare of his magic, and he took a step towards the doorway, but the end of that step, they were in a cool laboratory, the tile cold under them, instead of in the Hotland Resort.

Her eyes had darkened again, and the disorienting sensation of a teleport after a panic made her nauseated. Can skeletons even get nauseated? Apparently so. Toki shivers at the sudden change—because holy crap, this was freezing compared to Hotland. “Thank you.” She mutters lightly. Slowly, she glances around, eyes lightening some. “Where’s this place…?” It didn’t look like waterfall— but in hindsight, if she was in his position, she probably wouldn’t want to be lugging a flighty skeleton around places to sightsee either.

"This is the Laboratory, it's in Hotland, but it's air conditioned, so you can't really tell." he told her, "I just needed a checkpoint..." he sighed, "Shortcuts can be hard work."

“It’s cooler down here.” She admits quietly. “It… wasn’t the heat that initially got me out there. The temperature change is nice though. Makes the sensations go away.” Dim green orbs peer up at him, before flitting around the laboratory. “I know you don’t like hard work- if it’s easier for you to just return to the castle, we can do that instead.” She’s not going to argue if he decides it’s less hassle to take her back.

"Nah, I’m about halfway right there. It’s just another shortcut."

“If you’re sure… then I’d love to still see waterfall when you think you can handle another shortcut.” Until then… She got herself as comfortable as she could while clinging to him, sort of like an extremely leggy koala. It was easier to cling to him this way- she felt more stable, safer, with the larger skeleton practically eclipsing her frame with is.

"Of course!" he hugs her tightly, making sure not to drop her, then he chuckles and turns around. "Hey Alphys!"

There was suddenly a pair of yelps and a loud clatter of something- or someone- being dropped.

"NGAAAHHHHH! YOU SKELETAL PEICE OF CRAP, HAVENT YOU HEARD OF KNOCKING!?!"

"Oops, looks like Alphys had Undyne over." Sans grin only grew.

"U-U-Undyne! Sans is o-okay to come here too, y-you know."

Toki couldn’t help it- she had to peek. She squirmed, giving up being a koala on Sans for the time being. Setting her feet back down, she turned and peered at what appeared to be a very, very angry fish monster. She sort of reminded her of a betta fish- if a betta fish had shark teeth, an eye patch, and a long patch of red hair. Briefly, Toki missed her hair, but she brushed it aside before she could get too upset over it.

“Uh… Sorry.” She responds, scuffing her toe bones lightly on the floor. “Sans took me here because it was cooler. Sorry for intruding?”

The Red haired monster folded her arms as she glared down at the rest of the lab from the upstairs that served as Alphys’ room. Literally all that could be seen were her head and her blue-scaled shouders as she glared down at the both of them.

"Take it easy, Undyne, kid had a panic attack so I brought her here on the way for Waterfall." he explained.

"Ah." her eye narrowed slightly, and she gave Sans an 'I'm watching you' gesture, before disappearing again

"Pfft, Undyne get dressed and come say hello." Caeruleus laughter floated up.

She elbows Sans, and huffs. “I’m not a kid, Cae.” She arches a brow ridge at him. “Thirty two is old enough to not be considered a kid. At least in human years.”

Alphys titters gently to herself as she scrambles to toss on clothes. Her tail doesn’t want to work with her today, and her spikes are all jumbled, and she has the worst case of bed-head in a long time- but she gives Undyne an apologetic smile. She speaks softly, though she knows her voice carries down to the two below. Damn her nerves. “S-sorry, Undyne… We… We can continue after they leave?” She had really enjoyed the larger woman’s affections- but she just couldn’t continue with Sans and an unknown down below.

"Sure..." Grumbling that Sans 'ruined the mood', she got on her jeans and tank top, coming down the escalator to meet them.

"Oh, by the way..." Sans started, trailing off momentarily with a blank look crossing his skull. "... I was gonna say somethin'... But I forgot."

Toki didn’t really want to just ask Sans what was wrong in front of whoever these people were, so she tugged her fanged mouth into a smile, and stepped forwards to offer the still irate looking fish woman a handshake. Sans would either remember what he was going to say, or he wouldn’t. “I’m super sorry about this. I guess he can only go so far with his shortcuts. Anyways, I’m Tokiko Nara. You can call me Toki!”

---

Alphys wasn’t far behind Undyne, but she was more hesitant in approaching Toki. Instead, she sidled closer to Sans, and glanced to him. Quietly, so that the skeleton woman wouldn’t hear, she murmured to the big skeleton. “I... is that one of the HTM’s? Her name is f-familiar. R-r-really familiar.”

"Yep. She's the Guardian Angel..." he murmured to Alphys.

Alphys eyes got wide, and she let out a pleased little ‘eeeee’ noise. “She really is? She’s that Tokiko? I heard her h-house got burned, but I haven’t seen it on the human news if she m-made it or not…”

---

"Heh, Tokiko Huh? Sounds like an Anime name!" Who in the stars knew why this terrifying fish woman was a anime fan.

Sans had long ago put his money on the factor of the Otaku Girlfriend.

“Well, I am half Japanese, so I should logically have a Japanese name.”

"Well it's nice to meet you, Tokiko, I'm Undyne, Captain of the Royal Guard!" She said, reaching and gripped her hand, giving a strong shake.
"Oh! I just remembered" Sans said out loud, "Undyne has a really hard handshake, so there's the chance that-

Her grin is wide- right up until the vigorous shaking of her hand causes her arm to pop off at the elbow, and fall out of her sleeve. "Well, it’s nice to meet you too, Undyne. Would you, ah, mind unhanding my hand? It’s kind of handy and I really do need it back at some point…"

Surprisingly enough, Undyne lifted the arm up, looked at it for a moment, before she started to laugh. "Holy shit! This hasn't happened since Papyrus!"

---

That went better than he had hoped. Knowing now that Toki wasn't going to freak out, Sans returned to addressing Alphys. "It did. To the ground, and nope, Pops saved her and we brought her back here to recover." Sans explained, before he chuckled. It was hilarious how Toki took that so well.

Alphys smiled nervously, eyes flitting from her girlfriend to the smaller skeleton woman. Her fingers fiddled with themselves, but she managed a tittering laugh once Undyne began to cackle. “Ah… it’s good to see that she made the change. There was an older human who didn’t manage to survive her change on the news this morning… I w-was hoping the G-Guardian Angel would be all right… Is she handling it okay? Fire’s are s-scary.”

"That's unfortunate..." He sighed, before he turned his grin to Alphys. "Well, she recovered well enough, but she's got a bad fear of fire until she can get the incident out of her head." he explained, watching Undyne reach out and help re-attach the bone to the skeleton woman’s arm.

“I h-heard you say she had a p-panic attack.” The yellow dinosaur watched the two of them quietly, happy that Undyne hadn’t decided that she disliked the skeleton. Alphys had never seen a female skeleton before. “W-was it the lava in Hotland?”

Sans nodded. "She locked up in panic. I had to drag her back to the hotel to snap her out of it.”

The reptilian monster nods faintly, running a sweaty hand down her shirt to wipe it clean. “T-that can happen. You d-did good. The best thing you can do with that is g-get her some place cool, and away from whatever c-caused it, and r-remind her where she is at p-p-present.”

Giving another nod, Sans watched the two talk with a grin as he fell silent.

---

Toki laughed with the guard, her mouth falling open. Her teeth grinded, sending sparks across her and Undyne, as she laughed. “I heard it happened to Papyrus too. Super glad that I got warned before hand.”

Once her arm was back in it's socket, the skeleton rolled her shoulder, and grinned up at the sharp-toothed fish lady. “Thanks, Undyne. You’re pretty cool. So what does the Captain of the Royal Guard do?”

"Well before the barrier was broken. My job was to hunt down humans.” She said with a loose shrug.

“It was? That sounds… fun?” Hunting humans wasn’t her idea of fun, but the monsters were desperate to get out of the barrier. They did what they had to- and she wasn’t going to judge them for it. “So… Alphys? Is Alphys your giiiiirlfriend~?”
Undyne stiffened slightly, single eye inspecting her critically, and then she huffed. She gave a sharp-toothed grin. "Yeah! She is!"

“It’s really cute.” She smiles up at her calmly. “Again, I’m super sorry Sans and I interrupted your, ah…” Well, her face flushed a silly green, and she scrubbed her claws against the back of her skull awkwardly. “Well, your fun.” Well, wasn’t that embarrassing. “Heh. We’ll head out when he thinks he’s rested enough for another shortcut. I still want that tour of Waterfall, even if Hotland didn’t turn out so well.”

"You had an issue with Hotland? Heh that makes two of us." She said with a 'fufufufu'.

“Ah…” She tucks her hands into her pocket, and scuffs her toes again. “You could say that. Heh. Magma makes me think of less pleasant things. Don’t mind the heat, since it really just goes right through me now, but what comes with it… not so good with it.”

She nodded in agreement, and cast a glance to Sans. "Well, you should stop dragging your feet" She cackled,

"Yeah, yeah, Undyne." He chuckled, "Alright, I’m going. Come on, Miss Toki."

Toki nodded, smiling at Undyne again, and approached the skeleton and the little yellow dino. She smiled, and waved slightly. “Sorry about not properly introducing myself- your girlfriend is very nice, Alphys. I’d love to hang out with you guys later, when we’re not intruding on your time.”

“I-I-I-it’s n-n-no problem, I a-a-a-assure you.” She gave the HTM a nervous smile, and shakily offered her hand. When Toki shook it, Alphys relaxed, and giggled quietly. “I h-h-hope you like Waterfall.”

“I’m sure I will.” She smiles wider, and lets the yellow monster go. Padding to Sans, Toki links arms with him, and braces herself for the teleport. “Also, what’s this Miss Toki stuff, Sans? That’s what Papyrus calls me- you always call me Toki.”

"Heh, don't worry about it." he looked to the girlfriends, then cackled, and flared his magic, sending them to where the heat of Hotland met the gentle moist air of Waterfall.

The change of temperature was jarring- and it was this sort of weird, hot and chillingly wet sort of air that was surprising. She blinked, feeling that she was probably going to end up soaked to the bone from condensation at one point or another, and eased herself from his arms. She glanced around- the fires of Hotland were obvious, and she only flitted her gaze over them for a moment. The opposite direction must be Waterfall then.

She grins at him, and pads off, tugging the legs of her pants up as the floor got soggier and soggier. No need to get one of her few pairs of clothes completely soaked. “You’re going to get your slippers soaked.”

"Nah, i’ll be okay" he chuckled, "My Pantlegs are gonna get wet too, so why sweat it..." Though he doesn't mean it as he quickly got his slippers off and into his hand, holding them close as he started into the water.

Toki rolls her eyes, and chuckles. She slips into the cool water, and shivers. Something churns in her bones instinctively, and the water around her heats. Brows furrowing, she looks perplexed, and steps down into a colder spot. The same churning feeling, and then the water was warmer. Huh. “Eh, a little water never hurt anyone.” Not anyone that she knew, anyway. She places a smile on her face anyway, and plods through the water regardless of her warming it instinctively. “The water’s a little cooler than the river behind the house. It’s actually— is that glowing coming from down that way?”

He nodded, smiling. ”Just you wait.” Walking with her through waterfall, the large skeleton couldn’t hide his chuckles. ”Though... I've gotten something special in mind to visit before the pools.”

“So cryptic,” she chuckles. A grin tugs at her teeth, and she half-lids her sockets as she peers at him. Mischief bubbles in her chest- and then she’s kicking a small splash of water in his direction with a lighthearted laugh. “And where did you have in mind?”

He looked at her with a chuckle, then he turned, dodging her failed attempt at a splash easily enough. ”Oh... heh... Just you wait.”
"You're kidding me." She stared down at the small collection of them at their feet.

He chuckled. “I am not kidding you."

"What did you say these things are called?"

Caeruleus chuckled softly. "Temmies."

“They’re… adorably creepy.” And they were. They reminded her of something akin to a dog, or a cat. Maybe a fox? But that face… it kept moving and just… It looked disjointed. She shivered, which was slightly from the chill of the wet moss sinking into her toes. She sinks down in front of one of them though, a kind smile tugging at her teeth. Creepy or not, everything deserves a chance at kindness. “Ah… hello, Temmie is it?”

"hOi! I'M TEMMIE!"

“Hi Temmie. I’m Toki. How are you?”

"hOi! I'm G00d!" they yelped happily.

“That’s good.” Toki smiles at the Temmie kindly, and then straightens. She latches onto Cae’s jacket, and peers up at him. “You said the Temmies ran a shop…?” Not like she could buy anything- she didn’t have monster currency.

He nodded once, and pointed a nearby entrance in the cave.

She stared at it, and shook her head. “Good gracious.” Curiosity made her want to look around inside- but she knew that going in just to sate that was rude. The cave didn’t look very big- and she’d block other potential customers if she just loitered inside and didn’t actually buy anything.

"Come on, let's see if they're having a sale on Temmie Flakes” Sans joked, heading inside of the small cave.

"hOi! Welcom to the TEM SHOP!” Squealed the Temmie inside.

Toki wasn’t sure of going inside of the shop, but if Cae was going to go in, then she supposed that she was going to as well. Besides… “What the heck are Temmie Flakes?” She ducked in after him, pinpricks flicking here and there as she examined the shop curiously.
"Hey there, Tem, just came to see what you had in stock." Sans greeted casually as he took a look at the few/only things the store offered

"Tem Has TEM FLAKES!"

Tem flakes reminded Toki of some sort of off brand cereal. She eyed it curiously, and glanced to Cae. “Tem flakes, huh? You eat them, Cae?”

"Not exactly." he said in reply. "The taste is kinda bland, but at least the texture is decent enough." he shrugged, flicking a gold piece in Temmie's direction before he picked up one of the strange flakes.

She tilted her head and watched him curiously- though regretted it as her horns scraped across the ceiling. She winced. That was actually uncomfortable. She came closer still, and peered at the flake. “It… doesn’t look very good, to be honest.” Toki was vaguely hungry, but that looked unappetizing.

Noticing her horns, he stepped back and guided her outside where she'd have plenty of room to move. "Honestly, it could taste better." he shrugged loosely.

She followed him out of the little shop easily enough, waving good-bye to the Temmie managing the shop. “I might be pretty hungry right now, but that doesn’t sound at all appetizing. No offense meant to the Temmies, of course.”

"Well then lucky for you I have just the place, we'll check it out after we've gone through Waterfall." He said with a chuckle. He pocketed the flake, and walked out of the odd village with Toki.

Toki stuck close to Cae- because Temmies were cute, but their little faces disturbed her greatly. She shivers slightly, and steps back into the mire that makes up the ground of Waterfall. “Sounds fine by me. I want to see the glow-pools first.”

"Consider us there." he chuckled, and with a flare of magic, they shortcut past the crystal chamber and the glowing paths, coming closer to where a bright, gentle glow was emitting from pools of water.

She hadn’t been expecting the shortcut, so she stumbles and shoots him a dirty look. “Little warning, please. That’s disorienting when you’re not expecting it.” Still, her ire doesn’t last.

Instead, she gasps, and heads for the pool. Good gracious that was pretty.

He lets her go admire the marvel of the pools, and gives her a few minutes before wandering over. A chuckle shakes his ribs. "Pops says the minerals in the rocks that make the water glow is also really healthy for monsterkind, so there’s actually a few pools near here that are used for washing. They’re a bit cooler than the pools here though, because the water is actually circulated, so you never bathe in the same water twice."

“That’s actually really cool.” She blinks up at him and grins. Regardless, she dips a toe into the glowing water, and hums curiously. “I may have to heckle you into teleporting me out here one of these nights so I can give it a go in soaking in the glowing stuff. I wonder if it’s good for former humans too? Cold water isn’t going to be an issue, I think. I keep warming the water I step in.”

"That'd make you one hell of a bathing partner, warming the water just by stepping in it. That'd sure feel nice."

She rolls her pinpricks at him, and enjoys the glowing water for another moment. It soaks into the rims of her pants- but oh well; now her pants glow. “I suppose it’d be handy- but I guess that means no more swims to cool off in the summer.” She huffs a soft laugh, and leans down to run her fingers through the water. It was denser than regular water- probably from all of the minerals it had been stewing in. Part of her wondered how it would taste.

She tilts her head with a curious noise, but pulls away from the pools edge. “So where did you want to show me next?”

"The place where Pap and I grew up, actually.”

“Really? Huh. I’d love to see it!”

He nods once and offered her his hand. "Come on, we'll walk this time.”

Toki nods, smiles wider, and takes his hand. “Lead the way then, Sans.”

He nodded once and smiled, leading her over the bridges to the exit of the great tunnels.

And right into what appeared to be a snowstorm. Toki blinked, squinting against the sudden chill that froze over her damp clothes. “… You lived in a blizzard? I know the cold goes right through skeletons, but this is a little excessive.”

"It's just a fog layer. Trust me" he took her hand firmly and began into the snow.

Fog layer. Riiiight. They called this sort of weather a blizzard on the surface. She sighs, but trudges down into the white stuff. Well, starts to. The dampness of her bones makes them even colder, and she ends up bouncing from foot to foot through it, an unpleasant feeling creeping up from her heels and toes. “Coldcoldcoldcoldcoldcoldcoldcold.”

He walked with her quietly through the snow, before smiling to her as they finally passed through the layer of cold to reveal...

A small, snow-covered village.

The small village was quaint- a small handful of houses settled alongside an icy river. Kids ran here and there, until a voice called them into what she realized must be a school- or a library. Both? Probably both, with a settlement this small. Toki shuffles on her feet in the deepening snow, and tugs a smile on her face. “Well, it’s cold as balls down here, but it’s certainly pretty. You lived here?”

"Yep, c'mon." he led her into the town, greeting those who remained to call this 'home'. Soon he stopped at a larger home, a two-story cabin.

She peered at the cabin that she was led to, and tilted her head curiously. “Nice house. Yours and Papyrus’?”

"And Pops too..."

Toki nods slightly, crossing her arms and rubbing her palms against her bones lightly. For a skeleton, her feet were damn cold. “It’s a nice looking place. Looks like the one you guys had made up top- but I think you told me you’d modeled the up top house after this one. The one up top looks a little bigger though. Taller doors maybe? Either way, you guys have a nice place.”

He chuckled, "Thanks." he then unlocked the door and pushed it open, looking around before he flicked the switch to turn on the light.

Toki stepped in behind him, shaking the ice from between her tarsal bones and off of the edge of her clothes before she slips inside. A shiver rattles her bones, and she squints as the lights blind her slightly.

He looks around, then he lets out a quiet sigh, "We'd been here... What... Fifteen years? Twenty? It's almost weird to be imagine I won't be calling this home for much longer..." he chuckled weakly.

“I’ve never moved from my home- I was born in the house you got to see, and I lived there for all of my life. I can’t imagine what it’s like to just up and move- but... at least you’re doing it with your family, right?” She pats his arm gently, and peers at the place. “Humans have a saying that home is where your heart is. Yours, I wager, rests with your family. So long as you’ve got your dad and your brother, you’ve always got your home.”

He hesitated, an odd look ghosting over his face, and then he sighed. A soft laugh bubbled up in his chest, even as his shoulders trembled. Cae’s sockets welled with something liquid.

Toki isn’t quite sure what to make of the fact that skeletons can cry, but she’s not above tugging Cae down to tuck his face into her shoulder. She pets the back of his skull with gentle claws, and rattles soothingly in her chest. Her eyes glow a soothing emerald. “’S alright to be upset. A change like this is pretty scary, I know. Up top is a big world.”

"H-Heh... t’s... Not the reason I'm cryin'... but thanks a lot..." he murmured, reaching up and wrapping his arms around her. "Shit... I'm supposed to be a grown-ass skeleton, and I'm cryin’ like a bittybones here..."

“Men are all the same- monster or human. There’s no shame in tears, for whatever reason that causes them. Bittybones, bigbones, tears aren’t a bad thing.” She hugs him all the same, tilting her head lightly with another soothing rattle. “What’s made you cry, if I can ask? Is it anything I can help?” She’d seen an almost haunted look cross his face for a split second- and if he wanted to share, then he would. If not, then she’d just help him as best she could.

"It's nothin’... Just some old nightmares coming to bother me again, I don’t need that shit right now, but you're doing a damn good job at distractin’ me from it." he chuckled, nuzzling her softly.

She thrums again and nods. Her claws trace gently over his skull, and her other hand rubs circles on his scapulas. “Nightmares are terrible things.” She hums softly. "Glad I’m helping though. Do you want to step outside?” If the house caused nightmares, it was probably best to keep him out of there. At least, by her way of thinking, it would help to ease him out of whatever was flashing through his skull if they stayed away from the cause.

"Nah.” Cae nuzzled her again, and then let her go. He steadied himself, and headed for the stairs.

Toki watched him walk with a quiet sound, but followed him to the stairs. She’s not one to snoop- so she’ll just follow him rather than wander where she shouldn’t be. “Did you want to grab some things while you’re here? I can help you carry some stuff back.” The inside of her ribcage made a great place to stuff things.

"May as well take a look at some old memories.” he chuckled softly, going to the door that was his room.

She followed closely behind, peering at this and that with soft sounds. Her feet were beginning to thaw out again, and the cold bones creaked as they began to warm. That odd churning sensation filled her bones again- and she was beginning to suspect that it was probably some sort of instinctive magic. She did have fire-based magic, after all. “Mkay. This your room?”
“Yeah, you wanna go in first?” he asked, gesturing to the darkness of the room.

“Sure!” The darkness of the room was a little odd, but it’s not like her eyes wouldn’t adjust in time. She slips in, feeling her way along the floor with her feet so she doesn’t stub her toes on anything.

And she keeps walking... and walking... and walking... even after the light of the hallway disappeared.

“Okay, Cae? What the hell? It’s really freaking dark, and there’s no way your room is this big.”

After a while of silence, she turns to try and find him, only seeing darkness around her. If she had skin, it would be crawling.

"Caeruleus?"

Suddenly a light clicks on, and she hears something.

The whirring of mechanical function. More specifically...

The treadmill she was just walking on.

Standing by the light switch, Cae gasped loudly, before he burst out laughing.

Toki just... She blinks, and lets herself be carried off of the treadmill. She crosses her arms, and shoots Cae a dirty look, though her ribs rattling loudly in amusement ruins her expression and betrays her amusement. “That was a dick move, Cae, really. Just how long were you going to let me walk on this thing?”

"Don’t ask because you would not like the answer." he cackled.

She sidles closer to him and socks him in the shoulder with a mock offended huff. “Hmph. Well, if that’s how you want to be, I guess I’ll wait for you downstairs.” She gives him a vague grin, and heads towards the door.

"Now hang on a second." A snap of his fingers and her soul is turned blue, before he pulls her back into his arms.

That was a unique sensation that was also strangely uncomfortable. She’s felt it before, she realizes- he hadn’t used this on her since the incident with Twitch and the tree. She’s tugged back across the room and into his grasp, and is thankful that it doesn’t burn so painfully this time. “I was just joking with you, Sans.” she chuckles all the same. The glow in her chest had changed- and she peeks under the collar of her shirt in confusion. “What the hell? Why is my soul blue?”

"That's what happens when I use my magic on ya'." He hums slightly, arms looping around her. "It gets turned blue."

“Huh.” She doesn’t mind as he loops his arms around her, and she trusts him enough not to kick up a fuss over him using his magic on her. “This is the same magic you used when I fell out of the tree, yeah? I recognize the sensation. At least it isn’t painful this time- last time it hurt a lot when you grabbed me.”

He nodded once against her, pressing the grin of his skull against the back of her own. "I'm just glad I wasn't wrong when I guessed it wouldn't hurt this time."

“It’s a little uncomfortable- sorta feels like you’re holding me really tight all over? But it’s not like before. Before, it burned. Glad to know you were experimenting though.” She chuckles softly, and squirms faintly. “You gonna let me go? I promise I won’t walk out.”

He contemplated it for a moment, but ultimately nodded. "Sure." he let her back up on her feet and let her soul go.

She rubbed her chest as the feeling faded, and casually peered at the glow of her soul. She couldn’t see the cracks from here… She was a little worried- she wasn’t sure that the cracks would hold up against magic against her soul. She didn’t really want to check though- Cae didn’t know, and he certainly did not need to worry about it. “Thanks, Cae.”

He nods, smiling gently. However he saw her look and his face belayed his worries. "Yeah...

She rubs her fingers against her collar nervously, before letting her shirt drop. She takes a deep breath and steadies herself. If something had gone bad, she’d have felt it for sure. “So, besides playing a trick on me with your treadmill, what did you want to look at up here?”

"Just had to get something," he said, going to his dresser and pulling out a key. "Here it is...

Toki blinks. “A key? Huh. Okay.” She glances around again, passively letting him do with it what he needed to do, while she-... was that a trash tornado?

Self sustaining, it appeared. How on earth…?

"Alright, you can go ahead and wait on the couch." he told her, "I won’t be long.”

At the dismissal, she nods and offers him a cheery wave. He could do what he needed to do- she’d behave herself while he was busy. Heading back down the stairs, Toki doesn’t bother sitting on the couch. Rather, she goes to wait by the window, and watches the snow. Her toes had warmed up again, but she wasn’t eager to go trouncing back out into the chill again either. Hm…

Well, when he got down here, she had a plan that would work to keep her toes from freezing again.

He was gone for a while, but soon came back, smiling softly, "Alright... If you wanna head home?”

He’d find her in the same place as she was before, watching the snow. “I’m ready to head back, yeah. I think I’ll go raid the Castle kitchens for some tea.” She could really go for some of her honeytarts… But all of her honey that hadn’t been shipped had been in the house, or in the process of being bottled. She sighs softly, and pulls away from the window to meet him at the front door. “But first, before we go back out in the snow…”

"Hm?” He glanced to her. "What’s up?”

She grins at him, and trails her fingers along his shoulder. Toki steps around him gently, heading towards his back. “Well, since it’s so bloody cold outside, and no one thought to warn me about it…
I had an idea. Rather than demanding your slippers- I thought maybe I’d just hitch a ride until we got out of the ice and snow. You familiar with a piggyback ride, Sans?”

At first he wasn’t sure that he heard her right. But turns out he did indeed- Sans chuckled quietly, and crouched down slightly. "Alright, c’mon you.”

Toki just beams at him. She hadn’t had a piggyback ride since she’d outgrown her step dad’s height years ago. Looping her arms around his neck, she clamors on his back. It’s a little awkward, looping her legs around him- because it’s literally her bones looping over his pelvic bones- but she manages.
Resting her chin on his shoulder, she chuckles against his skull. “At least I’m not that heavy?”
He chuckled and looped his hands behind her femurs. "I’d say you’re light as a feather, except you’re more like light as a bone."

“Heh, light as a bone. Good one.” She chuckles. She yawns, her imaginary stomach rumbling silently with the hopes of getting something to eat back at the castle. Her teeth click together, and sparks flick over the side of his skull. “Agh, sorry. I keep forgetting that my teeth spark like that. Hm… Thinking I might pester the cooks to let me make some pasta.”

Cae gave a soft rumble that vibrated up into her back, and left the house with her. After she nudged the door shut for him, he plodded out into the snow.

Toki giggled as a thought crossed her mind. She leaned closer, leeching off the warmth of his jacket as she whispered to him. “Hey Cae? Sometimes I feel like such a whore for pasta. I just want to eat all of it. Does that make me a… pastatute?”

"I wouldn't put it pasta you~"
Chapter 10

Chapter Notes

Strider's notes: heh, hell, it's hard to believe we're already at chapter 10. Fuck, time goes fast when you're having fun writing. :D Be prepared for some random ships to happen-SilverWing is a huge Kingding's shipper, so that's going to appear here and there pretty frequently. heh. Skelegoat fun. Anywho, this chapter hedges into some theories on how skeletons have 'mass' under their clothes. The running theory here is that once their magic settles and sort of builds up, it lingers around them and takes whatever shape they'd have as a 'body' of sorts. So, Pap is this buff hunk of yum, Sans is gonna be a pudgy butterball of smex, and Toki's going to have dat ass.

SilverWing notes: I am a filthy Kingdings shipper and i love the idea of these giant bara dads just being cute together. Also, here's the list of monster heights with character's thus far.
Toki - 6' without horns, 6'9'' with horns
Caeruleus - 6'6''
Aliquam - 7'6''
Tenebris - 8'6''
Asgore - 10' without horns, 12' with horns.

She was finally getting to go home again- well, soon. It was going to be a long trip by cart, but it was better than Cae trying to teleport them all back one at a time. He’d probably exhaust himself with that amount of effort. Regardless, Toki was ecstatic. Yeah, home was burnt to the ground- but it was high time that she gets around to cleaning up the ashes that remained.

Everything would be made again- it would just take time. She’d see about cleaning out the shed and staying in that until she could get a house built. Or just use a tent- whatever was easiest, she supposed.

Toki grunts, accepting a crate that was handed to her and toting it to the back of the wagon. She was tasked with arranging the crates- which wasn’t all that bad of work, and it made her feel marginally less useless than usual. Problem was, she was running out of stacking space rapidly- and the cart was filling up. She pitied the horses that would be pulling it. “You know, if you could sweet talk your brother into teleporting my truck here, we could get all of this moved and back to my place in like six hours?”

"I'm afraid I don’t think he'd be able to transport something as large as a truck..." Aliquam replied.

She ducked her head out the back of the transport to give Aliquam a smile and a soft laugh. “Well, that does make sense. Trucks are big and pretty heavy.” And her truck wasn’t a small rig by any means. She takes another box, puts it in place, and then hops out the back when she’s run out of standing space. “Ah, I can’t wait to get home. I’ve got so much to get done.”

"Indeed" he rumbled, "And thankfully, we've got a simply solution to our current residential dilemma." he said with a smile. "So we can move you back home, then rebuild what was lost."

“Indeed! I wonder if my camping tent is still good… The weather should hold through the rest of this month, for camping outdoors.” She finishes packing the back of the cart, and gives it a content look as she passes her sleeve over the front of her skull to collect the few drops of sweat she’d earned. Lots of supplies for the monsters back home, which was very pleasing indeed. “I think we’re done with this one. Any more, and it probably won’t roll.”

"Miss Toki.” He moved over to her and took her hands, smiling at her warmly. "That’s not what I meant.” he said simply.

It took her a moment, before her eyes brightened. Her fingers curled over his gloved hands, and she beamed at him just as jubilantly. “Oh! Oh Ali, you’re so sweet. I couldn’t impose though- you guys just got the house, you’ll want to settle in and get acquainted with it without guests, I’m sure.”

He shook his head and pulled her hands closer, beaming at her happily. "I don’t think I’d have it any other way, Miss Toki!”

“If you’re sure your brother and father wouldn’t mind, then I guess it wouldn’t hurt if I stayed with you three until I can get my home rebuilt.” She could take the couch, if need be. She’d be less likely to ruin someone’s pillows that way. “Well, that’s settled then. Should we go tell the King that we’re ready to head off?” It was getting to be more towards evening- the darkening skies above hinting at a possible summer rain storm- but setting out in the dark wasn’t really a problem. Flashlights existed for a reason.

He nodded eagerly, straightening and releasing her fingers with a broad grin. "Very well, let's go find Father!"

Well, Gaster and the King did both need to know. Either way it worked. She shrugged faintly as he let her fingers go, and smiled broadly up at him. “We’ll check the garden first.” She knew it was just a bit off from the Judgement Hall. She hadn’t gone in there often- it seemed like such a private place to the King, even if the Garden also doubled as his throne room. “Asgore sure loves his flowers, doesn’t he?”

The walk to the throne room was thankfully short. "Indeed he does. He loves gardening.” Papyrus all but chirped. Laughter floated up to them from the throne room, and the tall skeleton slowed with a confused sound. "Nyeah?"

Toki tilted her head curiously. “Should we wait? Sounds like Asgore has a guest.”

"... Well, perhaps...” Papyrus murmured in consideration. "Father did say he wanted to talk to Asgore."

She nods. “Then we can just send him a text to let him know we’re ready. You have your phone on you?”

"Of course.” The larger skeleton was better at texting than she was- but he had more practice.

Without warning, a ringtone went off from down in the throne room, and there was an ’Ah!' from that general direction.

“Well, that tells us where your dad is.” Toki snorts. Idly she rolls up the sleeves of her sweater, settling the rolled cuffs about at her elbow.

"Should we still wait to go visit?”

She sighs, and shakes her head. “Nah. Lets go down- we’ll just be quick.” She gives a wide smile and heads down the stairs to the throne room cheerfully.
He chuckled and followed her, listening as they went.

"Who was that?"

"Ah, just my son. He was letting me know we're ready to go."

"A Pity, old friend. I'd so hate to watch you go."

"Your majesty, I'm a busy man, and you know that..."

"Oh yes, I know~"

"A-Asgore!"

The sound of Tenebris' laughter rang out into the hallway and Papyrus felt a quiet chuckle grow in his non-existent throat.

"It's been a while since I've heard Father that happy." he commented in a quiet voice.

It left little to wonder exactly what they were doing- and Toki was pretty sure they were going to walk in on something dirty. She swallows down non-existent saliva, and flashes a smile to Papyrus. “He sounds very happy… Maybe he wants to stay when we go back?” She wasn’t sure that he would actually stay if she mentioned it- they were still uncertain about the cracks in her soul, and Gaster was the only soul specialist she knew of.

"Perhaps, I’m not sure though." he said quietly, "He cares about your health greatly." he then smiled at her. "Don't worry, I’m sure he and the king are just having a moment to themselves before Father leaves."

Toki doesn’t have the chance to really respond- she peeks into the throne room and pauses, blocking Aliquam from going inside with her body.

Tenebris had his back to a wall, his head tilted up as he was still laughing, his hands entwined with the king's mane-like fur.

Asgore was standing over him, large furry arms trapping the smaller monster between him and the wall. His grinning face was currently buried in the scientist's neck, tickling him by nuzzling him with his furry snout between soft pecks on the white skin. At that moment, he seemed to grant the other mercy and as he pulled his head back.

Tenebris was able to catch his breath. "I- hahaha... I'll never understand h-how you're able to do th-that... normally I’m not ticklish!" The sound from Gaster was undeniably a giggle of some kind.

"I have my ways, old friend." Asgore then leaned his head up and rested it on Tenebris' forehead, letting glowing purple eyes gently look into loving blue

The snuggly pile of monsters in the flowers has her stepping right back out. Her face burns- because she just had the oddest sensation similar to walking in on her parents in the act, even if Asgore and Gaster hadn’t been doing anything dirty. She doesn’t let Aliquam go far enough to see, before she tugs him back and towards the stairs. “We’ll give them a little while before we go bother them. They’re, ah, pretty busy in there. So how about you and I go raid the kitchens? I dunno about you, but I’m kinda hungry."

"Nyeh...? Well, if you're sure..." Papyrus didn’t fight her as she urged him back up the stairs. "I could make you a batch of my famous spaghetti!"
Toki links her arm with his, and gives him a wide grin as they head back up. Going up stairs is easier than going down, and thusly goes faster. Once they’re back in the hall, she’s tugging him quietly towards the kitchens. “I was actually thinking I could cook up a noodle dish for us both. It’s one of my favorites concerning pasta. It’s probably not as good as your spaghetti, but I think you’d like it all the same.”

"Might as well give it a try, yes?"

She nods. “If all else fails, we can scrap it and you can make spaghetti. Heh. You mind helping me make it? I’m not very good at dicing onion and garlic up as small as I need it to be.”

"But of course!" he grinned proudly. "No one dices onions and garlic up quite like The Great Papyrus!"

She poked his bicep playfully, and laughed whole-heartedly. The kitchens loom ahead of them, and she finds them blessedly empty. Good. “I look forwards to seeing your dicing job then.” Toki takes the time to hunt down a large pot. She couldn’t find any chicken here, but she could just make it without the meat added in it. It would still taste good either way. “I am surprised the kitchen actually has the noodles that I usually use. I wouldn’t think that you’d have Ziti here.”

"We have a lot of different kinds of food, More than what a human would assume!"

“I am impressed.” She grins happily. It takes a little bit to find what she needs, but soon she’s got chicken broth simmering in the pot, and she’s finished cutting the broccoli that has to go into it. She’d handed Aliquam two onions and a couple cloves of garlic for him to dice up. “Once you’ve got it all diced, just dump it into the pot.” She starts grating the asiago cheese, grumbling as her bones catch on the grater. Really it shouldn’t be surprising that they had all sorts of food here. The king probably ordered some of practically every item so that the monsters could try all sorts of human foods.

Which would explain why they had twelve kinds of cheese in the fridge.

"Yes Ma’am!" He grabbed a cutting board and a knife, and once he rolled up his sleeves, and washed his hands, he started chopping the veggies with the skill of a professional.

She watches him from the corners of her eye and ends up smiling quietly. He was very at home in the kitchen- probably even more than she was. “I used to make this all the time for me and my brothers before they ended up moving out. They loved it. Like me, Roshi has problems eating tomato-based sauces, so he was always so excited when I would make this on my turn to cook for family dinner night.”

"Oh dear... I didn't realize you had a problem digesting tomatoes..." he now had a light frown on his face. "I wish I had known sooner."

Toki edged over to bump her hip gently to his as she finished the cheese. The feeling of bone on bone was expected, but it was slightly muffled. Weird. She chanced a glance down- was she filling her clothes out more? It appeared to be so. That was... weird. Perhaps it was a skeleton thing- after all, Cae was just bone, but he still managed to be quite ‘round’. “I never exactly put it out there. I still enjoy your spaghetti regardless, you goober. It was quite alright, I promise.”

He smiled at her, and bumped her hip back before he picked up the cutting board, going to the stove and pushing the cut onions and garlic into the pot. Once his hands were washed once more, Aliquam dried them and donned his gloves once more, flexing his fingers in the comfortable fabric.
She grinned at him, and hummed contently. She slid over to the pot, stirring it gently and watching it boil. It took a few minutes, but she was pleased with the resulting smell that wafted up. Adding in the broccoli and the noodles, Toki carefully poured in a little bit of heavy whipping cream, adding a pinch of salt and pepper, and sat back to let the broccoli and the noodles cook. The aroma that was wafting from the bubbling pot was heavenly. “We’ve got probably ten minutes before the noodles are done.”

"Alright, wanna chat until then?"

“Well of course!” She chuckles. Toki sidles up next to him, content to lean on the counter as she keeps track of time. “Are you excited to finally get to move into your house? The whole incident kind of put a damper on the mood.”

"Of course we are! With you living with us, it’ll feel that more at home too."

“You are so unbelievably sweet sometimes, you know that?” Gently resting her head against his upper arm, Tokiko hummed softly. “I’m excited to get back. It’s going to be pretty cool living with you guys for a while. I promise to try and not put any holes in your couch with my horns.”

He reached up and began to stroke her head gently. "Don’t worry about it," he murmured softly, "It's an old couch."

“Old couch or not, I still don’t want to poke holes in it. My horns are a bit obnox- ow, Pap, careful with the crack. It still hurts.” It wasn’t a stabbing pain when he touched it- but more of a dull ache. It was getting better, thankfully- but touching it still was unpleasant. Toki hums faintly. “I doubt horns are like finger nails… Too bad- it’d be easier to keep them short.”

He watched out for the crack, stroking the smooth, unaffected bone around it instead. "They may be, but I don’t know."

“I’d rather not test it. They’re not always sensitive, but I’d still rather not risk it.” She glances up at him and sighs softly. The soft strokes over her skull is horribly relaxing, and she finds herself slumping into him slightly. Idly, she steals his other hand, and examines his bones above his gloves. He had such large hands- but she wasn’t sure if that was just glove, or the actual bone under the material. The bones of his wrist and forearm were a lot thicker than her own- but she was a human proportioned skeleton. Papyrus was pretty much a giant.

He watched her then let out a soft ‘Nyeh heh heh’ and flexed his hand for her, causing the fabric over his arm to flex with it. "See something you like?"

How… How did that even work? It looked as if he had muscles under the fabric, but there was just bone. She looks perplexed, until his words register, and she flushes a bright green. “Ah- well, I was noticing that you have very nice arms, so I suppose I do indeed see something I like.” The flirt falls from her mouth before she can stop it. Toki clears her throat faintly, and examines his arm again. “I was also noticing the difference in our bones. You have really thick bones- mine look like twigs next to yours.”

He laughed at that. "I always made sure to be tip top with my physical stature. As a royal guard member, I must always be at my best."

She nods slightly, shifting to face him. She investigates his arms again- and realizes that most of his shirt fits a torso, and not just actual bone. “This defies so much logic, Pap. You’re a skeleton. But you look like you’ve got muscle under your shirt. This makes no sense. Unless you have an actual body under there?” Inquisitive fingers brush up his arm and to his bicep- but she doesn’t go further.
She doesn’t want to invade his privacy too much—she was already feeling up his arms as it was.

Damn, he had nice arms.

"Oh but the answer is so simple, my dear." he chuckled, "The answer to your worries." he then turned and lifted up his shirt, revealing only his spine and the bottom few of his ribs "Magic!"

She felt that this was probably the equivalent of being mildly flashed, but laughed softly anyways. Her finger passed through what had been solid with a shirt on, only to feel nothing at all where his abdomen would be. She idly touches one of his lower ribs—holy crap, it’s like nearly three fingers wide. He was built like a rather tall tank. “This is honestly fascinating. But Magic I suppose is the simplest answer— and it’s going to be the answer to a lot of my questions as time goes on, I wager.”

He tensed and shivered as she touched his rib, "N-Nyeh..." Thick, powerful, and apparently sensitive.

And like lightning, her fingers retreated, and her face exploded into a flush. “I am so sorry about that. Curiosity gets the better of me sometimes— I shouldn’t have touched.”

"Nyeh, it... it's okay... I'm just a little sensitive..." he murmured.

“It was a little insensitive of me just to shove my digits in your ribs though.” She grimaces faintly, and urges him to let his shirt back down. “Very sorry about…” Fondling his rib? “About disregarding your personal space. I’ll make sure not to do it again, I promise.” She’s a flustered mess—so she steps away to check on the pasta on the stove while he collects himself.

He smiled gently and shook his head, "Ah, don’t worry about it." a small rub over the rib she had touched and he lowered his shirt, letting the energy pooling in his right eye fade away before he settled down and walked up to stand beside her. "It's alright, you'll learn that our ribcages, including yours, is rather sensitive..."

“I’m pretty sure I’ve got a lot to learn about being a skeleton.” She flashes him a shy smile, stirring the pot with a soft hum. She dumps in the cheese and the last of the whipping cream, and leaves it to simmer for the last few minutes that the noodles need. She’s aware of him being close, and gently bumps his hip with her own. “Good thing I’ve got you to help me learn, yeah?”

He blinked, and then he chuckled. He bumps her back again just as gently as she did him. "Of course, miss Toki~"

Her face cools, and she’s glad her blush is fading. When the dish is properly thickened, Toki makes a pleased noise and turns off the burner. She doesn’t bother with oven-mitts to handle the hot pan—instead she just carefully nabs it about the bottom and lifts it. It tingles unpleasantly against her bones, but only reminds her of holding a slightly overly warm mug of cocoa. It was, she figured, a nifty trick of her magic—she’d figured she could handle extremely warm things for a short amount of time.

Too long, and it burned regardless of how she handled it. She settles it off of the burners, and grins up at Aliquam. “Will you snag some bowls please? This pasta is too saucy for plates.”

He tensed up for a moment, watching her worriedly. "A-Aren’t you worried you're going to burn your hands?!"

She blinks at her palms, and shakes her head. “Well... if I hold on too long it burns, but I figured it was something to do with my magic? Or something related to it. Could be my high HP making me not notice it? I don’t really know.”
Once he hands her the bowls, she sets to dishing up two decent portions of the noodles and sauce. There’s plenty left over, so the other denizens of the castle would no doubt get several meals from it as well. She offers him a bowl with a spoon, and cautions carefully. “It’s hot- you’ve got gloves, but still, don’t burn yourself.”

"They're called mitts." he rolled his eyes and cackled, then he took a spoonful and blew on it, before he put the spoon behind his teeth.

She watched him intently, hopping her backside onto the counter so she’d have somewhere to sit. She didn’t have a desire to flop into the dining room adjacent to the kitchen- so the counter worked just fine. He had an easier time working the spoon no doubt- she had to work it between her fangs. Interlocking teeth meant she had to widen her mouth further to open it for things- and she really didn’t want to make a mess of her sweater if she dribbled sauce down onto it. “Mitts, gloves, hand-shoes, whatever they are, they work for blocking heat.” She winks at him, enjoying her mouthful. The garlic blended well with the chicken and the onion, and the cream and cheese made the sauce thick and rich. Hells yes, she had missed this.

Her eyes glow brighter, and following an unconscious instinct from when she had been human, a glowing green tongue forms to pass over her teeth and keep her from making a mess of her face.

He smiles proudly, "Already summoning your ecto-tongue!"

"Eh- whut?" She pauses mid bite, and peers at him curiously. “Ecto-tongue?"

"Look!" he pointed to her mouth, then he laughed. "You summoned one of these!" he then opened his mouth and his own tongue stuck out.

It was glowing orange, like the gleam in his eye, and Toki paused for what was probably a rude amount of time. She just stared. That… Could all Skeletons do that? Hell, that’s actually really cool, and explains how skeletons might eat ‘nice cream’. “I… huh…” She focuses, recalling the urge to make sure she didn’t have any of their meal lingering on her teeth, and summons it again. She sticks it out, and peers down at it. “Mine is green? Really weird.” She reaches up to poke at her tongue. Well, she could certainly feel her fingers touching it. It sort of reminded her of very firm jelly, or a soft rubber. “Well, alright then, I’m learning new things every day.” With that, she shoves another spoonful into her mouth, and makes a pleased sound.

He laughed again, then took another spoonful into his mouth, "This tastes fantastic!"

She laughs happily, and downs her meal fairly quickly. It was best when it was hot, or cold. Not in-between. In-between in an odd lukewarm state had a weird taste- so she was intent on devouring it before it cooled too much. “I’m glad you enjoy it. Is it almost as good as your spaghetti?"

"It tastes almost as good as it!" He announced happily. "Emphasis on 'Almost', nyeh heh heh!"

She laughed softly as she finished hers, tipping the bowl up so she could drink the last of the sauce. It warmed her core as her magic converted it to energy, the energy solidifying around her bones. Her magic was still ‘settling’ as it was. “Well, I think that’s a high compliment then! Nearly as good as your spaghetti is probably the best I could hope for.”

He smiled down at her, and he gave a soft laugh as he pulled her close into a gentle hug. "Haha..."

She leans into the hug, holding her bowl out to the side so their clothes don’t get dirty from it as she returns his hug with one arm. How he could feel so solid and not like bones was beyond her. “You done, Pap? I’ll handle the dishes if you want to put the rest of the food into some Tupperware.”
"But of course!" He replied. He gave her a squeeze, and then let her go as he went to collect the Tupperware.

Toki took his bowl as she hopped off the counter. She headed for the sink, turning the water on as hot as it would go. She rolls her sleeves up past her elbows, settling it around her upper arms. The cheese in the dish liked to stick to whatever it was in- so she had to work to get it off of the utensils and bowls. The pot would be a mess- but she wasn’t going to just leave dishes here for someone else to handle. Her mess, she would clean it.

Idly, she hums a quiet tune, content and happy to keep herself busy with the dishes. Bubbles from the soap clung to her radius and ulna, and she couldn’t help giggling at the odd sensation. It was pretty ticklish.

He came back after a little with the Tupperware, humming a tune as he loaded the food into the bowls. "One, two, and three, all nicely sealed up to keep the heat in. Nyeh heh heh!"

“I’m sure someone will enjoy it.” She smiles over at him, and comes to collect the empty pot from him. She sets it under the running water, letting it fill up as she adds soap and gets to work. The clean bowls are set to the side on a drying rack where they could air-dry. “Ah, I had forgotten how the noodles like to scorch to the bottom of the pot when I make this dish.” Her claws scrape burned bits of noodle off the bottom of the pot, and she tosses it into the trash so it doesn’t clog up the sink.

Once the pot is clean and rinsed, she sets it to the side and sets to work rinsing the bubbles out from between her bones.

"Mmm, that's always annoying." he huffed, stacking the tubs of food carefully on the counter before he smiled at her, "You just need a good wire brush and it'll come right off!"

“True, but some pots and pans you can't use wire brushes on. It ruins the inside of the pan.” When she’s bubble free, Toki turns off the water and watches her arms. They shimmer green for a second as the churning sensation strikes again in her bones, and she focuses it. Steam wafts up from her arms, and suddenly she’s dry again. Heh. "I guess fire magic has its uses…” She muses quietly, watching her palms thoughtfully.

He blinked once, then he let out a 'Nyeh heh heh heh heh!' "Very impressive!" he exclaims proudly.

“It sort of does that on it’s own.” She informs him quietly. “Not sure how to control it yet.” Idly, she rolls her sleeves down and tucks her fingers into her pockets. Toki gives Papyrus a smile and leans against the counter. “Hopefully it doesn’t go beyond steaming away water.” If actual flames happened, she would probably figuratively shit herself.

"Well, you'll no doubt get the hang of it, you're already doing so well with your magic!” he assured her cheerfully.

She wasn’t so certain. Her eyes dim, and she sighs softly behind her teeth. “I sure hope so.”

"Don't be discouraged, Miss Toki! Stay determined!"

She arches a brow at him and chuckles softly. “I’m not discouraged, Pap. I’m just… nervous. My magic is fire based, and, well… Fire and I don’t really get along very well now.”

"But facing your fear, and harnessing it for yourself, is the best way to conquer it!"

He looked so certain of that, so absolutely sure that it would work. She gave him a soft smile, eyes glowing affectionately at him. Sometimes he was just so… so good and kind that it blew her away.
“Sometimes it doesn’t work like that, Pap. Sometimes when something traumatic happens, it’s harder than just facing it and getting over it.”

"I know, but still, there's no point in feeling pity for you when I KNOW you can overcome this, even if you need a little help from a friend."

She simply chuckles, the sound a soft and quiet murmur against his exuberance. “Sometimes problems like this don’t ever go away, Papyrus.” PTSD wasn’t something that really went away permanently, she knew.

He looked at her for a moment, a small frown growing to his usual previous look. Aliquam sighed after a moment, and rubbed his skull softly as he looked away. "Yeah... I gotcha..." he then looked back to her, gaze locking with her own with a firm resolution. "But you know what? I'm still here for you, and I’ll be here if you ever feel ready to face your inner demons."

Inner demons seemed to be an apt name for it. She smiles at him kindly, and opens her arms in a silent request for a hug. “I know you will be. I’ll try- but there’s other things I have to worry about first, before I start conquering personal demons.” The cracks in her soul took top priority. She didn’t want to leave him without hope though. She’s hesitant- that much is obvious by the glow of her eyes- but she speaks with a calm honesty. “You and I can work on conquering my fears though. I don’t know how, but we’ll work on a way, okay? Maybe start with something small… A candle or something.”

Taking a step closer, he hugged her and nuzzled his skull to hers, avoiding the cracked scar between her horns completely as he did. "Heh... Yeah, A candle sounds perfect to start with." he agreed.

Toki sighed softly, and relaxed into him. Her arms looped around his middle, and she tucked her face against his collarbone. She’s grateful that her horns slope slightly, or he’d have a face full of them with his current position. “We’ll work on it when we’re at home.” Where she could feel safest, more or less.

"Safe and sound..." he agreed gently, rubbing her back softly.

She shivers as his mitts rove over her back, rubbing over the back of her ribs and spine. “Safe and sound.” She echoes softly in agreement.
After the gentle pep talk from Papyrus, Toki found herself feeling light-hearted and made the effort to be more positive around the skeletal monsters, if only so she didn’t keep worrying them. The wagon that was started by Papyrus and Toki had been filled with resources for the townspeople, and the escort accompanying Toki set out to return to their growing, young village.

It was a two-day travel, as they did have to stop for frequent rests for their escort’s sake, but they made great time and were nearly there now. One could only walk so long before they tired out. Ever one to persevere, Papyrus led the wagons with bone spear in hand. He kept an eye on the right side of the road and roadsides with a watchful gaze, while Sans watched the side that Papyrus could not see.

There was a second wagon behind the first, with an open back so the riders could see anything approaching from behind. Anymore this road was mostly free of cars, because people didn’t want to risk running across monsters on their own. The second wagon wasn’t so much of a guard wagon as it was a transport wagon- and on it sat Toki, Tenebris, and one more. One who was currently in the middle of a silly story where the one telling it was the punch line.

"And so I pull back, my mane and face is soaking wet, and I have lilies caught on my horns!"
Asgore laughs, "Then, when I think it couldn't get any worse, the froggit leapt right onto my nose, as if to rub it in that it clearly bested me!"

Toki’s eye sockets beaded with tears as she laughed into her sweater sleeve. Asgore had proven to be surprisingly good at telling stories, and his humor always seemed to fit right in with whatever he was telling. The long ride had been made bearable with his stories. “Oh my god, Asgore, if I still had lungs I’d be dying! What happened next?”

"Well then it's certainly a good thing you don’t have lungs, I’d so hate to see someone so young perish like that." he said with a heaping pile of concern in his voice.

It took him a bit before Tenebris patted his shoulder, finding his voice between his own bouts of laughter. "Old friend, it's a figure of speech” the king was quickly reassured, "She wouldn't actually die."

"Oh... That's good to know." the king sighed, before he smiled at Toki, going to resume his story now that he was reassured that there were no lives on the line. "So, thankfully not too many people saw it, it allowed me to sneak to my room and dry off properly, though I smelled like the courtyard pond for a few days," he chortled.

Toki laughed, dabbling at her eye sockets. She didn’t bother correcting Gaster- because certain humans could die from laughing too hard, if it triggered an asthma attack- and instead tuned in for the rest of the story. “Heh, well, smelling like a pond isn’t too bad. There are worse things to smell like, trust me. Skunk is one of them. Heh. Speaking of. I have a skunk story- if you guys know what skunks are?”

The two exchanged looks, and then they looked back at her. "No, I’m afraid I don’t"

"If you'd please, fill us in so we know what we're missing."

“Okay, so, skunks are a mammal in America. They’re short, pretty close to the ground, and are black with a white stripe. They’re actually really cute, sort of like a strange shaped cat, and make great pets if you can get the scent glands removed as babies. Anyways, they have these scent glands under their tails that they can shoot a rather pungent odor from. It’s such a bad stink that it takes weeks to wear off.” She grins at them.

“So my family and I took a trip to America when I was little. We were there for a week to visit the other side of my family. My eldest little brother, Ryushi, was a pretty animal friendly kid, meaning he could charm practically any animal he got his hands on. He was playing out back of my dad’s grandparents place. Lo and behold, he gets a hold of a skunk, and manages to sway it into relaxing in his arms. He had a habit of showing my mom any animal that he found, so he brought the skunk inside the house- where naturally, it freaked out at the number of people in the kitchen. We smelled like skunk for the entire duration of our visit.”

"Oh dear." Tenebris smirked at that, covering his mouth with his fist as he resisted a cackle. Asgore allowed his to escape, chuckling with mirth. "My my, that's quite unfortunate..." He commented.

"It really was,” She laughed, glancing at the trees around them. They were thinning out- and she could see a familiar stretch of road ahead. Her eyes brightened eagerly. “Ryushi was so upset that he refused to leave the bathroom for three hours. He thought he was bringing in some sort of strange cat.”

"Oh that's unfortunate..."

"Ryushi... He's one of your siblings..." Tenebris questioned, folded his arms as he took a moment to think. "Hm..."

“Yeah. I’m the eldest of nine- he’s my eldest brother. I’ve got seven other brothers.” She grins at him. “I had a pretty big family. Heh. Sometimes the house would get lonely without them. Before the barrier broke, I had been living by myself for probably eight years. Maybe nine?”

Tenebris eyes narrowed slightly, and he let out soft ‘hm’.

"Tenebris, are you alright, old friend?"

"Yes... Just... had a thought..." he assured him, before he smiled gently, his arms returning to resting calmly in his lap.

Toki tilts her head up at him curiously, questioning slightly with her gaze. She doesn’t outright ask, as her attention is divided. The trees open up, and the compound wall comes into view. There’s no reporters outside, no humans, and no graffiti. From around the wall that surrounds the housing community proper, she can hear the laughter of children.

Her eyes brighten, and her mouth splits in a happy grin, soul singing in her chest. She was home! “We’re here!” Ish. They had to turn in the front gates, but they’d be home in a few minutes. She was half tempted to jump from the wagon- but safety was important, so she kept her seat.

The wagons entered the compound shortly after Papyrus jogged ahead to announce their return, and almost immediately the wagon carrying the three passengers was swarmed.

"Miss Tokiko! You've returned!"

"Your majesty! An honor to see you!"

Asgore gave a light chuckle and gave a small dismissing wave of his hand, "Please, give more attention to Miss Nara."

Or not give attention to Miss Nara. Toki simply smiled wider as she made her way to the edge of the wagon. “It’s good to be home,” She smiles wider. “I’ve missed you all dearly.”

“Come on guys, you’ve got to let her down!” Two large paws gently nudged monsters out of the way, and cleared a spot for everyone to dismount from the wagon. Wolfen offered a paw up to the skeleton woman, and grinned up at her. Bo’s smaller body was visible next to him in the crowd, and she waved sheepishly up at the three in the wagon.

She accepted the hand down, and turned to offer a hand up to the King and Gaster. “Thanks, Wolfen. It’s good to be back.”

“It’s good to have you back, Miss Toki. The kids have been besides themselves with worry.” The adults had been too, but that was left unsaid. The sheep woman turned a bright smile to the King and to Gaster. “It’s good to see you back in perfect health, Doctor Gaster. It is likewise good to see you here to visit, your Majesty.”

Tenebris let Asgore go first and he watched with a smile as the large king stepped on the cool grass with almost a sigh of relief, like he had been waiting for this for a long time.

"I couldn't resist, after all that my dear Doctor has spoke of it" he rumbled happily. He then turned and reached, offering a hand to Tenebris.

Taking the king's offered hand, he stepped off the wagon onto the ground. The claws on his feet flexed, and then retracted into their relaxed position as the grass tickled his toes. The doctor offered a smile to the crowd. "Thank you for your kind words, Miss Bo. I'm glad I was able to recover so quickly," he rumbled in reply, before smiling up at Asgore as the king patted his shoulder.

"Not injury nor illness could keep Tenebris down. I know this from experience!" He guffawed merrily.

“We’re all glad that you’re both okay.” The sheep smiled warmly. “And that you’ve managed to return. It’s been a lot quieter without Miss Toki around- and we can finally show the King Nara Village! We’ve got a lot done during the time you’ve been gone- we even have a little market in one of the squares now.”

“Nara Village?” Toki blinks. That was the first she’d heard of that- and of the Market too. It was good that things were moving along- monsters settling in finally, and starting up their old trades, or finding new ones.
The sheep flushes, and it’s her mate that answers. “Eheh, It’s just a little nickname for the town. The kids came up with it after you had to go to the underground, and it kind of stuck. Thumper was pretty adamant that it stay that way until you came back.”

She could read between the lines- in case she didn’t come back, the little rabbit had wanted to make sure that she wouldn’t be forgotten. She smiles warmly. “That is very sweet of him, and of all of you. I think it’s really cute.”

"Adorable indeed!" Asgore agreed, "Come then! Let's not waste any time!" he announced cheerfully, before looking to Tenebris.

The Doctor offered him a gentle smile. "Your Majesty, I’ll be walking with my sons to our home, we have much to unpack."

"Alright, Tenebris, I’ll meet you again later, alright?"

"Of course, your Majesty." they pressed their heads together, sharing a loving gaze for a moment, before the phantom monster went to join his boys with the first wagon.

Looking to Toki, Asgore offered her a smile and a warmly inquired question. "Would you like to accompany me on the 'tour', Miss Tokiko?"

Toki did indeed stare a little bit- but to her credit, so did many of the other monsters. Open displays of affection were often adorable and awkward- but that was pretty genuine. Well then. She chuckles softly to herself, watching as Wolfen urges everyone into motion. They swarm the other cart, helping to unload it in record time.

Asgore’s question is given a moment of deliberation, before she shakes her head softly. “I would, but I need to see if there’s anything salvageable from my house. I’m hoping my lockbox and gun safe made it. I’ve got important documents in there that I really need to get.”

Bo gave her a gentle smile and patted her arm. “We haven’t touched the wreckage of your home, Miss Toki. We weren’t sure what to look for… But the human public guard has been here already and taken pictures and documented things. It was cleared the other day for people to start to clean it… But we weren’t sure how to start.”

The police huh? At least it was documented. She gives the sheep a smile. “Thanks, Bo, for handling everything while I was gone. I know it was probably tough. I’ll get to work getting what I need out of the ash, and then start clearing the debris.”

"Oh dear..." Asgore's look changed, and his eyes flitted over her thoughtfully. "Will you need some help?" he inquired.

Toki shook her head and smiled up at him kindly. “I think I can handle some burnt husks, Asgore. I’ll be okay! Besides, I don’t want to interrupt your tour. Bo’s really nice- I’m sure she wouldn’t mind taking you…?"

“Oh certainly not!” The sheep flushed, her tail flitting excitedly under her clothes. It wasn’t often one got to give royalty a tour, after all. “Oh! Will you need a place to stay? That’s to both of you, that is.”

“Papyrus has already insisted that I stay with them until I can get a house rebuilt.” She shakes her head and smiles quietly. "I will be alright. Tenebris said he's already got a place for me to sleep." Asgore replied to Bo, before looking to Toki with a smile stretching his muzzle. "Miss Tokiko, if you ever change your mind, I am a gardener so I’m used to getting my hands dirty.” he assured her with a warm chortle.

“Still, Asgore, you don’t need to come out here and work. Besides, dirt is different than ash. Ash makes a nasty mess when you try to rinse it out of hair. Or fur, rather.” She shakes her head, and offers him another smile. “Heh. I have the feeling that the house is going to be very full.”

Bo simply smiles shyly, and moves to let Toki slip around her. “I’m glad you both have some place to stay. Alright! Let’s get the tour going before the kids know you’re here, Majesty. A lot of them remember your trips to the school classrooms- I’m certain we will be swarmed when you’re spotted.” The short sheep bids the skeleton a farewell, and motions to the cleared path towards the village. “Shall we?”

"Ha! Of course, Miss Bo!” Asgore chuckled happily. "Let us go and face the children head-on!"

“Good luck!” Toki waved them off with a grin. Once the King and the kindly sheep were off, she headed off for her house. She bypassed the first wagon, which was mostly empty now, and gave the boys a nod as she went.

The remains were burnt and withered- and very little of it was left. Some beams had survived, but they were blackened and pinning down whatever was underneath. She had the sinking feeling that her gun safe was under one of them. The front steps were mostly intact, which let her pad up into the great, big piles of ash and debris that had once held her home. To the left, she could see the burnt remains of her television, and to the right, the largest mound of burnt debris.

She was glad she no longer had a throat- sadness would have clogged it. Seeing her home in ruins wasn’t easy… But she had to move forwards. Toki headed for the large lump, rolling up her sleeves with a sigh as she set to tugging on the beams. The ash was deep- nearly up to her knees- but it made for great traction as she pulled on the hollowed remnants of her home.

With a grunt, she hauled a burnt beam over, and coughed as the resulting ash cloud flooded her face. Under the beam, she finds her gun safe. It’s large, and the top has partially melted inwards. The door is in tact though, and she thanks the stars for that. She manages to roll it out, and leaves it by the stairs.

Finding the lock box was harder, but a couple of moved beams later, and some ones that fell apart while being handled, had her holding the large box. As heat resistant as it was, it was partially melted along the bottom. The hinges worked, and she couldn’t see anything wrong with those. Under the lock box was a melted family photo album- and she had to leave it behind quickly before it got to her. Her soul throbbed sadly as she returned to the gun safe. Rolling it carefully down the stairs, Toki sighed and went to clean off herself and her remaining belongings with the hose near the shed.

When both boxes and her bones were clean from ash, Toki opened up the gun safe. An unhappy sound leaves her- the top of her gun has been fused with the top of the safe. God damn it. “At least the paperwork didn’t burn up…”

"Toki…” A large hand slowly came to land on her shoulder. Giving a slow soothing stroke with his thumb, Tenebris slowly stepping into her field of vision. The monster slowly knelt down, and his gentle purple gaze met her eyes.

She blinks up at him quietly and tilts her skull. “Ah, Gaster. Have you finished getting everything moved to your house?” Her eyes flit back to the mess at hand, and she gathers the messy files at the bottom of the gun case. It’s too clunky to carry home- and the gun is ruined anyways. There’s no telling the damage done to the inside of the barrel- and most of the shells had gone off in the heat anyways. She sighs through her nasal cavity.

"Yes." He looked at the case and reached inside, grabbing the gun. A powerful surge of strength later and the gun was forcefully pulled from the inside of the case. "Tsk.... I haven’t seen one of these in over six hundred years... yet I still remember it's..." he seemed to shutter, and dropped it, watching it land with a clatter on the ground. "Capabilities."
The screech of metal had made her cringe when he’d torn the gun free. Well, now it was definitely ruined. “Guns now are a lot more powerful than guns from back then.” She flicks her gaze up to him. “Cae and I have already had a talk about this, and he’s pretty certain that he’s faster than a bullet. I’m pretty certain he’s a bit over confident. Guns are scary. I was going to show him what they could do, though I wasn’t feeling up to it. I was gonna do it now that we’re back, but… Well, there’s no sense in it now. Buying another gun would be pointless.” The kickback from a gun would probably knock her arm off. Literally.

She sighs, scooping the gun up gently, and tucks the gun right back into its case. Better if the kids don’t try to play with it. She locks it up again, and leaves the gun safe sitting there. Another sigh pulls from behind her teeth, and she straightens up with a grumble. Holding the files in and her lockbox in one hand, the other props on the magic-padded part of her hip. “Well… I guess we should return, huh? I’ve got to sort through papers, make sure everything is here and undamaged. I need to call my family at some point… Stars above, my brothers are going to have words at me for pretty much disappearing off the face of the planet.”

He nodded, and he turned and looked into the ruins of her house. He was silent for a short time, simply looking over it quietly. Eventually Tenebris then sighed and tugged a smile on as he looked back at her. "Yes, you deserve something to eat, plus a good night's rest.”

“Deserve? Nah. Could I use something scrumptious and a good nights sleep? Hell yes.” She hefts the lock box under her arm, and smiles. She turns away from the ruins first, shoving the sadness flitting around her soul away. Not all was lost- she was still here to rebuild. “Lets go, Tenebris. No use staring at the ghost of what was, y'know?”

She heads away from the ruins, heading for the streets. Her clothes are soggy from the water she used to rinse them off, but her magic wont churn to dry them off. Idly she wonders if it is from her mood about her house. Regardless, soggy clothes clinging to her bones is probably indecent. “I need to change clothes anyways. Wet cloth feels really weird on my ribs.”

He simply ends up nodding and following her, seeing to it that she was changed and fed, left in the care of Sans and Papyrus.

While the three of them were busy, he stepped outside again to have a pipe. His smile grew wider as Asgore approached the home, a tired smile on his face.

"Asgore, how did it go?"

"The children are still lively as ever. It was wonderful!” the king chuckled gently, snagging Tenebris in a warm embrace.
"I'm glad, old friend." The hug was returned, before he stepped back. "You're free to get comfortable inside, one of my boys can see to getting you some food, but I have something I feel like I must see through..."

"You wont hurt yourself in the process will you?"

"Not physically."

That answer didn't satisfy the tall king and he gave a few gentle pats to Tenebris' cheek, getting a laugh from him before he reached up and cupped the king's fluff-covered cheeks.

"I promise, I'll be alright... I want to do this for Miss Toki..."

"Alright, Tenebris. I trust you on this... But when you're all done, I'll have a warm lap waiting for you."

"Oh Asgore, you're always so kind to me." Gaster leaned up and placed a soft kiss on the snout of the king, that which immediately wrinkled as he gave a chuff.

"There wouldn't be anything between us if I was rude, now would there?" he remarked after a moment, before he nuzzled Tenebris' neck, "I'll see you inside, then" He rumbled softly.

"Of course~"

Toki would have been bundled in her fluffiest sweater, her softest pants, and a pair of borrowed socks that were three sizes too large for her. She’s stretched out at the end of the couch, hardly taking up any of it with the size of it, organizing her folders in her lap when King Asgore entered the house.

Her lock box is open and balanced on one leg, and she’s got a phone tucked against her skull as she sorts through the things inside. Lots of important paperwork, and a few of her more sentimental photographs are amongst the many things stuffed in the box. The boys had stepped out long enough to give her some privacy to handle this phone call, and had also been kind enough to lend her one of their cell phones. “Yes, I’m fine, Simmons. I did make the change. No, I don’t need you to contact my family- Simmons. Simmons, stop, seriously, I’m alright. I’ll call Mom and my brothers when I’m settled in. I’ve got to have the house rebuilt before I can have everyone over- yes, damn it, you can relay that to Mom too, I know you’re going to call her after. Please inform her that she’ll need to wait to invade until I actually have a house for her to invade. N- SIMMONS. Jesus Christ, I’ve covered that I’m staying with someone already.”

A laugh leaves her, and she wiggles her fingers at the King in a quiet greeting. “I’m safe, I promise. Listen, I’ve got to get off for now. I’ve got all of my paperwork, all of my banking information, everything is still golden. Yes, yes, no, no, definitely not. Leave the will the way it is- that way, even if something does end up happening, the monster community will have something to fall back on. No, I don’t care what Dad says about it. That’s not really his business.”

“Yes.”

“Yes.”

“Alright. Have a good night, Simmons.” She hangs up, and sets the phone beside her. “Hi, Asgore.
Did you have a fun tour?"

"I did indeed." He rumbled, hanging up his coat. "It was very fun, but also rather tiring." he sighed, taking a seat in the large recliner chair. It was big for Tenebris, which meant it was perfect for his majesty to settle down in. "Oof."

“Ha, I bet.” She tucks her legs under her, and thumbs through the papers. She’s got everything in order now, and all of the important paper is tucked at the forefront. She tugs out the few pictures she has, and her smile softens. Ah, she remembered these. Most of them were of her and her siblings as kids, but she had a couple of them from them being older. “Boys!” She calls out over the back of the couch. “Thanks for giving me a minute! You can come back in now!”

They came back in when called and the taller of the two smiled at both Toki and Asgore. "Welcome home your majesty!"

"Thank you, Papyrus. I hope you could tell me if you are able to make some tea right now? After all the fun I had today I’d just love a warm cup if it wouldn’t be too much of a bother." Asgore replied with a cheerful, tired purring noise.

"Of course, sir! I'll go put on the teapot!"

Toki tilts her head curiously as Papyrus ducks back into the kitchen. She shifts on the couch, and smiles wider at one of the photos. Ah, Dom had such a grumpy face sometimes. “Your phone, Cae.” She holds his cell phone up to he can take it back. “Thanks for letting me borrow it- I’m going to have to get another one here soon.” She’d also need to call and deal with the city about getting her license renewed, since her old one was for her human self… and it had burnt up in the fire.

He took it with a soft 'Yoink' (Yes, the funnybones actually makes the sound), and he pocketed it before flopping onto the couch beside her with a sigh. "Yeah no problem... Aaahhh, I'm exhausted. I think I'm taking the next few days off." he huffed.

She has to hurry and tuck some of her papers into the box so he doesn’t squish them. She shoots him an amused look, and shifts on the couch so she can flop her legs across his lap. That's what he gets for taking the space next to her when the entire other half of the couch was open. She spreads the pictures out again, and gently frowns at a tear at the edge of the one with her nephew on it. Blasted claws. “The next few days off? Off from what?”

"Working," he chuckles, before he reached and began to play with her toes. "Where's Pops? Have you seen him?"

“Well he went outside to smoke or something a little while ago. He still out there, Asgore?” Her feet twitch, and she casually pokes him in the ribs as vengeance while she tucks her things back into the box. “That tickles, you know.”

Sans grunted and began to chuckle mischievously as he continued to assault her toes. "Oh so that's how it's gonna be?"

"Actually, he said he had something to take care of, so he'll be out for a while." Asgore answered, amusement glinting in his eyes as he watched them.

“S-Sans!” She scolds, tucking her feet away from his mischievous hands, and hiding them under her femurs. “If you're going to be naughty, you can sit on the other end, mister.” Her bones crawl with the odd lingering sensation of his attacks, and she glances to Asgore. “Oh really? Well, I hope he’s not up too late. He could probably use a good nights rest too- Sans, don’t you dare. I see your fingers moving. Don’t even.”

Sans chuckles and gives her a cheeky grin, "What are you talking about? I’m completely innocent, heh heh heh..."

The king watched them fondly. "I agree, Miss Tokiko. He always would overwork himself back when he was the Royal Scientist, poor man would be dead on his feet." the king sighed.

“Workaholics enjoy what they do though.” She points out. “My brother Utaka is like that. He’s a lawyer, and his wife is always making sure that he takes ample breaks so he doesn’t overwork himself.” Toki gives Sans an amused look, and forms her tongue to stick it out at him teasingly. The lockbox is settled carefully on the floor and out of the way of any possible shenanigans. The last thing she needs is to kick it and send it flying. “Nyeh. Innocent my ass, Sans.”

Asgore chuckled quietly as he gave no reply, letting the conversation fade as he watched the two skeletons interact.

"Yeah, completely innocent!" Cae said insistently, before he looked down at her with a chuckle. "’Nyeh’, huh? You’ve been hanging around my brother too long."

She lets her tongue dissipate as she laughs. “I hang around you both probably too much. At least I haven’t started drinking ketchup.” That was a completely nasty habit. She squints up at him playfully, and replaces her legs in his lap. “If you can behave, and not tickle me, that’d be great. I’d feel terrible if I stabbed your finger on accident.” The pointed bones of her toes were pesky- and if she kicked him, it’d likely hurt.

He chuckled and reached out to stroke her leg bones instead, his thumbs putting pressure to make this as if it was a massage.

She relaxes contently as he rubs at the wider bone of her tibia. Folding her arms over her ribs, Toki watches him rub along her shin through her pants. The cotton material is soft and feels nice against her bones. A rumbling rattle trembles up her rib cage, and she realizes that’s the skeletal equivalent of a purr. “I think you missed your calling, Cae. Masseuses are very sought after.”

"I'm not sure if anyone would like the feeling of my bones against their skin." He chuckled. "I'm not sure yet." He continued massaging with one hand. With the other hand, he reached up to stroke the smooth side of her skull. "Tell me, Doll... You feelin' any better yet?" he asked gently.

Toki leaned her skull into his fingers with a quiet sigh. “Your bones never bothered my skin when I still had it. You might have an issue doing deep tissue massages, but I’m sure you’d work out how to do it.” The bone lids slide over her sockets, and she relaxes into his fingers quietly. “Better?” She inquired, not sure what he meant.

"Feeling better physically, better handle on your magic, emotionally; fuck, anything would work."

“Ah. Uh… Well, physically I feel fine. More than fine, if you keep rubbing like that. That feels amazing.” She hums. Bone lids open, and she peers at him quietly. “I don’t really have a handle on my magic, Cae. It sort of just does what it does. Emotionally I am… sad. A lot of things were lost in the fire- and I had a lot of things saved for my family here too. Thirty years of memories is a lot to lose in one night. It hurts right now- but it will get better with time, I promise.”

He looked at her, then he sighed and he leaned over to loop an arm around her back, before pulling her so instead of her legs on his lap, it was her rear. He wrapped both arms around her tightly and nuzzled his face into her neck. His eye sockets closed as he almost seem to expel air through his nasal hole. "Well... If it helps, imagine how you may have lost thirty years, but you may end up with thirty more years of good memories, of everything you've done for us. Of the new family you've earned."

Without warning, another pair of arms came around them and Caeruleus let his grin grow, as there was a soft 'Nyeh heh heh' by their non-existent ears. "That's for damn sure, Brother. But you never know, it may be more than just thirty years, it may even be thirty decades, now that she's one of us."

Toki was relaxed in their arms. Being shifted over wasn’t that much of a surprise, though the second pair of arms was. She smiled, and lifted her hand to gently grasp Papyrus’ arm and run her fingers over his arm through his shirt. “Thanks you two. I look forwards to making more memories with all of you. She nestles back into Cae’s front, back reclining comfortably against the swell of his stomach. “I suppose we’ll see if I have thirty years or thirty decades, huh?" She had a monster body, but she had a human soul. Who knew if she’d grow old without them? She shook that thought from her mind for now- because that could go down a dark road, and it was not a road she wished to travel. “If you’re finished with the tea, Pap, you should join us on the couch. You can keep your brother from misbehaving.”

"Of course. Let me just serve his majesty and I’ll have a seat." he agreed.

Once Asgore was given his tea, Aliquam was all to eager to join his brother and fellow skeleton on the couch, rejoining the cuddle effortlessly. "Nyeh~"

They probably looked a bit silly there on the couch. Two large skeletons with one much more fragile looking one draped across them. She relaxed, shifting so she could drape her legs across Aliquam since Sans had a hold of her torso. “You know, Cae, you make a great backrest.” Her fingers teasingly prod his middle, and she beams up at him warmly.

"I'm big-boned, so I'm gonna be soft." He joked with a soft laugh, watching as Aliquam reached up to start massaging her feet.

Her toes twitched, and she hid a grin. The massage both felt good and tickled slightly. His mitts were warm against her bones though, and felt good. Toki simply grins up to Sans. “Big boned indeed. Both of you are pretty big.” She nabs his hand, and splays her fingers against his own. His fingers are probably twice as thick as hers are. “Or I am just very small. That might also be a possibility.”

She pauses, and frowns. “You know, I never used to be considered small. For a woman, I was really big according to society’s standards.”

His hand was too adorned with gloves, but they were black, and fingerless, cutting off near the middle of his Proximal Phalanges. His Distal Phalanges, much like his brother's and his Father's, were pointed at the end.

"That may be true, I mean hell you're almost as tall as I am." Cae chuckled gently, "But you're still a human originally. That means you may not get as tall as we do.”

“Human females stop growing at around fourteen years old, sometimes fifteen. I’m pretty much double that age. I’m well past the age where I have to deal with growing pains.” She bumps her finger tips to his, humming as her sharp digit tips touch his. “Even without gloves, you all have giant bones. Heh. Sort of wish humans had bones like this- would make breaking them even harder.”

"Heh... Yeah... You're pretty thin.” he commented, reaching and pinching her arm between his fingers. "I can see your struggle."
She grimaced at the pinch and patted his fingers. “Hey now, gentle with that. You press too hard and you’ll get those sausage fingers of yours stuck between my radius and ulna. At least I won’t be getting my fingers or hands stuck in things, with as thin as they are.”

He laughed at that, and his hand let her go for a moment. "Sausage fingers? That's only if I was a fleshy." he then lifted her arm up, grinning at her. "So, uh... would I get in trouble if I got something else stuck... liiiike..." he then stuck out his tongue, poking it through the two bones, "Bleeeeh~"

It took half a second before she realized that he actually did it. Her bones rattle, and her cheeks tinge green- that was the weirdest sensation, and she’s not entirely certain that it is innocent. “SANS!”

Yes, he gets in trouble. Much trouble- because she’s flushing and squirming out of his lap and into his brother’s instead. She rubs her arm, squeaking at the sticky blue saliva that makes her bones shiver. “I can’t believe you! That felt so freakin’ weird!”

He laughed at that, while Aliquam pulled Toki close, holding her protectively. "Sans!” he scolded, letting Cae have his laugh while he cradled the smaller skeleton to his chest.

She sticks her tongue out at Cae, and tucks herself neatly into Papyrus’ lap. “Hmph. Well, you’ve lost your snuggling privileges for tonight. Pap gets all of your snuggles.” Leaning up, she loops her arms around the biggest skeleton, and nestles close. “And this way you can’t lick my arm again.”

"Awww WHAT?!

"Nyeh~" Aliquam smiled and nuzzled his face down into Toki’s neck.

Toki grins at Sans. “That’s what happens when you’re naughty. Besides- I might not know much about what touches are considered inappropriate with Skeletons yet, but I am almost certain that it is improper to lick the inside of someone’s bones in front of the King.” Her gaze flits to Asgore, still watching them from the recliner. “So yes.” She snuggles into the big skeleton, and her eyes glow merrily at Sans.

He pouted slightly, then he leaned back and sighed as he closed his eyes to relax.

"Mmm..." Aliquam did the same, hugging Toki firmly as he held her to his chest, stroking her head where the crack did not mark.

She relaxed against him with a sigh. The house was quiet, and the smell of Asgore’s tea was drifting here and there through the room. The relative calm and quiet was very soothing, and she slumped against Aliquam. Nestling her head to his chest, she let her sockets close.

The emotional ball in her chest loosened as she relaxed, and she found herself feeling tired and drained as she shunted the sad feelings off to be dealt with later. Being sad always made her tired- and she wasn’t entirely sure if it was her heritage as a Nara or the long trip that day, but she was ready to nod off in Aliquam’s arms. Between his soft touches and the thrum of his soul in his chest, she was fighting the heavy sensation of sleep.

“Mm… Going to end up falling asleep here. You can put me down if you prefer, Ali.”

"I don’t care. You can fall asleep there, Miss Toki." he whispered, smiling warmly against her.

She hums contently, and sighs softly. She nestles closer, her magic pulsing lazily to warm her under her bones, and then she’s out like a light.

Flesh or bone, determined or not, no one can fall asleep at the drop of a hat like a Nara can.
Chapter 12

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: We get to meet a couple of the Nara boys! :D Woot!

Also don't forget to visit the official blog! http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Somehow, somewhere, there was a leak in some form of information system. Or someone was watching the property- for some reason, Toki was damn sure it was the latter. Three days after she got home, it was all over the news that she’d reappeared, and had apparently made a successful change.

She hadn’t heard a peep from HAM- but then and again, her phone had melted in the fire, and she hadn’t gotten another one.

Either way, she was glad when they didn’t call. She’d had to handle reporters and a few news channels that had all but demanded to see her, or to get the chance to pester Asgore. Toki ran interference for the King, so he didn’t have to spend his few days off being hounded by the masses. He’d come out here for a break- and damn it all, she was going to make sure he got a break.

Between keeping the press from ruining Asgore’s visit and cleaning up the remnants of her house, Toki was busy. She got it arranged for the same construction company that was building the monster houses to rebuild her home. It would be larger, more up to date, and not made entirely of wood. She was shelling out for it to be made of brick- which was more resistant to fire per chance she had a magical accident.

She found it easier to manage being so busy now that she wasn’t horribly sick, and found joy in doing her work again. Keeping busy kept her too tired to be upset about everything- and she slept too deeply at night for it to ruin her rest.

Sadly, today was the day Asgore was set to return to the castle. She was going to miss having him around- he was tremendously helpful with the kids, and kept them busy and out of the ash while the adults cleaned up everything and worked around the hazards that lay below the soft ash. The wagons were being prepared to be sent back to the castle- some of the wolf guards were changing out, heading back to visit family still underground. The skeleton brothers were picking up the slack for the monsters who were taking time off.

“Miss Nara?” One of the wolves caught her attention, and she padded to the gate while the others helped pack up the empty boxes. “That’s not a car I know, and those are not humans I recognize. They do not appear to be with the news crew- but surely rioters would not bring children with them?”

Children?

Toki picked up the pace, and stepped outside the front gates. Parked a bit off from the entrance was a minivan, and spilling out of the minivan… Well, two men and a short woman were making their way out of the car. The woman had a little girl propped on her hip, and had her hand around a boy’s.
“Halt”! The guard spoke. “State your business.”

“Ah- Wait, these ones are okay! Those are my brothers.”

The taller of the two men stared at her for a moment, and recognition flitted across his eyes. He didn’t wait long before charging her with a whoop. She didn’t bother dodging as he caught her around the neck, making her stumble back into view of the wagons. She hit the dirt with a grunt, but didn’t stay there long. He yanked her into a rough headlock. Fist finding her skull, the dark haired man ground his knuckles into her skull until she yelped.

“Fucking hell Han, okay, okay, you win! Let me up you big brute!”

“Watch your fucking language Toki, there’s kids here!” Han replied tartly. “And not fucking likely! You right bitch- you told Simmons to tell mom to tell us not to visit until you had a place for us all to stay? What sort of idiot are you? Last we heard, you were dyin’ from whatever the fuck radiation shit, and then we find out you pretty much burned alive? The fuck, sis?”

And standing by the wagons was Caeruleus. He watched Toki go down with the human and for the most part panicked. "HEY!" He roared out, taking a shortcut to close the distance before he turned Han's soul blue. Lifting him away from Toki, Cae gave the human a dark look. "Do we have a problem here?" he growled, his left eye lighting up warningly, before he looked to Toki, "Hey, are you okay?"

Toki took the reprieve to get to her feet, rubbing her fingers gingerly over her skull. Han had scrubbed over the crack- and damn had that hurt. She glanced to her brother, still hanging in the air. His hair was crew cut like usual, so it didn’t hide the gob smacked look on his face. ‘I’m alright, Sans, I promise. You can let him down- that’s one of my brothers. Han’s an asshole- but that’s how he shows his worry.”

“I’m an asshole?” The man in the air kicked his feet, arms flailing as he scrabbled mid air. “Says the bitch who didn’t let us come care for you when you were sick, and who apparently doesn’t want us here until you have a house.”

“Oh shove off, Han. It’s not like we can go back in time and change it- you’re an adult, so deal with it. The only reason I told Simmons to relay my message was so I didn’t have to deal with the entire clan descending upon the compound.” She gives him a dirty look, but sighs. “I’m sorry I scared you guys. I’m okay though, I promise.”

“Yeah, well, you’ve got to make up for scaring us like that, Toki.”

He lowered him slowly, but didn’t let him go yet. Rather he took a second to focus on Han's soul, checking his LV, wondering why the man had been so aggressive right off the bat. He already had one idea as to why... he just had to be sure...

Hans soul would be sporting a whopping LV of 8, with his attack sitting around ten and his defense at about a fifteen.

Toki shot Sans a glance when her brother was lowered, but not released. Probably to make sure that he didn’t attack again. She glanced to her brother, and sighed. ‘I’ll work on making it up to you guys, I promise. You need to behave though, Han. Everyone’s pretty on edge with aggressive humans- and I know you’re as gentle as a lamb, but you made a terrible first impression.”

“Oh don’t pull a Mom- I’ll apologize when he stops using the ‘force’ on me. And of course I’m gentle- I’m a music teacher, not a heathen. But you’re my sister- and I am fully within my right to noogie you into oblivion for scaring the hell out of us. You made Luna cry.”

“Well… shit.” That definitely made her feel bad. She glanced to her other brother, who was staying sheepishly out of the way.

Ryushi waved at her, having no desire to get in the middle of his brother’s skirmish with a monster.

"A music teacher doesn't just have a LV 8 soul." he growled quietly, but let the human go after a moment.

“A what soul?” Toki blinked. She waved to her brother as Han was let go, and the other approached hesitantly. Her nephew had no such regards, and she found herself with an armful of grumbling eight year old.

Han didn’t look much better- confusion filled his face as he got his bearings. “LV 8? What’s that mean?”

"... T'be honest, I'd rather not discuss this in front of th' kids..." he said in a lower voice, turning his head slightly before he shortcut away from them, returning to the wagons.

Well that was just grand. Toki watched him go with a frown on her face. “I'll ask him later.” She says to her brother, grunting as Dominic tugs on her hand. “I missed you too Dom. If you yank any harder, you’re going to yank my hand off.”

“You’re a butthead.” The boy says firmly, latching tightly onto her wrist. Blue eyes stared up at her balefully, framed by the same dark lashes that make up his short hair. “But I still love you, Aunt Toki. C’mon. You gotta go apologize to Luna.”

“She’s really upset, isn’t she?”

“She caught sight of part of the news cast that showed you on fire. It wasn’t pretty.”

Toki grimaces, and goes to fetch her Niece. Sarah hands her over easily, but remains quiet. Sarah was a quiet woman who spoke very little, but saw most things. How Ryushi landed someone like her, Toki would never know, but she doesn’t really care. The American woman goes to collect Han, and make sure that he hadn’t gotten too roughed up in squabbling with his sister.

Luna is pressed into her arms. At three years old, the little girl was the spitting image of what Toki looked like when she was that age. Minus the lack of color- Luna was entirely albino. She pouted up at Toki, eyes glimmering wetly, before she shoved her face towards Toki’s own.

Eskimo kisses were Luna’s thing- and obligingly, Toki leaned down to brush the ridge of bone that remained of her nose against the pudgy soft one of the little girl’s. “Am I forgiven, my little Lunatune?”

The toddler sniffed and nodded. She clung onto Toki, wiggling her fingers into her cloths and effectively becoming a leech. “Yeh.”

“Good.” She smiles. Keeping one arm supporting the clingy toddler, the other still trapped by her nephew, Toki nods to her brother and motions to the inside of the wall. “C’mon, guys. We can all go sit- and Dom can meet some of the monster kids. I think you’ll like Thumper, Dom. He’s like Mirou.”

“I’m sure Dom’ll behave.” Ryushi ruffles his son’s hair, and leans in to kiss his sister’s cheek. “You look healthy, Sis. Better than you did the times we saw you on the newscast. These monsters have been good to you, haven’t they?”

“Yeah, they really have.”

Upon seeing the tense hold of his brother's shoulders, Aliquam had come to see what had upset Cae, though he looked in surprise at the family. "Who are these humans, Miss Toki?" he asked.

Toki looked relieved that Papyrus hadn’t taken on his brother’s grouchiness too. She beams at him, and hefts her Niece higher. The toddler tilts her head and peers at the massive skeleton timidly. “Ah, these are my family. This little lady is Luna, and this big fella is her big brother, Dominic. They’re my niece and nephew. The shorter man is Ryushi, that’s his wife, Sarah, and my other brother Han. Guys,” she addresses the lot of them, “This is Papyrus Aliquam Gaster. I’m living with him and his brother while I get my house rebuilt.”

Obligingly, her brothers and her sister in law say hello, but ultimately do not wander very close. First impressions are important- Han had made a terrible one with the other skeleton, and this one here was much larger than the last.

“Papyrus Ali-Ali… Papyrus.” Dom peers up at the big skeleton, and resolutely clings to his aunt. “You’re really big.”

“He’s really nice though.” Toki beams. She nudges Luna gently, and turns so the little girl can better see the skeleton. “Say hi, Luna. Ali’s really nice, I promise.”

Little ruby eyes glimmer up at the tall skeleton. Luna is curious- but she’s not as brash as her brother all the time. She loops one hand around Toki’s collarbone, missing her Aunt’s wince at the odd sensation, and waves a pudgy hand at the big skeleton. “Ah… Ahli… Quinn? Quinn. Hi…”

"Hello there, everybody" he greeted, before he looked to Luna, hearing the new nickname, he let out a cheerful, ‘Nyeh heh heh’. "Oh how adorable! Quinn, that's a new nickname for me!" He announced happily, "I'm gonna be Uncle Quinn." he giggled, "Do you like the sound of that, little human?" he asked.

“Uncle Quinn, huh?” Ryushi began to grin, ignoring the flush that began to grow on Toki’s cheeks. “Well, I’ll be darned. Mom’s going to be so sad she missed the wedding, Sis.”

“Unca.” Luna nods firmly. “Unca Quinn.” Pleased with herself, she reached out to change grasps to her newfound ‘uncle’.

Dom on the other hand leered up at his Aunt. “I didn’t know you got married, Aunty. Why didn’t you say anything?”

“Ah… We’re not married, sweetie.” She offers him a wry smile, adjusting her hold on Luna so Papyrus could take her if he wanted to.

The large skeleton paid them little mind. Chuckling, Aliquam reached and slowly took Luna, holding her close and stroking her hair, "Well hello there, little one.” He purred.

The fluffy white bits of hair would be soft like downy feathers. Pudgy arms reach up for his face, and she scrunches hers up. He had to do the nose thing. He just had to.

With her arm free, Toki leaned down to hug Dom. “I’ll explain what that means later, okay?”

“Alright…” The boy huffs slightly, but accepts it. He shifts, and hugs her tighter, before letting go. “Now that you’re okay, and we know you’re not gone, can I go play?”
“Dom,” His father murmurs softly, “It’s rude to go wandering off so soon.”

“Children will be children, Ryu. It’s okay. Alright. We’ll go find the other kids here soon, I promise.”

He leaned into Luna’s hands and softly turned his skull so a smooth part of it rubbed against the tip of her nose. "Nyeh heh heh! Nuzzle nuzzle~" Aliquam chuckles softly, before glancing over to Dominic. "There are many children here, they will be finishing school soon so you need not wait too long." he explained.

Luna is thrilled by the nuzzles she receives, and giggles happily. Her fingers seek out his bones through his clothing and she latches on, much like she had done to Toki. She reclines into his chest, content to be a koala.

Dom makes a face, but nods at Papyrus. “I can wait for them to get out from school.”

“You’d better.” Ryushi ruffles his son’s hair again, and then tugs his sister in for a quick hug. He flicks her one of her horns playfully, and then peers at the crack in her skull. “Hey Sis? Why does your skull have a crack in it?”

“It’s from the fire. It didn’t quite heal properly, so it scarred- can you not touch it please? The crack is still sensitive.”

“It is? Shit.” Han is there too, gently yanking her down by her horns so he can look at it. She can see his face, and guilt glimmers in his dark eyes. His teeth worry at his lip as he brushes gentle fingers around the crack. “I am so sorry- did my noogie hurt you? I didn’t make the crack worse, did I? It’s so big… Oh shit- is it hurting you tugging on your horns?”

“Ack- Han, it’s okay. I know you were upset with me, and I really did deserve the tackle- no, the crack isn’t worse, and no, you’re not hurting my horns.” She remains stuck as her brothers investigate her skull. When it’s deemed that she’s not going to die, they let her straighten. Her ribs rattle with a sigh. “I’m okay, I promise.”

“We almost lost you once- you can’t blame us for worrying. We’ll spread the word though that the crack isn’t life threatening.” Ryushi gives her a smile.

“Yeah- otherwise you’re gonna have to go through all of that again. Mom’ll be worse than us.”

She grimaces. “Yeah, I know. Mom’d have my skull wrapped in bandages to hold it together before I could get a word in otherwise.”

“You can’t blame her though, Sis. You’re her only daughter- even if you’re the oldest you’re still her little girl.”

She smiles wryly, her head tilting as she picks up the sounds of children approaching.

The monster kids flood out of the housing district, obviously having been let loose from their classes. It wasn’t an official school yet- that hadn’t been built- but they rotated houses through volunteers to host the kids for classes. After school it became a game to see who the kids could find first- Toki, or some other form of entertainment. For the last while, that entertainment had been Asgore.

“Hey, Han? You usually bring your violin with you everywhere. You have it today?”

“I do, yeah. Why?”
“Why don’t you go get it and entertain the kids with it? They haven’t had the chance to really be introduced to much human music.”

Han looked aghast. “Seriously? I should disown you. You’ve had your hands on these kids since they moved in, and you haven’t given them a proper musical education? Shame on you, Toki. Shame. I’ll be right back- make sure they don’t steal Dom without me!” He turns on his heel and jogs back for the car.

She watches her brother go and flicks her gaze over to Ryushi. “Did you want to see the village?”

“We do, yes.” Sarah steps up to bump shoulders with her husband. “We can wander on our own though. Why don’t you go see if your other friend is all right? He seemed pretty upset by Han.”

Toki nods. “I’ll talk to Sans. Hey, Pap? You might wanna hand Luna back. She gets cranky when Sarah leaves her with anyone and goes off someplace else.”

“She just doesn’t like to miss anything.” Ryushi smiled up at the big skeleton, and opened his arms to accept his daughter. “She likes to be included in our little adventures, don’t you Luna-loo?”

The toddler glances to her dad, and huffs. “Yuh.”

"Music, huh?" Papyrus had grown interested as he slowly disentangled Luna from his body and handed her over. "I play the violin as well. Sans and Father can play instruments too.”

“Toki’s got the musical inclination of a tone deaf walrus.” Ryushi informs the tall skeleton cheerily, hefting his little girl up into his arms.

“Yeah, but Sis can carry a tune better than any of us.” Han was striding back about the same time that the mob of monster kids swarmed out.

“Toki!” Thumper bustled to her, and beamed up at her. “Who’re these humans?”

“The one with the fiddle is my brother, Han. He’s going to be showing you guys music- and Dom’s gonna hang with you too, if that’s alright. He’s a little bored with the adults. That’s Ryushi, my other brother, his wife Sarah, and their daughter, Luna.”

“Nice to meet all of you!” The enthusiastic rabbit offers them all a grin. “I don’t blame him. All you adults talk about is weird adult things.” The rabbit glances to the smaller human, and bounces over to take his hand. “C’mon! We can play tag. You can run fast, right?”

“Faster than you, I’d bet. C’mon, Uncle Han! You can serenade us while we race.”

Toki watched the kids steal away a good portion of her family, and laughed quietly. She stayed near Papyrus, and shook her head. “Dom’s going to sleep the whole car ride home. Thumper’s got a never ending well of energy.”

“It’ll do him good. He’s been so cooped up with school and the problems in the city that he hasn’t had the chance to run wild. Han could use the energy too. There’s been some stuff happening in his neighborhood, and he had to stay with us for a while. Kids have been setting off firecrackers-”

“Ah.” She grimaces. “Say no more. Yeah, it’s fine. Let him go relax- he’s in his element with the kids. You three enjoy your walk- definitely check out the market too.”

“Oh, a market? Well, I know where we’re stopping first. Come on, Ryu.”
“But that means I have to carry the bags.”

“That’s what husbands are for, dear.”

And soon she is alone with Papyrus. She sighs. Naras. Here one moment, gone the next- or asleep the next. Fickle creatures, her family was. She glanced up at the tall Skeleton with a smile. “I didn’t know any of you played. So what does Cae play? The trombone? Bone-gos?”

The sound that accompanied his face palm was surely loud enough to be heard across the town. "Oh my god."

Toki laughed brilliantly, mouth opening as she pressed her palm to it. “I’m so sorry, that sort of slipped out. Heh. Will you forgive me? I know my jokes are terrible.”

"He likes Brass instruments, so yes, trombone." He chuckled, "And Father plays the Piano."

She’d take that as a yes. She nods up at him quietly, snags his arm in a small hug. “It takes talent to make music of any kind. As my brothers said, I cant play instruments to save my life. Heh. Speaking of your brother- I’m going to go talk with him real quick, okay? He was in a foul mood about something with Han. Something about a LV 8 soul, or something. I don’t know what that means. Your dad and I haven’t really gone deep into lessons about souls yet.” She was still learning how to skeleton, let alone how to deal with souls.

"Oh dear... An LV 8?" he asked. "Are you sure?"

“Yes? That’s what Cae said.” She blinks up at him, confusion furrowing her brow. “I don’t understand. Is a LV 8 bad?”

He looked at her, then looked at the rest of her family as they passed fully out of sight, before he gestured her closer. He knelt down and gave her a serious look.

“... You're really freaking me out here, Pap.” Toki’s soul flutters nervously, but she draws closer willingly. Her eyes flit over to where the kids had taken Han and Dom, hearing noisy laughter and the merry tune of a fiddle playing.

"A soul is able to gain something called EXP. When it gets enough, it's LV increases. LV 20 is the known cap... and by far the most dangerous."

She blinks. “Huh. How is that a problem then? It doesn’t sound bad... Well, except the dangerous part. I don’t know how LV makes you dangerous. Just be honest with me, Pap. I’m still learning about this stuff- and I’d rather not blunder into something horribly offensive if I can help it.”

"LV... It’s an abbreviated name for an Acronym... LOVE...” He said softly.

“I get the feeling that LOVE is different from love, and not in a good way.” She hesitates, and peers at his face intently. “Would you be more comfortable if I asked Cae about this?”

"... He's... More used to it...” The tall skeleton looked upset. “I think so...”

She nods, and leans up to gently tap her teeth against his forehead in a soft kiss. For being uncomfortable with the subject, Papyrus had done a better job than she thought he might. Didn’t answer everything, but gave her enough to pinpoint what she needed to be directly informed of. “Okay. I’ll go talk to him about it- thank you for trying though!” She gives him a smile, and makes a beeline for the brooding skeleton near the wagons. “I’ll be right back.”
He sighed, and watched her go, before he put on a smile and went to entertain the children with Han.

Toki padded up to Cae, and snagged his jacket sleeve. She tugs him over towards the wall, away from the other people, before turning to stare up at him. “Alright. Explain please. Paps made an attempt, but he’s not comfortable with it, and I don’t want him to be upset trying to explain something. We got as far as LV being an acronym for LOVE, but not what any of that means, or how it and EXP are bad.”

He looked at her, grinding his teeth for a moment. And then he sighed. "EXP stands for Execution Points. Get enough, you gain LOVE. LOVE stands for Level Of Violence. Just how comfortable someone is with killing. Do you get what I’m saying?" He grit his teeth slightly, a tight grin that wasn’t really a grin being given to her. His sockets were dark. "Your brother has a LV of 8. There’s blood, and potentially dust, on his hands. He’s killed a lot of people, Toki. A lot."

Her mouth dropped open, understanding blooming in her eyes. Oh. Oh, that’s what this was about. He thought… She reached up and tugged his hands gently into her own. Slowly, she spoke so that the other monsters couldn’t overhear. “Han is ex military.” She explains softly. “In the military, you have to follow orders. He was in the military for several years- and he was good at what his superiors had him do. Sometimes what he was ordered to do was not always a good thing. Han is by nature a gentle person- he retired as soon as his superiors would let him go. He has nightmares and freezes up at loud popping sounds. Blood on his hands, yes. Dust? Definitely not. He can’t handle killing an insect now, let alone doing something so heinous as to kill a monster.”

She peers up at him quietly. “I understand your alarm- but I know my brother probably as well as you know yours. Han isn’t a threat to anyone here. He’s rough and tumble with me because I’m his sister, and siblings often scuffle. It’s a human thing, I think. We’re all rough little hoodlums when we’re little. His signature way of letting me know I’m in deep shit is to tackle me and noogie me.”

Cae looked at her for a long while, processing just what she was saying. Well. He’d made a complete ass of himself, hadn’t he? He sighed, which was followed by a frustrated groan. The lights return to his sockets, and his grin loosens into a frown. "Shit... I’ve made an awful first impression, haven’t I, Toki..."

“Well, to be fair, your first impression of him was a mildly violent sibling scuffle. It was just a bad way to introduce each other.” She offers him a quiet smile, and rubs the backs of his knuckles soothingly. “Just apologize to him, yeah? You don’t have to go in depth- just tell him you and I talked, and we explained some things, and that you had needed some reassurance. I need to explain to Papyrus what I told you, so he isn’t too alarmed either. Lets not mention the LV thing to Han though. He beats himself up enough over it as it is, yeah? The last thing my brother needs is to know it made a permanent mark on his soul.”

He sunk slightly into his coat, and glanced away. "Yeah... Wanna help me go find him?"

“Well, he might bite if you asked him nicely, but I doubt it.” She lets his hands go, and heads off in the direction of the music. Really, it wasn’t hard to find them. Her brother could be such a show pony when he wanted to be- he was in the park, prancing around like a fool and playing some amusing show tune. The kids were laughing and clapping along, while some of them played tag in the back ground.

Dominic was among those running, and he looked completely exhausted, though determined to catch the fleet-footed rabbit monsters that dashed circles around him. Twitch was having a blast, bolting around him like a fuzzy blur, while Thumper ran circles around Papyrus.

Toki stopped a little ways away from her brother, and motioned Sans to step forth.

When she gave the gesture to approach, he slowly did, smiling with his stuck grin. "Heya... Han?"

Han glanced over when the big monster approached, and offered a hesitant smile. His music faded off, and he faced the kids for a moment. “Hey, munchkins, I’m gonna rest my fingers for a second and talk to the big guy here. Why don’t you go see how many of you can cling to Papyrus before he falls over?”

Challenge accepted apparently, as the hoard of kids swarms the taller skeleton. Han can see his sister failing to hide her laughter, and counts it as a win. Free, he turns to the skeleton in the blue coat. “Ah… Sans, right? I’m sorry if I spooked you guys. I forget that you monsters aren’t used to human roughhousing.”

Upon being swarmed, there was a shrill "NYEH!" of panic from Quinn. The tall skeleton goes down, disappearing under a hoard of clamoring monster kids. "NO! The great Papyrus' greatest weakness! CHILDREN!"

"I'm sorry I jumped to conclusions." he said in return, reaching up to rub his skull awkwardly. "I think we should try t' start over..." He mentioned, before he chuckled softly. "Hey uh, Han... Do ya' know how t' greet a new pal?"

Han heard the laughter of his sister ringing out alongside the various noises of panic from Papyrus, and he let a chuckle escape himself. He looked at Sans, a hesitant smile tugging at his lips. "I have a guess, but in case I’m wrong, you mind telling me?"

"Heh, No problem. Hell, it'll be a life lesson for ya. You greet a new pal..."

He then held his hand out

"By shakin' their hand."

Han looked at his hand- his claws moreover- and for a moment Cae could guess the human was expecting it to bite him, which would be rather amusing... But after enough consideration, Han extended his own hand. "Screw it. To new beginnings, Right?"

"Yeah. Heh... The Name's Caeruleus." Cae reached and gripped the human's hand firmly, met with a firm handshake in return.

Perfect. The whoopee cushion hidden in his palm flattened, the air escaping in a very crude, and very loud-

BRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRTTTT

Hans' eyes went wide as his cheeks tinged red, and he sputtered out a laugh.

Sans' eyes gleamed in amusement, his grin widening as a loud chuckle escaped him. "And you just got dunked on, pal."
Chapter 13

The day went good. Gods above, it went good. They laughed and laughed, and Han decided that he was going to come back often for music lessons with the monster kids. He’d do optional weekend lessons outside of school hours.

The kids played outside with the adults for hours- and everyone got dragged into the biggest game of tag that most of them had ever participated in. It was fun- it was light and warm, and something that every one of them had needed.

A little bit of play in the day could remind anyone that you’re never too old to play tag- and that even a King can play with the regular people. Everyone was in high spirits with no incidents and the day having been devoid of any and all reporters or outsiders. The high spirits were infectious, and there wasn’t one face that had gone without a smile. Between Han’s music, the children’s laughter, and the ambient happiness in the atmosphere, the day proved to be most joyous despite the return of the King.

They’d all taken a break for a late dinner- Papyrus made a fantastic spaghetti, and ended up wearing some of it when Luna decided that it was time to fling her food- and then had been right back out there for another hour or two of play out back in the river. They’d all gotten soaked, but a bit of Asgore’s fire magic had managed to dry out pretty much everyone’s clothes.

The sun was starting to go down though, and the day’s fun was coming to an end. The kids were tired, the adults were exhausted, and everyone was getting ready to send the King off for his trip home. The wagons were loaded up tighter as the guards returning to the Underground packed up their travel belongings, and the wagons all but groaned at the added weight.

As her family lingered back with Asgore- attempting to disentangle Luna from the goat king’s beard- Toki recalled that she hadn’t checked her mail in an age. The box was probably overstuffed- and she cringed to think of all of the junk mail that she’d have to dispose of.

She waved off her family for a moment, excusing herself to go and collect it from the boxes outside the walls. Toki waved at guards, all but bouncing out the shadowed opening. Dusk was settling over the compound, making the trees change to darker hues. Shadows danced here and there, the lights of houses combating the dark.

Toki bounced around the corner with a hum, heading towards the mailbox by her brother’s car. A grunt left her as she ran into something hard and metal- it clacked against her bones, and it took her a moment to recognize what she was seeing.

Her hands lift upwards, eyes flitting up to the walls with the hopes that one of the guards would see. There was no one up there- they were all down saying their goodbyes to those of them that were leaving to visit their extended family Underground.

Before her stood a man in dark clothes. He wore all black, except for the mask on his face. It had interlacing red lines- and as she stared into it, she recognized letters layered over each other. H. A. M. The gun against her sternum didn’t keep her from gasping- behind him were many others in the same outfit. Black body suits, with the mask emblazoned with red letters adorned every single face that stared back at her.

Every single one of them had guns.

"Well, well, well... If it isn't the monster sympathizer herself... The one who loved those freaks so much she became one!" the masked man chuckled lowly. “It wasn’t enough for you to just take them in, allow them into our world- no, you had to go and become one of those filthy beasts.”

She swallowed, nerves making her eye glow a pale green. By nature a fairly calm person, she found her nerves being tested by the sheer number of black clothed people. She couldn’t tell how many there were- they were too tightly packed, lingering and blending into the dusk around them. There had to be at least forty, if not more. “You guys are with HAM, aren’t you? Please, there’s no need for such... drastic measures. Surely you guys have something better to do than terrorize people on such a fine day, right?”

"People? HA! There's no 'people' here. They're walking dust-piles keeping real power from us humans, just like you are now." He put pressure on her sternum by pushing his shotgun forward. "If they want to be 'people', they should have stayed underground where they belong."

“What if it was us under there, and we emerged to hate like you people have? How would you feel? They’re not very different from us- they laugh, they love, they cry. They’re just people, but with magic and different shapes!” The gun on her sternum makes her bones rattle. Her magic churns uneasily under her bones. Toki goes to take a step back from the gun to give her more standing space.

“Nuh-uh, you move, you get dusted, bitch.” One of the others spoke, hefting a rifle and cocking it threateningly.

Toki swallows again, eyes flaring a lighter color. Theoretically the guns might not do much to her bones, if she can manage to be lucky enough for them to not be good shots. At point blank though, she might not be all right. It wouldn’t matter if she could get the bullet to go between her ribs instead, but the barrel of the shotgun was pressed to her sternum. “Why are you here? Tonight of all nights? Why now?”

"Isn't it obvious?” The first man laughed quietly. His voice was low, so as not to attract attention. “The king’s here. With him gone? The world is ours again, and monsterkind will be reminded why they were put underground in the first place. But if you're going to get in our way... You'll just have to be the first casualty.”
“So your end goal is to kill the King?” Fuck, she needed to get all the information out of him that she could. “Why? If Asgore falls, another King will take his place, and another after that. That’s a senseless cycle of violence and hate- Asgore is a really nice person! He doesn’t deserve that. No monster deserves what you have planned. Please, there’s no need for this. You don’t have to hurt me, or anyone- just go home. I wont even say anything to the others if you turn around and leave right now.”

"I'm afraid we can't do that. You monsters are a blight on this world, and you've already gotten way too fucking comfortable.” The man snarled. “First you come into our world, then your fucking magic starts transforming us humans into your freakish kind!”

“I-It’s more than just magic,” she stammers. “It’s something tied into the DNA of humans who have monster ancestors. It’s literally not their fault that some of us have undergone the change, or are in the process of changing. It’s in our DNA. Please. This is senseless- I’m not going to let you waltz into my home and hurt innocent people.”

"Then we're not going to let you live. Even if we have to kill our own family, our own children, our grandchildren! We'll wipe your disgusting kind off the face of the earth and all strains of your filthy presence!"

Horror made her mouth drop open. “There is something wrong with you people. Killing your own children? Just what are you hoping to accomplish with mass genocide of a species that hasn’t done any-”

“Aunt Toki! What’s taking so long? Don’t tell me you fell asleep by the mailbox- If you start doing what dad does, I’m gonna have to disown you.”

Panic flooded Toki as Dom barreled around the corner. He shoved into her, making her jerk towards the man with the gun. This maniac was going to kill her family- his own fucking family too. Her arms came down and spread out, hoping to use her loose sweater to block him from view. “Dom, run!”

"Auntie, wha-?"

And with the lurching movement, the trigger of the shotgun was reflexively pulled, the muzzle of the gun flashing bright in the dark.

The whole town grew quiet as a single gunshot rang out. Tenebris and Caeruleus turned towards the gate, while Quinn immediately moved into action, ushering the king towards to somewhere safe.

Sarah went along with Asgore, as Luna was still resolutely clinging to the King’s beard.

Han’s violin hit the ground as he turned to the direction of the noise. With all of the trees in the area, it wasn’t hard to pinpoint it. Ryushi likewise followed his gaze, and horror stretched his face. “DOM!”

Ryushi raced for the gate about the time that Dom toppled backwards into view.

Toki soon followed, shirt blown wide open as she rotated instinctively, trying to cover her nephew with flesh she didn’t have. Red blossomed on the young boy’s chest and abdomen, and his mouth was open and gasping. Toki was stiller than stone as she draped across him.
Men stepped into view, lining up and blocking the entrance. They stood only a few feet from the fallen skeleton, but their sudden aggressive advance halted Ryushi in his tracks.

“Tonight, Humans Against Monsters makes the second strike. Tonight,” one of their members spoke, “The ground will be covered in dust and blood alike. Tonight you all die- so say goodbye to this world you filthy beasts.”

"..." Tenebris and Cae both stared at the fallen in horror...

For the longest time, there was only silence, the monsters in shock, before a single, horrified screech cut the air.

"TOKI!" Cae shortcut forward without thinking, aiming to land at Toki’s side.

"Caeruleus no!" Tenebris gasped.

The first row of humans converged as Sans appeared next to the fallen skeleton. They trampled over her and the boy, hardly taking note that her arms were positioned to keep her weight from crushing the child below her as they stomped down on her back and vaulted over her. They swarmed in, striking out with the blunt ends of their guns to force the monster back.

“Kill the humans! Dust the monsters! No one survives tonight! Fucking find the King! He can’t evade us forever.”

The first shot rang out, blowing through one of the guards as he scrambled for cover. It blew through his chest, the bullet imbedding in the wood of the wagon. His dust scattered over the cart before he could even yelp.

Ryushi and Han were hardly idle. The eldest of the two met one of the gun-wielding humans, and began the struggle of trying to wrest his weapon from him. Han on the other hand ducked behind one of the wagons, hand fishing in the back of his pants for the gun holster that he habitually had on him.

Sans blocked with his arms and snarled lowly, backing away with the human's advance. His sockets were dark, his grin fallen into a frown. "It's a beautiful night... But on nights like this... Humans like you... Shouldn't be admiring the stars...! Humans like you!" His left eye lit up brightly as Gaster Blasters appeared, a snarl pulling at his lips. "Should be BURNING IN HELL!" His screech was droned out by the roar of the blasters going off, cutting through the air in arcs of hellish blue.

As the humans pushed his son, Tenebris felt something inside him snap. His eyes narrowed and his pupils turned to slits, before a low snarl came from him. His jaw then unhinged and he let out the most bestial roar one could hear, a true battle cry that hadn’t been heard since before the barrier was erected.

It was an order for all brave and strong enough to fight to protect their loved ones.

The monsters heard the cry, and those who knew how to fight swarmed from their houses. The humans scattered as the blasters went off, several of them not getting out of the way in time. They screamed, terrible horrible noises as the blasters seared flesh and stole away the life force in their souls. Many of them dropped where they stood, souls giving out against the trauma that was inflicted. Half of them parted to rush for the civilians that rushed from their homes. The other remaining half surged over the fallen skeleton, scrambling up and away from the massive blasters.

Shots rang out, and the humans ducked to take cover as Han leaned out, aiming to disable them. Leg shots, arm shots, non-fatal wounds.
The space over Toki and Dom cleared out rapidly, humans scattering and bull rushing the monsters. The civilians created a hefty wall across the roads. Those who were proficient at shields took the forefront, setting up barriers that deflected the bullets as they were fired. Long range attacks soared over, narrowly dodging the other guards as some of them rushed out from behind cover to fly with tooth and fang into the fray.

A few turned their guns onto Tenebris, shooting at him to keep him at bay.

Others turned their guns onto Cae, running and dodging as they made attempts to hit him without getting hit by the blasters.

Tenebris led those to protect the innocent, but upon being fired upon, his tail swung around, the bullets being reflected by the blade adorning the end of the monster's tail. Provoked, he screeched ferociously and charged. The humans scattered briefly, reforming into a loose bunch as he turned to charge again. Before he could get too close, he skidded to a stop and pulled fast into a twist. His tail swinging swiftly, there was a sickening gurgle as the bladed end sliced a path through several fleshy middles. It was as easy as a hot knife going through butter.

They fell where they stood, organs spilling out into the grass.

They attempted to hit Cae- they tried hard with their foolish weapons.

But he wasn't the master of the Judgement hall for nothing.

He was the King's judge.

The People's Jury.

The Kingdom's Executioner.

His eye glowed with unreleased energy as he sent blaster attack and bone attack alike out to kill the humans. His steps long and unfaltering as his sole goal was to get to Toki and Dom. His shield was a ring of magic he was able to summon around him, slowing the bullets that traveled through it until they fell to the ground by his feet.

He was pulling no strings, he'd get to Tokiko, and he'd protect her. They didn't deserve her dust on their shoes.

Humans fell dead as blasters and bones alike struck out, driving them back and away from Toki and Dom. The space opened up as the humans were forced back, trampled grass and shards of bone littering the ground among the fallen bullets. Dom was gasping, fingers grasping at his Aunt's forearms. Red mingled with an odd green fluid, staining her shirt and bones a garish color. The tattered scraps of her shirt hid most of the damage for the boy below her- but there was a lot of blood.

Three humans dropped as their legs were shot, and guards were quick to disarm them and restrain them. Ryushi managed to get his opponent disarmed and set in a chokehold. He kept his back to the wall, his eyes on his son, and the terrifying display of magic that was working to protect and repel the members of HAM.

Cae finally managed to get to them and with a surge of magic, cast away his attack to boost his defense as he reached and took one of Dom's hands. "Hey... Hey... It's okay, kid..."

He couldn't see worth a damn with her draped over the boy. Gently, Sans grasped Toki's shoulders, slowly attempting to roll her over as to access the damage. "Oh my god... Oh my god..." he hissed weakly upon seeing her damage.
The front of her shirt fell open, folding down and catching on cracked remnants of her lower ribs. Her sternum was entirely gone, parts of it blown back and lodged in the rest of her bones. Pieces were shoved through the back part of her rib cage, bone lodging up in her shoulder blades as well, littering her shirt with shards of bone. From her second rib and down was entirely gone in the front, and the shattered bits of her ribcage were oozing magic.

Her sockets were dark and empty, body limp and unresponsive.

Dom was a bloody mess below her. The bullet had obviously pretty much exploded against her bones, shoving pieces through other parts of her much more fragile bone structure. Shards of bone were what did the most damage. Long splinters and thick, twisted shards speared into his middle, lodging in between his ribs and up in his shoulder. Blood welled in thick pools from the punctures. He gasped and coughed, hands grasping bleakly for anything to make it stop hurting.

There was a click, and a bullet attempted to shoot at Cae from behind. It slipped under his defensive barrier, tore through his jacket, and struck the ground uselessly as he lacked the flesh for that sort of attack to damage him.

He was going to check her HP when he felt the bullet tear through his jacket... he reached up to where he felt it completely miss his bones, then he turned his head, eye glowing, "... You made a bad choice, Pal." his eye then blinked, and the HAM Agent's soul was turned blue.

The agent's soul was blue, but it didn't stop him from aiming for Sans' skull this time. What did stop him, however, was the force of the massive beast that was Tenebris bowling him over.

The gun now out of reach, Tenebris roared in the man's face. This wasn't the gentleman that many knew and loved. This was an animal, a relentless beast that fought with a purpose.

And by hearing the roar, Asgore knew his state of mind was compromised... He got up and pushed past Aliquam, running back outside. "TENEBRIS!" he shouted, running for them. "STOP!" The king was in his full armor now, and devoid of Luna to slow him down.

The appearance of the King drew the humans’ attention- and those remaining from the fight against the civilians turned to charge him instead. Their guns were useless, peppering against his armor harmlessly. They couldn’t get a clear shot for his head- one aimed and missed, putting a hole through the King’s ear as it flapped behind him.

The one under Tenebris grit his teeth and roared back, rage burying the fear that made his bladder lose control. “We’ll never stop! We are only small part of this, there are many, many more of us. You cant hope to fight us all- You kill me, beast. Do it. DO IT. PROVE TO THE WORLD WHAT YOU ARE.”

Though the pain of the bullet going through his ear blurred his vision with shock, Asgore kept running to Tenebris. He had to stop him!

The Phantom leaned his head back and his jaw unhinged with a loud pop, but before he could sink his teeth into human flesh, large armored arms grabbed him and put him in a lock as Asgore pulled him off of the human.

"Tenebris! That's enough, old friend!" the king snarled over the beast's enraged roars.

Quinn had quickly run out after the King. Seeing the guns fixed on his King, his right eye lit up and he summoned forth bones that shot from the ground, spearing through the guns to render them useless.
"Fuck- RETREAT!" With weapons rendered useless, the humans had no way to fight back. They turned, leaving their wounded where they lay, and bolted.

Flashing lights and sirens appeared outside of the walls, and Han figured that Sarah had called the cops and an ambulance. The enraged beast in Asgore’s arms would not help the situation. His gun running out of ammo, and no more guns in action, had him stepping from behind the wagon.

"Asgore! Get him out of sight! If the cops see him, they’ll shoot- Get him behind the shed!" The shed was the closest thing that was out of sight and still within distance to move him.

There was a flurry of noise from the cops as they lunged out of their cars, giving chase as the humans on foot kept running. The ambulance wasn’t far behind, and paramedics were scrambling out the back of the van at about the same time that Ryushi dropped his unconscious foe.

The father bolted to his son, mournful eyes glancing at his sister as his hands fluttered helplessly over his son’s arms. Cae had Toki well enough- there wasn’t anything he could do for his sister.

“Daddy…” Dom choked. “Daddy it hurts…”

“I know Dom, I know… Oh god, Dom…”

The paramedic’s descended- one hung back for half a second, and cast Cae a helpless look. “We don’t know how to treat monsters… I’m so sorry…”

Advice well noted. Tenebris kicked at first as an attempt to reclaim balance, but the King quickly dragged him away from the action. He needed to calm him down, and he was going to do just that.

Aliquam wasn’t about to let the humans get away. He teleported to the gate, using the trick he very rarely bothered using, and his eye glowed brightly as he summoned bones around those who attempted to run. Trapping them and leaving them at the mercy of the police was the easier option.

Caeruleus was trembling as he sat with Toki, the shield falling to let the paramedics collect Dom, but he slowly pulled Toki close, holding her in a protective hold. "..."

Sarah rushed out as the sounds of guns faded- and she managed to bolt to the paramedics as they took Dom. Luna was sobbing in her arms, and she kept her daughter’s line of sight off of her brother.

Both parents left swiftly in the ambulance that ferried them for the nearest hospital in the city.

Han didn’t linger with the downed men, who couldn’t run for the wounds in their legs. He jogged out, passing Papyrus and heading to the police to handle the fallout that was no doubt coming.

And like that, it was over. The guns were stopped, the fighting done- and the dust of that single guard drifting slightly in the wind.

Shards of Toki’s ribs fell out as she was lifted, dropping to the ground with steady plinks. Toki was limp, rag dolling like a fresh corpse in his arms with her sockets dark and broken ribs still oozing magic.

He held her closer and tucked his against hers. "T-Toki, hang on... please" he whispered, before turning, "P-PAPYRUS!" he cried out.

The younger brother was there quickly, long legs carrying him over. He covered his mouth as he caught sight of the damage. "O-Oh my god..." he whispered roughly. Papyrus dropped to his knees and offered his healing magic to stop his bleeding, passing his fingers over the oozing ends of the shattered and cracked bone. "Miss Toki..." he whispered, tears welling in his eye sockets, as an edge of her rib broke off when he brushed it. "How the hell... How is she not dust...?" he asked hesitantly. It had only taken one shot to create the pile of dust he had seen- how was she hanging on?

This is when Cae summoned her soul, going to check her HP with the hopes that it was still there. She wouldn’t dust- she hadn’t before, but it wasn’t like he could tell his brother that.

Toki’s soul floated out, still the same warm green color, still alive and still blessedly there. It was dimmer. The large red cracks were more pronounced against the darker green. Her HP read out at 750/1000. Her attack rested below that stat, very faintly outlined if one was looking for it, at a solid 3, while her defense skyrocketed up to 200 next to it. Despite the healing, the number of her HP barely ticked upwards.

The bleeding was stopped easily enough, the rough edges of her ribs glimmering with blood and magic stains. As the healing settled into her bones, sealing up the leaking cracks and fissures, the light returned to Toki’s eyes.

She’d shot herself in the foot once before- but that was nothing compared to the agony of having her ribs completely shattered like that. Dazed and in pain, she made the mistake of inhaling. Her magic filled her chest cavity, expanding on the ribs that were no longer there. Agony stole her breath away, and the air rushed out in a strangled moan.

Papyrus tensed at the damage to her soul. "Oh my god...!" he gasped in shock. Those… Those cracks…

Having Already seen it, Cae bit back an upset sound regardless. He looked to Toki's face as she stirred. "Hey... hey... Toki, it's okay. We're going to get you somewhere..." he told her softly, looking around for the larger monsters that were the King and his father. Tenebris was coming from where he was dragged, with Asgore behind him, cradling his wounded ear. The King veered off, heading over to his people to begin addressing what wounds he could.

The skeleton finished his sentence quietly. "Safe..."

Tenebris looked like he was going to be sick, but his strides carried him quickly over to Toki. He crouched next to his sons, eyes flicking over the damage to her body with a grimace. "Your magic will not heal this damage" He said to Quinn.

"B-But father...!"

"Trust me... She needs more than that." he murmured. He reached out and set his hand under her head and neck, tilting it up slightly so he could peer into the dimly lit sockets. "Toki, can you hear me?" he spoke gently.

Her gaze was vacant for a short time, lost to the agony in her ribs. The murmured voices drew her around, and she managed to focus on the tense faces around her. She sucked in another breath, thirty-two years of human instinct driving her to form her words with air that she didn’t even need. Even as it made her sockets snap tightly closed in pain, she grit her teeth, sparks leaping as her teeth ground together like harsh flint. Her fingers clenched tightly onto whatever was closest. She didn’t look to see what she grasped. “Y-yes…”

Panic budded in her mind- She remembered the gun, she remembered searing pain and twisting to cover Dom- and there had been so much blood. She forced her sockets open, eyes tinting a panicked lime. “D-Dom?”

"Focus on me." He ordered sharply, cupping her cheeks. "Look at me." he ordered again. "Dom has been taken by the human paramedics.” he assured her. "He's safe, he's going to be okay..."

She really didn’t have much to argue- children had the habit of being surprisingly resilient, but humans were so fragile compared to monster kids. Toki trembled, the lime color dimming from her eyes as pain won out over panic. She managed to give him a nod. Nodding didn’t hurt, and she was hurting so much… Every breath hurt, and each time it hurt she just kept inhaling more… Green tears beaded in her eye sockets. She wasn’t a warrior- she didn’t deal with broken bones, flesh wounds, or any of this sort of stuff regularly. “Hurts…”

"I know... I know." He slowly came closer and lifted her from Cae’s arms into his lap, holding her close. "Your ribcage was damaged... You have exposed bone marrow..." he murmured, "But it'll be okay... The pain will stop..."

The motion of being moved made the agony spike, and green magic briefly scorched over her bones in an instinctive defensive measure as her eyes went dark, mind falling blank against the pain. She cried out, fingers curling into her palms as her spine stiffened. The green briefly singed at her bones, darkening the tips as her defense turned to offense.

The scorching heat of her magic faded off within seconds as it only made the pain worse, and her pinpricks appeared again. She rasped, mouth falling open as she trembled faintly. “Whennnnnn…?” When would the pain stop?

His hand glowed black as he lowered it, holding it over her spine and inner-ribcage. He could see the shards of bone... He shook his head slowly, and smiled to her gently. "Seconds." He then focused with his magic, and from the hole in his palm black tendrils reached out, finding the shards and pulling them straight out.

Her HP ticked downwards as the shards tore out, the same green ooze bubbling forth from the fissures in her bones. Her eyes went dark, and a strangled noise left her. She writhed momentarily, the pain spiking sharply, before it began to ebb off. It didn’t fade completely- every motion of her torso, every breath, brought about pain.

But it was less.

And that’s all that mattered.

"Papyrus."

With the speaking of his name, he moved forward and began to use his healing magic again to stop the bleeding.

"What do we do, Pops...?" Cae asked quietly, uncertainty flitting across his gaze.

"Calm down, Sans. We just need to keep her spine straight and get her inside... we need a stretcher."

Toki fell silent, sockets closing as she tried to hold still.

“The ambulance already left.” One of the police officers approached hesitantly. He had his jacket off- and a few others were shrugging off their own and preparing to bring them over. He glanced hesitantly to the largest of the skeletons, and swallowed nervously. “Uh- big guy? Papyrus or whatever the other one said- you made the bone things, right? If you can, uh, make two really long ones, we can make a stretcher for your friend. That’s- holy shit, that’s Tokiko Nara isn’t it?”

“Fuck, this is going to be a mess…” One of the other’s murmured. He brought over an armload of jackets, and laid them carefully on the ground. Arranging them so they were connected, the policeman stretched the arms of the coats out. The arms would be used to tie to the bones. “If you can't make bones, maybe just find some long sticks. A spear, or whatever the heck you monsters can make- we can tie the jackets to it.”

Papyrus nodded once, then he smiled, but it was more forced and hollow than genuine. "Two bones... coming right up." he then got up and called upon his magic, summoning two bones into his hands. He stepped away from the three other monsters and let the bones stretch until they were long enough to create the stretcher. "Here we are." he said, putting them down.

The cops watched in amazement, but ultimately the first one that spoke got to work. The second one headed off, going to help wrangle up the survivors- and trying to ignore the sickening sight of many disemboweled humans.

The jacket arms were knotted tightly around the bones, and bunched up to create a solid surface to lay her on. He grimaced, tightening the straps, and then stood with a groan. He was too old for this shit. “There. It should hold long enough to get her some place to rest. I, uh… I’m sorry I can’t do more. None of us are trained to help with Monster medical problems.”

"You've done more than enough to help us." Tenebris said with a tight smile. "You have my gratitude." he then moved to carefully prepare to move Toki, while Cae moved to get the stretcher over to them.

The officer nodded and grimaced. “I’m glad you monsters stopped these guys. Its terrorists like these that make our country not safe- My little girl… They’d have her killed for what she is. We’ll give you some time- and her- to rest and heal, but we’re going to need all information you guys can give. Take some time to heal- We’ll talk with her brother and get things sorted out here.”

Toki moaned quietly. “Thank y-you…”

"If you think your daughter isn't safe... Bring her here." Tenebris offered the small bit of advice.

“I… I might do that. Thank you.”

The shifting of her body onto the stretcher is painful, and the cop leaves before the pained noises grow too loud. Once she’s settled on the stretcher, her fingers curl over the edges and she uses the bones to hold herself still.

Tenebris and Papyrus hefted the ends of the stretcher and began to bring her carefully back to their home. Cae did not follow. The crowd parted to let them through- monsters and police officers alike letting the boss monsters ferry the wounded woman away.

They would see her later- right now they had ashes to gather and dead humans to collect.

With what would have been a white-knuckled grip, the human turned monster managed to keep her body still under the slight swaying of the stretcher. By the end of it, her arms trembled and her finger bones felt cramped and locked in place. “C-couch?” That was where she had been staying, and the blankets were still there and messy from her waking up that morning.

They took her there, putting the stretcher down right on it, before they covered her up to her waist. "I need to work on your rib-cage.” Tenebris told her.

As the bones holding the coats together were dissolved, Toki found her fingers curling instead into the heavy material of the Police coats. Her finger bones creaked ominously. She gave a terse nod to Gaster. “P-please do.” Though what could he do? Her ribs were shattered- shards of her bones were caught in the tattered remnants of her shirt, and resting down in her pelvic girdle. Other shards were embedded in the ground outside- and… and in Dom.
Strider's Notes: Tooth extraction went well, as I'm posting the chapter after it. Heh. If all goes well, we'll continue with regularly released updates on TOTU. :) If we're slow to release them, I'm sure you guys understand why.

Don't forget to check us out at our blog! http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing notes: Well! That was some perfect aftercare after the nightmare that was Chapter 13.
Now it's time to get to the fun part, over the next couple of chapters you'll see more of one of our darling baby bones spending time together with Toki.

Her ribs were a patchwork of cracks and empty spaces, held in place by the same dark tendrils of magic that had yanked the shards out of where they had imbedded in her other bones. There were shards that they hadn’t been able to find- so Tenebris filled the gaps with his magic as best he could, and kept everything in place.

It would take time for the bone to grow back together, to fill in the gaps where the bone hadn’t been able to be retrieved. The patchwork was fragile, so very fragile- one wrong hit, and it would bend under the pressure in a way that no solid set of ribs ever would.

It had hardened up a little bit come the second day- Toki had ‘slept’ through the entirety of the first- but was still sensitive to the touch. She was sequestered to the couch, where she was supposed to sit still and rest. She didn’t have a problem with it on the day she woke- she handled some things with the Police over the phone, and got a call from her brother and his wife.

Dom was just fine- he was still in the hospital, but he was going to be fine. They’d managed to remove all of the shards of bone and fragments of bullets- and the boy, in typical boy fashion, had demanded to keep the largest chunk of bone as a keepsake. She didn’t have the heart to tell him she needed that chunk back for her sternum- so she would handle regenerating that part of her body.

Dom was a better trooper about it than she was.

Han handled everything that she couldn’t do over the phone. Before he had to leave to go back to work, he got it set up for a police patrol to keep an eye on the compound and the village.

The extra protection helped with their lack of manpower, but did little to quell the sadness that had invaded the community.

Toki also got word that one of the guards had been dusted.

On top of her body hurting, her soul practically wept with sorrow. One of the wolves, Hound, had been the one to get dusted. He hadn’t been able to brace his defense for the bullet- and it had torn through his HP. Word had come from the Castle that his mate, still back in the Capital, had fallen down.

On day three after the HAM attacked, there were two funerals, both of which she missed. The King had returned back home on the day prior- and had taken the ashes of Hound with him.

By day four, she couldn’t take sitting there anymore. She couldn’t just rest while Han and everyone else handled things for her. It wasn’t in her nature to be stationary, to just lay here and grow round from the amount of magic infused food they kept shoving down her. Her soul ached, her body throbbed- and so she eased herself out of the cocoon of blankets and pillows that the skeletons had padded her in, and tried to make as little noise as possible as she stiffly shambled for the kitchen. She didn’t want to attract their attention- they treated her like cracked glass, as if the lightest of pushes would shatter her- as she went to make herself an early morning cup of tea.

The morning light outside was nice- and she had every intention of enjoying the early morning air before the household roused, and she was bundled back up on the couch again.

She didn’t expect, however, Tenebris to be standing in the kitchen in front of the stove.

Simply put, he was, but upon sensing her, his dilated pupils constricted and he took a deep breath. "Shouldn't you be resting?" he questioned on a quiet voice.

She’d frozen when she spotted him, and his voice made her startle. A soft hiss was pulled from her mouth as her ribs twanged, and she shot him a rueful look. "Same could be said for you. I thought you were asleep." Not one to be dissuaded, she continues on her slow shuffling trek, and makes a beeline for some tea. Most of it is on the top shelf, but she’s just tall enough to edge down her preferred tea with the tips of her claws. The teapot was too loud- so hot water from the tap would work well enough.

"My years in the labs have ruined my sleeping schedule." he murmured. "I have enough water, just wait and I'll share this pot of water with you."

Toki makes a soft ‘mmm’ noise in response. Her time being sick had ruined her sleeping schedule. She used to be a late to bed and early to rise sort of human- now she woke up whenever. She fetches her bags of tea, and sets them on the counter. Stretching her arms up too high hurts, darn it. "Thanks, Gaster. I was just going to use some water from the tap."

She shuffle-steps over to one of the cupboards and fetches her usual mug. "You look pretty tired. Why don’t you try to get some more sleep after you have your tea? I can handle myself for a little bit."

He sighed quietly, and then glanced back at her. "I’m probably just going to have a pipe, and settle down in my recliner..." he decided after a while, before he turned back to the teapot. "How do you feel?"

"You do that. I’ll keep quiet so I don’t disturb you.” She gives him a faint smile, and drops a bag of tea into her mug. It could steep for a while once she added the water. She edged over to join him at the stove, and brushed her fingers over her ribs with a grimace. “I’m alright so long as I am careful about how I move or do things. Your magic is still holding up.”

"I'm glad..." he whispered, yawning tiredly. His eyes were dull as he collected a tea bag from the counter and put it in his own mug. "I cant dare imagine what would happen if we lost you."

"Gaster, I’m not going anywhere." She shifted, and gently bumped her shoulder to his side. She would have used her hip, but that was a motion she couldn’t quite handle painlessly. “Us Nara are made from tough stuff. If I can survive being burned alive, I can survive being shot for a second time.” At least Cae would take guns seriously now- but she kept that particular thought to herself.

He chuckled at that, reaching and setting his hand on her shoulder, "You know, Toki." he murmured, "We all appreciate you for what you’ve done for us, you don’t deserve everything that’s happened to you..." he murmured, "And if there’s anything I can do..."

Her fingers come up to cover his, and she gives him a tired smile as she rubs the smooth bone of her fingers over his own. “You guys don’t deserve the genocide that those people wish. You monsters are kind- kinder than most of humanity.” She sighs, and leans her forehead against his arm. Gods above, these monsters were kind. Scary yes- she’d seen the mess that they’d made of the HAM agents when they’d carried her back here- but completely undeserving of the hate that mankind could bring. Her bone lids close over her sockets, and she heaves a shuddering sigh. “Unless you can magically suck all of the hate and racism out of the world… there’s nothing that you can do.”

The kettle screams, making her flinch against him at the loud noise, announcing that the water inside was ready to be used for their tea.

There wasn’t really much he could say to that with how groggy he was. Instead, Tenebris turned off the burner and lifted up the kettle. "Watch out, it's hot." he warned.

“Heat doesn’t bother me much anymore.” She muses softly. As he fills their mugs with the hot water, she scoops her mug close and cradles it to her chest. The touch hurts- but the heat of the mug makes her sigh in relief, face relaxing. Heat felt good against the broken bones. “Thank you, Gaster.”

"My pleasure, Miss Toki." he said with a smile, leaving his tea to steep longer. "Mmm." He liked his tea stronger... so good, even untouched with sugar or cream.

“You know, you can just call me Toki, right? No need for the ‘miss’ bit to it.” She offers him another smile, and begins her slow shuffle-walk towards the front door. There was a seat outside that was calling her name.

"I know... I know..." He looked at her, then he sighed and rubbed his eyes, "Mmm, wait for me." he murmured, "I'll sit with you.”

“Gaster,” Exasperation tinged her voice. She didn’t stop- but it’s not like she could move very fast. “I am not going to die if I sit on the stairs without someone watching me. Have a pipe and enjoy your tea and then get some sleep. I promise, I’ll be alright.”

"It's not to watch you." Which normally would be the case. "It's just to talk. Or at least relax and get some air.”

She rolls her pinpricks in her sockets, not fully believing him, but ends up nodding. “I’m not going to begrudge you fresh air, and company would be nice.” She reaches the front door shortly, easing it open carefully, and then steps outside. She leaves it open for the older monster to follow after. There aren’t any chairs- so she eases herself carefully down so she can sit against the railing of the stairs. Her ribs twinge, protesting such movements, and a soft groan leaves her.

He followed her shortly. Sitting on the top step, Tenebris' legs easily extended to stretch his claws in the ground, much like a cat would. Setting his teacup down, he stretched in the now much more open space, his mouth opening wide in a deep yawn. It was rather interesting to see, as he wouldn’t usually do this in front of many people.

That was actually slightly adorable. Toki smiled into her cup, shifting to give him space to stretch.
The steps weren’t very wide, but she wasn’t a very big monster. Sipping the scalding tea, Toki hummed and glanced out. Monsters were still asleep, so the town was empty. Only a few were up and about, but they were groggily shuffling towards the market to open up their stands.

“I love mornings.” She murmurs against her mug. The hot tea was probably too hot for many others to drink, but it didn’t bother her. “They’re quiet and peaceful. Sometimes you can pretend that there’s nothing wrong, and you can just… exist.” The sun was teasing the tops of the surrounding forest, glinting off the roofs of the monster houses.

"Mmm..." He took deep breath and looked at the sky, leaning his arms behind his body now with his palms against the ground. "It's been a while since I've had a proper morning... But... this is still rather early for me since I’ve more or less retired.” he chuckled.

“Before I got sick, I used to get up every morning before dawn and come outside to watch the sun rise over the mountain.” She hums. Shifting positions, Toki extends a leg, stretching it out alongside his own. Her other one tucks up, giving her arms something to lean on. “I haven’t managed to get back into a regular schedule with everything that’s been happening. I probably wont manage that until I’m back in my own house.”

"Everyone is going to make an effort to restore your home, you mean that much to us all." he purred, "Not that we're eager to get you out of our house," he teased.

She elbowed him with a soft laugh, and set her tea down. The morning was cold, and steam curled from the top of the mug. “I’ve got it all set up for the contractors to put up the house. They’ll be putting it up after they finish the next district of homes. It’s gonna be a bit bigger than the old one- so everyone can walk through the doors.” And with it being made out of brick, that was going to be needed. If Papyrus plowed into a brick doorframe like he did her old ones, he would definitely need healing of some kind. “It’s nice staying with you guys- in a house that isn’t empty- but I am ready to sleep in an actual bed.”

He looked at her. "If you wanted a bed to sleep in, you could have just asked," he chuckled in a gentle scold.

“Ha- I’m not taking anyone’s bed.” She’s firm on that. “The couch is good for now. What I meant by sleeping in a bed would be sprawling out. Your couch is pretty big- but if I roll too far, I’ll hit the floor.” She chuckles. Scooping her mug up, she drained the rest of the tea and then settled the mug down again. She’d need to scoop out the tea bag eventually, but for now it could sit. “Though, I can’t really move much with all of the pillows the boys keep packing me in. It’s probably a good thing- hitting the floor with my ribs like this would be a mess.”

"I couldn't imagine it would feel good." he chuckled softly, collecting his cup and drinking down his tea before it could get cold.

Though before they could continue talking, Papyrus appeared in the doorway, looking tired and frazzled. "T-Toki!"

The sudden appearance of the frazzled and tired skeleton startled her, and she groaned as her ribs were bumped roughly into her knee. Gods above, that hurt. Regardless, she turned a slight smile to the tall skeleton. “Good morning, Papyrus. Did you sleep well?”

"W-Well yes, I did. I was worried when I didn't see you on the couch!” he responded.

"It's alright, Aliquam. We just needed some tea and fresh air, I made sure she was okay." Tenebris assured him, watching his shoulders slump in relief.
"I'm glad..."

Toki arched a bone ridge at Gaster. So much for just needing fresh air, huh? She sighs through her nasal cavity, and then lifts a hand to the railing. She tugs, working on easing herself back onto her feet. It's a long process- going down is easier than getting up. "I've been on the couch for a couple days now- if I stayed on there any longer, I might have gone stir-crazy."

"Then perhaps I could bring you with me on my morning patrol, just see how well you're doing?" Aliquam offered hesitantly. "I mean... It has been a few days..."

"I actually would like that. Though… I'd probably slow you down. I can't really go at your usual walking pace." Once she’s upright, Toki nods. Her foot bumps her mug, and she glares down at it. Shit. She forgot to bring that up with her. "Hey, Gaster? Can you hand me my mug?" She needed to go rinse it out and dispose of the tea bag.

He shook his head and scooted the mug closer to himself. "I'll take care of it, you two go on ahead."

Toki gives him a grateful look. "Thanks, Gaster." Easing herself down the stairs, Toki glances up to the larger skeleton in the doorway. "You going on patrol in your pajamas, Ali?" Her brow arches, and she gives him an amused smile.

"No! Of course not!" he insisted, before he turned, running back upstairs.

She hears the door slam as he flies into his bedroom, and laughs softly. She makes her way out to the 'road', brushing her bare feet over the ground. The dirt is cold and dry- and the mornings are getting colder and colder. October was just around the corner. Heh. She’d need to introduce everyone to the joys of Halloween- bobbing for apples, pumpkin carving, trick-or-treating… It would do good to keep the kid’s spirits up.

It's not long before Aliquam joins her in his uniform, smiling gently, "You got a head start, huh? Heh, maybe you're doing better than we feared..."

"I made it literally twenty feet from the house the entire time you were gone, Pap. I'm pretty sure you cleared that in like five seconds." Still, she offers him a cheery grin and a thumbs up. She hasn’t joined him on his rout before, so she doesn’t really know where to start. "Lead the way? I'm not sure which way you usually go. Don’t worry about leaving me behind- I know my way back to the house if I get lost."

"Nyeh heh heh...!" he chuckled with a smile on his face, "I feel like it's less you need to be led, and more just..." he then offered, "Me needing someone to talk to, ya'know?"

She nods. She knows that feeling. If he wasn’t going to race ahead, then she was completely fine just walking and talking with him. He’d been so busy these past couple of days… They all had. Toki offers him her hand, wiggling her long fingers for his mitts. "I don’t mind talking." She makes a surprisingly good listener. "Penny for your thoughts?"

"Sometimes, I wonder if they're better priced at a dollar." He chuckled, taking her hand gently in his dark red glove. "I don’t think monsterkind could have gotten this far without you... You've done so much for us, I can’t even begin to thank you, nonetheless the rest of my kind..."

"Nyeh heh heh...!

"A dollar huh? I think I’d be willing to pay that price. Maybe even two or three." She smiles at him, lacing her fingers with his. His hand dwarfed hers, but it was a strangely comfortable sensation. "I think," she hums, "That without me, monsterkind would be in a different sort of place. Perhaps farther, perhaps not- but there’s no way to know, really. None of you guys need to thank me- I did what all of humanity should have done. For creatures who have evolved so far, it is ridiculous how primitive some of us still are.” She sighs softly, and flicks her pinpricks to him. Her smile softens. “Gaster told me that the primary color of my soul is green, which stands for kindness. He said it’s pretty rare- and I am in the firm belief that if the world could just show a little more kindness and less hate, it would be a merry place indeed.”

"Monsterkind wouldn't have come this far." he whispered, pulling her into a ghost of a hold, not truly squeezing for sake of her injuries. "Not without the wall of protection, of sanctuary, you've given to us." he murmured, his teeth pressing against her cheekbones.

The affectionate gesture makes her flush a bright green, having not been expecting the skeletal ‘kiss’ to her cheek. She eases her arm around his side, letting go of his hand in favor of simply leaning into him as they walked. He made a better brace than one would think. “I’m sure in time you would have. Maybe not this quickly- but given time, you all would have been at this point.” The mention of sanctuary makes her soul clench, and her eyes flit to the ground. “It’s not much of a sanctuary if I can’t protect you all from HAM. I… apologize for that. We lost two monsters because of them.” One here, and one back at the underground. “I don’t know how to prevent them from hitting again.” She was just one person trying to make a place for many, and being faced with an organization that probably outnumbered all the monsters in the compound.

She sucked in a frustrated breath of air, and grimaced when it forcibly expanded her ribs. Gods above, she was useless at this point. They had more important things to be worrying about than her. Toki was one person- one monster, one human, one whatever she was- out of many.

"Toki..." He nuzzled her again, "The loss of life is very upsetting... but try to think of the positive as well. Because we were able to react so quickly, so many people were protected..."

“I’m sorry.” Her fingers rub his side quietly, as they angle around a corner and down another road. “I’m usually better at being positive- but when my mind is left to wander, it often wanders to dark places. It’s why I keep busy. It’s why I kept busy even before I made the change.” She takes in another deep breath and sighs deeper this time. There was no use dwelling on what she couldn't change. Looking to the past did not always pave the way for the future. “Sorry. I’ll try to do better.” Clearing her nonexistent throat, Toki tilts her head back, taking the moment to enjoy a patch of sunshine. It glimmers over her horns, the darkened ivory lighting up. “The mornings are getting colder. October is just around the corner- I was thinking about doing something for Halloween.”

He nodded once, "I'll need to dig up my turtleneck and sweatpants." he mentioned to himself, before he shook his head, "No, you don't need to try and 'be better' at anything. You're you, Tokiko Nara, and that's what so many people love about you. That's what I love about you."

Her train of thought derailed- and though she knew Papyrus was an affectionate being, she hadn’t quite expected that to come from him. That nearly makes her miss a step, and her hand tightens on his side as she strains to keep her balance. Green heat floods her face. Gods above, Papyrus. “I- I guess. Still- I don’t need to be so negative around you. You’re so positive- you can always find the silver lining on the darkest cloud. Your happiness is infectious- so there’s no real reason to be upset. That’s what I love about you. Heh. I bet you look awesome in a turtleneck.” With how his magic filled out his clothes… Flushing again, she glanced away, bright pinpricks flicking around to distract herself. "I need to get myself another sweater for the season. Coats are too bulky, but a long sweater is just right."

"You know, silver linings can be found on more than just clouds... It could be found on bone laced with green magic" he nuzzled her jawbone and gave a soft 'nyeh heh heh heh~'.

"I can loan you one of mine, my ribcage doesn't jut out so much, so it may just fit you too." he told her happily.

“A bone laced with green magic?” She wasn’t certain what he meant by that, but she wasn’t going to press further. His nuzzles made her laugh softly- though she had to wonder how comfortable that was for him. She was so much shorter… “You know, I think anything of yours is going to be hilariously large on me. And not just because of the height difference. But that’s really sweet of you.”

"Nyeh~" Papyrus doesn’t answer her question, but he does pull back to his usual height and beam down at her cheekily. "At least you'll look cute in it, yes?"

Gods damn it; she just got that stupid flush to go away. She tucks into his side, attempting to hide it. “I- I think that’s a matter of perspective. You think I’d look cute in it?” Everything with these monsters was large on her.

"Well yes!" he laughed, "As soon as your ribcage has recovered, I can see what might fit you... Most of my height is in my legs after all..." he mentioned, before patting her shoulder, "Well, we'll see!"

Toki laughs softly. “I actually might borrow one before ribs are recovered, if that’s okay with you. My current shirt is nice, but it’s really tight across my bones.” It helped hold them in place, yes, but it was uncomfortable when she was moving around. “I don’t know about the height thing though. You’re a lot of leg, but you’re a lot of torso too.” Considering her skull came to about his arm pit- and her horns near his face- he was hilariously tall. But she liked it- he was large. “Being large isn’t bad though. You… make me feel safe.”

He tugged her gently to a stop in the middle of the empty road. "And if you'll let me... I'll always keep you safe." He knelt this time to hug her, with both arms hugging her by where was once the small of her back. His face nuzzled into her neck, and he smiled against her. "Heh... Brother always told me I had an odd way of showing affection..." he murmured.

“I wouldn’t mind that.” She wouldn’t mind that at all. Her arms shifted and looped around his neck instinctively. Her fingers brushed his vertebrae, claws gently scraping as she leaned into him. His grasp around her was gentle- oh so gentle- no doubt in part because of the fragile mass of patchwork bones pressed to his chest. “I don’t think it’s odd.” She murmurs softly against his shoulder. Her sharp teeth rub against his cheek as her fingers trail down to his armor. “I think it fits you.”

He couldn't reply to that, he could only smile and give a soft laugh, "Toki..." he seemed to want to say something else, before it quieted itself in his non-existent throat. "Mm, let's finish our patrol, then we can go home..."

She didn’t press him for what he was going to say. Instead she simply nodded, gave him one last gentle squeeze, and then let him stand upright again. She offered her arm with a smile. “Alright. You’ve been a good sport about my lack of speed. Thank you for being patient with me, Quinn.”

He nodded with a smile, taking her arm with his. "Nyeh heh heh... of course, Miss Toki!" he said quietly, leading her onwards.

She smiled and let him guide her along. The walk back was pretty long, because she couldn’t go fast. But it was nice- and they managed to get back to the house before the children swarmed out of their homes to head to their morning lessons. The house was a welcome sight for Toki. Perhaps a walk that long had been a bit of a stretch for her first time outside since the shattering, but she enjoyed it, even if her ribs began throbbing tenderly.

She kept it quiet- because they would probably not let her out of the house again if she mentioned overworking herself a bit- and smiled as Papyrus walked with her to the front door. “Home sweet home.”

He nodded once, and pushed the door open for her. "Ladies first" he said softly, letting her arm go.

“Thanks, Pap.” She flashes him a smile and hobbles inside. “So… any chance I can borrow a larger shirt? I was serious about this one pressing on my ribs.” She had the inking it was because of the magical pudge roll she was developing from sitting on her rear all day, but really wasn’t sure.

"It looks like Father really did go back to sleep, so you can relax in his chair until I get back." he told her as he followed her inside, closing the door behind him. He edged around her before starting for upstairs.

She watched him go with a soft sigh, and padded closer to Tenebris’ chair. It was massive- as it had fit the both him and the King on it. She didn’t sit- first, she really needed to get out of this shirt.

Edging her fingers along the edge, she grimaced as she began easing it up. The fabric snagged slightly on rough cracks, and she bit back a whimper. Ow. Ow. Ow.

A short time he came down, carrying a blanket in one hand, and a sweater in the other. He’d changed out of his uniform, settling into his more casual clothes. "Miss Toki?"

“Ah- can you give me a hand please?” She’s got it bunched up under her arms- but she can’t quite rotate her shoulders enough without pulling on the backs of her ribs. “It- ah, it’s a bit stuck.” Her fingers trembled on the edge of the fabric.

His sockets widened and he tossed the cloth in his arms onto the couch as he came over. "Oh goodness!" He carefully unhooked where it was caught, then helped her get it over her shoulders, then moving and putting his hands to the back of her skull, "Go ahead and pull it off, I’ll make sure it doesn’t hook on your horns..."

It was a relief as he unhooked it from where it had snagged. She exhaled a shaky breath and eased the rest of the way out. Her horns slid out easily enough- it was going into a shirt that they usually caused the most problems. As she slid free of the shirt, she stood topless before him. She glanced at her chest. Ugh. The white bone was interspersed with webs of sticky, black magic- and it looked like a mess. She prodded gently, checking for any loose spots. Finding none worthy mentioning, she crossed her arms and turned to Papyrus. “Thanks, Pap. I was in a bit of a sticky situation there. Is that shirt for me?”

"Yes, but first, let me make sure father's magic is not yet faltering from prolonged maintaining... as well on check on your bones themselves." He said gently, though didn’t reach for her immediately. "If I may, of course!"

“I don’t mind.” She turns fully to face him, dropping her arms. She rested them on her hips, watching his face carefully as she turned the mess towards him. It wasn’t pretty to look at. “Be gentle with me, please. It’s a bit tender from the shirt tugging on it.”

"I'll be so gentle you won’t even tell...” he murmured, examining the healing progress of the ribs, his eyes warm and focused.

“I trust you.”

There wasn’t much progress. Some of the smaller cracks to the insides of the ribs were starting to heal, fresh bone soft and pale as it sealed the cracks together. The part being held together with magic was bound tight; only a few spots of bone loose from where he’d had to ease the shirt up. As she inhaled and exhaled, those spots wiggled, but remained in place. They would settle again so long as nothing tugged or rubbed on them too hard.

"You can touch- just… don’t press too hard. Most of it still feels solid, so that’s good, right?"

His fingers ghosted over her ribs as he examined them, "Yes. It is" he said softly, "It means Father's magic is doing its job. You are healing well." he concluded with a warm smile.

She shivered slightly at the ghosting touch, but held still as he examined her. “Good. I’d rather heal well than not heal at all.” Gaster had said he thought it would be a couple weeks before her ribs will have healed enough to support themselves without his magic. The chill air in the room wafts up her spine, and she rattles slightly. “Alright- am I good to put a shirt on? Did you need to check inside of the cage first?”

"I'd actually like to see your soul for a moment."

"Ah…” She hesitates. “It’s… not a pretty sight. Are you… Are you sure…?"

"I'm positive, I don’t care what it looks like, Toki... It's you. And you're perfect. No matter what.”

He was so damned earnest about it too, and that was the worst part.

Toki didn’t have it in her to tell him no, not without explicitly voicing the reason behind her refusal. “Alright…” She cups her hands at her chest for a second, and carefully draws it out. The right side up heart squishes out between the dark magic holding her chest together, and settles in her palm. It’s still dim, but is vastly brighter than it had been. The red cracks are not as blatant with the more vibrant green to drown it out slightly, but they do glow faintly against the usual green aura that her soul has. She offers it out for him to cup in his magic and investigate. “It’s hardly perfect- but it’s me.”

"But that's just it. By being you, it's perfect to me." he purred, slowly cupping it in his magic to examine it. He then focused to check her HP, thinking about that for a moment.

Her HP popped up higher than it was. It was resting around 775/1000. She watches him quietly, and just smiles. Affection makes her soul glow brighter. He really was sweet. “My HP is higher than it was. Twenty five points isn’t a lot, but it’s more than it was.”

He smiled at her, and then he held her soul close to his chest, cradling it as his own soul released a gentle energy, an aura to be detected. "Your HP is amazing at such a low LV..."

"Gaster isn’t sure why.” She admits quietly. The pulse of energy is soothing, and her sockets shut. The aura over her soul felt like a heating pad being draped across her entire body- it was wonderful. “It- ah, it served me well enough though. If it was any lower, I probably wouldn’t have survived the fire. If it’s all the same, I think it’s more than high enough.” And she had no intentions of ever raising her LV.

"You're LV 1, silly." he laughed quietly, "That's as low as it can get."

“And that’s how low it should stay.” She smiles up at him quietly. “And I meant my HP, not my LV. According to Gaster, most of the other monsters run a lot lower than what I have.” While he cradles her soul, she moves to collect the shirt. She gathers, and eases herself into it. Thankfully the neck hole is large enough her horns don’t snag- and soon she’s draped in a ridiculously large shirt that hangs down past her rear. “Much more comfortable.”

He chuckled at that, turning the soul quietly. The cracks along the backside of it caught his attention.
He remembered seeing these before. "Hmm... Toki..." he reached up with his thumb. "Do you have any idea of what could have cause thes-" Upon contact, however, his form seized up as his eye flashed bright orange in pain, "G-Gaahhh!" He almost dropped her soul as the burning pain seared over his bones.

Heat and agony had flashed over both of them. The cloying stench of smoke, of burning flesh, the crackle and snap of falling beams, and the burning, agonizing sensation of flesh burning down to bone flooded them. The taste of burning flesh was strong, but it was overridden by the sheer pain that came with feeling the fire burning from behind bone, bursting out through ribs and crawling upwards to do the same to her skull.

He took a half step back, before he collapsed onto his knee, trembling in pain, "Ghhh..."

Toki staggered, nearly hitting the floor as the unexpected sensation hit her like a truck. She managed to brace against the couch, arms curling around her ribs as she let out a grinding whimper. She looked like she would be violently ill if she could have been. "D-don't touch those again..." She whispered roughly.

He didn't need to be told twice as he held her soul out to her, letting his magic cradle it away from his palms. "I-I'm so... s-sorry." he whispered, "D-Do you always feel this?"

She took it back shakily, pressing it back into place. She trembled, leaning against the arm of the couch. She wouldn’t meet his eyes. "I... I didn’t think to warn you. N-no, I don’t. Only if you touch the cracks- I wasn’t aware that you would feel it too. A... Are you okay?" She’d already gone through this sensation before. She’d lived it, literally.

But he had no flesh to burn, no nerves to scald away, no lungs to shrivel and burst. What he felt had to have been horrifying. "It... It hurt..." he whispered, getting back to his feet and slowly moving closer to try and help her up. "But yes... I'll be okay..."

She let him ease her up, and she shook like a quivering leaf. The smell still lingered in her nose, and she found herself pressing closer to him to let the smell of him drive away the fire and flesh. "That’s what it was like..." She whispered softly. "In... In the fire. Are you sure? It’s... not an easy thing to go through."

He slowly picked her up with one arm under her, the other under her rear as he moved over to pick up the blanket, before he slowly sat down in the recliner. He then set her down and tossed the blanket until it was unfolded. After that, he covered them both up and wrapped his arms around her. "I'll be okay... I'm going to worry more about you for now..." he reassured her.

She didn’t even squirm or complain as she was settled against the hardness of his chest. Her fingers curled around its edges, and she latched on as he cradled her and draped them both under the blanket. It was warm and soft, and smelled faintly like he did. “I’ll be okay…” She murmured softly. “The sensations will pass. It just takes time and things to override the bad things.” His armor, the blanket, her clothes, all of the things touching her were grounding her, reminding her that she wasn’t burning, and that she was just fine. “So, ah... next time you handle my soul, maybe don’t touch the cracks...?”

"Of course, Toki... I'm sorry about that." He clacked her cheek with a small nip this time, smiling at her when he pulled back again. "I'll make sure to be as careful as I can be..." he promised.

“I know you will be, Ali. I know.” She turned her head so her cheek pressed to his chest, and peered up at him quietly through one of her sockets. The other closed as she worked to relax, sprawling across him like a warm, bony blanket. As the sensations faded, exhaustion settled in. Her fingers curl around his ribs, clinging to his shirt, and eventually her sockets slide closed. She was safe. He was safe. The fire wasn’t going to get her again… “M’ really tired from that…”

Shivering, Papyrus smiled at her, and hugged her close, "Then sleep. And I'll still be here when you wake up." he murmured, nuzzling her softly. He adjusted his hold so it'd be more comfortable for the long term, and then nuzzled his face into her neck to settle down himself.

Toki didn’t need to be told twice. She settled, letting him get comfortable, and drifted off without another word.
Chapter 15

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Ha~ This was a nice chapter. Very relaxing.

Don't forget to check our tumblr! You can come sass me here, or come be sweet to our Silverwing :) http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Also, i did some art for the end of the chapter. :) http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/post/150483105970/strider-i-actually-had-the-urge-to-art-and-so-i

Silverwing Notes: I think i got diabetes from how sweet this chapter is... But for those who have stuck around, thank you so much, and stay tuned for more TOTU~

“I am disappointed in you, Aliqaum.”

The rumbling voice of someone near her drew her consciousness closer to the surface.

Something rumbled back under her ear, and it tickled over her voice. She was laying on someone…? Someone who was talking. She groaned, fingers tightening over what she had in her grasp.

The one resting below her squeaked, and long fingers were soothing her hands to relax. “Father, please-”

“No, Papyrus. What you did was dangerous.”

She roused further- some of the words faded out into unyielding murmurs as she was drawn deep from her sleep. She tuned back in to who she realized was Tenebris, once more speaking quietly, but firmly to his son. They apparently did not notice the change in her breathing patterns.

"Papyrus, you know how fragile souls can be.” Tenebris was quiet, but his voice was firm. “After everything she's gone through, I would have thought you knew to exercise more caution when examining her soul. You should have left her soul for me to handle."

Her pillow rumbled quietly below her. "Father, I know... I'm sorry, I just... Those marks..."

"I know, son. Caeruleus doesn't like them either, but until I find out how to fix them, we just have to make sure they don't get worse..."

Ugh. They had to do this now?

“M’ not gon’ break from Pap touchin’ m’cracks.” Toki groaned quietly, letting the both of them know that she had been woken up, and burrowed her face against his chest. Her soul ached- it was sore from the reminder of the events from the fire- and she did her best to ignore it. Toki shifted and stretched sleepily, comfortable and temporarily forgetting the problem of her ribs in her gogginess.

“Nng… ow.” She stilled, sucking in a breath and easing out of her stretch. She shifted against Papyrus, rotating as she laid on him so that her chest wasn’t being compressed. She peeks open a socket, blearily peering up at Tenebris. “He learned his lesson when he touched them- pretty sure he won't ever forget that lesson either.”

Tenebris glanced down at her as she revealed she was awake, and he gave a soft exhaled breath. “Toki... This damage is new to me, and I'm not sure how much your soul can take, every incident may bring it that much closer to retaining permanent damage...”

Toki sits up with a careful grunt, giving Papyrus a fond look as she shifts so he can sit upright. “Thanks for letting me sleep, Ali. I hope you didn't get too uncomfortable with me draped on you.” Her gaze drifted back to Tenebris as she mulled over his words. It was true- it could be getting worse. But besides the ache, she didn't feel any worse. “I think I would feel it if they were getting worse. But we can check.”

Given that both Skeletons in the room knew about it- and apparently Cae too, if Tenebris was being honest about him not liking the cracks- Toki eased her soul back out and into view without being asked. It looked about the same as last night, though brighter. The sadness weighing down her soul was still there, but it was lesser after a long day. She adjusted it and turned it around, yawning grumpily into her fingers. She could use some tea, or coffee or something to wake her up. Food too, now that she thinks on it. “The cracks are the same to my eyes. My soul feels fine. The cracks don’t even hurt when they're not being touched.”

He looked at the both of them, and at her soul, and then he sighed. "I need to figure out just what it takes to heal them..." he murmured. Clearly stressed about it to a degree, Gaster’s words were terse and flat.

Toki rubbed her eyes and pressed her soul back into place. “Don’t stress too bad about it, okay? If the cracks get worse, you’ll be the first to know. If they don’t get worse, and just stay as they are, I’ll learn to live with them.” She really would like them fixed- but if it didn’t end up working… Well, so long as she didn’t die, she could survive. She shifts, and holds a hand up to the larger monster. “Can you help me up please?”

"Of course.” he stepped forward and took her hand, helping to ease her up. “Here you go.”

Once she was on her feet, Toki eased the blanket off of her shoulders, and draped it carefully over Pap’s legs. “Thanks, Gaster. I’m going to get started on dinner while you two finish talking. But first… clothes.” She gives them both a tired smile and makes a quick trip to where she kept her small collection of clothes. She keeps the baggy shirt, but opts to change out pants for a long skirt instead. She heads for the kitchen and changes in there. The light from the windows was gone, and the clock on the wall told her was way past the usual mealtime. Heh. She’d slept the entire day away on Papyrus. That had probably driven the poor skeleton insane, being so still all day. “And, uh… Well, I have a theory on why the cracks are there. I’d rather not explain multiple times though. So when dinner’s done, I’ll tell all three of you.” Provided Cae showed up for dinner tonight.

Toki pads into the kitchen with the intent of starting dinner while the doctor and his son continued their scolding session. If she was well enough to walk around, then she could damn well make dinner. There is the soft clatter of pots and pans as she eases one out of the cupboard. They had teriyaki sauce- and she had a hankering for something tangy and good. So some of Papyrus’ spaghetti noodles are sequestered out to be boiled, and she puts a pot of sauce on to cook. It was pretty simple to make- one just needed water, a dollop of butter, spices, and teriyaki. Straight from the bottle, the sauce was too rich to make a good flavoring. But diluted and boiled, it made a deliciously tangy sauce to go over noodles.

She was alone in the kitchen for a while, surprisingly. She could hear them through the open archway, and let the general sounds of their voices wash over her. They seemed to talk more than the one-sided scolding from before.

After enough time passed, Papyrus joined her in the kitchen.

She had the noodles boiling, the sauce slowly thickening, and was currently, lazily washing the dishes. The smell of teriyaki bubbled up and filled the kitchen, thick and deliciously pungent.

She was singing softly while elbow deep in dishwater. It was one of the songs from Beauty and the Beast- and one of the few that she could sing in tune to. When her brothers had said she could carry a tune, they hadn’t been wrong- but it had to be specific songs. Her voice didn’t mesh well with everything, sadly. She was at the end of this one. “Tale as old as time, song as old as rhyme… Beauty and the Beast…”

She didn’t notice the large skeleton that had entered.

His interest piqued at hearing her sing. His smile grew and softened as he came closer.

She faded off from words for a short time, and instead hummed along to a non-Disney song as she scrubbed at a stubborn stain- from someone’s morning eggs that had been absolutely slathered in ketchup. Ketchup dried was a thing of horrors, honestly. ‘Take Me To Church’ was easy enough to follow.

When she got the plate clean, she pulled it free and shook her fingers. Fishing for a towel to dry it off with, the woman let the lyrics wash forth again. “Take me to church. I'll worship like a dog at the shrine of your lies, I'll tell you my sins and you can sharpen your knife. Offer me that deathless death. Good God, let me give you my life.”

"If I'm a pagan of a good time," He sang softly, his arms wrapping around her waist. They settled carefully on her hips, mindful of her torso. "My lover's is sunlight," he then purred into her ear.

A firm grip kept the clean plate from being dropped, and Toki managed to not miss a beat. As his hands settled on her hips, a smile tugged at her teeth, and her mouth fell open to let her words ring clearer. "To keep the Goddess on my side, she demands a sacrifice.

"Take me to church. I'll worship like a dog at the shrine of your lies, I'll tell you my sins and you can sharpen your knife. Offer me that deathless death. Good God, let me give you my life.”

"We're the lord's starving faithful... That looks tasty, that looks plenty, and this is hungry work.”

Cooking sure could be. She smiles, a warm flush coating her cheeks. The darkened window reflects her face back at her, and she watches him through their reflection. “Take me to church. I'll worship like a dog at the shrine of your lies, I'll tell you my sins and you can sharpen your knife. Offer me that deathless death. Good God, let me give you my life.”

“He smiled and coaxed her hands from the sink. Pulling her into the open space of the kitchen, he eased her around so she faced him. "Take me to church. I'll worship like a dog at the shrine of your lies," he sang, pulling her into a position much like one could in a dance.

Her hands, soapy and wet from doing dishes, dried in a puff of magic induced steam before her fingers came to rest on him. One hand curled over his bicep, folding over the magic formed muscle gently, while her other arm craned up to loop over his shoulder. She smiled at him, eyes glowing a bright, happy color. "I'll tell you my sins and you can sharpen your knife."

His eyes gleamed with glee as he held her close. "Offer me a deathless death," he murmured to her, and set his head on her.

He tuned in with her as she went to finish the last line for the song. "Good God, let me give you my life~"

She flushed brightly, and giggled softly in his arms. The kitchen timer went off, letting the world know that the noodles were done. "I didn’t know you could sing," she murmured softly. "You’re actually really good."

"I dabbled in music time to time," he murmured gently, "But never did I hear a voice as lovely as yours."

Brighter yet brighter her blush doth grow. "I think you’re telling me a fib right there." She hums softly. "Wait until you catch me singing a song I don’t fit well with. Ah- Pap, the noodles are gonna overcook..." she squirms lightly as the timer goes off a second time. "I knew you played a violin- but playing an instrument and singing are two different things." She could only sing.

He let's her go, and folds his arms in amusement. "The voice is an instrument, you know... I’d say you’re a master at it."

She shuffles to the stove and removes the noodles. Draining them went quick and easy, and then she was buttering the noodles and letting it melt. She flashed him a small smile, face a bright emerald as her soul glowed brightly and happily through her borrowed shirt. "I’d say you were the better singer out of the two of us- but I think we could argue who sang better until the sun comes up. C’mere- can you get me down some clean plates? I might as well wait until after dinner to finish doing dishes..."

And that would let Cae’s ketchup monstrosities soak a bit longer before she attempted to tackle that particular challenge.

"Sure thing." he moved to the cupboard and opened it, reaching up and effortlessly collecting a few plates.

She didn’t bother dirtying a spoon to sample the sauce. She dipped the end of her index phalange into it after she urged her magic to churn in the bones of her fingers. It was thick and hot- and perfect consistency in the pan. Taste though... She was never a good judge if her sauces tasted good. She enjoyed food- rarely did she think it was bad. She hummed, looking at the dark sauce staining her digit- and then offered the sticky digit to Papyrus as he fetched her the plates she needed. "Hey, Ali? Can you tell me if this tastes good or not? I’m not sure if need to add a bit more teriyaki to it, or thin it out more."

"I suppose so." his cheek tinged as he realized she meant licking it off her finger and he leaned in after a moment’s hesitation. "Heh..." he then closed his eyes and his teeth parted to free his bright orange tongue. That tongue then proceeded to run up over her phalange that had the sauce on it.

"Mmh..." he pulled back and somehow made a smacking sound, before he nodded in consideration. "Try a pinch of sugar, and it's ready."
Well, that was not something she had expected. With humans it was hardly so... sensual to feel. Hot damn. She coughed slightly as he cleaned her finger, and tucked her chin to hide her flush. “Sugar, got it.” A sprinkle of it was added, and she swirled the pan to mix it in. Fetching the plates, she dished out the long spaghetti noodles, and drizzled the dark sauce over top of each pile.

He frowned, not really sure. "Maybe... I haven’t seen that lazybones all day!"

“Considering I slept on your chest all day, I didn’t see him either.” She gives him an amused look, and pantomimes holding a phone to her nonexistent ear. “Give him a call on your phone? I’ll bring the plates to the table. Ah- snag your dad too. He needs to eat something before he goes off to do ‘science’ or whatever it is he does most of the night.”

"Of course." he nodded and stepped out to make the call to his family members.

Toki hummed as he left and shifted down the counter to collect the silverware. She carries the plates into the dining area two at a time, because her hands are only so large, and settles them in their usual spots. Drinks of the usual choice are placed out, and Toki chooses a tall glass of milk for herself. She could use the calcium at this point. Sans, as per the norm, had Ketchup set out for him- but she put it in a glass this time so there would be none of his rebellious ‘drink it from the jug’ shenanigans tonight.

Aliquam returned about the same time she was getting seated, smiling gently. "I... brought something I think might help you..." he said softly, holding something cupped in his hands.

She eased into her chair, and blinked up at him curiously. “Something that might help me?” With how he had his hands cupped around it, she couldn’t see it. Her gaze flicked behind him, hearing movement in the other room. It was probably Gaster getting out of his chair, or Cae getting home. “What did you bring?”

He smiled, and opened his hands to her.

It was a small tea candle, with a wick that was pristine and white. It had never been lit before.

It was unlit, sitting there innocently in his palm and his hands dwarfed it, making the small candle seem even tinier. Still, despite the comical size difference, and the lack of glow around the small unassuming object, it made the vertebrae of her neck tense up and a sense of unease bubble in her middle. “O-oh. Ah…” She worries her fingers at the edge of the table, glancing away from the candle. She had promised him- though she had said she’d let him know when she was ready. There was no time like the present, she supposed. “Okay. Yeah. We can, uh, do that tonight. I don’t know where your dad’s matches are to light it though.”

"It's okay, we don’t need them." he assured her, before hearing Caeruleus enter.

"Hey Toki, hey Pap."

"Hello, Brother. I was just talking to Miss Toki about a potential therapy method to help her overcome her fear.”

The smaller skeleton drew her gaze as he slipped into the dining area from behind his brother, and she gave him a nervous smile. "Hi Sans. Ah- dinner's done.” Her pinpricks flicked back over to Papyrus, and she hummed softly. “Don’t need matches?” Hard to light a candle without matches. “Sans- did you see your dad out in the living room? Dinner’s done- he needs to eat something before he runs off for nightly ‘science’ stuff that he does. And ah- yeah…” At least the exposure therapy fell in line with what she wanted to talk to them about.
"Nice." he went to sit down, already knowing where he sat by the cup of ketchup. "Well... No, I think he's out having a pipe."

She sighs through her nasal cavity and nods. “Well, I’m sure he knows dinner is done. He’ll join us when he’s done, I’m sure.” After all, he probably wanted to hear what she had to say concerning the cracks. She shifts and twirls her fork through the teriyaki soaked noodles, but doesn’t take a bite. “Did you have a good day today, Cae?”

"I did." he nodded once, starting to eat as well.

The candle makes a soft ‘tk’ as it is settled gingerly on the table. It’s settled about the center of the table. "Are you ready?" the younger asked.

Her grip on her fork tightens, and she nods. It was just a candle. Just a simple, little, tiny tea light. The flame on it would be no bigger than her distal phalanx on her pinky finger. “As I’ll ever be.”

Papyrus nodded slowly, then picked up the candle. He held up a lighter and flicked it to ignite it. Without hesitating he lit the candle, watching the fire catch the wick and slowly light it up... he slowly set the candle down, then he looked to her.

Toki had flinched as the lighter lit up, pointed fingers digging into the table as she gripped it tight. Her first instinct was to bold away from the flash, but she used the table to keep herself in place. Toki had a white-knuckled grip on her fork as she watched the flame. The candle flame was smaller than that of the lighter, and that was a small relief. Her nonexistent stomach cramped up, appetite gone, and her soul trembled. Fear, she recognized easily enough, made her palms feel as if they were submerged in ice.

She forcibly loosened her grasp on the fork when the metal creaked, and made her gaze turn away from the candle. If a skeleton could have gone pale, she would have. It was just a candle- there was no reason to be afraid of it. It wasn’t even a full candle. It was a tea light- they could hardly even be called a candle. She took a deep breath and resumed fiddling with her noodles.

"You're doing great!" Aliquam praised gently, stroking her shoulder steadily as he took the seat beside her.

She twitched, magic churning uneasily in her bones, as he touched her. The candle didn’t put out enough smoke to override her senses, and it smelled vaguely like fresh linens, but her mouth still tinged with the phantom taste of ash. “I-ah…” Words are attempted and failed, before she forcibly shakes herself. Her fingers curl tighter around her fork, and she forced fork full of noodles into her mouth. The teriyaki slid over her senses, and some of her tension eased. She could do this. It was just a candle. It was just a damn candle. She could handle it.

The more she repeated that line, the firmer her resolve became. Her soul pulsed behind her ribs, brightening with her determination.

Both brothers lit up. "Toki, you're doing it!" Papyrus praised with a laugh.

"Well shit, Toki, way to go!" the elder brother chuckled.

“Eheh.” She loosens her hold on the table, and continues eating. She’d rather keep the attention off of her and the candle- because thinking about it made it harder to focus on keeping still and calm. “So-ah, while we were napping today, w-what did you get up to, Sans?”

"I went and helped out with some construction. Went n' tired myself out." he chuckled.
She smiled slightly. “I honestly can’t see you doing construction work- but I will take your word for it.” She shifts and glances to Papyrus. “We had a lazy day today- though I think his end of it was from me falling asleep on him.”

"The roles have been reversed, ‘ey Pap?” Sans cackled, amusement stretching his grin. He lazily winks at them between bites of his noodles.

"Very funny, Sans." Quinn rolled his eyes and laughed softly. He leaned over to drape an arm over her shoulders as he consumed his meal.

“He can’t take the blame for this one. It was an interesting morning, and it left me tired. Your brother makes an awesome snuggle buddy, for the record.” She waves her fork teasingly at Cae, and her eyes flit over to Gaster’s unoccupied seat. “I sure hope your dad didn’t forget about me wanting to talk to you all.” Or about dinner.

"No, he should be in-" And in the other room, there was the sound of a door closing, "-heh, soon enough.”

“Speak of the devil and he shall appear, huh?” She fiddles with her noodles some more, and then pushes the unfinished plate away. She ate some of it- but her ‘stomach’ is still clenched with nerves. The longer the candle burns, the more smoke-like the smell of it is becoming. Sort of like burning cloth. She coughs, and calls out to the eldest monster in the house. “Dinner’s done, Gaster! We’re in the dining room.”

He rumbled and came into the dining room. "Hello everyone." he greeted warmly, sitting down at the open seat. He took a moment to take notice of the candle and blinked once. "Huh...?"

“It’s... Well, Paps is determined to help me be able to handle fire again. It’s part of my exposure therapy.” She doesn’t glance to what drew his question, because she knows what it is. Her fingers drum lightly on the table, a soft ‘tktktktk’ of bone on wood, and her teeth gnash quietly. “Which brings me around to the cracks. I’m pretty sure I know what caused them- and since you got to feel that as well this morning,” her pinpricks flick to Papyrus, “It should be pretty obvious. I’m thinking maybe... maybe working to get over my issue with flames might help the cracks. I don’t know if they’ll ever go away- or if I’ll ever fully win against them- but I can try.”

"That does sound... logical.” Tenebris nodded once in agreement, before smiling at her. "A very clever idea, my dear Toki.” he praised.

“Heh... yeah. We can continue checking on it, and try other theories too, but it doesn’t hurt to try this one.” Her fingers continue tapping, a slightly nervous staccato, and she leans slightly more into Aliquam. The tightening in her middle increases. Skeletons can’t feel queasy, can they? She hopes not. “So, ah, I know you haven’t had this type of pasta before. It’s an original creation of mine. What do you think?”

"This is very interesting tasting. I like it." Caeruleus nodded once in agreement, before smiling at her. "It's good, Toki." Aliquam praised.

Tenebris took a bite, savoring it quietly. "... This tastes wonderful.”

She smiles and heaves a dramatic sigh. “I’m glad. I wouldn’t be much of a poststatute,” She waggles a brow ridge at Cae, “if I didn’t know how to make strange things taste good.”

Caeruleus gave her a thumbs up for the pun, narrowly avoiding choking on his noodles. Quinn face palmed while Tenebris chuckled in amusement, while she relaxed with a pleased look on her face.
The tea light eventually flickers, and she exhales hard enough to send the wick out. As the fire disappears, she relaxes more, and feels the knot of tension in her middle ease. “Sorry- I think that’s enough for now though. Really don’t like that queasy sensation. I’ll go get started on dishes while you three finish up.”

She eases out from under Papyrus’ arm, and slips from her chair. She collects her plate and meanders back towards the kitchen.

While Caeruleus and Tenebris continued to eat, Papyrus stood up and followed her. "Toki... wait."

She paused, setting her plate down onto the counter. “What’s up?”

He hugged her softly. "Come back and sit with us... We don’t want you to feel alone. Besides, wouldn't you rather watch your loved ones enjoy your great creation?"

Warmth fills her smile. “Oh Pap- I don’t feel alone. I never feel alone with you three. I just needed to work off the energy from my nerves. The smoky smell in there was getting to be a bit... much. I would like to see you all enjoy dinner, but I think it’s better if I give the room some time to air out.”

"Ah... I see..." he nuzzled her softly, and bumped his teeth to her cheek. "For the record, your food is wonderful."

She smiles softly, and reaches up to cup his skull. Her fingers trail gently from the top, down to cradle his jaw. She rubbed her thumb lightly over his fangs- they were vastly different than her own, after all. He had a matched set- she was all fang. “I’m glad you enjoyed it. If you want, you can go get your plate and finish eating in here while I do dishes.”

He closed his eyes and hummed happily at her touch. "Good idea." He murmured. He pulled away and disappeared from her view back into the dining room. His voice echoed back to her from the open doorway- explaining that he would keep her company- before he was coming back with his plate of food. Already a forkful was tucked into his mouth, teeth gripping the metal as he padded into the room.

Toki laughed softly and turned to start on dishes. She gave Aliquam the rest of her noodles- no need for them to go to waste with her lack of appetite- and then set in to cleaning her plate and the rest of the dishes.

As she worked, the last of the tension bled out from her body, and she began to hum a small and happy tune for her and her good company to enjoy. Eventually Papyrus finished, and joined her in doing dishes. He was better at putting them up top in the cupboards.
Days rolled into weeks, and before she knew it, it was the last week of October. They had some plans for some fun on Halloween- all of the adults were collaborating to do some decorations around the town, and the houses were going to do trick-or-treating. It wasn’t just going to be the monsters either- the construction workers were bringing their families, and friends of their families. There was talk of putting their cars in the streets and doing some trunk-or-treating too. Unfortunately her family wasn’t going to be making it out this year- they were all heading to her mother’s house to do their Halloween fun there, where they could all keep Dom under a close eye.

That was fine though. Toki had all of her Halloween things in the shed.

Toki had some plans putting one of the battery operated fog machines to use as well.

Of course, that wasn’t to say that Toki would be alone this Halloween. Aliquam talked about learning the recipe of her honey tarts, to which she would happily oblige him. He could help make them en-masse for the event to come.

Now that she wasn’t restricted to the house, everyone seemed to fall back into his or her semi-usual routines. Aliquam was usually spending time with her when he wasn’t needed for guard-duty. Sans seemed to disappear during the day, yet come home exhausted. Tenebris would find himself where he could be useful and provide where he could, but always disappeared after the final goodnight. Toki spent a lot of time doing what she usually did- though much less of the physical aspect of working.

Dominic was healing well but he was still not moving around quite like she could. He kept straining his wounds with all of the running around he was prone to doing. If he was at Nara Village for Halloween, she was pretty sure he’d spend all of it running with Thumper and Twitch.

Time flew by as she handled some of the fallout from the attack from HAM. Her brother took over the case on the monster’s behalf when some city officials stirred up trouble over the monsters having actually killed people. So far, the case was leaning heavily towards the monster’s favor, much to her joy. The world had been horrified to learn the details pertaining to the attack, and they had a large amount of supporters.

Which helped a lot - donations came in from all over to help support the monsters. As the second district was finished, and the third started, Toki found that she needed the extra outside help to keep expanding what was becoming a small burg. The country was helping too, but politicians only approved of so much at a time to be sent out. Personal donations were a lot different - and it was becoming a new 'fad' to donate to help build the first 'monster city'. They even had their first 'establishment' being put into place. A bar - one that Sans was apparently familiar with - was being put up. There were plans for a bakery to go up as well, but it hadn’t been finalized yet.

Her house was nearly done too. She was excited to get her own space again. The couch was great, and she was very grateful for them letting her stay with them, but she woke up most mornings with cricks in her spine. Toki wanted her own bed again, damn it, with piles of blankets for her to nestle down in.

The first freeze had just come - super late into the year, surprisingly. But with the first freeze came time to shut down her hives for the year. Not only did it make her bones ache something fierce, but also it made her bees sluggish and unresponsive if they were out in it too long.

She was closing up her hives for the year. She was doing one last deep cleaning of the hives, making sure that there was no debris in any of them that needed to be removed. The honey taps had been cleaned out and closed up, and food was going to be placed inside so that the bees didn’t have to completely rely upon what honey they had stored up.

But right now she was elbow deep in a buzzing mass of bees, scraping out something that looked suspiciously like moss from inside one of the hives. The bees were buzzing, clinging to her bones and tickling up the insides of her shirt. Even without skin, the bees seemed to cling to her effortlessly. They rested against her bones, drawn to the warmth that her magic was producing to combat the chill of the morning.

They wreathed her head, like a fuzzy buzzing crown of insects, and clung to her horns with their soft little legs.

She laughed as one crawled over her cheek. “You poor things,” she murmurs softly, “you’ll have to hibernate the cold months away soon. I’ll miss seeing all of you out and about. But you’ll be back once the ice and snow is gone in spring.”

"I don’t see why we can’t put blankets over the hives." Was a comment from Aliquam as he walked up, before kneeling beside her with a small smile. "Heh... I never got the chance to see them when they were active." he murmured, holding a finger out to a bee that sat on the edge of one of the hives.

She starts, which sends up a small cloud of bees. They rapidly settle again, clinging to her bones and clothes. A few of them swarm warningly over Papyrus, buzzing loudly. The one he offered a finger too clamors up onto him, cleaning it's face with a set of fuzzy legs.

She laughed softly as the bees tickled along her neck. Considering she was hollow now, she didn’t need to worry about keeping them out of her shirt. They could just fly out the bottom. “Between you and your brother, you’re both certainly strving to keep me on my toes.” She sighs.

She adjusts a handful of bees, and locates the queen amidst the mess. The long, fat insect crawls lazily over her fingers. “A blanket would run the risk of overheating them. Bees are pretty good about keeping warm in a confined space. It’s just out in the open air that they struggle. Isn’t that right, little Queen?” The queen is settled up in a more proper spot, and Toki heaves out a mess of moss. It’s tossed to the ground after she picks the bees from it. “You’ll get to see them more active next year, I’m sure. You might actually be all right to bring out here in the full swing of summer. We’re all bones- no flesh to be stung.”

"Mmmhm…” he smiled gently as he lifted the bee to eye-level, watching it clean itself. He gave a soft ‘nyeh heh heh’. "How cute~" he let the bee wander as it wished, watching her be swarmed. "I'm intrigued by how they don't hesitate to come close to you." he mentioned, "They recognize you, even like this..."

Toki smiles at him, and lifts a brow. One of the bees takes the chance to slip down and brush over her nasal ridge, while Papyrus’ own passenger slowly works up towards his arm. A couple others come down to join the first, relishing the warmth of his body. “A lot of people find them terrifying. But a lot of humans are severely allergic to their stings, so it’s understandable. There are other kinds of bees that are aggressive as well, and don’t do kind things for the general reputation.” She eases a mass of bees out of her shirt, and settles them in the hive. The combs in the hive are gently moved so she can remove moss from under them as well. This hive might have a leak somewhere... it would have to do though.

“Bee’s just sort of know, I think. I knew a set of twins when I was a little kid. They were identical, from their faces to their mannerisms, height, weight, you name it. Yuki and Yomi- really sweet girls. But Yomi was like me- she could walk among the bees and never get stung. But Yuki- Yuki always got stung, without fail. Even when they went out together, it was always Yuki who got stung, while they left Yomi alone. I think maybe they can probably feel souls- or at least the energy of them. Same with other animals- some animals can tell a good person from a bad person.”

There was a saying- if a dog doesn’t like you, then there is probably something to be said about your personality. Perhaps, she muses, it applies to bees as well.

"Then I guess it's clear what that says about you, huh?" He purred gently, leaning up to gently bump her skull with his.

“I’d like to think I’m a good person.” She smiled, gently bumping him in turn. As she finishes with the hive, she shifts and lifts the hem of her shirt. She eases out a handful of bees that had been roosting behind her ribs, and dumps them gently back into the box. “Silly things- I am not your hive. C’mon, back in the box you go. None of you have any sense of personal space.” Not that she really minded. The vibrations felt nice on her bones- very relaxing.

He laughed at that. "Personal space issues indeed...!" he agreed before he carefully coaxed the bees from his own frame. "I’m not a hive either, little bees.”

Disentangling from the bees wasn’t all that hard, and soon she was sealing up the box once more. A dish of food is slid in through a slat in the bottom, and then she’s dusting her hands off on her pants, and reaching up to slide her shirt back down over her ribs.

They were almost fully healed- only a few lingering ‘scars’ of soft bone that had to harden up remained. Tenebris’ magic had done well to hold it still, and then encourage the bone to regenerate. She felt bad though- she was all back together, and her nephew was still having problems lifting his arms certain ways.

She sighs, and pats the top of the box. She turns to Papyrus- and then laughs. “I think you’ve still got a friend, Pap.” On his shoulder rests a fuzzy bee, nestled next to his collar. It flutters its wings, and resumes cleaning its legs.

"Oh, would you look at that..." he reached up and slowly ran a phalange over the body and abdomen of the bee. "Nyeh heh heh~"

She laughs as it buzzes and takes to the air, disturbed by his touch. It bumbles slightly, and boops his nasal ridge as it buzzes around his skull, before fluttering lazily down for the box. "I think that one likes you. Heh. C’mon. You want to help me take the food bag over to the shed?" That had been the last hive she’d needed to clean. "I need to get the Halloween decorations out anyways."

"Of course! I’d love to learn more about this human holiday 'Halloween'." he rumbled with a smile, stooping to take the food bag into his arms. "Any idea what inspired it?" He inquired. "What do you do on it? Who's this 'Jack' that you make a lantern out of?"

Gods above, he was too precious sometimes. Toki can’t hold back the laugh that bursts forth as she guides him to the shed. “First off, we don’t make anyone into a lantern. Jack-o-lanterns are pumpkins that you carve and put a candle in. You light them in the evening. I don’t actually know why we do that- but they can be pretty spooky depending on what you carve into them. Some people do the traditional pumpkin face- that I’m sure you’ll see a lot of soon when the Pumpkins get here- while others do more detailed versions. Some people carve dragons in them, skeletons, werewolves, ghosts- all sorts of things that humanity might consider spooky."

She opens the shed, and props the door open with the rock that sits outside. “As for Halloween itself, there’s a lot of speculation as to where it originated. A lot of it points back to it being a pagan holiday in origin- I just like to think of it as some good old fashioned spooky and scary fun and call it that.” Speaking of spooky and scary… she needed to find the fog machine.

"Spooky." He repeated with an amused 'nyeh heh heh heh'. "How interesting!" he commented, setting the bag of feed off to the side. "And what do you do?" he asked.

“Well, I usually went out trick-or-treating with my family in my Mom’s neighborhood. But plans change- and I’m going to be here this year. The construction workers and myself have been planning stuff for the thirty first.” She grins at him. Her eyes brighten as she spots one of the boxes she needs. She peeks inside. “Aha! There’s what I need. This year, since I’m technically already a skeleton, I don’t need to dress up. Well… I might put on a witches hat or something. Something simple. But I definitely want to up my spooky factor, so I can spook some trick-or-treaters.” Good-natured spooking’s were always fun.

She glances to him. “Out of curiosity- can you check my ribs real fast? I need to know if they’ll hold up to having something attached to them. I know they’re fully sealed- but will the new bone hold up?"

"Of course I can." he assured her with a smile. "Come on then, I’ll take a look."

She beams up at him and lifts her shirt. Really it did get easier to show her ribs to people. She didn’t have breasts to flash anyone with- and bare bones were just bones. “Thanks, Pap. Heh. If I show you what I plan to do, can you keep it a secret? I want to see how much I can startle your brother.” And maybe Tenebris- but she had an inkling that he wasn’t easy to spook.

"Of course I can keep this secret~" he nodded once, before cackling, "As long as I can get in on the scare.

“If you can help me think of the perfect scare, that’d be good. I’m no good at coming up with scares-I can pull off creepy more than scary.” She sits still while he investigates her ribs. He prods lightly, checking over the solid, healed parts, as well as prodding the lighter ‘scars’ that had yet to become firm. The fresh bone is soft and tender, but holds up well under his fingers. When he’s done, she leaves her shirt up, and goes to snag the fog machine.
Velcro is looped around a couple of her ribs. It’s an uncomfortable sensation- but like looking pretty, being spooky was not always a comfortable sensation. She tinkers with it for a second, and then it clicks on with a soft whirring. At least the batteries still worked. She grinned as white fog began to billow out of it, and then draped her shirt tightly over her pants. The neck of her shirt is unrolled, so it rests below her chin, creating a tunnel for the fog to follow. “And now we wait. It’s got a bit of space to fill up.”

His eyes gleamed with interest. "Oh my...!" he then began to laugh. "Nyeh heh heh heh! So you plan on scaring him with that?" he asked.

“You’ll see.” She grins at him. With how her skull is formed, she’s got ‘cheeks’ of sorts, so most of the fog should gather in the back of her mouth. She can feel it vaguely, ghosting over her ribs in a slightly heavier way that shows it’s not air, and it swirls inside of her with every breath. As it fills her insides, she pads back to the boxes and pulls them out. “These have a lot of my tools in it.” She keeps her mouth shut as she talks, so it doesn’t pool out. “Ah! We can make baked pumpkin seeds too. Heh. We’re going to need a lot of paper too. The dining room is going to be covered in pumpkin guts. It’s going to be so much fun!”

"This is going to be fantastic~" he chuckled. "What else do we have to do to prepare?"

She plops a box into his arms and grins at him from over top of it. She can feel the fog filling her mouth. This time she lets her mouth move with her as she speaks, and is rewarded by a layer of milky fog rolling out from between her fangs. Some of it bubbles up and rolls out of her eye sockets and nasal cavity. Definitely not something one would be expecting to see from a living skeleton. The green lights in her eyes dance merrily. “Not a whole lot, actually. You tall folk should probably be expecting to clean pumpkin guts off the ceiling though. Pumpkins can be hard to carve, and if you carve too hard, it flies everywhere.”

Holy stars that looked almost terrifying. Grinning to himself, Quinn chuckled faintly. "So we get to tear pumpkins apart, and make a mess of the internals?"

“That about sums it up. We can also scare trick-or-treaters, but probably nothing too over the top. I’m not totally okay scaring the pants off of children.” She exhales sharply, and playfully blows a curl of fog into his face. Her shirt is lifted, letting fog spill out like a cloud of dust, and then she’s fishing in her ribs to turn the machine off and remove it from her ribs. “So, think that’ll do to scare your Brother a bit? If I hadn’t have told you prior, think it would have startled you too?”

"I would have worried a bit, yes." he nodded, before he blinked, "Miss Toki... What are ‘trick-or-treaters’?"

She blinks up at him, blowing the fog idly out of her skull as she does so. “Uh… Trick-or-treaters are kids that come to knock on your door. They’ll say trick-or-treat. The theory behind that is if you give them candy, then you’ve chosen to treat them. If you have nothing to give, they can play a trick on you without fear of retribution. We don’t really do much of the trick aspect- you leave a light on outside to show you have candy, and you turn the light off when you don’t have candy. Kids go to the houses with lights on.”

"I see." he took this information to memory and thought about it, "So you've mentioned dressing up..."

“Humans used to dress up as monsters- the types from movies and shows- or super heroes for Halloween. Really though, you can dress up as anything. I used to dress up as a skeleton a lot- I think my costume is still in here somewhere. It was actually really cool- the bones were made out of a glow in the dark material, so in the dark it would just show a walking skeleton. Sort of ironic, isn’t "it?" She grins up at him cheekily. "No bones about it, I was meant to become a skeleton."

He chuckled at that. "Oh the irony indeed. Now I suppose you won't need that costume, huh?"

"Not at all." She grins at him lopsidedly, and rummages around for her old witches hat. "I think I've still got my witches costume here… Now that I'm a few pounds lighter in the middle, I think I can fit in it again." Her hat is located first, and it's plonked on her skull while she digs. It doesn't quite sit right because of her horns, but she can modify it later.

The dress she procures is long and dark, interspersed with a dark green trim and white lace. "Aww. Nope, my pelvis is still too wide. Oh well- maybe one of the other adults can enjoy it. I'll keep the hat though. Gives me a spooky vibe." She wiggles her fingers playfully at Papyrus. "Better be careful, Pap~ I could cast a spell on you." She teases.

He laughs warmly, mischief lighting up his eyes as he sets down the box he had been holding. "Oh dear," he grins at her, dramatically flailing a hand for a second, "I'm cornered by a terrifying witch! I better unleash my special attack!" his eyes lit up with energy as he darted forwards to snap her, and then he leaned under her chin and began to nip gently along her neck. "Nips and kisses! Nyeh heh heh heh!"

She squeaked and flushed, the hat tumbling from her skull as she was nabbed. The 'nips and kisses' brightened her flush, and she couldn't bite back the soft moan that escaped from behind her teeth. Good Gods, he could go from zero to full throttle quite quick. "N-nyah, nips and kisses huh? Your special attack is s-super effective!" One of her hands curls at his neck, and she strokes her fingers firmly over the vertebrae. It was only fair, when he was being so mischievous with her own.

"NYEH!" her counter-attack surprised him, and he let out a loud laugh. "O-Oh gosh... Nyeh heh heh~! Y-Your Counter attack is just a-as effective!"

She grins, and squirms so she can tuck into his shoulder. Her mouth finds where her fingers had touched, and she parts her teeth to scrape them gently along the vertebrae. Her fangs are hardly built for nibbling- but she makes a gentle attempt. Sockets lighting up with green light, Toki's tongue forms and briefly licks over the bone. Two could play the game of fluster- and it was time she stepped up on her end. "Oh?" She hums. "Good~"

He seemed to jolt at the feeling of her teeth and tongue, and his own efforts faded as a soft sound escaped him, his grip on her faltering.

With her point made, she gives him one more scrape of her teeth and then escapes his grasp. She giggles at him, and winks teasingly at him as she stoops to collect her box and her fallen hat. "I think we'll call that battle a draw~"

Quinn pulled back to reveal his face completely flushed. His gaze was lowered and pupils missing past the magical cloud of orange magic that stained the bones of his face. "N-Nyeh... I-I suppose so..."

She grins up at him, and arches a brow ridge. "Something wrong, Pap?" She too was flushed, but holding up better than he was.

"Ye-No, no, no!" he smiled at her, obviously flustered. "Heh... Just a little bit, well, flushed. Neckbones are sort of... you know" he reached up and rubbed his neck bones gently. "Sensitive... Heh... Mine aren't often touched, really."

She grinned. Sticky green saliva would meet his fingers on his neck. "And you think mine are? I wasn't aware that neck bones could be so sensitive, but... well, that felt nice. Very nice.” She props the box on one hip and mirrors his motion with her other hand. Her neck tingles slightly. “I was just giving as good as I got. Can’t really nibble though. Fangs are meant for biting, not nibbling.”

"You did well enough.” he huffed softly, though he had not left much, if any saliva on her bones. "Though we are even now, so I’ll leave it at that... heh...” he then smiled at her, "Come on, let's go get ready.”

She just grinned at him. “That’s what you get for being such a flirt, Pap.” She motions for him to take his box at his feet, and then slips around him to step from the shed. “There’s not much to get ready. This is mostly inside decorations.” The construction workers were chipping in to get Halloween supplies for outside. Rather than decorating each house- because decorations were expensive in large quantities- there was a plan to decorate the park into a full-scale Halloween ‘village’ of sorts.

“Hm... You ever had pumpkin pie?” She asks curiously, nudging the shed shut once he leaves.

"I have not. The only kind I have had is Miss Toriel's pie.” He answered, easily keeping pace with her short but quick strides.

“I haven’t gotten to meet her yet. Hm... Going to have to change that though. I’ll make a pumpkin pie for thanksgiving then. It’s not really a Halloween thing, so much as hoards of candy and shenanigans.” She bumps her hip to his, grins at him widely, and tickles his ribs lightly with her elbow. “Lots of shenanigans.”

"Heh heh heh... I certainly hope Father can get into the festivities as well." He chuckled, nudging her with his own hip. "Imagine how terrifying that'll be."

“I dunno, it’s hard to see your dad as scary. He’s too… nice. I mean I heard from Han that he can be really scary when he get angry, but I wasn’t really aware of much of the incident.” Apparently the doctor had run around like a hell beast until the King had to forcibly drag him away to calm him.

"None of us took well to the ambush,” he admits, “but we succeeded in defeating them. Caeruleus almost immediately had moved to protect you and Dom..."

“Han told me you got Asgore out of there almost immediately after I was shot.” She gives him a smile. “You did good. They were after him anyways. Heh. I did what I could to protect Dom.” She shifts the box against her ribs and rattles with a shiver. “I’m glad Cae got to us though. If they had realized I wasn’t dead, they’d have probably turned back to finish it.”

"If he didn't, I know that I would have for sure." he murmured. Balancing the box in one hand, he reached out his other to brush her shoulder. She reached up to pat his hand, shifting the box to her opposite hip as they turned down the street to his house. “You’re sweet, Pap. But you had to protect the King- that’s part of a guard’s duty, isn’t it?” She winks up at him lightly. “You can’t just shirk duty because a civilian is in danger. But really- it doesn’t matter. I made it, Dom made it- we lost two monsters in the long run, but everyone else survived.”

He nodded in agreement, "Of course... I am mourning the two lost, but those around us, those we saved..."

“I mourn them too.” She only ever met Hound- but he had always had such kind things to say about his mate… She sighs, taking a breath through her nose, and then wiggles free of his hand. She bumps his hip, and then more firmly holds the box. She clamps a hand over the top to keep it closed. “Enough sad stuff- today is a good day, and Halloween is soon! We can’t be sad with shenanigans to be had! That being said… Race you the rest of the way! Winner gets to pick a prize!”

And without warning, off she goes, running as fast as her legs will carry her. Her laugh follows after.

"It's ON!" He laughed, running behind her, then beside her, then in front of her.

Long legs really did help when challenged to race.

When he bypasses her, she laughs, and doesn’t slow. She knew he would win- and he got to choose a prize of his liking. She’s not nearly as fast as him- she doesn’t do a lot of running to warrant it- but she is quick with her smaller size. Still, she ends up at the house several seconds behind him, huffing and puffing with exertion.

She might be a bit out of shape. “You, hah, you win.”

He jogged in place, waiting for her at the door. Once she arrived, he stopped and grinned down at her. "Nyeh heh heh heh~!"

She wheezed slightly. “I might be a bit out of shape.” She admits. Still, she goes to open the door for them both, leaving the taller skeleton to enter and close it behind her. She moves to plop the box of things onto the floor next to the couch. “Well… you won. What do you choose for your prize?”

He entered and closed the door behind her. He stacked his box next to her own, making sure not to jostle it or break anything inside, before he sat down on the couch. His hand came up to cup his chin while he pondered. "Hmm..." Papyrus then smiled at her. "Come closer and I'll tell you."

Toki had an inkling of an idea what he had planned, but went along with it anyways. She stood in front of him and leaned down, placing her hands on his knees to help her balance. Her eyes glimmered warmly, the soft green glow showing her happiness as she smiled kindly at him. “I’m closer. Tell me now?”

He smiled wider, a brow arching teasingly, and reached up to pull her onto his lap. "Cloooosser~"

She flushes and ends up straddling him with how he pulled her down. All right then. She could roll with this. Toki shifts and sits back, resting her palms on his chest as she giggles. “I don’t think I can get much closer than this, Pap.”

He chuckled, and then he leaned up closer to her face. His pupils flashed mischievously. "What I want..." he drawled softly and bumped his teeth to her cheek, "Is a favor in the future."

“A favor?” She swallowed slightly and nodded. “I can do a favor. What favor?”

"I don’t know yet." he then pulled back and smiled at her.

She laughed, letting her head drop down onto his chest. She relaxed for a moment, and then nodded against him. “Alright. When you can think of a favor that you really want, I’ll try to do it. Sound good?”

"Of course." he ran his hands down her back and over her hips before he nuzzled his face under her chin.

She chuckled at his affections, suppressing a shiver as his hands trailed down her hips, and tickled her fingers up his ribs to keep him getting too impish with her. “C’mon, Pap, you’ve got to let me up.
We can snuggle after we get the decorations up.” And she was in a slightly compromising position—but she’s not entirely certain he’s noticed just how she’s sitting on him. “Do you mind hiding the fog machine in your room? Sans is sure to see it if it’s left out here.”

“I won't mind at all, but I say we take the chance to spook them tonight.” he chuckled softly.

“Tonight… I can do tonight.” She grins at him, and, giving a purposeful squirm in his lap, slides back onto her own feet. Her socks rub on the floor, and she goes to snag the machine. ‘Gimme a hand. I want to put it on the back of my ribs- it feels heavier near my sternum. By my spine should work better.”

He nodded, grinning as he helped her set it up. His fingers looped the straps gently around the insides of her ribs, brushing them as he did so. Her flush was his reward, and he gave a pleased hum.
It was followed by what could only be called a mischievous giggle.

As soon as it’s secure, she shifts and turns it on. It whirs to life, and she closes her shirt, and tucks the loose end into her pants. Her sleeves are bunched up to create a tighter space and prevent leaking.
This leaves it two places to go- out the neck of her shirt, and out her skull. “This is going to be good.
Heh. Alright- nonchalance is the key.” She offers him a hand up. “C’mon mister tall skeleton. I need you to tape streamers to the ceiling.”

He’s off to fetch the tape as soon as he’s upright. "Of course! Just tell me where to put them.”

She collects her rolls of black and orange streamers, and guides him into decorating the doorways with the twisting bands, and for lacing most of the wall trims in orange and black. As they work, she also tapes plastic spiders to the walls, and drapes fake cobwebs along the windows and counters.

The house slowly comes together with more and more decorations- and she even sets up a few pumpkin shaped candleholders on the shelves. They remain empty- but she knows they’ll eventually get put to use. She hangs some of the weather proof decorations outside the house, making the front porch like area become shrouded in ghostly wisps of cloth and hoards of cobwebs loaded with plastic spiders.

It doesn’t take long to get all of the items into place- and soon she’s watching him hang the last streamers across the ceiling. She grins happily. “And now it looks like it should. We actually put these up super late- but I wasn’t up to putting things up back in the beginning of October. Now we just need Jack-o-lanterns outside, and everything will be in place.” The sound of the door catches her attention, and she takes a deep breath to stir up the fog sitting heavily inside of her clothes.

Needless to say, Tenebris and Caeruleus were both uneasy as they entered their home, both looking around with concern and curiosity.

"Tokiko? Papryus?"

Toki waves at them cheerily from the couch, and turns to face them. The fog had been spilling from her eye sockets for a while now, and as she exhaled, it trailed from her nasal cavity as well. The sounds of Papyrus covered the faint mechanical noise from inside of her ribs.

“Welcome home!” She chirps, teeth opening to let the dusty fog roll forth from between white rows of sharp daggers. “Papyrus and I decorated today!”

"Waaaagh!” Caeruleus eye lights disappeared, and he scrambled backwards, bumping into Tenebris.

Toki gave a disappointed pout, but arched a brow. She exhaled, blowing out a curtain of fog as she got off the couch. “What’s interesting? Something the matter, Cae? You look like you’ve seen a ghost.”

"How the hell are you doing that?!" Cae demanded, pointing at the smoke.

Tenebris came closer, leaning down and examining the smoke billowing from her mouth with fascination.

She blew it into the elder monster’s face, and laughed deeply, sending more puffs of it falling from her mouth and bursting from her eye sockets. “How am I doing what, Sans?” She inquires petulantly, wiggling her brows at him. “Something’s got your bones all rattled, that’s for sure.”

He chuckled lowly and stood tall again while Caeruleus made various arm flailing gestures to try and talk. "The smoke...!" he eventually got out, sounding frustrated and flustered.

She grinned and eased up off of the couch. She shifts, and tugs her shirt out of her pants. The edge is lifted, and white fog spills out in a dense fog, as if someone had just dumped a bucket of milky ash from inside of her shirt. It spilled across the floor, trailing over her socks and bubbling from the inside of her pelvis.

Inside her ribs, Velcro entwined with the backside of the cage, sits the machine. It whirs, spitting out more fog. “Fog machine.” She grins. “Got you good, didn’t I?”

"..." Caeruleus blinked slowly for a moment, and then he laughed heartily. "Oh...! Damn it, kid! Hahaha!"

Tenebris and Papyrus both laughed with him.

"That’s a very interesting device, Miss Toki. May I see it?” Tenebris inquired lightly.

“Sure!” She shifts and wiggles her fingers back into her ribs. She feels along, tracing bones as she locates the Velcro. It’s easily undone, and she eases from around the bones with a soft thrum. Toki hands it over, and motions to the button. “That’s how you turn it on and off. It takes a while for the fog to build up, but it’s worth the effort after.”

Her fingers return to her ribs, and she rubs the spot where it had rested. “It’s not comfortable to wear, I forewarn you now.”

Tenebris took it in hand and looked it over curiously. As he turned it, his gaze flicked to her. "Fascinating indeed..." he chuckled. "May I borrow it?"

“Ah... sure? I was only going to use it to scare you guys anyways. At least I got a bird in the hand, eh?” She grins over at Cae and waggles her brows teasingly. Fixing her shirt, she makes herself presentable once more.

"Easily worth the two in the bush." Tenebris agreed.

Cae just folded his arms, mouth tipping down in a pout that was rather adorably sulky for a six-foot tall Skeleton.

“Easily.” She grins.
Chapter 17

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Heh. We get another nice chapter of cute things- with some trauma, because Grillby is just too hot for everyone to handle. Unf.

Don't forget to check us out on tumblr! sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

We also have a fanart page! You should check it, and our character information page out. You can see what Toki’s teeth look like :D http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/tagged/TOTU-Fanart Silverwing Notes: innocently singing 'This is Halloween', then grins widely This is starting to get interesting, and this chapter got extra spoops in it, hehehe! Enjoy the festive events that is chapter 17!

Halloween came with a surprising addition to the town. The bar was finished the day prior- and the new owner had been brought in. Apparently it was it was some monster named Grillby, which Toki found hilarious since he ran a bar and grill. She didn't actually have time to meet him, sadly. She would find time soon though, she knew. She had to properly welcome him to the community, and make sure that he had everything he needed here.

The week approaching Halloween was busy as hell. Along with managing to play with the hems on the witches dress- which is what she was now adorned in, with the hat that had been modified to fit over her horns- all of the adults spent time getting the park up and running- and now it was filled with graveyards, hanging skeletons, and other creepy Halloween themed things. There was a spot for bobbing for apples, a bean-bag toss, a pin-the-nose on the pumpkin, and a large pile of hay bales that had been made into the ‘castle of horror’. The kids were fond of the hay fort. They had a 'pumpkin patch' set up where kids were going to get their pumpkins. It was decided that everyone would get pumpkins on Halloween, carve them before midnight, and set them outside to ward off ‘evil spirits’ of bad luck.

Toki already had her pumpkins selected and waiting at home for them, so they didn’t have to battle the kids for them. Each member of the household had one pumpkin to carve, and everything was all prepared in the kitchen. She had intentions of getting them carved before trick-or-treating really got started, so that the kids would have the chance to enjoy the designs that they would be doing.

Problem was- it was time to carve, and they were one skeleton down. Cae was nowhere to be found but she had an inkling of where he would be. Probably down at the bar- which she knew was handing out small child-sized root-beer floats to the kids all day today.

She tugged on the brim of her witches hat, billowing sleeves rolled up and pinned so the pumpkins wouldn’t make a mess of them, and glanced to Papyrus. “Join me to go get your brother? He needs to get here in time to put on his costume, and we need to start the pumpkins if we’re going to get them out before the kids start knocking.”

"Of course!" He replied happily. "I've got the PERFECT costume planned, nyeh heh heh, I bet Sans will love it! By the way, have you seen Father? He said he’d go and get his costume but I haven’t seen him...!"

“Not since he disappeared upstairs, I haven’t.” She huffs slightly, and glances to him. She was the only one in costume- but she hadn’t wanted to fiddle with the laces after dealing with pumpkin guts. Toki tips her hat back slightly, bending the rim so it doesn’t block her eyes- and then motions him to follow her. She gathers the hem of the dress into her fingers and heads out the door. “We’ll give him a bit to get dressed while we go fetch your brother. I’m pretty sure he’s at the new bar.”

"I'm sure he'll be there, he and Grillby have quite a history!" He agreed, following her to where the new bar n’ grill was. It wasn’t far of a walk from the house, actually.

From outside, it's gentle lighting shown, offering a warm scene to gaze upon as you drew close.

Toki wasn’t much paying attention as she headed for the bar. “I’d heard about that in passing from a lot of the other monsters.” She hums idly. When they reach the bar, she tugs the door open and steps inside. The warmth that washes over her surprises her- but it was a ruefully cold day, so it felt nice. She catches sight of a blue jacket out of the corner of her eye, and lifts her head to call out to him.

She freezes solid in the doorway, blocking Papyrus from entering behind her, and the lights disappear from her eyes.

Next to Sans- who is passing out small cups of root beer floats to some monster kids- is a literal living flame. His fires crackle and snap against the snazzy collar of his vest, and a glowing smile shows as he passes a fizzy drink to an eager child. He looks happy and kind, if a bit large to be handling such small cups.

But all Toki can see is someone on fire, see herself reflected in that flame, and feel the blaze of agony tearing her away from reality.

"Toki...?" Papyrus looked at her, before looking towards his brother, "Sans?" he then called out, hoping his brother could get Toki to move.

"Heeey Pap! Glad you could-" Sans started to look up with a grin, but immediately it fell on seeing the shut-down skeleton in front of his little brother. For a moment he felt only confusion, then the warmth of his friend who served beside him registered.

Grillby spoke up quietly, having noticed the sudden silence from the Skeleton, and the way his gaze had gone. He lifted a finger and adjusted his glasses. “Is there something wrong over ther-"

"Shit." he hissed, interrupting the fire elemental. He teleported once to get on the other side of the bar, and then lunged for Toki. Cae took her into his arms and teleported away again.

He carried her through his shortcuts until they were by the river, the air significantly cooler than it was inside the grill. The sand on the beach was soft and icy, wet from the river and cold from the October air around them.

"Toki...! Toki, Hey!" he said, patting her cheeks urgently, "Come on, kid. Snap out of it...!"

Toki remained unresponsive in his grasp. His touches did little to rouse her. Her breathing sped up rapidly, before it stopped completely.

Fire. He had been made of fire- she had looked like that until her skin had burnt away, until all of the nerves and tissue had charred to nothing but ash. But the fire had kept burning, licking over her bones like a ravenous beast hell bent on devouring her soul. It had burned her, turning her into a human pyre and stealing her breath away. She had breathed fire, had been fire, consumed in the endless hunger that had taken away her home and nearly her life.

In her chest, the green of her soul dimmed rapidly, the red cracks pulsing with an angry carmine glow. Her sockets remained empty.

"Toki!" he had to get her attention without catching that of the children's... He turned his head then he sighed, "Fuck..." he then dipped his hand into the river, hissing at the shock of the cold, before he slipped his hand under her ribcage, and let his icy hand grab hold of her soul. He grit his teeth and curled up around her, bracing himself in case his shit luck made it that he now had a palm-full of those cracks.

A palm full of those cracks he would indeed have. He would be thrown headlong into her panic, the burning sensation washing over him. Visions of human hands, the flesh melting away to be replaced with ashen bone, would flash through. Of fire bursting through ribs, scouring eyes from eye sockets, burning flesh into the bone. He would feel his face warping under the fire, horns being warped into being as magic rolled and roiled and drew the fire inwards.

He would see a human stuck in a burning house, desperately trying to save children, and burning alive as magic keeps her from leaving. He would see her vision locking onto Grillby, and the parallels she drew between his form and that which she had in the blaze.

The panic that had her so locked up would be nearly overwhelming. The fire, the burning, the panic, the fear, so gut wrenchingly overwhelming that it wanted to make her violently ill.

Toki remained locked down, her soul not even quivering at the icy hand that washes over it. Steam would roil forth, her magic agitated and lashing out against the perceived danger.

"T-Toki..." he hissed, releasing her soul as the pain overwhelmed him. His hand stung, and his soul throbbed in sympathetic agony. He did a quick check when he felt an ache settle over his bones, his vision wavering.

Down to 5/10 hp remaining.

Fuck. She did so much accidental damage just with a touch to her soul.

He grit his teeth as he looked at his burnt hand, as well as what remained of his glove (The heat had burned right through the fucking thing), before he grabbed Toki. "Sorry about this, Doll." he then urged her backwards into the river, making use of her lack of fight, and pushed her into its icy grasp. He let it submerge her fully, keeping a hold on the tips of her horns so he could bring her back out again.

The water hissed and steamed like a hell beast churned below. She thrashed as it washed over her, the icy depths forcibly pulling her from her panic. Her eyes lit up, dim and shaken, as she flailed, sputtering as the water flooded her mouth. Her dress was soaked, her bones crackling ominously as the heat was suddenly changed with ice. Her limbs tremble, and she peers up at him blankly as he pulled her out of the water.

She was there now, but barely.

He pulled her close as soon as he saw the lights in her eye sockets, hugging her firmly. "Shit... Toki... Are you okay?" he asked gently, trudging out of the water to sit on the grass, her form untouched for the moment it took him to shed his jacket, wrapping it around her to donate his generated heat to her as he hugged her close.

She’s silent and still as he draws her from the water and settles her on the grass. The cold, wet cloth clinging to her bones is such a sudden change from where she was. She was… “I was burning again…” She whispers softly, voice cracking like the marks upon her soul. “It was so hot…” She doesn’t respond as his coat is settled over her limbs, save to nestle down instinctively in the warm fluff.

"Toki... I'm so sorry... I should have remembered to warn Pap about this..." he hissed softly.

“I didn’t… He was… fire…” Her limbs draw upwards, and she huddles into his coat. The dripping brim of her witches hat shrouds her face as she begins to rattle anxiously. “I didn’t know…” Papyrus. Papyrus was still probably back at the bar. She wanted him here- he was safe. Cae was safe too- but both of them were safer feeling together.

There is a low keening noise, buzzing and harrowing at her ears, and it takes her a minute to realize that it is her making that sound. She can’t stop it even as she tries.

"I'm sorry, Tokiko..." he murmured as he squeezed her gently.

He stiffened, hearing something... the rattling of chains sounded, echoing with the sound of wind. But there was no breeze...?

The sounds did not go unnoticed, and she tensed, nervous and flighty in her borrowed jacket. The last thing she needed was for something to go wrong right now, when she was so perilously close to the precipice of panic.

The world around them seemed to grow darker and Cae instinctively held Toki closer. He saw something in the growing darkness, a cloud-shrouded form that carried a scythe-like blade in his hand.

"Wh-What the fuck..." he hissed, trying to hide the fact he was getting nervous from this. Toki didn’t need him getting upset too.

The shrouded form with it’s scythe in hand was too much too soon. Any other time and she would have been simultaneously terrified and awed. But now… It was the straw to break the camels back- and Toki burst into terrified sobs in Cae’s arms. Her panic was too fresh, her fight or flight response too hair-trigger to let her ponder that this might have been a Halloween jape, and not a legitimate threat.

Almost immediately the form tensed and the blade was dropped, flying behind the cloak before the form came closer. "Toki?!" Pure white hands with familiar holes in the palms appeared from the dark sleeves, gripping the hood and pulling it back to revealed the worried gaze of-

"GODS BE DAMNED, POPS! YOU SCARED THE HELL OUT OF US!"

"Sans, yell at me later. Toki’s soaking wet! What happened?"

Sans winced. "She saw Grillby..."

Sadly, that was all that needed to be said for Tenebris to understand. He sighed, and then came closer, touching her shoulder. "Tokiko, it’s me. It’s Tenebris." he murmured softly. She continued to shake while he rubbed over her shoulder, comforting her with one hand. His other hand was sent reaching into the cloak to turn off the fog machine that hid his feet.

She shook and trembled under his fingers, her hands balling up against her face momentarily. Even the familiar voice did little to quell her cries- and her palms pressed to her eye sockets to try and stem her tears.
"Oh god..." He took her from Sans and cradled her, wet dress and all, hugging her gently to his chest. "It's okay... it's okay... shhh..." As the fog cleared, the black shadow compressed into what was revealed to be his coat. The sound of chains, or so Sans thought he had heard, was really the sound of Tenebris' tail rattling, the loose vertebrae clacking against each other with every move. The blade of his tail gleamed in the ambient light of the evening, it's scythe-like blade being that which was held by the phantom monster seconds before.

She uncoiled enough to latch onto him, arms curling around his neck. She cried for a while, arms tightening around his neck as she shook with nerves.

It took her an embarrassingly long time to calm, and eventually she clung to him, trembling like a leaf in the wind. She felt bad- it had just been Tenebris after all, and that was no good reason to burst into hysterics. She felt even worse, knowing she had panicked again. And over a monster no less.

Toki had never feared monsters- not even when the large skeleton had burst into her back yard claiming that he was going to be the monster’s mascot.

“I’m so sorry…” She rasped into his neck.

Dismissing her apologies as little issue, he nuzzled and hushed her gently as he started towards her home, while Sans went to go fetch Papyrus and inform Grillby of what had happened.

Toki was silent for the duration of the walk. It took her a little bit to realize that she was soaking wet and chilled to the bone- and it felt like her very soul had been encased in ice. There was a burning within it, and she tilted her head enough to peek at it through her soaking dress. The red cracks were enflamed, throbbing like a heartbeat against the dim green of her soul. One of the cracks appeared to be wider, throbbing and agitated like a torn-asunder scar.

Home soothed some of her lingering tension- even if it wasn’t her house, she had spent enough time there to consider it one of her homes. It was safe. Safe was good. “Home…” She whispered quietly.

"That's right." Tenebris murmured, carrying her into the house and up the stairs to the bathroom. A warm shower would help her at this point.

“I don’ need it…” She murmurs softly. Her magic churns violently in her bones upon her gentle prodding, and her dress hisses as the heat of it forces the moisture out. Steam fogs up the bathroom, and soon she’s dry and vaguely overly warm in his arms. Overly warm or not, it doesn’t stop the icy chill that’s rooted deep in her stomach.

She had been frightened of a monster- and she felt terrible about it.

“My… soul…” She murmurs faintly, still staring at the widened crack. “S’ not right… It wasn’t fair to him. I didn’t even get to say hello before…” She hadn’t even gotten to say hello to the elemental- and she had the feeling that going back would simply produce the same response.

She was only just getting to handle multiple candles at a time. He was much larger than any candle she had ever seen. She wouldn’t even be able to apologize. Silent tears bubbled in her sockets, but they were scorched away by the magic heating her bones.

He felt her heat and immediately let her dry herself off as he simply held her to comfort her, "It was beyond your control. You just need to keep recovering. You've made it this far..."

“I’ll keep recovering. I have to. The cracks will get bigger if I let this beat me. But it’s so hard. I feel so… thin. Stretched and worn, like frayed fabric… That might have been the worst panic yet. I was in the doorway and then it felt like I was back in the fire. Like I had never left.” She whispers. Her fingers curl into his sweater, and she shivers in his arms despite the heat that she’s putting off. “It wasn’t his fault either… Gods I feel like shit- I’ve never been afraid of a monster before. It’s not fair to him.”

He sighs and hugs her tighter. "It's okay, Tokiko... It's okay..."

“It’s not okay.” She murmurs quietly. “It’s not okay. Today was supposed to be a fun day.” And she had effectively ruined it in one fell swoop. She shifts in his arms and rattles quietly. At least her rattling was easing off some. Sitting here and stewing in her own thoughts and misery wasn’t going to help any. Not at all. “…I need to do something. Something to keep me busy. Do you think Cae and Pap will still be up to doing pumpkins…?” She still had her dress on- and now that it was dry and warm, she could still do Halloween things.

Anything to keep her busy at this point.

"Of course, of course..." he assured her. The door banged open and shut.

"TOKI?" Papyrus. Right on time.

Toki squirms slightly in Gaster’s arms, a silent request to bet set down. “Lets go down stairs before he tears up the house to find us.”

He nodded and set her down. Once he was certain she was stable, he eased the door open and motioned her out. "After you."

Toki managed to catch a glimpse of herself in the mirror as she was set down. She looked dreadful. Her bones appeared paler, and there were green smears where her tears had tarnished the bone. Heat still churned on her bones, and she struggled a moment to get it to ease off. Once the shimmering over her bones faded, she felt drained and strangely colder inside.

“Thanks Gaster.” He’s given a strained smile, before she’s easing herself out the door and padding towards the stairs. “I’m here, Pap.” Her voice is tired. She is tired. But she speaks regardless so the big skeleton knows where she is.

Papyrus almost trips, twice, as he runs up the stairs to meet her. His arms snare her swiftly, hugging her tightly. "Toki, Sans told me what happened... I'm so sorry!" he whined as he nuzzled her.

She grimaces, but eases into his grasp quietly. Her fingers are shaky as they come up to cling to him. He is warm and broad, and safe feeling. Some of her tension eases. “It’s okay,” she murmurs. “It wasn’t anyone’s fault. I’ll need to apologize to that monster later, but…it wasn’t anyone’s fault. I didn’t expect…” She hadn’t expected a literal embodiment of fire to come and live here, but that was no excuse. Tears bead at her eyes without her prompting, and she stubbornly scrubs them away. “I- I’m not okay right now, but I will be. I promise.”

He used his thumbs to wipe her tears away and he hushed her tenderly. Nuzzling her as he coaxes Aliquam lets his soul release a soothing aura that he spread through his every inch of being, all that much more for her to take in.

Her soul trembles against the soothing affectionate aura that he surrounds her in, and she quakes in his arms. Her face eventually buries against his chest, and she sighs into his shirt. The aura felt good- it felt soothing, like warmth and light and love, and everything that was Papyrus. Her battered soul reveled in the sensation. It helped soothe the chill permeating her being, but it did not stay the shivers that came after. Shock was a powerful thing. “Thank you, Pap…”

He nodded once and touched his teeth to her skull in a gentle nuzzle. "Anything for you, Toki..."
murmured gently.

“Anything, huh?” She sniffs quietly. “I don’t want…” she wiggles her fingers at herself, “this to ruin our evening. Can we still carve pumpkins? I don’t think I can handle candles, but I still want us to enjoy our evening… We’ve still got candy to hand out too.”

He nodded and smiled. "Of course. Come on."

“That includes costumes. From all of you.” She flicks her gaze up to Gaster as well, and then steps from Papyrus’ arms. She heads down the stairs, going slow as trembles shake her legs. “I think… I think I could use some hot cocoa. I can make some while you all get changed.”

Tenebris smiled at her, already preparing to re-don his costume, while Papyrus giggled. "I'm gonna go change, okay?" He purred. When she gave him a nod, he bolted for his room excitedly.

Toki shivered as she reached the bottom of the stairs. Her sockets dimmed, and she forced herself to focus on the clattering noises of Papyrus rummaging around in his room. Her witches hat is abandoned on the couch, and she shambles softly for the kitchen.

Listlessly, she snags the packets of instant cocoa, and begins to prepare a mug for everyone. Quick and easy she has them done, and is then stepping towards the dining room with four mugs in hand.

Sitting on the table is four tea lights, and she closes her eyes and stills. They were unlit. They were unlit, and harmless, and they weren’t doing anything. She had already bested the tea lights once. She could do it again.

As she exhaled forcibly, Toki wondered sourly if she would ever actually beat this for good, or if it would just rear it’s ugly head someday and shatter her peace of mind.

Tenebris came in behind her, looking at how sharp his blade on his tail was real fast, before he smiled at her. "I’m excited to see how these turn out, Toki.” he purred.

She gives him a shaky smile and passes him a mug of cocoa. The other three are set on the table, and she hesitates, before shakily taking the candles and shoving them out of sight behind a vase. “I’m excited too.” She smiles. She moves to fetch the carving knives from the box, and returns with several of the long, serrated edges, along with the finer tools needed for smaller details and four very long, very hefty ice cream scoops. “This might get messy,” she warns, “Pumpkin goes everywhere. It was always family tradition to do it in costume though.” Pumpkin cleaned off rather well regardless.

She steps around the table and stubs her toe on the edge of a large pumpkin. She grumbles, and rolls it over to him. “I got you one of the big ones. Since, y’know, big hands.”

He took it from the floor, easily balancing the large gourd in his hands, and chuckled. "Thank you" he rumbled happily, looking at the pumpkin. He then took his claw and began to mark the pumpkin's outside for its design.

She openly stared. “I kind of forgot that you had claws. It takes a lot of force to get through a pumpkin’s shell.” Good lord. She probably couldn’t do that- she’d get her fingers stuck in the rind if she tried. She snorts, and sets out the other two pumpkins. Toki takes the smallest for herself, and takes a sip from her cocoa.

It’s rich and thick, and the marshmallows stick to her upper teeth, but the warmth and taste of chocolate soothe some of the shaky feelings in her body and warms her soul. “Ah… Mama always did say that chocolate soothed the soul.” She murmurs to herself.
He chuckled softly and put the pumpkin on its side, bringing up his tail and notching where it would lose its cap. "Indeed, though for me it was a nice hot coffee with cream and sugar" he purred, "either that or a nice hot cup of tea."

"Tea is good too." She nods softly. "But chocolate’s just got this… I dunno. It’s really good for after a day has gone bad. And, heh, today went bad. But we’re going to make sure it ends on a high note." She was determined about that. She sips her cocoa again, not bothering to remove her cocoa-stache, and then sets the mug down. “Maybe chocolate is a human thing.” The wolf monsters wouldn’t touch the stuff.

She takes one of the knives, and traces the tip along the top. She outlined the basis for where the cap would be removed, and then reared her arm back to plunge the knife into the pumpkin.

It slid in with a satisfying thud, and she began the process of sawing at it.

With a clean slice, Tenebris watched the cap of his pumpkin fall away from the rest.

Hers is a rather gruesome mess- orange liquid bubbles out the top, and she’s gotten bits of rind stuck between her finger bones- but soon the cap pops off too. She’s feeling better the more she gets into carving the pumpkins. There was something truly therapeutic about mutilating a squash for the holidays. “Oh! Save the seeds for me please!” She flails the stump of the pumpkin top in his vague direction, and offers him an ice cream scoop for the innards. “Just leave the guts in a pile- I’ll dig out the seeds later. I want to bake them. They’re really good.”

He chuckled lowly and reached into the pumpkin, clawing out the internals effortlessly while Sans walked in, smiling. "Oooh, Pumpkins."

She shifts and eyes Cae. Good. He’s in costume. “Mhm. Pick whatever pumpkin you want to carve- might want to take your gloves off though. Pumpkin guts and gloves don’t usually mix well. Knife?” She offers one to him hilt first as she turns to start tugging orange guts out with her fingers. They’re sticky, slimy, and feel absolutely horrible on her bones, but it’s fun and stress relieving. “Ah- watch your cocoa. I’d feel bad if I flung pumpkin guts into your drink.”

He took it, stowing his gloves in his pockets, before making clean work of the top before he took a scoop and started to clean it out.

"Nyeh heh heh!" However, it's not long before another form entered. Aliquam, dressed up in his-"Heeeeey, Pap! Is that your old battle body?!

"Yes it is!" he replied with a proud laugh.

She looked up, and squeaked. Her scoop dropped into the pumpkin with a wet squelch, and her hands fly up to cover her sockets. Pumpkin guts slick off her fingers and fly everywhere. “Good gods, Pap, why are you in a speedo?”

"At least I’m wearing the under suit that went with it." he commented shyly, rubbing his arm.

"Papyrus wore this when he was younger, his 'Battle Body'."

She flushed, and peeked between her fingers. His battle body fit him well, she thinks, even if it looks a little ridiculous after seeing him in legit Royal Guard gear. “He, ah, looks very, very good in it. But I was not expecting to see a skeleton in a speedo today, no-sir. You do look very good in your costume though.”
"Nyeh..." he smiled a bit, then came over, "Nyeh heh heh... So, Pumpkins, yeah?"

"Mhm!" She motions to the last pumpkin remaining, dropping her hands with a deep exhale. She could handle him in a speedo. It was just bones. Sans had taken the roundest pumpkin, which left the tallest, most oblong pumpkin for Papyrus. "I can help you cut open the top if you’ll bring it closer. That one’s really heavy. Nearly popped my arms off trying to get it into the house.” She’d ended up rolling the Pumpkin that Tenebris had taken. “Or do you think you can manage to get it?” He did have tremendous physical strength- and it was possible he’d just pull a Tenebris and poke his pointed fingers into it.

"Of course I can," he assured her, coming over and lifting it almost effortlessly to start into it. His claws make quick work of the rind as he copies what his brother and father were doing.

Toki stares at him. “You know… I used to think I was pretty strong for a girl, but now I feel like a ridiculous noodle compared to the lot of you.” She sighs and shakes her head. She turns back to her own pumpkin, and scoops out two handfuls of guts. They slop between her bones, and she rattles with a shiver as she deposits them in the center of the table. She’s already got pumpkin on her face, but it doesn’t cover the rich sweet smell that pervades the room. Pumpkin always smelled so nice.

The monsters all got a laugh out of that, and after several minutes, they all had carved out their pumpkins. Now to start on the actual carving of said pumpkins.

Toki had hollowed her pumpkin out spectacularly, so that it was thin and easy to work with. Hell, she’d even sampled some of the insides- the parts that usually gets pureed and turned into pies- and had gotten the brothers to try it too. With the smallest pumpkin there, she wasn’t really sure what to carve on it. Eventually she settled for taking her carving tools and working on smoothing several bees out on the orange surface.

Papyrus looked set on his task, Sans had a lazy grin as he made his, but Tenebris looked the most focused by far, working delicately on his pumpkin.

Toki was naturally curious about what everyone was making- but kept to her side of the table. She found a spot that needed to be thinned, and got the scoop. It was a little tough- and the scoop ended up jerking and sending peels of pumpkin into her face and onto the ceiling.

She scooped a peel out of her eye socket, and peered up with a frown. “Well shit. That’s going to stain something fierce.”

Caeruleus started laughing while Papyrus got her a paper towel. "Here! Accidents happen.”

She accepts the paper towel with a grin and cleans her face with it. The ceiling is out of her reach though- but the pumpkin was bound to fall down eventually. She shrugs and resumes carving. Upon her lips a silly Halloween song is hummed. Spooky Scary Skeletons seemed fitting, for the lot of them in their costumes making a mess out of themselves.

It doesn’t take her long, before she has a cartoon bee drawn next to a jar of honey. She thins out the walls behind it, and pokes a few holes for the light to shine better through, before she beams. She hadn’t just carved it open- she had done the shaving method, which let different layers of light make up the details of the carving. It was going to look epic. She spins the pumpkin around and beams. “Done!”

"As am I!" Papyrus turns around his pumpkin to reveal a classic Jack O’ Lantern face.

"I'm done too" Caeruleus chuckles, turning around his pumpkin to reveal a symbol.
The symbol for Pi.

"Eh? EH?" Caeruelus’ grin grew as he started to cackle.

She laughs heartily, and flicks a string of guts at the round skeleton. “Really? Pumpkin Pi? That’s probably the worst pun I’ve heard from you yet. Good job.” She chuckles. Her smile warms as she spies Papyrus’ pumpkin. “Good job, Pap! I really like how you did the nose. I could never get the nose perfectly even when I do those pumpkins.”

"Nyeh heh heh heh! Thank you, Toki~" he beamed happily.

She nods at him cheerily, and goes to finish her cocoa. She nearly spits it out. “Cold cocoa is not good cocoa.” She sighs. Her fingers were too gross to stick in the drink to warm it again, and one did NOT microwave hot cocoa. They just did not. Not even instant cocoa. So she sets the cold drink on the table, and glances to Tenebris. “What are you working on, Gaster?”

"Since you've met me, you've designated me by last name. You know you could call me 'Tenebris', or any non-embarrassing abbreviation of such. As for what I’ve been working on-" He then turned his pumpkin around. He then made a final cut and pushed it out, revealing a symbol of his own. A Delta Rune, the Dreemurr family's symbol.

“You’ve never told me to call you anything other than that, to be fair.” She points out with a vague grin. “Tenebris it is. No embarrassing abbreviations huh? Can’t call you Tenny then?” Her tease is warm and kind, though her puzzlement is shown as she sees the pumpkin. “That’s a nice symbol- I think the king wore something like that when I first met him. What’s it mean?”

The younger skeletons started to rumble and chuckle until Tenebris growls at them both. With his sons chastised, he then looked at her. "It is the Delta Rune, the Dreemurr family insignia."

“Oh! That’s actually really cool.” She smiles quietly. “Family insignias are pretty cool. A lot of the clans of yore had one- we still have one, actually. My clan, that is.” She fiddles with her pumpkin, and then sets the cap on it quietly. She beams up at him. “I think it’s cute. You put it on the pumpkin for Asgore, huh?” She wiggles her brow ridges teasingly at him. “That’s kind of adorable.”

And at that moment everyone could feel the room raise a couple of degrees as Tenebris’s soul pulsed stronger, his cheeks tingling black as he grunted. "Very funny..."

“I wasn’t teasing you with mean intent, Tenebris. It’s actually really sweet. I’m not blind. Women are usually more observant then men anyways. You’re both really cute together, even if there’s nothing official.” His flush is adorable, and she beams wider at him. “Anyways,” she claps her hands together, and works on shaking off the pumpkin bits from between her joints, “We should get these outside if we’re all done. The kids are going to want to see them when they come by for the candies.”

She had enough caramel apples in the fridge to feed an army- and an army she would be feeding. An army of ravenous, hyperactive kids who would be knocking on the door nonstop until late.

"Of course." Tenebris started cleaning up while the brothers took their pumpkins in hand, Caeruleus taking Tenebris' as well.

“Remember to save me the seeds!” Toki hefts her pumpkin into her arms and follows. She hesitates, reaching behind the vase to collect the tea lights. They felt almost heavier in her hand than the pumpkin in her arms did, and she hustled after them.

Outside, she eased her pumpkin down onto the sides of the step, and took off the top. She offered the candles to the boys. “I don’t… think I can stay out here while you light them, but my problems are no reason not to have the full Halloween experience. Think you two can handle lighting them while I go get the candy apples ready?”

They took them and smiled, "You can count on us!" Aliquam assured her with a smile.

She smiled, eyeing a mass of kids that were already heading this way. They were all carrying their chosen pumpkins. She ducked inside of the house as she heard the first flick of the lighter.

The kids voices drowned out any tension she might have had.

“Whoah! Look at those! That one’s got a bee on it- I bet miss Toki did that one!”

“Ah! Ah! AH! I KNOW THAT FACE! Miss Toki showed us how to make that one! It looks so nice!”

“I wonder who did the King’s symbol? It looks really good! I want to make one like the math one though!”

“You’re such a nerd.”

She smiled, content at the excitement of the kids that followed her into the house.

It might have had a rocky start- but it wasn't a bad holiday in the long run. Sure she was flighty and panicky for the rest of the night- but she enjoyed herself too. Caramel apples and fangs do not work, she learns.

And come late that night, she learns that emotionally exhausting days leave one drained. So she passes out across Caeruleus' chest in the middle of The Nightmare Before Christmas.
Chapter 18

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: Chapter 18 is a doozy. over 9k words. e.e this was a long one. Boy howdy.

Come find us at our blog! :D http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Seventeen Chapters. Seven. Teen. Chapters.
And only now do we get to the icing on the cake! Hahaha!
On that note:
Chapter 18 is 18+ only. We love writing, but please keep us out of prison, and dont continue past the Author Notes if you are an underage reader. If you're already past the age of 18, then please! Enjoy the latest chapter of TOTU!

The first snow set in three days after Halloween, and it buried most of the houses in four feet of snow and then some. Of course the kids had a field day, but the cold and the ice made for hard times in trying to continue construction. They had to clear out several thousand pounds of the white, fluffy flakes first before they could even get the machinery to move.

The monsters from Snowdin seemed more used to it, and they made quick work of it the first time. But the snow fell again, two days after that, and it froze over, creating an unforgiving ice pack. Winter was officially here, and it came in like a lion.

Everyone spent hours outside, freezing in the snow and ice as they cleared the walkways and opened up paths between the houses. The snow was piled in heaps and mounds in the park, and once most of the road ways had been cleared, everyone had proceeded to play in the mountains of ice and frozen flakes.

A full-scale snowball war had occurred- and with some magical help from some of the ice-oriented monsters, they’d formed the massive piles of snow into legitimate forts of ice. It was probably the most fun she’d ever had after shoveling so much snow.

Spending the day with the children playing in the snow made her recall playing with her brothers in a similar such way. She missed having kids in her family around- and she was thirty-two. Her clock was ticking away- but she was no longer human now, was she?

She still wasn’t sure how that all worked- how she would ever have kids like this- but for now she could sate her longing for dealing with kids with handling the other monster kids. She babysat often enough that it was practically like having a hoard of her own kids anyways. So she enjoyed her time out with the kids, swapping teams on the snow war to keep everything even and keep kids from getting too upset about not being on the same team.

The day had ended with everyone needing to thaw- but everyone that much happier.

Toki woke up at an ungodly hour on the morning after their snow-fun. It was a particularly cold morning with even more snow falling. Her first thought was- great, someone’s going to have to shovel more of that shit again. She could see it vaguely through the window, which meant it was going to be piled high in front of the front door again, damn it. The second thought was… why is everything so hot? She woke up feeling warm- like someone had left her near a heating vent all night long. Her shirt was rumpled, her pants in disarray, and she had flung her blanket off sometime in the middle of the night.

Warmth creaked through her bones, and her body physically ached in a way that she had never experienced. Her legs wobbled, her arms tingled, and any time she brushed her bones, it felt almost painful. She couldn’t go back to sleep, even as she tried several times. She was restless, even if she was tired, and no position was comfortable. Her pelvis ached, her back throbbed, her ribs tingled…

Was she getting sick? Could skeletons even get sick? It was possible, after being out in the cold all day that she could have been coming down with something. Ugh. Even changing species wouldn’t apparently free her from the common cold. But, one thing that always helped was a cold shower to drop the body temperature, and then a warm one to ease the ache.

So she plodded sleepily up into the bathroom, and took her shower. She took two of them, in fact, a cold one to try and cool her bones and then a hot one to try and ease the ache.

And she came out feeling much the same. Trying to wash her bones had been an ordeal, and she’d had to stop multiple times. Good gods, what the hell was wrong with her? Was this some super delayed reaction to making the change over? With her soul throbbing uncertainly in her chest, she donned a clean shirt- the loosest one she had- and a clean pair of her baggiest pants, and then headed downstairs to the kitchen.

She would have breakfast ready for the boys, and tea ready for Tenebris by the time that the sun came up.

Aliquam was the first one awake, coming downstairs as he yawned and rubbed his eye sockets with his palms. "Mmmh, Toki?" he murmured as he noticed her up and about in the kitchen far earlier than she usually was. "What are you doing up so-"

Then that scent hit...

The scent of heat...

It washed over his bones and invaded his essence. He shivered roughly as his soul flared with magic, lighting up his eye before he could stop it. Shit. "Hnhg!"

The sleep-rough voice of Aliquam had caught her attention, and she stepped out of the kitchen to bid him good morning. The bright light of his eye caught her attention, along with his shiver, and worry tugged at her face. "Oh no. Are you okay?" Was he getting sick too? Could sickness be passed between monsters? She needed to stay away from the kids if that was the case. "I woke up not feeling… right, I guess. I couldn’t go back to sleep. So I deep cleaned the kitchen and made breakfast."

"I... I see..." he murmured, clearing his throat roughly. He smiled, though it was shaky and forced. "I'm okay, it's just... Well, how do I explain this to someone who was once a human...?" As far as he had observed, humans never seemed to go into heat. The only thing that the men complained about frequently with their wives was the aggressive tendencies that could come from something called a ‘period’.

"Explain what?" She blinks. "It feels like I’m running a fever, but a cold shower hasn’t cooled me off.” She pads back into the kitchen, motioning for him to follow. She sips at her own mug of tea, and leans back against the counter with a soft moan. Her finger rubs her hip, and she winces. “Gods above, everything hurts.” It was sort of like a period cramp all over her body, minus the terrible stains. Not like she could tell him that—she hadn’t bled since she’d made the change over.

"Toki." he sighed deeply, orange brushing over his cheeks as he stepped closer and gripped her shoulder. He gave her a serious look. "It’s... It’s called a ‘Heat Cycle’.

She deadpanned. “Heat cycle.” She repeats. “Like… what a dog or a cat gets? But…” That made no sense. They were monsters, not animals. Well some of them were animal based monsters, but they were still monsters. It felt wrong to even make that comparison, but it was the only one she could think of on the fly.

He nodded slowly as he looked down at her. "Monsters get it too... And though it’s not contagious like a human sickness, it can spread to compatible partners...” he explained hesitantly, cheeks flooding with an embarrassed orange.

She shivered as his hand remained on her shoulder. Her bones prickled, and warmed under his palm. She shook her head slightly, eyes brightening shades without her consent. They were probably compatible partners, weren’t they? It made sense, given their shared species. “I... Ah... Well. This is certainly… embarrassing. Is it going to spread to you? How can I make it go away?"

"It... Already has spread..." he murmured softly, "As for losing it... well... Either you hold out, though that is far more painful than... just sating it..." his face was going bright orange rather rapidly. “Or you sate it.”

“That fast?” She looks horrified, but the green of her flush spreads rapidly over her cheeks. Holy shit. Holy shit, she brought him into heat like one dog does to another. Holy shit. Oh gods above, if the ground could swallow her up right now, she wouldn’t complain. She swallows, and sets her mug down as her fingers tremble. Were they going to spread it to the others of the house? The ache in her bones deepens, and she trembles slightly under his palm. Shit.

“Ah… Sating it?” She hadn’t covered this in her lessons with Tenebris yet. Shit. “Waiting it out doesn’t seem… productive…”

"That’s what I’ve come to learn," he said softly, his hand pulling back from her shoulder to clench at his side. "Ah... Sating it... As in... Uhm..." Come on, say it, stupid!

“Sex?” She supplies softly, flush brightening as her pinpricks flared. Magic churned in her bones, eager and receptive to the male that it could sense standing before her. Shit. She’d made the exchange from a monthly subscription to Lucifer’s Waterfall to a randomly activated horn dog. She’s not sure which one she prefers. “I... don’t know how.” She admits softly. “I know how it works for humans, but… Your father and I hadn’t covered this in our lessons... If teaching me along the way doesn’t bother you, then I... wouldn’t mind… with you.”

He slowly let his hand loosen, and he smiled at her, before he offered her a hand. "Heh... I... May not have had a girlfriend before... But I’m willing to... try with you." he purred gently.

Her fingers came up and slipped into his. The warm food was forgotten—she wasn’t hungry anyways— and she smiles up at him compassionately. “If you get to be uncomfortable, just let me know, okay?” Shit, if he hadn’t had a girlfriend before… He was probably a virgin. He didn’t come off to her as being the type for a one-night stand. But maybe he’d done it once or twice. He’d probably been ‘handling’ heats for a while, so it was likely he knew what to do and where to touch to make it go away faster.

She eases closer to him, body language shifting from tense to receptive as she steps into his personal space. Her other hand comes to rest on his bicep. Her mind felt like there was a haze stuck in it, heavy and thick, though her thoughts remained coherent and her own. Hell. What was that smell- had Papyrus always smelled this... good?

He set his other hand on her hip as he pulled her closer, his touch nervous but amazingly gentle... "Nyeh... Heh heh... Honestly... I don’t think I’d want to... do this... with anyone else first.” he admitted, before he leaned down. His sockets slowly close as he pressed his teeth to hers in a gentle first kiss.

The kiss was a surprise, but a welcome one. She leans up as far as she can so he doesn’t have to crane so much, and kisses him tenderly. Her magic pads her fangs instinctively, making the space above them softer and suppler as she returns his gentle kiss with warm gusto. The gentle touch was needed- her hips were almost painfully sensitive. Her hand shifted, trailing from his bicep down to his ribs. Her fingers were feather light- she was a couple hours into her own, obviously, so she was hyper sore, but that didn’t mean that his own bones wouldn’t be tender even as early in as he was.

She doesn’t have to open her mouth to speak, so the kiss isn’t broken as she leans into him with a soft groan and speaks. “I don’t think I would want anyone else for this either…” She purrs.

He shivered, and broke the kiss to smile at her. "We, nyeh... we best get off our feet, so we don't collapse.” he then turned his head slightly, motioning with his chin towards the living room. "Couch?"

Couch sounded good, but what if Cae or Tenebris walked out? Eh... They would handle it as they came to it. It wasn’t like she had a room to drag him to, and if they were going to have sex, she’d rather it not be next to Tenebris’ room. Toki wasn’t always quiet, and she had an inkling that Papyrus was going to be pretty vocal. At least out here there was some space to muffle the noises. “Couch.” She agrees, finger stroking teasingly over his rib. She’d had her fair share of human lovers before- she knew how to play the seduction game. She wasn’t in flattering clothes, but that doesn’t mean she doesn’t know how to rock it.

She pulls from him, trailing her hand over his chest and up along his chin to urge him to follow. She pads away, towards the couch, with her hips swinging with each step. Hell yes, she hadn’t strutted in a long time- she felt like a giddy kid going to snog for the first time.

His body jolted as he moaned under the touch to his rib, but his form practically melted to her hand. As she guided him with her touch, he found himself following her with eagerness that wasn’t entirely the fault of the heat. He slowly came over, and sat down on the couch, before he leaned back and opened his legs a little. He then smiled at her and patted his lap.

Toki was glad she had worn her baggiest sweat pants, because they would be easy to remove come the time to do so. She shivers at his open offer, and gives him a warm smile. A rumbling rattle of a purr escapes her as she eases down over top of him, straddling his lap once more. “This is familiar,” she coos teasingly, fingers sliding up to stroke over his jaw. She tugs him in for another kiss.

He chuckled. "But this time, there's nothing to make me want to hold back from loving you.” he whispered, kissing her before he opened his mouth and let his tongue slide from behind his teeth, pressing it against her own as he purred loudly, the rattling in his bones adding to the eager noise.

Her mouth slid open when his tongue pressed to her teeth. Her magic shifted to pad those too, as her tongue worked and stroked over his own. His rattling was loud, and hers joined in with his. Her fingers slipped to the hem of his shirt, and she slid her hands up, tracing his bottom ribs gently. “Mmm... nothing to hold me back either. Don’t be afraid to touch me…” She purred. Her other hand cradled his skull, fingers tilting back to hesitantly and gently stroke over the vertebrae of his neck. She pressed to him, eager and almost hot to the touch.

That invitation was perfect for him. He ran his tongue over the front of her teeth before slipping it by them to entwine it with her own green tongue. He moaned at her touches. One hand went down to stroke over her lower spine and her femur, the other reaching up to rub the vertebrae in her neck before lowering to touch her ribs delicately. "Nnnn~"

Well that was a hot sound, holy shit. Her tongue explored outwards, brushing over his teeth as it tangled with his. He tasted refreshing, like the toothpaste he used to brush with that morning. She traced his fangs from the inside, a heated groan pulling from her. “Nn, gentle please. Spine. Tender.” She tensed as his fingers danced over her spine- it was so sore that she wasn’t sure if it felt good or felt terrible through her shirt- but that eased as his fingers found her ribs and femur. A trail of heat followed his hands, like he’d lit a fire below her clothes that couldn’t be quenched. Toki shifted, fingers stroking more firmly over the vertebrae of his neck. Her claws found the seams in the bones, dipping in and touching it delicately while her other hand curled around his lower rib and gave a soft stroke.

He nodded slowly and gave a deep throaty sound as the touch on her spine loosened enough. Watching her expression, he smiled and slowly rubbed the front of her pelvic bone. "Nyeh~"

Her hips rolled without thinking, pressing her pelvis to his fingers eagerly. Her pants blocked some of the sensation, and they were rapidly becoming a bother. Warmth bubbled under his touch, her magic sparking along her bones. The endless ache began to shift into a different sort of ache- one she hadn’t felt in a long time. It had been many years since her last lover- but one did not forget how things went. Like riding a bike, the knowledge never went away.

Toki broke the kiss, and kissed down to his neck. Her mouth replaced her fingers, sharp teeth nibbling oh so gently over his neck, and that freed up her other hand so it too could snake up the inside of his shirt. His shirt caught on the sleeves of her own, and she rattled slightly in her chest. “Shirt’s ‘n th’ way,” she mumbles, not entirely willing to lean back to have him remove it. Or to request it be removed, actually.

He leaned his head back at her kisses and gave a low sigh as he closed his eyes, before he opened them again and smiled, "As are your pants," he rumbled. "I'll take off mine if you take off yours~"

She leans back and rattles at him. Her voice is husky. “Deal,” she purrs. She leans back and curls her fingers over the edge of her shirt. But she hesitates, and takes a shuddering breath. Toki takes a moment to control her urges, and gives him a warm but serious look. “You mentioned that you haven’t ever had a girlfriend before. Doing something like this for the first time is a big thing for humans… If… you’d rather do this with your girlfriend… I wouldn’t mind being…?” She wouldn’t mind being his.

He looked down at her with slight surprise, but it quickly changed to a look of happiness. "I would love to have you as my girlfriend, Tokiko!" he beamed.

She relaxes some, and releases a hot puff of air. “Then you’ve got me.” She purrs. Her eyes soften affectionately, and she resumes easing her shirt up. It slides easily over her horns, and then she’s topless in his lap. She giggles softly. “We’re going to traumatize your father and brother if they come out here… Oh yeah, pants. Nnnng… That means I have to get up. I’m so comfortable~” She wiggles teasingly against him.

"Mm..." He slid a hand under the band of her pants, easing them down over her pelvic bones. Once they’re down to her thighs, his arm flexes and he lifts her easily while she balances with her hands on his shoulders. In a clean and easy motion, he has her pants pulled down and off of her. “Nyeh!”
She laughs, now completely bare before him. His hand on her coccyx sends pleasant flashes up her spine, and she shivers. “You are the biggest goober- and that was also really, really hot, I want you to know that.” Toki had never been manhandled like that before- she’d been bigger than most of her other lovers. Most human men couldn’t lift a woman with one hand either.

She flushes as he settles her down again, and she leans over to kiss him softly for a moment. “Mmm~” Her bare bones against the cloth of his pants feels strange, and she shifts, rolling her pelvis against his in a teasing manner. It was his first time- like hell she wasn’t going to make it a time to remember. “My turn to help you. Arms up, Aliquam.” She curls her fingers at the edge of his shirt, eyes glowing with an almost liquid emerald light.

He grinned at her, lifting his arms above his head as she requested. At the same time he took a deep breath and his chest swelled in her face.

“Fuck, you have some nice ribs,” She had not meant to say that out loud, not with his shirt up and half off over his skull and arms, but it came out anyways. She leans forward to kiss his sternum, teeth scraping gently over the broad bones, as she leaves him to free his arms and the top of his skull from his shirt. She couldn’t reach anyways, not without standing up on the couch. He was too tall. She hadn’t really seen his ribs in full before- and hot damn, they were broad and thick and Toki decided then and there that they were definitely lickable.

He laughed faintly as he struggled the rest of the way out of his shirt, before a soft, breathy moan escaped him at the attention to his sternum. Though as she moved on to assault his ribs with love he ended up arching as he let out a louder cry. "Aaahh~!"

“Shhh~” She purrs into his chest as he tosses his shirt away. “Don’t want to wake the others.” Her teeth scrape again, and her fingers curl, stroking up the insides of his ribs. Damn he had nice ribs. “Mmm… Still need to remove those pants…” One hand trailed down his ribs, and stroked over the top crests of his pelvis. She glanced down, fiddling moving to fiddle with knot holding his pants up. She caught a faint, green glow from her pelvis, and it drew her gaze with an arched brow. She leaned back, relenting on her assault as she noticed just what her magic had formed. “Huh…” Well that answered how they would be going about doing this.

He looked at her, chest heaving as with steamy breaths. By the stars, she was beautiful, perched on his lap like she was. Her chest expanding with each breath, the faint lines of scars from her bones healing over glimmering in the low light. White lines on white bones did not stand out well, but in the glow of his magic, they blossomed. Pale green tainting her cheeks, with a rich, liquid emerald lighting up her eyes… She really was a sight to behold.

He reached down and untied the string holding his sweatpants up. Aliquam slowly pushed them out of the way, lifting his hips up with her astride him without an issue, so he could slide them down fully. Though as he did, a bright orange glow began to radiate from his pelvis.

The glow took the shape of a long, glowing orange penis, standing almost at full attention as his magic took hold.

The ecto-cock- for that’s probably what it was called- was larger than she expected, and she flushed a bright green. Part of it was nerves- but the bundle of heat pooling in her nonexistent stomach knew that the other part was eagerness. Well then. She wasn’t sure why she was expecting something smaller- but hell. He was impressive. Her fingers come down, gently and shyly circling his member to give him a soft stroke. Her thumb strokes over the top, smearing the glowing orange fluid that was beading up and down the length of his shaft. She uses it to slick up her palm for better motion. The folds of her lower lips rub gently against his femurs as she uses the other hand to slide his pants all the way down. There.
Two naked skeletons sitting on a couch- that sounded like a raunchy punchline of one of Sans’ jokes.

“You’re beautiful,” she tells Papyrus firmly, giving him an affectionate look as she strokes him. And he is. He is a bold orange; slightly see through, but with what appears to be small ridges running down the bottom of his shaft. He was human shaped- but also not quite.

He smiled down at her, sighing deeply as he reached and rubbed her legs, before his hand crept closer to her own genitalia. He held her leg in one hand, hefting it up so he could get at her better, the other then reaching up and rubbing slowly against the green ecto-flesh. She was soft against his fingers, and he traced her lips with his digits. They came away sticky with luminous green fluids, and he slicked his fingers together curiously, before delving in for more.

“Holy shit,” her fingers reflexively tighten- because she hadn’t expected to feel that sensation ever again. A ragged breath steals from her chest, droplets of moisture accumulating on her bones as she exhales roughly. “Mmm… do that again?” It’s a request, even as she cradles his member in her hand. She strokes the length of his shaft, brushing her fingers along the head as she goes. He was large- and she couldn’t curl her fingers over the whole of the length. She shivers, mouth returning to press sizzling kisses against his sternum. Her eye lights find his, and they dim with heat driven lust.

He nodded slowly and rattled eagerly as his hand resumed rubbing along her crotch tenderly. His digits slowly moving to push past the outer lips to massage the inside, dipping the edge of his phalange inwards to brush the small cluster of magic at the very top.

Her legs spread instinctively as his fingers laid into her button, though there was no point. She had no thighs to block the way and restrict access. The heat in her bones raged on as she rocked slightly into his fingers. “You can go deeper,” She says softly. “Explore. It’s your first time- if you prod something wrong, I’ll let you know, I promise.” She worked slowly over his cock, her teeth scraping along his chest as she does. She kissed to the side, and, with some careful work, gently bit down on one of his ribs. Her jaw shivered, trembling over the bone in a mock vibration.

"Ahh... Oh Toki~" he purred, before he took that daring step forward and pushed so he palmed the front of her pelvis, his finger searching until it found what he supposed he was looking for. He presses his teeth to the crown of her skull, cradling his face between the rounded curve of her horns as he pushed his finger into her, going in to the knuckle, "Mmh~"

“Ahnnn…” She her hips rolled into his palm, teeth reflexively biting down on his rib as he sent lightning racing up her spine. She soothed her tongue over it apologetically as she trembled, fingers flexing around his member. “Gods above Aliquam, are you sure you haven’t done this before?”

His eye flashed as he whined out loudly at the bite, though he then smiled down at her. "Nyeh... I... Uh-huh, h-haven't..."

She releases him from the bite, and leans up to yank him down into a kiss. “I was teasing,” She coos softly. Toki rolls her hips down onto his finger, and rubs her pelvis into his palm. She was warm and slick- and part of that was because of the nature of her created organ. Heat knotted in her middle- his fingers felt amazing, but it wasn’t what she was craving.

Her walls were soft and made of magic- it was little thought that the slick surface could easily stretch to accommodate his size. “You ready for more…?”

His fingers flexed once, and then slowly pulled out as he gripped her hips. "Y-yes." he purred softly. Cowboy style it was. She shifted, leaning up on her knees so she could scoot closer. She tugs slightly on his hips so he slides into a slouch, and closer to her own height so she can steal a searing kiss. Flashes of light fly away from where her teeth meet his as the friction from her kiss causes literal sparks to fly. Toki eases up, fingers holding him and guiding him straight. She winks at him, and licks her fangs with her tongue as she lines up.

Her mouth falls to clavicle, kissing and nibbling over it as she eases herself down onto his length. Gripping her hips, Aliquam moaned as he helped her ease down onto his cock. Making sure not to go too fast despite the eagerness they both showed signs of having, his hands gripped her hips firmly as he guided her down.

"Oh... oh my... ah... Toki..."

Going slowly makes her whine slightly- he felt good, hot and thick and where he slid in, the ache in her bones physically eased- but she doesn’t fight the control of his hands. She rolls her hips slightly, walls fluttering around him in responses that came from having experience as being a human. She trembles, easing down slowly, so painfully slow, until her pelvis meets his.

He is large- larger than she had estimated. If she had been human, been confined to the same limits as mortal flesh, there would have been no way to get him seated in her. He was too large all around, both in length and in girth. But this- this was bliss. A throaty moan pulls from her, and she tucks her face into his chest. Her fingers curl around his ribs, taking hold as she shakes like a leaf in the wind. “Oh gods,” she groans. “Mmm…” he presses against every spot she’s ever had. He was going to drive her insane.

He was too large in the torso area to properly bend him body at this current angle, but he was happy with kissing her head as he continued to move her. "Aah... it... it feels so good, Toki," he purred into the side of her skull.

She shifted, legs tensing, and then lifted off. She set into a slow ride, her hips rolling against him as her fingers set to work stroking his ribs. The size of his upper body made this a little hard, but unless he flipped them over so he took top, she’d have to do the hard work this time. She panted, eyes glowing bright as she trembled against him. She had the urge to bite down, but Toki resisted. She never used to be a biter- and she wasn’t about to break off her teeth gnawing on his bones.

No- she focused instead on kissing every inch she could reach, panting into his ribs as she bobs up and down on his member. “If you,” she pants, “want to take control, just follow your instincts. If not… Mmm, I’m good here~”

His arms wrapped around her as he helped her bounce, but after a few delicious bounces, he nuzzled her, "C-Can I move you?" he asked softly.

“Feel f-free,” she purrs. She shifts, pausing in her bouncing to give him the chance to do what he felt was right.

He slowly lifted her off, whining in tandem with her as he did, because he too was loathe to leave the warm, wet heat that had him harder than the bones he could summon. He shifted them both off of the couch, before turning and setting her stomach-down on the couch, her hips hanging off of it.

He moved to his knees behind her, and felt it now much easier to press back against her body. "Mmmh~ This works... sooo much better." he cooed, before he gripped his cock, aligning it to the silky glow of her passage once he was comfortable again. "Ready?" he whispered.

She hadn’t imagined being pinned like so, with her front pressed to the seat of the couch. But it felt good, and she stretched on her toes, angling to present herself better. Her lower back arched, and she shot him a sultry glance over her shoulder. Her soul thrummed rapidly in her chest. “More than ready~” She groans. She missed him inside of her already. He was heat and light and warmth and she needed more of him now.

His eye glowed eagerly as he leaned down, pressing his torso over the small of her back, it allowed him to lean in and kiss over her neck and head before he gave a gentle bite to her shoulder as he pressed his hips to hers. His cock slowly pushing back inside with a wet, satisfying sound, and the Skeleton gave a tremulous moan. "Nnnhh~"

Her mouth opened with a heated pant, eyes glimmering brightly with her magic. She was effectively pinned; hands splayed across the couch to keep herself steady as he slowly sank into her folds, his rib cage keeping her back settled in one spot. He was just as hot, just as thick, but this angle… Oh this angle, it made the small ridges of his cock slide and drag against so many nerves she thought she didn’t have anymore. One of her hands comes to her mouth, and she bites down on it just as he had to her scapula. Her teeth gnash, sending sparks over her bones as her moan floats up from inside of her ribs. “Nnn, fuck, Pap.”

He nuzzled her gently, bite loosening to place a few chaste kisses up and down her spine. Aliquam chuckled at her reflexive moan as he began to move his hips. He found the position afforded him an ease of motion that he was missing before. His pace began to pick up, pelvis clacking loudly as each thrust brought their bones together.

He slid in and out of her smoothly, her body stretching around him. Toki’s walls quivered, clinging to him and trying to hold him firm. Each clack of his bones against her own was a spike of agonizing need that got sent straight up her spine. Pinned as she was, she was stuck panting under the heat of his body. Her free hand sought his own, and she twined her fingers with his to keep her anchored while her teeth bit down harder into her arm.

He wrapped his hand around hers tightly, lacing their fingers as he drove her into the cushions. Aliquam moaned in her ear, his thrusts speeding up as his edge came closer. "Tokiko~"

“Papyrus,” his name was echoed from her throat, her mouth falling open into a shaky pant. She trembled, her magic building in her middle like a rising tidal wave. It was tightly coiled, like a snake ready to strike, and the coil just kept getting tighter and tighter in her middle. Her free hand scrabbled at the couch, seeking that final edge to send her over. He kept pounding her sensitive spots over and over, her walls clenching at him, milking his magic for what it would give, and yet it wasn’t enough, it wasn’t enough to sate the burning warmth that seared her soul from the inside. “Nnnhnn.”

His other arm looped under her torso to grip at her shoulder, holding her tighter as he seemed to give in, "Hhhaahhh... T-Toki!" he cried out, "I... Something’s... A-A feeling’s... growing... I-inside me...!"

“S-saaa release.” She hisses, her teeth sparking again. Fuckfuckfuckfuckfuck aghnnn- her edge wouldn’t come fast enough. Her clawspoke holes in the couch and she growls, the back of her ribs vibrating up against his chest. “Fuuuuuck…”

"T-Toki...Toki...!" he whined loudly before he pressed his face into her back and cried out loudly as a few harder thrusts ended in a release for him, he howled out in bliss as his hold on her hand tightened, and he came off the high slowly, trembling as he slumped over her, "... hhhnnn..."

Papyrus couldn't be reached, please leave a message.

She felt him flood her with his release, his last few frantic thrusts not enough to toss her over. Fuck. She groaned as he tightened around her, deafening her with his howl of bliss, and slumped tiredly into the couch. The burning ache of her bones persisted, with him still buried deep inside of her- but fuck all, she hadn’t come either.

She took a deep, slightly frustrated breath, and exhaled into the cushion. It was his first time. It couldn’t be blamed on him for that.

Papyrus wouldn’t admit it but he was definitely drooling as he laid over her, letting out soft ‘nyeh’s between every few pants.

Toki shivers because she can feel that drool pooling on her shoulder blades, as it is colder than the rest of her bones. Her fingers loosen, letting his larger hand dwarf her own as she forces her body to relax. He is still warm, pressed flush to her, and her soul’s aura thrums loudly with bone-weary need for more. His seed is warm in her belly, but it does little to soothe that need.

"Nyeh..." he kissed her bones softly after recovering long enough and he smiled down at her, "W-Wowie..."

She peered up at him through one fevered socket, her bones trembling under the waves of heat. Gods above- this was so not fair. She didn’t want to discourage him, no matter how badly she ached. For his first try, he had done remarkably well. Just… not long enough. “Haah… You… You did good,” she pants, turning her palm to cradle his hand in her own again. Fuck. Fuckfuckfuckfuckfuck.

"Nyeh... I... heh... Wowie...." he purred as he squeezed her hand.

His purr resonated against her spine, and she keened heatedly, fingers curling tightly against his own. Her hips rocked slowly back into his instinctively. “You, ah, good for another round…?” Please say yes… please to the stars above…

"G-Give me a moment... and I’ll be okay." he purred gently.

A moment. A moment. She… She could wait a moment, right? Fuck. She lets off a soft groan and hides her face in the seat. She doesn’t say a word.

He leaned back and sighed tiredly, before he slowly lifted himself up... After a moment, he smiled down at her and pushed his hips, grinding against her internals as their hips rubbed.

A moan is torn from her, muffled by the couch. As he lifts himself up, she finds herself able to lean shakily onto her elbows… Up until he grinds against her, and sends her into shaky gasps. Gods above she needed it so bad that it almost hurt. “Nnnnn.” She rocks back against him with a needy noise.

He kissed her head gently then he began to rock his hips gradually. His kisses trailed into soft nips, and laps with his tongue as he cleaned up the backs of her shoulders. Slowly he was speeding up, until he was thrusting into her again at the same pace as before. His sighs rang in her ears.

Her sounds echoed back to him, pleased sighs growing louder and louder as her edge was brought back. That coil tightened more and more in her middle, winding tighter and tighter until she felt like she might snap in two. “P-Papyrus!” His name fell from her mouth, her pants nearly producing steam as her claws wore away at the plush surface.

"Oh come on, I like that couch." Papyrus jumped hard and looked up to find Cae grinning as he leaned against the banister of the staircase.

"B-BROTHER?!”
As Papyrus stopped again—because of Cae—Toki found herself snarling loudly into the couch. GOD DAMMIT. AGAIN. “I’ll buy you a new one,” she growls, bright green eyes flicking up to the elder brother against the banister.

"Well shit, Toki, I’ll admit that looks really fuckin’ hot... Introducing my brother to sex, huh? Frankly, I don’t think there's a better candidate for his V-card than you."

Her fingers curl into the couch, and there is a ripping sound as her claws pop right through it. She’d fucking fix it later. Her mouth opens, and it is not a pretty sight as smoke curls out from between her teeth with her growl. She’s beginning to think that bleeding out quarts of blood for a week is more merciful than this. “Normally I’d say I’m honored,” she huffs, bones rattling with that god-awful coil of need strangling her soul, “but this heat thing is bullshit and I am growing more and more frustrated.” And silently she wishes Cae catches it, so his smug ass has to handle the aches and pains too.

He chuckled and shook his head. "Right... well I’m going back to bed, you two enjoy yourself, just don’t wake dad. Or else you're both gonna pay for it."

At this point anything would make it better. Tenebris didn't scare her. He’d probably be mortified if he woke up and saw this. “I will see you later,” she hisses in turn. Her eyes flash as she glances back at Papyrus, and then she’s rumbling at him softly. Not quite the same rumbling threat she’d issued to Cae—no, this was a ‘if you stop now, we are going to have problems’ sort of rumble.

He looked at her, then he smiled, and he pulled back, his cock falling out of her, only long enough for him to roll her over though, "Nyeh heh heh~"

The new position pleased her, and her mouth descended upon his neck with ravenous intent. Her fangs nipped and nibbled, her tongue flicking over any scratches she might cause. Her fingers curl around his ribs and stroke them boldly, urging him to do the same as she hooks her legs over his hips firmly. No escape now.

He groaned and growled softly as he quickly moved back into position, pushing in with little hesitation, "Nyeh~" he hissed softly and pulled her close, before he reached up and grabbed her shoulders, pushing her back onto the couch as he started moving again, his right eye socket was bright orange, the left completely empty.

That was hot, and she wasn’t even surprised that she needed that right now. As he pushed her back into the couch, she kept herself in place with her hands and her own grip on him, mouth working at his neck. She found a spot against one of his vertebrae, planted her mouth, and sucked as her walls clamped around his cock. She rocked and rolled her hips, rolling her bones against his own for the pure friction fire that burned over her afterwards.

The coil burned brighter and brighter, until she thought it might consume her.

He tensed up and growled again as he shuttered roughly, "Oh S-Stars..." he moaned loudly, his hips picking up pace after only a short time, "Toki~" he mewled.

His sounds, his motions, it only spurred her on. When she thought the coil could get no tighter— it finally snapped. Her magic washed over her and flooded the room, and her teeth clamped down on his neck with a vice grip while her claws grasped his ribs like they were a lifeline. The sharp fangs dug in, and his name burst from behind them in a high cry as she clamped around his member in pulsating waves. “PAPYRUS!”
He yelled out in pain but the thrill of the pain sent a zap up Aliquam's spine. His eye socket flashed brightly as he slammed deep and bit hard onto her shoulder as he filled her with yet another round of orange cum, filling her channel until it was gushing out of her. He couldn't find his words, couldn't scream her name... he could only scream in mind-blowing bliss as he rode this harder climax out.

His teeth dented her bones, but fuck if that wasn’t hot and didn’t make that overwhelming sensation linger.

Like all good highs though, it ebbed off, taking some of the frantic frenzied haze that had stolen her mind. She panted against him, trembling and feeling like a battered leaf in the wind. She could taste bone in her mouth, she noted almost lazily, and a rumbling purr pulled from her as she clung to him. Her tongue lathed over his neck as her teeth released, showing faint holes in the bone where she had literally bitten him. At the center of the bite mark was a dark bruise.

She simply purred, pleased on some instinctual level with this.

He panted softly and he nuzzled her. "Nyeh... nyeh~"

“Heh,” she nuzzles him in turn, mouth closing now that she had layered his bite in her saliva. “Mmn... That was... Wowie.”

He blinked once, then giggled quietly as he leaned back to kiss the crown of her head.

“Mm... M’tired... Th’ burns still there though... When’s th’ heat go ‘way?” She’s not whining-instead, the husky quality of her voice lends her the appearance of being well shagged. She might have only gone once- but it had been a doozy.

"A few days... Maybe?” he whined softly, "I hope I h-helped..."

Days? Shit... She didn’t think she could go through that many more times. That was more intense than what most humans went through. She nuzzles up under his chin, chest rattling with a pleased and temporarily sated purr. “You did,” she murmers, clearing her voice so she can talk smoother. “You really did... I’m sorry I bit you so hard. I... was a bit of a savage, wasn’t I?”

"Likewise with you! Your shoulder!"

“IT hurts a little bit, but it feels good too.” She admits quietly. Her fingers loosen from him and come up to brush the bite. It stings- but it doesn’t feel nearly half as bad as her own looked on him. He had blunt teeth and two fangs- she had a mouth full of the latter.

Her fingers trembled with an embarrassing quaver, and she shivered against him. “Mmmn... If this is going to keep happening,” she rasps, “we’re going to need to eat something to keep up our energy. Or at least I am. I don’t know about you.” Her magic had saturated the room- and she felt slightly depleted.

He nodded slightly and hugged her gently as he slowly moved his hips back, "A-ah...”

As he eased out of her, she winced slightly. Gods above, she felt like she’d been rode hard and put away wet. And, looking down at the mess of her thighs and the still-there green glow of her nether bits, she probably had. “Mmn... I don’t know about you, but I feel super sore... but in a good way.” She wondered if her legs would even work.

He giggled quietly and carefully lifted her up onto the couch, before he sat beside her head, his magic fading away and letting him calm down.
Hers didn’t really fade so much as the tenderness eased. She was stained some strange colors between the green and orange fluid from the both of them- and there was no way she was going to put on clothes if this was going to happen again. She shifted on the couch, and eased her way into a sitting position, and then working to stand. “Hell, I need coffee after this… You want some?” Even tea would work.

"Mmmm... Got any juice?" he asked quietly.

She wobbled to her feet, her legs quaking like a newborn fawns. She shivers, magic tingling over her bones as she wobbles. “I think so. Will apple juice work?” She braces on his shoulder for a moment, and then goes to ease herself around the couch. Fuck it all, Cae had already seen her spread wide with his brother spearing her. At this point, she could walk to the kitchen in the nude all she wanted.

He nodded slowly, smiling after her.

She wobbles into the kitchen, eyes zeroed in on the fridge. Juice for Pap. Coffee for herself- or maybe just some of the tea from before. She could just reheat it with magic. Yessss. Less effort spent for the same pleasant effect.

As she collected her drinks, there were soft footsteps coming from upstairs, trudging down the staircase with the occasional soft thud.

The footsteps didn’t even register. She was busy pouring a glass of juice and trying to not drop the bottle with her trembles.

After draping a cover over Quinn, the form walked over to the kitchen, eyes half-lidded as he grumbled softly.

There would be a naked Toki putting the apple juice in the fridge, and then padding back to lazily attempt to warm up her tea. Attempting being the key. Her magic isn’t wanting to respond right away.

"... Ten seconds in the microwave... put it in a mug first."

She startles, and glances back to see... fuck, it’s Gaster. “Uh… Thanks…” She mumbles. She does as told, and wobbles to the microwave. It’s tucked in, and she grumbles about her magic being so easy to stir up earlier as she turns the microwave on. “Mnnng. I had breakfast for everyone earlier, but it’s gone cold now.”

"It's almost 5am..."

“Well that explains why no one was up and it was dark outside.” She rubs her arm, shivering. The timer beeps, and she collects her tea. The mug is hot, and it makes her bones ache with relief. “Heh. Well, I feel slightly silly. I guess I can just remake breakfast if you’re, ah, hungry…” She certainly wasn’t desperate enough to eat cold eggs. Or reheated eggs for that matter.

"Mnn.. No need." he rumbled softly, "Just came to see why my son was screaming... Glad to see you two are getting along at this point..."

She flinched, but didn’t back down from his grumpy rumble. “Sorry about the noise. Not gonna lie though.” She holds her fingers out and pinches them together. “I’m a smidge irritated at you. You don’t think learning about heats was a wee bit more important than learning about what to do if you can’t find a limb that’s popped off?”

"I didn't expect it to come to you this early. At least we know the expected start date of your heating “Dude. Just… Dude. I traded a monthly subscription to Lucifer’s waterfall to become a horny harpy for a couple days. Definitely something I’d consider important- wait, cycle? They fall on specific dates?” Shit.

"Indeed. They vary greatly between each species of monsters."

She stares at him and sighs through her fangs. “This would have been helpful to know. I literally thought I caught a cold from yesterday. Papyrus had to explain it to me.” Which was awkward in itself- speaking of Papyrus, she had juice to bring to him. Juice, and a once more growing burning sensation deep in her bones. “Is there any way to stop these? These are ridiculous. I snarled at Cae like some sex crazed fiend, Tenebris. I don’t snarl at good people like that. That’s just not normal.”

"Yours will be especially rough to deal with, the boys have had theirs before, but this is your first, and you're well into adulthood. As you must have already seen, the best way to relieve the heat is sexual activity."

She stares at him more. “That sounds completely unpleasant. So I’m going to want to jump someone’s bones every time? Great… Like I said, any way to stop it? Everyone gets it, so there has to be some way to make it skip a cycle or seven, right…?” Everyone had to, she figured. She paused, and squinted at him. “I brought Papyrus into his. Please tell me I’m not going to do that to you. That would be really, really awkward.”

"… You would not stand a chance against me when I am in heat, Miss Tokiko." he doesn't answer her question, his tail swaying behind him.

The vertebrae on the back of her neck rattled slightly and she clutched her mug of tea tighter. “You did not answer my question, his tail swaying behind him.

The vertebrae on the back of her neck rattled slightly and she clutched her mug of tea tighter. “You did not answer my question.”

He retained silence this time, but there was a faint sound.

Rattling.

His tail swayed back and forth, the vertebrae rattling on it.

Her mother always did say she had balls of steel. Toki swallows, but casually sips her tea. The rattling makes her own bones answer, and she rumbles in irritation at the noises she makes. She fixes him with a flat stare, looking deliberately unimpressed.

He seemed to stay engaged in the stare-down with her for a while, but after long enough the silence lowered over his tail once more as it rested its blade against the ground. "It is not your concern." he then stepped forward and picked up the glass of juice. "Aliquam is passed out on the couch, he won't mind if I take this."

She is proud to say that she did not back down against the stare and the rattling of the much larger monster. But… Shit. Aliquam was asleep? Ugh. Shower time it was then. She dips her chin to him, and finishes her tea in one quick gulp. He could be slightly scary, she admits to herself. But the chances of her admitting it to anyone else were slim. “Not my concern my ass…” She mutters to herself. Like hell she wants to trigger others- hell, she’d go spend days in the shed if it meant not bringing everyone into this blasted heat. “Go for it. I’ll get him another one when he wakes up. Lucky pluck.” He was asleep. Not freaking fair.

He snorted softly in amusement and drank the juice before setting the cup by the sink. He yawned. "I'm going back to bed. See about getting some more sleep as well, Tokiko, you've a long day ahead.
of you."

She grits her teeth hard enough for sparks to fly. "If this infernal burning in my bones wasn’t creeping back, I would probably fall asleep right here on this floor. As it is, I’m going to go take the worlds coldest shower. Enjoy your sleep, Tenebris. You might not get much of it." She was loud.

"Mmm... you enjoy that" he chuckled quietly, "I’ll see you later then." he then glanced back at her as his purple eyes began to glow, "I certainly hope you will control yourself enough, I do not like being disturbed when I rest."

“And I’m not fond of being kept unaware of major things like this. I guess everyone gets disappointed by life sometimes, Tenny.” She sniffs and turns her back on him to rinse out her mug.

His eyes glowed brighter, a dark promise in the dark purple haze, and his tail lashed out, the blade of his tail tipping her chin up, to face him. "Watch yourself, Nara." he growled lowly, before he slipped the blade away from her chin as he walked out.

She will never admit that he was probably scarier than she previously thought, and that such a blatant threat had sent her magic churning heatedly through her bones in a way that was decidedly not fear.
Nope. This was not okay. Not okay at all. Still, she steels her nerve and manages to watch him leave the room without showing her nerves. When he’s gone, she deflates, trembling faintly in place. Holy fuck. Where was her brain to mouth filter at? Holy shit she had been rude, she’d need to apologize when she wasn’t in a complete shitstorm of a mood.

She stumbles to the fridge, fetches more juice, and takes it out in the living room. It’s left on the side table for Papyrus, before she wobbles for the bathroom. She needs a shower. A long one fucking one.

The cold doesn’t help one bit, but it does keep the heat from overwhelming her again. She fills the rather large tub full of the coldest water she can get, and submerges as much as she can. It’s fucking cold- but it works well enough to keep her calm and in her right mind.

And she ends up passing out in the ice bath, curled up and dreaming of lewd things.
Holy shit. What had happened? All Quinn could remember was the feeling of heat, and a mindless need before- stars above, why the hell does his neck hurt so badly?

Not yet sitting up, Aliquam reached up and set a hand on his neck over where he discovered there to be a bite. The holes were large, spaced apart evenly. The holes on the top were positioned with the holes in the bottom directly filling the gaps. But where did it come from...

It came back to him as he sat up, hitting him like a freight train. He and Toki...

Toki...!

He slowly got up from the couch, shivering at the chill of the air, before he looked down to realize he was undressed and had marks of last night's fun scarring his body as well as staining it. He grimaced at the tie-dye mishmash of colors that covered his pelvis and parts of his thighs. Green and orange were most prevalent, but the stains also mixed into strange color.

Papyrus stretched, noting that his bones ached. He needed a shower to remove the stains- but first. That glass of juice on the table looked heavenly. He took it and downed it, relishing the room-temperature liquid that quenched his mouth.

The empty glass is set back onto the side table.

He heads upstairs to the bathroom and eases the door open. A wall of steam scours over him, and he takes a step back to fan it out of his face.

"T-Tokiko? Are you in there?" he entered once the steam had cleared and he walked to the bathtub, pulling back the curtain.

She would be limp in the tub, the water boiling around her like a kettle someone had left on the stove for too long. Her sockets would be closed, arms crossed over her chest, and her legs akimbo in what little remained of the water. Where she had been up to her chin before, the water barely covered her pelvis.
Her soft snores filled the air above the sound of boiling water.

Were he not aware of her element, he would have panicked.

That didn't stop him from doing it anyways. "TOKI!" he immediately turned on the cold water to counteract the boiling and whined worriedly as he used the extendable showerhead to run the cold water over her bones.

She jerked awake with a crack of bone on porcelain, her elbow slamming into the heated ceramic as cold as balls fucking water jerked her into awareness. Green floods her sockets as they jerk open, and she thrashes blearily in the hot water. The new water was cold and it hissed as it struck her heated bones. Her arms flailed defensively as she curled into herself. “Ack- Pap? Pap- Pap no, why, that's cold oh my god!”

"You've been boiling in the tub for hours!" he whined loudly, "Are you okay?!"

She sputters and flails again, this time opting to fling herself out of the tub. She drips on the floor as she stumbles to her feet, and flicks her gaze down to the tub. Oh. Oh wow, it really was boiling. Her teeth clack together, too wet to produce sparks, and she sighs. “I’m alright, Pap. I forgot- my magic heats water when I sit in it. It’s… a little out of control right now, to be honest.”

He turned the water flow back to the faucet as to allow it to fill the tub with cold water to null out the boiling water, and then he sighed. "Well… it's a good thing Father got something... well... heat proof..." he murmured, before looking at her, his own pain was now overlooked in his worry for her. "I can tell..." he sighed, "We both have that problem..."

She shivers as the hot water is rapidly diluted with cold. Her bones rattle- and now that she’s awake and aware, that gnawing feeling inside of her bones begins to grow. Mentioning Gaster makes her flush, and she glances away awkwardly. "We, ah, woke your dad with our activities. It was probably the most awkward moment ever in the kitchen.” Still she grimaces slightly, and motions for him to step in. “The cold water wont help with the heat, I’ve found. But it will help keep it from getting worse. Ah… ‘s not good for scrubbing though.” She motions to his pelvis with a flush. At least all of her stains had boiled away with the steam that rolled off of her bones. “I could help you clean off though, if you’d like…” Heating a washcloth with her hands would be easy enough.

Though his blush had faded with the sudden jolt of worry, Aliquam felt the heat returning to his cheeks at her offer. "I... ah... heh... I wouldn’t... Mind it~" he admitted, "I mean... ah..." he turned away, covering his mouth with his hand as he averted his gaze.

“I wouldn’t mind helping.” While her mind was still clear, she owed him for the… rather rough use she put him to for his first time. She fetched a washcloth from under the sink, and approached the tub. “Go ahead and get comfortable. Ah… don’t be embarrassed of anything that happens either, Pap. I’ll try to be gentle, but… well, y’know.” Cloth on bone was either pleasurable or painful at this point- there was no in-between. She kneels next to the tub, a flush blooming across her cheeks as she dips the cloth into the colder water. Her pinpricks flick up to his neck, and her smile sinks. “I really did bite you hard. I’m so sorry- that has to hurt really bad.”

He looked at her and he reached up to touch his neck. "Ah, so that’s why that stings... hahaha, no problem, my dear!” he then climbed into the bathtub, sighing at the comfortable temperature of the water once he turned the faucet off.

The tub was still large for even him, and she leaned against the edge with a smile. “That would be why it stings. It’s, ah, bruised too. I didn’t know bone could bruise.” Her fingers brush her own bite, and she grins. “To be fair, you gave as good as you got. You’re just lacking distinctly in the fang area— so you didn’t leave as many holes.”

She dips the cloth into the water again, her hand pulsing with magic to warm it up, and then reaches out to begin cleaning his pelvis and femurs gently. Her flush grows, because she knows exactly where she’s scrubbing, and the chill of the room has nothing on the heat that bubbles in her marrow.

"Mmmh..." he listened to her the best he could before his eyes closed and he leaned his head back, moaning breathily at the touches to his sensitive bones.

Well that was doing things to her libido. She continues cleaning him with one hand, while the other eases his arm up and out of the water. She stretches his hand out, and peppers soft kisses up the back of his radius. “Feel good?”

He moaned again, his other hand gripping his knee. "Ah... yes, it does. Don’t stop now, please.”

“Of course.” Her mouth peppered soft kisses up and down his arm, and she forced the haze to stay out of her mind. Her teeth parted, and she nibbled gingerly up his arm, soothing it away with a slow lick of her tongue.

His pelvis was returning to its original color, so there was that. She worked over his bones carefully, keeping the water near his hips warm so the stains came off faster. Soon he was spotless, femurs and all. All evidence of their fun was washed away into the water.

He was shivering by the end of it, long legs trembling in the bath. "Hah... nyeh... Heh..." he smiled up at her, "Th-Thank you.”

She smiled back at him warmly, and kissed right up his arm again. She nibbled over his humerus, trailing kisses up to his shoulder as she leaned on the tub. “I’m glad I could help.” Her fingers still stroked over his pelvis, abandoning the washcloth to let it float in the water. The water around her hand was heating up, but her magic wouldn’t draw inwards to make it stop.

“Ah... Shit. I’m sorry.” She leans back and takes a deep breath to steady herself, removing her hands and leaving him be. He was new to this- he was new to sex and to sexual acts, and she needed to take it easy with him. It was spur of the moment becoming his girlfriend, and she needed to make sure to remember to treat him better. Being overbearing, heat or not, was not acceptable; not when Papyrus seemed the type to date for a while before getting to what they essentially leapt headlong into. “Sorry. You’re probably tired and sore from before. I’ll let you soak- I tend to heat up the water anyways.”

"Nyeh... could... you stay?” he asked quietly, his hand snagging her own before she can pull fully away. "We can refill the tub where it's needed, but... I'd really like to keep you.”

“Keep me, huh?” She relents, and leans quietly against the tub. Her fingers rub soothing circles into his, and she sighs softly. “I’ll stay. For as long as I can, anyways. This heat is… It's hard to fight it.” She still reclines against the outside of the tub, and props her cheek on her palm. Her elbow rests on the rim, supporting her head. “Did you sleep well? Your dad told me you were asleep on the couch when he came down stairs.”

He nodded slowly, smiling gently as he stroked her head with his other hand. "I did, I hope you did too..."

She smiles softly and nuzzles into his palm. “I was sleeping well enough- as good as one can in a bathtub. I was really cold when I went to sleep… But I guess I boiled the water away.”

"Mmm-hmm.” he watched her, and then he sighed and smiled. "You're so warm~"
“I’m always warm.” Her eyes glow brightly at him, and she presses a soft kiss to his palm. She nuzzled her skull closer and sighed. “The heat makes it worse though. I am too warm. It burns, and not in a good way. Isn’t it like that for you?”

"The heat makes it hard, but being you’re a skeleton with fire magic, that may be further reason as to your high temperature," he explained softly.

She groans quietly and rests her skull on the warm porcelain. “Higher temperature and apparently aggression.” The last part is muttered more to herself than to him.

"What was that?" he inquired.

“Ah… shit…” She frees her hand from his to scrub her face with a sigh. “It, ah… makes me a bit of an asshole? I was really… sassy with your dad, and I am never usually sassy. I think I really irritated him.” To be fair, she had been, and still was, vastly irritated with Tenebris over that whole thing.

"Oh...." he then smiled, "Don’t worry, Toki, he won’t stay mad at you, especially if this was when he was tired."

She gives Pap a faint smile, but it’s slightly forced. “I dunno, Pap. I ah… well, he put that nifty looking tail scythe to my chin and told me to watch myself. I think he was sufficiently pissed off when his little intimidation attempt with his tail rattling didn’t work.”

"Intimidation?" he blinked, "Heh... That’s only one reason his tail rattles, so you may be mistaking it for another reason for it to!"

“I am not well versed in your father’s body language.” She points out. “He’s usually much more put together- even with his morning grumpies. And, ah… Well to be fair, I’m usually not so much of a bitch either.” She shakes her head.

The burning heat in her middle scorches through her in a reminder, and she drops an arm to curl it around her ribs. “Ugh… Think if I went and laid in the snow, it would make the heat stop?”

"Not sure... But let me know if it works." he whined quietly.

The green glow is edging back into view between her legs, and she presses her legs tightly together. "Somehow I think it wont. If… If you want me to relieve some of your…" She wiggles her fingers at him. “I wouldn’t mind. I know a bit about sex… You might have some fun with it.”

He blinked, then he shivered and he looked away. "A-Are you sure....?"

“If you’re not comfortable with it, we don’t have to. I… was rougher with you for your first time than I should have been. Normally I’m not rough at all with anyone…” She grimaces slightly. “But I am sure. If you’d like… I wouldn’t mind.” She might have to get creative- because her teeth would cause problems. But an open mouth and her tongue should do.

"Nyeh~" he smiled, "I... Would appreciate it.”

She smiles warmly and nods. The easiest method for this would be achieved by clamoring into the bath with him at this point… Settling between his legs would be easy enough, and she didn’t actually need air.

She shifts and stands, stepping one foot into the tub. Toki leans down to ease his legs apart so she can settle on her knees before him. The water is cold compared to the warmth of her bones, but it feels strangely nice. Her fingers trail up his femurs, stroking with silent appreciation for the sturdy bones. She eases up to his pelvis, and rubs her finger tips over where his member would appear once sufficiently aroused.

He shivered and rested his head on his arms. "Aahhh... Hnn~" he then rocked his hips gently into her touch, "Nnh~ ah"

She smiled at him slightly, eyes glowing warmly. Her teeth part, and she leans forwards to brush them in kisses up his femurs. She goes slowly, until they finally brush against his pelvis. The water feels strange on her face, but it doesn’t bother her as she scrapes her teeth gently where her fingers had been. She forces her magic around her teeth, creating a soft barrier between the sharp edges and whatever she touches. Her tongue forms, and her mouth parts so she can drag it over his bones.

Compared to the water, her tongue would feel like liquid fire, burning in the most pleasant of ways. "O-Oh Stars...!" he whined quietly, seeming to enjoy the sensation enough, as magic pooled in his socket. And his crotch.

"Nyeh~" he looked down at her as the cock came into existence, twitching lightly as it hardened.

It very nearly appeared in her mouth, which could have been bad. She eyes him lightly, taking a moment to appreciate him. He was just as large and long as she remembered, and she rattled a purr before leaning down. She wasn’t sure how much of him she could take- so she’d save that for last.

Her mouth opens wider, and her tongue licks upwards from the base. Fingers clutching his hips to keep him close, Toki lets her sockets close as she savors him. He doesn’t really taste like much- but she can mostly taste the hot water. Kisses are peppered up the shaft, and she hums under the surface of the water, slowly swirling her tongue around the head. She went slow- because she didn’t want him to panic over her teeth.

"O-Ohhh..." he didn't seem to care enough about her teeth, she was being careful and knew well enough what she was doing, so he was more than content to simply enjoy.

Enjoy he would. She opened her mouth wider, eyes lighting up a bright green as she forcibly focuses her magic. Her teeth are dulled drastically, so that the edges don’t even bother him as she eases her mouth down around his member. Her tongue swirls, and she sucks teasingly on the end of him for a moment. Rather than work him deeper, she pops free, and works herself back down his shaft yet again. "You like?" her voice is garbled slightly under the water, but it rumbles up her bones and into his cock. Thank the stars for not needing air- she would be suffocating by now if she did.

"Yes... Yes... oh god yes~" he moaned gently, reaching to set a hand on her head.

She purred against him, and nudged his fingers with her horns. They were there for a reason- he was welcome to hold onto them if he liked. Her mouth bobbed down again, and she teased a molten kiss up the length of his shaft. Her tongue swirled around him again, and then she abandoned his shaft to teasingly kiss at his femurs. Toki worked her tongue against the joint of his hip, the green of her eyes round and mischievous in her sockets.

"T-Toki~" indeed he ended up gripping a horn as he rocked his hips, "Nyeh...; aahh."

Her mouth nips gently along his leg, sucking faintly on the bone. She didn’t want to bruise- not this time, not with the one so prominent in the bite ring on his neck- but she wanted to drive him a little bit crazy. His noises were going straight to her pelvis, and the water around her was heating up. Her head leans into his hand, and she daringly returns to his cock. Her mouth takes his head in once more, and she slowly slides him further. Her jaw can’t open nearly as wide as she would like- but she would go as far as possible, wrapping her tongue around him as she goes. The ecto-organ pulses around him, creating a false ‘throat’ with which to massage and stroke him with.

He jolted hard and his mouth fell open. Papyrus gasped loudly. "Aaaahhh~ T-Toki! Nyeh... ahh, it feels so... nnnh~"

“I know,” She purrs. It was nice, she muses, not having to use her mouth to speak. It was full anyways. She couldn’t take all of him in- her skull wasn’t nearly large enough to house him. She stopped about midway down the shaft, gave a pout, and then set a swiftly bobbing pace. Occasionally she would let her blunted teeth scrape up along his shaft as she listened to his moans and gasps.

"Aaahhh~!” he yelped and whines out blissfully as he looked down at her, "Ooooh G-Goodness! You're... ahh... It... it feels good~!” he whined.

She winks up at him. This she had a lot of practice with. Her last attempt at a relationship had her learning more than she wanted to about blowing someone. His favorite thing had been similar to this. At least the information was going to good use. “As it should.” She rumbles softly. Her tongue squeezes around him faintly, constricting in a mockery of a swallow. Her fingers start to play with the back of his pelvis, trailing up and down the curves of his iliac crests. She brushes over his tailbone too, exploring as he enjoyed himself.

Aliquam mewled as his tailbone was touched. His hips jerked slightly in her hold, and his fingers stroked up the length of her horn. “Nng…”

Her horns weren’t quite as sensitive as the rest of her, but it still felt nice with his bones sliding over one of them. His eagerness was adorable, and she kept up her touches as her head bobbed more. His arousal was tingling over her senses, making the pulsing heat between her legs that much worse. But she could wait- this, this was worth waiting for. Making him feel good made her feel good. “You’re doing so good,” she praises warmly. One of her hands abandons his hips to circle around as much of the base of his cock as she can. She works it in time with her bobbing, wanting to cover as much area as possible with her lack of ability to devour all of him.

"Hn... haah... oooh.... ngh~" he moaned as he rocked himself slightly, before he tensed up and whimpered, one hand flying up to press to his teeth as he groaned. "T-Toki! Wait!"

She eased off as he spoke, letting her head lift up and off of his cock. She passes her tongue over her teeth and frees her skull from the water, green pinpricks flicking to peer up at him from her eye sockets. “What’s wrong?”

"I... ah... I don't wanna... uhm... reach it... without y-you.” He stammered quietly into the back of his hand, his gaze locking onto what was suddenly a very interesting shape in the ceramic of the tub.

Oh… Oh gods he was so sweet. She smiles, and a soft laugh bubbles out of her mouth. She rubs her fingers fondly over his femurs, urging him to look at her rather than at the tub. “Papy, it’s okay to just accept pleasure. You don’t always have to give back. But if that’s what you want… Well, I think the tub is big enough for some fun, don’t you? You don't ever have to be embarrassed about wanting something with me. I promise you that.”

He shivered roughly and looked at her, biting onto a knuckle for a moment before he gave a feverish nod, "You... You feel so wonderful," he admitted softly, "I want you to feel pleasure too, you deserve it!"

Shit. This sweet skeleton was her sweet skeleton now, wasn’t he? She smiles at him, sockets half-closing as she rattles a purr at him. “I’m not going to deny either of us, Pap. Now… The question I have for you is…” she leans up, scooting closer so she can nudge his knuckle out of his mouth and replace it with a warm kiss. “How do you want me?”

He blinked, then he leaned and kissed her happily, "Mmm~ I want you as much as possible. It feels wonderful... Feels wonderful with you~"

She giggles into the kiss- because that is not what she meant, but he is cute nonetheless. “That’s not what I meant, you silly thing.” Her fingers slip down to tease his member, and she presses another kiss to his teeth. “What I meant,” she purred, “Is how would you like this to go? I could ride again- or you can bend me over the tub.” Or something like that. “Whatever you want, or think will work.”

"I... I want to watch your face."

“Riding it is then.” She smiles at him lightly. “I’d say we could do the traditional pose, but the bath tub is not suited for that. That’s more for beds and extremely flat surfaces.” Still, she kisses him again, and uses that distraction to shift into his lap. She is warm and more than ready to take him. Magic was convenient. Lube was no longer something she needed to buy in bulk.

Toki eases into his lap, straddling him in the wide and deep tub. Her hands come to brace on the side of the tub so she doesn’t slip, and she lifts herself up. “Line up, cowboy~”

Aliquam gently pressed a kiss to the crown of her skull and moved her hips into place. He rolled his hips so his cock lined up with the smooth green glow of her passage. Shyly, he purred up to her. "Nyeh~ I love you."

Papyrus had never been shy about his affections- nor about letting those know they were loved. Thankfully, neither had Toki. She smiled down at him, the glow in her eyes softening with affection. “And I love you too.” She shifted and eased down, letting his hands guide her in the speed of her descent. She leaned forwards to rest her chest against his, pressing a soft kiss on the other side of his neck.

He kissed the crown of her head again, teeth brushing gently over the crack that splits her skull. A happy moan escapes her. "Ah... Toki~" he mewed softly.

“Don’t be afraid to touch,” she murmurs the gentle reminder. Her hands keep her steady as she eases down his length, hilting him within her slowly. A groan escapes her, and she pulls her mouth away against the reflexive instinct to nip. She shudders around him, walls pulsing and trembling with the throbbing of her soul. Her mouth comes to kiss his sternum as she lets him get adjusted- and then she sets a torturously slow pace astride his lap.

"Ahhh... hhahh! Tokiko," he grunted loudly, rocking his hips slowly as he looked down at her, "That... it's... too slow." he whined, "Faster...!"

“Faster huh? I think I can do that.” She giggles softly at his frustrated sound, and eases herself into a faster motion. Her hips roll against his own as she comes down to envelop him, her walls clutching him tightly as her bones roll and grind gently against his own. She leans back from him, mouth falling open as she pants. Droplets of condensation gather at her temples and roll down her bones, dripping onto her ribs and then into the heated bath water. Pleasure zips up and down her spine- but it’s not the same frantic feeling as before. It tingles and pools, traveling in waves up and down her spine.

“Ah- yes, mm…” She risks slipping as she lets go of the side of the tub with one hand. The one she freed comes down and slips under his ribs, stroking up the insides of his cage and teasing up to the backside of his sternum.

"Aahhh... Toki~" he held her hips and began to move his own, causing a small wave of water to slosh.

Between the both of them, the full tub was making a mess of the floor. She really didn’t care all that much. “Mmm, Pap~” His name rolled off of her tongue with a purr, and she stroked the inside of his sternum. Her magic washed over the both of them, mingling with his as she trembled and shuttered. The heat in her belly was great- but that frantic frenzied need was not as bad. Her control remained full, even as the coil of need rolled tighter in her belly. Perhaps the first attempt had been the worst- and she was hoping to all the stars above that this one would be easier, and that she could find her release when Papyrus did.

"Oh god... It's... it's so hot~!" he mewled happily, mouth falling open to join her in panting. His hips picked up the pace, lurching upwards into her roughly.

Water sloshed out onto the tile as his rough thrust drew a pleased cry from her mouth. It felt good, the bone crashing together as they met mid motion. Steam rose from the bones above the water, filling the room with a thin mist as she panted. Her claws clenched in the ceramic, and she rattled urgently above him. “Stars above, I love you,” she purred, eyes glancing down to lock with his own. The green was blazing bright, matching the strong glow of orange from behind her sternum, and it bathed the room in a forest colored rainbow.

"Nyeh! Nyeh! Aahh! I love you too!" he mewled.

She shuddered. His noises were getting to her- his eager sounds, his moans, his cries, it all spoke to something deep in her being that audibly rumbled with a pleased noise. Her fingers curled around one of his lower ribs, stroking it base to front in the same motions that coincided with her bounces. She couldn’t- she was close, so close, she just needed… “I’m clo-”

Magic washed over her bones, thick and potent, as her mouth fell open in a cry of his name as her warning was drowned out. Her bones rattled, walls clamping around his cock and milking it for all that it might give as released claimed her and stilled her in his lap.

As she clenched, he cried out and pulled her hips to his as he curled inwards, clutching her close to him. His energy surged hard over them both, mingling and mixing with her own as his cock. He came after a few short thrusts, flooding her with his magic as his cry echoed out of the bathroom. "N-NYEEEEHHH!"

She shuddered at the warmth that proceeded to flood her insides, slumping into his hold as his cry all but deafened her. A niggling part of her worried that they probably just woke Tenebris again- but the part of her that was basking in his aura like a cat with catnip said fuck all about waking the older monster.

She shivered, arms coming to cling to him as her magic slowly pooled back inside of herself. She basked in the sensations though, panting against his sternum.

He leaned back and his head fell to one side, his eyes closed as he panted. "Ah... Hah... Nyeh..."

The heat still burned- but it was lesser. Sated still, from the first, rough round, and this second, gentler one. It might take time, but… Maybe they could figure out the easiest way to ride through the heat.

Maybe. She’d… She’d need to figure it out as time goes on. She shivers against him, forcibly cooling her bones so she doesn’t burn him as she relaxes. “You,” she pants softly, “were so… hot, god damn. Mmn…”

"Nyah, you’re wonderful. I love you so much.” he mewled, only having half the mind power in his current state.

“Mmm, love you too.” She nuzzles him softly. She was functioning at a higher mind set than he currently was, so it was up to her to get them moving. She was loathe to move, but she did it anyways. She eased herself off of him, feeling raw and sensitive as he popped free. She was a dripping mess, but thankfully the water kept the stains off. The water though was a mess. She smiled faintly, leaning back to pull the plug. The hot water was rapidly drained, and then she began to refill it with cold water. “You relax and cool off,” she presses a kiss to his sternum. Her magic wavers in her chest, and she feels inexplicably weak. She’d only had tea today- and had just blown through another portion of her magic unintentionally. “I need to eat something.”

"Mmh..." he looked up at her, then he closed his eyes and leaned his head to the side, "Nyah... Alright..." he murmured before he slumped under the water, "brblblbl...."

His tired burbling was adorable. She still eased herself out of the tub and hid a grimace. She was sore- riding at the pace he’d urged her to left her pelvis feeling painfully sensitive. Still, she did her best to mop the floor, dried herself off with a trickle of magic, and then headed downstairs. She needed clothes- at least something loose and easy to remove.

She ends up stealing one of Papyrus’ long shirts, as it sits down the middle of her femurs. She’s pretty sure he won’t mind- and now she’s not going to be flashing her glowing bits to Cae or Tenebris if they come down again. She grimaces and heads into the kitchen- good gods, she needs food. She feels… empty. Drained. But with the amount of magic she’d been letting loose in the house, it was little wonder why. She hardly wants to stand and cook- but she needs to eat something.
Five days. It took five long days for her heat to pass. By the end of those five days, one of the cushions for the couch had been practically gutted, they had ruined a carpet, and the paint on the walls of the hallway needed to be touched up from bones and claws unmercifully ruining it.

Day five had her waking up face down in a pile of couch stuffing, with several bites adorning her shoulders and collarbone, and scratches over her bones. Pap wasn’t much better than she was- but she’d managed not to bite him as hard as the one on his neck. She was sore- oh hell she was past sore at this point. She felt like someone had shoved a jackhammer in her pelvis and left it on high. Nothing was broken- but everything was tender and everything hurt.

But the warmth was entirely gone- and her magic was nearly depleted as well. She felt wobbly as she struggled off the couch, slightly light headed and empty, leaving Papyrus to continue snoozing where they had fallen after the night prior. She tugged the blanket up to cover him, delighting in the fact that she couldn’t feel the pulse of heat from his bones either. She was pretty certain she’d kept him in heat for the duration of her own- and god she felt horrible about that.

Toki felt guilty in general about it. She hadn’t been… pleasant with Cae or Tenebris, during what little she remembered seeing of them between being asleep, or lost in the throws of pleasure with Aliquam. She had apologies to make- probably to all three of them, now that she thinks on it.

Toki tugged on a loose-necked long shirt, and hobbled for the kitchen. She hadn’t cooked a full meal since the heat began- and she needed something substantial. But without the heat driving her, nullifying her aches and pains with that of the heat itself, her legs hardly felt like they could support her.

She staggered, dark circles under her sockets, and caught herself on the door frame to the kitchen. She needed sleep too. Actual food and sleep- not just passing out after sating that burn- but fuck, she had to fix the couch first. The cushion had all but exploded. She couldn’t sleep on that- or the mess that stained the other cushions.

Caeruleus was standing in the kitchen at this time, humming a tune to himself as he rummaged around in the fridge. The sound of her bones brushing the door frame caught his attention, so he looked at her with the intent of giving some remark about the destroyed remnants of the couch, only to grow worried. "Holy shit, Toki, are you okay?" he asked.

She remains leaning on the door frame, grimacing to herself. Well. This wasn’t what she was expecting- but then and again, it wasn’t early in the morning, and Cae did need to eat too. “I could be better.” She admits. “Ah… I’m a bit burnt out, in the magical sense of things. Sore too. But not in heat anymore, so there’s that?” She shifts, and hobbles for the cabinets. The neck of the long shirt drapes down, and she shifts it up so the bites across her shoulders aren’t on display.

"Heh... There is that." he murmured. The fridge is shut, it's contents abandoned temporarily as he turns to go to her. "Come on, lets getcha on a seat." he told her gently.

“No, no, Sans I’m fine, I promise. I need something to eat- I’m running off of tea and snacks and that does not make for good magical fuel.” Sitting does not sound particularly pleasant for pelvis. “Don’t let me interrupt what you’re up to. I just need food."

"I was making food." he huffed. "I'll make something for both of us to eat."

She puffs her cheeks and sighs at him. “Cae, I’ve been enough of a bother for the past few days- I don’t mind cooking. Besides- can you even make anything other than hot dogs?” Her voice takes on a teasing lit as she rifles through the lower cupboards.

"..." He straightened further, before he came over and flicked her on the head, "I can too cook," he grumbled, "And seriously, you haven't been a bother for us, Doll." he then leaned in and clacked her on the head with the top of his, "Doofus. Don't talk so lowly of yourself."

The flick makes her grumble, and she rubs the spot that he flicked with her fingers. “I wasn’t talking lowly of myself,” She grumbles, “But it was inconvenient, the whole heat thing.” She bumps her hip to his in retribution, and puts a knee up onto the counter so she can look in the upper cupboards. “For the first time in my life, I can say that I need a step ladder. Also apologies for not believing you- I don’t think I’ve ever seen you make anything, besides hot drinks and hotdogs."

"It's normal for a monster to go into heat, you know." He scolded, "You don’t inconvenience us, if anything it's good to know you had it, because you're having something that's normal to monsterkind. Further assuring us of your good health." He almost sounded like his father speaking like that.

He gets a packet of instant gravy to his face for his mimicking of his father’s usual speech patterns. “Dude- for five days I was an aggressive sex fiend- and I also ruined the couch, and Pap and I need to repaint the hallway wall. If that’s not an inconvenience, then I don’t know what is. Ugh. At least Pap wasn’t put into asshole mode. Dunno if you heard about it from Tenebris, but your dad and I sort of squared off in here after you warned us against being too loud.”

She contemplates doing pasta, but decides against it. She wobbles slightly on the counter, and ends up shutting the cupboard and just easing down to sit. She winces. The counter is unforgiving to her sore backside. “I don’t even know what I want to eat. Ideas?"

"Actually, if you want me to be honestly, I knew that happened already. I could feel the tension through the floorboards. Pops has a really powerful aura. Though, uh..." he then smirked, "ah, never mind." The female before him had stood up to his father's Aura- and that in itself was impressive.

"Would you like one of these 'frozen pizzas'?” he asked, moving back to the fridge. He peered in the top half of the freezer, and motioned to the frozen boxes inside.

“… You and Tenebris have an irritating knack for cutting off half of your sentences. Ah…” His aura- she recalled it, and faked a yawn to hide the color that flitted over her skull. “It wasn’t actually that bad. I was more worried about his tail- it’s really sharp when it’s up in your face.” She arches a brow at him and sighs. “Sure. Pizza sounds good enough. Might as well cook up two. I am ravenous right now.” She would literally eat anything right now.

"What can I say? It’s a family thing. And yeah, that too. He hasn't let that thing dull in years." he chuckled. "Though the pizzas, are they both for you or one for me too?” he joked.

She would have flung her slipper at him if she had it with her. “I was actually going to share mine with Pap when he woke up, but I mean, if you want to eat a whole pizza to yourself…” She trails off with a sarcastic laugh, and hops from the counter.

Her legs slip out from under her, bare bones slick on the tile, and she lands on her ass with a loud curse. “FUCK.” Ow, god, that hurt so bad. “My ass…”

"Oh shit, are you okay?” he asked, turning to her in concern.

“Focus on the pizza, Sans. I’m fine- my legs are noodles, and the tile is slick.” She doesn’t bother getting up, sitting on the cold tile while she reclines into the counter. Ugh. “Ugh. Anyways, two pizzas. If we have to make a third, we can. Anyways, sorry for snarling at you that one time. Ah...” She hesitated to tell him that he interrupted- but she's pretty sure he understands.

He shook his head and abandoned the fridge momentarily to go and lift her up, "Nuh-uh, I’m not leaving you on the floor.” he huffed, before he nuzzled her. "Hey, don't worry about that, okay? You know I don’t get too irked about that kinda shit."

She doesn’t bother fighting it, but she grumbles as he lifts her. She has no pants- and his hand is perilously close to her sore pelvis. “I know it doesn’t bother you, but it bothers me. I am not an aggressive person by nature- or an asshole by nature. It just… ugh. I need to bother your dad about details concerning heats, if these are going to be a regular thing. Can you just- OW. Cae. Gentle please.”

He tensed slightly and was a bit more careful as he moved her to sit in a better position on a chair. "Shit... Sorry, doll" he sighed softly, stroking her cheek gently.

"Unfortunately-" he started, pulling away, "-You wont be able to talk to him for a few days.”

“I wont?” She blinks at him, shifting herself in her seat. “And it’s alright, Cae. I’m just a bit… sore, to be honest. Feels like someone stuck a jackhammer in my pelvis and left it on high.” Or an uncomfortably large vibrator. Either way- she was sore and sitting hurt. Touching anything hurt. “Hence why I’m not wearing any pants.”

Now sore, he could understand, the lack of pants, even more so. But when she offered that metaphor as to how she was feeling. Well fuck.

"That’s... uh... Fuck. One way to put it...” he chuckled awkwardly.

She grins at him, all sharp teeth and equally sharp humor. “That’s payback for your comment about liking the couch. You could have walked back to your room instead.” She gives him an amused look and reclines back in the seat. “So,” she drawls, “You were going to make pizza and impress me with your culinary expertise, no?”

"Excuse me." he huffed. "Yeah, yeah, lets let the oven heat up first, fucks up the pizza if you put it in too soon."

She gives a mocking bow in her seat. “Of course, head chef. You obviously know best about correct pizza cooking.”

Rolling his eyes, he Frisbee’d the pizza box towards her head once he had pulled its contents from it. "Think fast."

Awake she might be, but she hardly has the dexterity to dodge the box. It smacks her in the face with a satisfying slap of cardboard on bone, and then plops into her lap. She rubs the bridge of her nose and shoots him a dirty look. “Think fast my bony white ass. You’re like ten feet away- I’m not a ninja, you know.”

"Ten feet away gave you at least three seconds to react." he countered quickly (oops is his nerd side showing? Yes it is), before he got a baking tray and set the pizzas on them.

“How about you factor in the fact that it takes more energy to get a stationary object in motion- and I am a little low on energy.” Fuck she hadn’t been in science class in a decade or more- she was rusty at this science crap. The pizza box is wound up, and flung right back at him.

She misses.

"... Touché." He grinned at her, and then he started to get some water going, "What do you feel like drinking right now?"

“Anything hot, thick, and creamy.” She sighs. She could go for a hot chocolate- with a double pouch of chocolate for that extra savory sensation. Gods above, that sounded really good. “Or anything at all. I really don’t care. At this point, I would probably drink lukewarm coffee and call it good.”

Hot, Thick, and Creamy. Only two things came to mind for that...

Buuuuut now wasn't the time, and for once, Cae let a dirty joke get by him as he nodded. "Hot Cocoa it is. Marshmallows?"

“Extra marshmallows, please.” She crosses her legs, and sighs softly. “Maybe add a bit of vanilla creamer to it? It makes it a bit richer.” And she could use the metaphorical calories at this point.

"You got it."

Five minutes later, he puts down a mug of steaming hot chocolate in front of her with a small stirring spoon still spinning lightly from when he mixed in the creamer and extra chocolate. Caeruleus pulled open the bag of marshmallows and put a handful on top, and slid it closer with a grin. "Here you go, Toki. Enjoy."

Her fingers curl around the mug, and she shoots him a thankful smile. “Thanks, Cae.” The still steaming mug is brought to her mouth, and she stills the spoon with a finger, before taking a mouthful of the burning liquid. “Mmm…” She can’t stop the soft moan that spills out- gods above, hot chocolate was a gift from the heavens.

Reaching, he gave her a soft pat on the shoulder as he offered her a grin, "It's nothin' really. What the hell am I supposed to do, be a dick and deny a doll like you her cocoa?"
His pat on her shoulder had her arm flinching out from under his grasp- he patted right over top of the first bite from Aliquam. It had bruised brilliantly. Still, she offers him a cheeky smile. “I suppose you could have, but then you’d have a sad doll sitting in your kitchen. Can’t have that, now can we?”

"Not at all, Toki," he agreed, before he eyed the bites peeking through the neck of her shirt. "Holy fuck, hahaha... You and Pap really didn't let up, didja?" he teased gently. It was a little awkward, talking about this with the woman who technically popped his brother’s metaphorical cherry- but he’d meant what he said. She was a good person- before and after the change. She never did seem to change.

One hand comes to clasp over the bites, and she grimaces. “Not really, no. Ah… You should see the one I left on his neck on the first day.” Her teeth open, and she pantomimes gnashing them. “These teeth are meant for biting, not nibbling. He, ah… Well, it’s not a nice mark. I was more careful after. He didn’t have to be as careful. Mostly flat teeth, you know.” Only the two fangs to make punctures in the bone meant that she got away with the easier of the markings. She awkwardly sips her cocoa, and adjusts herself in her seat. The rich chocolate is making her feel better as her magic begins to restore.

"Heh. Yeah, sure." he chuckled gently, "I'll have to make sure that Pap doesn't keep anything too permanent." He laughed again, quietly. "But hey, you're both happy aren’t you?"

“You may want to.” She smiles faintly. “We are, actually. I… ah, well, I actually asked him out. He said yes. Anyways, I was also unaware that bone could bruise. Hickies are a thing, even for skeletons, then.” She sips her cocoa, tilting the mug slightly and getting a layer of melted mallow over the top of her upper teeth. “Heh. Either way, I’m glad it’s over. It won’t happen again next month, will it? Because I can handle this every few months- but I might go crazy if it’s every month. I’d take human reproductive cycles over that.”

"If you're lucky. Mine happens on it's own once every couple months so you may be lucky and have the same. I'm not sure what Pap's does, you'll have to ask him.” he explained, before he tucked his hands away in his pockets as he smiled down at her, "Shit, that's cute."

She tilts her head at him in confusion, eye lights glimmering lightly. “What’s cute? And I guess so… heh. Even every couple of months would be okay. Still would be better than how human females work.”

"You are. And I have no idea what humans do, so I’m gonna go ahead and just smile and nod."

“You’re always smiling.” She points out. She steals another sip of cocoa, and then nearly snorts it as she laughs. “Be glad that you don’t, Cae. It’s gross.”

"Taking your word for it. Say no more.”

And her grin suddenly grew, eyes sharpening. “Now I sort of want to tell you. I should probably ruin your innocence.”

"Hoe don't do it."

Dear gods, who introduced him to memes? Toki’s grin just widened around the rim of her cup, looking slightly sinister despite her mallow-stache. “Well,” she begins, “A human female has a uterus. The uterus is where a little human is made and expelled- and starting from around the age of fourteen, until about fifty, the uterus is ready to hold a baby. But, when no baby is conceived, the uterus sheds it’s lining to prepare a new one. The shedding of his lining is called menstruation. They essentially bleed out of their nether bits once every month for seven days.”

Her eye sockets darken and she laughs. “It amounts to the woman bleeding for about seven years of her life.”

"Oh my GOD."

Her laughter is loud as it rings out, and she chokes on her cocoa. How a skeleton can choke, she has no idea, but she’s hacking and wheezing as cocoa goes places it shouldn’t go. The mug is set on the table, and she clutches her knees. Tears of mirth bead in her eyes, and gods above, his face was the perfect mix of horror and fascination she had ever seen.

He turns and bangs his head lightly on the fridge a few times.

"Can't. Un-see that." he groaned. He picked up on soft footsteps, making him turn to see Aliquam entering the kitchen.

Rubbing his eye tiredly as he dragged his blanket behind him, clad in nothing but his bones and a pair of boxers. Boxers with spaghetti pictures on them. "Nyeh... What's going on?" he asked, before he yawned widely, literally releasing a long 'nyeeeeeeehhhhh' in the yawn.

She’s not sure what has her laughing harder- Cae’s response, or Pap’s boxers, but she are bent over, and has a horrible gurgling noise tainting her laughter. It sounds similar to something backfiring, and she just can’t stop laughing in order to make it go away. “I- Cae- talk- HA- women-” is all that’s decipherable from her laughter.

"Oh my... What did I come back to?"

"You. Do not want to know, Pap."

Aliquam blinked once, then he rubbed his head and walked over to Toki. "Slow down Toki, catch your breath. Then you can tell me why my brother is freaking out."

It takes her a minute to catch her breath, and she ends up removing her mustache as she passes her sleeve over her teeth. She giggles slightly, eye lights bright as she straightens. They dim though, seeing the many bite marks that decorate his bones. None are as bad as the one on his neck. Still, seeing them is sobering, and guilt bubbles in her middle. Some girlfriend she was. “Ah,” she coughs slightly, “I was explaining to your brother the worse parts of the human female reproductive system.”

He smiled gently and shaking his head, "Nyeh heh heh. You're awful, Toki" he huffed, before clacking a soft kiss to the top of her head. "Nyeh~"

She shifts, and tilts up to meet his kiss with her mouth instead. She kisses him softly for a moment, simply enjoying the motion as she does so. “I am awful, aren’t I?” One finger comes up to brush over his neck, and she sighs. Double meanings lingered behind her words.

"You torture my dear brother," he scolded once the kiss parted, before he reached and ran his fingers over her marks on his bones. They didn’t really hurt that bad- they had already started healing on their own. He paused, glanced down at her, and made a show of licking over his teeth. "Mmm... You taste like cocoa."

Cae rolled his eyes and chuckled, going to check the pizzas, "Lovebirds."

Toki simply smiled up at him. She rubbed her fingers gently over the worst mark, and sighed again. “I torture him because he tortures me. It’s a mutual relationship, I assure you. And of course I taste like cocoa- I still have some to finish.” Her mug is taken again as she withdraws her hand, and she sips from it. Her mallow-stache returns with a vengeance.

To Cae, she rolls her pinpricks. “Tweet. Tweet.” There might have been sarcasm in her words, but it was affectionate sarcasm.

He giggled and sat down in a seat next to her. He stretched, "Have you seen Father?"

"No, he took his coat and said he had some business to take care of, that was this morning." Cae replied, "His face was black."

"Oh."

She pauses, and recalls that Tenebris face tended to be black when he was flushed about something. She blinks, slowly at first, before it dawned on her. Her palm met her face in a satisfying slap, and she slumped into her chair with a curse. Her pelvis ached, and she flinched slightly because the chairs were not comfortable to her poor un-padded backside, but remained in her position. “Fuck… of course.” It took little thought as to why the elder monster was missing, and why his face was dark—particularly after she’d basically basted the house in her magic.

After a moment, there was a snicker from one of the brothers, before they both burst out laughing.

Her face burned in mortification, and she slouched further down. Her cocoa was finished rapidly, before she hid in her palms with a groan. “Fuuuuck.”

She’d brought Tenebris into heat.

Fuck.

There was soon a loud FLUMP as Caeruleus fell over, banging his fist on the ground as his mouth fell open, teeth parting with the magnitude of his laughter, "OH MY GOD! He's old as shit and you put him in fucking heat! HA!"

Her bones practically buzzed with mortification.

If there was any tension between the three of them that morning, that single realization brought it all crashing down.
Three days later, and the snow had risen again. By now the monsters didn’t bother clearing the roads- only clearing their front doors, and the roofs of their homes. The ice and chill was rough- but it would eventually ease off. It usually did, anyways.

Three days stuck in the house was a boring prospect though- but she filled the time by spending her hours with the brothers. They managed to get the couch fixed- though it was a rather messy stitching, all of the stuffing was once more back inside, and they flipped the cushions to hide the stains and the ‘scars’ marring the usual sides to them. It worked- and they would eventually see if Tenebris would notice. The house was cold- the heater was struggling to keep anything larger than the bedrooms warm, so the living room, where she stayed, was pretty much an ice cube all the time.

She dealt with it by bundling up- something the brothers didn’t need to do because as Cae put it- the chill went right through them.

By the morning of the third day, the power kicked off for the town, and everyone was cast into darkness. The snow had taken out one of the power lines, and the electrical company would be out by morning to fix it. For most of the monsters, that wasn’t an issue. They bundled up over top of their furs, turned on their fireplaces, and huddled in the main rooms to keep warm.

It wasn’t quite so for Toki- There was only so many candles that could be lit, and she was a nervous and jittery mess with as many of them that they had out. The house was lit though, if a smelling a bit noxious from the many scents, and she used her magic to try and keep the room a stable temperature. It drained her- and ultimately she had to give it up before long.

She bundled up on the couch as the day turned to a frozen and blustery night, a pot of tea balanced on her lap. She was focusing her magic- which hadn’t fully recovered from three days of depleting it- and pouring the warmth into the pot. At her side was a worn copy of a book- one that one of the workers brought her some time ago.

Slowly, the pot of tea was beginning to heat, and she was pleased. Something warm to drink would help warm her inside, even if it sucked away parts of her magic.
"Toki, we don’t want you to get cold…” Aliquam said softly.

"And believe it or not, but extreme weather can actually do some damage to us.” Caeruleus mentioned, his hood pulled over his head. The soft fur was warmed by his magic, but even then it did little to help.

"We need to light the fireplace."

"But we can't unless we know you're going to be okay."

Well she wasn’t going to be okay. But they were right- they did need to light the fireplace, or else things might start freezing over inside of the house. She swallows, cradling the warming pot of tea that she struggles to bring to a boil. “Ah… Yeah. I’ll… I’ll manage.” If all else failed, she would have them turn the couch around, so she didn’t have to face the fire. She shivered though, bones rattling and teeth clacking with the force of it. Her magic struggled against the cold- it sapped her strength, and made her hope that the fire monster, Grillby, was doing all right against the chill. “Go ahead and light it- you both need it.”

Aliquam hugged her firmly with one arm while pressing a few reassuring kisses to her head. He tensed, hearing something, a banging, or at least a rattling on the front door. The sound was frantic, muffled cursing rising over the howling sounds of the wind outside.

Toki was off the couch in but a moment, passing the lukewarm pot of tea to Aliquam. She headed for the door, gathering her magic at her fingertips, and went to heat it. She’d had to do this before already, when the door had frozen shut and Wolfen had come a knocking to see if they were all right. She pressed her magic against the wood grain, and shivered as it sucks the heat out of her palms. Her bones ache against the cold, but slowly the door heats.

Icy water pools from the edges as she pushes more magic into it. Once it’s thawed, she reaches up to tug it open for whoever was so frantic behind it.

As soon as the door handle is turned, the large form stumbled through the doorway with a gasp and fell hard onto the ground.

"F-Fucking hell..."

"Holy shit, Pops!” both brothers go to his side, pulling him in further and letting Toki close the door as the flurry of snow outside rushed inwards.

"Oh man... Looks like you're not gonna suffer alone, Toki." Cae attempted a vague joke, while Aliquam ran to get some blankets.

Tenebris was well soaked with the snow, his teeth chattering as he tried to get feeling in his hands. His legs? Forget about it.

Toki shivered as the snow brushed over her, and she reached down to Tenebris. She’d gotten better about doing this- it was just like warming the pot of tea. He was just a lot larger than any pot of tea she had ever tried to heat- the bathtub not withstanding. She pressed one of her hands into the broad span of his back, the other slipping under the rim of his coat and turtleneck so she could funnel magic into him directly, and surged her magic into him. It worked slowly, trickling like a rapidly draining pool of liquid warmth, but began to steam his clothes dry and warm his skin.

She trembled as she worked, warmth leeching from her bones into him. “T-t-that’s fine,” she stutters, jaw flexing in a shiver. “Let me thaw him, and you can get the fire g-going.”
He shuddered as his form slowly dried and his skin went from a no-blood pale to its usual odd shade. As his clothes dried and warmed, his body heated up and he slowly managed to sit up. "Hah...Thank you, Toki." he sighed softly, smiling at her gently, "I'm proud of you." he praised smoothly once his teeth stopped chattering.

As his teeth stopped chattering, hers resumed with a vengeance. Though she didn’t need her mouth to speak, the chatter bled over into her voice regardless. She wobbled in place, and then motioned for him to stand. “I’ve been practicing since the power went out. Come- I’ll finish heating the tea. You could use it.” She offers him a hand, and braces to ease the massive monster up. She’d gotten most of his body warm- but his feet and hands were very cold. She needed to sit and focus on that alone- but she needed him away from the chill of the door.

It was already freezing shut again.

He got to his feet well enough but after a few steps, decided it’d be better to walk on all fours for this. "We're both in need of the heat... Are you ready to go by the fireplace to heat up?” he asked.

At this time, Caeruleus had gone and started up the fire, Aliquam going to get some more blankets.

Seeing him transition from bipedal to quadruped was always a strange thing to see, but Toki ambled along with him regardless.

“No.” She answered honestly. “I’m not. But I need to- and I know this.” She keeps her eyes away from the fireplace, and from the crackling of wood being devoured. It makes the back of her neck crawl, and her shivers descend into faint rattling sounds. She approaches the couch, drawing her blanket around her and then motioning for the larger monster to sit. “Up you go- I need to warm your hands and feet, or you’ll lose your toes.”

"Same to you, my dear. You're affected by the cold, and I can't allow that to go on much longer..." he told her. Once on the couch, he sat back and opened his coat, "Come on, you warmed me up pretty well, I'd say it's time to return the favor.”

“Feet and hands are important.” She huffs. She doesn’t immediately step in to his grasp- no, she collects the teapot again, and forces her magic into it. It’s not a steady boil- but it finally begins to steam. So she pours some into the large mug, and presses it into one of Tenebris hands, before she clamors into his lap.

She’s shivering largely by then, delicate bones rattling and feeling drained. Still, she plates her hands on his thighs, and begins to pulse warmth down his legs. The tea mug could handle his hands.

His hands immediately felt better upon taking the mug, and his toes began to twitch and flex upon feeling the nerves coming back to life. It hurt, but it was not the worst agony he had ever felt. Her magic was warm and soft- not unlike being next to a candle. "You really are a nursemaid, dear Toki." he chuckled quietly.

“I’m a living hot water bottle.” She grouses good-naturedly. "Sorry about the tea. Wasn’t expecting you home- it’s going to be sweet.” But it would be good for his metabolism anyways. She continues working the magic down his legs, warming up frozen nerves and tendons. “I guess fire magic is good for something.”

Her sockets are closed- and she’s pointedly not looking at the fire that’s slowly warming up part of the room. “Cae, Ali, get yourself some tea too. Cold might not bother you as much, but it’ll still warm your bones.”
"We're gonna worry about you two first."

"I'll go grab Father's slippers from upstairs."

That made Tenebris groan, sound rumbling through his chest. "Aliquam you make it sound like I'm an old man."

"Weeeeellll…"

"Shut up, Caeruleus."

Toki snickers faintly, her magic sputtering against her fingers. “From what Cae hinted at, you are pretty old. No offense meant, though. But, uh, I wouldn’t turn down the slippers. My magic’s not fully back. I’m running on fumes.” But fumes would have to do- and she continued warming his legs until slippers could be fetched. Her own were on her feet- and she had several layers of clothes on as well.

"Chronological age has no place given what I’ve gone through... I'm physically still young enough to be at most three hundred and fifty years old..." he huffed softly, before he smiled and effortlessly lifted her up, his tail holding the mug of tea now "That's enough, you're going to pass out at this rate." he insisted, tucking her into his coat and closing it around her form.

“I’m not going to pass out.” If she was going to do that, she’d have done it when she had been almost empty three days prior. She rattled against him, squirming faintly. There was little she could do though- and thus she was enveloped in his coat, like one might do to a particularly pesky pet. She sighed, her legs sticking out from under the edges of his jacket, and simply leans back into him. Even drained as she is, her bones radiate warmth back into his chest. “Dude, three hundred and fifty years old is practically ancient. Humans rarely live to be a hundred, let alone getting near that number.”

She shivers again, and wiggles her slipper covered feet as she frees her blanket from around her shoulders. It’s wiggled out the bottom of her coat and spread over their legs as best she can. It’s not enough- not nearly enough- to change the chill setting into her bones but it helps some.

"I'm not human, am I my dear?” he huffed, "Now hush, and just enjoy the mutual warmth." he murmured, obviously too busy being a stubborn father to care about himself.

Aliquam came back and smiled gently as he offered his father a blanket. It was taken and the blanket was draped over his lap, legs, and midsection, blanketing Toki save for her head.

She had essentially been cocooned against the large monster. Which probably served its purpose. The chill in her bones couldn’t be helped- her marrow felt like it was made of ice- but her magic kept the topical part of her bones warmed. It filled her clothes with a sputtering heat, and oozed out into the cocoon.

“No,” she muses softly, nestling her head in against the fabric of the blanket. She leans back, careful of her horns, and rests her head against his chest. “No, I suppose you’re not. I was though- it’s a daunting thought to live that long. Humans are meant to live fleeting lives. Heh.” She wiggles her fingers and tucks them into her stomach. “By mutual warmth, did you mean ’enjoy being my living heater’?”

"You made my clothes as warm as if they were fresh from the dryer, so the least I could do is return the favor." he rumbled softly, tucking her in further as if to prove a point.

She grunts as she’s sucked in further, and eventually opens her sockets. Dim eye lights peer up at him as best she can, trying to ease the initial flight of panic she feels upon seeing the light of the flames flickering on the ceiling. “I got very good at drying clothes after shoveling snow for several hours. Good to know I put my practice to good use. So… Mind sharing that t-tea? I’d enjoy a sip. I like sweet things.” She has no available hands- but she would make due.

He smiled down at her, and held the cup of tea to her. "Here."

She leans up to take a sip, and savors the bittersweet taste of over-brewed tea. Oops. “I still need to work on my tea making skills with magic though.” She’d heated it too fast in her frantic need to make the water boil. “Mm… warm…”

He smiled at her. "When everything is back up and running, I’ll make you some of my favorite tea."

“Orange b-blossom is good tea.” She agrees. She nudges the rim of the cup, and looks up at him. Her teeth chatter again as she shivers, and sparks zing out over the blanket. “Drink, Tenebris. I didn’t speed-heat that to just drink it myself. You were half frozen out there- you need the warmth right now.”

He shakes his head, and leaves the cup balanced near her. "By heating yourself, you're heating us both, trust me." he purred softly.

“Trust me when I say it now- the tea is not going to be enough to keep my magic going.” She hums softly. Her sockets drift closer to being shut, and she sighs faintly. “Besides- you don’t have to fib to me. I know you just don’t want to drink the gross tea.” Toki teases faintly.

"Well at least I considered telling you gently." he teased back, before he pushed his feet into his slippers, purring loudly as he flexed his toes in them, "Mmmm, in just a few minutes I find myself warm enough to doze off,ahaha..."

“Lucky you.” She trembles against him still, bones quivering. Her magic stutters in her bones, and she leans out to sip more of the tea. Screw it- if he was going to leech from her warmth, then she needed all the fuel she could get. He was a big body to heat. The tea is gross, and it makes her stomach ache, but it floods her with the energy she needs to keep the faint flow of her magic going.

When she’s drained the cup, she leans back into him with a sigh. Quietly she nestles down, eying the boys. They’re stoking the fire- which has her quickly flicking her gaze to the ceiling again. The crackling of the flames devouring the wood has sweat beading at her temples. “So, ah… I’m sorry. About before. I wasn’t nice- and even if I was upset with you, it wasn’t right of me to be rude like that.”

"Mmmh... Do you mean the other night in the kitchen?” he asked gently, before he chuckled and shook his head, “No, it's quite alright. I was admittedly more cranky that morning... something previous had me irked, but I’ve long since forgiven and forgotten.” he assured her gently.

She sighed softly and nodded. “I figured you’d say that. Still. For not having one, I sure acted like a bit of a dick. Heh. And, ah… sorry for triggering your…’ Well, his heat was left unsaid. Twists faintly, tiring of looking at the ceiling, and manages to shift onto her side. Laying on her front would be more comfortable- but he’s not in a position for her to do that.

"Hm? Oh... Don't worry about that, again, I’ve since gotten better," he assured her.

“D-doesn’t matter.” She mumbles. “Cae said you didn’t... do that regularly.” Something to do with his age- Cae had been very vague on the details on it, and she hadn’t pressed. “And you said ‘s bound to happen again. So it’s going to happen t’ you again too if you’re around. So… sorry?”

"Hahaha, it's quite alright.” he assured her, "I'm simply going to get used to it like I did all my other struggles."

She snorts slightly, and closes her eyes. "Mhm. You say that now." She sighs gently again, and curls up faintly. The chill in her bones sucks- but it's not so bad. She can ignore it well enough. "Either way, you won't have to be too bothered with it for long. Once the snow is gone, they'll be working to finish m' house. I'll be out of your metaphorical hair." Probably before Christmas.

"Why do you act like we're eager to get rid of you, Tokiko?" he asked with a scolding tone, his hold on her tightening slightly.

Her bones creaked faintly as his grip on her tightened, and she gave a tiny groan in response. "So I don't trigger a mass heat again? Or do we don't trigger each other?" She mumbles vaguely. One hand wiggles free of its confines to come up and rub blearily at her sockets. She's tired. "I dunno, Tenny. I know you're not eager- but I bet you all miss having the couch and living room to yourselves. Ah- fuck, sorry. I know you prefer Tenebris."

"It is quite alright, Toki. You don't give us any burdens, you know." he sighed. "The heat is a new thing, we can learn to cope with it."

"You sound like you'd prefer I keep stayin' on th' couch." She blinks up at him sleepily, and nestles her head on his chest. Now that he's warming up, he's starting to radiate warmth back to her. It's not much help- but it feels nice. "Tha's right. It's still new. Mmn… Gonna have to figure out how it works…"

"If you ask the boys, they'd surely not mind sharing their beds." He chuckled softly. "Though, if your house did successfully allow us to visit, and you may just luckily share your bed, as long as it's the right size. We'll figure it out together. I admittedly do not have much information on the heat cycles of female skeletons. I never found myself invested with one to bother looking into it."

"Tha's fine. We'll figure 't out as we go. S'not a big deal… Anyways, I want m' own bed. Nice 'n big, where I can hog all th' blankets…" A vaguely amused purr bubbles out from her chest. "Pap's a blanket hog." And Cae snored louder than any snore she'd ever heard. "It's gon' be. Yeah. Havin' it made bigger, house 'n th' beds too. 'Cause you're all giants, and I'm tiny now apparently."

"Yes. You are." he chuckled, nuzzling her, "Compared to us who have been monsters since birth, you are very small for an adult. You are more teen sized, believe it or not."

"Hmph." The grumpy noise that escapes her is equal parts small and adorable. "It's not my fault y'll 'r giants." She yawns. "Giant 'n warm… mmm…" The fire roaring near the brothers was easing the chill in the room, and it was enough to make her strive to ignore the cold in her marrow.

He stroked her head gently and leaned back as he took a deep breath. "Rest, I'll keep you warm now~" he purred.

"Mkay…" She really didn’t need to be told twice. With her sockets closed, magic drained low, and body chilled, she was ready to settle in for something warm to soothe her. The body heat she’d managed to restore to him was doing good to bolster her own, and her magic was leeching faintly off of it.

There was a sleepy grumble, wherein she was trying to get comfortable in her many layers, before she was dropping off to sleep in his arms, shivering all the while.

Content with her settling down now, he leaned his head back against the couch, and slowly closed his eyes to surrender to slumber himself, "Mmm..."
After a short time, both were in a warmth-enveloped slumber.

Their slumber eventually came to an end with more rapid fire pounding on the door. It was black outside- the battery-operated clock informed all around them that it was nearly four AM- and the wind nearly drowned out the sound of knocking.

The voice outside was loud though- it was Wolfen, and he sounded tired and panicked. “Miss Toki! Miss Toki, please, we need your help.”

The noise alone had woken her- but she knew that voice, and Wolfen was not one to beg. The tired skeleton squirmed in her cocoon, trying to free her limbs and body from the sleeping monster that had her caged. She felt better after her sleep- not fully recovered, not even close, but her magic was no longer on empty. The chill in her bones was still present- but it was less.

“Tenebris,” she hisses sleepily, tensing as her eyes flick over the dying embers of the fire. She hyper focuses, and forces her gaze away. It hadn’t hurt her- she was better than her fear. She was better than it, damn it. The fire had kept them warm- it had been a good fire. Yes. A good fire. Her breath whooshed out of her in one tight exhale, and she renewed her squirms. “Let me up, Wolfen’s at the door. I’ve got to go thaw it.”

Tenebris’ eyes opened slowly and he blinked once before he took a deep breath, and let her go. He let her clamor out of the blankets, before discarding them off of his frame. He was warm now, down to the center of his being. Fire magic was handy indeed. He stretched, his limbs creaking faintly. "Allow me." he rumbled.

He walked over to the door and turned the knob experimentally. He heard a soft cracking that was the ice in the mechanism being disturbed, and with one strong pull, had the door open, the ice holding it closed flying everywhere as he looked out at the wolf-guard. "What's going on, Wolfen?" he questioned blearily.

Toki was right there next to him as Wolfen appeared. The large, furry wolf-monster was faring better in the ice than most- but even he was bundled up. The darkness whipped and whirled outside, tossing walls of white this way and that. His back blocked it from being blown in, but the cold still seeped around the large monster.

He cast her a frantic look, eyes wide and muzzle puckered in distress. “We need your help. Thumper. He panicked when a branch hit the house and bolted. We cant find him- we’ve got everyone out looking that we can, but there’s a lot of adults who can’t handle the snow. You’re a skeleton- the cold-” “Wouldn’t bother me.” Is all she says- she doesn’t bother to correct him about it, because skeletons weren’t usually bothered by cold. Her magic made her different though. There was a lost child out in a snow storm- there was no time to dally. She shifts and snags a second coat from one of the hanging racks. It’s tucked around her arms, and she bundles tighter against the cold spilling in through the front door, and turns to face the door.

She edges up to the side. “I need a boost. I should be able to walk on the snow. Tenebris- Get the boys. We need everyone looking for Thumper.”
For all the fur that the boy had, he was still a child. Rabbit monsters did not grow in a thick winter coat either, and Thumper was not a plush-coated child. They had little time to find him at this early in the morning.

Tenebris did not need much urging from her to get him moving. He was swift as he went to fetch the boys.

Toki was gone before they got back downstairs. Her magic bubbled over her bones, keeping her base layer of clothes warm as she trudged through the snow. For the most part, she was on top of it. It came up to her shins, before the layers of ice were thick enough to support her body weight.

Wolfen had left her on her own once she was atop the snow layers- and he had bustled back into the main parts of town. There were maybe fifty or so monsters equipped to handle the snow- and many of them were trudging waist deep through the thick flurries.

Shouts of Thumper’s name were lost on the wind, while Toki took an unconventional path. It wasn’t the first time he had ever gotten spooked- Rabbits were flighty by nature, and Thumpers excessive energy often made him even more so. Loud noises were usually what triggered his flight response- and with the wind howling like a beast, the loud thump of a branch against a house no doubt would have had him bolting.

Those kinds of noises even scared her from time to time.

But there was one of two places he ran- either out to her hives, or out to the big trees that surrounded the back part of her ancestral home. She had a hunch- she wasn’t sure if he actually made it this far, but with everyone looking around town, it never hurt. If he wasn’t here, then there was nothing lost. But if he was, then everything was gained.

It took time to trudge through the snow though. The wind nearly blew her off of her feet several times, and she’d had to brace herself for the gusts that came and went. She eventually gave up keeping herself warm with her magic- each gust stole her heat away. She would save her magic for warming up everyone later- they would need it after being out in the storm.

Eventually, through the whiteout, she located the towering shape of the dormant tree. Her feet carried her numbly towards the base of it, and she began to search the roots.

Faint gasping reached her ears, and Toki moved for it. She found Thumper curled up under a root, fur frosted over with ice. The tips of his ears were blue, even through his fur, and his little legs twitched with faint spasms. Frost had gathered over his body as he shivered.

He was unmercifully conscious.

“Oh Thumper…” She murmured softly. Her finger stole from her pockets so she could lift him- and it was like lifting a block of fuzzy ice. He was cold- he was so, so cold, and not dressed warmly enough to even consider going outside.

“S-s-s-cold.” His teeth chattered faintly. His eyes cracked open faintly, recognition flashing in the dimmed amethyst pools.

“It’s okay, baby. Shh… You’re okay now…” One of the branches creaked above, and he whimpered. Toki couldn’t warm him up outside of her shirt- but she wasn’t sure he’d make the walk back. But… She could warm him up another way.

His eyes closed, a sighing breath leaving him as he fades out of awareness, and panic makes her decision for her.
Toki yanks her layers of shirts and coats up, and guides the curled and half-frozen child into her middle. She settles his body in her pelvis, and leaves his upper torso to rest against her ribs. He is bigger now than he was before- and he does not fit half as easily as when he curled up after the fire.

Her clothes are dropped around him, making an odd shaped bulge in her middle, before she fires up her magic. She permeates it around her middle, heating the bones and the air inside of her so she can begin to thaw out the frozen rabbit in her middle. She shivers- because he is a block of ice in side of her, and that makes the cold in her marrow even deeper- but begins the slow walk back to the houses. She keeps her hands in the front pockets of her coat, cradling and keeping the bulge of the rabbit inside of her middle still so that he doesn’t fall out.

Aliquam was by far traveling the best out of the three of the Gaster family, able to lift his legs high enough to travel through the snow, so it was hardly any surprise when it was he who stumbled upon her. "THUMPER!" He called, spotting Toki as she turned the corner back into the village proper. He was quickly moving fort her, his legs kicking up plumes of snow as he plowed through it. He was heavier than her- but not by much, so he too was atop one of the many layers of ice and snow. "Toki, Any luck?" he asked, practically shouting over the wind.

Papyrus appearing was a bit of a shock- it had been endless white and wind, and then there was the massive skeleton, bedecked in his bright red scarf and winter clothes. Toki glanced up at him silently, and silently adjusted her arms. The lump in her middle shifted and a passing twitch of a rabbits foot had her grunting. Her mouth went to open, but found snow flaking her teeth and crusting them shut. She was numb, all but to the magic warming her belly and creating a hotspot in her abdomen. What magic she had continued to pool there. Thumper needed to be thawed- but he needed healing too. His ears were so cold... “I found him!” She shouts over the wind, forcing her voice to be louder so as to be heard as she shivers in the snow. “Need to get inside!”

He nodded slightly, and he turned, getting an idea, his eyes glowed and with a flare of energy, he unleashed a powerful wave of magic that flew from his form and coiled into itself, before forming a pair of large cat-like skulls. Their eyes lit up and one's mouth opened widely as it let out a roar, before Aliquam somehow had whistled for their attention. The creatures turned and looked at the duo with bright orange eyes, awaiting orders.

"Bastet! Go and find Father! Let them know we found Thumper!" He ordered one, watching it turn fast and take off into the storm, the other being coaxed closer, "Neko. I want you to stay with us, clear us a path to the others." he ordered.

The giant being let out a loud sound not unlike a monster-esque 'mrroowwwr' and turned, lowering into the snow before starting ahead, nosing and clearing a path. Aliquam then offered Toki a hand. "Come on."

Really, it shouldn’t have surprised her. She vaguely recalled seeing flashes of the huge skulls Caeruleus had summoned- but still, her eyes widened and she watched the huge skulls warily. They were big- and apparently sentient, as Aliquam set them to their tasks.

The one shoveling the way did make a great, path clearer though. The hand that is offered to her is taken, icy fingers curling into his palm. She hadn’t thought to grab gloves- she never wore them- and it showed. The other hand remains cradling her middle as Thumper rouses slightly, shifting with pained sounds from her middle. Thawing limbs are painful, but it is a good thing. If he can groan and feel the pain, then he wasn’t dying under her shirt.

Her magic stutters against a particularly cold blast of air, and she leans into Papyrus to keep her balance. The snow and ice doesn’t hold up against the massive cat-skull thing, and Toki is relieved as her frozen slippers can walk smoothly and swiftly over what remains on the ground.
He held her close as he walked with her on the path made by the blaster creature until they made it to where Tenebris and Caeruleus were waiting, "Aliquam! Toki! You found him?" Cae asked.

Toki doesn’t trust her voice as her shivering sets in again. She nods, eye lights dimming, and shifts her hand out of her pocket. She taps her shirt, where the odd bulge in her clothes is moving. Once the shivering abates for a moment, she speaks. “I’ve got him. I’m trying to warm him- but we need to get inside. He needs healing- he’s covered in frostbite. Lets go to his house- someone needs to tell everyone he’s been found.”

And she wasn’t sure the big blaster monster was a good way to do that. She shifts none the less, and wavers in the wind.

"Lets get him to our home first, it's closer!" Tenebris insisted, "We'll warm him enough to allow me to perform medical treatment.”

Toki visibly is staggered by the wind, fighting to keep the heat in the middle going as the cold sucks at it, and her eye lights flick tensely to Tenebris. Her face is cold, and ice is gathering along her exposed bones. Her teeth glisten with it, and her jaw works to try and thaw it out. “Any house will do at this point. Point me in a direction- I can’t focus very well.”

He sighed then stepped forward and scooped her up, tucking her into his coat. "Caeruleus, Aliquam, have the hunt called off, tell Thumper's mother he's with me. Go!"

The two nodded and turned to go find them, while Tenebris quickly began for their home.

Tenebris wouldn’t find warmth from the skeleton in his coat now. The only warm spot would be the heat she has gathered in her belly. Her arms are stiff as she tucks them close, angling herself so Thumper isn’t crushed between them. She is aware as they return though, and she eyes the once-more frozen door of the house. She extends a hand, shunting off some of her magic without asking so she can rapidly thaw the frozen nob, and turn it open for them.

Tenebris had his hands full with her, after all.

The door opens, and the warmth of the house spills over her. It’s not too much warmer than outside- but compared to the ice on her bones, it’s practically a sauna. The fire is still going, but dimly. No one had stocked it before they had rushed out the front door to join the search.

He pushes his form inside and closes the door fast behind him, before he knelt down in front of the fireplace, using one hand to cover Toki’s eyes as he did so, and opened his coat to drown both forms in this new heat.

Her many layers were frosted over, and she didn’t have the magic to dry them. With his claws covering her eyes, Toki eases her outer coat off, and lets it drop. Without the thick coat on, it’s easier to see where she has Thumper bundled.

She eases the front part of her shirt up blindly, settling it about the curve of her ribs, so that Thumper can feel the more natural heat coming from the fire. She's too cold, too numb, too empty to be upset by being so close to it. He needs it more- but not seeing it is certainly helping her to keep her calm.

“M-m-Miss T-Toki,” he chatters faintly- good, he’s awake. “M-mister T-Ten-Tenebris. It h-hurtssss.”

“Shh…” She soothes softly. One of her cold hands finds one of his paws, and she strokes his fingers soothingly. They’re looped around her ribs, clinging to her much like the time before. “It’s going to hurt. You were very cold, Thumper. Warming up is going to hurt- but you’re okay now. Nothing scary is going to get you with us here.”

He sniffs faintly, and clutches her fingers in his thawing paw. “I w-w-want my m-mom…”

She rumbles a soft sound through her chest, a vaguely soothing song being hummed to keep him as calm as she can.

Tenebris took off his coat, the clothing still quite heated on the inside, and he draped it over the two, "You'll see her soon, I just need to make sure you're going to recover perfectly."

She reclined as she was seated on the floor, and braced one arm behind her back to keep her slightly upright. This angle would let Tenebris work on the rabbit without disturbing him. She kept funneling her magic into her bones, keeping up the warm bubble that cradled the rabbit. The thawing ice ran slightly over her bones, and she suppressed a shudder.

“O-oh.” Thumper didn’t attempt to free himself from the tangle- he simply clutched onto her tighter, and blinked slowly up at the bigger monster. “Okay…” He hurt- his thin fur had done little to save him from the ice- and he had nothing but his own flighty tendencies to blame for nearly getting himself dusted. Tears beaded in his eyes, and he nuzzled his face into the large hand that he cradled close. It was cold- and so unlike how Miss Toki’s bones usually were- but it still smelled like her, and that was enough. He wasn’t dust- they found him, and he was going to get better. “I… I’m sorry…”

“You got scared,” She soothed softly. “It happens, Thumper. Loud noises can be scary- and this is the first real blizzard I bet you’ve ever seen. They’re kind of scary, I know. No one’s angry with you, Thumper. It’s okay.”

He reached and slowly ran his fingers over the young bunny's fur, watching his face for every twitch and reaction. "You're a brave bunny, Thumper, when the primary foolishness is overlooked." he commented quietly.

Most of the rabbits fur was tender and wet, but beginning to warm. His skin under it was chapped and looked burnt- his ears being the worst parts. The tips of them were black and blue, where the cold had practically frozen them solid. He cried out as those were touched, Tenebris words falling on empty ears.

Toki’s humming remained steady, and she rubbed his cheeks with her finger tips to distract him. “Go ahead and heal him- once he’s healed, all we need to do is let him warm up. And I think I’ve got that covered, between me and the fireplace.” She was running low- but it took marginally less magic to heat something that could fit inside of her abdominal cavity than it did to heat something that was a good deal larger than her.

He nodded once and after a moment began to release his magic to heal the child, if not at least numb him from the pain. “This is not good," he murmured to Toki, "the poor child..."

“This is what the weather up here is like,” She murmurs faintly. Her teeth are starting to melt, and her jaw slacks open limply as it thaws. Toki exhales slowly, tiredly. “Winter is hard here- which is why I had the houses built to withstand it.” She lets her head loll downwards, mildly frozen bones in her neck cracking and popping as she stretches them. “Children- they need to be bundled up and watched. Fur or no fur- this is not weather for anyone to be out in.”

Thumper’s fussing eases as the pain is numbed, and he falls quiet, listening to the sounds of the fire, and the pulse of magic over his flesh. Frostbite is easy enough to heal on the monster child- magic makes it many times easier.
"You're very lucky this was only stage one frostbite, no permanent damage." he told him sternly, a warning rumbling through his chest as he worked. The flesh mended, healing slowly, but surely, as he worked over the frozen parts. "You must not underestimate this world, it is less tame than that which we lived in before."

The rabbit resumes crying in earnest. He hadn't meant to run off- but the noise and the wind, it had scared him. They didn't have such things back in Snowdin. They had whiteouts, sure, but not like this.

Toki creaks open her eyes and rumbles a faint warning up at Tenebris, eye lights glimmering a weak, protective green. Tenebris did not have the best timing for scolding someone- not when the rabbit in her ribcage was already petrified of what happened. It didn't please her. "He understands, Tenebris. Thumper usually only makes a mistake once."

He looked at her, gauging the glow in her eyes, and then sighed and reached out to gently rub the child's ear where it had not sustained damage. "I'm glad he's a bright child, then..." he sighed, "He's foolish, but I'm glad he's a child that learns well from his mistakes."

"Rabbits are flighty. The adults are better at it- but I've babysat these guys enough to know. He gets spooked with wind and loud bangs. You know as well as I do that sometimes panic doesn't give you a choice in the matter, no matter how foolish." Her sockets close again once she's certain her point has been gotten, and then she shudders faintly. The cold in her bones aches. "Hah... 's really cold."

She murmurs more to herself than to him. "Might need to put another log on the fire. Others are going to need it when they get here." She wouldn't have the energy to warm them.

Her magic sputtered and died off, and Thumper whimpered faintly against her. She crooned and soothed him- the inside of her ribs were warm, so it would do for now. His tears ebbed off- and he dropped to sleep. Being cold was tired business- and now that he was safe and warming up, he was no doubt exhausted.

After putting another log on the fire, Tenebris gently pried Thumper from the inner parts of her ribcage. Thumper was content enough to let him put him against his warm and soft turtleneck to rest while he reached down and cupped Toki's cheek. "Are you alright?" he asked.

"Cold." She murmurs. Her arm eases down, and she lets herself lay flat. She idly lets her shirt back down, and just... lays there. The fire is warm, but she is cold. Very cold- and part of that was over use of her magic. "Might be over doing it with my magical heating trick." She admits.

"Take a rest, you're over exerting yourself."

"I am literally laying on the floor, too cold to panic over the fire that is maybe five feet from me. I am literally doing nothing." Not anymore, anyways. Her arms spread out, and she sighs. Her clothes are wet- but her magic wont gather to dry it- and her slippers are soggy. Ugh. "Keep warming Thumper," she hums. "Skin to skin is going to be best at this point." Now that she wasn't heating him with magic. "Rub his arms and legs to stimulate his muscles."

"Not my point." he huffed, though he then settled down and began to do what he was told. The young rabbit monster wasn't much help, but with him asleep it was easier to rub his limbs. The longer he rubbed, the warmer they began to feel. "Of course."

She peeks open an eye to watch him, and then slowly sits up again. She digs her fingers into her layers, and peels off all but the bottom layer of her clothes. Her wet slippers are tossed closer to the fire- and she is glad she didn't blindly throw them in the fire. Now clad in one of her thinner shirts and her thinner sweats, Toki uses her foot to nudge the wet clothing over to where her slippers are.
Her bottom layer is mostly dry- but it’s good enough. “How are you doing?” She inquires. “You don’t handle cold well.”

"I’m well enough... I wore boots this time."

“So you did.” She tilts her head at him, and gets to her feet as the door rattles again. “That’s probably his mother and the boys.”

She pads to it, and finds the handle still not quite frozen enough that she’s unable to pull it open. She opens it, and Thumper’s mother tackles her around her neck, babbling many thanks.

She pats her back softly, and steps back for the brothers to come in. “C’mon, before you let the chill in. Thumper’s asleep- but he’s starting to warm up better now.”

Tenebris is smiling gently as he holds Thumper close, rubbing over his limbs to warm him up. He glances at the door, and gives the boy’s mother a warm look.

Toki ushers the skeletons in, and manages to disentangle herself from his mother’s grasp. She wobbles as the rabbit abandons her, and shuts the door while the cream-colored hare bounces over to the largest monster. She shoots the boys a tired look, and steps forward to help them out of their wet jackets and outer clothes. “C’mon. Out of those- you need to dry off a bit before you mold or something.”

“Thank you.” Penelope gives him a wide, teary-eyed smile. She has the same eyes that Thumper does- and they swim like liquid amethyst with her tears. “Thank you, all of you, for finding my don. Is… Is he going to be okay?”

"Yes. He will be fine. He’s a strong young man." Tenebris assured her with a gentle smile.

“That he is.” She sniffs softly. Her fingers reach up to brush his cheek, and Thumper groans quietly.

“Mommy…?”

“I’m here, baby.” Her fingers stroke softly over his fur, and she dabbles at her damp eyes. “This is twice now you’ve scared me like this.”

“I’m sorry…” he whispered softly.

Toki smiled tiredly, and left the boys to their undressing. She wobbled closer, and brushed the rabbit’s shoulder. “You have a fire going at your house, right, Penelope?”

“We do, yes. A fire, and many candles.”

“Good. You can take him home now, if Tenebris has him fully healed,” her gaze flicks to him slightly. “But you need to bundle him up and keep him close. Body heat will keep his internal temperature up.”

"He is well enough to go home."

"I'll take them home." Cae volunteered.

“Thank you.” She gives the skeleton a thankful smile and gathers her son from Tenebris arms. The little gray bunny clings to her, and she holds him tightly. “Please- I want to take him home. Thank you both.” She steps closer to Caeruleus, and smiles up at him.

He grinned at her and offered his hand to her. "Here."
Toki gives her a cheery smile as the bunnies and the skeleton disappear. The tension bleeds from her bones, and she wobbles over to Tenebris. She drops into his lap like a very cold rock, and curls up with a shiver.

He wrapped his arms around her, and his tail pulled his coat over her. "You poor dear." he murmured. "Don't worry. I'm here to keep you warm." he purred.

“Good luck with that…” She mutters tiredly. She drapes across him, leeching what warmth she can, and settles in to rest without another word. Thank god for being a Nara- dropping off to sleep was practically second nature.

He chuckled, pressing a soft kiss to the top of her head, ready to let her rest. However, one last thing came to him and he purred gently, "Hey, Toki, do you know where you are right now?"

“Nnn? In your lap…?” Was that a trick question?

"You're in front of a lit fireplace. With a very much alive fire."

She tenses faintly, and her claws curl into his shirt. “Please don’t mention it. I’ve been very good and haven’t been looking at it. Or listening to it. I’m too cold to panic right now.” Her magic wasn’t even prickling. Exhaustion had her dragging down.

"Do you not realize? You're recovering very quickly." He praised.

“Situations happen.” She doesn’t have it in her to argue with him. She instead turns and curls her face into his chest, sprawling over him like a particularly chilly cat.

He chuckled and leaned back with a sigh, "Good Night, Toki."

“More like good morning…” Still, she dropped off to sleep, more than content where she lay.
Chapter 22

Strider Notes: Bit of a shorter chapter that comes after the last one, but it’s a good one none the less! Heh. Get some hints of Sansby too.

Come and visit us at our blog! :D Where you can witness shitposting, sass, and relevant things galore! http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Well, Poor dear Toki went and got herself DRAINED. How will we be helping our hero? This is how! By taking her to Sans’ boyfriend.

The snowstorm passed later that day. By noon, it was gone, and sunshine glimmered over top the freshly fallen flakes. The power wasn’t back on- but there wasn’t much to be done about it. They had to get the plows out for the road, and there was no telling when they’d make it all the way out to the village.

Most of the monsters got out, and began to uncover walkways, and open up the streets again. Blankets were traded, and Grillby’s was very busy, as monsters came in for warm food and drinks courtesy of the only fire based monster that could decently cook. Patrons came and went, stocking up on magically prepared foods to warm them up as they worked.

Toki didn’t wake up as shovels sounded loudly outside the house, even with the sunlight glimmering in threads through the window. She’d eventually moved onto the couch again, so Tenebris could bundle up in his chair and move closer to the fire. She was bundled up in blankets to actually sleep. She slept with her back to the fire, her shivers worse, and her bones ice cold to the touch. There was a faint tinge of magic on her cheeks, a spot tainted green that was a few scant degrees warmer than the rest of her bones. It lit up the small space between the couch and her face.

Her shivers were steady and growing ever stronger. No one bothered to knock and wake up the household- they had done a lot for Thumper the night prior, and none of the monsters outside were eager to wake the monsters within. Or at least, intentionally wake them. The sounds of shovels tossing snow were loud and grating- and sunlight was rapidly growing in the window as one of the monsters cleared the snowdrift that was piled against it.

Light bathed the room, warm and blissful- but did nothing to soothe the chill of her bones, or the shallow, fitful breaths that expanded her ribs.

Tenebris was snoring by the time the sun was high, his recliner leaned back as he was most comfortable that way. Both brothers were careful and quiet as they prepared for their day.

The light eventually reaches her, and a tiny groan leaves her. Her fingers grasp the blanket and tug it over her more as she shivers unconsciously. She trembles faintly, bones rattling loudly under her blanket cocoon.

The sound is loud in the quiet peace from inside the room. It’s louder than the fire in the fireplace, rattling drowning out the subtle crackling.
The noise drew attention. "Toki? Y'okay, Doll?" Caeruleus had heard the noise and came to check on her.

The rattling doesn’t stop, and she doesn’t answer. The part of the blankets facing out from the couch is warmed by the fire- but the side that isn’t is very cold. Her sockets remain closed, her face still tucked to the back of the couch.

"Toki?" He lifted the blanket to touch her bones directly, "Doll?"

His bones are warm compared to hers- and that was odd. Toki usually ran warm, like a rock left in the sun for several hours. This time it was like ice against his fingers, her skull still and breaths erratic as she flinches away from his fingers. “Nng…”

"Toki... Are you sick?" He asked gently as he moved his hand to her covered shoulder. Her bones are cold, and even her shirt is icy to the touch. She was usually very warm.

She shivers under his touch, groaning as his fingers prod her shoulder. Slowly, she opens one of her sockets, eye lights dim, and tilts to peer up at him blearily. “Mnn…?”

Her magic was hard to sense- and it occurred to him that she might have gotten too cold and too drained for her to regenerate it. He frowned. He didn’t know how to help someone with fire-based magic- but there was someone who did know. "Toki... I think you're sick..."

“Noooo…” She groans softly. Her socket closes again and she tucks the blanket around her. “Mm not siiiiiiiiick.” Skeletons couldn’t get sick, right? Well… they weren’t supposed to go into heat either- monsters were different.

"Yes you are. You used too much magic, didn't you?"

"You have the blanket." he sighed, though he let the corner of it drop back down around her shoulder. He shifted and picked her up, grunting faintly as he did so. "Come on, you."

Her socket’s popped open as she squeaked and flailed faintly, kicking her legs as the blanket abandoned them. Her pants were nice, but did little to block the air that drifted up the legs. “Cae, noooooo.” She whines. The sudden change in position makes her skull throb, and she clenches her sockets shut again. Ugh. Headache. “Put me downwwwwwn, you ass. I’m fine.”

"No, you're gonna suck it up and come with me," he huffed, getting his slippers on.

She rolls in his arms, trying to free her hands so she can crawl over his shoulder. Freeing both of her arms is a chore, so she attempts to climb to freedom with the one she manages to wiggle free from her blankets. If the shorter skeleton was not going to listen to her- she'd instead call to the only other being she knew was in the room. “Tenebris! Help!”

Tenebris' eyes opened in bleary alarm and he sat up, gaze flicking in the direction of Toki’s voice. He yawned. "Sans...?"

"She's sick, Pops... I’m taking her to Grillby."

“I’m not sick,” she groans. She flails her hand over Caeruleus shoulder in a plea for help. “Make him put me down, it’s cold in here and cold out there.”

"You used too much magic last night, Toki.” Tenebris rumbled groggily. “You are experiencing Magi-Drain. An 'illness' that comes with using too much magic."

“Then let me sleep.” She huffs tiredly. She squirms in his arms again, and tries to flick the blanket back over her bare feet. “It’ll come back on it’s own right?”

"It wont recharge fast enough. Not without a proper jumpstart."

“Speed isn’t everything… What does Grillby have anything to do with a jumpstart?” Unless panic was their motive for getting her magic going again, she seriously didn’t see how they were going to cure her of whatever the hell Magi-Drain was.

"You both have fire-based magic, by sharing his magic with you, it will aid yours in getting back up and running." Tenebris explained with a sigh.

“Oh…” She sighs and slumps. She doesn’t have the energy to fight the grasp on her right now. She peeks her eyes open and glares up at him. “I… you’re probably gonna need to keep my sockets closed, or we’ll have a Halloween repeat.”

"Duly noted.” Cae sighed, before he took a shortcut with her in his arms. "Just keep your face in your blanket."

The shortcut was not pleasant with her eyes open, and her nonexistent innards lurch at the disorienting sensation that washes over her. Maybe it’s because she doesn’t have magic to brace herself, but it did not feel right. She groans and presses her face into the blanket. “Skeletons can feel nauseated. Who knew?” She groused.

The inside of the bar is warm, and there is a lull of monsters as the lunch rush passes. It’s empty, and dimly lit from the light through the front windows, and the light from the bartender behind his bar.

Grillby blinks as Caeruleus appears, holding what looks to be a lump of blankets with feet and horns. Setting down his glass, he adjusts his tie and leans against the counter. Silently, he arches a questioning brow. He figured he’d be seeing Sans again soon, but hardly the same day as the blizzard.

"Hey Grillbz. I need your help with something. Toki here has flame-magic but she went and drained herself last night tryin' to find Thumper. Think you can jumpstart her?"

“You’d have done the same, Cae. Don’t even try to deny it.”

Toki- as in Tokiko Nara? He recalled her quite well- she had panicked at seeing him, for reasons that he very well understood. As he understood it, she had burned alive, and had come out of it no longer being human. The rabbit boy, Thumper, he too couldn’t handle being around Grillby. Some of the adults had informed the fire monster that it wasn’t his fault- that it had to do with what the fire had done and what the rabbit had seen.

He fully understood of course- the child would work through his problems in time. Children were more resilient- but the Nara woman, she was an adult. From what he understood of human aging from before the war, she had been half way through her life cycle. Those sorts of damages were not easily healed.

His brow furrows, and the faint lines that mark his mouth tilt downwards. He tilts his head, and mumbles faintly. “I do not wish to scare her again.” He says softly, knowing his voice likely wouldn’t carry though the thick blanket that kept the skeletal woman from his vision. “But I will help if she allows it.” Magic donation had to be done willingly- or there was a risk of dousing one’s flames. She needed a spark to get her burning again- in a metaphorical sense, not a literal sense.
"Keep her eyes covered, that's all it'll take. You know how to have your fire run cool don’t you?"
Cae inquired. He’d have to make her a blindfold for when she wanted to come talk to Grillby. His place as a figurative and literal beacon in the monster population made him someone that would be useful in the daily running of this new town.

The fires of his head crackled faintly, and he shot Cae a bemused look. He was older than he looked-a lot older. “Of course I know.” It was Fuku who was still learning- hence why she was still underground, managing the bar below. Once she could manage to handle the rain in waterfall, she would come topside with him. He sighs and steps around the end of the bar. He motions for him to put the skeleton on one of the tables. He would need to draw out her soul for this- fire based magic was tricky business to relight.

Toki grumbles faintly, but claps her hands over her sockets to make sure she keeps them closed. The crackling of fire is a bit disconcerting- but if she pretends that it’s just the sound of the fireplace, it’s not so bad.

He nodded and laid her down, using the blanket to cover her eye sockets for her. “Allow me, I’ve gotten used to the whole pulling-it-out method.”

There was a vague mumble from below the blankets as Toki snickers faintly. Pulling it out method,

And indeed, he effortlessly was able to summon her soul, lifting it from her chest. "Though, uh, do be careful, those cracks on it are pretty nasty if you touch them."

Grillby hesitated as the soul was drawn out, the craggy line of his mouth dropping down into a frown. “So many cracks for one so young….” He murmurs faintly. His hands come to cup her soul, and his magic supports her now. He is careful as he checks her over- and very nearly drops her soul as the fires on his head dim.

Oh. Oh stars.

He… Hadn’t expected to see one of these ever again. He hadn’t… Shit, he had hoped to never see a soul like this again. Nerves make his fires crackle faintly, before he settles them with a forceful exhale. Despite what she was, she was good. She was kind- the shade of her soul was not like the one he had met long before. No- she was a good one. And if the others did not know what she was-well, he wasn’t going to kick the proverbial hornets nest.

Toki groans faintly as his magic eases into her soul, and she shivers violently as the fire monster croons at her. It is not entirely pleasant- she is so, so cold, and he is so very warm as his hands cradle the very core of her being.

Caeruleus took a moment to hug her tightly. "You're doing great." He murmured softly, sockets watching the flame elemental before him. "I'll be over soon, doll.” The unease in the fire elemental was there and gone rather quickly, but Cae was good at seeing things. Seeing the discomfort in his form was odd indeed, and he'd have to ask him about that later.

Grillby keeps his silence as he works on warming the soul in his hands. As he trickles his magic in, it begins to warm and pulse brighter. Fire magic was a rare thing now, so rare indeed, but it had many uses besides the obvious. As her spark relit, he could feel her magic churning back to life, devouring his magic like a wildfire. He almost winced as her magic flared faintly against his hands. The heat of her magic was immense, rivaling his own, but it was uncontrolled and wild. Human souls were so powerful compared to a monster soul that it was almost mind-boggling.
“She needs training.” He murmurs. One hand still feeds her soul from the deep well of his magic, while the other reaches out to hover over her legs. She is so small compared to them- he could hold both of her ankles in one hand. Her frailty was so… strange for a skeleton monster. “Her magic is wild and buzzing with activity. She will be formidable with proper instruction.”

He frowns still. “Her size is worrisome. From what I remember of skeleton females, they were quite large and fierce.” They had been a declining race back even before the war- and he’d had a few of them under him in his garrison. He knew most of his fighter’s well and the skeletons had been formidable, even as they crumbled to dust against the human mage’s attacks. “But she was human… There is no growth that will likely happen then.”

“Thats what I’m thinkin’… yeah… I mean, I wouldn’t know…” Caeruleus wasn’t even a full-blooded skeleton himself, so how could he… he shook off those thoughts, and then looked at Grillby. "I’m thinking Dad has it in his agenda when she’s recovered enough. No use in training her fire if she’s gonna get triggered by it.”

Grillby tilts his head thoughtfully and hums a soft, raspy noise. “Fire is unpredictable.” He says softly. Her magic was strong- and he had seen Cae’s hand when he had returned. She had burnt half of his hp away just by the touch of her soul alone. Fire could be many things- and as uncontrollable as hers felt, it was little wonder that there hadn’t been more burns for everyone. She had control, yes, but for how long? Her inherent kindness was likely keeping a lid on things- but eventually fire always escapes the grasp of those new to its uses. “Your brother mentioned to me that she has improved up to candles. In time, she will recover. Her soul is already healing. Look.” His hand tilts her soul, and though he doesn’t touch the cracks, he motions to the very bottoms of them. Some of the smaller splinters were no longer the bright, flame colored red that the rest were. They were a soft green- not the same green as the rest of her soul, but newly healed. Fresh. Fragile.

He smiled slightly upon seeing the healing cracks, eyes brightening. "Holy shit, Toki... Way to go, doll..." he chuckled.

“I… I managed to handle the fireplace last night. But I was too cold, and I didn’t look at it. It’s, ah, how I’m handling you right now, no offense. You sort of sound like a campfire. Anyways… Maybe my theory on fixing my cracks was right? Maybe… The better I am around fire, the more the cracks will close up?”

He rumbles a soft, amused laugh, and gently pats her knee as he funnels more magic in. Her soul was looking better and better- and it was not like he did not have a large wellspring to draw from. There were no fire-boss monsters left, after all. He and Fuku were the last of the fire elementals, and he hadn’t put his magic to large use in many a year. “No offense taken, little spark. Progress is progress- you are doing well. It is an interesting theory- but likely the case.” After all, belief in something working was a powerful cure sometimes.

“This is our first actual time talking, isn’t it? I didn’t make a good first impression- I’m sorry.” Her voice is muffled by the blanket, and by Cae’s hand, but this close, it’s not hard to hear her. “Little belated, but welcome to Nara Village?”

“It is good to be here.” He murmurs warmly. He turns her soul again, idly checking her stats. Her attack was… pitifully low. But that helped ease some of his tension. Her defense had his brows lifting, dislodging his glasses. Stars above- that was a high stat. It explained her resilience. Though… His frown appeared, and his gaze flicked over to Cae. “You may want to have your brother heal her when you return. Her HP is not full.” It was reading out at a thousand even, but there was space to be filled in on the bar. Not much- but probably from her running around in the cold the night prior.

"Grillby was the brightest face to look forward to when you reached Snowdin, Literally and figuratively.” Cae joked, gaze flicking from Grillby’s frame down to the soul that looked so very small in the large monster’s hand. “Heh, sure thing Grillbz. Afterwards you think I could come back for the usual?” However after a moment he looked to her soul and realized why her numbers were skewed. “T-Toki! Oh my god!” he laughed.

“What? What am I missing out on?”

“I’m… not sure why he is laughing.” The fire elemental stared at the cackling skeleton, and then peered at the soul. Both hands came to cup it, and he peered at the numbers. “A thousand out of a thousand and ten. It’s not that big of a loss- surely you lost it while out looking for the lost child.”

She pauses, and then chuckles faintly. “Holy shit. Grillby, no, my HP max was a thousand flat. It went up.”

“Oh. Well, yes. Soul damage to this extent can greatly drop your max total HP. Surely you did not expect her HP to stay this low once she had recovered?” Truly, with what she was, he was surprised to see the numbers as low as they were. The ones he had faced… They never managed to whittle them down to take them out.

"Holy shit, Toki! This is great!” he all but beamed.

“Oh. Well, yes. Soul damage to this extent can greatly drop your max total HP. Surely you did not expect her HP to stay this low once she had recovered?” Truly, with what she was, he was surprised to see the numbers as low as they were. The ones he had faced… They never managed to whittle them down to take them out.

"Holy shit, Toki! This is great!” he all but beamed.

“Uhuh.” She squirms faintly, and flexes her fingers. She still felt tired- like he was filling a bucket with a teaspoon- but she wasn’t as cold. Her marrow felt warmer inside of her bones, and it was a much more pleasant sensation than she remembered. “I’m starting to feel better. Not as cold.”

“Your fire had been dampened.” The fire monster muttered. “You have fire based magic. You must take care to not let yourself get so low on magic. You have a lot of magic at your disposal. I’m not sure how you ran so low…”

“A… Heat, actually. Like you said, I don’t have the best control, so I sorta… basted the house with it? Anyways, I was doing okay until I had to thaw Tenebris and Thumper.”

A bemused grin tugged at Grillby’s face, and a blue hue overtook his face. That explained the sudden appearance of the older brother at his bar for their… Well. “Ah… So you’re the one who caused all the trouble.”

“Trouble?”

“Mhm. Several monsters around your block went into heat.”

Mortification flooded her, and if she hadn’t already had her face covered, she’d have been hiding it again. “Oh my gods, please tell me you’re lying to me.”

“I’m not, actually. It’s a perfectly natural thing.” Grillby chuckled. “Until you get control of your magic, you’ll bring a lot of monsters into heat. Skeletons are one of the few universally compatible monsters for breeding- it’s actually something that developed as they began to die out.” He’d had a handful with the females he’d had in his garrison. Once one went into heat, they all went into heat. Not necessarily bad, because they turned aggressive on the humans, but it did cause a lot of discourse between the soldiers. “A defense mechanism, I think.”

Caeruleus snickered at that, "Grillby here seemed well enough despite the sudden flare of... Well... Activity." the smug bastard then proceeded to wink at the elemental.

The flush on his face grew, and Grillby eased her soul back into her chest. He covered his mouth and faked a cough, smoothing his hands down the front of his vest. “I am very old. It takes a lot to bring a fire based monster of my age into heat- and my bar is far enough from your home that I was safe.” Safe from her at least, but not from Sans. “Regardless- I do believe you have recovered enough. You need rest, and proper monster food to bolster your magic. If Caeruleus will not fix it for you, then perhaps Papyrus might be convinced. He is proficient at cooking, if I recall.”

Toki just grinned under her blankets, a faint giggle escaping her as she subtly nudged the skeleton that was blinding her. She heard the tone in Cae’s voice- and the strange tone to the fire monster’s smoky voice, and knew exactly where the skeleton had spent his heat. That might explain why Sans was allowed to have such a high tab at the bar- after all, one did not woo the one that was desired by making them pay for their drinks and food. “I’ll talk to Pap. If he’s not too tired from restoring my HP, I’ll see if he can whip up some magical spaghetti or something once the power comes back on. Or hot cocoa. Cocoa sounds amazing right now.”

"I'm the cocoa master here." Caeruleus huffed proudly as he scooped her up, "Heheheh."

There was a click of machinery and electronics, before the lights of the bar flickered to life.

“Power’s back on. Thank the gods, now we can actually go heat up the whole of the house.” Toki shifted in his arms, and wiggled her feet. “Cocoa master indeed. And now we can actually cook… Though you’re welcome to come back here for some time with Grillby. Wobbly or not, I can make cocoa on my own.”

Grillby simply smiles a small, indulgent smile. “Rest well, Miss Toki. It has been a pleasure to meet you. Maybe soon, we can talk without the need for a blindfold.”

“That’s what I’m hoping.”

The barkeeper flicks his gaze to Caeruleus, and parts his mouth faintly. A glowing tongue scores over jagged teeth made of flame, before he seals it again, a teasing reminder of what the flame elemental had to offer. Flustering him brought about it’s own consequences- and he was sure that the skeleton egged him on just for them. “You’re welcome back whenever you have the free time, Sans.”

"I know I’m still gonna be a repeat customer, Grillbz. See you next time!” he winked at him as he then turned to take his leave, chuckling as he walked out into the snow. "See? Isn't he great company?" Cae spoke to Toki after a while.

“He is,” she agreed. She struggled and freed her face once the cold swooped over her. She burrowed as best she could into the blanket and shivered. Apparently Sans was feeling too lazy to put his shortcuts to use again. Not that it mattered- it was cold out, but she didn’t have that marrow-deep chill settled into her bones anymore. Not like before, at least. “And I did okay. I think part of my calm was… Whatever the heck your dad called it. Magi-drain? That thing. He’s really nice though, and I think he really likes you. Very soft spoken though.”

"He's a quiet kinda guy, I guess that's why everyone likes him. He listens.”

She reaches up with a wide grin and pinches the flexible bone next to his ever-present grin. “Is that why youuuu like him?”

"Eyooo!” he growled out, "Easy on the cheekbones, doll or I’ll drop you!"

“You wouldn’t dare drop me in the snow.” she grins. She gentles her pinch though, remembering her claws, but tugs lightly to jostle him with an amused petulance. Tired and recovering from a sickness or not, Toki was a big sister, and she was going to tease him about it. “You didn’t answer meeeeee.
Someone’s got a cruuuuuush on the hot bartender, doesn’t he?"

"No." he growled, "Now shut up about it or I will drop you."

She released his face only to laugh good-naturedly up at him. Oh he so did. That was adorable. “Oh no, you’re adorable when you’re flustered.”

She might be thirty-two years old, but one was only too old to be childish if they felt like it. Lowly, she began to chant. “Cae and Grillby sitting in a tree,” the tone of her voice told all- she knew she was going to get dropped on her ass. She just hoped he teleported home first. “K-I-S-S-I-N-G-”

Dropped indeed, with no teleport to boot.

“THAT’S COLD!”
Chapter 23

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: Heh. We get to see a little bit of the big-sister side of Toki here. The fact that she helped raised eight boys sort of comes into play here. She also once again imparts with us the fact that she has balls of steel.

Also come check out our blog! :D lots of shenanigans go down here. Y'all are missing out hard core. http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing notes: We'll see the more unseen sides of the Gaster family in this Chapter.
Sans being a little shit
Papy being a Puzzle Nerd and Gaster being a salty old man.

She was beginning to think this had been a huge mistake. Huge. The biggest. Why? She had taken Caeruleus to Ikea.

The days had rolled on, the snow melting off as the weather gave in to a slightly warmer front. Now everything was ankle deep mud and slightly flooded rivers- but it was better than the endless blankets of snow and ice.

It was about a week before Thanksgiving that her house got finished. It ended up being bigger than she expected. It towered three stories high, with ceilings tall enough for even Asgore to stand straight. The first floor held the living room, an extended kitchen and dining room, a large walk in storeroom for her honey, and the bottom floor bathroom. Everything had been made with all of the larger monsters in mind- because she wanted to be able to invite everyone into her home.

The second floor held her bedroom, a private bathroom off of her bedroom, a regular bathroom off at the end of the hall, and four guest rooms with room for multiple beds in them. The third floor was, once more, an attic. She didn’t have anything to put up there yet, but she may end up turning it into a private lounge. It had a large window at one end, so it overlooked her hives, and the tops of the trees surrounding the compound and surrounding village.

The house was big, made of brick and treated wood. It had running water, full electricity- the only thing it was missing was someone living inside of it. Thankfully, as the month rolled on, her insurance finally got around to getting her the reimbursement for what she had lost. So she had a large sum of money burning a nice big hole in her bank account.

That’s what lead her to bringing the boys to town. She had hijacked Aliquam and Caeruleus, leaving Tenebris at home to wait for their return. As it was, her truck could seat four normally- but the brothers took up the majority of the space. Trying to fit Tenebris in as well would make for either an uncomfortable ride, or someone getting shoved into the back of it.

Or in the pull-along trailer she had hooked up. Either way, he hadn’t been too bothered by her request to stay home. They simply did not make large trucks to be that sort of monster friendly.

The space would be needed- she had a home to furnish, and food to be gotten. Furniture first though-food could come after, when they didn’t have to worry about having a fridge to put it in. She needed a fridge and a freezer first- because she was hosting Thanksgiving for her family. She had to get at least a turkey and a ham, if not two of each- and had to have space for everything to be stored.

So after a long drive to town, she had gotten them parked in the parking lot, and linked arms with Papyrus to guide them inside. They got stares as they entered- because three skeletons walking into an Ikea sounded like the start of a terrible joke- but the stares were not what had her regretting everything.

“Cae- Cae, no, oh my god.”

"Hey Toki," Cae grinned as he held up a chair. "I’ve got you on my 'Reidar'."

She groaned and turned her head away. “I need a couple chairs anyways,” she groused. She assists Papyrus into loading several of them up into the cart, and continues onwards. “Pap? How on earth are you two related? Your brother is ridiculous.”

He doesn’t answer. He just stares ahead with an embarrassed look while Caeruleus meandered over to a hanging plant, "Hey Toki, do you think this plant is a 'Riskorn' not?"

“Your puns are definitely going to put you at risk,” she huffs. She doesn’t bother with fake plants- no, she’s off to grab end tables and anything else that she can find. Papyrus becomes the one to push the shopping cart as the tall skeleton tries very hard to pretend that his brother does not exist.

Toki tries to pretend he doesn’t too. Dear gods, she tries.

She fails.

"Hey Toki, you mentioned we had some rodent issues," Cae said as he walked up once more, "So I caught you a-” he then held up another, smaller chair "Kritter~"

“Oh my god, Cae stop.” She presses a hand to her face, stifling a laugh. Nearby, one of the men in the store covers a laugh with a coughing fit, and her face burns brighter. She heads for the bedding section, intent on getting a bed frame and a decent bed that would fit her and… Well, Aliquam too.

"Hmm... You know, Al..." he said, padding up to an 'Adum's rug. He held it up, and pointed to the sign."

"I think they named this one after you, bro.”

"Oh my god, Sans!"

“I never should have brought you here. I should have shoved Tenebris in the truck and left you home. Oh my god.” Toki’s skull clacks against Aliquam’s arm, and she groans. She does snag three of the rugs though, and tosses them on the cart. The floor of her house was done in tile- so everything was going to be bloody cold in the mornings. “Gods sake, Cae.”

"Hey pap, I got a question about you and your girlfriend.” Cae moved closer to his brother as they passed some shelves. "Do Utrusta?"

"Sans." Aliquam groans.

“Sans no.”

“Sans yes.”
Toki groaned. She needed bookshelves- and bypassing them as they head for the beds, she snags a few that could be stacked together. They were heavy, and went into the cart easily enough. “Cae if you don’t stop, this ‘Bladis’ going to find itself lodged in between your ribs.” She hefts whatever the thing is and flings it in the direction of the elder brother. It’s small and covered in plastic- and more than likely to bounce off his coat than anything else.

It takes her a moment, before she groans. “Oh no. The puns are infectious.”

"I guess that means you", he reached and pointed to some sheets, "'Kannetecken’ anymore.” he chuckled lowly.

“Disowned. I am disowning you, Sans.” She huffs.

It was going to be a long, long day.

"Oh Toki, you just cant stand that I'm-" he held up some more sheets, "-Sarskild.”

“Think they take super late Halloween returns here?” She turns a deadpan gaze to Papyrus. “I’m sure they can fit one more skeleton in their closet.”

"I'm starting to think about forging a receipt."

"I think you guys are really 'Envis' about my skills as a pun master.” Caeruleus cackled loudly.

“We probably should.” She grumbles. The beds come into view, and she searches for the largest one she can find. California king- that seemed decent. It offered lots of space to sprawl, or to spread paperwork on when she didn’t want to work at a table like a civilized person usually did.

She frowns. “This isn’t going to fit in the truck. Think we can fit a mattress this size and a bed frame in the trailer?"

"Probably. If you can a ford it, it looks like we'll dodge a bullet on this one."

“Caeruleus. I will hide all of the ketchup bottles in the house and you wont find them. I swear to all the gods. All of them.” She groans. “This is revenge for teasing you about him, isn’t it?”

“Probably.” Aliquam hums, eying it and largely trying to ignore his brother’s pestering of his girlfriend. It was a very, very large mattress. “It can’t possibly be that hard to maneuver it in there.”

“I’m sure we can manage.”

Caeruleus appears to shove a frying pan in her hands, and his grin widened. “I dunno Toki, you don’ got the ‘Tolerance’ for my puns- how you think you’re going to have the patience to fit that in the trailer?”

“Same way I’m going to stuff you in a body bag.”

It took three trips to get everything they needed, and to get it home. Toki ended up stopping for food supplies during the third run, simply because she wasn’t going to be up for a fourth run to town just for food after they got the house together.

Outside of her house was relatively empty, because everything had been stacked inside. Some things were being shipped to her house at a later date- because try as she might, she could not get a monster-friendly couch in this country, so that had to be purchased online and shipped from overseas.

She also ordered paint- because the bland color of the red bricks was not really something she liked. She was going to paint it something bright and colorful, just for the hell of it.

She tasked Caeruleus and Tenebris with putting together her shelves and coffee table, while she and Papyrus were trying to get her freezer plugged in. The plug in cord was short- so they’d had to switch it spots with the fridge. She was flopped across the counter, with Aliquam holding the freezer at an angle so she could get it plugged in.

They were listening to the melodious music of Tenebris and Sans attempting to put things together- and amusing.

Sans sounds positively befuddled. "I thought this goes with those pegs."

Gaster was growing rapidly more irritated with his eldest son. "No, no, no, no, THAT goes with these pegs."

"Shouldn't they have like, coded these?"

The father was growing exasperated too. Very exasperated. "They did!"

"Well they shoulda’ done color codes instead or something."

"Sans Caeruleus Gaster, are you a bloody child!?"

Toki laughs as she manages to get it plugged in. She shimmies out, her shirt riding up and exposing her ribs. “Ha- Your brother and father sure are enjoying the best part about Ikea, aren’t they?” It was probably mean of her to stick Tenebris with putting together the furniture with Sans- but Sans had earned it for being a pain in the tail bone for the duration of their outing.

Cheekily, she cups her palm around her mouth to amplify her voice as she fixes her shirt. “Have you tried turning it the other way around?” She calls to the duo in what would become her living room.

Completely unhelpful advice was going to be her forte for the evening.

Aliquam chuckled at her shout, before hearing an "oh!" from one of them.

"They sound like they're doing puzzles" Aliquam said, before he let out a small sigh.

“Technically it is puzzles.” She grins up at him. “Not very fun ones, though. Nothing goes where it’s supposed to go, and everything is backwards. But Ikea is known for being cheap- and the insurance didn’t reimburse enough to get everything in the old-style of stuff I had prior.” Her solid oak wardrobe was gone- and she wasn’t shelling out another several thousand dollars for one. Nah- she’d settle for a cheap dresser that didn’t weigh four hundred pounds. “If you’d rather go help them, you can, Pap. C’mere for a second first though.” She wiggles her fingers at him from her seat on the counter. She was almost level with him like this.

"Nyeh?” he smiled as he finished sliding the freezer into place. He padded closer, leaning down just faintly. "What is it?"

“This.” Toki grins. She shifts and pulls him closer, parting her legs so she can loop her arms around his neck. She’s tall enough to do this here without him having to crane down too far, and as an added bonus, he was within kissing range. She bumped her teeth to his gently, and rubbed her fingers gently along his shoulders. “Mmm. I love you, Ali. I’m glad you came shopping with me today.”

He let out a soft purr once she parted the kiss, and he nodded once as he looped his arms around her. "My pleasure~" he purred gently, "I’m so glad I could come as well. It was fun!"

“Not bad for a trip into town, eh? Sorry about shoving you in the back cab of the truck.” It was the only place that had room for the leggy skeleton to fold his limbs. She smiled up at him, eye lights dancing warmly as she looped her knees over his hips, tickling the backs of his legs with her dangling toes. Having no ligaments meant more flexible joints. “Heh… As nice as it is to have a space to call my own again, I’m going to miss living with you guys.”

"Hey, it's fine." he chuckled, "And at least you'll have your own bed, yeah?"

“My own bed indeed.” She grins up at him and winks, a flush flicking over her cheeks. “Want to help me… break it in~?”

"Mmm, as long as you don’t mind staining it green~" he purred, pulling her hips to his as he smirked down at her.

“Good thing I got green sheets, yeah?” She grins up at him. Her hand wanders down, trailing over his rib and down to tease at his iliac crests. “We’ll have the whole house to ourselves- which means we don’t have to be quiet.”

He was going to reply to that until there was a clatter and the loud sound of Sans shouting. "SON OF A-

"SANS!"

"... I better go." he pulled away fast and ran to the front room.

Toki was a bit disappointed, but concern over rode that feeling quickly. She hopped from the counter, shorter legs carrying her a little slower towards the front room than Pap had done. Shit- did Sans hurt himself with something? “What happened?”

"Played balancing act." Tenebris growled, tapping Cae in the head with the side of a fist. "You idiot"

"Ow, damnit!" He growled, "Look, her petty revenge was poorly thought out! Pap was always better than puzzles than I am." he grumbled

"You had your skills with puzzles, Sans." Aliquam pat his brother's shoulder with a smile then he turned. "Though... Let's leave the expensive furniture to me."

Toki stared at the pile of something that was supposed to be a shelf, and felt her bones buzz noisily with something between irritation and amusement. “Gods above, Sans. Just… I thought you hurt yourself. Shit. Alright. Fine- punishment is over then. You want to help me move the rest of the stuff in the house while your brother takes over building?”

"YES."

She snorts a laugh, and motions for him to follow her. “Alright, alright. C’mon. We’ve got to get the dining table in the house. It’s gonna take some work- the doors aren’t wide enough for it.” They’d need to turn it on its side.

It was also a more expensive item she’d splurged for- because it needed to hold up the rigors that came from family holidays. “Ali? You okay to help your dad?”

"Of course Toki," he gave her a thumbs up. "Go ahead and go do whatever you’ve got to do. Father and I will be here."

“Alright.” She gives him a cheery salute, and leaves Sans to follow behind her. The table was still outside, a heavy cherry-wood thing that was designed more for banquets than for normal every-day eating. She stares at it, and sighs in resignation. “This is going to suck.”

"Mmm... Maybe not". He cupped his chin, "Let's leave that for Pops to carry in."

“What, you chicken?” she grins at him. “You don’t think we can get it? Fine. Help me get my bed frame inside then? That’s something we can put together. It’s literally four pieces of wood. How hard can it be?”

"That, I can do. Just remember to duck." he chuckled, going to get started on those.

She watched as he began to float the long boards up the stairs and into the house. “You do realize that this would be a thousand times easier if you just did that all the time, and not at randomly selective moments, right? We could get the table inside! Think of the possibilities!” He could have had the freezer plugged in without having to contort and do it by hand- Hell, he could have had the whole house set up in moments.

"Who do you think I am? My Dad?” he cackled, "I'll do what I can, but I'm still me, and that isn't gonna change anytime soon.” Somehow, without lips, he whistled as he started carrying everything upstairs.

Toki sighed. Of course he wasn’t- and Sans was a habitual lazybones. She grumbles quietly, and fetches the mattress. For as big as it is, it’s also very heavy- but she manages to get it to the stairs, and up the front steps. She followed along behind him, dragging it up the old fashioned way instead of embracing the laziness of the Nara.

Sitting down in front of where the bed was gonna be set up, he danced the wood planks around and grabbed the screws, putting them in until they were set. It took only a few short moments, and then the bed frame was in place and resting in the middle of the room. "Here we go."

She managed to get the mattress up the second flight of stairs about the time that Sans got the bed set up. She stared at him, straining to push the heavy mattress through the door. “You and your magical hacks, man. Just... Not fair. Not fair at all.” She grumbles.

He grinned and bided his time. As she put all her strength into pushing the mattress further into the room, he proceeded to simply lift it up with his magic and scoot it forwards out of her reach. Revenge was sweet. "Heheh."

And right onto her face she would go, a loud clatter of bones on tile as she slips without the mattress to brace against. “You can be such a little shit!” She hisses from the floor. That was something like what her brothers would do! Gods above, what a dick move.

The thud was loud, and it drew the attention of the tall skeleton below. Aliquam called up from the ground floor with great concern. "Tokiko! Are you okay?"

She sat up, and patted her mouth. She paused and wiggled a tooth. Oh. Oh gods he did not. She turned to him with a sharp glare. He made one of her fangs loose. It. Was. ON. “I AM IN THE MIDDLE OF MURDERING YOUR BROTHER.”
She scrabbles up, knocking over the mattress with an even louder THUMP, and the chase is on.

"HAHAHA- OH SHIT!" Caeruleus laughed as he turned and bolted to the bathroom, locking the door behind him.

She hit the door and rattled the knob. “Sans Caeruleus Gaster, you open this damn door right now and take your thumps like a man!”

"Sowwy! No one with dat name, on the pooopaaaaahh, come back later!" Was sung in a higher voice, mocking and full of dry sarcasm all at once.

“SANS.” She rattles it harder. She has a key- yes, she does. She begins searching her pockets. “Key, key, key, where’s the damn key…”

"Ooooooooh imma little teapot short and stout!" By some miracle, he makes a perfect prrrt sound effect. His laughter echoes in the room.

She knew he was just messing with her- and part of that is what egged her onwards. She was a big sister- and she too could be egged into action when sufficiently motivated. Knocking loose a tooth was sufficient revenge. So as he mocked her with the teapot, she felt her own kettle steaming faintly.

“You’re going to be short and stout when I’m done with you.” She threatens. Her keys are located, and she jambs it into the lock as she runs her tongue over her loose tooth. What if it fell out? Could skeletons even naturally grow back teeth? She would look weird with a gap in her fangs.

The door unlocks, and she shoves it open.

And he’s gone.

Aliquam turns to look out the window and sees his older brother hauling ass towards the main town, and no doubt Grillby’s, letting out a loud laugh as he raced through the muck outside. He turned a corner and was gone from sight.

Toki comes thundering down the stairs moments later, cupping her mouth in one hand, and looking around for the elder brother as she scrabbled to keep her balance. “Where is he? He’s going to get the noogie of his fucking LIFE.”

The father and brother exchanged quick looks, before both immediately shrugged their shoulders.

She flicks her gaze to them and her eyes sharpen. “He knocked my damn tooth loose. He’s just… UGH. I’m going to burn all of his ketchup. All of it.”

"Tokiii, nooo, c'mere." Aliquam reached for her with a smile, "C'mere."

She scowls, but approaches him regardless. Her bones buzz irritably, and her mouth smartens. She cradles her jaw in her hand and eases down onto the floor next to him. “Cae can be such a dick.” She huffs. Technically she had deserved it.

He cupped her cheeks and cooed soothingly as he presses soft kisses to her face a few times. He set her tooth in one quick motion and used a burst of healing magic to secure it once more. "There, all better. Now, what did you say my brother did?" he asked softly.
The setting of her tooth was not entirely pleasant, but the healing magic soothed that. Her bones still buzzed with irritation, vibrating faintly under her clothes. “I was pushing the mattress up the stairs—the big California king sized one for my bed—and I managed to get it to my room and in the door. He… Well, he did his magical mojo and yanked it out from under me. I might have landed on my face. On the tile. He, ah, proceeded to mock me from the bathroom. So all of his ketchup must be burned. Retribution and all of that.”

If Caeruleus wanted to start a war of shenanigans, and then by all rights, she would end it. A lady always ended fights, after all.

"No, Toki. Noooo." he cooed, pecking her face with kisses a few more times, "Noooooo." She flailed her arms, trying her best to remain irritated as she pushed weakly at his chest. His kisses made her stifle a giggle, each one seeming to sap away more and more of her frustration with the older brother. “No, Pap, stop it, I have to remain irritated with him—stop with your anger nullifying kisses!”

"Muah, muah, muah, muah!” he cooed as he kissed her.

“Ack- Pap!” She couldn’t help the laughter that bubbled forth. His theatrical noises had her busting into laughter—she was never one for lingering with irritation anyways. It never settled well in her bones. “Pap, nooooo!”

"Muah, muah, muah, muah, muah~ All the kisses for Tokiko!"

Toki slumps into him with a sigh and soft giggles. Her eyes glint for a second, before she leans up and presses into his last kiss, deepening it with a soft purr. Payback for sucking her dry of her irritation would be getting one hell of a kiss, and nothing more.

Heh—maybe Tenebris could take lessons for when he’s all flustered about kisses with the king?

He let out a pleased coo and held the kiss for a little while, before he pulled back and let out a pleased ‘Nyeh heh heh~’. She sighed up at him, and squinted her sockets. “Teasing me into not being upset with your brother is cheating, Pap. That’s hardcore cheating, isn’t it, Tenebris?”

"Heh, a chip off the old block.” the older monster smirked to himself.

She shifted with a sigh and rolled, casually pushing herself into the larger skeleton’s lap so she could look out over the mess of Ikea parts. “I dunno about that— you seem to get super flustered whenever someone mentions you kissing on Asgore. Huh… You guys actually got pretty far in putting together the shelves.”

He blinked then he grabbed her skull and leaned down, "Watch yourself, Nara." he warned with a rumble before he let her go. "Yes I’d say so, Papyrus was born for this nonsense apparently."

"Nonsense?! That's nonsense! It's so simple! All you’ve got to do is-" As he rambled on, he started assembling another item without looking at the directions.

Once again Tenebris leaned down, "This is when I just smile and nod." he whispered.

She ended up leaning away from him slightly, magic churning faintly in her bones in response to his warning, and reached out to instead pinch Tenebris’ cheek and give it a playful shake. She was pretty much moved out of Aliquam’s lap. She did not fit with Ikea parts, after all. “Watch your own self, Gaster,” She mimics a rumble back at him. Like hell she’s going to let him intimidate her. “But you’re right- smile and nod is going to be the best thing at this point. So smile and nod- ‘cause if Pap’s absurd love for puzzles and knack for them doesn’t intimidate me, you sure aren’t gonna.”

She tugs his cheek up and down in a mock nod at her and grins up at him with a playfully arched brow bone.

He shot her a deadpan look, then quickly turns his head and brings his teeth down on her hand, severing it at the wrist. He leans back, and she sees him swallow.

And suddenly she has no hand. She gapes at him for a moment, mouth popping open. “Spit that out!” She squeaks, other hand coming up to tug on his chin. He just ate her fucking hand. What the fuck? “You have no idea what I’ve been doing with that hand!”

"Nearly throttling one of my sons." he replied sarcastically, rolling his eyes.

“Tenebris Gaster, you give my hand back this instant.” She sits up on her knees and plants her hands- er, hand- on her hip. Her brow furrows and she grinds her teeth at him. “I wasn’t going to throttle him. Well… A little bit of throttling might have occurred.”

He deadpans her all too easily. "Tokiko Nara, I have gone against the mother of all mothers, Toriel Vinicius Dreemurr herself. Your motherly effects will do little." he snorts in amusement.

She purses her lips at him shrewdly. “I think I have a bottle of ipecac in the shed. I wonder if it works on monsters.”

"You're not going to get anything in me." he rolled his eyes and moved to get up.

She squawked, and proceeded to curl around his leg so he didn’t escape. Her missing hand was starting to tingle unpleasantly. She might not get it in him now, but… She knew how he liked his tea. “Aliquam!” She yelps, “Make your dad spit my hand out!”

"Nyeh?" he looked over at her, "Make my father... What?"

"He ate my hand and won't give it back!"

"..." He looked at his father, who was rubbing his cheek. He then walked over to his father and held out his hand, "Father, please. You promised."

Deadpanning his son, they seemed to have a glaring match until Tenebris rolled his eyes, and shook his shoulders before there was a loud rattling noise from his stomach. He lifted his shirt and Aliquam reached into his abdominal cavity, feeling around until he pulled his hand out With Tokiko's hand gently enveloped in it.

“What… What the fuck…” She looks particularly disturbed and vaguely disgusted as she clings to the large monsters leg like a particularly bony pest- because holy shit, she had been in there once. What. Just… What.

"What? I told you. No internal organs. That includes a stomach." Tenebris shrugged his shoulders. "No stomach, no intestines, no liver, kidneys. Why do you think you were able to fit in my torso? There's nothing in there but the neutral element of the environment.”

Toki releases his leg and gets to her feet. She stares at him, and it is a definitely flummoxed look. “What… how do you… How do you even drink tea then?” Wouldn’t it just run out of the hole? She peers at him for another moment, forcibly shakes her head and then takes her hand from Papyrus. She makes to wipe the thick black spittle onto Tenebris shirt. “You know what- magic. Magic is the answer to everything.”

He grabs her before she could and gives her a handkerchief to wipe it off on instead. He was going to take more than her hand if she soiled his turtleneck.

She leers at him faintly, but does wipe the hand off on the handkerchief easily enough. Once it’s relocated, she peers at the black slobber coating the kerchief… and then in a moment of brilliant Nara mischief, casually presses it into his chest to give it back. Casually with the goop side down.

She grins up at him, all sharp teeth and amusement. “My mother has a rule- If you’re bitten, you have to bite back twice as hard. Take my hand again, and I’ll implement Momma’s rule. Here’s your kerchief! Thanks for letting me borrow it, Tenebris.” She politely steps back out of his range, and sidles behind Papyrus with a grin.

She might have just poked a bear too big for her to play with- but it was not often she got to see the big monster loosen up for shenanigans. He usually looked on with fond indifference. And Toki was many things- and good at goading was one of them.

He grabs the kerchief and pulls it from his turtleneck, giving a loud whine that completely cut his aggression. Leaving the rag on Toki's head, slobber-side down, he immediately goes to cold-wash his turtleneck, whining about hoping to get the saliva out before it leaves any stains.

Toki giggles into Papyrus back, part of her giddy with relief at his lack of irritated response. The other part of her knows this stuff is going to be a mess to get off her bones. She takes it off, cleans what she can, and then leaves the rest to be scrubbed later. “Do you think he knows that I know how to get pretty much anything out of white clothing? I was a human for thirty two years- if I can get blood out of clothes, I can get monster spit out of clothes.”

"Toki..." Papyrus said quietly, reluctant amusement glimmering on his face. "That's his favorite turtleneck. If you can really get it out, you better hurry and go tell him.”

“I'll make sure it’s extra white.” She says with a veiled laugh. She pats his shoulder, and gives him a grin. “I’ll go handle it- you finish the furniture. And, ah, if you don’t hear from me in a couple hours, assume he’s probably locked me someplace and eaten the key.”

She pads after the big monster, laughing in a non-veiled way. “Gaster, stop. Just take off the turtleneck- I can get it clean for you.”

He's glaring at her loathingly from where he's standing in front of a mirror in the bottom floor bathroom. "You can do many a things to me in revenge, Tokiko Nara. But for the love of science. You do not hurt a man's turtleneck." he growled sourly, though he does remove his turtleneck, revealing a black tank top he wears underneath it, one that hugged his muscles and shield generously. However, as the outer clothing is removed, a large wave of heat comes off of him, one he immediately seems to miss as he hugs himself, rubbing his arms. "Brrr.... how long will this take?"

“For the love of common manners, you do not bite a girl’s hand off.” She quips right back at him, rolling her eye lights in her sockets. As he strips, the heat rolls over her, and she chuffs. Her house is cold- no heat running yet since they had been in and out of the door so much- so of course he’s going to exude warmth. “Probably an hour? Maybe two, if it’s a stubborn stain. The washing machine is hooked up and everything, but it takes about an hour to do a usual run through.” She collects the turtleneck from him, and pads out of the bathroom. Down the hall is the laundry room, and she fetches some of the supplies she had gotten while in town.

A good heaping of detergent and some various home remedies later, she’s bundling the massive shirt into the machine that seems entirely too small for it. She shuts the lid, and starts the hot water with a sigh.

"You pinched my cheek like I was a child!" He countered sourly, before going upstairs to get something to wrap around himself until he got his favorite heat source back.

"You growled in my face for innocently teasing you,” She shoots back just as sourly when he returns, wrapped in a quilt she had purchased. It was, hilariously enough, the one she had intended to use for her bed. “That’s bad manners, Tenebris. I was raised with a bunch of boys, but even I know it’s bad manners to tell someone to ‘watch themselves’ unless you mean to go through with it.”

"I'm a man of my pride, I don't take well to being treated like a common youngling!" he snarled sharply. "You should be thankful I only bit off your hand! I knew it would be painless!"

"Pride is no excuse for being rude, Tenebris. You’re old enough to know that.” She squares her shoulders and the look she gives him is decidedly stubborn. “Good natured ribbing is something done between friends, Tenebris.” She wondered what he meant by ‘only’ and pondered if he would ever actually hurt her. Toki really didn’t think he would. “Are we not at least friends by now?”

"I'll answer this better after some tea. I'm not good at holding my heat as well as you can." he grumbled quietly, "I need to warm up..."

She crosses her arms and arches a brow. “I haven’t got any tea yet. It wasn’t on my necessities. If you want, I can help warm you. It is my fault you’re sans a shirt now.” And she would own up to that, even if he was being a bit of an ass.

"I'll take you up on that. But first. Tea."

“That’s a long walk through the cold back to your house for tea.” She arches a brow at him and steps closer. Her fingers curl over the edge of her quilt, and she guides her magic into it. She had gotten quite good at this. It wasn’t going to be as good as directly into his body, but it would make the quilt warm.

... He let out a shrill whine at the mention of no tea, but as the newfound heat came to seep into his torso, he let out a soft trill, yes, a trill and he purrs as he lowers to sit down to snuggles into the heat.

She watches him sit down in the middle of the floor, and sighs to herself. She keeps a hand on the blanket, peering back into the main room where Aliquam was still working through her furniture. Most of it was already done- damn, he worked fast. “Better now?” She questioned the grouchy older monster with a soft sigh.

"Mmh...." he nodded slowly, then he nuzzled into the blanket, "You can go ahead." he murmured, "You only just got your magic back..."

“If I let go, this blanket is going to cool off.” She arches her brow. “And I’m back in full stores, thank you very much. I was only low last time because of the heat. It’s been what- almost two weeks? I’m good now. So. I know it’s not tea- but are you going to answer me now?”

"..." He opened his eyes, then looked up at her with a faint smile. "After everything you've done, we are at least friends, yes."

“Good. I consider you to be quite the good friend myself.” She looks relieved. “As your friend, lemme tell you this. You can be one of the most bipolar bastards ever- I like you anyways despite this- but if some of my teasing bothers you, tell me up front. Don’t growl at me when you do- be clear and concise and I will respect it. It’ll avoid situations like this, where you bite my hand off, and I ruin your turtleneck.”

"I'm an old man, it's my job to growl at people." he huffed, "But you've given me a warm quilt so I don’t suffer while you clean my sweater, so... I'll make an exception for you..."

“And it’s my job to get my stuffy friends to loosen up.” She gives him a toothy grin. “I’ll do you one thing more. Since I don’t own a clothes-dryer, I’ll even dry and warm your sweater before you put it on once it’s clean. And thank you for making an exception for me. You might end up making a lot of them- I am a bit headstrong sometimes.” She had always been a willful child- kind, but willfully stubborn.

She shifts, and wiggles right into his lap with a huff. There, she closes the quilt tighter, and spreads her magic thinly over him as well. The floor below was cold, after all. Tile was not good for conducting heat.

"You and me both, Tokiko Nara." he puffed softly, before he sighed. He looped his arms vaguely around her- she was always warm, and it was nice when your body did not retain or make it’s own heat very well. "I need a pipe..." he murmured, before he pulled the blanket over his head. "Mnh..."

“No smoking in my house.” She chirps cheerily up at him, content to sit and act as his heater. “Lets make a deal. Shit's bound to happen- you’re stubborn, I’m stubborn, and we’re bound to clash against each other at some point. Whatever we argue about, it’s probably not going to be important. So- we stay friends, even if we’re angry. Friends forgive over time. Sound all right? ‘Cause I’m already working towards forgiving you for eating my hand.”

"... Sounds fair." he murmured, looking down at her with a ghost of a smile. Residual heat was nice, but this constant pace of new heat had him as mellow as a snake under a heating lamp. His eyes half-lidded and a tired smile on his face as he spoke, even his voice softening to a gentle rumble with the warmth she generated.

She nodded up at him, and glanced out of the blankets to speak to Aliquam. “Are you alright putting the rest of the furniture together? I’ve got to keep your dad warm until his sweater is done.”

"Nyeh? You speak as if it is a challenge for The Great Papyrus!” the young man announced boldly, before resuming his work while humming a tune.

Toki just laughs softly. She sighs, reclining back into the large monster clinging to her for warmth, and lets her sockets close. She rubs the ridge of her nasal cavity with a sigh. Today had been fun- but she could feel a headache building in the base of her skull. Dealing with knocking a tooth loose, and then having to handle Tenebris left her tired. She shifts, nestling down a bit more, and is content to wait until the washer screams at her that it is done.

By the time that the washer’s buzzer goes off, Aliquam has managed to get everything put together that needs to be together- and most everything from out in the truck and trailer is now inside of the house. The dining table was a two-person job- and she was occupied elsewhere- so it was sitting outside on the front deck area, out of the weather until they could get to it.

He was currently buzzing around and organizing her house- he recalled how everything had been arranged far better than she did. It also gave him something to run off the excess energy with. So he stacked shelves, put dishes in their rightful place, and got things into order.
Toki manages to wiggle free of the dozing monster draped against her, and goes to fetch his turtleneck. Like she suspected- it is stain free, and probably whiter than it has been in an age. Mama Nara’s stain removal secrets strike again. She pads back to the living room after ringing it out, and pulses her magic into the heavy cloth.

She drops it onto Tenebris with a smile, the fabric hot and dry, and completely free of his drool stains. “Family secrets are handy, aren’t they?”

He doesn’t reply, instead just immediately climbs back into it and hugs himself, hiding his face in the warm neck before he started purring loudly, his breaths short and swift as he took in the new, clean scent as well.

Tenebris was quite the pleased monster now.

She still has his drool stain on her skull, and subsequently smells like his stink- but his happy sounds are worth it. “I’ll give you a moment alone with it, goodness me. Get a room you two.” She teases lightly, and pads for the kitchen to get a start on scrubbing her skull.

"... Thank you, Toki,"

“You’re welcome, Tenebris.”
Chapter 24

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: Kon also earns his humps. -Wagglebrows- Also another nice and fluffy chapter for you all. I hope you like the other half of her brothers- because fuck all, i hated writing this chapter, and I don't ever want to have all eight of her siblings in one chapter at a time. I write them all. e.e
Also come check out our blog! :D lots of shenanigans go down here. Ya'll are missing out hard core. http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing: Kon is a 110% concetrate Little Shit. And Tenebris only instigates his ass XD GDI

Unfortunately plans for thanksgiving weren’t folding out like she had hoped. Her parents were unable to get a flight out- and her two youngest brothers were with them. Ryushi had promised that he would take the kids to his in-laws house this year- and he was taking Han with them since he was living with them- so he was out. That left Utaka, Kon, Kohaku, and Roshi. Utaka’s wife wasn’t coming- she was off on holiday business for the company she worked for.

With Kohaku would come Mirou, but that was still only five of her family instead of the usual mass. Even the family she had from her dad’s side couldn’t make it- but that wasn’t that hard to guess. Her American grandparents were a lot older than her mom and dad, and had trouble getting around.

It was a little disheartening- she had hoped they could spend the holiday together. Papyrus was a bummed that part of her family would not make it, but did not let it bring him down fully as he heard he would still meet a good part of it. Toki steeled herself- she would have more than just her brothers there with her after all. She had invited the Gaster family and their dates of choice if they so wished. Papyrus was already her date for dinner- but she had no idea who Gaster would bring, or if he even would.

She had a strong inkling about who Cae’s choice in partner this evening was going to be- and had steeled her for several days to prepare for it. She had made herself watch the fireplace until it no longer made her feel flighty- which was a feat in and of itself.

She had also spent most of the day cooking. Caeruleus was there to help her prepare for one of her guests arrivals, further sealing her thoughts as to who he would bring, as well as some of the cooking. He wasn’t actually that bad of a cook- and did very well making the crust for pies.

Tenebris helped a bit too- but he spent the majority of his day helping the rest of the village prepare for their own festivities. Turkey’s to cook, pies to make- all of the like. He would be back around the house later though, which gave her ample room to get things done without everyone hovering excitedly.

Her house was permeated by the smells of many different types of food. Turkey, ham, pumpkin pie, apple pies- she made almost and every traditional food known to the holiday. She had even gotten her hands on pickled beets- which she was most definitely looking forwards to. They tasted so weird, but hell, they were a good kind of weird.

There was going to be enough food for everyone to take leftovers home. Which was good- she slaved hours over it, working from early in the morning until nearly four in the afternoon. If they didn’t take leftovers, she would be eating turkey for a week. She still might end up eating turkey for a week. The two turkeys were quite large. At last though- At last she was done. The last rolls were out of the oven, and on the table.

The long table in her dining hall was doing well to keep the food in due order- and her magic was keeping it warm. Fire magic was rapidly growing to be something that she was using often, hilariously enough. She never would have thought that it could be useful for things besides burning.

Everyone would be arriving soon- and she was nervous about how her brothers and other nephew would react to her and her guests of choice.

Aliquam was smiling at his girlfriend as they waited. "Are you excited?"

“I’m equal parts excited and nervous.” She admits to him, carefully reaching up to untie her apron. It was covered in flour and dough- and needed a thorough washing before it could be used again. “I’m sure my brothers will love you- I just wish you could have seen all of us together. Well… Maybe not. We get a little chaotic when the nine of us are together. Are you excited to meet them?"

"O-Of course!" he nodded quickly, "Yes I don’t think I’ve ever been so..." he then whined and hugged her. "I'm nervous, Tokiko..." he sighed.

She managed to set the apron on one of the counters so she could hug him back. “Oh Pap,” she sighed softly, “You don’t have to be nervous. Or very nervous, anyways. I’ll make sure to keep them in line.” She wasn’t too worried- most of her brother’s had good heads on their shoulders. The only one she needed to watch would be Kon. “Or as in line as can be- you know how brothers are.” Toki tilts his chin down to her and gives him a soft smooch.

He nuzzled her and kissed her with a smile. "Nyeh~ I trust you on that...

She smiles up at him warmly, and nuzzles him gently in return.

There is the sound of knuckles on an oaken door, and Toki perks. Her eyes brighten eagerly. “That’s probably them now. I warned the guards my family would be coming.” She wiggles out of his arms, giving him a happy smile, and pads for the door. Her feet are in her usual slippers- and she’s in slacks for once, instead of sweat pants. She kept her usual turtleneck though, opting for an orange one that very closely matched the shade of Aliquam’s magic.

She opened the door, and was promptly tackled by Roshi. All of her brothers looked alike- but each had a slightly different shape to their jaw, or cut to their hair- and the rowdy mow-hawk that Roshi kept his hair in tickled at her nose as the burly personal trainer squeezed his arms around her like a noose. He rocked back and lifted her clean off her feet, swinging her in a circle as she laughed. “Big sis! It’s been far too long- I’d say you should eat more, because you’re skin and bones, but that’s insensitive.”

“It’s ineffective if you just say it anyways.” Utaka stared at her neutrally, and dipped his chin faintly in a fond gesture. He steps in, opening his arms once Roshi lets her go. “You’ve been in to trouble since we’ve last gotten to sit down face to face, sister.”

“Sorry, bro.” She smiles at him regardless and leans in to hug him. Utaka was in a suit- he was always in a suit- with his hair cut short and his glasses perched upon the bridge of his nose. He was the only one out of her siblings who needed to have glasses- but Toki liked to think it added to his intimidation factor. He was a very, very good lawyer. “Thank you for handling my case though.”

“What else are brother’s for?” There is a fond tilt to his lips as he reaches up to pat her cheek. His gaze flicks past her though, dark eyes scrutinizing Papyrus with a sharp intensity.

“Getting their sisters into trouble, for starters.” Kon brushes past both of the elder boys, and clamps his arms around her hips. He tickles her ribs coyly, and grins up at her. Kon was the third youngest- and by far one of her more risqué brothers. He ran with whatever fad tickled his fancy- which today, was the tightest pair of pants she had ever seen on anyone, and some hipster shirt with a catchy saying. His hair was, as per the usual, one of the many colors of the rainbow. He’d gone for a bright purple this time. “Look at you! You look wonderful- though your teeth are a little bit intimidating, Sis.”

She playfully gnashes them at him. “All the better to keep you in line with, Kon. You’d better be on your best behavior tonight, little bro.”

He grins up at her. “Kinky. I didn’t know you were into biting too, Sis.”

She swats him, and shoos him away with a laugh. “Oh my god, Kon, seriously. Behave, or no pie for you.”

Kohaku was the last to step through. He was shorter than the other three of her brothers, but he was also brawnier. Given his job in construction, it was little wonder why. He offered her a quiet smile, and adjusted his grip on his son’s hand. “Hey Sis.” He waves quietly. He was the more soft spoken of the four brothers presently here- and it was a trait that he had passed down to his son.

Mirou proceeded to hide his face in his father’s pant leg and peek out at Toki.

“Hi, Kohaku.” She smiles warmly, and then crouches down. “Mirou,” she coos softly, “Do you remember me? I’m your Aunt Toki. I know I look a lot different now.”

Mirou flutters his lashes at her, baby blues peering out at her from under the thick lashes. Mirou looked remarkably like his father, all save in the eyes. He had his mother’s eyes. He lifts a hand and taps it to his lips, before pointing at her face. “Teeth. Wont bite?”

“Oh sweetheart, no.” She shook her head, and offered out her hand for him to take. “I only told your Uncle Kon I’d bite him because he wont listen otherwise. I wont hurt you. I’ll make you a pinky promise on that.”

Pinky promises still meant the world to most of her family- and the little boy was soon in her arms and snuggled to her chin.

She hefts him up- he had his dads build, and was very large for a six year old- and then turns to Papyrus with a sheepish grin. “Papyrus- these are my brothers. Roshi, Utaka, Kohaku, and Kon. This is my nephew, Mirou. He’s really shy. Bros- this is Papyrus, my boyfriend. He and his family will be joining us for dinner tonight.”

Utaka did not looked perturbed by the massive skeleton- he simply raised a dark brow, strode forwards, and offered an unflinching hand to the massive monster.

Papyrus watched with a smile as her brothers greeted the sister, and when he was offered the hand to shake, he smiled warmly and reached out to take the offered hand. He gives it a firm shake. ”It's nice to meet you all. You can call me Aliquam, or Quinn for short if the first is too hard to pronounce.” he chuckled.
“Aliquam.” Utaka muses, releasing his hand after a firm shake. He straightens, peering up at the massive skeleton quietly. “Toki has mentioned you the last few times we had managed to talk. I am the one responsible for handling the case against the HAM agents. You may call me Utaka.”

“I didn’t know our big Sis was finally dating someone!” Kon grinned. He bumped his hip to hers, careful of Mirou, and beamed up at his much taller sister. Kon was six inches shorter than her- so looking up wasn’t much that was new. “Ah- you took my advice. He has a nice ass, Sis. I approve.”

“Kon!” She scolds, cupping a hand over Mirou’s ear. Not that it did much- the sound slipped right through her bones. “Language.”

“He, ah, hears worse regularly, sister.” Kohaku scuffles the boot of his shoe against her tile for a moment. “He comes to work with me sometimes. Construction workers say worse things.”

“I suppose… So long as you don’t repeat them, then it’s all right. You have to be in high school before you can say them.”

“I know, Auntie.” He loops an arm around her neck and sighs. Mirou glances around over her shoulder, before he squirms. “Can I look around…?”

“Oh course, sweetie.” She sets him on his feet, ruffles his hair, and then sends him off. He wanders for her living room, and she lets him. There’s nothing she has to hide. Kohaku quietly excuses himself to follow his son- which was fine enough. Kohaku was pretty quiet, and she’d rather her introverted brother not get too worn out too soon. “Will you be staying the night tonight?”

“Nah- we carpooled.” Roshi grinned. “Besides- Utaka has to be in bright and early tomorrow.”

"You were the one to aid us? You have my gratitude!” He said with a smile to Utaka, before he looked over at Kon. "You're quite the bold one." he chuckled.

“I was.” He was still handling all of the fallout- but most of the men and women from the attack were sure to not be allowed out of prison. Domestic terrorism was a serious crime. Utaka dipped his head quietly, and gave his sister a faint nod when the large skeleton’s gaze moved elsewhere. He approved so far of her choice in… men? Monsters, or whatever the term could be politely called. He shared a look with Roshi though, and found the elder of the two still uncertain about his choice.

Kon however grinned widely. He leaned forwards, planting a hand on his hip, and blew a kiss to the tall skeleton. “If you weren’t with my sister, I’d say I could be whatever you want me to be, baby. But she’s got prior claim on that sweet ass.”

He yelps as Toki pinches him, and shoots him a vaguely amused look as she steps forwards to bump her arm fondly against Aliquam’s. “You’re damn right I do. Speaking of saying things- please try to keep yourself under control when Pap’s family gets here.”

She was slightly horrified of what might happen to Kon if he gets too out of hand with Tenebris or Caeruleus.

“No promises.”

He lifted a brow, but his words were interrupted as the door opened.

"We're back, Toki!" Cae announced, with Tenebris trailing in behind him.

Grillby wasn’t far behind them either, and the flame elemental edged in behind the both of them and carefully shut the door.
Toki swallowed, but kept her eyes fixated on the floor. “Welcome back,” she smiles, and offers them a wave. “Everyone’s here then- we can start eating if you like. Sans, Tenebris, Grillby- these are my brothers. Roshi, Utaka, Kon, and my other brother, Kohaku, and his son Mirou are in the living room. Bros- That’s pap’s brother, father, and Sans’ guest for the evening, Grillby.”

“I… Ah, I brought cider…” Grillby had a jug of it cradled in one hand. “I’ll go put it on the table.”

“Thank you, Grillby.” She flicks her eyes to him, ignoring the flutter of panic in her chest. She gives him a genuine smile despite it, her fingers curling tightly into her palms. The sharp prickle of her claws is enough for her to focus. She is not her fear- her fear does not have to dominate her life. This was a monster- not a reflection. This was a good monster. This was a good fire. “The table’s in the other room- why don’t you go find a spot to put it?”

“I’ll help!” Roshi is hot on his heels, mouth working quickly to babble at the quiet monster. “Dude! You are literally fire! How cool is that? How do you not burn your clothes? Are they fire-retardant clothes? Magical clothes?”

“Roshi’s harmless, and it’s nice to meet all of you, certainly.” Kon grins. His eyes are on the skeleton and the largest monster he’s seen yet. “Toki, why didn’t you tell me you were surrounded by such hot company? Oooh, tall, dark and handsome is such a dilf. Did it hurt when you fell from heaven, handsome?”

Going to make sure that Grillby wasn't too overwhelmed, Caeruleus was quick to follow the both of them into the other room.

Grinning, Tenebris leaned down to be more level with Kon, his tail coming around to tilt his chin up. “Gutsy, Are we? Well i have a question for you” he chuckled.

“Did you scrape your knees when you crawled out of hell?” he countered skillfully.

Such a comeback made Cae snort while Aliquam covered his face with his hand.

This close, Kon could see Tenebris teeth quite clearly and the muscles of his shoulders tightened with something that was decidedly not fear. Oh no- quite the opposite. “Oh fuck- I kind of of want those to bite me.” He grins at him, and leans cheekily into the tip of his tail. It prickles at his skin- but fuck, that was hot. “If I did,” Kon grins, "Would you like me to fall to my knees and beg forgiveness~?" Because Damn, that was one sexy DILF he'd like to-“Get to know a whoooolle lot more.” The purple haired brother grinned cheekily. Apparently he'd said that last bit out loud. He regretted none of it.

“Kon.”

“Tenebris, if you ignore him he usually goes away, I promise.” Toki covers her face with her palms and sighs into them. Dear gods- she had forgotten that Kon had no filter.

Utaka shoots his younger brother a look and crosses his arms over his chest. He sighs through his nose and rubs his eyes. “Tenebris, yes? Please- I apologize on behalf of my brother. He is… obnoxious.”

"He's cocky. That will get him in trouble in due time." he chuckled lowly.

“And if I like trouble?” He flutters his lashes at the bigger monster and steeple his chin onto his hands. “What if I really like trouble?”

“Then you can do the dishes when you get in trouble.” Toki quips. She tugs him away by his ear and motions for him to go into the kitchen. “Go wash up- food first, then you can get in more trouble.” Her eyes do flick to Tenebris, and she arches a brow. “That counts for everyone else too- Wash up time! Grillby gets an exemption from it.”

There is a muffled thanks from the dining room, and she doesn’t have to guess to know that it was Grillby.

“No one likes doing thanksgiving dishes.” He blows a raspberry at her, and pads into the kitchen to do as told. All of her brothers migrate in after him.

Tenebris chuckles as he walked to the sink to wash his hands, taking care of the holes in them especially.

Mirou comes to a stop behind Toki, having intended to take her hand and drag her in to get washed up too. He stares with wide eyes up at Tenebris. He looks very much like a fawn caught in the headlights, his hand clinging to her pocket as he stares up at the monster who is nearly three times his height. He was rather short for a six year old.

“Mirou,” Toki gently ruffles his hair, having caught on to his nerves. “This is Doctor Gaster. He’s really nice. Tenebris- this is my nephew, Mirou. He’s a little timid.”

"Pleased to meet you, Mirou." he rumbled gently, smiling down at the child.

The whites of his eyes grew larger, and he ducked behind Toki’s pant leg. “H-hi.”

She rolls her sockets and scoops him into her arms, swinging him up so he couldn’t hide from Tenebris. He would need help reaching the sink anyways. “C’mon, Mirou. Tenebris is really cool. He’s a bit big, but he’s a really big softy.” She leans in to whisper to the child, winking up at the big monster as she does so. “He purrs like a big cat when he’s happy- someone who does that cant be too scary, can they?”

“I guess…”

Toki simply smiles up at Tenebris and wiggles into the fray to get her hands and her nephew’s all washed up for dinner.

“He seems pretty nice to me~” Kon grins. He brushes past the big monster- and his fingers might brush against his backside as he ‘wiggles’ free from between him and the crowd of his brothers and other monsters. So smooth with how he does it, his siblings don’t even notice. "Very nice."

He blinked slowly, not entirely sure he felt what he thought he felt, and he gave Kon a look. "How often does this one get himself in trouble?" he asks Toki.

“Often enough that I had to bail him out of a lot of it when we were younger. I got a lot of black eyes for his ass when he bit off more than he could chew.” She rinses her fingers, and gets a towel to dry them off with. Mirou is settled onto the floor, and handed his own towel for drying

“IT’s not my fault that they couldn’t handle my flirting."

“You were eight- what the hell were you doing flirting with boys who were my age?”

“Excuse you. I happen to like older men. It’s not just a taste that develops over time, you know. It also helped that I had an older sister who was taller than all of the boys her age.”

“Just because they had to jump to punch my face did not make it hurt any less, Kon.”

"Hm..." He rolls his eyes and his tail shoos Kon away as he dries his hands.

Kon laughs gleefully and heads for the dining room. He snags his usual seat near the middle, and grins as his brother’s pile in around him. He gets one on each side—no doubt to keep him under control.

Toki watches him go with a faint sigh, smiling as Mirou manages to give Tenebris a tiny smile. The boy bustles after Kohaku, and Toki trails behind slowly after she collects plates. “Feel free to sit wherever you want,” She addresses the monsters, “There’s no particular seating arrangement when it’s just my brothers and myself.” Her mother and father usually had her sit at the head of the table while they took the seats on her left—old clan tradition bullshit and the like, since she had technically taken over the clan compound— but they weren’t here to enforce the usual rules. Plates are handed out, and she manages not to flinch when her fingers brush Grillby’s. Grillby had managed to get everyone glasses of cider— and it looked delicious.

He smiles at her faintly, sitting down near one of the sliced legs of ham. What a peculiar food…

Caeruleus sits down by Grillby, grinning up at him, Aliquam sits down as well near Toki’s seat, smiling to her. Finally, Tenebris takes the largest of the seats, no doubt the one made for him at the end of the table.

"This looks wonderful, Toki, well done." he praised.

Toki settles between Aliquam and Tenebris. She had indeed left the largest chair for the largest monster—she’d gotten special ordered with Asgore in mind, but it suited Tenebris well enough too. “Don’t just praise me, you dork. You helped too— you did really well with the pie crusts.” She chuckled.

“It looks really good.” Kohaku murmurs faintly. He’s across from Grillby, and offers the quiet monster a smile that is returned in kind. His son is next to him, and he can see him staring in nervous curiosity at the fire monster across the table. “Uh… Did you want to start us off with saying thanks, Sis?”

“Thanks?” Grillby murmurs quietly. There had been so many things to memorize about the holiday that he wasn’t sure which one that was. “That is the tradition where one says something that they are deeply thankful that happened to them… right?”

“Correct.” Toki smiles warmly. “I was actually thinking of letting you all start.” She motions a hand to the monsters at her table, and laces her fingers gently through Papyrus’ own. “Want to start us off, Tenebris?”

“Heh... I suppose I could give it a try.” he nodded once, before he began to purr faintly. "I'm thankful for the humans bearing kind hearts towards our kind. To Frisk for freeing us, instead of taking his majesty's soul and leaving us in the underground without our king.” He tilts his head and shoots her a loose grin. “And to Tokiko for giving us homes that let us poke our heads out the windows and take in pure mountain range air."

“Well spoken.” Kohaku hums.

Toki grins bashfully, and then motions to the skeleton brothers and Grillby.
Grillby clears his throat first. “I am thankful for the chance to be up on the surface once more. I am thankful for my friends, and family, even if they are not here with us now. I am thankful for many things.”

“Also well spoken, hot stuff.” Kon beams.

"I'm thankful for Toki, and for everything that has worked out so far up here in the new town." Aliquam said with a happy 'Nyeh heh heh!'.

Toki smiles wider and rubs her fingers over his knuckles with a fond sound.

“Daww,” Roshi grins. “Toki you got a sweet one.”

“Damn straight I did.”

Finally it ended up Caeruleus' turn... he took a breath, and then he smiled, "I'm thankful... that everything went right for once... And that the kid promised... No more resets..." he then leaned against Grillby with a smile. "Everyone finally got their happy ending."

Grillby flushes a bright color, and makes a pleased crackling noise.

Confusion bubbles up inside of Toki, but she smiles nonetheless. “That’s a good thing to be thankful for…” her tone conveys her confusion, but she doesn’t ask. Maybe a reset is a monster thing? That was something for a later discussion. “Happy endings are always good.”

Her brothers too took note of it, but kept quiet. Well, mostly. Kon pouted slightly. “Aww, so the skeleton can flirt with the hot bartender but I can’t flirt with the dilf?”

“He is more subtle with his flirtations, Kon.” Utaka clears his throat, relaxing in his seat. “My turn. I am thankful for all that has happened this year- and that we are all still here to be able to have this conversation.” His gaze flicks to Toki, and he dips his chin faintly with an arched brow. Two near-death experiences on her part had to be more than enough.

“I’m thankful that I managed to pick up more business- and that I’m here with all of you.” Kohaku echoes quietly.

Mirou piped up after his dad, fiddling with his napkin as he watched the table. “I’m thankful that Auntie Toki’s okay, and that daddy finally changed my bed time. I have a friend like aunt Toki who is super nice- I’m thankful for him too.”

“I’m thankful she’s okay too, kiddo. Hm… I’m also thankful that business has been booming! Lots of people are wanting to be fit this year, and it’s just great!” Roshi laughs.

Kon sighs and leans back in his chair. “Despite all of the sass I keep getting from you tonight, I am definitely thankful that I managed to come to dinner. I wouldn’t miss it for the world.” He leans forwards again, and grins at Tenebris. “I’m also super thankful I got to meet you today, big daddy.”

"Stick your hand in the snake's den and you're going to be bitten.” he warned him simply.

Kon grinned unrepentantly. “And I already told you- I wouldn’t mind being bitten. Those teeth. Hnnnn-”

“KON!” Toki scolds. “There is a child at this table!”

“Sorry but not sorry?”
He rolls his eyes, then he sighs, "Oy..." he then looked at Toki, smiling gently. "What about you, Toki?"

Toki smiles at Tenebris in return, before letting her eyes wander over everyone. She ponders a moment, considering what she wants to say. What did she want to say? There wasn’t really one specific thing that she was thankful for- or even a small list. Hell, her list would take hours. But… she could probably sum it up in one go. “I don’t really have a specific thing, I think… Well, maybe. I’m thankful that the barrier broke. That all of you got out. Despite some of the side effects that came with the Emergence, I wouldn’t change it for the world. I am thankful that I got to meet all of you- that I’ve gotten to know all of you, to care for all of you, and to share our world with you. I am simply thankful for all of you- every last one of you. I’m thankful that I am here to share dinner with you, to share laughs, to share this holiday with my family and loved ones- human and monster alike.”

“Without the barrier breaking,” She continues, “I would never have met any of you. So I am thankful to the kid who helped break it- because without them, you would not be here with us today. I wouldn’t have gotten to love all of you- and I certainly wouldn’t have the best bone-friend in the world.” She shoots Pap a wink, squeezing his hand gently. “So… yeah. Heh. That’s the gist of what I’m thankful for.” It wasn’t very concise and linear- but she felt it got the point across.

“That was… Well spoken, Toki.” Utaka blinks. “I think I speak for all of our brothers- including ones who aren’t here tonight- when I tell you good job.”

"Here-here!" Papyrus said with a laugh.

Caerlueus laughed and lifted his glass in a mock toast. "To the barrier’s destruction!" he announced, "And our new life on the surface!"

“Here-Here!” was echoed. Glasses didn’t clink- mainly because the table was too wide and too full of food for proper toasting- but everyone took a sip all the same.

It befuddled Toki how Grillby could drink- but she did not comment on it. Magic was a strange thing.

“And now we can dig in.” She grins. “I hope everyone eats a lot- because I feel like I probably made too much food. There’s going to be leftovers for everyone.”

“That’s not a bad thing though,” Kohaku smiles. He stands so he can reach out and begin filling Mirou’s plate for him. “Beets?”

“Blech!” His nose crinkles. “No beets, daddy.”

“I’ll take some of those!”

Tenebris seemed to favor the turkey, the taste and textured of the cooked meat appealing to his inner predator. Aliquam liked the potatoes and gravy, the spices that had been added creating a cacophony of taste on his ecto-tongue. Her brothers favored the ham, enjoying the brown-sugar glaze that it had been baked in, though they stopped eating every once in a while when a glowing tongue would come into view.

She and Grillby and Caeruleus ended up taking bits of everything- though Toki veered away from the potatoes. They did weird things with her teeth, and she gave up eating them when it got too messy.

The food was good, and Toki ended up eating way more than she probably should have. She felt stuffed, her magic sluggish as she relaxed back into her seat. They had ended the dinner with pie-and she just barely managed to fit in a slice of pumpkin pie.

Grillby had two slices of apple pie- and might have found a new favorite sweet. “I really need to get this recipe from you, Miss Toki.”

Tenebris enjoyed the apple pie as well, purring happily as he ate it. Aliquam tried the pumpkin and came to enjoy it, while Caeruleus seemed in agreement of enjoying the apple.

Utaka politely wiped his mouth with a napkin and took a sip of his cider to clear his mouth out. “Toki doesn’t follow a recipe.” He chuckles softly. “Never has. When she bakes from scratch, everything is measured as she goes.”

“Nothing ever turns out exactly the same every time, so it’s no guarantee you’ll taste the same thing twice. It’s a knack I got from my grandmother.” She grins lazily. “But I’ll get a basic recipe written down for you, if you’d like.”

“I would, thank you.”

Toki laughs slightly, and covers a yawn. “Agh. I don’t even have flesh anymore, but still, thanksgiving dinner is going to apparently make me sleepy.”

“You can’t escape the sleepy effects of the turkey,” Roshi grinned to her. “Or, apparently,” his grin widened, and he motioned a fork for her middle, “Getting a holiday food baby either.”

She glanced down- and indeed, her magic had padded her middle faintly to give her that ‘stuffed for the holidays’ look. Toki had never been stick thin- but she hadn’t been hefty either. With her build, as a human, she had ended up with what her siblings had affectionately called a ‘food baby’ whenever she stuffed herself at the holidays. The food baby term was coined for the similar look it got to a small ‘baby bump’ as the term went. She laughed, and crossed her arms over her middle. “Apparently so. I still don’t understand how it works- but magic does strange things.”

Aliquam giggled and hugged her gently, "Nyeh~ we're both pregnant then, I guess." he laughed jokingly, gesturing to his own food-bump.

“I guess so~” She leans up to kiss him gently, and giggles, running her fingers over his middle teasingly.

“How scandalous,” Kon grinned. “Going to make us uncles before you’re even married- what would dad say?”

Toki rolls her eyes and leans into Aliquam with a soft laugh, blushing faintly. “He’d probably be as offended as he was when you showed up to our family reunion in a skirt with your hair the color of the rainbow.”

Kon tossed his head and laughed. “I thought I was going to get disowned- but his face. Oh his face was worth it.”

Utaka chuckles softly. “You and father have been disagreeing about your life choices since the first time you told him you wanted your own style of clothing.”

“What can I say? I’m a rebel.” He made a kissy face at Tenebris and winked. “Besides- we’ve all had our spats with dad. He’s far too traditional for his own good. Change is good for him. Speaking of… Imagine what he’d say if I came to Christmas with this angel on my arm?”

“Father doesn’t have an issue with monsters, you know that.” Kohaku sighs.
“No,” Kon agrees, “he doesn’t. But it would be because I would have brought him. You know how he is.”

“You usually antagonize him though, to be fair.”

"Nyeh heh heh heh~" Papyrus giggled at that.

Tenebris rolled his eyes, leaning back and pulling out his pipe, before patting around for his lighter or matches.

“Tenebris, smoking is done outside.” Toki gives the big monster an amused grin. She wiggles free from Aliquam, and gets up to collect dishes. “I’m going to get these into the sink to soak before the brown-sugar starts to stick.”

“And before you fall asleep and forget them, huh?” Roshi grinned, handing over his plate willingly.

Miou hops up too once Kohaku prods him lightly, and begins collecting dishes on his side of the table. “I wanna help with dishes, Aunt Toki.”

“That’s fine, sweetie.”

The duo move into the kitchen, and Toki starts to stack the dishes in the sink. The hot water is turned on, and she collects Miou’s dishes from him as well. Once the sink is plugged up, she sets it to filling.

“Aunt Toki!” Miou takes on a scolding tone as he spots her apron. He bounces to grasp at her apron, and then looks at it unhappily. “That’s unsanitary! Grandma says you don’t keep used aprons on the counters.”

“Well, what grandma doesn’t know doesn’t hurt her, does it?” She grins at him in amusement and dries her fingers. “Toss it here, little man. I’ll go put it in the hamper to wash later. Sound good?”

He does as asked, and a cloud of flour puffs up into her face as she catches it.

It tickles at her nasal cavity. She coughs, flapping her hands to get the flour out of her face- but it doesn’t stop the sneeze that comes. Her mouth falls open and clicks shut, sparks flying as her skull rattles with her sneeze.

There is a puff of light, not unlike a candle and a bottle of hair spray, before Miou is shrieking. “AUNT TOKI SNEEZES FIRE!”

Aliquam had followed to help a few minutes later, only to "NYEH!” in surprise as she sneezed the cloud of fire. "GREAT GOOGLY MOOGLY!” he exclaimed.

“My nose!” She clasps her fingers over the bone, sockets watering. That hadn’t hurt per-say, but it had felt like the time she had snorted chili powder on accident. It was an unpleasant burning sensation.

Miou began to laugh- and her brothers, who had poked their heads in at the shout, began to roar right alongside him. Utaka was the quietest, covering his mouth as he snickered.

Grillby had remained in his seat- and was quietly chortling. “Fire natured beings usually sneeze fire.” He murmurs in amusement.

Caeruleus was laughing beside Grillby, while Tenebris shook his head and chuckled quietly.
“Wow Toki. I didn’t think you could become a flamethrower without a little help from the fireman’s wick, if you get my meaning.” Kon- it was always Kon- nearly choked on his cider as he finished it.

Grillby did choke on his cider, and sputtered into his napkin as his face burned blue.

There was a few seconds of silence where everyone was processing just what Kon had piped off with before there were blue and orange glowing bones surrounding him. This was a perfect example of the phrase ‘talk shit, get fucking dunked on.’

“B-boys! No fighting in the house!”

Kon? Kon had earned his thumps.
Chapter 25

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: I don't know what everyone was so freaked out about on tumblr, honestly. -Shrugs- Anyways, here's some cute fun in the snow. :) It's really adorable- and the image of Tenebris on ice will be forever ingrained into my mind. :D I hope you all like it.

As usual, you're missing out if you don't come visit our blog. Come find us at http://sinosoftheunderground.tumblr.com/ where you can talk to us and experience the greatness that is my salty ass shenanigans. :D

Silverwing Notes: 's no day like a Snow Day... It's a good thing we as a daring duo were able to make it that much better~ Enjoy 25 ye who remain loyal to read our crazy story!

The holiday ended well, with a massive game of poker with the monsters. Tenebris and Kon disappeared during the game for more than an hour, and her brother returning with a strange hitch in his gait and an extremely pleased look upon his face. Tenebris returned in a scarf- and refused to take it off for the rest of the evening.

She knew exactly what had happened- and Toki was not entirely sure what to think of it. She wasn’t sure if he had charmed him into bed- or if Tenebris had simply had enough of his flirtations. Either way, she had to change the sheets in one of the guest rooms, and black stains did not like to come out of baby blue sheets. They were promptly thrown out of the house, and she replaced them with a set of spare ones she had.

The second snowstorm blew in during the beginning of the first week of December. When the first few inches of snow began to fall, there was a mad scramble for another order of blankets from Muffet.

The spider woman had been weaving heat-enchanted blankets for those on the surface- and she had a large order ready. But with the snowstorm incoming, there was a high risk of being trapped out in the ice with the wagon. The only ones who could safely go were the skeletons.

Papyrus and Sans had gotten geared up to go, ignoring Toki’s offer to drive them there. The chances of the truck getting stuck in the snow was too great- and after Toki had gotten sick last time, they were even more adamant that she stay back at her home where it was safe and where she couldn’t freeze.

They set off the same morning, with only a few inches of snow on the ground, but more growing every minute. Having sent the boys off with something he wanted to have given to the king, Tenebris was content as he watched them depart.

It was for naught though- the snow fell for most of the day, but eased off during the night. Rain took over during the early, and watered down the snow. The cold remained- and by noon the next day the rain and the snow had froze over into thick sheets of ice that coated everything in a treacherously slick surface. Toki had a delivery coming- but the driver had assured her that his chains wouldn’t have a problem with the ice, so that was one blessing.

Of course, the ice wasn’t without its merits. Toki had several of the kids out on the road- the only place that the adults hadn’t gotten to trampling on and scraping into a pile of gross slush- and was in the midst of teaching them how to do a poor mockery of ice-skating. It made for a good way to entertain them- even if hitting her backside on the ice hurt.

She laughed where she sat, sprawled with her tailbone smarting in the middle of the road. Other than watching out for the delivery truck to turn the corner, the road was never busy. It was safer than trying to teach them how to skate on the frozen parts of the river. “Keep going Thumper!”

“I’m gonna get you!” The rabbit had proven to be exceptionally bad at ice-skating, and was slipping all over the place as he chased down his fellow children. Somehow the lessons had dissolved into a hilarious game of ice-tag.

Twitch, counter to her rabbit partner, was practically a natural. The light pink bunny drifted backwards, the thick ice supporting her slight weight easily enough. “Mlehhhhh.” She blew a raspberry at the gray bunny, “You’ll never catch me like that.”

Tenebris was rumbling and humming quietly as he strode over the ice, his tail swaying behind him as to keep his balance effortlessly as his feet rhythmically slid on the ice. His gaze was on the mountain, not really paying much attention to his surroundings.

The big monster was pretty graceful, she knew. But the children were not quite as graceful. Toki had managed to get to her hands and knees before one of Wolfen’s kids plowed into her front and sent her sliding over the ice rapidly. The gloves over her hands didn’t let her claws catch, so she had no way to slow herself down as she slid straight for the monster’s legs.

“Tenebris, watch out!”

"What?" He turned and tensed. "AH!"

She slams into his legs, and his large form topples over her own. She shrieks, expecting to get crushed- only for her horns to catch on his shirt, and for her body to get crushed up into the slit in his abdomen. Her arms and legs are stuck out, horn still tangled in his turtleneck, and she’s flailing faintly, muffled by the dark flesh pressing around her.

“Mister Gaster, are you okay?” Howl- the one who had ran into Toki- skittered over to the fallen monster. He was fluffy and white, with a mane of curly fur around his neck. He looked primarily like his father- except for the two curly sheep horns coming from between his ears, and the fluffy short tail that he had inherited from Bo.

A couple of the guards near the entrance began laughing- they had witnessed the pileup happening from the entryway, and that was a sight that they wouldn’t soon forget.

He groaned and turned his head to look up at Howl. "Yes child, I’m fine" he assured him, smiling gently. "Ah... Ngh. Toki, are you okay?" he asked.

Her arms flailed below him, and she kicked faintly. There is a muffled noise from inside of his chest. “Let me out!”

“I think she’s stuck, Mister Tenebris.” Howl offers the big monster a hand- he’s tiny, but stout, and he can balance well enough for the larger monster to get to his feet.
He laughed and took his help to at least get to his knees, before he reached inwards and began to untangle Toki from his clothing.

“Ack- Tenebris, that’s my horn! It doesn’t bend that way!” One of her horns had speared right through his shirt- which meant that good heavens, if it had been flesh, he would have been hurting. It takes a moment, but soon her horn is untangled, and her limbs are still flailing faintly. At least she’s upright now.

Howl hesitates once Tenebris is up, and then reaches out to tug lightly on Toki’s legs. “You’re really stuck, Miss Toki.”

He groaned at the hole in his turtleneck, but let it hook on his shield as he moved to at least get her in a position where she could move. "Oh dear..." he sighed.

It took a bit of finagling, but eventually she got both of her arms hooked where she needed them to, and pulled herself free. Thankfully, unless something went through his mouth first, it didn’t get slathered in his black slobber. So she came out onto the ice again, dry and with her clothing askew. She takes a moment to get her balance, and then glances up at Tenebris with worry. “I didn’t hit you with my horn, did I?”

“I don’t see any blood, Miss Toki.” Howl gives her a smile, and then grunts as Thumper slides into his back. He slides slightly into Tenebris- but the large monster is stable enough on his knees not to be shoved. “Ack!”

“You’re it!” Thumper crows. He scrabbles off on all fours, finding better traction using his front paws as well as his back, and escapes before the wolf child can tag him back.

“Awww,” Howl whines. “That’s not fair! I was helping Miss Toki and Mister Tenebris!”

“All’s fair in love and war!” The gray rabbit crows back.

"Where in the world did he learn that line? What books have you been giving them, Toki?" Tenebris laughed softly as he carefully got up again.

“I might have said it once or twice when we were playing tag last month. I didn’t think he heard me though. I doubt he even knows what it means.” She grins.

The little wolf monster curls his muzzle with a sigh, and then glances to Toki. He grins, and reaches out to gently tap his paw against her knee before he bolts off as fast as he can over the ice. “You’re it Miss Toki! And no tag-backs! You play dirty.”

Toki laughs and grins. “You’re learning to play by the dirty rules then. Good job Howl. Better run fast though- I’ll get Twitch to get you otherwise.” But... She grins, and her sockets glimmered up at Tenebris. She reaches out and pats his leg. “Aaaand now Tenny’s it! Run Howl, run!”

She takes off after the little wolf, grinning back over her shoulder at Tenebris.

"Well then..." He blinked once, and then he rolled his eyes a large grin growing on his face. "ALL’S FAIR IN LOVE AND WAR!” he bellowed, before he lowered to all fours and took off in a fast run, laughing as he went after the children.

The children’s shrieks lit up the air, and laughter was had as they played tag. Toki had to tap out after nearly an hour, having bruised her tailbone with as many times as she’d fallen on it.

She was joined on the sidelines by a winded Thumper, settling against the wall of the compound and well out of the way of slippery ground, and gradually many other children as well as they too tired out from struggling to stay upright on the icy road. Twitch was still going- the little bunny had proven too fast for Tenebris to catch, and was flaunting that as most children are wont to do.

She was the only one he hadn’t tagged- and the only one who still had the energy to go. The little pink bunny was far too happy to run circles around the large monster, proving that when she grew older, she’d be quite the speed demon.

“You’re too slow, Mister Tenebris!” She laughed. “You can’t catch me! You better give up before you get too tired.”

“We’ll see about that, little Twitch! I might be more aged than you are but I am still going and I don’t intend to stop anytime soon!” he laughed.

Toki simply grinned. It wasn’t often that he cut loose and just romped with anyone. Heavens knows she prodded him often enough- rarely did she get such a response. Kids had magic of their own though.

Twitch laughed heartily, slipping faintly on the ice as she cackled. “Just don’t hurt your back, Mister Tenebris. Older monsters should be careful of their health you know!” She taunts playfully. She skids behind him and ducks between his legs, sliding on her paws to reverse her direction once she’s clear of his frame.

He reared backwards and his tail dropped fast, hooking on her abdomen before pushing her back between his legs. He then snatched her up, tossed her in the air, and caught her with a laugh. "I've got you!"

Twitch shrieked with laughter as she was snagged and tossed, her ears flapping in the wind. Her eyes lit up with joy, and she laughed harder as she landed in his arms. She looped her little fingers into his sweater and beamed up at Tenebris brightly. "You win!"

There is the sound of chains over ice, and then a horn is blaring in frantic spurts. A truck turns a corner around the road, with its chains clacking uselessly over the ice. It’s moving fast- the truck that was apparently able to handle the ice and snow- and heading right for Tenebris and Twitch in the middle of the road.

He lowered the child with a smile, but turned and gasped sharply as he saw the truck. Without thinking, he turned and flung Twitch into a snow bank by the others, he then moved to run, but he was too late.

He had only made it to his lowered form before the truck struck him. There was enough energy stopped by his weight to stop the truck, but there was enough counter energy to send him into the nearest snow bank. "I-I tried to stop! The ice!" the driver stammered as he got out of the truck, coming to see the front of the truck was practically destroyed...

And covered in black blood.

Twitch had been caught by Howl- and then the children were being bustled into the compound by the guards near the gate. Two of them rushed out to the truck, two of them taking the children in- and then two more following Toki towards Tenebris. Her magic lashed outwards in a panic, and the ice around her feet melted away in a burst of steam.

The guards followed behind her. Fuck the truck, Toki thought, fuck the truck, it could be fixed. They didn’t have any healers here to fix Tenebris!
“Tenebris!” She shouted, reaching the snow bank where he had slid. Blood flecked the ice leading to it. “Oh gods…”

The guards immediately moved to dig the snow out from on top of the old monster, only stopping when moving anymore would put pressure on his form.

His wounds were considerable, and many of them bleeding. His right side had taken the most damage, his arm was mangled, and parts of the bone showing where enough pressure had blown in the flesh. His shoulder and hip looked shattered and were he not a monster, they could have been considered unfixable.

His clothes were destroyed, the warm brown-colored turtleneck now missing a large portion of its fabric and revealing that his side had been cut into as well.

His head was also bleeding, a long path of black going down his face from a gash.

This was far worse than the injuries sustained in the burning of Tokiko’s previous home.

And it worsened further when he let out a deep, weak moan, his eyes barely open, and greatly unfocused as his hands twitched, seeking something, anything...

Tenebris was still awake.

Toki’s hand came to her mouth, and a distressed sound left her. “Oh gods…” She couldn’t panic right now- the urgency of the situation wouldn’t allow for it. He needed tending. He needed healing- Fuck, they needed Aliquam. But neither brother was here. The other guards could handle the human behind the wheel. “Can you carry him?” She had no gravitational magic to put to use now- nor the strength in her body to carry him. “He needs to get inside now- the cold is going to hurt him worse with his body all torn up like this.” He needed to be warm first- with how his turtleneck and pants looked shredded from the ice. If he got too cold while he was bleeding out… He needed to stay conscious. “My house is closest. We need to be gentle- but we don’t have a stretcher. One of you- ease under his shoulders. The other- take his hips. Tenebris? Tenebris, this is going to hurt. We need to get you inside- we need you not to fight us on this, okay?”

She stooped down to take his least wounded hand in her own to give him something to cling to.

His hand tightened only a little in hers as he seemed to twitch. When the monsters started to move him however his full form tensed and he roared out in pain.

Fuck, fuck, fuck, fuck, fuck, FUCK. Toki’s soul cried out in agony in time with his verbal roar- because holy shit, this was hurting him so bad and there was nothing she could do to ease his pain. He didn’t have anything to brace against- and squeezing her hand wasn’t working- so she did the only thing she could think of.

She shoved magic into her left forearm to reinforce her bones, and shoved it between his teeth for him to bite down on. “Shhh, Tenebris, shhh… it’ll be okay. It’s going to be okay. Bite down- focus on your jaws, don’t focus on the pain.”

The guards hustled as fast as they could while going carefully. Her house wasn’t far- it was literally just inside the compound- but they had to not jostle him. They didn’t have to worry about the ice. It melted around them under the force of Toki’s magic.

He looked up at her but ended up biting hard in pain as the guards resumed moving him. His tail dragged limp behind them, the blade plowing the ice as he was moved.
Toki would have hell to explain when the brothers got back home

Her magic strained against his jaws- they clenched with more force than she had expected, and she felt something in her arm crack ominously as her form forced more magic to brace back against his bite. This hadn’t been the smartest idea- but she hadn’t been thinking. There hadn’t been any stick near close enough to what they needed- and she couldn’t exactly go pry off the bumper of the truck that hit him to do the job either. The magic making her bones buzz numbed whatever had gave- and she urged the guards on as she rubbed soothing circles with her other hand.

It was a long, long walk for them, as they got him up the stairs and into the house. Her room was their destination- and she helped them ease him down onto the bed. She hadn’t remade it yet- all of her quilts were in the living room- so the bare sheets took the brunt of his blood as it rolled down his limbs.

She cradled his head as it was settled, having freed her hand as soon as he was set down. She rubbed her fingers soothingly over his jaw, crooning warmly in an attempt to get him to ease it open on her arm. “Get me Bo,” she turns her eyes to the guards. “Please. She can help me.”

One of the guards nodded and hurried outside as he went to get Bo. Tenebris was trembling in pain as he held onto her, refusing to release her arm.

Well, her arm wasn’t going to be let go anytime soon, was it? She tugged faintly, groaning as his grip tightened. She massaged his jaw faintly. “Can you help me with his clothes? I need to see the damage to his legs- there’s scissors in the drawer of my beside table. He’s not letting go- but he needs those cut off so we can see the extent of his damage.”

The remaining guard nodded and hurried to get the scissors, bringing them over.

As he set to removing Tenebris’ ruined clothes, Toki eased down onto the bed next to his uninjured shoulder. “Tenebris,” she cooed softly, fingers still rubbing over the taut bone of his face. He had a grip on her arm probably akin to that of a bulldog, and she wasn’t getting her bones free without his help unless she either began removing his teeth or breaking his jaw. She didn’t want to do either of those things. “I need you to let go of my arm so I can look at your wounds. Can you do that for me?”

He let out a throaty whimper as he looked up at her, before he closed his eyes and slowly opened his jaws. They stayed open as he let out pain filled pants. “Hah... haahhh…”

Her arm eased out of his mouth, and something along her radius throbbed with pain inside of her sweater sleeve. Her magic eased out of her arm, and she eased his mouth back together. “Shhh,” she soothed, “You’re alright. You’re going to be okay.”

She eased off of the bed and turned to the guard. Tenebris was mostly unclothod now, and she did her best to keep her eyes on his non-private areas. Not that there was much to see at this point anyways. Blood was everywhere...

He was actually less skeletal than she thought. He had a broad skeletal shield over his chest, but it ended about the middle of his ribs. Instead he seemed almost like he was made from living bone- or some sort of bleached white flesh. It was strange- but that was what he was made from. She’d almost say he was like a lich- but she wouldn’t want to offend him.

“Okay… okay, I can handle those wounds. I need my sewing kit…” She was bustling back to her bedside table and pulling forth her emergency sewing kit. Her medical pack from the bathroom came next- though she wasn’t sure what she’d do with it. “Fuck, there’s so much blood…” it was black, just like the saliva that stained her jacket. She had no idea what she was doing- but fuck, she had to do something. Getting his flesh to be back in one straight piece seemed to be the best method available. No one else could heal.

The doctor is the one that got hit, after all. So she set in on the spots where the road and ice had torn him asunder, washing gravel and ice from his wounds with water fetched from the bathroom before beginning to stitch.

It wouldn’t be pretty- after all, the couch had looked like Frankenstein’s monster.

He whimpered quietly and would jerk and twitch in pain, his tail convulsing and flying in rings behind him, as if a mouse performing a post-mortem helicopter-tail, the blade was heavy enough to keep it grounded but it would get pulled with the especially hard pull of his tail's thrashing.

Toki was about half way done with his arm- the Guard having put a light amount of pressure on Tenebris’ leg with a towel to keep it bleeding- when she heard the front door bang open.

“Up here!” She calls, hearing Bo’s voice ring out. His arm was looking more together- her stitching was thick and ropy, but it was holding, and that’s what counted.

Hoofs clomp rapidly up the stairs, and the harried sheep bursts into her room. She’s got a basket on her arm, laden with salves, and she bustles for the wounded beast. She shoos the guard down to hold his tail. “I came as quickly as I could. How is he?”

“He got hit by the delivery truck outside.” So much for his fucking chains working. “I don’t know for sure- but I think his pelvis and his femur are broken. His shoulder and humerus are pretty well shattered- and he’s got a concussion. I’m trying to stitch up his wounds- but I don’t know how to set his bones.”

“We need Aliquam.” She says softly. “I don’t think Tenebris can focus enough to heal himself. He should be back in a couple of days. We can keep him stable until then.” There was no way she was risking a car trip to take him up the mountain- Shit, if she went off the road, they would be stuck. She couldn’t carry him home- and her magic would run out if the night got colder.

"Oh poor darling..." she said softly, going up to set one cool hoof on his cheek, using the other to tilt up one of his eyelids. His pupils were extremely dilated, he had little to no focus and was no doubt blinded by how much light his pupils would let in like this. "He's definitely out of it, oh poor darling..." she sighed, before letting his eyelid down again slowly. She moved away and turned to go to the bathroom. "I'll go get something to help clean up the blood."

“Towels are under the bathroom sink.” She calls. “At this point we need to stitch him up- and then wrap his wounds as best we can. I’ve got a lot of bandage wrap in my first aid box.” It was all they could do at this point. Her fingers work quickly, sewing his shoulder and arm back together. The bones are still broken- and where they peek out of the skin, she eases them back under gently.

Once his arm is back together and the stitches are keeping him from bleeding out, she starts in on his leg. There’s only a few big cuts- and those are rapidly sewn shut as well. Speedy and not the neatest- but they hold. He wouldn’t be popping a stitch like this. By the time that his leg has been cleaned out and stitched together, she’s covered in his blood. The black sludge is dark against the pale color of his legs, and she shivers. “I think I’ve got everything stitched…”

Bo had come with warm water to clean Tenebris off. Moving with a gentleness that could be considered as soft as her wool, she carefully cleaned the clotting blood, though she hesitated when she saw the reflection of the clot in the light... there was threads of bright red within the black... How... odd...
Toki didn’t notice the red- she was more focused on the black that was everywhere. Once he had been cleaned and dried, Toki began bandaging his arms. She did them tight- to keep his bones where they were as best that she could- and tried not to listen to his pained sounds when she had to pull the bandages tight. Tears beaded in her sockets- he was hurting so bad, and she couldn’t do more than this.

Once his arms and legs were bandaged, she left the scrapes on the rest of him to Bo. They just needed salve. She turned and went to his skull, gently cleansing it and beginning the wrapping process there. The spot where the blood was the thickest sported a small crack- and she bound it tightly before it could bleed more. “I am so sorry we can’t do more, Tenebris…” She murmurs, gently petting his cheek.

The male’s form was still tense, but the merciful numbing given to him by Bo's salves enabled him to tolerate the agonizing pain that burned both sides of his form. Feeling her hand on his cheek, Tenebris managed a slightly deeper breath, before he slowly let him exhale a soft, rattling noise.

“Tenebris- I’m going to check your HP, okay?” If it was high enough up, he should be able to sleep without the risk of him going into a coma. Or whatever it was that monsters did. She shifts to his chest and reaches with her magic to coax his soul out. She keeps it between her body and Bo’s, the damaged lavender shape glowing faintly in her hold. She peers at him- he had around half of his hp left out of three thousand and five hundred. His attack rested at ninety, defense a fair bit lower at seventy. She wasn’t sure what normal boss monster stats looked like- for all the times that they had seen her own, she’d never seen Caeruleus soul, or Aliquam’s.

“I think he’ll be able to sleep…” She murmurs softly. She pulses magic gently against it, bathing it in soothing warmth to try and help him relax, sort of like what Grillby had done for her. Minus the giving of magic- she was mimicking the soothing warmth that had flooded her body.

Bo nodded once as she watched him, before hearing Tenebris sigh. To him the pulse of magic made it feel like he had just sat down in a hot bathtub of water. It gave him reason to relax. After a moment, he settled down, and his tail twitched, a natural wanting to curl around his form.

“You can let his tail go now,” Toki murmurs to the guard. The guard does as asked, and eases his tail up onto the bed with him. “I think he’ll be okay to rest… Thank you for coming, Bo. Can you go see if the driver is okay? We’ll need to call a tow truck for his rig…” And she needed her supplies from the truck- but no doubt they had been unloaded already. She’d ordered some food in bulk- and a couch. A second couch, technically- to replace the one that Papyrus and her had ruined at their house. It was supposed to be a surprise, but…

“I’ll stay with him.” She says softly. “He’s going to need his rest- and I can keep an eye on him well enough.”

"Of course, dear. If you need anything, just give me a call." she nodded once to Toki, giving a soft smile before she took her leave.

Toki could do that. She gave a nod to the other guard as well. “Thank you for your help. Please- go get cleaned up and let everyone know what happened.” She keeps up the magic pulses to his soul, and swallows quietly. Her room was warm- her magic was releasing heat into the air- and it no doubt felt good over his body as well as what her magic was doing for him.

Once the guard left, she eased closer again, and sat on the edge of the bed. Her bed was massive- so there was plenty of space for her to stay close as she cradles his soul to her chest. She doesn’t touch- she doesn’t have the right to that- but she keeps the warmth going over his soul with her magic.
“Tenebris? How are you feeling? Is this helping?”

Tenebris couldn't bring forth his voice to reply, but he smiled at her, his gaze sharpening for a few seconds before losing focus again, his eyes closing.

With his concussion as it was, that would have to be answer enough. That was good enough for her. She kept his soul cradled to her chest with one hand, sitting at his least damaged side while her other hand strokes gently over his skull, mindful of his bandages as she tries to ease him into rest. Her sockets close as she sighs. She’s covered in blood- but so is her bed. There’s no point in changing if she’s just going to get dirty again.

It was going to be a long day.

Bo was kind, and brought them both some dinner once darkness fell. She managed to get him to eat a little bit of the heavily magic infused food- but he was too out of it to consume much. She sat up with him, alternating between reading silently and reading to him to help keep him relaxed while she kept him warm and repeatedly warming his soul. She didn’t want a blanket to obscure anything she might miss- like the horrible black marks blooming over his bones.

The bruises were horrifying- and she had never thought any living being could turn those sorts of colors. It was nauseating, watching them blossom over his pale frame.

It was late at night, more into the next morning, when she couldn’t take it anymore. She was tired from the activities of the day and the stress that had come afterwards. Try as she might, she couldn’t fight the pull of sleep forever. She fell asleep after tucking his soul back into his chest, with his good arm draped over her legs and a book open in her lap. The contact would help keep him warm- after all, she tended to heat things in her sleep.

Unfortunately for her, she missed the relaxing of his body. It wasn’t the sort of relaxing that came with sleep- no, this was the sort of boneless relaxation that felt more akin to liquefaction than it did relaxing.

She slept on, blissfully unaware.
Chapter 26

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Heheheheheh. On another note- we finally figure out that ‘illness’ that Tenebris mentioned way back in chapter four. Also Wingdings do not translate well over skype- or into AO3 for that record. So here is some garbled gibberish- enjoy.

On another note, don't forget to come visit us on our tumblr! We'd love to hear how you're freaking out over all of this. :) http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/ is where you'll find us, darlings.

Silverwing Notes: Of all the characters we have to work with, Strider and i almost Unanimously agree that Tenebris is our favorite of them to fuck up, with Toki at a close second...

Why do you people like us so much we're fucking monsters. And monster fuckers but that's a whole different topic bro.

Toki woke early the next morning to an odd sensation over her legs. It was almost wet- not quite. Warm and sticky- sort of like someone had taken a bucket of goop and poured it on her. She stretched faintly, rubbing her sockets blurrrily. It was entirely possible that it was just the blood sticking to her. It had soaked into her clothes- and she hadn’t left his side long enough to bother changing. She’d stayed on the bed- and it was no use ruining another set of clothes if he started to bleed again.

The first thought, upon opening her sockets, was that Gaster was worse off than she had thought. The black had grown, oozing over her sheets like syrup in a cold room. The problem was- it wasn’t blood.

No- it was his body.

He had sagged, his full form losing a good portion of its shape in the night. His bandages were still in place- but that was one of the only things that were solid about him other than his hands and his skull. His other arm had darkened, and had oozed partially around her leg. It encased it, but it wasn’t hard to pull away.

Her startled shriek couldn’t be stopped as she jerked away from the ooze, pulling her legs free of what had once been his body. Her hands come up to pat his face in a panic, trying to rouse him. Her magic roiled in her bones, unsure what to do and how to fix him. He wasn’t dust- so he wasn’t dead, but this… She didn’t know what this was.

“Oh gods…” His face had done the opposite of his body. Where his body was sagging, slowly turning into a dark, formless blob, his face had pulled tight. One of his sockets drooped, but his mouth pulled up into a terrifying grin. “Gaster! Tenebris! What’s happening to you? How do I fix it?”

The noise made him shift and after a moment, pupils appeared in his eyes, white dots that came to glow gently... he looked around, then began to speak, "T-*O��I?" he blinked slowly, then the pupils turned to pin pricks and he let out a horrifying sound much akin to a scream. He knew what this was, and it was clear that he didn't like it.

The sound that came from him was inhuman, and panic made her eyes glow a bright lime. Oh gods- this wasn’t normal was it? Was this part of his condition? Oh fuck, fuck, fuck, fuck, fuck. Her hands cupped his face, and she forced him to look at her. “Oh gods, Gaster, I can’t understand you. Shhh, shhh, just- just tell me how to fix this! Speak slow, I’ll try to understand.”

His gaze darted back and forth before moving up to her. "DET ☇ ☼ MN ☁ ☀ ☠ ☇ TER ☇ INAT ON!" He spoke in a panicked voice. "TAB ☇ ☀ TS!" his gaze then resumed looking around. He had no idea where he was. Yesterday was a painful blur for him, and he had no idea that he was resting on her bed.

Deter- Deter something. Whatever it was- she needed it. She got the gist of the last word. He needed something- probably a medication. She could get it- she just needed to know where before he turned into a liquid and got absorbed into the fucking mattress. “Tablets! You need tablets! Where? At your house, I know, but where? Your room? Shit- I’m going to need to run to your house- fuck, what if you dissolve before I can get back, fuck, fuck, fuck, fuck-”

He looked at her, then he looked away, his form wheezing deeper and deeper as he tried to calm himself enough to speak coherently, "... Ro ☇ ☇... Ri ☇ ☇... Top." he managed to get out. "Fro ☇ ☇... Re ☇ ☇"

“Room… Bed…” The other word was a mystery, but she got the gist. It was something in his bedroom, and it was either on top of something or in the top of something. If it were clearly labeled, she would find it. If it wasn’t… Well, she’d just grab everything she could find. And it was red, Red, she could do. “Got it. You stay here- don’t try to move and try to not melt anymore. I’ll be back.”

She bolts for the door, slamming it open, and is then rushing down her stairs. She foregoes shoes- because fuck it, she didn’t have time to find where her slippers had gotten tossed- and just books it out of the house.

It’s a little after dawn, she realizes- and no one is on the streets yet. Which is for the best- She looks like she’s been dipped in tar, and running with the panicked look on her face would probably bring a mob of monsters to her defense.

She makes it to his house in record time and tears up the stairs. His room is violated- and this is the first time she’s actually been in it. It’s militaristically simplistic- but it just fits Gaster. His bed is massive- nearly the same size as her own- with a bedside table on either side. He’s got one window, and a few shelves and book cases. She beelines it for the bed- he’d mentioned the bed. She checks the dresser on the left first- and finds nothing red or pill shaped inside.

The one on the right is ripped open as well- and there, blessedly on the top, is the bottle she needs. It’s full of red tablets, large and chalky looking. It’s the only bottle in there- the only thing with pills anywhere near the bed. This has to be it.

She takes it firmly in hand and turns, bolting out of his room again. She’s tracked mud up and down their stairs- and into his room- but she’d clean it later. She’s flying back out the front door, barely managing to shut it behind her as she takes off down the street.

It was probably the fastest Toki had moved in years- and it showed when she got home. She managed to use her magic to dry the muck at her feet, but she’s panting as she makes it up to the room.
She throws open her door and rattles the bottle, hot breaths leaving her as she flashes him the red pills. Thankfully he doesn’t look too much more gooey than when she had left. “These are the only thing I could find,” she gasps.

He looked at her, and his eyes lit up. Those were the ones he needed! "✿✿" he praised.

She didn’t understand his word- but his eyes told enough. She bustled to the bedside, twisting the cap off expertly. She eases his hand up so she can see it better, and glances to him. “Twitch your fingers if you can please. How many pills?” Shit- could he even drink water to take them like this? He would have to dry swallow.

He looked at her, and then he looked at her hand.

Twitch.

...

Twitch.

“Two?”

"Y_aligned:"

“Got it.” Two pills are taken out, the cap twisted back into place. She shifts and holds them to his mouth. “Open please- or not. You don’t have teeth. Uh… All right. I’m just going to… put these in then. Please don’t choke- I don’t know how to give a blob of goop the Heimlich.”

With that, she drops them into the fixed and parted grin on his face.

He rolled his eyes and closed them as the tablets were taken into his form, absorbing them rapidly. After a while, he takes a deep wheeze, and relaxes. The flowing and oozing motion of his form melting comes to an abrupt halt as the determination floods his body.

As his melting stops, Toki relaxes. “Shit… Shit… Okay… Fuck…” The pills are set onto her bedside table- because shit, he needs these things or he’s going to turn more and more into a pile of goop. “Shit… Okay. I’m just… Gonna sit here a second. I think you scared ten years off of my life span, Gaster. Gods above.” She eases onto the bed, trying not to sit on any of his goop, and cradles her skull in her hands.

Holy shit.

That was… That was a nightmare worthy experience.

The melting stopped, Tenebris is able to find himself able to relax in this time of pure numbness, though, after a while, he took a deep wheeze, and then exhaled a soft chuckle.

She paused. Was… Was he laughing? She turned to face him.

The bastard was chuckling.

“You… You right bastard,” she hissed. “This is not funny! I wake up to you literally melting into my fucking bones, and then you freaked out when I woke you up! Fucking hell, Gaster, it’s not funny!”

He looked at her, then he did it again, but this time it was accompanied by harder jerks in his chest, fluid pooling at his eyes.
Was he laughing? Was he crying? Both.

Fuck.

“Fuck, fuck, sorry, god, shit…” She scoots up the bed some, and hesitantly eases her arms around where his neck would be. She doesn’t touch the blob that was his shoulder- was still his shoulder, with the amount of bandages holding it in place- and instead dabs at his inky black tears with her hand. “Shit. Sorry. I forgot it was probably scary for you too. It’s going to be okay, Gaster. Shhh…” She pulses her magic gently over his face in an attempt to soothe him. No way was she pulling his soul right now. “But seriously- you asshole. If you hadn’t been so secretive and maybe warned me that you took daily meds, I could have known to have gotten them sooner or something.”

He looked up at her then he chuckled again and his pupils dimmed as he turned his head to rest it on her arm, "I’m so sorry me friend."

She paused, trying to decipher his words. “I didn’t catch most of that,” she says softly, “But I think I get the gist. It’s… okay I guess. I know now- but it would have been useful to know before, you know?” her fingers stroke soothing circles over his skull, and she cradles him as best she can. “Will you reform like you were before…?”

"Ye, of course" he purred quietly, his eyes closing.

She strokes his skull- his calm is good, even if she doesn’t fully understand him. She sighs softly, and leans down to press a soft kiss to the crown of his skull. “Going to tell you now- if you ever scare me like that again, I will do unspeakable things in revenge. I promise you now.”

He just let another chuckle pass, looking up with her as his pupils started to darken, a ring of deep purple forming around them, already signs of his recovery.

The color returning was good. She sighed, and patted his cheek. “I’m serious.” She gives him her most serious face. “Very serious. Anyways, I’m going to go get my quilt from downstairs. Now that you’re conscious, you’re going to need to keep warm. I’ll be right back.”

She pulls from him again, watching as the goop of his body starts to shift further into him. Good. Good.

She has to take a moment outside of the door to calm the rapid thumping of her soul- panic was never a good emotion to feel. A quick trip down the stairs has her with a quilt in hand, and then she’s returning to her room. She’s a bloody mess- literally and figuratively- and is beginning to ponder just saying to hell with it and changing anyways.

Toki drapes the quilt over him carefully, and then pads to her dresser. “I need to clean up. I didn’t take the time to yesterday- and your blood is starting to itch on my bones. If you need at me, just holler.” The computer generated sounds that whatever that language made was startling enough to draw her attention from anywhere, she is very sure.

Fair enough. He relaxed and closed his eyes, going to wait this out until he was intact once more.

She has to take a moment outside of the door to calm the rapid thumping of her soul- panic was never a good emotion to feel. A quick trip down the stairs has her with a quilt in hand, and then she’s returning to her room. She’s a bloody mess- literally and figuratively- and is beginning to ponder just saying to hell with it and changing anyways.

Toki drapes the quilt over him carefully, and then pads to her dresser. “I need to clean up. I didn’t take the time to yesterday- and your blood is starting to itch on my bones. If you need at me, just holler.” The computer generated sounds that whatever that language made was startling enough to draw her attention from anywhere, she is very sure.

Fair enough. He relaxed and closed his eyes, going to wait this out until he was intact once more.

Toki had just gotten clean- discovering a small and mildly painful fracture on her radius from where he’d bitten her while she was at it- and into a change of new clothes when she heard the door below being knocked on. Frantic knocking, in fact.

She groans faintly and steps out of the bathroom, rolling the sleeves of her shirt down to her wrists. Her sweater was warm, and it covered the aching crack in her radius. At least she looks less like she’s been doing vulgar things to a squid. “You’re looking better all ready.” She informs the big not-quite-solid yet monster taking over her bed. “Someone’s downstairs- so I’ll be back shortly, alright? You rest up. Call me if you need me.”

Once he gives her the okay, she heads down stairs, tiredly plodding for her door.

“Hello?”

"A-Are you Tokiko Nara?” A humanoid Fox monster was standing on the other side of the door, holding two scared looking human children close to his form. The fox monster, a male by his voice, was the average size of an adult human man. "Y-You have to help me... please..."

He was just a hair shorter than her, she noticed. She eyed the children, and the battered looking appearance of the man before her, and stepped aside. “You can call me Toki.” She smiles. “Come in, please. You’re safe here,” she soothes softly. She doesn’t reach for him- the swelling in his eye and the ragged appearance of his fur keeps her from doing so- but she offers him a genuinely kind smile. “Do you need a place to stay, Mister…?”

"M-My name is Todd, Todd Hanes... Th-thank you so much...” he coaxed the children inside and took them to the couch, sitting them down before he looked them over. He comforted the younger of the two, a girl who was crying into her fists. The other brother sporting a small cut on his head, with a stubborn refuse-to-cry look on his face, refused to be held close. He glared up at her warily.

“My home will always be a safe place for people like us, and the families of us people.” She smiles warmly. She shuts the door firmly behind them and follows, adjusting her sleeves slightly as she pauses by the entry to the living room. “Todd? Can I ask what happened to cause you to come here? You’re the first that we’ve had come to us.”

"... I... I finished my change early this morning... My wife... she freaked out... said that it was going to happen to our children too, that we were... filthy. That we were... tainted.” he whispered softly, "She... She hit me first, and then she grabbed a knife..." he looked shaken, sounded even more so, "I had to grab the kids... and run for it."

She glanced at the children- they didn’t look sick, or to even be remotely showing the signs. Her eye lights flicked back to him though, and she nodded softly. “You are safe here, Todd. I wont let her hurt you. What is her name?” She could tell the guards to be on the lookout for her. “Do you think she would follow you here?” Most humans weren’t brave enough to enter the compound if they had anti-monster mentality. HAM was an unfortunate exception to this usual rule.

"V-Vikki. Her name's Vikki. She... She might? I don’t know- We have two cars, and I took the faster of the two, but... I don’t know. She was... She was..."

“Vikki then. Easy, Todd. Breathe deep for me, okay? Keep calm.” She nods. She coaxes him through a few calming breaths, and then continues once the fox is out of danger of hyperventilating. “Vikki wont hurt you or your children while you are under my roof. C’mon. Lets go get your wounds bandaged- if that’s okay. You all look like you could use some food and rest.”

"That'd be wonderful... Thank you so much, I hope this isn't anything too out of the way for you..."

“Oh goodness no, it’s no problem at all.” She gives him a bright smile. “I do have a guest right now though- he’s really badly hurt, and can be a bit grumpy. He wont hurt you- but I just want to warn you that he’s probably not going to be a pretty sight if you see him. He’s in my room right now- Follow me. I’ll show you to the guest room and get my first aid kit. Once we get you all patched up, I can make you some breakfast while you get settled in. Does that sound all right to you three? Ah... What are your little one’s names?”
"This is Felix," he gestured to his son, who looked up at her quietly, "and Rosie." he hugged the girl gently to hush her, letting her hide her face in his shoulder.

"Felix and Rosie. It’s nice to meet you both." They get soft smiles, before she’s motioning for them to follow her. “C’mon. Lets get you a room- are you okay sharing one?” She wasn’t sure if he’d want his kids close- they were still young enough to share a bed for a couple of nights until their father’s nerves wore off.

"Yes, that won’t be any trouble at all." Todd said with a smile, while Felix reached up and took his sister's hand.

Both children were quiet- but after witnessing their mother apparently trying to murder them… She could understand their silence. They might loosen up once they’d had some time to settle in. She smiles at them kindly still, and leads the way up the stairs. “Here- this one is across from my room, in case you need me. I’ll give you a moment to get settled in while I go get my medical kit. I’ll be right back, I promise.” A soothing smile is shot to Todd as she opens the door to the extra room, and then steps back to let them in.

She turns to go into her room, gaze flicking over to Tenebris as she does so. “We have guests- they’re going to be here for a little while, I think.”

"Mmm..." Tenebris' face had been released from its set position, his mouth closed in a neutral frown while his eyes were closed. He seemed set on resting for now.

“You keep resting.” She smiles tiredly. She collects her first aid kit, adjusting the blanket to better cover him and keep him warm, and then ducks back out of the room. She heads across the hall and into the open door of the room. “Alright- do you need my help to patch you all up?” She wasn’t sure what Todd did for a living- but obviously a nurse wouldn’t need a lot of help form her if he was one. She probably wouldn’t do half as good of a job as a nurse would.

"A-Actually, no! I'm all right to treat these with what you have there." he said with a hesitant smile. "I... was actually a medical assistant, at the Ebott City Hospital."

Relief floods her. “Goodness, you are a godsend. I’m not good at medical things.” Tenebris’ stitches were terrible things to see. “Alright… Alright. I’ll let you take care of your kids- and I’ll go do something productive.” He probably needed a moment to just calm down and realize he was safe. The poor fox was absolutely haggard looking- it was a several hour drive out to here, and it was still early. Who knew what time it was that he made the change? “How do pancakes and eggs sound?” She’d make it with magic in it- something she was getting good at- to encourage those bruises and cuts to heal. The father could probably use it too- Monster food was good for one’s HP, and there was no telling what sort of stats he had. She couldn’t see souls while they were still inside.

Rosie sniffled faintly, clinging tightly to her brother’s hand. “Sounds okay…” She whispered.

“Then that’s what I’ll do. You three take some time to yourselves, okay? Relax and rest. You’re safe here.”

"I would have thought monsterkind has doctors." he said quietly, before he sighed and gave her a happy smile. His tail behind him, though ruffled up, starting to wag slowly in the impromptu hole he’d had to tear in his pants. "Thank you so much, Miss Nara." he murmured softly, "You really are a miracle to monsterkind." This new monster would bring his experience of the human world with him, the good, and the bad. But the way he smiled at her with so much happiness, it was clear that he would follow the tales of the good if it meant a new, happy life the way he was now. "O-Oh, before I forget, where's this home's restroom? In case one of them needs to go." he asked, gesturing to the children who were seeming to settle down well enough on the large bed.

“Trust me, Todd, you wouldn’t be the first one to tell me I’m a miracle.” Toki chuckles faintly, though it fades off after a few scant seconds. “Our doctor is currently in my room.” She sighs.

“There was an incident yesterday with the ice outside and a delivery truck. Tenebris got hurt- and his son, who also knows how to heal, is currently on his way back from the castle. With luck he will be here tonight- but it’s possible he wont be here until as late as early tomorrow morning. Otherwise I’m very sure he’d be out here healing your wounds and checking on your HP.” She steps out the door and points down the hall. “The door at the very end of the hall is the bathroom- and you’re all welcome to it. You look like you could use a hot shower. I’ll have an icepack ready for you when breakfast is ready- there are some spare clothes in the dresser. They’re my size- but you’re close to my size too, I think. I buy larger than I need anyways. Get changed and get settled in.”

"I hope he's alright," he said softly, before he smiled and stood, "You two stay here, I'll be right back." he murmured softly to his children, before he went to go take that shower.

Toki watched him go, and then closed the bedroom door after waving to the kids. Tenebris would be fine for now- when he was feeling up to it, and was fully reformed into his prior shape, she’d ask Todd to maybe take a look at him. He might know how to properly bind and set the bones, at least until Aliquam came back.

She padded down the stairs, scrubbing a hand over her face with a sigh. This was unexpected- but she wouldn’t turn him away. It made her sad- just how many men and women alike were subjected to spousal abuse because of the change? She was surprised that it wasn’t the other way around- but, she mused, it wasn’t just women that could be abused either. His wife had tried to remove the problem with him and his children- and she was eerily reminded of the HAM agents. They had intended to kill anyone with ties to monster blood.

Genocide was a serious threat. No one really knew how big HAM stretched- or how many members there were. There were a few attacks on the news- where humans who had either changed or hadn’t yet made it were attacked- but nothing had been fatal yet. The only fatal attack from HAM that she had seen had been the loss of Hound. But there had been more sent to hospitals or monster healers than anything else.

She tugged at her sweater, bones rattling with a nervous energy, and plodded into the kitchen to put her apron on. Food first- she could set to warning the guards about Vikki once everything was properly working in the village. It was early still- she’d catch them best by the lunch rotation.

“Pancakes and eggs,” she hums softly, a light tune of song being rumbled from her chest, “do the soul good. Mmm. I wonder if I have any syrup…” She knew she had some honey- not homegrown, but it was still good honey. She could mix it into the batter- it added sweetness to the pancakes that just made them divine.

It was about a half hour until they came back down. This had been enough time for all three to get bathed and cleaned up, with a bandage on Felix’s cut. Todd still had a towel around his neck, using the towel to rub the fur around his head and shoulders. He was going to have to get used to that.

“Over here!” Toki calls from the kitchen. She was just finishing up the last of the food- which was heavy with infused magic. It wasn’t particularly healing magic- but at this point, the magic itself would help bolster the healing process.

She has four plates set on the counter, and a fifth off to the side and covered in foil. The fifth is set for Tenebris to eat when he was feeling up to it.
The last of the pancakes are shunted off onto a serving platter, and smiles as she turns off the griddle. Her hands are dusted off on her apron, and then she’s working to untie it.

"I do apologize if I trail water around, my... fur is still quite wet..." He admitted as he walked into the kitchen with his children following behind him.

She turns to face him and can’t help the giggle that escapes. He looked like a fox that took a dip in the river. “Oh my. So it is. If you’d like, I can help you dry it while the kids grab their food. Dining room is that way, little ones- salt, pepper, syrup, and all of the breakfast additives are already on the table. Feel free to take as much pancakes and eggs as you want- I made a lot of extra.” She’d even gotten the silverware out and set to rights.

"I suppose some help would be nice." he laughed quietly.

Both children edged around them both. Felix gave her a slightly less grumpy look, but it was his sister that gave her a hesitant but warm ‘thank you’ as they went to get their food. Felix didn’t look as grumpy as prior- but there was a definitive edge to his faint smile that Toki identified as the ‘hungry boy’ look.

Having helped raise her brothers had its perks.

She watched them go with a smile, and then freed herself from her apron. It’s tossed on an unoccupied counter, before she offers him her hands. The bones were clean, thankfully. Making pancakes did not always end up messy- and she didn’t have to scrub batter from between her bones. “Alright. May I have your hands?”

He reached hesitantly and took her hands. His hands were smooth and damp, covered in fur despite their relatively human shape. "Alright..."

The kids slipped past them into the dining room with plates loaded with food. They gave them a curious look, but didn’t linger.

Toki tightened her fingers on his and gave him a soothing smile. Belatedly, she realizes that a soothing smile from her might be like getting a grin from a crocodile. Oh well. She can’t do anything about her teeth. Eye lights dancing warmly, she shifts her grip and hums softly. “Don’t panic- I’m going to use my magic to dry you. It might feel a little warm, but I won’t burn you. I promise.”

With that said, she opens up the well of her magic, and lets it flow over her bones. They buzz faintly against his fingers, before steam rises from his fur in a thick cloud, billowing up to the ceiling before disappearing.

The steam is not the only thing that rises up.

He shivers at first, smiling at how nice the heat felt, but suddenly he realized exactly what causes the sudden silence in the kitchen. He opened his eyes, looking at his body.

"Oh. My god." Without hesitation he let go of Toki and bolted past her, going into the dining room and opening his arms. "Rosie! Look at Papa!" he laughed, revealing to his daughter that he was now less a fox and more a walking FLUFFBALL.

“You’re so fluffy!” Bright green eyes twinkled at him as the little girl began to laugh. It was shaky at first, but continually staring at the fluffy mass of monster in front of her began to ease the nerves in her chest. Daddy was still daddy, even if mommy wasn’t nice anymore.

Felix nearly chokes on eggs as he covers a laugh at his dad’s expense.
Toki began to laugh, covering her mouth as a gleeful amusement filled her. She hadn’t expected him to fluff out like that. “Alright, Mister Fluffykins, don’t forget to get a plate of your own. I didn’t expect you to fluff like that- but then and again, I don’t work with fur on a usual basis.”

"Of course, of course, but Rosie always had a passion for fluffy things, so I’m going to let her have her fun first," he chuckled, going to sit down by his daughter.

Rosie was all too happy to oblige in her passion- and her fingers thread through the fur of his arm with happy curiosity. She beams, rubbing over the soft fur. “It’s so soft!” She smiles. “I wish I had fur like this.”

Toki just smiled. She’d make him a plate. Parents could often forget to feed themselves in their desires to insure their children’s well being. He seemed like a very good dad- and his children obviously loved him.

A quick trip to the kitchen and back, and she returns with two plates. One is set in front of Todd, and the other is settled in front of her as she takes a seat across from the family. Where Felix appears to have drowned everything in ketchup, Toki does the equivalent with honey instead.

Felix stares in mild and unhidden disgust as he watches her take a bite of the sticky concoction on her plate. “Honey on eggs?”

“Honey goes good on everything.” Toki winks. "I think you'd like one of my friends, Felix. He likes ketchup too." Ketchup on eggs was pretty good- but on pancakes?

Todd chuckled, eating idly with one hand while his daughter commandeered the other one. "I never figured out where he got that habit. As long as he washes his plate after he's done, I’m happy." he commented.

“You lucky dog- Sans always avoids doing dishes whenever he’s over. Ketchup is nearly impossible to get off once it dries.” She chuckles. Her pancakes were amazing- and a pleased rattle escapes her ribs. “How do you guys like the pancakes?”

“They’re really good, Miss Nara.” Rosie smiles at her slightly, and nibbles at part of an egg. “They make my mouth tingly though.”

“That’s the magic.” She nods with a smile. “I’m no doctor, but I’ve worked alongside the monsters long enough to know some tricks. Magic infused food is good for healing and restoring any lost HP.”

"You also seem to have this way of making it feel like you just draped yourself in a blanket that's fresh from the dryer." Todd laughed softly.

“That’s how my magic works. I’ve got fire-based magic- so my magic feels warm. It’s really handy when I have to warm things up.” The honey makes the egg stick to her teeth, but she enjoys it regardless.

“You’ve mentioned that twice now. HP, that is.” Felix fiddles with his pancakes, taking a bite that is heaping with far too much ketchup to be healthy. At least he doesn’t seem upset about eating magic pancakes. “What is HP?”

“It’s tied to your soul, actually.” Toki smiles. “I’m still learning about how to be a monster myself- but I know that HP and souls are actually relevant to both humans and monsters. It’s actually really cool.”
"That's really interesting." Todd commented quietly, "I do believe I have much to learn about this new life I'll be living, huh? All of this about Souls... it sounds amazing."

“I’ve been around monsters since the Emergence- but I’m always learning something new every day.” Toki gives him a small grin. “Sometimes it seems pretty far out there- but it’s all real. Souls are actually really cool- you can pull them out and see them. It’s the culmination of your entire being- and you can hold it in your hand. It’s kind of scary- but really nifty.”

“Really?” Rosie blinked. “You can just... pull your soul out? Doesn’t it hurt?”

“Not if you’re gentle.” Toki chirps softly.

"That's amazing. How is that done?" he inquired.

“You can use magic to draw it out. Ah... Would you like to see how?” Tenebris had shown her his soul once upon a time- back when she was still human. She leans back in her seat and brushes her fingers against her sternum. It wasn’t really that invasive for her to show him- he needed to know what it was like, so he wouldn’t freak out if someone ever pulled his. The children too- the monster kids were always comparing souls and ‘stats’ as it were. Twitch was the proud owner of the highest speed stat, and liked to boast about it. “I can show you mine if you promise not to touch.”

"Sure... What do you two say?" Todd looked at his children, propping his chin in his palm.

“Sure! I wanna see what a soul looks like.” Rosie grins. “I’ll keep my hands to myself, I promise.”

Felix shrugged. “I guess.”

Toki nods. “Alright then. Watch closely.” They wouldn’t be able to see the magic that she wove- not even she could do that- but they would see the strong green glow that began to bubble behind her red sweater. Her soul squishes out of her chest, and hovers in her hand. She makes note that the cracks in it have healed further, since she last checked. The ones that remain are glowing as bright a red as they usually do. “This is my soul. I have a human soul- as far as we know; most HTM’s have human souls. I haven’t actually got to meet another HTM yet to confirm this, but... yeah.”

Rosie’s eyes lit up. “Wow! It’s really pretty. It matches your eyes when they do the glowing thing! Why’s it green? Couldn’t it be pink? What’s with the red lines?”

Toki chuckles. “The color actually depends upon your strongest trait. Mine is kindness, so my soul is green. I know a monster with a lavender soul- but I don’t know of anyone who has a pink soul. You see how mine is a right side up heart? Monster souls are upside down. It’s really cool. The red lines are actually some damage on my soul. It’s healing though, so I’m getting better. It’s why I didn’t want you to touch it- the red marks tend to shock whoever touches them.”

Her gaze flicks to Todd, curious about his reaction to seeing her soul.

His ears were standing straight up as he looked at her soul. The colors were magnificent, if he had to say so himself. The cracks were odd and concerning- because something to crack a soul had to have been a terrible incident- but he supposed if they were healing then that was good as well. "Oh, wow...” he murmured gently.

“Mhm.” Toki let them look for a moment more before she tucked her soul back into her chest. She shivered, and finished off her pancakes. “That’s what a soul generally looks like though. It’s pretty cool. It shows your stats as well- but those are confusing and I don’t entirely understand them all that well yet.” She wasn’t sure why she had a defense of two hundred- which was astoundingly high, considering how well her bones broke against physical attacks. Her radius was still sore from Tenebris- but that was her own foolish fault there. “If you’d like, you can eventually learn how to do it too.”

“That’s really cool!” Rosie finished gobbling up her breakfast, and then turned her wide eyes to Toki. “Can I see my soul? Will you show me? Pretty please? I bet it’s pink! Or purple! Ooo, I hope it’s pretty.”

“Uh… That’d be up to your dad, kiddo. Souls are a pretty personal business. It can leave you feeling pretty weird afterwards- and you’ve all had a long day.”

"It's absolutely painless right?" Todd asked, just to be sure.

Toki nods. “I had my soul removed once when I was human- I felt a little bit cold, but I think that was tied into the nature of my magic. It didn’t hurt at all, I promise.”

"Alright, just for a moment, okay Rosie?"

“Okay, Daddy!” She beams at him. She hops out of her seat when Toki beckons her closer, and takes the seat next to the skeleton. “Okay, so what do I do?”

“Just sit still, and be calm.” She smiles at her. She reaches in with her magic. Finding Rosie’s soul is easy- and it slips from the little girl’s body without much issue. It really was a novelty to her- but she was sure it was part of her human nature. Seeing souls was always amazing.

She holds the little soul up, and grins. It’s not even half the size of her soul- which is strange, but given her age, she can understand it. It was a pale pink color.

“I don’t know what pink means- but I can ask Tenebris when he’s feeling better.”

Rosie positively glows. “It’s so pretty! Daddy look! It’s pink!”

"Oh would you look at that." he laughed, "I'm glad, Rosie, it's a perfect color for you."

Toki laughs, and eases it back into the girl’s chest. “Mhm. It is a very fitting color.”

Rosie bounces back to her side of the table and nudges her brother. “Felix! Felix, you should have her check your soul too! I bet yours is all dark and stuff ‘cause you’re such a grumpy butt.”

He stuck his tongue out at her and shook his head. “Nuh. I’m good. Souls and stuff- seems pretty heavy.”

"I suppose I’d like to see mine too, if you can help me summon it." Todd rumbled faintly.

Toki nodded and waved him to her side of the table. Once he joined her, she held out her hands and smiled. “Focus on the feeling of it being drawn out. It’s the feeling you’ll need to use when you want to draw it out yourself.” Her magic slid into his chest, and she eased his soul out into the grasp of her magic.

Hovering in her palm was a small green soul. It was a bit bigger than Rosie’s, but vastly smaller than her own. It was a lighter color of green, more the color of a sun-lit canopy than the brilliant emerald of her own.

“Green.” She whispered softly, eye-lights wide. “You’re green.”

She couldn’t help but to peer at his soul- at his stats as well. His health was hilariously low compared to hers. His HP rested at about two hundred and fifty when full, with his attack at a two and defense at a three. Her health and defense stat outclassed his by far.

He took a soft breath as he watched her, then he looked at her, "Green... is it a bad thing?" he asked.

"Mine is green too, if you recall." She smiles despite her words, and holds his soul out for him to inspect. He, like his daughter, doesn’t have any flaws on his soul. "Green stands for kindness- and I have been informed that it is a rare color of soul to have. Its... it’s nice to see that there are other kind people out in the world."

"O-Oh... heh..." he rubbed his head, looking at his soul, "Kindness." he repeated, before he laughed quietly, "I'm glad..."

“It’s a good color.” She assures him. She eases it back into his chest, and then grins at him.
“Definitely going to talk to Tenebris about all of this. It’s really cool- I didn’t know souls could be different sizes.”

Toki chuckles faintly, and then stands to take her plate. She reaches across for Rosie’s empty plate- and is summarily slid Felix’s not entirely empty plate as well. “Why don’t you finish eating, Todd. I’ll go get these soaking, and then you three can relax in the living room. I have some movies,” She’d finally gotten more copies of the old Disney shows, “That you can put on and relax to. I need to check on Tenebris.”

"Thank you so much, Miss Toki.” He smiled at her slightly, and slid his plate over to resume his meal.

“When you’re done, just set the plate in the sink. I’ll get to it later.” Toki simply smiled, and was quick to put the dishes into a sink full of water. It would keep everything soggy enough to clean it when she got around to doing it. Procrastination at it’s finest, right there.

She balances Tenebris’ food in one hand, and points Rosie at her collection of Disney DVD’s with the other. The girl snags her brother- who puts on one heck of a show of grumping despite how easily he was tugged to the massive couch- and goes to pick out a movie.

“I want to watch Finding Nemo.”

“Rosie, we watch that one often enough at home. Why don’t we watch The Lion King?”

“No way! Nemo is the best.”

“But the lions are fluffier.”

“Hnnng... You drive a hard bargain. You know the hyena’s scare me!”

“How about something fluffy that doesn’t have hyenas?”

“Like what?”

The children’s discussion fades from her ears as she heads up the stairs. She doesn’t bother knocking, instead stepping into her room with a flourish. She has to switch the plate to her other hand as she does so, but it’s no big deal. “Tenebris? I made breakfast.” And with a bit of magical manipulation, it would even be steaming under the foil.

"Mmm... Toki..." he purred quietly from where he lay on the bed, his form almost restored now.

“Hey there,” She grins. She pads closer to the bed, and sits at the edge. “Do you think you’re up for some food?"

"Not yet, I’m afraid." he sighed.

“That’s okay.” She nods. Toki sets the plate on the side table, leaving the foil to keep in the heat. Running her fingers over his skull, she peers into his sockets with a soft frown. “You’re still pretty concussed,” she sighs. “I don’t know if you were fully coherent earlier. We have guests- and they’re going to be here for a while I think. He’s an HTM like me, and he’s got two sweet little human kids.”

"I'm glad..." he sighed softly, "I... can't wait to meet him.”

“When you’re feeling up to it, I was thinking he could look at your limbs. He worked at a hospital- so he’s going to know more about what he’s doing than I am. He might know how to wrap them better.” She smiles faintly. She brushes over his skull again, and thrums. Magic runs over him, giving him an extra boost of warmth to keep him going. She was going to be back and forth after all- she wouldn’t be here to keep the room hot all day. “His name is Todd- Todd Hanes. His kids are Felix and Rosie. Felix is a bit of a grump- but after the morning they’ve had…”

"Mmm..." he purred deeply, then looked up at her. "Are they okay?"

“Todd’s face is pretty messed up,” she admits. “And I couldn’t see if he had any other wounds. He seemed to be walking okay- so I’m pretty sure it was just his face, and maybe some bruises elsewhere. Felix has a cut on his forehead, but his dad managed to fix it up. Rosie’s just fine. Ah… Todd completed his change this morning. His wife came after him and the kids with a knife because of it.”

He looked at her for a moment, silent, and then he winced as he shifted. He was trying to get up.

She planted a hand in the middle of his chest and glared at him. The sad fact was, it wasn’t hard to keep him gently pressed down. “No.” She says firmly. “If I have to tie you to this bed, I will. No getting up. Monsters don’t have to use the bathroom, so you can’t even make that excuse. You’re stuck here until Aliquam gets back to fix you.”

He let out a soft groan, looking up at her with stubbornly furrowed brows.

“If you stay on this bed until Aliquam comes back, I will lift the no-smoking rule in the house while you’re bedridden.” And that was being generous- while Tenebris’ pipe did not smell very bad, she wasn’t fully comfortable with extra smoke being in her house for understandable reasons. Even if the smoke smelled like spearmint.

"........." That got his attention, and he sighed, "Could I do a smoking-bowl instead? Just smoke the leaves on my bedside?" he requested.

She made a face. That would put more smoke smell into her room. “If you help me scrub the smoke off my ceilings when you’re better, then yes.”

"..." He sighed, and then nodded. "Deal."

“Good.” She took her hand from his chest and gave him a smile. “I’ll go get a bowl for you now. Your tobacco is probably still in your coat.” Which had been flung off to the side of the room when the guard had helped her undress him. “You sit tight and rest.”

"Spearmint." he corrected after her.
“Yeah, yeah, smoke is smoke even if it smells good. And it still stains things.”

She flashes him a smile and heads out the door. She’s plodding down the stairs, hearing the beginnings of 101 Dalmatians starting to play, when she spots Todd herding the children towards the stairs.

Knocking at the front door registers in her ears.

Todd’s bright blue eyes were blown wide with panic, even the one that was bruised and partially swollen. “Vikki’s outside!” He hisses. “She’s at the door!”

The day could not get any worse, could it?
When he said he hadn’t known if she was following them or not, he had been right. He hadn’t known. But she was here- and knocking at Toki’s door. Toki couldn’t just ignore her- if she was violent with her husband and children, there’s no knowing what she would do to an unsuspecting guard.

Toki ushered the three of them into the room they had been in before. “Keep the door shut,” She says. “Keep it closed until I come knock. I’ll let you know when she’s gone away.”

Todd hugged his children tightly as he nodded to her. Pushing the door closed behind him, he moved his children to the bed and held them tightly.

Once the door was firmly shut, Toki headed back down the stairs. It didn’t take her long to get to the door, and she listened to the impatient tapping of shoes against her front porch. She couldn’t tell what type of shoes- but the tapping was more and more impatient the longer that she waited. Finally she leaned up, peeking through the peephole in the center of the door.

The woman on the other side was short, broad in the shoulders. She had curly brown hair, and was glaring up at the door with the same green eyes that Rosie had. She was worrying her lip- but Toki couldn’t see past the woman’s chest to see what she kept glancing down at.

Toki steeled herself and grimaced. Vikki wasn’t exactly what she had imagined when she thought of spousal abuser. Vikki looked like an overly fit soccer mom- like she should be out on the field encouraging kids to run faster. Well- one could never tell a person by their cover, could they? It explained why the guards hadn’t stopped her- Vikki looked harmless, and as good as the guards could be, sometimes an unassuming aura could get past them.

She wondered what sort of story that the human had spun to them.

She put a fixed grin on her face, making her teeth look a bit sharper than she usually tried, and opened the door. Behind her, she can hear the start of the ‘Cruella de Vil’ song being sung.
“Cruella De Vil, Cruella De Vil. If she doesn’t scare you, no evil thing will…”

“Vikki, I assume.” Toki’s voice oozed a calm politeness that was most certainly fake, but did its job well enough. “I’m going to have to ask you to leave my property immediately.”

To her credit, Vikki only looked mildly startled to be face to face with a much taller fang-toothed skeleton monster. She recovered swiftly though, and her lips curled up into a disgusted look as she recognized the face she was staring at. After all- if you didn’t know the face of the woman who hosted the largest settlement of monsters in the country, then you lived under a rock. "If you know my name then that stupid fucking fox is here. Tell him to get his fucking ass out here now."

“That _man_,” she stresses the word, “Came to me after you went after him and your children with a knife. Todd came to me with signs of spousal abuse- with a story of attempted murder. No, Vikki. I’m going to have to ask you to leave again.” She keeps eye contact with her, letting her shoulders square out as she leans down so she is pretty much face to face. Her teeth grit and she lets them grind faintly to spout off sparks. Her arms come to block the doorway so that she can’t slip past her into the house. “He is a guest seeking sanctuary under my roof- and it’s something that we offered to all families with family members who made the change. So please. Turn around and leave and don’t come back.”

"No. I'm not going to leave, until that stupid fox is dead!" Her eyes glinted- not with fury, not with rage, but a bone chilling calm. She knew very well what she was doing. Vikki swung her arm up, and then down.

The crowbar that Toki hadn’t seen cracked down on the top of her skull. She hadn’t had time to pull back- no, she had been lost in the look in Vikki’s eyes. She honestly believed that she was right to murder her husband and her children, and that she was justified in doing so- and that had frozen her solid.

Pain split her skull open as the crowbar glanced off her horns in a shower of sparks, and she stumbled back as the bar slid down and struck over the large crack in her skull. The sound of bone cracking was loud, and one of her eyes went blind as she reflexively shut it. Stars danced in her skull as she staggered back into the main room with a pained shout, one hand coming up to clutch over her socket. Shit- the human had cracked from the scar on her skull down to the top of her eye socket. Droplets of green magic beaded at the edges of the hairline crack and rolled down her face.

Unafraid, she storms forward into the house, hefting her weapon upwards. The woman is loud as she shouts angrily. "WHERE ARE YOU, YOU DISGUSTING BEAST?"

There was a startled noise from upstairs- one that Toki’s ringing skull distinctively picked out as a startled noise from the children- that drew Vikki’s gaze.

She was not going to hurt those children. It had been many years since Toki had last had an actual fight- and she was far too much out of shape for it- but like hell was she going to stand by. Toki was going to have to knuckle-up and do something about it.

She lunged for the back of Vikki’s skull as the woman turned to go towards the stairs. Her claws hooked into her hair, and she flung the woman away. She ended up shoving towards her kitchen- but that would work just fine. “I warned you to leave.” She hisses, planting herself in the way of Vikki and the stairs. She drops her hand from her socket, and her eye light turns on. Seeing hurts- but not even as close to her chest had hurt from the shattering. “I asked you nicely to vacate the premises of my property. And now you’re threatening my guests. You’re not going to touch anyone. Last chance. Pick the shattered pieces of your pride up and walk out the front door now.”
She snarled as her hair was grabbed and she hit the ground, "Ghn..." she reached and rubbed her head, then stood up with the crowbar in hand. "I'm not leaving, that stupid fox needs to pay for what he's done!"

“And what has he done?” She snarled. Her mouth slid open to enunciate her words, and she let the sparks flicker from her teeth while the magic in her body began buzzing in her bones. “He has done nothing that he could control! No one chooses to become an HTM, Vikki. You are his wife! You should have loved and supported him- to have and to hold, in sickness and in health, if I recall my brother’s wedding vows right. Just because he’s covered in fur doesn’t mean he’s a different person!”

Toki doesn’t have anything in hand to defend against that crowbar- so her best bet is to rush her. She hasn’t ever brawled in an unfair fight. Back when she used to get into spats with people picking on her brothers, it had been fistfights. Always fistfights. The crowbar had her wary- so she stood her ground for the time being.

"What am I going to do if I’m married to a damn fox!? I don't want people getting ideas about me suddenly having interest in fucking a fox! And my children! They're better off dying as humans than growing up and turning into THAT!" She shakes her head and sneers. “You monsters are a blight upon this world. It’s wrong- it’s hubris, monsters having children with humans. But here they are- proof that our ancestors didn’t have an ounce of shame for fornicating with beasts. And we-we are going to cleanse this planet of the plague that has washed over us. This place- this plague vector- will be wiped clean."

“They’re not going to turn into what he is! If they were, they would have by now! You obviously lack the genetic code that causes the mutation, or they would be monsters.” Toki bristles, and her bones buzz louder. “Fuck what other people think! If you had truly loved him, then it wouldn’t matter what other people think! You were married to him for how long? Probably for longer than your children have been alive! If you can just shake off time spent like that because of what HAM has obviously been spewing to you, then you’re not worthy of being a wife, and not half as smart as you look. If you can just kill your kids because their father carries the genetic markers for becoming a monster, then you are not worthy of being a mother. Get out of my house and off of my property now before I throw you off.”

"I've already said. I'm. Not. LEAVING!” Her voice trailed off into a shriek, and she lunged at her, swinging the crowbar again.

Toki didn’t have a choice but to meet her lunge. She ducked down under the wide swing of the crowbar, keeping her horns angled away so she didn’t impale and kill the woman, and drove her shoulder into the stout woman’s chest. Toki had height on the woman, and magic reinforcing her steps- but Vikki was broader across the shoulders than Toki could ever hope to be.

Toki had to put more umph behind her hit as she shoved the woman back, magic switching intent from offensive to defensive in an instant. She wasn’t at an angle to shove her out the door of the house- so into the kitchen they stepped, her bare bones slipping perilously on the tile.

They thrashed her kitchen, shoving each other into cabinets, the counters, Toki trying to stay close enough so that Vikki couldn’t get a good strike in with the bar.

The motions blurred together, and she got her skull rattled more than once when the woman attempted to shove her and her claws away.

Vikki’s clothes were in tatters, and that made it easy to scratch at the flesh below. She bore shallow claw marks- and the blood made Toki hesitate her next strike. Instead of aiming to claw her, her fist... balled up and she drove it into Vikki's middle.

Choking out in pain, Vikki wrapped an arm around her gut as she swung the crowbar in retaliation at the shoulder that she could see. Toki jerked back and moved her arm to block it so she didn’t crack it down on her shoulder. But she made a mistake.

She used the arm that Tenebris had bit down on the night prior, and her magic was no longer on the defensive.

There's the loud cracking of bone and she screamed a shrill note as her radius, which had been cracked under the powerful bite from Tenebris' jaws, was then shattered under the strike of the crowbar. She was forced to retreat as she clenched her arm, fingers curling around the jagged break that parted the bone in half as severed shards dropped onto the ground.

"See why you shouldn't get in my fucking way?" Vikki sneered.

Toki didn't reply. Her mind was in a haze, as she clutched at her arm. Her sockets were briefly dark, but it did not last long. Her magic surged in her bones, bright and green and burning with anger as instincts she had never used filled her bones. Her sockets ignited as instincts drove it forwards, curls of magic scorching upwards from her sockets as she glared at her.

The energy filling her body buzzed and her bones began to hum with an audible tenor of warning. They began heating up as magic came to fill every ounce of her essence, ghosting over the wounds that now marked her head and her arm. Green ooze bubbled out between the claws holding tight to her arm, dribbling down onto the tile below her.

This woman. This woman dared to enter her home with the intent to kill. To not only kill her husband, but also two innocent children who had done absolutely nothing wrong but be born to someone with the HTM gene. This woman was no better than the genocidal terrorists of HAM- and it wouldn’t have surprised Toki one bit if this woman was affiliated with them. She wouldn’t stop with her family though. No, a woman like this would surely kill Tenebris while he was unable to defend himself. Then she would likely return to finish Toki.

Toki had to protect them. There was no one she would risk- not after losing one of the guards to the humans last time. No- they were hers to protect. The guards, the villagers, the children, everyone under her roof and under her care.

She had to protect them.

"I swear, if you dare think for a second," She hissed, “that I will let you harm any of them... I will make you quickly regret considering such a foolish notion." Toki warned her over the sound of her practically buzzing bones. Her words dripping with venom as the energy of her magic began to come off her form in waves. Her soul pulsed brighter and brighter, throwing her defense straight out the window and right into her offense.

Not fazed by the threat, Vikki began for the stairs. She stopped short as glow of green magic blocked her from the first step. It rapidly began to fill the room around them, clinging to the walls and the ceilings, blocking off doorways and windows. "What the fuck?"

Vikki used the crowbar she had in hand and swung it into the cloud, only to hit something that felt solid... something that then began to buzz violently. The magic collected into orbs, then compressed.

They formed bright green bees that hummed loudly with violent intent.

Vikki reeled backwards a step, shoulders hunching together as she stared in undisguised unease at the sight before her. "B-Bees?!"

Toki was surprised. Of all the creatures her magic took form of; it was ironic that it was bees. Bees always held her passion, and the humming of the insects that were vibrating over her walls resonated with the feelings inside of her soul. She had always cherished bees- maybe it wasn’t so ironic that this was what her magic formed to defend her.

Though their forms were masked green with magic, there were features she recognized from her own bees. Even one with a perfect stripe down it's back- One she hadn’t seen in years. Stripe, she recalled, had been the first queen that she had ever had. They were larger than normal bees, but varied in sizes- some were about the length of two knuckles instead of the length of her distal phalanx, while others were as large as a guinea pig.

They were her bees, her finest treasure.

And her magic had formed them to defend the hive.

Having a swarm of eight-inch bees staring you down would unnerve even the most hardened of people.

Her eyes gleamed brighter, a harsh glow as her magic irradiated the house. A snarl tugged at her teeth, and she straightened on her feet. "I really don't want to hurt another human being, but I think by having these show up, my decision has been made for me. This is your last warning, Vikki. Leave my house, and never come back."

She could feel the bees through her magic- they were not fully sentient, no, but dependant upon her. They buzzed in the back of her mind, awaiting her command, and urging her into motion with what little instinctive sentience they had.

Vikki hesitated, but with the hatred growing greater in her eyes, she did not back down. She growled. "NO!" She swung at the bees again, striking them with the crowbar.

As the bees actually faltered in their steady buzzing, a distinct throb of pain struck hard in the back of her mind. A few of the larger ones dropped to the ground, bodies bent awkwardly and dripping green, and fizzled from existence. Toki’s mind went blank, and her gaze went red.

She dropped her arm and lunged. She grabbed Vikki by the wrist, her heated bones scorching the human's skin until she screamed and dropped the crowbar. Toki held on for a moment longer, driven by the ingrained instinct to bring her point across. She let go when the flesh below her bones began to bubble and blister, the smell of burning meat wafting up and clinging to the air in a cloying stench. The burn that bubbled up was red and black- and followed the shape of the bones of her hand.

She hauled her arm back and flung Vikki towards the dining room. Toki stepped onto the crowbar, and the metal scorched her tiles as it was warped and bent under the heat of her bones. It glowed a ripe cherry red color- faintly burning the bottoms of her feet- and only when no human hand could hold it did she withdraw her touch from it.

The crowbar now rendered useless, Toki turned to face Vikki.

Vikki’s face had stretched in horror, several of the bees having come to land on her. Welts were bubbling on her face as the balls off fire scorched over any exposed skin, burning holes in her clothes and scorching her hair.

Toki advanced.
Vikki, in a moment of panic, grasped the nearest chair closest to her and flung it at Toki. The bees swooped in to block it from hitting her. They swarmed over the chair, creating a buzzing, writhing barrier as they blocked Toki from the strike. The chair dropped to the ground, charred and burnt, but still whole.

Toki stepped through the swarm, which clung to her bones and wreathed her in flame.

"S-STAY AWAY FROM ME!" Vikki threw another chair but missed as Toki lunged. Toki lunged, her undamaged hand coming around Vikki’s neck. The skin heated, burning hot- and the scream of terror was like a shot of ice through Toki’s mind. The burning flesh invaded her nose again, clinging to her palm and ingraining in the creases of her bones as she realized just what she was doing.

Vikki sobbed, her hands clinging to the wrist that was burning her. The heat began to ebb as Toki worked to rein in her magic. When she was under control again- with the buzzing rage set on the back burner- Toki leaned down and opened her mouth to snarl in her face.

"Get out of my house." Toki ordered sharply, before dropping Vikki onto her rear. “If you dare come back here again, or think about hurting anyone of mine…”

Hers. Yes. Everyone here was hers- her friends, her family, they were all apart of what her magic insisted was her hive. They were hers to protect.

At her urging, the bees all gathered behind her, their unison buzzing making a roar that vibrated over the walls once more. Fire billowed out from between her teeth, and she shrieked a noise from the center of her being that was hardly a human sounding noise at all. The threat was obvious.

It was all Vikki needed to know. She picked herself up, and ran for her life. She burst from the house with Toki following at her heels. Toki watched as the woman fled, bursting past confused wolf guards who lingered at the gates. She watched as Vikki got into a car and sped off, leaving a burnout on the road as she fled back towards the city. The guards took one look at Toki, and began to run a perimeter check.

That was for the best. Getting close to her right now was like sticking your arm in a fire.

Once alone, Toki turned and leaned against the doorframe. She clutched the shattered part of her radius and trembled in place, her arm throbbing and pulsing in time with her skull. The horrible roar of noise from her bees was ebbing off as they calmed and settled on her walls. They didn’t scorch the wallpaper covering the brick- they didn’t damage anything in her house at all. The only burn marks she would find were from her hands touching things, or her feet stepping across tile.

There was a brush against her cheek- and she recognized the bee with the single stripe down the center of it’s back. It came down to rest on her shoulder and she got a closer look at it. It was one of the larger ones, about as long as a small guinea pig. Where there was the soft fluffy cotton like fur on a normal bee, there was a wreath of flames in it’s place.

It buzzed and brushed its feelers over her cheek, trailing warmth over bones that felt clammy.

She let go of her arm and shifted up to cover it with her hand. Stripe, she recalled. This was Stripe. Or her magic had manifested itself in the form of Stripe. The bee buzzed gently, happily. She wasn’t sure if it was actually sentient- but she could feel it buzzing in the back of her skull. It felt… content. Pleased at what had happened. She also wasn’t sure if Stripe was female, or if it even had a gender since it was a being from her magic.
The bee did nothing to inform her of the answer.

She fell back on old impulses, as she looked it over. "Did she hurt you, my babies?" she whispered faintly. There was a slightly higher buzzing from Stripe, before Toki watched as the bees started to disappear one by one as her magic calmed down.

They continued to disappear until finally it was just stripe and her. She ran her finger over the magic bee, taking note that the green flames that had replaced the fuzz was warm. It didn’t burn, or put off that oppressive heat that she had felt from the swarm. No, holding the eight-inch bee was like holding a bottle of warm water.

Stripe buzzed faintly, tickling warm legs over her cheeks again before it too disappeared. Her magic sucked back inside of her, leaving the house empty, silent, and colder than it had been before.

"...." She took a breath, and then wobbled back into her house. Her legs shook, and her body trembled- but she had things to do, even if she felt light headed and woozy. She first located the shards of her arm, and stuffed them in her pockets. Aliquam could fix the pieces that had splintered off when he returned.

Her dining room was pretty trashed, and she would need new chairs… But…

She needed to let them know that Vikki was gone. Toki staggered up the stairs, holding her sleeve tightly to the broken bones in an effort to stem the bleeding of the green magic.

She knocked on his door, voice raspy as she spoke. “Vikki’s gone, Todd. If she’s smart, she wont be coming back.” She needed to tell Tenebris too… She had basically flooded the house with her magic- she would be surprised if Tenebris hadn’t tried to get up.

"Toki." Todd's voice came from the door. "Are you okay?" he asked, moving the chair out of the way of the door to pull it open. His breathing was slightly labored, and he was panting with his mouth wide open. Sweat had dampened his fur. "I heard a lot of that… Wh- Oh my god! Your face! What happened to your face?"

Toki wobbled where she stood, her cracked socket closing as green ooze trailed down her cheek. Concern spiked through her at the sight of his bedraggled state, and she kept her bleeding arm pressed to her chest as he reached out his hands to cup her skull gently. “She came with the intent to… Well, she came with a crowbar. I didn’t see it until she hit me with it. Ah… Are you okay? You look really… warm."

"The house... it got so hot... We had to open the window..." he managed past his panting, "There was enough room for the children to stick their heads out, so they were able to keep cool enough." he murmured, before he reached out and gently gripped her wrist. He could see green staining her shirt- and as he pulled her other hand away from what was obviously a wound, his eyes grew round in his sockets. "She came with the intent to… Well, she came with a crowbar. I didn’t see it until she hit me with it. Ah… Are you okay? You look really… warm."

Guilt filled her- shit she had over heated the house accidentally. “I’m sorry- my magic is fire, and I probably heated the house up.” She paused when he grasped her extended wrist. Confusion tugged at her mouth, and she followed his gaze.

Her palm and fingers were black. Not the charred by fire black- but had layers of flesh and meat that was definitely not hers. It was cooked to her bones, stuck between the spaces in the bones. The stench hit her again, wafting up to her. Meaty and thick, so thick she could taste it in her mouth. It was one she was intimately familiar with. Burnt human flesh was not a smell that one could ever
She had done this. She had done this to another human being- even if that human being was trash. No one deserved to deal with burns like that- she had… She had charred her skin away.

Toki blanched, and a sickened feeling churned in her stomach. The smell pervaded her nasal cavity- and human meat burning smells vastly different from animal meat- and she found something bubbling upwards from inside of her chest. A sour taste built in her throat, and it was one she was certain she’d never feel again.

Skeletons couldn’t vomit; skeletons couldn’t vomit- oh the hell that they couldn’t. She turned on her heel, one hand coming to clamp over her mouth- the closest bathroom was in her room, and that’s the one she fled to.

Todd was left standing there, gaping in the doorway. He’d seen the horror that crossed her face- but she hadn’t said that Vikki was dead. The burnt flesh clinging to her bones though, made him wonder if Vikki was wishing she might have been.

Toki burst through the door to her room, and made a beeline for her bathroom- just barely making it to the toilet in time as she dropped to her knees and retched noisily. The magic that her food had been converted to came up in a thick, dark green sludge as it stained the toilet bowl.

She couldn’t get that smell out of her nasal passage, and not even the dark and bitter taste of regurgitated magic could cover the taste of it in her mouth.

"T-Toki?" Tenebris was able to lift his head to look towards the bathroom. "Hey! What the hell happened?!

Toki couldn’t answer- her arms clattered against the bowl as she shuddered and retched again. It was in her nose- it was in her mouth, it was on her hand. She could feel it flaking off of her bones, like thick wafers as it drifted down to the floor. The magic that coated the bowl burned as it came up, spurting past her teeth like green magma.

She trembled, rattling like a wind-chime in a storm. “I… I burned her, I burned her and it’s on my hand, I can smell it, I can feel it,” she stammered.

"Toki!" he tried to sit up only to immediately regret it as he went down again, his head throbbing in sheer pain, "Toki..."

Her magic panicked as she struggled to gain control of her body. She flung an arm out in his direction, choking his name as she heaved again. He had promised not to get up- she couldn’t take care of him while she was trying to quell her nausea.

There was a pop as her newfound magic reacted- and then a fluffy green bee the size of a kitten settled on his chest and buzzed at him in a scolding tone. The lone bright stripe down it’s back stood out against the green fires of its body. It didn’t burn him or his blankets at all- it simply stared at him through little glowing green eyes and waved its feelers at him. But Stripe’s warning was very clear despite the lack of large body language or verbal cues. Tenebris was to stay still.

He tensed up as he looked at the bee in surprise, but he smiled lightly and slowly relaxed his body again. It was warm on his chest, and not as heavy as one might have thought. "Your magic is powerful enough to summon an incarnate." he purred, reaching up with his unwounded hand to try and pet the bee. “That is quite the surprise indeed.”

Stripe buzzed slightly as it- she?- was petted. Fuzzy legs carried its round body forwards so she could get nearer to his face. It patted his face again, leaving little imprints of warmth where it stepped. The flames that billowed out in place of soft furs were no warmer than Toki’s bones usually felt, and did no harm to his fingers as they stroked through the long and crackling fluff.

It took Toki a minute to calm down. Her magic began to ease off about the same time that her heaving did. She flushed the toilet and staggered to her feet. She didn’t answer Tenebris at first. Toki shoved her hands under the sink and began to scrub frantically at her hands, ignoring the agony that shot up her arm.

Thankfully the charred flesh came off easy- and soon she was spotless once more. Only then did her terror ease- and Stripe gave one last warm buzz before disappearing now that Tenebris did not need to be distracted.

She staggered back out to her bedroom, wiping her teeth on the sleeve of her sweater. She had flecks of char on there too, but she didn’t have the mobility in her arm to change shirts. “I… V… Vikki showed up. I had… I had to handle it. She came with a crowbar.” She turned to face him, displaying the weeping crack that split her left eye socket all the way up to her scar. “She… She was… She was going to do bad things.” She clutched her wounded left arm again and stared at the floor.

Her fingers were dripping the green ooze that acted as her blood, and it was dribbling down into a small puddle on the floor. It had already stained her sleeve- and the red turtleneck was a damp brown color where her magic had oozed into the fabric. She… She needed to do something about that. Bind the bones or something. “I… I need my first aid kit…” She whispers softly. Todd still had it, she thought.

"Toki… stars above…” He whispered as he looked at her, frowning worriedly.

There was a knock on the doorframe that drew his gaze. Todd stood in the open door, an uncertain look on his face. "Here.” he said softly, holding the first aid kit in his hands, "I... I can help you if you'd like... I mean..."

“Please.” She nods slowly to the red fox. “I need help with my arm at least. It really is starting to hurt pretty bad now that I’m not using it. Ah… Tenebris, this is Todd Hanes. Todd, this is Doctor Tenebris Gaster. You’re welcome to come in, Todd.”

Tenebris looked at the Fox and the fox looked back for a time, though the latter looked a little intimidated. Not all of the intimidation left when Tenebris shot him a smile, but it was a good start. "It's nice to meet you, Mister Hanes."

"Ah. The feeling is mutual, Doctor.” Todd smiled a little. He hesitated, tail swishing behind him, and then plodded into the room to go to Toki’s side.

Toki approaches the side of her bed, and sits on the edge for lack of better place to actually do this. She really needs to get a table and chairs in here at some point- but for now this would have to do. She gnashes her teeth, the damp surfaces not giving off sparks for once, and begins to roll up her sleeve. Her arm looks fine from below, though her radius is angled further out than it should be. Once her sleeve reaches midway up her left arm, her radius drops off into a jagged, weeping edge. It is empty for several inches, before the bone resumes further up. “I don’t know what you can do- but maybe just covering the ends of the bone with bandage so it stops oozing?”

"I'm afraid that's the most of what I can do... I didn't work with bones as much.” he sighed. He was going to do what he could, regardless of his lack of knowledge in bones. "I... I must thank you again... I couldn't dare imagine what would have happened if I didn't come to you.”
“Given how quickly she arrived after you did, I’m not sure you’d have been safe elsewhere.” She murmured. She’d need to call and report this to the police… At least the crowbar down below would still have Vikki’s fingerprints on it, and probably spots of Toki’s magic ooze on it. It would hopefully be enough to sway them to her side, even after what she did in defending her home. “Nara village is open to those seeking refuge- I am glad you came here for protection.” She smiles faintly as she watches him bandage up her bones. It hurt- but her ribs had hurt worse. “You don’t have to know how to work with bones to help. I just need it to hold for now. When Papyrus gets back, I can have him rework the shards back onto my arm. I found them all this time- so no re-growing required, right Tenebris?”

"That's correct, Toki," he replied quietly. "I only hope I can say the same for my own."

"Toki told me there was an accident with a delivery truck. I'm glad to see that the impact didn't kill you."

“He’s tougher than he looks.” Toki gives the older monster a bemused fond look, wincing as Todd tightened the bandages on her arm. “All of your bones were located, Tenebris. Ah… The ones that were sticking out were pushed back in your skin stuff when I stitched you up. Pap’s gonna have to set them though.”

Her fingers flexed faintly, and she was glad she could still move them, even if her ulna was the only thing keeping her arm together at this point. Toki’s right hand comes up to prod gently over her eye socket. The oozing hadn’t slowed down, and the crack was still sore. Her socket and the surrounding bones felt sticky from her magic.

“… Oh boy. I’m going to have to explain this mess to Sans and Papyrus when they get back.” She sighs. She was already dreading it.
Toki ended up with a bandage wrapped around her skull, covering the damaged socket and reducing her vision down to just one eye. It was a little overkill— but cracked skulls were worrisome. At least she didn’t have anything besides a killer migraine from it— she had no brain to rattle, so no concussion could be given. She did have a wicked bruise that was blooming though— in the same green shade as her magic.

With Todd’s help, she piled the burnt chairs outside, used enough air freshener in her house to cause a serious problem around an open flame, and managed to get the call out to the Police. An officer had shown up, taken her statement, recorded her wounds, and then took the crowbar with him for evidence. They put a notice out for her arrest, and Toki let them know that they should check the hospitals since Vikki had gotten burned.

It had been over swiftly— and she’d gotten a pleased look from the officer after informing him as to why Vikki had come with violent intentions. Her brother would be getting another call, no doubt— but it wasn’t anything that Utaka couldn’t handle.

It was suggested and agreed upon between the Officer and herself that maybe her house was not the safest place for Todd and the kids. She got it arranged so they would be staying with Wolfen and Bo for a few days; per-chance that Vikki came back or sent someone to finish her business. It suited Todd well enough— his kids could play with their kids, and Wolfen could teach Todd about being a male monster. Particularly one closely related to the canine family— there were many things that the skeletons couldn’t handle teaching him at this point.

As night fell, Toki’s arm grew more and more sore. She ended up with it propped to her chest in a sling made of towels so she would stop using it, and with another pot-full of magic heavy food from Bo. The sheep woman hadn’t wanted her cooking, not with a broken arm. That suited her just fine— the pot of stew was delicious, and she had even heckled Tenebris into eating a few bowls to keep his body going and urge his magic to heal his concussion.

After the long day, she was tired— but she needed to wait for Aliquam and Caeruleus to get back. With Tenebris up in her room, probably fast asleep with his spearmint burning in a bowl on the bedside table, Toki found herself sitting on the first step up towards the second floor. She wasn’t ready to go upstairs— but had no desire to eat in the dining room.

She had a thin blanket draped over her shoulders, and a bowl of hot soup balanced on her knees. Her sweat pants had been changed out earlier, as had her turtleneck, and she was stuck in a t-shirt until they could get her arm fixed. She shivered, and spooned bite of hot soup into her mouth, tilting her skull so she could better see what she was doing out of her open eye socket. The last thing she needed to do was spill soup all down the front of her shirt when it was just her and Tenebris in the house. She’d be stuck in a stained shirt until she could get some help changing.

“At least it wasn’t my right hand,” she mutters faintly to herself. It was cold outside- it had started to snow again, and she could faintly see it through the window. “I probably could have put this in a mug and saved myself some trouble though.” She stares at her soup with a soft sigh, and eats another spoonful. Balancing the bowl on her knees and eating at the same time was not easy when she couldn’t brace the bowl with her other hand.

There were noises at the front door, of shoes shaking mud and ice off, before it opened to reveal Caeruleus and Aliquam. Both of them were caked in snowflakes and ice. "Fффффиньин freezing out there," the older snarled, shaking himself off. They had bundles in their arms- bundles that looked like blankets. "Tokes!" He called, “We're back!"

Vaguely through the door, she could see thick-furred guards unloading the blankets from Muffet. Those would do well for the villagers who didn’t have the fur or magic to keep them warm, she mused. A tired sound leaves her, and she angles her skull to peer up at the guys through her open socket. The bandages on the other one itched faintly and felt cold. It had oozed through the bandages and stained the outside layer a faint green.

“Welcome back,” she murmurs softly. If they hadn’t come bursting in here in a panic, it was unlikely that the guards had the chance to mention what happened to Tenebris. Toki gets to her feet and sets the bowl of half-eaten soup on a side table. “Please tell me you’re both okay.” She adjusts the blanket around her shoulders and peers at them hopefully. “You both look like you could use some hot soup. Bo made some- there’s a lot left.”

"We're fine, but what the hell happened here?" Caeruleus asked urgently, glancing around. Some of the furniture had been disturbed- and there were feet shaped burn marks on the floor.

"It smells terrible in here..." Aliquam said quietly. His gaze flicked around the room, categorizing the damages quietly, until his eye lights landed on Tokiko. A worried frown tugged his teeth downwards. "And what happened to you? You look.... Terrible."

“Lovely thing to say to your girlfriend, Pap.” She would wink at him, but it comes off as a tired blink instead. She touches her bandaged socket, grimaces, and motioned for them to follow her. She took the bowl of soup and plodded for the kitchen. “Some things happened. You can look at my wounds later. Follow me- I’ll recap once I put this in the kitchen. The, ah…” She swallows thickly. She had tried to cover the smell with air freshener- but now it just smelled like berries and burnt meat. “The smell is in the explanation. You might as well take a seat in the dining room. I’ll explain, and then we can go upstairs.” It would be easier to have everything laid out before they went to wake Tenebris for healing him.

They looked at her, and then followed quietly.

Once the dish had been put in the kitchen, and everyone shuffled into the dining room, Toki slumped into her usual seat and adjusted the blanket again. “Okay, bear with me. It’s been a hell of a couple of days. Prepare yourself for a little bit of a word vomit.” She scrubbed her right cheek with her palm and buzzed faintly. “Remember how I said that my home would be open to any humans turned monsters if they needed refuge? I had my first refugee today. A fox monster named Todd Hanes came to me for help- apparently he had made the change this morning, and his wife had promptly tried to murder him and his two kids with a knife. So we got him and his kids in- they’re not here right now, but that’ll come in later- and I got the gist of the story from him. His wife, Vikki, is apparently anti-monster. Heh.”

Both brothers were frowning, sharing glances. "That's awful... He's okay now, right?" Aliquam asked, "And the kids?"

“His face is pretty messed up.” She admits. “Eye all swollen shut and bruised.” Sort of like the nasty green color that had bloomed around the crack in her skull. Bones, she had learned with Papyrus, could indeed bruise. “He and I are both one eye down- but he’s all right. Felix has a cut on his forehead, but Todd managed to get him bandaged up just fine. Felix is his son, for the record. They’re staying with Wolfen’s family right now, because my house is too easily accessed by Vikki. She already found him once today.”

"Where the hell was Pops when all this happened?” Caeruleus inquired, leaning his elbows on the table quietly. "Please tell me he gave her a good thrashing.”

“Ah... No. He got hit by a truck yesterday- he’s pretty busted up. I, ah, had to handle Vikki myself when she showed up with a crowbar and bad intentions.” She trembles faintly, bones rattling loudly and gestures to a few burn marks that mar the walls where Toki had pinned the human. “Ah... Tenebris really needs some healing- but I wanted to get this out of the way before you go tend to him. Also- apparently if your dad misses his medications he turns into a goop monster. That was one hell of a way to wake up this morning, and I am far more out of shape than I thought. I don’t run that fast regularly anymore.”

They were silent for a moment, before Caeruleus hissed sharply. “He got hit by a truck?”

“Yeah. So the night after you guys left, it rained. It was still cold, so the rain and the snow turned into some pretty thick sheets of ice. I don’t know if you had trouble with it on the road or not- but we did here. The kids and I were playing out on the road while the adults cleared the walkways in the compound. We got your dad playing ice tag- he’s actually really good at playing with the kids, y’know? Anyways, I had a delivery truck that was supposed to bring some stuff... Apparently his chains didn’t work, and he slid around the corner in the road. Tenebris took the brunt of the hit instead of Twitch. He was asleep when I last looked in- there were things I wanted to tell you before I showed you so you didn’t disturb him with a thousand questions about if he was okay and about what happened.”

"So... He's okay now, right?” Cae inquired.

“He’s in my room, unable to move.” Toki grimaces. “Pretty much shattered his hip and pelvis, and his right arm and shoulder. Concussion too. He’s stable and not going anywhere, though. His HP has been steady, and slowly ticking upwards with the amount of magical food he’s been eating.”

Aliquam tensed and stood from the table. He headed for the stairs without another word.

Toki watched him go with a soft sigh. Tenebris hadn’t been going anywhere- but Aliquam was a worrying sort. She understood it just fine. She had hoped to get everything laid out first- but she had an inkling that she was just too mentally drained to be thinking correctly. It occurred to her that she should have sent them straight up the stairs to heal Tenebris right from the start.

Fuck- where was her mind? Obviously not present. “I trust Papyrus to be able to handle your Dad well enough. You may want to go help him though, Sans. I’m not going to be of any use holding him down- and snapping bones into place isn’t going to be easy.”

She too stands from her chair. She discards her blanket, baring the sling that Todd had made her wear, and instead turns to head into the kitchen. “I’ll finish explaining when you both are done.”
The dining room smelled a lot like burning meat- and she was intent on getting the air freshener again before it made her stomach expunge the little bit of food she’d put into it. Well, into her magic, anyways.

"Toki, as soon as Pap comes back down those stairs he's gonna heal you too, you know..." he assured her, before going to join his brother upstairs.

She pauses, and just... she snorts. “That’s not even remotely a worry I had,” she mutters faintly to no one. The thought of Papyrus ignoring anyone’s wounds was preposterous.

The air freshener is sprayed, but it doesn’t help in the least. And as sounds of pain come from upstairs- the roars and groans of a wounded beast getting his bones relocated into place- Toki had to step outside. She settled on her back deck, and planted her back against the wall as she took a seat. The snow falling and pattering lightly against the house helped drown out the sounds- sounds she had heard the night prior, and sounds that she had hoped to never hear again. Between the sounds and the smells, she felt more fragile than she had a right to being.

She had defended her home- she had defended someone who came to her for protection. But she felt terrible- and everything was starting to snowball, and she didn’t have her bees or her hives to distract her from everything now.

“Fucking hell,” she whispers. It was too much. She ducked her head into her knees and let the snow continue fall around her as her magic buzzed in her bones and dribbled from her eye socket onto her pants. Her soul wept with every pained noise that Tenebris made.

For all the pain that he was enduring now, Tenebris knew it was worth it.

His form tensed up and he bared his fangs as his bones pushed through healing nerve and muscle to reconnect like a puzzle in his hip and shoulder.

"We're almost done, Pops." Caeruleus assured him.

When the searing agony finally stopped, Tenebris was panting weakly as he lay on the bed, his head to the side... Aliquam came and knelt by his head. Cool bone touched hot cheeks, and the son leaned in to rest his head against his Father's, healing what damage was done by the concussion. When that ended, Tenebris was finally silent, his body going to heal the rest of the way on it’s own without any problems now. The bruising would take weeks to fade, most likely. Bruises were not Aliquam’s forte.

They covered him up once more with her quilt and let him rest in her room. It would be a while before he would stir.

The brother’s then headed downstairs.

Toki wasn’t where they had last seen her- but it wasn’t hard to find her. She had left the back door open a crack, and the cold air outside rushed inwards. The air was cold- but it was blessedly fresh compared to the stink that permeated the rest of downstairs.

Stepping outside, Aliquam spotted her easily enough. She was right next to the door. He stepped closer and reached down to touch Toki’s shoulder. She didn’t respond to his touch, or him stepping outside. Worry tingled through his soul. “Toki...” he murmured softly, "How do you feel?" he asked gently.
“Not very well, to be honest.” She doesn’t look up at him from where she’s sitting, and her voice is thicker than it usually is. Her bones are warm- obvious that her magic wasn’t depleted, despite her show of force earlier today. She scrubs her visible socket on her knee, drying at the tears that were glowing down her cheeks. They were traitorously bright streaks in the darkness outside. “Papyrus… Fuck. I’m a bit of a mess right now, to be honest.”

He stroked her shoulder gently, and then reached up and used his thumb to wipe her tears. He didn’t see them often- and they made his soul ache when he did see them. She was usually very strong- but the events of the day and day prior had shaken her. Sometimes, for all of her strengths, it was easy to forget that Toki was just a beekeeper and a civilian. She did a lot for them, and handled things that she really shouldn’t have had to do. "Let's go inside, okay? Brother will make you some cocoa while I fix you up." he said gently, pressing a gentle kiss to the top of her skull.

“Okay…” Toki nodded quietly. She eased herself up, using the brick wall to support her back as she shoved to her feet. To her credit, she didn’t wobble in the snow. She shot him a wobbly not-quite-earnest smile, and eased around him to enter the house again. She sniffles quietly, and goes to fetch the bag of bones from the counter. She hands them to the tallest brother, and then begins to un-do the sling forcing her arm still. “You’ll need these.” She murmurs to Aliquam, and to Caeruleus too since he is there in the kitchen. He was puttering around in her cupboards, probably working on making something. “I managed to find all of the shards.”

Without the towels to hide it, her bandaged bones come into view. The gap is long, and the ends of the bones are jagged. Bandages had been secured over the ends- but they had oozed through and stained the tips of her radius a radiant green color. Bone ooze did not apparently possess a clotting agent the same way blood did- and a few drops dripped free from their bindings and splashed onto the floor. There are nine pieces in total in the bag she had handed him- only one of them very large. The large piece has the spot where the first fracture had been- and it’s vaguely indented in the shape of one of Tenebris’ teeth.

Both hands free, she pads back for the dining room. He could spread the bones out on the table and do what he needed to do with them.

He looked at her wounds like a worried lover would and was quick to start his work. He started by putting the damaged fragments of bone together as a puzzle-master would, nearly effortless as he worked… once done he slowly used his magic and let the fragments seal together. There had been a fracture that hadn’t matched up with the damage from the crowbar- it was on the entirely opposite side of her radius. But he healed that too. Once healed, he took the severed part of her radius and brought it over to her. “What caused the crack on the other side? It doesn’t match up with the strike mark from the crowbar.”

“I let Tenebris bite down on my arm while we were moving him into the house. It was a rough trip- and I couldn’t just sit by and let him bear it on his own. Biting down gave him something to focus on.”

Aliquam paused and stared at her for a moment. “You… You do understand that Father could have utterly rendered your arm into splinters, correct? While I thank you for helping him in his time of need, it was incredibly foolish of you to do.”

“I got the gist of that when I had to flood magic in my arm. It did well to reinforce the bones, but he still managed to crack my radius anyways.” She shrugs quietly. “I’d do it again, if I had to.”

“I know you would.” He sighed. He pressed a soft kiss to the crown of her skull, avoiding her bandages as best he could, and then settled into the chair next to her. “Arm please.”
Toki stretched out her arm as asked, resting it flat on the table so he could line up the jagged ends easier. Her fingers tugged the bandages off the ends first- and left the bare marrow out to the air. She winced slightly. It wasn’t a sensation she had ever hoped to have to deal with again- but at least this time they found all of the pieces. It wouldn’t have to re-grow completely.

He angled the radius bone to where it connected and slowly moved it into place. A pulse of magic later and it began to seal together once more. "Mmmh..." He let out a soft sound as he focused.

Toki held her arm still for him to mend. It wasn’t an entirely pleasant sensation, making her magic buzz in her bones in an agitated way, but she gritted her teeth and held out through it. Idly, her right hand came up to tug at the bandages on her skull. They loosened as she tried to work her claws through the knot at the back.

Eventually they fell away, revealing her closed socket, and the crack that ran up through it all the way to her scar. Her bones weren’t the same pale color as before- a blotchy green bruise spread out from the impact site in the vague shape of a crowbar’s back end.

Once sure her arm would heal the remainders of the cracks on it’s own well enough, Aliquam moved to her head and let out a soft sad sound. "Oh Toki..."

She blinked up at him slowly, and opened her damaged socket. Moving it brought another bead of green ooze trailing down- and she closed it again instead and nestled her jaw into his palm.

He stroked her cheeks with his thumbs, cradling her skull in his hands. If not for the length of her horns, his gloved hands would have outsized her skull. He peered sadly at the crack, and gently prodded it. It seemed stable and easy enough to heal- and there didn’t look to be any pieces missing. The green magic that beaded from the crack was gently wiped away.

"She caught me off guard.” She murmurs softly without his prompting. “I didn’t think to check her hands- and she clocked me a good one that had me reeling. It’s how she got in the house. It honestly doesn’t hurt as bad anymore. My arm hurt worse.” At least none of her skull had chipped off. It was a surprisingly sturdy surface- and the crack was long, but thin and fairly straight forwards. The bruise looked worse than the crack, honestly. “T-To be honest... I... I hurt her worse…” Toki’s voice wavers hesitantly.

"Toki,” he sighed softly, leaning up and softly kissing the cracks gently. He releases magic as he does so to heal the crack, and watches with a critical eye as the bone shimmers and begins to weave back together. "You did what you had to, didn't you?" he inquired.

"I did.” She murmured softly. The crack healed up easily, leaving a faint line of off colored bone that would eventually return to its original colors once it settled. She opened her socket when it was healed, and peered up at him through dim eye lights. Tears gather in the corners of her sockets again. “Papyrus... I burned her. I was burning her alive with my magic and the bees- I... her... Her skin, it... It was burned into my hand. That’s what smells so bad in the house, and the air fresheners aren’t helping down here. I... did that to another living being, Pap. I know what it feels like- and being burned alive is not a pain I would wish upon anyone.” She felt her magic churning in her middle again, nauseated and agitated all at once. Her hand comes up to curl over her teeth and she squeezes her sockets shut with a sharp shake of her head. She didn’t want to get sick again.

"Hang on, hang on...” He interrupted her, "First... Take a second... just collect yourself before you continue...” He guides her through a few slow breaths to get her started. He knew what the burning felt like- he had felt it in her soul. Toki was horribly kind by nature- and he knew that inflicting that sort of pain on someone else was not something she ever wanted to do. “Second of all... Bees? What bees?” As far as he knew, bees did not come out in the winter- and the snow and ice outside would have chased any living insect back to their hive.

She did as told. It didn’t help much, but she’s not sure anything will at this point. It lets her get her composure though, and her composure is what she needs. Toki swallows and lowers her hands into her lap. She cups them together, and quietly glances down to them. Wordlessly, she pulls on her magic, on the buzzing in the back of her mind. It’s surprisingly easy to do- as if the magic bubbling in the back of her soul is eager to come out and see the world.

Stripe appears in her palm as her magic draws the bee forth, just as large and as warm as she remembered. Stripe buzzes in her hands for a second, before lifting into the air to settle on her shoulder. Glowing green eyes watch Papyrus with a calm intensity.

“These bees. Well… There are more of them. This is Stripe. When Vikki broke my arm, I got angry, and my magic just… sort of summoned them to block her path when she tried to go up the stairs. We ended up overheating the house.” They’d nearly cooked poor Todd and his kids in the room.

"...! Oh wow." he said softly, reaching up a finger to touch the fire bee. "A queen bee familiar... That's amazing!" he said with a smile.

Stripe buzzes faintly, but clamors onto his finger. She works her way up his glove, the fires of her fluff warm but not burning him as she walks.

“Yeah- she comes with a large hoard of other ones. It’s… actually really weird. She’s got the exact same markings as the first queen bee I ever had in my hives.” Toki smiles quietly, but it’s more half-hearted than it is a real smile. Toki’s magic wavers, and the bee buzzes at her slightly. “I can feel them- all of them, in the back of my mind. They’re there, waiting. It’s this… faint tickling feeling.”

"Wow." he whispered, smiling happily as he watched the bee. As it clamored up his arm, he reached out with gentle fingers to stroke from the fiery mane around its wing joints down along the glowing stripe down the abdomen. It vaguely reminded him of petting the bees from Toki’s hive- except that these were many times larger, and less likely to be accidentally crushed under his touch. "How cute! A perfect fit for you... oh wow I wonder now what your blasters themselves are like...!" he pondered with a 'Nyeh heh heh!'.

Toki blinks faintly and shakes her head. She shivers, and her magic withdraws. Stripe disappears with a parting buzz, and then Toki rubs her fingers over her upper arms. Turning her head away, she quietly looks at the floor. “Blasters? Aren’t those boss weapons...? I’m not a boss monster, Papyrus. I’ve still got a human soul.”

".... Oh yeah... Well... you know... there's a chance. Father always thought they were genetic-exclusive to his bloodline, but given you've summoned a familiar like we can..."

“Familiars might be a skeleton thing...?” She shrugs slightly. “We can ask Grillby. He seemed to know a fair bit about, uh, skeletons. From before the war, and stuff. Your dad saw my family tree- and he didn’t say anything about the Vaega bloodline being able to summon anything even remotely like your blasters.”

Toki shifts in her seat, and then quietly stands so she can loop her arms around his neck. She doesn’t say why at first- but she simply hugs him tight and hides her face in his shirt. He’s still chilled from being outside- but her magic makes quick work of that. His scent blocks out the smell from the room itself. “Sorry… I just… I needed a hug. It’s been a long couple of days, and I’m glad you’re both back.”

He takes a deep breath and hugged her gently back in return. "You're my girlfriend, Toki. Don’t think it's a chore for me to love you, okay?” he murmured, pressing a few gentle kisses to the top of her head. “Besides- when am I going to turn down a hug from you?”

“Hopefully never.” She sighs softly. “Will you stay tonight?” Toki pulls back enough to look at him. “Tenebris has my room- but the couch can fit us both I think.” Heavens knew, the beds in the guest rooms were not wide enough for two skeletons. Caeruleus would fit though, if he didn’t want to settle on the couch with them.

Papyrus nuzzled gently against the top of her head and gave a ponderous sound. “Well, I think we can make it fit. You and I fit together quite well, so it stands to reason that we can make the couch work.” They did fit together, like two finely crafted puzzle pieces.

His hand slid down to the small of her back, and he tilted her back so he could give her a full kiss. “I’ll stay tonight, and any night after that you need me.” His murmur was earnest.

She smiled up at him, eyes glimmering faintly after the kiss. “We’ll make it fit… Caeruleus?”

“Yeah, Doll?”

“You’re welcome to any of the guest rooms, unless you want to stay on the couch with Pap and me.”

“I think I’ll take one of the rooms, Doll.” He comes lumbering from the kitchen, and hands her a small mug of cocoa. “Drink this first, though. Cocoa heals the soul, right? You did good keeping my old man together- but you’re no surgeon.” It was so easy to forget that Toki was human- and this sort of chaos was not something that she was accustomed to, no matter how well she handled it. He’d seen the stitches- and it had been made with an unsteady hand. Bo’s salve had been present too- but the sheep monster had no way to hold a needle. The only one who knew how to do stitches was the skeleton that owned the house. “You drink this and let the chocolate soothe you. Double packs o’ chocolate, and a shot a’ creamer. You deserve it.”

Toki smiles and takes the mug. She sips it- and the rich chocolate soothes her faintly. It was thick and creamy- and heavy with the unique magic that Caeruleus had. It left it with a sort of peppermint aftertaste. “Thanks, Cae… Go get some rest, okay? You guys made it back here, and then had to work once you got here.”

He gives her a cheery salute, and shares a quick look with his brother. They nod to each other, and then Sans snags one of the magic-weaved blankets from the table and proceeds to take one of his shortcuts up the stairs to one of the rooms.

“Come,” Papyrus eases her towards the living room, snagging one of the blankets as well.

The living room is dark, and quiet as they settle on the couch. Toki nestles into his side, and holds her cocoa close as she takes her peace with him. He spreads the blanket over them, and basks in the warmth that comes. Having a girlfriend who naturally exuded warmth alongside a blanket that was created with the sole purpose to provide heat was a uniquely satisfying experience.

He took note of some burns along the bottoms of her feet as she tucked them up onto the couch, and leaned down to quickly heal them. He wasn’t sure where they were from at this point- but it was possible when she had used her magic it had heated the floor below her and singed the bones. It didn’t make sense though- because she could handle the hot pots in the kitchen, or pulling thing straight from the oven with very little issue.

They hadn’t been painful- she hadn’t been walking funny and she hadn’t said that her feet needed healing- so he wasn’t really going to complain about where she had gotten them or how. All the same, he healed them up and settled her flush into his side.

“I’m sorry you had to come home to drama.” She murmurs softly to him as she got settled.

“Shh…” he strokes the top of her skull gently, and steals a sip of her cocoa to make her laugh. “It’s not something you could control, Toki. It’s really not- so you don’t need to apologize. You did the right thing today- I am proud of you.”

He succeeds both in stealing a drink of her cocoa and in getting her to laugh, if only faintly. Toki leans up to kiss his mallow-stache away, and smiles slightly at the orange flush that tint his cheekbones. “I know… I just worry.” She clutches her cocoa close to her and sips it quietly. She works through nearly half of it, before the silence gets to her. “Hey… Pap?”

“Nyeh?”

“I never did get around to asking Caeruleus about this, but… Back at Thanksgiving- when he mentioned being thankful for no more resets… What are resets?”

“It’s a bit of a heavy topic…” He hedges, not entirely certain she was up to that sort of revelation today. Stars above knew that he hadn’t been ready when Caeruleus had approached him- and all of their friends from the Underground- and explained everything as best as he could without completely traumatizing everyone.

“It’s a bit of a heavy day.” Toki responds softly. “I can handle it, whatever it is.”

Papyrus frowns faintly and nestles her more firmly into his side. He heaves a deep sigh, letting it rumble through the broad expanse of his chest. He really wasn’t sure that she was- but he wasn’t going to deny her the answers that she sought. Aliquam would just need to be there for her if it scared her, as any good boyfriend should. “I don’t really understand all of it,” he admits quietly. “But I know the gist of it. Magic in the underground was a strange thing. It… Well, lets just say that the most determined soul could control the flow of time- and if things went bad, they could reset to the time before the bad happened and go from there.”

And so he explained, to the best of his ability, how Frisk’s powers worked, and how only a scant few could remember clearly through the resets. Aliquam did his best to explain that the resets were triggered if Frisk died- or if Frisk felt the need to reset. There had apparently been some times where someone close to them or one of their friends that had died or been killed, and they had been prompted to reset. He adds that he thought there might have been some darker aspects to it- simply because of some of the nightmares he had seen from his brother, and the general lack of trust that Sans had concerning the human child- but acknowledges that he had no real proof of it, and no grounds to demand a solid answer from his older brother.

Toki sat quietly through it, processing it as she drank down her cocoa. It was finished long before he was done talking, and she left her empty mug on the coffee table. The more he talked, the more she could understand some of Caeruleus quirks. He had been friendlier with her than he had been with several of the other humans she’d been around- and she had indeed heard some of his nightmares. Caeruleus was mostly quiet when he had them- but some nights he would wake, come down stairs, and binge on ketchup.

She had used to join him when she lived with them- she would have cocoa, coax him back to bed, and then crash back on the couch.

She had a brother who had nightmares too- and Han had stayed with her for a while until the isolation of the countryside got to be too much for the city-bound teacher.
Frankly the whole explanation and story about resets was a little hard to believe, but she found herself inclined to believe them. Aliquam had never lied to her after all. He had been honest with her from the start- at least as far as she knew about. She didn’t think he’d have any reason to lie to her now.

“So… That’s why your brother was nicer to me then he was a lot of the other humans who started working here.” Toki murmured quietly. “It was a little… weird. He always seemed to be one step ahead of me- and seemed even friendly with me where he wasn’t with others. It explains a lot.”

“Yes.” Aliquam rubbed her shoulders gently, and hummed slightly. “He hasn’t told me a lot about the other times that Frisk had to reset- but he remembers a lot of them. It’s why he has bad dreams sometimes.”

“I understand that…” She shifts and peers up at him. “So… what about me in the other resets?”

Aliquam’s face pinches, and he looks away. “Well… This is the longest one so far. The others… he would not tell me exactly what happened… You remember the attack from HAM? Where your ribs got shattered? We didn’t know that was going to happen, if you can understand what I mean by that.”

She was smart enough to read between the lines. Her sockets close, and she nods. “Say no more. I understand.” She really didn’t want to hear about how she had died- because she had several inklings as to how. The fire- the sickness- there were any innumerable reasons as to how it could have happened. It was entirely possible she probably hadn’t ever woken up from the bed in the castle. She really didn’t need to think on it though- She was here now, and now is what mattered. “This is a lot to wrap my head around.”

“It was for most of us too.” He nuzzles her skull gently, and kisses along one of her horns.

Toki swallows, and buries her face against his side. “Now that I know, I can say I’m thankful there hasn’t been any more resets either.”

“As am I.” His fingers massage over her shoulders, and he thrums a soft tune for her. “Are you okay with it?”

“I’m about as okay with it as I can be, Ali. It’s in the past- now is now, and I am alive, and so is everyone else.”

“It is a good way to think.”

She’s quiet for a short time, until she finally yawns. “Can we lay down?”

“Of course.”

It’s not hard for him to lift her again- and she’s draped across his chest much like the time when her ribs had been broken. She feels more solid against him this time, and he takes some comfort in her better health this time around. Toki was mostly healed, but her bones would need time to settle so they would not re-break. So he would keep an eye on her to make sure she kept her rigorous activity to a minimum until he was certain that the new-bone would hold.

“Thanks, Ali…” She murmurs softly. She snuggles into his chest, sockets closing, and simply basks.

They were back- they were safe for now. And even if the lingering smell of burnt flesh ruined the air for her, Papyrus smelled like fallen snow, spaghetti, and musk. It was enough to combat it the smell- and she found herself falling asleep against his chest without another word.
Papyrus was content enough with that. One of his sockets lit up, and he glanced over the back of the couch towards the front door. He flicked his fingers- and the locks in the house engaged with a quiet click.

Now no one could just open the door and walk in while they rested.

Pleased with himself, he rumbled and looped his arms around her. Her recently damaged one was cradled in his hand, and he rubbed his fingers soothingly along the break. The glow in his sockets remained as he settled in- but this time it was a comforting glow that would help keep her soothed and relaxed in her slumber.

Toki was not meant for fighting- for as rough and tumble as her brothers were, and for the times she had to defend them in her youth, she was sorely out of practice. This scared him- it scared him a lot. As much as he wanted to say he could protect her all the time, he knew that it wasn’t true. The bruise lingering on her skull was proof enough of that.

But… While he could not teach her to fight as a human could, he knew someone who could help teach her how to fight as a Monster could. It might not be enough- but if she could keep someone from getting close to her, she would be okay.

He knew just the woman up for the job.
A week passed in what felt like the blink of an eye. Tenebris ended up going home two days after the boys returned, with Caeruleus joining him. Aliquam remained, spending most of his days shoveling snow from the small blizzard that blew in, and spending most of his nights curled around Toki. The ice and snow thankfully only lingered for a few more days, before it began to melt off. It was still woefully cold- but it was a dry cold, verses the wet and freezing cold that came with snow.

For the first few nights, Toki had nightmares. Burning Vikki left it’s mark on her mind- and she woke up several nights to her bones nearly singing the sheets with Papyrus frantically shaking her awake. Her dreams were unpleasant- but they dealt with them. It took her a while to accept the fact that what she had done to the human had been necessary. If Toki hadn’t done what she did, then Vikki would have likely succeeded, and there would have been several dead bodies and likely dust, if Vikki went after Tenebris.

In an effort to keep everyone’s mind off of the events that came to pass- from the new ropy scars that littered Tenebris’ arms and legs, to the bruise that was rapidly fading from her face- Toki and Aliquam decorated the house with her Christmas decorations. Plastic mistletoe hung from several doorways, and there garland along every edge of the room. She’d even put up a tree. Not a real one- No, Douglas fir did not grow native around here, and she was not paying several hundred dollars for an imported one. But she had an eight-foot tall fake tree, and she and her boyfriend decorated it liberally. It might have been two weeks until Christmas, but it looked quite like someone had vomited Christmas spirit into her house. They’d even hung up cheap car fresheners to give the house the smell of pine trees.

She even had outdoor lights on her front porch.

It did it’s job- and the house felt lighter with everything in it. Toki and Aliquam romped that night- the first night that he was sure she was healed enough for any such ventures- and found bliss come morning. The Christmas spirit in the house helped with her nightmares- and she found her nights no longer plagued with the violent terrors.

She would be doing a family gathering for Christmas- with any luck, anyways. She knew for sure her parents were coming- but all of her brothers were up in the air about it. With everything that had happened, Utaka was horribly busy- and her siblings were dealing with some issues of their own.

It was fine- the last half of the year had been pretty hectic since the monsters Emerged.
everything calmed down- and the issue with HAM was resolved- Toki figured things would go back to normal. Or better than normal, she would muse, because the monsters would be there to share it with her. By then, maybe she’d have control of her magic.

With the newfound gift of her familiars, Toki had realized she was developing some interesting… habits from them. They might not have been completely sentient, but they did have thoughts of their own. Not quite human thoughts- or monster thoughts either. They were fairly possessive, she was learning. Alongside the new instinctual urges they kept pushing at her, Toki found that her bones buzzed more often than they rattled- and the bees were at her beck and call.

They buzzed in the back of her skull, a constant company against the quietest moments in the house. She was growing used to the busy din of their noises in the background. They were always there- but sometimes the buzzing was louder than usual.

Today was one such morning. Toki stirred slightly where she lay, peering up at the glimmers of sunshine trickling through her window. There was warmth at her back, and a surprisingly heated bony arm looped around her middle. Papyrus had taken a liking to her bed- it had space for both of them, where his bed at his house did not. She’d gotten it with that thought in mind. As such- she discovered that Papyrus was an amazing big spoon. He made an adorable little spoon too- but he liked to envelop and hold her close more often than not.

This one such morning was no different than the last- save for the fact that he was warmer than he usually was. Perhaps he had caught a cold while he was out and about in the snow? Or whatever that Magic-drain thing had been. Toki was sleepy- but curious as she shifted faintly.

She stilled, however, when his scent hit her. It rolled over her like a musky spice, flooding her nasal cavity and making her bones buzz heatedly. The magic in her body was warming and reacting accordingly.

Was that…?

Heat?

The short answer- or not so short, in actuality- was given to her when something that was definitely not his leg pressed to her backside and rocked into her. The bare bones of his chest pressed against the nightgown covering her spine, and she shivered slightly at his rumble.

He was in heat- and not even awake yet. There was no telling when it had hit- but from the heat in his bones, Toki would bet it had hit sometime early in the morning. She was surprised that he was sleeping as deeply as he was- though with all of the work that he tended to do during the day as of recently, he had been sleeping deeper than usual.

Well… She wasn’t about to let him suffer through his heat alone. Not when he had helped her through her first one- it might not be his first rodeo, but that’s what girlfriends were for. Toki shifted, and gently rubbed her backside against the beast restrained by his boxers. Her fingers found the bones of his arm, and slowly slid between them. Toki rolled the tips of her distal phalanx over the inside of his radius.

Now it was time to wait and see when he would rouse.

He shivered and let out a quiet ‘Nyeh’ as he ground and dry-humped against her. But when she poked her bones through his arm, his magic jolted and his eye sockets lit up, the right one a bright orange. His arms tightened around her. "N-Nyeh...? T-Toki?"
“I’m sorry, Pap. Did I wake you? I was just making myself comfortable for the long haul.” She wiggles her hips back into him softly, and tilts her head back to peek at him. She grins toothily. His magic felt good against her bones- and his scent was musky and delicious. She runs her fingers along the inside of his arm again.

"C-Comfy?” he squeaked, before he whined and nuzzled against her back. "Nyeh..." he didn't fucking care. He just... felt NEED... "Toki..." he rolled over and pushed his way between her legs, nuzzling into her neck before starting to nip and bite along her bones. "Nnnh... You’re s-such a t-tease," he hissed quietly.

“I’m pretty sure someone woke up in a heat~ or at very least, quite the randy mood, no?” She grins back at him. The nips and bites stirred her magic, and she found herself making a high-pitched humming sound at him. She vaguely recognized it from her many years working around bees and their queens. It was a high-pitched buzzing sound, a queen’s song to lure in her suitors, and it was called piping. It vibrated over her bones and into the air.

She rolled willingly when he did, settling on her back as he eased above her, his heat encouraging her own to go along with him. Her eyes brightened, and she all but buzzed under his touch. Her gown had inched upwards, showing off the undergarments that she still bothered to wear even though she had nothing to hide. Toki stroked her fingers up his back and teased them over the back of his jaws. “I only tease for you,” she purrs.

The piping noise only made him excited as he ground against her. "Oooooh my stars, Toki." he groaned, "That sounded so... Alluring." he hissed. He reached up and gripped her underwear, wanting to admire them later on, but not now. Right now, they were in the way. He began to ease them downwards off of her pelvis.

Toki lifted her hips willingly, and wiggled them to get her undergarments to slide down. His eagerness pleased the buzzing feeling in the back of her mind, and that luring piping noise continued in soft, sweet intervals. She shifted and tugged at his boxers. “Mmm, I’ll lure you right into my trap if you’re not careful.” He looked far too restrained in his boxers- and the orange glow was showing through the thin material.

His bulge ground against her bare bones now, his face pressed under her chin as he moaned and whined. "N-Nyeeeeehhh.... Trap…?"

“An innuendo,” she purrs. She kisses along the top of his skull, pressing vibrating fingers into his vertebrae as she rolls against him. Shit- he was hard as hell, and rubbing right along her bones. “Nnnn… Now who’s being the tease? Why don’t you unleash that beast and let me tend to it~?”

With a sharp sound, he bit her clavicle and reached down, pushing his boxers down to free his cock, which looked a bit more swollen than usual.

"S-Summon... N-Now..." he growled, before whining faintly into the bone he had gripped tightly in his teeth. "Please~?"

He was always so polite- even when he was demanding from her. Toki parted her legs, and her magic didn’t even need much prodding. Her lips formed down below, magic slicking up her walls in preparation for what was to come. His bite stung over her collarbone- but it felt good in a way that his bites always seemed to. Her claws roved over his scapulas, and she piped again at him, insistent and taunting all at once.

He hissed in excitement and with a sharp thrust of his hips, his cock was pushed inside of her, almost halfway. "N-NYEH!" he barked out, gripping her arms tightly.
She squeaked as he shoved inside- faster and rougher than he ever usually was. Perhaps it wasn’t best to poke the sleeping bear when the bear already had a stick pointed at you in the first place. Toki’s legs come up, hooking over his hips as she lets out a pleased yelp. Her chest arches up into his face- and she makes note that his bite might have ripped her nightgown. To hell with it- she had other gowns. She finishes ripping it the rest of the way, and her bones practically vibrate against him as she’s freed. Clothes were overrated anyways. He was hot- thicker than normal, and she was fairly certain that there was no way he was going to get all of him inside of her. Toki was going to enjoy him trying though. “Ah-”

The vibrations set him off and he lets out a loud sound as he immediately starts a powerful pace into her. "N-NYEH! Aaahhhh... F-Fuck...!" he snarled.

She yelped, one hand coming to hold him while the other extended above her to hold her headboard. He drove her into the mattress, and her arm was the only thing keeping her horns from being driven into the cherry wood behind her. “F-fuck, holy shit.” She gasped against him. Each thrust drove him deeper into her core, and heat flooded her bones. Toki rolled her hips against him as best she could, her mouth falling open with heated pants as her soul raced behind her sternum. He was doing his hardest to fit- and her magic was working with him to make it happen.

"Nngh... nnhhh... Toki." he snarled. He glanced down, caught sight of the thundering soul in her chest, and used his magic to pull on it. "T-Toki... there's something I... want to try..."

Her soul didn’t even fight being pulled. It slipped from behind her sternum easily, urged on by her magic, and floated up to him. Her HP was full- resting now at a thousand and fifty now- and the green glow was overpowering the red. “W-with my soul?” She pants slightly under him, eyes glowing up at him warmly. “I trust you.”

He looked at her with a smile, before he pulled her soul close. His teeth pressed against the smooth side of it, and his magic caressed it. He gently kissed it, leveling one arm flat on the bed to keep his body weight supported. "I love you so much," he whispered into her core.

The touch was not something that was new- but the intent with which he touched it… She trembled, and her eye lights brightened like flames. Her claws tore into the headboard- and a moan ripped from her throat as he continued to thrust at a slower, gentler pace. It felt like he had just kissed her everywhere at once- and the throbbing of her magic increased. Her soul fluttered in his grasp, tendrils of magic curling along the surfaces like lures. “A-a-ah f-fuck, P-pap, wow. D-do that a-again? Please…”

Very, very faintly, her soul piped to him in his hand.

He moaned softly, and made sure to avoid her scars as he kissed her soul again. And again. And again. "Oh Toki…” He crooned softly against her, punctuating each kiss with a slow thrust of his hips. “You’re beautiful.” He watched her through half-lidded sockets, enjoying the sight of her writhing below him. He murmured sweet nothings to her, punctuating each one with a smooth thrust.

With the green glow that was overwhelming the red, it was likely that touching her scars wouldn’t have even produced the usual shock. Her soul pulsed faster and faster- each kiss and touch was equal to a thousand fold that against her bones as the surface of it slicked up with sweet tasting magic. She trembled, mouth open, eyes ablaze- and amidst his words, she was lost.

She came hard, clenching around him like a vice as the high-pitched buzzing raised an octave. It stuttered off shortly, but she was still left gasping, magic roused and inflamed as her soul practically oozed it’s own release in his hand.
That was something she had never felt before- and holy fuck was that ever the overwhelming experience. She wanted more.

He hadn’t ever done this before- and was surprised as her soul oozed against his mouth. The taste on his tongue... Honey? Aliquam let out a low humming moan as he shifted gears and gently began to suck on her soul, his hips rolling more gently against her own. His cock twitched and throbbed, tightly moving within the shuddering confines of her walls. "Mmmh~"

“Sh-shit,” Toki writhed faintly under him, her soul sending waves of sensation over her. She hadn’t even fully ebbed off her first one, and he was jolting her forwards towards yet another. Her soul fluttered against his tongue, oozing more magic as he stimulated it. It was slick and sticky- and textured exactly like honey was. Her magic bubbled up in her chest- it felt good, it felt amazing, but he wasn’t exactly getting anything huge in return from it either.

Her fingers twitch, and she sends her magic to gently tug on his soul. Not a demand- not a forceful pull- but a simple inquiry. “C-can I?” She hadn’t seen his soul before- but hell, if this is what he could do to her… she wanted to see how positively mad she could drive him.

"Yes, Toki." he whispered. He kept her soul lightly balanced in his mouth, and propped himself up better on his one free arm so his chest could be parted from her own. He remained seated deep within her, hips still twitching now and again, and summoned his own soul. It was healthy, a beautiful, vibrant bright orange monster soul. "Ha... What do you think?"

Her fingers come up to gently take his soul from his hands. Toki shudders softly, but is extremely gentle as she takes him. Her walls spasm around his cock- but she keeps her composure as she handles him. The last thing she wants to do is accidentally hurt him.

He was beautiful- Orange just like his magic, but so much deeper. Vibrant hues danced along its surface, with darker shades of orange swirling within. The upside down heart was warm, throbbing in her fingers with every pulse of his magic. It was the culmination of his being- and it fit him perfectly. She strokes along the edge of it with her thumb, and trembles faintly. It was the same size as her soul was. “You… You’re perfect.” she murmurs softly. Toki edges him up to her mouth, and very gently presses him to her teeth in a soft kiss. Magic dulls the edges of her fangs, and she nuzzles into him affectionately. “W-What does orange mean?”

He shivered and moaned breathily at the touches to his soul. He eased her soul back into his hand before he smiled at her. His sockets were still alight with magic, and the heat roiled between them. He’d need to make a call later when the heat temporarily abated for a time- he was supposed to be doing guard duty today. Heats changed plans, however, so it wasn’t like anyone was going to complain. "N-Nyeh... It's... Bravery." he answered softly, "A-At least... for humans it is.”

“Bravery? I think it fits you.” She mirrors him, parting her teeth faintly so she can lick over the length of his soul. It tingled against her tongue, with a strange taste that she couldn’t quite place. “You are my brave heart,” she purrs. Her soul buzzes against his fingers, and she pipes at him instinctively. A word built up in the back of her skull, forced there by the buzzing of her swarm in the back of her mind, and she kissed his soul again as her magic wrapped around him. The word rumbled out of her chest with a liquid promise, possessive and loving all at once. “Mine~”

"Nnnh...! Y-Yours~ Fuck... and you're mine!" he snarled in pleasure, brushing his teeth lightly on her soul as he ground against her happily. His thrusts were resuming in earnest, and each soft nibble to her soul was punctuated with an almost bruising slap of his pelvis against her own.

Toki parted her mouth and took his soul inside. The sharp edges of her teeth were dulled faintly as she scraped it. Her hand cradled him as her other claws dug into the headboard. She rocked against him with a soft cry. Her words floated from behind her busy mouth as she makes a valid attempt not to bite down too hard. While his light chewing felt good- just slightly painful enough to make her soul vibrate against his teeth- hers would be entirely painful. “Ahh- Yours! Yours! I’m yours!”

Ffffuck yes- His fingers clawed at the sheets below them, and he groaned faintly before his mouth fell open and her soul was free to fall into his hand. "Hahh.... hhah..." he panted quietly, "Ah... T-Toikiko.” He whined faintly.

Toki trembled as her soul fell free from his mouth. He needed to come to his edge- she was nearing the edge for her second one. Slowly, slid his soul from her mouth, a curious idea blooming in her skull. She pressed a solid kiss to it- and then stretched her fingers out to brush the edge of his soul gently against the un-cracked side of her own.

Her soul sparked with a bright green light that sent jitters flailing through her bones, and stars flashing in her skull. “W-Wowie,” she very nearly drops his soul as she brushes them together again.

His eyes suddenly lit up brightly and he let out a shrill shriek as he immediately collapsed, hugging her tightly, unintentionally pressing their souls together as he did so, "Fffffuuuck!" he cried out.

She squeaked as he collapsed on her. He was heavy for a skeleton, and she groaned as her soul was pressed to his. She vibrated under him, a lewd sound leaving her- because holy shit, the stars just kept dancing. She clasped her hand with his, keeping their souls together- that was better than any touch he could do with his hands. “P-Papyrus, f-fuck- move!” She wiggled her hips under him in a clear demand- this was too good a moment to pass up.

This sort of pleasure didn’t come often- why squander it?

His thrusts are almost savage as he resumes, and his mouth clamps tightly over her neck as he reflexively bites down. His teeth hold tight, and he groans, hips clattering against her own noisily. The clatter nearly drowns out the slick sounds of his cock dragging within her. Aliquam can feel himself thickening, and he yelps needily. "T-TOKI! AAH!"

The bite on her neck stung- but it felt amazing too. Her hips rocked up into his, and she abandoned her hold on the headrest to drop her hand and stroke his ribs firmly. “P-Pap!” She could feel her edge coming closer- her magic sparked at him, at his soul, and she cried out in desire. “S’ close!”

Papyrus’ magic sparked, between his ribs and her fingers, and it caused him to cry out in pleasure as he moved. His mind and magic were both lost to instinct as he continued to thrust until his vision went white, and he ended up screaming her name out as he reached release. His cock swelled within her, and surged with magic as he emptied into her being, his soul basting her own with magic as it seeped into her own.

His release triggered her own, and Toki’s soul surged with magic as she took his waves of magic into her being. She exuded heat, an overwhelming buzzing noise taking over the room as her magic blended with his and basted the house. She cried his name, mouth falling open with a shriek of passion, and eyes whiting out against the pleasure that overtook her. Toki clenched around him as he flooded her insides, her legs holding him firmly in her depths.

Toki slumped under him, overwhelmed by sensations, trembling like a leaf under his weight.

He was currently in the same rough state, trembling and panting weakly as he held onto her. "Hah... hahhh... Ooooohhhh stars~"

“Stars,” she whispers raggedly. Toki gulped in air, her soul and body buzzing with the magic she’d been washed with. Her soul shuddered against his, and her fingers twitch slightly. They’d made a mess of their hands- but she found the sticky goop in their palms to be satisfying. “W-why haven’t we done t-this before?” she rasped questioningly. “Th-That was… wow.” She felt thoroughly well ridden- and full. Her hips twitched against his, and she groaned faintly. Hell- he was thick, and she was slightly sore, but in a good way.

"Nnn... Nyeh~ We... We'll have to do that again soon..." he giggled quietly, his soul slowly slipping free of them to tuck away in his chest, "Hahh~"

“Oh yes~” she purrs. Her claws unhook from the bed frame, and she loops her arm around his neck. Toki drags him up for a smooth kiss, and nuzzles her face to his. The burning in her body was ebbing slightly- a nice reprieve for the storm yet to come. “Mmm… did that help a little bit?” Her collarbone was sensitive from his bite- but it felt good. She wiggles her fingers and takes her own soul back to her chest. A soft giggle leaves her. “We made a bit of a mess…” Their hands were very sticky.

"This mess is almost as bad as when Sans refused to clean up his messes." he huffed. “But yes, I feel a bit better.”

Toki chuckles slightly and cleans her fingers on the sheets. They could simply be washed anyways. She shifts, settling under him, completely content not to move. And since she didn’t want to move… Maybe some snuggles and talking it was. “What was it like, underground?” She inquired softly. “Also- I have been dying to ask since I met you- but how did you decide on The Great Papyrus?”

"Nyeh heh heh... Well, before the barrier was destroyed, it was quiet.” he hummed quietly, before he laughed, "The Great Papyrus, or so I called myself when I was younger, was that determined young skeleton who’s heart was set on joining the Royal Guard... That old armor I was wearing on Halloween was my 'Battle Body', or a costume Sans had made me for a party." he explained.

She giggles softly. “That armor was a little silly- but very dashing on you, if I must say. I was quite fond of your speedo. So… what had you so set on joining the royal guard? It seems like a noble thing to do.”

"The Royal guard was marveled by the entire underground! And... Admittedly, I hadn't too many friends back then.”

“Really?” Her fingers come up to stroke his jaw slightly, rubbing her thumbs along his temple as she does so. “They sound really cool... But I can’t believe you didn’t have many friends. Who wouldn’t want to be friends with you? I have the most awesome boyfriend ever.” Anyone who hadn’t wanted to be friends had sorely missed out, in her opinion.

"I know, I know." he chuckled, "I was rather immature." he sighed quietly.

“Everyone has to grow up over time.” She smiles softly to him and gives him a gentle smooch. “Do you know how old you could be compared to in human years?” She asks curiously. “Your dad mentioned that Skeletons aged differently- that monsters in general did.”

He leaned into her kiss with a soft purr of consideration. "Mmmm I'm not sure... perhaps around... twenty three?"

She hesitated, and then her hands came up to cover her face. She began to laugh, ribs bouncing up slightly against his. “Oh my god. Oh my god, I’m a cougar. Kon’s never going to let me live that down, oh my god.”
"How are you a mountain lion?" he asked, staring at her in befuddlement.

She laughed even harder. “No, no, you don’t- Oh my god. Okay… Okay, so a cougar is a term for an older woman who dates younger men. I don't know the actual age requirement to be a cougar, but it doesn't really matter. I’ll be thirty-three this coming January. The twentieth of January- Pap, if you think you’re the equivalent of twenty three- you’d be ten years younger than me. That puts me well into cougar range, as far as my brothers would be concerned.”

"...! O-Oh...!" his cheeks darkened slightly as he looked at her, and cleared his throat. "Ah..."

She giggles softly at his blush, and twitches her hips faintly against his own. “I don’t mind being with a younger man- or skeleton, technically. Does it bother you that, physically by human standards, I’m older than you?”

He shivered as she twitched her hips, then he smiled down at her. His teeth gently pressed a kiss to her chest, and she nibbled him gently. "No. Not necessarily." he purred.

“Not necessarily, hm? Afraid I cant keep up with a young sprout like you~?” She gives him a teasing grin, nerves bubbling slightly in her belly. She didn’t think it would- but sometimes one could never tell. “I think I can prove that I can keep up with you.” She purred.

"You already have~" he purred, before giving a light grind of his hips, "Well enough~"

She grinned up at him, soul soothed slightly. Her mouth comes up to meet his in a smooth kiss, and she strokes her fingers gently along his bones. “Good~ Now, speaking of keeping up…” She rocks her hips gently into his, a tremble of arousal sliding up her spine. He hadn’t pulled free from her- and it ached in a wholesome good sort of way. “Food before the heat resumes, or another round~?”

"Mmmm~" he then smirked at her, "The only thing I’m hungry for..." he drawled teasingly as he lifted himself up slightly and pressed their hips more firmly together as he leaned down over her, "Is you~"

Toki flushed a bright red, and giggled softly. “I think that’s a craving I can help you sate,” she purrs, winking up at him.

"Nyeh heh heh~" he grabbed her by the arms and pulled her with him as he sat back, Toki now seated in his lap, "Hope you wouldn't mind being the one to move this time around~"

"You kidding me? I never mind.” She wiggled slightly as he rolled them so she was seated astride his lap. She rolls her hips slowly against him, and takes the chance to fully shrug off the tattered remains of her nightgown. She adjusts herself on his lap, steadying her legs, and then kisses at his collarbone. It was his turn to get nibbled at- and she had every intention of leaving him with a hicky.

"Mmmh~" he leaned his head back, smiling at her as he did, "Ah... My lovely Toki~" he purred, "wanting to leave your mark?" he rumbled.

“You left one on me,” she grins. His teeth had left a lovely mark on her collar bone, and she had full intentions of giving him one. “I thought it might be fair for us to be matching, right handsome?” she leaves a small bruise on his bone- and then kisses her way up to his neck. Slowly she lifted her hips, drawing her up along his shaft. She shivered and set a slow but steady pace, lightning zinging up her spine.

One hand came down and began to stroke over his spine.
"Nnnh~ oh yes," he chuckled softly, "Hah~" at the touches to his spine he arched and moaned louder, his hips twitching and squirming under hers, "Ooh~!"

She kissed and nibbled along his bones, rolling her hips into his every time that she hilted him inside of her. He could just sit back and enjoy as she bounced over top of him, her fingers stroking up and down along his spine as she quickened her pace. Her mouth nipped and nibbled over his bones, teeth scraping slightly over his neck. She touched over where she had bitten before, tongue lapping at the bones.

"Ahhh..." he wasn't afraid to be vocal for her, it felt really good and he wasn't going to hide that fact.

His noises pleased her, and she found her bones vibrating against him in a soft, luring buzz. She pipped for him as he moaned for her- and she rocked and bounced at varying speeds, building surely towards their end. "Mmm~"

"Nnnh.. aahh... Nyeh~" he moaned as she rode him, until soon he grew close and he grabbed her hips, moving her faster. "Nyeh! Aaahh!"

She let him take control as she felt him pulse inside of her, magic thick and heated as she takes him deep. She can feel her edge coming, and pulls him down into a heated kiss. Her tongue steals out- and she laps at his teeth teasingly, her hips grinding down against his.

"Ahhh... Nnnh! Toki~" he mewled, hugging her tightly as he shivered and reached a rough climax. His hips twitched into her own, and he rumbled at her pleasantly. "Nnnnggh!"

Toki shudders and slumps into him with a quiet purr. Her bones buzz pleasantly, and she drapes across him like a limp blanket. “Mmmm, Pap~” She was pleased- very pleased- and slightly tired. Two orgasms in a short amount of time made her sleepy- despite the warmth and the heat bubbling lowly in her bones. “Mmmm.”

"I love you" he sighed softly.

She nestled close, her sockets drifting to half-mast as she relaxed. “Mmmnnn, I love you too.” She purrs contently.

Yes- yes she did love him. And it was a love that was growing each day she spent with him, and with each new thing she got to learn about him. She draped herself across him with a content sigh, enjoying the tingle of her magic over his bones and the warmth in the room. They needed this.
Chapter 30

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So it is a thing. HEH. HEHEHEHEHEHEHEH. Enjoy, folks-

Also, don't forget to come visit us at our blog! You can find us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: You thought things couldn’t get any more crazy, right?

It was a nice, short heat. Two days were spent in lavished fun, romping across every surface and cleaning up after as they went. Toki was in need of a replacement pillow for her couch- she might have bitten it during their dinner time romp- but the majority of her house got away unscathed, which was surprising given the intensity of his heat. He was no where near as aggressive as she had been- but she found that by making that high pitched buzzing at him, she could egg him onwards into greater action.

So naturally, she had to tease him frantic multiple times- and enjoy the lust that took them for a joyride because of it.

Her headboard had the claw marks too- but they didn’t bother her really. They made great handholds for when Aliquam had gotten exuberant with his thrusting. After two days of not-quite-tender lovemaking, much really didn’t bother her. They had both needed it- sure they had sex prior, but there was just something uniquely soothing and settling about being entangled with another for many hours- without a care in the world. Well, a care besides sex, snuggles, and food. They had been entirely focused on each other- and it had been a wonderful thing.

They’d even played with some of the Christmas stuff- not that she would ever tell anyone what exactly. But there were a few strands of garland that were no longer sacred- and garland on bone was vastly less itchy than it was on actual skin.

The heat ended late the second night- and they slept like peaceful logs all tangled up in her sheets.

She woke quietly come late morning, her limbs still tangled with her boyfriends, to a faint glow that tickled at her closed sockets from under the blanket she’d been burrowed in. She shifted closer, nestling to his chest, and groaned quietly. She was sore- well used, more like- and her soul ached. They had spent several more times touching their souls together over the few days of his heat- and it left her feeling drained and yet full. It was an oddly pleasing sensation- but they had probably overdone it. Over stimulating themselves seemed to be a running factor of heats- which made her glad that they did not come once a month. It hadn’t been all that long since her heat- but at least his was vastly shorter than her own, and vastly less violent.

Like it had been mentioned, her magic seemed to make the heat more intent. His magic didn’t burn with the intensity hers did- so it made his heat less… intense? Yes. Intense. It had been good though- and that was the sort of heat that she could get behind having regularly.

A happy moan escapes her throat, and she nestles her fingers around him. She threads her fingers into the backs of his ribs and eases her chest to his. Her ribs brush against his- but it is a strangely muted way. She shivers, and nestles closer to him with a sleepy sigh. They were both sorely in need of a shower- they smelled strongly of musk. Toki didn’t mind it- he smelled amazing as per usual- but to other monster noses, they probably would be offensive.

Speaking of offensive. She tugged the blanket closer to her face, slightly stealing it from her boyfriend as she cocooned herself tighter against him, and groaned again. “Nnn… Tu’n ‘f th’ ligh’.” She grumbles quietly. She had left the curtains closed- so where was the light coming from…? It wasn’t bright- but to sleepy sockets, anything could look like the sun if one wasn’t aware enough to properly process it.

Aliquam had sat up when she started to complain, sockets opening sleepily to look towards the lamp. It was off- as were all lights but the night light in the bathroom- so what was… He shifted slightly, and glanced down to where the faint glow was originating from the darkened room. It was coming from under the covers.

Wait… Was that…

"T-Tokiko… it's... it's not the lights..." Shock coated the sleepy tone of his voice, and he found his tiredness fading rapidly as he stared at the faint green glow from where his girlfriend was nestled in the blankets. "It's you! You're glowing!"

“Wha-?” She was glowing? She took a moment to rub her sockets, and then disentangled her arms from his body. She peeled back the blanket- and there, under it, was the source of the green glow. It was her torso- or at least most of her abdominal cavity. The space usually filled out in her clothes had begun glowing faintly, a dark green color that was just opaque enough for her to faintly see the outline of the bones hidden within the glow. She could follow the rolling lines of skin she didn’t have, rolling up from her pelvic bones all the way up the first two of her ribs. It wasn’t smooth and thin like she used to be- no it matched how her clothes filled out, with a small amount of pudge that she had gained over the holidays. She even had a divot that marked her belly button. The false body was darker near her hips, and lightened slightly as it rolled upwards towards her ribs.

Toki blinked slowly, processing this new sight, and reached out a finger to touch her abdomen curiously. It was warm- and very solid under her fingers, like someone had taken play-dough and mixed it with Jell-O. “Uh… Holy shit, I am glowing. What the hell?” Confusion and slight unease flooded her. “This didn’t happen last time.” She hadn’t ever ended up with a body like this. Yeah, when she was in heat, she summoned up the lady parts that were usually not within sight. It didn’t hurt- but she wasn’t certain what exactly it was supposed to mean. “Uh… Do… you know what this is?”

"... I have a guess... but... Perhaps I should go get Father." he hedged quietly, eye lights locked on the glow of her middle. "This isn't... something I know enough about..."

“If it has something to do with the heat, your Dad isn’t going to know either. He doesn’t know a whole lot about female skeletons- I’ve been one huge learning experience for him a lot of the time.” Her breath hitches slightly, and she watches her middle move with it. Holy shit. Holy shit, this was weird and not okay, and it wasn’t something she wanted to deal with so soon after the incident with Vikki.

“I don’t know who to ask about it thou- Grillby. Grillby dropped a lot of hints about knowing about skeletons when Caeruleus took me to him the time that I got that Magi-drain thing.” The fire monster had mentioned that it was normal for female skeletons to cycle through their heat like she had- and to affect so many. Which meant there was the high chance that the fire monster would know about it.

Toki squirms, and works to disentangle herself from her blankets. Clothes- she needed clothes. She wasn’t sure what sort of shirt she’d need- but as she watched, the glow on her middle eased slightly in response to her rousing. A turtleneck would do- a long one, so it wouldn’t ride up.

"You've gotten used to his fire by now, right?" Toki didn’t do too badly with Grillby when she wasn’t stressed- but he wasn’t entirely certain how this particular meeting would go. This wasn’t the best way to wake up in the morning. “It won't hurt to go and talk to him?"

“I’ll be okay with you there.” She did better when she had someone else with her. Grillby was nice-and the more she got to know him, the less he seemed to trigger her panic. Toki managed to flail out of bed, and went to get her clothes. “Yeah- C’mon, up. Clothes, and then we’ll go talk with Grillby.”

She leaves him to get out of bed on his own, and flies into her own clothes. Her middle had her disturbed- skeletons could form body parts, she knew, because they could form tongues. But this wouldn’t go away when she willed it- and other than her lady parts, she had never had something form without her willing it into being. Even when she had accidentally used her tongue for the first time, she had been actively trying to lick her teeth clean. There was no reason for this glowing abdomen business. But sweatpants and a dark green turtleneck covered the small amount of glow well enough, and she flicked her sockets over to see how Papyrus was faring.

Papyrus had been quick to get out of the bed and into his usual clothing. He wrapped his scarf around his neck, and then smiled as he looked at Toki. "Nyeh, let's not waste any time, then!"

Toki gave him a nod in turn, and got her slippers on. After snagging his hand, she headed out of the room and down the stairs with him. She idly kept tugging at her turtleneck, making sure it covered her as best as possible. With this… skin of sorts, she had no desire to show off anything under her shirt. It was… weird.

It also made for a frighteningly swift walk towards Grillby’s- her legs carried her quicker than usual, and her fingers kept a tight hold on Aliquam’s. She was nervous- what if touching souls had been bad? They’d never done that before- what if it set off something weird in her body? Maybe human souls weren’t meant to be touched like that?

All sorts of questions lingered in her skull, and it kept her quiet for most of the walk. She managed smiles and greetings for those who offered them- but there were few monsters out and about at this time. Many were tutoring the children during their late-morning classes.

Thankfully that meant that Grillby’s was empty when they arrived- though the ‘out to lunch’ sign on the front was as good of a way to tell it would be. The door wasn’t locked- but it was only locked when the bar itself was actually closed.

Grillby himself was behind the bar as usual. He had a burger on a plate in front of him, with a basket of fries that he was quietly chewing away at. In his other hand, he held his phone. It was more or less the size of a tablet- given just how large his hands actually were- but it served as a good screen. He was browsing this ‘you tube’ thing that the humans had. They had wonderful videos on how to create such strange concoctions of alcoholic drinks- and a channel that created misleading videos. One did not stuff a turkey in such a violent way- he had seen the proper way to do so, thankfully.

He glanced up when the bell tolled, one fry braced between burning fangs. Upon seeing Tokiko and Papyrus, he tilted his head quietly, and motioned them closer. “… Can I help you?"

"Grillby, I’m glad you're available." The taller skeleton took the lead and brought his girlfriend with him up to the bar. "There's something... strange going on with Toki..." he started, hesitantly glancing at her.
Toki glanced away slightly and cleared her non-existent throat. “Yeah. I kinda… figured you might know more about it than Tenebris would- you seemed pretty knowledgeable about, uh, female skeletons when you helped me feel better.”

Grillby glanced between the both of them and finished his fry quietly. He dusted off his fingers on his pants, and quietly paused the video on his phone. “I can assume,” he started slowly, “That your thoughts on my knowledge are because this is something to do with…?”

“Well, it happened after Pap’s heat… And uh, I woke up with it this morning, and Tenebris doesn’t really know so much about female skeletons as he does male skeletons and… it’s open out here, or I’d just show you, but…”

He cut her off with a wave of his hand. “Come.” He had no idea what the both of them had gotten up to during heat- but that would explain why Caeruleus had come grumbling about having to pick up Papyrus’ morning shift for him. The large bartender stood, leaving his unfinished food and phone on the bar top as he padded out from behind it. “I cannot help what I cannot see. The back room will do.”

Toki clutched to Aliquam’s hand, and tugged him with her as she headed for the back room. The back room, as it turned out, was one of the alcohol storage rooms. It was wall to wall with crates of various alcohol and confections. Once they were in the wide room, and her boyfriend had shut the door, Toki tugged up the edge of her turtleneck up.

Her belly glowed faintly as she exposed it. “This is our problem. It showed up this morning- and we have no idea what it is.”

The old bartender’s flames let out a surprised crackle of heat, and he stared down at the tiny skeleton in front of him. His gaze flicked over to Aliquam, and a flaming brow arched high with a dry sizzle. “Well… First off, congratulations. I was unaware you both were intending to have children at this time. Or that you were formally mated, for that matter. Really, Aliquam- shame on you. You did not even tell your brother. Second- what did you think would happen when you shared souls with the intent to create children?”

The brother tensed up, sockets blossoming wide. "Ah! Children!? I... I hadn't meant to... I mean.... Intent?!" Poor Papy was a stammering mess, orange rising to his cheekbones as the flabbergasted skeleton failed to put together a legible sentence.

Toki was marginally better than her boyfriend, but only just. Her shirt remained clutched in her fingers, and she stared at him out of black sockets. She was… he… She was pregnant? What? But… “But… We... We never... Children never even crossed into my mind. I mean I want them, don’t get me wrong, but… It didn’t… We were just messing around, nothing of that sort intended. We’re not... mated either. Dating yes, but…”

Grillby blinks slowly, observing the both of them. “… But it is not possible for monsters to conceive without the desire for children on both parties. Both souls have to touch with the intent to spawn- and the new-formed soul can gestate within either parent. It is how monsters can never be forced into having children. Your pregnancy is the only reason your body would form and not be able to be returned to its usual state.”

Toki’s fingers dropped her shirt, and one hand came down to rest on her lower abdomen. The other came up to cradle her temple. “I… I don’t have a monster soul though... Humans… Humans don’t…I have a human soul. Maybe…” Shit- it was too soon, it was too much- and shit, she was light headed.

Papyrus stammered a little bit more, before he let out a weak ‘nyeeeh’ and went down.

Grillby’s flames flashed bright as he stepped forwards to catch the toppling skeleton. Despite Papyrus being nearly as tall as him, the skeleton weighed hardly anything. The bartender’s flames crackled faintly, and he hefted the fainted skeleton over his shoulder. His eyes glanced to Toki. “We can talk about it upstairs. Are you going to faint too?”

“I’ll be okay…” Concern filtered in through her internal panic, but her eye lights were still missing as the massive flame monster carried her boyfriend- and the father of her apparent child- out of the back room and over to another door. The door had lead to a set of stairs, and she followed him up those too.

Grillby guided her into his home above the bar with a gentle hand, and then to his living room. Aliquam was gently dumped onto the couch, and he patted the Skeleton’s cheek to get him to start rousing as the fire monster took a seat on the floor. He had two seats- the couch and the chair in front of it. He hadn’t quite expected the big skeleton to drop so suddenly- No; the human turned monster had looked more apt to be the one to faint. “Have a seat, Miss Toki. Please- continue. We can figure this out together. I know how monster conception works. Do humans not use their souls?” He had never taken the time to study humans and how they reproduced when they had been at war- he had been more concerned about killing them, not on how they were to be made.

He watched her intently. The small skeleton still looked likely to faint- and the emptiness of her sockets was disturbing. That was one small fact that he would never get used to regarding skeletons- how empty and utterly dark their sockets could get when they were angry or distressed.

Toki took a seat on the chair across from the couch, and curled her arms around her middle. Amidst the panic, there was a sort of numb sensation. Shock, most likely. That… had not been the answer that she had been expecting. She had a tiny being growing inside of her- she had been expecting some sort of soul complication, like she’d eventually be covered in all green glowy bits or something. “Most humans don’t even believe souls exist,” she mutters softly. “Humans… You’re aware of sex, yeah? Well, humans are entirely biological. A male puts his bits into a female, and he ejaculates- and the sperm meets with the egg in a female and forms an embryo. Humans have accidental babies all the time- be they forced, or accidental in a relationship or one nightstand. It’s why we have population problems.”

His brow furrowed. “Then how does the soul of this embryo come into being? I know human souls are strong, but to create another soul from just one is not possible without severe damage to the soul.”

Toki’s mind flashed to Tenebris’ soul- to the holes that marked it and showed the damage he’d gotten from creating not one, but two souls from his own. “I don’t… I don’t know. Women are usually tired through pregnancy- when my sister in law had Dom, she couldn’t seem to get enough sleep. My mom had my eight brothers and myself though, and she’s still as cantankerous as ever. Maybe… maybe it’s a human thing? Because I have a human soul, we didn’t… need the intent t-t-to make a new soul?”

“It might be possible, Miss Toki.” The fire elemental frowned deeper. That did make sense- and account for the population boom in humans, and how they hadn’t died out when they barely lived for half of a century. That was concerning though. “I sometimes forget you have a human soul- which is silly with as powerful as yours is. My apologies for my assumptions earlier- I will need to apologize to your intended as well when he wakes.”

“Its okay…” The horned skeleton curls in on herself, her knees coming up to shield her middle. She liked kids- hell she wanted several of them herself. But… She wasn’t ready for kids. With the threat of HAM, and with everything going on, she hadn’t wanted- “I… Can you please not say anything?”

“Pardon?”

“Can you keep this a secret for now? Papyrus and I are going to need to talk about this- and I don’t think I can do that if everyone knows. Wait. Everyone can’t tell, can they?”

Grillby nodded quietly, and ran his fingers over the bridge between his eyes. This was a mess- and he pitied the poor young ones. They hadn’t even known… “I will keep it quiet, Miss Toki. I understand- you and Papyrus will need to discuss your plans. As for telling- no. Skeletons are rare creatures- and you are not even a day into gestation yet. So long as you keep your shirt down, you should be okay to keep it quiet.” He rumbled softly, and glanced back at her quietly. She looked stressed- and he leaned back to knock his knuckles gently on Aliquam’s cheek again to attempt and rouse him once more. He needed to wake up and tend to his female. “Keep in mind, though- we will need to tell Tenebris something. If this is something that is possible for all Human Turned Monsters, then word needs to be spread about it or there will be cases of this that arise all over the place. Perhaps I can come up with a cover story for us in time, though.”

Toki shook her head and wiped at her eyes- shit, she was tearing up. It was starting to sink in- she was pregnant. Shit. Shit, shit, double shit, triple shit. “N-no. We’ll tell Tenebris soon, I promise. Just… I’ll handle it. But… But not yet. I… I need time.” She needed time to calm down, time to talk to Papyrus, time to just… She needed time.

“I understand, Miss Toki.” He gave her a soothing smile. “Slow your breathing, Miss Toki. Panicking in your condition is not good.” When she failed to slow her breathing- in fact, him pointing out her hyperventilating seemed to make her do it faster- Grillby scooted along the floor and made her uncurl. He took her hands- so small and fragile compared to the monster that had sired her child- into his own, and let his chest expand. “With me, okay? Take a breath in- one, two, three… And out. Take a breath in- one, two, three… and out.”

Toki’s fingers curled into his, and she shakily matched his breathing. She hadn’t even been aware that she’d been hyperventilating- but she’d panicked more when she realized it. She didn’t want to hurt the baby- or whatever the little soul was called. But his technique worked- and she began to calm slightly.

During the breathing process, Papyrus had begun to stir. As Toki calmed, he slowly sat up, rubbing his head with his palm. ”Nyeh…?”

Toki was doing marginally better- but she kept silent, working through calming breathing. The longer she did it, the more the coil of panic began to ease off. His hands were warm and large- and created great focus points for her bones to cling to. This was the first time she’d touched him, now that she thought on it- fire was a strange medium to hold and to have touch you. It did feel good with his thumbs rubbing over the backs of her palms though.

Grillby eased her through a few more breaths, making sure she kept the slow and even pace with him, and then turned to look at Papyrus over his shoulder. Amusement flickered through his flames. “You with us now, Papyrus?”

"Nnn… Uh-huh…" he took a breath, steadying himself as he scrubbed his hand down his face. He then looked at Toki, ”A- Are you okay?”

“Are you okay?” She counters quietly, continuing her calming motions. She wasn’t okay right now- she was still flighty, still panicky- and growing ever more worried because she and Aliquam were still to new into their relationship for this to be happening. They hadn’t even talked about kids yet. Shit- he was so young to be a dad- she was old enough to be a mom, but…

She shook her skull forcibly and tried to clear her mind. If she continued to think about it, she wouldn’t make it stop. A deep breath in- one, two three…

“She will be. She worked herself into a bit of a panic- and it is not good for the soulling for her to be in such a state.” Grillby tilted his head quietly and kept an eye on the skeleton. If he careened off the couch, he’d crack his skull against the coffee table- and then they’d have to tell Tenebris why his son’s skull was flayed open after he fainted for the second time that day.

"I... I can't blame her... she... Oh Stars." he ran his hands over his face. "This is my fault..."

“Technically, it is no one’s fault.” Grillby shifted- making sure that Toki would be alright on her own first- and then scooted back across the floor to the younger man. Stars above, he was too old for this. He rested warm hands onto Papyrus’ knees, and gave him a comforting look. He was a dad above all else- and these two were very obviously lost and in need of guidance at this point. “Toki and I talked while you were recovering. Humans work differently than monsters- we think it is the differences in your souls that caused this. Humans don’t require souls to create new life- and we think that might have translated over to her life as a monster now. Her soul is still human.”

Toki shifted, scrubbing her eye sockets slightly to remove any traces of tears that might have gathered and lingered. When she blinks them open, her eye lights come on, and she peers over at Aliquam tiredly. “I don’t blame you, Ali. This… This sort of stuff happens to humans. He told me that monsters don’t have… accidents… like this. So… I’m… I’m sorry…”

"...!" Papyrus swallowed thickly, and offered Grillby a thankful smile at the offered comfort. He eased off of the couch, and stepped over to the chair. Leaning down, he looped his arms around her and hugged her tightly. "D-Don't be... We'll get through this, okay?" he murmured, "Somehow... we'll make this work..." He wouldn’t abandon her because of an accident- they would just have to handle the consequences of their actions like most people had to.

Toki managed not to hiccup into more tears or hyperventilation, and instead looped her arms around him in a tight hug. She dragged him down so he ended up kneeling in front of her, and proceeded to wrap around him like a leech. Burying her face into his chest, her bones rattled in a faint tremble. “Y-yeah. We… We need to sit down and discuss everything. We need to figure out what we’re going to do…”

Grillby smiled faintly, and propped his chin onto his palm. “You both are willing to work on it,” he murmured softly, “which is a good sign. I think you’ll both be okay. I will keep your secret though, Miss Toki. But you may want to tell Tenebris soon- neither of you will be able to hide it for long.”

Not if Caeruleus got wind of it- the elder brother had a particular knack for soul searching.

Quinn hugged her in a vice's grip, his face nuzzled into her shoulder as he took a deep breath to steady himself. "Toki, I love you... I would... never abandon you. Either of you." he murmured softly.

Toki nuzzled into his shoulder quietly and shivered. “I love you too…” She can’t deny the possibilities of him leaving her hadn’t crossed her mind- but she had to recall that monsters had a different code of honor than humans did. Not all humans would stay with a woman after this- and many would insist upon having the problem taken care of. There were few who would honor it- but not as many as there should be.
Grillby shifted, and hauled himself to his feet. His fires crackled faintly and he stretched his back-yes, he was surely too old to be scooting around on the floor. “It has been an exciting morning for you both,” The old fire elemental murmured gently. “Why don’t I get you both a burger and a fry so you can get home and get cleaned up?”

“Cleaned up…?”

Grillby chuckled. “You both smell of heat. I am fairly certain that you did not take the time to rinse off before you came here, correct?”

Embarrassment tinged Toki’s cheeks a bright green, and her grasp on Aliquam tightened.

Aliquam pulled back and hid his face in his hands, "I am so sorry." he murmured to Grillby.

Grillby chuckled and patted the skeleton’s shoulder. “It is not the first time I’ve had to do this for someone- and it surely will not be the last.” Amusement tinged his voice. “My sense of smell is not the best- but the wolf monsters will surely know what you have been up to.”

“I think I’ll forego the burger, Grillby. Thank you, though. I think I just want to get home and get washed… maybe make pancakes or something.” Something light and not-greasy. She groans quietly. “Right about now I wish I had Sans’ knack for shortcuts.”

"We’ll come back later for that breakfast, if that’s okay with you." he murmured as he looked up at the elemental.

Grillby nodded. “It will be lunch by then- but of course. Stop by whenever you like, and I will prepare you a meal.”

“Thank you, Grillby.” Toki leaned back slightly and scrubbed her hand over her face. There was a lot they needed to talk about in private. She shifts and goes to stand. It would be another quick walk back, she hoped.

Papyrus stood as well, and then hugged Toki close to him before he teleported them both back home.

Toki squeaked- sudden teleportation was always disorienting- and clung to him when they arrived back. “I… did not know you could take shortcuts too. Warn me next time please? It's pretty disorienting if you can’t brace for it.” Was teleporting even good for a new soul? Well… Her middle was still there, so it couldn’t have been too harmful for it. “So… ah… are you okay? I know this is a lot to take in… We haven’t even seriously talked about having kids before…”

"Nyeh, ah… I’m sorry…” he giggled quietly, before nuzzling her. "I'm fine, yes... just... just shocked."

“I’d say you were shocked. You fainted.” She nuzzles into him quietly, and then peers around. It would appear that he had dropped them in the living room- nearly on top of the coffee table. “But… are you really okay? Like… This is big news. I understand if you’re not totally okay with it. Our relationship is pretty new. Most humans wait years before they even consider having kids with each other.” They’d only been together since November- it had been just a little bit over a month, she thought.

"Of course!" he answered, nuzzling her, "I don’t think I could be happier right now, I mean... I wanted children someday, I didn't think it would be so soon, but I don’t care!"

Toki laughs quietly, and finds moisture beading at the corners of her sockets. “Holy shit, Ali. Just… holy shit. You monsters are something else entirely- most humans wouldn’t have hesitated to pack their bags and leave as fast as possible. Or insist on other… methods.” She swipes at it, and smiles up at him warmly. “You really are amazing, you know that?” She was undoubtedly the luckiest woman alive. Toki pulls back, and edges her shirt up faintly. Peering down at her middle, she flicks her eye lights up to his face and grins a lopsided-grin. “So, ah… surprise I guess? You’re going to be a dad?”

He smiled and knelt down. Hands coming to rest on her hips, Papyrus leaned forwards to press his teeth gently against the glow of her lower belly. He kissed it softly, thumbs rubbing soothing circles over her hips. "So I am. I'm still happy and don't care~” he purred. “Hello there, little one. You can’t hear me yet- but I’m your father! And I love you very, very much.”

One of Toki’s hands came down to rest on his skull, and she rubbed soft circles over the crown of his head. She listened to him talk to it- talk to something that had only just come into being- and felt her soul warm at the sight. “I’m glad you’re happy.” She smiles softly. It was a huge weight off of her soul- this wasn’t going to cause a rift. Exhaling a shaky sigh, the skeleton tilts her head back and closes her eyes. “I am too. Now that the panic is over, I’m actually really thrilled to be a mom. A little… unsure about the timing, but it can't be helped.” She needed some time to just let this settle in first before she began to tell anyone- but she was both eager and dreading telling everyone. Dreading mostly because if HAM found out…

Her smile faded slightly. “Hey, Pap…? What… What are we going to do? HAM is still a problem… If they find out about the baby…”

Even he began to frown. He leaned back and peered up at her. "They won't find out..." he murmured firmly. "We will keep this as tight-knit as possible.”

Toki swallowed faintly and nodded. “I don’t know how we’re going to manage that. This is going to be a mess- I’d be the first HTM to be having a child with a monster. It’s… common knowledge that we’re together. I don’t know how skeleton pregnancy’s work- or even what this one is going to be like, since my soul is human- but human pregnancies are nearly impossible to hide once you get further along. People are going to suspect things…” Pregnancy weight was different than just getting heavy. “At least with Undyne coming, I’ll be able to defend both of us better if I need to.”

Toki was already a target for HAM because of what she was, and for everything that she had done to help get and keep the monsters on the surface world. Nerves coiled in her middle, and her bones buzzed faintly. It wasn't just her that could be hurt anymore. They would target the child- and Papyrus for siring it.

"We'll find a way to make things work." he promised softly, pressing a few more kisses to the soft green ecto-flesh of her belly. "I promise, I wont let anything happen to you.”

“It’s not just about me, Pap. They'll come after you too. Because we’re together- because the child is ours- you'll be a target too if HAM finds out.” Her fingers smooth over his skull again, and she takes a few slow breaths. “We can tell the villagers.” She murmurs. “They'll need to know- and the guards. We can... hell, I don’t know. Maybe we can consult Undyne about it too. She's going to help me learn how to defend myself- and then I can protect you too... And... Shit, we need to tell your brother and your dad.” This would be Tenebris’ first grandchild. Her parents and brothers would be excited- but it was the first grandchild that was always special. It was mainly why she’d ended up inheriting her grandparent’s place, despite the fact she was only half Japanese. Dominic was her parent’s first grandson- and he held a special place in their hearts.

But this would be Tenebris’ first.

"I can protect myself.” He huffed stubbornly into her abdomen. "I don’t care about what happens to me, as long as it doesn't happen to you, I’m content as is.”
She flicks his skull with the tip of a claw and huffs at him. “Being in a relationship means we protect each other, you numbskull. By protecting each other, we can better protect our child. We’ll also have friends and family to help protect us too. Think Caeruleus will be excited about being an uncle?”

Aliquam rumbles faintly in response and nods. He could accept that. "Of course he will. He's already taken the role of 'Dunkle' for his majesty's child."

“Dunkle, huh?” Toki chuckled faintly and nudged him softly. She motioned to the couch- if he wanted to snuggle her middle, then they could do it from the couch. It was bound to be more comfortable than him pressing his kneecaps into the hard tile under them. “I’m thinking we tell everyone on Christmas. Think your dad will be excited…?”

"Indeed. I remember when he told us about when we were growing. His joy wasn’t hard to see or hear.”

He didn’t seem to notice her nudge- which was fine, because it occurred to her that they sorely needed a shower instead of stinking up the couch. Toki pets his skull again, and then wiggles in his grasp. “We’ll tell everyone on Christmas then. Though… Undyne probably needs to know, since she’s going to be teaching me to fight.” And the fish monster had seemed to be a very… passionate person. Toki’d rather she be aware of her passenger before training started.

He nodded once, then he sighed and slowly stood up, hugging her close to his chest once he was on his feet. "Come on... we.... ah... should probably go wash up and get ready for the day.”

“We probably should,” She agreed. Her fingers drifted down and she fixed her shirt. Once he let her go, she padded ahead of him and flicked her eyes back to him as she headed up the stairs. “C’mon you. We could both use a shower- and then some food too.”

He nodded in agreement then began upstairs, snagging her fingers with his as they go. They would be okay.
Chapter 31

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Undyne is hilarious- also fish plus fire does not mix well. Hehehehehe.

Don't forget to visit our tumblr! I just recently did some pictures of Toki, so you can go see her cute little face. You can find us here at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: I can smell the shit, and it hasn’t even hit the fan yet. Enjoy chapter 31!

Three days proved to be some of the most surreal days she’d had in a long while. Finding out she was pregnant had been a shock- and she’d spent the first day slightly out of it as she puttered around the house. Day two and three were easier- but she still wasn’t sure she believed it. She didn’t feel pregnant. The only thing that kept reminding her that she was pregnant was the green glow that escaped whenever she lifted her shirt.

She was only a few days along, though. It made sense that she wouldn’t feel anything yet. It was probably not even visible to anyone who could see souls yet.

Toki found herself looking forwards to Christmas- when they could tell everyone the big news. With how Aliquam strutted about happily, she was sure that everyone suspected that something was up. No one had asked though- which was good. She didn’t have an explanation for them- and she didn’t want to lie and say that they were engaged or something, and certainly a good lay was not enough of a reason to strut like that.

Before Christmas could come though, she had to handle the first time training with Undyne. The fish woman due to arrive any minute- having apparently decided that she needed to run from the mountain instead of taking a cart like a normal living being.

Toki was in her usual turtleneck- but opted this time to wear jeans instead of sweat pants. She even crammed her feet into her old tennis shoes- and ended up stabbing the pointed parts of her toe bones through the end of them. Oh well- it worked. She wanted traction if she was going to be active that day.

Toki lingered in the house, all-alone at the moment. Papyrus had stolen some of the guards away to do some training with them- he’d taken it to heart that everything would be more secure in the compound. Which served her well enough- she didn’t need anyone seeing her getting her ass handed to her by a giant fish woman.

It wasn’t late into the day when a noise from her front door had Toki certain that her door was going to be rattled off its hinges. She padded for it, and tossed it open so that it wouldn’t take any more abuse. Predictably, it was the large fish monster on the other side of the door. Toki greeted her with a hesitant grin. “Hi!”

The woman on the other side was grinning widely, baring hellishly sharp teeth and looking barely winded despite her travel-roughened appearance. "Hey there, Miss Nara!" she cackled, "It's been a while!"
"Undyne," Toki smiled up at her, "It has been a while. At least this meeting is under better circumstances, am I right? Please, come in!" She steps back from the door and motions for the burly monster to come inside. "We need to talk before we get started."

"Sure thing!" she said with a grin, padding into the house after her.

Toki worried at the edge of her turtleneck as she shut the door behind her. She motioned for the fish to follow her into the kitchen, and then made a beeline for it. She shivered slightly, and rolled her shoulders thoughtfully. Once safely inside, she leaned against the counter and turned to face Undyne. "So… We’re going to have to be careful in training and take things kind of easy."

Undyne arched her brow, and curled her lip curiously. "Yeah? How come?"

"If I tell you, you have to keep it secret." Toki curls her arms over her chest and arches a brow at her slightly. "It is utmost important that you keep it secret. Can you do that?"

"...! Well, yeah! Of course!"

Toki heaved a sigh and nodded. She hiked up the edge of her shirt- and showed her middle. The glow was less bright than before- and not as noticeable- but the green sheen of ecto-flesh was undeniably there. "So… Turns out that HTM’s need to be careful with soul play."

Undyne's eye widened as the ecto-stomach was exposed and she stared for a little bit. Her fins twitched, flaring slightly, and her eye shifted back up to give her an incredulous look. "It's Papyrus', huh?"

"Yeah. Once he got over his initial shock, he was pretty excited to be a dad." She rubs a finger along the surface quietly, watching the flesh flex under the tip of her finger, and gives her a faint smile. "It came as quite a shock to both of us. Turns out that HTM souls follow human conduct. Anyways, we’re keeping it quiet. Outside of us two, only Grillby and you know. So… Keep it quiet, please? We wanted to surprise everyone at Christmas. There's also the problems with HAM- I'm a target for them, and all three of us would be a larger one if they found out. Pap's out working with the guards- I think he's training them up better because of all of this."

"... Ah... yeah!" she gave her a grin. "Heh! If anyone can whip those punks into shape, it'd be Papyrus. Especially since he's got something extra to protect now."

Toki sighed and set her turtleneck back into place. She smoothed the dark fabric down, and then glanced back up to Undyne’s face. "So you think we can still train well enough? I really do need to be able to defend myself. I got my ass handed to me by a human. Though… I’m not sure how we’d work on my magic. I don’t want to hurt you."

"Fufufufufufufu!" Undyne’s head fins flared widely, and her head rocked back as she cackled at Toki. "You? Hurt me? Hahaha! Don't worry about me, punk! I'm not the captain of the guard for nothing!"

Toki tilted her head and stared at her disbelievingly. "I am not sure if you are very self-sure, or mildly insane. But… all right. I think you’ll be okay to hit my anywhere except my middle- that’s about how it works with humans, I think. I don’t know about monsters though." She shrugged, and hummed. "Do you need to rest for a bit before we train? I heard you… ran here?"

The royal guard laughed and shook her head. She might have been mildly sweaty, but she’d done longer laps back and forth between the districts under the mountain. "No way! I feel good!"

Yep. Toki was leaning towards the monster being mildly insane. She shrugged and rubbed the back of her neck quietly. A sigh pulls from her nasal cavity, and she twitched her head towards her back door. “All right- we can practice out in the back part of the compound.” Her beehives weren’t there- and the only thing they could damage would be the shed and the big clan tree. Toki snags a couple bottles of water- mostly for the fish woman following her- and heads out back. "You have any idea what you want me to do...?"

The fish woman isn’t far behind her. She surveys the area with a quick glance, and then focuses on the skeleton in front of her. "Just fight!"

“Just fight?” Why did Toki have a sudden feeling that this was going to be a huge mess?

"Yeah!" There was a gleam of her eye, and suddenly Undyne had summoned a pair of matching spears into her hands. “Ready to get some, punk?”

Spears, of course. The fish monster summoned spears- harpoons would have been far too cliché. Toki stared at her for a moment, speechless, before flailing her hands frantically at the spear-clad woman. “Wait-wait-wait, I have no idea how to do anything like that.” Her bees would get speared through, holy shit. At least her bones were less of a target. This woman was going to steam roll her.

Toki wasn’t going to deny that she might have her priorities backwards. She could stare down an intimidating Tenebris with little issue- but the raw passion in Undyne had her vastly more intimidated. This was a violent monster- one who fought often and for fun- that was bearing down on her with a grin that made a great white shark look like a Pomeranian.

“Well, no time like the present to learn! And don’t give me that shit- Papyrus said you summoned some sort of bug thing- let ‘m out! I’ll fight ‘m all!” The fish gave her a cheerful grin, but did end up tossing one of her spears over to Toki. “I’ve never fought a human turned monster before. I’ve fought Frisk, but all they did was deflect and run away.”

Toki fumbled with it- and then was on the run as the fish woman charged her with a wild whoop. Toki squeaked, her voice rising in a startled shout back towards the wall of muscle pursuing her. “Fuck FUCK FUCK FUCK I WASN’T READY!”

“NGGYAHHHH! STOP RUNNING AND HIT ME BACK, PUNK!”

It was past noon when the swarm appeared. Bright green and glowing, a swarm of flaming bees appeared over the compound where Toki’s house was located. The buzzing cacophony of noise that arose was nothing short of deafening- but none of the monsters would get close enough to the wall of flaming insects to get in. The heat at the edge of the wall was too much- far too much for those with fur or easily burnt skin to get close to.

The cloud hung heavily over the air, undulating with noises of what was apparently a fight happening inside. With no way for anyone to get in, one of the guards hoofed it for the only one who could handle the heat- the fire elemental at the bar. Papyrus wasn’t here- he was out with some wolves running in the forest- and they weren’t sure the skeletons could take the heat anyways.

The guard burst in, a panting hard. “Grillby!” She spotted the fire elemental along with the older skeleton brother seated at the bar. “Grillby! Come quick- there’s something going on in Miss Toki’s compound- there’s a wall of flaming bee things! We can’t get in, but we can hear fighting.”

Grillby perked on the stool he was seated on, his attention taken from Caeruleus’ joke as his head whipped to the door. A fight? With Toki? That- she wasn’t supposed to be fighting! The fires of his skull whipped and whirled, and he stood from the bar. His long fingers rolled his sleeves up, bearing scarred and muscled forearms, and he took long strides for the front door.

Caeruleus had gotten up as well, as he was worried about her. "Allow me to take us on a shortcut, Grillbz." he said, reaching up and grabbing the elementals wrist before teleporting the duo to the compound.

Grillby’s flames flickered faintly- teleporting was not something that he did often and it was slightly disorienting when he did so- but remained steady when they landed. Sans had dropped them right outside of wall of what appeared to be large, flaming bees of some kind. The largest were still small to him, but the smallest were like gnats. The problem was- there were thousands of them all buzzing and exuding heat. The air felt like summer time, which was a relief from the cold of winter. “Thank you, Caeruleus.” He murmured faintly. The elemental glanced down at the skeleton, and tilted his head. “Let me see how thick they are in there before you enter.” With his HP, Sans couldn’t risk getting burnt by these bees. Grillby however, they simply fed to the heat of his flames. It was nice- even if the noises of fighting from inside were disconcerting.

The fire elemental finished his sleeves, and then made for the wall. He pushed through the bees with little issue- and they parted around him like water over a rock. He did not hurt them- and they did not hurt him, though they did singe his shirt in places. For the most part, it appeared that they had made a flaming barrier of sorts, patchy in some spots and thick in others. The inside was mostly hollow- though there were a few here and there that were aggressively buzzing in the general direction of the fighting. The fire elemental turned and raised his voice enough for the skeleton to hear over the buzzing din of the swarm. “Cae! You can come in- just don’t touch the bees.”

"In that case I’m staying out here, there's too many bees to actually avoid them!" Caeruleus insisted, backing away quickly when a few bees strayed out of the pack.

They wandered over vaguely to investigate him, putting on an impressive defensive display as they did so.

Grillby sighed through his teeth. “I’ll handle it then!” The big monster rolled his shoulders with a faint crackle of fire, and then was jogging lightly around the back of the house. At the epicenter of fire and bees was not the one whom he was expecting.

Inside the compound, Undyne was stunned at the magnificent sight that was Toki's attack. The swarm of green bees, their wings screaming and causing the ground under her feet to shutter and vibrate up into her calves... it was... amazing... but also really intimidating with the vast size of the swarm.

Toki had a hand on her forearm and was attempting to unpin herself from the tree she’d gotten stuck to. Undyne had chased her for the better part of an hour- maybe an hour and a half- and the skeleton’s ribcage was heaving for breath. She’d lost her spear maybe half way through, and had been stuck keeping on her toes, avoiding swipes that would have knocked her across the yard. And they had, on more than one occasion- and she’d felt the sting of the magic weapon tingle over her bones. It stung- but probably not as much as it should have.

But Toki had stumbled once the fish woman had moved to projectiles. Toki took a thick spear that lodged itself right between her radius and ulna- and when she’d glanced back, Undyne had been stalking towards her.
To simply put it, Undyne intimidated the hell out of her simply by the passion with which she put into fighting. And that intimidation had kicked in flight or fight to defend her and her baby- and she hadn’t been able to flee. So her bones had buzzed and burned, and the spear in her arm suddenly began to throb painfully against her bones, and her bees had come.

Droves of them flooded from her magic, buzzing and spiraling into the sky like a burning pyre. They had fanned out, blanketing over the compound like a defensive wall, with Stripe coming to rest on Toki’s pinned arm. The swarm vibrated, a sullen warning for the fish to cease her assault- and a few of them darted in with stingers aimed.

“Don’t let them touch you!” Toki yelped. “They’ll burn you!”

Undyne was backing away from the bees, her magic dispelling almost immediately as she turned tail and danced out of the way. "Yeeaaahhh, FUCK THIS."

Toki rubbed her arm as Undyne’s magic let her free. Her soul raced in her chest, and she curled her arm protectively around her middle. The bees buzzed louder, and Toki took a frantic moment to reach out with her thoughts. Her swarm buzzed loudly in the back of her skull, and they were dead set on removing the threat. The apparent threat was Undyne- who had to stay on her toes as the swarm began to converge.

She focused her magic, and gave a tug backwards on them as Grillby rounded the corner. Toki’s skull throbbed, and she clutched at it as the buzzing in her head grew in intensity, like something much larger was about to make it’s way into the world. No, no, there was no need for this. It was play fighting- this was not an actual fight, this was Undyne going overboard, and her bees had no need to react this way. Yes- she had been afraid. But Undyne wouldn’t have hurt her and her child.

She pressed this need to them- and the oppressive buzzing in the back of her skull began to fade. The bees stilled in their swarming, and let up on their movements against the fish monster. Forcing herself to calm was helping to calm the bees- and she shot a look to Grillby as he headed for them. He had several of them clinging to his shirt, but they did him no harm, and he did no harm to them.

Toki pulsed her magic again and began to draw it in. Most of the swarm began to dissipate, and as her magic shifted back into it’s defensive position, she found the ache in her bones easing.

“Shit- Undyne? Are you okay? Grillby? What are you doing here?”

The old general crossed his arms across his chest and fixed her with a decidedly unhappy look- though it shifted and he pinned the fish monster under his ire filled gaze. “And what exactly was happening here? I was called out because the guards could not get to you- and we heard fighting. Captain Undyne. Explain yourself. Now.”

"Woah, woah hey! Don’t pin this on me! She wanted me to come and help her train, so I thought I would!” she defended herself quickly.

Toki shifted off against the bark and set herself between the large flame elemental and the fish woman. “She didn’t do anything wrong- besides scare the bejeesus out of me.” She rolled her shoulders faintly and peered at the hole in her shirt. “And pin me to the tree. Pap and I asked her to help me learn to defend myself. She, ah, knows about the thing too.”

Grillby pinned a glowing gaze on the skeleton, and tilted his head down. “She should not have been so rough with you if she knows.” His gaze flicks back to the fish, and he frowns at her. “She is a civilian. Last time I was in the army, we did not throw civilians directly into live-combat situations, Captain. Humans don’t inherently know how to fight like we do.”
“She’s not human anymore though, Grillby. I had to push her to get her to fight back- hell, I even threatened things I wouldn’t ever do, and she still ran, even when I hit her hard. She’s got the instincts for fighting-”

Grillby snorted smoke. “Miss Nara is inherently kind, Undyne. It is not in her nature to fight- and the fact that I came around to her pinned in a tree? You took it too far, Undyne. That response? That response was her magic set to defend her and her-”

“Grillby- good gods, Grillby, it’s okay. She didn’t hurt me- she was really careful where she hit me. You can even check my HP- it didn’t go down all that much until I went to attack her. Yeah, she scared me a lot, but I needed it. She’s right- I can fight, but getting me to fight is harder.”

Grillby paused and peered at her. As the rest of the bees dispersed, he leaned in and coaxed her soul from her chest without asking.

He got to witness her defensive stat- which was startlingly resting at a negative three- begin to rise back up to it’s usual position at two hundred. The problem was- it was sucking it from an attack stat that was suddenly much, much higher than it should have been. She was only down a hundred and fifty HP. “This… is befuddling.” He mutters. “Really befuddling. I knew boss hearts were strange sorts of souls, but this is… alarming…”

Even with the facts defending her, Undyne looked guilty enough with a small frown, before she blinked once at his words. Boss heart…?

Caeruleus had gotten Papyrus and both brothers were now running up, a hoard of guards fanning out around the compound to secure it.

"Toki!" Aliquam shouted worriedly, coming to her side before looking at her soul. "...!"

“Boss heart?” Toki repeated. She watched the flames on Grillby’s head rapidly change colors. “I’m a boss heart? What is that? I’m okay, Ali. I just got spooked and my bees came to my defense.”

The fire elemental ground his teeth faintly, and passed her soul over to Aliquam so that the father of her child could restore her HP. Her stats were still off- but rapidly dropping to their normal positions. And he was very certain that both brothers could see it. “A boss heart is the human equivalent of a boss monster.” He mutters slightly.

Papyrus took her soul and cradled it gently as he began to heal it. His eyes focused on Grillby, as did most everyone else’s.

Grilby’s flames crackled faintly, and he watched and waited until the guards that were circling began to return to their usual duties now that training was ‘over’ for the time being. He heaved a great sigh, and began to fix his sleeves. He brushed off any burnt ashes from his shirt- his vest now had an open hole that showed off one of his pectorals, so that would need to be replaced- and then began to speak.

“Boss hearts,” he murmured, “are terrifyingly powerful- but they are also… I think the term is called a ‘glass cannon’? When they are alone, they are a force to recon with, but each one has a specific weakness. All together, they are virtually unstoppable, until they run themselves dry.” He crosses his arms and sighs, tilting his head back to watch the sky. He had missed the sky, being sealed underground. “Unlike with monsters, there are only ever fourteen boss hearts in existence at one point. Two for each of the primary soul colors- One representing the good side, and the other representing the bad side of the souls. Determination, patience, bravery, integrity, perseverance, kindness, and justice all have their antonyms. Negligence, intolerance, cowardice, deceitfulness, indecisiveness, cruelty, and corruption, respectively match up with the seven main colors. I had the pleasure of facing many boss heart mages on the battlefield- and I squared off with Cruelty many times. It is how I know what they are. Toki is the boss heart for kindness. It was the seven anti-hearts that created the barrier once they had gained enough LOVE to boost their power.”

Toki stared at him blankly for a moment, and then lifted a hand to her mouth as it dropped open. “Holy shit…” That… That was a lot to take in. She wobbled in place and simply stared. “Why… didn’t you say anything?”

“Because- there was no point in causing problems when you were not Cruelty reborn. You are Kindness. But it is because you are kindness that is a problem. I met kindness only once- before Cruelty killed him. Kindness was killed almost instantly when he went on the offensive to defend my group. I am realizing why he was so easily killed now that I have seen your soul. On the norm, your magic is primarily defensive to magical attacks, and your defense to physical attacks is better than most. Hence why you were not dusted when you were shot by the HAM agent. But when you go on the offensive- your stats flip, and your defense goes into the negative. I do not know why. But it is something that can prove to be a huge problem for you. If you have to fight- you must not allow yourself to take any damage. Your HP should be higher- Several hundred points higher- but the damage to it… You are more fragile than you would think, Miss Toki.”

"So what you're saying is..." Sans started, trailing off as his younger brother moved.

Papyrus wrapped his arms around Toki, nuzzling her gently as he pressed her soul carefully back into her chest. His arms came to settle around her middle, cupping it protectively. "She's better a shield than she is a sword?" the younger brother finished.

"So even if I did hit her and did do actual damage... it wouldn't have been something overly bad?" Undyne then asked.

The look Grillby shot her was one that could be vastly frightening. His teeth parted, and he rumbled at the fish monster. “Better a shield indeed. Her bees did a good job of keeping things out- but she would be defenseless if something got inside. As for you-” he pointed a finger at her, “if you had hit her full on in the stomach, not even her defense stat would have saved the soulling. Carrying monsters are fragile- the further along they get, the less magic they have to work with, and what magic they do have is usually slightly unstable. In the case of this one, we don’t know just how fragile she and the soulling might be. Humans miscarry very easily. She has a human soul. So I do commend you for making sure your hits only struck her arms- it would have been a sad day to lose a soul not even a week old yet.”

"H-Heh..." she smiled a little at that, before she rubbed her head, ducking her gaze away from the old general. It had been a long time since Undyne had trained anyone- Papyrus had actually been the last. He had come to her with prior knowledge of how to fight- as most monsters did. She could swallow her pride and admit she’d approached it wrong. "Ah jeez... You're right, I guess. I got excited about fighting with an HTM, and I didn't stop to consider how humans work verses us."

"Soulling?" Caeruleus questioned.

“Dammit Grillby.” Toki sighed. She peered at Caeruleus, and wiggled a bit away from Aliquam. She peeked the edge of her shirt up, showing the slight green glow of her belly. “No going back now. Congrats- you're going to be an uncle.”

Grillby sighed out a plume of smoke, and scrubbed his palm over his head to cool his ire. He was not fond of people risking innocent souls- and he had his reasons for it. “My apologies, Miss Toki. I was… on a roll, so to speak.”
"Holy shit." Was all Caeruleus could let out, before he stood up straight, grinning widely. The lights in his eyes got larger, until they began to practically gleam. His fingers fist ed in his hoodie, and he bounced lightly on his heels "Heh... Holy shit... I'm gonna be an uncle...!"

Toki reached out and clamped a slightly overly warm hand over his mouth to keep him from getting too loud. Not that it mattered- he spoke much like she did, without needing to open his mouth. “SHHH. Keep it quiet. We were going to surprise you for Christmas- but we still plan to surprise Tenebris. So. Shush.”

"Right..." he chuckled weakly, rubbing his head once she let him go. Before she could pull out of reach, he snagged her arm and tugged her into a tight hug. “Heh... heh heh heh..."

Toki sighed and hugged him back. She patted his shoulders gently, hoping silently that this wouldn’t become a ‘touch the belly’ session that so many pregnant women complained about. She didn’t even have one to touch yet, and it would be ridiculous to do so now. “Now you know why Pap’s been strutting around like a peacock, yeah? Anyways… Undyne? I think I’m done training for today, if it’s all the same to you. My bees would like to turn you into grilled fish.”

Cae seemed content to simply hug her close and eye the hole in her shirtsleeve. It changed the whole perspective of the fight getting out of hand now that he knew that he was going to be an uncle. “It does explain his extra cheer that he’s had and hasn’t bothered to explain.”

Grillby crossed his arms. “I think I can take over training you. Fire is my element- and your bees cannot harm me. We will stick to turning the offensive capabilities of your insects into primarily defensive measures.” Plus he had more experience actually training skeletons. He peered at Undyne intently. “You will join us. You could improve in your techniques with starting civilians.”

"... Sure thing, Sir..." Undyne said quietly. That was the only time you would see her in such a passive state, "And, ah, don’t sweat it, Toki! I still think you did one hell of a job fighting today!" She then grinned again, giving Toki a thumbs up.

Toki chuckled quietly and squirmed. “I did more running than I did fighting- and let me tell you, that’s more running I’ve done today than I have done in years. I am vastly out of shape.” She raps her knuckles gently on Cae’s shoulder, and tilts her head. “Hm…” She really needed to make sure that her bees knew Undyne not to be a threat- in case something ever came up again. She turned, squirming in his hold, and got a hand free. She summoned Stripe, and managed to free herself from Cae’s grasp. “Stripe is the queen of my hive. I think, anyways. She’s got the most different shape body out of all of my bees.” That she had seen, anyways. “Anyways, I want the bees to know you’re not a threat. She’s familiar with Pap already- and she’s calmer now that I’m calm- so you can touch her if you like. I can focus them better when it’s just one. She won’t hurt you.”

Grillby watched the bee appear in Toki’s palm, and tilted his head curiously. “Undyne, it has been centuries since anyone has called me Sir. Just call me Grillby. It is easier for everyone.” Centuries yes, but one did not forget how to do their job. “I wonder what plane your summons come from. There are not many fire-natured summons- and I have never heard of fire bees.”

Undyne hesitated for a moment and she came closer, nodding to Grillby before she slowly reached out to the bee. Now, she wasn’t scared of a single bug on it’s own, but she sure as hell didn’t like the feeling of getting her hand burnt. Or any part of her getting burnt, for that matter.

Toki eased her hand out, and offered Stripe over. The bee buzzed faintly, recognizing the fish woman- but at some careful nudges through her magic, the bee steps out and extends a leg to gently boop one of Undyne’s webbed fingers. The bee was warm- about like warm water from a sink- but did not burn when it touched her. Stripe began pulling herself forwards, aiming to get into Undyne’s palm without having to fly.

“I’m not sure where they come from,” Toki mutters, keeping a close eye on Stripe. Her stinger was hidden- but she still didn’t want to risk it. “I know I think there’s more where they came from. The swarm was really loud in my skull- like more of them wanted to come out and fight. Gave me a bit of a fright- I really didn’t want them to hurt Undyne.”

“Captain Undyne is, if I remember, quite susceptible to the heat. It is for the best that you reined them in.” The old general mutters. He sighs, and drapes an arm around Sans shoulder. “It is possible that there are more of them. Depending on the plane they come from, you could very well be their first host. Or at least the first in recorded history.”

Toki made a curious noise, but left it at that. They would find out in time, she supposed.

Leaning against Grillby, Cae smiled at him and leaned his head against him, taking a deep breath and seeming able to breathe better in the aromatic heat resonating from his elemental boyfriend.

Aliquam was watching Stripe as Undyne carefully handled her, though after a while the captain gave a grin, "Heh, holy shit... This is actually pretty cool...!"

“Bees are very neat.” Toki agreed. She stepped back over to Aliquam, and leaned back against him quietly. She peered up at him, and offered up the arm with the hole in the sleeve. “Think you can help me fix this? Or is it beyond repair?” She really liked this turtleneck. It was warm, and covered the glow of her middle fabulously.

The queen bee buzzes faintly, and crawls slowly up Undyne’s arms. There, she wiggles her feet at her and gives her a scolding buzz for scaring Toki. Stripe’s fluffy mane whips and whirls slightly, as she turns glowing eyes to Cae. She wiggles her feet at him next.

Grillby watches intently, keeping his arm loose around Caeruleus. The bee didn’t seem aggressive- but Cae did not have the HP to risk perchance the queen bee decided that it didn’t like him.

"Of course I can fix it, Toki." Aliquam promised easily, eying the hole slightly. His fingers brushed it- and he eyed the width. “It can be patched- but it might not look the same. I think I have thread that can match the color. It is a clean tear, after all.”

“Good.” Toki chuckled softly. “You saw Tenebris’ stitches. That’s about the extent of my sewing skills. It doesn’t have to be perfect- it’ll still be better than what I can do.” Embroidery and sewing was not a skill she possessed. She did writing and bees- that was her forte.

Undyne watched the bee with the same intensity, but seemed calm enough with it's presence.

Caeruleus just laughed quietly and gave her a soft wave, "Hey there, pretty Queenie." he purred.

Having been spoken too, Stripe’s wings began to rapidly flap. It warmed her up faintly, but she was off of Undyne’s arm before she could bother her too much. Like a fat, bumbling sausage of the sky, the queen bobbed over towards Cae, aiming to land on his arm.

Grillby offered his hand for a landing pad- and was surprisingly ignored in favor of Cae. “I think she likes you calling her that.” He murmured quietly.

He let out a soft laugh as the queen landed on his jacket. "Well she's really pretty, isn't she? For a bee, y’know." he laughed softly, reaching a finger out to pet the bee.

Stripe’s fluff was warm under his fingers, and she gave a faint humming buzz against his touch. She ventured down his arm- and then began to try and crawl up his sleeve curiously.

“That she is.” Grillby watched both the queen bee and Toki- and the shortest skeleton didn’t seem wary, so the queen must have been entirely passive. The insect seemed calmer now that the threat was over, and part of him wondered just how tightly bound the master and her summons actually were. This is something he would need to figure out- and given his immunity to the heat of her flames, he would have ample time to do so. He hadn’t trained in years- but this was necessary. She had decent control over them now- but he wasn’t sure she always would, as the insects seemed sentient. Still- he was a little unsure as she began to work up the arm of Cae’s jacket.

“You can grab her- just be gentle and you wont hurt her.” Bees were fragile- but her magic ones seemed pretty sturdy. From when Toki had touched them, their exoskeletons had been hard and strong compared to the easily crushed bodies of actual bees. “She’s curious about the inside of your jacket.” It was the only pair of sleeves with the space for Stripe to investigate, after all.

He laughed softly and reached to gently cup around her, before lifting his sleeve up to allow her in. "My pretty Queen," he cooed gently, "Pretty, pretty, queen."

Toki grins faintly. “Apparently I’m not the only one who talks to bees.”

The queen buzzes faintly, and clamors up his sleeve as he lifts it better. Her little legs cling to the bones of his arm, and she settles in, vibrating lightly against him. He shuddered, and wiggled his fingers faintly.

Toki’s magic wavers slightly, and leans back against Papyrus. “So, I don’t know about you, Undyne, but I think I need something to eat. That many bees sort of sucked up a lot of my magic. I’m not quite used to summoning that many yet.”

“That is something you are going to have to watch, Miss Toki. You’ll exhaust yourself easier with your condition.” The fire elemental dips his head, and flicks his gaze pointedly to Papyrus. “You will also require magic donations from another source from time to time as well. As you are a boss heart, your stores will be higher- but there is no telling how this could go. Your soul is human- this will be a learning experience for us all.”

“Nyeh?” Papyrus looked mildly confused, and he rubbed a palm against his skull. “Donations?”

“It helps strengthen the soulling and lessen the strain on the carrier’s soul. Your magic will be better for this process, since you are directly related to it. Family, or like-natured magic would come second best, but it is doable. Technically anyone can donate- but some magic is better for it over others.” Grillby sighed faintly. It was slightly sad how little that they knew- but Tenebris tended to hoard some of his knowledge like a dragon upon it’s gold. “It’s fairly easy- pretty much just like giving a magic donation for someone suffering from Magi-drain. You needn’t put it directly into the soul, however. A hand on her middle would work just fine. Miss Nara’s magic is not going to restore as easily as normal- so she will need to eat more to compensate for the loss of magic if she uses large quantities.” The fire elemental murmured. “Toki will know when she needs a donation- and so will you, I suspect. If she begins to act differently, she might require a donation.”

“On that note- come on, Toki. I’ll take you inside for some cocoa. Summoning that many bees probably took a lot out of you, and you’ve got more than just you to think about now.”

Toki snorted softly. “Cae, I hardly need to be babied.”

“Oh, so you’re turning down my cocoa, doll?” The broad skeleton chortled faintly.
“The day I turn down your cocoa is the day I need to go to the mental ward.” Toki responded teasingly.

“Anywhos, Pap’s needs to show Undyne around th’ town anyways, so that leaves me to make sure you get the food you need. Extra heavy on th’ magic f’r sure.” Caeruleus offered her a wide grin, and stepped away from Grillby. He jerked a thumb towards her home, and tilted his head in the direction of the back door. “C’mon, doll. I’m not takin’ no for an answer.” He needed to talk to her anyways. “Unless you’re ready to be shipped t’ th’ loony bin?”

“And I need to get back to my bar.” He hadn’t put up the ‘out to lunch’ sign. Grillby tilted his head, and bade them farewell. He was the first to leave, turning around and eying the burns on his shirt. He needed to change too- this was highly unprofessional of him to look like this. His steps were quiet, strides long, and he was soon heading back around the corner of the house and back towards his bar.

She could do without a trip to the loony bin. Toki relinquished her hold on her magic, and Stripe disappeared from Sans’ sleeve as she turned to smooch Pap’s cheek faintly. “Alright, Cae.” She chuckles faintly, and turns to plod for the house. She rubs her arms, and then sighs. “I need to get another shirt anyways. C’mon, Cae. The promised cocoa awaits!”

He laughed and nodded, following her towards the house while Aliquam and Undyne followed after Grillby. "Let's go get that cocoa."

Toki flashes him a grin, and pushes into the kitchen once she reaches the back door. She leaves it open for him to follow after her, and then makes for the cabinets. Toki hums lightly and climbs up the countertop to fetch a mug for her cocoa from one of the upper cabinets. “You going to pilfer my ketchup again, or are you going to have some cocoa today?”

"I actually don’t have enough of an appetite." he replied, starting up the cocoa.

“Really?” She blinked over at him. Her brow furrowed as she eased off of the countertop. She approaches him and presents the mug, peering up at his face with a concerned frown. “You never turn down ketchup. Are you okay?”

"Honestly? No,” he sighed. Ah shit. She had a faint inkling as to why. Her teeth ground faintly, showering sparks over her counter, and her eye lights flicked over his face for a second. Shit indeed. Toki plunged her hands into the pockets of her jeans, and gave him some space to work. “Is it because of…?" Her chin jerked at her middle, and she scuffled the tip of her tennis shoe against the tile under her feet.

"Yeah... I mean... You've only been dating my brother for a month.” He sighed. His fingers tapped idly on the counter as he waited for the water to boil. She could have heated it with magic, sure- but it would be counterproductive to have her infusing the drink with magic. “Are you two sure you wanna move so fast?” he inquired quietly. “Having a kid is… huge stuff.”

“Truth be told, this wasn’t intentional. It’s… it’s even a little fast for me too. Humans wait years before having kids with someone...” She admits quietly. “We... well shit, you’ve already seen us rutting on the couch. This can’t be any more embarrassing than going to Grillby about this.” She takes a moment and frees her hands so she can scrub her face. It was different talking about this with Grillby- he was nice and all, but he wasn’t related to either of them, or connected in any official way. This was the uncle of her child- and she really didn’t desire to give him the sordid details of its conception, even if he’d already seen Papyrus metaphorically balls deep inside of her. “He wanted to try something, and I trusted him to know what he was doing- and we dabbled a bit into soul play during his heat.” That was about as bad as she thought it would be. “It, ah... turns out that HTM’s need to be careful doing anything with souls. Human souls don’t ever touch when humans procreate- and it turns out we don’t need intent to spark off a little soul. So… yeah. We don’t really have any other options except—" Except for abortion. And she really didn’t want to do that.

The massive abortion debate was a huge, huge mess about when it was ethical to do it, when it wasn’t, when the fetus was actually considered alive, if pro-life or pro-choice were the better options-it was basically a huge shit storm that Toki really didn’t want to get into. Actually knowing that there was a living soul in her made her highly desire to keep it alive- and the thought of intentionally destroying a soul that she was creating… it made her nonexistent skin crawl, because she knew it was alive, even if it wasn’t aware or large yet.

It was an accident? But… such a thing... It would be impossible.... But again... She was once a human... "Oh..." he then ran a hand over his face, sighing through his teeth. "An accident..." he then looked at her, and let his smile settle into a gentle one. "I gotcha... Well... you know what?"

She was slightly wary, but didn’t think she had reason to be. Her fingers settled down to tap on her middle, drumming over the warm shirt covered magic quietly, and she peeked at him out of the corner of her sockets. “What?”

"Even if you didn't mean to have 'em." He then grinned and gave her a thumbs up. "I'll still their punkle Caeruleus."

Toki laughed softly and grinned at him slightly. Relief tittered through her soul, and she rubbed her middle quietly. “So you will be, so you will be. We’ll have dadiquam, punkle Cae, grandpa Tenny, and momster Toki. Heh. It’s actually a relief that we got you in on it. Now I don’t have to worry about how to surprise you at Christmas. Though, ah… As I said, it was going to be a surprise- but we’re also trying to keep it quiet in the compound itself. Pap’s been running drills with the guards for a reason.” One she knew Cae could catch on for himself. “Anyways… I sort of wish I could see souls. I’d love to see what it looks like- if the little soul’s going to be having a human or monster shaped soul, y’know?"

"Fantastic, we just need the baby and we've got the whole set.” he joked, before he gave a semi-serious nod. "Yeah, Pap’s ‘s pulling all the strings to ensure your protection."

Toki nods slightly. The pot on the stove begins to bubble, and she goes to the fridge to fetch the creamer for him. “Heh. Little babybones.” At least she assumed it would be. No one would really know until it was born. “I know he is.” She sighs quietly. The creamer is plonked on the counter near him, and Toki fiddles with her sleeve. “We need to protect him too though, Cae. HAM… they’ll go after him too for being with me. For being it’s father.” Her fingers tap gently on her middle again, and she shakes her head sharply. “Ugh. HAM is a huge problem I wish we didn’t have to deal with… Anyways, off of that topic… So you want to know what happened when Pap learned he was going to be a dad?”

"Tell me and you'll get an extra handful of marshmallows."

“Well how can I refuse that?” Toki grinned, and leaned back against the counter while he worked on the cocoa. “So… we went to Grillby because we were concerned about the glow- and Grillby sprung it on us that well… y’know. Paps… He fainted. Dropped right where he stood, like a sack of clanky-bricks.”

He paused, and then chuckled softly. "... Make that two handfuls."
Chapter 32

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Fuck this chapter- too many people. UGH. It’s a little lacking- because Strider made the big fuck up of giving Toki so many siblings. The chapter is probably the hardest one for me to date- and it very nearly did not happen because it frustrated me this much. Ugh. As much as I would love to have all of her siblings be active things in this story- for my sanity, I am pretty sure I’m just going to stick to my favorites. –groans-

Don’t forget to come visit our tumblr! I actually got around to doing some face references for Toki- and also a human toki, which looks like utter crap, but... yeah!
Come visit us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: So sweet I think I got diabetes from this chapter.

Christmas came faster than she could have possibly thought. Toki managed to get all of the presents she needed- including a special one for Tenebris and one for Cae- and got them wrapped the morning before Christmas. The tree was heavily loaded with presents, and it wasn’t even all of them. Grillby had brought over his to put under the tree, Utaka and Kohaku had sent along their gifts because they weren’t going to be able to make it. Keri- Utaka’s wife- had promised Christmas to her family, and thus they were stuck going over to her parents place. Kohaku had work- and as a single dad, he couldn’t exactly turn down a job for a holiday.

That was fine- Toki’s house was hilariously full as it was, and the Gaster family, plus Grillby, hadn’t even arrived yet. She’d miss having her brothers and nephew there- but she’d make sure to call them and tell them the news later.

Her family was ridiculously busy- and had arrived late in the afternoon on Christmas Eve. Her mother had bustled in, arms laden with presents that went to making the mountain under the tree even bigger, and had proceeded to boot Toki out of the kitchen so that she and Sarah could take over cooking the rest of dinner. Her dad had shuffled off to the living room with her niece and nephew- and they had started to marathon Christmas movies all evening.

Her brothers, on the other hand, turned the fresh snow out in the back yard into a battlefield. They’d entertained themselves as they usually did, and had built snow forts to battle each other with. Shiro, Souta, and Kon were on a team against Roshi, Ryushi, and Han. Han’s team was dominating- and from her position up stairs, Toki could hear Souta’s frustrated swearing.

Shiro and Souta were her youngest brothers under Kon- and they were the hardest to motivate. Hence why they were still undecided in their college majors. But, like all good siblings, her brothers knew how to motivate each other. One thing someone should fear is a motivated Nara- and there was plenty of motivation making the brothers compete against each other outside.

While her family invaded her home- making it their home in the meantime just as they always did when they were all there together- Toki had retreated upstairs to get the guest rooms ready. Four rooms meant that everyone would be sharing at some point- and she had some futons for those who wouldn’t be getting a bed. Toki’s room would be housing the Gaster Family and Grillby for the night, since it was the largest room with the most floor space for absurdly tall monsters to be sleeping, and she could fit everyone comfortably within it.

She wasn’t sure how her family was going to bunk up- but that was something that they’d have to handle on their own.

Her stomach was tight with nerves about the evening- because she was going to be informing everyone of her condition once everyone gathered in the living room for nightly shenanigans. She hadn’t eaten all day- that probably didn’t help- but her anxiousness about her family’s reaction wasn’t unwarranted. Her dad was… traditional at best. She had no idea how he would react to her being pregnant and unwed- or even pregnant with a Monster’s child. Her mother was vastly less traditional than her dad was.

Hence the not eating- because she felt like her stomach was going to crawl out of her throat, and it had nothing to do with the baby in her middle.

Toki shook out the larger futons, and carefully spread them on her floor. She was leaving the bed to Tenebris for the night- because he was older, and she didn’t want him to wake up with a crick in his neck or in his back from the hard tile under the mats- so she had two sets of futons on either side of her bed. One set was for her and Aliquam- the other set was for Caeruleus and Grillby.

She smoothed out the futons and got them put together, her soul thundering quietly in her chest. Toki had no real reason to be so anxious about this everyone meeting, but hell, she couldn’t help it. She just… She wanted this to be a good holiday, and there were so many things that could royally ruin it. Her dad being an asshole was one of them. Or Kon and her dad getting into an argument. Kon and her dad were always ones to argue.

Toki collected some of the old sheets she’d taken from the guest rooms, and headed down stairs once her room was prepared. After dumping the old stuff into the wash, Toki headed back out for the main room. A knock at the door drew her attention and she went to answer it- and she silently hoped it was Aliquam, because she was sorely in need of a hug.

It wasn't her boyfriend, rather her honorary brother. "Hey there, Doll." Caeruleus said gently, looking down at her. He read something in her eyes apparently and reached out, pulling her into a gentle hug. "You doing alright?" he asked.

A hug was a hug, even if it wasn’t her boyfriend. Her honorary brother was just as good for hugs. She leaned into his hug and sighed softly. “Tired and nervous. About, y’know.” She didn’t motion or say what- her dad had keen ears, even over top of the cheesy Christmas songs coming from the movie- but it was obvious. “I’ve gotten the bedrooms ready for tonight though. ‘s good to see you, Cae. C’mon in! Your bro and Tenebris still trying to get the last of their presents wrapped?"

Claws and wrapping paper would make for a hilariously difficult time trying to do things, she figured.

"Thanks, don’t mind if I do, ’s fuckin’ cold out." he huffed, stepping inside and shivering to warm himself up before he spoke again. "Heh... Pops is having the most trouble. He, with all his dexterity with surgical procedures and dangerous chemical work, can hardly handle some flimsy paper and tape without tearing it pretty badly." he laughed.

Toki chuckled. “I had some trouble wrapping gifts too. There’s extra tape on some of them to fix the holes I made.” She reaches out and brushes her magic over his coat, warming it for him without him asking as she shuts the door behind him. “Yeah- it’s cold as heck outside, and my brothers are still out there in the middle of their snow war. Kon’s team is getting their asses handed to them.”
“Tokiko- watch your language.” Her dad calls from the main room. “Who’s that with you?”

“I’m an adult, dad,” She calls back automatically, “I’m well past the age where I have to donate to the swear jar. Also this is Caeruleus- his family is joining us for Christmas this year.”

"Nice To meet you, Mister Nara.” he called to the other room.

“You can call me Jiro, Caeruleus.” The older Japanese man peeked over the back of her couch. He looked a lot like his sons, though his hair was graying and thinning out along the top. Dark eyes glittered at them thoughtfully, and he didn’t seem too upset to see the skeleton at the door. “You’re the brother to Papyrus, correct?”

His grin was casual and relaxed as he offered the older man a wave. He then gave a nod. "That's me. He's my little bro."

Shrewd eyes watched him for a moment, before he made a soft ‘hmmm’ noise. “I see.” Jiro tilted his head quietly, and nodded slowly. “You and yours have treated my daughter well-”

“Grandpa, shh!” Dominic’s voice came from next to Jiro. “You’ll wake up Luna.”

“Sorry, Dom.” A faint chuckle softened his face.

“They’re the best, Dad.” Toki grins. She loops her arm through Cae’s, and tugs on it lightly. “I’m gonna go introduce him to Mom. You keep being the babysitter for the evening.”

“Babysitting is my thing.” He drones dryly.

“You’re the best.”

"Heh heh heh." Caeruleus laughed quietly into a fist, before he followed Toki, "Lead the way.”

Toki grinned and tugged him to the kitchen. Sarah was elbow deep in a Christmas turkey, pulling out all the little bones from inside now that it had cooled, with ear buds in her ears and the faint sound of music trickling from them. She offered them a faint wave, and resumed what she was doing. Bones were dropped onto a plate- and then she began actually carving into the meat so it could be served up.

Next to her, on a small step stool, was a tiny wisp of a woman with her gray hair tucked into a tight bun. The apron she had on was a little long, but served its purpose. She couldn’t have been any taller than five foot, if that. She was slight, with the same skin tone that Toki had when she was human, but there were some things that looked similar. The shape to her jaw, the curve of hips, how she held herself- it was all reminiscent of Toki.

“Mom,” Toki grinned, “This is Sans Caeruleus Gaster. This is Pap’s brother- Pap and their dad will be along later.” Grillby would probably be by once the bar closed up- or he finished helping Gaster. One of two options- it depended how frustrated the older monster got, and if he would actually seek help. “Cae- this is my mom. Her name is Yumei.”

Yumei dusted off her hands, and adjusted the thick glasses on her face. She turned, and squinted up at Cae quietly, before motioning for him to come closer and lean down.

Caeruleus smiled lightly as he looked at the woman, before he came closer, "Nice to meet you, Yumei." he rumbled.

Once he was closer, she reached up and clasped his skull in her small hands. She yanks him down closer, and peers up into his sockets intently. She is silent for a time, assessing him thoughtfully. She’d heard a lot about him from her daughter- a lot about everyone who was coming over, in fact. But he didn’t know that. And unlike Toki- Yumei amused herself by strange means sometimes. “You have a good soul.” She decides, smushing where his cheeks would be if he had flesh. “Loyal soul. You love your brother and your father- and someone else, I think. Yes, you are a good skeleton. Even if you have a strange taste in drinks. It is good to meet you finally, Sans. I look forwards to meeting your brother and father as well.”

Toki covers her mouth and giggles quietly. Her mom was great.

He tensed up at the gripping of his skull, then he chuckled as he smiled down at her with his usual fixed grin. She was odd- and he had no idea how she knew what she knew- but Toki’s giggle gave him a hint. "Well you're not bad at all either, ya'know."

“I would like to think so.” She pats his cheeks playfully, and then turns back to her cooking. “He is good. If his brother is like him, I approve.”

“Pap is amazing, Ma.” She grins. “I think you’ll love him. I know I do. Tenebris is pretty cool too.”

“Ah yes, Tenebris. Kon insists that he is quite the…” She seems reluctant to say it, so she simply trails off.

“Kon flirts with anything that looks delicious.” Toki chuckles. “Apparently Tenebris fell into his tastes. Bro’s weird like that. But we love him anyways, no?”

“That we do.” Yumei flashed them both a grin. “Now shoo- out of the kitchen until food is done. Why don’t you make sure that Caeruleus is up to date on his Christmas movi- HAN.” She taps a spoon on the window, and pushes it open slightly. “You put your brother down right now!”

“But Kon started it!” Han had Kon tossed over his shoulder, and was steadily going to dump him face first into a snow bank.

“I don’t care if he started it- I am finishing it, end of discussion!”

Toki giggled. “Kon always deserves it though.” She points out, grinning up at Cae with a wink. “Doesn’t he, Cae?”

"He had what he got coming to him. He's good, but I know my Dad was a heart-lyncher in his golden years." he snorted quietly

“He’s apparently still a heart-lyncher.” She chuckled slightly. Toki laughed and tugged on Cae as her mother waved her spoon at them next. “C’mom, lets scoot before she starts to fling things. She doesn’t like to cook with everyone underfoot. Or on top of her feet, given her size.”

“Tokiko Nara, if you crack one more short joke about me, I will bend you over my knee and paddle your backside, bones or no bones.”

“Yes Ma!” She laughed again, and tugged him from the kitchen. “All right. What would you like to do until everyone gets here?”

"I had a feeling you couldn't be the butt of the short joke forever.” Cae cackled.

The front door opened up, and Aliquam called out to them. “We’re here!”

“Welcome back!” Toki calls back, lightly smacking Cae’s arm as she wiggles past him to go to the Grillby slides in behind Tenebris, shutting the door firmly behind him. He has a stack of gifts in one hand, and he shuffles them from hand to hand as he shakes himself out of his jacket. “It is good to be back, Miss Toki.” He murmurs softly. “It is quite cold outside- what on earth are your brothers doing out in the chill?”

“My brothers are probably insane, and it’s best to just assume that’s the reason and leave it at that. It’s good to have you over again though, Grillby. Please, go ahead and find a place for the presents by the tree. I can take your jackets up stairs if you’d like- I need to grab the stockings anyways.” They’d need to find places for all of the Christmas stockings- and she had a feeling they would all be placed high on her wall, if not on the fireplace. Toki grins up at Tenebris as she takes Grillby’s jacket for him, and holds out her hand to take his as well. “So, I heard you’ve found that wrapping paper is pretty flimsy, huh?”

"Very funny." Tenebris chuffed, shedding his coat and dropping it on her with a teasing smirk. "You sure you can carry that, Toki?" he teased. "It's been getting colder, so my coats are heavier now."

She wiggles it off of her face and laughs up at him. His coat was heavy- ridiculously heavy, with the amount of material that made up the long surface- but she managed to keep her hold on it. “I think I can manage, Tenebris. Though,” she grins up at him teasingly, “If not, I’m sure the floors will get a proper sweeping if it has to drag the ground.”

“Unca Quinn!” There is a tiny squeak, and a white head of hair pokes up over the back of the couch. There is a grumble- Luna had obviously woken up and is obviously using her brother’s face for a step stool- but she beams at them with a tiny-toothed smile that was as white as her skin. Her ruby eyes got wide though, seeing Tenebris and the large fire monster. “Oooo.”

"Excuse you!" he chuckled, purple eyes watching her bemusedly as she headed up the stairs.

Papyrus lit up with a wide grin. "Little Luna!" he said happily, going over to deposit his armful of gifts by the tree before scooping her up. "Nyeh heh heh heh!"

Luna beamed happily as she was lifted, watching her aunt take the coats up stairs as she nestled into his arms. “Uhn!” She leaned up, eager to do the customary nose rub with the nose-less skeleton. Her glee was palpable when he leaned down and mashed the bridge of his nose to hers, and she happily giggled as she clung to his face.

“And you must be Papyrus.” Jiro waved slightly at the massive skeleton that filched his granddaughter from the couch. His gaze slipped to the large fire monster, his eyes glimmering warily as he subconsciously waited for something to catch fire. “I’m Jiro, Toki’s father. Who are you?”

“IT is a pleasure to meet you,” Grillby murmurs faintly as he slips around to place his gifts around the tree as well. It was hilariously full- and he wondered just how much paper would cover the floors come the morning after. “I am Grillby- I run the bar here in town. Your daughter graciously is having me for the holiday since I could not have my daughter here to spend it with me.” Neither of them would do well traveling in the cold- Grillby was more resilient than Fuku, but he didn’t want to risk being snuffed at any rate.

“A pleasure.” The elder man nodded, shifting as his grandson lounged across his lap.

"My name is Tenebris Gaster, I'm the Father of Sans and Papyrus." Tenebris introduced himself with a rumble.
Jiro freed himself from his grandson’s grasp so he could get up. His back popped faintly, and he hid a wince- his back wasn’t as great as it used to be any more. He padded around the couch, looking up, up, up to the face of the big monster. Jiro was approximately five foot five- and looked like a much older clone of most of his sons. He offered the big monster a hand. “Jiro Nara. You’re welcome to simply call me Jiro, though. So… our kids are dating, it appears.”

He reached out and gently took the offered hand as he looked down him. He took care not to break the human’s hand as he gave it a firm shake. “Indeed they are.” he replied, "However, I cannot help but think of the good fortune of their match. Toki is kind, and my boy is full of potential as a lover. She's in good hands."

“Personally, I try not to think of Toki’s love life.” Jiro admits, returning the firm shakes politely before releasing his hand. “I don’t know your son yet- but my daughter is an excellent judge of character. She would not be with him if she did not trust him- and I think it is for me to trust in her judgment as well. Their match is a good one, I feel.” They also fit together quite well, his skeleton daughter and her skeleton boyfriend.

“Glad you approve, Dad.” Toki rejoins them downstairs, her arms laden with several large stockings and a box of tacks. Each has a name embroidered on it- all of them having been made with everyone in mind. “So, who wants to help me get these up? For once I’m not the tallest in the house- so I get to pawn the tall people jobs off onto everyone else.”

Tenebris laughed slightly at that, and moved to take them from her. "I'll take care of those."

“Thanks, Tenebris. They go around the fire place, by the way.” The pile of cloth looks a lot smaller in his arms than it does in hers- and she grins when he sets off to do those. Toki takes a moment to bump her hip to Cae’s, pointing cheekily over to Grillby, Luna, and Papyrus.

Luna tugged slightly on Aliquam’s jaw, and pointed shyly over his shoulder towards the bigger fire monster. “Is glowy… Can touch?”

Grillby shifted where he stood, eyes flicking to the tiny albino child in Papyrus’ arms. “I suppose you can…” Grillby murmured quietly. It wasn’t like he was going to burn her- but not many asked to touch a fire elemental on the first meeting. Water elementals certainly- fire was usually viewed a bit differently.

Papyrus smiled and came over to Grillby. "Luna, this is Grillby." he rumbled gently. Luna looked at him with widening eyes, her mouth popping open. Grillby hesitated, and then offered the tiny child his massive hand. She took it, leaning back slightly in Aliquam’s arms, and ran her fingers over his palm curiously. He was warm, like holding a bottle of warm water. “Pretty~” she coos softly. “Funcle Grilly ‘s pretty!”

Grillby flushed, and rubbed his other hand over the back of his head. Funcle sounded like something Cae would come up with. "God damn that's cute." Caeruleus whispered.

“I know, right?” Toki grinned. She bumped him again playfully and leaned in to whisper to him. “He looks pretty cute with kids, don’t you think?”

"Grillby's a natural father, he raised his daughter after all." he chuckled softly in reply.

"Isn't he nice and warm, Luna?” Pap cooed.
“Uhuh!” Luna pressed her face into his palm and giggled. He was very warm- and she liked it.

Grillby smiled slightly and chuckled. “I am very warm.” He murmurs softly to her. “Do you like it?”

“Yuh!”

Toki grinned up at him cheekily. “Think he’d want more?” She asks casually.

"I don’t know...” Cae shrugged, "I mean... kids... he needs something to keep him on his feet but I think the bar does that well enough..." he chuckled faintly.

“Grillby seems the type to enjoy being kept even more on his toes.” She grins at him cheekily and wiggles her brows teasingly at him.

She startles when the back door opens, and a stampede of boots comes trampling in. Her brothers jostle out of the kitchen, tossing their things sloppily into a corner, before swooping into the kitchen. Moments later, they swarm out again, arms laden with everything to set the dining table with silverware and food.

Yumei comes out of the kitchen, drying her hands with a towel. She spots the cluster of monsters in the living room, and gives a slight whistle to gather their attention. “I see everyone’s here- come, food is ready. We can make introductions inside.”

“I already know Tenebris inside and out,” Kon wolf whistles from the dining room, but it cuts off as the sound of flesh smacking flesh rings out. “Ow!”

“Behave, Kon.”

“But-“

“Behave.”

Rolling his eyes, Tenebris felt that this was going to be another interesting evening.

Dinner was a messy and chaotic affair that lasted nearly two hours long, just from all of the talking that occurred. Potatoes had been nearly flung several times, and messes had to be scooped off the floor when slick bowls were nearly dropped. Despite the chaos, it was an amazing dinner- and went better than Toki had expected.

Kon even behaved for once- of course, with Yumei sitting next to him, any time he’d gone to say something dirty, he had gotten pinched. He’d spent the time making sad puppy eyes at Tenebris- and being mostly ignored for his efforts.

By the time that all of the food had been mostly devoured, Toki was beyond ready to sleep. Luna had already beat her to it- the little girl was sprawled out on Grillby’s shoulder, cradled against him with one hand as she drooled faintly onto his shirt. The fire elemental looked odd with the little albino sprawled against him- the glow from his body made her look even paler, but she snuggled into his warmth like a tiny leech.

Toki had things to do first before she could officially announce that it was time to go to bed- lest Santa not come. “Hey mom? Do you mind if I steal Tenebris, Pap, and Cae really quick? I need to talk to them about something.”
Yumei nodded from her seat. “That’s fine, Toki. You take all the time you need. Your father and I can handle your brothers.”

“Handle us?”

“Yes. Dishes for all of you- you spent your hours goofing off out in the ice and chill while us women spent our hours making this house livable for everyone. It is your turn.” The small Asian planted her hands on her hips and tilted them faintly.

Tenebris would recognize this as the same pose Toki had given him when he’d bitten off her hand.

The boys groaned, but began to move. A great mess of noise and stomping feet occurred as everyone gathered everything from the table, and plowed into her kitchen. Dom snagged Grillby’s hand, tugging the fire elemental away before he could be recruited into dish drying duty- and tugged him back into the living room.

Toki chuckled, watching the mayhem for a moment, before glancing down to the Gaster family. “You three don’t mind if I borrow you, right?” Only one of them didn’t know the reason. And he would find out, once she took him to her room and fetched the gift that had been left in there.

"Not at all." Pap rumbled

"If it gets me out of cleaning duty." Cae cackled before getting a smack to the back of the head from Tenebris, "Ow."

Toki rolled her eyes in her sockets, and motioned for them to follow. “Don’t worry, Cae. You get cleaning duty for breakfast tomorrow. Breakfast will be up to the boys to cook. Knowing them, they’re going to make the greasiest bacon known to mankind.” She exits the dining room, feeling sluggish and bloated from all of the food. Potatoes converted into a lot of magic surprisingly- and it made her tired and sleepy. She yawns faintly, and heads up the stairs for her room.

"Heh..." Cae chuckled quietly.

"So what is this about, Toki?" Tenebris asked, having not been leaked the news in any form.

“I actually have a gift for you, Tenebris. I wanted to give it to you here though- it's a special gift.” She had gotten Cae a t-shirt with ‘greatest pun-cle’ written on it- but that was something he didn’t know about either. He’d get that tomorrow though. He was just here because he already knew. Toki pushes into her room, stepping around one of the futons, and pads for the dresser. She snags the present off of it, and motions for Tenebris to take a seat on the bed. She wasn’t sure how it would go- but if he fainted like Aliquam had, she didn’t want him to flatten the futons. Once he’s seated, she passes him a box, “Go ahead and open it, Tenebris. It’s an early Christmas presents.” She grins, and fiddles with the edges of her sleeves as she shares an excited look with Aliquam.

Tenebris sat on the bed and watched her quietly, raising a brow. He then took the present when it was offered and he looked at it; before he used his claw to cut it open cleanly. He then looked in to see the contents.

Inside the box would be a large black beanie. Embroidered on it in purple- the same lavender color as his soul- would be the words ‘World’s Foxiest Grandpa’. It would be made of some soft and warm material.

He felt the fabric between his digits and he smiled lightly, but was confused upon reading the words.
“World’s Foxiest... Grandpa...?” he then looked up at the brothers, whom were both snickering loudly.

Toki beams at him once he’s had proper time to digest what he’s seeing, and lifts the hem of her shirt up. The green of her belly is bright against the dark red of her sweater, and her eye sockets light up happily at him. “Surprise! You’re going to be a grandpa!”

He looked at her stomach and his eyes widened in surprise. He set the beanie down on the bed, and slid off to kneel on the ground in front of her. Tenebris glanced upwards first, silently asking permission. When she nodded slightly, his eyes brightened he brushed his fingers against her stomach. It was firm, warm, and solid, and he could vaguely feel the mass of magic that was forming her womb in her lower belly. His eyes twinkled merrily for a moment. He couldn’t quite see it from this angle, but he could sense it if he focused. It was very small, very new- but undeniably there.

"This is..." his expression then settled into a calm look, and he flicked his eyes up to them slightly. "You and Papyrus are sure about this?" he asked gently, peering into her middle intently to examine the soul. He couldn’t see much- or even a speck. It was likely too new yet to get any details on it. How fascinating.

She’s not sure what he was trying to see- the soul wasn’t even two weeks old at this point, and she certainly can’t see anything inside of her middle. She’s glad he’s excited though, even if he hides it pretty well. Toki rolls her shirt up to her ribs to let him have better access, and smiles down at him crookedly. "It was actually an accident. Apparently HTM’s don’t need intent during soul play to spark off a little soul. Pap isn’t going to leave me on my own for this- though our relationship is pretty new." Toki shoots Aliquam a tender smile.

"This is... illogical and... Impossible... But..." he then smiled, "I suppose I can be considered what one could call... Pro-choice? I would love a grandchild, but if you two think you're not ready... I'll support you on either path."

Toki shook her head quietly. “I’m pro-choice too, but we didn’t really discuss getting rid of it... I mean, with humans, it’s a huge debate about when it becomes murder and stuff- but with the soul already there and visibly in existence...” Her fingers curl over her middle faintly, and she glances again to Papyrus. “I mean... if he’s not ready, I can handle being a single mother. A lot of women end up doing it, believe it or not.”

"No," Aliquam hugged her firmly from behind, leaning down and pressing his face into the back of her skull with a purr. "I'd never do such a thing as leave you to do it alone. It's mine too- and as weird as it is, I don't mind being a dad."

Toki smiled happily down at Tenebris, and curled her fingers over Pap’s as they braced on her upper abdomen. “Well, there’s your answer. So yeah- you’re going to be a grandpa, Tenebris. Ready to learn with me how an HTM pregnancy works?"

"For once, I will not be the mentor in the lesson of life." he chuckled quietly.

“Nope.” She chuckles softly. Toki taps her middle and sighs softly. “I can’t wait until we can actually see the soul. Heh. We’re flying blind here- I think the only one who knows much about it is Grillby- but he knows legitimate skeletons, not ones with human souls.”

"Mmm..." he smiled and got back to his feet, and then he looked down at her. "I have something for you..." he said gently, picking up the beanie and putting it on. "Comfy~"

“We’re glad you like it.” Toki grinned up at him. She shoos Pap’s fingers from her middle and sets her shirt in place. “Have something for me? But shouldn’t it wait until tomorrow- Pap, lemme gooooo. You can hold me later tonight. Baby and I aren’t going anywhere.”

"NYEH! I sha’nt!" He then scooped her up bridal style. "Nyeh heh heh heh~"

Toki squeaked and curled her arms around his neck. She laughed, her legs dangling over the edges of his arms. “Oh my god Pap,” she laughed, “It’s been a while since you’ve done this. Well- if you’re not going to let me down, will you follow your dad?”

When he brought them downstairs, Toki laughing all the way, she was faced with the sight of her curious brothers staring at the both of them. She waved at them with a grin, and pointed Pap towards the empty side of the couch. “Tally-ho my handsome steed!”

He laughed and trotted over to the couch, dropping her off while Tenebris came over with a box.

Toki settled on the couch eagerly, peering up at him with curiosity. “So, what’s in the box?”

"Your present." He answered, holding it to her.

Her brothers loitered curiously around the room, while Grillby scooted out to give them space. Toki took the box, settling it in her lap. It was heavy, and she took care to unwrap it so she didn’t damage anything inside. Inside the box was… “A book?” She blinked. She pulled it gingerly from the box, before flipping it open.

Her jaw fell open, and tears beaded at her eyes.

These… Were the pictures that she had lost in the fire. Not all of them- but… But there were a lot of them. “Oh my gods…” She whispered.

“Holy crap- didn’t you say those went up in the fire?” Han blinked, leaning over the back of the couch. “I remember that one! It was your first time meeting a cow- and the first time you got licked by one. I remember how tall your hair stood after it licked you.”

“Cow spit makes great hair gel,” Roshi grinned.

"I salvaged as many as I could before they cleared the rubble" Tenebris murmured gently as she looked through the photo album.

Toki’s sockets watered more, and she gently slid the book off of her lap. She took a step back onto the couch, and then used the added height to throw her arms around Tenebris’ shoulders with a loud sniffle. “Thank you. Thank you so much…” She managed, before dissolving into happy tears.

Yumei smiled quietly. “These pictures mean a lot to all of us… Thank you, Tenebris.”

Catching Toki, Tenebris didn't reply, just pressed his face into her shoulder and started to purr loudly.

Grillby smiled quietly, and nudged Caeruleus, slowly pushing the shorter skeleton towards the corner of the doorway. “So, did you know about this?”

"The photo album? No. But this explains his disappearance on those nights a while back.” Caeruleus replied quietly.

“Hmm. I see…” Grillby eyed the ceiling lightly, and once he was in position, he grinned. Slowly, he turned Cae so he faced him, and then motioned with a brow towards the ceiling.
And the mistletoe that dangled slightly above them. “So… I have a question for you, Caeruleus.”

He tilted his head back and blinked as he saw the mistletoe, before he looked at the Elemental.

Grillby gave him a roguish grin, and crouched down slightly. His mouth closed gently over Cae’s for a short, sweet kiss as was tradition. “Will you,” he murmured softly against the skeleton’s teeth, “allow me to court you properly?”

"... Court me... Grillbz holy shit...” he murmured, his cheeks flushing.

“Is that a yes~?” The fire monster murmured warmly, eyes searching the other’s sockets. It wouldn’t be much different than what he had been doing already- but it would be putting a title to Grillby’s actions.

After moment, he let out a soft ‘heh’, before he began to laugh, and he hugged Grillby tightly, "F-Fuck yeah!"

“Language!” Jiro barked from somewhere in the hoard of his sons.

Grillby laughed and swung the skeleton up into his arms for a deeper kiss.

Kon wolf whistled, and grinned. “Oooo hell yes, kiss him deeper! Use some fire tongue! Turn that skull into a jack-o-lantern, hot stuff!”

He kissed him for a while, then his eye lit up and he immediately sent bones flying at Kon.

Kon shrieked and dodged, flailing backwards over one end of the couch.

Grillby laughed softly, and leaned in to whisper to Caeruleus. “Later,” he rumbled softly, words thick with promise.

“No magic in such crowded areas, Caeruleus.” Yumei scolded softly. “Kon got what he deserved. Hmph… Hmmm…?” Her eyes locked onto Tenebris’ beanie, and she tilted her head. Adjusting her glasses, she squinted and read it. “World’s Foxiest Grandpa...?”

Toki sniffled slightly and pulled back from Tenebris. Oh yeah. His beanie. Shit. Well, there went the surprise. Rubbing her sockets, Toki giggled quietly and turned to her family. “Yeah. It’s his first grandbaby- and your fourth one. So, ah… Surprise? I’m pregnant?”

“We’re going to be Uncles! Again! FUCKING FINALLY!” Han whooped.

Her dad sputtered, nearly choking on his drink. “But you’re not even married yet!” he sounded positively scandalized.

“I’m going to be a grandma again!” Yumei’s face stretched into a brilliant grin, her eyes twinkling merrily.

Caeruleus’ cheekbones went dark, and he hid his face in his now-certified boyfriend’s chest as the various sounds of celebration and shock began rupturing from the occupants of the living room.

"YOU’RE NOT EVEN MARRIED YET!” Echoed again, louder this time.
Chapter 33

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This may prove to be the second hardest chapter. Agh. –groans- I officially hate doing holiday chapters. On another note, this one focuses a lot on Han, actually. It was fun exploring a little bit of his character. Also- yes, i mentioned on my blog that i am not particularly religious- and neither is Toki. Hence why she says 'gods' a lot of the time, instead of any variant. Anywho- she sings one of my fav Christmas songs simply because i enjoy it. :) And it was either this one, or a bastardized version of Jingle Bells.

Don't forget to come visit us at our blog! You can come visit us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Christmas morning had been chaotic from start to finish. Not in the bad sense- but in the busy sense. Toki had woken up early to the sounds of her brothers making a mess of her kitchen, and breakfast itself had been one huge mess. At least it had been tasty- her brothers were decent cooks when it came to breakfast.

Opening presents had been a feat unto itself. No one had imagined the amount of paper that could come off of so many boxes- they’d actually had Grillby burn the pile in the fire place half way through opening gifts. Admittedly, some of the paper was from Cae’s shirt. She’d wrapped the box about eleven times, mostly just to frustrate him with how many layers he’d had to dig through.

Everyone got a lot of things. Most of the gifts were admittedly for the kids, but everyone got a little bit of some things. The gifts for Utaka, Kohaku, and Mirou were set to the side to be taken to them once everyone left the compound. Toki had gotten a couple medical textbooks for Tenebris, on top of a dark custom-sized fedora. She’d gotten Grillby an apron with ‘So hot, too hot’ written on it. Cae had gotten the shirt, and a book on puns. For Papyrus, Toki had a harder time choosing, but she ended up getting him a book on Italian cuisine, a new scarf, and a couple books with the hardest puzzles she could find.

Her youngest brothers, still in college, got several textbooks that they would need for the next semester, and a couple pre-loaded gift-cards for one of the local coffee shops around their campus. Kon got a new tablet for his computer, and she got Roshi a set of leg-weights. Toki had shelled out for Han too- she’d shelled out to get him a new violin and carrying case for it. Ryushi and Sarah had gotten a joint gift from her in the form of new knives for both their restaurant and their home kitchen.

Her mom and dad got a couple magic-enchanted blankets for their home life.

Toki on the other hand ended up with hoards of quilts and hilarious little bee-related things. Outside of Tenebris’ gift, Grillby’s was the most touching. He’d presented it as a gift to both her and Papyrus. The fire elemental had apparently contacted Muffet- and had her rush order a pair of little onesies. They came decorated like bees, with little stripes and fabric stingers and wings, and were matching in all except color. One matched the color of her magic- the other matched the color of Aliquam’s magic.

It had moved her damn near to tears.
The vast part of the day was spent handling her family treating her like she was glass- apparently being able to physically see her pregnancy had them on edge, just because it wasn’t coated in protective muscles and fat layers. It was very sweet- but very tiresome too.

She’d made her phone calls later in the day- and had been rewarded with excited whoops from both of her quieter brothers. Mirou was excited too- but he was vastly quieter about it than his father had been.

The day went had gone well, as did the next. The next was the last day before everyone would leave- and so it found most everyone outside and romping through the freshly fallen snow.

Everyone was spread out, mostly doing their own thing in the center park in the village. Toki had bundled up and was nestled against the base of one of the trees with Tenebris, quietly keeping an eye on everything as her brother’s romped and caused general mayhem with each other while she kept the big monster from getting too cold. Her brothers were currently deep into a playful brawl, and were trying to coax Aliquam into it with them.

Aliquam was less into the idea, moreso in his new puzzle book. Already he was a few pages into it. Though there was a glint in his eyes as he seemed to continue to lure the attention of the boys back to him, keeping them from asking Caeruleus to join them.

Speaking of, where was he anyhow?

He was in the shadows, stirring trouble that would spell a messy end for their lovely guests' snow-fight.

Tenebris had happily worn his new fedora with his coat outside, mentioning how it 'reminded him of the 40's' with it's relation to the long coat, before he took to reading into the medical textbooks, curious about human health. As he read, his pipe bounced in his teeth with idle movement of his jaw

Han stayed out of most of the rough housing, and chose to instead take up post near the play set. He was fiddling with his violin, toying with the strings and the sound settings while he watched Dom play with his little sister on the swings. Several other monster kids were with them- they were highly curious about Luna and her odd coloration.

The little girl had been liberally smeared in sun block, because it wasn’t an overcast day. It made her white skin even paler- but it was worth it to keep her from getting a burn from the sun reflecting on the snow.

Han laughed quietly, and set the fiddle to his shoulder. He decided to pick up the tune from one of Charlie Daniel’s songs, and began to mutter the lyrics to it quietly as he got the strings adjusted accordingly for it. Just because he couldn’t sing worth a damn didn’t mean that he didn’t enjoy attempting anyways. “The devil went down to Georgia. He was lookin' for a soul to steal. He was in a bind 'cause he was way behind, and he was willin' to make a deal. When he came across this young man sawin' on a fiddle and playin' it hot, the devil jumped up on a hickory stump and said, 'Boy, let me tell you what. I guess you didn't know it but I'm a fiddle player, too. And if you'd care to take a dare, I'll make a bet with you. Now, you play pretty good fiddle, boy, but give the devil his due. I'll bet a fiddle of gold against your soul, 'cause I think I'm better than you.'”

He tweaked the tune again, and found the perfect spot. His pace picked up, and he set the violin into the first real song it had probably ever played. When his sister gifted him instruments, she usually went all out- and he was not disappointed. “The boy said, ‘My name's Johnny, and it might be a sin. But I'll take your bet, you're gonna regret, 'cause I'm the best that's ever been.’. Johnny, rosin up your bow and play your fiddle hard, 'cause hell's broke loose in Georgia and the devil deals the cards.
And if you win you get this shiny fiddle made of gold. But if you lose, the devil gets your soul.”

“That’s a bad word, mister.”

Han startled, his bow making a shrill sound, and turned to see a little girl peering at him curiously. Bright green eyes twinkled at him— but the most startling fact was that this girl was human. He was used to the monster kids— he hadn’t been expecting a human child to be here for the holidays. Though, it occurred to him that it really shouldn’t be that odd. Toki had told him about the HTM and the human woman that had come calling with bad intentions. Han had every intention of getting Toki some sort of weapon. “Ah… Hell isn’t a bad word. It’s a place.”

"Sis." A human boy joined the girl near Han and took her hand, before looking up at Han with a warily curious look. At least until there was the calling of the children’s names.

"Rosie, Felix!" It was Todd, his bright red fur was combed back and had been trimmed so it was a little easier to care for, but his tail stayed bushy as ever. He came over and smiled at his children, gaze pulling to Han once he discerned that his kids were okay. "So you're the source of the mean string pulling. Your skill is remarkable!" he praised.

Han flushed and scrubbed a hand over the back of his neck. “Ah… Thanks, I guess… I’m nowhere near as good as Charlie Daniels. These your kids?” He offered a shy smile up to the fox man. He thought the HTM was a fox, but… “I-if not, sorry for assuming. My sister told me about another HTM here, but… I don’t really recall what sort of monster she said they were. Ah- I’m Han, by the way. Han Nara.”

"Todd Hanes, and you're right, I’m that HTM. These two are mine." he smiled back, hugging his children when they came to him. "It's nice to meet you, Han. You're related to Toki? I'm glad there's more than one Nara in the world. One just wouldn't be enough to make up.”

Han stands, gathering his instrument in one hand and offering a broad hand to the taller fox. He smiled up at him quietly. “They’re cute kids. Heh. Makes me miss my students. Everyone’s off for the holidays back in the city. Ah… Well, there’s actually eight of us boys, and then Toki, so there’s nine of us total. It’s nice to meet you, Todd. And you too, Rosie, Felix.”

“It’s nice to meet you too, Mister Nara!” Rosie beamed up at him brightly, snuggling into her dad’s side. She fists her little fingers in his coat, and giggles slightly. “I like your songs. Except the naughty words. They’re bad.”

"The word he said isn't as bad as you think, Rosie." Felix insisted, before looking up at Han, "Nice to meet you too."

Han offered the boy a hand too, and grinned at him slightly. “It’s still not a word that you kids should be saying. It might be a place- but it’s still also not quite something little ones should be saying. So, did you all have a good Christmas?”

"I think this is the best Christmas we've had in a long time." Todd answered with a smile, "This perfect snowfall, it's like magic.”

“Well, given that actual magic exists, it’s little surprise that the snow is so perfect.” He grins quietly. “Usually we’re four feet deep into a snow storm at this time. I’m glad you had a good Christmas though, despite what all happened to you. So, uh… if you kids want to go play, you can. I promise my brothers don’t bite.”

Well, Kon might, once Kon caught sight of Todd. But Han’s younger brother was a bit of a freak-and everyone knew it. “So, Toki told me you worked in the medical field?”

The kids were let loose to go play while Todd talked to Han. "That's right, I worked at the hospital in the city before I changed."

Han motioned for the fox to join him on the play equipment, and then took his seat once more. “Ebott City, right? Heh. Small world. That’s where I got my teaching degree at.”

Todd smiled at him and settled next to him. His tail swished slightly as he got comfortable on the cold surface of the play set. "Yeah... What college did you go to?"

“Ebott City University. I got my tuition paid by the military. Heh.” He wiggles his violin. “I’m a music teacher. I actually teach here on the weekends- but I haven’t been able to make it here on account of the weather as of late. What about you?” He idly hefts his violin, and begins to play a soft tune. It was an original one, befitting the calm peace the snow had brought.

Though it wasn’t so much peace- Kon was shrieking, dancing around and trying to shake snow out of his too tight jeans. That’s what he got for wearing skinny jeans to a snow brawl.

Unfortunately, his skinny jean struggle was about to become worse. As Caeruleus soon appeared, grinning wider than usual with mischievous intent.

"Same! I got a scholarship." he replied with a smile. Todd leaned back and relaxed, smiling as he listened to the gentle music, "Mmm, I'm thinking this is far better than the city..." he sighed, "It's much nicer, living out here."

“That’s good!” Han chuckled softly. He rolled his eyes, watching the mayhem unfold. “I couldn’t get one- and I refused to let mom and dad pay for it. Military offered full payment for one degree- and I took it.” Some days he wondered if it was worth it, really. “Yeah… it’s peaceful here. The city hasn’t been very good to me as of late.” He muses quietly. “Part of me wonders if Toki has room here for me again…” It wasn’t fair to his sister though, for him to come and go and come back again. Not while she was dealing with so much- and being pregnant? Hell, he was one more stress she absolutely did not need.

“C-Caeruleus! Don’t you dare!” Kon, with one arm shoved down the back of his pants, kicked snow at the larger skeleton. “Sans!”

He cackled lowly and used his magic, suddenly two large Gaster blasters made of snow lifted from the ground and both opened their mouths widely.

Kon about shat his pants. He yelped, watching the snow forms for half a second, before he took off across the snow. He ran funny, ice still packed in the back of his pants, but he booked it, a shriek escaping him as he made a beeline for one of the other trees. “You asshole! Don’t you dare!”

Todd took some time to respond, but he eventually laughed softly. He too was watching the mayhem happening. "I'm sure there's enough room, Han. I'm sure you'd fit right in."

“It’s not so much about fitting in.” Han smiles wryly. “It’s about it staying that way. I was out here a couple times before- but it got too quiet for me with just Toki out here. The city has a bit too many people- too many people who like firecrackers.”

"FIRE IN THE HOLE!" he yelled, before the blasters unleashed their fury, literally, in a cannon blast of snow that flew at Kon.

"Well regardless, I’m sure if you tried, then you'd be able to fi-" he was cut off as he heard the maniacal cackle of Caeruleus accompanying Kon’s yells as the skeleton chased after him.

Kon’s shrieks grew as the ice knocked him right off of his feet. He landed face first in the snow, and scrambled back to his feet to try and escape.

Roshi laughed heartily and gave chase, playfully chucking a snowball at Caeruleus’ back. “Hey! Only we get to pick on our little brother!”

“A little late to my defense, don’t you think?” The younger snarled, shaking himself off behind the tree.

Han laughed heartily, his music trailing off as he set his instrument next to him. “Heh. Kon probably earned that. Heheheh. I know Toki’d find a place for me in a heartbeat, but I don’t know what I could give back to her. She’s got a lot on her plate- and she gives too much of herself to others sometimes.”

"As soon as my brother marries your sister, he'll be my brother too!" he laughed.

"Do what you can for the other monsters here." he answered, "You would make a great music teacher."

“We’ll all be your brothers then! Which means…” Ryushi gave Roshi a boost, and sent the personal trainer crashing onto Cae’s shoulders.

Roshi caught him in a gentle headlock, and rubbed his knuckles lightly against the top of his skull. “Brothers get NOOGIES!”

“And ice down their pants!” Kon darted back for them, now that Cae was covered by his two brothers. Ice and sleet is shoved liberally towards the skeleton’s pants.

Han snorted faintly, watching them ‘take vengeance’ on the skeleton. “I would be… heh. Maybe. I’ll think on it… So what about you? Are you going to resume your practice here? They don’t seem to have any actual doctors besides Tenebris and Toki’s boyfriend. Speaking of… any chance you know prenatal things?” Tenebris might end up picking the fox’s brain if he did.

"OH GA-COME ON!" he yelled out, shaking his head and trying to get free from them, "GUYS!"

"Well of course!” he replied with a smile, "Prenatal huh? Explain"

“Brotherly love!” Roshi’s knuckles scrubbed at his skull again, and, like his sister, he showed a remarkable skill for hanging on when attempting to be shaken off. “Shhhh, just take it. Just take it aaaaaalll in.”

“Allll of it,” Ryushi grinned. The eldest brother shifted, and aimed to take out the skeleton’s legs. Yeah, it would drop the big monster on him- but it would ‘take him down’ a notch.

“Well… I’m not supposed to tell anyone though… But I guess if you’re going to be staying, you’ll know soon enough.” He leaned closer and whispered quietly. “Toki’s pregnant.”

"You guys SU-aaahh!” he yelped out as he fell.

"Really?” he inquired, gaze flicking over to the human next to him.

Han nodded to the taller fox monster and smiled faintly. “Yeah. I’m gonna be an uncle again. We have to keep it quiet though- there are humans out there who wouldn’t be happy about the baby.
Anyways- you’re an HTM, so you’re going to want to talk to Tenebris about the soul stuff. I didn’t understand most of it- but I guess it ties in to how Toki ended up pregnant.”

The skeleton was suddenly piled upon by a good chunk of the Nara brothers- and those who didn’t pile on began the effort to pack the pudgy skeleton in the snow while the rest kept him still, regardless of Ryushi being trapped under him or not. Sacrifices must be made, after all. The brother below the skeleton wiggled and prodded him teasingly, his muffled laugh trailing upwards.

“Ah, ah, ah, is that any way to speak to your future brothers? Whenever the two love birds pop the question, you’ll never be able to be rid of us.” Roshi grinned.

"I gotcha." Todd nodded in understanding, smiling gently. "I am rather intrigued with how this goes.”

“Yeah. You’ll have to talk to Tenebris some. Toki got him some medical books, but they’re flying blind as far as I know.” He shrugs faintly, and props his chin on his palm. “So you never did answer- do you know prenatal things? Toki didn’t really know much about what you did at the hospital. Were you a nurse?”

"I was, yes, so I do know things of the sort." he replied, smiling gently.

"YOU GUYS SUCK!" Caeruleus yelled again, "Let go of me! I look like a fucking... UGH!"

“Nice tits Cae! You a double ‘d’ snowball, or…?” Kon leaned down to press two mounds of snow to his chest, grinning at him cheekily. “I must say, you make a mighty fine snow-maid~”

Han snickered, and grinned slightly to Todd. “That’s pretty cool. People who can heal are amazing. I have immense respect for folks who can help the wounded. Though I will admit- army medics can put the fear of the gods into a man sometimes.”

"Grrrr..." he glared up at them all, then he turned his attention to Kon, "I'm going to shove so much snow in your pants," he hissed, "It'll run out of space and go up your ASS!"

"Army medics." he chuckled at that, "It's the 'Nurses' that everyone likes."

“Oooo, ice play,” Kon leaned down and gave Cae a flirty grin. “I’d like that~ Is that just empty words, or is that a promise, big guy?”

“Ew bro, that’s gross!”

“It’s only gross to those who haven’t tried it yet!”

Han choked slightly on his saliva and worked to clear his airways as he nodded to Todd. “Eheh, yeah, uh, Army nurses take no shit either. Heh. But you stay on their good side, and they’re quite pleasant. Heh. So... Where are you staying? I didn’t see you at Toki’s place for Christmas. Do you have a house of your own?"

"I'm staying with some monsters, they took me in while we find a more permanent residence.”

He nods quietly. “That makes sense. They’re constantly building new houses- I’m certain you’ll have a place of your own soon. This place is getting huge... it seems so much more vast than the compound I grew up in. All eighty something of us used to live in the compound buildings until my grandparents passed.”

"That sounds like it was wonderful.” He makes a soft pleased sound. “This land is so... lush. It’s “This isn’t even all of it.” He chuckles quietly. “Toki has hundreds of miles of land. We used to take family camping trips when we were younger, and it would take us days to work through everything. Heh. We haven’t done that in years- frankly, mom and dad are too old to be crawling up the back mountains like they used to.” And getting lost in the woods didn’t interest him anymore. Knowing Toki, in a couple years this whole place would become a city for the monsters.

He shook his head wryly, and watched his siblings finish encasing Cae in snow. They yanked Ryushi out from under him by his ankles, and then proceeded to run the hell away before the skeleton could get himself free from the snow. “Heh. Maybe I’ll ask Toki to section me off a small plot. Maybe settle down- start a gardening business or something. Something peaceful, alongside teaching of course. Music isn’t something taught often anymore, sadly. But maybe I’d have better luck with work with the monster schools?”

Toki had mentioned them finally putting in an official building here soon. Maybe he could get on working there or something… it would technically be falling under a government funded job, ironically enough, given the still in-progress negotiations that were happening. He heard news of the monsters possibly getting rights to own land, and to finally get vehicles and licenses of their own.

HAM would have a field day with that. He wondered if the phone calls he kept getting would get worse.

Todd laughed quietly, rubbing his head with his palms before resting them in his lap once more. His tail swayed behind him as he looked away for a moment, before looking back at Han. "You’d make a great music teacher. Unless they happen to own instruments that we don’t have up here.” he snorted.

Han offered him a wry grin. “I own all of the instruments that I bring here. I let my students use them- so it’s likely that I wouldn’t have much of an issue with instruments and the like. Heh. I’ll talk to Toki about it. It’ll probably be a while before they get the school up though. So… is there anything you’d like me to play for you in the mean time?”

"Well there's an idea." he chuckled, before he looked at him thoughtfully. "Well... if you're offering..." Todd propped his chin in his palm, watching him through blue eyes. He seemed to contemplate what song he wanted to hear.

“Toki mentioned putting in an official building here soon. Maybe I could get on working there or something... it would technically be falling under a government funded job, ironically enough, given the still in-progress negotiations that were happening. He heard news of the monsters possibly getting rights to own land, and to finally get vehicles and licenses of their own.

HAM would have a field day with that. He wondered if the phone calls he kept getting would get worse.

Todd laughed quietly, rubbing his head with his palms before resting them in his lap once more. His tail swayed behind him as he looked away for a moment, before looking back at Han. "You’d make a great music teacher. Unless they happen to own instruments that we don’t have up here.” he snorted.

Han offered him a wry grin. “I own all of the instruments that I bring here. I let my students use them- so it’s likely that I wouldn’t have much of an issue with instruments and the like. Heh. I’ll talk to Toki about it. It’ll probably be a while before they get the school up though. So... is there anything you’d like me to play for you in the mean time?”

"Well there's an idea." he chuckled, before he looked at him thoughtfully. "Well... if you're offering..." Todd propped his chin in his palm, watching him through blue eyes. He seemed to contemplate what song he wanted to hear.

“I could resume the one I was playing before... Oh! What about Silent Night? It's a bit... late, I guess, but we might be able to heckle Toki into singing the lyrics for us. She does the softer songs better.”

He blinked, and then he laughed. "Well, tis' the season isn't it?"

“I guess so, yeah.” Han grinned at him cheekily, and stood up. Gathering his instrument closer, he cupped a hand to his mouth and shouted across the park for his sister. “Hey! Toki! Get your ass over here!”

“What for?” She calls back.

“I’m gonna play a Christmas song! Silent Night!”

“And you want me to sing it?”

“Well yeah!”
The eldest sibling groans and gets to her feet. She offers Tenebris a grin, and pads for the play set. She’s closely followed- her younger brothers leave Caeruleus to his fate under the lightly packed snow, and flood towards the play set. Her niece and nephew are tossed onto their shoulders- and Rosie and Felix find themselves astride her brother’s shoulders as well.

“Fuck yeah! I love when Toki sings Christmas songs!”

Toki laughs slightly, and turns when she reaches her brother. Her hands are stuffed into her pockets, and she grins across the gaggle of her family and friends. A couple of monster kids wander over too.

“Hey Pap! You said you played the violin too. Think you’ve heard Silent Night enough over my phone to play with my bro?”

Aliquam grinned at her and closed his book. It’s tucked under his arm as he gives her a wave and a nod. "Worth a try!" he said happily, going inside to get his violin.

Thankfully his house was pretty much right in front of the park- so he didn’t have to go far to get his instrument.

Toki grinned cheerily, and peered at Han and Todd while they waited for Papyrus to fetch his instrument. “So, are you serenading Todd, Han?”

Han flushed but grinned and lightly socked her in the shoulder in revenge. “Hardly- you’re going to be serenading us all. You know I play better than I sing.”

“Far too true.”

"Good thing she's already taken by Pap, huh Toki?” Cae joked from where was trying to get his body out of from under the snow packed around him.

“Damn straight!” She grins back. Toki watches him struggle in silent amusement. If he had been legitimately stuck, she’d have sent her bees to melt the snow- but given how it was flaking off around him, she didn’t think he needed it.

Han snorted a laugh, and carefully checked the tuning on his instrument. It was good enough for Silent Night, he thought. “So, you good to sing it? Don’t need a drink of water?”

“I don’t have a throat to lubricate, Han. Or vocal chords for that matter. Magic is pretty awesome like that.” She perks, spotting Aliquam coming back out. “Did you find your violin, Pap?”

"Yes I did!" he laughed happily, approaching with long strides. "It's still tuned right too!"

“Good!” She grins back to him. Toki steps further down, making room for Aliquam to join her brother in standing atop the stairs to the play set.

“Go ahead and warm up, Papyrus.” Han gives him a cheery salute with his bow. “You know the gist of the song, right?”

"I do indeed." he replied, giving a few plays of the notes on the strings. He’d listened to her Christmas play list on her new phone far, far too many times. Once he was sure he was good to go, Aliquam nodded eagerly to Han. "Ready!"

“Alright!” Han readied his violin, and began the opening chorus. The sounds that floated from his violin were sweet and gentle, and he cycled through the opening chorus once, before bringing it back around to cue Toki.
Taking position near Han, Aliquam finished rosinning his bow, and tightened it in time to take over playing in rhythm with him.

When her cue came, Toki was ready. She laced her hands against her front and leaned her shoulder into the railing. Her mouth opened slightly to give a clearer sound, and she began to sing. “Silent night!” Her voice drawled slowly to the tune of the violins. “Holy night! All is calm all is bright. Round yon virgin mother and child. Holy infant, so tender and mild. Sleep in heavenly peace! Sleep in heavenly peace!” Her words trailed off as she waited for the music to trail to the next point where she needed to begin. In the meantime, she took a moment to observe the crowd.

Her brothers were silent, watching her with open glee. She wasn’t the best singer- but she’d used to sing all of them to sleep on nights where they had nightmares. It brought good memories to all of them. Even Tenebris and Caeruleus were watching- and she gave them a cheery wave.

When the musical cue came up once more, Toki shifted positions slightly and began to sing the next part. “Silent night! Holy night! Shepherds quake at the sight. Glories stream from heaven afar. Heavenly hosts sing Hallelujah, Christ the Savior is born! Christ the Savior is born!” She might not have strictly believed in one god- or any particular religion in general- but she did vastly enjoy this song.

Toki took a moment to draw in a breath, giving the guys time for them to roll through the instrumental parts. Waiting to sing was always the hardest part- she didn’t want to miss her signal, or she’d die of embarrassment. When it came time for her to sing again, she found herself quietly swaying with the tunes of the violins. Her sockets closed, and she simply rolled with the music, voice reflecting the soft duet of the violins behind her. “Silent night! Holy night! Son of God, love's pure light. Radiance beams from thy holy face, with the dawn of redeeming grace. Jesus, Lord at thy birth. Jesus, Lord at thy birth.”

The longer instrumental part would come next, she knew. The song itself was fairly short- but the slow tone of the lyrics made it seem longer than it was.

As it rolled around for her to sing again, Toki’s voice deepened, taking on a softer, quieter sound that wafted over the snow. “Silent night~ Holy night. Shepherds quake at the sight. Glories stream from heaven afar. Heavenly hosts sing Hallelujah, Christ the Savior is born~ Christ the Savior is born…”

As the final notes passed, Aliquam lowered his violin to hear the crowd that had gathered cheer for them.

Han dropped his as well and laughed gleefully. He hadn’t been paying much mind- but several monsters had wandered over to the gaggle of Naras and had listened in apparently. His gaze dropped though, looking to see how Todd enjoyed the show.

Toki flushed brightly, and slipped upwards to bump back against Aliquam. “Glad you all enjoyed it,” she chuckles softly. She tilts her head up and winks at him. “Did you have fun? You play really good.”

Todd was smiling brightly, having been entranced in awe while he listened to the performance.

Aliquam wrapped his arms around her and pressed his teeth into the back of her skull with a gentle kiss. "I had fun, oh yes~" he laughed softly.

Toki grinned up at him widely and nuzzled leaned into his embrace contently.

Han just grinned, and laughed happily.
Sometimes a little bit of music in the snow was just the way the day needed to go.

“What wants another song?”

Almost immediately the crowd cheered, eager for another performance.
Chapter 34

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This one is one I really a lot~ hehe, it’s cute and relaxing and very sweet. Also Silverwing needs to go to the shame corner for MAKING PUNs IN THE AUTHORS NOTES.

Don't forget to join us on our blog! I’ll be uploading an art pic pertaining to this chapter here soon :) You can find us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: This chapter has a pleasant surprise to it, Sweet as cake, fluffy as the icing on top, ahhh it has me in tiers~

Enjoy the chapter folks, happy reading!

New years came and passed, with fireworks being had and a festival being thrown. Half the village ended up drunk off their asses- but it was a good show, and a wonderful start to the New Year.

Everyone watched the fireworks from either in the middle of the park, or on top of the roofs of their homes. It was a beautiful display- and well worth the money that was shelled out for it. It wasn’t nearly as good as the display from the City- but they had no way to move seven hundred monsters that far to see them. So… her display worked for now.

The days rolled by as January came into full swing, and Toki found herself busier than ever. Asgore was making progress with the governments of the world, finally. There was talk of monsters finally getting human rights- and no longer being considered her ‘wards’ as it were. There was solid talk of monsters being able to purchase the houses that they lived in now, and of monsters being able to finally get driving licenses. Car company’s were also eager to get in on the latter- they wanted the chance to make specialty cars that catered specifically to monster clients. Currency was also being transferred over- and it turned out that the monster’s currency traded up very, very nicely into human money.

Toki would have to teach the monsters how to drive- given that she was the only one on the property who could legally hold a license and legally drive. It wasn’t going to be fun- but it would be nice to be able to see some of them driving if Asgore could get the law passed to secure their rights.

As houses went up and more monsters moved in, she had to handle the possibilities of human settlements coming in. A company called Tall-mart wanted to put up a store near the village- and there was talk of a police department and fire department. All of them would be manned by human and monster staff- in the first true start of integrating the two societies together.

It was busy and a lot of stress on her- and it wasn’t hard to realize why she completely forgot about her birthday. She spent most of the morning of the twentieth bent over her dining room table punching numbers into her calculator and figuring out the best possible places to fit the new ‘jobs’ of sort that would be opening up soon.

Toki gnawed on her pen, not even paying attention to the time as she stared down at the forms. The words were blurring together slightly, but she forced herself through it to continue looking them over. She wasn’t even entirely sure what this form was about anymore- but it was important, and she had to sign it, so she’d rather not sign her soul away if she didn’t have to.

“Ugh…” She groans quietly, scrubbing her palm over her face as she toys with the cap of her pen. It wasn’t long until a gentle pair of arms wrapped around Tokiko, pulling her away from the table and into a warm embrace. "Toki." It was Aliquam gently purring in her ear, his hold on her securing her against him. "You’re working too hard." he sighed quietly, "Do you remember what day it is?" he asked softly.

She startled, not having expected to be hugged- but relaxed when familiar bony arms settled around her. She leaned back slightly, and angled her skull so she could peer up at him blankly for a moment, thoroughly gnawed upon pen still clutched between her fangs. “It’s work that has to be done though, Pap. It’s important for all of you.” Her brows furrowed slightly. “What day…? No? I know it’s the twentieth and these papers have to be mailed out tomorrow if I agree to the terms…” She was completely drawing a blank as she settled contently in his grasp. “What was important about the twentieth?”

"Toki, you mean you forgot the meeting conference at Grillby’s tonight?!" he insisted, before he nuzzled and began to nip at her neck teasingly. "Tsk tsk tsk!"

Horror stretched her sockets. She didn’t… remember a conference meeting at Grillby’s. “Shit!” She squirmed in his grasp, managing a slight giggle from his nips, and leaned forwards to gather her papers into a jumbled pile to be handled later. “Oh my god, I didn’t even remember there was one today! How late am I? Oh gods, shit, I hope they’re not too upset…”

"You're actually like... only a minute or two! Come on! I'll meet you there!"

“That’s fine, that’s fine! I need to find my shoes- please let them know how sorry I am about that.” She wiggles out of her chair, and bustles to go find her coat and shoes.

"Of course!" He made sure she didn't see his grin as he ran out of the house.

Toki wasn’t out of the house that much later than he was- perhaps a minute or three- but he was already long gone out of sight by the time she took off after him. She’d taken a moment to change into a nice orange turtleneck- it didn’t match well with the blue of her sweat pants, but eh, she didn’t really care about matching colors.

They all blurred together as she set out at a fast jog for Grillby’s anyways. She was already late- no need to break her neck on any slick spots in a mad dash for the bar.

It wouldn’t take her long to get there anyways. The blinds were down, which was typical for meetings that were supposed to be private. Guilt gnawed at her- Grillby lost business when the bar was closed for long meetings, and she had no idea if this conference was going to be a long one. Either way, she sighed, shaking muck off of her slippers as she eased the door open and squeezed inside of the warm building.

"SURPRISE!" Was countless yells from the monsters waiting inside, standing behind the Gaster family and a large cake.

"Happy birthday, Tokiko!" Aliquam laughed happily.

Toki froze at first, like a deer in the headlights. Slowly a grin stretched her face, and she laughed as she shrugged out of her coat. “Oh my gosh, I completely forgot today was my birthday. Thank you, all of you- you didn’t have to do this for me.” So much for having missed an important conference-but this was a welcome surprise instead.

Aliquam came over and pulled her into another embrace, kissing her happily.

"We wanted to, doll." Caeruelus laughed.

Toki laughed again, leaning into Aliquam’s grasp contently. She smiled up at him warmly, eye lights twinkling brightly. “So much for missing a conference, huh?” She winked at him. Toki shifted, linking arms with the taller skeleton, and then guided them closer to everyone else. “Thank you, all of you. This is... really nice, actually.” The Nara hadn’t realized how tightly wound up she was with all of the work she’d been doing- but the surprise party was easing some of it. “So, who baked the cake?”

Caeruleus lifted a hand, and then glanced towards Grillby, who then elbowed Tenebris in the arm, making his clear his throat. “I... helped them a little bit” the older admitted under his breath.

Toki beamed at them warmly. “I’m sure between the three of you that it is a wonderful cake. Grillby wouldn’t let Cae make a ketchup cake- so it’s definitely got to be edible.” She winks at the older brother, and then steps around Aliquam to give everyone a hug for a thanks.

Grillby takes his easily, patting her back gently. “You work too hard, Miss Toki.” He admonishes quietly. “Today is the day celebrating your birth- you should be relaxing and enjoying it.” Not spending it bent over a table doing paperwork.

“It’ll be more relaxing with all of you,” She grins warmly.

He pats her skull fondly and nods as she goes to hug Tenebris. “It is nice to see you again. We have seen little of you with how busy you’ve been with the humans and their papers.”

“I’ve missed seeing all of you too- but it is important paperwork. There’s talk of all of you getting full citizenship and human rights. That’s worth a back cramp any day.”

Tenebris rumbled as he hugged Toki and he gave her a gentle peck on the top of her skull. "Do not hurt yourself with your efforts, Tokiko dear."

“I wont, Tenebris.” She squeezes him gently, and smiles faintly. “I’m sorry I haven’t been able to do a lot of checkups with you lately- papers and all of that. For what it’s worth- I feel fine? Pretty tired, but with all that’s going on… It’s super exciting.”

And it was- she was up late most nights handling phone calls, emergency faxes- it was a busy time of the year. She felt sorry for Pap too- he’d ended up falling asleep without her several times because she was simply up late doing things.

"I will want to look tonight, if that is alright." he murmured, before he chuckled and turned, looking at the townspeople who attended the party. The bunny children and their mother, Todd and his children, his sons, Grillby, and himself were all there. It was a small party, but more than enough to show how much Toki is loved.

It was definitely enough to let her know she was loved. Everyone being there warmed her soul, and Toki found utter joy in them taking time out of their day to do this for her. She hadn’t even remembered her own birthday- and probably wouldn’t have until someone sent her a text message about it. “Of course!” She smiles. “That’s fine by me. Lets get through the party first, before we do that.”

Grillby was close enough to hear, but the crackle of his flames kept the others from overhearing.
“You are welcome to the back room if you need it,” he murmurs softly to her.

“We’ll see.” She grins up at him, and takes a moment to hug Cae as well. She spots a bit of something on his sweater, and grins as she swipes what appears to be frosting off of it. “Someone is messy, aren’t they?” It’s booped onto his teeth, and then she swipes her fingers off the rest of the way onto her fingers. “So, which first, everyone? Cake or presents? The cake looks amazing, by the way. The decorations are really cool!”

"If you don’t distribute the cake, I think Caeruleus will eat it all.” Aliquam joked with a laugh, getting a sharply indignant "OI!” from his brother.

“I think you’re right,” She grinned to her boyfriend. Toki bounced slightly, and moved towards the cake. “You’re not all going to do the singing, are you…?” The singing always flustered her- she’d rather just get the cake cut up and served and enjoy the sugary confection without all the noise.

"Why wouldn't we?"

"It's a special event, you dork.” Cae cackled.

“Because it’s…” She flails her fingers and hides her face. Gods above- the oddest things could fluster her sometimes, and singing happy birthday was one of them.

Grillby grins lightly and gently bumps his shoulder to Cae’s. He waggles a brow lightly, and begins to chant softly. “Happy birthday to you,” He crooned softly, starting off the song before Toki could fuss.

"Happy birthday to you,"

"You look like a monkey!"

"SANS!"

Grillby scolding pinched the ridge of Cae’s iliac crest, though he chuckled quietly.

Toki laughed into her hands and endured the rest of the song. When it ended, she dealt with her flush and managed a smile for everyone else. The candles were blown out, and she grinned. “So- who’s got the knives for serving up the cake?”

Grillby held up a knife, and offered it to her handle first.

Toki took the knife with a faint smile, and turned it towards the cake. She collected plates, and began to cut and put slices on it. “Alright- Remember to pull out the candles in your slices, but now it’s cake time!”

She settles slices onto the plates, and slides them down along the table for everyone to collect.

“Cake!” Thumper was practically bouncing at her feet. “Cake, cake, cake, cake!”

“You hardly need the sugar,” Penelope gave Toki a smile, and gently nudged her out of the way. She pushed a place of cake into the skeleton’s hands. “Birthday girl gets the first slice, silly. Let me handle this- Thumper, you keep your fingers out of the icing.”

“But Mom!”

“Patience is a virtue, dear.”
"It'll taste better on the cake itself, trust me kid." Caeruleus mentioned as he got into what was starting to be a line, while Tenebris helped with a second knife that was almost humorously small in his hands.

Toki giggled and got out of the way of the small line. She shot Grillby a grin and took a seat on top of one of the empty tables- to which he frowned and wiggled his fingers at her scoldingly.

“Tables are for glasses,” he admonishes once he gets his slice of cake, also slipping out of the way for everyone to slide through, “not asses.” There would be plenty of cake left over for everyone, even once all of the slices had been handed out to people. They had made the cake with larger monsters in mind- so the slices were catered more to the size of himself and Tenebris. Toki’s looked hilarious in front of her- but it was even more so for a monster like Thumper.

The boy’s eyes practically glowed at the slice of cake on his plate though, and he carefully brought it over to the tables sized for smaller monsters. It was currently the ‘kiddy’ table of sorts- but it looked smaller compared to the cake. The slice was the size of his head. Truly, he would be in taking a lot of sugar, and Penelope was going to have her hands full.

“But tables are more fun to sit on.” She teases back, content to wait as everyone filed through the small line. It was an interesting sight- the knife was more suited to the small rabbit monster. Compared to Penelope, Tenebris looked like a large child playing with doll toys. “Besides, I don’t have one of those. I have a pelvis and whatever the little bones that make up the backside of it are.”

"Your Sacrum, Coccyx, Illiums, Pubus." Cae piped up from nearby.

“Yes, those.” She waves her fork at him slightly, and slides willingly into the seat, instead of sullying the top of the table.

Grillby’s stern looks ease off, and he chooses to take a seat near Caeruleus. He casually props a leg into his boyfriend’s lap, and nibbles his cake quietly. The moist confection sizzles slightly in the heat of his mouth, but it tastes good all the same.

Toki patiently waits until everyone has their cake and is seated, before she starts in on hers. It’s probably more cake than she can actually eat- but it looks amazing, and she’s going to eat as much of it as she can. Her fork dips in, and she samples it happily. The frosting is delicious and sweet- borderline too sweet for her tastes, but utterly delicious.

Given the number of monsters that it would be feeding, there wasn’t any magic baked into it. The last thing anyone needed was monster kids with more energy from extra magic alongside the sugar rush that was sure to come. Either way- the magic would have changed the base flavor of the cake. The cake is vanilla- which is a good safe flavor to choose when feeding so many. “It’s amazing,” she thrums contently, leaning back in her seat as she enjoys her treat.

"Excuse you." Cae cackled quietly, patting his boyfriend’s leg with one hand as he nibbles at the cake with the other.

Tenebris and Aliquam had taken up their seats near Toki, enjoying their cakes as they relaxed at the table.

"I'm glad you like it, Toki." Aliquam chirped happily.

The female skeleton gives him a wink, and nibbles another bite. It really is very sweet- and she finds herself finishing a little more than half of it before she sets it down with a content sigh. She knows her limits- the rabbit children do not. Thumper was nearly finished with his cake. “It was a very good cake,” She chuckles slightly, dropping her fingers to pat her middle. She folds her hands over her belly, turtleneck bunching slightly over the curve of the ecto-flesh hidden under it. “But I think that’s about as much as I can eat.” It was most of what she had eaten that day- and too much sweets on an empty ‘stomach’ was just asking for something bad to happen. “Do either of you want the rest of mine? They’re really big slices- though they do fit better to someone your size, Tenebris.”

“We can save it for later in case you get a craving for sweets.” Aliquam suggested warmly.

Toki chuckles, and quietly licks her fork clean. She wasn’t even far enough along to begin craving anything. But still, she nods and lets her fork clatter against the plate. “I think we’re going to end up with more cake than we can eat, to be honest.” She laughs.

There is a split second where she has a second to brace herself, before a fuzzy child sized bullet slams into her middle and wraps around her like a furry leech. “Presents now?” Thumper is glowing as he beams up at her. “You have to open mine first! You gotta, you gotta!”

She was slightly winded, but he didn’t appear to have hurt her. She loops her arms around him and gently bumps the ridge of her nasal cavity to the soft pink of his nose. “How about we wait until everyone else has finished their cake first? After all, Cae can probably eat two or three pieces, you know?” The last part is whispered playfully, and she shoots the older brother a cheeky grin.

At this time Caeruleus was indeed munching on the beginning of a second slice, chewing as he looked over, "What?"

Toki just laughs, releasing Thumper as the rabbit groans impatiently into her chest and squirms to be let down. Despite having just eaten an entire slice of something the size of his head, he was still up and moving- and apparently darting from table to table with childish impatience. “Oh nothing, Cae. So, is that the second slice or the third?” She teases.

Grillby just hides a grin, and chuckles just slightly. He finishes most of his slice- but diligently dumps the last small bit onto the chubby skeleton’s plate. It was much more fun to watch him eat it- and enjoy the extra energy the skeleton would have when the sugar was processed directly into his magic. Grillby would help him wear off that energy later though.

“Buzz off.” he grumbled, though he ate the last piece of cake on his plate from Grillby.

Toki paused. She actually paused, before squinting at him. “Was that an intentional pun, or unintentional?”

His grin widened as he leered over at her, "Buzz buzz."

Toki grinned back at him, slightly more sharp-toothed than he was- and proceeded to buzz her bones and magic at him tauntingly. “At least you’re being accurate.” She snickers.

He choked at that slightly, and then he looked at her as he coughed. "Well heck, that's awesome."

Toki grins at him. “I had forgotten that you haven’t gotten to hear that yet. Pap listens to it often enough- it’s something from my bees.”

“It was really cool!” Thumper is back at her table again, and is bouncing slightly as he peers over the edge. He doesn’t vault into her lap again- no, he’s doing table checks.

“Someone is letting their eagerness show,” Toki ruffles his ears, and laughs softly. “Okay. Tell you what- how about you go collect empty plates, and set them all on a table for me, and then I’ll start on presents. Sound like a deal, Thumper?”
“Yes!” The rabbit was off and running, boundless energy carrying him back and forth as he hauled plates like a pro.

Toki grinned wider. “Hey, Grillby? When he’s old enough to work here, he’d be an awesome waiter. Not many kids have a talent for balancing plates like that.”

“Perhaps.” The fire elemental murmurs quietly as his plate is gathered. He shifts and stands, freeing his intended as he rights himself. He rumbles thoughtfully, and goes to fetch the gifts for her to begin opening.

Cae finished his cake and left it to get snatched up as he joined Grillby, humming quietly while his tongue happily wandered about his mouth in savoring the sweet aftertaste of the cake.

The fire monster loaded the gifts gently onto the table- he knew his was fairly durable, but the others were a bit of a mystery to him.

Toki stared at the small collection of gifts and wondered how she was going to carry them all home. Her rib cage couldn’t be used anymore, after all. “So, which first?”

“My!” Thumper grinned. He finished setting the plates aside and bounced back as the other monsters gathered around. They left plenty of space, but still lingered to watch the unwrapping around them. Thumper fished his gift out, and plopped the small box into her lap. “Mom and I made it for you!”

“Awww, really? That’s super sweet of both of you!” They both got a warm smile, and then Toki gently opened the wrapping. It was decently wrapped- but opened easily under her claws. A small box came into view, and she opened the end of it curiously. Out plopped a bracelet decorated with green and black stripes, and tiny bee charms. Toki beamed, and slipped it onto her wrist. “Awww, thank you! It’s so cute! Look, Ali! It’s got a bee on it!”

The surprise party ended well- with a couple new turtlenecks from Grillby, a box of tea samples from Tenebris, a new single-person quilt and a handful of hand-knitted gloves came from Todd and his kids, a tiny leash and collar from Cae which had been listed as ‘for the pretty bee’, and a scarf that matched Papyrus’ own red one.

The gifts had thrilled her- and even better, they all fit into one box for her to carry home.

After the party wrapped up, Toki had stuck around at the bar to help Grillby clean up. Naturally, she’d managed to wrangle the Gaster family into helping her and the flaming barman. They’d stuck Cae on dish duty, while Grillby packed cake into containers for them to take home. Aliquam was breaking down boxes, while Toki swept up the floor.

Thumper had taken a tumble into the table when the sugar had kicked in- and paper and package stuffing had pretty much exploded across the floor.

She tiredly hummed as she swept, gathering things into a pile to be disposed of.

Tenebris had taken this chance to step outside, puffing from his pipe quietly as he relaxed, taking deep breaths of the smoke and exhaling long plumes of it into the air.

Toki was done cleaning the mess on the floor before he got back in. Once it was swept up and put into the trash, she turned to the other monsters and searched for her next task.
Grillby grumbled a soft sound, and set the to-go boxes of cake on top of the box of gifts. “You can go ahead and get home, Miss Toki. I’m glad we managed to steal you away for a while- I know you have been busy.”

“I have been,” She admits quietly. She approaches, and quietly peers at the other skeletons. Cae was still busy with dishes- Aliquam was finishing up stuffing the cardboard into a recycling bin that looked fit to burst. “I might actually clean up the mess of papers at home and go to bed early. Now that the sugar is starting to wear off, I’m getting pretty tired.” It was dark out- nearing nine at night- so it wasn’t like it was too early to sleep. “Hey, Ali? You spending the night at my place, or you going to crash at your house?” He spent a lot of his nights with her- but there were some nights where he returned to his place. He hadn’t moved in with her, after all.

"Are you crazy? I'm staying with you tonight, nyeh heh heh~" The look in his eye sockets was mischievous. It was obviously promising something.

She grinned at him teasingly, and hefted the heavy box into her arms. “Good! I’d enjoy having you here with me tonight.” Though she wasn’t sure she had the energy to get up to the sort of things that his eyes were promising- she would certainly try though. “Are you sure you and Cae can handle this, Grillby?”

“Go enjoy your night,” he rumbled softly. “And don’t forget to have Tenebris check on you. It has been a long time since you have had the time to get an appointment. I will enjoy my time here with Caeruleus, once he is done using that deathtrap of a sink.”

Toki smiled and nodded. “Mkay. You enjoy your time with your boyfriend. C’mon, Ali. Lets go snag your dad and head to my place. I’d love to try some of the tea he got me.”

"Alright, last I checked, he was outside." Aliquam replied, leading her to the door with a smile.

Indeed he was outside. Toki’s arms were full of the heavy box, so she couldn’t wave to get his attention, but her mouth worked just fine. “We’re heading back to my place, Tenebris. You wanted to tag along, right? To talk about some stuff?”

"Mmhm.” he nodded once, "Let's go, then, I suppose," he replied as he walked with her and Papyrus back to her home sweet home. "How are you feeling now, by the way?” he inquired.

The walk home wouldn’t be long, though it would be awkward as she shifts the box from one hip to the other. Cardboard was hard to hold with the slick bone of her fingers. Her slippers are a little bit soggy- but that was fine. “I feel pretty tired, to be honest. Even with the sugar rush from the cake- which was really good, by the way- I feel pretty exhausted. It’s been a busy start to the New Year, and the month isn’t even over yet.” She chuckles.

“I know Ali’s probably been telling of my horrible sleeping habits as of late.” Up until midnight or later, and then up super early- she was probably running herself ragged. “Once I’ve got this last batch of papers done, it’ll be a week or so until the next ones come. I’m looking forwards to some time to crash and just sleep if I can. Maybe for more than four to six hours a night, eh Pap?”

"I'll start pinning you down if you don’t take this task upon yourself.” he said with a laugh, making Tenebris chuckle behind them.

Toki flashed him a slight grin. “Well, I wouldn’t mind being pinned down,” she wiggles her brows at him with a wink. “But I think I can manage some sleep without extreme measures.” As they reach the house, Toki leans back slightly and adjusts her grasp on the box so she can tote it up the front stairs. She stifles a yawn, and waits for one of the guys to open the door.
Aliquam pushed the door open and followed her once she stepped inside, with Tenebris in tow as he put out his pipe.

Toki headed for one of the side tables in the main room, and carefully plonked the box down. Idly, she rubbed her knuckles into her lower back and stretched, letting the vertebrae pop and stretch out once more. Her back was slightly tight from all of the writing and poring over papers she’d been doing. It felt great to stretch- though she belatedly remembered that popping bones was not something skeletons did. At least, not what the other skeletons did. “Ah, home sweet home.” She hummed, straightening out her turtleneck. “Okay, so where are you going to be able to see easier, Tenebris?”

He was rather tall, and she was much smaller than he was. Crouching was not going to be an easy angle for a decent checkup.

“Well, somewhere you can sit where you end up a little higher is easier for me.” he replied, “No where uncomfortable for you though. Even the counter would work.”

“I can do the counter.” She had wide counters. “Kitchen’s got the best lighting anyways.” She leaves the box of gifts in place, though takes the to-go boxes of cake, and saunters for the kitchen. The most open spot is near the sink, and she leans over to turn on the kitchen lights first before stuffing the cake into the fridge where it could stay good out of the relative warmth of her house. Getting up onto the counter is a bit harder- she’d had them made more in mind for tall guests, so the counter actually stops about at the bottom of her ribs.

She turns, plants her hands, and bounces slightly so she can hop back up onto the counter. She shimmies back, and sits with her back straight. “This work?” She grins. “If all else fails, I can lay on the dining room table. Though I don’t know how well laying flat would work for seeing inside of me.”

Both of them followed her into the kitchen. Tenebris nodded and let her get comfortable before he came over, smiling gently. “This will work.” He collected a chair with his tail, and took a seat in front of her. He tugged his gloves off gingerly. “Alright then, if you’d kindly.” he purred, gesturing to her shirt with his bared fingers.

Toki nodded with a smile, and rolled her turtleneck up to just past the bottom of her ribs. The thick material was stubborn, so she left a hand on it to keep it upright. Her abdomen was the same color it had been prior, though there was a small, almost unperceivable slope to the bottom of her belly. Toki couldn’t really see without craning awkwardly, so she relaxed, easing down the bottom of her waistline so it edged under her iliac crests. “Can you see alright like this?”

“Perfect.” He ran one hand over her side in a comforting manner then looked into her midsection. Nestled in her pelvic girdle, a darker green shape was slightly bean shaped and was now visible. It shifted lightly as she breathed, and inside something was visible. It was a little gray heart- which rotated and parted, and showed that it was not one, but two tiny, gray little upside down hearts nestled inside of the summoned organ. They floated slightly, but seemed to be tethered closely to the walls of the pseudo womb.

Toki shifted, watching him curiously. “So, can you see anything yet?”

He watched it for a short while, mystified as he watched the tiny gray souls. It was obviously two, and not just a reflection against the glow of the organ in her belly. Tenebris smiled warmly and ran his knuckles slowly over her midsection. The flesh was slightly firmer, a different sort of feel to it than it had before. "Yes..."
“Really?” Her face brightened eagerly, shifting slightly as his knuckle passes gently over her belly. The look in his eyes is soft, and there is an almost mystified look on his face. This was the first time he was getting to see his grandchild- and being a monster has to have it’s perks. Humans didn’t get to see much this early. “I was wondering if it was a monster soul or a human soul. Can you tell what it is yet?”

He did not reply vocally at first, but his smile was growing with every passing second. ”They're Monster. Genetics would be consistent. One part human to three parts monster.”

“Monster!” She grinned. “That’s good! That’s actually really cool! Hey Ali, it’s going to be a little monster soul!” She peeked as best she could, but couldn’t see anything beyond a dark blob from her current angle. “Is that weird dark bean shaped thing where the baby’s soul is?”

Aliquam was smiling, but something had Tenebris entranced, and that drew his attention. He stepped closer, and tilted his skull inquisitively. "Father...?"

"I can't believe this... it's such good fortune." he purred happily.

“That it’s a little monster soul…?” She was confused- she couldn’t quite see what he was seeing.

"No... It's two."

Toki paused, her breath hitching faintly, before she tucked her chin quietly into her chest. One of her fingers came to brush over the side of her belly, the pointed claw tracing lightly over the flesh and sending phantom goose bumps over her glowing parts. “Pardon me? You said… Two? As in… Twins?”

"Twins!" Tenebris laughed, confirming her question quietly.

"T-twins...?"

And there was a crash that made Tenebris turn in his seat. Yep. Aliquam fainted again.

Toki squeaked- the shock of twins was rapidly replaced by the fact that there was now a pile of sprawled skeleton that had probably just concussed himself on the tile of her kitchen floor. “Gods above, Papyrus!” She wiggled off of the counter, escaping Tenebris, and she bolted to the fallen skeleton. “Not again,” she sighed, the sound amused and frustrated as she crouched down by his shoulders.

She hooked her fingers under them and grunted, heaving his heavy upper half up into a sitting position so she could lean him against her. “Dammit- you need a helmet, I swear to all the stars in the sky. C’mon- wake up, Pap.” She patted his cheekbones gently. His skull didn’t look like he’d cracked it- but that didn’t mean he wouldn’t wake up with one hell of a headache.

"Nyyyyehhhhh...." Aliquam groaned and slowly leaned his head back, "T-Twins..." he rasped out slowly.

Toki heaves a sigh. The noise he makes is not quite aware, and his sockets are hardly fully lit. “Yeah, twins, Pap.” She presses a soft kiss to his temple and then groans quietly. “He’s pretty out of it. At least he’s still marginally conscious of it this time. Will you help me get him to the couch, Tenebris? He's really heavy.” He might have been all bones and no meat, but he was made of a much more dense bone than a human skeleton was.

The elder monster sighed softly through his teeth and eased out of his seat to go take his son from her.
"Twins." Al grumbled as Tenebris hefted him up.

"Up we go, Papyrus." he purred.

Toki watched him heft the skeleton up, and bustled to the couch to get it in place. She righted her turtleneck, and settled a pillow for Aliquam’s skull to be settled on.

Once they got him settled on the couch, Toki rubbed over his skull slightly and draped a blanket over him with a soft sigh. She scrubbed her face tiredly, and leaned against the arm of the couch.

“Twins. Gods above.” She curls an arm over her middle, and cradles her face in her hand for a time. Twins. Not just one- there was two. Two little souls in her middle- they were going to have two. Holy shit. She knew they could handle one- but twins was going to be harder. A lot harder.

"I’m so proud of you, Toki" Tenebris praised her happily.

“Proud of me?” She inquired incredulously, dropping her hand from her face to fold it over her middle. “Why on earth?” She was… actually sort of nervous. Twins was so much more… Just… more. Anxiousness was building- and there was no logical reason for her to be so nervous about twins. “T-Twins is… Twins is… a lot… It’s…” It was kind of scary to some extent. Twins meant there was much more that could go wrong, much more that would be happening. It was a lot to find out on her thirty third birthday. “It’s not a bad thing, but… It’s… kind of scary…” She murmured tiredly.

"It is a lot to bear, I understand my dear." he said gently as he touched her shoulder, “It is scary, but I’m going to be here for you.” he purred softly.

Toki sighed faintly. “I know you will be. I just… I worry.” The initial pregnancy had been a shocking, but… Twins was… “Twins come with their own complications for humans. I don’t know about monsters.” Her hand slides up, and she settles her palm over top of his fingers with a quiet sigh. “I just… worry. Ali’s young- twins is a lot to be saddled with. It’s a lot harder pregnancy. Are you… sure it’s twins? Not just a reflection in the glow or something?”

"I saw two individual souls, Toki." he said softly, "But please, I am a father of two myself, I can help you where I can." he assured her. “I will do my research as best I can. I have been around other pregnant monsters- though not skeletons, I admit.”

“At least there’s an age gap between the boys, though.” She points out. Toki wasn’t sure how old Caeruleus was, but she knew he was older than Papyrus. “Two… Oh boy.” She lifts her shirt quietly, and peers down into her middle. Distal phalanx’ running across the tiny curve of her abdomen, Toki makes note that she can’t see the souls no matter how hard she squints, but she can see the dark green housing that’s holding them. “Your help will be appreciated. So. Heh. Twins. Looks like I’m going to have to invest in two cribs.” And despite her not wanting to think about it, doubts trickled into her mind. Twins on the first shot- in a relationship that was a couple months old. She would not blame Aliquam in the slightest if he was unhappy with this situation, or if he wanted out at any time. She was already committed- but she wasn’t going to force him to do anything.

But that was a conversation for after Tenebris went home. And after Aliquam woke up.

“… I’m not going to be able to hide it for long.” She mutters suddenly. “They’re already getting big… We’re going to have to tell the rest of the village.”

He smiled gently and patted her shoulder. He offered her a comforting rumble. "You can deliver the news when you're ready."
“I’m never going to be ready,” she sighs. “And these two will be too big to hide before I am. Thumper’s sure to notice here soon with how often he barrels into me. I almost want you to tell everyone- you’ve got more sway, and can probably better explain the risks and why we have to keep this quiet for as long as possible.”

Idly, she drops a hand and taps a claw gently between Aliquam’s eye sockets, hoping to fully rouse him.

“I can do that, if you wish. Give it some time and think it over. You are tired, Toki.”

Aliquam groaned slightly and his sockets relit slowly, "Nyeh..."

“Hey there,” Toki murmured softly to him. Her palm cupped his skull, and she rubbed at it soothingly. “You feeling better now?”

"Twins..." he giggled quietly, "I... ah... Twins!" he started to giggle louder.

Toki hesitantly withdrew her hand, and cast him a bemused wary look. “Uh…” Her eye lights flick up to Gaster, and she tilts her chin towards his son with a befuddled look. “Yeah Pap. Twins. Is that okay?”

"Yes!" he looked up at her, eye lights twinkling merrily. "Twins...! Oh my god this is.... Terrifying. But I’m... Oh my god, I’m so excited...”

A relieved laugh leaves her, and she stoops down to press a kiss to his brow. “I’m glad. I’m somewhere between terrified, exhausted, and excited, to be honest with you.” She smiles faintly. “You’ve got to stop this fainting business, though. I’m not nearly strong enough to move you when you clock out on the tile. So ah… heh. Twins. Good thing Grillby gave us two onesies for Christmas, yeah? We’re going to need two of everything... Might explain why I’ve been so tired though- makin’ two little ones is harder than making one.”

He giggled quietly up at her, still clearly lost in the news of being a dad to not one, but two little ones. "Well then I think I should help you with that, yes?"

Toki shifts and stands from the arm of the chair. She plants her hands on her hips and gives Aliquam a tired smile. “Soon,” she nods, knowing what he was meaning. Her gaze flits to Gaster. “Is there anything else you wanted to check first before we do that? Or that you need to check, I guess. You did mention being around monster pregnancies before, even if it wasn’t skeleton pregnancies.”

"No, you should be alright for the pre-exchange. Just go ahead and get comfy." Tenebris assured her as he watched Aliquam slowly sit up with a quiet grunt of effort.

"I know enough, at least a little bit! Enough to, ah, do this" Aliquam insisted, before he smiled at her and patted his lap, "Come on!"

Toki rolled her eyes with quiet amusement. “Been talking with your dad about what he knows, haven’t you?” She inquires with wry amusement. Still, she shifts and eases down into his lap. Not like she’s going to complain. Toki shifts, and leans her torso back against the arm of the couch, letting her legs stretch out over the other side of his. “This work for whatever you’re going to do?”

"I talked to Grillby too." He replied with a small smile, wrapping his arms around her and giving a small squeeze. "Nyeh~"

Toki chuckled softly as he looped his arms around her. “Sounds like that’s good enough, if you’re not kicking up a fuss. So... Shirt up, I’m going to assume?” Her fingers wriggle to the edges of her turtleneck, and she rolls the orange fabric up to her ribs as she nestles close to his chest. “At least if you faint from seeing them, you’re already on the couch, no?”

"Hahaha." he laughed quietly, tugging his gloves off before reaching out to rest his fingers across her middle. Rubbing her stomach gently as he looked down at the beauty of his future, his pupils practically glimmer with glee. "Oh my goodness, it's... hahaha..."

“It’s what?” She blinks up at him curiously. Toki does relax slightly as the bare bones of his hands rub over her middle. It feels nice, in an odd sort of way, and she slumps slowly into the couch. One of her arms comes up to support her neck, and she watches him out of contently half-lidded sockets. “That feels really nice,” she admits softly. “It’s really soothing. Pretty sure they’re fond of it too.”

"It's wonderful." he said with a smile, fingers roving gingerly over the flesh. "Absolutely beautiful."

Toki chuckles softly. “I’m glad you think so. I was… kinda worried that two might seem like too much for you.” She admits quietly. The little green blob in her middle shifts as she adjusts her hips, and Toki smiles wider as she watches him explore her middle gently. “I get the feeling this is going to become a regular thing, isn’t it? Not that I’m complaining. It’s really relaxing.” The green flesh felt tight at times- but that was probably the growing and shifting that her magic was having to do to accommodate not one, but two souls growing inside of her.

"Nonsense. Two just means that there is more to love.” He hums softly. “I wouldn’t mind doing this more. Only if you like it, though.” he purred gently, before he rested his head against her own. He closed his sockets as he let his magic flow down his core and into his hands, slowly streaming it into her own through the barrier that makes up her middle.

“I would not mind more. It feels good- the flesh has felt tighter recently.” she hums softly in turn. She nuzzles her face to his, sockets closing with a blessed sound as he eases magic into her middle. It takes a short bit, but the tiredness in her soul begins to fade, and the bright glow that her belly initially had returns with force. It had been dimmer- which she had been glad for, because it let her hide easier. She’d have to wear a jacket overtop of her turtleneck now, or double up on the shirts, but it wouldn’t be too bad. “Mmm… your magic always feels nice,” she murmurs. “Like being out in the sun. Warm. Light. Joy. It is very much you.”

"And yours is a feeling of a blanket that is draped over your shoulder when your day couldn't get any worse, it reminds you just how there is something to look forward to after even the hardest of days." he purred.

Her hand trails up and she cradles his jaw with a soft sound, caressing his skull with gentle fingers. Slowly, a soft buzzing noise escapes her bones. It isn’t the same mocking noise that she made at Caenor the piping she made when he had been in heat. This is a content sound, a soft buzzing of harmony and inner peace, of health and happiness. “We make a good match, I think.” She murmurs softly to him.

The glow of her abdomen brightens more, and then levels out, growing no brighter or dimmer. The tiredness in her eases further- but she is still sleepy from working long hours. It is less so- but still present.

"Like a bee and honey.” he joked quietly, purring quietly until he stopped feeding magic to his young. "Mmm~ Feel better?” he asked gently.

Toki nodded against him, slowly opening her sockets again. Like a bee and honey indeed. She kissed him gently, and then released her light grip on his skull so she could lean back. She glanced down, and laughed softly. “I feel a lot better. But it looks like I’ve been eating glow-sticks. I might need to borrow one of your turtlenecks to wear over mine. None of mine are thick enough to cover this sort of glow… Huh. It wasn’t this bright before you donated magic. Looks like that’s something to note.” Her hand trailed down, and she laced her fingers with his so they both cradled her middle. She was warm, her belly warmer, and that soft buzzing noise from her bones was persisting.

"Nyeh heh heh heh... Of course, my love." he purred gently, kissing her softly.

She kissed him back gently, leaning into him with a pleased sound. “What about you?” she murmurs against his kiss, “Are you feeling tired? That felt like a lot of magic.”

"Honestly I am a tad tired but you know, I already passed out once so..."

“We’ll avoid doing it again.” She smiles softly and kisses him again, before nestling against him. “Want to just sleep tonight?” He had intended mischief, she knew, but she didn’t want them to run out of energy in the midst of it either.

"Yes, we’ll look into eating later. For now. Sleep." he purred, hugging her before pulling her onto his chest as he laid back.

Toki managed to fix her turtleneck before he rotated her, but found herself sprawled out across his chest in what was obviously becoming their couch snuggling position. She giggled softly and stretched out. A slow glance to the side let her realize that they still had a guest. Her face bloomed in a blush. “Uh… Sorry about forgetting you were there, Tenebris. You were pretty quiet…”

"I’m glad you two have a hand on how to nurture the children while you carry them, Toki." Tenebris rumbled gently, amusement dancing in his eyes. "Instinct does it job well."

“That it does,” she admits. “Though we’d be pretty lost without you and Grillby. He knows a lot about caring for a pregnant mate.” Which made sense- he did have a daughter that he mentioned from time to time. Toki nestles down better into Aliquam’s grasp, and peers up at the largest monster. “Did you want to check the souls again now that they’ve been given magic? Being see-through is pretty handy for checking without moving.”

"I suppose.” he chuckled slightly. Kneeling down beside the cuddling duo, Tenebris took a peek at the small souls again, lifting the back of her shirt up towards her ribs. He had to shift his angle slightly to see past her spine, but it was doable.

The souls appeared much the same, if a bit brighter than before, and harder to see for the brightness that glowed from her middle.

Toki exhaled slightly, a shiver racing up her spine as a cool draft of air raced up her exposed back. “They look okay?”

"They actually look healthier now." He murmured in response.

Toki frowned slightly. “I didn’t know that they needed energy that badly,” she mutters. “I guess we’ll just need to keep an eye on the glow. The brighter it is, the better they’re doing, is what I’m gathering.” It gave a whole new meaning to the phrase ‘pregnancy glow’. That particular thought made her giggle, and she nuzzled her face into Aliquam’s pectoral. She was glad that with the way her magic filled out clothes, it hadn’t given her breasts. Lying on someone’s chest with breasts was simultaneously impossible and uncomfortable, and she rather liked being sprawled out on his.

“Thanks, Tenebris. For checking and letting us know. Though, I imagine we would have learned eventually. Knowing earlier means we can prepare better for them though.”

Too bad they didn’t know the genders- they’d just go with a neutral color of some kind. Maybe green, or orange for the nursery- Toki and Pap would have to talk it over when the time came to actually get a nursery up and running.

"Of course, Toki. I will get a blanket so you two can rest." he rumbled, leaving them be as he got up to fetch a blanket.

Aliquam wrapped his arms around her more firmly and smiled gently, before he sighed. "Mmm~ I love you.”

Toki adjusted her shirt, pulling it back down over her back, and shifted to she could kiss the bottom of Aliquam’s chin while they waited for Tenebris to drape a blanket over them. “I love you too,” She murmurs warmly. “I love you more each passing day, you know that?”

"More and more." he agreed happily.

Toki smiled and draped her arms around his chest. The pleased buzzing starts up again, lower and more relaxed than before. They could do this together- Twins was a challenge, but it was one that they were up to handling.
Chapter 35

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Nyehheheh. So we’re actually going to do a lot of the pregnancy stuff in this fic- including some of the grosser things, because pregnancy is fascinatingly disgusting at times. Though of course, it’s not all going to be as bad because skeletons- but y’know. We roll with the skelepreg ideas as they happen. HEH.

We also learn a little bit about what Toki actually IS to the monsters somewhere in the eleven thousand words that makes up this beast of a chapter.

Don't forget to check out our blog! I finally caved and joined in on the bittybones craze, so you can totes check out the doll i made of Sassafras. Eheh. You can find us here at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Well, no smut in this one, instead, Tokiko learns of the greatness that is known as the 'Change of Taste' that usually accompanies pregnancy. HEHEHEHEHEH! Enjoy the chapter!

Unfortunately for Toki, her paperwork troubles didn’t end with that last stack. She got it shipped out once she finished it, and the day after that, she got even more. Progress was happening though- legitimate progress towards monsters being considered full-fledged citizens and people in their own right. For that reason alone, Toki wasn’t bothered by her lack of breaks. No- this was important. This was hellishly important- so if there were any papers she needed to get done, she wasn’t going to procrastinate any of them. The sooner she got them done, the sooner talks could continue. Besides- she wasn’t the only one. The other ‘foster’ homes of sorts in other countries were participating as well, considering the monsters under their care were technically their wards. Though most certainly not in as large of scale as she did.

Current legal matters technically considered all of the monsters in Nara Village to be wardens of the Nara clan. Considering she’d taken over as clan head by all legal means, that meant that she was essentially the head of a clan of several hundred monsters now. That included paperwork for every monster- from the oldest, to the youngest. It was a lot of papers- but she settled into a groove and began to crank them out as they came in. It wasn’t like she had anything else to do during the day while Papyrus was out running drills with the guards. Her hives wouldn’t be opened up for several months yet.

All the effort into the papers was worth it as far as she was concerned. Soon, they would be their own people. Soon, with any luck, they could be considered their own families- and be fully free to make their own choices, legal or otherwise. Soon she’d be needing to teach several hundred monsters about taxes, how to do them, about how to drive, and how the world of humans worked for them when they had to handle stuff on their own. She might end up recruiting her brothers into helping her give driving lessons. Her family was pretty vast- and all of them, except for Shiro and her niece and nephews, could drive exceptionally well. Between her family, extended and otherwise, they’d manage to get everyone taught.

Not that the monsters would let her overwork herself, though. Heavens no- she’d already been banned from a lot of the weight intensive work of the village. Tenebris had a conversation with the people of the village, explaining her current situation and why they would need to keep it quiet for as long as possible. Everyone remembered HAM- and remembered what HAM had done, the lives that HAM had taken, and the life that they had nearly taken. Though Toki wasn’t privy to what all he told them, she was pretty sure he told them a lot of things that they probably didn’t need to know.

It changed a lot of the dynamics in the village. She had a sneaky suspicion he’d told them that her pregnancy was something they were still learning about, and that it was best if they made sure she didn’t strain herself.

Much like the time that Toki had been sick with MRS, the villagers had banded together to support her. The guards were working double time now that they knew why Aliquam was pushing them to better their skills, and the monsters proved ubiquitous whenever something needed done. Ice needed removed on the stairs? It was scraped off before she could melt it away. Someone graffiti’s the walls? The graffiti was gone by mid morning.

She didn’t mind the help- though it did make her feel a little bit useless, like a glass doll someone sets on a high shelf to keep it from getting shattered. It did give her time to do paperwork though, so it wasn’t like she really had the time to be doing physical activities outside. She spent hours bent over the dining table, her back stiff and coiled tighter than a slinky with phantom knots while doing papers- Toki literally did not have the time to be out shoveling ice, or scrubbing the walls, not when she was busy signing seven hundred plus papers on a regular basis.

This was probably why she was the ‘matron’ of the biggest monster home currently out there.

The beginning of February put a kink into her work groove though. She woke up on the third with something feeling off. She wasn’t quite sure what it was- everything felt strange sometimes- but it threw off her groove. She’d woken up earlier than Papyrus for once- as of late, he was usually awake far earlier than she was due to his early morning training routines with the guards- and had decided to let him get some sleep rather than wake him for company.

He was tired too, though he seemed to have boundless energy once he actually got up and going. She wasn’t going to begrudge him more sleep. She’d wake him at eight- that was an extra hour for him to sleep. He was usually up between six and seven- being one hour late wouldn’t be that much of an issue. The guards knew their usual drill- they could run the basics without the skeleton there to push them to their limits and beyond.

Padding down the stairs after getting ready for her day had proven only to make that feeling worse. She was groggy- she wanted some tea to help wake her up and get her ready for her day.

The kitchen smelled weird. Very weird. Toki’s mouth curled into a frown, and she splashed some water into her face from the sink to wake her. Once she’d dried her bones, she began to search for whatever made the smell.

It didn’t smell like it had gone bad- but whatever it was, it was turning that odd sensation into a queasy pulse in her middle. It wasn’t in the cupboards, or in the sink either, or even under it. She eventually tracked it down to the fridge.

Inside the fridge weren’t a whole lot of things that could spoil. Some soda, some iced tea, some ketchup bottles, a couple things of freshly sliced lunchmeats for sandwiches, milk that was still two weeks out from expiring, and a carton of eggs. And leftovers from last night’s dinner- but none of it hit her off directly as what could cause such a smell.

She checked the iced tea first. Iced tea tended to ferment and then mold- but it still smelled fresh and delicious. It needed to be used up soon before it started to go bad, but it was hardly close enough to needing to be dumped down the sink. The milk was next- because you never really knew unless you smelled it- and it too proved to be in good condition.

Toki scoured the fridge and found nothing. She heaved a sigh and grimaced, before snagging the leftovers. She really didn’t want to cook, not with the weird smell making her nauseated- and besides; Aliquam could eat spaghetti for weeks and never tire of it. He certainly wouldn’t complain about having it for breakfast.

She collected the tin of leftovers, and closed the fridge. Plonking the Tupperware onto the counter, she fetched two bowls. She needed to eat regardless of how she felt. A bowl of spaghetti would give her the energy she needed to crank through the last of this stack of paper.

Toki pried open the lid of the spaghetti, and leaned over to enjoy the smell of the garlic and tomato sauce. That was one thing she liked about being a skeleton- her body no longer had problems eating tomato based products. Which meant that she could enjoy his spaghetti without any consequences.
Hell, she’d dug in with gusto the night prior- it had been a while since they’d made spaghetti, and she had enjoyed every bite of it, and probably ate more than she should have. But it had been good, like always. It wouldn’t actually surprise her if Aliquam ever wanted to start an Italian restaurant, onece monsters could officially own their own property outside of the village.

As the spaghetti smell wafted up into her nasal cavity, Toki realized her mistake. The odd smell that she had been dealing with all morning had been the spaghetti smell lingering in the house from dinner last night- though there was nothing wrong with it at all.

Something lurched in her midsection, and Toki had a few seconds to realize exactly what was happening before she had to turn and bolt for the downstairs bathroom. She wasn’t going to go outside and retch in the frost covered grass- that was asking for the guards to hear her and come running. The upstairs bathroom was out of the question- she would hardly make it there, and even if her room’s bathroom was closer, she wasn’t going to wake Papyrus. Her bare feet clattered noisily against the tile as she booked it, abandoning the spaghetti on the counter as she ran.

She made it in time, throwing the door open with a bang against the wall as she hit her knees to the ground. Toki retched noisily, hands clinging shakily to the side of the toilet bowl as her insides revolted, and felt last night’s feast make a comeback in the form of vile smelling waves of green magic. She heaved, and thus began the cycle.

Morning sickness was going to be a thing for the HTM, it would seem. They hadn’t known if she would end up with it- though since she could regurgitate, it made sense. The twins were not apparently fond of their father’s spaghetti either, and what they weren’t fond of, she wasn’t going to be fond of. She’d seen enough of her mother’s pregnancies with her brothers to know exactly what this was going to be like.

The only saving grace she had was that it wasn’t chunks of noodles she was spewing- but noodleflavored magic wasn’t much better. It didn’t help in the slightest- and it sloshed into the bowl as she made a wretched groan. Throwing up was terrible- and it wasn’t stopping with the initial heave. No-she was certain the noises she was making were floating up to Aliquam. He was a floor above her, and not far from the bottom floor bathroom either.

As she hurled into the bowl, she hoped he was a heavier sleeper today than he usually tended to be.

Unfortunately, simply put, today was a day where he was not a heavy sleeper.

There was a crack of displaced air behind her as he made use of his rarely used teleportation, and then he was behind her and rubbing her back with a broad palm. His other palm scrubbed his sockets, and he covered a tired yawn as he crouched behind her. "Toki, are you okay?" His voice was sleepy, but aware and very concerned.

Toki choked, coughing between heaves. His hand on her back was soothing, but did little to stop the rebelling of her magic. She cradled her skull in her hands, elbows resting on the toilet seat, and took shaky breaths through her mouth. Thankfully, because no one ever needed to use the toilet, everything simply smelled like bathroom cleaner and the contents of her stomach.

“N-hrk- not yet,” she rasped. “Nnggh…” He smelled vaguely like the spaghetti from last night, and she gurgled a wave of sludge again to the porcelain god.

"Toki," he whined quietly, rubbing her back carefully. "What's the matter, Toki? You never got sick like this before."

Toki chokes, and coughs to clear her mouth. It ebbs for a moment, letting her catch her breath. She rattles faintly against his touch, nausea twisting in her middle. “It’s called morning sickness,” she rasps, taking shallow breaths and spitting to clear her mouth. “It’s a human thing… ’s got triggers, sight, smell, taste. Buncha sciency stuff behind it- short story made shorter, babybones doesn’t like dinner from last night."

"Was it bad sauce?" he asked quietly, "I'm sorry."

“Noooo,” she groans quietly. “Not bad sauce, not your fault. Dinner was delicious last night. It’s the smell. I can smell it in the air and on you and it’s making me nauseated.” She inhaled slightly, and leaned her head over to spit again. Ugh. Her middle still churned and bubbled, but it at least was settled enough that she wasn’t spitting up more blobs of green. Still, she wasn’t going to risk moving yet.

He let out a quiet sound and moved away from her. "I... ah... I'm sorry."

“Pap,” she sighs softly, “it’s okay. We didn’t know if it was going to be something I’d be dealing with. Not your fault. Tenebris knows more about how it works- he’s got the books; you can ask him when he visits today. Just... Can you... Can you get the spaghetti out of the house please? And open the windows?"

"... I... yes of course, hang on." He got up fast and quickly went and collected the leftovers, packing them in air-tight containers before turning on a fan and opening the windows. He made sure that the dishes he used last night were free of any pasta and sauces as the house aired out.

Toki exhaled softly when he left, and staggered slowly to her feet as she flushed the mess in the toilet away. She made it to the sink, and fished out a washcloth to clean her face, rinsing out her mouth with some careful maneuvering so she could fit her skull and her horns in enough to rinse.

Once her mouth was fresh again, Toki took a moment to clean between each of her fangs, and then stared at herself in the mirror. Despite not having skin, or gills, she looked vastly greener about the gills than she did the day prior. Her skull seemed paler, her eye lights dim, with an odd green tinge about her cheeks from the magic buzzing in her body. Morning sickness came in like a lion, and out like a lamb, she knew. Ugh. She wandered out of the bathroom when she was certain she wouldn’t be immediately sick, and made a face at the nauseated bubbling her abdomen kept doing.

The house was starting to smell better. A relieved sigh escapes her. “Thanks, Pap.” She calls, not daring to go near enough to the kitchen to find him. She stays near the front room. “The house is starting to smell better.”
"I’ll... uh... Go and shower too..." he said softly, edging out of the kitchen. "I wore these clothes to bed... I probably still... ah... smell the part."

Toki gave him a queasy smile and nodded. “You do, love. I’m sorry about this- all of this. I can go put your clothes in the wash if you want.” She didn’t need to breathe, per say, so she could just hold her breath while she handled them. She felt bad about him having to handle this with her. Vomiting was disgusting- but at least skeletons only heaved magic, not chunks.

"Nyeh...." he sighed softly, before going upstairs. There was then a knock on the door.

“Just leave your stuff outside the door, Pap. I’ll get it, okay?” His glum look had her soul pulsing sadly, and she ducked her skull quietly. The knocking caught her attention, and she groaned faintly. Tenebris was supposed to visit, but there was the chance it was always someone else. Either way, she headed for the door and opened it, hoping that whoever was on the other side didn’t mind that she looked like garbage.

Tenebris was standing there, puffing from his pipe, "Ah, good morning, Toki. You're up early.”

She really wasn’t sure if smoke would be another trigger or not, so she not so discretely covered her nasal passage and gave him a mildly miserable look. She could smell the spearmint vaguely through her sleeve, and her stomach was still deciding if it was going to like or hate the smell. “Yeah, it’s earlier than I’d like to be up, to be frank. Come on in- though leave the door open. The front room needs to air out. Pap’s in the shower.”

"Did something spill?" he asked, "Is Papyrus alright?"

“He might be mildly traumatized, but no, he's physically fine.” She steps back to let him in, and takes a hesitantly deeper breath. The smoke from his pipe is cloying, but it smells soothing. She idly drops her hands to cradle her belly. “Spill? Only my insides spilled. The, ah, spaghetti from last night didn’t agree with the twins. He thinks it’s his fault, I think.”

"Oh that's not good." He said softly, "Sensitivity to certain food, it seems consistent with a few human symptoms with pregnancy... We weren’t certain you would be affected- but it seems that you are. I am sorry, my dear. It does not seem… pleasant.”

“Yeah…” The nausea began to abate, and she furrowed her brows slightly in relief, and rubbed her fingers over her belly. The motion was soothing as well, so she kept it up. “Thank god, it’s starting to abate. The mint is helping I think- so for once, you’re welcome to smoke in the house. Anyways, I woke him with getting sick. Think you can explain it better than I can? I didn’t explain it very well.” It was hard to explain between heaves and gags.

He puffed his pipe a few times, and then he nodded, carefully exhaling the smoke into the air near her so she’d get more of the scent as he cleaned his feet before he entered.

Toki made a face at the smoke, but enjoyed the nausea abating feeling that the mint brought. “Thanks, Tenebris. Looks like I might need to invest in some sort of mint scented things.”

She sighs, and crosses her arms quietly. She tilts her skull, listening to the sounds of the shower from the top floor, and then closes the door behind the bigger monster. She didn’t want to let the mint smell escape, after all. Scrubbing a hand down her face, Toki proceeds to go take a seat on the arm of the couch. The living room didn’t smell too horribly- mostly like the fireplace and like paper and ink. “Why do I feel slightly guilty over spooking Paps? I couldn’t really control it…”

"Spearmint is known to be therapeutic," he rumbled quietly, watching her intently. “And I do not know, Toki. Perhaps because it is his first time seeing you so sick?” They had managed to not let him see her purge blood from her body- and he had not been home to witness when she had gotten sick after burning that vile woman.

She heaved a deep sigh, and nodded quietly instead of responding to the last bit of his words. “Well, it seems to be helping with my nausea.” She mutters quietly. The vast removal of what she’d eaten the night prior had left her feeling empty- not quite hungry, but not quite full enough- with some of her magic depleted. Resting her chin in her palm, Toki fell silent, simply sighing and waiting for Pap to finish. She’d get his clothes when he was done- or when Tenebris left. Either or.

"Hm... In that case…” he took a deeper intake as he took a small clay bowl off one of the nearby shelves. He held it on his fingers as he then took his pipe and turned it over, tapping it into the bowl.
The smoldering debris landed with a soft plop, dimming faintly before he blew into it. The embers spread and released more of the smoke. "There we go," he purred gently, setting it down back where he’d found it and letting the smoke rise and fill the air with the smell of mint. "A natural incense bowl."

Toki quirked a gentle smile at him, managing to not look entirely miserable from her seat on the arm.
“You didn’t have to do that,” she murmurs softly. “I’d have gotten hold of some mint somehow. But thank you, Tenebris. That’ll help clear the air some at least. With the fan and the windows open, I’m sure the house will be clear soon.”

He nodded gently, smiling at her, "My pleasure, miss Toki" he rumbled, "I do hope you feel better soon enough."

“My nausea is already ebbing off. Or is at least not as bad as it was a little bit ago. If I’m going to apparently have food triggers, it’s possible that it could last well into twelve weeks or longer.” Her bones buzz faintly, and she heaves a larger sigh and gets off of the couch. She stretches her arms, and tucks her fingers into her pockets. “Would you like some tea while we wait for Aliquam, Tenebris? I think I could use some hot cocoa- and he’s going to need something for breakfast before he goes running off to train the guards.” She had full intentions of bringing the smoking incense bowl with her into the kitchen, however.

"Sure. Until I get the mint I need to refill my pipe," he rumbled, "That will do quite nicely.” He scooped the bowl of incense into his hand, and motioned for her to lead the way. He smiled at her as she led him to the kitchen. “Thank you, Toki."

“It’s not a big problem,” She chuckles faintly. When the incense bowl is settled on the counter, Toki gathers a kettle full of water, and sets it to heat on the stove while she prepares his preferred tea into his usual mug. She collects another mug, and then goes to fetch the packets of instant cocoa. “So, what brings you by the house so early?” She inquires. “I didn’t figure I’d see you until well past ten or eleven.” It wasn’t even eight yet.

"I suppose I was being a concerned father again, I was coming to check on the two of you.” he admitted, "That, and Aliquam woke with a start, I felt that trace element of a flare of magic when he seemed to wake.”

“Ah. My apologies for making him alarm you. I didn’t know you could feel when his magic flaredthat’s actually fairly neat.” Her shoulder hunched faintly, and she hid a soft sigh. She tugged open both cocoa packets, and proceeded to dump them into the mug. The powder puffed up, and she fanned it with her hand. She couldn’t actually smell it over the thick scent of mint that was gradually clogging up her kitchen, but she’d take mint over nausea any day. Idly, she stirs in some creamer and makes the base liquid, contently waiting for the water to boil. “Is that something all parents can feel with their kids?”
"Sharing a soul will do that." he murmured, rubbing his chest. "Not sure if it's exclusive or if I'm one of many with this capability."

Understanding dawns in her sockets, and Toki nods quietly. "Given the method of their creation, it might be unique. I don’t feel anything from the tiny souls yet." And her soul had literally sparked off the souls technically on it’s own, though obviously borrowing Aliquam’s ‘genetics’ of sorts. She wanders to the teakettle, and rests her hand on the edge of it. Toki is admittedly a little bit impatient- but she threads some fire magic across the surface of the pot, and heats it rapidly. Within a few seconds, it is screaming at her, and she proceeds to pour the hot liquid into his mug with his tea bags. She pours him his tea, and slides his mug towards him along the counter.

Her cocoa is next, and she pours in the hot liquid, stirring it with a chopstick she kept aside strictly for stirring. Chopsticks were fun- but forks required much less effort to eat. Chopsticks made great stirring sticks though.

Toki hums faintly, staring at the dark liquid swirling. "I’ll make breakfast when Pap gets downstairs." She’d rather make something he wanted rather than something he didn’t- he did get a shitty start to his day.

"Sounds good, no rush at all." he chuckled, "We have a whole morning ahead of us to eat."

"We do," she nods, "But Ali was scheduled for more training with the guards in a couple hours." Still, she collects her mug of cocoa and snags a seat in one of the chairs that was always being moved to and from the kitchen. She nudges the other out for the elder monster to take a seat in, and crosses her legs as she sips her cocoa. It is thick and rich like usual, and she enjoys it with a soft groan of appreciation. "I’ll ask him what he wants when he gets out of the shower. He was trying to scrub the smell of last night’s dinner off of his bones-, which is really, really sweet of him. Heh. When he’s craving spaghetti, he’s going to have to do spaghetti night at your place, I think. At least until the little ones decide that spaghetti is an acceptable meal."

"I'm wondering if it would prove more beneficial if we convince him to cook other dishes. Spaghetti is a good starter, but it seems less than what he's truly capable of."

"I've been working with him on it. He’s learned a lot of the stuff I know how to cook- and we’re working on perfecting a lot of stuff from one of the cookbooks mom sent me for my birthday." She hums slightly into her cocoa, and chuckles softly. "Still, he might end up doing dinner for you guys some nights. I can’t imagine him doing a couple months with no spaghetti. That’s like me going months without cocoa, or you without your tea or pipe."

"It's... actually not that dampening on his psychological status, he likes cooking it since it was the first dish he ever perfected." he explained. "He wont perish because he hasn't gotten to cook it."

"Is that so?" She blinks over at him. "That’s not what I meant though, Tenebris. None of us would technically die if we didn’t get to enjoy our favorite things. You could live without your tea and pipe- I could technically live without my cocoa too. But life would be a miserable and slightly sad thing without our favorite things in life.” Cocking a brow at him, Toki chuckled faintly to herself. “I’m not going to deny him his spaghetti- though I will try to distract him from missing it as best I can with the cookbook."

"Do whatever, he's quite adaptive, I’m sure it'll work out." Tenebris chuckled, before he took a deep breath, enjoying the diluted smell of the mint. "Mmm... The scent of spearmint already diluted by the oxygen. I think I may do smoke-bowls more often."

Toki chuckled softly. “Just don’t do them near any smoke detectors, or you’ll set them off.” Hers were still slightly ruined from when she’d scorched Vikki- she hadn’t gotten around to replacing them yet. Toki shifts in her seat as she takes another swallow of cocoa. Her middle bubbled faintly, and she took a deep breath of the smoke to try and soothe it. “He and I will talk about it.” She nods, bones blanching as she glares faintly at her cocoa. No- this was not happening. No. She refused to accept it.

He chuckled softly, though it faded off as he noticed her expression. His brow furrowed, and he paused mid sip of his tea. "Toki?"

“Nngg… Nope.”

Toki couldn’t refuse it for long. It bubbled up the back of her throat, sour like before, and she abruptly stands as condensation beads at her skull. Her mug is discarded, very nearly spilling it in her haste to set the half finished cocoa in her seat. She doesn’t have the time to make another mad dash for the bathroom- so the empty side of the sink would have to do.

Her bones rattle as she loudly retched. It was the second heave that had the cocoa flavored magic back flowing out of her body and into the sink. Her fingers take a death grip on the metal edging, and she braces herself for round two.

He was at her side in seconds, one large hand coming to pat gently along her back. "That's... very unfortunate," he said quietly, before hearing footsteps on the stairs, "Ah... here comes my son."

Toki grimaced. Her dry heaving covered the sounds of Aliquam’s approach. She trusted Tenebris’ ears though, and focused on letting her body do what it needed. Most of the cocoa had been expelled with the first couple of heaves, so now it was just the twins letting her know they did not appreciate her attempting to drink so soon. Idly, she shakily turned the sink on to wash down the green goop that had been splattered on the sink.

She really didn’t want him to walk in on her sick again- but every noise that escaped her was unpleasant and betrayed her. “Ughhh…"

"Toki..." Aliquam walked over with a frown, approaching closer once Tenebris stepped out of the way.

She groaned again quietly, and tipped her skull to rinse out her mouth with the tap water once her dry retching eased off. “Sorry you came out to that, Ali,” she mutters quietly, rinsing her teeth and flushing her mouth clean. Once water had replaced the sour taste in her mouth, she righted herself and guided the water to rinse the sink clean.

Toki was still nauseated and her bones looked paler than normal, but the mint was beginning to help again now that the little souls in her belly had finished their tantrum. “I’m okay, I promise.”

Aliquam looped his arms around her gently, settling his palms over the soft plane of her middle. His fingers gently rubbed soothing circles over her lower belly, and he nuzzled her shoulder gently. He hummed softly to soothe her and the little souls below his fingers. "Goodness," he murmured, "My poor Toki..."

Toki finished the sink, and then leaned back into his chest. Her fingers came down to slide along his own, cupping his hands as they cupped her and their little ones. Rolling her skull back to rest safely against his chest, she let her sockets close and a soft sigh escaped her. “That feels good… It’s helping too. Thank you, Pap.” She murmurs faintly. “I’ll be okay, Ali. Just… no cocoa for me. I guess it’s a fair exchange though.” Given that the spaghetti smell made her horribly ill, it was fair that she didn’t get to drink her favorite drink. “Are you okay? You seemed pretty disturbed when you went to "shower…"

He whined quietly, "Not your cocoa...." he then sighed and shook his head, "No, I'm alright. Please don't worry about me."

"My cocoa for your spaghetti- it's a fair trade, Pap." She nestled into him quietly, peeking her sockets open to peer up at him. “Papyrus, a relationship is a two way street. I’m at least familiar with what’s happening- I doubt you’ve ever regurgitated magic before. I’m going to worry- just as you worry for the three of us.” Her thumb massaged the back of his palm, and she melted further into him with a sigh. “I need to make you breakfast,” she mutters, eyes closing again. “You need to eat before you go out to train.” He was already late, unless he’d taken time to make a call from upstairs to let them know why.

"I have plenty other dishes to make you know." he murmured, before he nuzzled his cheek to hers. He rumbles softly, a soothing sound for her benefit. "No, you don’t need to cook anything for me. I appreciate your effort though, Tokiko.” he purred.

Toki quirked a faint smile, and hummed softly. “We have many dishes we can make,” she murmurs. They had an entire cookbook of dishes to make and perfect. “Are you sure? I could make you some pancakes or something.” Something simple and easy wouldn’t be too hard to do. She could go flop on the couch afterwards. Being sick was tiring- and she wanted to catch a nap before she had to go hunch over her paperwork again. “You need time to get into your training gear, don’t you?” Unless he canceled it for the day.

"I... ah..." he laughed quietly, "I told them I’d be a little late... they understood, being that you're my mate." he murmured, pressing a soft kiss to her skull. "I plan on making sure that Father is ready to take care of you while I’m gone."

She wasn’t sure if they were officially mates- given that they weren’t married or bound or whatever the monster equivalent was, and did technically live in separate houses, even if he stayed at her home most nights. A soft buzz of agreement escapes her, and she leans into his soft kiss. “And you’re a very good mate,” she murmurs slightly, testing the word out on her metaphorical tongue. It was a good word. “I don’t need someone to watch me though, Pap. All I need is some saltine crackers and a nap before I get to work.”

"Father knows how much I worry about you, you know." he huffed quietly, gently nudging her skull with his chin. "Even if I don’t stay, he'll make sure you do not over-exert yourself."

Toki continued rubbing his hands lightly, and sighed in affectionate exasperation. With the twins made known, Aliquam could be such a worrier. “I’m not going to overexert myself doing papers, Pap. I spend hours hunched over the table- the only thing at risk is probably my posture.” And her tailbone- sitting for so long drove her crazy, but the paperwork was important.

He nuzzled her softly and pressed a few clanking kisses to her head. "I love you so much.”

Toki laughed softly, and lifted a hand to cradle his jaw. She shifted, rotating so she could face him, his hands sliding to her lower back instead of her belly, and leaned up to kiss him gently in return. “I love you too,” she murmurs, “but my statement stands no matter how you butter me up. I’m not made of glass, love. The little souls and myself will be okay to do paperwork without their grandpa practicing his babysitting skills early.”

"Nyeeehhh." he whined slightly at her. "Toki... I'll stop by later, okay?"

"I would hope so.” she smiles up at him soothingly, gives him one more kiss, and then eases out of his hold. If he continued to hold her, she wouldn’t want him to leave, and he did have prior arrangements. Toki stretches her shoulders, and goes to put the half empty mug of cocoa into the sink. The smell doesn’t bother her, nor does the sight, so it must have been something in the taste. Either way, she looked forlornly to the drink as she dumped it down the drain. “I always miss you when you’re missing all day. Maybe stop in when the guards break for lunch?”

"Of course, and I’ll join you for dinner. Maybe some pasta with a vinaigrette or a spiced oil dressing?" he purred, watching her.

She shot him a smile, and leaned up to kiss his cheek. “That sounds lovely, dear. Heh… hey Pap? Probably odd timing, but… you spend a lot of time here, even if you do spend a fair bit of it at your house too. Do you ever think about maybe… I dunno, moving in with me officially?"

"I could, yes," he said softly, "Of course. Father and Caeruleus can keep my room intact but I could grab what I need and come stay with you." he purred lightly.

She smiled up at him quietly and laughed softly. “As cool as your bed is, I don’t think we need two in my room. Well, our room, if you officially move in. Do you want to though? I know you’ve lived with your dad and your brother for all of your life.” Yeah, they’d still be relatively close, but it was still scary moving for the first time and technically leaving your family.

"I’ve never tried anything like that, honestly, so… I at least want to try it. If it works out.”

“If it works out, then you’ll be here. If not- then it’s not like it’s far to move you back, yeah? We can continue what we’re doing now if all else fails.” Toki wasn’t an extremely hard person to live with, really. He was practically doing it now- except he’d come here for bed every night, instead of returning to his family’s place.

Toki gives him a wider smile, and gently bumps her hip to his. “How about we talk more about it over dinner tonight, yeah? We don’t want to keep the guards waiting for too much longer.”

"Sure..." he purred, before he realized exactly how late it was getting to be in the morning. "Oh crap!" He then kissed her one last time, grabbed his armor from one of the closets in the main room, and began dressing as he ran out the open door.

"That... was amusing." Tenebris snorted.

Toki watched Aliquam go with a soft bemused sigh, and then flicked her eye lights to Tenebris. “That’s Ali for you,” she says fondly. “At least he doesn’t have to watch the doorways anymore when he’s rushing around. Heh… So, about what he said... are you really going to keep an eye on me all day? It’s hardly going to be entertaining watching me work on papers for hours on end.”

"I may just do just that, but not for the reason you think.”

She crosses her arms across her chest and arches a brow up at him. Her sockets half lid, and she gives him a look that says entirely how much she doubts his words. “And what reason would that be?"

"I’d... Actually like to help you," he replied, bemused at her look. "Paperwork was everything back in the labs, so. I might just be a valuable asset to this new enemy." he chuckled, joking with that statement.

Toki watched him for a moment, still incredulous. “… You’re actually volunteering to help with paperwork?” Her tone was even more skeptical than her look portrayed. “I mean, I’m not going to complain- it’s a lot of reading, though. I’ve got about three hundred more sets of paperwork to go over today- help would be appreciated. Though… unless you can forge my signature, I’m still going to have to sign all of them.”

“Fair enough.” he rumbled gently, moving out of the kitchen and into the dining room. "I'll do what I can." He pulled up a chair and sat down, starting on a file nearest him.

It would, ironically, be his file that he grabbed. Toki takes a seat next to him after following him into the dining room, and offers him one of her larger pens to write with. It’s technically a gag pen she had gotten in her Christmas stocking- and as such, it’s bright pink and covered with bee stickers. His behemoth hands would crush her nicer pens if he put too much pressure behind his strokes. “If I give you a sample of my signature, you can practice it a bit. This is technically illegal- but I really could use the help. I wont tell if you wont tell.” A sticky note is then defiled with her signature, and passed over for him to practice with.

He chuckled, eying her signature for a moment. "Even Scientists are known to bend a few rules, my dear Tokiko." However, he put the pen down, and looked into his file, wondering just what was in it.

His file had a lot of known information on him- stuff that wasn’t too private. Stuff that wasn’t to be shared without his permission had been redacted on Asgore’s orders. For the most part it listed his occupation, all of his legal numbers and information that would officially become his once everything was done, and it also listed him as having an official guardian, and being considered part of the Nara clan by proxy. His name was actually listed as Tenebris Gaster of the Nara Clan. There were spots for Toki’s signatures where she was agreeing that this information looked correct, a spot for her to sign for him to get his rights- the file was approximately forty pages thick, with signatures needed every other page.

“True that- but if it was found that these were being forged, it could set everything back by months of progress. If you don’t think you can forge it, just let me know, and I’ll handle the signing.” Toki was already setting in to her file. This file was on Grillby and his business in the village, and was a slight bit more complex, as he was the only monster who had an entire building dedicated to his business. The market district was full of stands and collapsible tables, so that was an entirely different sort of paperwork that she had to do. “An accidental fire threat?” She mutters to herself, brows furrowing as she checkmarks the ‘not a threat’ box. If Grillby started a fire, heavens knew it would not be an accident. She was more likely to start an accidental fire than he was.

Upon seeing this information and knowing it’s importance, he pulled up a side sheet of paper and began to write down these numbers. However, he soon noticed how name was put, and his eyes narrowed slightly as he stared at it. "Toki. A question."

She didn’t glance up, busy reading the fine print at the bottom of one of Grillby’s pages. “I might have an answer.”

"Why is my name written like this? And... An official guardian?" he questioned, "I've been on this planet for what is almost a thousand years now. Why do I require a guardian?" he asked, sounding slightly offended by the idea.

Toki looked up, tilting her head quietly in consideration. She inhaled, taking a deep breath of the mint-scented air, and leaned her elbows on the table. ‘I’m your guardian.” She tells him honestly. “I’m the guardian for any monster who comes to the Village. I don’t really understand the complexities of it, but… you guys don’t have all the rights that humans do yet. It’s... Frankly stupid, to be honest. These papers are to help get you guys your rights- That’s why I’m working hard to get them done as fast as possible, so Asgore can continue to make progress with the governments of the world. But until you have them, the only way to keep you on the surface was to essentially give you a guardian. But, because I am also the head of the Nara Clan, it essentially puts you all as my wards, which by proxy means that you are all part of my clan."

"After everything, as well as the addition of my personal heritage I would have thought it would at least allow my sons and myself a place in my own clan..." he grumbled quietly, looking at the next page. He then huffed and closed the folder, leaning back, he looked to pull out his pipe, but upon realizing his spearmint was left at home, what he had now burning slowly in the bowl, he sighed and tucked it away again.

"Why is it that a large portion of human beings assume they're the superior race? If anything, we Monsters were on the earth before them. Is it because of their 'opposable thumbs' against the other animals of the world? We have them too” he sighed, lifting a hand and bending his thumb a few times to make his point.

"I assure you if humans had been the ones to do this, we wouldn't force them all this paperwork just to reclaim the land we once called home." he growled in annoyance.

Toki let him vent, and then leaned back in her seat with a soft sigh. “I don’t know, Tenebris. Humanity is… cruel and corrupt, I think. We like control- we fear that which we don’t understand. We are a race that can hate and murder and enslave our own kind simply based on the different color of our skin.” She exhales quietly, and gives him a soft look. “When you get your rights, you and all of the monsters will be given the choice to remain apart of my clan, or to break free. That is what I want more than anything- for you all to have the choice to do what you want, when you want. I want you to be free to own your own land, to own your own cars, to own businesses or farms, or whatever makes your souls happy. Right now, myself and all of the other guardians of the world are simply… well, gilded cages, as harsh as the term is. We offer protection and home- but you’re not truly free. Not yet.”

And not all of the other guardians were like her. She’d met them a few times- and not all of them offered complete freedom like she did. They made decisions without consulting any of their wards. Toki left the decisions usually to the monsters- they governed themselves in the village. She simply handled the paperwork and kept the stress off of the civilians. Nothing of Nara Village seemed like a cage- even with the tall walls of her compound surrounding her house- and she did everything she possibly could to make sure that it wasn’t. But by legal standards- she was the cage that kept them safe from the harshness of the government, and from true freedom.

“But you all will be soon.” She gives him a determined look.

He was silent for a moment, staring hard at her table for a time. Eventually, he sighed. "Thank you, Toki." he murmured, looking to her, "Your selfless consideration for our kind will reward you in due time." he said with a small smile.

“I don’t do this for the reward, Tenebris.” She shakes her head, and turns her gaze back to her papers. “I do this because freedom is the right of all sentient beings. And as much as I do not like being a cage for you- I’d rather you be in a cage where you can see the sky, than be trapped underground for months- or years, if it drags out this long- before you could enjoy the world up here. I don’t… do a lot of things that other guardians do. Not all of them let their wards make decisions for themselves.”

And other than keeping this information from everyone, Toki was honest with all of the monsters. She asked opinions- she took opinions too- and she let them decide what to do with the town. She provided the means for them to do with it what they wanted- and she made sure that their will was done.
The fact that none of the monsters ever seemed to suspect anything spoke measures of her effort to make sure that they were as free as they could currently be.

"Ignorance is bliss, I suppose." he rumbled quietly, "I'm relieved that they don't immediately realize when there's something wrong, but then again, the ignorance would put them in danger, if the situation was that bad."

"In some places, it is." She grimaces slightly, and continues signing the papers. She plows through Grillby’s paperwork, and then tucks his folder into the ‘finished’ stack. “Which is why we’re working hard to get everyone the right to choose. It’s looking like you’ll all be able to drive before you’re able to own homes though, so that will be interesting. Apparently the motor companies are pushing for it- they want to make specialty cars for monsters with special needs. Like… your legs, technically. You wouldn’t be able to drive my truck with how your legs are structured.”

"I haven't remotely considered driving since I got here, though I suppose if moving large quantities of things, or going long distances, both would more of a convenience by a vehicle," he rumbled, before he laughed, "I was almost too large for the cab, remember? I had to tuck in my legs and lay in the back seat until we returned to the compound."

“I remember that. You fit better in the bed of the truck than you did inside of the cab.” She chuckles softly. “But no, going by car is much faster. I’m about dead center between the mountain and the city. It’s a couple days by wagon to the mountain, but it’s only like… two or three hours by car, I think. It’s been a while since I’ve made the drive. It’s about the same to the city. It’d probably be a lot easier on you for visiting Asgore if you could drive.” Toki grins to herself, and selects the next file. It’s Cae’s folder.

"We'd have to make resources count, you probably don’t have any fuel stations in the immediate vicinity." he chuckled quietly, before he noticed the file, "Ah, if I may have a look at that." he requested.

Toki slid him the file easily, and took his instead so she could go over it and sign where she needed to. “We do actually have a gas station between here and town. Not towards the mountain, but it’s about an hour towards town. It’s near the fire department.”

"Hm... an hour..." he murmured, opening his son's file to look at it now.

Cae’s file was a lot like his. There was a little bit redacted, but not nearly as much. His files were a lot thinner than Tenebris’ own, with his own personalized legal information.

Toki scrolls through Tenebris’ files, and signs what she needs to. There’s a lot to sign, and she pauses as she gets to the last page. “I’m going to put you down for wanting a license regardless, mkay? It’s not a bad thing to have- it means if there’s an emergency, you could drive if someone else was unable to.”

"Sure,” he murmurs distractedly, “that’s fine."

Toki nods, and finishes up his papers. She slide’s Ali’s file over to him too, figuring that he wants to look them over, and then dives headlong into her work. She slightly tunes him out, muttering here and there to herself as she works, settling into her usual groove and completely losing track of time.

Aliquam’s file was thicker than Cae’s, but not nearly as thick as Tenebris’ own had been. Inside were general details, as well as express permissions for him to wield his magic in an offensive measure without repercussion. As a guard, he needed it to keep the property safe. It was slated that he- and a lot of the wolf guards, actually- were there to guard her and her wards, as well as provide protection for supplies that were brought to and fro. He had a lot more information, loops and hoops to jump through that made his paperwork a bit more tedious to read over than any of the others. He was also marked as one of the few skeleton monsters- Cae’s file had one too. Tenebris’ file did not state what he was.

The government was fully aware of HAM- and the threat that they posed. This was the best option they had, other than putting her with a twenty-four hour protective service. Instead, she had the monsters to guard her twenty four seven instead. Which, technically she was supposed to have- but she didn’t bother informing the other monsters of this. It wasn’t like she left the compound often- and she didn’t need special treatment.

He looks over everything, then sets it to her pile to be signed, before he looked at Aliquam's file, of course he’d have a bit more detail to his, permissions to use his magic. Yes, yes. It's all accounted for.

---

Hours pass with her hunched in place, signing file after file after file, making sure that everything was in order as she cranked them out. The mint had burnt out by then, but the house still smelled vaguely like it, and that in itself kept her empty ‘stomach’ calm. Well, that and the fact that she was completely lost in her work, oblivious to her companion and the ache in her back.

After a couple hours, Tenebris had gotten a crick in his back and he sighed, then he stood and popped his back, "Nngh, jeez... I'm getting too old for this shit."

Toki’s posture hadn’t changed, still slouched and stiff and most likely going to make some horrifying noises once she did move. She was still scribbling away with one hand cradling her forehead as her eye lights scan over the papers. She doesn’t even notice him getting up, and her vocal response is more an instinctual agreement than an aware response. “Mhm.”

He rolled his eyes. She was completely lost. He sighed, and stepped behind her. Tenebris then pulled her chair back and away from the table. "Come on. Break time."

She was aware enough to lift her pen before she made an erroneous mark on the papers. Toki blinked, still poised to write, and then glanced back at Tenebris. His words registered, and she quirked the corner of her mouth upwards at him. "I got lost again, didn’t I? Sorry. I sort of zone out. Okay. Break time- I can do that. My back is killing me."

Easing out of her chair proves to be a pain in the ass, and her back makes some distinctly horrifying noises as she forcibly straightens. She kneads her knuckles into the ecto-flesh of her lower back. “Agh. Skeletons should not be able to get back cramps from magic. There is no logic in it. We don’t even have muscle!

"If I may," he stretched out his arms and set one hand on her shoulder, the other coming to rest flat against her back. "I have a remedy for this."

“A remedy?” She tilted her head back to peer at him over her shoulder, but didn’t fight his grasp. No, she leaned slightly into his hands and waited trustingly. “Is it like some sort chiropractic work for skeletons?”

"You could say so." he slowly bent her back as he pushed on her spine, hearing consecutive 'pop, pop, pop, pop's from her back.
Her hands came to brace against the back of her chair, and she groaned faintly. “Holy shit- ah, that hurts… but in a good way? Hurts less after it pops.” Her brows furrow, and she stretches slightly so he can pop further up her back. “Mmmnn… Thank you for this. Need me to pop your back too?” She couldn’t do it like he could, but she did know the human method.

"You're not strong enough to use your hands..." he told her, "But I do think there may be another method to do so. Though, what did you have in mind?"

“I actually think I can. It’s all about positioning.” When he finishes her back, she stretches, rotating her shoulders slightly. “Ah. Much better.” She still ached, and there were cramps in the summoned flesh of her lower back, but it wasn’t something that he could fix immediately. “If you don’t mind laying on the floor, I can give it a shot. You’ve got the added benefit of having flesh- or whatever it is you’re made out of- with bones under it. I know how to work with that.”

"I suppose," he chuckled, before lying down with a sigh.

When he got settled, Toki carefully straddled him. He was a lot larger- but she had long legs, and she could manage it. Standing above him, she grinned down at him and tapped his arms with her fingers. “Lay them flat at your side, please, and relax.” Her digits then trailed to his back, and she edged down. She started at his lower back, and placed her palms on either side of his spine.

As she began to rub, loosening the tight muscles, she quietly threaded her magic into them to promote the muscles to loosen, so she could ease his vertebrae back into place.

He laid his arms flat and took a deep breath, before he sighed out softly. "Ooohhh..."

“Mhm.” She might have been a little bit smug- and probably should have listened to him- but she slowly began to pop his back for him once the muscles in his back loosened enough for his bones to move. She had to put all of her body weight behind her shove, but each vertebrae slid into place and was soothed from aching by a wash of her heated magic. Working her way up his back, Toki managed to get most of his back adjusted, and then carefully shifted so he could get up. Her arms might ache a little bit from the force she’d had to exude, but she was smug as she grinned down to him. “Told you I could do it. Feel better?”

The sound of his back popping made him take deep moaning breaths, his hide shivering slightly under his coat. "Oh gods..." he sighed happily.

Toki laughed at the sounds he made, and carefully eased herself to sit beside him. She leaned forwards, putting her elbows on her knees and her chin in her palms, and watched him relax. The position made her middle shift, pudging outwards just slightly. “Heh- you really do need to relax from time to time, Tenebris. Your back was full of knots. I could feel it in my magic. I know I overwork myself, but at least I don’t have physical muscles anymore that can turn themselves into painful lumps of ow.”

"This... Mmmh~ It feels so much better now..." he sighed, eyes half-lidded as they slowly rolled upward to look at her.

Toki laughed at the sounds he made, and carefully eased herself to sit beside him. She leaned forwards, putting her elbows on her knees and her chin in her palms, and watched him relax. The position made her middle shift, pudging outwards just slightly. “Heh- you really do need to relax from time to time, Tenebris. Your back was full of knots. I could feel it in my magic. I know I overwork myself, but at least I don’t have physical muscles anymore that can turn themselves into painful lumps of ow.”

"This... Mmmh- It feels so much better now..." he sighed, eyes half-lidded as they slowly rolled upward to look at her.

Toki laughed quietly, and reached a toe out to gently poke him in the ribs. “Maybe I need another part time job. How does being a bee keeper, author, and masseuse sound for a resume?” She teased lightly. “Toki’s Magical Massages. Sounds pretty legit.”

He grunted, then shot her a look, "Mmmh. Like you don’t already have a lot on your plate?"

She drops a hand and pats her middle. “And my plate’s about to get even fuller for the next several years.” Toki laughs slightly, and leans down to teasingly poke his cheek. “I was teasing. But I wouldn’t mind helping you relax your muscles when you need it. Didn’t you say you were getting too old earlier? Or was I hearing things?”

Her eyes are twinkling at him merrily, a playful grin stretching up her face. She was feeling better, her nausea completely gone-and it was showing in her mood.

He moved onto his hands and feet as he arched his back out like a cat, stretching the newly relaxed muscles slightly, before he looked at her. "Hrm. I said nothing of the sort." he huffed softly, but he had a playful smile of his own as he arched a brow at her.

“I dunno,” she grinned, wiggling a brow back at him playfully. He dwarfed her, crouched on all fours as she sat there on her behind. She leaned backwards, bracing her hands on the floor behind her. “I think I distinctly recall you mentioning that you were too old for something. I might have been in my own little world, but I know what I heard. I guess you are getting up there, huh, Grandpa Tenny~?”

"Very funny, Toki,” he huffed, before he reached over and flicked her gently on the forehead. "There's only two people in the world allowed to call me Grandpa.”

“I think I’m a riot, mister ‘World’s Foxiest Grandpa’.” Toki was entirely unrepentant as she rubbed her forehead where he’d flicked it. Amusement glimmered in her eyes. “And who might those two people be~?”

He glared at her, then his gaze softened and he lowered his eye lights downwards, pointing to her stomach. "Them."

“Oh? These two, right here?” Her grin softens, and she edges her shirt upwards, showing off the starting curve of her belly. It’s dimmer than the last time he saw it, but the glow is still strong and still bright. With how she’s sitting, the top of the womb is visible, and a little gray soul is visible. She beams at him, all joy and happiness in her gaze. “I’m sure you’re going to be the best Grandpa. You’re already learning how to settle their tantrums.” The mint had most certainly helped settle her belly.

"Hahahaha!” he laughed at that, and then he sighed and leaned forwards, pressing a soft kiss to the top of her skull. "You'd make a fine daughter-in-law."

She let her shirt drop back down and smiled warmly up at the much larger monster, dropping her hand to let it rub her middle quietly. Not as relaxing as when Aliquam did it, but it was still nice. "You’d make an amazing father-in-law. I wouldn’t mind marrying Aliquam, but I don’t know if we’re ready for that yet.” Though legally, any marriage wouldn’t even be legal yet anyhow, unless they did it through Asgore. And even then, it would only be legal through monster standards. “I know you heard us in the kitchen. We’re going to talk about him moving in tonight, before we even get close to talking about tying the knot yet. What are your thoughts on your youngest moving out?”

"He may be my youngest, but he is an adult. If he thinks he is ready, he is free to go, if it ends up not so, then he is always welcome to return home."

“Good answer.” Toki nods up at him. She shifts, and pushes a hand gently against his face. “Okay, mister Foxy Grandpa, my tailbone hurts sitting like this on the tile. Back up a bit so I can get up.”

"Don’t call me that." he huffed quietly, grunting at the hand to his face. He did begin backing up however, and offered her a hand once he gained his feet under him.
She takes the hand up gracefully, and dusts off her backside once she’s upright. She grins at him unrepentantly. “And what exactly are you going to do to me if I keep calling you that?” She couldn’t help poking lightly at the monster before her—really, she shouldn’t, but she couldn’t help it.

"Simply this." he then reached over and flicked her forehead again.

Toki flailed her hands at his with a laugh, covering the twice-flicked spot with one of her palms. “Really? A forehead flick? That’s not what I was expecting. But I guess that’s not so bad—very easy to block you from doing it again.” He couldn’t flick her forehead if he couldn’t get to it.

He rolled his eyes, then reached up and flicked one of her horn-tips instead, "I am a creative individual, Tokiko Nara... I will find a way to get my revenge."

Flicking her horns is not usually a good thing to do. Sparks fly from the blackened tips, dancing over the arm of his coat and down her skull, and she snickers at him in amusement. “Careful Tenny, or you’ll light your nice jacket on fire.”

... And there was his gaze of reconsideration as his hand retracted back rapidly.

She reached up and patted his sleeve, making sure no parts of his coat smoldered into flames. Toki gave him an apologetic smile. “Sorry, Tenebris. People seem to forget that parts of me act like flint.”

"It's quite alright. I've never seen bones this conductive, honestly. It's fascinating."

Toki rolls her eyes and teasingly snaps her teeth at him. “It’s a pain in the ass—my teeth are worse than my horns. They’re too tightly interlocked to do anything with my mouth open, unless my teeth are wet.” Her teeth weren’t even black like her horns were. “Not all of me actually makes sparks, either. My horns and my teeth do, but the rest of me doesn’t.”

"Interesting..." he rumbled, "Perhaps I could take a sample later on when I have my lab set up."

“A sample of my bones...” She arches a brow at him curiously. “I mean, you could probably take a sample now and check it out the next time you go to the castle.”

"With you being pregnant, I wouldn't want to be gone for a long period of time. You're too precious to us."

“Tenebris, if you’re gone for a week, I hardly think me or the little souls will die. Valentines is coming up— I’m sure you want to spend time with Asgore, right?” She smiles at him warmly, and chuffs softly. “You can kill two birds with one stone while you’re there. The, uh, sample won’t hurt me or them, right? I’ve got the HP to tank any damage that comes from it, but...”

"... It would not hurt them." He sighed and rubbed his head, glancing away from her. "Time with his majesty... would be nice... And I can certainly trust our little family up here..."

“Then spend time with Asgore.” She smiled up at him. “Really- I’m going to be spending some time with Ali, and Grillby told me he’s got plans for Cae. Don’t waste the day away here. Hell, I can even drive you to the castle if you’d rather not take two extra days to make the trek by cart.”

"Heh... As long as it's safe, I’d actually appreciate the run..." he admitted, rubbing his cheek now, though the staining black was shining through the hole in his palm.

Toki grinned up at him. “You’re adorable when you blush, you know that?” Despite totally calling him on it, she nods. “So long as you don’t mind sitting in the back seat again. We can roll down the window and you can stick your feet out if you want.”
"That gives me a hilarious mental image that I probably did not need, Toki. But that certainly sounds reasonable." he agreed warmly, before he huffed, crossing his arms as he peered down at her. "I am not adorable, damn it."

“You are very adorable.” She grins up at him. Petulantly, she reaches up and gently pinches the remnants of his flush. “The evidence is right here, mister blush master. I’m sure Asgore enjoys just how adorably cute you are. After all, you are the world’s foxiest grandpa- so your beanie proudly proclaims.”

Before he can retaliate, she steps out of range and saunters into the kitchen, laughing as she goes. “Want some tea, Tenebris? I actually could use something to drink, at least until Aliquam comes back for lunch.”

"You will regret your actions on this day, Tokiko Nara." he growled as his cheek was pinched. Once his cheek was free again, he rubbed his cheek and stretched his back. "Some tea sounds nice, and hopefully you can stomach it."

“No regrets here,” she chuckles back to him, completely unrepentant. “Though I’m hoping I can stomach tea too. It would be bad karma for teasing you if I cant. Heh. Orange blossom like usual? Mmm, I might have some crackers too… Can you grab me the box from the top shelf? Aliquam sometimes forgets that I’m not quite as tall as all of you.”

"Orange Blossom sounds wonderful, thank you." he replied, following her to the kitchen and reaching into the cabinet upon request. "No problem" he replied, tossing her the box of crackers.

The saltines were caught, and she liberated a package of them so she could start nibbling them while waiting for the kettle to come to a boil.
Chapter 36

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And this would mark the first time they actually do the do on screen outside of a heat. Heh~ Yes, this chapter is 18 plus exclusively- as will the next two chapters. Valentine's, baby~

Don't forget to visit us at our blog! you can find us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Toki and Aliquam talked over dinner, and decided that yes, he would be moving in. Moving him in didn’t actually take very long. All of his things fit in the back of her truck, and it was just a short jaunt down the street to bring them to her home. They ended up leaving his bed behind. Everything else was loaded up and taken to her home, and now her room was much more fleshed out. As was her house in general- lingering amongst her things, his items had been interspersed.

It wasn’t just her house anymore- it was their house. Not all that much changed in their dynamics- except now he was there with her every night. Not that she minded. Toki enjoyed her time with Papyrus, and getting to spend every night with him was a treat indeed. She liked being able to wake up to his arms around her, or being sprawled across him.

Though she did feel bad for the mornings where he woke up to her making ghastly noises from the bathroom. Those were fairly common, but not as bad as it could be. Saltines and mint seemed to help keep most of her nausea at bay during the mornings. Thankfully for her, it so far was strictly morning sickness- though the ‘morning’ aspect could be as early as three or four in the morning.

At least the house smelled nice, like a York Patty truck had exploded with minty freshness inside of it.

The days bubbled past, and soon Toki found herself taking Tenebris on a truck ride up to the castle. They’d shoved him into the back of the cabin, folding down the front seat so he could rest his chest against it and watch out the front window with her. He couldn’t exactly wear seatbelts, but it wasn’t like he could fit out any of her windows if they wrecked, either.

Toki had taken him up mid morning on Valentines, dropping him off so he could spend a couple of days with the King. She’d then hurried home, possibly breaking the speed limit once or twice, because she had preparations to do for her evening with Aliquam. She already had one part of it prepared- it had been prepared for several days.

She knew Grillby was doing something for Cae, so the elder brother was at low risk of interrupting their fun.

Toki had parked her truck in its usual spot when she’d gotten home around two or three, and had hustled inside. Aliquam was busy most of the day- he’d volunteered, with her reassurance that she really didn’t mind if he was busy all day, to pick up the shifts for the guards who had made plans with their mates for Valentines. But there was no telling when he’d be done with that, and she wanted to have everything ready for sure for when he got inside.
Toki might not have been able to stomach spaghetti, but ravioli seemed to be okay most nights. So she’d done a spinach and mozzarella ravioli, with a side of garlic bread and roasted chicken. Toki had also taken the time to make him homemade chocolate oranges, as giving chocolates was tradition on this such day. One of her recipe books had them in it- and it seemed to be a unique thing to make. They’d actually turned out very good- though they weren’t quite as detailed as the store bought ones might be, she’d actually enjoyed the little nibble that the twins had let her enjoy.

They seemed to like things that tasted like oranges.

The house smelled deliciously like garlic, and was warm. Toki had the ‘to go’ bag for after dinner resting on the counter, with everything that she would need inside of it. She puttered around the kitchen in her apron, humming an idle tune to herself as she fiddled with the wrapping on the box of chocolate oranges.

Now all that was left to do was to wait for her boyfriend to get off from his shift.

The life of a royal guard was always a task. Even if there was no serious action here, they were kept busy where possible. It wasn’t a problem for Papyrus, but he was more than happy to return to his home after a long day of working.

“Toki, I-” he called as he entered, before he blinked and took in the air with a couple sniffs. "Nyeh? What have you been up to while I was gone?” he asked with a soft laugh, closing the door behind him.

“I’m in the kitchen, Pap!” She hurriedly slid the box of chocolates behind her, and pressed her hips casually against the counter so her body hid the gift. “Well, I took your dad up to see Asgore- and that was a pleasant ride, even if he did have to contort like a pretzel. I had the urge to do some cooking when I got home. Did you have a good day at work, dear?”

He chuckled as he slowly removed his outer-most armor, setting it by the stairs before he walked into the kitchen. "Well enough. I’m exhausted.” he sighed, before smiling at her, "What about you? Cooking huh? What do you have to show for your time?” he inquired.

“Tired, huh?” He’d definitely get a kick out of tonight’s activities then. It would help relax him. Toki grinned, and motioned to the spread that was steaming on the counter. “Spinach and mozzarella ravioli, roasted chicken, and garlic bread, with your choice of drinks for tonight.” Toki couldn’t exactly have alcohol, but if Aliquam wanted some, she wasn’t going to deny him it. “And of course,” she purrs, “something specifically for you, but you have to come closer for it-”

"Oh, how sweet of you, Toki!” He smiled, voice warm and happy as he wandered closer to her as requested. "What's that special something, then?” he hummed as his gaze locked on her.

She smiled up at him, and leaned up to kiss him. While he was distracted, she gathered the box into her hand, and pulled it from behind her. It was pressed into his hands as the kiss parted. “I made you a little something. It’s customary on valentines to give a gift, yeah? This is part one. I, ah, hope you like it.” Inside the box would be the chocolate oranges she’d made for him.

"Mmm~” he had enjoyed the kiss, but was pleasantly surprised at the box thrust into his hands. Upon opening it, his eyes gleamed with happiness. "Oooh! This looks wonderful, Toki!”

“You’ll have to let me know if you like them. They’re called chocolate oranges.” She beams up at him, and gently bumps his hip with hers as she starts to put the plates together. She heaps his full-she’d infused magic into it, having figured he was likely to be very tired after pulling double shifts all day. “You go get seated at the table- I’ll get your plate for you. You’ll get your second Valentine’s
"Alright, thank you~" he purred gently, taking the treat to the table to sit down and wait for her.

Toki isn’t long behind him. She comes in sans her apron with two plates balanced on one arm—thanking her several summers of working as a waitress in her youth—and two glasses in her other hand. She settles his plate in front of him, along with a glass of red wine, and then takes her own seat.

Sipping at her glass of milk, the smaller skeleton winks up at the larger one. “Bone-appetite, my love.”

"Red wine, huh? How fancy!" he chuckled, "Thank you." he then took a sniff of the wine, before he took a drink and let out a happy sound, “Mmm.”

Toki giggled softly, and sipped her milk again. “Mhm. Red wine is pretty customary for Valentine’s too- so you’ll have to enjoy your glass for me too.” She had picked a decent brand, she thought, though she was not so much a wine drinker. If she drank, it was usually what her brothers had drank, so vodka, tequila, sake, or whiskey depending on the day.

Toki lets him enjoy his drink and nibbles at her garlic bread. “Mmh. Speaking of wine- Roshi called. He, Han, and Kon want to take you, your brother, and your dad out for drinks. Sort of an official ‘welcome to the family’ thing.”

"Is that so?" he perked up. "I think that would be rather fun, actually!"

She snickers. He’d find out well enough how it would go. “I’ll let him know you’re down for it then. Your dad already agreed. I just need to ask Caeruleus if he wants to tag along. Heh.”

Either way, she digs into her food with gusto. Pregnancy was weird- she was either nauseated and not desiring food at all, or the switch would flip, and she found herself wanting to eat anything that she could. “Mm…” And she definitely liked this- and so did the little baby bones in her belly. “So, did anything interesting happen on your patrols today?”

"We suspect a few of the Squiddus that were native to Waterfall migrated up here and have started to cause mischief." He chuckled, before he began to dig into his meal. "Already they have started their rivalry with the Octonics once again."

“Oh yeah?” She wasn’t entirely sure what those were, but she nodded along slightly anyways. Dabbling her mouth with a napkin, she took a moment to remove a piece of garlic that wedged itself against the curve of one of her fangs. “Think they’ll cause problems in the compound?”

"The worst they could do is steal a small fraction of our fish intake, but they scarcely take more than what's needed."

“I don’t think that’ll be too much of a problem. The river is usually pretty full of fish- they’re certain to have plenty of food either way.” She wasn’t going to begrudge them food, after all. That wasn’t in her nature. Toki finished off her garlic bread, and worked on devouring her ravioli. “Oh! Before I forget- do you remember where I put my shoes? Not my slippers- but the old tennis shoes I used when I trained with Undyne? I can’t seem to find them.” They’d gotten set somewhere when they had moved him in- and she did need to find them.

It would make traversing the forest easier, but not necessary. She had full intents of going barefoot outside- it was cold, but surprisingly dry for February.
"Yeah, you'll find them in the closet by the door." he replied.

"Thanks, Ali." She gives him a warm smile, and falls quiet as she focuses on eating.

She doesn’t end up finishing her plate- she eats until she feels full, and finishes her milk before leaning back in her chair with a content sigh. “Mmm…”

"Full?" he asked with a smile, eye lights twinkling at her warmly.

Toki pats the faint curve of her middle and winks at him. She had a food-baby on top of actual baby bones. She was very, very full. “I am, yeah. What about you? Going to have room to enjoy those chocolates later~?"

"I'll share them with you." He offered with a purr.

"I can nibble a little bit.” She smiles faintly. “But only a little.” Too much chocolate risked making her nauseated again. “Heh, you'll have to bring one of the oranges with us tonight. We can enjoy it together.”

"Of course~" he chuckled. After he finished eating, he took his dishes to the kitchen and came back with a smile, "I have an idea for tonight, if you're in the mood for a little time out of the house.”

“I actually had an idea too,” she giggled. She had stood while he’d taken the dishes and had straightened the chairs. She adjusted her sweats, and made note that they were starting to fit differently on her now. “A plan, actually. But what’s your idea?” If his plan was better than the last part of her surprise, she could just delay the surprise until another time.

"Oh... a little time at the riverside.”

Toki pauses, and laughs heartily. “That’s actually what I was planning. Great minds think alike, don’t they? Well… shall we? I need to grab something from the kitchen… Do you have the energy for a walk though? I know you said you were tired.”

"I'd crawl on my hands and knees at 1 HP if it meant I was at your side.” he announced boldly.

Toki chuckled softly, and linked her arm with his. “Well, let's never let that happen, yeah? You’re mine. You’re not allowed to get that hurt.” Bumping her forehead to his arm affectionately, Toki tugged him into the kitchen and collected the small backpack she had sitting on the counter. Tugging it over her shoulder, she beams up at him brightly and laces their fingers. “I’d much rather have you walking at my side anyways. Ready for our walk?”

"Of course.” He folded his hand with hers and smiled at her, "I’m ready!"

Toki beams at him and guides him out the back door. She has a destination in mind- but finding it in the dark would be harder. Despite having become a monster, her dark vision was still utter crap. She waves a finger, and then there is a glowing bee hovering overhead and acting like a light for them to use. “You know,” she hums conversationally as she guides him out the back, moving around her apiary and into the trees that surround the undeveloped side of her compound, “It would be really cool to be able to see in the dark.”

"It would, yes." he agreed, watching the bee buzzing around with a warm amusement. They were fascinating, her bees, and at the same time they scared him. Knowing that her titanic defense could drop into the negative always sent his soul into nervous flutters. All it could take was a few well placed hits… "I think Father can see in the dark."
“Probably can. I know the rabbit kids can— they were befuddled that I couldn’t see in the dark as a human. I think it still befuddles them that I can’t see in the dark as a human. But, y’know, kids, right?” She gently bumps her hip to his, and smiles up at him. A couple more bees are called, and they spread out, lighting the way.

Stripe appears, in the harness that Sans had given Toki for her birthday, and flops harmlessly across the top of Aliquam’s skull. She buzzed contentedly, like a particularly fat, glowing sausage hat, warm legs holding onto the bone with ease.

"Kids." he laughed in agreement. His eye lights flicked up, going slightly cross-eyed as he attempted to look up at the bee resting on his skull. "Nyeh heh heh! Hello, Stripe!"

The bee gave a buzz, gently patting the top of one of his brows with a flaming fluffy leg, before nestling down contently.

The one who summoned the bee was all too happy to laugh and relay the greeting to him. “Stripe says hello. I think she’s content on your skull… Heh, kids indeed. We’re going to have kids of our own soon.” Sometimes it didn’t feel quite real yet, despite the symptoms she dealt with and the fact that she could look down and quite literally see the little souls in her belly. It was odd. “I wonder what they’re going to be like. Their favorite foods, their favorite activities, which parent they’re going to favor when trying to sweet talk us into something… I’m excited to meet them.”

"I am too. It is also another reminder of what I do, and why I do it.” He squeezed her hand gently.

A tender look bloomed in her sockets, and she rubbed her fingers over the smooth material of his gloves. Sometimes she wondered why he habitually wore them— he had lovely hands. Strong hands, with strong fingers— she loved every part of him, truly. “It is, huh?” A warm look is flashed up to him, and she hefts the pack higher on her shoulder.

"Indeed.” He murmured gently. “You’re the woman I love; and with my young within you… I would fight with my life if it means protecting you. All of you.”

Toki smiled and nestled her head gently against his shoulder. A soft buzzing sound kicks up, and it’s not the bees making the pleased noise this time. “You’re the one I love too, Pap. We’re going to protect each other. All of us. We’re a family— and family protects family.”

He wiggled his fingers free from her own and then looped that arm around her firmly. With gentle eyes, he looked down at her with a smile. "I love you so much, Toki.”

“I love you too.” She leaned into his side, looping her now free hand around his waist. She tucked her fingers under the waistband of his pants, and grinned as the river came into sight. It glimmered lightly under the stars, rushing over rocks and sand. “Alright… There should be some stepping stones around here somewhere…”

A line of flat, slimy rocks would be raised out of the water a little bit to the left of their current position. The line of rocks leads directly over to the other side of the river— and is easily traversed. One of her bees goes to highlight it, and the rest of the small flock buzz over to aid in lighting the way for them to cross.

He noticed and he moved over to them curiously, temporarily pulling away from her. He held examined them for a moment, and then held up his hand and smiled over to Toki. "Shall we?"

Toki grinned and took his hand. “We shall. Here- let me go first. I’ll clear off the slime so your shoes don’t slip.” She eases around him, and uses her feet to wash off the tops of the stone as she goes.
“It’s still going to be slippery though—so be careful, or we’ll both get an impromptu bath.” And the candles in her bag really did not need to be getting wet.

He held to her tight to make sure neither of them fell, but he still moved one slow step at a time as they made their way across as an extra precaution. As his shoes touched the grass, Aliquam grinned broadly. "Well done!"

Toki rinsed her feet off in the shallows, and then stepped onto the grass with him. She grinned at him and nudged his hip with hers. “You’re a natural at stone walking, Pap.” She teases gently. “Now c’mon! There’s a place I want to show you, and it’s just up here!” Toki loops her finger tips with his, excitement bubbling over her bones and lighting up her sockets, and she turns, tugging him down along the river bank and slightly into the trees. The tree tops are thick, giving no light from the moon or stars— but the bees guiding them provide more than enough light to get them through.

"Alright, alright, I’m coming!" he laughed, long legs hardly struggling to keep up with her quick pace.

Toki guided him a little further in, and slowed down as the trees opened up suddenly. In the center of the hollow, which had a perfect view of the stars in the sky, was a deep-set pond, clear and cold from the small stream running into it and probably fifteen feet wide or more. The bottom was set in stone— and it looked like someone had already been here. The grass at the edges had been cut short-- and someone had rolled some logs into it to make impromptu seats and spots to rest in the deep water.

“Here we are;” she beams. “This is where I wanted to take you. You work so hard for everyone— I wanted you to have a night where you can feel special. Though… I didn’t have time to trek out here and get it ready beforehand.”

She lets his hand go, and begins rifling through her bag. Candles are procured— and her bees flutter over to help her in putting them strategically around to give them light.

"Oh wow...!" he said in awe, gaze roving over the stars and everything around them. "This is amazing! How long have you known about this?"

His amazement makes her soul sing, and Toki’s bees pulse bright with magic for half a second— before they’re gone. The glow of the candles takes their place, and it casts a soft, glimmering glow over the dark water. “I’ve known for a while;” she admits, “And it occurred to me a few days ago that I would like to turn it into a little ‘vacation’ spot, if you will.”

Toki makes a small noise at him, and begins to strip, easing her pants down over her hips teasingly, so he can catch what she intends. She chose, today, not to wear undergarments of any kind, but her long turtleneck covers down to her thighs anyways. She shakes them off, and puts one leg into the icy water so she can heat it before he gets in. Teasingly edging her sweater up as the water around her leg begins to steam, Toki winks at him.

He watched her as his cheeks turned bright orange and he tried not to look too excited as he undressed as well. His ghost-muscle disappeared to reveal strong bones, and yet, he looked so bare without clothing to illuminate his physique.

Now only in his boxers, he came to join her by the water, touching her shoulders as he rumbled a deep chuckle. "What are you trying to get at, you little tease~?"

It took but a moment to escape from her turtleneck, and she left her clothes far enough away that they wouldn’t get wet if they happened to splash. Toki stood bare before him, proving that she hadn’t decided to wear her usual underpants. Unlike him, the green glow of her torso did not disappear.
Instead, it shifted with her, rolling like actual human flesh did, though the undeniable shape of her womb was obvious as it swelled up from the cradle of her pelvis. Toki cocked her hip teasingly at him as he touched her scapula, and trailed her fingers down over his ribs and playfully twanging the band of his boxers.

Green dusted her cheeks, and tinted the lights of her eyes, and she winked at him again. “I think you know what I’m getting at~” She purrs. It takes her but a moment, and she’s giggling as she eases down into the pond. It is clear- and soon, as her bones slide deeper into the dark water, the top begins to steam. “You work very hard,” she buzzes softly, “so very, very hard. I thought it might be fair if you got the chance to enjoy a lovely round of skinny dipping with a girlfriend who just happens to be able to make anything into a hot spring.”

He quietly laughed, and then he reached his hands down and slowly freed his boxers from where they hooked on his ileum. Letting them fall, he took a moment to nudge them over near her clothes before he stepped slowly into the spring. Letting out soft ‘hah’s as he adjusted to settle in the heated water, a pleased sound escaped him also. "O-Oh stars~"

Toki watched him settle into the newly made hot spring and grinned. She sank down into the heat of the steaming water. It was deep enough at the deepest point that she had to stand on her tippie toes, lest her chin go under- but he wouldn’t have that same issue. From this vantage, she looked like a particularly smug crocodile as she watched him ease in. She didn’t sink like the she thought she would- but the dense magic keeping her middle stable apparently worked as a makeshift flotation device.

An amused thought made her giggle, bubbles escaping from under her chin. Her eye lights twinkle at him as she swims closer, brushing her fingers up his femurs teasingly. “Hey Pap… what do you call a pregnant woman who’s swimming?”

"I don’t know. What?” He gave her a suspicious look.

Her grin grew, and she flicked warm droplets of water at him with her fingers. “A human submarine.”

He blinked once, and then started to laugh heartily. "Or a skeleton submarine, in your case!"

“That too,” she smirks. Toki shifts, and hauls herself up onto one of the logs she’d sunk. The bark had been lost long ago, but the wood was worn smooth with the weather of the world. She seats herself, upper torso out of the water, and beams at him. “So, hot stuff, how do you like the hot spring? I didn’t make it too warm, did I?” Her body was enjoying it, and the warmth felt great on her lower back.

"No, no! This feels wonderful!” he replied quietly, a happy look on his face as he sunk down into the water. "I never thought I could encounter a hot spring so close to home.”

“Having a girlfriend with fire magic has its perks, doesn’t it?” She smiles to him. “C’mere.” She parts her legs and pats the top of the water, wanting him to come closer. With how the log was propped and floating, Toki could give him a hug without him having to stoop- and she was going to enjoy every moment of it. And, with luck, give him a ‘massage’ of sorts.

He came over and smiled as he nuzzled close to her. "Nyeh~ what do you have in store now?"

As his hands came to settle on the curve of her ecto-flesh hips, Toki looped her arms around his shoulders and pressed her fingertips into his scapulas. Face to face with him, Toki winked and gently pressed a nibbling kiss to his jaw line. “Nothing nefarious, I promise. Just something I want to try…”
He didn’t have muscles, not like humans did. Well, he did, when his magic stretched out to fill out his clothes. But he did not have clothes now— it was just the bare bone.

Her magic pulsed over her fingers and down into his shoulder blades, simulating the same sensation as a legitimate massage. “If all else fails, it means I get to smooch you until my shoulders get too cold up here in the air. Though… I might just do that anyways.”

He watched her expression until the stimulation to his shoulder-blades hit and his eyes widened, before they closed and he leaned his head back, a moan of bliss escaping him. "N-Nyeh~"

“Well, that’s a plus then.” She grins, kisses him softly again, and then has him turn around so his back presses to her front. Toki works along his shoulder blades and down the backs of his ribs, running her magic through her finger tips as she traces and relaxes his body through his magic. “You work really hard, Pap. You work to keep us safe, you work at making sure that I don’t over exert myself— it’s time someone makes sure you’re taken care of, yeah?”

"Hhhnn... U-Uh huh..." he looked back at her with a shaky smile. "Of c-course."

Toki grins, and presses soft kisses over his shoulders as her hands work downward. When she runs out of ribs, she cups his spine in her hands and begins to rub down the vertebrae one by one, straying and lingering over any particularly tightly set bone.

He was starting to tremble at that point, hands coming to brace his weight on the log she was seated on. "N-Nyeh...hahh... haahh... T-Toki~"

Toki grins, and nibbles gently over his shoulder, before her hand slips down and gently fondles his coccyx as her magic peters off. She did need to keep the pond warm- and using all of her magic would not be wise to do. “Mmm, have I succeeded in relaxing you~?” She teases gently.

"Nnnyeeeehhh!” suddenly there's a glow from his soul and his eye...

And one more place awfully close to her hand.

Toki blinks, and giggles softly. She doesn’t hesitate, reaching her hand through the empty space of his abdomen so she can grasp the glowing member lighting up the pool of water. She strokes him gently with her thumb, dragging her teeth gently down to where his ribs meet with the water. “Well, I guess that’s one way to make a guard stand at attention, no?”

He gave another jolt, pelvis jerking slightly in a faint thrust, and his mouth opened with a throaty gasp. "Hhaahhhh... T-Toki..!"

“Yessss Pap? Got to tell me what you want, my love. Telepathy isn’t my gift,” she purrs.

"Hah... hahh... Touch me... please Toki~" he pleaded. "Touch me, and let me touch you."

“You never have to beg to touch me, Pap. I am yours,” she purrs into his shoulder. “I’m going to be the mother to your children- I am very, very, very much yours.” She eases her grip on his member, and has him turn once more so he can face her.

She hooks her knees gently over his hips and peers up at his face with a gentle smile and green tinged cheekbones. Toki’s fingers rove over his ribs, tracing his sternum as she lets the orange glow of his cock light up between them. It reflects off of her middle.

He smiled at her now that he was facing her, his sockets glowing a low orange color. "Hah~" Aliquam reached up and gripped her hipbones with gentle fingers before he leaned in and began to kiss her. He rubbed what he could of her hips, before they were enveloped in the ecto-flesh that made up her middle. "Toki... I can't believe how lucky I was to find someone like you... I love you" he told her happily, "I love you so much..."

“I love you too. I love you so, so much... it is a love that grows deeper each day I spend with you.” She shifted, a soft shiver escaping her as he kneaded his palms into her hips. Her hips felt tighter and tense, and that felt heavenly. The skeleton leaned into the kiss, hands stroking back up his body. She giggles softly though, and nuzzles her face to his, one hand dropping to stroke over his member again. “You really did find me though, didn’t you? Stumbled right into my back yard, back when I was still human.”

He shivers at her gentle touches, and keeps massaging her hips gently. "Announcing my determination to be friends with a any and all humans," he chuckled, "but... I’ve matured a bit since then, haven’t I?" His giggle weakened as he reached a hand up to rub the base of her spine, as well as trailing a hand down her pelvis.

“I see you mature more and more every day.” She admits softly. “You’ve grown in leaps and bounds- and you make my soul swell with pride all the time.” Her fingers slow their strokes, and she presses close to kiss him again as she melts into him. The hands on her spine make her magic stir, warming within her, and she rocks her hips slightly into his palm. His erection is trapped between them as she cuddles closer, propping her chin gently on his chest. Fingers trailing over his ribs, the skeleton shudders slightly under his fingers. “You are wiser, you are stronger, smarter, more mature… You are you, Pap. I’ve cared about you since I met you. Your determination, your bravery… Truth be told, you probably stole my heart the moment you flounced into my back yard.”

He smiled up at her as she spoke and he let out a soft laugh, before he leaned up to kiss her as he lifted up her hips off of the log. "Mmmh~"

Toki giggled as he eased her off of the log, curling her legs tighter to his. She leans her torso back, and with a soft pull of her magic, she summons her lower parts so his member can nestle up against the velvety magic of her core. “Mm...” She kissed him softly, and nipped gently along his jaw. One hand curled around his spine, the other coming to clutch curl around his shoulders.

The hand around his shoulders played with the base of his skull, teasing her digits over the back of the smooth bone.

"Mmmh, aahh~ Hey... ah... Toki?"

She leaned back slightly and peered up at him with a soft sound. “Hm? Yes, Pap?”

"I remember... when you were human you had these... things on your chest." he reached up, pantomiming cupping something over her chest.

Things on her- Oh. “My breasts?” She reclined back further against the log, and looked down at her chest in consideration. If her magic could make her middle, and make a tongue, or- according to Caeruleus- anything she wanted... She could probably give herself breasts. “Hm...” He wouldn’t have mentioned them if he didn’t want to see them- and that was consideration enough for her to focus.

It helped that she remembered what having breasts was like. The texture, the feel, the softness, the weight of them- she knew her breasts quite well. It took a moment, and then the magic from her middle rolled upwards, coming to cover the entirety of her ribcage. The green glow swelled, and two green breasts appeared.
They were bigger than she remembered them being- but it occurred to her that she was pregnant- of course her magic was going to reflect that. “Huh. Apparently yes, I can make magic boobs. These are what you were thinking of, yeah?”

His eyes lit up as they appeared and he smiled up at her, ”Thank you.” he then leaned in and his tongue slipped from his teeth, lapping over the breast before he purred softly and carefully took a nipple between his teeth.

Toki squeaked slightly as he took the summoned globe into his mouth. His tongue was damp, and between it and his teeth, she found a shiver steeling down her spine. “Oh, stars,” she murmurs softly. Her breasts had never been that sensitive before- but these weren’t breasts. This was another construct of her magic- no doubt the same type of construct that formed her feminine parts. It made sense that it was sensitive. “G gentle please, they’re sensitive.”

"Mmh... Mm-hmm~” he nodded once but continued his gentle treatment. He swirled his tongue around the nub, exploring it gently with his mouth. The flesh tasted similar to what Toki’s magic tasted like- and he enjoyed it greatly.

Toki shifted, shivering quietly. Her head rolled back, and she rolled her hips gently, stroking her nether lips gently over the length of his shaft. Two could tease- and with how her back was craned over the log, she couldn’t exactly line up for him to thrust in. “Nnn…” her mouth parted, long fangs whistling slightly as she exhaled roughly around them.

Her hands did the only thing they could- and that was work over his shoulders, stroking his clavicle and up along his spinal column as he worked over the magic that had formed her breast.

"Nnhh...” he whined quietly as he moved her slightly, hips rocking into her own. "I want to... to make love to you, Toki... Is it safe to...?” His hips twitched, and his eyes flicked down to her middle as his mouth relinquished her breast.

Toki shuddered against the log, adjusting her hips so he could have an easier time about getting in. “You wont hurt them. You wont hurt me either. Make love to me, Pap- it’ll be okay, I promise.” Despite the log digging oddly into her spine, she was comfortable, sprawled out with her chest up for his enjoyment. She rolled her hips, teasing him slightly, and then she piped at him, low and sweet.

He smiled up at her and he kissed her with a gentle passion as he took her hips in hand, moving her with unfathomable gentleness as he moved his cock to line up with her entrance. "Toki, I love you~" he whispered gently, easing his member into her gingerly. "I-I-aahhh... I love you s-so much...!” he groaned.

Toki kissed him back, one arm keeping his skull close as she cradled him. She hissed softly as he eased inside of her, her walls stretching around him like a formfitting glove. “I love you too,” she purrs, “so very, v-very much. Nn… Feels good,” she purred. Her hips twitched in his hands, and she slowly rolled against him, an encouraging motion as he slowly seated himself. His member would stretch deep into her- but wouldn’t bother the pseudo womb in her middle. Her tongue slid out, and she lapped at his teeth, seeking permission to tangle hers with his.

"Aahhh,” his mouth opened once more and his tongue reached out to press against hers in a skillful, loving manner. "Nyeh, hahhh- Oh Toki you feel so good.”

She gyrated against him, her hips slowly rolling against his and sending tingles of pleasure shooting up and down her spine. With her free hand, she guided one of his from her hips and settled it on her untouched breast in a silent plea for more of his touch. Meanwhile, her hand resumed a path of wandering, exploring over his bones and sliding into any crevice she could find. “So big, so thick, so… you. Mmm, I can’t get enough of you,” she murmurs, a tremble trailing over her bones. She pipes again, an involuntary sound as she invades his mouth with her tongue, tasting him and offering him the same experience with her.

His hand gently squeezed and kneaded her breast in his hand as the other hand held her hip so he could move within her. "Toki… Ooh stars, hahh~!" he moaned breathily "This is... so good! You feel so good."

“This feels amazing,” she purred. There was something different about making love outside of a heat driven lust- something more personal, something more intimate. She might have been being pounded into a log out in the wilderness- but the only thing she could see, feel, taste, and experience was the slow drag of his member against her walls, and the touch of his body against hers.

She arched her back, changing the angle of her hips so that each slow draw of his cock rolled across everything within her. “This is right, us here, together… Mmm, we are perfect,” she purred. Or as close to perfect as could be. She broke the kiss, her mouth coming down to suckle along his neck. She nibbled, exposing her own and giving him something to clamp onto if he so desired as her fingers found his lower spine and began to stroke it softly in time with his thrusts.

"Hahh~ Haaahh!" his mouth was hanging in the pleasure as he moved gently against her. Even he could sense this perfection between them now. There was no heat to mask either of their judgments; their chemistry was in its purest form.

"We're... hahaha... no... You're perfect, I am but the drone that serves her majesty." he whispered, purring at her with a wide smile. "I love you so much…”

Toki moaned softly, a tiny giggle escaping her as her fingers stroked back up his spine. “You are hardly a drone,” she purred, “for if I am a queen, I surely must need a king…” Toki kissed him again, sweet and gentle. She shifted, flexing her core around him. Each stroke sent her soul fluttering in her chest, the ectoplasm that made up her flesh trembling and clamping tight around him. She panted against him, steam coiling up from her bones as her magic coiled tight. “Mmm, Pa-py-russsss…” His name rolls from her mouth in the form of a breathy moan. “I love you,” and she never, ever got tired of saying so.

"O-Oh god, Toki~" he gasped out, hand abandoning the summoned ecto-flesh on her chest to grasp her other hip, his face pressing into the soft flesh summoned onto her chest. "O-Oh stars... Toki~ You're so warm around me." he moaned.

Toki shivered, letting her head roll back as his face buried in the soft flesh summoned onto her chest. Her hands came up to cradle his skull, massaging and stroking as she rocked and rolled under him, striving to bring him to his edge through gentle touches. “You’re so warm in me,” she pants, soft breaths escaping her as warmth rolls off of her bones. “I need you- all of you. Mmmm- ahh~ Stars, Pap…”

His hands moved her slowly until he started to get close, this being shown as he began to urge faster. "Ah, hahh, nnn, nyeeeh~”

The stimulation that came with the change of pace was enough to toss her over. She tightened around him, a wordless cry that sounded vaguely like it might have been his name escaping out of her open mouth. She shudders, tightening around him in more ways than one, and buzzes pleasantly against him as her body milks his for what she can. “Ah~”

He tensed up as her body clenched around him and he let out a few breathy moans before he wrapped one arm around her and held her close, pushing her hips down to pin them to his as his release washed over him, "Nyeeehhh~! T-Toki~!" he cried out.

Toki didn’t have a problem with him pinning her, and her body drew in the magic that he released to her. The glow of her middle brightened, the magic around the dark green shape tinting a different color as the manifested form of his magic was taken in and absorbed. Toki clung tightly to him, her arms looping to hold herself tightly flush with his body. “Mmmm, Pap,” she purred, pleasantly buzzed with the afterglow of their affections. Her upper torso shivered in the cold night air, but her lower half was pleasantly warm and enjoying being wrapped around him. Toki draped against him, content not to move until he wanted her to. “Mmm… I love you.”

"I love you." he whispered into her torso.

She leaned down to kiss the crown of his skull, and was content hugging him to her body. “I love you more,” she purrs with a soft teasing thrum. “Mm… Can we sit further down on the log? If you want me to keep these out for tonight, we’ll want to keep them warm. Cold boobs are not fun boobs.” And the chill of the air around them was very real.

He giggled and looked up at her, then he moved the both of them off of the log and they sank under the water. It once more solidified the fact that that skeletons didn't necessarily need to breathe.

Toki laughed softly as they sunk under the surface, and leaned in to kiss him softly. She shifted in his lap, leaning back as her abdomen lit up the space between them. The glow caught her gaze, and she blinked down at her middle, before wiggling a brow up at him. The lower part of her belly was an odd mix of orange and green- and it was quite obvious that there were apparently several ways to give a more direct magic donation. And this one apparently made her change colors slightly.

He kissed her then he looked down and smiled as he stroked her stomach, "So beautiful," he whispered, his words unheard under the water. "So perfect.” he then leaned up and kissed her neck softly.

She could hear him saying something- but without lips to read and with how water tended to warp spoken words, she had no way of knowing what he was saying. But the fingers that stroked over her belly made her buzz, and that was a sound that shivered through the water almost clearly. She tilted her neck to the side, a pleased sound escaping her as he kissed over her neck.

He smiled up at her, and nuzzled her neck with an airless sigh.

Toki nestled close, tucking her chest to his and her head to his shoulder. The skeleton drapes herself more firmly against him, and settles down to enjoy her evening with him. They had all night- until the sun began to rise and the world began to rouse.

She was going to make sure it was a night that he’d never forget.
Chapter 37

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This chapter takes place on the same day that the other one does. But this- this is our Sansby chapter. ;) It is also NSFW- so anyone under 18 needs to scoot.

Don't forget! You can find us at our blog! http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/ is where it's at, baby. Also, ya'll totally missed it. We got our first hate anon last night- and it wasn't even TOTU related. XD Apparently they thought that I shouldn't be doing art unless i can afford to make art to the quality of their standards. Apparently I make shitty things~

Silverwing Notes: And if you fuckers thought the last chapter was good…

ENJOY THIS SACK OF HOT SHIT.

Unlike Tokiko, Grillby was limited in what he could do. He could not make chocolates traditionally- there were things he could and could not do, and cooling his body enough to handle chocolate was not one of them. Chocolate melted too easily for him to handle- so sadly, Cae was not gifted with chocolates when he came to the bar that evening to help the bartender close down.

What the skeleton was going to be gifted with, however, was a bouquet of roses with the promise that Grillby would love the skeleton until the last rose died. It was an idea he got off of the human internet- and inside of the bouquet, there was a single silk rose hidden among the others for Cae to find later.

The doors to the bar closed early, when the dark came, and Grillby had taken time to wipe down the bar and prepare it for the next day’s work. Cae made good company, even if he did deplete the fire elementals supply of Ketchup rather quickly, though as per the norm, the skeleton was the one to lead the conversations. Though Sans had gotten pulled away midway through the day, to run some various errands for some of the townsfolk who didn’t have anything major planned for the holiday.

Grillby had plans though. Oh yes he had plans- and they involved his skeleton intended, and long, long hours spent up in his haven.

He also wanted to talk to him. With Aliquam settling down with Toki- even if they hadn’t formally mated or wed- Grillby had been getting thoughts of his own. He did not think he would ever marry again- but then and again, he hadn’t thought he would ever love again.

His first mate had been his world- and then given him Fuku. They’d nearly had a second child, before his first mate had gotten killed by one of the fallen humans. His daughter had been nearly grown when they were lost. Grillby had waited until she was old enough not to need their constant attention to tell her about wanting to give her siblings- but even then, it had taken several months to spark the soulling- and they had lost many of them. His mate had never been in the best of health- but his mate had not been a boss monster like Grillby was. She had been so fragile compared to him- and Fuku was the spitting image of her.

When they reached the point where the little emberling wouldn’t extinguish, everyone had been so overjoyed. Their family had been about to grow- but it hadn’t meant to be.

It had been a young boy, he remembered, who had come in with guns blazing. He had been a little older than frisk, he thought. Perhaps closer to Felix’s age, give or take a year or two. His first mate had lost her life- and the life of their unborn child, and he and Fuku had mourned her loss.

Even his soul still longed for her- but it was not meant to be. Sans had come along and reminded him that it was okay to love again, that love was not something that needed to be feared or something that he wasn’t allowed to have. The skeleton had wormed his way in with his wisecracking jokes, his sass, and the general pestering that he tended to do when trying to get someone to loosen up.

Though Sans would never know, he had saved Grillby in more ways than one. He gave him cause to hope again- cause to love. He saved him from falling- for he had been slowly deteriorating as grief for his lost love consumed his body and soul. Monsters who lost true mates did not usually die- but most wished they would. With only Fuku to fall back on, Grillby had been wasting away, because it was not the duty of the parent to put that sort of emotional weight onto their child. No- he had made sure that she wasn’t fading, that she was growing and happy and as healthy as could be.

It had worn him down.

The wise cracking skeleton had been a ray of light for him- and damn if he hadn’t fallen hard for him because of it. He had fallen hard for the skeleton that had only one HP and enough cracks in his soul that it should have shattered long ago- and that had terrified him.

If he hadn’t been such a coward about it… there was the chance he could have been with him years ago. But Grillby had been afraid of losing him. Of losing another he had come to love. Losing one that you come to love with your entire being was worse than anything the war had ever done to him- and Grillby still had his triggers about that too.

But Sans had hope now- and Grillby had the joy of watching his soul heal, and his HP tick upwards by each precious, sacred point.

Grillby… Grillby was finally in a place where he wanted a family again.

He wanted to roll out of bed in the morning and listen to the pitter-patter of little feet racing for breakfast. He wanted to heft a child onto his hip, to hold them close and watch them grow.

Grillby idly swept, rolling his plans for the evening over in his mind, and crackled a soft tune as his heels bounced lightly over the floor. He was dancing just slightly as he swept, a good mood keeping his flames as high as his spirits.

Having needed some help done around the town had ended up with Cae being late as he arrived at the bar. "Hey Grillbz, sorry I’m late!" he called casually, "I had to help out here and there in the town."

Though he had shown up late, Caeruleus was casually relaxing at the bar, ketchup bottle in hand. He was amused as he watched Grillby do his little dance while he worked. "Looks like you’re ready to lay out a salsa dance, Grillbz." he laughed.

“If you’re going to make a pun about salsa being my perfect dance, I will take back your ketchup rights.” The bartender rumbled in a gentle teasing tone. He knew Cae’s brand of humor- and likening the spicy flavor of salsa to the bartender’s flames was not something that he was above doing. He hummed, and leaned down to scoop up the dustpan. Debris from the day’s work were swept into the pan, and carried to the trashcan near the bar.
He chuckled lowly, knowing that he would get called out for a pun like that, "I have no idea what you're talking about~"

“That's a hunk of slag and you know it.” The bartender gave him a fondly amused look, and resumed cleaning. He paused though, and had to stop for a second and make an attempt to clean the layer of dust off of his glasses. His eyes squinted as he scrubbed the lenses on a soft cloth, rumbling faintly to himself. It would be easier if he could use the cleaning spray that had come with his new glasses- but the spray burned his body something bad when it touched his skin. "I am glad Fuku does not have to deal with these things," he mutters.

"At least it's not a chemical burn. I heard humans can get those and they hurt like hell, but here, let me take care of that." Cae fetched the spray cleaner that the bartender never used, and took the glasses from the larger monster.

Grillby handed over his glasses without complaint, and scrubbed a hand over his face. His eyes squinted, looking at the blurry outline of the skeleton handling the cleaning for him, and shifted to carefully move a few of his tables. “I can handle small amounts of liquids or light rain. Whatever it is in that solution burns something nasty. Hence, why I am glad Fuku did not inherit my vision problem.”

He nodded gently in agreement, cleaning the bartender's glasses before he smiled and handed them back. "Here.”

Grillby took them with a thankful nod, and secured them to his face once more. As his vision cleared, the fire elemental leaned down and pressed a smooth kiss to Caeruleus' skull. “Thank you, Sans.” He murmurs. Straightening, the elemental rolls up the sleeves of his shirt, exposing rippling muscles littered with a few scars here and there, and then heads behind the bar to put the alcohol bottles into their proper places. “Speaking of Fuku- she is doing very well managing the bar below ground.” He mutters softly. “She's heard that we are officially together. She… 'ships' us? I do not know what that is, though 'ships' are something the humans of the Internet frequently seem to freak out over.”

He whistled quietly at the sight of the elementals muscle, then he smiled and followed him to the bar, returning to his seat. "Ship, huh? That's weird... we're inland though..."

“And we are not boats.” The larger monster had plenty of muscle to ogle- and with the blinds drawn on the front of the bar, the skeleton monster had a fair chance of possibly sweet talking him out of his top. “I believe it is a term she has coined from Doctor Alphys during one of their ‘anime’ nights at the bar.”

"... Aaaaaah.... yeah that'd explain it" he chuckled, looking up at him, "Mmm, So, Grillbz..." he started, "I'm wondering if we wanna do anything special for today, I heard it's supposed to be a romantic holiday or somethin'."

Grillby nods, his back to the skeleton. “I had something in mind,” His voice rumbles pleasantly out to Sans. “Something in mind I think you’ll like… But I do need to finish here first.” His voice slips towards being apologetic. “I hope you do not mind being patient for me. I promise, it will be worth it.”

Cae watched him for a moment, and then he smirked and leaned his head on his hand, his elbow on the bar. He then twitched his other hand, using his magic to tease the bartender, rubbing a ghostly touch over his chest before moving to undo his vest

Grillby was unsure for a short time just what the skeleton was playing at- but as soon as the first buttons on his vest began undoing themselves he began to get the picture. He flicks his gaze over to the smaller monster and rumbles deeply at him, amusement tickling over his voice. “Careful about which monsters you tease, Caeruleus. Some of us do not play fair.”

Still, he shed his vest, leaving the black spider-silk garment on the top of the bar as he turned to put dishes away into the cabinet. It left him in the white button up shirt he wore below his vest. It was tucked into the waistline of his slacks, folds of his shirt highlighting the muscles of his upper back.

"You think I care~?" he purred, his gaze half-lidded with interest as his magic continued to touch and feel.

“I think you will care.” The rumble in his voice wasn’t a threat- no, it was a promise of things to come.

Grillby wasn’t bothered in the slightest as the buttons came undone one at a time. His shirt was pulled free of his pants once all of the buttons were unbuttoned, and he found it sliding down his shoulders. He rolled his eyes with amused exasperation at Sans impatience, and willingly slid his arms out of his shirt.

His back came into view, rippling with muscle and a few thick, roping scars. Smaller scars, obviously burns from water, darkened the bright orange and red that made up most of his blazing skin. Grillby hummed, shifting his stance, and stretched an arm up to place a bottle of liquor on a high shelf.

Two could play at that game- and the muscles rippling under his flaming skin were on display as he made sure to stretch and flex when he could. He was almost giddy- he hadn’t put himself on display like this in a long, long time.

He chuckled lowly and gave a soft whistle, appreciating the view he was getting. "Hot damn, Grillby~" he chuckled. “I’d love to get me a taste of that hot tamale.”

The old general hadn’t lost his warrior’s body, even after all of the centuries that had come to pass. Grillby turned, carefully cleaning some of the glasses, and gave Caeruleus a lopsided grin. To distract the skeleton from going for the button on his slacks, the fire elemental chuckled softly.

“You’ll get a taste of this hot tamale soon enough,” he rumbles, “but do you think you can handle the burn?”

He’s interrupted from his flirting as his senses pick up a flare of magic from near the river. He pauses, tilts his head, and then chuckles softly. It would appear that the Guardian Angel had already started her plans with the father of her child.

"Holy fuck that’s hot." he snorted, though he felt the flare as well. He turned, casting a glance in the general direction of the river, and then he chuckled. "You know, I always wondered why your bar was so close to the river.”

“Maybe I like to live dangerously?” He suggested cheekily. “Mostly, I enjoy the view from the top floor. Water is as lovely as it is deadly, and so long as I do not try to enjoy it up close, I am fine.”

The fire monster focuses his magic, and from around his ankles slides a rope of fire. Prehensile and made entirely from his magic, it begins the process of snaking up the bar stool, aiming to bind the skeleton while he was distracted by the flares of magic from his sibling and Toki.

“You’d think they were trying for a soulling with how often those two enjoy themselves.” The fire monster snorts slightly, and straightens the top of his bar.
"So true. If they didn't already have two, I wouldn't have been able to tell the difference." he laughed.

The bartender laughed too, and his eyes brightened as the rope of fire tightened, binding Cae’s feet together suddenly, before snaking up his legs and up the legs of his shorts. Without hinting at anything going on, Grillby hums slightly. “Indeed… Say, Caeruleus… Despite only formally asking you this last Christmas, I would say we’ve had a steady relationship for a long while. What do you think about maybe… having children of our own?”

Sans let out a startled noise as the rope tightened. He felt the rope now and he looked downward at his legs. Grillby's question went unheard for a moment. "What the hell!?"

“Something the matter, the matter, Caeruleus? You didn’t answer my question.” Grillby leaned closer to him across the bar, flames flickering slightly. It was obvious to see the rope was made out of the same colored flames that made up Grillby’s form. The bartender crossed his arms, making the muscles of his pectorals ripple. “Cat got your tongue?”

Caeruleus looked up at him, blushing a bright blue. "This is your handy work, Grillbz. Kinky." he huffed, before he shivered at the sight and feel of the ropes sliding up and around his pelvis. "Holy shit... Ah... W-What was your question again?"

One did not poke the bear without consequences. Grillby cocked his hip against the bar, and arched a flaming brow at the skeleton. A smirk visibly split his mouth, and sharp looking fangs of flame glimmered at him. “I don’t know what you’re talking about,” he hums softly. “As for my question, what do you think about having children with me? We’ve essentially been together unofficially for years.” Grillby was too old to wed again- but he was not too old to love or be a father again. Or a… mother, he supposed. He had never carried when he and his first mate had tried. Out of all of the times that they had tried, he had never been the one to take on the emberling.

He was shivering lightly as he looked up at him. But the question makes him stop and think for a moment, fiddling with his ketchup bottle. "K-Kids... With me?" he asked, "I mean... shit... are you serious?"

“Very.” Grillby tilted his head slightly, and paced around the other side of the bar. As the rope slid higher around Cae, it stole his hands away from his ketchup, and bound them lightly behind his back. The bartender hooked his finger in the zipper of the skeleton’s jacket and began to undo it.

After all- all of the ropes were under his clothes. He could freely remove what he wished, when he wished, without having to fiddle with irksome clothing. “I do not say what I do not mean.”

"Hhn!" he gasped sharply and looked up at Grillby, sockets wide and eye lights small. "Wha.. B-But why me, I mean... Do I really look like I could be a mother?"

“You know as well as I that you could end up being the father.” Grillby murmurs softly. “It would likely be better for your HP if you were the father... But yes.” He coyly motions to the pudgy skeleton’s middle, trying to lighten the mood with a light joke about the skeleton’s round middle under his shirt. His jacket is removed, and discarded neatly next to Grillby’s own shed clothes. “I have come to care for you over the years- you have brought me feelings again that I haven’t felt since I lost my first mate. I find myself happier when I am with you- and I would be happy to make a child with you. I miss being a father, to be honest. And there is no other soul I’d rather make a life with.”

He puffed and gave a hesitant laugh, before he smiled up at him. "Shit... I ah... I don’t know what to say, Grillbz..."
“A yes or a no would suffice.” The flame monster arched a brow at him, and looped his fingers through the skeleton’s shirt. Grillby didn’t remove it-no, he used it to haul Caeruleus up, and over his shoulder rather swiftly. Keeping one arm across his legs, the fire monster patted his intended’s backside and headed for the stairs.

He gasped as he was lifted up and he blushed furiously, "G-Grillby... Fuck..." he murmured, before he smiled, "H-Heh... Y-Yes."

The fire monster paused at the stairs, hand on the railing, and shifted the skeleton draped across his bare hide. “… Truly? You say yes?”

"Come on man do you really need me to repeat it? I said yes damn it!” he huffed, squirming. At least he had a good view of the elementals ass from here. "I... Jeez... I can't believe you asked me... I mean... Well shit we've been great friends for a long time now... if not so much more... I just...!" he was a flustered mess.

Grillby laughed heartily, mouth falling open as his voice rumbled up and down the stairwell. “We’ve been more than friends for a long time, Caeruleus. It was my own nerves that kept me from asking you formally a long, long time ago.” He resumes going up the stairs, taking them two at a time as he heads up to his home.

The door is opened, and he makes a beeline for his bedroom. Cae’s flowers were on his bed- and he took a moment to carefully move them to the side table before he dropped the skeleton chest down on the massive plush surface. “Take a deep breath and relax, Caeruleus. Though… Don’t relax too much. You have prodded me a fair bit- I am justified in my actions tonight.”

The elemental leaned closer and pressed his hips against the back of Cae’s shorts. The heat against his pelvis would let the skeleton know just what he had gotten himself into- if the flaming fangs nipping at his spine through his shirt didn’t do it first. “So… Tonight? Or do you need time to… process impending parenthood?”

He shivered as he was laid down, then looked back at Grillby, before he jolted and let out soft moans in reaction to the heat that now spread over his back, "nnh... hah..."

Grillby hooked a finger in one of the ropes that looped around the skeleton’s neck, and tugged it back. It parted, like a leash, and yanked him upwards. “I expect an answer when I ask you something.” The bartender rumbled softly, rolling his hips teasingly through the other’s shorts. “Or are you going to be naughty as well as teasing today?”

He gasped as he was pulled back and he looked at him as best he could. "H-Hah... Grillby... Holy shit..." he moaned quietly. "Nnh... Do you want me to behave? Or are you egging me on to give you shit?" he cackled.

“Mmm... I just want my answers, so I know how this evening will go.” The more magic they exchanged, the easier it would be for a new life to spark. Fire elementals were hard to breed with- but their young were hardy and tough inside of their carrier once the flames of their souls were stable. If they started now, there was the chance that it could spark off in several months time. Grillby gently pinched the skeleton’s coccyx through his shorts, and rumbled softly. “How you act is entirely on you- but then and again, you enjoy it when I get rougher with you, don’t you?”

He jumped sharply, and then he shivered and grinned up at him unrepentantly. "Hehehe~"

“Answer me,” the big monster rumbled his demand sharply. But instead of scolding him-he eased up, keeping him restrained but not touching him, taking reverse measures to get what he desires.
He shivered and groaned loudly as he squirmed lightly, "Nnhhh, I-I'll be good" he whined.

Grillby clucked his tongue lightly against the back of his teeth and adjusted the ropes that bound him. "That is not the answer that I seek," he rumbles. His hand tightens on the leash, and he uses it to lean the skeleton upright once more. "And avoiding it is definitely being naughty... Do you know what happens to skeletons who misbehave?"

"Wh-What happens" he asked hesitantly.

Grillby shifted and removed Cae’s shirt in one swift motion. It might have slightly torn- but he could repair the hem for him in the morning. “Disobedient skeletons have to work for what they want.”

In one swift motion, Grillby has Cae kneeling on the floor- which has a padded rug to cushion the bare knee caps of the topless skeleton- and nestled between the thick thighs of the fire monster. Grillby keeps a hold on the leash, and toys with his zipper pointedly. “But disobedient skeletons get handicaps. Yours? No hands. Not until I say so.”

"Hahh... h-holy shit." he murmured, smiling up at him, "This is hot, Grillby..." he giggled weakly.

The barman tilted his head and gave him a smoldering smirk. “I know. I can smell what I’m doing to you.” His desire was palpable- particularly since Grillby’s sense of smell was tied to his entire body, as his flames consumed air to give him those sensations. He was no dog or wolf monster, but he had a decent enough sense of smell, particularly when it was one he was intimately familiar with.

Slowly, Grillby unbuttoned his slacks. The zipper came next, proving that the barman did not believe in boxers or briefs- mostly because unless it was in use, he did not need them. His cock summoned, glowing red and long, with small curls of flames branching out from the base and leading up towards his belly button.

He arched a brow, and leaned back patiently on his elbows. “You know what to do.” He would have to suck until Grillby either came, or Cae actually answered his question.

Cae was asking himself right now why the hell Grillby was affecting him like this. He couldn't even think of anything good to try and snark back with. "I... ah... I wouldn't mind kids... you know... I mean... tonight seems okay enough.” he murmured into the shaft of Grillby's cock.

Grillby shifted, and loosened the leash a little bit. He parted his thighs a bit more so the broad shoulders of the skeleton could fit more comfortably, and then offered him a flash of a soft grin. “Then that’s how we’ll end out the night,” he purrs gently to him. Though the gentleness fades, covered by the prior mask, and he drags a flaming finger down his cheek as the skeleton’s face nuzzles close to his cock. A lot of this was a mask- a mask that seemed to excite the skeleton under him, so he kept it up. “But for now... your impatience earlier in the bar has reaped this- if you had just been patient, had waited until I was done...” Grillby rumbled at him, mouth opening to flick a flaming tongue out across his lips. “We might be in an entirely different situation.”

"Explain~?” he cooed softly, before he opened his mouth, his sharp teeth gleaming before he closed his mouth around the head of the cock,

The muscles of Grillby’s legs tensed faintly as those sharp teeth closed around him. It both excited and made him wary- he’d been on the accidental end of love bites before, though from different monsters, and getting a bite to that particular spot was not something he wanted to experience. Still, his cock was warm, and Cae’s mouth seemed cool in comparison. It sent ripples of flame up his skin, the equivalent of gooseflesh for a human. “Mmm...” It pleased him, and Grillby glowed brighter. The inside of Cae’s skull lit up, and that made a curl of desire bubble deeper into his belly.
“Well,” The elemental muttered, stroking his fingers over the top of Caeruleus skull, “The way I see it, you would have been sprawled under me as I worshipped every inch of you I could. You could have been face down in the mattress, being pounded until your eyes roll.” Though he’s certain that one is going to happen at least once tonight, “Or even tangled together in the midst of making love. But no- you must earn that tonight.”

Earn it he says... His lowered gaze lifts, and gleams as his grin appears around the elementals cock. His eye sockets were glowing with a gentle lighting, before he suddenly leaned forward, taking in almost the entire cock into his mouth, softened by magic and moistened by 'saliva' as he began to suck Grillby off. His eye sockets were now glowing much brighter now.

Grillby had not been expecting the skeleton to take him almost to the hilt. Grillby was a large monster, his cock befitting his size. So the skeleton’s skull lit up like a jack-o-lantern, and Grillby couldn’t hide the groan that pulled from his throat. “Stars,” he hissed softly, palm cupping the skeleton’s skull. “Good,” he praised, pleased.

He chuckled quietly and he pushed himself forward again, taking him to the base, before pulling back again. "Mnhh~", it definitely gave his jaw a bit of a stretch, but he didn't care, watching Grillby's face with a smug look.

Grillby did not do oral often- he was more often the one to toss Cae down and ravish him, rather than have the skeleton attempt to ‘blow his candle’ as it were. It felt good- alien and foreign, and cold in a way that felt splendid. Grillby’s face was slack, eyes bright behind his glasses. He watched Sans, withdrawing his hand from his skull so the skeleton could move as he pleased. Instead it came up, and he bit lightly at his knuckle, trying to keep his breathing steady.

Noting Grillby's reaction, Caeruleus moaned happily and look up at the elemental, grinning through his gaze as he also sought Grillby's approval to the treatment. "Mmmh~" “Yesss,” he purred. His hips rocked faintly where he sat, rolling them slowly as Caeruleus bobbed on his cock. Grillby groaned, biting further onto his knuckle. “Mmm, good work, Sans. G-good work.” He rumbled pleasantly.

Perfect~ he was going in the right direction. He chuckled and hummed softly as he kept sucking and bobbing his head, mock swallowing around him. "Mmm."

Caeruleus did not have a throat like other monsters might, but that was probably the only reason that he was able to actually hilt the big fire beast. Grillby hissed softly, and the hand in his mouth moved down to clutch Cae’s skull. His hips rocked slightly, thrusting upwards just faintly into his mouth. The fire elementals mouth fell open, flaming tongue lolling gingerly over his teeth as smoke curled faintly out of his mouth with every growing pant.

"Mmmhhh~" he relaxed himself to take the thrusts, his tongue happily rubbing against the cock as it moved against his tongue.

Grillby had better stamina for things outside of oral- and it showed. He shuddered and shook, breathing coming out more and more ragged as Sans bobbed and bounced. Grillby shivered, waves of fire crackling over him in a small flood of elemental gooseflesh. “I am, ah, nnn, c-close,” he manages to warn the small skeleton.

Close... good... he relaxed his magic then leaned forward, completely hilting the cock in his throat. "Mmmmng~"

The humming helped, and the fire of Grillby’s head blazed upwards for a moment as he came.
Grillby grunted deeply, his cock pulsing-and then liquid fire magic rushed out into Caeruleus mouth. It was on the slightly too hot side, like coffee that was just a little too hot to be drinking regularly.

He shuddered, hand stroking the skull that had brought him to his edge. “G-good,” He manages, smoke curling out of his mouth as he panted. “Very good.”

His eyes widened slightly, and then squeezed closed. He groaned as he gulped down the hot load, before he slowly pulled back, his mouth hanging open as he panted. "Hahh... hahh..."

Grillby loosened the ties binding his arms, so Caeruleus could have some bit of freedom. The flaming ropes remained, and began to pulse with his magic, teasing over the bones that they were so tangled with. “I, hah, think you’ve earned a reward,” he purrs softly. Just as soon as he could go again- which would be shortly, for sure- he would be ravishing Sans.

His arms sagged a little, and he moaned as the ropes started to move and tease. "A-aahhh~"

Grillby did not rest long. As he shifted, he used the rope to move the skeleton onto the bed. He shifted, and scooted his pants further down. Sans had swallowed his load- but these were his nice slacks, and he had no intention of staining them blue.

Once his pants were down- nestled somewhere on the floor, leaving him bare, Grillby clamored back up onto the bed with Caeruleus. He brushed his fingers up the skeleton’s legs, and the ropes gathered and he guided them around and up, so his hands were secured above the headboard. “Mmm, your turn now,” he purred. “Though these seem to be in the way- oh? What’s this? Excited, are we?”

Caeruleus took a soft breath as looked up at him, "Ahh... hahh... hehehehe~ Well... shit no hiding it is there?" he asked quietly.

“No hiding indeed,” the fire elemental purred. He cupped him through his shorts, rubbing just slightly to tease him. “Looks like I wasn’t the only one who got something out of that, hm?” He left Cae’s legs free, keeping the ropes bound to his bones to keep him stimulated from all over. Grillby was nothing if efficient- and with the rope weaved between his bones, it was sure to drive Sans bonkers. “So tell me,” he purrs, “would you like me to remove your shorts? To have my wicked way with you, my Caeruleus?”

His tongue was hanging out of his mouth as he arched his back, arms straining at his binds. "Oooh fuck..." he groaned loudly, "P-Please... Y-yes..." his voice came out slightly whining, but he honestly did not care.

Grillby grinned, and leaned down. While he slowly teased his shorts down with his fingers, Grillby ran his mouth up and down the Sans’ spine, kissing and nibbling as he goes. It doesn’t take him very long to ease the skeleton’s shorts down, and he shifts to run the warmth of his tongue over his ribs briefly. He had to tease him a bit more, after all, before he got to the main event. He leaned back, scooting up and easing the skeleton’s legs over his hips, eyes flicking down to see which equipment Cae had summoned for the evening.

"Aahhh, haaaah…” Surprisingly enough, he summoned an ecto-cock, despite how submissive it looked like Grillby had him.

Grillby wasn’t really surprised- Caeruleus was a bit odd in his desires sometimes, so the fire elemental had learned to roll with whatever the skeleton wanted for the night. The big monster hummed, and grasped his cock in his hand. Cae was decently sized, but Grillby had very large hands. He had little trouble slipping his palm around him and giving him a firm stroke upwards. His mouth returned to working over his ribs, silent save for soft rumbles that he filtered into the other’s "Aahhh!" he leaned his head back, his teeth now closed again, tongue hidden. "F-fuck~ your hand is nice ‘n hooooot!"

Grillby grins, and scrapes his teeth gently over the skeleton’s ribs, before dipping down to do the same to the sensitive side of his spine. He doesn’t respond verbally- instead his tongue comes out, and he lifts the skeleton enough for him to slick his tongue around the girth of his spine.

His hand continues working over the thick blue cock gently, while Grillby’s hips gently rock into the mattress below him.

"Aahhhhh…" his hips rocked into his hand as he looked down at him, eyes glowing brightly. "Ooooh fuck… Grillby~"

“That would be my name, don’t wear it out.” he purred. The elemental kept stroking his cock, rolling his palm around it slowly. Eventually he shifted, and moved so Cae’s legs hooked over his shoulders again. “If I had ears, I’d love to use your femurs as earmuffs. Oh look- I already am.” The big monster grinned. His mouth came down, and he had little problems enveloping his cock in his mouth.

Sans always ran at a far colder temperature than he did, and it stung his mouth slightly. But Grillby persevered, and began to warm him with soft strokes of his tongue, and feather light touches of his lips over his shaft.

"GRILLBY!" His shout was loud as the other's mouth was suddenly around his cock. Unable to hold himself back, he roughly bucked upward.

His buck caught Grillby off guard, and the big monster coughed slightly as he effectively shoved the majority of the front of his pelvis straight into his mouth. If he had a throat like other monsters, it probably would have gagged him. Grillby pulled back, fingering part of his jaw that was probably going to bruise from the sudden bones to the face, and eyed his partner with mild amusement. “Little tightly wound up, aren’t we?”

He wasn’t going to be upset about it- accidents happened. He would just need to keep a firmer grip on the skeleton’s pelvis. He didn’t return immediately to his cock- no, he left it sitting there, covered in his glowing red saliva and straining for attention as he instead kissed and nipped along the femurs on his shoulders.

"Hahh... hah... N Ngh! G-Grillby don’t stop!" he whined, squirming faintly. "Please!"

Grillby simply arched a brow at him and nibbled a little more firmly on his femur. “Begging, are we? Show some patience, Sans. Your impatience got you into this mess in the first place, no?” He shifts and runs his fingers over the space where Sans could summon his other parts. He teases the insides of the bones, deliberately ignoring the cock that was tempting him in front of his face. “Be patient,” he purred. “The best rewards are the ones you wait for.”

He whimpered as he looked down at him, his normally round pupils shaped almost like hearts, "Grillby, I’m sorry, okay?! Just... please... My dick's getting cold...!"

“Oh, is it?” The old general adored when he could drive Caeruleus this far. Teasingly, he exhaled warm air over his dick, and then ran his tongue from the base to the tip. “Well, we can’t be having that now can we?” His digits curled upwards, securing his pelvis in place so they didn’t have another thrusting repeat- and then his mouth slowly closed over his cock, savoring the cold burn that stung... over his cheeks and tongue as he hilted him again.

Grillby curled his fingers, stroking inside of his pelvis teasingly.

"Oooh fuuuuck," he gasped out, his eyes becoming half-lidded as he leaned his head to one side, "Oh god~"

His magic was coiling around Grillby's hand. If it got out of the way he'd end up summoning his other anatomy as well.

Grillby could feel the magic gathering around his hand, and withdrew his fingers obediently. He mouthed up and down his cock, lips brushing and massaging gently as he gave a soft and firm suck. He couldn’t speak with his mouth full- but he got to enjoy as Cae’s skull lolled to the side. He rumbled softly, letting it vibrate up through the length being worked by his mouth.

"AAahh!" Within seconds of his hand withdrawing, there was a bright glow as he had summoned an ecto-pussy, "Hahh... hahh...."

The ecto pussy made him smile, and he teased two fingers gently along the outer lips. His mouth continued it’s bobbing, keeping him distracted as he began to tease him there too. Two fingers curled, and eased into his depths while his thumb found the nub of ecto-flesh at the top and began to massage that too.

Skeletons were fun- they could make whatever they wanted, when they wanted. He let out a pleased hum, watching the bound upper half of his chosen intended to see how he reacted to the double stimulus.

He jolted and let out a choked sound of pleasure, his fists clenching and relaxing repeatedly as his teeth parted one more to get more air. His face was a feverish blue in hue, and his pupils now well distinguished hearts in his sockets.

Grillby grinned wider. Oh yes- he was enjoying this. But… He knew the one thing that could drive the skeleton over the edge. He shifted, and his mouth left his dick. No doubt this would upset Cae- so he shushed him gently. Fingers still slick from stretching the skeleton’s folds, he slid them around his cock as he moved up. Cae’s legs dropped back down over his hips- and Grillby gave him half a second to realize what this meant before he slid his cock home into the skeleton’s body.

Grillby was a large, large monster in many proportions. Cae’s pelvis fit him like an extremely tight glove as he rocked in place, palming his cock as he loomed over him. His mouth found his chest and he began to kiss and nibble each and every one of his ribs, dick pulsing with the warmth of his flames.

He clearly needed more than that second to recollect himself, but as soon as Grillby was hilted in him, he arched and choked on his own noise. His body rattled loudly with pleasure as he let out a single word, voice verging near a sob.

"C-CLOSE!"

“Good,” Grillby purred. “Be a good skeleton for me,” he murmured against his chest. His hips shifted, rocking and pounding into the skeleton mercilessly. Each hard thrust was timed with a stroke of his hand, and Grillby even found his own end coming close again. It was hot, driving him this crazed for him. “Be a good skeleton,” he repeated, “and scream my name,” he rumbled.

"G-Grillby...!" he gasped his name a few times, before he arched deeply and screamed as he climaxed around him.
Grillby lasted a few more thrusts before the sight of Sans was enough to push him over. As the skeleton’s eye lights rolled practically to the back of their sockets, he hilted himself and growled a pleased noise. His member pulsed, and then hot magic flooded into the skeleton, flooding him full with his second load of the evening.

Grillby didn’t even mind when Cae’s cock spurted blue up his abdomen, painting him just as he filled the skeleton. “Caeruleus,” he rumbled softly, shuddering as he nearly collapsed on him. One arm braced himself, and he panted, basting the bound skeleton with the warmth radiating from him. His mouth slowly closed as his form slumped, boneless under the big monster. "Nnh... H-Hahh..." he whimpered softly, before he looked up at Grillby, "G-Grill...?"

Grillby had enough awareness to let the ropes disappear, and he shuddered slightly over Sans. His hips rocked slowly as his soul raced, taking time to calm after such an exciting moment. “Are you alright?” He was aware the other had fragile HP- and sometimes Grillby could get a little out of hand. He kissed softly over the skeleton’s chest, and peered at him with warm eyes through his glasses. Releasing Sans’ cock, Grillby shifted and flipped them, so the skeleton was sprawled out across his chest.

His form slumped upon being freed from the ropes, and he held tightly to Grillby, panting heavily as he laid his head on the other's chest, "Y-yeah..." he managed out after long enough, "G-Great."

Grillby nodded. He coaxed his own soul out of the side of his chest, showing a brilliant orange soul, interspersed with flecks of red and yellow to make it look almost like living flame. He offered it out to Cae, utmost trust in the tired boss elemental’s face. His soul is worn slightly, a few healed cracks leaving permanent marks where he had nearly given up hope so long ago.

He looked at him, then he smiled weakly and he nodded faintly. "Y-yeah..."

Grillby extended his hand, and let his soul draw closer to Cae’s own. “You are beautiful,” he murmurs, awe easing into his voice. It was such a fragile soul for a boss monster- but hell if that didn’t make him want to protect it from harm. His soul trembles softly in his palm, and he extends it further, letting Cae make the final choice on if they do this or not.

He smiled at him hesitantly. "Yours is more so.” He purred softly, before he slowly pushed his soul closer to Grillby’s, "I want this." he whispered.

“I want this too.” Grillby lets his soul extend as he shifts his other hand to cradle Cae’s skull tenderly. He strokes his cheek as he waits for their souls to brush and mingle together.

He closed his eyes and his soul was held out until it brushed against the bright colored soul of the "A-Ahh..." he gasped.

Grillby tensed under him, a soft groan leaving him. His soul pulsed warmly against Cae’s, the surface of it being chilled by the cooler temperatures of Sans’. A shiver rolls down his body, and he cradles their souls together, trapping them between his hand and the skeleton’s palm. “Ahgn… Mm…” He could slightly feel Cae, feel his nerves, and did his best to soothe him as he pushed his magic towards the younger skeleton’s core.

The magic was sent with the express intent to create a soul- with all the hope and desire that the fire elemental could muster, along with all of the love for the skeleton that he could physically send over.

"Nnnh..." his grip moved to cling to Grillby's shoulders, his form curling up slightly as the sensation quickly washed over him. "G-Grill... f-fu... hhahh..." his sounds were now more breathy, his head resting on his chest.

Grillby was silent and focused, offering his magic to the skeleton above him. He shivered under him, heat bleeding out into the smaller monster as he hoped with all of his being. “We will have to wait and see,” he admits softly. “It might take a while for it to take…” Tiredness coats his voice- the amount of magic he’d put into Cae was more than he had expunged in a long, long time.

"Th-That's... that's fine..." something was not fine... Sans Caeruleus Gaster, the normally strong-willed and cocky skeleton was trembling as he lay against Grillby, taking a weak breath before his shoulders shivered.

Grillby frowned, and looped a warm arm around the skeleton. He nuzzled the top of his skull, and began soothingly. His soul threaded more love over alongside his magic. “Sans…?” He queried softly. “Are you okay?”

He looked at him as he started to laugh, "Y-Yeah, Grillby... I'm... well shit..." he nuzzled him and hugged him tightly, "I never got this far b'fore." he murmured, "There was always a reset..."

“You said it yourself,” Grillby murmured softly. “This is the last one. This will be the last one- so why not let yourself be happy? Let yourself love, let yourself grow… Live, Sans. Let yourself live for once.”

The skeleton had blundered the facts about the resets to him a long time ago, when he had gotten too drunk. In trying to drown his sorrows, he had accidentally spilled them- and had to go back several days later to clear up many facts that he had muddled.

Grillby had understood then, why Sans had been slightly distant and fearful in getting to attached to their relationship.

He gave another laugh, and he nuzzled him again, "Fuck, Grillbz... Why couldn't it have been like this sooner..." he sighed.

“… That is mostly my fault,” the fire elemental clutched him tighter to him, and nuzzled the top of his skull. “I was afraid…” He admits. “Afraid of loving and losing again. Twice… I would not survive it.”

He looked up at him, then he slowly pulled himself closer to lean up and kiss Grillby.

Grillby kissed him back gently, and let their souls part. His sluggishly slid back into his chest, so he could loop both arms around the skeleton using him for a living heating pad. When they parted, Grillby closed his eyes and heaved a great sigh. “…Do you remember,” he began, “when we first met? Do you remember what I looked like?” he had been thinner then- his muscle tone had faded along with the brightness of his fires. He had moved like he was so much older than he actually was- and his glow had been dimmer than an echo-flower’s. Grillby had looked decent from afar, but up close he had been run down, looking nothing like he did now.

"Yeah, you were so fucking cute." he chuckled quietly, "Hey, remember how short I was?"

It physically pained him to have to ruin his perception of their first meeting, but it meant that he too had been fooled by his outward appearance. “I remember, yes. You had to get a step stool to get onto one of the taller seats- and then you proceeded to flirt with me. If I recall, you said I ‘lit up your world’. I remember it made me laugh.” Grillby chuckled quietly. His eyes closed though, and it faded off. He was silent, and he glanced away. “Truth be told, I was perhaps days away from falling.” He admitted quietly. “You making me laugh had been the first time in a long time.”

“Well, I’ll admit, there was definitely a spark between us.” he chuckled quietly, before he nuzzled him, "Hey... Grillbz... You know I’ll never let that happen."

“Losing you would tip me back, Sans. You, with your puns and humor, reminded me to live. To hope again. Losing my first mate hit me hard, Cae. It hit very hard.” He smooched the top of his skull quietly and closed his eyes. “The reason it took so long for me to formally ask was because I was afraid. I’m... not afraid anymore. I’m ready to move on- and to live. And that’s what I want you to do too. Don’t fear the resets. Fearing things- it keeps you from truly living.”

He sighed softly. "Yeah... you're right," he murmured, before he held tighter to the elemental below him. "Well you know what? Not an issue anymore." he told him firmly. "Because now you have me. And I have you."

“Exactly.” The large fire elemental nuzzled into him and rumbled contently as he enveloped the smaller skeleton in his warmth. “And together, we will truly live.” He murmured warmly.

Giving a soft laugh, Caeruleus nuzzled him again and took a deep breath, his body aching and demanding he surrender to the warmth. "Promise you won't tell no one about this?" he murmured, his accent coming into the way he talked again.

“I am a man of few words,” The bartender rumbled softly. After all, he’d kept the knowledge of his falling to himself for many years. This would stay between them and only them.

"Damn straight you are." he chuckled, nipping his chest before he sighed and settled, his eye sockets soon going dark.

The elemental settled down as soon as Sans had fallen asleep. His fires dimmed faintly as he settled down, and the elemental succumbed to slumber shortly after. It had been a good Valentines- a very good one.
Chapter 38

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So here’s the third part of the Valentine’s chapters. Here’s what Tenebris has been up to during the events of the past two chapters. –flails hands- here is the kingdings that Silverwing has been frothing relentlessly for. I still don’t ship it or really enjoy it, but eh. The things you do for friends, am I right?

Don't forget to come find us at our blog! you can find us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: And now, for the cute-ship we've all been waiting for!

Some Kingding Dads fuckin' like the adorable lovers they are!

"Thank you for the ride, Toki."

"No problem, Tenebris! I’ll see you in a little while!"

"Of course."

When introduced to the idea of spending this romantic holiday with Asgore, Tenebris had felt a sense of fluster that made him both excited and almost a little nervous to visit the king. And yet, he accepted her offer for the lift, and thankfully didn’t have to twist himself into a pretzel to fit in her car this time.

At least getting out was easy enough...

Tenebris waved until the truck was out of sight, and he smiled as he turned and began into the mountain. He felt Goosebumps as he walked through the barrier hall, feeling a older sense of dread and loathing for what once occupied this hall. Regardless, he continued walking, out of the great hall, and into the lesser, he could see the light at the other end of the hall, a bright golden color. Growing eager, he quickened his pace until he arrived in the throne room doorway.

As usual, Asgore was in the throne room. This time though, he was settled on his knees, heavy cloak discarded and settled over the arm of the throne as he tended to the garden of golden flowers that bloomed around his seat. The king was metaphorically elbow deep in carefully removing several buttercups from the ground, taking care to keep the roots in tact. It was obvious he’d been doing it for a while- for the garden was larger than it had been before. He was spreading out the flowers, thinning out the patches where they had grown surely too thick, and making the ground cover expand.

It also served the purpose of making sure that the precious plants did not choke themselves out. He only had to do it every few years- but it was enjoyable work nonetheless.

The king sneezed as pollen invaded his nose, and he laughed quietly as a few loose petals fluttered into the air. His ears twitched, and he shook his head, heavy mane bouncing around his horns. “This is what I get for doing this in the middle of blooming season.”
Tenebris put a fist over his mouth to stifle his laugh as he came over. He pulled a handkerchief from his coat and reached out, running a hand over Asgore's shoulder as to not startle him, as he offered it to the king, stepping into view with a gentle smile.

"Gesundheit, your Majesty."

The king did startle, but not completely. He had heard the soft noises of Tenebris’ feet over the tile, but he hadn’t expected him to be so close so soon. So while his mane fluffed slightly, his tail fluttering rapidly as it poked out the back of his trousers, he avoided actually jumping from the contact.

He sniffed quietly, and took the handkerchief with a thankful rumble. “Thank you, old friend.” He took the moment to blow his nose, and gave his head another slight shake. Pollen puffed off of him, and he waved it away with a quiet chuckle, tucking the used kerchief into his pocket so he could either use it again, or clean it later. He turned on his knees, peering up at the tall scientist. “I did not expect you to be here so soon- it has been far too long since I have gotten to see you. How did you get here so quickly?” The caravans took days- and he’d gotten word that Tenebris was going to visit, but hadn’t expected him to be there the same day that he got the call.

Kneeling down to rest on his haunches so as to be more level with Asgore, Tenebris smiled at the other. "I was given a lift by Miss Toki." he explained, "I believe she detected my eagerness to see you again." he admitted with a soft laugh.

Asgore shifted to face him fully and offered him a kind smile. His ears perked, and his eyes twinkled merrily. “That is quite kind of her! She has been doing much for our kind- I am glad she could take the time to bring you here… I would be lying if I said I wasn’t eager to see you too.” The king beamed at him. “Forgive me for being a bit unprepared. When you called this morning, I thought I would be seeing you two days from now. I would have made sure I wasn’t up to my wrists in dirt.”

He laughed softly and shook his head. "Oh don’t worry. I think the earthy smell fits you." he purred, before looking to where he was working. He arched a brow curiously. "Opening up the garden, hm?” he rumbled, "A task well known by an experienced botanist such as yourself.” he then reached out and picked up a few of the flowers, looking at it before he glanced to Asgore with a warm smile.

Asgore chuckled merrily, and scrubbed his hands on a spare cloth, so the fur wasn’t as dirty. “Well, I certainly hope you enjoy how I smell. I certainly enjoy your scent.” He inhaled a heavy whiff, pointedly sniffing teasingly towards the skeleton monster. The king nodded, gathering the few plants he’d uprooted and settling them into a bin with some dirt in it so they wouldn’t dry out. “You know I have to do it once or twice a year, or they choke themselves out. But I think they can wait to be finished until a later time. Would you like some tea, or did you want to stop at your laboratory first, old friend?”

The phantom had mentioned vaguely over the phone that he had some samples he wanted to run some tests on- though he hadn’t said what they were or why he wanted to run them. Asgore did not often press for answers, though.

"I’d rather have a cup of tea with you before I end up losing track of time." he admitted, before he leaned forwards and bumped his skull gently under the king’s chin. "It's been so long since I properly spent time with you." he murmured.

Asgore nuzzled his chin down onto the top of Tenebris’ skull, and proceeded to tug the monster into his arms. He stood up, with Tenebris easily draped in his arms, and pressed a soft kiss to the phantom’s forehead. “It has been far too long, my friend. A cup of tea sounds splendid- I think I still have some of your favorite back at home. Come! Tea awaits!”
Fluffy tail flicking happily, the king turns on his heel and carefully steps through the flowers, making sure not to crush them as he goes.

He purred happily when he felt the other's soft lips on his forehead and he chuckled before following him, "Right behind you, my king."

The king was cheerful as he plodded down the long hall that headed towards his home. It didn’t take long for his legs to bring him there, and he opened the door, ushering the phantom in first. The house was warm - it was always warm, maintained by his magic that had long ago permeated the premises - so Asgore gave Gaster a smile. "Is there anything you would like me to make you along with the tea while you get settled in?"

"Mmm, I don’t have a preference, anything that's convenient will work just fine." he replied, standing by the front door as he reached up, starting to unbutton his coat.

Asgore nodded and left him to get himself settled in. The king stepped into his kitchen, quietly grabbing for some biscuits that would go well with the tea. Some were settled onto a plate, and then Asgore started the tea.

Fire magic had many uses - and he had long ago perfected the art of making the perfect cup of tea with it. He hummed pleasantly, warming the pot of water with one hand and getting the tea ready to steep with the other.

Tenebris soon came to join him in the kitchen. Now barefoot and in his turtleneck, he hugged Asgore from behind and started to purr into his back.

The king had heard him coming, and smiled to himself. The monster purring into his back was warm, and Asgore chuckled gingerly. "Is the house warm enough for you, Old friend? I know you get cold quite easily." Asgore himself was verging on the edge of overly warm - but having thick fur often did that to a monster.

"Yes. But there's nothing I love more than the heat of another... especially if he has the aroma of tea, flowers, and soil to him." he rumbled gently.

Asgore simply smiled. He rumbled gently back, and poured the now-boiling water over the tea leaves to let them steep. The king shifted, carefully scooting the cups back so that they did not get spilled, and then turned around in Gaster’s grasp so he could face him. Large hands settled on the phantom monster’s hips, and he dipped down to rub his nose against the other’s neck. Soft, furry lips pressed ticklish kisses over the turtleneck hiding his skin from view. "Well, I most certainly do not mind sharing my warmth with you, my friend."

He let a soft giggle slip past him and he smiled up at the king. "Good, because I would be set on taking it anyhow." he purred softly, nuzzling the top of the king’s head.

Asgore chuckles, and his ears flick and flop. The spot where he had gotten shot had healed over, and with magic, it looked as if it had never been there in the first place. He tilts his head, exhaling warm air and lipping gently up the side of his neck. "Mmm, one condition. I get to hear more of your laughs- I love hearing your laughter and making you laugh."

He shivered and in response to the other's actions, leaned and softly nipped his ear with a rumbling chuckle.

Asgore laughed softly and hugged the other monster affectionately. He released him then, and slid the tea over to him. "Mm, tea first, my friend. If we wait any longer, it will have steeped for too long.” And one did not waste tea in the presence of the king.

"I wouldn't mind a stronger tea." he rumbled, but he took his tea without another word, and blew on it gently before he took a sip.

Asgore too blew on his own cup, leaning against his counters as he took a sip. He had an odd quirk of simply eating the tealeaves that remained in his cup- Frisk often teased him that he was more goat than he let on- and he had to take care not to get the soggy leaves caught in his beard. “Strong tea is good- but a perfect cup is neither too strong, nor too weak.”

"Very true." he sighed blissfully. "There's always something about the way you make it, dear friend, that always makes it taste wonderful.”

Asgore chortled softly and wiggled a furry brow at him playfully. “I could take a page from your son’s book and say it’s made with magic.”

"That's awful" he laughed, "It would have been worse if you said 'made with love'." he added.

“Well, it might have been made with the lower case love,” Asgore winks. He sips his tea, the hot drink scalding over his teeth and tongue. There is a content rumble in his chest- and it sounds vaguely sheep like as he enjoys his warm drink.

"Stars..." he moved his teacup to one hand so he could face palm, well aimed so there is a loud SLAP result as his hand met his forehead.

The noise startled him more than the action, and Asgore choked on his tea with a bleating laugh. It sounded like someone had just slapped a china-plate. He sputtered, dabbing his beard with a napkin as tea escaped. “My friend! If you do that, you might damage your face with your claws.”

He looked at him with a smile, already the handprint darkening on his forehead from where he’d smacked himself. "I need not worry about my claws, dear Asgore. Thank you anyways for your worry."

“I am always going to worry.” The king chuffs softly. He finishes his tea, and goes to rinse his cup.

After a moment Tenebris came and rinsed his out as well. "You wish to return to the garden? Or would you like to do something else~?” he purred Asgore lets Tenebris take over at the sink, and sidles up behind him. His nose burrows into the neck of Tenebris’ turtleneck, and he slowly presses kisses to what skin he can as his hands come to rest on the shorter monster’s hips. “I’m thinking,” he purred, “Something else first.”

He shivers and his tail starts to rattle as he leans his head to one side, letting the king have better access. "Nnn... heh... Great minds think alike.”

The king rumbles softly, large palms exploring over the monster’s hips. One of his fingers comes to tease the base of his tail, and Asgore chuckles gently against Tenebris’ neck. “Great minds indeed… Where would you prefer it this time, Tenebris?” Last time they had accidentally broken one of his cabinets when Tenebris got a little exuberant- but he supposed he wouldn’t mind it here if that is where the doctor wanted it.

He purrs until the other’s digits go to his tail and he stiffed, pupils dilating slightly as he let out a soft rattling moan. He slowly managed to turn around and grin up at Asgore. "Anywhere we haven't tried yet~?” he chuckled quietly.
“Probably the actual bedroom,” The king chuckled. He let the monster turn, and then shifted, pressing him flush to the counter behind him. There was a growing bulge pressed to the front of Tenebris’ pants.

He let out a soft ‘ah’ of surprise, and then he licked his lips. "Ah... You were as eager for this as I was..." he chuckled lowly.

Tenebris leaned against the counter for support, and with a flex of his midsection, Tenebris brings up his legs, haunches resting on the king's hips as his legs locked behind him, his tail coiling around one of Asgore's legs. He grins at him coyly. "Then what are we waiting for, your majesty?"

Asgore chuckles softly as he’s snared. He arches an amused furry brow at the monster in front of him, and idly plucks the hem of his pants. “Well,” he rumbles back, “I think we have a problem. I’d hate to ruin your favorite sweater and your pants…” he could slip his own down from there, but Gaster’s tail would definitely put a small kink in things. But he did have practice, and expertly began to work the other monster’s pants down his hips. “Lift,” he commands gently, so he can slide them out from under the curve of his buttocks.

He chuckled and did as ordered. "Don't forget to unclip the band over my tail." he murmured.

Asgore wouldn’t forget- but the reminder was good. He chuckled softly, doing as instructed, and then began guiding his pants down. He has to unhook Gaster’s legs long enough to fling the pants away, but soon he’s back, pressing the growing bulge in his own pants against the slit that hid all of Gaster’s parts. He kissed him softly, and his hands wandered up the scientists’ turtleneck, stroking over pale skin with the soft pads of his fingers.

He moaned softly into the kiss as his haunches, powerful and pure white, were released from his clothing, "Mrrr~" he let out a purr and his mouth fell open as the king's hands found his shield. Soft pads found powerful bone that protected the smaller's chest, and as wandering fingers slipped between the ribs of the shield, he arched and gave a soft moan, "Ahhh... Asgore~" This felt more like a massage, but he was happily anticipating so much more.

Asgore was content to give much more than that. He shifts, and guides his shirt up. “Arms,” he purrs. While Tenebris has his arms in the air, he's going to kiss and nip along the edges of his shield, and run his blunted teeth along his neck. He rumbles softly, rocking teasingly against Tenebris’ slit.

He chuckled and helped him, first getting his head through the turtleneck before he easily slid out of both it and the black tank top he wore underneath it.

He now laid back on the counter with a sigh, bare for his king to admire. "Mmnn~" he smiled up at him, "It's been too long."

“Far too long,” Asgore all but purred. He leaned back for a moment, eyes roving over the pale body displayed for him. He trailed his hands up and down his sides, stroking over the slit at the center of his body, before wandering up to the shield of reinforced bone that made up Tenebris’ chest. “Mm…” He leaned down, and his mouth began to trail paths over any new scars he might have missed, kissing them and making note of them, and making note that each new scar just made Tenebris that much more lovely.

His torso swelled with air as he leaned his head back, eyes closing as his arms came up to look around Asgore’s neck, stroking through the golden fur. His shield had little damage to it, proof of its capability, but had a few thin marks around the hole that led to his empty torso. Under the king’s girth, however, his slit, held closed by strong muscle that sealed everything behind the flesh, was now softening up in arousal, starting to open to the king's touches, "nnnh~"
Asgore was pleased at his reactions, and continued his gentle ministrations. Kisses here, touches there, licks that trailed teasingly over roping lines of scar and muscle- Asgore practically worshipped the body that he was presented with. Sadly, he had to pause, if only to undo the buttons on his trousers and free himself from his ever tightening confinements.

His sheath popped free, his cock already slipping free. It was long, with slightly backwards facing barbs along the bottom of it that faced towards his testicals. The goat monster let out a rumbling sound, and his fingered slipped to his slit, gently stroking the softening flesh.

Tenebris had lifted his head to see for a moment what Asgore had stopped for, but he wasn't disappointed in what he saw. "O-Oh sweet Stars," he mewled out upon the gentle touches to his slit. He leaned back and turned his head to moan behind a bit lip as a long, black tentacle slipped from his slit to gently entwine with His Majesty's hand, "nnnhh…"

The tentacle wasn't much of a surprise. Tenebris had some… interesting parts, but Asgore enjoyed them nonetheless. As the tentacle looped around his fingers, he gently stroked it. “Well hello there,” he crooned cheekily. “Someone’s excited.” It was sticky and black, and stained the fur of his palm something fierce- but his palm worked over the tentacle anyways, trying to coax out the rest of them.

Tenebris buried his face in his arm, moaning breathlessly as the tentacle continued to react to his king's touch, though soon enough the tentacle was accompanied by a second, followed by a third, and a fourth.

Asgore smiled softly, and took his time stroking each of the tentacles that came out. He let them spread their slime, and chuckled softly as he stroked each one. Tenebris blissful expressions made him happy for what he was doing.

Pried open by the tentacles, the muscles of Tenebris' slit retracted completely and the scientist looked up at his king. "A-Asgore…” he moaned out, rotating his hips before pressing against his hand, the tentacles all happily moving over the king's fur, staining them with their black essence. But now it seemed the smaller of the two monsters wanted something more.

The king knew exactly what the smaller monster wanted, and he shifted to stroke his pinky just below the tentacles. The soft nook was usually hidden by the tentacles, and he made sure to brush his knuckle against the sweet spot. “Tenebris,” The king rumbled softly. His paws gingerly worked over the tentacles while his mouth paid tribute to the pale flesh before him. Asgore’s teeth worked gently along his shoulder, nibbling and nipping the skin with blunted tips as the soft fur of his lips kissed and sucked slightly.

The king knew exactly what he truly wanted- but Asgore wanted Tenebris absolutely prepared before he did anything more. Tenebris was closer to his size- but Asgore’s member was more inherent to that of his lion-based father. If Tenebris was not completely ready, it would not be pleasant, and Asgore did not want any part of this to be unpleasant for him. Perhaps he was too patient of a lover, to attentive, but that is how he was.

Patient and attentive was more than okay for Tenebris, he knew what the king was packing, but he didn't care. He was always so gentle.

The soft sounds that Gaster made were beautiful as he clung to his king, running his fingers through his fur. The touches to his nook had him gasping and moaning softly as he rocked his hips, wanting more of his touch.

Asgore was gentle as he slipped a clawed finger inside. He stuck with his pinky for now, as it was his smallest finger. His claw gently scraped over the inside of his nook, the soft pad of his finger massaging the inside walls. That left the rest of his fingers free to fondle the tentacles clinging to him.

As the finger moved inside, Tenebris gasped out. His nook had gone untouched for so long… "O-Oooh stars...." he breathed out, "Asgore~" “Tenebris,” Asgore cooed softly. He slowly rocked his finger in his nook, stroking and curling it slightly as he stimulated him. Slowly, he added a second finger, easing it in and gently stretching him. Thrusting them slowly, Asgore gave a patient rumble, chuckling at the soft noises of pleasure from the smaller monster.

Tenebris curled in and pressed his head to Asgore's neck as his hands hooked around his back, holding to him tightly as his toes curled. "Aaahhhhh..." he mewled out, his hips rocking in reaction to the two fingers in his already-wet nook.

The motion pleased the king, and Asgore curled his free hand around the smaller monster. His claws traced teasing patterns up and down his spine, stroking over the flesh and scars that were there. “Mmm…” His mouth settled over Tenebris neck and shoulder, and he nibbled and sucked where he found.

Asgore rolled his wrist, and squeezed a third finger in. He curled his fingers, rocking his knuckles in deeper into the phantom. A few thrusts, slick black ooze sticking to his fur and slicking it down. “Think you’re ready, my friend?” He teases slightly.

He was breathless at this point, his mouth hanging open and taking a gasp whenever Asgore moved his fingers, "Y-Yes...! YEes...!" was what he managed to get out. His face was a deep black now, and hot with a blush. He knew that only Asgore could get him like this, but fuck he loved it~

Truly, his poor scientist was far too wound up if he was already trembling and twitching around him. Asgore would just have to make sure he spent his time here as relaxed as could be. A pleased noise rumbled from his chest, and he gave his nook one last rolling thrust with his fingers before sliding them out.

The king took a moment to slick his cock up with the sticky black fluids that coated his digits. Once he was sufficiently lubricated, Asgore placed his hand on a pale hip, and began to guide his member into Gaster's nook. He took it slow, gliding smoothly. He was wider than just three fingers- but three fingers was usually enough to prepare Tenebris well enough for the girth that came with taking the goat-king’s cock.

The sounds from the scientist only grew louder as the king pushed in. Tenebris loved the way his king's fingers felt, but after so long without, when it came to finally being able to envelop the king's cock in his needy nook, he stood no chance to remain coherent. Claws pressed into Asgore's shoulders as he moaned louder, "Aaahhh~!"

Asgore’s fur was thick, and his shirt added a layer of defense against the thick claws that dug into his hide. The kind purred, sucking sharply along his neck. He eased himself in until he was hilted, and gave him a little bit of time to adjust. Slowly, he drew out, the barbs dragging backwards against his nook as he pulled backwards.

His hips jerked forwards again, completing the thrust with almost painful slowness.

Moaning into Asgore's chest, Tenebris' legs clenched around his waist and he let out a needy snarl, before he jerked his hips, rocking against him. "Nnnhhh...!"

Asgore gave him a sharper nip, and rumbled to him. “Patience, my friend,” he murmured affectionately. His hands held firm to the pale hips, keeping him easily still as he set the pace of the thrusts.

"Ah-Asgore... please..." he whined into his neck, his tail coiling tightly around Asgore's leg as his toes continued to curl and uncurl.

Asgore rumbled soothingly, keeping one hand secure on his hip. The other hand came up to cradle his back, dragging gentle claws up and down his spine. His hips rolled, and he began to pick up his pace. Soft grunts escaped through his nose, and he lapped his tongue up the other's neck, rumbling gently.

Tenebris was more than pleased to let out his noises as he was pounded into the countertop by his king and lover, leaning up and lightly nipping his ears and jaw between moans.

Asgore rumbles lightly and shivers at the nipping. He shudders, his cock throbbing as he shifts his angle, driving the thick head of his shaft into the upper parts of his nook. “Mmmm,” The kind purrs, eyes sliding shut. His grunts deepen slightly, and he nips and nibbles Tenebris' shoulders a bit harder. He would end up with several hickies and no doubt some bruising from his teeth- Asgore wouldn’t regret marking his scientist though.

Not that Tenny cared at all~ they were the marks of his king, and Stars help him if he didn't thoroughly enjoy every last one. He let the king bite him as he pleased before he retaliated. He moved to the king's collarbone, nuzzled back his clothing and bit down gently, "Rrrr~"

Asgore’s fur was thick- and they’d probably be picking it out of Tenebris teeth for hours after. Still, the king groans, jerking his hips a little rougher. The spurs on his cock slid roughly over the inner side of Tenebris nook, and Asgore didn’t bother to stop the pleased growl that bubbled up through his chest.

That rougher thrust is exactly what Gaster wanted. He moaned out in pleasure and bit a little harder, his hips wiggling eagerly in Asgore's hands, "Ahh- th-that's it" he hissed.

The king chomped slightly harder onto his skin, lips curling up and tickling the whiskers of his beard over his skin. Asgore’s thrusts roughened further, his breaths coming out in deep, grunting pants. He rolled his hips, giving his cock a little twist as it tugged free and thrust back in.

That freed Asgore of the fangs on his collarbone as Tenebris began to bark out and made loud open-mouthed moans from Asgore's treatment. "Oooh F-Fuck~!") he cried.

Asgore rumbled sharply, jerking his hips heartily. He felt his edge coming, and could feel that Tenebris was close too. The rippling and pulsing of his nook surrounding his cock was almost painfully pleasurable. One hand keeping his hips still, the one that had wandered up to his back moved back down suddenly, grasping back at the tentacles that had been left thrashing between them.

He began to stroke them in earnest, timing it with each sharp thrust as he slammed further and further into his core.

"A-ASGORE!" Tenebris cried out, his grip like a vice on Asgore's clothing as his hips began to jerk into the dual stimulation. The king wasn't wrong in his assumptions, Gaster was close... so close.

“Come for me,” the king rumbles deeply, letting it vibrate up his chest like a bass drum. “Come for me, Tenebris.” His hand rolls, tweaking the tentacles tauntingly, as he rolls his hips in a nearly bruising thrust. “Scream the name of your King,” he purrs.
Tenebris tensed up at the baritone words that trembled through him, and his tail came to unwind from Asgore's leg, instead going between them and hooking onto his shoulder firmly. "A-ASGORE!" the scientist cried out, before his form went rigid and he clenched down on the king's cock as his tentacles all began to release their black fluids.

"ASGORE!" Was the near-scream that then tore itself from Gaster's throat.

Asgore’s shirt was officially ruined, but that was perfectly fine. The king’s face buried in Gaster’s neck, his hand still stroking the weeping tentacles. Asgore gave a beastly grunt, thrust a few more times, and came hard as well, flooding the phantom’s nook with his essence. His cock swelled, locking them loosely together as the king clutched him tight. “Mmmm, Tenebris…”

W-Was he... oh god he was tied. Tenebris let out weak pants and mewls as he settled down in Asgore's arms, panting heavily into his shirt as he slowly managed to lift one hand, petting the king gently.

Asgore’s rumbles faded into a deep, almost sub-sonic bass boom deep in his chest, and he snuggles into Gaster affectionately. His lips press soft fuzzy kisses wherever he can, and he leans into the soft pets with his ears twitching happily. The goat king’s tail flutters happily behind him.

"Hahh... Hnn~" Tenebris caught his breath, then chuckled quietly as he nuzzled the soft chest, "Mmm... Thank you." he purred.

The goat monster purred, mouth pressing more kisses. He lathed his tongue over where he had bitten him, and then leaned back to pepper his skull in kisses too. “No,” he purred, “Thank you. Mm… Sorry I knotted- I didn’t think to pull out. My apologies,” he purred, not at all entirely apologetic. Asgore shifted, and lifted Tenebris up so he could tote him over to the kitchen chairs. He sat, leaving the phantom draped over him, and relaxed to wait out the tie that kept them bound together.

"N-No no... I don't care... Not a bit.” he purred happily, nuzzling into his chest, "I... didn't mean to ruin your shirt." he murmured, slowly getting his tail to unhook on his shoulder.

“A shirt can be replaced,” The king chortled affectionately. “It is no trouble.”

"Mmmh." the reassurance put the old soul at peace and Tenebris closed his eyes, "I missed this.”

“I’ve missed this too. It has been lonely since you moved to the Village,” The kind king admits quietly. He loops his arms tightly around him, and settles down to snuggle in the chair as they wait for the knot to pass. “Without Toriel and Frisk here, the castle feels very empty.” Even if he was busy all hours of the day handling bureaucratic nonsense and working to get the laws into place. “How has life been down in Nara Village? It was coming along wonderfully when I came for New Years. I heard they are getting a school put up?”

"Indeed." he replied, "My Papyrus has found love with Miss Tokiko, and I’m going to be a grandfather soon." he explained to him.

“Oh?” Asgore blinked. “So soon? That is very fast. But I suppose love waits for no one. Congratulations on expecting your first grandchild, Tenebris. I didn’t know there was a wedding.” A furry lip juts out, and he pouts slightly at Tenebris. “I wasn’t invited?”

"Well... a few things... one... It was an unexpected accident that was overlooked due to Toki's human soul... two... there was not a wedding... and three..." he smiled at this, "It's twins, actually...”

“Truly?” Asgore blinked, pout fading to surprise in an instant. “Oh… Oh dear, well then. That is… news we should probably make public, so that all HTM’s out there are aware. Congratulations doubly though! Twins! What luck! I am sure you all are very excited.” He smiles a tenderly lopsided smile, eyes glimmering faintly. “Fatherhood is such a joy… I am certain Papyrus is excited, no?”

"He was surprised initially, but he's very excited to be a father. I have faith in his skill." he rumbled gently.

Asgore’s hands wandered, idly petting the white form draped across him. “I’m sure you’re excited to be a grandfather, aren’t you?” He thrummed softly.

"Ecstatic." he replied, smiling tiredly.

Asgore chuckled softly. He nuzzled him again, and pressed a soft kiss to his face. “You sound tired, old friend. We won’t be able to part for a while yet- why don’t you get some rest? When you wake, we can have some more tea and some biscuits.”

"Mmmh..." he sighed tiredly. "Gladly, sire..." he murmured, not caring that he was without clothing. He was happy and warm against the fur of his king.

Asgore had plenty of practice keeping the phantom monster warm. He snuggled him closer, fur fluffing out to help disperse his heat to the other, and settled down to wait out his knot.
Chapter 39

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And now we get to see some drunken shenanigans. Woop woop. Also don’t worry- despite you guys not seeing a lot of it immediately, plot is progressing steadily. Hehehe.

Ah! Don't forget to visit us at our blog! You can catch us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: For those who haven't seen Deadpool, or haven’t gone out drinking, yes there is an alcoholic beverage by the name of which Tenebris speaks. I personally think it's fucking hilarious, and ironic that it would happen to qualify to be Tenebris' favorite.

Anywho, enjoy, readers!

Toki went to fetch Tenebris around a week later. She’d left him there for probably longer than he had planned- but she’d been serious when she’d told him that she wasn’t going to die if he was gone for a week. And, as she pulled up outside of the castle in her truck, she had been right.

The week had gone good- she’d gotten it cleared with Cae that yes, he wouldn’t mind going out with her brothers. She’d also made headway into the next set of papers- and things were really beginning to progress as far as she knew. Most of the week had been spent enjoying her time with Aliquam and the relative peace of the village- though they’d made use of the pond she’d made into a hot-spring more than once.

Her mood was high, and she turned the radio down slightly as she rolled down her window, waiting for the big monster to come out to the car. She’d gotten the seats all set for him, so he could sprawl on his chest across the collapsed front seat, and leave his lower half curled up in her back seat. It was on the cooler side today- so she’d taken extra care to make space for his tail, so she could keep the heater on inside of the truck for him.

He did get cold easy, after all.

Idly, Toki sung along with the radio, tapping her knuckles lightly on the steering wheel as her truck idled. Toki sent Tenebris a text, letting him know she was here and waiting for him.

Giving his king one last kiss farewell, Tenebris looked more than content as he walked out of the castle, through the barrier hall, and out to where he could see her. He gave a wave to reveal his presence easier, before starting over to the truck.

Upon arriving to it, he smiled and opened the door. "Hello, Toki~" he greeted, even sounding much better than he had when he was dropped off.

Toki grinned at him cheekily when he opened the back door, having rotated so she could see him clamor in. It was easier for him to fit if it was just the two of them in the car- and he could drape across the seats like a lion over a sun rock. “Sooo,” she purrs, “Did you have a good week of vacation?” She wiggles her brow ridges at him, turning the radio down so they could talk without having to shout over it. “You certainly seem to be in a better mood.”

Once in the truck, he stretched out and sighed, settling down in the seats before he smiled at her. He pillowed his head on his forearms, using his tail to shut the door behind him. "It was wonderful, yes..." he then blinked, mouth popping open. "Wait... It was a week?!"

“It was a week.” She nodded with amusement, keeping a sage smile on her face. Once the door was shut, she hit the locks so he didn’t accidentally open it while going down the road, and then tossed the truck into reverse. She backed down the rickety road, and got the truck turned around when she could. Putting it back into drive, Toki proceeded down the main road towards home. “Got lost in your lab and in your boyfriend, didn’t you?” He had needed it- the improvement to his mood was visible, and a happy Tenebris was quite the sight to see.

"The latter more than the prior." he admitted with a chuckle, "It was so good to visit him."

“That’s good.” Toki keeps her eyes on the road, but idly taps her knuckles to the tune of the music. “You really did need it- you’re coming back with a much better mood. Maybe I need to drop you off up there more often.” She chuckles.

“Very funny,” he snorted, giving her a faint grin. "Though, admittedly, you may have a point.”

Toki adjusted her seat belt with one hand- it was starting to sit funny across her middle, and she wasn’t entirely certain what to think of that. “I always have a point.” She grins, tapping one of her horns with her finger. “I’m glad you enjoyed yourself. So, besides spending some quality lovey-dovey time with the King, what else did you do?”

"That was awful." He snorted, bemused. "I did that research I said I would do. And I’m surprised at what I found."

“I’ve been hanging around your son too much.” Toki chuckles softly. “Some of Sans’ humor was bound to rub off on me eventually. He’s like a fungus. A strange, ketchup guzzling fungus.” The way she says it is full of nothing more than affection though, as she shifts gears in her truck and turns on her fog lights. The particular stretch of woods was always foggy- and it was honestly creepy. There had used to be people out here- but a lot of them had sold the land and moved away the moment that the monsters became part of the world. Now it was empty houses and the ghosts of what remained of farms or play sets. “Really? What did you find?”

"That was awful." He snorted, bemused. "I did that research I said I would do. And I’m surprised at what I found."

“He really does grow on you.” he snorted, before getting to answer her. "The chemistry of your bones has changed. They're highly conductive, and yet at the same time they're completely fireproof."

“At least the parts that spark. I burnt the bottom of my feet when I had to handle Vikki. Pap’s the one that actually saw it. But I think that was from touching hot stuff while my defense was in the negative. Hm... We could probably test it. I think I have a lighter in my glove box?” The lighter wasn’t a huge deal- she used them to light candles at home. Really, she was doing a large amount better with fire than before. Grillby no longer bothered her, to be honest.

"Not while you're driving." he said sternly.

“Tenebris, I’m literally the only car on this road at almost any given time anymore. This is the best time- you know Paps would pitch a fit over us doing something like this.” Aliquam was a love, truly, but he was also overprotective at times. Her being a glass canon had him worrying- and it seemed he would rather her not use her magic with her defense how it was. “If you’re worried about me panicking, I can pull over.”

"I wouldn’t mind it," he sighed.

“Ye of such little faith.” But still, Toki is not going to begrudge him his safety measures, since he is the only one who had the possibility of probably ruining his face on the glass. Her seat belts were top of the line- she wouldn’t be going anywhere once they locked. Toki drives until they’re out of the fog, and then pulls off to the shoulder of the road. As she slides it into park, Toki turns slightly in her seat and gives him a wry grin. Experimenting with the lighter wasn’t going to kill her- and a burn on her finger was easily healed. “You’re going to have to dig in the glove box for me- it should be off to the side by the passenger door.”

He shook his head and chuckled, before he rummaged around the glove box. "The sample from your horn might not be the same as your phalanges, so let me know if it hurts at any point."

“The bones of my hands are inherently more sensitive. I don’t feel much in the ends of my horns, to be truthful with you. It’s probably going to suck. I don’t mind though- I’m just as curious as you are. For science, right?” he wouldn’t have a problem finding the lighter- she could see the bright red shell of it just next to her first aid kit. Toki offered out her fingers. “So do you think it works different when the bone is attached to me still? We know the sample of my horn didn’t scorch, but do you think it still won’t if it’s not away from my body?”

"... Yes for science." he said in defeat, "I'm afraid I’m not sure if there is going to be a difference." he mentioned, before he tested the lighter.

Toki nods and wiggles her index finger. She does look away though as he lights it up, and takes a calming breath. It was different knowing she was going to be touching it- but she stayed calm. It was only a little bit on her finger. She had burnt herself worse than that on hot drinks as a human- and it wasn’t like a tiny burn on her finger would hurt the twins in her belly either. “I’m ready. If it hurts, you’ll know.”

He nodded and sparked the lighter, looking at the flame before he held it out for her.

The flame passed under her digit, and she held still. “It’s hot,” She admits, finally glancing over. The bone of her finger was slightly darker, but that was from the smoke of the lighter. “But not too bad. It’s getting a little bit irritating- like being out in the sun for too long, but it doesn’t hurt. I think my defense stat buffers the burn.”

"Most likely." he moved the lighter then gently blew on her finger to cool it.

She laughed at the absurdity of him blowing on her finger, and instead dipped it into the bottle of water she’d brought with her. She found herself taking in a lot more fluids, even if she didn’t technically need them. The water hisses and steams for half a second, before it calms. Her now cool finger is withdrawn, and she turns it over for him to observe and analyze. “‘You know,’” she chuckles, “We’re hilarious. We just pulled over to the side of the road to see if all of me is fireproof or not. Heh. Did you want me to flip my defense so we can see if that affects it?”

"That would involve you needing to resort to violence, and right now I rather like having my jaw located properly. Plus if I show up with a bruise my boys would get worried." Toki guffawed, and proceeded to sip the water she’d cooled her finger in. It tasted slightly like smoke- but was better than nothing. “Oh please. If I actually hit you hard enough to bruise you, I’d probably break my hand before I dislocated your jaw. Either way, you are right and that can probably wait.” She shifts, bringing the car back into gear, and resumes driving. “I might be able to flip my defense when I summon my bees— but I’d need something to send them after. Like… I dunno, a tree or a big rock or something. Something I’m not actually going to hurt."

He chuckled softly and set the lighter back into the glove compartment. "Let’s bring this up again later when we can actually act upon it."

“That sounds good to me.” She chuckles. “Alright. We’ve got a long drive home. Going to get your nap on, or jam to the tunes with me?”

"I can enjoy it if you play it quietly, but I do think a nap is in order."

Toki grins and wiggles her brows at him suggestively. “Tired yourself out good and hard, huh?”

"Not a word.” He curled his lip at her, baring sharp reprimanding teeth at her. “I can still sense Papyrus on you.” he growled, his cheeks darkening.

Her brows wiggle harder, and to her credit, she doesn’t even flush at his words and implications. She knows exactly what he can sense— and the orange-colored tinge to her lower belly was probably the cause. “That might be true, but it doesn’t fluster me to talk about it. It’s adorable when you get all flushed.”

He snorts softly and rested his head more firmly on his arms. "I enjoyed the time I had with the king, that’s all you get to hear."

“For one, I don’t want any sordid details. That’s gross. That’d be like walking in on my mom and dad having sex. For two, just nope. Do not want.”

Tenebris could be such a cat sometimes— fine one moment, and grumpy and huffy the next. Toki grinned and turned the radio up just a hair and got comfortable in her seat. One arm guiding the steering wheel, she idly tapped a tune on her leg while she sang along quietly.

When they got back a couple hours later, Toki pulled the car to a crawl as they approached the compound. She squinted slightly, peering over at the two cars in her driveway. “That’s Kon and Roshi’s cars…” She mutters. Kon’s car was undeniably his— he had a large, improper sticker stuck to the back bumper of it.

Tenebris was snoring quietly where he laid, but feeling the car slow down had his eyes opening slowly. He lifted his head. "...?"

Toki hummed slightly, and turned on her blinker. She pulled into the compound, bringing her truck over to the usual spot that she parked it. “Huh… Well, we’re home! I wonder how much damage my brothers have done to everything while I’ve been gone.”

She also was low-key pitying Papyrus, because the poor skeleton probably had taken it upon himself to baby-sit her brothers while she wasn’t here to keep them in line.

Oddly enough, things were peaceful as she got out.

Little did she know that Kon would be hogtied and pinned down by Aliquam with a foot on his back as he spoke calmly to the brothers. Kon couldn't get anything out because he had a sock stuffed in his mouth. Aliquam, safe to be said, was annoyed with him.
Toki indeed was oblivious as she got out, motioning for Tenebris to follow once he clamored out of the car. Toki made quick time getting to her house, and she opened the front door hesitantly, peeking inside suspiciously.

“I don’t immediately see anything broken…” She mutters, stepping inside and leaving it open for Tenebris to follow. She paused, spotting her brother bound and gagged on her floor and being used as a foot rest for her boyfriend. “Uh… Why is my brother all tied up? I mean, unless you’re giving him as a welcome-home gift to your Dad, I’d understand.”

Kon, on the floor, squirms and gives her puppy dog eyes. His hair-bright red now-is a mess, and he can’t even plead with her to get his freedom.

Toki squints. “… Is that one of Caeruleus’ socks…? That’s… disgusting.”

Tenebris entered the house and looked down at Kon, before he smirked. "Well, this is definitely interesting. Papyrus do you have your phone? I want to get a picture of this."

With a smirk, Aliquam pulled out his phone and tossed it to Tenebris.

He caught it and set up the camera, smirking as he knelt down to get a good angle. "Smile for the Camera, Kon."

Kon shot Tenebris an unrepentant look, and wiggled his brow. It was muffled, but there might have been a vague muttering about being tied up and photographed being considered kinky.

Toki glanced up at Papyrus and tilted her skull, bemused and also slightly alarmed. “What on earth could he have done to get you so irritated?” Papyrus was usually very calm.

Her brothers clamped their mouths shut when she glanced at them, and refused to say a word on it.

Aliquam grunted slightly. "He started going on about very inappropriate topics. Then mentioned a threesome with me and my father... I believe the phrase for this would be 'Talk shit, get hit'?"

“That sounds like Kon.” Toki grimaces. She shifts and tugs him away with a soft huff. “You just need to learn to ignore him, Pap. Physically stopping him works- but he actually enjoys being tied up.”

“That he does.” Han crosses his arms and leans down to tug the gag out of Kon’s mouth once Tenebris is done with his pictures. “You’re a bit of a freak, bro.”

“But at least I own up to it.” Kon grins unrepentantly up at his older brother. “I’m not the one who has the hots for the foxy doctor but lacks the balls to-”

Han gives him a light thump, and flushes with a frown.

"At this rate I feel like you’re going to invite me to do something absolutely filthy with you, Kon." Tenebris sighed. "I need some tea, it's too early for this." he huffed as he walked past them.

“It’s nearly three in the afternoon.” Roshi laughs. “Oh boy. Are we sure we wanna take the old man out drinking? If he’s drinking tea, he’s going to get so shit-faced far too fast.”

Kon squirms, and eventually Roshi leans down to help untie him. He calls after Tenebris though, grinning wide. “I mean, we could have done something filthy. I was already all tied up for you and everything!”
Toki shakes her head. “So you three are here to take them out for drinks now?”

Han nods, brushing away his flush with a few scrubs of his face. “Yeah. I’ll be having a couple- but I’m going to be playing designated babysitter for the evening.”

She nods sagely. “You handle your alcohol very well. At least the bar isn’t far from here. But please-try and keep Aliquam in one piece. I love him dearly- and I will be very upset if he gets lost.” Or if one of her brothers pulls drunken shenanigans.

Like stealing his hand and hiding it.

Aliquam had a smile as he looked to Toki. "Don't worry, Toki, I'll be alright."

Toki rolls her eyes good-naturedly and gives him a bemused look. “You say that now, but if you come home tonight missing an arm or your hand, I am going to laugh really, really hard at you.”

Kon makes a noise from the ground. “That was one time Toki! One time!”

“You stole someone’s prosthetic arm while you were drunk and threw it on a roof, Kon. I had to climb the roof of the bar to go give it back to them.” She plants her hands on her hips and gives him a stern look. “One time is enough for a lifetime.”

Roshi grins and singsongs from down by Kon. “Someone’s practicing her mom look again. But this time it’s actually going to be put to use.”

Papyrus sighed then went to go get Tenebris, bringing him to the front room. "Alright, you three, are you intending to drag us off for drinking?" he chuckled, while Tenebris grumbled softly.

It was apparent that the big monster hadn’t gotten his tea. Toki giggled at him softly.

Roshi helped his brother up, dusting him off, while Han nodded to Papyrus. “We are, yeah. Toki told us that Grillby’s was the best place to go- we were going to take your brother too.”

“Sans is already probably there. He spends a lot of time at Grillbys.” Toki chuckles softly. She leans up and tugs Pap down to give him a kiss on his cheekbone. “You boys go have fun, yeah?”

He leaned down and kissed her gently, "Of course~ we'll see you later.”

“Mhm.” She gives him a fond gently, “We are, yeah. Toki told us that Grillby’s was the best place to go- we were going to take your brother too.”

“Sans is already probably there. He spends a lot of time at Grillbys.” Toki chuckles softly. She leans up and tugs Pap down to give him a kiss on his cheekbone. “You boys go have fun, yeah?”

He leaned down and kissed her gently, "Of course~ we'll see you later.”

“Mhm.” She gives him a fond gently, “We are, yeah. Toki told us that Grillby’s was the best place to go- we were going to take your brother too.”

"Come on." Aliquam smiled at Tenebris.

The older monster sighed in defeat before he chuckled quietly. "Alright, let's go." he agreed

Toki waved them off with a wide grin, and shut the door once everyone had filed out. She shook her head with an amused chuckle, and went to go prepare the living room. Her brothers weren’t going to be in any position to drive home- and they’d need some place to crash. There was no way she and Han were getting two drunken humans and two drunken monsters up to the top floor safely.
No- she had futons to lay out and Tylenol to find for the hangovers the following morning. She wasn’t sure it would work on monsters- but given what Kon’s favorite drink was, the humans would definitely need it.

Kon’s favorite drink was one she actually invented. It tasted like shit- but she called it the death shot. One part whiskey, one part vodka, one part tequila, with a pinch of cinnamon to help it burn- and it was a hell of a way to get drunk very, very fast.

She pitied her monster family- they were in for a hell of an evening.

One would be surprised as to who came walking, or waddling, back to the house.

Aliquam and Tenebris were by far walking the straightest. They were each helping a brother make their way, except for Kon. He was getting dragged behind Tenebris.

It was dark out, somewhere between ten and eleven at night, when the five of them finally headed home. As for why it was only the five of them, well, turns out that Sans could not hold his alcohol. He’d passed out at the bar, and Grillby had taken him upstairs half way through the night.

The night itself had actually ended when Kon had groped the bartender one too many times, and had gotten them summarily booted out for rowdy behavior.

Han was the only brother who hadn’t gotten himself shit-faced. He had a couple drinks, and it showed only for the flush in his cheeks and the slightly more relaxed grin on his face. He was trailing behind the four in front, making sure that no one had gotten lost, or fallen on their face on the stairs.

Though Kon did enough falling anyways. He’d gotten sloshed, and had the coordination of a two year old. Tenebris tail was an amazing obstical- and the older monster had gotten tired of him either running into it or falling over it, and had thus promptly taken a hold of the back of his shirt and proceeded to drag him. Not that Kon had minded- it left him right in range for groping the monsters backside.

Han had both of Kon’s shoes in hand. They’d come off with his heels dragging in the dirt.

Roshi was pretty well latched onto Aliquam, fingers in places they should not be as he giggled and swayed, clinging drunkenly to the skeleton who wasn’t even nearly close to as bad as he was. “Y’knoo,” he slurred as they reached the door, “M’sis ‘s righ’. You’ve got greeaaaaat booooooones,” he cackled. “You know what else has great bones? Thiiiiiiis door. This is my door. I love this door.”

“And I love this ass~” There was a clap, and Kon’s hand clapped against Tenebris’ backside. “And this tail. I wanna lick it.”

“Sure you do, Brother.” Han shot Papyrus an apologetic look, and wouldn’t even meet Tenebris’ gaze. “But Roshi, do doors have bones?”

“… Y’kno, I dunno if doors have booooonones. Les’ ask Toki! Toki knows aaaaall about bones.”

Roshi however, proved to be completely inept at opening the door. “Th’ knob ‘s moving! I think it likes me.”

"Aliquam."

"Yes father?"
"Let me surgically remove his hands."

"No Father."

Aliquam sighed as he helped Roshi, eyeing Kon with a flat, disappointed look.

Han chuckled, and once no one was in danger of toppling back down Toki’s stairs, he squeezed in to the door. It swung open to the smell of peppermint and vanilla, and he wrinkled his nose. Peppermint and vanilla usually smelled really good- but whatever Toki had been baking had practically basted the house in the smell, and it was killing his nose. "Ugh. It smells like the Pillsbury doughboys butt-hole had a Christmas party in here."

The house was dark and quiet, save for the light from the dining room, and one in the living room. There was soft snoring coming from the dining room. Obviously someone had fallen asleep while doing papers again- which would end up murdering her back.

Roshi lurched into the house, knocking the door into the wall as he staggered. He giggled. "Tokiiiiii," he practically shrieks, "Do doors have bones?"

The snoring fades off abruptly, and there’s the sound of her knee jerking into the top of the table. A tiredly muttered, “Owww my knee,” Floats out of the open doorway.

Tenebris took in the air and smiled, before he dropped Kon. “Quit touching my rear already.” he growled sharply before going back out to light his pipe.

Aliquam helped the others to the couch, and smiled gently at them, before looking at the general direction that Toki had made noise from. "Are you okay?"

Han- ever the helpful brother- grasps Kon’s arms and begins to drag him towards the living room. The colorful Asian sulks the whole way, making grabby hands at the big monster as he stays outside.

“Noooo, come baaack.” Kon whined as he slumped on the futon he’d been dropped on. “But it is the best buuuuutttttt. I wanna touch it all night long."

“Good luck with that, whiskey dick.” Toki appeared in the doorway, clothing rumpled. She was kneading a fist into her lower back while the other one rubbed tiredly at her sockets. She shook out her leg with a grumble. “I hit my knee. I’m okay though… Roshi, bro, you are very drunk. No-doors don’t have bones.”

“Awww… Poor door. I bet ’t would have the bestest bones.” Roshi sagged faintly against the couch, where he had been summarily dropped, and giggled loudly. “I swear to drunk I’m not that god.”

“You are very, very drunk.” Toki translates easily. She approaches, doing her best to ignore the gross stench of alcohol on all of them. Offering Pap a faint smile, she tilts her head, keeping one hand on her back. Falling asleep like that left her with the worst knots in her ecto-flesh. “Did you have fun, Pap?”

"I did. It turns out I can hold my alcohol rather well!” he replied with a smile, "It was rather funny when I won."

Toki offered him a faint smile and sighed. Inhaling again was a mistake, and she gave him a nod, hands folding across her belly unconsciously. “Hold it well indeed. I can smell the death shot on all of you from over here- hey… Where’s Cae? Didn’t he go with you guys?"

“Sans, it turns out, is a lightweight. You can drink better than he can. Well, when you can drink.”
Han gave her a dip of his head and kicked off his shoes. He set to the task of trying to wrestle Kon’s shoes from his feet.

“I can usually hold my liquor quite well for someone who doesn’t drink often… Though, just how many drinks did you have?” She squints up at Papyrus. “You guys were gone for a while- death shot really should have knocked you on your tailbone if you had more than four or five.”

"I had four.” he answered with a totally sober smile. "Father did his own thing, indulging in an oddly named drink."

“Oddly named drink?” She parroted. She leans back slightly still, and arches a brow. “Let me tell you now, you might be completely sober, but if you were to go around an open flame, you might very well combust. Death shots have a lot of alcohol in them.”

“Taste like shiiiiiiit.” Kon groans. “I love ‘m.”

“I made them taste like shit so we’d be discouraged to drink so often,” Toki chuffs. She steps back a few paces and calls out to Tenebris. “What sort of drink did you have, Tenebris? Didn’t indulge in any Death shots?”

"Nope." He replied calmly, puffing quietly from his pipe as he glanced back at her, "I avoided those, and rather indulged in my favorite.”

She watched him out puffing on his pipe and arched a brow. “Probably for the best. You don’t come off as the heavy weight drinker. So if you didn’t get coerced into my brother’s liver-killing favorite drinks, what on earth did you get?” he hadn’t come in far enough for her to get a whiff.

Han smelled vaguely of margarita salt alongside whiskey. Roshi and Kon both smelled too strongly of Death shot for her to get anything more. Which was for the best- usually it didn’t bother her, and the red wine Paps had drank on Valentines hadn’t bothered her, but this much was slowly murdering her insides.

After putting out his pipe, he walked back over to join them. He smelled of alcohol, but also had an underlying thick stench of coffee that mixed horribly with his mint in his pipe. "I indulged in a couple of Blowjobs." he chuckled.

“I can give you a couple moreeee!” Kon calls, flailing a bare foot in the air. It’s barely visible over the couch, and Han’s swearing kicks up as Kon manages to clock him with his leg. “I’d drink you all night long~”

Coffee was not a smell that she was apparently okay with either. The mint of his pipe did not mix well with it, and her middle lurched sharply. Her bones blanched slightly, eye lights disappearing. She swallows shakily. “That’s… nice…”

"It's a rather pleasant taste. It's alcoholic coffee and Irish cream, very tasty.” he explained, before giving her space as he went to go drink some water.

That didn’t help at all. Describing the taste and what was in it was not what she needed.

Han stands, dusting himself off lightly. He glances up, and his face twists slightly. “Uh… Toki? You okay over there?”

“Nope… Fuck…” And off down the hall she goes, stomach churning traitorously as she makes a mad dash for the bathroom. Retching echoes out after her as she rushes into the restroom, managing to get to the toilet before a mess is made on the floor.
“Grosssss, someone’s been drinking too much, hehehe,” Roshi giggles from the couch.

“Oh ew, I remember when Mom was sick with Kon. That sounds rough.” Han is a bit more sympathetic than his smashed brother is, but even his face twists at the horrid noises coming from the bathroom. He glances to Aliquam. “Morning sickness is a bitch, isn’t it? You got any sympathy sickness?”

"Oh dear." Tenebris said quietly, having witnessed her bolting. "Tsk..."

"Yes, and I’ve gagged a few times, but otherwise..." Aliquam faded off with a soft sigh and trailed after her. He stopped at the doorway, but didn’t get too much closer. He still remembered the spaghetti incident, and how his smell hadn’t helped her. "Tokiko," he whined softly, "Are you okay?"

Toki had her head clutched in her hands, elbows resting on the seat as she knelt. She gagged, nothing coming up beyond the first heave. “Ugh... I would be better if this morning sickness could just not be a fucking thing.” Even she was getting tired of it. Slightly frustrated tears beaded at the corners of her sockets, but her arms blocked his view. She choked again, retching once more with a miserable sound.

Han watched the skeleton standing in the doorway to the bathroom and sighed softly. Yes, Aliquam was a good man- even if he wasn’t a man, and was technically a monster. Han headed for the kitchen, snagging the bottle of Tylenol off of the coffee table before he went. He slipped past Tenebris, but stopped at the cabinets. “… Mother fucking- I did not notice. These were made taller. Uh... Hey, Tenebris? Can you grab me a glass? This house is not short people friendly."

"Of course." Tenebris answered as he walked over and collecting two glasses, one for himself, holding the other to Han.

Aliquam entered the bathroom with a soft sigh and reached out and touched her back gently. "Oh Toki..."

“M’ sorry,” she choked. It always bothered her when he had to deal with her being sick. Her bones buzzed faintly under his hand, and she shuddered with slight stress. It had been too many scents all miss-mashed together. Papyrus didn’t bother her as badly since it was just his smell in the bathroom with her. A hard retch shakes a faint sob from her. “Fucking- gghghg.”

Han is trying very hard to ignore the horrible, horrible noises his sister is making as he takes the glass. “Thanks, Tenebris. You need some Tylenol too? Or can monsters even take human medicines?” He shakes out what he thinks is two tablets, and tosses them back before filling his glass of water. He chases the oblong tablets with the cool drink.

"I'll be alright with enough water. Thank you." After a moment he turned, and refilled his glass.

"I smell too much like that drink... I'll have to stay at a distance tonight, I hope you don’t mind that, Toki." Quinn whined gently, before turning as Tenebris approached.

The older monster was offering him the glass of water. "Here."

Taking it, Aliquam smiled at his father, then returned to Toki as Tenebris moved away.

For Toki, she had been okay enough with the smell of the Death shot. It was overpowering, but by itself, it wasn’t that bad. Tenebris coming near brought her the smell of coffee mixed with mint- and she heaved up thick green magic, her arms visibly shaking as she leaned against the toilet. Fuck, this night was going sour rather quickly. “Not you,” She manages, gasping amidst her coughing. The rough heaves were doing nothing to help the cramping in her lower back. “Co-coffee.”

Han had gone back to the living room. Despite the noises from the bathroom, there were two very unconscious drunkards sprawled around his sister’s living room. Han was starting to get that ‘after drinks’ headache- so he settled down too. The two monsters could handle his sister.

"Ah..." he slowly came back closer and held the glass of water out to her. "Here."

Toki gurgled miserably, and spat to clear her mouth. She groped blindly for a moment, and collected a washcloth before she bothered to take the glass of water. It took a moment of wiping her teeth before she would lean away from the toilet. “Thanks,” she rasped softly. Her stomach still roiled, but she used the first few sips to rinse out her mouth. The second sips, she actually swallowed. It was cool and refreshing- and didn’t make her middle immediately want to spit it back out.

Shakily, she flushed the toilet and leaned back, body trembling as she ran a hand under her sockets to remove the glowing traces of her frustration. “God- I’m sorry, Pap. S’posed to be a fun night for you.” Not a night where he had to come back and deal with her.

He smiled and shook his head gently. "Don’t worry about it, Toki."

“Heh. But I do. I hate when you have to deal with the worst of this stuff.” More tears beaded, and she didn’t bother wiping them away. Her stomach roiled, and she took a sip of water and then bowed her head quietly. Toki took a moment to just do nothing, to breathe through the worst of the nausea wave. When it faded, and she no longer felt like she would hurl if she so much as looked at the water, Toki shifted and pushed into Aliquam’s arms. She didn’t say anything, and simply buried her face against his shirt. Yeah, he smelt like the bar, but under it all he still smelled like himself, and Toki just needed to be held.

He smiled and hugged her gently. "I love you."

“I love you too…” She nestled close in his arms, shivering faintly as they sat on the bathroom floor. Her sockets closed tiredly, staining his shirt with luminous tears, and her arms tightened around him quietly. “Morning sickness is utter shit.” She whispers, sniffing quietly into his shirt. And she still had weeks of this stuff left. Ugh.

"I know... I know..." he murmured.

“I’m sorry. I shouldn’t be tearing up over this. It’s stupid…” she mutters. The tall skeleton curls up in his lap, effectively filling his lap as she leaves her legs to drape over the side of his femur. “I’m sorry…” Shit, what was wrong with her? Was this a mood swing?

She hadn’t had those yet- and she was not sure what she was expecting.

He smiled and stroked her head gently, humming to her gently. "It's okay..." he whispered, "It's okay."

“But it's not okay!” She exclaims in frustration, his humming and gentle touches soothing. “I don’t… I shouldn’t be crying- its stupid, and you shouldn’t… you shouldn’t…” She sniffs and has to dabble more tears away, staining her sleeve. “It’s just stupid sickness and back cramps and mood swings and… It's just stupid…”

"It's okay." he purred, "You're going to be okay.”

The purring sound being generated from his bones was oddly soothing, and she hiccupped into his shirt for a short while. She was conscious of this being a mood swing- but that didn’t mean that it was any less powerful, or any less pesky.

Eventually her tears faded off, along with the worst of the nausea, and it left her feeling empty and exhausted. She shifted, arms looping around his neck and leaving her angled a little oddly. Toki tenses, back throbbing, but simply ignores it and instead nuzzles him softly. She leans back, one hand coming to dry her sockets completely, while the other goes to her lower back. “Thank you… Gods, I’m tired now.” She mutters. Crying always exhausted her.

He stroked her head and cooed quietly as he scooped her up. “Let’s go to bed.”

Toki didn’t even cringe when his scooping jostled her middle. She had abandoned the glass of water sometime during her crying fit, so she didn’t have to worry about setting that down. She shivered and nestled her head on his chest. “Mkay… We need to get into our pajamas.” She mutters quietly. Toki eases the door shut behind him and nestles close. She’s a mess of sore and achy. Her back is cramped to high hell, her abdomen feels like it’s been punched with how tender it is. The warmth of his arms holding her feels good though.

"Can you drink more water if I brought it to you?" he asked softly.

Toki nodded passively against his chest. “Yeah…”

"Good… I need to shower so I smell more like home… it'll prevent nausea more than how I am now…” he purred.

“Thank you.” She nuzzles him softly, and tilts her sockets up to watch the stairs. Her brothers are snoring loudly in the living room, and she holds her breath until they get up towards their room. Tenebris hadn’t been in sight- but he might have been in the kitchen, or out smoking. Or had already gone home- there were many options.

Toki once more opens the door for him, so he can step into their room. “You can set me down now,” she says quietly. “If you leave your clothes here, I’ll take care of them for you while you go get clean.” She could take that glass of water after.

"No, no.” he said stubbornly, "Go and get ready for bed. I'll shower and bring you your water.”

She sighed softly through her nasal ridge, and then shot him a tired smile. He was the greatest- truly. “I was just going to put your clothes in the hamper,” she admits softly. She had to do a load of laundry in the morning- so his clothes were going to wait in there. “But okay… I’ll get ready while you go shower, alright?” She just needed to be set down by her stubborn skeleton boyfriend.

He pressed a soft kiss to the top of her skull and laid her down in their bed. Another loving clack of his teeth between her horns, and Aliquam let out a content 'Nyeh' before he went to shower.

Toki laid there for a moment, having watched him go, before she carefully rolled out of bed. He was sweet- but she couldn’t get in her pajamas if she was already getting settled. Toki took a moment to strip, sighing as she rested her clothes on the dresser. She tugs on her lighter sleeping gown. It’s mostly see-through, which turns her into a living nightlight most nights, but she enjoys it. It’s soft and silky against her bones, and is exactly what she needs.

While Pap has the shower going, she sneaks in and trades out his clothes. His used ones are replaced with his usual sleeping boxers and optional pants, as she does what she said she would. His clothes and her clothes are tossed into the hamper outside of the room before Toki actually goes to settle on the bed.

She sits on her side, and leans forwards to stretch her lower back. Her fingers rub circles in the ectoflesh of her lower back while she waits patiently for him to get out.

Aliquam was out after around five minutes, a tired, content look on his face. "Nyeh heh heh... Thank you Toki." he purred softly, before he climbed onto the bed, nuzzling her gently.

Toki shifted when he had gotten in to bed, and eased herself down so she could snuggle up next to him. She nuzzled up affectionately under his chin, not even bothered by him forgetting the glass of water. “Told you I could handle it,” her voice is full of warm affection despite her stubborn words. Her thin arms loop around him, and she guides his hand up to her lower back and groans softly. His bones were warm from the shower- and the heat felt amazing on her lower back. “Your hand is warm. It feels good. Mm… you smell good too.”

"I'm glad you think so." he purred, "Oh, before I get comfy, still need that water?" he inquired.

Toki shook her head slightly, and closed her sockets. “No. I just need you.” She murmurs softly.

He smiled and hugged her tightly as he lay back, making sure she was perfectly aligned at his side before he pulled the blanket over them both. Giving her one last kiss, this time letting his teeth tenderly linger against her own as he cradled her to his much larger frame.

"I love you so much, Toki...” He murmured softly to her. “Good night~"

Toki settled to his side comfortably, body flush with his bones. She looped her fingers over his ribs, and nestled in contently. “I love you too,” She whispered softly. “Thank you. For being with me tonight… Good night, Pap. Sleep tight.”

He shivered at the hand on his ribs, but grew comfortable quickly as she relaxed against him. "Mm... You’re welcome~" he purred, holding her until he fell asleep, his arm coming to rest protectively over her stomach in his slumber.

Toki took a little bit longer to fall asleep for all of her tiredness. It was only when the soft snores of Papyrus eased into her ears that she found herself drifting off. With his hands cradling her belly, she let her legs tangle with his. With a soft sigh, Toki nestled down and drifted to sleep. It had been a long day.

But it had ended on a good note. She couldn’t feel safer and more loved anywhere else other than right here in his arms, even with the loud racket of her brother’s open-mouthed snoring coming from downstairs.
Chapter 40

Her morning sickness began to ebb off as March came into the swing of things. There were still some scents and tastes that could send her running- cocoa and the smell of anything coffee related to be frank- but as the days rolled on, her morning worship to the porcelain god happened less and less. On one hand, she was very, very thankful. Being ill was stressful on her, and on poor Aliquam, who did what he could to help her. It was nice to not wake him up super early in the morning with her singing the song of pregnant peoples all across the world.

But on the other hand- something else cropped up. Not just mood swings- though those were few and far between thankfully. No- Toki began to get headaches. They cropped up at all hours of the day, and there was nothing that she knew she could do for them. She’d googled it though- apparently headaches and migraines were sometimes part of pregnancy. Each pregnancy was different. Some women got them, some didn’t, some had terrible ones, some had light ones- it was all very inconsistent and frankly befuddling.

So she didn’t bother the boys with it. Truthfully, they weren’t that bad. She had troubles doing all of her paperwork for as often as she did normally, because her head would just pulse in agony. It just gave Toki the excuse to take more breaks. Lights bothered her sometimes, but she usually kept the house dark when she was home alone, so that was fine too.

She might not have had experience with them a lot before, but what she had read had said that they were fairly normal.

However, migraines aside, that wasn’t the only thing that had popped up. It was a little bit past half way through March- and she had a belly. It was not huge by any means- but she noticed it as her and Papyrus were trying to get ready for their morning.

Her last pair of sweat pants had gotten dirty the day prior, and she really didn’t want to wear them until she got around to doing laundry, so she’d pulled out her slacks. Her slacks had fit a week ago when she’d had to trek up to the castle for a meeting with some of the car companies and the King- but now, as she stood in front of a mirror, straining to get the button to hook, she found that she couldn’t even draw it near.

She had buzzed irritably for a moment, because she had a migraine from hell making the back of her skull tight and her eyes sensitive and did not want to be dealing with pants that had apparently shrunk in the washing machine. She had buzzed loudly too, before she paused, falling silent. She turned sideways, and took a look at herself. Her middle sloped outwards- and she realized that she was technically at the end of her first trimester.

Her fingers roved slightly over the slope of her middle, sockets widening marginally as she took in the real signs that her belly was actually growing with life. The glow of her middle was duller than usual- she’d need to have Paps do a donation soon, though she wasn’t eager for the brightness to be showing through her clothes again. Her fingers gently cupped her middle- and her hand actually had something to cup for once. She hadn’t noticed this popping up- or at least not this big before. But she hadn’t exactly looked at herself in the mirror from the side in a while, and looking at it from a downward view wasn’t something she always did.

Shit. She was going to need new pants. No wonder her sweat pants were starting to feel tight across the middle.

“… Hey Pap?” She called back softly to gather his attention, making sure to keep her eyes angled away from the sharp glare of the bedroom light. “I think I’m going to need to go shopping for clothes here soon.”

"Does that mean a trip to the city, Toki?" he asked from the other side of the bedroom, where he himself was preparing for the day.

“That it does. But that’s not all I meant. Look.” She remains turned to the side in front of the mirror, and watches him through the reflection.

He looked over, and he smiled gently, eye lights lighting up as he spotted her dilemma. "Oh Toki..." He got up from where he was lacing his boots and headed over. Making sure no light got by him, he sidled up behind her and hugged her from behind, his hands caressing the swell. "My beautiful Toki." he purred.

Toki smiled up at him tenderly, letting his hands replace her own. The smooth bone of his fingers felt nice against her middle, and she chuckled softly as she laced her fingers gently over his. Leaning back against his chest felt nice, even if it made her skull throb with the change in positions. “Look at our little ones. They’re getting bigger.” She tenderly rubs her thumb over his.

In the mirror, she can see her eye lights change, glowing a bright but tender green. Her soul practically pulses with joy. She couldn’t even be too upset by her pants not fitting anymore. There was finally something to cup, to hold. It was different than just seeing the souls, knowing that they were there. She didn’t know why- but it was, and it made her all that much happier. “I might need to borrow a pair of your sweat pants. All of mine are dirty- and if my slacks wont fit, I’ve got no chance in hell of getting my jeans to fit.”

His sockets were glowing with a gentle orange color, mirroring his happiness as he looked at her through the mirror. "That's fine... we could also get you some long skirts." he suggested.

“Long skirts?” she rolls her head back to look at him, and hides a wince. That just made the back of her skull feel tighter. To distract herself, she rubs his fingers slightly, and hummed softly. “Hm… Well, I suppose I can get a couple. You’ll have to help me though- I’m not the best judge of which skirts I look good in.”

He chuckled and hummed into the back of her head, clacking his teeth to the back of it in a soft kiss. "Of course!"

The kiss, for once, actually made her eyes twitch in discomfort. Normally the touch of bone on bone didn’t bother her, but the noise made her ears ring and skull pulse. She sighed softly through her teeth and nodded. “Good. We’re going to need to take the trip to town soon- I’ve got that meeting at the castle in a couple days.” It was the car company’s again- they wanted measurements on the monsters that were going to be driving once they could get the bill passed. For now though… “You still have the pair of sweats with the long drawstrings?” She’d need to pull them extra tight. She had large hips, yes, but his torso was wider than hers, and she really didn’t want to have to keep hiking them up.

"That I do."

She gives him a soft smile. “Think you can find them? I’ll shimmy out of these, and then we can actually go get some breakfast. I’m thinking pancakes? Maybe waffles?”

"That sounds delicious. Homemade or while we're out?” he inquired.

Toki laughed slightly- he still hadn’t let her go. She squirms, and leans up to press a gentle kiss to his jaw while his fingers continue to cradle her middle. “You’ve got to let me go before we can get any food. Tell you what- lets get me some pants, then we’ll snag a granola bar to tide us over until we get there. We can grab a late brunch when we’re in town. And then, this evening, we’ll flop on the couch and turn on a movie, and you can snuggle my middle to your soul’s content. Sound good?”

"Couldn’t have planned it better myself." he agreed happily, reluctantly letting her go.

Toki smiled back at him and shimmed out of her pants. Her slacks were rolled up and set on her dresser, before she crossed to his side of the room and began her search for his smaller pair of sweats. “Hmm… I might make a swing through the maternity store while we’re there.” She was still small enough to go unnoticed- and could say she was buying things for a friend, since they were supposed to be keeping her pregnancy hidden- but if she got any larger she’d need to stock up on larger sizes of clothing, otherwise people would start to notice.

And given that there was no word of any other skeleton HTM’s with horns, and Toki was well known for Nara Village, there wasn’t really any way to go incognito. “Aha! Success.” His pants are located, and she pulls them out, and slips them on. Her pelvis is once more covered, and she tightens the strings so they don’t fall down. They are still hilariously large on her, and she has to roll up the legs of them.

She ends up giggling nonetheless, ignoring the irritation it causes in her head. His pants, with how they were rolled up, looked like hammer pants on her. He might not get the reference, but she looked a little silly. Toki tucked turtleneck down over her pants, and offered him a grin. “I look cute.” She declares.

He has a hand over his mouth, palm pressed into his teeth with the brightest blush on his face. To him, she wasn't just cute. She was adorable.

Toki tilts her skull, peering at him ponderously. His flush was adorable, and she gave him a wink. The loose clothes on her hid her burgeoning bump very well, though it still showed slightly through her top, and she rocked faintly on her heels, shoving her hands into the deep pockets of the pants. Her slippers were downstairs- and she might actually invest in some different foot ware. Or at least new slippers, since her current ones were getting a bit haggard. “You finish lacing your boots, Pap. I’ll go get my purse. Did you want to stop at the bank while we’re in town?” The bank that she went through did a lot of conversions of Gold into human currency- and the Guards here were still paid by the King in Gold.

He nodded gently. "A trip to the bank sounds good." he rumbled gently in agreement, "God you look so cute." he giggled softly.
Toki giggled softly and smiled at him. “Well, thank you~” She purrs. She gives him a wink over her shoulder, and pads out of the room. She leaves him to get ready, and bounces down the stairs. Migraine or no, seeing her bump had put her in a hell of a good mood. There was a light bounce in her step as she located her purse and tossed it over her shoulder. Her keys are collected too, and then she’s waiting for him at the bottom of the stairs. “Don’t forget your wallet, Pap!” She calls up to him, carefully slipping her feet into her slippers.

"I wont!” he called, grabbing his wallet and putting on his coat as he came downstairs.

Toki didn’t bother with a coat. She’d been running a little warmer thanks to the magic constantly gathered in her belly. So she smiled up at him, the sleeves of her turtleneck now rolled up to her forearms, and adjusted her purse on her arm. It usually rested on her shoulder, but there was no point since they were going out to the car. “C’mon, handsome. We’ve got a long car ride. You remember how to move the seat back in the truck, right?”

Her poor long-legged boyfriend had to have the seat all the way back to fit his legs in.

She jingles her keys slightly, and pads for the door, leaving him to follow.

"Yes, of course!” he replied as he followed her.

Toki simply smiles, and makes for the truck. It’s bright outside, and she squints slightly, eyes throbbing. Ugh. What she would give for an overcast day- but she couldn’t laze about and do nothing just because her skull hurt. If she did that, she’d never get anything done.

Tossing her purse into the truck, Toki slid into the drivers seat and got the engine warmed up. She had to adjust her own seat when her middle brushed against the steering wheel. She flushed slightly, hoping Papyrus hadn’t noticed.

Papyrus hadn’t seen it, he was too busy with his own seat, climbing in and sighing comfortably.

Good- she got away with it. Toki grins, adjusting her backrest first so she’s not so ramrod straight and then carefully buckles up. Once Paps has finished fiddling with his seat and has gotten himself buckled, Toki starts up the truck and gets it turned around.

She cracks her window, giving herself some fresh air, and settles in for the long drive to town. The sunlight is harsh- and she wishes she had ears, because some sunglasses would do wonders.

"It's awfully bright out. Do you happen to have a pair of sunglasses in here?"

Toki nods, and motions to the glove box. “There should be a couple pairs in there. When in doubt, check the glove box. Or the armrest box. I put everything car related in either of those.”

He chuckled at that and quickly pulled out two pairs. He put a pair on himself, then opened another pair, "I'll put a pair on you, okay?"

Toki openly stared, glad that the road was empty and mostly straight. Her mouth popped open, and she peered at him curiously. “… How do they stay on?” She asks, completely befuddled. There was nothing holding them up- how on earth did that even work? “I mean, I’m not turning them down, but… to quote your dad, that is absolutely fascinating.”

He laughed at that. "Nyeh heh heh heh! Magic!” he replied simply, "Still want them?” he inquired.

Toki nods, and leans slightly towards him. “Well yeah. It’s bright out, and my eyes are a bit sensitive today.”
And with that, he held out the glasses, allowing them to easily slide onto Toki's skull. "There you go!"

They fit a little oddly on her skull, given the slope of the bone where it arched into her horns- and they were a little over sized. But they did their job, and the light was much less piercing. She smiled at him cheerily, eye lights glowing faintly behind the dark lenses. "Thank you, Pap. That helps a lot."

"Nyeh heh heh, of course!" he replied cheerfully.

So long as it worked, she wasn’t going to question the logic of magic. After all, she was a pregnant skeleton- thinking into the logic of it was far too complicated for her tastes. She was a beekeeper and an author, not a scientist.

The trek to town wasn’t as bad as it could have been. The sunglasses helped some, but as they got to the city, the noises of traffic and usual city life grew louder. Cars honking, trains making noise on their tracks, humans’ in general being loud with their voices or booming stereos- Ebott City was a huge noise pollution hazard. For as long as the drive was, Toki enjoyed the relative quiet that being so far out brought. Even the noise from the villagers seemed like peace and quiet when compared to this.

The mall- their true destination, for it was the only massive business that was vastly monster and HTM friendly- was further into the city than the bank was. Her bank was actually on the outskirts- and they’d made a quick stop for him to transfer his gold over to cash.

He now had a wallet full of bills. Toki didn’t ask how much- that was private information that she didn’t feel the need to pester him about.

They’d stopped at a place not far from the bank and had their brunch, and then continued on towards their destination.

Going further into the city brought with it stresses of it’s own outside of the pulsing noises that made her skull want to split in half. Toki did not handle traffic well. A white-knuckled grip was kept on the steering wheel, and her teeth ground quietly whenever someone would honk impatiently at her. It wasn’t irritation- no; she was just a shy when it came to driving in heavy traffic. It made her anxious.

She heaved a sharp sigh of relief when the turn-off for the mall came. Flipping on her blinker, Toki changed lanes, ignoring the irritated honking of someone who didn’t like that she had moved in front of them. When her turn-off time hit, she eased off of the highway, and down a much less busy road.

“We’ll be there in a moment.” She mutters softly to Aliquam. Already she could see the massive overhead parking space. It was fairly empty, which meant they should be able to get a spot on the ground floor. Toki really didn’t want to have to haul bags of clothing- or whatever else they found-up several flights of stairs.

"Sounds good." Was his reply, a soothing smile on his face. He adjusted his jacket, where the inner pocket that held his wallet was kept safe from anyone attempting to snag it, and folded his arms patiently.
Toki gave him a smile, and guided them in. As she hoped, she actually found a parking space on the bottom floor. It was near the exit, which wasn’t too bad in the long run. She put the car in park, and took a moment to exhale and shake out her fingers.

Gods she hated city driving.

Shaking her head, she tugged the sunglasses off of her face and left them on the dashboard, before collecting her purse. The strap is looped on her shoulder, and then she steps from the truck. The underside of the car park is hot, despite the breeze that wafts through from time to time. “Hmm… Not a bad parking spot if I do say so myself.” She chirps.

"Not at all, at least we wont come back to an overheated vehicle, yes?” he chirped, closing the door and looking at her from over the cab.

Toki’s horns were visible above the cab, but that was about all he would see. She pads around the back of the truck and waves at him cheerily. “That’s quite true. My truck doesn’t overheat that bad anyways. It does worse in the cold- doesn’t like to run very well. C’mon. Is there any stores you’d like to visit while we’re here?"

He thought about it as he caught up with her, before offering her his hand. "Perhaps, I’ll think about it as we go.” he replied.

Toki reached out to take his hand, lacing the bare bones of her fingers through his. She smiled at him, adjusting her purse strap, and begins to walk with him towards the front doors of the mall. People coming in and out stare at them, but she ignores their gazes, even if they unnerve her slightly. She was used to being stared at for being so tall- it wasn’t that odd to be stared at for some other reason than that. “If anything catches your eye, just let me know. We’re not on a time limit while we’re here.”

He had long since got used gotten used to these looks, and walked with a carefree smile on his face. "But of course, dear Toki!"

Toki beams up at him and swings their hands. She holds the door open for him, and guides him inside.

The mall itself is pretty big. It’s four floors up, though the higher up you go, the more novelty the shops seem to get. There was an ice skating rink on the third floor, and a cosmic bowling alley on the top floor, for goodness sake. The first and the second floor have most of the main shops from all of the main stores.

Immediately to their left is a men’s tuxedo store. To their right is a woman’s bridal shop. Across the open court yard of the mall is three shoe stores, and a gimmick store that sold action figures and various tabletop gaming things.

Further to the right, down the long hallway, a maternity store and store for babies and small children is visible. To the right are the escalators that take them up to what looks to be an entrance to a super store.

“So!” She chirps, ignoring the stares that they get, “Which way first?”

"Hm.... I say we go to get your clothes first." he replied, sockets scanning over the mall.

“I don’t see a store that sells slacks- at least ones that aren’t for tuxedos… But… maybe it’s on the second floor?” Her sockets wander down the way to the left, however. The maternity store has caught her eye- and she’s definitely going to need larger shirts here soon. She should probably stick with some cheap and incognito turtlenecks, but… She has a desire to at least look at the maternity stuff. Toki hesitates though, not sure if they should wander down there. Yeah they could play it off that they were buying things for baby shower gifts or something, but she had a feeling they’d be walking out with several bags.

He caught her gaze and he hooked an arm around her. "We'll go there last, okay?"

Toki heaves a soft sigh and nods as she leans into him. He did well to guide her impulses- and she willingly turned to the right and guided him instead for the escaladers up. “That works. Alright- lets go to the second floor. I know the super store up there sells slacks. Are you in need of some new pants while we’re here?"

"I'd probably need mine custom made, but I can certainly see if I can be served."

Toki nods up at him. The escalader is not wide enough to go side by side, so she steps a couple steps up ahead of him, and grins. Her horns are now taller than he is- though it won’t last long. “Well, you do have those long legs of yours. I’m sure we can find something- despite most of us being short, they do actually sell some clothes for tall people. I just don’t know what size you wear.” Length wise, he looked probably like an extra large, or an extra-extra large. She wasn’t good with judging the size of someone’s waistline though. “I’m also thinking of getting some new slippers. Do you happen to know your shoe size? We could get you a pair of house slippers so your feet don’t get chilled on the tile.”

"Despite my size, I think my feet are smaller." he answered, "Perhaps a ten... or a twelve maybe?"

Toki hums in consideration. When they reach the second floor, she snuggles right back up to him and heads for the store with him. “Hm… Well, that might be because you’re got bone instead of added skin. When I was human, I wore about an eleven to twelve in women’s shoes. With the removal of all the extra bits, I wear a ten. Men’s shoes are bigger.” She eyes his boots, and hums. “Hm… I think you’re about an eleven? Shoes all fit different, so we’ll simply have to see. Oh!” She suddenly beams. “We can get matching slippers, Pap!"

"Nyeh heh heh heh! We could!"

“If we find something we like, we’ll totally get matching pairs.” She smiles up at him. Toki stops to collect a hand basket, not thinking that they’d really need a cart. The hand baskets were big enough as it was. She left it hanging on the arm that wasn’t nestled against Papyrus, and scouted out the tops of the isles. Shoes were next to pants, thankfully. “So, foot-ware first? Or pants?"

"Well, which one do you need more?"

“Technically I can’t do anything with them until I buy them anyway, so it really doesn’t matter.” She points out. “Might as well get shoes. It’s the isle before pants is anyways.”

He shrugged loosely and followed her, smiling as they walked.

They arrived at the shoes fairly quickly, and Toki nearly stumbled as a shorter man plowed into her shoulder. He grunted, shot them both a nasty look, and stalked off without a word, even as Toki uttered a reflexive apology. Toki shook her head with a sigh, rubbing her arm idly before continuing in. “Some people.” She mutters.

Aliquam shot a slightly sharp look at the man who shoved past them, but didn’t engage in anything.

Shaking her head again, Toki pads down the isle, and peers at some of the shoes. “… Well, high heels would be fun, but I can’t walk in those to save my life. Boots, boots, boots, ah! Slippers. Here
He followed her willingly, also looking over the shoes. Humans had so many shoes for so many things- even completely inane things. Like for being taller. "Find anything good?"

Toki was silent for a time, browsing the shoes intently. She eventually sighed and tugged out a pair of dark colored house shoes. They were leather, with fluffy padded insides. The leather would hold up against the sharply pointed parts of her toe bones. “I think so. This is in my size- but I can’t see the top shelf where the larger sizes are to tell if they have yours.” Honestly, why stores set up shelves for people who almost always had to use a stepladder to get things from the top, she would never ever know.

Toki holds out the slippers, displaying the thick rubber soles at the bottom. “And look at traction. No more slipping in the mud.” The leather would also be easy to clean and waterproof.

"Those are useful... nyeh heh heh... need a boost to see the higher shelf?" he asked.

Toki chuckled softly. “Normally I’d say yes, but I’d rather not risk my shirt slipping up. Think you can just grab down a couple of the larger ones? And grab a thirteen as well, mister tall guy. There’s always the chance you might have a larger shoe size than we thought.”

"Heh, alright, alright." he reached up and pulled down a few pairs of slippers, smiling at her, "Here!"

Toki took the boxes with a smile, and motioned for him to take a seat on one of the movable booth things. “Alright. Boots off- both of your feet are the same size, right?”

"Of course." he sat down and removed his boots.

Toki simply smiled slightly and knelt down at his feet. Kneeling was unpleasant- the change in motion made her skull throb, eye lights momentarily blinking out before she shook her head. Ugh. Migraine, migraine, go away, don’t come back another day. “Alright. Let’s start with the tens and go from there- Oh wow. Your feet are the exact same size. That’s pretty cool.” Her bones were too- But she knew humans who didn’t. Kon actually had one foot that was a full size larger than the other one. He simply bought in the bigger size and tied the other shoe tighter.

Toki smiled and set to slipping the shoes diligently onto his feet. They fit- but they looked fairly cramped. Hard to tell with the fluff though. “How do they feel?”

He looked at them and wiggled his foot lightly, before he curled his toes, "Not bad at all...!" he replied.

“Try walking in them. Shoes feel different when sitting verses walking. This looks like it might pinch your feet together slightly…” She hums, scooting back so he can take a few steps up and down the isle.

"Alright." he got up and gave them a quick back and forth lap... "Ah, you may be right. One size higher?" he asked.

“I knew I pegged you for an eleven. Alright- foot up.” She would let him use the top of her skull for balance, even if it made her head throb all the more, and carefully swapped out for the elevens. “Okay- those look a lot better from here. If it’s still too tight, we can try an eleven and a half.”

He was kind enough to not resort to doing that, but after a lap up and down the isle in the new shoes, he gave her a thumbs up.
Toki beamed at him. “Now we know. You run about an eleven.” Proportionally, Aliquam had really, really small feet for someone as tall as he was. But she wasn’t going to comment- every body was different and amazing. She shifted and got to her feet, bending down to pick up the boxes of shoes. The two pair that they were going to get were tossed into the handcart, and she beamed at him. “Bam. Slippers have been achieved.” And they were even nice slippers, so she wouldn’t feel bad wearing them to official meetings and the like.

"Fantastic." he said happily, leaning over to take the handcart from her. "That's one thing off the list, now what?"

She let him take the handcart without a fuss. “Slacks- and you said you’d help me choose a long skirt or two.” She wasn’t looking forwards to trying things on in a cramped dressing room built for humans much smaller than she was. “Skirts and stuff look like they’re right across from the slacks.”

"Very convenient, wouldn't you say?" Aliquam hummed happily.

Toki nods and chuckles. “C'mon, you. Skirts and slacks await. At least I don't have to buy bras. I can’t imagine dealing with bras and having bones. That just sounds like a mess waiting to happen.”

Toki ended up walking away from the store with three new pairs of slacks- all of them several sizes too big- and a belt to hold them up. She also was now the proud owner of not one, not two, definitely not three- but five long skirts. How Ali managed to find five of them that looked good on her, she had no idea- but she honestly didn’t care. Sweat pants were easier, and she’d invested in several pairs of those too. She’d also gotten a couple more turtlenecks- though not many. She was saving most of her shirt shopping for their last stop.

They’d also managed to find him slacks too- two pairs, actually- and several new pairs of sweat pants on top of their new matching slippers. He also now owned a couple of dress shirts- in case he had wanted to accompany her out somewhere that wasn’t Grillby’s.

All of their stuff fit in three bags, of which Aliquam insisted upon carrying. Toki hadn’t fussed- her skull was too tender for her to fuss too badly over being babied- and they’d proceeded to explore the rest of the mall.

The mall had proven to be almost painfully loud in some spots, and despite some interest being shown, neither of them actually ended up investing in anything else from any of the other stores despite the hours that they wandered. They’d broken for lunch, gotten some surprisingly delicious burritos from one of the mall vendors, and then decided to head down to their last stop.

That was, as promised, the Maternity store. Toki had all but beamed on going in, though she side eyed the young man at the counter.

He watched her intently, eyes narrowed ponderously for a time, before he’d glanced away and resumed reading. He watched them out of the corner of his eyes though, intent and unflinching.

The store was, unsurprisingly, empty except for them. They’d gotten that a lot- despite a lot of friendly greetings, there were a lot of people who would leave mid-shopping when they came in. Not once had they been asked to leave though- and Toki had suspicions on that resting on her, simply because of how known she was.

Either way, she wasn’t going to let a bunch of assholes ruin the mood. Toki tugged Papyrus away from the entrance, and padded through hoards of baby clothes near the front. The actual maternity clothes were at the back- and even if she didn’t buy a lot, she wanted to look.

They bypassed racks upon racks of baby clothed though, from tiny blankets, to even tinier shoes.

"Oh my stars!" And that is when Toki heard the cutest noise come from her boyfriend. "Tokiii, look at how small these shoes are!"

Oh… oh no, that was cute, and she hadn’t even seen it yet. Toki obediently turned, and padded back to Papyrus. She blinked at the little shoes, and quirked a grin. She reached up to snag a pair of tiny, tiny sneakers, and held them up for Aliquam to ogle. Her hands didn’t dwarf them as much as his might, but the shoes were still painfully tiny. “I know, aren’t they?” Too bad they wouldn’t know their little one’s shoe sizes until they got there.

He looked at her, a childish gleam in his expression before he cooed. "I never have seen shoes this small before~"

“Oh these are baby shoes,” she smiles. “These are for very, very new babies, to keep their feet warm if you don’t want them in onesies all the time.” Her eyes glimmer with an entirely different gleam, and it takes conscious effort not to rest the little shoes against her belly. Instead, she holds them out for him to take, and tucks her hands happily into her pockets. Her voice drops low, very low, so only he can hear her. “We’ll definitely have to get some for our little babybones.” Not now, but when they were larger…

"Of course.” he giggled and held them effortlessly in one hand as he then let her take the lead for this shopping trip.

Toki smiled a secret smile when he pointedly did not put the little pair of shoes back. They’d need two of everything, she realized. Twins was double everything. Shaking her head quietly, she padded back for the maternity section.

A long turtleneck- which was far, far bigger than she actually needed now- caught her attention. It was black, designed for someone probably late term, and embroidered on the belly was a pot of honey with bees buzzing around it. “Oh gods, the irony. Hey, Pap, look. Should we get one…?” It appeared to also come in Orange, but the black looked nicer.

"Yes, it would look nice on you.” he said as he came over, "Though black absorbs more heat.”

Toki pursed her mouth and nodded faintly. “That it does… It comes in orange too, but… I dunno. It’s sort of an off orange? Not sure if I like it.” It wasn’t the same orange as his magic. His magic was her favorite orange. She shrugs, and snags one of the black ones regardless. The human can’t see them from back here, so she drapes it across her front, and checks to see how it fits against her neck and the width of her shoulders. “Believe it or not, if my change in body temperature now is any indication, I don’t think it’d going to matter much what color I wear.”

"I suppose you have a point.” he agreed, "Well, you're the one wearing it, it's up to you.”

Well if that wasn’t just a slight bit of disapproval she detected. Toki arched a brow at him and playfully stuck her tongue out, before folding the shirt up and draping it over her arm. Consequences be damned, she was going to wear the shirt with a honey pot on it. “Yes. I’m definitely getting it. There’s lots of shirts here, Pap. You’re perfectly entitled to suggest shirts- I’ve got a terrible taste in fashion as it is.”

"And you think I’m any better? Didn't you see what I wore for at least a year straight?” he asked with a laugh.
“I remember seeing your battle body from Halloween, yes.” She offers him a wry grin, and begins thumbing through the racks. She selects a lot of darker colored shirts—simply because she was going to be massive as it was, and didn’t really want to be labeled a massive, colorful blimp. “Really though, you do just fine now. You helped me get those skirts, didn’t you? They’re really pretty.” They’d been pretty pricey too—she’d bought them, because they all had elastic waistlines.

Speaking of prices. She stopped and peered at the shirt she had in her hand, proceeded to balk at the price, and quietly put it back on the rack. She wasn’t shelling out thirty dollars for something that wasn’t even her favorite color. No indeed. She needed to watch her money anyways—she only had so much in royalties, and didn’t want to have to tap into her savings.

He noticed and let out a quiet hum, before looking at her.

Hm… A lot of the shirts she had were expensive. Really, she shouldn’t have been expecting anything otherwise. She remembered hearing her sister in law complaining about the prices when she had been pregnant. Toki tilted her head, contemplating just getting the ones she had already grabbed and calling it good. She ended up meeting his gaze by accident and arching a brow at him questioningly. “What’s that look for, Pap?”

"Nothing important, just thinking.” he replied softly.

“Hmm… penny for your thoughts?” She shifts, pacing to another rack. This one is simple colors, reds, oranges, blues, greens—cheaper than the last. The material though… That itched over her bones just touching it.

"I sell them for a dollar.” he snickered; quoting a conversation they’d had what had seemed like forever ago amused him greatly. Aliquam stopped her for a moment, just to hug her from behind again and nuzzle his face into the back of her neck. "..." He then had a realization and he smiled, "You know, I just remembered a great place to buy clothing. It'd do well for you.”

Toki leaned back into him with a soft sigh, letting him nuzzle the back of her skull quietly. The plastic bags pressed against her arms, helping keep her pressed back into him, and she took the moment to look up at him with a gentle smile. “Didn’t I tell you I’d be willing to pay two or three?” She thrums affectionately. “What sort of place were you thinking of?” And how would it do well for her?

"It's run by an old friend of mine.” he rumbled, "Back in Snowdin. A trip well worth it.”

“Oh?” Well, she was all for doing business with monsters. She purses her teeth slightly, and hums. "Hm… Well, that would definitely work. I still want to get the black shirt though. Who’s your friend? I don’t know if we can make the trip today. It’s like… almost five hours from the city to the mountain.” It was already well into the day—nearly two in the afternoon. She paused her words for a moment, and puffed her cheeks.

“Actually it might not work. I’ve got human currency— which as far as I know isn’t taken Underground yet.” Mostly because humans weren’t allowed down into the underground from their own government’s laws; Asgore didn’t actually have anything to do with that yet.

"Her name is Lana Vestimoves. She's a dressmaker, and it's okay, I still have gold at home to use if we were to go." he explained and assured, "But she's made clothing for all body types, so a pregnant body shouldn't be an issue.”

She grinds her teeth quietly, ignoring the sparks that fall. She keeps only the black shirt, setting the rest onto a nearby rack, and then turns to face him. Toki peers up at him slightly, and her teeth grind again- it’s her equivalent of chewing on her lip. “I know you do- I’d just feel bad for you using your gold.” She tried to keep what the monsters paid down to a minimum at most times. Aliquam had hardly paid for anything, with gold or with human cash. “I’ll get this for now, yeah? I’ve got my pants- and my turtlenecks still fit for now. We can make a run up there and see about getting some clothes made later.”

"Sounds good, Toki." he purred gently, leaning down and kissing her cheekbones softly. “They’re my little ones too, Toki. Let me help cover some of the stuff we’ll need, okay?”

Toki smiled at him and nuzzled his face gently, happiness tingling through her. Tilting her head up made her dizzy, so she only did it for a short time. “Mkay. Lets go pay then, and head home. I don’t know about you, but I definitely want to run our clothes through the wash before we wear them. Gets all of that store bought stiffness out of them, y’know?” She tugs his fingers and smiles at him, guiding him back towards the front of the store. “You want to get the baby shoes?” She wiggles her brow with mock sassiness.

"Yes, I want to get the baby shoes.” he replied with an equally sassy brow wiggle as he followed her.

Toki giggles softly and reaches out to snag an identical set of baby shoes as she passes. “Got to remember to buy in doubles then, Pap. We’ve got two, you know.” Her words on it fade off though, as they approach the register.

The man at the counter is both young, and looking at them with not-very-veiled distaste. His nametag was smudged and old, but the name Joey was vaguely imprinted on it. “I take it you’ve found everything you wanted?” He droned, eyes wandering over them intensely. They settled on her for a moment, observing her front, before he arched a brow at her.

“Uh… Yeah.” She doesn’t really like the look on his face. Still, she takes the baby shoes from Pap, sets them on the counter with the shirt and the second set, and then goes digging for her wallet.

“Forty six fifty.” The man mutters. “Cash or card?”

“I’ve got cash for it.” Toki clicks.

Toki tugs out her wallet and pays- the man is quick to bag their items, and hands it over tartly. The skeleton doesn’t take offense- no, she simply gives him a bitter smile, takes her change, and then tugs Pap back out of the store. She sighs heavily through her teeth. “I don’t know about you, but I am ready to go home. My feet are starting to kill me a little bit.” They’d been walking for hours after all- and she did not have near the same stamina that Aliquam had.

Aliquam had gave the clerk a smile and a light "Thank you" before he followed Toki out. He lingered behind her, stealing the bag from her hands and adding it to his own pile of shopping that he had been carrying for her. "Well we should head home then, yes?"

Toki nods. “I’m completely down for that.” She digs her hand into her purse and collects her keys once Aliquam takes the bag from her hand, and then gives him a warm smile.

She leaves him to follow her, and pads for the exit to the mall. She guides them back for the entrance, quietly rubbing the back of her neck as she walks.

"How do you feel, Toki?” Aliquam asked as he walked into the parking area with her. “I’ve noticed you’ve been a bit off today.”

“To be honest? Not very well. I’ve got a bit if a migraine.” She admits softly. “I’ve had it all day. It’s pesky.”

It’s bright outside, and she squints her sockets shut idly. Toki rolled her skull back, taking a breath of semi-fresh air, and enjoys the pressure on the back of her hand trying to ease the tightness in the back of her skull. Truth be told, it wasn’t really helping that much- but it was better than nothing. The pressure just kept building and building- and her skull wanted to split in two.

Really it was stupid that these headaches were a thing. She didn’t have a brain in her skull- there was no logical reason for her skull to be pounding like a hurricane wanted to escape. The noises, the light, the sounds of cars in the distance, none of this should bother her. Skeletons really were strange things- and she was slightly tired of being the weird one with strange problems out of the bunch.

It’s about three steps later that her eye lights go out, her legs buckle, and she drops without a word, skull bouncing and clanking dully as it hits the cement ground below them.

Papyrus hadn’t expected what just happened, having been just about to respond to her about her headache and why she hadn’t told him about it before, but his reaction is panicked and instantaneous. "TOKI!"
Chapter 41

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: As I said, this is actually something that’s happened to my mother. It’s a genetic quirk that unfortunately did not skip my generation. We both get migraines. I’ve got light sensitive triggers, and there are certain foods I can’t have. I can’t drink diet soda, because Aspartame is actually a trigger for my migraines. Anyways, this happened to my mom. She had a bad migraine, went into the kitchen to take something for it, and tried to rub some of the pain away. She ended up tilting her head back, and she woke up on the floor several hours later with our dogs pawing at her frantically.

She actually has to take medication to keep those from happening now. It sucks, and she has her bad days, but we manage. Heh. Toki’s are this bad because she’s been unable to take anything for them, and is assuming that they’re completely normal. They’re not entirely so.

Don’t forget to visit us at our tumblr page! http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

It had seemingly happened in slow motion. She’d said her words, and had proceeded to cross the walkway to the direction of the truck. Her legs had just crumpled mid-step, and he had been both too far away and too shocked to see her drop to do anything about it.

The sound of her skull on the cement was horribly loud, and it echoed in the mostly empty parking place. Her keys fell from her fingers, skull lolling to the side. Her sockets were empty, mouth slack and opened faintly. Toki’s purse thankfully had a zipper, or it would have no doubt spilled across the ground along with her.

With her legs and arms akimbo, body lying flat where she had fallen, Toki proceeded to not rouse or even twitch when Aliquam had all but shrieked her name. She laid there, limp and still, shirt hitched up faintly over the green of her middle and clothing askew.

She had dropped like a marionette without strings- but the glow of her middle was enough to let him know she hadn’t just spontaneously died.

"Oh my god... TOKI!" He cried as he came to her side, kneeling down and checking her worriedly, first making sure she didn’t do too much damage to her head.

The bags of clothes clattered around her as he crouched down. She was unresponsive to his touch- but thankfully her skull seemed unharmed beyond a few scrapes from the hard cement. She was breathing too, slow, steady breaths, like she had simply gone to sleep standing upright.

"Toki..." he sighed in relief, then he carefully picked her up, the shopping bags were temporarily abandoned as he moved her to the car. Careful of her horns, he laid her in the back seat. He carefully loaded up the bags onto the floor space of the back seat, rummaging in one briefly to pull out one of her turtlenecks. Using it to pillow her head, the tall skeleton let out a worried sound. Okay that was good... now...

"Nyeh..." he’d have to either wait for someone to help him...
Or he'd have to drive…

He always did want to drive, but had only a little practice...

As luck would have it, he wouldn't have to drive. There was a familiar face that knocked his knuckles lightly on the bed of the truck, and held up his hands peacefully. He had his badge in his palm, and offered a calm smile as he kept his distance. The last thing he wanted was a defensive monster turning on him—particularly since he remembered the bones that could be summoned. “Hey big guy. I don’t know if you remember me—but I think I remember you. I’m Mark Sheppard—the police officer from the last attack on the compound. I’m off duty, but I’m a cop at heart. You’re Papyrus, right? I recognized you and Miss Nara there. I saw her fall, and my wife sent me over to check on you both—is she okay?”

The knocking on the bed of the truck startled him but he turned and looked at the other, before his expression lightened up. "Oh, thank the stars." he sighed, before he came over, "Yes, that's me." he then gave the other a relieved smile.

"I remember you, you helped us greatly that day. I am still thankful. However... I don’t know why Toki fell like that..." he sighed, "I checked her though, and her head didn't take enough damage to be worrying... the young souls are okay too... so..." he rubbed his head, the back of it aching slightly at thinking about her own damage. "Sadly I don’t have enough experience with driving to get us home..."

“It’s best you didn’t try to drive her, Papyrus. Monsters don’t have the legal rights to do that yet—and you could get your guardian in a lot of trouble if you tried.” The officer gave him a soothing smile, and edged around closer to the driver’s side. Mark took a peek inside, and ran his fingers through his short-cropped hair. He leaned into the truck, squeezing past the much larger protective monster, and carefully snapped his fingers near her ears. She didn’t respond, and he frowned. “Okay. She doesn’t look like she was too hurt by the fall from what I can see, though I don’t see the… young souls you mentioned? Did she respond at all when you lifted her?”

She looked unconscious to him—but he isn’t sure how to treat something that didn’t have flesh.

He moved out of the way, looking down at him, "No... and ah..." he gestured to her swell, "She didn't land on them, so they're most likely okay.”

“They…” He paused, and took a closer look. He didn’t touch her shirt—but Mark was an observant man. He could also spot a bag from a maternity store. “Shit, she’s pregnant. Okay… The hospital really isn’t going to know what to do with this. Okay. Uh… Do you guys have a doctor back at the Village?” They had managed to handle the skeleton’s ribs after all—and they looked quite solid under her shirt.

"Yes, my father." he replied, "We also have another came to us not too long ago."

“I heard about that one. We’re still on the look out for his wife.” Mark made a face. “Okay. Your dad’s a doctor though—I remember him. Big fella, kinda scary.”

A rev of an engine came from behind the truck, and Mark’s wife rolled down the window. “Is she okay?” She called, leaning across the passenger’s seat as she shifted the car into park.

The back window was open, and two curious canine heads poked out. Both of them looked nearly identical—both being dark colored German Shepherd’s. One had his tongue lolling out, intelligent eyes intently watching his partner as he stood on the lap of the other. The other had a headband on, and a coloring book clenched in one paw. The officer’s daughter kept quiet, looking on curiously.
“She’s not responding, Susan.” Mark called back. “This fella can’t legally drive, and their doctor is all the way back at Nara Village.”

“There’s no way he’s going to fit in the back with Jenna and Charlie.” Susan nods. She shifts the car into gear, and pulls around so the truck can be backed out. “I’ll follow you up.”

“We’re gonna go to Nara village?” Jenna’s voice perks up from the back seat. “Cool!”

Mark watches her pull out, and gives Papyrus a faint smile. “I’ll drive you up. You might want to sit in the back with her and keep her still. Got the keys?”

“That’s a good idea.” he agreed, before he went and pulled the keys from where they’d been tangled in her finger bones, holding them to Mark. "I just need a moment to get comfortable. And thank you again.”

“To protect and serve,” Mark quotes, taking the keys patiently. He leaves the skeleton to climb into the back cab, and clamors into the front seat. He has to move the seat forwards quite a bit, as his feet wont touch the pedals. “As far as I’m concerned, you guys are citizens of this world too, so that means we’ve got to protect you too. Alright, I’m not going to crack down on you if you don’t buckle up this time.” The back seats hardly looked like they had buckles designed for monsters of his stature. He turns on the truck, and leaves it to warm up while the skeleton gets situated between his pregnant girlfriend and their shopping bags.

Aliquam had to have the other seat all the way forward and he put the bags there instead as he stretched out in the back. He laid Tokiko across his chest, stroking her head gently as he settled her carefully. "You have my thanks, Officer Shepherd.”

“Yes, they're mine." he replied, "As for how it's evaded the news, we haven't told enough people... We've kept it rather under the rug, as we don’t want anyone... dangerous finding out."

"Yes, they're mine." he replied, "As for how it's evaded the news, we haven't told enough people... We've kept it rather under the rug, as we don’t want anyone... dangerous finding out." Mark nods, eyes on the road. “Smart choice. HAM’s been on the move. There’s been more occasions of HTM’s being attacked- several home invasions as well. We’re trying to crack down on them- but they’re slipperier than a fresh fish.” It was common on the news- but he wasn’t sure Toki had television out there. It was, as he was concerned, way out in the boonies. He hit a speed bump, and his eyes flicked to the rearview mirror as the unconscious skeleton groaned just faintly at being jostled. “Sorry, Papyrus. Speed bumps are terrible no matter how you hit them.”

Aliquam stroked her skull gently, running his fingers over the scrapes on the bone. "It's alright, I'll be her cushion when you go over them." he replied softly, before he sighed. "Why can't they just leave us alone...?"

“Everyone always asks that, kid.” He sighs. He shifts from the back streets up onto one of the main streets, dodging cars expertly. “No one really knows. These criminals… they’re not right. The hurt they can cause- the death, the pain, the sadness? There’s something not right inside of them. Good people- good people don’t do this to other people; no matter how strange they look. We at the PD are doing all we can to help catch them.”
He sighed and nuzzled Toki. "I'm glad I'm here to at least protect my friends." he murmured, gently kissing her head as he let healing-magic seep into her through every point of contact.

The healing magic makes her shift, and a slight whimper escapes. The slack bones of her face tense in something akin to discomfort as the scrapes to the back of her skull heal over, and she trembles in his arms. She doesn't stir though.

“And protect those that are more than your friends.” Mark smiles faintly. “Being a dad can be pretty scary. Being a first time dad in a scary time can be even more so. How you holding up, kid?”

"I'm nervous, honestly. But. There are many at home who want to support me, my Father, my Brother, Grillby..." he said with a soft purr, "Toki felt reassured when I told her I wasn't going to leave it to her.” he looked down at her and stroked her head, hushing her gently to comfort her.

“If neither of you are ready to be parents, or if one of you isn’t, there are other options.” The cop says softly. He watches him through the mirror, and smiles quietly. “Honestly, I think you’ll both be okay. It really seems like you love her. Y’know, my wife and I, our daughter was a surprise too. We weren’t even married- we actually married when she was four. She actually brought us together.”

Toki settles faintly, her bones trembling from time to time. She shifts slightly and falls limp once more.

"I love her very much... She's done so much for everyone... She's wonderful." he leaned down and kissed her head gently, smiling quietly. "Marriage... I... don’t think we're ready for that yet..." he chuckled, "But I think about it every day."

He then sighed and leaned back, "You know... I think this may help strengthen the bond between Monsters and Humans." he mentioned.

“Your kid?” He questioned curiously. “Marriage is… tough. Not everyone is meant for it. Hell, a buddy of mine on the force has been with his woman for thirty years. They’ve got kids together- and they’re not married. They’re probably the happiest couple I know. If the time is ever right… you’ll know. Both of you will.”

He nodded in agreement, and then sighed and smiled, "I love you." he murmured to Toki, before closing his eyes.

Mark watched with a soft smile of sorts, and sighed. He let them relax, trusting the skeleton to say something if the unconscious woman began to rouse.

Toki was silent the entire drive home, her small fit of whimpering having been the last noises she’d made. She was warm though- perhaps too warm, as she lay draped on Aliquam.

Mark turned into the driveway, following the grooves of the tire marks over to where he thought was the usual parking spot. His wife stayed at the entrance, parking her car in the visitor parking spot. As soon as he slid the car into park and stepped out, he found the truck surrounded by wary wolf guards.

“Uh… Chill, guys. Officer Sheppard, Ebott City PD. I was driving home for Miss Nara. She, ah, needs a doctor. Papyrus? These are your guys, right? Can you have them put the spears away?”

He lifted his head, and turned as best he could. Reaching over and knocking his knuckles against the glass loudly, he gave them a thumbs up and called to them from inside the cab. "He's okay!" he told them.
The guards shifted, and backed off.

“Uh- the other car’s my wife and daughter. She’s here to take me home. Uh… Yeah.” Mark unlocked the doors, and shifted to open the back one for Pap.

One of the guards, now that there wasn’t a threat, took a step back. He perked his ears, spotting Toki sprawled limply, and gave Aliquam a dutiful salute. “Stay there, sir. I’ll go get your father.” Dark brown fur bounces as the guard jogs as fast as he can in his armor, heading out of the main compound and towards the village proper.

Another of the guard’s shifts and peers in the open back door, furry ears flicking upright and alert for any orders that might come. “Sir? What happened? Was there an attack while you both were shopping?”

"Toki passed out.” He murmured. He didn’t move- didn’t want to risk doing anything bad to the woman on his chest. “I don’t know why. I hope that Father will be able to answer that once he’s seen to her.” he replied.

Speaking of the phantom, Tenebris was settling down in his chair, lighting his pipe and taking a few puffs. He exhaled the smoke and lay back, taking a deep breath before sighing again in contentment.

A heavy brown fist knocked against his front door in a slightly frantic rate, no doubt jarring him from his relaxing.

Tenebris jumped, then groaned as he got up, "Coming, coming..." he called, puffing his pipe as he walked to the door. "Yes?" he sighed as he opened the door.

The strong smell of mint made the wolf-monster’s sensitive nose wrinkle, but he saluted Tenebris nonetheless. “There has been an incident of some kind, sir. Miss Nara is unconscious in the back of her truck. Your son is with her.” Aliquam knew how to heal- so whatever was wrong, it wasn’t a physical wound that he knew how to handle.

He blinked once, and he nodded sharply. “Thank you for telling me.” he rumbled, before he grabbed his coat and started out, pulling on the black garment.

The guard was not far behind him, making sure to shut the door once the bigger monster had stepped around him. Long furry legs carried him quickly, despite the heavily clanking armor, and he pulled ahead of the longer-limbed monster quite easily. All of the training that Aliquam had been pushing them through was showing through. The guard rounded the corner of the street first, disappearing from view, and headed back over towards the main gate.

Mark was near the gate, talking with his wife and daughter quietly, with his dog sitting obediently at his side. He lifted his head when the guard came back, eyes perking up as he waited to see the doctor no doubt trailing behind.

The rest of the wolf guards had spread out, taking defensive posts near and around the truck where the skeletons remained. One stayed by the door, in case she was needed to fetch something.

"At ease, Men." he growled sharply as he approached the truck, noticing Aliquam's head on the passenger side door. He came over and opened it, immediately looking Toki over. He looked at Aliquam when he couldn’t see anything physically wrong, who then proceeded to explain what happened.

"Understood." He then turned. "You two come and collect these bags." He ordered two of the guards, "Please take them to Toki's home."

The one by the door nodded faintly, flicking her tail at her companion. “I can handle the bags, sir.” The bags are collected swiftly, leaving Aliquam free to leave the back seat with Toki, and then the wolf is bounding up towards the house, armor making a ruckus.

There was a lot of noise as the guards dispersed, returning to their usual positions. The one with brown fur broke from position- and was joined by the cop and his family. They headed off into the village, presumably with the intent to give him and his purple-clad daughter a tour.

Toki, meanwhile, groans just slightly. It is faint, brought on by the loud din of many sets of clanking armor, but it is there.

"Aliquam, how easily can you get Toki out?" Tenebris questioned

"I imagine if I lay flat I can slip her from my arms to yours." The younger skeleton replied.

"Alright, let's do that." Tenebris lowered to a kneeling position and Aliquam laid back, carefully shifting his hold to Toki's hips as Tenebris reached and gripped her underarms. "One, Two..."

With a swift pull, Toki was out of the car and in Tenebris' arms, securely held in a bridal-carry.

"Good job." Tenebris praised as Aliquam then climbed out of the truck, stretching his legs and shaking them to wake them back up.

It was getting dark, but it was still brighter than inside of the truck. Toki’s body was lax, but that same groan escapes her again as her skull lolls limply over his arm. Her limbs settle into his grasp, and he would find that she is a few pounds heavier than she used to be. Her sockets remain empty and closed, but her fingers twitch just slightly.

And for a moment Tenebris had hoped she would have stirred from that.

"Hrm..." He then sighed, "We need someone to pull the truck into her parking spot, I'll get started on her." he said calmly.

But immediately it had worried Aliquam. "Father... Is she okay?" he pressed.

"I... I don’t know. Aliquam. But I'll find out."

She woke up in her room. The last thing she remembered had been telling Aliquam that she had a migraine. She had been walking towards the truck so they could go home, had tilted her head back and pressed to try and relieve some of the pressure- and the rest was blank.

She could feel her sheets draped lightly over her. She was settled on her side, facing towards what she could assume was Aliquam’s half of the bed. There was… something pulsing on the back of her skull. Something that wasn’t the headache- which was still there, but marginally lesser.
Groggily, her sockets flicked halfway open, eye lights coming on dimly. She groans quietly, much louder than the last, and her fingers curl into the sheets. Toki is a little dazed, a little confused—she wasn’t supposed to be at home, was she? “Nng…”

"Are you waking up now, Miss Toki?" Was the calm, gentle voice that was Tenebris Gaster. "I suspected that was the concern... Ah, don't try to move." He murmured soothingly.

“Nng…” Toki’s eye lights flicked slightly and brightened some. The back of her skull hurt slightly, but the pulsing thing was helping the ache of her migraine. “Mm… Yeah… I’m up now. What… happened? We were walking to the car…” She blinks slowly, and shifts faintly. Not a lot of movement, but enough to feel something shift against the back of her skull. “What’s on my head…?”

"You passed out. Stay still, I’m almost done." he told her sternly, before slowly moving. Something slid out from the inside of her skull, and as Tenebris moved away, Toki would have a second to look to see just what had been in her head.

“Done doing what?” She manages. When he’d pulled away, the strange thing on the back of her skull drawing back, and taking with it the vast majority of her migraine. This was the least painful it had been in a long while. She turned, and caught sight of it.

Extending from somewhere under his coat was a long, black tentacle.

“Uh…” Her sockets are quite wide. She’d seen him completely undressed before- and she had never noticed anything like that. Toki shifts, rolling onto her back gingerly. “What… Was that doing to my skull?”

"Siphoning pent up magic that had gathered in the back of your skull. It is the reason you passed out. Speaking of, how's your head now?"

She sits up slowly and cradles her skull in a palm. “Huh… That explains the migraine that wouldn’t go away.” She mutters slightly. “My head feels better. Better than it has all week, actually. It still hurts, but… that’s probably from hitting the cement.”

"Most likely, my recommendation for that is an Ice Pack." he chuckled quietly.

“That’s my recommendation too. Uh… how long have I been out?” She shifted and placed her feet on the floor. Toki was still a little woozy, so she took a moment to scrub her face. Once she’s sure she’ll be fine, Toki clamors to her feet and gets her balance. “So… what caused the migraine?”

"The magic." he said again, "There was too much pressure on your inner cranial." he explained.

“… Huh… Well I guess it wasn’t just a pregnancy thing then.” She ground her teeth quietly, and then flicks her gaze up to Tenebris. “I’ve been having migraines for the past while. I thought it was just a pregnancy thing- googled it and whatnot.”

He shook his head. "Not this time, this symptom is monster in origin."

Toki makes a face. “Ah. Alright. Well… do you think it’ll come back? Because that would be bad to pass out going down the road.” She moves then, straightening her clothes as she pads for the door. She grimaces. “I am still a little lightheaded. Will you make sure I don’t fall on my face going down the stairs? I want that ice pack."

"If your magic builds up again, it will no doubt return." he sighed and followed after her. "Yes. I will help you to the couch. Then I'll retrieve the Ice pack myself, as Aliquam will no doubt come check on you.”
Toki rolls her eyes slightly, but does use him to get down the stairs. He makes a good brace for going up and down- but she does pad stubbornly for the kitchen to collect the icepack herself. Lightheaded she might be, but helpless she is not. “I can get the icepack, Tenebris. Though… crap, Pap probably freaked out when I fell. Ah hell.”

She rummages in the freezer for one of the larger icepacks, and then pads for the couch. Toki claims a seat, leans back, and lets the ice pack be held up by the back of her skull. “Mm. You were right. Ice feels good. So… what was that black thing that drained my magic?”

He sighed and sat down in one of the chairs in the living room, before he let his eyes glow gently. His coat harnessed the magic before tendrils rose from it, inky and black just like the one from before. "One of these."

Toki stared out from one socket, the other closing as she let the ache in her skull fade and waited for Aliquam to come around. There was no telling what he was doing. “That is simultaneously freaky and very, very cool. So you just… what, absorbed my magic? Huh… It’s not gonna like, hurt you to do that, is it?”

"Yes, I did. And no, I do not think it will be a problem for me." he replied, taking his pipe into his teeth and letting it hang there.

Toki nodded. She fell silent, and watched him for a moment, before just closing her sockets. She relaxed, hands coming to cradle the noticeable bump of her middle, and just zoned out. The ice on the back of her skull felt nice, and she was still a little woozy from having essentially fainted.

"Toki!" the door flew open as Papyrus appeared; his eyes alit with great worry.

Toki didn’t even jump. She stayed relaxed, silently breathing and letting the chill soothe her skull. “I’m on the couch, Pap.”

He was on the couch next to her before she could even get her sockets open. His arms looped around her, and he held her close. "I was so worried about you!"

Toki squeaked as the couch was invaded, and leaned into his grasp. “I’m sorry I scared you.” She murmurs softly, nuzzling to his chest. “Your dad said it was a buildup of magic in the back of my skull or something.” Something likely pregnancy related.

"I see..." he whined softly, "I'm sorry. I wish I knew sooner..."

Her teeth purse together faintly, and she reaches up to gently flick his cheek. “Stop that, Ali. It wasn’t your fault- I didn’t know that could happen, or I would have told you. I thought it was a human thing- so it was my error, not anyone else’s.” Still, she snuggles closer, leaving the icepack draped over the back of her neck. “Besides, your dad fixed it. With his… weird tentacle sucky things.”

"Father, you used your tendrils!" Aliquam shot a look at him.

Tenebris just shook his head. "Aliquam you know that they assist in my work when they’re necessary."

Toki glanced between them, befuddled. “… What’s so bad about them?”

"Well... Mhh..." he huffed softly, "N-Nothing... but... well...!"

“Just spit it out, Pap. Are they straining on his magic or something?”
"He's always so tired after he uses them! I worry about him!"

"Papyrus Aliquam Gaster. I'm fine. I did it for Toki's sake."

“And now you can sit there and relax. Also, he did sort of like… I dunno, suck out my magic?” Like some sort of tentacle vampire thing. She shivered, and huddled closer to Aliquam. “Does he get to keep the magic or does it just… poof?” So many questions now that her head didn’t hurt as bad.

… now that her head didn’t hurt, she could finally get back to doing paperwork in her regular workloads. A contemplative look crosses her face.

"I don’t know." he growled quietly, still looking at Tenebris, who lit his pipe and took a few puffs from it.

"Give me a good night's rest, Aliquam and I’ll be as right as rain." the older replied calmly.

Toki nodded quietly and shifted. “Why don’t you rest? I can go make some tea. I need something to eat anyways.” Her magic, now that it wasn’t over supplying to her skull, felt… empty? Like he’d drained more than just the pesky pool bothering her head.

"I s'ppose..." Tenebris took a deep breath and settled down, looking at Aliquam who nuzzled Toki before he let her go.

Toki used Pap’s shoulder to get up, and offered him a faint smile. “You want to join me in the kitchen, Pap?” She thought she’d offer- since she had an inkling that he would be following her regardless.

He got up and nodded. "Of course." he said quickly.

Toki smiled at him and slid the icepack off of the back of her neck. Her skull was still tender to the touch, but at least there were no scratches. She took a breath and padded for the kitchen, casting a longing glance towards the box of cocoa that she couldn’t have. She gave a soft buzz, and rubbed her hand over her middle as she contemplated what she, and therefore the ever-picky twins, wanted to eat. Speaking of… “… How did we get home, by the way?” She’d seen the bags by the stairs.

"Did you ever meet Officer Mark Shepherd?" he asked, "He saw you pass out and he drove us home."

“I don’t think so.” She blinks. “He sounds nice though. I’ll have to tell him thank you when I can finally meet him face to face.” For now though… food. She scrubs her face, blankly staring up at the cupboards. “I have no idea what I have the energy to make right now. Any suggestions?"

"How about I make us something to eat.” he offered, "Some stew maybe.”

"Stew sounds good.” She shifts to sit on the counter. “Sorry I’m not much help right now. It feels like I’m still a little out of it.”

"No, Toki, it's completely fine” he helped her onto the counter and pressed a gentle kiss to her head. "Knowing you're okay is satisfaction enough.”

“I’ll be okay up here,” she kicks her feet pointedly, and tucks her chin so she can watch him. Truthfully, she didn’t really want to go sit down elsewhere. Fainting was scary, now that she could actually sit and think on it. She had no desire to be anywhere but close to Papyrus. “And I’m even more okay since I’m with you.”
He halted for a moment, and his smile grew before he embraced her tightly. "Nyeh~" he purred gently.

Toki giggled softly as he wrapped around her. She leaned into his embrace, and thrummed softly. "Careful with the squishing me, love. I’m a bit harder than our little jellybeans. We’re really lucky my accident didn’t hurt them today."

"Nyeh..." he whined softly and moved his squeeze to higher up, "I won’t squish them." he promised quietly.

She nodded and nuzzled closer to him. Her arms loop around his neck- and she finds herself reluctant to let go, even though her middle is begging for food. “Mm... good. I don’t wanna let you go...”

"Nyehh... Then why do you think you have to?" He turned around and pulled her arms over his neck, before reaching behind him and grabbing her legs, "Nyeh!"

This was a familiar position- but over a much less plush back. Still, she hooked herself onto him with a content purr, and nuzzled her face into the back of his neck. The curve of her belly fit perfectly in the small of his back. “Yes. This works just fine. I wont get in the way of cooking, will I?"

He shook his head. "Just don’t attack my neck more than necessary and we'll be golden." he giggled, securing her legs before he got started.

Out of it or not, Toki’s eye lights gleamed mischievously. “I’ll be good.” She purrs lazily. It was lies and blasphemy, in all reality. Because as soon as his hands are away from sharp objects, Toki took the opportunity to use her teeth and nibble lightly at the vertebrae of his neck.

He didn't notice at first until an especially hard nip made him gasp out and nearly drop the can he was holding.

“Mmm, butterfingers today, love?” She questions with mock sleepiness.

"You cheeky little fox." he huffed, "Behave back there." he warned her.

Toki chuffed softly and smooched his neck. “Only because I love you.” She purrs. Her fingers though, will trace his collarbone. After all, behave ‘back there’ meant back where she was. His front was free game.

He shivered and sighed, "You little minx." he chuckled softly.

“I love you,” she purrs. She burrows her fingers against his bones, and nestles in. She may actually nap while clinging to him. Her limbs tighten faintly.

He sighed and chuckled, "I love you too." he purred softly.

Toki nuzzled her face between his shoulders, and sighed out a warm breath against his shirt. Nap maybe not- but doze, yes. Half doze, more like. “Mmm... so what type of stew are you making...?”

"A meat stew.” He replied.

“It smells almost as good as you.” She blinks sleepily.

He chuckled quietly and stroked her leg. "Nothing smells better than you, you know~"

“Mmm, I’m thinking you’re telling me a fibula there. Trust the pregnant skeleton on this one. You smell way better. All musk and yummyness. It fits you.” Her legs shift around him, tightening slightly, and she adjusts herself better on his back.

He smiled at her and chuckled, "You're sweet, Toki~" he purred gently.

His purr felt nice against her front. She buzzed softly to him in turn, and nuzzled closer. “Mhmm... I’m only sweet for you though.” Not really- she was kind and sweet for everyone. Though, everyone else also got some low-key sass from time to time.

"No you're not, you're a wonderful person to everyone you meet.”

“Mmm, true.” Kindness was her inherent trait after all. She shifts, and accidentally bumps her horns to the back of his skull. “Shit- sorry, Pap.”

He blinked and shook his head with a chuckle, "Nah, it's okay!"

“If you’re sure, Pap.” Still, she leans up to kiss the spot she clocked, and then settles down patiently to wait for their stew to be done.

He seemed to be making it by near scratch, as he was working with her on his back for at least an hour.

In that hour, Toki ended up dozing right off, clinging to his shoulders. They completely forgot to get Tenebris his tea- but he would probably survive, given his napping state out in the living room.

She was completely out of it, arms locked around him and soft snores bubbling up from over his shoulders.

Papyrus couldn't stop smiling as he cooked. Despite how their day out had ended, he still found his mouth angled upwards into a content grin. The entire reason for that grin was located on his back. She was so sweet…

Though after enough time had passed, the stew was complete. Leaving it covered to keep it warm, he carried her to the couch and sat her down, before he sat down as well, and pulled her close. Gently clacking a soft kiss onto her head, he murmured softly to her so as not to wake his dad from his nap in the other chair. "I love you so much, Tokiko Nara."

She stirred faintly, nuzzled closer, and settled back down. Aliquam didn’t have the heart to wake her. He’d let her nap until she was content- and then they would go and eat. After all- to quote Toki, ‘having a girlfriend with fire magic had its perks’. And one of those perks, was the ability to rapidly reheat food.

He gently stroked her head until their mutual warmth overwhelmed him, and he fell asleep with her safely tucked in his arms.
The first of April was there before they knew it. The migraines continued to be a thing, and there was nothing they could do about it. But, now that they knew, they could siphon the magic away before it could get too bad. She ended up being pretty well babied for the first several days, much to her amusement. She did understand though- and Toki imagined that if the positions had been reversed, things would have been quite similar.

Passing out was a serious thing, and completely terrifying. So, she made sure to pester Tenebris to drain away the magic whenever her head would hurt worse. They’d found that if she regularly used at least some of her magic, however, it prolonged the need for them to drain away the excess that caused her pain.

April first also meant that Toki was wary as hell. It was literally the one day of the year dedicated to pranks and shenanigans- and even she wouldn’t put it past Papyrus to pull something on her on a day like today. Well… Maybe not Pap. He was too sweet for anything seriously prank-related. She could see him maybe putting a sticky note with something embarrassingly cute on her back, but that was about it.

She personally didn’t have any pranks planned- but pranks had been more her brother’s forte than her own.

It was a surprisingly dry start to April, so Toki was spending the day outside tending to some weeding around the compound. She hadn’t tended to them all winter, and the flowers were infested with weeds of various kinds. She needed the flowers to bloom well, so her bees would have a good supply of honey for the summer.

Dirt clung to the bones of her hands as she dealt with some up-rooted bulb plants. Toki wasn’t alone in the garden though. No, she was exercising her magic. She had several different bees bumbling around her garden, using their larger size and strength to hoist some weeds out of the ground with her. Stripe was with her too, though the large queen was firmly wedged between her horns and seemed to be sleeping.

The harness around the bug pressed awkwardly into her skull, but Toki didn’t mind. They made for pleasant company between the guards that checked in every so often.
The Gaster family was not the only one that was overprotective. The guards checked in often— and would then tattle to Aliquam if she was ‘overworking’ herself, and he would come make sure she took a break. It really was sweet, even if it was a little pesky.

Aliquam was coming into the garden, a gentle smile on his face, he wasn’t coming to worry her, rather had a plate with a sandwich and a glass of lemonade in hand, "Toki." he called to her, carefully stepping between the flowers as he made his way over to her.

The bees flitted over to greet Aliquam, bumping into him like affectionate flaming sausages, before returning to their tasks. One of them lingered, investigating the glass of lemonade for a moment, before attempting to steal a sip from the glass.

Toki lifts her gaze, and waves at him with a smile. She leans back, rubbing her knuckles into her lower back, and beams at him brightly. Stripe waves a lazy leg from atop Toki’s skull. “Hey Ali. Did I lose track of time again?”

He shooed the bee away from the glass with a soft laugh before he knelt by her. "You did. Here, I brought you a PB’n’J and some lemonade. I crisped the bread too, just how you like it~"

Her sockets brightened, and she beamed. She’d been having a real craving for anything involving peanut butter. As he knelt down, she leaned up and gave him a soft kiss. “You are literally the best, like, ever. I’ve had a hankering for peanut butter all morning.” She dusts off her fingers, dry soil falling away from her bones and clinging to her shorts instead, and reaches out to take the plate and glass. She adjusts her kneeling position, and settles for criss-cross instead.

"I love you too~" He giggled, handing her the plate first as she got settled. "How are the twins?" he asked.

“They’re playing hell on my lower back, but they’re doing good. I keep getting these ticklish feelings inside. Fetal quickening I think it’s called. Your dad would know the term.” Sort of faintly like bubbles popping behind her bellybutton- it was going to be a prelude to actual movement later. It was a good sign, for sure. She settles the plate firmly in her lap, the glass on a nearby rock, and takes a big bite out of her sandwich. A moan tugs free at the taste of the creamy peanut butter and the crispy outside of the sandwich. “Shit, yes, this is amazing. They also might be craving peanut butter. Mmm…”

He giggled and lowered himself so he was carefully sprawled on his stomach. Papyrus reached out to caress her stomach with gentle fingers. "My silly Jellybeans," he giggled softly, "Being so hard on momma~"

Toki smiled and lifted the plate out of his way as he pretty much made himself at home in her lap. Munching through her sandwich, Toki used her non-busy hand to guide his fingers to one side of the small swell. God damn, this sandwich tasted amazing. The lemonade that chased it down was like the icing on the cake. “I feel the tickling here. I’d say it’s gas, but I don’t have organs that do that anymore, so it can only be them starting to move. I can’t feel anything from the outside yet, but probably in a couple more weeks, we’ll be able to actually feel them. Mmm… how is it you knew exactly what I wanted to eat? This is just… mmm…” She was probably making a fool out of herself over a sandwich and a drink, but she was with him, so she really didn’t care.

He giggled quietly and shifted as to press his face against her swell, giving a happy murr as he tried to feel for the vibrations of the twins. "I'm your mate. It's my job to know~" he chuckled.

She finishes her sandwich in record time, her magic swirling contently in her middle. Toki sips at her lemonade after making sure her fingers were clean from peanut butter and jelly, and rubs the top of his skull with a soft laugh. “True that, true that indeed. Still, very insightful of you. Mmm… whatever that noise you’re making is, it really tickles.” She giggles.

He giggled quietly and kissed her stomach a few times, "I don’t mean to tickle, nyeh heh heh, but I just love touching you like this," he cooed softly, "You're so soft and warm."

Toki smiled and leaned back slightly so he had better access. She giggles again and tugs her shirt up, obliging him with some bone to flesh contact. “I enjoy your touch,” she thrums, also enjoying her lemonade. Her fingers trace soft lines over his skull, circling around the back. He’d been getting what his dad called sympathy headaches- something about him being in tune with her systems. He didn’t need the actual magic drain- usually he could dump it into her belly in a donation and negate it- but she still felt bad about it. So she rubbed, knowing he probably didn’t have one, but knowing the motion usually felt good. “Soft huh? Certainly wouldn’t have to do with the two little jellybeans blooming in my belly, would it?” She winks down at him.

He cooed happily and pecked her stomach a few times. “Nyeh. Does it matter?” he huffed, "It's still you either way."

“That is very true.” She chuckled. The bubbling feeling continued behind her middle for a time, before it faded off. “Heh… You know, I wonder what they look like…” There were times that she wished ultrasound machines worked on monsters- but they didn’t. Something about the magic that made up monsters messed with some of the delicate hospital machinery.

He looked at her stomach and his gaze softened as he watched the little souls floating in her middle. "They're going to be big and healthy." he purred gently.

“I certainly hope they’ll be healthy. They’re already getting big. I’m showing at fourteen weeks, Pap.” She can’t really crane down to kiss his head- her middle no longer flexes like that- but she does purr for him. “Probably because their daddy is a giant.” She teases.

He giggled gently, his soft laugh fading off slowly. "You're so tiny too" he told her, before nuzzling her, "It's not bad for you is it?” he then asked, a little bit of worry wiggling into his voice.

“What, me being so tiny? I’m actually quite tall for what I was. Plus I’ve got the extra inches from my horns, if that counts.” She giggles softly. ‘I don’t really think it’s bad that I’m much smaller than you.” She had a wide, wide pelvis after all- she could handle what he threw at her. “I mean, yeah it could cause complications with the twins later, but we really don’t know how they’re gonna come into the world until they’re well on their way. We’ll handle it, Pap. I’m made of some pretty tough stuff.”

He sighed and nuzzled her softly. "Well, you know... Father is a doctor, worst case... I ah... I know he could help us if things got bad..."

She gently taps his glabella and offers him a reassuring smile. “There is that, but I don’t think we’ll have a problem. I’m very certain we can bring our little ones in without too much problem. I’m healthy- you’re healthy. They’re healthy. At least, that’s what your Dad has been saying during the checkups. Heh. You and me though, Pap, we’re in this together. We’ll handle what all is thrown at us together.”

"Of course!" he said happily, "I don’t want you to ever think anything else!" he sat up then, and pulled her into a hug, nuzzling his cheek into hers.

He was still here, three months and some odd weeks after the initial conception- she was pretty certain he was going to stay and handle all of this with her. Toki leaned into the hug and nuzzles him back with a soft thrum. “Never.” She assures him. “But you and me, we’ll handle it together. If complications happen, we’ll handle it. Smooth sailing? Definitely handle it. We’ll just be careful, y’know?”

Stripe buzzes on the top of her skull, smooshing her legs against Pap’s skull when it gets close to her seat.

"Of course." he nodded, "Which means we should take care to make sure YOU don’t hurt yourself." he huffed, nuzzling her.

She gave a befuddled sound, and inquired after his comment. “Me? How am I going to end up hurting myself?”

"I don’t know..." he whined softly.

She pats his cheek, and smooches him gently. “Life happens, Pap. I’m a bit of a clutz- I’m bound to hurt myself sooner or later. But, I will be extra careful, and make sure not to try and move the couch on my own if I lose my toe under it again. Sound fair?”

He giggled again and returned the kiss, "Deal." he purred gently, before he sat back, "You want to finish your lemonade?" he then asked.

Toki grins and does, indeed, drain the last of her lemonade. “Mmm… that answer your question?”

She gives him a cheeky grin, gathering the plate and the used cup into a pile on her lap.

The bees buzzing around the plants, in the meantime, have gathered many weeds into their pile. One of the bees is settled on the pile of weeds, and seems to be rapidly dehydrating them with the heat of its fires. The plants were crumbling to dust under its touch.

"Indeed." he replied, before noticing what her bees were doing. He let out a chuckle. "Nyeh heh heh heh, what a way to multitask." he commented, "It’s rather adorable!"

“Aren’t they just?” She watched them for a moment. “They’re quite helpful out here. Of course, Stripe here would rather nap. But she makes a good companion.”

The bee on her skull buzzes at the mention of her name, fat limbs nestling closer to Toki’s bones.

“She's adorable, but I can see why she likes my brother so much." he joked, "She's a little bit on the lazy side, now isn't she?"

“She is.” Toki scoots back, leaning back so she supports her weight with her elbows. “She’s not actually sure why she likes Cae- from what I can get from her thought process, anyways. Maybe it’s because they’re kindred spirits?”

The bee, quite well and done with all of the shifting that the skeleton had done, proceeded to buzz off of her head and settle back down on the exposed green swell of her belly. She sprawled stubbornly across the green flesh, buzzing faintly over her navel.

"And just as keen on protecting the queen while she's at it!" he laughed gently, reaching out to pet the bee.

“I think she was more annoyed that she kept getting jostled.” Toki giggled softly. The bee currently warming her belly buzzed faintly, a happy sound, at his touch. It brought a peal of laughter to Toki, and she struggled not to squirm. “Oh stars, the buzzing tickles!”
"Nyeh heh heh heh!" The laughter was contagious and Aliquam found himself laughing as well, before he reached and gently coaxed the bee onto his hand, "Come here you, and lets not torture Toki with your ticklish buzzing."

Stripe was easily herded into his palm, where in she began to sluggishly trek up his shoulder. She buzzed at him mulishly.

Toki swiped at her sockets, her giggles stirring up a flurry of the strange, bubbling feelings in her belly. “Gods above, that tickled something fierce.” She rubbed her fingers over her middle to soothe the bubbly feeling.

He smiled and reached up to pet the bee's head, "That's a good girl" he cooed happily, before leaning in to gently kiss her side, as her head was too small. Attempting a kiss on her abdomen was weird and dangerous.

Stripe buzzed pleasantly at the affections, her fires curling around his fingers harmlessly.

Toki sat up as she picked up the sounds of shoes slapping across the ground. She rolls her sockets, fingers still soothing her middle, and laughs slightly. Well- it was about time that Cae tried something. “Don’t even try it, Cae.” She couldn’t see who it was over Papyrus’ shoulders. “Your shenanigans can wait until later.”

The sound that comes from behind Aliquam is not a laugh, nor an amused chortle from the portly skeleton. Instead, it’s feminine, and hellishly amused. There is the cock of something that sounds like a gun. “Huh. I guess Joey was right. You really are pregnant, aren’t you? The bosses are going to love seeing this. Letting yourself get fucked by beasts- it’s no wonder you keep so many of them around you, whore. Added my husband to your harem, haven’t you? I wonder who the father even is.”

The sound of a gun cocking immediately has Aliquam on his feet, standing protectively over Toki as he looks in the direction of the voice. "I don’t know who you are, but I request you do not speak to Toki like that. It's very rude" he spoke with a stern tone.

Toki too scrambles to her feet, and peers through the gaps in Aliquam’s arms. Her bees abandon their tasks and flock to her, all of them, even Stripe, taking to the air. They hover around her, wary.

The woman before them had curly brown hair, pulled up in a ponytail. Green eyes glittered at them darkly. She was in a tank top and long pants, displaying the large collection of burn marks on her flesh. The largest of them was around her neck- and burnt into the shape of a familiar small skeletal hand.

Black boots and pants were tinged gray- and flecks of dust scattered in the breeze. There was dust along her gun as well- and Toki recognized that it had a silencer on it. It took her a moment to see who it was- because the last time she had seen her, she had been more plump and many, many times less threatening.

Toki’s eyes lock on the dust. Oh… oh no…

“Really?” The woman offers him a lip-curling sneer, eyes flitting to the bees. She levels her gun at them in a precautionary way. “Your bitch of a master didn’t tell you who I am? After I shattered her arm, tried to cave in that ugly mug of hers, and she burnt the ever loving fuck out of me with her freaky magic bullshit?”

Immediately Aliquam's magic flared up and he summoned a bone that he held in his hand. His primary weapon was at the ready, though it wouldn’t be helpful against a gun. "She is not my master." he growled, before he reached back and firmly tucked Toki behind him. "Who is this woman?" he then questioned his mate his voice unintentionally a growl towards her as he quickly grew defensive.

Toki didn’t even fight being moved. Her sockets were wide and dark- because that… That was monster dust on Vikki’s clothes and gun. She flinches faintly at his growl, but it serves it’s purpose and brings her back. She violently shoves her shirt back down into proper place, and her bees hover closer to her. “That’s Vikki,” She mutters. “Remember I told you about Todd’s wife…? That’s… her.” Except she no longer had the soccer mom look to her.

No… This was not the same Vikki from several months past.

“That’s me indeed,” She offers a wide grin. “Vikki Hanes, at your service once more. Only this time…” She grins, and taps something on her chest. It’s a camera- broadcasting back to her HQ over a live feed. “I’m not alone. Not really. And I’m much, much stronger than I was before. Heh. I’m stronger than you now. I’m here to finish what I started- and to convey a message.”

"...." His eyes narrowed and immediately took a step forward, magic pulsing from his footstep and raising a wall of bones that blocked Toki from view, protecting her in the same motion. "Stay there." he ordered with a growl.

Once she was safe, he shifted his stance; the bone now in both hands as his right eye glowed bright, "And what kind of message is that?" Was his tense question to the woman threatening them.

Toki’s bees didn’t thicken- because she didn’t risk switching her defense into her offense. The ones that fluttered around her were strictly defensive… and did well to keep her informed of the interactions she could no longer see. Some of them flit up to the sky, buzzing loudly in a sound of alarm.

Vikki smiled nice and wide. “Yes, definitely your master’s pet. Guarding her diligently like the dog you are, aren’t you?” Vikki laughs again, and shifts the weapon. The silencer cracks- and she relishes in the pained noise that Toki makes as one of the bees hovering outside of the bone wall explodes into a rain of flaming internals. “Every kill I do makes me feel so much stronger… It’s intoxicating, the power I can feel in my veins. I wonder… how much stronger would you make me if I killed you?”

She aims the gun at Aliquam, and prepares herself to dodge should he lunge. He was larger than her by several feet- she was smaller than even Toki. But she was fast. faster now than ever before. “My message, hm? Heh. Cruelty knows you, Kindness. He knows you, and knows what you are…” She all but purrs. “And you are nothing but a toy for him to break. You and your monster spawn.”

He growled at the human's words, but shook his head, "You don't have to do this." he warned her, "You can prove that humans can have a change of heart. Put. The gun. Down."

“If you’d have said that to me last time, I might have actually listened. It’s cute, how you think that would actually work.” She turns, lines up the shot, and fires at him with a wide grin. She aims for the broad part of his chest- after all, the wolves at the gate had been dropped just as easily. “I don’t think so, beast. Boss has shown me how the world can be- and it is a better world without all of you to taint it.”

In one solid move of his hand, the bone in his grasp takes the bullet instead of his chest, and he sighed softly. A growl followed his sigh, and he gave her a tight look. "So be it. I'm sorry." He then twirled the staff and gave a snarl as he then slammed the head of it into the ground. Magic flew out in a shockwave before waves of bones flew at Vikki.

Vikki was no brave soul. No, she ran and ducked, dodging around the bones and bolting to get around the wall of bones he’d put around one of her primary targets. She found it solid, all the way around- but that didn’t mean she didn’t shoot at any bees she could see.

She relished in the cries of pain from Toki, and the way the human turned monster drew her bees back to her, tightly tucking them behind the barrier of bones.

Vikki grasps for the nearest tool- which is an ax at the base of a pile of wood- and takes it in one hand. She bolts back around, shooting towards his back and trying to dodge any bones he flung at her.

He was twirling the bone now as he effortlessly was able to slide a foot and dodge the bullet, before he grinned and reached out a hand towards her.

Plink

"Nyeh heh heh heh..." He then donned a grin to challenge his brother's, and his gaze sharpened. "You're blue now. That's my attack."

Vikki was weighed down by something- she wasn’t sure what it was. But something in her chest felt heavy, sluggish- like she couldn’t move against the forces of gravity. Still, her soul surged, and she struggled through it, forcing her arm to lift so she could take another shot towards him. She can’t quite aim high enough- but multiple bullets rip for his legs.

Thankfully, being bone, the bullets would tear through his pants and go through to embed into the ground. But one hit enough to crack the bone as it went by and he roared out in pain.

1980/2000HP.

He leaned against the bone he held in hand, having landed the head of it into the dirt, and he growled, before he sent a single surge of magic to numb it as he straightened again. He then extended a hand, then twisted it and brought it up again. Bones flew from the ground, one of them spearing the gun, the other avoiding her hand and arm completely.

“Fuck,” she hissed. The hand wielding the ax lifted, and she made an attempt to swat the bones away from her arm. The gun was useless- shit, it wasn’t even in her hand anymore. She shifted, making an attempt to move. “Why am I so slow?” She snarls, befuddled and beyond angry.

"Because. I turned you blue." he answered, coming closer with his weapon in hand.

Vikki struggled to move- she really did. He had her damn near rooted to the spot. So she forced all of her energy into her arm, and swiped at him with the bladed end of the ax. “Well make me un-blue, so I can kill you,” she snarls. “I’ll rip those disgusting abominations out of her belly and end them. But don’t worry. I’d make suuuure to spread their dust with yours.”

He blocked the swing effortlessly, and used the tip of his bone to tilt her chin up, pressing it into her throat to make his point. "Do not. Threaten. My Children." he growled. The orange in his eyes was now furious, burning what could be considered a bright red. His fangs were bared, emphasizing his long canines as his expression was one of barely restrained rage at her words. And yet, despite his expression showing his true emotions, his words came on a calm tone.

"Surrender now, and this will not end badly for you." he ordered next, pulling his weapon from her throat as he then hit one side and make it spin, sharply swatting the hand that held the axe as to make her drop it.

The ax was dropped, and she was stuck in place, helpless against him. But her face only grinned wider, and she simply smiled up at him. Her eyes were a flinty emerald- the same ones her daughter had. Hers lacked the spark of life- of hope, of compassion. No, they were twisted and jaded now, as were her words. “Your children should have been aborted the moment you found out about them. Quick and easy, a few hits to the middle would have ended them.” She bore her teeth at him. “You haven’t hit me once, coward. End badly for me? Hell, you won’t even fight with the intent to hurt me. A coward like you? You’re just going to lose your kids later anyways. I promise, I’d make it much more… humane… for the little abominations than my boss will.”

The rage that resonated from his soul could even be detected by those lacking magic and he let out an enraged snarl, before he rose his weapon, He then tensed slightly, and he gripped his arm, forcing it back down, just words... they were just words...

"No one will harm my children. Or my mate. Not while I have a soul pulsing in my chest," he growled, "and I don’t intend to let it be snuffed out." he then dropped the bone in his hand, and instead grabbed Vikki by her free arm, he then moved behind her as he twisted it, holding it there tightly. "You are done here," he growled. He kept a tight grip on her soul as well as he retracted the bones, allowing Toki to go free as he then lifted Vikki up off her feet, starting for the front gate.

"Tokiko. Call the police." he ordered her, his tone cold and unraveled, the boiling hot rage suppressed by it, "Tell them that we have caught and apprehended Vikki Hanes."

Toki was quivering slightly where she stood, arms looped protectively about her middle. Only three of her original summons were at her side- Stripe, and two others, were clinging protectively close to her, buzzing and humming loudly. One more was returning- it had gotten away before Vikki could shoot it from the sky. No doubt, it had gone to alarm the guards.

It takes the full calling of her name to draw her out of it- out of just what Vikki had been spouting and absolutely horrifying her with- and she fumbles for her phone in her pocket. It’s pulled out, and she dials the police. Her voice is shaky, as are her hands- and she nearly drops it as she calls the police. It only takes a few words- the mention of Vikki’s name- and then there is officers being dispatched.

Vikki snarls with rage and squirms as best she can. Her fingers claw at his wrists, and she howls her anger loudly. She was foiled- she hadn’t been expecting this blue magic shit. “In the end you’ll all die,” she snarls, “you’ll all die, and I’ll get to watch your dust scatter in the wind. Hell, once I get free, I’ll go piss on your graves. You wont get away. Nowhere is safe from us- we have eyes everywhere. We see all, we know all,” she hisses. “And us humans will rid the world of all abominations, be they born or unborn.”

He held her tightly, her nails doing little to his bone as he carried her towards the front gate. "The only abominations upon this world are those who cannot come to accept those they share the world with. People like that heartless organization. People like you."

“That might be so,” she grins, “But in the world we make when we’re through with animals like you? We will be revered for removing the plague that has befallen us.”

There was a barking call that went out across the village, and the sound of all of the guards kicking into overdrive.

When Aliquam gets to the gate, he will see two piles of armor littered in dust, weapons dropped and discarded.
He knew they would be there and he felt regret swell in his gut, before he shook his head. "Humans without kindness are the plague," he said simply, before he gave a loud whistle, "GUARDS!" he barked out sharply.

The noise of the guards came pounding for them. Several of them let out distinct calls of warning-echoing through the trees to the guards who were patrolling past the perimeter. Calls echoed back-and everyone was on high alert.

Guards on duty and off duty rushed out of the village proper, fur raised and snarls upon their teeth.

Wolfen was among them, and his eyes darkened at seeing the piles of dust, and Aliquam restraining the frothing woman. He was the first to reach them, and his hands came out and closed over her wrists with bruising effectiveness. His hands were large enough to hold both of them in one hand-which let him take her from Aliquam, force her face down into the dirt, and bind her hands tightly behind her back with a length of rope procured from his working belt.

The rest fanned out, taking post and listening for orders.

"Make sure she does not worm away from you, do NOT use violence unless it's absolutely necessary." he ordered Wolfen, "She wants us to act like the monsters they think we are. Do not let her win."

He then looked to a pair of guards, and motioned to the piles of dust. "Have these guards identified and their remains collected to be given to their loved ones." he ordered them. Another guard is also given an order. "Take post and watch for the police, they are on their way." he told him, before he sighed, "I need to go console my mate." he then told them.

He looked to a swift-runner scout, a messenger among the guard, "Stay with the lookout, come find me as soon as the police are spotted." and with that, he was on his way back to the house, running in a full sprint.

The guards moved as ordered. Training really had paid off- but not enough for the two who now lay dead.

Toki was where she’d been left, though she wasn’t really doing anything. She still had her arms curled around her middle, shoulders hunched up. She was in a distinctly defensive position, her four bees buzzing agitatedly around her. Her sockets were dark- and she was lost to complete and utter terror.

HAM knew. HAM knew who she was, what she was. HAM was lead by Cruelty. Cruelty knew about her children. And they… And they… They wanted to do…

Walking closer, Aliquam began to hum gently to catch the bee’s attention as to not startle them. And once close enough, he gently spoke, "Toki?"

The bees buzzed louder in response, but had seen him coming for a ways off. They parted, but did not disappear. No, they flitted around them, broadening their range as they took up a defensive position.

Toki however lifted her gaze to Papyrus. Her sockets beaded with silent tears. “They know…” She whispers. “They know… They… wanted to… Oh god Pap, Cruelty, the anti-heart, oh god, they know about me and now they know about the babies-”

He moved to his knees before her and pulled her into a tight embrace, tucking her against him protectively. "Shh... shhh... It's okay, Toki... It's okay... They won't touch you or the twins...” His voice tightened and darkened, and he held her tighter. “I won't let them.”

Toki remained on her feet, but she slumped slightly into him. She was trembling in his grasp, arms still clinging tightly to her middle. Tears came, hot and heavy, and her eyes blossomed back into color, bright and distressed as warbling sobs escaped her into his shirt. Shock left her shaky and trembling- even though she wasn’t even the one to fight. No- she’d had to stand by and listen, feeling her bees be slaughtered by her bullets, and listen to her speak. “She got in, Ali.” She whispered, voice cracking. “She got in, and… and others could do the same… She had… Dust on her shoes and she wanted to…” Her voice fades off into more sobs.

Vikki could get in.

Who’s to say others couldn’t just kill their way in too?

"Shh.. shh..." he hushed her still, before he picked her up, cradling her close. "Shh... I'm here..." he told her firmly, "That's enough. Don't think about it. You'll scare the twins..."

They were already doing the bubble thing in her belly, reacting to the stress of her soul. She didn’t think they could get any more scared than that. Her sockets burned slightly, the force of her glow almost blinding as she shifted her grip. One arm came to cling to him, and she shuddered and shook. “I can’t stop thinking about it,” she whispers roughly. “I… I can’t...” Toki simply buries her face against him and cries. “He knows, Pap! Cruelty knows!” Cruelty was apparently leading HAM too, if Vikki was honest with what she said.

Emotions had been on the fritz for her anyways with her pregnancy, and she and her babies and her mate had just been threatened with a gun- and they had been given a message from the head of HAM himself.

It was little wonder why she was a distressed ball of panic as she clung to him.

He lifted her up without effort as he rose to his feet, gently squeezing her to comfort her. His leg throbbed with the additional weight being supported by it, but it was hardly something he couldn’t handle. "I'm going to call my father, he'll come and get you. I have Royal Guard duties to attend to, it's very important I see to them... But Father will take you, and will be with you until I get back, okay?" he murmured into her neck.

Toki managed a shaky nod. She still had her phone clutched in her hand- the one pressed to her belly- and managed to hand it over as she trembled. Tenebris was safe- so was Ali, but he… he no doubt had remains to collect, and… and deal with Vikki. “O... Okay...” She whispered roughly.

He slowly took the phone, and dialed, holding the phone to his ear.

“Yo.” His elder brother answered on the second ring, having apparently picked up Tenebris’ phone. “Cae here. Whatchu need Pops for, Toki?"

Caeruleus would work just as good for this particular task. "Are you busy, Sans?"

"Pap?" He sounded confused, but that faded off as he took in his brother’s tone of voice. "No. What's up?"

"This is an emergency, I need you to get Toki to Father as soon as possible. There has been an incident, and I still need to handle it."

“Shit... Is she okay?”
"... No Sans. We’re out back in the court yard."

He didn't even need to hang up before there was the sound of Caeruleus appearing, his slippers slapping against the ground.

"Tokes!" The older brother padded up and reached out, checking over his honorary sister with a careful inspection before looking at Papyrus.

Papyrus hung up the phone and pressed it into Toki’s pocket when she failed to take it. "I need you to get her to Father," he said again.

"You can count on me, Pap..." Sans could see it, the hellfire that was in Aliquam's eyes, masked by the worry and love for his mate. It wasn’t an expression that he often got to see. Something really, really had pissed his brother off.

The taller skeleton gave his mate a soft kiss, and then slowly set her down in Cae's arms. She shifted her hold onto the older brother easily, curling up in his grasp. Papyrus watched her until Sans was gone, the sound of displaced air cracking loudly following their disappearance.

Howls cut the air, the wolves communicating out to him. The Police had arrived.

Turning, Aliquam took a deep breath and started back to the main gate, looking around upon arrival, before looking to the officers who showed up.

The cops were there indeed. It was Officer Sheppard and his partner. His partner was down with Wolfen, attempting to keep the shrieking banshee of a woman still enough for them to get the cuffs on her instead of the rope. The large wolf’s hands were more detrimental than helpful, given their size. They made it hard to get the cuffs on without letting her loose.

They looked like they had her under control though.

Two guards were still collecting the remains.

Mark caught sight of Aliquam- and took note of the rip in the monsters pants, and the anger that lurked in the orange hellfire of his eyes. He was a little bit intimidated, because whatever that woman had done had brought out something in the taller skeleton that spoke of impending doom. But he stepped closer to him regardless, giving him a firm once over. He had a tear in his pants- but he looked like he had fared well. “Your guards were unclear,” he says softly, “As to what happened… But those piles of dust… She’s been screaming that all of you deserve to die, so I think I know what happened, but… Son, will you clear it up for me? Give me a concise story?”

"She tried to get the drop on me and Toki, came armed with a weapon that I disabled. It's in our backyard. She's traumatized my mate with threats on the lives of my unborn children, and though the apprehending was easy enough, I was wounded." he explained calmly, before he sighed, and summoned a bone to lean on. His leg was starting to hurt. "Apparently... she killed her way to get in." he sighed, looking over at where the guards were carefully collecting the dust.

Mark gave him a concerned look. “If you got hurt, son, you need to sit down. I can see you favoring that leg… is Miss Nara alright?” He shifts to offer Aliquam a hand so the monster could sit instead. “I see... I’m sorry you lost good monsters, Papyrus. We’ll need to collect the weapon as evidence, as well as any bullets that may have been fired- but this woman isn’t going to get out. Ever.”

There was a shout of pain from Wolfen as a steel-toed boot slammed into his mouth. Vikki flailed hard, and dislocated her thumb as she ripped a hand out of the cuff. She forcibly rolled, grabbing the partner’s gun from his hip holster in one swift motion- and turns to fire back at Mark and Papyrus.
The bullet flies true- and clips the police officer in the upper arm as she cocked back to prepare another shot.

Aliquam tensed as he heard the gunshot and like that, his mind lit alive again. He lunged, abandoning his cane as he grabbed Mark and pulling him out of harms way, summoning bones to disable her once more.

BLAM!

This one sank into his shoulder and as he screamed in pain, his magic surged to act upon his order.

Bones flew from the ground underneath Vikki. But unlike last time, he had not been able to keep true to his aim.

Pointed bones stabbed through her extended arm. Her leg. Her chest.... And as Papyrus looked up, he saw blood running down the final bone that had speared through her head, from under her jaw, right out the top of her head.

She had been killed instantly.

"..." He slowly released Mark... and he took a step back, his eyes widening, "... N-No... I... I didn't mean... I... Oh god... What have I done...?" he whispered, his hands covering his mouth. He wanted to look away, he wanted to so badly... But he was frozen. Unable to look away from the bone that was now stained red with chunks of gore clinging to it.

Mark had stumbled when he’d been shoved, but he recovered well enough. His shoulder ached- but it had only nicked him in passing. Though... he couldn’t say that the sight he turned around to didn’t curdle his stomach just a little bit. From the one on her skull, he could see bits of her brain matter had been blown right out the back with the force of the strike. The ones shoving through her body had broken through her fragile human bones, dragging with them spires of ruptured organs and blood.

She was very, very dead.

“Shit...” he hissed softly. The tall skeleton seemed lost in the sight, and despite the ache in his arm, Mark jerked him around to face the other way. Other squad cars pulled up. “Papyrus- you did what you had to. She took an officer’s weapon.” And he could see a recording device still active on her chest. “You defended us- and yourself. Sometimes it happens, kid. It’s hard- and I hope you never have to do it again.”

His partner was already up and at the other squad cars.

Mark swallowed slightly. “This is going to be a mess. Is this the first time you’ve killed? You don’t... look like you can honestly handle questions right now.”

Once turned around, Pap looked down at him, "I'm sorry..." he whispered, "I didn't want to kill her...!" Every word was strained. He was a royal guard member, but never before had he needed to resort to such means, Monsters were always so peaceful, they never needed to be killed...

“You killed in self defense, kid.” He soothed. “... Yeah, you’re in no mindset to be answering questions. Okay... Okay. Can you... de-summon the bones? We’ll... handle the rest of that while you go see to those bullet wounds okay? I can cover for now. You... Well, you definitely need rest- we can get statements from the guards.”

His magic deactivated immediately and he felt like he was going to be sick as he heard the sound of the body falling to the ground.
An arm went around his stomach while the other covered his mouth as he made a horrible retching sound behind his hand. His sockets flinched shut, and he struggled not to heave right then and there.

Mark’s eyes widened, and he put a hand to the skeleton’s back, trying to stay out of the splash zone. “Oh boy.” That was a grisly noise to hear from something that had no guts.

"Papyrus!" There was suddenly Sans' voice as he appeared nearby, running closer until he stopped, freezing at the sight before him.

His younger brother, HP now at 1825, sobbing and looking close to purging his magic...

The body... Bone spears disappearing into the earth...

It reminds him of the times when there's a spray of blood as bones spear through the blue and pink jumper. Of brown hair askew with the sudden angle as there's an expulsion of blood from both the human's puncture wounds and their mouth.

It reminds him of bloodstains on the points of the bones, and how it runs down the pillars of bone to pool into the tile.

The knife in their hand clatters to the ground as the child's final breath is drawn.

A small red heart that cracks. Then shatters.

His eyes widened as he shook himself from the memory and immediately shortcut to Aliquam's side. He looped his arms around his younger brother, pulling him down into a tight hold.

It caused Papyrus to fall to his knees, but he didn't care as he immediately hid his face in his brother's chest.

"It's okay, Papyrus..." Cae looked down at him, stroking his fingers soothingly over the distressed skeleton’s skull, before he glanced up at Mark.

Mark grimaced. “He killed her when she shot at us. She winged me- and caught him in the back. I don’t know if it just went through his ribs or not. He... He really needs some time. I can cover for you guys here- take him somewhere that he can calm down and be healed. Bullets suck.” His own shoulder was weeping and staining his uniform, but some bandages would fix his problem.

"I owe you one." Cae replied softly, hugging his brother tighter and taking him away from the gruesome scene.

They landed outside the Gaster household. Papyrus immediately shoved away from Sans and stumbled to his feet. He lurched to bushes when he could no longer hold the sick feeling back. One hand kept a hold on his stomach as he hunched over and threw up into the bush, purging his magic roughly in a wave of sticky orange goop.

"Shit... Pap..." He never killed a human before... He was always so careful... how the hell... "Pap, it's okay," he slowly came over and rubbed his back to help soothe him.

"I-I'm sorry, Sans... I'm so sorry..." the younger whispered, choking and spitting to clear his mouth. "I didn't mean to..."

"I know... I know... Just... Get that out of your system, and we'll get you and Toki cleaned up, okay? Pops is already taking care of her, so let your big bro take care of you.”
Papyrus gave a slow nod, before another retch took his attention away from his brother. He heaved again into the brush, orange magic staining his teeth a ghastly hue as the puddle of sludge grew at his feet.

Cae grimaced, but rubbed his back in soothing circles. It helped that he had some practice helping Toki with her morning sickness, so he just kept rubbing as Aliquam sobbed between heaves of orange goop. “Better out than in, Pap.”

After Papyrus had purged the magic gained from what had been his own cooking, and recovered enough that he wasn’t dry-retching every few seconds, Sans walked him into the house. He could hear an ethereal sound that played delicate notes on seamless vocals- and he identified it as his father singing.

Pops must be singing to Toki to soothe her... he was always good at that Sans slowly sat Papyrus down, and let him take a moment as he got him some water.

Upstairs, Tenebris was humming and singing tenderly to his Son's mate, cradling her gently as he sang an old song of monsterkind's past to calm her mind and settle the twin souls inside her.

Toki had stopped sobbing a while ago, but she was limp and listless as she was cradled. Her head was curled towards his chest, sockets still glowing with upset, and tiny tracks of tears trickling down her cheeks. His room was just the same as before- and the simplistic style of it left her nothing to stare at. So his chest worked, and did well to absorb her drizzling tears.

She blinked slowly, very slowly. The music was soothing. She had her fingers folded over her middle, doing her best to focus on the sounds that Tenebris was making, and not the thoughts that kept plaguing her. The little souls in her belly had stopped moving a while ago, the bubbling sensation fading off as they obviously tired themselves out during their quickening.

Toki shifted, hearing the front door open vaguely over the melodious sound of the big monster singing. She wasn’t sure who it was- couldn’t discern that much details- and found herself unwilling to move. She pressed her face to his chest again and shivered softly.

Tenebris had heard it but did not stop singing until the song was over. He slowly moved and laid her on his bed, covering her up by the lush blanket. "Rest. I'll be right back, okay?" he murmured.

By the end of the song, most of her tears had ended up drying. Now her face was simply stained with the remnants. Toki clutched the blanket to her like a lifeline and nodded faintly. "Okay…” She muttered softly, shivering just slightly as she curled up tightly.

He stroked her head gently, "I'll bring you something to drink when I get back." he murmured, before he walked out, leaving her in the darkened room. He hoped she would get some rest, especially when he heard Aliquam's drying sobs from downstairs.

"Aliquam... Caeruleus." He spoke as he came downstairs, going immediately to his sons' side. He took Aliquam into his hold to comfort him as Sans took this chance to explain what he knew.

Once his eldest son was done, Tenebris nuzzled the top of his youngest’s skull. "... I see..." he sighed, "This is awful... I'm so sorry, Aliquam..." he said softly.
Rest she would not be getting. No- as it got quiet, she picked up on the sound of Papyrus’ sobbing. She shifted slowly, and clamored out of the bed. The blanket isn’t taken- no, she simply fiddles with the hem of her shirt, and pads to the door. Pap… Pap crying was not good.

He’d be at her side if the positions were reversed- and she was damn well going to be there too.

Toki makes it to the stairs before she makes noises, and that’s just a quiet sniffle of her own. “I… heard crying…” She murmurs softly. Her eye lights flick over the three of them as she descends, and she scrubs her hand over her cheek quietly.

"There was an accident..." Tenebris explained gently as he stroked Aliquam's head, "Aliquam is very shaken from it..." he then sighed, nuzzling his boy comfortingly.

"If you want to come down, Tokes... S’not like he's gonna bite." Cae attempted to joke to try and lift the mood.

Cae got an upturned quirk of the corner of her mouth for his efforts, but it was gone as soon as she hit the bottom of the stairs. Toki nods to them- but doesn’t say anything else though- and simply goes to sit with him. She doesn’t say anything- doesn’t press for what happened, because sometimes doing so right after was not the thing to do. Instead she loops her arms around him as best she can, and holds him like he would hold her.

Her body buzzes just faintly, a soft, subsonic sound to try and comfort him.

While staying in his father's hold, Aliquam turned and hugged Toki tightly, hiding his face in her shoulder. He didn’t say anything- he simply cried.

"Toki. You and Aliquam both have had a long day. I want you both to stay here tonight. " Tenebris insisted, not going to take no for an answer.

Toki didn’t have it in her to tell him no. Instead she simply shifted, cradling him close and tucking his skull gently into her neck. Her hand rubbed the top of his head, and her sockets closed tiredly. When they opened again, they were glowing gently to help soothe him in time with the low buzzing.

She did reply to Tenebris though. Her voice was quiet, slightly rough from crying, but thankfully steady. “Thank you. That… That sounds fine to me.” She says quietly. “I don’t think either of us are… are good to go home right now.”

The stimulation was soothing to Papyrus, and the young Skeleton found himself starting to grow calm in the sound of his mate's buzzing, like a troubled worker being soothed by his queen.

Tenebris reached and gently stroked Toki's head, smiling at her gently, "You're welcome to stay here as long as you need to... Quod nostrum est tibi."

Toki leaned into the head strokes quietly, her sockets glowing even as she closed them. She kept up the buzzing- his calm was helping her calm. It was a good symbiosis. She murmured to the biggest monster quietly as she continued to soothe her mate. “I don’t know what that means, but… thank you.” She murmurs weakly. Her arms tighten lightly around Pap, and she nuzzles her head to his.

“Thank you…”

"What's ours is yours, Toki." he purred gently, slowly releasing Papyrus, "Sans... Come with me to the kitchen, let's leave them be."

"Sure thing, Pops..."
The two monsters stood and walked to their kitchen, leaving Papyrus and Toki alone.

"... Toki... I... have an odd request..."

Toki listened to them go. She shivered slightly, and turned her attention to Papyrus. “What request?” She asks softly.

"I've seen... that bees like to swarm..." he murmured, "When we've rested, and you think that your magic has replenished by then... could we rest in a swarm?" he asked. "I... Admittedly... Have come to love the sound their wings make..."

“I can handle that now.” She answers softly. “I didn’t use much magic...” She murmurs. She buzzes gently to him, and nuzzles him softly. “Think we can fit in your old bed...? Her fingers brush over his shoulders, and she frowns slightly as her fingers brush a hole in the fabric. “Ali...? Are... you hurt?”

He winces slightly as he comes to remember and looked at his shoulder, "I... I had forgotten about that..." he murmured, "I... I got shot..."

Her finger brushes what feels like a bullet mushroomed into his scapula. Her hand flinches back, and she glances to the kitchen without hesitation. “Tenebris! Pap got shot!” Yes, that might have been tattling- but like hell was she going to let him wait for the monster equivalent to adrenalin to wear off.

"Owch..."

Though the call immediately had Tenebris coming back from the kitchen, having obviously abandoned what he was doing. "Shot?" He asked.

“Sorry, Pap... He’s got a bullet lodged in his shoulder.” She says softly. “I... don’t know if he got hit anywhere else.” She admits quietly. Toki waves her hand to show where she felt the bullet.

He knelt down and reached, carefully looking at the wound. He got up and grabbed his medical kit from nearby, bringing back a pair of tweezers. He carefully moved the tweezers into the hold in his shirt and caught the bullet, pulling it out carefully. Aliquam let out a soft whine, but it was only once as Tenebris smiled at him, before he had an idea, and he got up again, "Toki... Do you know if you possess healing magic?" he asked. “There is nothing we can do but aid the bone in healing on it’s own- it will take time to fully heal and set.”

“I don’t think I do. I can relax with the fire magic, but... Not heal.” Not anything instinctual. But she did pulse her magic into her hand, using the heat to soothe over where Tenebris had yanked out the bullet in an attempt to at least lessen the pain.

Though it wasn't perfect healing magic, Aliquam seemed to relax. "It will do. I want to give this to the officers before they leave, I’ll be back." he told her, before he hurried outside.

Cae soon came out of the kitchen with a small tray; on it was some tea that Tenebris had started for them.

Toki kept up the heat based magic, and kept Ali tucked close. Her body temperature kicked up a few notches, acting like a living heating pad. She shot Cae a tired look. “Tea?” She questioned softly.

"With honey." he replied with a soft grin, "It's not Pop's Orange Blossom, but he knows it will help you both calm down."

Toki perks slightly- because the honey they had here was the stuff she’d sent underground so long
Her sockets brighten a bit, and she nods quietly. “It’ll help,” she murmurs. She keeps one hand on Pap to keep the heat helping soothe him, and shifts. She can’t exactly wiggle free of Aliquam’s grip on her. “Hey, Pap? Cae’s got some tea… Think you can drink some?”

He nodded slowly. "Y-yes.... yes..."

“Okay…” She shifted then, and pulls away. She doesn’t leave his side- no, she stays fairly well pressed to him, and gives Cae a largely tired look. Silently, she reaches out for a cup. She wasn’t all that thirsty, but the tea would help calm some of the lingering shakes clinging stubbornly to her fingers.

After stirring in a small spoonful of honey, he offered it to her, ”You know, you two are really brave.”

“Paps is.” She agrees gently. She takes the tea and sips it slowly, waiting until Ali drank from his too. It was hot, but good and sweet and everything that she apparently needed from her drink.

Aliquam took a slow drink, but sighed gently

"You're brave too, Tokes.” Cae chuckled softly, "Don’t undermine yourself."

She shakes her head but does neither agree nor disagree. She instead sips her tea quietly, eye lights tiredly resting on Cae’s slippers as she leans into Paps to encourage him to relax with his drink. “If you say so, Cae.” She muttered. She’d dissolved into a sobbing mess- and Pap had to handle the fallout. She was hardly brave. Toki had frozen up and had been essentially useless against Vikki- and against whatever had traumatized him so. No- Toki was not brave. Brave was Papyrus- he was her brave heart.

Papyrus nuzzled close with a slowly growing smile, and wrapped an arm around her, giving a deep breath, before he sighed and took a drink of his tea.

Toki buzzed a little bit louder, the sound humming out from somewhere deep in her chest. She leaned into him, soothing him with her glow and her sounds as she soothed herself with tea. She finished her tea quickly, the hot liquid warming her from the inside. She didn’t really take the time to savor it- but it was still good and helped some. “Thanks, Cae.” She says softly. “Heh… When Paps is done drinking, think it’d be okay if we just… crashed for a bit…?”

"Sure thing. Pops said that you could use his bed." Cae answered.

With her soothing buzzing, it wasn’t long until Aliquam finished his own tea, now looking down at Toki tiredly.

“That’s nice of him. I don’t think we’d fit in Ali’s bed- and I don’t want to lay on him with his shoulder like that.” She glances up to Aliquam, and rubs a hand over her cheek. She’s still got teartracks stained into her bones, but the soft smile that quirks at her mouth helps ease some of those. “Are you ready to rest some?” She asks gently.

He looked at her and gave a nod. "Yes, Toki" he replied softly, "I’d want nothing more than just to rest with you right now." he murmured.

Whatever had happened out there had him horribly upset, she knew. Toki heaved a soft sigh, and gently wiggled free of his grasp. “Okay. C’mon. Need a hand up, love…?" The affectionate nickname escaped without her meaning to, but it felt good to assure both of them that they were okay.
"Yes please." he smiled up at her and favored his wounded leg as he got up. "Nnnh."

Toki shifted and planted herself under his arm on his wounded side, shifting her body to take his weight, sort of like a living crutch. “Okay, mark that down for two wounds.” She mutters. More fire magic should dull the wound enough for him to hobble with her. “Okay, we go at your pace. Unless Cae would like to teleport us to the top of the stairs?” She shoots the elder brother a pointed glance.

Cae held his hands up in a passive gesture to appease her, and then came over. "I'll give you a lift, okay?” he chuckled.

“Thanks, Cae.”

Once he takes them to the top of the stairs, Toki has to take a moment to get her balance- and then she’s guiding Aliquam gently back for the room she had left earlier. She eases the door open, and carefully guides him in. The large bed would suit them well.

He sighed softly as he limped to the bed, slowly attempting to kick off his shoes before they reached the bed.

Toki didn’t let him. She guided him to sit, and then knelt to remove his shoes for him. Once his feet were bare, she helped him lay back. “Do you need anything before I join you?”

He shook his head, and simply looked at her. "You."

Her. That’s all he needed. She smiled softly, and proceeded to do just that. She clamored in, carefully guiding his father’s blanket up around them. She snuggled into his side, body intertwining with his as best she possibly could. She nestled up close and shut her eye sockets contently.

There were a few moments where all she did was suck in his scent and just… bask in him. Slowly, she uncorked the stopper to her magic, and let it flood him, and the room.

From the magic crawling on the walls, bees appeared, lazily fluttering out and filling the open air with the soft, melodious sound of wings.

He had felt nice as he lay down with Toki and for a moment things were all right. Then the humming... he took a deep breath and smiled gently. This was perfect.

He nuzzled close to Toki, and as he slipped into a more peaceful rest, he could feel the warmth of the bees blanketing them both. He took a deep breath, and just before he surrendered to slumber, he exhaled the softest phrase.

“I love you.”
They stayed with Tenebris for several days. They eventually migrated to Papyrus’ old room, and made his old bed fit. The police had come and talked to Aliquam quite often, but did not bring him in. It turned out that the entire incident had been filmed- and it was enough to clear him of any charges that might have come up for what he did.

News of what happened to Vikki appeared over practically every news station- so Toki knew she was dead, but not how it had happened. She assumed that, well, Vikki probably turned on the police and gotten shot. There were endless possibilities. Over the news there were also lots of HTM’s that were starting to go missing. Kids, adults, elderly- they were being taken.

People were suspecting HAM.

A week after the incident, found them back in their house, waiting anxiously for Undyne to arrive. The fish monster had been stuck traveling at the pace of her guards- because after the third ‘attack’ from what was obviously HAM, the king was done with HAM getting the jump on them. The loss of two more lives- both of the guards lost had been unmated- was enough to warrant more extreme measures.

Undyne, as captain of the guard, was being sent to Nara Village to oversee the more rigorous training of the guards there, along with adding more official Royal Guard’s to the roster. The completion of the school and next living district left plenty of space for them to formally move in, and they were due to arrive, alongside more monsters, to the village sometime during this day.

Toki was certainly relieved for extra protection. The house felt… almost dangerous, with how close it was to the entrance of the village. But the house wasn’t moving- and she wasn’t going to even bother demolishing it and trying to have it rebuilt before she grew bigger. This was her home, damn it all. If anything, she’d put in locking gates over the entrance to the village, even if that felt like it would make the open compound seem like a prison. That was the last thing she really wanted…

Though… What she really wanted was to know what had happened to Papyrus. Everyone was keeping it very, very tight lipped. It was something that he had to tell her himself, they’d told her. She understood that- but she… really did want to know what made him wake up in tears, and be inconsolable for hours, or wake up being violently ill.

It had been one such morning- he’d woken up super early in the morning sicker than she had been during her worst days of morning sickness- and she’d promptly hustled him to the couch so he could get more sleep once he’d stopped hurling. She’d left a trash bin near the couch in case he got a nightmare while she wasn’t there, turning on the television and setting the television channel to something humorous and relaxing to give him some background noise. Stripe had been left there too, nestled against his neck where she buzzed soothingly to him to help him sleep.
Toki had then gone to clean up the mess that had been made in the bathroom upstairs, and then gone to do house chores while he slept. That’s how she spent the early hours of her morning, while Aliquam napped on the couch with Stripe.

He slept better with the soothing buzzing of her bees- and even if it was exhausting to her, she was damn well going to let him get the sleep he could. He dealt with her nightmares when she had them- and she loved him. It was the best that she could do, until he confided in her what had happened to him- and with Vikki.

It was well past noon when she finally stopped doing house chores, leaving Papyrus on the couch amidst his nap, and instead took her paperwork out to the front porch and settled down in the sunshine. She had to get the papers for Undyne and the royal guards done, along with the seventy civilians that were coming under her guardianship.

There was a lot that she needed to do- and not as much time to get it done.

"Toki!" Was a familiar bark of a voice not long after she had gotten settled to work.

A familiar flare of red hair on a blue-scaled head was walking closer, but there was fire in Undyne's yellowed gaze. "Who the fuck hurt you? I swear to god if they show their mug here again-" she growled, popping her knuckles. Her fins flared widely, and she bore sharp, sharp teeth with a snarl. Her demeanor changed completely upon approaching the deck, however. "How're you feeling? How's Papyrus?"

The aggressive approach had Toki mulishly tucking her chin, knees tightening reflexively and guarding her middle. She arched a tired brow up at the big fish, and patted the floor next to her in a silent request for the high-strung royal guard to join her.

Behind her, Toki could see the caravan arriving. They were heading straight through the front of her compound, guiding the carts back towards the rest of the village so they could get their things moved into their new homes.

Toki took her time in replying, organizing her papers before she sighed, legs dropping from their defensive position. She crossed them, resting the paperwork in her lap, and looked to Undyne. “Quiet, please. Pap is sleeping. He’s… had it rough.” She answers softly. “It was a long night.” She doesn’t answer how she’s feeling- because she’s tired and there’s nothing to be done for it. “I’m not hurt. Pap was- but he’s healing up decently now.” No one had said anything about Vikki- and the rain that had come the days after had covered anything she might have learned from going close to the front gate. She knew that she was dead- but no one would tell her how or why. Or what her death had done to Aliquam, really.

"Damn it." she huffed as she leaned against the banister instead of taking a seat. "How bad is he?" she then asked.

Toki tapped her pen idly against the paperwork in her lap. “He wakes up in a panic, and sometimes his dreams make him sick.” She says softly. “I don’t… know why. No one has told me anything about what happened. He’s sleeping right now- it was a bad morning, and he needs his sleep.”

"There's only one thing I know that could traumatize someone like that." She murmured.

Toki pursed her teeth together and sighed through her nasal cavity. She shifts, and resumes working on Undyne’s file. As curious as she is, Toki shakes her head and sighs harder. “I’ve been being told to wait until he’s ready to talk about it. He was patient with me- I owe him that much too. I just wish he didn’t suffer with them.” His nightmares left him in such a panic that it hurt for her to see him like
The fish woman nodded quietly. She sighed heavily. "You think I could go in and see if he's awake?" She asked.

“So long as you go quietly.” Toki nods softly. She taps her finger against the front door. “He’s in the living room. Just… go carefully. Stripe is with him, and she will probably not be nice to you if you if you startle her.” Her bees were on the aggressive side when being spooked now, and did not take well to being snuck up upon. Tenebris had nearly gotten swarmed when he’d spooked them by peeking into his room to check on Papyrus and Toki.

She nodded. Undyne entered the house and sighed gently. She padded to the living room. "Pap…?" she said his name quietly, "You up?" there was no reply and she sighed softly, coming into the home before kneeling by Papyrus to check him over, "Shit, Pap..." she sighed softly.

While Toki had remained outside, trusting the Captain of the guard with her boyfriend, Stripe was not quite as passive. She remembers the fish woman and how she'd charged at her hive queen- and that was not quite fully trustworthy with her queen’s chosen mate. The bee wiggles out from between his skull and his shoulder, and buzzes her wings in a warning towards the shape that is leaning over Aliquam.

"Easy. He's my friend, I’m just making sure he's okay." Undyne told the bee, less afraid than she had been before. "Toki told me something happened..."

That didn’t mean that the buzzing didn’t increase, and the more the flames of fur that made up the Queen’s mane didn’t blaze up. She buzzed stubbornly, giving another warning. This was her queen’s mate- and she would keep him safe and protected and calm. Though she did move, patting the skeleton’s cheek with an affectionate buzz.

At being gently patted, Pap shifted and took a soft breath, before his eyes opened. He blearily looked around. "Mmhh...?"

Undyne gave him as soothing of a grin as she was able to do, one of her brows twitching as the damned bee woke him. He was supposed to be resting. Agh. “Hi, Pap. So, ah… How you doin’ with everything, punk?”

He slowly looked up at her, before he sighed and lowered his gaze again, "I... I did a horrible thing, Undyne... And... I can't forget it..." he whined, "I keep closing my eyes... and I see it... and it's... oh god." he covered his face, trembling, "I... I didn't mean to..."

She reaches out and tugs his hands into her own, making it so he can’t hide. She gives him a firm look. “I know, Pap. I know. I got the gist of it from Cae when he called. This… is part of the reason I did not want you in the Royal Guard. We, as the Guard, have to kill from time to time. You are… very kind.”

He wasn’t hard enough to be able to kill what he needed to as a guard. She sighs through her teeth. “I’m not going to lie- it’s going to be with you for the rest of your life. Stars know, mine linger with me.” It might not have affected his LV, but that didn’t mean that he didn’t suffer internally from it. “But… talking helps.” She admits softly. “Finding someone to be a support pillar. Alphys is mine- and I am hers.”

He looked up, and then he sniffed softly and tugged his hands free so he could rub his eyes. "C-Could I talk to you too? I... I don’t want to tell Toki..."
In a moment of gentle affection, she took his skull between her hands and dabbed the beads of tears from his eyes. “I’m here for all of my guards.” She says softly. “I’m also here for all of my friends. Of course you can talk to me, Pap. But… your girl- she’s pretty worried about you. I didn’t tell her anything- so… the only way she’s going to know is if you tell her, Pap. She told me that herself.”

She gives him a snaggle-toothed grin, and blinks at him. “She loves you. When you’re ready to let her in, she’ll love you even after you tell her.”

He sniffs quietly and doesn’t tug from her hands. "Heh... I... I know it was an accident... but I can't stop imagining it... it was awful... Every time I close my eyes, all I can think about is that... scene..."

“Some things can’t be unseen, Pap.” Her webbed fingers spread over his cheeks, and they’re cool to the touch. She doesn’t twitch as the easily irate fire bee investigates her fingers. Her single golden eye stares at him firmly, but gently. She knows quite well that some things cannot be unseen. She has been the captain long enough to have taken at least one human soul before. One did not un-see the limp, bloodied body of a child as it gurgled and cried for its mother at the end of a spear. “But you’re not alone. I’m here to talk to. You can talk to all of us. We’re here for you.” She murmurs. “When they get bad, try to focus on something else. Pick something easy- something you can fill your head with. For the longest time, I used memories of teaching you how to cook.” Now Alphys was her center when she needed to be yanked from traumatic thoughts.

"... Her bees." he replied quietly, sockets half-lidded as he stared at her.

“She sure is.” Undyne retracts her hands, but remains crouched in front of the couch. She watches the bee for a while, and then hums softly. “Some of that might be bleeding over from Toki, I think. Summons are weird. They feed emotions and thoughts and some instincts back and forth… I don’t really get the idea of all of that sciency shit myself. Fuhuhu! But seriously, Pap. You ever need to talk about it- come find me. But, uh… I’d work on building up the bravery to tell Toki too. Keeping secrets in a relationship isn’t good.” It had taken Frisk prodding at Alphys for the dinosaur to tell Undyne about the Amalgamates. That had been a huge, huge secret to discover, and yeah, she’d been low-key hurt that Alphys hadn’t trusted her with it without having to be forced into a corner. But they’d gotten over that hurdle, and were quite happily still together.

"Yeah..." he slowly sat up and held his shoulder gently as he looked at her, "I… Honestly did the best I could…"

“You did.” She agreed gently. “You did what you did- and I think it was for the best. She can’t get away now. Taking a life is hard- and it should never get easier- but sometimes that is the only option.” Now the only thing they needed to worry about was HAM proper.

He nodded in agreement and leaned back with a soft sigh. He contemplated the ceiling for a moment, before huffing slightly. "Undyne... I... I want to tell Toki." he spoke at last.
“You do?” She blinked, pleasantly surprised. “Well damn. You’ve got bigger balls than Asgore- it took me months to tell Alphys some of the shit I’ve done. Very proud of you, Pap. I’m all in support of you telling her.”

"Just... please stay and help me... please?"

The big fish monster shifts on her haunches and nods. “Of course. I don’t mind being a third party.” And as much as she wanted to say ‘and as your best friend, she breaks your heart, I break her face’, she really couldn’t. Punching a pregnant monster was not a good idea. “Want me to go grab her now, punk?”

He gave her a hesitant smile. "Heh... yes please.”

“Right!” She rocked back onto her feet and straightened. Her knuckles curled, and she gave him an affectionate noogie in passing as she headed for the door. She peeked outside, spotting the woman still elbow deep in papers.

Before she could speak, however, Toki beat her to it. “You want to drive, yeah?”

“Fuck yes!”

“Cool.” She scribbled more, filling in the blanks.

That was until Undyne gently yanked her to her feet, and casually stole the papers from her grasp. “All of this papery shit can wait. Pap is wanting to talk.”

“Talk...?”

“About the thing.” Undyne nods. “And I’m here for moral support. Now, c’mon. I can hold your papers and crap while you two talk.” She guides Toki into the house without much fuss from the short skeleton, and nudges her for the living room. She grins widely.

Toki gives her a hesitant smile, still a wee bit intimidated, and pads silently to the couch. “Hey Pap. Did you nap okay?”

"Yes... I slept well." he replied.

“That’s good.” Toki shifted and wiggled onto the couch with him. She settled at his side, scooping Stripe out of the way and resting her gently on the back of the couch. She leans up to kiss his cheek.

“Daww, such fucking cute little skele-nerds.” Undyne grins sharply. Knowing better than to snoop, she sets the papers on a side table and takes a perch in the back of the room. Pap would know she was there- but she wouldn’t be hovering too close.

Toki flushes slightly, and fiddles with her sleeves. “Ah, thanks. We don’t try to be cute.” It just sort of happened. “So... uh... You wanted to...?” She edges hopefully, eyes glimmering warmly.

"Talk. Yes.” He reached for her hands, grasping her fingers shakily in his own. Aliquam took a deep breath, his sockets flickering vaguely with a nervous orange glow. "I... Want to talk about what happened."

Toki nodded. She holds his hands in her own and soothingly rubs them with her fingers. “I’ll listen.” She says softly, giving him a tender and encouraging smile.

He smiled at her nervously, and took another deep breath to steady himself. "Toki... I... I killed Vikki..." He finally admitted it, voice shivering a little more than he had wanted it to.

"You... did?" She blinked slowly. He had... was that... Well. That explained why the police had wanted to talk to Todd. Toki swallowed slightly, and her fingers tightened just faintly on his. "I... see. Well... I'm sorry that it... came to that. That would explain your nightmares though... Killing is a hard thing to do." She’d had to help Han too. Han still grieved over the people that he had killed- the ghosts of their memories would haunt him for all of his life. Papyrus was too kind a soul to have to kill- and no doubt that would weigh heavy on his mind for all of his life.

Some small part of her soul was relieved though. It was the small part that had been driven into a panic- because Vikki was twisted and broken, and she had been tainted by Cruelty to the point that Toki was absolutely certain that she would have hunted down Toki and Papyrus if she had ever gotten out of jail. Be it in ten years or fifty, she had little doubt... though the loss of life was sad, Vikki had made her selection for the path that she would walk.

Toki lifts his hands and presses them gently against her teeth in a soft kiss, showing that she was willing to stay and willing to listen more. She was supporting- and not judging him for it.

He felt relieved. Aliquam gave her a shaky smile. "It was an accident. I meant only to disable her... But I got shot and my aim went awry..."

"I didn’t think you would do it intentionally." She gave him a soothing smile, and kissed his knuckles again. "It’ll get better, Pap. The nightmares, that is. It's going to take time, but... It’ll get better. I promise. I’ll be here every step of the way on that road too.”

"I've already found remedy in your wonderful buzzing." He hummed gently. "I find myself at peace when I hear it. It allows me to sleep most of the time without nightmares.

She gave him a tired smile. "I know it does. Stripe did well enough to let you sleep today while I had things to get done. You had a rough morning..." The fault in his nightmares came from when she slept too deeply. She couldn’t buzz if she was too far gone- but she didn’t get much sleep if she was conscious enough to keep up a buzzing sound for him. Leaving her bees out all night was exhausting on her magic quantities too. “I’m sorry for that.”

"It's alright, Toki. You're mortal. Can only do so much before you overexert yourself.” He gave her a slight smile.

Toki leaned up and took his skull in her hands. It was similar to when Undyne had clutched at him- but this time it was to draw him down and to press soft kisses to his teeth. “I will drive myself to the brink and back for you.” She says firmly, eye lights glowing with determination. “I… might not fully understand what you feel about this situation, but I am familiar with helping someone through it. So, like I did for him, I am going to do everything I can for you too.” Her little brother had lived with her for a long time until, between her and his therapist, he had felt stable enough to live on his own in the city. “The good, and the bad, right? That’s what mates are here for.” Not just boyfriend and girlfriend- mates, even if not done by law.

He watched her for a moment, seeing the absolute honesty in her eye lights. She was telling the truth. She hadn’t ever lied to him before. Stars above, Toki was speaking honestly with him. She wouldn’t leave him over this- over him having... "Stars above,” he murmured, “I love you.” he sighed happily, leaning in and capturing her in a kiss.

Toki leaned into the kiss gently, and stroked his cheekbones gingerly. “I love you too, Papyrus Aliquam Gaster.” Eyes twinkling, Toki laughs just faintly. “Gods do I love you. You are my world, you silly skeleton. I’m proud that you told me.”
"I am glad you think no less of me..." His eyes were soft, but his smile was still slightly nervous as he sighed.

Toki gently bumped her forehead to his, shifting to sit on her knees so she could actually do so. "Never." She nuzzles her nasal ridge to his. "I could never think less of you. That would be like me thinking less of Han. Do you think less of Han for what he’s done?" Han’s kills, as he had vaguely explained at one point, had been an accident too. He didn’t go into detail how, but... he messed up and people died.

"No... Of course not." he replied before he laughed quietly and pulled her into his lap, hugging her tight.

She settled into his lap like it was made for her, and draped her legs over his with a pleased thrum. Snuggling up under his chin, Toki thrummed a soft, happy buzzing noise for him. "Exactly. I love you no matter what, just like I love Han no matter what."

He smiled gently and held her tight, nuzzling gently into the top of her skull. "My beautiful Toki," He murmured gently.

"My handsome Aliquam," she smiles softly.

"My stars, you both are grossly adorable." Undyne snorts from the corner. "Seriously though- don’t forget I’m here. Pap might be one of my besties, but I really don’t want to see him start necking with his baby mama. That’d be gross."

"I'm not going to start necking her, Undyne!" he countered with a flustered glare to the large fish monster. "Not yet anyway." he then chuckled into her skull.

Toki flushed a bright green and proceeded to hide her face against his chest.

Undyne grinned sharply. "I still don’t want to see two cinimon-buns necking on the couch. So save the sexual wiggling until after I’m gone. Speaking of- you doin’ okay Papyrus?” he certainly seemed like he was in a better place now that he knew he had a support network to fall back on if he needed to vent.

He giggled quietly at that and nodded softly. "Yes, I feel a lot better now. I know i will still be haunted for a while, but at least I have someone to hug when it gets to be too much."

"Hug indeed." Toki nuzzles him gently.

"I suppose so.” Undyne grins. "I’m glad you’re feeling better about it, Pap. You’re not alone in this. Any time you need to talk or vent, we’ll go suplex some stuff and you can talk about your thoughts."

"If you’re going to be suplexing things, please do it outside of the compound. Repairs are expensive.” Toki squints at her.

"Nyeh heh heh heh!" he nodded in agreement and then nuzzled Toki again. "Outside the compound, I promise."

"Good.” Toki nuzzles him back softly and gives him a gentle smile.

Undyne shifted from the wall and paced into the middle of the room. She crossed her arms and gave them both a broad grin. "We’ll make sure to clean up any messes too, don’t worry. Gotta make sure the baby mama doesn’t get too stressed. Don’t want to hurt the guppies, do ya?"
“Most certainly not.” She watches Undyne warily, and settles closer into Aliquam’s hold. Yes—Undyne is intimidating. Very intimidating.

"You don't want to scare 'the baby mama' either, Undyne." Aliquam chuckled, "Why don't you sit down?"

“Fuhuhu! I don’t scare her! Do I?” She grins. “And naw, I gotta scoot once I’m sure you’re all good to go. I gotta get my shit moved in and set up in my room.”

Toki holds her fingers together to show a measured distance and gives her a warily amused look. “You might. Just a little bit. Ah… You come off a little bit terrifying when chasing someone with a spear.”

Undyne breaks out into loud laughter. “Oh hell, I didn’t mean to scare you. We really have to toughen you up if I scare you, though. I’m not that scary. I’m just passionate about fighting.”

"Very passionate." Aliquam corrected her lightheartedly.

The big fish woman flares her fins at him cheerily. “That I am. Fuhuhu! So, if I did scare your lady, what are you gonna do about it, bone boy?”

"Politely ask you to stop." he said with a matter-of-factly tone. "Though if you continued, I'd be forced to turn you into fish sticks." he cackled deviously.

Undyne snorts. “Really? Fish sticks?”

Toki giggles softly. “Deep fried Undyne does not sound very appetizing to be honest with you.”

"You know I'm not good at threatening people." he huffed with a pout.

“That’s okay, love. I can be the scary one for us.” She did have the teeth for it. She winked up at him gently.

“You both are too cute to be scary.” The big fish laughs. “Alright, lovebirds. If you both are okay now, I’m going to get going. You want me to bring you your papers, Toki?”

“Yes please! I need to get those done.”

"Thank you, Undyne, I really dont wanna let her go anytime soon.” The larger monster nestled her closer to himself.

Undyne gave him a lopsided grin and nodded. She went to fetch the papers and handed them over to her. “Well, I don’t blame you. I wouldn’t want to let my Alphys go either. Tell you what- you take the next week or so and spend it with your girl and your guppies. I’ll take some time to get my guards and myself familiar with the terf around here, and then we’ll get to whipping everyone into shape.”

“That sounds good to me.” Toki takes the papers thankfully, and sets them on her lap. Her pen is collected next, and she presses the point out with her thumb. “Sound okay to you, Ali?”

"I would love that!" He responded happily. "Thank you, Undyne."

Undyne leaned over to tug him into a brief noogie, making Toki have to duck so she didn’t spear the fish monster with her horns. “No problem, punk! You take all the time you need.”

Toki, squished slightly in his lap, poked her in the middle with her finger. Oh. Wow. She had amazing muscles. “I’ll make sure to take good care of him.” Toki did not escape the noogie either- and she was left befuddled and rumpled as she sat there in his lap, having gotten an unpleasantly large fist scrubbing into the top of her skull with enough force to pop a watermelon.

Undyne laughed and stepped away from the couch. “Good! Now I’m off. Enjoy your time together, you cute little punks.”

Toki rubbed her skull and sighed in amusement. “Bye, Undyne!”

He gave a happier ’nyeh heh heh heh!’ as Undyne took her leave, and waved as she exited. “See you later!” he called.

Once they were alone, Toki shifted and relaxed against him. Her papers are shuffled, and she carefully re-opens Undyne’s file. She still had a lot of stuff that she still needed to sign- and she needed to make sure that all of the numbers were correct, since this was the initial paperwork for Undyne’s official release into her custody. Toki sighs and settles in to work. “You’re welcome to go back to napping, Pap.” She gives him a soft smile. “Or we can turn on the television if you want to watch something instead.”

"I heard they just integrated something called 'Webflicks' into our cable signal." he replied, "Maybe we could check that out?"

“Webflicks, huh? Sure!” Toki doesn’t go fishing for the remote- instead, Stripe buzzes up, collects it, and deposits it easily into her lap. She grins at him. “I might have just harnessed my inner Cae there, but here you are, love. You don’t mind if I work while we snuggle?”

"Not at all." he took the remote and began to look through the shows, before he smiled and pressed the ‘ok’ button on the remote.

The TV Show: ‘Funniest Home Videos' started playing.

Toki smiled, eying his selection out of the corner of her eyes. It was a good show, she thought, and would help him relax. She hummed softly to herself and settled into her work. She blazed through what needed to be signed, and then took a closer look to make sure everything was going good. “Okay…” She mutters faintly, not really paying much mind to what she’s saying. “Undyne of the Nara Clan. That just… looks so weird.” She mutters.

"That does, though probably not as bad as it would be for King Asgore.” Pap commented with a chuckle, eye lights locked onto the television. "Though, why would she need to be registered?” he asked.

Aww fuck. She’d said that out loud. “Uh… WELL… Technically all the monsters here are my wards- and therefore apart of my clan.” She admits, fiddling with her pen slightly. “King Asgore is probably the only monster who wouldn’t ever be under it- because he’s the King, and is technically in charge of all of the talks and stuff. It’s, uh, only temporary though.”

She really wasn’t sure how Ali would take that news. Tenebris had been royally pissed at finding out he had a guardian and wasn’t even allowed to be in his own clan.

"... Aha, I see." he nodded gently, "I suppose I am 'of the Nara clan' as well?” he asked.

Ahh fuck. She’d said that out loud. “Uh… Well… Technically all the monsters here are my wards- and therefore apart of my clan.” She admits, fiddling with her pen slightly. “King Asgore is probably the only monster who wouldn’t ever be under it- because he’s the King, and is technically in charge of all of the talks and stuff. It’s, uh, only temporary though.”

She really wasn’t sure how Ali would take that news. Tenebris had been royally pissed at finding out he had a guardian and wasn’t even allowed to be in his own clan.

"... Aha, I see." he nodded gently, "I suppose I am 'of the Nara clan' as well?” he asked.

“Yeah.” She nods, tucking her chin down and glancing away from him nervously. “Everyone here is. Your father, your brother, Grillby, Wolfen, Undyne… Your dad wasn’t too thrilled upon finding that out, heh… It’s the only reason that you all get to be here on the surface technically, but it’s only temporary!” She assures quickly. “Once Asgore can get you guys your rights, you’ll be given the choice to stay as clan members, and then you’ll be able to own your own land, businesses-all of that stuff.”

"I wouldn't mind staying in your clan~" he purred, nuzzling her neck.

Toki relaxes slightly, and reaches up to cradle his jaw affectionately. “I know- but I think your dad wants to reform his own clan up top. You’d be included in that, Pap.” She gives him a warm smile. “I don’t think anyone’s going to stay in the clan once they’re free to go, to be honest. I’m a gilded cage- but a cage nonetheless.”

"I might want to stay, I dont know." he sighed quietly, nuzzling her, "I think I'd be happy either way..."

“Whatever you choose, I will support you with your decision.” She smiles at him softly and leans up to kiss him. Then, she returns to focusing on her paperwork. “So, are you excited? The car companies have been working and pressuring the government. You guys might be able to get your licenses and own your own cars here soon.”

"That does sound exciting!" he answered happily.

“Yeah!” She grins. “I’ve been helping them prepare for monsters with special needs. They’ve already designed a driving system to work with those who have digitigrade legs. What sort of car do you think you’d want?”

"Something nice." he answered with a hum, "I dont know, really."

“You’ll want to give it some thought. Look it up online maybe, check out the cars. They’re willing to make custom cars for each monster.” She hums.

Toki smiles faintly and nuzzles closer to him with a soft sigh. His laughter that comes from the videos is soothing- and she finds solice in him finding some joy in the silly inane things of Funny Home Videos.

It let her work in peace, as they occasionally chatted about this and that.
Chapter 44

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: For the record, please excuse any spelling errors from here on out. My auto correct for spelling on my word doc has decided to shit itself, so… y’know, nothing I can quite do about that. Ugh. Anywho, this is a nice short chapter that brings one of Toki’s brother’s home. :3

Alright- for another note, I got a job. I work Tuesday and Wednesday nights, from 5pm until 7am, and I am the one who updates the chapters. I start next week. So, our schedule might be a bit fucked up from time to time- I will try to update, but I’m going to be working pretty much 14 hours of nightshift, come home to sleep, and then leave again for round two.

Ah, don't forget to visit the blog. You can find us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: The fox and the Han are so cute.

It wasn’t even a week later that Toki had gotten a call from Han. Her brother had been in tears, calling her from the Veterinary hospital. Han had a dog. Well, more like he’d had a dog. Someone had gotten into his backyard, however, and had put firecrackers in the dog’s mouth.

Han had gotten home to his dog missing most of his face- and had rushed his companion to the veterinary hospital. They couldn’t save him in time though- and Han had lost it. He’d had that dog for years- he had been an older rescued animal from a shelter, and Han had fallen in love with him.

With the increased use of firecrackers being used around his home, Han wasn’t in a place that was safe for his mental stability anymore.

So Toki had packed up her truck early on Wednesday morning, and moved him back to the compound. With the monster school nearly complete, he was going to work on applying to work there instead of in the city, so for now he was going to be staying with her and getting into a better mental state. She even had a house she was going to have built for him, since he wasn’t comfortable staying with her for too long.

He was her baby brother though- she would do anything to keep him healthy and happy. Even if that meant he lived with her again for a while, and invaded her house with all of his instruments.

All of them.

It had taken three truckloads between her truck bed and her trailer to get all of his things- and getting him settled in had been rough. Han was still a mess. The ex-military man had depended on the dog a lot for some of his stability, and having lost his companion in such a violent way… Well, it didn’t do well for him.

He was still crying even as he worked to shove his piano into the corner of the main room. A lot of his instruments went out in the shed- but the ones that didn’t handle the weather well had to stay in the house. His piano was one of those such instruments.

Toki wrung her fingers together and tugged him into a hug once he was done. He slumped into her and sniffled quietly as she stroked his hair. His eyes were a blotchy mess, and his breath kept rattling through his lungs, but she was glad she’d helped raise her brother not to be afraid to cry. Mourning in painful silence was not something anyone should have to do.

Han had insisted upon moving the piano on his own, but the rest of the house was buzzing with activity. Several monsters were in and out, helping bring stuff in and packing instruments into the spare rooms for when they could be moved to the school’s not-yet-constructed music room.

“All right, Han. The piano’s in. Why don’t you take a break and just relax, yeah?”

“Relaxing isn’t going to help…” he mutters, squeezing his eyes shut.

Han was built bulkier than she was, but she towered above him. She had always been taller- and that helped her tuck him further into her chest with a protective rattle. “I know, Han. I know. He was a good boy- he didn’t deserve what those bastards did to him.”

“No, he didn’t.” He sniffled again.

Toki wasn’t sure what could help- but… Maybe… “Hey,” she tilted his chin up quietly. “Hey, why don’t we sing something?”

“I don’t think I can do something happy, Toki…”

She gently bumps her chin to the top of his skull and shakes her head. “Not what I meant, little bro. We could do a sad song. We used to do that when you were little and were upset about something.”

“Yeah… That… That could work.” He leans back to scrub his eyes, and gives a mirthless laugh. “Fucking hell, I can’t see past my fucking tears to play an instrument, Toki.”

“Maybe we can ask Tenebris to play the piano for us?” She murmurs gently to him. The Gaster family were all assisting in the movement as well. She’d been banned from actually moving things- on accounts of her burgeoning middle- so she was left to tend to her brother.

She glanced about to locate the elder monster.

Tenebris was actually standing near the piano now that it was settled in one final place, looking over the piano with an admiring gaze before his hand reached down and played a gentle chord. Music to his ears, he mused, it felt good. He even found himself sighing in satisfaction.

“Hey, Tenebris?” Toki called softly. “You play the piano, right?”

"It has been a while, but yes, i do." he replied, looking towards the duo, "Why do you ask?"

“I was wondering if maybe you could play a song? I have one in mind- I can pull up the sheet music for it on your phone.” His phone had a larger screen than her own did. “Singing usually helped Han when he was younger- I’m thinking it might help him a bit now.”

"Hmm... May i see it? I have an old favorite in mind but if I know this song, I could try.”

Toki nods. She leaves Han to get settled, and goes to take Tenebris’ phone from him. She pulls up the song and types in for the sheet music, and then hands it over. “It’s called ‘If I Die Young’. It’s... well, a sad song, actually, but sad songs help get emotions out.”
"Hmmm..." he looked at it, then he smiled and nodded gently, "I suppose I could give it a go." he rumbled.

Toki beamed at him. “Really? That would be great!”

He smiled at them and set up his phone while he got settled on the bench seat in front of the piano. It was a little small for him, but he could handle it easily enough. He flexed his hands, and began to slowly play the tune, his fingers dancing over the keys with skill barely dampened by time.

Toki drew Han closer to the piano as some monsters paused to peek in at them. She waved to them, and waited until she was certain that Tenebris had the notes down. Once he’d played through once, getting used to how the song flowed, Toki joined in with words.

“If I die young, bury me in satin. Lay me down on a bed of roses. Sink me in a river at dawn, send me away with the words of a love song.”

Han sniffled, but joined in moments later. His voice cracked, thick with tears. “Lord make me a rainbow, I'll shine down on my mother. She'll know I'm safe with you when she stands under my colors. Ooooh, and life ain't always what you think it ought to be, no, ain't even grey, but she buries her baby.”

Smiling, Tenebris hummed quietly to the tune, occasionally peering over to the siblings as they sang.

Toki continued from there, looping her arm gently over his shoulder. For as tough as Han was, death got to him something bad. Going into the military had been one of the worst things he’d done- he had been too gentle for what he’d had to do. Her sockets glimmered a soft green, trying to soothe her brother as best she could with her words and her care. “The sharp knife of a short life, oh well... I've had just enough time.”

“If I die young, bury me in satin. Lay me down on a bed of roses. Sink me in a river at dawn, send me away with the words of a love song.” Han’s voice trailed after her again, melancholy thick in his tone. Tears bubbled up in his eyes, and he leaned into the bony shoulder of his elder sister. Han took what comfort he could get- his big sister had always been there for him. She dropped everything to come to him- just like she would do for any of her brothers. “The sharp knife of a short life, oh well... I've had just enough time.”

“And I'll be wearing white when I come into your kingdom. I'm as green as the ring on my little cold finger. I've never known the loving of a man, but it sure felt nice when he was holding my hand.”

Toki nudged him gently, and gave him a tender smile. “There's a boy here in town, says he'll love me forever. Who would have thought forever could be severed by the sharp knife of a short life? Well, I've had just enough time...”

Tenebris smiles to himself as he continues, slowing down a little now as the music went.

Han managed to give her a teary smile in return. Music always helped- it was part of why he’d wanted to become a teacher. Music could do so much for the world. It expressed so many things that were hard to normally put into words. Already it was helping. It would take more than just one song- but it was a start. Everything had to start somewhere. “So put on your best, boys, and I'll wear my pearls. What I never did is done...”

“A penny for my thoughts, oh, no, I'll sell 'em for a dollar. They're worth so much more after I'm a goner. And maybe then you'll hear the words I been singin’. It's funny when you're dead how people start listenin'.” Toki gently wiped his tears with her sleeve, and simply watched him as they sang. He was already improving. His eyes were brighter- but full recovery would take time. One just didn’t lose a pet and get over it.

Tenebris hummed quietly as the song neared it's end, and he smiled gently, before he began to bring it to a close.

Han’s voice cleared up some as he sang. “If I die young, bury me in satin. Lay me down on a bed of roses. Sink me in a river at dawn, send me away with the words of a love song.”

“Uh oh,”

“Uh oh,” her brother echoed.

Her voice softened as the song began to reach it’s closing part, and she pressed a soft kiss to the top of his head. “The ballad of a dove, go with peace and love. Gather up your tears, keep ’em in your pocket. Save ’em for a time when you're really gonna need ’em, oh…”

“The sharp knife of a short life, oh well. I've had just enough time. So put on your best, boys, and I'll wear my pearls…” Han sniffled quietly as the lyrics faded off. He gave her, and Tenebris, a small smile. “Thank you, both of you.”

“Any time, little brother. Any time.”

As the last chord played, Tenebris slowly let off the keys, and he leaned back, purring quietly as he looked to them.

“You play pretty good.” Han scrubbed his face stubbornly. “You thought about maybe teaching piano classes to the kids?” Han was proficient enough with his instruments to teach someone, but someone of Tenebris skill would teach it better than he could, hands down.

"I dont know. I could consider once in a while." he rumbled.

Han nodded softly. “It would be really cool if you did.”

Toki smiles wryly, and tugs her brother in for an affectionate hug and a noogie. “You just want him to teach you to play better piano so you can impress Todd, don’t you, bro?”

Han flushed amidst the blotchy tones of his skin, and he elbowed her ribs gently. “You behave.”

As if luck had been called, there was a knocking at the open front door and Todd peered in, a smile on his face. "Hello, Miss Nara! Is your brother here?" he asked.

Toki’s face split in a grin. “We’re in the living room!” She calls back to Todd. “And yeah, Han’s here. He’s moving back to the village!”

Han just blanches slightly. Shit. Fuck. His face was a fucking mess- he didn’t want Todd to see him covered in the remnants of his sobs. He scrubbed his face on his sleeve- which didn’t do much, and struggled not to run and hide.

"I, ah, I brought him a little welcome to the neighborhood gift." he replied. "May I come in?"

“Sure!”

Smiling, the red fox monster entered, his tail swaying behind him gently. "Hi there, Han, Toki." he greeted cheerily.

Toki waved to him and braced her knuckles against her lower back. “Hiya Todd. It’s good to see you again.” She smiles.

Han offers him a wave too, but his is much more shy. He toes the carpet quietly with his shoe, and hopes the fox isn’t too bothered by his ‘been crying’ face.

"Likewise." he came over and offered Han a small basket with a wax melt bowl and a few cubes. "I heard you were a veteran. I brought you something that might help if something unnerves you.” he explained, "And to thank you for your service.”

Han took the small basket, blinking slowly at its contents. The scented wax melts were definitely nice- and the scent was a soothing lavender. He would definitely put it to use. “This is… Really thoughtful. Thank you.” The basket is kept in one hand, and he throws the other arm around the much taller fox’s neck to tug him down into a hug. The fur that floods his face is comforting, but also brings on a bout of longing. “I… I’ll definitely be putting these to use.” Fuck it- his eyes are watering again, and he hopes the fox monster cannot smell his tears.

His fur fluffed up in surprise, ears pricking upwards intently. Then he smiled and wrapped his arms around the man, patting his back gently. He could smell the tears- and wasn’t sure why he was teary. Han was usually pretty put together, if a little adorably awkward sometimes. "Heh... Hey, no problem.” he replied warmly. "Anything for a fella like you.”

Toki gaveTodd a thankful smile. “Really, thank you. That’s really sweet. He’s had a rough couple days. He, ah, lost his companion animal to some asshole.”

“Fuckin’ firecrackers.” Han sniffs bitterly, but doesn’t back away from the hug. The fur is soothing. He loved his sister to death, don’t get him wrong, but there was something soothing about having your face smashed into soft fur instead of a bony shoulder. His fingers thread through the fox’s ruff, and he holds him tight for a moment.

"Hey... you know what? Don’t think about the firecrackers... We don't have any here," he then hummed softly. "Ah... I am sorry about your companion dog. It sucks to lose a pet... I’ll mourn with you though." he replied gently, before he smiled soothingly. "At least I can offer you something else?” he then shifted and reached up, a paw resting on the other’s back. Fuzzy fingers were warm as they touched him. "I may not be your lost companion. But I still have fur, and I’m sure this isn't the first time you’ve buried your face in a furry form to calm down, huh?” he chuckled gently.

“You’d be right.” Han sniffs quietly. “Thank you, Todd. That’s really nice of you. It… it helps.” He admits. Threading his fingers through fur and hiding his face in it was already helping. Yeah, it made him miss his dog too, but it was the thought that counted.

Toki smiled softly, and wandered off so her brother could have a moment with the kind fox. “I’ll be back- I’m going to go put another load of laundry on.”

"Sure thing." his tail wagged slowly behind him as he sighed, "Heh... So.. I'm wondering... You like coffee?"

“I do.” Han backs up a bit, releasing the fox so he can scrub his face again. “Coffee is basically what keeps me running during early morning classes with kids. I love any and all coffee.” Though he’d have to make sure he didn’t come home smelling of Coffee, lest he kill his poor sister with the smell of it.

"Would you like to go get some, sometime? I mean... Do they even have a café here?"

“Not yet. Sis told me that they’re getting a bakery-café thing here soon, but... I know Grillby makes a mean cup of ‘jo if you ask him nicely. But uh…” Shit, his face was flushed almost as red as the fox’s fur. His fingers knotted in his hair as he scrubbed them through. “I mean yeah sure, I’d love to get a cup with you whenever. Though ah… are you sure you want to? I mean… I heard about the thing on the news…” News of Vikki’s death had gone viral- though the reason hadn’t been released.
But she was dead- and Todd was technically a widower now. Yeah, he’d been months without his homicidal wife- but Han wanted to make sure that the fox was absolutely sure. Han came with his own baggage of sorts.

"Well, yes.” Todd flicks his ears and rubs his arms slightly. “I'm not... not gonna let what happened drag me down, I have a new life now, me, and my children both. We’re going to be happy here, and I want to find happiness."

Han nods. “That’s a good way to think. With that… yeah. I’m totally down for coffee. Or a burger-or both.” His flush only grows, and he twiddles his fingers slightly.

He smiled. "Good, it's a date then, heh...!” he laughed quietly.

Han laughed awkwardly and stuffed his nervous fingers into his pockets. “Yeah! Eheh… Ah… I’m so sorry I’m so awkward sometimes. ‘s been a couple of years since someone’s asked me to coffee.
I’m a little out of practice.”

"You think I'm any better? I haven't dated in years!” Todd laughed.

“Yeah, but at least you were in a relationship during that time.” Han chuckled softly. He took a couple deep breaths, relaxing his shoulders, and then went to set the gift basket on the coffee table. “I guess we’ll both have to get into the swing of things, huh Todd? Though, uh… your kids gonna be okay with you going out to coffee with me?"

"You're nice, so Rosie will like you, and knowing Felix, if you're nice to Rosie, he'll like you too.”
he assured him with a soft smile.

Han gave him a relieved look. “Your kids are sweet. They enjoy the music lessons I’ve been teaching on the weekends- I certainly hope they like me beyond just the ‘cool teacher’ thing though.
That’d be awkward, since I’m going out on a d-date with their dad.”

"I know if you saw each other on the street, she'd wave to you.” he chuckled.

Han chuckled softly. “I wouldn’t doubt it. Both of your kids are really, really sweet. Rosie is an absolute doll. For all of his quiet nature, Felix is really kind and observant.” The young boy was also proving to be quite proficient with a flute. Rosie, like Toki, had the musical talent of a tone-deaf walrus.

"Then what are you worried about?” The fox laughed.

“It’s a Nara thing. We worry about some weird things sometimes.” He scrubs the back of his head shyly and rocks on his heels. “So ah… Maybe tomorrow for coffee? I'll be settled in by then…”

"Sounds perfect." He replied warmly.

Han gave him a lopsided roguish grin. Brown eyes glimmered at the fox monster, and Han shifted to the side so one of the monsters could slip past him and set some of Han’s movies onto the movie shelf. “Cool.”

"Heh... I can't wait... but I should go, I'll need to start on dinner for the kids soon. But I'll see you tomorrow wont I?"
Han nodded. “Of course! Kids ‘ve gotta eat. You go ahead- I’ll swing by your house tomorrow. What time works for you?”

"How about nine in the morning?"

The smaller man nods. “Nine works. I’ll be over to get you then. Ah… Say hello to your kids for me, will you?”

"Sure thing. I’ll see you then!” he smiled. Todd gave him a wave, and took his leave.

Han watched the fox go with a fond expression, only to find Toki tossing her arm over his shoulder with a wide grin.

“My baby bro’s got a daaaaate~” She grins, singsonging teasingly at him all the while being happy that he was in a better mood after talking to the fox monster.

He elbows her in the arm, and pauses when her arm pops off at the elbow. They both still- his complaints failing to come from his mouth- as her arm falls out of her sleeve and rolls over towards Tenebris and the piano. “Uh… Uhhhhh. UHHH… Tenebris shit fuck, I think I just broke Toki~”

“Han, it’s okay. It’s a skeleton thing. You just hit my arm funny- you have really bony elbows.”

Tenebris snickered and laughed softly as he scooped the arm up. He stood and padded over. “It’s quite alright, it happens. Arm please.”

Toki offered out her empty sleeve and rolled it up to her elbow. “It does. At least it’s not as bad as last time. I caught my toe on the corner of the couch- Ali had to lift the couch so I could get my toe back.”

“Dude. That is… morbid.” He watched intently, and then grinned. “Oh my god, Sis. You could literally hit someone with your severed arm. That is absolutely horrifying. I love it.”

"..." Tenebris leaned over and patted Han on the cheek with the skeleton hand before attaching it with a low cracking sound of the bones. Who said he didn’t have a sense of humor?

Toki certainly laughed, loudly, when her brother’s face twisted into something horribly amusing to look at. “Oh my god, Tenebris. That was perfect.”

“… I just got patted with my sister’s severed hand. That… That is an experience that I never thought I’d ever have, holy shit.”

Tenebris chuckled softly as he patted Han on the head. "There there dear boy, everyone gets it once in a while.”

Han just stares up at Tenebris. “You know… I don’t think I ever realized just how large you really are. Until your hand practically engulfed my skull that is.”

Toki grins and bumps her hip to Tenebris’ side. “Tenebris is a big monster. That’s another thing for your book. Being petted by the local adorable giant, no?”

“… Damn straight.” Han grins.

Tenebris laughed and then heard a loud BWOOOPH from upstairs, followed by a pair of voices laughing.

Toki paused, as did most of the monsters currently helping load things in. “Uh… Okay, what was that?” Her voice calls out loudly in the silence that follows.

Ailence at first, then another BWOOOMPH and more laughter following it.

Toki’s brows furrowed, and she proceeded to pad up the stairs towards the sound of laughter.

Han stayed downstairs, intent on letting his sister handle the house disturbances.

Voices floated out the door to her as she approached one of the rooms. She could identify the skeleton brothers quite easily.

Papyrus was laughing loudly, and protesting something. "Sans you are so immature!"

"You're laughing too, Pap!"

"I am and I hate it!"

BWOOOOPH.

"Hahahaha!"

"Nyeh heh heh heh!"

Toki opened the door and peered inside, looking to the source of the thunderous laughter.

The brothers somehow found a sousaphone in Han's instruments, and Sans was playing notes on it, but the frequency of the notes was hilarious, and the brothers were laughing hard at the obnoxious noise.

Toki smiled and leaned on the frame of the doorway, propping her hand on her hips. She listened to their laughter, and simply enjoyed it. It always made her smile when she could hear him laugh that hard- it was becoming more frequent now that he wasn’t afraid to talk to her about his nightmares, but it still wasn’t as often as it had been before. She had missed it a lot. Between Papyrus and her brother, Toki could foresee being exhausted very often in the near future. “Good Gods you two. You found the sousaphone, I see.”

"Heeey, Tokes!" Caeruleus greeted with a grin, "Come on in! Yeah we found it, isn't this thing hilarious?!"

Toki snorts loudly and arches a brow at them. “The sousaphone is a lot of fun. But very loud in an enclosed space. Are you both having fun?” She winks.

"Yes, we are."

"The sound is quite silly, though it is a little loud.” Aliquam agreed with her.

Sans grinned at her widely. "Would you at least stay for one whoomph?

“A little loud indeed.” She giggles softly. “But I’m glad you’re having fun. Though… Cae… How can you even play a brass instrument without lips? You know what- give it a toot. I’ll see for myself how it works.” She grins at him playfully.

He cackled, but as he leaned in, his grin disappeared from his face, and he blew against the brass mouthpiece.

BWOOOPH
Being so close to the noise made her bones vibrate, and she laughed harder, fingers curling around her middle as the little souls quickened in response to the simulation from the sound waves. “Good gods, that is hilarious!”
Chapter 45

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This chapter is very cute. Very, very cute. Also, side note. Silverwing landed her job- so now we’re both going to be working. We do have some chapters stockpiled up- but if we run out of them, TOTU’s regular schedule will probably become irregular, as we struggle with schedules and stuff. I only work two days- I don’t know what hers is going to be, but it looks like it might be late at night too.

I hope you guys will be patient with us- these jobs mean a lot, and it’s going to help both of us tremendously with our living situations.

Also- don't forget to visit the blog! Shit happens there, and most of it is hilarious, or painfully cute. It's where you'll find all of the TOTU artwork that is out there to see. http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Very cute. Too cute. SUCH CUTE.

Toki had been right. Between her brother and Papyrus, she was running on empty. But she didn’t complain- hell no, she didn’t complain. They needed her- and for her support, they were improving. Han’s nightmares were less frequent than Papyrus’ own were- and they were even less now that the school had been finished. He was now working all during the day, teaching music- and unofficially helping the monster teachers teach the monster kids about human culture and human history.

Papyrus was back to working with Undyne as well. The fish monster would run him ragged from dawn until dusk, and he would come in looking haggard as hell. Toki would manage to stuff some monster food down him, hustle him in to shower, and then get him into bed before he’d crash. He was working hard- so horribly, horribly hard, because he was adamant that he’d be able to defend her and their twins. His determination kept her from complaining- because he was doing this for them, and that warmed her soul.

Day by day, she’d handle the two men in her life. On Han’s days off, he spent them with Todd- the two of them were absolutely adorable dorks. Neither of them were very sure of what they were doing- but with some careful nudging on Toki’s part, they were beginning to get better at the whole dating thing.

They were precious- though it drove her a little bit insane when Han would skip out on doing his turn for dishes for the night so he could go get late night drinks with the fox. Todd was actually learning healing magic- so he was making the drive up to the Castle in the morning for work, and sometimes getting home late too. Toki’d had his kids over for dinner multiple times when Todd was stuck up at the castle super late learning magic. They met up when they could.

A month of the repetitious work was wearing on Toki though. Between managing her boys, the house, and general village problems when they were brought to her, Toki was worn out. She hid it well though- covered it with smiles and laughter- but she found her energy capacity dropping more and more as her middle grew bigger. Her back was killing her too- the weight in her middle was making all sorts of painful knots and cramps form in her lower back.
She needed a magic donation too— but there really wasn’t a good time for her to be pestering Aliquam for magic when he came back each day usually damn near drained from training with Undyne and the guards.

So Toki did what she could.

She settled for taking naps between paperwork and house chores.

Which is what she was doing— taking a light catnap on the couch and pretending that she didn’t have another stack of papers to do— when the sounds of clawed feet over her tile woke her from her light doze. She didn’t stir though— she knew those ghosting footsteps quite well by now. She simply sighed, nuzzled better into her pillow, and shifted a little bit on her side.

Toki was missing being able to sleep on her belly. At twenty weeks along, she was blooming— and sleeping on her belly was no longer possible, sadly. Sleeping on her back made her spine hurt— but her side was still safe, even if it was growing slightly harder to sleep spooned to Pap’s side.

The footsteps that approached were, as she knew it would be, Tenebris. With a cup of tea in hand for her, he ended up setting the tea down on the coffee table once he realized she was asleep. He crouched next to the couch, tail carefully winding around his ankles, and peered at her for a moment. When she didn’t stir, he tsked softly to himself, and very gently hooked the edge of his claw into the bulge of her turtleneck. It had rolled upwards during her nap— but he did need it edged just a little bit further upwards for him to check upon the two little soulling’s nestled in her belly.

The ecto flesh was very dim. Her middle was larger than before, bulging outwards with how her body was resting. The dark green uterus wasn’t very visible with how dim the glow of her middle was. She did, indeed, really need a magic donation. She just needed to find the time to ask Pap— when he wasn’t bone tired. She sighed sleepily, still keeping up pretenses of being asleep, as she focused on him. She could smell the tea— but it was not enough of a lure for her to get up and make her person known.

He frowned lightly and his hand ran over her stomach gently. "Oh dear..." He murmured. Papyrus was exhausted almost daily now... Tenebris thought for a moment, and then he focused and allowed some of his magic to seep through, at least enough that he could see the souls inside her.

"Heh... Hello you two... Giving your mother her share of toils aren’t you?" he chuckled quietly once able to see them.

Her middle brightened as his magic bubbled into her body. Toki hadn’t been expecting that— not at all. His magic felt different compared to Papyrus’ own. Where Aliquam was sunshine and warmth, Tenebris felt deep and dark, like an endless ocean. She shivered faintly.

The little souls in her belly brightened as he fed magic to them, and they did something else too. The extra magic gave them the boost of energy they needed— and under his palm, there was a faint press of a limb from inside, bumping out against his fingers.

"... Did you just... kick me, little one?" he murmured.

His eyes widened... was that...?

He pulled back immediately, removing his gloves and pressing his fingers to her stomach again more firmly. "... Did you just... kick me, little one?" he murmured.

Under his bare palm, he would feel more movement. The energy stirred them into motion, fleeting kicks and punches bumping up against his palm as they feasted greedily upon the energy that had been offered up. Twins took up more energy than a single— and they were steadily draining her magic downwards. Fleeting bumps and shifts were visible across the dim glow of the surface of her middle.

Yes. Yes, he had just been kicked by his grandchildren- and he was the first one to feel such motions. Well, first one to feel it from the outside. Toki had been feeling them shift inside of her for a while now.

He smiled weakly, breath hitching in awe. "H-Hah.... hahaha...." he began to laugh softly, leaning inwards and pressing his face gently into the soft swell of her belly. His fingers dabbed away an inky tear that welled at the corner of his eye. "Oh my stars... hello you two... It's your grandpapa.,” he cooed softly.

They reacted to his touch and his voice murmuring against her middle, tiny fists and feet brushing out against him briefly. They were chewing through the magic that he had given them, the thick and powerful sample making them active and squirmy. One of them shifted, and a leg poked out, making a tiny bump against his mouth.

Toki struggles not to giggle. Gods, that tickled so bad. That was worse than the quickening she was used to. This was the first time that they had actively moved- and as much as she'd have liked for Papyrus to feel them first… this was something special. She could hear the awe and affection in Tenebris’ voice. It was adorable.

He laughed happily, and nuzzled her stomach, resting his head on it as he stroked over the skin to keep them happy and distracted. "You know... you're the first time I've ever felt a baby kick. I was never married... I never felt this before..." He talked to them gently. "I didn't get to feel my sons until they emerged and I held them for the first time... It's a wonderful feeling... but this... this is new.” His voice was weakening as he spoke. This was really something new for the older monster, and the old sentimentality of a father was flaring in his heart again.

The flurry of movement began to die down as they exhausted through the immediate burst of energy that they had to share. Her middle remained brighter still, but their kicks ebbed off into gentle swishes and slight movements. With his skull resting lightly against the soft bulge, he would feel them shift however, rolling slightly under the thin barrier of ecto flesh that kept the pseudo organ in place. Tiny backs, tiny limbs- all of them hardly developed, but still enough to be felt and seen without layers of muscle, organs, and human fats to muffle their movements.

Toki’¿s soul practically melted at that. Tenebris talking to his grandchildren- shit, that was more adorable than his flush. She shifted slightly, and lifted an arm to rest a hand on the top of his skull. “You’re going to be a great grandpa,” she murmurs sleepily, affectionately petting the top of his head to let him know she did not mind him giving them affection.

He stiffened in surprise, but didn't move against the hand pressing gently on his skull. Rather he just smiled faintly and settled down again. "Sans and Papyrus were both tank-grown... I could put my head against the glass... but I couldn't actually feel them..." he sighed quietly, "It wasn't the same..."

"Well,” she mutters tiredly, shifting slightly as tiny legs kicked at her from within. A solid back rolled to press against his cheek. “You’re welcome to feel them move now… You are, for the record, the first to feel them kick from the outside. It’s kinda cool, isn’t it?” She remembered feeling her little brothers’ kicking for the first time. It had been damn near awe inspiring- and she had pretty much fallen in love with them. Even with Souta, who had kicked her in the nose for their first interaction, had earned her love for the first time when he had kicked her. “Those ‘r your grandbabies, Tenny. I think they liked your magic.”

He gave a weak chuckle, before nuzzling her again, "It's wonderful, I love it." he whispered. "I think they did too... mine's a lot more concentrated than Papyrus' is," he purred quietly. "I don't want to give them too much though. I'm the grandfather, not the sire. I can give touch-ups once in a while, but unless absolutely necessary, I think I'd have to hold off."

Toki nods sleepily. "Mhmm… I need to talk to Pap about a donation… But he’s been so busy and he comes home so tired, he really doesn’t have the magic to spare.” She yawns, teeth sparking, and she hurries to pat her pillow so she doesn’t set it ablaze. “Mmm…” The flurry of movement in her belly was slowing down to a sluggish crawl again, and she continued to gently rub his skull regardless. It was a relaxing motion, petting someone. “Still, what little magic you gave helped. They’ve been pretty still these last couple of days. I think they’re as tired as I am.”

"I could consider doing a donation, if he’s truly too exhausted." he murmured, before he smiled and closed his eyes, purring quietly. His hand was starting to twitch and flex, almost a kneading motion across her middle.

The purring against their enclosure startled the little souls, and Toki grunted at the tiny reflexive jerk of a leg that booted Tenebris where his nose would be. “Ha- that felt really weird. I think you startled one of them.” She shifts slightly, fingers still rubbing as he kneads her side. “It’s okay. I can manage. I’ve been taking more naps, and my middle’s gotten brighter than it has been. I’ll just need to rest more, until Pap adjusts to his workload and isn’t as tired.”

He hummed quietly and chuckled, "I... ah... hope you don’t mind I get comfy here..." he murmured, "I... can’t find myself with the will to move.”

“I don’t mind. Go ahead and get comfortable- crouching next to the couch cant be that comfortable. I’m not goin’ no where.” She yawns. “I really need to sleep some more… Mm…”

He smiled at that and shifted to get comfortable, before he chuckled, "Getting away from doing your work?” he chuckled, "I'm no help am I..."

“You’re more help than you think.” She murmurs softly. Her sockets drift closed again, and she sighs a soft content sound. He was a lot of help, but he couldn’t be there to do her work with her every day. “I am, yeah. I just… got really tired while writing. Started to nod off while upright. My back hurts bad enough as it is that I really don’t need to be sleeping at the table anymore.”

"I've passed out in my work on more than one occasion." he admitted.

“Do it often enough too- but… ng.” She guides one of his fingers to her lower back, and lets him feel the difference in the texture against her belly. It’s hard, full of swirling knot-like spots. “Pregnancy has brought knots. All the paperwork doesn’t help.” She yawns. “So I’m doing what I can.” She lets his hand go, returns to rubbing his skull, and settles down with a soft sigh so he can pillow his head on her middle once more.

He watched her, and kept his hand where she left it, slowly digging in his claws and shivering his hand where his fingers rested.

Toki shivered, his claws hard against her skin. The motion made her back ache, but in a good way. “Nnng… That hurts. But in a good way? Skeletons shouldn’t get damn back cramps.”

"You usually don’t." he chuckled softly, kneading gently.

“I get them more than you’d think. Probably doesn’t help that I’ve got magic that’s been summoned for several months now. I can’t exactly de-summon it to reset the knots.” She shifts, and sighs softly as he rubs. “Mmm… Your claws are a little prickly, but shit, I don’t care at this point. It feels good.” She really needed to pester Pap for a backrub instead- but she didn’t like to ask for things. That was something she needed to work on, but…

He chuckled at that and continued to gently knead her back.

She relaxes gently under his touches, her body slowly melting. The knots are something bad- and they’re not all going to come out since he can only rub half of her back, given her inability to lie on her front. But it feels nice- very nice. Toki loosens up further, and her breathing begins to slow.

She was dropping back to sleep under the gentle kneading, with her twins shifting faintly in her middle. They can’t kick hard yet- but it’s still not a soft motion, and is vaguely uncomfortable. She’s dreading what bony little limbs will feel like from the inside when they’re bigger.

Toki is faintly aware of the twins settling in her middle as she settles into a nap once more.

Smiling, Tenebris slowly moved his hands to his lap and he rested there, sighing gently with his skull resting slightly on her middle. No way was he missing any little kicks while they napped.

Toki woke to the front door opening and closing several hours later, along with a pang of hunger in her middle. She yawned, a soft, tired noise, and blearily blinked into her pillow. With the house as quiet as it was, the only noise was a soft purring snore situated roundabouts where her middle was. The sound of the hard wood of the front door was hard to deny, and it jerked her right out of her light snoozing.

She was still exhausted- and, as she squirmed slightly, she also realized that she was very much stuck. The couch had fitted to her body- and she’d been leaned backwards slightly with the weight of Tenebris skull pillowed on her side. His head was heavy on the dim and bare ecto flesh of her middle- and there was no way to move him without jerking the older monster awake. Even if she could get free of his head, she’d need to try to roll to get out of the indent she’d made in the couch, and try not to squish the twins when she made her roll.

The chances of that happening smoothly were very slim. And Cae would never let her live it down if she ever got stuck and couldn’t get up.

She listened for the distinct sound of either slippers on tile, or of his armor clanking. What even time was it? She couldn’t reach her phone from where it sat on the coffee table, no matter how far she stretched her arms. Part of her wanted to summon Stripe- but she needed to reserve her magic for when Papyrus needed to sleep in case she had to go help Han with a nightmare. Toki shifted slightly, and grimaced as a painful throb trailed up her back.

Where Tenebris had massaged had proceeded to knot right back up again since the other side hadn’t been handled. “Agh- shit, that stings.” She mutters tartly to herself, trying to stretch without disturbing the sleepily rumbling boss monster pinning her. He didn’t often relax like this, after all. “Mng… Ali? Is that you?” Her voice softly addressed whoever had entered the house.

"Ah, Toki, I hadn't seen you were asleep until I was inside... I hope I didn't disturb you... Or Father.” He spoke as he approached, saying the last part as he realized the older monster was asleep by the couch.

The monster was actually asleep with his ear holes on her abdomen- and Toki couldn’t shove her shirt down to cover the dim color of it without smothering Tenebris. So instead she twists, peering up at him as best she can to give him a tired smile. “I don’t think anything can wake Tenebris right now. But I do need up. I need to stretch and move. I’m, ah… stuck. If you can lift his head, I can crawl out.” Provided she could get out of the body dip the couch had formed around her.

"Why did he choose your swell of all places to get comfortable?" He asked as he came around, kneeling to see about lifting up Tenebris’ head.

Toki discretely tried to shove her shirt down a little bit. She shifts some as he comes around the other side of the couch and offers him a tired look. Tenebris was pretty solidly resting on her, but he probably wouldn’t be hard to move. Toki offered up her pillow so that he could replace her middle with it. “He was checking in on the little souls.” She says softly. “And, ah… Well, I can show you once we’re up.” Theoretically, if she fed some of her magic directly into her middle, it might wake up the twins. She’s not sure if it would do anything for the brightness though. “How are you feeling, Pap? You’re home early. I think- I cant get my phone to check the time.”

"It's late actually." he replied, passing her the cell phone she spent so long struggling to reach.

She took a look at the time, and her sockets widened. “Shit,” she hissed softly. “I didn’t mean to nap so long. Shit. I’m sorry.” It was nearly nine at night. “I should have started dinner a while ago. Agh. Alright.” She squirms, and, once he’s lifted Tenebris’ head off of her, she replaces her belly with the pillow and drags herself off the couch.

She lands on her hands and knees, and grumbles tiredly. She shoves upright, using the couch to counterbalance the weight of her dimmed middle. “Okay. Okay. Ah… Text from Han- he’s doing dinner with Todd tonight, and says not to expect him until late.”

"Hey, hey." he reached out and gently stopped her, looping his fingers around her elbow to keep her from rushing off. "Relax. Just relax."

“I am relaxed.” His fingers on her elbow did stop her, but she simply turned, tugging her shirt down over her middle quickly, and offered him a tired grin. Planting her un-claimed hand in the small of her back, Toki simply watched him patiently. “I still need to do dinner though, Pap. I’ve got to feed you and the giant motorboat that had me pinned earlier. You’ve been training hard with Undyne and the guards. I’m actually surprised you’re not dead on your feet right now, though.”

"I have no time to die, I’m going to be a father, remember?” Papyrus chuckled, before he tugged her gently into his arms and hugged her. "How are the twins?” he asked.

He did look less tired tonight- so maybe the magic rich food she’d been packing into his lunches was helping build up his tolerance. Toki leaned into him softly, and sighed as she relaxed into his arms. “Very true. You’re not allowed to die. Never, ever, ever.” She murmurs. She does sigh though, and nestle close. “The twins are okay enough. We’re all kinda tired.” She mutters softly. Which really made little sense. She’d been sleeping for many, many hours on the couch. Sure it had been a light sleep, disturbed occasionally by the babybones shifting in her middle, but it had been sleep nonetheless. She rubs her middle slightly, sighing when they remained still. “We have something to show you once they decide to wake up.”

"I suppose so.” he chuckled, and then he nuzzled her. "Alright, but for now, I want you to relax. I'll make us something to eat."

“Nope.” She gives him a stubbornly loving smile. “You’ve spent all day working. I have literally spent the day sleeping. I’ve got energy in spades.” She bluffs, wiggling in his arms so she could escape and get to doing the house duties. “You’re welcome to keep me company, but I’ll do the cooking.”
"No, no, no." He patted her skull gently. "At least let me help. I know what Father likes when an appetite finally comes around to him." He then leaned in, wiggling his brows slightly. "He gets cravings and his pipe can only sate him so much."

“He’s not the only one who has cravings.” She quirks a faint smile at him. “But… fine. I was going to make baked potatoes. I’ve got a real hankering for potato.” And mustard. And chocolate. It was a weird desire. Still, she wiggles free and leaves him to trail behind her. Her knuckles knead into her lower back. “You’re welcome to make something that will go with the baked potatoes though.”

"You know what goes great with Potatoes?” He grinned slightly and gestured to his snoring Father as he followed her into the kitchen.

"Meat."

And Tenebris twitched where he was, tail rattling quietly.

“Well, I do have those steaks in the freezer. I suppose we can get them cooked up. Think the four-pack will be good?” She wasn’t much feeling red meat- but she’d give the bigger monsters her steak, and eat more potato.

The rattle of his tail amuses her, and she wonders if he’s woken up yet. And if he was going to tattle on her to Pap about things she hasn’t been mentioning. She chirrs softly to herself, and collects the potatoes from the cupboard. Bending down is agony, but potatoes are worth it. Then she’s on the hunt for tin foil. Magic baked potatoes would be good for everyone, even if she was tired as hell.

"I think two will fill him up." he chuckled quietly, "We can share one for if you get peckish later on." he commented, before he smiled and knelt down, pecking her stomach tenderly. "And later you can remind me to feed these little ones as well."

“You need your magic though, Pap. Tonight might be an off night, but I would feel terrible if you came back half dead tomorrow.” She tuts softly to him in turn. Unless he was going to take the day off, she’d feel guilty for leaving him exhausted. She affectionately pats his skull as he takes a moment to nuzzle the soft swell of her middle, before she sets to wrapping the potatoes in foil so she can bake them. “And I’m good. I’m not really feeling the idea of meat tonight. Little ones are craving potato tonight. Well, potato and weird things." She might indulge the weird things once dinner was done.

Aliquam sighed and looked up at her. "Toki, I’ve been neglecting you since Undyne came. I need to do what I have to. To make sure the twins are okay..." he insisted as he stood up. Rubbing the back of his skull, Aliquam gave her a sheepish smile. "Undyne said tomorrow I could rest... I kinda pulled something while training today..." he then admitted, going to start on the meat.

Her face pinched slightly as she watched him go collect the meat from the freezer. “You work too hard sometimes, Pap. You’ve hardly been neglecting me. You’ve been working really, really hard.” She cradles the wrapped potatoes to her chest, and proceeds to begin baking them in her arms. “But… I do admit I’ve been keeping it quiet. The twins, ah, have been sorely in need of a donation for a while. Your dad had to donate some so he could see the soullings today. His magic is… potent.”

He watched her and sighed heavily. "Tonight, Toki. Nothing you say will talk me out of it." he told her sternly, before he tapped the meat, “Tsk, frozen. Think you could defrost these real fast?” he asked, "Once done with the potatoes of course."

“Did you expect it to be warm in the freezer, love?” She arches a brow to him, shuffles her potatoes to one arm, and then reaches out to take the meat. It steams as she threads magic through it, but it only takes a little bit before she’s handing the now defrosted package back. “Alright, though. I won’t try to talk you out of it since you don’t have work with Undyne tomorrow.” If he did, it would be an entirely different conversation and she would be being much more stubborn about it.

"Even if I did have training, I don’t care.” he insisted, before he smiled, "Thank you~" he then turned on the burner and started on the steaks.

Needless to say it wasn’t long that the steaks began sizzling and there was a groggy Tenebris in the doorway, mouth slightly ajar as he took in the air, "Meat?" Was the only word that escaped him.

Toki had an armload of hot potatoes- and was setting them carefully onto their plates. She kept two potatoes for herself- and had them already split open. It was too late for a formal sit down dinner- so they’d decided they were just going to eat in the kitchen. “Meat’s cooking.” Toki points a claw towards Pap, and eyes Tenebris lightly as she plods for the fridge. “You, mister, are no longer allowed to nap with me when I have paperwork I have to do. You literally purr and act like a giant sleep machine. Totally not fair, Tenebris. That’s, like, cheating.”

She rummages in the fridge for her condiments of choice- and locates the bottle of mustard, the bottle of chocolate sauce for making chocolate milk, and, on a whim, also a small jar of banana peppers. “Mmm…” Yes she is pleased with this. She goes to prepare her potatoes, since she’s not one waiting on meat.

He puffed and grumbled quietly, rubbing his eyes as he came over. For once he was putting absolutely no weight into supporting his tail so it dragged behind him. "Not my fault you let off heat like a blanket." he countered as he sat down on a chair, yawning wide enough that there was a loud pop as his jaw came loose, his lower jaw splitting wide before popping back into place as he closed his mouth. "Papyrus, you don’t need to cook it too much. I like my meat bleeding." he purred lowly.

"If you insist." he gave the meat a sear, then put them on a plate and handed them over to Tenebris. He turned to get him some silverware but heard something and turned to find Tenebris biting right into the meat, using his hand to hold it up.

His eyes were half-lidded, but now sharper and gleaming with a feral hunger that quickly began to turn to satisfaction as the blood coated his tongue.

"Mmh." The beast rumbled happily, black tongue running over his teeth upon swallowing. "Delicious~" he then went in for another bite, his teeth actually going through the bone that had been in it with a nasty sounding CRACK, taking it from the steak as he chewed.

Toki was briefly stunned into silence, first by how fucking wide his mouth could go- and then by the slightly gross display of bloody meat being masticated. She blanched, and made a face of revulsion. “Yep. No meat for me. That is gross. You’re welcome to have my steak- either of you.” She’s content with her potatoes.

She turns back to it, her bones rattling in a shiver as the loud crack of bone breaking makes her think of when those teeth had cracked her own arm. She rubs it idly, and then sets to preparing her potatoes. The insides are mashed with a fork, and liberally smeared with mustard, before being sprinkled in banana peppers and light teasing of chocolate sauce. Salt and pepper finish it off- and probably the most disgusting potatoes to ever exist are left resting before her. Toki’s mouth waters eagerly.

Still, she has more manners. She prepares Ali’s potato, leaving him with only the job of choosing his condiments for it, and collects a couple potatoes as she then goes to take a seat across from Tenebris.
in one of the kitchen chairs. She shifts, half balancing the plate on her belly, and tosses the biggest monster his potatoes. Happily digging in to what is probably pretty foul looking and foul smelling, it is a very pleased noise that escapes her mouth, even if the mass of sticky gross potato sticks to her teeth and mouth like glue. “Mmmm…”

Tenebris gave a tired grumble that was half an apology, but did not look to want to stop eating like a beast any time soon.

Aliquam looked at her potato, and it was his turn to don a slightly disgusted expression. "Pregnancy cravings are... strange to say the least."

Toki gave Aliquam an amused look, and took a large bite of her potato. “Hey now. This tastes amazing. You can’t say it’s gross unless you try it. Which, if you want, I wouldn’t mind sharing a bite with you. It’s really good, believe it or not.”

Toki scoots her chair over slightly so Ali can join them as he finished cooking and fixed up his plate, and then focused on her meal. She’s tired, but the potatoes taste amazing when covered in peppers, mustard, and chocolate sauce, so it doesn’t take her long to finish the first one, and start in on the second. Her body rapidly converts it towards her magic, though since they’re basted with her magic, it doesn’t really do as much as it could to help her levels.

Tenebris finishes with enjoying his meat and goes to wash himself of the blood that had gotten on him as Aliquam dug into his meal. It didn’t take long for the big monster to inhale his food- and he finished his in record time. He was eager to get her magic replenished- and the taste of her magic lingered on his tongue from where she had thawed the meat and cooked the potatoes.

Toki finished her second potato by the time everyone else was done, and carefully stood from her chair. She stretched her back, yawning faintly as she stooped to collect Aliquam’s plate. Dishes could be done later, but they did need to soak or the chinaware would end up with food bits sticking to it. She nudges Tenebris over as he finishes cleaning himself, and deposits the plates in the ‘dirty dishes’ side of the sink. “Mm… Not bad for a semi-rushed dinner.” She has to take a moment to clean her face too- super sticky potato and fangs makes for a messy face.

"Well I certainly enjoyed it." he murmured, "Thank you both.” he rumbled gently, though ended up needing to blast the spray hose attached to the sink right onto his jaw, with the lack of palms and all to hold the water.

“You’re welcome, Tenebris. I’m glad you enjoyed.” Toki gave him a bemused look and simply used the sink and paper towels. When she was clean, she backed away from the sink and rubbed her back slightly. “Hmm…” A yawn cracks her jaw again, and she shakes her head faintly. “Alright. Mm… Well, I feel better. That was one craving that’s been sated.” One strange, strange and slightly revolting craving that had indeed been sated for the time being.

Sated cravings indeed. Tenebris dried himself off once his pale skin no longer had the red blood on it and he stood to the side to let Aliquam wash up as well.

“I’m gonna go gather my paperwork and put it up for the night.” She gave them both a lopsided grin, and then padded from the kitchen while they cleaned themselves up. Paperwork needed to be put into its proper stacks, or Toki ran the risk of losing something. It wouldn’t take long at all to do.

Both came out once they were done, and while Tenebris stepped out to have a pipe, Aliquam moved over to Toki and hugged her midsection, nuzzling the back of her skull affectionately.

The large bony hands that closed about her middle didn’t startle her, but she did smile. She had an armload of papers at hand- but she carefully organized them and set them down on the coffee table once more instead of toting them to the dining room. Leaning back into him, Toki smiled and buzzed warmly up to him. “Well hello there,” she murmured softly. “Long time no see, hm?” She teased.

Her middle was warm under his fingers, and Toki was hoping the babybones would stir with the added food in her system. They didn’t, however, and Toki hid a soft sigh.

"It's been too long." he murmured, settling his hands flat against the sides of her swell before he released his magic to be absorbed by her.

Like always, he felt like sunshine and warmth. The orange tinge of his magic flooded through her, and she literally sagged into him in response. Holy crap- it had been a long time. She could already feel the lessening of the drain on her systems as his magic flooded in and took over giving the twins what they needed. Toki’s socket’s dropped closed, and she slumped back into him with a soft relieved sound. “Mmm… Far too long,” She murmurs.

Soft kicks and punches start up under his fingers with the new magic flooding them and stirring them into awareness. The twins shift in her belly, stretching and reacting to the newfound energy that brightened the glow of her midsection from under her shirt.

His arms tense around her to heft her weight as she slumps against him. "I'm sorry," he murmured, before he smiled and rubbed her stomach gently. "Hello my little jellybeans," he purred softly, nuzzling his face into Toki's neck. They were moving, fluttering against his palm in motions that were definitely beyond quickening now. The sensitive bones of his hands were picking up every little twitch and every little jab. “Wowie,” he murmurs, mystified.

The rubbing motion stirred them more, and a slightly hard jab to his palm made Toki squeeze out a soft laugh in response. She could only imagine what those would feel like when they got bigger. “Love, it’s okay. You are doing a lot- and I managed well enough while you’ve been working. Heh. The jellybeans do say thank you though. They’re squirming something fierce now.”

He sighed happily, simply feeling his young kicking against his palm for a time. Stars above were they kicking- and punching and squirming and moving. Their movements were small- but he could feel them as they kicked and enjoyed the magic that he was feeding them. Papyrus looked at Toki, and gave her a loving smile. "Will you be coming to bed now?" he asked gently.

Toki nods, relaxing marginally with each rub of his fingers and pulse of his magic. “Mhm. I was planning on it. I’m still pretty tired, even if the jellybeans aren’t tired anymore.” Her middle was already brightened by the magic he had fed into it. Not like she had eaten glow sticks, but more of a healthy, usual sort of glow. Her tiredness was still there, though. She’d been fueling them with strictly her magic for a while. She was running a little on the low side. Not dangerously so- but enough that she was feeling tired and slightly cold.

"Well once they realize you're ready to rest, they'll settle." he chuckled.

She quirked her teeth into a faint smile, and turned her head to press a soft kiss to the bottom of his jaw. “I hope so,” she chuckles gently. “It took them running through your dad’s magic before they calmed earlier. That’s actually why he had me pinned. He fell asleep feeling them kick. Mm… I think that’s enough, love. I don’t want you to drain yourself. I can already feel the difference.” Even if her shirt was doing a decent job of covering most of the glow, she could see it faintly through the spaces in the thread. “Mm… Think your dad would mind overly much if we disappeared upstairs to get ready for bed?”

"He felt them first, huh?" he chuckled, "I'm glad... and Nah, he'll be fine.”
“He did.” She smiled faintly. “I’m pretty sure he teared up. It was really sweet. Heh… He tried not to wake me, but I was more lightly dozing at that time anyways.” She yawns, and then nudges him softly when he stops feeding her magic. “C’mon, you snuggly dork. We need our pajamas, and I need to stretch my back some before we get too lost in feeling the babybones movin’ around.”

He gave her a fond look, and pressed one more kiss to the top of her skull. It didn’t bother him that his dad got to feel the soullings first. Well- Toki probably felt them first before all. "Okay." he let her go and instead started upstairs, giving her a cheeky smile.

Toki watched him go with a soft laugh, and set something heavy on her paperwork so it didn’t get blown around if a draft came from under the door. She followed him up a moment later, leaving Tenebris to do whatever he wanted to, and followed him up the stairs.

Heading into their room, Toki fiddled with her shirt, and went to tug it off as she looked for her top.
Toki wasn’t going to bother with night pants tonight. Just a long nightshirt would do.

Aliquam was undressing to just sleep in boxers tonight. He noticed her out of the corner of his eye and he turned to smile at her.

Toki winked at him once she got out of her shirt. It was bundled up and tossed into the dirty clothes, before she began the process of getting the mostly translucent blue nightshirt slid on. It covered her belly, but the bright glow was visible. It wasn’t like glow sticks- and the little gray souls were highly visible through the thick green membrane keeping them and their bodies safely inside.

Shimmying out of her pants and leaving herself in only a shirt and underpants, the skeleton also flings those into the clothes bin, before planting one hand on the dresser. She shifts, leaning forwards and extending her pelvis backwards, and stretches her lower back with a soft groan. Her vertebrae pop and crunch loudly, and she sighed softly shortly after. “Mmm… Like what you see?” She questions him teasingly, watching him watch her through the mirror while she dealt with some parts of her lower back pain. He always looked so much smaller outside of his clothing- though his bones were still massive and strong.

"Very much so, you're beautiful more and more with each passing day." he sighed softly.

“You’re such a flatterer sometimes, Aliquam.” She offers him a small grin, straightens, and then makes for the bed. Toki sits easily, but getting comfortable is not easy. “Mm… Damn, I miss laying on my front.” She sighs. Looking at herself briefly, she then glances up to him and leans back slightly while crossing her legs slightly. “Mmm… I am inclined to disagree. The only thing that’s changing day by day is my waistline- so it is our little one who are growing more so than myself.”
She teases.

"Nyeh!" It didn’t take him long to squirrel his way into bed. He hugged her gently and while caressing her stomach, and tugged her backwards on the bed so she was snuggled up flush to him.

Toki giggled softly, turning carefully to cuddle close. The twins kicked gently as she settled her back carefully against the front of his ribs, and she laughed quietly. Tangling her legs with his felt good, and she sighed as she snuggled back into him with a pleased sound. “Mm… The twins know it’s their daddy touching them.” She purrs softly. They were alive with motion, squirming and basking in the energy suffusing her middle so richly.

"I'm glad~" he chuckled.

"Me too." She sighs softly. She squints up at the light switch, having realized they hadn’t shut it off-and makes use of a quick summoning to plunge them both into the darkness of the room. Well…
Except it was actually fairly bright. Toki squinted down at her middle, and the bright glow of her belly that highlighted the bones of his hands. “I am once more a living nightlight. Or a firefly.” Except it wasn’t her rear that lit up.

"This is nice though." Papyrus cooed softly. He curled around her, wrapping his body around her as he cradled her gravid swell more securely in his hands. She was getting larger- and she would only continue to grow larger. He couldn’t wait.

“Mmm… Very true.” She gives a tired yawn, and tucks her chin so her horns don’t stab at him as she nestles back into him. “Mm…” She was going to try and sleep, if the bouncy jellybeans in her belly would let her.

"I love you." he purred, stroking her stomach.

Toki smiled sleepily. “I love you too. We all do.” She snuggles down, tucking her chin to her chest with a quiet sigh, and settles down to try and sleep. Though, that’s long in the coming. The twins are awake and moving, and it is not easy to sleep with two tiny bodies squirming inside.

He moved over soon and curled up, now curled around her stomach as he rubbed the skin.

She was rotated easily so she faced him, leaving the curve of her abdomen braced inside the empty cavity of his own. Toki thrummed softly, but didn’t stir, simply relaxing more and more as his hands rubbed the skin of her middle. It felt good, relaxing and soothing her towards sleep, even if it excited the high-strung soulings.

"I love you so much." he sighed blissfully.

Toki gave a tiny rumbling purr, and hooked her fingers into his ribs as she clung to him. Sleepily, she nuzzled her face to his chest. “M’ love ya mostest’s.” She slurred softly.

He chuckled softly at that and kissed her head affectionately. His hands massaged her middle softly, and slowly worked over her lower back as well. Papyrus located knots in her back, and he frowned faintly. He couldn’t really do a deep tissue rub like she apparently needed, but… He could loosen some of them.

She sighed sleepily, and was snoring just softly into his chest shortly, for all of her guff about the wiggling keeping her up. The rubbing and magic donation had her settling straight to sleep as the stress ebbed out of her body.
Chapter 46

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: This is a good chapter. Heh. Lots of cute things happen.

May was ending- and the weather was finally solidifying for the better. The rain was less and less, and the cold was turning towards warmer times- which meant many things. The flowers were coming into bloom, as were the trees and various other fauna that made up the majority of the woods.

And with them coming to life, Toki’s apiary was coming back into business too. She found herself out with the bees one early morning, clad in a pair of shorts and a tank top as she enjoyed the sunshine dancing over her bones. The bees were active, swarming as they stretched their wings and headed out to get pollen. They clung to her and Aliquam, whom she had stolen from Undyne for the day so she’d have some help getting the hives going and getting her honey business going once more.

Undyne had been eager to get more honey- apparently it had been quite popular amongst the citizens of Waterfall- and had readily agreed. She had offered to help too, until the swarming bees dissuaded her.

Toki had the taps turned on, and was steadily draining out the honey that the hive had managed to collect over the winter. It was being gathered in bins that were carefully placed under the taps that connected to her hives. It left her hands free to spend some time deep cleaning the hives- and fixing the front of the one that had the apparent leak. It looked like a warped piece of wood had cracked- which meant all she really needed to do was nail a patch up piece over the large crack, and it would be functional again.

So she hammered away, crouched carefully in front of the hive, and trying to keep her balance while she tapped nails carefully into the wood.

Aliquam was sitting nearby, bonding with the bees. He hummed softly and giggled when the bees crawled over his ribs, exploring under and over his shirt. "Did they always do this?" he asked between giggles.

Toki laughed heartily, huffing when she smacked her finger with the hammer. It stung, but didn’t do much more than scuff her bone. “They did it to me once I made the change, if you recall. They quite like that we’re hollow now. Well- you’re more hollow than I am.” She had a small swarm of them clinging to her belly, obviously perturbed by the green glow that didn’t let them investigate the inside of her body anymore.

She jolted as one crawled into her eye socket, and had to carefully and gently scoop it out. “Eye sockets are off limits, you silly bugs.” She coos to the scout clinging merrily to her finger.

"That is both adorable and hilarious." He snorted softly, giving a lighthearted 'nyeh heh heh heh!'

“Just you wait until they climb into your eye socket.” She grinned at him cheekily. The bees gathered on her skull, forming a buzzing crown of sorts as they basked and enjoyed the warmth of her body. Toki finished up with fixing the box, and then struggled to get to her feet. It was getting harder to get up from crouching down like that.

"Need some help?" he asked gently, noticing her struggle.

Toki grimaced, and hauled herself to her feet using the top of the beehive to boost her. She straightened, rubbed her back, and shot him a cheeky grin. “Not yet. Soon I wont be able to get up and down without help or something to tug myself up on- but today is not that day.” Never mind that she managed to get up by using the beehive.

"Well still, I worry." he mentioned as he followed her with his gaze.

Toki nodded and stooped, turning off the valve once this hive was done draining. She hefted the tub of honey up, settling the heavy jug on her hip. A little over a gallon of honey was decent for what they had stored up over winter. She just had to heft everything else in with her- but for now she’d cap the jug, and get them all to the forefront of the apiary. “We all worry,” she chirps softly to him, setting the jug down and going to collect the others one at a time. “But we’ll be okay for a little while yet.”

He sighed, and then he smiled and got up to help her carry the honey. "If you're sure."

“I am almost fifty percent sure.” She grinned teasingly at him. His help was handy- repetitively bending and lifting hurt her back something bad. But it was necessary. “Heh. We’ll have fresh honey for a while now. I wont make a shipment out of the village until the next harvest, so we can split this up between us and the villagers.” She wasn’t going to bother setting up a stall at the market of sorts- she didn’t want anything in return from them for the honey.

"Almost fifty?!” He shot her a look, "Why so little?" he asked.

Toki wiggled her brows at him slightly. “I was teasing, love. It was the first number that popped into my mind. Your response made it worth it though,” she giggled, plonking down another jug of honey. She rubbed her back as she straightened, and gently tickled his ribs. She was careful of his hitchhikers, just as she was careful of her own.

He shivered and let out a soft ‘nyeh!’ before he huffed and swatted at her hand. "No tickles," he giggled, "especially while I'm carrying honey!"

Toki rolled her eye lights in amusement and laughed heartily. “These jugs are pretty hearty. If you could break it by dropping it, I would be surprised. So… That means yes tickles.” And her sharp fingers would gently tickle over his bones, before she wiggled out of his reach, grinning playfully at him as a cloud of bee’s bustles out of the neck of his shirt.

"Nyeeehh!” he squirmed and laughed before he huffed and shook himself, "Not fair," he huffed.

“Life isn’t fair, love.” She winked at him, and headed to collect another jug. She ended up snagging two, and waddled slightly as she brought them back up to the front where the rest of the jugs were being collected.

"So all we have got to do is sanitize the bottles and this can get sent out, yeah?"

“Sanitize the bottles, make sure there’s nothing in the honey before we pour it into the jars, seal the jars, and then ship them out.” She chirps cheerfully. Toki plonks down more jugs, and then carefully scoops a bee up as it wanders over her nasal bridge. She pets it gently, and then hums thoughtfully as she squints at it. That little… dot inside of it. She hadn’t ever noticed it before. Was it… a soul? Huh. “Hey Pap? You think this little dot inside the bee is a soul, maybe?”
"Huh?" he looked at her, and then lifted up his hand to look at a bee.

Inside of the bee was a tiny, tiny dot. It took up most of the thorax, and was shaped like a drop of water. It was tiny and gold- and pulsed with signs of life. The bee didn’t even notice that it was there, as it cleaned its antenna atop of his fingers.

Toki peered at her bee as well, squinting and focusing her magic on it briefly. The bee stilled, sensing it’s examination- and Toki caught a glimpse of tiny, tiny stats. Everything was in decimals- and the Bee didn’t even have a natural one for HP. She stared at it, completely surprised.

"How cute!" he purred gently, "It does have a visible soul!"

"With the smallest stats I’ve ever seen.” Toki murmurs. She squints harder, but ultimately stops when her magic makes her briefly sense all of the bees. It was a little disorienting- and she shook her head to clear the non-magic related buzz that flooded it. “That’s actually really cool. Huh.” She let it go carefully, and watched it buzz off to rejoin the mass clinging to her middle. “Bees are really cool. They do so much for us with their tiny, tiny little souls.” She beams contently. “They make hives, pollinate flowers, make delicious honey from their regurgitation- bees are fascinating. I wonder what other critter’s souls look like.”

"I suppose if we get the chance we'll find out.”

“Makes me wish we had a zoo in Ebott City. We could go look at all of the animals and insects and see what their souls look like.” Toki murmured softly. She smiled, watching the bees for a time, before going back to hauling honey. Once all of the jugs were gathered and the taps closed down, Toki heaved a huge sigh. “And now we need to get this to the pantry. All of my equipment is there.”

In the walk in pantry she’d designed specifically for holding her stores of honey and preparing it for shipping and sale.

"Consider it done, nyeh heh heh!"

Toki laughed softly and set to helping him get everything inside to the pantry after she’d put more food out for the bees. She had to brush the bee’s off- because getting a swarm of them in the house was not a good idea- before they went in. By the time they had it all lugged in and stacked on the shelf so she could work on processing it, her back was killing her, and she was exhausted in the physical sense.

“I am definitely out of shape.” She grouses good-naturedly to herself as she directs Aliquam to grab the jars from the top shelf. “Alright. You wanna remember how to prep jars from the last time you got to see me do honey, Pap?”

"I do indeed, Toki." he answered, setting the collected honey down on the table before collecting the jars.

She watched him work with a satisfied nod, and set to work on her own. The sealed jars were disinfected first off, rinsed second, and then honey was carefully strained into it to make sure that the organic substance was pure and good. The wax wouldn’t hurt anyone- but not a lot of people enjoyed eating honey right from the comb. And only a few of her hives still had the harvestable comb- it was good business, but hard work. She preferred the easier tapped hives, where it didn’t distress her bees as badly.

Toki set to work, humming an easy tune as she strained the honey through a strainer, and then got it settled into the jars. Once the air settled, she was vacuum sealing the tops, and setting the finished jars off to the side for labels to be slapped on. Simple and easy.
After a matter of many hours, the honey was all sealed away and put into crates for distribution. "Well, Toki," Papyrus hummed as he looked at their completed job proudly, "I'd say we did a great job!" he sighed happily.

“We did.” She smiles warmly. She shifts to heft a crate up and stack them in the corner. “You’re really quite good at it.” She praised warmly. Toki shifted and offered him a bright smile. “We can hand these out later. Heh… So,” she beams, “Want to make some honey tarts?” She hadn’t made them with her honey for a long while.

"Definitely!" There wasn’t a second of hesitation to answer that.

She grins at him and snags one of the bottles she was keeping for her house, and pads from the room. She rolls her hips slightly, stretching them, and vows to take a hot bath later to soothe the aching bones. Her pelvis was visibly widening- and soon she’d be stuck with that gods be damned waddle she’d laughed at her mother for having. “It’s been a long while since I’ve made my tarts, hasn’t it? At least, my tarts with my honey, verses store bought.” And there was definitely a difference. Homegrown honey always tasted better in her opinion.

"That's very true indeed." he agreed as he followed her out.

She headed for the kitchen, humming to herself. She’d actually need to make the tarts from scratch for once- she had run out of the base tarts the other day. Toki padded in, leaving Pap to follow, and plonked the honey on the counter before beginning to look for her tart making supplies. “Hey, Pap? Do you remember which cupboard I put my baking pan in? The one for my tarts?”

"Ahh..." He looked at them contemplatively, and then he used his foot to open a cupboard near the floor. Inside, he spotted the pan. "That one. Allow me."

"Thanks, love." She shot him a smile as he fetched the pan, and gathered the rest of her stuff. It would take thirty minutes for the tarts to bake- unless she used her magic. Humming thoughtfully, Toki began to get the batter measured out and mixed. “Think we can entertain ourselves for half an hour? Or should I just use magic on the tarts?”

"I could massage your belly.” he answered with a smile, setting the pan down on the counter for her to pour her batter in.

Toki snorts a soft laugh of amusement, and glances over her shoulder as she begins to mix the powdered things into the liquid bits to make the batter proper. “You just want to feel the little ones move again, don’t you?” She teases. “But I’m totally down for that. The ecto skin feels tight and kind of itchy. A rub would feel amazing.”

"Nyeh heh heh heh~" Papyrus laughed softly. "As you wish~” he thrummed softly.

Toki rolled her eyes good naturedly, setting the oven to preheat. It didn’t take long- the cakes didn’t need to bake at a very high temperature. Once the oven was done preheating, she poured the batter into the pan and eased the first one in. It wasn’t a very big batch she was making- No, it was just a small one for their house. She’d make more later to send with Han to the school, so the kids and teachers could have a treat.

With the timer set, she turned to wash her hands and hum to herself. “Heh. So, you have any idea how you want me, Pap?"

"On the couch please, as comfortable as you can get." he replied.

“I can do that.” She finishes washing her hands, dries them with a flush of magic, and then gives him a smile as she pads for the couch.

Toki settles on it gingerly, stretching out and easing herself up so she’s not completely flat. Her shoulders rest on the armrest, and she adjusts her tank top slightly as it rides up. Her shorts ride up too, but the bare bones of her femurs feel nice and free against the air of the house. “I’m comfy!” She chirps, adjusting herself just slightly, and popping a pillow slightly behind her knees. It felt good to keep them slightly elevated- and put a little bit less weight on her lower lumbar, oddly enough. Will this work for you?” There was plenty of space for him to flop on the couch with her- he could drape between her legs if he wished, and lounge in her lap- or really anything considering he could just lift her if he needed her moved.

"Perfect!” He chirped and sat down alongside the couch. Papyrus reached up, gently easing her shirt up over her belly before stroking her stomach. It did feel a bit tight- but with how fast it was growing, it was little wonder. Magic or not, everything had it’s limits. He purred softly and carefully began to rub the bare bones of his palms over the smoothly growing mound of her middle.

Toki relaxed as he set his hands to working over the ecto-skin that covered her middle. It did, as she said, feel tight and itchy even if the flesh remained supple and soft under his fingers. The rubbing felt good though, and she rocked her skull back against the arm of the couch with a blissful sigh.

“Mmm… That feels great, Pap.”

The twins stirred under his fingers, and batted at him with tiny kicks as he gently jostled their housing.

"Hello you two,” he chuckled softly as he rubbed, kneading ever to slightly with his thumbs.

His palms practically engulfed her belly, and Toki laughed as a tiny foot ran a long path under his fingers. It felt good, having him massage her, and she let her body slouch contently. “You know,” she hums lazily, “With as active as these two are now, they’re going keep me up all night when they get to be full sized.”

"I do apologize.” he sighed gently, pressing a soft kiss to a passing foot. "But I will do my best to take care of you even then.”

“Apologize for what?” She blinks open her sockets to peer at him curiously. “Seriously, love, I’d rather them be active than not be moving much. I know they’re healthy when they’re tickling my ribs from the inside.” She affectionately strokes Pap’s skull with her fingers as she relaxes. The tight feeling across her middle fades slowly, but it feels better now that the skin was being rubbed. Too bad lotion didn’t work on skeletons. “Besides- all the wiggling just means they’re going to take after you and be very energetic. It’s a good thing.” She winks. “Nara tend to be habitually lazy by nature. It’ll be good to break tradition.”

He giggled softly and nuzzled into her hand, sighing happily as his hands continued to dance over her swell.

The little ones continued to squirm in her for a bit, before ultimately settling down for the most part. A pair of small feet pressed down into what felt like her spine, but for the most part they too were relaxed by the careful dance of his hands over her swell. His rubbing was soothing, and she felt herself relax down into the couch. “Mmm… We’re going to have to do this more often. It’s very relaxing.” She purrs.

He purred loudly as he smiled down at her. "I'm glad it gives you relief~" he chuckled happily, before he leaned down and kissed her stomach.

She laughed slightly, her belly shifting against his teeth. One of them stretched, and rested a small back against where his mouth kissed. “I am too. Pregnancy is a bit rough, but it’ll be worth it in the end when we get to see our little jellybeans. You’ve been a real sport about all the strange things that happen with it. It makes me very proud of you.” Toki strokes his skull again, her bones letting off a pleased buzz.

He nuzzled her hand and sighed happily. "I'm a sport because after everything you've done for us, it's time for you to be repaid, even if it's not in full.” he purred happily

Toki’s fingers rubbed soothing circles on his skull, and she leaned her skull forward so she could offer him a quiet smile. That hadn’t been the response she had been expecting. “I don’t want you to do things just because you guys think I deserve something in return. None of you guys owe me anything.” She says softly.

"Nyeh, you say that." he huffed softly, turning to nip her hand.

She squeaked as he snagged her thumb in his teeth. “I say that and I mean it, you goober.” She curled her fingers along his jaw, tickling the edges as he held her thumb. The only thing she could think that she wanted from him was his love, and she was pretty sure she already had that.

He giggled softly and licked her finger before letting it go. "Well, I say we're a shoulder you can lean on if it's needed~" he purred, "And if you needed anything at all, you could count on us.”

Toki gave him a bemused look, and cleaned her thumb off on the shoulder of his shirt. “Very mature, slobbering my finger like that.” She teased. “I know you guys are here if I need anything. I’m just not the sort of person to ask for help.” Hence why she spent most of her days plowing through her paperwork alone, unless Tenebris decided to volunteer to help for the day. “Or ask for anything in general.”

"I know you're not, but we're not afraid to help where we can, you know." he murmured.

“She strokes his jaw again, thumbing over his cheekbone with gentle affection, before she grunts softly, and presses her fingers to a spot closer to her back. She rubs gently, and rolls her eye lights in her sockets. “That was a tiny foot to my spine- and that felt really, really weird.” She didn’t lie on her back often anymore, because the babybones tended to kick her in weird, weird places. It didn’t exactly hurt- but it was a slightly uncomfortable sensation, and it wouldn’t feel very nice when they got larger. “Heh. I think they’re gonna have your feet.”

"You want to know what would be worse?” he grinned.

She gave him a wary look. “What would be worse?” She inquired lightly.

"If my father's 'genetics' passed down to his grandchildren." he snickered. "They'd have very powerful legs.”

That made Toki literally groan. “Oh gods, Pap. Lets hope they don’t. That would probably suck when they get bigger. Some of their kicks are already a bit uncomfortable at times. If they had his leg strength, they could probably kick their way right out of me.”

"Exactly." he nodded, continuing to stroke her stomach as he then let out some magic for her. "This should feel better for you.” he murmured.

The magic did feel nice, though it stirred up the babybones inside of her. “It feels nice,” She nods, “Though I didn’t really need it. The glow is still bright enough from last time.” Though now, it was brightening once more. Toki laughs, and joins her fingers with his briefly to guide his fingers to the side of her belly where one of the soullings was jabbing small bony limbs outwards. “They really enjoy your magic. It wakes them up.”

"I'm glad.” He purrs. “I would hope it does. It reassures me that they're healthy.”

Toki laughed gently and let his fingers go so she could ease her fingers against her middle and shoo the poking foot to the other side of her belly with her fingers. “They’re healthy, I’m fairly certain. With as much magic as they take, I’m certain that they’re very, very healthy.” She also made sure to eat stuff that was rich in calcium from time to time, to help with bone growth.

"They are really powerful kicks, yeah?” he smiled at her, "I'm glad.” he purred gently.

“You and me both.” She chuckles softly. “And yeah. For something so small, they kick pretty strongly. It’s only going to get stronger as they get bigger.” She chirps softly. Toki shifts, smiling at a foot that presses against his fingers. “It feels really, really weird though. I can’t even describe it.” She murmurs. “Hm… hey, Pap? I’m what… Around twenty-one weeks along? We don’t know how long it’ll be, but… forty weeks is the norm for humans, and it’s less than that with twins. So… We haven’t really talked about names, and we’re probably half way there.” She murmurs softly.

"I guess it never came to mind... do we wanna wait to name them until we know what they'll be born as, or should we start thinking now?” he asked.

“Well, not all humans choose to know.” She murmured softly. “We could pick two names for each just in case? Or something gender neutral, if it comes to us.”

"I can do that... let's see, there's... Alex, Skylar, Adrian..."

“Oh? Those are nice. Skylar,” Which sounded very weird with her accent, “is a lovely name. Not going to suggest fonts though, to keep up the family tradition? Eras is a lovely name for a little boy. I don’t know many fonts, admitted. Hmm… What about…?” She closes her sockets briefly, thoughtfully rubbing her fingers along his skull. She found one that she was slightly fond of, the more she thought about it- but ended up shaking her skull and muttering to herself. “No, no, that one’s dumb.”

Papyrus perked, eyes brightening slightly as he all but chirped against her middle. "What is it? Lemme hear it!"

His exuberant tone made one of the twins startle, and she dropped her fingers to soothe the spot that their tiny little limb lashed out at. “But it’s silly though.” She peeked at him, and then glanced away. A green flush bubbled up over her cheeks, and she tucked her chin shyly. “It’s… not really gender neutral though, but… Honey for a girl maybe? I know it’s a silly name, but…” It wasn’t even customary to her family’s naming traditions, but it would pay homage to the other half of her genetics. “I kinda like it…”

He blinked, and then he lit up even more. "It's adorable! I love it!" he laughed happily.

Toki laughed softly, face still flushed. Shifting her legs so her ankles were crossed, she peered at him happily. “So… That’s one name down then. Heh… What did you think of Eras? It’s a font- like your name is. It’s more masculine- but we could go with two gender neutral names, and one of each of the
He snorted and laughed softly. "Oh that's clever. I say we go for it."

"Hm…” She closed her sockets again, and rubbed her middle thoughtfully. “I like it. What about you two? You two like the names, hm?” She smiles and gently laughs as something tiny taps her hand in response to the stimulus. “So we’ve got Skylar, Eras, Honey… We need one more font, just to make it even. Uh… All I can think is Times New Roman, but we are not naming anything that. Uh…”

"Nyeh heh heh, what about Verdana?” he inquired, fingers traveling her middle to brush where the little one was kicking. Absolutely wonderful!

She smiled widely. “It’s not quite gender neutral- but… I get the feeling we’re going to have a little girl. I dunno why. Mother’s intuition, maybe?” Her mother had said that boys carried all in the front, and girls carried all around. She was sort of in-between that- and had no idea how to judge that with twins. “I like Verdana. Hey, Pap? Which surname are they going to take?” Light bulbs were flickering on in her skull, and her eyes opened and brightened with her thoughts. She really liked all four names- and had a thought about just… mixing and matching them.

"...! Ah... Probably mine?” he asked, "They take the name of the father, do they not?"

“We’re an untraditional couple.” She quirks a slight grin at him, all sharp teeth and love. They weren’t even married- and that was going to be a whole barrel of monkey’s to get into if they ever did get married. “Hm… Skylar Eras Gaster. Hm… I kinda like that. A lot. Though… It’ll be interesting, since the firstborn will be heir to the Nara clan. Heh. We’ll be making up a lot of traditions as we go.” Her eyes glimmer eagerly.

Toki had always been fond of making new traditions.

"The fusion of clans.” he agreed, "It will be very interesting.”

“Very.” She nods slightly. “Will it be a true fusion though? I know Sans is older- technically isn’t he heir to your clan after your dad? I don’t really know how monster clans work, though I know you do have them. Your dad was in quite a snit when he found out you all were technically apart of mine for now.”

"I will have to ask Father of this." he cupped his chin in thought, "I wonder..."

"Hm?” She folded her hands on her middle, feeling more relaxed. Well, up until the timer for the tarts went off. She squirmed, and tapped his skull lightly. “Time’s up, love. Gotta get them out. Give me a hand getting up? I got a little too comfy. Tell me your thoughts though, while I fetch the tarts from the oven.”

"Alright.” he stood first, and then reached out and gently took her hands, pulling her up. "I probably am not the first to receive the role of alpha, but as first married... I do not know.”

“We’re not married though.” She blinked up at him lightly as she settled on her feet. She took a moment to catch her balance, make sure she wasn’t going to fall backwards, before padding off towards the kitchen and leaving him to follow and ponder his and her words.

Toki made haste for the oven, and plucked the tarts from the oven, before turning off the timer and heat from inside. The more her magic had settled into her bones and the more familiar she got with her magic, the more she found that hot things were bothering her less and less.

The hot tray of plain tarts was carefully set on the stove, and the tarts removed and set on a cooling rack. They were still too hot for him to eat yet—so they would both need to wait to put the honey on until it could be safely handled.

Papyrus hadn't followed. He had gotten rather stiff as he let slip what he had said. Her ignorance however made him sag and sigh in faint relief. She hadn't caught on, he thinks... phew...!

Toki pads back out to him a few moments later, scrubbing her fingers against the fabric of her shirt to try and cool off the bone so she didn’t burn anything. In one hand, she has the jar of honey.
“Anyways,” She continues once she’s back in the main room, “You were saying?”

"Oh! Ah... I actually lost my train of thought." Papyrus chuckled quietly. "Sorry...!"

She propped a hand on her hip and gave him a warm, lopsided smile. “You are a precious pumpkin, you know that? Well, your train of thought will eventually return to its station.” Toki winks.
“Anyways, the tarts need to cool before we can eat them.” More for his sake than her own, really, but she didn’t mind waiting a little bit.

"Right, okay!" he stretched where he was standing, and looked at her, "What should we do until then?"

She had several ideas— and many of them were heading down a different path that was not so innocent. “Well, there are lots of things we could do.” She grins at him coyly, and pads closer. The lights of her eyes take on a slightly mint colored tinge, and she gives him a demure smile. “We are all alone, after all~ How about we close the curtains on the windows and see what sort of mischief we can get into with a bottle of honey?”

Mood swings could be powerful things— and she felt herself going from zero to horny rather rapidly.

His socket’s lit up. "Oh now you're giving me ideas.” He took the jar of honey from her fingers as he met her in the middle of the room. Aliquam wrapped an arm around the small of her back, tugging her gently to his chest, and smirked down at her devilishly. "Nyeh heh heh~"
Chapter 47

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: And finally a hella good thing for the Monsters. A light in the dark, if you will.

Don't forget to visit our blog! Lots of stuff goes down there. You can ask us or the characters questions if you like. http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Makes awful joke related to 'im in me mum's car, broom broom'

It was only three days later that Toki got the best news possible. Probably the best news she’d ever gotten, even over becoming pregnant. She had toiled and toiled the last couple of days against a sudden onslaught of paperwork- working through the night and into the next day even- and low and behold… It paid off.

It paid off big time.

Since they came to the surface, Asgore had been working to help monsters achieve their rights. Rights that they should have had from the start, and rights that they should have had from the moment they had stepped out from the underground. Humans had denied them that- denied them the right to even be on the surface without someone to keep an eye on them.

And now… She didn’t care if she was tired, she didn’t care if she had large dark marks under her eye sockets from lack of sleep, and she certainly didn’t care that she probably looked like hell from pulling the all nighter she had. She gathered her papers and deeds and files, which were no longer technically hers anymore, and sent bees to fetch her loved ones. Toki could tell the rest of the village later- but for now, she sent some of her fastest fire bees out to find the Gaster family.

Toki had gotten a very, very important phone call from Asgore.

They had enough votes- enough supporters- and they managed to secure the monsters all of their rights in a single landslide. She had no idea how he did it- he sounded as exhausted and excited as she did- but he managed it, and that in itself was like some sort of heaven sent miracle. Monsters now could own their own land, businesses, cars, and homes. They could also get married and legally have it recognized.

Monsters could also marry HTM’s. Humans were not there yet- but HTM’s were a gray area on their scale, it would seem. She had some sort of inkling as to why that particular part had been pushed through- and would have to thank Asgore when she went to visit the castle later that day.

She’d spent the morning on the phone with Simmons and various other legal agencies after Asgore’s call- and had gotten it cleared through all of them for her to give the land they were living on to them, along with all of the land still scheduled for development. They would consider it a donation of sorts- and she’d see that pay off on her tax return next year, so she really didn’t want any payment from them.

That wasn’t the point. The point was- they were free. Finally free.
Toki’s socket’s beaded with happy tears.

She’d also managed a call to some of the bussing agencies- and they were agreeing to send up busses to bring everyone up to the castle later that day. Well, everyone who would be buying cars. They needed to choose the car designs they liked- and some of them needed to be specially fitted and sized to some of the monsters- so that was going to happen too.

Toki was so happy that she felt like she might explode.

She waited, documents and official paperwork in hand, for the Gaster family to come to the house.

It didn’t take them long to come barging in the front door. Caeruleus was the first to show up, but Tenebris and Aliquam soon joined him, both looking harried and like they had rushed over.

"Toki, what’s going on? Are you okay?" Aliquam inquired, eyes roving over her, and then assessing if there was a threat.

What a sight she must have been for them to see, with her all teary eyed and exhausted with her arms full of important files and deeds. She gave them a water laugh, and shifted the pile of things in her arms so she could dabble at the glowing tear tracks on her face. “Everything is fine, Quinn. Shit. Just… hell, everything is amazing. Come in, please. I wanted to tell you three first and give me the chance to compose myself.” She motions for them to come to the dining room with her, and then carefully deposits her armload onto the table. Behind her on the floor is boxes and boxes of paperwork- enough for the hundredfold monsters under her care.

They looked at each other, and followed her. Tenebris noticed the boxes almost immediately, and his eyes narrowed slightly. "Was there an update about our residency?" he inquired, peering between the boxes and her.

This would be the first that Cae had heard of it, as he was the only one to her knowledge that hadn’t been clued in as to what Toki really as, but… “Yes.” She beams, sniffing without shame as fat, happy tears rolled down her cheekbones. “I’m no longer your gilded cage- you’re free. You’re all finally, finally free. And this- this is yours. Your files, your paperwork, your identity, all of this belongs to you now. Your clan is your own, Tenebris, if you so choose. You are free."

They all seemed stunned for a moment, silence overwhelming for a short time. But Aliquam was the first to respond, his sockets widening. "We're free..." He lit up and scooped her up in a twirl, "This is wonderful!" he laughed.

Tenebris took a deep breath and he purred softly, eyes wide and happy. "Thank you, Tokiko."

Sans however had a conflicted look in his eye sockets. But after a moment he sighed and smiled, letting the look fade. "Cool."

Toki had seen the look on Cae’s face, and knew that she owed him an explanation. But she was swept into Pap’s arms before she could do that, and ended up giving a choked laugh as she looped her arms about his shoulders. The twirling was overwhelming, but she was too overjoyed to care. “It’s wonderful indeed!” She sniffs, smiling brightly. “And, ah… I got it cleared for everyone to have the homes they have now. Th-the deed to your house is in with Tenebris’ paperwork. It’s yours now, as is the space of land behind it.” All of the houses had yards of sort, and spaces for cars to be parked. They’d made sure of that when they’d been built, and it was finally time to put them to use. She scrubs her sockets again, and laughs. “You’re all free now. It’s… Gods, I can’t stop crying, and it’s dumb that I cant, but I’m just so happy for you guys.”
He nuzzled her and wiped her eyes as he hushed her. "I'm proud of you, Toki~ I'm so proud of you." he purred happily. "I love you so much." he cooed.

Toki sniffled and nuzzled into his hand as he cleared her cheeks. "It has nothing to do with me- Asgore managed to get all of your rights in a landslide. Well, almost all of them. Monsters still can’t marry humans. But monsters and HTM’s, monsters and monsters, all marriages will be legally recognized now. You’re your own people now- and now everyone can make their own choices regarding staying apart of my clan, or breaking forth, or if they want to keep their homes here or sell and move to the cities. Hell, you all can go to different countries now if you want to see the world."

"That sounds wonderful" Tenebris laughed gently.

While nuzzles from Papyrus continued, he was positively beaming with joy. "I can't wait...!"

"Hey Pap, you can finally get that car you wanted!"

"... Oh my Stars!" he pulled back, his eyes gleaming, "I can! Nyeh heh heh!"

“You can,” she laughs, scrubbing her face on Papyrus’ shoulder. The tears still glimmered in her eyes, but the flow began to ebb off. “That’s something else too. I’ve got busses coming today- everyone is going up to the castle. The car companies are there- they’re going to take orders today for those who want cars, and get them fitted and sized for the monsters that will be using them. All of you will be getting cars once you decide on a model and a make.”

"Awesome!" Cae's grin widened.

Tenebris cupped his chin, "That would be quite interesting to have my own vehicle..." the older monster rumbled loudly.

Toki sniffed and nodded, and patted Pap’s shoulder slightly. "Lemme down, love. I love you to death, but all the twirling is making me dizzy. But yeah- You’re welcome to ride with me if you want. I’m going to drive up. Busses are the only vehicle I get car sick in, so I’m going to stick to my truck.”

"Sounds good." Cae and Ali agreed, though the taller of the two eased her down onto her feet with a fond gentleness.

"I wouldn’t mind riding in the bed of the truck. There will be enough room for me there." Tenebris hummed.

“I can toss some pillows back there to pad the bed. Metal isn’t very comfortable.” On her feet once more, the tired looking skeleton scrubs her sockets with her sleeves, and then goes to separate the paperwork. Each pile is slid towards its intended owner. “You’ll all be taking a drivers test while you’re up there- there’s a manual in each of your folders for you to read and look over. It’s the new one that’s going to be released soon regarding monster vehicles on the roads. I have one too.” As a driver on said roads, she needed to be aware of any new laws added. “You’ll also want to keep all of this information safe. Like, seriously safe.”

"Sounds good." Ali nodded with a smile.

“I’ve got a lockbox you can put yours in if you want, Pap.” Since he did live here after all, he was free to use hers until she could get him his own lock box. She glances to Tenebris and offers him a slight smile. “So… do you think you three can help me get everyone’s paperwork passed out to them before the busses come? There’s a lot of monsters for me to handle on my own.” And there were stacks of boxes that she would have to carry as well. They were heavy- and she’d brought them in the house on her own as it was.

"I can do that." Papyrus nodded.

"Sounds easy enough." Cae nods, cracks his knuckle joints, and grins wider.

Gaster folds his arms. "Indeed"

"Thanks, you guys." She gives them a relieved smile. Toki plants her knuckles into her lower back, and gives them a warm look, before moving to take a box. "The busses should be here in an hour and a half. Or roundabouts that time. Between the four of us, I’m sure we can get the deeds to their homes and the files all handed out."

They actually ran a little over than the hour and a half- but the bus drivers were cool with it, thankfully. They waited the extra twenty minutes it took to get everyone their papers and for everyone calm enough to board the busses. Not everyone was going- even with ten busses, they couldn’t fit all of the citizens. But they agreed to make multiple runs- and Toki would shell out the money to help pay for the gas. It was expensive- but she didn’t mind. Soon everyone would be able to drive on his or her own.

The ride up there was actually very quiet. Toki was exhausted, and could barely fit behind the wheel while giving Cae enough legroom in the back seat. Both the boys and Tenebris spent their time reading up on the driving manual.

Truth be told, Toki was getting a little tight behind the wheel anyways. Her middle kept rubbing on the steering wheel- and her legs couldn’t reach the pedals if she let herself sit back much further. Such was the curse of carrying twins, truly.

But thankfully they were almost there. The castle loomed ahead, and now all they had to do was wait for the line of busses to file in and get parked, before Toki could get her truck parked.

She adjusted her seat belt with her fingers and squirmed, trying to shift a little bit backwards to give her some more space against her middle. It didn’t work. "How goes the booklet, guys? Think you understand it enough to ace your test?" The back window to the truck had been left open- so Tenebris wasn’t out of the loop in case they talked.

"I am currently trying to figure out how we intend to make these 'pedals' work with my... own anatomy." Tenebris mentioned, lifting up one of he legs and curling the toes a little bit.

She tilted her skull, truck idling quietly as she waited her turn to park. One of her fingers tapped idly along the steering wheel. "Probably about the same that they’re going to do for the wolves. I don’t really know yet- but it might be some sort of specialized dash with room for your legs. It would make sense. We’ll have to see when we pick up the cars, I suppose."

He shrugged and continued reading.

Toki let him be after that, and adjusted herself again. That was about as good as it would get- and the boys were obviously engrossed in their reading.

It didn’t take long for them to get in, and she parked her truck well out of the way as the first hoard of monsters filed into the castle. Once the truck was safely parked, she squished out from between the seat and the steering wheel, and rubbed the sore spot on her middle from where it had been rubbed on by the wheel when she’d had to adjust her course. “Well, we’re here.” She hums.

Tenebris slowly got up and leaned on the roof of the cab as he looked out.

“Watch those elbows up there, big guy.” She chirped up to him. “You’ll dent roof. The roof isn’t as reinforced as the body is.” She stretches her legs and then leans her head in the car to address the skeletons in her rig. “Hey, you two. You want to keep reading until the crowd at the entrance thins out?”

"We have the whole day, don’t we?” Cae asked as he read his manual.

“We do indeed.” She yawns faintly. “I’m going to make an attempt to nap in the back of the truck then, if it’s all the same to you. Wake me up when you want to head inside, yeah?”

"Fair enough." Aliquam replied, smiling at her as he glanced up from his reading. "Want me to lay with you?”

“I certainly wouldn’t mind it if you’d like to.” She quirks a smile to him, and rubs her cheek thoughtfully. “Though I dunno if all three of us can fit back there. Your dad is pretty large.” And her truck bed was a normal sized one, which meant it was about eight and a half feet long, and maybe five wide. Both Aliquam and Tenebris were quite broad in the shoulder.

"I could go for a walk." Tenebris suggested.

“Reading and walking is not easy to do- unless you think you’ve got the manual down good enough?” She leans back out of the truck to look at the bigger monster over the roof of it.

He arched a brow at her and curled his lip slightly. "I am a scientist. Do you not think I have honed my ability to do just that?”

Sans piped up from inside the truck without ever looking up from his page. “Pops, aren’t you retired?”

Gaster’s hands tightened, and he tapped the top of the truck carefully with his gloved finger. "Sans Caeruleus Gaster. I will find a way to completely halt your access to ketchup."

"Aw come on!"

Toki giggled softly. “You are getting up there, eh, Gramps?” She teases lightly. “You could just kick Cae to the front seat and stretch out like you did after Valentine’s Day. It’s probably more comfortable than wandering around in the crowd and getting your tail trampled on.”

"Oh come on don't encourage him.” Cae groaned.

"Well as nice as lounging sounds, I'm starting to lose feeling in my feet, and I can easily tuck my tail away. Thank you anyhow.”

She rolls her eye lights in her sockets, but nods. “Looks like we’re on for lounging then, Pap. Mind giving me a hand up before you hop out, Tenebris?” Getting into the back of her truck was doable, when one wasn’t nearing twenty-two weeks pregnant. She leaves Papyrus to get out of the truck on his own time, and makes for the back of it with a hum. Her truck was pretty tall- and the top of the sides of the bed came up to her under arms.
"No problem." Tenebris drops the back of the truck and he reaches down gently, hooking his hands on her under arms. "Alley oop." he chuckles, lifting her up gently, before setting her rear on one of the many pillows he was given to rest on.

“… It still amazes me how you guys just lift me like I’m a child. Seriously.” Toki had dangled like a child from his hands, and he’d hefted her like her mom had when she’d been a toddler. Toki settles down on one of the pillows with a soft sigh, peering up at him with a grin. “Heh. You may end up toting the twins a lot. I think that excited them.” They were going to town inside of her belly, kicking up a small flurry.

"Isn’t that a duty of a grandfather?" he hummed, helping Aliquam up before he hopped down onto the ground.

“That depends on the grandpa.” She chuckles. “Mine certainly didn’t heft me. Read to me a lot? Yes.” She nestles down, and pats the pillow next to her for Papyrus to join her. The pillows only did so much, and she had intentions of at least relaxing into him a little bit, since she couldn’t lie on her front on the pillows.

Aliquam sat with her and purred as he pulled her close, nuzzling the top of her skull softly.

"Well I suppose I would fit the quota regardless, yes?" Tenebris chuckled, "I’m going to go look at the different kind of vehicles. See you later." he rumbled, turning to go. Of course he was. Toki rolled her sockets and snuggled into Aliquam. “You would indeed.” She murmurs softly. A sigh escapes her, and she shifts, spooning into his side as best she can. “Are you okay to read like this?” She could flop on her back between his legs and nap that way, reclined against his chest. Her horns would make a good spot to balance the booklet.

"Oh yes, of course!" he replied, stroking her stomach gently. "No problem at all~"

She winks up at him softly, and nestles her head somewhere against his side as he cups her belly with his hand. The twins are stirred up- but their kicks aren’t too strong yet. “Mmm, good. I don’t want to disrupt you learning to drive. We might need it before long. I’m getting a bit tight behind the steering wheel.”

"Sure thing." he rumbled, "Alright, where was I…" he murmured, looking to his book. Toki carefully pointed at a page that had recent signs of use, and then settled down with a sleepy sigh. Her sockets closed, and it didn’t take long for her to be snoring away against his chest, relaxed and limp and very dead to the noises of the world.

He held her gently and hummed soothingly as he read, though after long enough ended up joining her in the peaceful nap.

The sound of engines revving caught Tenebris' attention and he came over curiously.

There was a tiny wisp of a thing sitting in the driver’s seat of a newer model mustang. She was maybe five feet tall, and built like a twig. She had a sales tag on though- her name was Sue. She eyed the massive monster that approached the car, and arched her brow in a friendly manner, teasingly roaring the engine at him. “Hiya!” She chirps, all bubbles and happiness in her voice.
“You're a big fella, aren’t ya?” She spoke Japanese, but heavily accented.

He looked down at her and smiled, "Yes, I suppose I am. I came to see what there was to choose from the selection." He answered. Looking at the engine of the car, he knelt down, and then he let out a loud growl to challenge the roar of the engine.

The growl startled her, and her foot pressed down on the gas. The engine roared back, but not nearly as strong as his growl. Sue licked her lips nervously. “Well, uh, if you're interested in muscle cars, we have a lot to choose from. Uh… I can show you some more, if ya’d like.”

He chuckled lowly, then he gained his feet again. "I'd like that, thank you."

“Sure, no problem, sugar.” She turns off the car, giving it time to rest, before clamoring out. She glances up and hums. “Okay. Follow me, please. I’ve got some Mustangs, and some more Cameros. I’d say a Ferrari, but they’re a bit… uh… probably too spendy for most monsters, to be honest.”

"In my line of work, I may be able to afford a little luxury for all my years of service." he chuckled quietly, "I suppose we’ll see."

“I suppose so. Alright then!” Her cheer snapped back quickly, and she guided him off to try out different cars. “I’m Sue, by the way. Who’re you, big fella?” Sue took him along a row of mustangs, and waited until he pointed at one, before going to get it started up for him. She popped the hood, and revved it so he could take a look at how it worked inside.

"My name is Tenebris. Pleased to meet you, Sue." he knelt and growled as the engine revved. Still his resonance was stronger, and he shook his head lightly.

She stepped out of the car, eyes glimmering thoughtfully at him. “Hm… Are you… trying to find one that’s louder than you?” She asked slightly. Sue was observant, trained to look for tells which might help increase the likelihood of a successful sale.

"I'll admit." he chuckled softly, "I am indeed searching for something who's resonance speaks as loud as my own." he replied, "The beast in me demands a perfect match, so I am but a servant to seek it's approval."

“I think I can help you with that.” She grins. “Though, a lot of our louder cars are the older models. Is that going to bother you and your… beast?”

He laughed softly, "Oh no, no... that wont at all be an issue." he assured her.

Sue hummed, but nodded. She motioned for him to follow her again, and then set off at a surprisingly fast pace for someone with such short legs. She out paced him easily enough, and led him down to the older cars. “We don’t have many to choose from, admittedly. We don’t make these anymore- but some we were willing to make an exception for, based on popularity. We’ve got some Dodge Chargers, some ’69 mustangs- lots of really sweet rides. And, if all else fails, glass-packs do exist if we cant find one that matches your roar."

"Fascinating..." he rubbed his hands together, keeping pace well enough. "Well, I suppose now we shall see which engine stands superior." he rumbled.

“Mhm! Come check this one out. I know the color is horrible, but I love how the engine on this one sounds.” She guided him over to a mustang- which was a horrible, horrible shade of flesh colored- and motioned for him to wait for her to get it going. The mustang was in front of a dark colored Dodge Charger- and another salesperson was climbing into it to give a demonstration to a large fish woman.
She fired it up, and gave it a roar for him to compare to. To her ears, it sounded damn near close.

He bared his fangs and gave a snarling roar, but still he shook his head. "It's not enough, it's very close but-"

A snarling roar started up behind him as the salesperson got the Dodge started up. He revved it, looking up to the large fish woman, who was flexing at him with a highly pleased expression.

"LOUDER!" She hollered cheerfully.

Obligingly, he revved it louder, flooring it and making the engine all but shriek a horribly terrifying sound. Several sheep monsters flocked away from the noise.

Tenebris jumped sharply at the roar and he tensed, his form going straight as his eyes widened, before his pupils immediately turned to slits. He then lowered and turned to face the engine, his eyes glowing and tail lashing as he roared back at the engine.

The man in the seat squeaked, and his foot jerked off the pedal. The roar of the engine cut off, and instead it rumbled at the crouched monster staring at it intently. "U-uhh…"

Sue jerked out of the Mustang, killing the engine with a quick motion as she stood. “Uh… Tenebris? Ya’ alright, big guy? The car’s not gonna hurt ‘cha.”

Tenebris' tail continued to lash as he started rumbling at the engine, before he looked towards the man in the driver's seat. He then tilted his head and his jaw slowly unhinged, not yet splitting before he rumbled slightly louder, his stance changing.

He wanted him to do it again.

Sue hesitated, and shared a look with the guy through the window when he sent her a desperate look, like a rabbit caught in the sights of a fox. She nodded slowly.

The man behind the seat trembled, but he gunned it, making the exuberant red-haired fish woman whoop again, punching her fist violently in the air. The Charger roared again, engine rattling in its frame with the force that it was packing.

His eyes flashed and his jaw came open as he roared his loudest, a pitch that seemed to finally have found its match.

Far across the lot, Aliquam and Cae sat up fast. They could hear the roar of the engine, as well as the shrieking roar of their father.

"Was that pops?"

"Yes it was."

Toki had been startled awake when her pillow had jolted upright, and she blinked her sockets open, letting him go on instinct. She caught herself before she dropped back, and glanced at them quizzically. What…? Oh. There was a noise. “What’s going on?”

"We have no idea" Cae replied, getting out of the truck, "But I'm damn well about to find out...!" he then quickly shortcut away from the truck.

He showed up to find Tenebris huffing softly as he glared at the vehicle before him. After a moment, his jaw shifted and reattached, before he closed his eyes and rose back to his hind feet. He rolled his neck, before he reached up and wiped his mouth with a soft rattle. He smiled warmly at Sue, as if what had just happened didn’t even occur.

"I do believe I found what I was looking for." he purred.

“Uh… Okay. So a '69 Dodge Charger then. Uh… Okay.” Sue, to her credit, hadn’t lost her smile, though she did seem a little bit more nervous. “Alright. We need to get you tested for your permit, and then we’ll get you measured and work on designing the car to your standards. Oh, uh. Can I help you, mister teleporting skeleton dude?”

"Just need to speak to Pops here..." Cae replied to Sue, before he walked up to his father. "What the hell just happened?" he demanded, leaving his hands in his pockets.

"I got curious. I wanted to find a car that would match me well."

"By roaring at it so loud we could hear you across the damn lot?"

"... Yes." He said it as if it was the most natural thing in the world.

“Uh…” Sue looked slightly uncomfortable, and cleared her throat. “If you two are going to have an argument, I’m going to have to ask you to step outside until you’re finished.”

"There's no conflict, miss Sue." Tenebris waved it off with a gentle smile.

"It's just not reassuring when you hear your pops roar from where you're parked.. all the way across the lot." Cae sighed.

“I suppose it wouldn’t be.” She offered them wide smile. “He’s fine though, I promise. Are you here to take your test too?” Some of the monsters had passed on it, saying they didn’t want to, or their spouse was going to be the one driving.

"Well yeah, but we were gonna wait until it had cleared out a bit." he rubbed his head, "My brother is gonna do the test too..."

“Well, the testing booths are open right now. Everyone is still looking at cars, so if you wanted to get your tests out of the way, now would be the time.” Sue chirps softly.

"Oh sweet." Cae grinned a bit, while Tenebris adjusted his sweater slightly.

"I'd say I'm rather eager to do this test." He rumbled happily.

“Then how about you go grab your brother, and I’ll get you three cuties all set up and ready to go. You’ve all studied, right?”

"Indeed."

"That I have."

"Father! Sans!" There was Aliquam, right on cue.

Behind him was a tired looking Toki, who kept dodging through the masses as the longer legged monster practically drug her along behind him. She was walking faster than she usually did- and thus had a small bit of a waddle plaguing her as she tried to keep up.

“I’m going to assume that’s your brother and- Miss Toki?” She blinks. “You’re well acquainted with Miss Toki?”

“Well yeah, my brother’s mated to her.” Cae answered.

“M-mated?” She blinked, confused by the term. “Er… alright then. Ah! Miss Toki! It’s good to see you again. You look tired.”

“My nap was interrupted.” The pregnant skeleton huffs slightly, and flicks a look up and down Tenebris to make sure he’s okay. “It’s good to see you again too, Sue. I take it you’re helping Tenebris here?”

“I am, yes! We found his car of choice, and now he, and presumably his sons, are off to take their test.”

“Might as well,” She yawned faintly, “We’re already in here.”

“If you don’t mind waiting, I could take the test.” Ali hugged Toki gently.

“I’m not going anywhere without you three,” She yawns, “But there is no guarantee that I won’t find a corner to stand in and sleep.” Nara could sleep anywhere. She leans up to kiss his cheek, and then motions them off. “You go ace that test, love. All three of you should ace that test.”

She would laugh however if, for all of his boasting, Tenebris got the lowest score out of the three.

Sue nods cheerily. “I’ll go get them all set up and going. Speaking of- did you get your license renewed, Miss Toki?”

“I did.” She nods. She’d had it done shortly after she’d gotten back to her home after her change. “Take good care of them for me, Sue.” This would be the first time they’d had to do oodles of paperwork on their own. She was glad she’d made them bring all of their important information with them.

“Will do, Miss Toki. Follow me, boys! You go find a place to get off your feet, Miss Toki. I imagine your poor bones are sore.”

“A little bit.” Standing for long sets of time made her bones ache. She was glad that she couldn’t get swollen ankles and feet- but sore bones seemed to be the equivalent.

“Well, come on then.” Tenebris sounded eager as he smiled at his boys, before going to follow Sue to where they would perform the test.

Sue guided them off with a cheery wave back to Toki.

Toki waved them off with a smile, and then went to go wander. It would probably take them an hour if they found the questions hard. She could go hunt down Asgore… She did want to talk to him about some things concerning the village and the guards, which were technically able to seek employment elsewhere if they so chose.

Toki was still technically supposed to be under twenty-four-hour guard.
But Tenebris was a fast learner, and his boys did the same without flaw, and it was safe to say that they passed the test without issue.

Perfect scores all around.

When they came out, they’d find that Toki, true to her word, had taken up post against a pillar, and had apparently dozed off while remaining upright. There were a couple of wolf monsters hovering near her, trading off their unofficial guard duty from time to time so they could all browse in their own time.

They kept an eye on her and made sure she wasn’t disturbed while the Gaster family had been busy.

Aliquam giggled quietly as he walked over and dismissed the guards, before he took a place to rest besides her, smiling to himself.

Cae walked out, looking at his new ID card. "I shoulda brought a prop for this, damn it." he puffed, before snickering to himself.

At least Pop's ego would drop a little with how much trouble he was having with getting a proper picture taken.

Toki woke when the sounds of bones near her jolted her out of her light doze. She yawned, sharp teeth sparking as they ground together, and peered over at him slightly. “Mmm. How’d it go?” She’d never tracked down Asgore- and running laps around the inside of the castle to find the massive goat monster was not on her to-do list. She’d call him later. “You guys pass? Where’s Tenebris?”

"We all passed." Aliquam answered.

"But Pops is having the time of his life with trying to get a picture taken." Cae cackled.

“I bet he is. He’s absurdly tall.” She snorts softly. Toki shifts, leaning away from the wall, and her joints make a horrible crunching noise as she unlocks them. “Ahhh. Sweet relief. So, you both want to take a peak at the cars? He’ll be busy for a while yet. They’re going to need him for exact measurements on his height, the shapes of his legs, who all he’ll be having ride with him- all sorts of horribly fun and boring stuff that you both get to go through later too.”

"It's not because he's tall." Cae commented with a loud cackle, "But yeah, let's go car-hunting."

“Oh? What’s the problem then?” She tilted her head curiously, and stretched. She offered her arm to Pap, and smiled softly at him. “C’mon. You both have an idea of what sort of vehicle you want?”

"He doesn't have eye sockets." he snickered. That was the only hint he dropped, before answering her question. "I want something that can be a mess but still work really well."

"I wouldn't mind something simple, efficient." Aliquam mentioned.

“Work reliably well… Hm… Well, first thing that pops to mind is a truck. People take them out mudding and they function just fine, so long as the exhaust pipe doesn’t get clogged.” Toki loops her arm with Pap’s, and then snag’s Cae’s hand with her own to tug him down in the opposite direction. “Eh… Well, they don’t have anything quite… simple and efficient, unless you want a Subaru.” She pointed with her chin to the tiny, tiny gas efficient cars that were behind the mustangs. “And to be honest, love, Subaru’s… squish… really easy.”
"Heheheheh, trucks huh?" Cae immediately was interested, obvious by his tone of voice.

"Well what would you advise, Toki?" Aliquam inquired.

“I really don’t know, Pap. Something… safe, I guess. Humans can be crazy drivers, and we’re going to be parents here soon. What would you feel safe taking the twins for a drive in is the better question.” She abandon’s Cae’s hand to pat her middle, and grunts as she’s nailed in the rib. “All the commotion and noise has them grumpy.” She pouts. “But yeah. Trucks. Probably a nice short-bed one for you, double cab so you can take Grillby places and bring stuff home inside if it rains. They might have something in the Ford section.”

"I'll go see if there's one I can afford." with a cackle, he shortcut away, leaving Aliquam to face palm loudly in his wake.

Toki just shook her head and sighed. “Well, now it’s just us. What sort of car do you want, like, body style? Muscle car, speedster, and truck… uh… minivan? I can honestly not see you driving one of those, but one never knows. I could see you rocking a sports car.” Though those were definitely not infant friendly.

“Well...” he hummed quietly, looking around. "Those sound like fun, but I suppose I'll want resourceful before indulgence at this point."

She bumps her hip to his, and nearly knocks herself off balance in the process. “Pap, this is your first car. If you want a speedster, get a speedster. You’re tall enough to fit in my truck, so we can cart the twins around there until they’re old enough to go in a speedster.”

He blinked, then smiled at her. "I suppose there no harm in some indulgence."

“Indeed.” She grins at him wryly. “C’mon. Lets go see if any of the speedy cars catch your interest. Mustangs are good cars. Powerful- a little bit more sturdily built than… I dunno. Ferrari? Though, those are basically expensive coffins on wheels.” She chuckles quietly.

"What about those?" he hummed, pointing to where there was a few Mercedes being shown.

Toki tilted her skull thoughtfully, but obligingly guided him that way. They had to thread through a flock of sheep monsters, though they parted easily enough for the large, respectable skeleton that she was tugging along. Once on the other side of the fluffy mob, she hummed and smiled. “Mercedes are good cars. Expensive- but very good. Why don’t you try a couple out? I think you should fit in most of them.” Maybe. He was a leggy giant- but he wasn’t going to be driving it, so he didn’t need to fuss about legroom for the pedals quite yet.

"Why not!" he moved on ahead to find one of the assistants who were showing the cars.

He found a man not far away, who was just finishing helping a rabbit monster. He turned to the skeleton with a friendly smile on his face. “Ah, hello! I’m Lee. Are you interested in getting a Mercedes?”

"I am, yes." he replied, looking down at Lee. "They are very nice looking. How well do they perform when it comes to showing off?" Aliquam inquired.

Toki watched from afar, smiling and simply watching as the interactions happened. It was his car- he’d be the one driving it, so he needed to be sure it was one he liked and really wanted, and not just one that he got out of convenience. They could work around whatever he chose. Her truck was child friendly enough.
The shorter man grinned. “Oh? Want to showboat to impress a pretty lady? Or gentleman- I don’t judge either way. Mercedes are the best when it comes to that. It’s no Lamborghini, but a Mercedes is one of the best. C’mon, let’s see how you like it. Mercedes isn’t loud like, uh, the noise incident from earlier, but it is a powerful engine, and can go quite fast.” Not many monsters quite understood horsepower- so Lee did not explain it. He simply said fast, slow, very, very fast, or whatever the car qualified as. He guides him to one of the newer models, and pops the hood so he can look inside, before going to the driver’s door. “You look like you might fit- so did you want to sit and see for yourself how it feels?”

"I'd love to, yes." he replied with a smile, looking at the engine before he came over to the driver door, "Are you sure it will accommodate my size?"

“You should be able to fit your legs in enough to make the engine rumble if you want, but driving it? No.” He shakes his head. “This is just the model for the car. When you get yours, it will be custom made and put together, and then you’ll all return here to get your cars and drive them. Once you’ve decided on a car, we’ll take you for measurements so we can design the inside to better fit your body. Miss Nara has been sending us base designs for the sorts of body types that will be needing cars- the measurements will be basically just affirming what we know, so we can compile our data correctly. Ah- keys are in the cup holder, by the way."

"I see, she really has been on top of this. Clever Toki." he chuckled. He moved the seat all the way back and smiled as he found himself just able to fit. "So far so good!" He announced, stretching out and placing his feet on the right pedals to get a feel for it.

Lee leaned on the door and watched, nodding thoughtfully. “She really is. I dunno if she’s kept you all in the loop, but she’s been great. Between Asgore, the other companies, and herself, we managed to get all of you guys your rights. It’s pretty sweet business- though surprising. I’ve heard rumors that Nara are notoriously lazy and unmotivated.” He chuckles, voice full of praise despite his ending words. He taps the wheel. “We don’t have covers on, but once you own the car, you can get your steering wheel a cover for it, if you like.”

"I know this will sound silly, coming from a skeleton, but do you happen to have anything with a bone design?" he asked.

“We do.” He nods. He pats the skeleton’s leg, having him shift for a second, and then reaches back under the seat. He tugs out the binder that each of the show cars have, blows it off, and then opens it. “You can special order your steering wheel cover while you’re here. Most of the ones with bone designs can get really cold in the winter- but you don’t really have skin to get cold with. Hm…” he flips a couple pages, and points to one that has three skulls on either side, all stacked up and having one long, continuous crack that runs through it. “This one is one of my favorites. We’ve also got a lot more… stylized ones, I guess. Skulls with roses and thorns, skull and crossbones, all sorts of gimmicky skeleton stuff.”

"Nyeh heh heh, how interesting! I'll have to have a look before we're done here." He cackled softly.

The man laughed and nodded. “I suppose so. You’ll be given the option to choose matching seat covers too, if you need it. Anyways- why don’t you start up the car, see how it feels? How do you like the seats and the wheel? Window size okay?”

"Windows are alright, yes." He replied, putting the key in the ignition before he started the car up. He seemed to enjoy the sound of the engine, giving a sigh as he smiled. "This is nice."

“That is one sexy sounding engine, am I right?” Lee grinned. He loved the sound the engines made- particularly his favorite type of car. “Well don’t be shy- you’ve got your foot on the pedal, dude!
Give her a rev! Let's hear this baby purr."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

"Alright."

Lee closed his eyes with a pleased hum. "Oh yes. Mercedes does have quite the pleasant purr, doesn’t it?"

Toki finally made her way over, and laughed softly as she leaned her hip against the trunk of the car. "That it does. I contemplated getting one when I was younger, but never could afford one." She could now- but she rather liked her truck.

"Well I suppose now you can enjoy your dream car when I go and take you on drives, especially when the twins are born." he told her with a happy laugh.

"True that." She chuckles softly. Toki pads around and offers Lee a smile. "Hi, Lee."

"Miss Nara!" he gave her a delighted grin. "So I’m assuming that this is your boyfriend?"

"And the father of the twins." She smiles fondly, rubbing her fingers lightly over her middle.

"Heh! I approve. He has good taste in cars thus far." He grins.

"I thought that much." Papyrus commented with a chuckle.

"Mhm." She smiled fondly, and grinned to him. "So, how do the seats feel? Comfortable?"

Lee simply grinned. "So, are you both excited?"

"Hm?" She turned a curious gaze to him.

"You know? The marriage thing?"

"They are comfortable, yes." he then looked at Lee and smiled, "I am very excited, yes."

"As am I." She nods in agreement.

Lee grins. "My half sister’s excited too. She’s been fostering a nice bird monster over in Europe- she’s an HTM like you, Miss Nara- and they’ve hit it off quite well."

Toki nods and smiles. "Tell them congratulations for me when you next see them, then." She shifts, and leans down slightly to peer into the car. "Hm… It looks very nice inside. Back lit dashboard too. Very good."

"I like it." Ali decreed happily, "The seat moved back and down enough, and I can see just fine."

"That’s good." She nods, pleased. "Not much leg room though. But that’s what getting it custom sized is for. So… you think this is the one, love?"

"I know one would suggest looking around a little more, but I think, yes, I like this one." he nodded in confirmation.

"Sometimes it’s easiest just to go with what makes your heart feel right. Err… Soul." Lee coughed slightly, and stepped back as Toki stepped away from the door. "If you’re sure this is the one you want, we can go get your paperwork done, and have you on your way to getting fitted for the car."
"That was easier than I thought it would be." Papyrus chuckled as he got out again.

“For some, finding their car happens fast. For others, it does not.” Toki smiled at him warmly.

Lee motioned for him to follow. “Alright, c’mon, big guy. We’ve got paperwork to sign, and a price to haggle. Miss Nara, if you’d be so kind as to give us a bit?”

“Of course.” Toki smiles. “I might head back out to the truck though. My feet are sore, and I haven’t the foggiest idea why.”

“I’d say you were having swelling in your feet and ankles like a lot of pregnant women get, but you don’t have flesh. Who knows- maybe it’s just a lumbar thing?” Lee shrugs slightly. “Get some rest, Miss Toki. You look exhausted- and your boyfriend is going to be busy for a while yet.”

"I'm sure that Father will be done soon enough. Why don’t you go find him, and he'll escort you back to the truck?” Aliquam suggested, closing the door behind him.

Toki offered him a smile. “I’m sure your dad is going to go hunt down the King while he’s here.” It would be stupid of him not to. She shakes her head. “I’ll be okay. You go get your paperwork done- and choose a nice color for your mustang, yeah?”

"Of course." he smiled and leaned down to press a smooth kiss to the top of her skull. “Nyeh~ I'll see you later.” He purred.

“I’ll see you later too.” She took the chance and smooshed his jaw, before hefting her purse higher on her shoulder. She gave him a wave, and then began making her way through the crowds, intent on going out to the truck and resuming her nap. Paperwork for cars could take hours, after all.

Lee watched her go, and then grinned up at Papyrus. “Alright. Lets go get you all set up, big guy. You’ve got a lot of paperwork to fill out.”

"Lead the way, then!" he said with a happy hum.

Lee nodded, and off they went.
Chapter 48

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: Heh. We get to hear about what the cars are like- and if you’re curious about them, you’re welcome to google exactly what they are. Pap ended up with a maroon 2017 Mercedes GLC for Pap’s car- since at this point, they’re actually well into 2017. Sans ended up with a deep blue 2016 Ram 1500 Express. Tenebris ends up with a purple-obsidian colored 1966 Dodge Charger.

Don't forget to come visit our blog! Also sorry for the late chapter, folks. I slept in later after work than I thought I would. You can find us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

It took them nearly two weeks to get the first shipment of cars done. Among that shipment of cars were the cars for the Gaster family- and they’d had to call the busses again, and those who could get their cars all went to get them. Toki drove the Gaster family up herself- and then followed them back once they had gotten their cars of choice.

Papyrus ended up keeping it a secret the color he’d chosen- and it turned out he got himself a maroon colored 2017 Mercedes GLC. It had been horribly expensive- but given the gold-to-cash change over, Papyrus had been able to afford it quite easily. Sans got a deep blue colored 2016 Ram 1500 Express- and it was a damn fine truck.

Toki might have been a little jealous. Her own truck was much, much older, and was beginning to show it’s age with some of the noises it was making.

Tenebris actually got an older car, which hadn’t really surprised her. In the end he’d made the decision to get the 1966 Dodge Charger, instead of the ’69, though she wasn’t sure why. The engine on the ’66 seemed to be a little louder than the ’69, as far as Toki was concerned.

She’d let the monsters loose with their cars in an open field, and just let them get the feel for driving.

Now that everyone had cars, the village was even more alive. Monsters were coming and going to the city, and the castle, now that they were mobile. All hours of the day she had people coming in and out- and the noise of the cars coming and going would take some getting used to. Slowly her little slice of silence was becoming a small burg- and the sounds would have to be adjusted to.

Not that she minded- everyone was… well, happy. After all of the shit from HAM, and the reports that kept coming in on the news, getting to drive, getting freedom, was exactly what the monsters needed.

There was actually a payroll set up specifically for the village guards, coming directly from the castle itself, because the threat from HAM and Cruelty was not over. Toki had talked to Asgore- and all of the guards there were on a payroll for their work for the king. It was a hefty sum too- several thousand gold monthly for their work- and that made Toki happy that the Guards could finally get an official payment for the work they did.

It certainly helped boost the town economy that was for sure. Monsters were definitely spending coin on gas with as frequent as their trips to the city tended to be.

Speaking of- Toki would need to take a trip to the city herself.

She was once more in front of the mirror in the bedroom, looking at herself from the side, and sighing with a disgruntled look on her face. “Can’t get this buttoned either,” she grumbles, and adjusts her turtleneck with a huff. She wasn’t big enough to break out the one with the honey pot, and wasn’t really interested in wearing it yet- but her current turtlenecks, the ones they’d gotten from the maternity store so many weeks back, were finally starting to no longer fit. They rubbed uncomfortably over the sensitive ectoplasm of her middle, and rode up whenever she lifted her arms. “Ugh. I don’t know of any other stores than the one in the mall.” She mutters to herself. And that store had been managed by a HAM agent, apparently, and she was understandably hesitant about ever going back to it.

Aliquam had heard her grumbling and approached with a smile. "Toki, you know we could go and see Lana now." he suggested softly. "Remember when I told you about her?"

“I vaguely remember, yes.” She tilts her head with a soft sigh, and makes one last attempt at buttoning her slacks. In the end she huffs irritably, and jerks them down off of her hips. Damn it- she liked this pair. She’d just broken them in and gotten them comfortable, too. Ugh. She grumbles all the while, making a low, irritated buzzing noise from somewhere in her bones. “I wouldn’t mind- none of my pants seem to fit today, and I’m pretty sure these two had an overnight growth spurt or something.” She rubs her middle with a quiet sigh, and then heads for her dresser.

She had a small waddle now- she’d only had it for a couple of days, but it drove her a little bit batty. Toki rummages around, and tugs out one of the skirts that had the stretchy waistband types. She shifts and puts it on, leaving it resting around her hips. It too was getting tight- but it worked, and wasn't sweat pants. Toki kept getting hot flashes of sorts, and sweat pants were positively miserable when they happened. “Skirts still fit. Your friend’s name was… Lana, right?”

"Yes." he replied, "Come on, it'll give me some more practice with my car, and you'll get to see how it runs!"

“You sound excited.” She arched a brow at him, and adjusted her turtleneck with a soft sigh. Toki stretched her back and puffed out a plume of warm air. “Nnng. I feel a little bit like I am becoming a whale.” Given she was growing bigger each day, it wasn’t much of an understatement. “Alright. Uh… is that going to be okay though? I don’t have gold to pay with, and I know you just bought your car.”

"Toki." he came over and cupped her cheeks, stroking over the bone gently with his thumbs as he peered down at her lovingly. "Let me do this for you. No strings attached."

“I never imagined that there would be.” Still, she leaned into his fingers with a soft sigh, sockets closing. She struggled a little bit in letting others help- particularly financially. Toki was fully aware of it, though. “Okay. Okay. I need clothes, and I’ve only been through the underground once. It’d be nice to visit it again.” The times she’d gone to the underground, she’d never gone past the castle. She’d always been there on business of some sort.

He smiled and kissed her head gently. "Get something comfortable, and we'll set out, okay?" he purred.

“I’m about as comfortable as I can get when nothing wants to fit. I just need my shoes.” Which were downstairs, along with her purse. “And maybe a banana from the kitchen?” She had been hungry more often, and found fruit did decent enough to cover her random bouts of hunger.
“Sounds good.” he nodded gently, "I could prepare a few sandwiches too." he offered.

“That would be good.” She smiled to him gratefully. “Thank you, love. C’mon. It’s going to take me a moment to get my shoes on.” She wanted to wear her old sneakers, rather than ruin her new slippers by getting them soaked in Waterfall. It would take her a while to tie them, given her inability to bend down properly to do it anymore.

She gives him a soft kiss, and then Toki heads for the exit to their room so she can go down stairs.

He let her go down first and started for the kitchen once he had reached the bottom of the stairs.

Toki let him slip past her, and then scooted her shoes to the stairs. Once they were there, she eased herself down with the railing, and took a seat on the bottom step so she could work at getting her shoes on. Her middle didn’t quite offer the ease of movement that it used to- and folding over into herself was not something that she could do. So she had to crane and position herself, dealing with grumpy soulings kicking her ribs for squishing them like so, and then make an attempt to slip her bare bones into her shoes. The pointed ends of her toes fit nicely into the end of her sneaker- and then came the problem of lacing, which required more than one hand, so therefore more craning.

Pregnancy was as rewarding as it was difficult, and she looked hilarious attempting to get her shoes tied.

Quinn came out of the kitchen after about five minutes and he smiled gently, "Here." He put the bag of sandwiches down and knelt down to tie her shoes.

She flushed slightly, but sighed and leaned back to let him finish the laces. “Thanks, Pap. I, ah, didn’t think I’d need help doing this so soon… Guess I’ll be sticking with my slip-on shoes here soon, yeah?"

"Mnhm~" Aliquam quietly chuckled as he looked up at her, before resting his head on her swell softly. "Hello in there."

They responded to his touch quickly, booting him in the bridge of his nose as the twins twisted and squirmed. She sighed, leaning back on her elbows so he could give them some attention. “They’re having a tantrum.” Toki chirrs softly. “They didn’t like the contorting I was doing.”

He laughed at that as he leaned back, rubbing the bridge of his nose. "Well hopefully they find some other way to vent that won’t involve bruising you." he joked.

She chortled pleasantly. “My bones can take a beating, my love. They don’t really have anything to take out their problems on at this point anyways. I’ll just need to be careful not to squash them when I need to bend over. Besides- they're not big enough quite yet to be bruising me.” It would probably be soon though. Their kicks were getting stronger and stronger each passing day. With him leaning back, she leaned upright again, and offered him a slight smile, before hauling herself upright while using the railing on the stairs.

He picked up their snack and rose as well, offering her his arm with the slight quirk of a handsome grin. "If you're sure."

She looped her arm in his after snagging her purse, and leaned into him with a soft buzz. “I am very sure.” She chirped. Toki reached out to take the snack bag from him, cradling it carefully to her chest so nothing got crushed, and then joined him in heading for the door. “C’mon, love. I’d love to see how good you’ve gotten at driving.”

"As she wishes!" he giggled and led her to his car, "Isn't it nice?" he asked with a bright expression.
His car was pretty. It wasn’t a traditional looking Mercedes, but it was more… family oriented, almost. Fast, controllable- and a beautiful shade of maroon.

Toki smiled and nodded. “Your car is amazing.” She pads for the passenger door, letting Pap go free so he could go around to his side while she got herself situated. There was an unholy amount of headspace for her to sit in- obviously it had been designed so that tall monsters could ride in it. Her horns didn’t even touch the roof of the car- which they did quite often in her truck. “I am going to admit,” she says, as she settles into her seat with an awkward grunt, “Your seats are amazing. I might be a bit jealous. I thought my truck had nice seats- these are practically luxury seats.”

He laughed as he climbed in as well, stretching his legs before he sighed and got comfortable. "Lots of leg room too! Even Father could ride in this without a problem!"

She smiles and nods, and carefully twists to set her purse in the back. The snack bag is set near her feet, and she gets herself buckled in, adjusting the strap slightly as it rubs on her middle. Her shirt rides up- and Toki yanks it down viciously with a huff. “There is a lot of leg room. Headroom too- I’ve gotten used to my horns scraping the roof of my truck. This is really nice.” She confesses. She has room to stretch out, and she can angle the back of her chair slightly so she’s not sitting straight up.

"Isn’t it just?" he sighed happily and started the car, smiling, "It sounds wonderful too~"

“And so it does.” She listened to the purr of the motor, and smiled slightly. She shifted and settled, reaching down to check inside of the bag. “Is it alright if I eat the banana in here?” it was, as always, right atop the sandwiches that had been prepared. “I promise not to make a mess.”

"Yeah of course!" he began to pull out of their little 'driveway' and started slowly for the gate of the compound.

“Thanks, love.” She peels it carefully, and nibbles on her treat. She’s careful to pick up any of the silly strings that tend to shed from bananas, and toss them carefully into a napkin for later disposal. “So far so good, eh? It rides very smooth.” Her driveway of sorts wasn’t a smooth concrete- it was pitted and rough, worn down by the countless construction machinery that had come through for the building of the village. It felt like floating over a cloud. “Very nice,” she purrs.

As he pulled up to the exit of the compound prior, he looked to the guards and gave a smile.

They waved at him cheerfully, and one of them, revealed to be Wolfen, leaned down to peer in his window. “Taking your mate out for a drive?” He hummed softly, and wiggled a brow. “Or for some alone time~?” It was the weekend, after all, and Han was in and out of the house often times.

Toki flushed, and very nearly choked on her banana.

"Very funny." Papyrus huffed, "No. I'm taking her to see Miss Lana." he answered.

Wolfen chortled with amusement. “Ahhh, clothes already not fitting? Bo had that problem too when she carried. Good luck, you two. Have a safe drive!” He pats the top of the care carefully, and then leans up and steps back so they can go on their way.

Toki chuffs slightly, finishes her banana, and then stuffs the peel in the bag as she carefully cleans her teeth.

"Thank you, Wolfen." he smiled at him, and then pulled out of the compound. It didn’t take him up long to begin picking up speed as they headed for the mountain. "This will end up being very helpful to us." Papyrus hummed happily.
“Oh yeah?” She gets comfortable, settling her palms above her middle. Banana always sent the twins into a flurry of movement, and she settled in for the long haul as they made their happiness at her meal apparent. “How so?” She gives him an affectionately bemused look.

"Being able to drive now means if you're unable to, Father, Sans, and myself can easily provide our services now that we're able to!"

Toki chuckles. “That is very true. And believe it or not, that day is coming soon. I almost can’t reach the pedals in my truck.” Hers was a much older model- her pedals didn’t slide forward to accommodate the seat being moved backwards like a lot of newer models did.

"That's no good." he hummed. "Well, you have more than enough room now, yes?"

“Oh definitely.” She chuckles. “But I’m not behind the wheel. Passenger, I do just fine. This is really, really nice. Plenty of space, lots of room to stretch out.” And if her feet started to hurt, she could even sit cross-legged if she needed to.

"Good." he sighed happily, leaning back as he drove.

The trek to the top of the mountain didn’t take very long. Aliquam kept to the speed limit, if just a few miles per hour over it, and made it there in the usual time. Toki had admittedly napped for a bit of it, having fallen asleep with the smooth ride. Naps were a frequent thing in her pregnancy, as her stamina had waned quite a lot. Not that she minded- naps were amazing.

Still, she roused moments before they arrived, a great yawn splitting her jaw. “Mmm, sorry I fell asleep, Pap. You’re a very good driver.” She usually was wide-awake when someone else drove, dealing with the serving, the bobbing, the wobbling, and bumps in the road. His car, if anything, was an amazingly smooth ride.

"Thank you, Toki. I've practiced a bit since I got this car." he admitted proudly.

“Just a bit, huh?” He’d been out driving at least once, if not twice, a day since he’d gotten it, and Toki had let him practice on his own. She shifts in her seat, stretches, and then peers out the window. The castle loomed ahead, just around another corner.

"Nyeh heh heh heh~" he giggled innocently as he found where they usually park when they've reached the entrance to what had officially been the castle parking.

After he got out, he came around and opened her door, offering her his hand like the gentleman he was.

“Thank you, Papyrus.” Toki, of course, was all too pleased to make use to his help. She grasped the sandwiches, in case they decided to break for lunch while down there, and let him pull her from the car. "I'm going to leave my purse in here, m'kay?" Nothing in it would work down there anyways, and the cash she had was useless.

"Sure thing." He tucked it under the seat once she was clear and locked the car once he closed the door. "Shall we then?" he asked, offering his arm once more.

Naturally, she linked her arm with his, and settled at his side with a warm buzzing sound. “We shall.
Lead the way, my dear. I haven’t actually been past the castle since Cae took me on that tour that one time. I remember the hotel- I wonder if they ever fixed the fountain. I suppose we’ll see, won’t we?”

"Indeed so! But River would be happy to give us a lift to Snowdin, so we just gotta go a little into Hotland to catch their Ferry!"

“River?” They had walked all the way back, and teleported twice to get back to the castle. She blinks thoughtfully, guiding him up into the castle and towards where the elevator was. “That’s good. I think I can handle going a little bit into Hotland, even if it is sweltering in there.” She was doing better with fire- she was confident that she could handle Hotland now.

"It won’t be too bad, you don’t have skin anymore! So I wouldn’t recommend a dip in the lava, but the warmth is really nice, like a summer day!” he then got a little giddy, "I’ve always wanted to say that, now that I know what a summer day feels like~" he giggled happily.

She let him have his fun, and simply patted his arm with a fond expression. “Yes dear, but you’re not nearly six months pregnant. Hot flashes are a legitimate thing with fire magic.” She chuckles still. “It is warm down there, and it felt nice at first. A little hotter than a usual summer day, though. On the hotter days, it makes me think it’s probably cooler down there.” Their area was full of extremes. The magic in the land made the weather unpredictable sometimes.

"I suppose we’ll have to see.” he sighed, before he realized, "Oh yes! River is what we call our Ferryperson! I believe Father came up with the name and it more or less stuck, they like it at least!”

“Oh yeah?” She blinked. “Huh. Well, I’d love to meet them.” She smiles warmly. The elevator looms ahead, and she waddles for it contently, glad that Pap never seemed to comment on it. Or notice it, really. ‘Alright- down to the MTT resort we go. Heh. One of the kids told me they sell something called a ‘glamburger’, and it’s apparently covered in sparkles?”

"I tried one." he stuck out his tongue, "Didn’t exactly enjoy it..." he admitted.

The orange glow of his tongue was adorable, and she reached up a finger to teasingly poke it as they slipped into the elevator. It was empty, just like the first time. “To be honest, sparkles, unless created for that purpose, are not actually edible.” She giggles softly. She reached out and pressed the button to send them down.

"Uh-huh...” He laughed and waited for the elevator to finish moving. Papyrus grinned as it arrived, the doors opening swiftly. He guided them out into the heat of Hotland. "Well, this is L-1... River isn't too far from here!”

The air was hot, and they stepped out to the bubbling hiss of Lava as it dripped and scorched across stone. She found herself swallowing roughly, fingers locking tight onto the bag and his arm of their own accord. She hadn’t been to L-1 before- and the, ah, Magma was not expected. She supposed they weren’t going through the resort then. Toki stepped with him, her eyes drawn to the glow of the magma that filled the cavern. “Y-yeah.”

Papyrus had smiled gently, but got worried when he glanced over and saw her expression change. "Are you okay?”

“L-Lava.” She clenched her sockets shut as she watched a rock slowly sink into it, and turned her face towards him. Toki could feel her soul fluttering in her chest, pulsing faster and faster towards a full-blown panic. It was a struggle to keep moving, and eventually she stopped, arm still clamped on his, unable to walk further for the panic fluttering through her soul.
She tried to fight it— but it had been a long while since she had felt this intense of anxiety. Months, even.

He tensed and wrapped his arms around her. "Hey... hey!" he held her tight as he pulled her into the elevator again, letting the doors close and cut off the heat. "Toki...!

The change in temperature was good— and she hadn’t been totally lost. She could hear him— which was an improvement from the other bad ones she’d had— though she could do nothing to respond to him for some time. Eventually she began to tremble, and she clung to him Shakily as her soul made an attempt to slow its rapid fire stuttering— and the distressed buzzing that she was letting out.

"S-s-s-sorry," She stuttered, socket’s still closed as she exchanged the smell of brimstone and magma for the smell of Papyrus’ shirt and usual aroma.

"Hey, it's okay... it's okay..." he assured her, one hand coming up to smooth over her skull, petting gently over the crack and between her horns. He hummed softly, and let her cling to him, rocking her gently where they stood.

"H-h-h-haven’t h-had one tha-that bad in a l-long time.” His touch is soothing, and she shivers into him. “Thought I could h-handle the m-magma.” She murmurs Shakily. “It’s n-not as b-bad as last t-time though. I d-didn’t sh-shut down like last t-time."

"..., " he sighed and stroked her head gently. "Easy... it's okay..." he murmured, "What can I do to help you?"

"You’re h-helping r-right now. S-smell changes, c-cooler temperatures, and talking and touch. It a-all helps to r-remind me I’m not back there again. Ah... W-we can try again. Just drag me along if I lock up, o-okay?"

"Alright... would nullifying your senses help?"

She’s not entirely certain. “It can’t hurt, c-can it?” Thank the gods, her voice was starting to calm down again. So was her soul— its rapid-fire staccato beat against her chest, and his, was easing off, and leaving her aware of her passengers reacting to her upset too. There was nothing to do to soothe them, however, not until they were past Hotland.

Reaching up to his neck, he carefully undid his scarf, and held it in front of her to see. "I'll put this over your eyes." he told her, "and you can put it over your nose and mouth so the worst thing is your hearing."

That... might actually work. “Okay.” She closes her sockets and manages to lean back, so he can loop it around her skull. She’d adjust it once he had it on for her. “You’ll just have to hurry me along, Pap. I’ve got shorter strides,” particularly with her waddle, but she’d rather eat a cactus than admit to that, “but I can keep going if you can guide me.”

He nodded gently and pressed a gentle kiss to her head, before he wrapped the scarf on her skull, giving her one end to breathe into while the rest blinded her. "Toki, did I ever tell you about the time...

His words trailed off into general babble and stories as the door opened. Aliquam kept the stream of chatter up, filling her hearing with noise rather than the sounds of the cavern, and began walking through Hotland. The whole time, he talked... he went on about everything that came to mind until he had to change the topic to something a little more pressing. "Going down some stairs."

His chatter helped, as did keeping her breathing slowed behind his scarf. The heat itself wasn’t that bad, if a little sweltering under her clothes, and she found herself not as badly off as she could have been. “I feel them.” Her tennis shoes tapped lightly as she walked, and she felt her way down carefully so she didn’t trip or fall.

When they reached the bottom, she shivered, and clenched her hand tighter over his. It was helping, though the panic was trying to remain in her soul.

He smiled and took off the scarf. "Was that so hard?” he asked her with a bright smile.

His bright smile was the first thing she saw when she opened her sockets, and she blinked hard for a moment to adjust to the change in light. She nodded though, with a tiny smile. “It wasn’t as b-bad. I still feel shaky- but it helped. It helped a lot. We’ll n-need to do that when we come back too. So is this where River is?”

"I am right here." She startled, still slightly flighty, and bumped full on into Papyrus as she lurched around to find the voice. “Ah… Hi…?”

The hooded form looked at them, though it was Aliquam who spoke up, "Hello there, River!"

"Hello there, Papyrus. Who is your disoriented friend?" they asked.

"This is my mate, Tokiko Nara!" he answered.

“It’s n-nice to meet you.” She cleared her nonexistent throat, and slowly padded forwards to the figure perched on a strange looking boat. “Sorry about not noticing you at first, River. I don’t handle lava very well.”

The hooded figure seemed to nod. "It is understandable. Word traveled of your fate... Will you be requiring my services today?"

"Yes please, we'd like a lift to Snowdin."

"Alright, all aboard."

Aliquam boarded first and turned to offer Toki a hand, "Here we go."

“Thank you, love.” Toki nodded, and took his hand. She eased onto the boat, something she wasn’t really familiar with traveling on, and then carefully eased down into a sitting position on one of the benches. “Thank you for the lift, River.”

"Ho hum~" the boat set off and River hummed a soft tune as the boat set off once the taller skeleton was seated. "Hmm... Somewhere, it's a Thursday." they hummed gently.

Toki was immediately befuddled. “But… it’s Saturday?” She glances to Aliquam, leaning into him slightly as the boat raced off.

Aliquam just lightly shrugged, letting the Riverperson enjoy their tune as they ventured down the river.

Soon the air cooled, then turned to cold as they moved from region to region, ending up at the Snowdin dock inside of forty minutes or so.

Going from hot, to wet, to freezing cold had Toki a little bit chilled, but nothing her magic couldn’t warm up. When they docked, she eased out of the boat, and stretched her legs. “Thank you for the ride, River!” She beams up at them, all sharp teeth and happy kindness. She offers Pap a hand, since he was sitting on the ‘outside’ of the boat.

"Until next time. If there is one," they nodded to the duo, and turned their head away.

Aliquam took her hand and got his feet on solid ground, before he took a deep breath of familiar icy air. "Ah...! Shall we?"

Toki linked hands with him, and guided him out into the snow, trying to ignore the vaguely creepy message from River that had her slightly unnerved. “We shall. Ah, I can enjoy the snow more. I have shoes this time. It was actually really cold on my feet when I came here with Caeruleus. So, you know the way, right? I only went in as far as your old house.”

"Of course I do!" he answered.

“Cool.” She smiles. “Want to lead the way then, Pap? I have no idea where we’re going, and we don’t want you to end up a Papcicle if I get us lost.”

"... Oh my god." he sighed, before he just kept walking. "Toki. Why."

“Because I love you, and I hang out with your older brother too much. Speaking of... Heh. Want to know something amusing?” She grins up at him, falling back so he took the lead in guiding them through the thick snow. “I actually told him a pun while we were here. Heh... I remember it too. Best one ever. You wanna hear it?” It wouldn’t be as effective as incidental ones- but it was still the best one she’d ever come up with.

"Oh god... let's hear it," he sighed.

“Sometimes I feel like such a whore for pasta.” She grins broadly. “I just want to eat all of it. Does that make me a…” pastatute?

"... AAAAAUUUUUUUUUUUUGH."

His groan of frustration is fantastic. Toki laughs heartily, mouth falling open. Her laughter rings over the snow, echoing amongst the trees and houses dotted here and there. “Oh my gods, that is the best. I’m not even sorry for that.”

"Sans will rue the day." He mock growled as he walked with her to a large house hidden in a copse of trees. He reached up and knocked on the wooden door. "Lana? Are you in?"

"Oh my! Is that Papy dear?" There was a clatter and sounds like hooves on a hard floor, before the door open and a fluffy pink sheep monster bound forward and hugged him around the neck. "Welcome baaaack to Snowdin!” she bleated cheerfully.

Toki blinked and stepped away to let the friends reunite. She smiled warmly though- the fluffy pink sheep monster was absolutely adorable.

"You're still so warm, Miss Lana." Aliquam laughed gently as he hugged her back firmly. "Nyeh heh heh heh"

"Oh of course I am, silly!" she giggled. "I'm a fluffy laaaamb after all, I'm bound to be soft and warm too!"

Toki can’t hide her soft giggle. “Hi, Miss Lana.” She dips her head respectfully, tucking her free fingers into her shirt to tug it better down over her middle. She still has a hold of the snack bag, after all. “I’m Tokiko Nara. It’s nice to meet you!”

The sheep moved away from Papyrus to light up at the sight of her. Her eyes drifted down to her swell, and seemed to grow even larger. "Oh my Gosh! Miss Naaaara! I’ve heard so much about you! It’s so nice to meet you!" she squealed, offering a hand, "I’m Laaaana Vestimoves! It’s so nice to meet you! Oh, I already said thaaaaaat." she bleated, before she covered her face, "I'm sorry, I’m just so excited to finally meet you!"

Toki hadn’t expected such an exuberant greeting, but offered her a broad smile in return. She shook the offered hand, and let go when the embarrassed sheep woman covered her face. “It’s quite all right, Miss Vestimoves.” She smiles. “I’m not quite used to such an enthusiastic greeting- but I’m glad meeting me has made you so excited.” She shifts, adjusting her skirt, and ends up fiddling with the end of her shirt with an awkwardly warm smile. “Papyrus told me you’re quite the seamstress.”

She giggled at that, "Thaaaaat I am indeed!" she then knelt down and squished her cheeks as she cooed. "Oh goodness, baaaabies!"

Toki chuckled and nodded, caressing her abdomen fondly. “Growing twins.” she nods. They kick her fingers, and she rubs where they kicked. “Wiggly and feisty twins too. They’re growing bigger by the day, though I think they take after their father in size. And, ah, I’m a bit… wary to go to the shop we went to last time up on the surface, and my clothes no longer fit. Papyrus said you might be able to make something that will fit?"

"Oh of course! I can easily make you something that will fit nice and comfortably!" she gave a confident nod, gently clapping her hands together. "Oh so easy!"

“I would be very happy if you wouldn’t mind.” She offers a lopsided smile, and a hand to help the sheep back into a standing position. “Think we could get maybe a set of clothes made today? If you’re not to busy, that is.” She had to adjust her shirt again when it slid up, giving a faint peek at the glowing green ectoplasm that made up her abdomen.

"But of course! I'm a maaaaaster seamstress after all! Let's get started." She beckoned her to follow her as she started for the back of the house, and what was also obviously a store of sorts.

Toki blinked slowly, and then tugged Pap along with her. “Of course.” She smiles faintly, following her inside of the house. She keeps him close by out of vague nervousness of being in a stranger’s abode for the first time. “So what do you need me to do?” She asks curiously, glancing around as she did so.

"Just stand with your arms apart, we could also do this while you are seated." she told her, looking at her supplies, "Oh! Colors! What would you like?" she asked.

Toki found a spot to set the snacks down, and then did as asked. She spread her arms, taking an easy stance between two mannequins, and then glanced over to her boyfriend. “Hm… I dunno. I like green, blue, and I’m fond of some shades of orange. Black too, from time to time. What do you think, Pap?"

"Nonono, this is clothes for you! Not Paaaaapy! You maaaaake the decision." She told her, waving a finger in front of her in a scolding manner.

Toki chuckled softly and smiled quietly. “I don’t really know what I look good in though. At this point, I look like a whale in most colors that are bright- so darker colors maybe? I… kinda like dark green. I wear a lot of it. But I like black for pants- black doesn’t stain if something falls on it. So… Those colors, maybe?” She wasn’t sure how the sheep would get measurements from her legs with her in a skirt, but she would figure it out in time, she supposed.

She tapped her fingers on her chin for a bit, and then she grinned and turned, her hands glowing. "Little bit of green, aaaaand some darker green, ooh blaaaaack!"

Toki couldn’t help the soft giggle that escaped her at the sheep woman’s pronounced ‘aaaaa’s in some of her words. “What’s with the glowing hands?” She asked hesitantly, eye lights peering at them curiously.

"Maaaagic!" she replied happily. The cloth unraveled from its bolt, passing over the air and coming over to wrap around Toki’s arms and chest.

Well, seeing the cloth magically float through the air answered a lot of her questions almost immediately. Toki nodded hesitantly, and stood still while the cloth looped about her limbs and chest. “It’s pretty cool,” she mused thoughtfully, and shot a look to Papyrus. She winked at him slightly, and wiggled her feet in her shoes. Her bones were a bit sore- but nothing too badly yet, she mused.

After a moment she picked up a couple of needles and a few spools of threat, "You want loose and comfy, Yes?" she asked.

“Yes please.” Toki nodded. “Maybe a couple sizes too big please? They’re growing like weeds, and if you make it fit now, it won’t fit next week.”

"Of course! Say no more!” a twitch of her hands and the fabric loosely hung around her gut. She then moved in, pinning where needed before she hummed a little tune to herself. The way her hooves moved on the floor almost sounded like she was doing a dance on them, "Alrightie! You can slip out of the clothing now, yes?" she asked.

Toki nodded, once she was able to, and then carefully slipped out of the pinned form of the turtleneck. She did her best not to disturb the pins- and ended up with her own shirt tugging up with it. The glow of her middle flashed as she got the shirt in progress off and into one hand, and she tugged her shirt back down about her middle with a soft huff. “Oh. Uh- are these going to be machine-washable?” She blinks. “I can do hand washing if need be.” It would kill her back, but it was doable.

"Of course!” she bleated again, "I do a pre-wash with my fabrics to ensure all washable, hand is optional." she told her, before she took the clothing, cut it from the rolls, and let them re-ravel as she walked over to a sewing machine.

Toki nodded and smiled faintly. “That’s good. I hand dry all of the clothing I do- fire magic and all that- but hand washing tends to be murder on one’s back.” Her knuckles knead into her lower back, and Toki stretches with a pleased sigh. At least Lana had her size for her shirts down now. “Little babybones also kicking at their mother’s spine with little feet is a pain in the back too.” She mutters faintly to her middle.

"I will make something to support your baaaack." she told her, "But for now, you can go sit down with Paaaapy, while I finish your clothing."

Something to support her back? She had no idea what she could make that could do that- but she wasn’t going to turn it down. She nods and smiles slightly. “Thanks, Lana. If you need me for measurements for pants, just let me know.” That said, Toki pads away, snagging the snack bag first, and then goes to take a seat across from Papyrus at one of the many side tables. She plonks the bag on the table, and smiles warmly at him.
"I told you she was good." he told her with a soft laugh, watching the sheep dancing to a tune in her head as she used the machine to put the bits of fabric together, sealing them to be used and worn until such a garment was no longer needed by Madame Nara.

After long enough she seemed, to have a tune going in her head that came with lyrics as under her breath she sang. "Расцветали яблони и груши, Поплыли туманы над рекой. Выходила на берег Катюша, На высокий берег на крутой."

Aliquam blinked once. That was not a language he immediately recognized.

Toki watched too, crossing her legs as she reclined as best she could. “She’s pretty cool.” She smiles. “And very good at what she does. Heh… Interesting song. It’s… Russian, I think. I didn’t know monsters knew different languages other than Japanese. I know a few, but Russian isn’t one of them.” She wondered what the song meant. “Think she’ll ever come topside?”

"I don’t know… Perhaps?" he shrugged, "She finds herself most at home here in the snowy terrain of Snowdin." he hummed softly.

“She’d probably like our winters.” She chuckles softly. “Though Nara Village has rougher snow than the stuff here.” Toki sighs, and glances over to Lana. “Hey, Lana? Is it alright if I nibble on my sandwich while we wait?” She didn’t want to eat if food wasn’t allowed- but the twins were making their demands known with kicks and squirms.

"Oh yes! Of course! No harm in feeding yourself and little ones!" She told her with a smile.

Toki flicked her a broad smile in return and nodded. “Thanks, Lana.” She nudges Pap with a smile, and rummages in the bag, curious as to what sort of sandwiches he had made. Hopefully he had made something with radishes and mustard, and maybe peanut butter on it too. “Want your sandwich, Pap?”

Well, there was peanut butter and jelly. "Yes please." he replied.

She hid a pout- but figured she could indulge when she got home. It would have to do. She tugged out the sandwiches and passed his over to him with a smile. “Here you go, Pap. Bone-appetite.”

He shot her a look as he took a bite, though luckily for her a bite of the sandwich distracted him long enough for him not to make a grumpy sound about the pun."

Toki chortled and took a bite out of her sandwich. She was enjoying it well enough despite the lack of things she was craving being on it. A soft hum escapes her, and she winks teasingly at him as she reaches out with her shoe to poke his leg gently, pretending to be entirely innocent the entire time. “Mmm, ‘s a very good sandwich,” she chirps. “You’re a bone-a-fide good cook~”

"Oh by the stars." he groaned, hiding his face in his free hand. "Why do you torture me?"

“Because I love you dearly, and it amuses me.” She smiles at him coyly, and nudges his leg again. “I’m a real rib-tickler, no?” Oh she knew she wasn’t funny at all- but his amusement made her smile, and she’d quit once he was sufficiently flustered.

After all, sometimes her darling boyfriend required a little bit of a nudge in order to get him to play. But what she mistook for amusement was an underlying annoyance, "Toki... please..." he groaned into his palm.

“Alright, alright.” She did know when to call it quits- and she knew him well enough to read the growing annoyance in his voice “Sorry, love.” She offers him a sheepish grin.

"Thank you." he sighed, before he looked over at Lana, who was still singing in Russian, looking to be nearing completion of the garment.

Toki fell quiet, letting him cool off while she finished her sandwich and listened to the sheep monster singing as she worked her craft.

Soon she finished and gave a final snip before she folded the garment inside out, or rather, right side out. Admiring her work, she gave it a good shake, and stood from her stand. "All done!" she announced happily, coming over to Toki.

Toki had finished her sandwich by then, and she nodded with a smile as the sheep woman padded over. “It looks good!” She smiles, and carefully boosts herself to her feet using the side table. “Wow,” she blinks, peering at it in Lana’s hands. “That’s really good craftsmanship.”

"I'm so glaaaaad you think so! Try it on! I want to see how it fits!"

Toki nods softly, and collects it from her. It’s a soft fabric, and her sockets light up eagerly. “Ah~” She purrs. “It is soft.” Still, she obligingly shifts, and slips it on over top her current sweater. Removing her top around the guys was one thing- but getting in the buff around a stranger wasn’t on her to-do list. Not with the slight body-shyness she was feeling. The turtleneck settles around her shoulders nicely, drapes down loosely over her middle with plenty of space to grow. “How do I look?” She inquires, turning slowly so Lana can see if anything is sitting funny that she cannot immediately see.

Papyrus was lit up with happiness, his mood shifting as he took in his mate in one of her new shirts. "Oh Toki...! It's perfect!"

“Is it?” She peers at herself, looking at the dark greens and blacks on the soft turtleneck. It looks good on her, very sleek, and it’s very soft. A pleased buzzing vibrates loudly through the air as she rubs her fingers along the soft material of the sleeves.

"You look fantastic." he exclaimed happily, while Lana led Toki to a mirror so she herself could see.

Toki took a look at herself, shifting, twisting, and examining- and then she lit up like a star, a happy glow appearing in her eye sockets. “I love it.”

Lana clapped her hands together a few times in happy glee. "Wonderful! So happy you like it!"

“I love it.” She repeats again with a smile. The smile settles to a shyer one, and she peers back at them through the mirror. “Do you think you could make a couple more like it…?” She didn’t want to get too many, since she wasn’t the one buying them.

"Of course!" she replied happily, "I can easily repeat the design, I could even improvise, pockets, hood, zippers maybe?"

“A hood might be a little impractical.” She motions to the horns that make wearing anything on her skull quite difficult. “But pockets would be nice. Not sure on the zippers though.” These were shirts, after all- and a zipper against her bare bones wouldn’t feel very nice, she’d wager.

Toki shifts and adjusts her skirt. She wanted to get a couple pairs of pants too. At least one set of slacks- she did have meetings still, even with everyone technically out from under her guardianship.

"Alright. You want paaaaants too?" Lana gave her a cheerful smile.
“If that’s okay?” She glances to Papyrus for that, finding she’d rather have him confirm a yes or a no on that. “I really want a pair of slacks.” At least one, since she’d be out growing them probably quickly. “And… Maybe a pair of sweatpants?” Since hers were bordering on tight again.

"But of course!" She replied, "Come! Must size you for pants now!"

Papyrus had no change of expression. He just smiled as he watched, crossing his arms and relaxing contently as he made sure his mate was well dressed.

Toki smiled slightly, and fiddled with the bottom of the shirt, before carefully slipping it off. Now back in her basic clothes, she hands the sweater over so she can use it for the base pattern if she needs. “Uh… How are we going to do this? I mean… I have a skirt on- so… what’s going to be easier for you?” She did have under garments on, so she could technically take her skirt off if she needed her to. It wasn’t like the seamstress probably hadn’t seen bare bones before.

Lana shook her head and quickly returned the sweater. "Got measurements while unraveling, so you can keep wearing that. If you have something under your skirt, you can remove it. If not, do not worry!” she told her, "I can still work with that."

Toki took the shirt back with a smile and a nod. “I might change shirts when you’re done measuring me then. And I don’t mind- I imagine it’s easier without extra clothes in the way.” She didn’t mind all that much. She slung the new shirt over her shoulder, and then eased her skirt down and stepped out of it. It left her in her undergarments, and her shirt, which was too short in the front to fully cover her middle. “Besides- not much but bones and ectoplasm to see. I suppose you could see the soullings.” She muses, “Though I don’t know how well you’d see them. They’re kicking up a fuss.” And the little souls tended to become hard to see- at least to her- when they were moving.

She smiled at her with a soft giggle, then she hummed and her hands glowed once more. "Blaaaaack? Green again? Or would you like Blue?” she asked.

“For pants, I think I’d like black, or a dark blue. I tend to spill things on my pants- so whatever stains less.” Though her methods for getting out stains could get out almost anything, she’d rather not have to deep clean her pants every time she drops something on it. So, hence black. She shifts, and spreads her legs so that the cloth can slide as it needs to without being hindered. With that done, she holds still as best she can, only shifting positions when she absolutely must for the sake of comfort. Toki would need to get her shoes off before she could try on the pants when they were finished- as shoes were impossible to safely get through the leg of most pants.

"Consider these pants made!" she announced happily, the fabric coming around and wrapping around her, before the fabric was sliced and wrapped around her legs.

Toki nods and smiles wider as the fabric slides over her. She holds still so the sheep can pin the material as she needs to. “Oh! Can you maybe do deep pockets maybe? I don’t know about you, but I like my pockets to hold more than just the tips of my fingers.” She was firmly in the belief that women’s pants had decorative pockets only because they needed to urge women to buy purses.

"Deep pockets!" Lana parroted, slicing off some fabric and pinning them in place, the pockets went down to her mid-thigh. "Deep pockets" she giggled softly.

Well Aliquam was laughing now, so that was a plus.

Toki laughs too, but nods slightly. “Why not? My cell phone and my keys would never fall out again.” She chortles.
"You could hide a lamp in your pocket!" she giggled as she continued to mark the sewing point.

"Maybe not a lamp," she laughed softly. "But definitely a large number of things. I can even probably carry some things for you when we’re out and about, Pap."

"If there’s anything you can carry, I will let you know." he chuckled gently.

"Aaaaaaall done, you can step out of these paaaaants now!" Lana told her cheerfully.

Getting out of them was easy- they were still loose enough for her to slip her shoes through. Once she’s tree of them, she hands them off, and puts her skirt back on. “Thank you for doing this, Lana.” Toki shifts, and adjusts her top, before padding back over to where she had been seated prior. She reclaims her seat, and sets to her attempt at removing her shoes.

"My pleasure, Miss Toki!" she giggled, "Anything for a friend of Paaaapy's!"

Toki nodded and smiled. She let the sheep get to work- and once her shoes were off, and the woman’s back was turned, Toki wiggled out of her old turtleneck, and into her new one. It settled over her bare bones, feeling amazing without the old sweater to muffle it. It hid some of the swell of her middle too, about as best it could given the growing size of the twins.

It wasn't long after that the pants were completed and held out to Toki, "Ta-da!"

Toki stands, and takes them with a smile. She changes into them too, and discards her skirt for the time being. She looks good, dark slacks and green shirt- almost like her usual self. She stretches in them, rocking her hips thoughtfully and feeling how the material rubbed over her body. “Hm… I like them.” She twisted, moving to the mirror and taking a look at herself. It even looked good with how her body filled out the loose fabric with magic. “Howdy-doody, I got the booty,” she mutters unconsciously in a low tone to herself, hoping neither of them heard her.

"Wonderful!" she bleated happily, having missed her muttered words. "Oh you're so cute in your fluffy clothing!" Lana beamed warmly.

Toki flushed, and adjusted the neck of her turtleneck. “Ah, thank you.” She smiles. “I really like these. They fit good- and I have room to grow.” As she fiddled with the band, she realized that she had lots of room to grow. She might actually have to use her belt- but that meant she wouldn’t have to get resized for what she hoped was a long while.

"Then I’ve done my job!" She announced proudly, "Paaaapy, will you want me to prepare more of these garments?"

"Yes please, Lana. I'd appreciate that."

"Is it alright if I just leave the pants on? They’re very comfortable.” Much less constricting on her chest, even if she had to fist her pinkies in the belt loops to keep them from slowly working their way down her hips. Toki does shoot a look to Papyrus though- and it is a thankful and happy look for the new clothes that she had needed.

"Oh yes you can wear them right out the door!" Lana giggled. "Do you need anything, Paaaapy?"

The sheep woman turned an inquiring gaze to the tallest monster. "You look like you need something new soon! The threads are weakening." she mentioned.

"No, no, I'll be alright. This was a trip for my mate." he assured her.

"Alrightie then! I suppose all that's left is to check out, yes?"
“I suppose so.” Toki returns to her seat, and begins the task of once more putting her shoes on. It was no easier than the attempt Papyrus had helped her with. “Papyrus? If you need some new clothes, we can get a few pairs less of mine and get you some new stuff. I do take care to wash yours gently, but even I’m beginning to notice a few threadbare spots in the material.”

“Toki, I'll get something for myself, but I'm not going to stop her from making your clothes!” he admonished gently as he got up, leaning down and kissing her head with a smile before he went to join Lana at her register.

“Alright, alright.” She smiles softly, thrumming at the kiss. It takes her a little bit, but she soon has struggled into both of her shoes, and manages to haul herself upright so she can go follow Papyrus. Her old clothes are gathered and stuffed into the snack bag so she can carry them home without them getting soaked on the boat ride.

His measurements were taken relatively quickly, and he soon came over to Toki once more.

"We could go get lunch and she'd have these done by the time we get back. What do you say?"

She nodded to him with a smile. “That sounds lovely. What were you thinking for lunch?” Toki was a bit of a bottomless pit at this point- the sandwich from earlier had been filling, but the magic it had been made into had been greedily devoured by the hungry, squirmy babybones in her belly.

"Well, we have Grillby's." he answered, "Or rather, it's Fuku's now." he joked.

Toki laughed softly. “I've heard of Fuku from Grillby.” Not a lot- the man was very private, even if he was a warm individual. “Well, there’s no harm in seeing what she has for sale, right?”

"Of course not. We can go as soon as you're ready."

She laughs and links her arms with his. She took a quick stock of her person, and deemed herself presentable. At least her clothes fit now, and draped along her frame pleasantly instead of clinging tightly to her frame. “I think I’m good to go, so long as you think I look good enough to take on a date.” She winks up at him warmly.

"Most definitely. Though, maybe even more so than myself.” He laughed quietly before he leaned in and pressed a soft kiss to one of her horns. “We'll see you soon, Lana!” he called gently.

"Can't wait for you to come baaaack!” she bleated happily as she waved to them.

Toki waved back, and stepped out with him. The snow feels chilly against the warmth from inside of Lana’s home, but Toki’s magic churns and warms both her and Papyrus as they set out into the chill. “Hm… Think she sells milkshakes?” She wonders curiously.

"She's a fire elemental.” Papyrus arched a brow. “We'd have to make it ourselves if she even has the ingredients."

“True that.” She sometimes forgot that fire elementals didn’t usually handle liquids. She was so used to Grillby handling alcohol, cocoa, or whatever liquid someone requested. But, she supposed, there was a reason that Grillby had gone topside and Fuku had still not gotten past Waterfall.

The taller skeleton chuckled softly. "Indeed, but I'm sure we'll find something good to eat anyhow."

It wasn’t hard to locate Fuku’s. It was bright green- a more obnoxious green than even the glow of her middle. She angled towards it once she spotted it, and chuckled softly. “I’m sure. I could probably settle for some fries if all else fails.”
Aliquam chuckled and held the door open for her as they came in. "She always has made the fries less greasy than her father does."

Grillby did tend to make his fries quite greasy. They were very good when one was in the mood for the grease- but grease wasn’t something that was particularly pleasant in thought to her sense of taste.

Toki stomped her shoes free of snow as they stepped out of the chill and into the warmth inside. It was slightly warmer than Grillby’s bar, and the usual glow was a different tone. The bar itself was more up to date than Grillby’s more traditional approach was- and it was surprisingly busy despite the changes. Most of the booths and tables were full, and being waited upon by the cheery looking green fire elemental.

She waved them in, and motioned for them to sit wherever they liked while she tended to another order.

Toki simply blinked. “Uh… Where do you want to sit?”

"Sans enjoys the seats at the bar."

“But what do you enjoy?” She quirks a brow at him. “The bar seats seem to be the most open.”

He chuckled. "Well the booths may be too small for me."

“If they’re too small for you, they’re probably too small for me.” She wiggles her fingers towards her middle with a soft snort. “Alright, bar stools it is. C’mon.” She pads for the bar, leaving him to follow as she weaves through busy tables and avoids any messes on the floor. She takes a seat at one of the open stools, and smiles to Pap. There’s an open seat next to her, with plenty of leg space for him.

He nodded and sat down with a smile. "Comfy!"

“Very!” She beams back.

It doesn’t take long, but soon Fuku is coming by with menus, and a smile on her face. “Hi! Long time no see, Papyrus. I didn’t think I’d ever see you in here again unless you were picking up Sans.”

"Hello again, Miss Fuku." he greeted warmly, "Not this time, I have come hoping for something we can enjoy while we wait for Lana to finish our order." he explained easily. "What do you have?"

Fuku shot both of them a curious look- she didn’t get much news down here, and running the television wasn’t something she had time for, or to really listen to the gossip- but nodded. “Lana does good work.” She nods. “Lets see…” She shifts and offers the menus out. “I’ve got burgers, fries, onion rings, steaks, baked potatoes, tacos, salads. I’ve also got the basics for alcohol too- though…” Her eyes flick down to the shorter skeleton’s middle, “I don’t think your companion can have that… Uh… I’ve still got the tap hooked up, so I can get you some water?”

“Only if you can do it safely.” Toki smiles.

Aliquam nodded. "Agreed. Only if you can without harming yourself."

“I can manage.” She beams at them. “So what sort of grub can I get for you two?”

“Hm…” Toki peers at the menu, contemplating it thoughtfully, before pointing to the fries. “‘A side of curly fries, please.’ Potato tended to ‘stick to the ribs’ as the saying went, and though she didn’t want a baked potato, she could totally handle a curly-fry. “Do you have mustard for them?”
“I do.” She nods. Fuku cheerfully scribbles on her note pad, and then waits patiently for the larger skeleton’s order.

"Your father had a milkshake recipe he made me one time,” Aliquam hums, “do you know if it's still a possibility?"

“I’ve got that in one of my books.” She nods. She glances to the other skeleton when she perks, and smiles slightly. “Do you want a milkshake too?”

“… Maybe.” She grinds her teeth slightly, and glances to her boyfriend.

“Two milkshakes then. We’ve got chocolate, vanilla, strawberry, and banana. What flavor would you like?” Fuku smiles.

“Banana for me.” All the way- Bananas tasted amazing for Toki today. It was basically the food of the gods. “For us, rather.” Toki laughs softly as she’s kicked, and curls an arm over her middle.

"Strawberry!” he piped up happily.

“One strawberry and one banana shake, and a basket of curly fries coming right up.” Fuku smiled. She scribbled the total for the meal onto the ticket, set the copy of it down for Papyrus, and then stepped back to complete the order for them. “So, who’s the father?” She asks cheerily.

Toki blinked. This was probably the first monster that didn’t know. “Papyrus is, actually.”

“Really?” She blinked. “I thought that he was dating Tokiko Nara?”

“I am Toki,” the shorter skeleton laughs.

Fuku flushes brightly. “Oh. Well, I certainly feel silly. I’m so sorry- I’m usually too busy to keep up on the gossip, and I don’t always watch television.”

Papyrus laughed gently, "It’s quite alright, your father may not have told you, but Toki was actually an HTM!” he explained.

“I know who Miss Nara is- I just didn’t connect the name with the face.” She laughs hesitantly. “Dad’s told me a little about you- about as much as he knows, and as much as Sans says.” Fuku offers the skeleton a smile as she cooks. “It’s nice to meet you though! Dad says you’ve gotten him a really nice bar with sealed doors so the rain doesn’t creep in.”

“I did.” She nods. “It should hold against all but the harshest of floods. His home is upstairs, so he does have a place to retreat to in case someone leaves the door open and it floods. And it’s okay- unless you watch a lot of television, you wouldn’t know my face.”

“I honestly didn’t connect the name to the face.” She chuckles. “But congratulations! To the both of you. Dad said it was twins?”

"Yes, twins." he replied happily, "They're both very happy too."

“Mostly. They let me know when they’re unhappy.” She rubs her middle softly. “They don’t like when I tie my shoes.” She chortles.

“I can imagine.” She giggles, “Bending over probably squishes them if they take after their daddy in size.” It takes her a moment, but she’s soon presenting two shakes, and a large boat of curly fries. The fries are not very greasy, compared to Grillby’s, and they’re flavored liberally with salt and some Fuku just grins back. “No problem.” She slides the condiments down for her to flavor her fries, and then turns as a patron calls out to her. “If you need anything, just holler, yeah?”

“Of course.” Toki nods. As the fire elemental leaves, she shifts to sip at her milkshake. It is thick and creamy- and has little chunks of banana that taste amazing. “Mmm…”

“So good…” he sighed happily as he took a drink of his own. Thick, sweet, and strawberry- it hit all of the good spots.

“Very.” Toki took a few more sips, before nibbling on her fries. “Mmm… Fries are good too.” She puts a bit of mustard to the side and dips her curled spring of potato within it, and then eats it. Nudging the fry boat over, she offered it to share.

He reached over willingly. "I shouldn't resist." he chuckled, before he took a few fries and chomped on them. "Mmm~"

“Good, aren’t they?” She grins slightly. “Even better with mustard on them.” But mustard seemed to be her condiment of choice when it came to most of her cravings.

"Nyeh... I'm not sure about that."

Toki shrugs slightly, and nibbles another mustard covered fry. “Don’t blame me for my odd taste in things.” She chuckles. “Your little ones are very… fussy eaters, I suppose. They certainly enjoy mustard.”

"Well... You're the one gonna be cleaning up their mustard mess, I can't stand the stuff." He stuck his tongue out slightly.

She shrugged and nodded, glancing away from him to quietly munch on her fry. Toki was admittedly a little bit self-conscious with a lot of the stuff that came with pregnancy. She knew that her random taste in food tended to revolt other monsters- and was a bit… Easily bothered by it at times. “Yeah, I know.” She murmurs softly into her shake.

He smiled and reached over to gently pat her back. "Don’t worry, I still love you." He laughed lightly.

Toki shifted at the pats to her back, and kept her eyes on her shake. “Mmm, I love you too.” She murmurs again. Her shake is cold and delicious as she sips it through her straw. “I know my weird cravings gross you out. I’m sorry about that.”

"Don’t be. You cannot help it." He shook his head and took a slurp of his drink.

“Can’t help it, love. Pregnancy does weird things- and I am surprisingly self-conscious about this when I know I shouldn’t be.” She shrugged helplessly, and finished her portion of the fries. She elbows the other half- the ones not slathered in mustard- over for him to finish, and then focuses on her icy treat. “I’m self-conscious about a lot of things.” Though he knew that quite well, with as often as she tended to apologize for things.

He leaned over and pressed a soft kiss to her skull regardless. "I know, I know, but I'm still gonna love you anyway, you silly woman."

His smooch makes her teeth turn upwards into a slight smile. “And I still love you regardless.” She says softly in response. Toki nearly choking on her straw however, as a pained shriek floods above the usual noise in the bar. She turns in her chair, spitting out the end of the straw she’d bitten through, and searched for the cause.

Fuku was being ushered away from a mess of glass and plastic, a horrified rabbit monster babbling apologies as he ushered the bartender back towards the bar. Fuku’s front was drenched, and she had her hands clutched to her face, which was blackened and looked burnt. Her palms were no better looking, and parts of her ‘skin’ flecked and cracked, showing green magmatic blood below as it fell away and dusted.

Toki’s socket’s got wide. “Holy shit- Fuku!”

"Fuku!” Papyrus jolted out of his seat and went to her side, quickly moving her somewhere she could sit.

Fuku ended up seated at a rapidly emptied table, shaking and trembling as her fires struggled to relight the flesh that had been painfully extinguished.

Toki wasn’t far behind Papyrus, but she had to wade through the worried crowd that had gathered. Her teeth ground as she worked her way in, sparks flying in worry. “Fuku! Oh no… Pap, can you heal her?”

“N-need fire,” Fuku whimpered softly. “Need to r-relight. S-s-so cold…”

"I-I don’t know if I can, I was never able to with Grillby...” He trailed off, before he came to a sudden realization as he glanced at his mate. "What about you! Your fire!"

Her fire? She… Well, it could work. Toki nodded, and stepped forth. She carefully lowered down in front of the much smaller fire monster, and eased the burnt hands from the girl’s face. Her face was a mess- someone had obviously hit a tray that had liquids on it while she had been carrying it, and it had poured all over her. She eased her hands up onto the girl’s head, trying to fight the faint urge to panic as she felt the burnt parts of her face- memories tried to surge and were subsequently battled back into submission. “Easy, Fuku. Let me help you.”

Toki poured her magic into her hands, and let the heat of it wash into her face.

Fuku nearly sobbed in relief as the magic dried the water that saturated her. Her eyes creaked open as the extinguished parts of her caught fire again, slowly at first, and then more rapidly as Toki expunged more of her magic into her. It was unpracticed- not at all like her father healing her extinguished spots- but it worked, even if it was no doubt tiring on the healer’s end.

"Toki... Well done!” he praised happily.

Toki wobbled in place, inexplicably tired once she’d flash-dried the flame elemental’s uniform, and relit everything that had been extinguished. She also found herself slightly stuck- she hadn’t crouched where she’d have a way back up. Fuku was healed though- healed and looking much more energized.

The skeleton’s rear nearly hit the floor as the fire elemental lunged and tugged her into a hug. “Thankyouthankyouthankyou,” was the babbled mantra that came from the green being.

Toki simply blinked, a little dazed and a lot tired, and patted her shoulder softly. Fuku was a lot younger than she originally thought- and it made her wonder if Fuku should even be running a bar. It didn’t take long for the elemental to let her go though, and she valued her freedom as she was set loose from the iron grasp. “I’m glad I could help you, Fuku.” She said softly, and struggled to get upright.

Aliquam stepped over and looped his arms around her from behind, helping her stay up and balanced. "You did wonderful,” He sounded pleased, “and I’m so proud of you."

Toki quirked a gentle smile for her mate, leaning back into his support and letting him help her keep her balance, and peered down at the shorter fire elemental. “Did I manage to relight everything?”

Fuku nodded and laughed tiredly. “Yeah, you did. Thank you. Thank you so, so much. Why don’t you go sit and enjoy the rest of your meal- free of charge. It’s the least I can do.”

"That's very sweet of you, Fuku. Thank you. Come on, Toki, let's get you back to your milkshake.” Papyrus gave her a warm smile, and moved to guide her back to their seats.

The crowd parted to let them through, mutterings about the ‘guardian angel’ rising up among them. Some of them turned to go back to their food and seats- but others watched them curiously.

Fuku joined them as they headed for the bar, and smiled quietly. “You’ll need the food. You expended a lot of magic.”

“You still have fries to eat too.” Toki chuckled softly. She didn’t fight being guided back towards the bar- getting to sit again was fabulous, and she relaxed onto her stool when she could. “Mmm…”

He stroked her back gently. "I'm so proud of you." he cooed to Toki, pressing a soft kiss to her skull.

“So you’ve said.” She smiled wryly, and resumed drinking her milkshake. It was starting to melt, making it much easier to consume. “You can sit, Pap. I’m not going to fall off the stool, I promise.”

"Alright." he chuckled, sitting down and getting himself comfortable again. He sighed and relaxed.

"My milkshake is melting.” he realized, before going back to it.

“Well, the bar is warm.” Toki smiles to him slightly as she idly watches as Fuku gets back to work, replacing the order that had been spilled all over her front. “Ice melts in a warm environment, love.” The richness of the milkshake helps ease some of her energy problems, and she relaxes contently with a soft sigh.

"Mmh.” He hummed in reply.

Toki finished her milkshake swiftly, and then turned so she could recline her back against the bar itself. She looked over the sea of tables, and found most of the monsters had returned to their business, though a few still glanced over from time to time. “Ah. That was a good shake.” The twins were asleep, shifting only faintly in her middle, and Toki rubbed a hand soothingly over her belly as she relaxed.

He finished his milkshake around the same time, and once finished, he leaned back and sighed with a pleased look on his face. "Indeed."

“Mmh…” She relaxed contently.

"It's a tip." Aliquam told her, not taking the coins even as she pushed them back. "Thank you. We hope to see you again sometime!"
“Alright then. I’ll look forwards to seeing you two again!” She gave them a cheerful wave, and inched the coins into her apron pocket, where all of her tips were collected.

Toki nodded and waved, and then guided them both through the maze of tables and busy customers. Going outside was a shock of cold against the warmth of the bar, and she couldn’t suppress the sudden shiver that overtook her.

He wrapped his arms around her and nuzzled her gently before he began the walk back to Lana's.

Toki leaned into him, tired and content to enjoy his company as they walked. The snow was falling again, and it danced over and around her horns as she walked. Snowdin was nice, she mused. She probably could have lived here, if she’d been one of the monsters trapped under the mountain.

Aliquam began to whistle quietly as he walked, his arm around her as they returned to Lana's store.

There was the ding of the bell above his door, before a shrill, happy voice called to them in warm words. "Welcome baaaaack!"
It had been a complete surprise to her. Yeah, she knew she had some meetings- but she’d basically been summoned to fly out of the country for this one. Apparently they were going to set up a ‘village like her own’ out in the United States- and wanted to know how she had designed it, what sort of facilities they would need to accommodate monsters of all sizes, and how it was run without any obvious leader or official now that she wasn’t their guardian any longer. It was the government actually requesting her- and she was going to be taking a private flight out to the international airport over in Oregon, where the meeting was being held.

So she was being rushed out for an emergency meeting- and, by common vote of the monster populace of Nara Village, she was going to be taking ‘guards’ as well. HAM was still a threat- a major one- and they weren’t willing to lose her like other HTM’s were being lost.

Given that the monsters technically originated from Underground-, which was considered it’s own ‘nation’ within a nation- most of the topside monsters already had ‘passports’ in their information. Toki had been assured that they would be enough to get her through the airports as needed. Which was good- because Aliquam was adamant on coming with her on such a long trek. She was taking Tenebris too- two ‘guards’ was more than enough for one woman. Sans was staying behind to keep an eye on things with Han- after all, they had another business up and running, and things needed to keep rolling smoothly with the integration of the bakery.

Toki didn’t even have the chance to go try any of Muffet’s goods. She had to leave the day of the opening- and hope that she got back in time for the fireworks at the start of June.

Toki had enough things packed into her carry on to last her the week, along with all of her travel information. Now that she didn’t need things like deodorant or hair care supplies, it was down strictly to clothes, which she now had plenty of. Lana had made more than enough clothes for her to have several sets- and she was very, very pleased by it. Lana had also made a wrap that went around her belly. It didn’t make a whole lot of a difference with the amount of cramps she got in her back, but it did help support her middle and make her back ache less in general.

Her suitcase was packed and ready to go, and she was dressed and also ready. She’d gotten her bees fed, next order of honey collected and put into jars, had made sure the house was clean for Han to use when he was here.

The flight itself was only going to be a relatively short jaunt of roughly four hours- but she had to be there much earlier, in order to get through customs.

In the end they had taken Quinn's car, with Cae coming along to take the car back home for them.

Tenebris was grumbling as he adjusted a wrap they had put on his tail. "Damn thing... the sooner we get this off..."

Toki was hauling herself out of Pap’s back seat, having opted to give the tallest monster the spot with the most leg room, since she could turn sideways and drape her legs across Sans’ own, if she wished. She tugged her carry on with her, laden with her purse and other papers along with her clothing, and slung it over her shoulder as she attempted to gain her feet. “Sorry to say, but you’re stuck with that for another several hours, Tenebris. At least we’re flying over on a private jet, so we’re not stuck trying to fit you and Pap in a commercial airline.”

Tenebris bared his fangs in frustration and leaned his head back in annoyance, his tail thumping against the ground, instead of its usual sharp tapping sound the blade would make normally.

Aliquam was smiling as he helped Toki out of the car, making sure to mind her baby bump as he did so. "Careful now." he hummed gently.

Toki was thankful for the help- she’d always been a bit of a klutz, but the additional extra weight in her middle did little to help that. She let him haul her upright, and smiled at him thankfully. “We’re okay. Thank you though, Pap.” Her bag is hauled higher, and she loops both arms through the straps. It doesn’t help with her balance either, but it wasn’t too bad.

She laughed softly and stepped aside so she could shut the door. “You all have everything you need, right? Passports, identification, paperwork?”

Papyrus pressed a soft kiss between her horns and then held up two passports. "Mine and my Father's." he replied as lifted his other hand with an envelope clutched in it. "Paperwork for us both.”

“Good.” She smiles warmly. Toki shifts and lets him tuck it away, before heading to the back hatch. She opens it, and goes to tug forth the other two duffle bags that they had brought with their things. She hefts them up into her arms, looking ridiculous as she does, and then closes the hatch. “Cae- you good to get the car back home? I know your phone has GPS, but GPS can be bullshit from time to time.”

"Yes, and don't worry, I've got this in the bag!" he waved her off with a bright grin as he traded seats and got into the driver’s seat. It didn’t take him long before he started the car.

"Sans! Do not be generous with my gas tank!" Quinn told him sternly.

"Yeah! I gotcha Pap!" he told him. "I'll be good to your tank!"

“I’ll chip in and fill it when we get back.” She smooths a hand over Aliquam’s arms lightly, and then pads to Tenebris. His bag is held out to him. “I don’t know what you’ve packed, but it feels like bricks in here.” Though monster clothes of his size were bound to weigh a lot when there were many of them in a tight space.

"Nothing illegal if that's what you're worrying about." he chuckled, sling it over his shoulder.
"I’m fairly certain we’ll know if you have anything illegal when your bag gets searched." She snorts. "Just so you know- you can’t smoke on a plane. Alright- come on, you two. We’ve got a long walk,” or waddle in her case, “To where we depart.” She hefts her bag a bit more, and adjusts her grip on Aliquam’s bag, before setting off at a fast walk.

Fast walking pregnant skeletons waddle- but at least her larger stature and speedy pace urge the humans to keep their space. Her mom liked to call it ‘walk and think murder’, and usually people would get out of the way. Though- her mom was tiny, so she often had Toki do it. Size meant something sometimes.

Aliquam rolled his eyes and chuckled as he followed her. "Wait for me, Toki!" He laughed.

Tenebris shook his head then chuckled and went after them while Cae took his leave.

"You both have longer legs than I do! If you can’t keep up with one fast walking pregnant woman, then you are both sorely out of shape.” Which was ridiculous, because Aliquam could run laps around the compound without issue- and she suspected that, despite Tenebris being retired, he could probably do the same as well. She was really the only one who wasn’t in shape. She was a hilarious conundrum, really. A boss heart in the body of a civilian was an interesting thing. Still, she laughs, and keeps on trekking. Toki can only go so fast with two bags on her back and two babies in her belly, or risk falling over someone’s luggage. As it is, she’s easy to see.

Besides one other monster form- some form of bird monster stepping into one of the elevators-they’re the only monsters in sight. Her horns stand out quite nicely above the crowd.

"Well I would slow down! You know that!” Quinn insisted, walking slowly at her side once he caught up with her.

Tenebris made sure to watch and make sure that Sans got out of the parking lot safely, and then he easily caught up with them once his eldest was out of sight.

Toki, framed by two large monsters on either side, was quite a sight. She laughed softly at Aliquam, however, and grinned at him. “If I walk my usual pace, we’d never get anywhere. The airport is pretty big.” The building itself could hold half the village in it, if not more. She headed for some escalators, and eased herself onto one of the ones that went down, leaving the guys to file on behind her. “And I’m usually a pretty slow walker, you know that.” She took her time getting places usually.

Ebott City International Airport was massive, plainly put. There were gift shops of all kinds, bars, food places, lounges, wifi areas, and all sorts of things to distract the attention of those waiting on their flights. It was a pretty big place- and easy to get lost in.

When she reached the bottom, she patiently turned to wait for them to join her, adjusting her burdens with a soft huff. Toki was not by any means a monster built off of endurance.

They had surprisingly kept up well enough, though Tenebris had his tail stepped on more than once. He was holding it in one hand and grumbling to himself as he walked.

Toki slowed down as the crowd thickened, and she found herself wishing for personal space quite quickly. She eased back a bit between the two monsters when a harried woman who rushed past her without a second glance roughly jostled Toki. “Alright. The place we need to go is this way, I think.” To the left of their entryway should lead to their terminal. “Look for terminal E7.”

"That way.” Tenebris gestures to a Terminal labeled as E7.
Which was, as she thought, down to the left. She nodded, and hesitated but a moment before plunging into the crowd. Toki could project the ‘murder’ vibe, but she was by no means good at it—and everyone here was too busy to notice the tall monster. So she had to work with weaving her way here and there when she could, guiding the guys through as well.

Getting to E7 was a pain in the ass— and she nearly dropped the bag as they got there. “Fuckfuckfuck- we gotta go.” They were apparently taking off for Portland within forty minutes and were doing last call for boarding— ahead of schedule by two hours. And they hadn’t even bothered to send her a text or call. Yeah, she hadn’t paid for the tickets— the governments had— but the next flight to Oregon was in eight hours.

Sighing, Tenebris reached out and took Toki’s hand, giving gentle ‘pardon’s and ‘excuse me’s as he moved through the crowd.

Toki took a hold of Pap too, so the trio of monsters could get into line. She sighed heavily, nearly dropping Pap’s bag from her shoulder when she’s bumped again— but with the massive monster leading the way, it doesn’t take all that long for them to get into place. And then, now that they were in line, it was simply a waiting game. “Thanks, Tenebris. People move for bigger monsters, I guess.”

"Ta-Da.” he chuckled gently as he looked at her, before he looked back at the line. He noticed a few first glances from the guards, who noted the presence of the larger male. They then greatly considered if they were going to need backup or not.

Toki chuckled gently in turn, and handed Papyrus his bag. The line itself was swiftly moving, and there weren’t a lot of people flying private to Oregon. It wasn’t long before they were at the front of the line, passing bags over for inspection. “I’ll go first so you two can see how it goes, yeah?” She beams up at them warmly.

"Alright.” Tenebris rumbled as he stepped forward to let her pass.

Toki slid around him easily enough, and stepped forwards. “I’ll take the pat down, thank you.” She smiles to one of the guards.

He eyes her teeth and gives her a wary look. “Alright. Please step forwards, hold your arms and legs out, and stand still.”

She does as asked, standing spread-eagle for him, and hums softly.

The guard gives her a quick pat down, starting from the top and working his way down, though to the other skeletons watching it was probably something super invasive looking. He stands once he’s done, looking completely befuddled by the muscle and body that he felt under the skeleton’s clothes, alongside the bulge of her middle. “Alright…” He mutters softly. “You’re clear to go. Please take your bag and proceed forwards.”

Toki nodded, collected her bag, and then moved to patiently wait.

Aliquam walked up to the machine where he was to put his bag and put it down, before approaching the guard as well. "I suppose I will do the same as she had." he told the guard, fixing his stance slightly to do as Toki had done.

“Alright.” The guard looks slightly intimidated by the skeleton that looms over him, more than a foot taller than he was. He stands on his tiptoes, and just barely managed to give the same rundown that he did for the woman. From the shoulders to the feet he pats, his touch just as professional as it is invasive, and ends up looking just as befuddled as before. “How even…?” How on earth did skeletons have muscle? And manage to feel as well stacked as this one did? It just made no sense. “You’re good to go, sir.”

“I’ll get the next one, Terry.” A shorter woman approaches, and pats her comrade on the shoulder. “You look like your mind is going to explode.”

“A skeleton has muscles, Yuki.” The guard doesn’t fuss, and steps off to the side so the shorter woman can take over. “Muscles.” He emphasizes. “I don’t understand how that even works!”

“Magic, actually.” Toki supplies easily, giving Papyrus a grin and a wink. “Don’t worry, sir. I was confused at first too. It’s better just to roll with it and enjoy the view.”

“I like my men with a little bit more meat on their bones,” the woman, Yuki, laughs slightly. “But to each their own. Okay!” She turns to the biggest of the three, who is nearly three feet taller than she is, and blinks up at him. “Next one up- whoa, okay, big guy, you’re not going to fit through the scanner without breaking it. You going to be alright with a pat down?”

Tenebris was looking down at her, the angle unfortunately making it more like a leer from her vantage.

"I suppose it will be alright." he rumbled. He set his phone and wallet down on the counter, and then knelt down and stretched his arms to the side. At this angle, his more gentle, calm gaze could be seen.

Even kneeling, he was massive. Yuki swallowed down nerves and nodded. “Thank you.” She padded closer, and started from his shoulders. She patted firmly and professionally, and worked from his shoulders to his arms, and then to his underarms. Holy hell, this guy was stacked. The skeleton from before was ripped- this monster was a fucking tank. She eased her hands down and paused, and her fingertips brushed something hard against the side of his chest. “What is that?” she asks warily.

He blinked once. "What?" he questioned.

“This hard part- you have something under your shirt.” She was wary now, and it carried over into her voice. Bombs could be easily strapped to things, and while she didn’t think a monster would ever do something like that… Well, there was no telling with people.

He blinked again, then he reached up and felt...

"... ah." he then smiled gently, "That's my shield you're feeling." he explained.

“Shield?” She questioned, still wary.

“He’s got a… I almost want to call it an external rib cage almost, that goes over his skin?" Toki taps her chest to motion where. “It’s a part of his body, like his tail is. It’s made out of some sort of hard bone, I think. It protects his chest. At least, that’s my understanding.”

“Oh. Er… Forgive me for not fully trusting you- you would not believe the things people will sneak onto a plane. Will you lift your shirt please, sir, so I can confirm your companion’s words?” She steps back and around so she faces him.

He blinked once, and then he sighed heavily. "Very well.." He reached down, grabbing the hem of his turtleneck, as well as the underlying tank top he wears. He then lifted them both up, revealing his torso to her. True to their words, his shield gleamed in the light over where his inner rib cage resided.

She inspected it for a moment, and then nodded and motioned for him to put his shirt down. Damn.
He was ripped. Damn her mild monster fetish. “Alright, I believe you. Your torso is clear- if you can stand upright, I’ll sweep your legs, and you’ll be free to go.”

He nodded, and slowly stood, his tail stayed behind him, rattling quietly.

As of now, the only ‘weapons’ he had were his claws on both hands and feet, and his tail.

The tail she took notice of. The claws not so much- a lot of monsters had them. The tail on the other hand was new. Still, she did her customary pat down, running hands down his legs and his inseams, and then she peered at his tail. “Well… I suppose since it’s covered…” She muttered. Laws about Monster’s flying were still very open- and it was to the discretion of the security for now, until they could hammer out specifics.

“His tail will remain dulled until we land.” Toki chips in.

“I’m sure it will. I guess you’re good to go then.” The woman still looks a bit unnerved, but she waves him onwards. "Collect your things and enjoy your flight, sir."

"Thank you." he walked by and picked up his bag.

Once Tenebris had his bag, Toki offered them both a happy smile, and motioned them on. “C’mon you two. We’ve got a plane to catch.” With that said, she offers her hand to Papyrus, and sets off down the hall at a much slower waddle. Her burst of speed had been temporary, it seemed.

"Of course." Aliquam stayed at Toki’s side, looping his fingers affectionately into her own, and walked with her down the way.

Tenebris slowly moved ahead, looking for the gate that they needed to go through.

The gate was easy to see- there were a few people still waiting to get in, and it had big flashing letters broadcasting which flight it was.

Toki beamed and headed for it. “That’s our flight right there. Ah! I haven’t been on a plane in a long time. It’s going to be so exciting!”

"Hmm... Fascinating." Tenebris murmured.

“Uhuh!” She smiles happily. Toki is, admittedly, a little out of breath from all of the speed waddling by the time they reach the gate, but she doesn’t let it bother her. They reach the gate in time to be the next ones that go in. “Ah- I do believe we have private seats.”

“Under which name?” the one guarding the gate flips through his note pad.

“Should be under Tokiko Nara. If not, check for the last name ‘Gaster’.”

“Nara- right at the top of the list. You and your... guards?” he arches a brow at the note, “Your guards are to be housed in suite D3. Please inform your hostess, and she will guide you to it.”

“Thank you.” Toki nods pleasantly.

The man steps aside and motions them in.

"Thank you." Aliquam smiled at the guard and walked through the gate.

Toki followed, with Tenebris behind her, and they made their way to the plane.
The plane itself was large, definitely something Toki wouldn’t ever pay to fly on out of her own pocket. Once they were in, and informed the hostesses of where they needed to go, they found themselves guided down a long hallway, and brought to a decent sized private room of sorts. It had four seats, and areas for luggage.

“You will be on the plane long enough to receive a lunchtime meal, and this particular seat comes with a fully stocked mini-bar and snack bar. Though… I will make sure to bring by some soda for you, Miss Nara.” The hostess smiled as she ushered them in. “Are there any first time fliers here?”

“They are.” Toki nods to the two larger monsters and goes to tuck her carry on into the luggage rack so turbulence won’t knock it loose. She does tug loose a book first though, and settle it carefully next to what she’s chosen for her seat. “I've flown a lot as a kid. Nothing this nice, but I have been on a plane before.”

“That’s good then!” She smiles. “It’s good to fly with someone who has experience. Now- our flight is pretty straight forward, though we will be making one stop in Tokyo to top up on our fuel before we cross the Pacific Ocean. You will all be told when it is alright to move around and take your seat belts off, but until then, please remain seated and buckled so turbulence doesn’t cause you any problems.”

Tenebris looks around as soon as he’s done copying Toki, putting his bag up on the rack with little issue. Claiming the biggest of the seats, which had a bit more legroom for him to work with, he stretched out his limbs before he curled his claws contently.

Toki helped Papyrus get his bag in place, before taking her own seat. She fiddled with the buckles, and got them to the size they needed to be in order to accommodate her growing belly, and then crossed her ankles with a soft sigh. The arches of her feet hurt. “I’ll keep an eye on my boys,” She smiles softly.

“Of course you will. Once a mom always a mom, even if they aren’t yours.” She beams back. “If you don’t mind me asking, when are you due?”

“End of September we think. We don’t really know.” Toki grins. “First time seeing what happens when an HTM has children with an actual Monster.”

“That’s really neat!” The hostess laughs. “Well, I’m glad and hope the father is excited.”

Toki shares a smile, and glances to Papyrus. “Oh, he is. So is the grandfather.” She tilts her chin towards Tenebris.

“Ah! Congratulations to the new additions to your family! A family trip then?” She giggles. “Showing them a little bit of the world before you’re on baby duty?”

“Something akin to that.” She says wryly, no desire to elaborate on the actual reason for their trip.

Aliquam giggled softly and Tenebris was rumbling deeply as he looked at them, "We've a long way to go, so I'm excited to see how it goes... Not sure about the 'flight' aspect.”

“You’ll see how you like it.” The hostess smiles to the taller skeleton, and pads back to the door. “We’ll stop by frequently to see if you need anything. We’ll have sodas brought by once we're up in the air- I advise you to stay buckled until the captain levels out.”

Toki nods. “We’ll do that. How long do you think it will take until we take off?”

“Probably ten minutes or less. There are not that many people to get settled, so we're bit over-staffed for this flight.” She chuckles. “I’ll let you three get settled in. If you need anything, there is a button here by the door that you can press, and someone will be along shortly.”

“Okay. Thank you.” Toki gives her a smile, and sighs softly when the woman leaves. “Ahh. At least the seats are comfortable. Commercial flight has the most uncomfortable seating ever.”

"Mmhm." Tenebris leaned his head back and sighed gently, smiling as he peered over at Toki though half lidded eyes. "So... this... wont go bad right?"

“Go bad?” She blinks. “Statistically no. This place is pretty well known for being secure and safe. You saw the check in area- they searched you pretty well, Tenebris. The chances of the plane falling from the sky are pretty slim. Honestly, we’re more likely to have a problem with a HAM agent being on board than we are to have the plane crash.”

That thought alone makes even her a bit anxious, but she keeps her calm regardless. It's odd how HAM scares her more than a plane crash does.

"Mmhm." he shifted and rumbled softly, though it was clear he was actually nervous... his tail was rattling softly.

Toki could see his nerves clear as day, though she didn't really know how to soothe them. So she did the best thing she could- and that was keep a calm front.

It was actually closer to twenty minutes later that the plane took to the skies. In that time, soda had been stocked into the mini-bar for Toki, and she had finished the first chapter of the novel she was reading.

The plane rattled and shook like usual as it got up to speed- and then there was the sensation of the ground dropping out from under them as it lurched into the sky in a rapid climb.

Toki hummed, and turned a page, completely unbothered by the bumps and rattles of turbulence that knocked her lightly against her seatbelt.

At first the sensation didn't bother the two males, but when the turbulence hit, Tenebris' claws dug into the chair arms and his tail began to rattle LOUDLY, a semi-panicked look on his face.

Toki glanced up at the rattle, and chuckled softly. "Tenebris," she crooned softly, "It's okay. Take a deep breath- we're okay, the plane is okay. Turbulence is normal, I promise.”

He didn't answer coherently, just let out a series of rattles and clicks, his thin-slitted gaze looking around fast, the whole time his tail kept rattling.

Aliquam was taking it a little better, but still looked a bit tense as he focused on anything he could see in the room.

Well, she couldn’t exactly get out of her seat while they were ascending... So she began to buzz softly, just over the din of his rattling, so he would focus on her and not on the plane bucking below their feet.

It didn’t take all that long for the plane to level out, however, and once the Captain gave the go-ahead, she unclipped her seat belt and eased to the edge of her seat. “Are you both okay?”

"I.. I am alright." Aliquam answered slowly.

Tenebris' pupils opened up and he slowly slumped with a shaky sigh. "I need a pipe." he whined
"You can’t have a pipe until we get to America, Tenebris. This is a no smoking airline." She gives him a soothing smile, and continues her soft buzzing. “I’m glad you’re okay, Pap.” Toki slips her hand over his, and tubs his tense knuckles gently. “That was turbulence. We’re going to feel it several more times while we’re in the air- it may be worse than that, or it might be not nearly as bad. But… try to stay calm, yeah? Have a drink, eat something, read- I actually have a couple books in my bag if it will help.”

Tenebris let out a loud whine and leaned his head back. "At least a cup of tea then?"

Rolling his hand over, Aliquam gently gripped her hand as he looked at her. "Nyeh... I'm alright, Toki." he murmured.

Toki massaged his hand gently as he turned it over to grip her own, and gave him a warm smile. “You’re scared- but it’s okay to be afraid, Pap.” She says softly. “And Tenebris? If you brought your tea with you in your carry-on, or hidden somewhere on you, I do believe there are water bottles in the mini-fridge. I will gladly make you some tea.”

"...." After a moment, he took to his pack down from the rack and rummaged around. It took him a short bit, but he located what he wanted. "Here." he told her, tossing her the box.

One handed catching wasn’t doable, so it bounced off her abdomen and landed in her lap. Toki chuckled softly when one of the twins kicked in upset, and then gently wiggled her hand free from Ali’s. “I'll be right back, love.” She hauls herself out of the chair, grumbling something about chairs needing to have handholds for pregnant women, and then waddles to the mini-bar. As she’s the only one apparently brave enough to unbuckle, Toki is left to getting the water.

Once she’s gotten a couple bottles, she uses the top of the fridge to stand, and then spoons some of the tea directly into the bottle, before pouring her magic in slowly so she doesn’t scorch the dried tea. Shortly, the room smells strongly of orange blossom tea. “Alright, Tenebris. Your tea is done. Pap? Did you want some to help you keep calm too?”

"Yes please." he replied gently, while Tenebris has already begun to relax, purring gently just from the smell alone.

Toki smiles softly to herself, and prepares a second bottle. The aroma doubles, and then she carefully caps them and slips a beer coaster over the outside edges, so the piping hot plastic does not burn them. Tenebris gets his bottle of tea first, carefully settled into his hand, and then she waddles for Papyrus.

Tenebris took his bottle from her and took a moment as the heat seemed to comfort him alone.

Toki ends up tossed into his lap as the plane lurches into another bout of turbulence. The air around Ebott tended to be rough- and that was likely from all of the magical bleed off from Mount Ebott’s old barrier. “Thank goodness for caps, or we’d be wearing hot tea.” She huffs softly.

Aliquam was going to reach to take his cup, but ended up catching her instead. "Nyeh!" he laughed quietly, and then nuzzled her. "Well yes, that is true!" he agreed, before he pressed a soft kiss to her head. "And thank goodness for fast reflexes so I could catch you~"

“Indeed.” She chuckles softly. She still was a bit squished in the middle, and the twins angrily kicked against where they were pressed to him. She leaned up to kiss him back, and then smiled quietly. “Alright- your tea, and then I’ll get back to my seat. I forgot the air around Ebott tends to be rougher
"Thank you," he purred softly, taking his bottle from her with a warm smile sent her way. "This looks good."

"I hope it tastes good. Fast brewed isn’t as good as slow brew, but it should do its job." She smiles, and hesitantly shimmies back off of his lap. She makes it to her seat next to him, and eases down into it. Her buckle is returned to its place around her middle, and then she takes some time to rub her palms over her belly as the twins twist and fuss.

"Hm… y’know," she muses to the men around her, "I can vaguely feel their souls through mine. Not… much yet, but… They’re unhappy about being jostled, I know that much."

"You'll feel them more when they're born." Aliquam hummed softly. "You'll be able to read their aura as well." he explained, rubbing her stomach gently with one of his.

Their father’s hand made a good target, and Toki audibly grunted as tiny limbs turned their tantrums outwards instead of in towards her ribs and spine. "I can feel that they’re in the midst of some sort of tantrum. Ah- ow, little ones, ow. You have sharp little toe bones, and that is mommy’s ectoplasm that you are jabbing." She was officially six months along now- and had another four to go, technically- but the twins were getting big, and some of their kicks were actually beginning to hurt a little bit. These were some of those sorts of kicks. "So, uh, do you get to have a connection with them too?

"Not as strong as yours, but yes." He nodded. "Once in a while I feel them."

"That’s good." She smiles quietly. "I don’t think they much like flying either- must be something they get from you two. Hm. Wish I could soothe them though." Toki sighs and kneads her fingers gently against one side of her belly. "They’re getting to the size where some of their kicks are actually starting to hurt. I think they’re going to end up with the pointed ends on their toes like me and their grandpa."

"That is concerning and I hope it does not cause you more pain than it must," he cooed gently, stroking her stomach to soothe the souls within. "At peace little jellybeans," he cooed softly, releasing a little of his magic to try and soothe them.

The magic did its job, and they eased off some of their frenzied kicks and thrashes. "I think they’ve accepted your magic to pacify them for now." Toki still grunted again as one of them stretched a leg outwards, creating a visible distortion in her middle even from under her turtleneck. She blinked, and then began to laugh. "That is slightly painful, but I don’t even care. Look at that! I think that’s a foot. Tenny! Can you see that from over there? Check it out!" Typical mom- painful yes, but fascinating as well.

Aliquam smiled brightly while Tenebris peered over, smiling gently. "I can, it’s quite adorable, Toki."

Toki hijacked Papyrus’ hand, and pressed his fingers gently onto the lump. Vaguely, through the membrane of her abdomen, he would be able to feel a not-so-small foot. “It’s adorable- and also slightly creepy from my perspective. It reminds me of the Alien movies I used to watch when I was younger.”

The little foot remained jutting out for a few moments, before seamlessly blending into her middle again. She had to rub the spot as it ached. "Ah, this is a good prelude to what the next four months are going to be like." She chuckles faintly, in a good mood despite the faint ache from the foot.
"Oh wow." he cooed gently, "That's amazing. I'm so excited!"

"You’d better be," Toki giggled. “I can tell you now, Nara or not, those sorts of kicks will keep me up at night, and if Momma doesn’t sleep, neither does the Daddy."

“Isn’t that the truth.” It’s the same hostess from before, and she knocks lightly on the open door. “I didn’t mean to interrupt. I came to take your orders for your lunch time meals.” She smiles. “Our menu isn’t typical today, as we’ve had a small mix-up in our orders, so we’re serving dinner for lunch today. We’ve got steaks, potatoes, fish, salads, fruit platters—”

“I’d actually like a steak with some fruit, if it’s possible.” She smiles shyly back, folding her fingers over her middle.

“I’ll see to it.” The hostess nods cheerily.

"A steak sounds delicious, medium-well with a salad please." Tenebris requested, nursing his bottle of tea slowly.

"I'll have one too, please. Medium-well with a baked potato.” Papyrus spoke up next.

“I can do those as well.” She nodded, scribbling it onto a note pad. “What dressing would you like on your salad? And as for your potato, would you like that loaded, or just with butter? Ah- Miss Nara, how did you want your steak?”

Toki ground her teeth a little bit, and contemplated for a moment just what level of ‘done’ she wanted it. Her instinctual response was like theirs- medium well, with very little pink in it. But… something was nagging inside of her for something a little less done. “Um…” She flushes faintly and glances away. “Rare, please?” Well-done steaks had a different flavor than ones that were still a little bit… raw. And whatever was in her little one’s genetics had her suddenly craving something a little bit bloody.

“Rare it is.” She nods cheerfully.

"And here I was worried about letting my primal take over, meanwhile you go and order a steak that'll bleed. I’m a bit envious.”

“Sorry.” Toki tucks her chin, and glances down to her lap.

“Sorry.” Toki tucks her chin, and glances down to her lap.

“There’s no need to be self conscious, Miss Nara. Anyways, I can have yours changed to something more raw, sir.” The hostess nods. “Rare, or perhaps blue? I still need your side of dressing- and if the other sir would like his potato to be loaded, or not.”

"Blue sounds perfect, thank you.” He nodded once, before he smiled to Toki. "I mean nothing by my words, Toki." he assured her.

"What comes in a 'loaded' potato?” Aliquam asked.

“I know you didn’t. It’s stupid of me to feel self conscious about it, but…” She shrugs helplessly, not looking up at him. “Can’t really stop it. Pap deals with it enough as it is.”

Politely, the hostess doesn’t comment to Toki’s words. Instead, she nods to Tenebris, and then turns to Aliquam. “Blue it is. A loaded baked potato is a baked potato that has been stuffed with a mix of chives and bacon, topped in sour cream and sprinkled in various spices, before being doused in shredded cheddar cheese. Does that sound like you would like it.”
"I suppose I can try it." Aliquam replied to the hostess, before pressing a soft kiss to Toki’s head in an effort to comfort her.

Toki ends up leaning into Pap’s shoulder, and sighing softly as she nestles close. “I’m alright, Ali. Just mood stuff again. You know how it goes.” Mood swings were not something that could really be controlled. “Totally go for the loaded potato though. They’re usually really, really good.”

“A loaded baked potato it is.” She scribbles it down too. “Alright- I think that’s everything. Remember, there’s a button if you need any of us at any given moment.”

“We’ll press it if we need something.” Toki nods quietly.

“Good! I’ll take this to the chef then. Your lunch will be served in a couple of hours.” With that said, the hostess gave them a wave, and departed to go take more orders.

"Sounds good." he rumbled softly, before he enjoyed his tea, sighing as he leaned back and scratched his head gently. "Well. At least that was easy enough." he rumbled gently.

"I suppose so." Aliquam agreed, nuzzling Toki again regardless of her reassurance.

She didn’t fight his nuzzles- she only shifted so she could lift the armrest that kept the seats apart, and then shifted so she could lean on him. She craned for half a moment, and then managed to unlace her shoes enough for her to discard them. Aching feet were tucked up onto the seat with her, and she sighed softly. “It was actually very easy, and very high quality too. Most of the airlines I’ve flown on used frozen meals to feed everyone, and those were hit or miss as to if they were edible, or tasted gross.”

Toki leans into Aliquam, and rubs the arch of one of her feet with one hand as she quietly groans. Ugh. Pregnancy aches were the literal worst. She peered across the way to Tenebris, and hummed softly. “Is the tea helping you keep calm…?”

"It's helping." Tenebris agreed gently.

Aliquam looped his arm around her, resting his palm on her stomach and gently rubbing and massaging as he began humming softly to soothe both Toki and the twin souls inside of her belly.

Toki relaxed against him with his touch, a soft sigh escaping her as she practically melted. Tension she didn’t even know she had began to loosen, and the twins settled pleasantly. Her sockets drifted closed, and, unbidden, a very soft and faint pleased buzzing escaped her. “I’m glad the tea helped…” She murmured softly. “If it gets too cold for both of you, lemme know and I can heat it again.”

"Thank you, Toki." Tenebris hummed.

Aliquam continued his affections contently, nestling her as close as the seat belts would allow. ”My darling mate,” He practically purred, “I love you so much~”

“I love you too, Pap.” She smiled softly up at him, and relaxed into his careful touch and love. “I love you a whole lot.” She murmurs softly. Toki shifted and glanced over to Tenebris again. “I brought a book along, by the way, that teaches some Basic English if you want to read it. It might keep your mind busy, Tenebris.”

"I suppose it's worth a try. I might need it." he commented, before he moved to unbuckle and get up, since the plane was a little more stable right now, "Where will I find it?" he inquired as he padded over to their side of the room.
Toki grinned just faintly, rolling slightly so she could better nestle against her boyfriend. “It might not do you much good, given you have only hours to learn, not months- but it’s a start. It’s in my bag-second pocket, should be three books in. Possibly four books in- I don’t remember the exact order. If you have questions, you’re welcome to ask. I’m fairly fluent.” Her grandparents on her Dad’s side didn’t speak Japanese- so she’d had to learn English to communicate with them.

He noted that and rummaged in her pack until he found it. Once located, he put her pack back into shape and re-secured it once more. "Well you know I used to only speak in Wingdings when I was a pup. I grew up learning monster tongue and I had to learn your bloody language so I think I'll be fine.” he reached over and tapped her head affectionately with the book before going to sit down again.

Toki snorted at the tap, and laughed heartily. “English is by far harder than Japanese to learn, Tenebris. English has spoken and unspoken rules- and the sentences can make absolutely no sense.” She shifts, and peers up at Aliquam. A mischievous smile tilts her teeth upwards. “Two skeletons and a lich on a plane sounds like a wonderful start to a bad joke.” She says in English.

Aliquam blinked once, unsure of what she said.

"We will see." Tenebris chuffed, unaware of what he was just called.

Toki grinned, amusement twinkling in her eye lights. “Heh. Hey, Papyrus. I love you. That means ‘I love you’ in English.” She switched fluently between the two tongues, casually teaching him one of the first things she’d ever learned to say in her second tongue.

"Mmm... Can you teach me how to say it?” he asked.

“I can.” She smiled. “Alright. Try to pronounce it like do. This one is pretty easy. I.”

“I.”

“Love.” She smiled.

“Love.”

“You.”

“You.” he then smiled and pressed a kiss to her head, nuzzling her as well. "I love you.” Papyrus’ palm rubbed smoothly over her middle, cradling the swell of his children.

Toki beams. “I love you.” She parrots back warmly, laughing as the twins shift in her middle and relax against the large expanse of his hand. Toki had noticed that they liked to settle against his hand when he held her like so. “You’ve got pretty good pronunciation for a non-native speaker.”

"I am a fast learner, you know.” he purred.

“That you are.” She purred back. Toki gets herself a bit more comfortable, and then rests her book on her chest so she can thumb through it. “Learning English would probably be good. It’s a pretty commonly used language in the world.”

"I suppose so. Alright, I'll let father read the book, while I stay focused on cuddling you~” he chuckled, his arms cradling her closer to him as he smiled down at her.

“Neither me or the twins are certainly going to complain about cuddles from you. Too bad they don’t make buckle in beds on planes.” She chuckles, “Or we could just relax that way. At least the arm rests move though.” To which end she shifts and loosens her seat belt more, so she can turn fully sideways. Her legs drape over the opposite leg rest, and she thumbs open her book. “You can read with me if you want? I’ll thumb through at your pace, if you’d like.” She was a fast reader on the norm.

He giggled softly and nuzzled the top of her skull. "True. Oh well, I still have you in my arms, so all is right in the world." he purred, "But alright, it'll be easier if I have someone to help me."

“If it would be easier, I wouldn’t mind reading it out loud for you.”

"That'll work too,"

She nods and smiles, and thumbs back to the start of the book. She hadn’t been that far into it yet anyways. Toki clears her throat, and begins to read.
They had gotten the day of their arrival to relax in their hotel, before they were flung headlong into meetings. There were several regular humans at the meeting, and a few HTM’s as well, which was fairly surprising.

The table was fairly quiet, most of them simply taking notes as Toki talked. A few spoke up now and again- though there was one that was just as dense as a tree. A couple curious eyes looked to her ‘guards’ at her back, in chairs of their own as they observed and let her handle things. Everyone had brought guards- She wasn’t the only target from HAM apparently. But most others brought humans to keep them safe.

“Linda,” Toki groaned quietly, her accent bleeding over a little bit in her frustration with the dense woman. “Please, stop. Okay. Listen. Some monsters are bigger than other monsters. The king himself is like… Nearly ten feet tall, I think. You can’t just build all the houses to cater to the smaller monsters- it’s easier to build bigger so the taller ones can visit their shorter friends, and then make it accessible to both types of monsters from there.”

Linda sighed. “But it’s easier to keep them in houses that are smaller- we can fit more monsters into one area when housing is kept smaller.”

Dear gods, this woman. She was going to beat her senseless with the uncomfortable chair she was seated in soon, if she didn’t get what Toki was trying to say. “You can’t just make monster settlements like you do the cheap cookie-cutter houses that you’re used to. It takes more effort than that- and it is an effort well worth it, if you want more monsters to move to your country and find work there, or begin to work with the hospitals to teach how they heal.”

“But-”

“Linda,” One of the elder men there admonished the younger blond woman, “Please. Miss Nara makes a good point. We wouldn’t make those sorts of houses for us to live in, would we? No. Besides- she has blueprints and sketches of the sorts of houses we need, so it’s not as if we need to come up with the designs on our own. You are willing to share them, correct?”

“I am.” Toki nods. She shifts and digs through her purse, procuring the file that had the vast majority of the designs in mind. It’s slid across the table, and she sighs softly. “I have the originals at home. These are all copies- and you are welcome to make copies of them to take them back to your home countries. Speaking of- when you get your complexes up, and if monsters decide to move there, you might have to hire tutors for them. All of the monsters know my mother tongue by heart- but they will need to be taught how to speak, read, and write in the various tongues of the world in order to properly survive and thrive in it. There are monsters who know other tongues- I know one who speaks and sings quite fluently in Russian- but I am fairly certain that knowledge of a lot of the languages of the world have probably been lost in the time that they’ve been locked underground.”

“We’ll make sure to prepare such things for when they come.” The elder man nods. “Thank you, Miss Nara. I think that’s all we need for today. Now... Before we part- I need to ask. I’ve heard that you have had to deal with several attacks from this ‘Humans Against Monsters’ group. We’ve all had threats, but... you’ve had actual attacks. Why do you think that is?”

She couldn’t outright say that she was a Boss Heart, and that the Anti-heart for her soul color was leading HAM. So, Toki nodded softly. “I think it has to do with the fact that I took in so many monsters. As you are well aware, Nara Village has a population that is beginning to number well into a thousand monsters. That is a large number of monsters densely packed in one area- and HAM seeks to destroy all monsters. Ah- that is something else you will need. Guards, around the monster cities. A lot of monsters are trained to guard- but there are more civilians than there are guards. You too will become a target for HAM once you start constructing the living sectors and getting jobs for them, so you’ll all need to be vigilant.”

“Is that why you’ve brought such... large guards?”

“I wouldn’t have come with guards, but they insisted. Beyond that-”

“Is it true that you’re pregnant with a monster’s child?”

“I am.” She nods. She points over her shoulder to Papyrus. “He’s the father. As I was saying- the father of my children is very protective, so he came along with me regardless of what I said. Likewise, the grandfather,” she sees them look to Tenebris, “is also protective, so he too came along.”

At being gestured to, Papyrus glanced up and gave a small wave. Tenebris merely twitched his tail before he lightly thumped a foot and snorted, "Let us not forget how many times I’ve hit my forehead.” he growled quietly.

Toki caught that mutter and knew this was exactly why she was insisting her point as it was.

The elder man nodded, and eased up out of his chair with the files in hand. “That I can understand... Okay, we’ll call this meeting for today. I’ll have copies of these made and translated for everyone, and we’ll meet here tomorrow for further discussion. Why don’t you go enjoy the city, Miss Nara? Go see the zoo, or go to the mall, maybe, and see all the sights that Portland has to offer. You’ll find that you and yours should be fairly safe here.”

Linda sighed. “I guess I’ll just wait for tomorrow to get the rest of my questions cleared up then.”

“Thank you, Geoff.” Toki smiles at the elder man warmly, and tries not to cringe at Linda’s words. Joy. Just... Joy. “My companions and myself will probably go to the zoo. They don’t have one in Ebott city, and the nearest one is a long drive away. . Do you know if they will allow HTM's and monsters inside?” Not all places were monster friendly, and she wasn't sure a zoo would be.

“They do.” He nods. Everyone else stands, and looks ready to take their leave. “Enjoy your stay, Miss Nara.”

“We will.” She nods again. She doesn’t stand, and simply waits for the room to clear before leaning back and scrubbing her face. Ugh.

As the meeting was adjourned, Tenebris had taken a small yellow treat off an offered tray that had been supplied for the meeting and took a small bite to sate his hunger until they ate later.
Only to immediately regret it.

He made a face then picked up a napkin and pressed his tongue against it, depositing the half-chewed up biscuit onto it. "What the hell is this?" he growled as he sought something to get the taste from his mouth.

Toki snickered softly and leaned back. “One of Linda’s lemon bars. She’s brought them to every meeting we’ve ever had. It’s a running joke that everyone new to the meetings has to learn for themselves what they taste like.” Falling back into her native tongue to converse with her family felt nice.

Toki eased herself out of the chair, and rubbed her backside with a groan. “Ugh. Alright- let’s head outside and try to find the rental.” They had a rental car sized for monsters- and that’s the one they’d ended up taking. It was black- and to Toki’s eyes, it blended in with the cars around it. They’d had a hell of a time finding it in the hotel parking lot that morning. “Want to go to the zoo?” She hums softly. “Beats going back to the hotel.”

"It tastes like dirt. Not even the good kind of dirt." he grumbled before he wrapped up the bar and dropped it in the wastebasket. "No offence but... Egh." One didn’t need to know Japanese to know that Tenebris clearly didn’t like the taste.

It was a good thing that they were the only ones still in here then.

Toki snorted and stooped to try and gather her purse. Bending down wasn’t quite an easy task, after all. “Linda’s bars are gross. Dirt is a polite way to put it. Alright. So- zoo? Pap and I have been wanting to go there and see what the animal’s souls look like.”

"Of course." Tenebris rumbled gently.

“Sounds good to me!” Aliquam nodded. He helped her get her purse, and then looped arms with her contently.

Toki laughed gently, and let him lead her from the building down to the parking garage. Locating the SUV was just as hard as she’d suspected it would be, but soon they found themselves standing before it while they waited on Papyrus to dig out the keys.

Tenebris was looking at the vehicle that they stood before, looking interested as they waited for the doors to unlock. "It is interesting. How did they know to prepare for our size?"

“I told them I would be taking monsters and to plan for us needing a monster car for a rental.” Toki chirped cheerfully.

"Huh... I wonder if they knew you were serious on the 'monster' bit. It seems they were." Tenebris rumbled in amusement.

Toki chuckled. “I informed them that I would be taking literal monsters, Tenebris. They sort of figured, given my reputation. Anyways- do you want the front seat or the back seat?”

"How's the leg room?" he asked.

“Well, the back was pretty roomy when I rode back there on the way here.” She hums. “I’m thinking you might have more room for your tail in the back though, provided the front seat slides forwards enough.” Once Papyrus has the doors unlocked, Toki eases her way forwards and checks to see how far they slide forwards. They go very nearly to the dash. “Huh... They go a long ways forwards. It’s up to you though. What is going to be most comfortable for you and your tail?” Her and her bump could fit pretty much anywhere in a car like this.

"I'll take the back seat, Papyrus will drive," he rumbled.

“And I’ll operate navigator.” She chuckles. She eases the seat back just a bit, because her legs are not going to be a part of the dash no matter how much she cares for Tenebris, and then slips into the front. Toki digs for her phone while the other two get themselves situated, and then carefully gets the address for the zoo. “Alright. I’ve got the address- looks like the quickest path is a little detour from here. Neat! It’ll take us through some fir trees. You guys got to see some while we were flying in, but Douglas fir trees grow huge!”

"Fascinating." Tenebris hummed, easily able to get comfy once the window was down so he could look out.

“I know what your favorite word is, Tenebris. It’s truly fascinating, I tell you.” She teased. Toki had to lean the seat itself back just a bit- she hardly had the shape for Tenebris’ usual posture- and then got comfortable herself. “Alright- I’m going to hit play, and it’ll guide you from here to the zoo. Sound alright, Pap?” She sets her phone where he can see the display while safely driving, and hits the play button so it could direct him.

"Sounds good." He nodded softly. Papyrus started up the car, and got them out of the parking garage.

Toki grimaced as they hit a speed bump, the car bouncing harshly. “I am certainly missing your Mustang about now. This is not nearly as comfortable a ride when it comes to bumps.” She adjusts herself and her seatbelt, and then sighs softly.

“Turn right in three quarters of a mile.” Her phone intones when they’re out onto the road.

Nodding once in agreement, Papyrus turned the car and stopped at a red light, before hearing yelling and calls. He peered over and blinked once, seeing some young boys calling at the car from Toki’s side.

Toki tilted her head curiously, and rolled the window down slightly to see just what exactly the boys wanted.

"Is that an actual skeleton driving the car?" one of the boys asked.

She blinked, and nodded. “And an actual skeleton riding passenger, yes. Pretty cool, isn’t it?” She gives them a sharp-toothed grin. By far, she is probably the scariest looking of the two, even if Papyrus dwarfs her.

"Yeah!" A younger kid piped up, before looking at Tenebris through the back window. His eyes widened. "Whoa...! That guy is huge!"

“He is.” She nods, lightly eying the red light. “A lot of monsters are very large. Some of them are small, but the vast majority of them are giants. It’s pretty nifty!”

Tenebris chuckled at that. He was large, he knew, large and powerful. The big monster managed a glance down to the boys before the light turned green.

They looked highly interested.

Aliquam chuckled softly and took off.
Toki giggled faintly, and relaxed for the majority of the trip.

The road brought them to a heavily wooded part of the city, and she rolled down her window to enjoy the trees as they cruised down the road. “Douglas fir trees grow so big- it’s awesome.” Some of the trees were towering monoliths that soared a hundred and some feet high, if not more.

"Fascinating." Tenebris murmured as he looked out.

“Everything is fascinating to you.” She giggled softly. Toki enjoyed the fresh smell of pine.

Up until the fresh smell wasn’t fresh anymore. A musky odor blew into the car, rancid and fetid smelling, and she coughed and covered her nasal cavity with her turtleneck sleeve. “Oh yuck, I didn’t think someone would hit a skunk this close to the big city.”

Tenebris was enjoying the smell of the pines, but as the overwhelming smell of death hit him, he gagged loudly and winced. “Holy Stars, why does it smell like that?”

The loud gag startled her, and she lurched forward in her seat just in case anything would come up from him. “Holy shit- Tenebris, are you alright?” The smell of skunk was fresh- and they ended up rolling right past the rank freshly dead corpse as they went down the road. “Skunk isn’t pleasant- don’t you remember the story I told you like, months ago?”

“I didn’t think it would be- be this bad.” He retched, dry and hard, and felt saliva blooming in the back of his throat as every inhale assaulted his sensitive senses with the musk and stench of skunk. "Gonna be sick... Gonna be sick..." Tenebris rasped from behind them.

“Shit- Pap, get to the shoulder of the road please.” Toki fiddled with her seat belt. It must have been the skunk- that would be the first time that either of them had smelled it, and apparently Papyrus had better constitution against smells than his father did.

He nodded and pulled to the side, and Tenebris climbed out of the car and retreated to some nearby foliage.

“I’ll make sure he’s okay.” And since the smell of skunk was lingering in the area, Toki also had some scented stuff in her purse that he could press to… wherever his nose was. She hobbled out after him, and then made her way to where his back was visible, while she rummaged around in her purse for a scented napkin that she had. She too had scent triggers, even as far into her pregnancy as she is, and sometimes they helped.

“Tenebris? You alright?”

He coughed and growled softly from where he was standing, spitting and clearing his mouth of sour tasting saliva. "F-Fuck..."

Toki approached, and gently rested her hand on his back. She pulsed out warmth, and then began to rub soothing circles across the broad and taut muscles below her finger bones. “That’s your first time smelling skunk, I know. If you feel sick, it’s best just to let it out than to suffer lingering nausea.”

"Eugh..." The noise he made was retched, and the black ooze that fell from his mouth was even more so.

Toki had to look away, lest she join him. But she didn’t stop her rubbing, until the muscles under her finger bones stopped it’s rhythmic heaving, and he stopped making ghastly noises.

“Ugh.” He spit to clear his mouth again, and then stepped forcibly away from the pile of black sludge. Tenebris took a breath, straightened his back, and turned on his heel to stride for the car once his mouth had been wiped clean.

Toki rolled her eyes lightly at his attempted composure, and fished out a scented napkin. It’s pressed into his hand as she follows him back. “Here. Skunk stink lingers, and some of it is on the wheel of the car.” She’d seen little bits of gore stuck in the tread from where it had been splattered on the road. “This might help cover… well, however it is you smell without a nose.”

He takes it and presses it over his mouth. "Mmh... Thank you..." he murmured through it as he walked with her.

She smiled slightly. “It’s no problem, Tenebris. Pregnancy makes you carry nice smelling things around from time to time, in case you come across a trigger. Alright- into the car, and lets go. The stench is starting to bother even me now, and I was pretty desensitized to it after the skunk incident when I was younger.”

Toki eases into her seat, and rolls down her window further to air out the car, and then shoot a quick look over to Aliquam. “Are you doing alright, Pap?”

"I'm alright, yes..." he replied.

“Good.” She settles down and sighs. “We’ll take a different way back to the hotel.” She mutters.

"Thank you." he murmured once back in his seat.

“Not a problem. Stuff happens- and if we can avoid the skunk smell, we will.” Toki hummed softly in response, and waited for Papyrus to get back onto the road.

Once sure Tenebris wouldn’t be spontaneously sick in the back of the car, Aliquam pulled out again.

The rest of the trip was fairly easy, and they arrived at the zoo rather quickly. Toki stared as they parked, and whistled slightly through her teeth. “That is a lot of up hill walking. My feet are going to be dead after this.” She sighs. “Oh well. At least it looks like a nice zoo.” Vaguely she could smell the large mixes of animal smells wafting out, and blamed that on her heightened senses from her pregnancy. She could smell a lot of big cats, mostly, meaning they were probably close to the entrance.

Tenebris leaned his head back and his mouth fell open, taking in the air before he rumbled quietly. “Hmm.”

“I smell big cats.” Toki chirps softly. She hauls herself out of the car once they’re parked, and groans softly. “Oh yes. Definitely missing the Mercedes. My tailbone is so sore from the speed bumps. All right! You two ready to peer at some animal souls from afar?” Gods above, that sounded really weird- but she didn’t particularly care.

Tenebris nodded with a smile, as his taller son gave a bright laugh and hauled himself out of the car. “I can’t wait!”

“Me either! Though you may have to haul me up some of those hills.” The parking lot was even a hill. Hell, the area around her compound was fairly flat, until Mount Ebott. Toki wasn’t used to hills.
Still, she squared her shoulders, and began the waddle for the front gate, slinging her purse over her shoulder as she went.

"That will be easy enough." Aliquam giggled gently, following her with Tenebris in tow.

They would catch up to her before long, and it would be the three of them approaching the gate.

To his credit, the teen behind the counter only looked a little bit startled to see three monsters approach. “Uh… Hi. Three passes in?”

“Yes.” Toki nods. “How much?” She rummages around in her purse for the cash she’d had changed over to American currency.

“That depends on your ages.” He shuffles awkwardly. “Ages twelve through sixty-four is fifteen dollars. Sixty-five and up is twelve dollars.”

Toki nods, and glances back to them. “So… ticket’s for ages twelve through sixty-four are fifteen dollars. Sixty-five and up is twelve dollars” She says to them in her native tongue, watching as the boy’s eyes practically bug out of his head. “Think you count for the senior discount, Tenebris?”

"I am over seven hundred years old." he commented, "So... Perhaps."

Toki chuckled softly. “You are quite up there. Think they do a super-senior discount?” She teases with a wiggle of her brows. “You fall into the same category as I do, Ali.”

"I suppose I do." he replied, and arched a brow thoughtfully. "Though... That's only if I compare my age to a human equivalent. I’ve been alive much longer than that."

“Really? You’ve never told me how old you actually are. You’ve told me the equivalent- and that I am apparently a cougar.” She blinks at him thoughtfully, and then chuckled slightly. She turned her attentions briefly back to the boy. “Two adult passes and one seniors pass, please.”

The boy swallowed and nodded. He fished out the tickets, and took her cash. “Alright. Fifteen and fifteen are thirty, plus twelve is forty-two. Out of- fifty is eight dollars change. Here you go, Ma’am.”

“Thank you.” Toki took the tickets and her change, and handed the men their respective tickets, and took a moment to tuck her change into her wallet, and her wallet into her purse. That done, she had them follow her to the ticket clock in spot, and then from there, into the zoo proper.

They put them somewhere safe, then followed Toki.

"Well, though I am still in my twenties when compared to the age of a human's... I'm actually almost two hundred years old." he commented, "I'm a hundred and seventy five to be exact."

Toki very nearly dropped her purse, fumbling as the strap slid off her shoulder. She managed to keep it in place as she jerked her chin to him in shock. Her sockets clicked open and closed a couple of times, blinking slowly for a moment, before her laughter bubbled forth. “Holy shit. I’m more like jail bait to you then.” She chortled in amusement. “Oh well. At least I can say I’m with the best looking hundred and seventy five year old that I’ve ever seen.”

He sighed, and then chuckled gently. Papyrus leaned over to kiss one of her horns affectionately. "Nyeh heh heh heh, let's grab a map and get started, okay?"

“Okay!” She grinned cheerfully at him, giggles still escaping her. She spotted one of the spots for maps, and made for it. She snagged one, and then wiggled it at the boys. “Alright- who wants to be the official map holder for today’s adventure?"

"May as well be me." Aliquam replied, holding his hand out for the map.

Toki passed the map over easily and hiked her purse up over her shoulder for ease of comfort.
“Alright- well, lets look at the mountain goats while we’re here.” They had the first enclosure right off from the front gate, just a little bit away from the gift shop. “We totally need to stop in the gift shop later. We can get a souvenir for Sans.”

"I wonder what they have that he’ll like.” Quinn hummed to himself as they went in, Tenebris perked at hearing the goats in the pen and he looked past the glass.

Toki eased over to the enclosure as well, and peered into the glass. There were a lot of females, but it would appear that there was only one male in the herd. The beard reminded her a lot of the King, as did the horns. “I don’t really know what he’d like. I suppose we’ll see.” She shifts, and then sidles up near Tenebris.

She elbows him gently in the ribs, and wiggles her brows up at him as the ram comes near the glass to investigate him. “I think you’re a bit of a goat magnet, Tenny. All the goats go baaaalistic for you, don’t they?”

He flushed slightly and gave a scoff as he folded his arms. "Excuse you, Toki." he huffed.

Toki couldn’t help the giggle that escaped. “Gods above, you are adorable when you get flustered.” It was a rare thing that Tenebris got flustered like so, and she had to enjoy flustering him when she could.

The ram made a noise through the glass, before ducking his chin and marking his beard. It brought over a few of the lady goats that sniffed at his beard and bits before flouncing off. The ram hesitated, made a noise at Tenebris, and then went bouncing off after his ladies.

Toki snickered, and glanced away with heavy amusement. “Goats are a riot.”

He grumbled and turned away, letting the blush on his cheeks slowly ease.

Papyrus giggled lightly and looked at his father, before looking to Toki. "Where would you like to go next?"

“Well, lets take a look at the map.” She pads closer, and peers at the map in his hand. She was the only one fluent in English after all, though the map itself was fairly easy to follow with all of the symbols it had on it. “Well, it looks like there is one path to follow, but it splits off into another one. Do we want to check out the Great Northwest section? It looks like the little path will bring us right back down from Black Bear Ridge and the Eagle Canyons down to the Pacific Shores, and we can go from there.”

Aliquam nodded in agreement, while Tenebris looked over the map, soon nodding as well.

Toki beamed cheerfully. “Alright- looks like a decent jaunt. The path is this way. C’mon, my love. Walk with me?” She offers her hand to Papyrus, and smiles up to him. She would do her best not to make Tenebris feel like a third wheel- but affection was to be had at some point.

Tenebris had no problem with them having their fun; he himself was more interested in the animals.

Toki pauses as they’re half way up the trail, and then pouts. “Shoot. I didn’t really take the chance to look and see what mountain goat souls look like. Oh well. We need to hang a left here, and we should be able to see some black bears.” Seeing souls wasn’t easy for her. She could feel them and pull them out just fine, but seeing them inside the body was hard. She’d barely managed with the bees.

The two followed her as she led them through the zoo, looking around curiously, one with awe, the other in fascination.

They were surprisingly quiet, the two monsters accompanying her, but Toki didn’t mind. There was something tranquil about the zoo, with its towering trees and sounds of life. Toki didn’t even mind the people that gaped curiously at the trio of monsters as they walked.

The bear exhibit didn’t pan out, sadly. They were all asleep in their caves, so all they could really see were large, fuzzy black butts sticking out of the dens. The bobcats were similar, hidden by foliage as they napped the day away. So that left them making the hike up towards the Eagle Canyons.

And a hike it was, up a mountainside. Toki’s legs were killing her by the time they reached the next fork in the road. “Agh. All right. So, the left path looks like it leads up to the… Well, where the eagles and salmon are. Right path takes us down to something called the Cascade Stream. The stream leads back down to the rest of the zoo.” The left path was up even higher than where they already were.

"I'm curious about the large cat enclosures." Tenebris piped up.

“The majority of the big cats are on the other end of the zoo,” She hummed, pointing down to the Africa section. “But it looks like they have cougars up here too. They’re down the… Right path, it looks like. They’re just after the Cascade Stream, and before Trillium Creek Family Farms. I think that’s a petting zoo?”

"Oh." he rumbled gently.

"Ooh, a petting zoo?" Aliquam piped up with an excited sound.

“Mhm. Lets head to the right then- we’ll make our way down to the big cats, and stop by the petting zoo.” Toki flashed them both smiles, and waddled onwards. The pathway began to slope downwards, so she shifted her weight on her feet so she wouldn’t fall. Down the path quite a long ways, Toki could see covered buildings, which must have been the Cascade Stream habitat.

They both were excited to various degrees, but Aliquam kept a firm grip on her as they headed down the hill, so his mate didn’t even risk falling.

Toki didn’t mind him making sure she didn’t fall- normally it wouldn’t bother her to risk slipping, but it wasn’t just her anymore, and soullings were fairly fragile.

The opening to the Cascade Stream was fairly large, with double doors, though the doors were suited to human heights. Toki’s horns just barely skidded the edge as they passed through. Inside were all types of exhibits, from beavers to foxes, otters, ducks, and all sorts of things.

Funny enough, Tenebris and Aliquam both had to duck to go inside.

Toki grinned, and padded over to peer at the foxes. One of them peered up at her, made a noise, and then bounced off to play with one of the other ones. “Heh. These look like Todd.”

Seeing the foxes, Tenebris rumbled gently in laughter, "That's adorable." he chortled softly.

Toki lights up with a grin, and her magic fluctuated excitedly with her sudden thought. “We have to get a stuffed toy fox for Rosie and Felix.” One of the foxes yips, and she takes a moment to peer at it’s soul since they’re quite active. She struggles for a moment, but manages to make out a faint circular shape. “Huh… Fox souls look like circles. Or circular, at least.”

"How interesting." Aliquam hummed gently. “And of course! We’ll make sure to get them a toy to match their father.”

Toki nods, and moves over to take a look at the beavers. They too have circular souls, and she hums thoughtfully. Maybe circular souls were an animal thing? “Beavers are pretty cool. They kind of smell though.” Very musky they were. It wasn’t unpleasant, but it wasn’t something she’d enjoy smelling every day.

Tenebris rumbled in agreement, the spot where his nose would be if he had one wrinkling upwards slightly. "I can smell them faintly.”

“It’s not a bad smell, just… strong, I guess.” Toki chuckles softly, and steps back. She wanders over to one of the ponds, and blinks. “Whoa, guys come check this out. This thing is apparently a Sturgeon. It’s bigger than you, Tenebris.” The fish was probably close to nine or ten feet long, and was swimming lazy circles in the water that the ducks were swimming on.

He blinked once and looked at the massive fish, his tail rattling as it wagged back and forth. "How fascinating." he purred gently. "Its length can match his majesty's height." he chuckled.

Toki let out a un-lady like snort, and guffawed. Its length could match the King’s. Length. Shit, no one was too old for dick jokes. She kept her thoughts on that particular part of his words silent, and didn’t end up explaining why she was laughing so hard. “T-that’s very t-true.” She giggled.

He shot her a look, "I meant his height, not his anatomy, Nara.” he huffed. "So inappropriate.” he snorted, though he was rumbling gently with a laugh as well.

“One is never t-too old for d-dick jokes, Tenny.” She chuckled. Toki shook her head through, and strove to banish her giggles. She took a deep calming breath, and exhaled in a soft grunt as one of her ribs was jabbed. Apparently the twins thought she wasn’t hilarious either. Amusement lit her eye lights.

He shook his head and sighed with a soft laugh. "Very funny." he rumbled gently.

“The twins don’t think I’m funny either,” she chuckles. Her free hand folds over her middle, and she shifts, and pads a little further away. The pens themselves are pretty big, but there are only so many pens to go around. Toki perks, and coos as she reaches the otters. “Awww, they’re so cute! River Otters are simply precious.”

One of the otters came up to the glass and squeaked curiously as Aliquam knelt down, looking at their souls. They too were circular, but moved more fluently, as if more like the very water that they swam in.

Toki smiled and made an attempt to mimic the noise back at them. It wasn’t as hard as she thought- she no longer had actual vocal chords. It made her wonder if she would be able to mimic other things. So, she chirped back to the otters, squeaking at them cheerily.

The otter flipped excitedly in the water, squealing and squeaking happily.

Toki laughed happily. “I have no idea what I just said to the otter, but I think I just made its day.”

Aliquam was laughing quietly at her and the otter.
Tenebris just shook his head, rumbling quietly behind her in his usual subtle laughter.

Toki snickered again, and grinned. “Otters are adorable. Alright- you both ready to go look at the cougars, before we head down to look at the other animals?”

The eldest of them nodded. "Yes, of course."

"Let's go!" Aliquam held his hand out to her, smiling happily.

She reclaimed his hand, and guided him for the exit doors to the enclosure. “So, did you notice the souls? They’re all round in animals, it seems.”

"It is interesting." He agreed.

“I guess it makes sense. All monster souls are upside down hearts, all human souls are right side up hearts, animals have circles, and insects have water drop shaped souls. Huh. More you know, I guess.” She leans into his shoulder contently, and continues to ease her way down the surprisingly steep drop down to the rest of the zoo. “Oregon seems to be a lot of hills. I thought Ebott was steep in some places, but I think this takes the cake.”

"You'll have to tell that to me again later when I have something to write that down on." Tenebris commented over his shoulder as he walked.

“Oh yeah- you do sciency stuff. I bet this is something you’ll want to note for your experiments and whatnot.” Toki nods. “I’ll remind you when we get back to the hotel. Ah- we should have checked the fish’s soul. Maybe mammals have different souls than aquatic creatures do. Either way, we can test that theory later. Ebott does, in fact, have an aquarium.”

"Perhaps we will look into it upon returning home." he rumbled gently, looking to find the cat exhibit.

“If we’re not dead tired,” she chuckles, “We can plan a trip to the city with all of us for a day at the aquarium. Ah- Cougars. Oh look!” One of them was out sunning itself on one of the sun rocks outside of the dens, all tan and beige and powerful looking. Toki peered at the large feline through the thick glass that surrounded the enclosure, and grinned broadly. “That is one very large cat.”

Tenebris looked at the cats and slowly lowered to his haunches in front of the glass railing. He reached out and set a palm flat against the glass.

The cougar glanced over, flicked an ear, and chuffed at the big monster.

Toki blinked curiously.

He chuffed back and tilted his head slightly.

The cougar chuffed again, ears perking at the noise. It- a large tom, which was made present as he stood up- rolled onto his feet and padded for the glass. Large yellow eyes peered up at him as the cat bumped against the glass.

“I think you made a friend.” Toki discretely tugged out her phone, and began to take pictures.

He tilted his head a little more and rattled quietly, leaning and resting his forehead against the glass.

The cougar chuffed, sniffed the glass- and proceeded to turn around and rub along it with his body. Toki giggled as she took pictures. “Goat charmer and cat whisperer. Who knew?”
Tenebris rumbled happily as he watched the cougar, before he turned to see Aliquam giggling next to his mate.

Toki grinned, and snapped a picture of the look on the old scientist’s face. “Looks like the big kitty likes you. Have you ever thought about adopting a couple of cats to keep you company?”

“I considered.” he replied honestly.

“You totally should.” She grins lightly. “Cats are good companion animals. I’d say a dog, but… you come off more as a cat person than a dog person.” The only one of the Gasters that came off as a dog person was Sans, really. Toki shifted, startling when the big cat proceeded to hiss at her and Aliquam, and stepped away from the glass. She chuckles softly. “I like cats- but not ones who could eat me for a snack.”

He chuckled quietly, ”Cats don’t really eat bones," he commented.

“No, but you forget that I was fleshy and meaty up until last year.” She chuckles. “Thirty two years of being human is hard to deny- and I can say that instincts still go ‘nope, that is a predator, you should back away’ even if my teeth are now almost as large as the cat’s fangs.”

The feline loses interest soon, and wanders back to his sun rock.

He chuckled and stood, walking back to her. "Uh huh." he shook his head lightly, "Well let's consider this for when we get home."

“Mhm! C’mon, we still have so much to see!” She wanted to get as far as she could before backaches or leg aches slowed her down.

The duo are easily dragged along by Toki, both too amused to argue.
Chapter 51

They came home from America being completely exhausted. The day after the trip to the zoo, they spent all day in the room with all of the other old guardians and government officials, creating plans and solidifying construction designs. They were there from nearly dawn, until dark, and then they turned in once everything was finalized.

Other countries were going to start opening up for Monsters to make homes there too- and they now had solid plans, and solid understandings, for what the monsters wanted and what they truly needed for good living situations. Tutors were going to be offered to those who wanted to move countries, and the governments were going to start working on communicating with Doctor Alphys to help humans better understand how to care for monsters and human turned monsters for when they got sick or ill.

Despite it being an absolutely exhausting venture- filled with lots of Linda’s nasty lemon bars that she insisted everyone eat- it ended on a good note, with a positive impact on the future for monsterkind. Toki went home feeling extremely content with it.

The flight back had been pretty easy, less turbulence on taking off, though they encountered it when they got back. They slept most of the flight- or at least Toki did. She dozed off while the both of them had been talking about something.

When they’d returned back to the compound, Han had informed them that they had a couple days to rest, but then it was time for fireworks.

He had gotten hold of some information about a spot where one could see the fireworks clearly, but hear absolutely nothing from them. Which meant- he could watch the fireworks for the first time in a great many years. He spent those couple of days that they had to ‘rest’ having Papyrus help him plan a barbeque of sorts for everyone that would be coming. He’d dragged the tall skeleton off to town in order to get supplies for a traditional American barbeque, and they’d apparently spent some off hours off doing whatever in town while getting things for those that were coming.

It wasn’t going to be a big group compared to what could have wanted to come- a hundred or so monsters out of a thousand and then some were wanting to come with for various reasons- but it was... enough to warrant a large space. Which, thankfully, the clearing certainly was large enough to house so many.

That’s where they were currently- it was the evening of the fireworks, which celebrated the beginning of summer starting the second week of June. The clearing was fairly large, and littered with blankets. It was on a steeply sloped hill, surrounded by dense trees on three sides. The cars were parked in rows at the bottom of the hill. It had a straight view over Ebott City where the fireworks proper would be set off, and really, there was no better location.

It was dusk out, well into evening, with the last of the sun’s rays coloring the sky a brilliant mixture of gold, blues, reds, and dark purples. Grillby had wrangled Sans into helping him cook- he was the designation grill master for the barbeque, and he couldn’t quite manage six grills on his own, so, naturally, he asked his intended to help.

Muffet had even come along- and she had a small pastry stand set up to the side. She was selling her goods- which Toki really didn’t mind. The frugal spider lady was nice, and muffin, despite being horribly, horribly scary at times, was actually remarkably sweet. Toki was quite fond of the spider cider too. The warm cider would be a good drink later on in the night.

Which was fine with Toki. She was sort of caught between Han and literally everyone else. They were up to something, she knew- that or Han as just overly clingy because Todd and his kids hadn’t been able to make it to the fireworks today on account of Todd needing to do some things up at the Castle. Han had hardly left her side- and either recruited her into singing for the kids while he played his handy-dandy violin, or got her playing hide and seek in the trees with Thumper, Twitch, and a good chunk of the children.

He kept her busy, and busy had passed the time quite quickly. Still, she only had so much energy, and found herself starting to grow very tired during the last bout of hide and seek. Once she’d been found, she called a tap out, and waddled for their chosen spot. It was near the top of the hill so that the shorter monsters would be able to see the fireworks more effectively. It was necessary; given how many tall monsters she had in her ‘party’ of sorts, if they had sat lower, anyone behind them would have been completely blind.

Toki eased herself down onto the blanket while Han continued to search for the monster kids- the majority of which were running circles around him, darting from hiding place to hiding place. She reclined back slightly, resting on her elbows as she tried to catch her metaphorical breath. There were only so many hiding places she could fit now, and only so fast she could move to reach them.

Toki was quite thoroughly winded- but she’d had fun. And she took the reprieve from Han for what it was, and enjoyed her short stint of solitude while everyone was too busy to notice that she was alone. While Han was with her most times, the times that she wasn’t, other monsters had drawn her over for socialization and catching up.

Though, she found herself joined by an exhausted Muffin moments later- the muffin shaped Great Dane sized spider coming to nestle into her leg like an over sized lap dog. Toki patted Muffin quietly, and laughed softly as Muffet gave a whistle.

The spider gave a canine like whine, and got to its feet again, before reluctantly bounding off to aid its mistress.

Once Muffin left, Toki quite enjoyed being alone on the blanket, even if the grass below her was hard and uncomfortable. She tilted her skull back to enjoy the color of the twilight sky, sighing softly in happiness.
However, Toki was not alone for long as none other than the father of her children approached her and her resting place.

"Toki, you don’t mind if I take this spot by you, do you?" he asked gently, offering her a warm grin.

Toki tilted her skull over to him with a smile and shook her head. She wiggled over a little bit to give him some space, and padded the blanket beside her. “I don’t mind at all. Please- I would love your company. I haven’t gotten to see much of you today since we got out of the car. We’ve both been kept pretty busy though. I’m just trying to catch my breath a bit.”

Papyrus eased down next to her, scooting close and then tugging her gently against him with one arm. "I'm glad!" He chirped. His chipper tone faded though, and he glanced to her, and then away, a bit of nerves making his bones tingle. “I... I wanted to talk to you about something very important.”

“You’re welcome to talk to me about anything, you know that.” She purred softly to him. She leaned faintly into him, enjoying the warmth of his arm over her shoulders. “What is it you want to discuss, my love? Or is this something you’d rather do in a more private location?”

If it was serious, there was no telling if he wanted it to be out in public or not. If all else failed, they could go down to his Mercedes and talk there.

He looked at her for a long moment, mulling something over in his head. Then he eased himself from hugging her, and moved in front of her, resting himself on one knee before her. "Toki... You know I love you... and our children both... right?"

She eased herself up so she was sitting upright instead of reclining, and nodded to his question. “I know you do, and I- we- love you too.” She smiles warmly. Toki wasn’t sure what that was all about, but she waited patiently for him to speak.

He smiled and reached out, taking her hand tenderly into his own. "And you know that I’d want to make sure that you were safe with me, no matter what..."

“Of course.” She nods, watching him with curious affection in her eye lights as she gently strokes his fingers with her own.

He looked at her, and then he reached up and rubbed his head. "Well... I... I want to make it official!" he told her boldly, before he turned and began to feel around his pockets. The hand holding hers soon joined the one searching his pockets when he seemed unable to find something. "O-Official... By asking you... T-Tokiko Nara!" He seemed to panic for a moment before he found what he was looking for. Papyrus reached into his breast pocket and pulled out a velvet box. "T-To marry me!" he told her, holding it out to her with both hands, his face tucked between his biceps, eyes shut tight with nerves.

She was stunned speechless for several seconds, and it took her a moment to realize that holy crap, he was serious. He had asked her to marry him. Toki certainly gaped, and it took her several long seconds to get her nonexistent brain functioning again.

When she could form words with her mind, Toki carefully lifted her hands. One took the box very carefully, while the other tilted his chin up so he would look at her. Hearts danced in her eyes, affection making her soul swell and her body tingle and buzz audibly as her sockets physically lit up in the brightest shade of liquid emerald. “Yes.” She said simply, voice clear and firm. She didn’t even have to stop and think about if it was the right time or not- it just was, and she knew it. “Yes! A thousand times over, yes, yes, yes!”
For the longest time, he was scared... Terrified that he had done it wrong. All he could do was hold his position and try his best not to tremble. But when she touched his chin, and she spoke her words, he felt a profound sense of relief flood him. Papyrus smiled happily and hugged her tightly, unable to do anything but laugh; laugh with happiness and utter relief.

Toki looped her arms around his neck and tugged, sending him sprawling across the blanket with her once more. She snuggled close and hugged him back, laughing gently with the ring box still nestled in her hand. “I love you,” she laughed softly. “I love you so, so much you silly skeleton.” Happy tears welled in her sockets, and she clung tighter to him all the same.

"I love you Toki... I love you..." he whispered into her as he held her, "I love you so goddamn much..."

“You are my world, Papyrus Aliquam Gaster.” She smiled warmly. “I will love you until the end of time.” Toki nuzzled into his neck, and laughed gently. “Let’s get the ring on though, before I drop the box.” Velvet didn’t like to be held by bones. “Will you do the honors...?”

He smiled and took the box from her once he leaned back. He opened it and carefully pulled out the ring before he took her hand, and slipped the ring onto her finger. "Toki," he whispered, giggling weakly.

“Papy,” She smiled at him warmly, eyes bright with the green hearts and tiny, happy glowing tears. The ring fit fairly well as her magic cushioned it and kept it in place, and she turned it gently with her finger. It was a simple, smooth band to mark their engagement. Toki’s eyes watered all over again, and she flung her arms about his neck and clung tightly to him as they sprawled out on the blanket.

There was a click of a camera, and an out of breath Han grinned at them with his phone in hand. “This is going on the Internet and the Undernet.” He grinned.

He held her tightly and peppered her with loving kisses as he rolled over, so that he was now the body pillow for her, his arms around her and not going to let go until she was content. He didn't even care that Han had got it on camera.

He knew Tenebris was hiding with a camera fixed on them anyways.

Toki was content to cling to him tightly, though she had to shift a bit so as not to squish the twins while lying against him. “By everything that is holy, I love you, you silly skeleton.” She hiccupped happily against his chest, and then leaned up to meet his peppering of kisses with a deeper, actual kiss. Her teeth clicked gently against his own, magic pulsing and teasing softly over his bones.

Han grinned and took one more photo of them snuggled together. “Welcome to the family, Pap. More officially than last time. Heh- We’re going to have to go out for a stag night.” He liked the British term better than he did the American term. “Get you truly wasted.”

Toki wiped her tears, content to cling to Papyrus while he held her. “H-heh. If you’re taking him out for a bachelor’s party, you’d better keep an eye on him, Han.”
“Two eyes, as often as I can spare them.” He grins cheekily. “Congratulations, you two.”

"Nyeh heh heh heh." Papyrus laughed gently as he stroked Toki's head, his form glowing with happiness as he held her. "No. No Parties..." he told Han. "I just want as much time with Toki as possible."

Han simply smiled and nodded. “That’s fine by me. Heh… We’ll have the rest of both of your lives to see you sloshed anyways. You’re going to have a lot of time with Toki.” He grins, and wiggles the phone as it buzzes and dings. “By the way- you’ve already got about thirty people wishing you congratulations on your engagement already.”

Toki flushed, and nuzzled close to Papyrus. “You didn’t.”

“I did.” He grinned. “Hacked your Facebook and everything. Heh- alright. I’ll leave you two lovebirds to your snuggling. You and your fiancé are adorable, Sis.”

He blinked once, and then he giggled and hugged Toki tighter, kissing her head more and more as he cradled her close to his chest.

Toki smiled and twisted the ring on her finger. It felt right- cool and metal, though her magic was warming it up for her. She smiled and leaned up to kiss Aliquam again, her sockets fluttering closed as Han stepped away to give them some time.

Darkness fell, food was served, and Toki and Papyrus got free cups of spider cider from Muffet as congratulations on their engagement. Everyone was soon settled down with food and drink, and the fireworks began.

They were faint, barely discernable to Toki’s range of hearing, but they didn’t seem to bother Han at all. He sat beside her and Aliquam on the blanket, watching the lights pop in the darkness.

Toki enjoyed the fireworks tremendously. The display was supposed to be a long one, nearly an hour long- and she looked forwards to it. Every sound of wonder from the children and adults alike made the uncomfortable ground worth sitting on. She even caught Grillby making sounds of wonder from where he sat with Cae cradled against his chest. They were all piled together on the blanket, warm and comfortable in close proximity.

Han leaned over and tapped Papyrus’ hand. “Pst… hey. Can I borrow your fiancé for a moment? I want to talk to her.”

"But I’m cuddling with her." Papyrus might have whined just a little bit as he snuggled her closer to himself. "Will it take long?" he finally inquired.

“Maybe five minutes tops.” He smiles. “You’ll have her back before long, I promise.”

“Think you can handle five minutes?” She tilts her head back to peer at Papyrus, and smiles warmly to both him and her brother. Her brother wouldn’t interrupt unless he thought it was something important that he needed to talk to her about.

"Nyeh." He huffed, but relented and nodded. He helped her get upright, and gave her the blanket that they had been sharing. He was going to be fine without it for five simple minutes anyways.
"Any longer and I'll come after you."

“Soldier’s honor.” Han patted his heart with a smile, and chuckled as his sister got to her feet. The monster-sized blanket swallowed her up hilariously. “C’mon, Sis.” He offered his arm. “I’ll make sure you don’t roll your ankle in any holes.”

“Thanks, Han.” She gave him a smile, and looped her arm into her brother’s own. “I’ll be back, Pap.”

“We’ll be back.” Han nods. He guides her away, towards the trees off to the side of the gathering. Once he’s a fair distance off, he leans back against the trunk of one of the trees at the edge of the clearing and smiles slightly.

Toki waits patiently for a moment, before clearing her throat. “Papyrus was serious, you know. He will come find us if we’re not back within five minutes.”

“I know.” Han simply sighed. “I’m just… Thinking. You’re engaged now, Toki. That’s… hell, that’s amazing. I am super happy. I also approve. He’s the best damn guy you’ve ever dated- and he isn’t even human.”

“I know.” She sighs softly. Her eyes flit over to a bright flash of light in the sky, and she chuckles softly. It was the same orange as Papyrus’ soul and his magic. “I love him. I love him a lot. I never thought I’d ever love someone like I love him, y’know? It just… is.”

“That’s how love is.” He smiles slightly. “I think I know the feeling.” A wistful look slides over his face. “Which brings me around to what I wanted to talk to you about. You’re getting married eventually. Papyrus and you need the house to yourselves.”

She turned to him sharply. “Just because I’m engaged doesn’t mean that you’re not welcome in our house, Han. Never. You’ve always got a place to stay with me. Always.”

“I know. But you’ve got two little ones coming in soon.” He stoops to pet his nieces or nephews, and smiles as his fingers are kicked. “It’s time for you to start a family of your own. The next generation of clan leaders.”

“That doesn’t mean that you have to go, Han.”

“I’m not leaving the village, Toki. I’m not… nearly stable enough for that.” He admits quietly. “But…” His smile brightens. “Todd and I… we… We really like each other. His kids and myself get along great. Felix… Felix is amazing, and Rosie is just a doll. I’m attached.” He admits. “And they are too. Todd and I have been talking, and… He’d like me to move in with him.”

“Really?” She blinks.

“Yeah.” Han admits shyly. “I spend most of my time there anyways. With how often Todd is gone up at the castle learning magic, we thought… maybe it’d be good to have another person around the house to help raise the kids, y’know?”

“I do.” She nods slyly. “So it doesn’t have anything to do with you liking each other, does it?” she grins.

He flushes bright under the next flash of light, and lightly punches her arm. “Oh shut up you. That… might be a little of it. But… He’s happy. And I’m happy. And… we make each other happy. He makes some of the nightmares a little less…”
“Less.” She agrees without him needing to explain. She reaches up and takes his hand in hers. “Baby bro, if you’re happy, you go for it. Todd is a good, kind man. He will take care of you- and you’d damn well take care of him and those kids, or we’ll be having a different sort of talk.”

“I will do my best.” He smiles brightly. “Rosie slipped up yesterday. I didn’t tell you, but… She called me Papa. I don’t think I’ve ever been so damn happy in my entire life, to be honest with you.”

Toki beams. “I’m happy for you, Han. You’re a good man- a good brother. We’ll help you get moved in with him. I assume you’ll want to keep your instruments at my place?”

He shook his head. “The school, actually. They’ve opened up a room for them- I get a full musical classroom soon. Not just the little one- more and more students are joining, and I need more space to teach them all. It’s great, Toki. I haven’t been this happy and hopeful in a long, long time.”

“I’m glad, brother.” She smiles warmly. “I’ve noticed too. I’m just happy that you’re doing better and can finally find your happy place.”

“Me too…” He sighed softly. Han shifted stepped forward to hug his elder sister, making her stoop down just slightly so he could press a kiss to her forehead, and to the scar over her skull. “You are the best big sister a guy could have, y’know?”

“I certainly try to be.” She chuckled softly and hugged him back. The trees lit up with red light as a firework went off, and then fell dark once more.

Han stepped back from the hug after a moment and motioned back towards the group. “C’mon, we’re probably running short on our five minutes. I don’t want to get in trouble with Papyrus for keeping you too long, Sis.”

“Oh I doubt he’d be too upset. You’re my bro- and I always have time for you.” She grinned. Toki turned to stride forwards, round about the time that Han jerked and lunged behind her.

Aliquam had watched her leave with her brother, keeping his eye on her to make sure she didn’t trip in the dark. It truly hadn’t bothered him much to let her go off- though he was feeling the terrible need to keep her tucked close to himself where no one could bother her. Part of that he blamed on some of his genetics, truly, for his Father had a more beastly nature than any skeleton that Papyrus had ever read about. The need to tend to his mate, to make sure she and their brood were safe and cared for, was incredibly strong. That feeling only grew stronger as each day came to pass.

The tall skeleton heaved a sigh and crossed his ankles, leaning back to watch the sky. Fireworks were something he could never forget. The stars themselves were amazing- absolutely breathtaking, in fact. But… Fireworks were something else entirely. The way the colors washed the skies in bursts of light and fire were mesmerizing, and he found himself briefly lost in the glow of one that lit up the same color as his soul.

“Aliquam.” Tenebris scooted forwards to settle by his son. He leaned closer, to keep his words quiet and private, and then spoke again. “I want you to know that I am proud of you, my Son.”

“You are, Father?” He tilted his skull, gaze flicking to the big monster. Tenebris’ eyes were glowing faintly in the dark, pupils flashing with each bloom of color in the sky.
“I am.” Tenebris nods quietly. He rumbles faintly, and adjusts his gloves thoughtlessly. “You have shown your honor in yourself, and in your family name today, for gathering up the courage to ask your mate to be yours. It… makes me happy, to see my youngest son forging a family of his own.”

Papyrus smiles slightly. “You know, for a second I thought I had done something wrong, because she went quiet, and I was so, so terrified that she would tell me no… But then she tilted my chin up, and everything was right in the world.” He sighed softly. “I am happy, Father. I am so very, very happy. Part of me has been gnawing at me to make a claim on her that others could see- a beyond just our children.”

“That would be my doing, my son.” Tenebris sighed happily, before rumbling and reaching up to rest a hand on Aliquam's shoulder. “Instincts are powerful, and you and Sans got them from me. You feel relief- and possessiveness, correct?” The instincts were not all that the skeleton brothers had gotten- and the blossoming growth of Toki’s middle was proof of that.

“I do.” Aliquam nods quietly. “I want to keep her close and never let go sometimes.”

“You do well to control your instincts. Keep your logical mind in control- but don’t be afraid to indulge them from time to time. It is… very satisfying.” The elder monster chuckled quietly. A flash of bright purple caught his gaze, and he rumbled with a pleased sound. Fireworks, even as quiet as these, were hypnotizing to look at. “Despite a few learning missteps, you do well to care for Toki and your young, just as she does well to care for you.”

“Sometimes she does too much,” The taller monster sighed. “I worry when she exerts herself for my sake- or anyone else’s sake. She is…”

“You love her. Worry is natural, Papyrus. We have known her for some time now, though. She is almost as stubborn and tenacious as you can be.” He chuckled softly. “I can only imagine what your children will be like.”

That simple fact made Papyrus laugh softly. “Truly, father, we will have our hands full. Though… I cannot wait to see them and hold them. I can feel them slightly, but… holding them will be the best feeling in the world.”

“Holding your children is certainly an earth shattering experience.” Tenebris looked down at his hands, and laughed quietly. “You were the smallest skeleton I had ever seen when you were born. You were barely the length of my palm- where Sans was nearly double your size, and yet you grew up to be taller than even your brother. I remember when I first held you. You grasped my thumb and held me with a strength I didn’t think you could possess. Holding your child for the first time… your world zeros in on them, and they become your everything.”

Papyrus chuckles. “Father, you’re getting all teary eyed over memories again.”

“Ah, forgive me.” He does dabble at his eyes all the same, and chuffs to clear away any lingering sensations of tears. “You know how it is. Or, rather, you will at any rate.”

The tall skeleton nods. “I can’t wait.” He chuckles.

Another flash of light comes up- but it is accompanied by a sharp crack Pop- and then the monsters on the hill below them are scrambling to their feet. Papyrus’ eyes sharpen and he lurches to his feet, spotting Toki and Han as they tumble from the trees. His gaze locks on them, zeroing in as his soul thundered loudly in his chest.

And from around them pours humans in black clothes with bright red masks.
Tenebris’ eyes widened upon seeing the familiar soldiers, and a feral, untamed energy surges from his mind to his soul, before filling his body with a rage-fueled adrenaline.

H.A.M.

They didn’t have the chance to dodge. Pointblank, the bullet ripped a burning path through Han’s chest, and lodged inside the back of his scapula.

He fell back, tumbling out of the tree line, and Toki went down with him, arms coming to try and slow his fall. Around them, chaos exploded as humans in black body suits and red masks poured out of the woods in a swarm.

Monsters scrambled to their feet as they were nearly overwhelmed, forced back away from the tree line by lashing weapons. It didn’t take long before they were fighting back and human’s fighting them in turn. Black bodies and red masks moved in a blur as monsters surged forth, coming to cut the dark shapes off from harming Toki and Han more.

But no one could stop. No one could drop down to help her, because they had to beat the men in masks back.

Han gasped and choked, sputtering iron flavored flecks of spittle up across his sister’s shirt as she scrambled to see the damage.

Toki’s eyes blazed bright, panic making her hands shake as she rolled him over. He’d been shot- in the right side of his chest. Red was all but spurting out of the hole, and she shoved her fingers against it, trying to stem the flow of blood. “No, no, no, no, no,” Her voice sounded distant to her ears. “Han, oh gods, Han…!”

His eyes rolled slightly, staring up at her, through her, at something she couldn’t see. “I n-n-need-”

“Shh, shhh, don’t talk, just… Just stay with me Han. Please, please stay with me.” She pressed her fingers harder, struggling up onto her knees so she could put better pressure on his chest.

There was so much blood, rushing out from under her fingers with each pulse of his heart. His arms didn’t move, his body didn’t move- but his eyes flicked between her and the sky behind her. “P-please don’t make me go,” he stammers. “P-please.”

“You’re not going anywhere. You’re going to stay here- you’re going to be okay.” She looks up, frantically glancing for anyone who could help. Everyone is pinned down- oh gods, they can’t do anything. There is no one- anyone who could come, even if she shouted. Everyone was engaged- there were guns being shot, knives being wielded, blunt weapons sparking against magically conjured ones. She couldn’t find Aliquam amidst the warring masses- She couldn’t even see the massive form of Tenebris from where she was on the ground. Time both flew and crawled- and it could have been seconds or hours before she could turn her face back to her brother.

“I’m so sorry, I’m so sorry.” Her hands press harder against his chest, trying to stop the bleeding. It just wouldn’t stop. “I’m sorry if this hurts- I’m sorry, oh god, I’m sorry.”

“Toki-Toki, it… it doesn’t.” Han murmured. He swallowed shakily, eyes resting at half-mast. His face was rapidly paling, and he could… feel a stuttering in his chest. But it didn’t hurt. He couldn’t feel anything- anything beyond this draining feeling that was slowly sucking him away. “It doesn’t hurt. I can’t feel anything.”

That… Was probably not a good thing. Toki’s eyes welled with tears, and she tried not to burn him as her magic fluctuated wildly in her body. The bleeding wouldn’t stop- it was spurting out between the bones of her hands, staining everything on her with the vibrant red she knew his blood contained. Under the flashes of the lights from the fireworks blossoming overhead, she could see the growing stain on his shirt, and how it wept onto her. Her belly was coated in spots of red, and Toki could find no comfort in the lessening of the sizes of the spurts from his chest.

She sniffed quietly, and a hand flicked up to clear her sockets. Blood smeared across her face- and she nearly gagged as she tasted it dripping down against her mouth. “Okay- okay, not hurting is… is good right?”

“Right… I… Don’t make me go, please. I don’t… I’m not ready…” His teeth chattered, and he choked again, blood bubbling up and clogging his airways. She tilted his head and shoulders to the side, and he choked blood out over her arm as she tried to help him breathe.

Moving him hadn’t been a good idea. She couldn’t see an exit wound- which meant the bullet was still somewhere inside of him. “You’re not allowed to go anywhere,” Toki’s voice was shaky, for as firm as her words were. “I love you, bro, you’re not allowed to go anywhere. Not at all.”

“I’m not ready… Not ready… I was just… beginning to be happy.”

“You’re not going anywhere.” She said firmly, words harsh and unyielding, as she pressed tighter against his chest.

“I’m not ready… Todd… Rosie… Felix…” He muttered. “Toki… don’t m-make me leave them…”

“No one is going to make you do anything.” A sob nearly escaped.

“P-please…”

Toki trembled and opened her mouth to assure him once more- but before she could say anything else, his chest shuddered under her fingers and he exhaled out a rattling gurgle. The blood stopped spurting between her finger bones- and Toki watched the gleam fade from his eyes as his body went lax and released all of it’s tensions.

“Han?” No, no… he couldn’t be- he couldn’t…

But there was no response, not even as she shook his shoulder. The only thing that happened was the growing stain on his pants, proof of what she so wanted to deny.

“No!” She cried. Her magic lurched into him, and she tugged, trying to draw him awake and back to life with the warmth of her magic.

Instead, she drew out his soul. Her brother’s soul was small, indicating he was not a boss heart- but it was the most beautiful shade of blue she had ever seen. He was so, so small and worn, and with a few scratches here and there along the surface- but he shown with the most beautiful glow she had ever seen in that color. Her brother had been a beautiful soul, full of life and luster even after all of the pain and guilt he’d had to deal with.

Her first time ever seeing his soul- and she watched as a terrible cracking noise pierced the sounds of battle around her. White marks crackled across the surface, highlighting his LOVE, HP, and his stats, and she watched with growing horror as he shattered in her hand.
His soul disappeared, falling into a broken pile of blue dust at her fingers, before blowing away with the air of the many moving bodies around them.

Her little brother was dead. He was dead and gone- and she couldn’t fix that. She couldn’t make it better. He had died, shattering to pieces in her hands after bleeding out in her lap. She had been completely helpless to stop him, to stop his pain, to stop him dying. She was always helpless against them- even with the training she’d had, she hadn’t sensed them coming, hadn’t heard them- not until the gun had went off and nearly deafened her as Han- her sweet, sweet, hopeful baby brother- had taken a bullet meant to take another life.

But… There was a part of her, a part of her connected to the primal hive mind that her bees communicated through that spoke to her and told her that there was, in fact, one thing she could do. One thing that would prove she wasn’t helpless against the people that had murdered her little brother in cold blood.

She could make it even.

Her magic roiled and writhed in her body, heat billowing off of her. Monsters and humans alike backed up from her location as glowing green bees appeared around her, making a hastily formed shield around her.

Toki’s mouth opened and she screamed, her magic skyrocketing as her pain mixed with a well of growing fury. Her face contorted, jagged teeth splaying wide in a horrifying howl of mourning for the soul that had been lost, rage and grief coating the ghastly noise as she called to something. Above that, an unholy sound filled the air. It was a high-pitched buzzing that deafened those around her. The humans close to her began to scream, covering their ears over their masks as eardrums ruptured.

Across the planes of existence, something answered her call to battle.

Toki clutched Han’s body to her, cradling his limp corpse to her belly with one arm as hot tears streaked down her face. The other hand lifted, and she reached across her magic to the forms she could feel. Toki slashed down with her claws, and above her, in the sky, a whole tore its way into existence.

It was sloppily rent, but the edges were barely visible as a belch of brimstone and fire bloomed in the glowing hole she’d torn in the fabric of space. From the billowing smoke and roaring flames, the buzzing grew worse. Two forms appeared out of the portal.

They were some sorts of hell beasts, both of them. They had two long wings made of black chitin, with glowing green membranes that shaped them vaguely like a hornet’s wings. For all of the buzzing noises, the wings were mostly stationary, only shifting ever so slightly. The wings disappeared under a mane of glowing green fire, from which the head and the body both extended. The heads were vaguely shaped like that of a honey bee- but made out of a stark white bone. The spot where the eyes would be were empty, save for glowing green dots that scanned the suddenly frozen crowd around them. The sockets long and seemingly torn down towards the end of the head, and the skulls lacked any antenna whatsoever.

Under the mouth, two long, bone like mandibles clacked and snapped, baring sharp serrated teeth as they parted and flexed. Two sets of horns curled from the skull. One was pointed and solid black, curling backwards in a titanic version of Toki’s own. They cradled a blaze of green fire that curled up from the creature’s forehead, running between the two ebony spears and joining back into the mane that cushioned the rest of the head. The second set were blackened and curled like a rams, with the underside of them glowing the same color as the dots in their eyes.
Six legs were attached to the thorax, each of them bony and barbed and a sort of color that rested between black and green. The feet on the biggest one were white- the feet on the smallest were black.

From the thorax, a long spinal structure extended, with ribs framing an abdomen made from the same ectoplasm that the wings were. The spine extended all the way to the end of the flying hell hornet’s body- and then ended in long, glowing green stingers. The stingers dripped some green ooze, and it sizzled the grass where it landed.

They were nearly identical, save the colors in some spots, with the largest being fifteen feet, and the smallest being the same size as Toki. She could feel them, pressing in on the back of her mind. They were intelligent- and drawing from her the source of her grief and the fighting around them.

They made a choice- and they, the queens that they were, would remove the problem threatening the hive.

The smallest came down, wings fluttering violently as it came to rest near her. Monsters and humans alike scrambled away from the horrifying hell beasts hovering in the air, the group separating like water and oil to regroup. The smallest hovered close to her, but eyed the humans that lingered near to the human turned monster. The ones in the red masks- they were their targets.

The largest one opened her mouth- and a glowing green light began to blossom between the long mandibles that were ringed with fangs. A horrible screeching noise began echo as the power drawn from both the bee-beast and Toki began to gather and condense, turning into the beginnings of a green beam of magic.

The big one roared as the laser went off, and descended upon the crowd as bodies of humans were blown apart. The laser cut a swath in the group, flinging bodies here and there as trees cracked and groaned, leveling the forest just as much as it did the humans, before many of the humans were picked up and taken into the sky. Up and up they went- and then they were dropped, splattering across the ground in a mass of pulped flesh and bone.

Toki staggered where she sat, wobbling in place as her magic was depleted in that shot. Her vision swooned- but the sure pain and grief and burning rage compelled her to stay upright. These humans- no, these… These things, they had killed her brother, had tried for her and her babies. These things- they did not deserve anything less than death. It… it was wrong- she knew it. But she was lost- lost in the rage and grief and terror around her.

And the hornets were all too eager to comply and keep her from sullying herself with the task. The smallest turned, and latched onto a single man. The stinger sunk in as the mandible closed around his skull, and his body melted in half as the acidic burning poison in the stinger reduced him to nothing more than mush. He screamed for mercy the entire time, reaching a hand out for anyone to save him right up until his head was rent from his melting body, and flung away.

Toki could not look, however, or offer mercy. Her sockets closed tight, and she curled slightly towards her brother with a sob. It was sick- the fighting, the killing. It was sick, and it made her feel sick, so very, very sick. But the queens would not stop- not while her grief was so raw.

Someone shot a bullet through- and it made the big bee scream as it burst through the membrane of her wing. She turned with a roar of rage and descended upon them again, magic gathering for another blast.

The humans opened fire and surged forth, bravery found once more- and they swarmed to take out the one who had summoned the beasts.
A bullet made it past her wall of bees, and Toki shrieked in pain when it lodged itself in her shoulder blade. Her bees thickened, drawing forth more of her magic, and blocked any more bullets that might have came.

Her blood drizzled down, staining her shirt as her HP took a massive dent. She swooned in place.

Three more blasts rent the air, splattering humans across the grass- before Toki couldn’t hold on anymore. Her vision darkened, and she slumped against her brothers’ corpse, unconscious and unable to defend herself and her babies as her magic cut out. The air grew dark once more without the hellfire to light it, only lit now by the fireworks still popping and crackling across the sky and Grillby’s enraged form protecting those he could.

As her wall of bees dissipated with her magic- and the massive beasts rending the humans to bits disappeared without enough magic to tether them to this plane of existence- her world fell dark and she knew no more.

Tenebris had been one who joined the fight, while Aliquam and Caeruleus had moved to getting all the villagers to safety. The beast fought the humans valiantly, but had not expected to see the hellish hornets be summoned...

It was terrifying and miraculous to witness at the same time. They made even the beast stop and take notice, seeing the larger creatures taking lives by the droves. The slaughter was bone-chilling, the noises of the hornets and the screams of those being slaughtered echoing through the night.

Gaster continued his fight until the hornets disappeared, witnessing as Toki collapsed.

Immediately his mind switched from kill to protect. He charged forward on all fours, bowling past any humans in his way to stand over Toki and Han, roaring and screeching as he protected them with claws, tail, and teeth alike.

The ammunition they turned upon the beast was not bullets- but long, thick-shafted darts. They bounced off of his tail, but stuck into his clothes and flesh with backwards facing barbs, and began to pump tranquilizers into him.

There were no monsters that could make it to him- not with the humans gathering around him in a broad ring with guns aimed.

He winced as the darts hit him and he shook his head before his eyes glowed and he screeched loudly as a flare of magic summoned forth a pair of large blasters.

The large blasters roared loudly, and unleashed a powerful blast to clear the area around them. One of them dropped down and took Toki and Han into its maw before it flew off quickly away from the fighting.

The other blaster stayed behind to protect Tenebris as best as it could.

The sharp darts were shot at the remaining blaster as well, though they did little against the solid bone like structure.

“Mama! Daddy!” A child’s shriek split the air above the roars of fighting monsters and the crackkoom of guns. Thumper was at the edge of the clearing, sitting covered in dust and trying to detangle himself from his mother’s shirt, and his father’s pants. “N-No! S-stay away!” He couldn’t get himself free- and there was a man looming before him with a gun.

The man cocked the gun, and took aim.

However, Tenebris had enough adrenaline running through him to propel himself forwards once more. He charged fast, leaping over the circle of humans that had him caged, and landing over the dust covered bunny.

Tenebris swung the blade of his tail at the human, giving a furious screech.

The man managed to get a dart off, lodging it inside of Tenebris’ mouth, before he was rent in half by the bladed tail.

Thumper trembled, tears matting the dust of his parents to his gray cheeks, and the blood of the man spattered over him in a horrifying display of gore. He shifted and latched onto Tenebris’ arm once he managed to free himself, his sobs coming out hard and heavy. “M-mama…” His Mother and his father were both gone, reduced to nothing but dust as they tried to protect him.

Barking in pain, Tenebris stumbled backwards and was unable to close his mouth until he pulled out the dart. He held Thumper close and began to growl, but he was growing weaker… Whatever was in those darts was clouding his mind, making his limbs slow to react. He was growing numb

With the last of his strength going into holding the child close, he slowly stumbled off the piles of dust backing until his legs stopped responding to him. At that point, his upper half had kept going and he fell with a crash to the ground, rattling and growling weakly before his eyes closed and he slumped, his arm falling from Thumper.

For a time it seemed as if the humans ignored the fallen boss monster and the child, and that gave Thumper enough time to free himself from Tenebris’ grasp. He huddled near the monster’s face, trying to rouse him again for fear of him turning to dust like his dad had done. “C’mon, M-mister Tenebris. Y-you’ve got to g-get up. You’ve got to…”

When the big monster failed to respond, Thumper tried nudging his shoulder.

Acute aware of the threat, Tenebris let out a final, weak vocalization, but was unresponsive to Thumper’s attempts to stir him.

Another firework lit up the sky, shining a beautiful indigo- and highlighting the shadows that closed in around them. Thumper turned his gaze over and looked on with horrified amethyst eyes as red masked humans closed in on them.
Chapter 52

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So yeah. That happened. I hope you all enjoyed the last chapter~ Just so you know, I got really teary-eyed writing this one and the last one. I'm not completely heartless. Heh. Also- like not even an hour of posting, we had 16 anons freaking out in our ask box. Dudes. I love it. Feed me more of your flailing.

Don't forget to visit us on our blog :) http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Welp... After the violent attack that had occurred in the last chapter, it's time to see how our babies are doing.

Also I pity poor Strides (as of 11-14-2016), first the pain of losing Han last chapter plus her coup de gras on her wisdom tooth today (Which I didn't worry about bc mine came in straight, rekt), she's had a looooong day.

Oh well, Enjoy the chapter.

Toki woke slowly. It was a hard process, like trying to swim through a pool of molasses. Her mind, body, and very soul felt heavy and sluggish, like she wasn’t meant to wake up. It was like trying to claw out of a deep, endless hole that kept sucking her back in.

But she did. She pulled herself forth, her mind slowly sliding into awareness with the speed of a slug.

Her shoulder was the first thing she was aware of. It was the right shoulder blade, and laying on it hurt horribly. She felt crusted and gross, her memory foggy. The next she could feel was the bone aching weariness that flooded her. She was exhausted, like she had been drained dry. There was something crusted to the bones of her face, along her teeth, and something that had her shirt stiff over her belly and smelling of iron.

She shifted, and groaned in pain where she lay. Toki struggled to open her sockets, but they soon lit blearily, trying to take in her surroundings and recall the events that lead her to where she was.

It looked like she was back at home. She could see her coffee table, vaguely smell the usual smell of her house over the stench of her clothing, and she could feel the softness of the couch she had been gingerly laid on.

"..." There was pacing behind her, or rather, the back of the couch she was laying on, before there was a panicked calling of her name the moment that she groaned. "TOKIKO!"

Immediately there was a worried Aliquam in front of her, "Toki, oh my god, you're okay...!" he whispered softly.

“N’t s’ loud, Pap,” she groaned softly. His shout rang in her skull, and she nearly lifted her sore arm to cradle her skull. Instead, she hissed softly and clutched at her shoulder with her non-sore hand. “My shoulder hurts...”

He knelt down and pressed his head to hers, sparking off healing magic while keening worriedly.
"You were shot..." he murmured softly to her. "I had to dig the bullet out... I was so worried when you didn't wake up from it."

“Shot...?” She blinked slowly, and let the healing magic soothe her. Her shoulder shivered, but the healing magic did soothe her. Some of her exhaustion too, as her body absorbed the magic and put it towards healing herself.

Toki shivered, and nuzzled his face gently. She was quiet for a moment, before her fingers brushed over one of the stiff spots on her shirt. Slowly, she glanced down at it.

Blood. Her belly was coated with dried blood- all of her shirt was. It was on her bones, on her face- it was just... everywhere. And it took her a moment to think of what caused it- and then the lights in her eyes went out.

“... Han’s gone...” She murmured softly.

He looked at her, and then hugged her gently, stroking her head. "... He is, yes..."

“I... I...” She shifts and lurches out of his hug, forcing herself upright. She shudders, staring at the blood dried into her bones. “I... It’s... His blood is...” It was on her hands, figuratively and literally. Along her palms, the blood was tinted blue from the dust of his soul. Tears bead at her sockets, and her breathing quickens. “I... I need to get it off oh god he’s gone and it’s on my hands...”

"Toki. Toki. Listen to me." he gripped her head firmly, turning her skull to look at him. "It's okay... We'll get you cleaned up... Just stay with me, okay?"

Her sockets were dark, save for the glow of budding tears. Her hands clenched and unclenched, her shivers making her bones rattle. His touch draws her back enough for slight pinpricks to appear again, and they shiver with grief in her sockets. “H-he’s gone, Pap. My baby brother’s g-gone. H-he s-s-shattered in my hands...” He was gone, and she was still there. She wasn’t going anywhere. But the ache in her soul, the sheer grief that dimmed her glow, made her wish she didn’t have to feel any of it. “It’s on my h-hands...”

"Toki... I... I know... I’m so sorry." he murmured, before he kissed her head firmly, turning her skull to look at him. "Let's focus first on cleaning you up." He murmured to her gently. "There’s no point in letting this remain to traumatize you further." he told her, before he gently picked her up. "Come on..."

She trembled as he lifted her, her claws scratching faintly at the blood soaked into her palms. It was on her, all over her, and even over her teeth. She could taste where it had leaked into her mouth, but she was too distressed to be nauseated over it. “It’s everywhere...” A sob escaped her, and her face turned to tuck against his chest.

"Shh, shh..." he held her tightly as he moved upstairs, going to the large bathtub they had in their personal bathroom. "It's okay." he assured her, before he sighed. "I wish Sans was here. I don’t know what happened to him... After he heard about your brother he went pale and disappeared..."

“H-he’s probably s-sad.” She whispers faintly. Toki is not much help when he gets to the bathroom, but she is able to stand mostly on her own while he gets the tub going. She shivers, magic sputtering as it attempts to warm the chill that has settled in. She doesn’t have magic to spare though. Toki manages to strip herself out of her turtle neck. The blood had stained her ribcage and the green flesh of her swollen belly through the shirt, and she shuddered, nearly losing her balance, as she moved to shakily remove her pants. “I d-d-don’t b-blame him f-for being away.” Getting the button undone from her slacks was proving to be hard. She was trembling hard, and her tears blotted out her vision.
He held her firmly with one arm, making sure she wouldn’t fall, and getting her to bare bones with the other. Once she was bare, he started up the hot water and eased her into the tub. He let the hot water rain on her from the showerhead as he grabbed a body sponge and rubbed soap into it to create lather. Keeping it in hand, he reached up to start scrubbing her clean with the utmost gentleness.

Toki was complacent through most of it, and withstood some of the gentle cleaning as she remained shakily in the tub. But it wouldn’t get the stains off fast enough- and she didn’t feel clean even after the stains came off. She could feel it crusted to her bones even if it was no longer there. Her claws scrubbed roughly at the bones of her hands, trying to clean them more thoroughly while he moved the sponge elsewhere.

"Hey!" Without a second thought his hand lashed out and swatted the back of her hand away from scrubbing. "Hands down." He ordered firmly.

Toki’s chin tucked, but her hands separated. She hadn’t damaged herself with her claws- but that didn’t mean that her bones didn’t have tiny scratches. Her fingers curled tightly into her palms for a second, before limply dangling. “I’m s-sorry.” She hiccupped softly.

He looked at her, before he sighed and kissed her head, stroking it ever so gently as he hushed her. "It's okay... it's okay..." he murmured, cradling her head with one hand as he scrubbed her clean, running the sponge over her ribs, and her stomach.

The twins were still in her middle, even under the warmth of the spray and the touch of his hands. Her middle was dim- very dim. The attacks the hornets had used had drained her of almost all of her magic- so the twins were being fed with what little she had, and what little she was trying to begin to regenerate.

Her skull tipped slightly into his touch, and she lifted her fingers to gently clean her face. She made sure to go gently- lest she get swatted for that too. The water dripped off of her in a rusty brown color, mingling with faint green from the wound that had been on her shoulder blade.

"I love you." He whispered softly. "I love you so much. I’m sorry." he murmured, rinsing the sponge before he took a moment to just hug her tightly. One hand slid down to her middle, caressing the swell lovingly, before rubbing soothingly over her hip. ‘I’m so, so sorry about Han.

“I love y-you too.” He was getting soaked with her under the spray, but the bare skeleton couldn’t find it in her to care. She hesitantly looped her now clean arm bones around him, and tucked her head into his shoulder. The engagement ring on her finger clicked lightly against the back of his neck as she looped one arm about his neck. “H… He’s really g-gone… He… He didn’t want to die, Pap. It’s n-not fair… It’s not fair at all.”

"I know, I know..." He murmured, kissing her repeatedly to try and soothe her. "It's not fair, Toki..."

“It’s not...” Her voice trailed off into a soft whimper, and she began to sob in earnest, crumpling into him as her legs shook and gave out under her. “My baby brother is g-gone! He didn’t d-d-deserve to d-die like that.” She couldn’t help the wail that escaped her as she broke down in his arms, clinging to him like he was her lifeline.

"I know..." he repeated, stroking her head gently. It was a good thing he had his arms around her when she fell, as he was able to easily catch her. “Hey... hey.... shhhhh...” he cooed gently, stroking her head as he held her close, "I know... It's not fair." He hummed gently.

She had watched Han grow from a child into an adult, had helped raise him and had watched him grow and change as the events of his life had helped to shape him into the music-loving goober that he was- but she had never, ever, thought she would have been there to watch him bleed to death.

Toki clung to Papyrus and simply sobbed. Her soul hurt- it ached for her brother, her sweet, sweet, music-loving brother. It ached with loss and grief, and there was nothing she could do to ease that pain. Her bones vibrated, a low toned buzz of sorrow flitting off of her.

She was limp in his grasp when her fit of sobs finally died off into shaky hiccups.

He didn't care how long it took, but he held Toki close, letting her get her tears and sobs out of herself. He'd run his hand over her head time and time again, aiming to console her all he could.

Eventually she was left simply sniffling, exhausted as she shifted to cling to him. Her eye lights were dim, magic sparsely detectable within her. With as little magic as she had, she began to shiver against him. “I’m a bit c-cold…” She murmurs softly. Even with the warm steam of the bathroom, she found herself feeling icy. It was almost a numbing balm to the pain in her soul- though she knew it wasn’t healthy to think of it that way. She leaned back to scrub at her sockets, wiping away glowing tracks with her fingers.

"I know... We'll get you wrapped up, and into something warm.”

She sniffls softly and nods. Toki eases her weight back onto her legs, and finds that she is still very unsteady. Her strength was sapped along with her magic. “I… Is all of the b-b-blood off?” She couldn’t see everywhere. “If so, I w-want to get dressed, please.”

"In a moment it will be." he murmured, giving her a once-over and removing any spots he had missed prior, before he nodded and picked her up.

She felt lighter in his arms, without her magic making her bones as dense and fortified. Toki’s arms came around his neck, and she grimaced as her shoulder twanged. The bone was still sensitive, even without the bullet in it and after healing. “Thank you…” She murmurs softly, and leans a hand down so she can open the bathroom door for him.

He kissed her neck and let her open the door before he walked through and back into their room. "I love you." he murmured.

"I love you too," She murmured back. Her thumb idly played with the ring on her finger, swirling it slightly around the bones of her ring finger. “I love you so much…” She whispered again. “I… I’m going to need you a lot for a while.” Toki said quietly. “For H-Han’s funeral. A-and after.” Her little brother had wanted to be cremated, she knew, and he wanted his ashes spread out in his favorite places. “It f-falls upon the clan head to prepare any funerals within the main family…”

"I know, I know. It's okay," he purred gently to her. "I'll stay with you as long as it takes.”

“Thank you.” She whispers gently. She shifts in his arms, another shiver rippling over her, and then grunts as one of the twin babybones nails her hard in one of her lower ribs. “I think I can stand if you’ll s-set me down.”

"We'll find out." he murmured, slowly setting her down.

Her feet touched down on the tile, damp bones making a muted sound. Her legs shook for a moment, but she took a breath and forcibly steadied them. She stayed standing on her own merit, and gave him a small smile. “I’m steady enough…” She murmurs. Once she’s certain she’s good, Toki steps from his side and slowly makes her way to the dresser. A turtleneck- green in color- is selected, and she eases it onto herself, before fishing for one of her pairs of sweat pants. “… Hey, Pap? Is… Everyone else okay? No one else… d-died, did they?”
He couldn't answer her. He just looked at her, sorrow in his eyes.

Toki swallowed as she got herself into her pants. She took a deep breath, steadied herself on the dresser, and then turned herself to face him once more. His silence answered a lot of things. She reached out and took his hands in hers, leaning against the dresser to keep herself balanced. The ring on her finger clicked slightly against his bones, and she rubbed his hands gently with her own, offering him reassurance and love in turn. “Who did we lose?” She asked quietly.

"We identified the dust piles of Mister and Mrs. Hopperton. We were unable to locate Thumper, however..." he started, "We lost few more guards... And..." the last one made him clench his fists.

When he fell silent, hands clamping tightly over hers almost to a painful degree, Toki felt her own hands clinch gently in his. Her bones groaned with the strain of his grip, her magic not there to fortify her defenses naturally. “Oh no…” Thumper was orphaned then. Poor boy… He was missing too. That was just… terrible. Penelope had been an amazing mother, and an amazing woman to know. Toki swallowed roughly, and soothed her thumbs gently over his knuckles. “Who else, Pap?”

“Father…” He whispered softly.

“Not him,” she whispered back in turn, horror stretching her face. “He’s… gone? Or… Or missing like Thumper?”

"He’s missing... We don’t know what happened... We just... never found him."

“He… He might have been taken then. It’s… The only thing I can think of. HAM has been taking HTM’s... it… They might have taken him too. Both of them.” She swallowed, and closed her sockets roughly. Her hands tightened over his, and her bones audibly groaned. “I’m so sorry, Pap…”

"..." He was silent for a time as he looked at her. Then, slowly, he released her hands to bring them up to cover his face. "Oh Toki..."

She wobbled forth and reached up to cup his skull gently in her fingers. She stroked his cheekbones, and guided him down to tuck his face into her shoulder. “We’ll get them back,” she whispered for him. “We’ll get them back, Pap. I promise. We’ll find them somehow…”

He nodded slowly and hugged her gently. Papyrus took a long moment to compose himself- because his father was possibly still alive, and he had hope that they could save him- and then simply pressed a soft kiss to her shoulder and sighed against her.

Toki held him close and nuzzled nearer to him. She sighed softly, and then gently nudged him with her chin. “C’mon. Lets go b-back down stairs. I… If I don’t keep busy, I’ll start crying again, and I don’t have much more magic to spare for tears.” She murmurs softly.

He nodded and slowly leaned back to let her go.

Toki kept her arm linked with his, and guided him back out of their room. She leaned heavily on him, her legs still a bit unsteady. “I… I think everyone could use something hot to drink.” She murmurs, though she has no appetite for anything.

“Papyrus?” Asgore’s voice rings out as he steps through the front door without knocking. The king is dusty and bloody, and his royal garb is mussed. “I need your help. One of the guards has a bad break- bones are your forte, are they not? Neither I nor Toriel can get it to set correctly.”

They had made it down the stairs far enough for them to see the king. Papyrus gaped at him in horror. "A-Asgore...! Oh by the stars you're covered in dust... and blood..."
“Some of the monsters were covered in human blood.” The king explains—though there was blood that glowed in the way that monster blood seemed to do. “And I had to dig out a lot of bullets. We still haven’t gotten them all out— but that is beside the point. We need your help. One of the wolves broke his leg roundabouts the knee joint.” The dust was from one of the guards he hadn’t been able to save. She’d crumbled to dust as he was extracting a bullet, and he had gotten covered in it.

All of the wolf guards had the double knee joint, like Tenebris did, with their digitigrade legs. Those were hard to heal, she knew, unless you knew the structure intimately. Toki nudged Pap gently and leaned against the railing of the stairs. “Go,” she said softly. “Help them, okay? I’ll be here when you get back.”

“Frisk can stay with you, if you’d like.” The king offered gently, motioning a hand back behind him where the kid had followed him. “They have grown much and learned a lot from Tori. I’m sure they can help keep an eye on your mate, Papyrus.”

“Thank you, Frisk. Toki, I’ll be back in a little bit.” Aliquam looked at Toki with a small nod, kissing her head gently before he followed Asgore out, giving Frisk a pat on the head as he passed by.

The child smiled lightly as they were patted before they approached Toki, offering a hand to shake.

Toki might not have been in the best mindset to baby sit, but she had the feeling she was going to end up being the one being watched. Still, she accepted the hand, gently grasping the child’s hand with the rapidly cooling bones of her palm. “It’s nice to finally meet you, Frisk.” She says softly. “You’ve been very busy making headway across the lands for the monsters, haven’t you?”

They smiled and gave a nod. Busy indeed.

Toki smiled back hesitantly, and drew her hand back to make it down the last couple of steps. She was weak kneed, but managed to stay upright well enough. “That’s good… So, would you… like some tea?” Again, she wasn’t up to food, but something warm… Though tea reminded her of Tenebris, and Tenebris reminded her of other things. Toki stubbornly blinked. She couldn’t be crying anymore.

They did, but smiled gently and shook their head instead of saying so. They would rather Toki sit down to calm herself.

“Alright, that’s a no on the tea then.” She mumbles quietly. Toki heaves a deep sigh, scrubs a palm down her face, and then motions for Frisk to follow. She makes her way for the living room. “You’re welcome to a blanket if you get cold, Frisk. Normally the house is quite warm, but I can’t sustain the heat right now.” She snags one of her quilts, and it’s draped over her legs as she curls up on one end of the couch, propped against the arm.

They climbed up onto the couch, and smiled at her gently. They weren’t too cold really, and Toriel had made sure they were dressed warm.

Toki tilted her head back against the couch with a soft sigh, and shifted slightly. Her fingers dropped to rub over her belly, the motion more to comfort herself than anything as she tried to keep her mind away from things. It didn’t really work entirely all that well, even with the twins kicking her once more. Despite the dim color of her ecto flesh, they were still healthy, though not entirely happy with her. “If you want to, you can turn on the television. I’m afraid I’m not the best company right now. I’m sorry about that.”

They continued smiling, gently shaking their head.
Frisk was a very quiet child, Toki noted. Toki tilted her head quietly, fingers massaging lightly over a foot that kept shoving outwards from within her. “Is there anything you want to do, Frisk? It is… easier to keep my mind occupied than to… to linger on what’s happened. You are, uh, aware of… what happened tonight, right?” She wasn’t sure if they knew what all had transpired or not.

Their smile faded and they nodded slowly. Frisk then proceeded to shake their head. They then tucked their legs under themselves, folded their hands in their lap, and took a slow, deep breath in and let it slowly out.

Frisk did this a few times, and then looked to her, silently encouraging her to do the same.

Breathing exercises were a lot like what Grillby had her do when she had panicked over finding out she was a mother by accident. Though now, it wasn’t panic that had her stressed. It was grief, pure and simple. But Toki suspected Frisk wouldn’t let up until she at least tried it.

So, valiantly, the skeleton took up a similar pose, though not nearly the same, and then settled her hands on the blanket over her lap, and took a deep breath in. She matched the child’s breaths easily, keeping an eye light on them to keep track of their actions.

It did, ultimately, help a little bit. The repetitious behavior gave her something to focus on, though her soul still felt woefully heavy in her chest. Still, some of the tension visibly bled from her face, replaced only by visible tiredness and general melancholy.

They smiled in satisfaction and came a little closer, before gesturing lightly to her stomach. The gesture caught her eye, and she tilted her skull. “Hm?” She took a moment to consider what the child must have silently been asking, before nodding slowly and lifting an arm to welcome them closer to her side. “They’re active right now if you want to feel them move, Frisk. I don’t mind.” Frisk was just a kid, after all. The whole process must have been fascinating to them. After all, how often was it that one got to see a pregnant skeleton?

They smiled and nodded in thanks, before moving closer and slowly reaching to touch her stomach. Her middle was the warmest spot on her at this point, the magic thick and heated under Frisk’s touch. The surface of her middle was calm for a time, before one of the twins pressed a leg out against their fingers in a slow stretch.

Toki relaxed as best she could, teeth tilting upwards in a tired but tender smile.

Frisk smiled and rested their cheek against her belly for a moment, looking up at Toki and letting their smile grow once they caught her eye. They were hoping it’d be infectious.

Infectious it was. Frisk grinning up at her from where they had their face pressed to her belly was absolutely adorable, and reminded her of when she must have done the very same thing to her mother. Toki smiled back, a soft laugh escaping from her chest as the twins tapped Frisk’s cheek. “It’s a pretty cool feeling, isn’t it? I wouldn’t give it up for the world.”

They looked at her after she said that, and their smile faded… this time, it didn't come back.

They knew what she said… but at the same time, they wanted to offer her something. Something that would get her brother back for her.

They would RESET.

Toki saw their smile fade, and slid a hand down to gently rub her finger bones through the short brown locks of hair that fell messily from Frisk’s scalp. She rubbed gently, and her own smile faded even as the twins wiggled and squirmed against Frisk’s touch. “What’s wrong, Frisk?” She asked softly.

They looked down, and then looked up again, smiling again weakly. "I... can reset." They offered in a near-whisper of a voice.

Toki almost couldn’t hear them, even with how quiet the house was. She blinked slowly, digesting Frisk’s words. “You could… reset? But… why would you break your promise to Sans- oh.”

Frisk had reset whenever Toki had died. Frisk was offering her a reset.

A reset to bring back Han.

Toki swallowed roughly, and glanced away for a moment. Part of her soul leapt at the chance to see her brother- to be able to right the mistakes that had been made throughout the course of the monster’s time on the surface. But…

Frisk had promised no more resets. And… it was a horrible, horrible selfish thought for Toki to want to reset just to bring her brother back. There was no telling if something wouldn’t happen later and he would die then, or if someone else would take his place. There was simply no way of knowing- and Toki knew Han.

Han would be so, so upset with her for giving up everything just to bring him back.

Tears beaded at her sockets again, and drizzled just faintly down her cheeks as she silently sighed. “I… I want to say yes. I want to say yes so badly just to be able to see and hug my baby brother again… But I have to say no. Please. Don’t reset. If you had a way to jump back a day or two, then maybe, but… No. You and I- we can’t do that to Sans. We can’t do that to ourselves. We’ve all come so far…” She swallowed thickly, tears dripping down onto her sweater. “Han… H-Han wouldn’t want me to do that to everyone…”

They looked at her, and lowered their head for a moment, before they had an idea and took a second to focus and they lifted a hand.

A diamond shaped star appeared in their palm.

A SAVE point.

"I can SAVE." they mentioned quietly.

“I… see.” The SAVE star glimmered and glowed just faintly. Toki swallowed, and looked down to Frisk. “I don’t see how a SAVE can help though. If it’s like a game, wouldn’t it just… save our position right now?”

They nodded slowly, and lowered the star again.

Toki swallowed quietly. There might be hope, however. “If you can save, you can… Load a save, right? Do you know when your last save was?”

Opening their mouth, Frisk thought about it, before looking at her again... It... has been a while, they muse, closing their mouth again.

Toki took their silence for what it was. “It’s been a long time, hasn’t it?” She whispered softly, hope rapidly being smothered out.
It was a moment, and then they nodded.

Toki’s sockets closed with a soft click of her bone-lids, and she sighed softly through her nasal canal. “I… I see… Then no. There… There is nothing to be done. People die all the time. It… it hurts, knowing I will never see him again.” But she wasn’t cruel enough to do that to Sans. To demand a reset just so her brother could live again. She… She wasn’t that type of person.

“But maybe… we can prevent something like this from happening again.” She murmurs softly.

And they look back up at her. What did she have in mind?

Toki swallowed again, and glanced back down to Frisk as she scrubbed her cheeks clear. So much for not crying and depleting more magic from her systems- she had failed hard core at that. “You can save. Maybe not every day, because I understand how tedious that would be, but maybe every couple of days instead. That way if something bad happens, you can load back and warn everyone about it and we can go at things differently.”

They blinked, then smiled and nodded, that worked. They then lifted the star again and reached out to it. Did she want them to save now, for example?

Understanding some of Frisk’s actions wasn’t all that hard, truly. Toki nodded slowly, and slumped slightly back into the couch. Tired eye lights watched the star for a moment, before she nodded. “Yeah. Go ahead and save, Frisk. Try and make a habit of it, okay?”

Frisk nodded and the star was touched. It glimmered brightly for a moment, and then disappeared.

Toki sighed softly. “Then that’s that…” She whispers softly. She gently ruffled the kid’s hair. “Thank you for offering that, Frisk. But… don’t offer a reset again, okay? Promise me that. This is the final one. Small loads are okay, but nothing big. Playing with time is probably not something you want to do too much with.” The greater powers that be probably didn’t much like it either.

They nodded and smiled under her hair ruffling.

The gravid skeleton heaved a soft sigh, and felt her sockets drift closed for a short moment. She was so tired… and that little flash of hope had hurt really, really bad when it had been squashed flat. But… There was nothing to be done. She had to roll with it, and recover as best as she could. Slowly her fingers detangled from Frisk’s hair, and she brought her hands up to scrub her face with her hands.

Her ring clicked noisily on her face, glinting a shiny gold color in the dim lighting.

“It’s late,” she finally murmurs. “And I think I need some t-tea to help myself relax. Do you want to help me in the kitchen? I have some honey tarts I can make for a snack for us.” She needed to eat something to kick-start the regeneration of her magic.

Having helped Toriel in the past, Frisk smiled and gave a nod. They stood first, stretching a short moment before offering her a hand to get onto her feet.

Toki disengaged from her blanket for a moment, and then graciously used Frisk’s help to get onto her feet. She wobbled where she stood, nearly dropping if not for the stubborn streak she had, and then reclaimed her blanket. It was draped over her shoulders, creating a shawl of sorts for her to huddle in. “Thank you, Frisk. C’mon.”

Toki heads for the kitchen, using the wall as a brace to keep upright. She was truly, truly too drained of magic to be up and doing things, but sitting around tearfully wasn’t going to be good for her either.

The child stayed close on her heels, looking around the kitchen with an unheard hum.

It looked like someone had been in here earlier attempting to make something- but they had left a mess on her counter, and a broken pile of glass in another cup. Toki sighed. She would dispose of that later. She padded for her kettle, collecting it and filling it from the tap.

Once it was set on the stove to heat, Toki wobbled back over to where she kept her honey and her tarts. “Did you ever get to try any of the honey I sent up to the Castle last summer?” She inquired quietly as she began to prepare tarts for Frisk to nibble on. The poor kid was probably hungry given how late it was. It wasn’t a proper meal, but it would do well enough to perhaps lull them towards sleep.

“Cae was supposed to make sure that everyone got some.” She murmurs softly. “Speaking of, do you happen to know where he went? Pap said he disappeared.”

They nodded happily in reply, but at the question, Frisk shook their head.

“Hm…” She closed her sockets, and sighed quietly. “I have an inkling as to where he’s gone.” She murmured softly. “But I don’t have the strength in me to go find him.” She sighs.

Toki shifts and continues fixing up honey tarts. “Frisk? Can you get my cell phone from the living room please?”

They nodded and went back to the living room, coming back with the phone in hand shortly.

Toki took the phone once she finished the small plate of tarts, and then carefully dialed San’s phone number. She cradled it to her ear, and brought the plate of tarts over to the small side table and chairs for Frisk to get comfortable on. “Go ahead and eat while I wait for him to answer.” She murmurs softly to Frisk.

They nodded gently and began to nibble on one of the tarts.

The phone rings in her ear, and she waits patiently.

It didn’t take very long for Sans to answer.

"H'illo?” It was Cae, but he sounded horrible.

“Sans,” she murmured tiredly. Hell, he sounded worse than she did. But she was putting up a decent farce and keeping herself distracted. “Where are you?”

"... H-Hey Tokes..." he murmured, "I... I'm at home..."

“Why don’t you come here? I’m in the kitchen.” She murmurs softly into the receiver of the phone. “It’s just me and Frisk… We… would really like it if you were here too. Being… Being alone isn’t a good thing right now.”

"... F-Frisk is there?"

“Yeah… I’m as weak as a newborn lamb right now. Standing is hard… But Asgore needed Papyrus to help set someone’s leg, so they left Frisk to keep an eye on me so I didn't fall and hurt myself or something while I was alone.” She murmurs tiredly. “It… Would be nice to have everyone close tonight.” Her voice is thick, and she fights another wave of tears. Blast it all, she can’t cry. Not now, not in front of a kid. She takes a deep steadying breath, and totters over to the stove.

"... I'll be right over" and he hung up.

The sudden click of the line going dead was a start, and she glanced at her phone in time to see that it said he’d disconnected from his end.

Toki heaves a soft sigh, and leans quietly against the counter. She is cold, and her shivers are increasing, bones rattling noisily in the cool summer night. “Looks like he’s coming over,” She says to Frisk.

The kettle on the stove finally begins to shriek, and the loud noise nearly startles Toki into falling.

They nodded and watched the door, but were surprised when he came downstairs instead.

"Hey kid... I was hopin' t' talk to you."

Toki was less surprised. He tended to teleport wherever, and walk the rest of the way. “Do you want me to give you a minute or two in the kitchen alone?” She got three cups of tea poured, and left the rest of the pot of water to stay warm on the stove. The tea needed to steep anyways.

"I wont make you move out for our sake, we'll go talk in the living room.”

Toki rolls her eyes. “That’s where I was going to go and take my tea.” She explains quietly. “I’m pretty dea- I’m pretty tired.” Her choice of words was almost poor, and her visible flinch mid sentence showed it. “I was going to go try and warm up under a blanket.”

Sans winced. Oh yeah, he caught the gist of what she’d almost said, and he understood her flinch quite well. "Oh... Then don’t let us stop you... we'll stay here."

“Mkay. Come join me when you’re done, if you want.” She collects her mug carefully, and makes her way out of the kitchen. Toki doesn’t bother with the tarts. She has no taste for anything solid, even if she knows she needs it. She cradles the warm mug to her chest, and heads for the couch to get settled.

"Thanks..." he then leaned against the counter, looking at Frisk. "Hey, kid... Long time no see, huh?"

Frisk swallowed their mouthful of honey tart, and signed with one hand. ‘It’s good to see you again, Dunkle Sans.’ They offered him a soft smile. ‘I wish it was under better circumstances though.’

He smiled. "Glad you remembered I can read your hands.” he chuckled quietly, before he laughed. "Dunkle, you still calling me that? Not that there's anything wrong with it.”

‘Forever my favorite Dunkle.’ Frisk nodded slightly. They licked a drop of honey off of their fingers, a happy smile tugging at their lips. Even with such sad times, such a sweet treat was hard not to be happy with. ‘Of course I remember you can read hands. Not everyone can though. It makes it hard to communicate sometimes. I had to speak to Miss Toki earlier.’ It was no secret that Frisk was selectively mute- and chose not to speak for various reasons. They could do it when they needed to- but it was easier simply not to speak.

"Yeah... I'm sure Pap can teach her a little sign language." he chuckled before he shook his head, "Look, I wanted to ask you something..."

‘From what I’ve heard from Dad, she’s been super busy. I bet she hasn’t had time to learn. I barely managed to keep up with all of Mom’s paperwork. I dunno how she managed all of yours. But now that you’re free, she probably will have lots more time.’ Once she got past her grief, that is. Frisk tilted their head and finished the tart, nodding for him to continue. ‘Ask away, Sans.’

"So... you know she just lost her brother..."

‘I know.’ Frisk nods softly. ‘It is very sad. I never got to meet Han, but Todd talked about him all the time when I saw him at the castle. He seemed really nice.’

"Yeah... look... I know... we talked about this before... but..."

‘The resets?’ Frisk prompted gently.

"... Yeah..."

‘You don’t have to worry. I’m not going to reset. I promised, didn’t I?’ They offer him a gentle smile, and clamor out of their chair to go get their mug of tea. It smelled really good, and they ended up burning their lips slightly as they took the first sip.

He chuckled quietly. "Careful, we skeletons don’t really have many nerves to burn.”

Frisk stuck their tongue out at him and made a rude noise, before setting their mug down to cool. ‘I’ll be okay, Dunkle Sans. Anyways, you don’t have to worry about the resets anymore.’

"I know I shouldn't be... But... You know how many times I lost my brother... I can’t imagine letting her endure this... there's gotta be something we can do..."

Frisk shook their head sharply. ‘No.’ They said firmly. ‘There isn’t.’

His fists clenched lightly, irritation flitting across his face. So the one time that he would be okay with one, they wouldn’t do it? "How long do you and Asgore plan on sticking around?" he asked.

Frisk noted the tightening of his fists, and swallowed slightly. For as many times as Papyrus had died, Frisk had taken a beating for it. They loved Sans- but some small part of them knew what he was capable of, and feared that. ‘Don’t get upset with me, Sans. It wasn’t my choice not to reset.’

They left it vague and at that. ‘Mom’s going to take me home with her once everyone is healed.’ They say softly. ‘Dad... Dad was going to stay and help start looking for your dad and the missing child.’

"I'm not mad at you, kid... trust me..." He smiled at them just slightly. "Just some personal stuff running through my mind... I'm glad you came anyhow... You're a good face to see in a time like this."

He then hesitated, "Wait... What did you say? Not your choice?"

‘I’m glad you think so.’ They nod slightly. A yawn tugs at their lips, and they sip at their tea again. It was very relaxing to drink and smell. ‘Don’t be afraid to share what burdens you, Dunkle Sans. Sharing is caring, except for in STD’s.’ They say sagely. ‘I did say not my choice. I was told no.’ And there was only one person they had been around during the past while- so it was easy to connect the dots.

"Oh my god kid, you're too young to know that crap." he face palmed for a moment, and then he looked at them again. "Did... Tokes tell you not to reset?"

‘You do realize that I practically live on the Internet when I’m at home alone, right?’ They had also been through a lot. Years and years had passed Underground via the resets- Frisk was a lot older in their head than they were in their body. ‘I offered. She told me she really wanted to say yes, but ultimately no.’ Frisk responded softly.

"... Well jeez..." he rubbed his face, then sighed and smiled at them, "I guess you can see now just how wonderful she is... she's almost as wonderful as you are." he chuckled softly.

Frisk flushed and grinned at him. ‘She’s nicer than I am, Dunkle Sans. She’s really, really selfless. She told me it wasn’t fair to you or everyone else if it all got reset. But... she does need someone. She’s really, really hurting inside, even if she’s trying to keep it from overwhelming her. You understand the pain. Maybe you can help her with it.’

"Yeah... I kinda hope I can make myself look like less of a mess before I do though...” He sighed. “I don’t want to join the pity party and have her worry about me.”

‘I think you’re a little late on the draw with that one. She’s plenty worried about a lot of things.’ Frisk finishes their cup of tea, and a yawn tugs from them. ‘Looking like a mess probably won’t matter. What she needs is someone with her- and someone who doesn’t look like a kid. She's tried not to cry around me.’ Frisk was observant. ‘She’s had to try quite a lot, actually. I was thinking I’d go flop in one of the spare rooms and sleep until Mom came for me.’

"Haha... Well alright, you go ahead and rest, I’ll clean up a bit and go and talk to her.”

‘Mkay. I will. Also, drink your tea. It’ll help you relax too.’ Frisk smiles faintly, and goes to put their mug and the half-empty plate of tarts up on the counter. ‘You could use something to help you relax.’ With that said, Frisk gave him a jolly wave, and bounced off to go up to the second floor. The spare rooms were easily marked- and they found one that was completely bare to flop in for the night.

"Heh... yeah... see you kid." he took a long drink of his tea and sighed, before going to splash his face with cold water from the sink.

Toki was on the couch, her mug held quietly in her hands. She kept her attention elsewhere as she slowly sipped at the hot drink, letting it warm her bones as she visibly shivered and shook under her chills.

She was miserably cold, and feeling alone- but there was nothing to be done but wait and try not to think about Han or Tenebris or Thumper- or all of the lives that were lost. Toki wasn’t doing the best of jobs admittedly, and her eye lights glowed a lackluster green to show it.

After a moment, Cae had come out of the kitchen, a little more energy in his eye sockets than there was when he went in. "Hey, Tokes..." he greeted gently.

She heard him on the tile long before she saw him. Toki tilted her skull, dull eye lights flicking tiredly over to him. “Hey Cae.” She greeted softly in response. She slid a hand away from her mostly empty mug and patted the seat next to her as she finished the last of her tea. Her mug is disposed of on the coffee table soon after she finishes it. “Join me?” She murmurs softly. “Ah- did Frisk go up to one of the spare rooms?” She’d heard the child’s feet padding over the tile, and the soft squeak of the stairs as they bound upwards. But they hadn’t come back down.
Toki just hoped they hadn’t chosen Han’s room. The skeleton wasn’t sure how she was going to manage it, but… She definitely needed to clean it out. But… Not today. That was for another day. Another couple of days, even. There were things that Toki had to get done first, including getting Han cremated- and calling her family.

She would do that in the morning.

"Sure, and yeah, they wanted a nap." he replied, sitting by her with a small smile.

“I can imagine so. It’s nearly… three in the morning? It’s past everyone’s usual bedtimes.” She murmurs softly. She shifts as he settles by her, and then proceeds to squish into his side with a shiver and a soft sigh. Her bones are cold against his own, even through his clothes. “… Are you okay?” Toki asks softly, gently taking his hand in hers and playing with his visible fingertips.

"Yeah, I’m fine." he wrapped his arms around her gently, smiling softly at her.

Toki leaned into him further with a shiver and tuck her blanket better around herself. "Are you sure?” She inquires gently. “I… Know about your dad and Thumper. You have every r-right to be upset.”

"I... Try not to let it bother me..." he admitted, nuzzling her.

“You remember what I said all those months back when you took me to Snowdin? Crying is okay. Being… Being upset is okay. Today is… today is a sad, sad day.” She whispers softly. Toki leans into him, and quietly loops her arms around his plush middle as she curls fully against him. Her belly presses against his side. “We’ll get Tenebris back, Cae. We’ll find him somehow…” Thumper too. No child deserved whatever was likely happening to him.

He nuzzled her gently and sighed. "I... I know... I just... He's my dad, you know...?"

“I know.” She nuzzles him back and sighs shakily. “We think our parents are invincible,” she muses quietly, “when they’re simply as mortal as we are. Pap and I are here for you, Cae. You’re not alone, you know. You’re basically my b-brother in all but law- and that will be soon enough anyways. J… Just like with H-Han, you have a place here, if you want to stay here un-until we find your dad.” She wasn’t sure if he would, or if he would to stay with Grillby. Grillby was an entirely plausible chance.

Toki glanced up at him. “Is Grillby okay? I know he was t-there. I… I recall the glow of his fires just faintly. Is he okay?”

"Yeah, he's fine.” he replied, before he wrapped an arm around her more firmly and tucked her squarely into his grasp. "You're really something, Tokes."

“How so?” She blinks up at him tiredly.

"You're a sister to me, you're a best friend, and sometimes you act like a mother..." he purred.

The last part made her laugh quietly. “I helped raise my brothers, Sans. Raising eight boys alongside Mom gave me a bit of the mom-mode, y’know? Plus these two.” She drops a hand from his side down to her middle, where his nieces or nephews were kicking away grumpily. Toki’s eyes glimmered warmly, though the underlying sadness was there. She’d helped raise Han.

He nuzzled her gently and hugged her belly carefully. "Yeah, yeah..."

The twins twitched under his touch, and Toki sighed softly. “They’re upset.” She murmurs idly to their uncle, rubbing a tender spot.
"I know..." he murmured, sighing. "I wish I could help as well as Pap does."

“They haven’t gotten to know you as well as they have him, or Tenebris.” Their grandfather always took time to greet them or give them affection - it was adorable, really. Cae wasn’t around as often - he spent a lot of time with Grillby, which was understandable. Toki takes his hand, and gently presses his fingers over where an angrily jabbing foot was. She slowly had his fingers rub, and the kicking turned less aggressive. She smiles at him tiredly. “They’ll definitely love their uncle Cae if given the chance to get to know you.”

"Yeah..." he smiled and sighed quietly. "Pap won't get jealous will he? Me paying this much attention to you?"

“I highly doubt it.” She nestles closer. “He’s my mate. You’re his brother- and my brother. I am a naturally affectionate person. Pregnancy makes me even more snuggly. He’d probably be happy that I’m not alone right now.” She mutters quietly. A grunt escapes her, and she leans up to press her fingers near the tops of her ribs. “As much as the kicks can sting sometimes, I’m glad of it right now. I… don’t really know what I did. I summoned… things. And they drained my magic. I am very empty- and they are not happy that they don’t have the extra to snack on. Greedy little jellybeans.” Her words are affectionate regardless.

"Those things... Heh.. Those were hornet familiars." he told her, "We called 'em 'Hell Hornets'." His fingers hesitated for half a second, before curling over her belly and rubbing gently. "Will it hurt if I share some of my magic?"

“It won’t hurt.” She shakes her head slightly. “Tenebris had to do it once when Pap was running himself ragged.” Under his hand, the twins kick grumpily, and she sighs at the beating to her fragile ribs. Without her magic to reinforce them, the kicks were bordering painful when they didn’t relent. “Hornet familiars? Well… I guess I can understand that, considering I summon fire bees. So I have two types of familiars?"

"Well they're both insects, so you may be able to summon familiars within a family instead of a species." He suggested. "We Gaster's kinda do the same thing... I tend to stick stick to a canine family, Pap summons cats, and I think Pops summons drake heads.” He explained.

After a moment he eased his hand higher on her middle and gently rested it over the top of Toki's swell. A soft pulse of magic later and he's feeding the twins with his spare magic.

“And I summon giant hell hornets.” She murmurs softly. She shifts, and the twins ease some of their fussing as his magic floods into her. Like the aftertaste in the food he makes, his magic is cool and refreshingly minty feeling. Though the chill of his magic doesn’t do anything to help her shivers. In fact, they increase, making her rattle against him like a leaf in the wind. “The twins thank you.” Toki murmurs softly, her sockets fluttering closed. His spare magic gives the twins a little bit to fall back on, and her middle brightens visibly under her shirt, highlighting the spaces between his fingers like small candle. Her turtleneck, she realizes, is one of the thinner ones, designed for summer ware. No wonder she was so cold.

He nodded gently and carefully slipped off his hoodie, bringing it around to cover her up more. "There." he murmured, "You're shivering."

“I’m cold.” she admits softly, and casually burrows into his jacket. “Mild Magi-drain, I think. It feels a lot like last time. And, ah, your magic is cold feeling. Sort of like spearmint?” Where Papyrus was sunshine on a summer day, Sans was more like cool mint on a winter morning. Refreshing and nice - but very bone chilling. The twins at least seemed happy, and as the worst of their tantrum ended, Toki found her sockets drooping tiredly. She had all intentions of staying awake until Papyrus
"I'd've thought Dad's magic was more minty, hehehe..." he chuckled quietly, tucking her back against his side with a gentle motion. "Get some rest, okay? I don’t want Pap thinking I kept you awake."

"Your dad’s is intense." She murmurs softly. Her head is settled against his side, careful not to jab him with her horns. "Deep and dark, like an ocean. Yours is brighter, more minty and... I dunno. Just you." Toki shakes her head slightly and closes her sockets. "I’m tired, but... Going to sleep... I am scared." She admits quietly. "Because I know what I’m going to see when I sleep. I don’t... I don’t want to have to relive him dying again, Sans."

He chuckled gently, before he reached up and touched her head to release more of his 'cool' magic directly into her skull. "I know... I know... But Pap would tell you to do the same. He hates that you'd have to relive it, but he doesn't want you passing out and being forced to suffer while he’s not there to support you. The least I can do is be there when he can't."

The touch of his magic over her bones makes her shiver, and she flicks her eye lights up to him with a huff as she does a magnificent attempt at becoming a turtle between the blanket and his jacket. The twins had enjoyed the cool magic- that did not mean that the mommy enjoyed the cold. "If I can get tired enough, I’ll sleep a dreamless sleep though. Or most likely, anyways." She mutters. "I... know he would want me resting. But... I don’t know if I can. Even with you here- it... it scares me to sleep." Her voice trails off into a quiet whisper.

He stroked her head gently and nuzzled her. "I'll stay with you, okay, doll?" he murmured. "I'll keep my magic going, make sure your mind has something else to focus on. Liiike, see if you can pick up a minty smell to go with the sensation you speak of." he cackled softly.

Toki snorted slightly, and chuffed at him. "I suppose that’s fine. I can… try to sleep, I guess. If I can’t, then I can’t." She rolls her eye lights and shifts. "Mind if I change positions first? If I sleep sitting like this, I’ll wake up unable to feel my legs." She needed to settle on her side. She could probably pillow her skull in his lap, which would work just fine. He was padded enough, after all. "Ah... Will you wake me when Pap gets home?"

"Sure thing," he nodded gently to both requests, "No problem at all, Tokes." he purred.

Toki smiled softly and nodded. She shifted, easing herself down onto the couch. Her sore shoulder was pressed into the seat, which didn’t hurt all that bad, and she eased her head into his lap. His coat was kept, and she draped it around herself as she nestled under her quilt. Toki’s teeth chattered slightly, sending out harmless sparks, before she forced her jaw still, and curled up. “Alright. Thanks, Cae.” She murmurs softly.

Her sockets drift closed, but she stubbornly clings to consciousness.

Caeruelus smiled gently and held her close as she dozed off, stroking her head lightly.

Aliquam had finally been able to come home, and was happy to see Tokiko asleep on the couch... what made it better was that Sans was asleep too, his hand on the other's forehead. Coming over, he knelt for only long enough to press a smooth kiss to both his fiancé and his brother on the head, before he went off to shower so that he may join in on the cuddle pile.
The police had come by, after having begun setting up regular patrols around the compound, and had offered their condolences to both the monsters and to Toki’s family. There were one or two squad cars that rotated shifts and kept watch for the main entrance of the compound- but there was little else they could do to help beyond that.

Caeruleus ended up staying at his house- though he wasn’t alone. Asgore had moved into Tenebris’ room, with Frisk and Toriel taking Papyrus’ old room. The house was full- and they were there to make sure that nothing else could go wrong.

Caeruleus came to keep her company as well during the day, bonding over what was on TV, as well as the random come-to-mind banter... He did seem to make a good comfort for the twins as well, being their mother’s ‘pillow’ of sorts, while Aliquam was kept busy between Toki and continuing to heal the wounded monsters.

Han’s funeral was scheduled for Friday. He was to be cremated, and his ashes divided up between his family members so they could spread him across his favorite places to go with each of them.

It had been hell on Toki, getting it arranged. She did have some help- her mother, once she had finished sobbing with Toki over the phone, had proved to be invaluable at handling a lot of it. It was still up to Toki to do a good portion of it, but her mother was a good guide.

The phone calls were another taxing thing all together. She had to call each of her siblings after she’d informed her parents. Everyone had cried. Even her stoic father had broken down into the quietest and most heart wrenching sobs that Toki had heard. Toki’s soul hurt even more. Grief was a powerful thing, weighing heavily on her soul.

They had offered to come stay with her- but Toki had declined. She needed time to grieve and heal- and on some level, she was terrified that she would lose another family member should they come to stay with her. Losing Han was bad enough- losing any more was not something she could handle. So she pleaded for them to stay away. And, for once- too caught up in their grief to argue- they listened.

Todd had been told too. The fox man had crumpled where he stood, tears streaking down his muzzle, and Toki had folded herself around him while he howled his pain into her shoulder. The sounds that came from him hadn’t been entirely human anymore- but the meaning was still the same. His fox-like howling had drawn the wolf guards in as well and the area surrounding the village had echoed with the mournful sounds.

Felix had hunched his shoulders and strode angrily away, tears finding their way down his cheeks.

Rosie had openly wept, and rushed into her father’s side, needing nearly the same amount of consoling as her father.

Toki also dealt with nightmares. Whenever she slept too deeply or too long, she would fall into one. It was always the same nightmare. Black figures, red masks, hell hornets- and Han, lying in her lap hemorrhaging out despite everything she tried to do to help. He would beg and plead to stay- and ultimately die. And then the carnage would start- and she would wake up in utter terror as the men in masks screamed and were torn asunder.

There was guilt within her for taking the lives that she had. It was belated guilt- but guilt nonetheless. The Humans Against Monsters were still human, even if they had been twisted and corrupted by Cruelty’s views and desires. Some of them might have even been decent people at one point.

She wept tears for Han, and for the lives that her hornets had taken so savagely, even though rage simmered not far below the surface of her grief.

Between her nightmares and the magi-drain, which had her dealing with bone deep weariness and exhaustion, Toki was worn thin. She might not have been responsible for the monsters anymore, but they deserved her care and comfort all the same. So she stretched herself, helping the monsters plan their funerals as well as working on Han’s. Working herself to the bone let her take short naps where in she didn’t dream.

The harder she wore herself down, the less the nightmares plagued her. She was aware that it wasn’t healthy. But truly, it was the lesser of the evils.

Toki noticed a problem, however. Her magic wasn’t regenerating fast enough to overtake what the twins needed in order to thrive. At first she didn’t think it was a problem- but she encountered what that meant for her shortly after.

Toki had shambled through the house early in the morning while Pap had taken off to do his morning checkups on the wounded, and she had proceeded to sharply clip her left femur on a side table when she’d turned a corner without paying attention. It had sent her stumbling and cursing- thanking everything that was holy that she had been alone for that short amount of time- and she’d barely managed to catch herself on the wall before she was sent sprawling.

She had thought nothing of it- she had wide hips, and her pregnancy waddle had her running into everything under the sun.

But not even forty minutes later, she had been getting dressed for the day and had spotted the nasty bruise blossoming down her femur from her reflection in the mirror. Her magic was tied to her defense, which meant that without her magic her defense was practically nothing. The bruise was tender to the touch, and she had hissed in pain when her fingers brushed over it.

“Shit.” She muttered, staring at the dark green bruise streaking from her hip joint nearly half way down. The bone was soft and spongy almost, and the bruise was darkening more as she looked at it. Toki finished tugging on a long shirt, and then eased herself onto the bed with her sweat pants half off so she could gently prod the bruise and make sure she hadn’t cracked anything.

Her bone was solid enough, no visible cracks- but the color was deepening, and the ache growing. She really had caught her self good- but she hadn’t been in pants, either. Her clothes were a little less filled out than they usually were, but it hadn’t really mattered. Her nightgown only covered so far, and it was thin. Thin clothes didn’t make good buffers between solid wood and fragile bone.

“Glass canon.” she scoffs irritably to herself, fingers rubbing the area around the bruise as her tired sockets pinch tighter. “More like glass bones…”

There was a soft knock at her door bedroom door. "Toki? Hey, you awake?"

Toki startled at the knock, and cursed loudly. “Y-yeah, I’m awake!” She struggled upwards, nearly tripping over her sagging pants. She worked to tug them upwards.

"Pfft. You are crashing around in there. You okay?"

“Just- ow, OW- dealing with a bruise.” Holy hell, the bruise was tender. Her pants made it hurt like hell, and she hobbled faintly as she made her way to the door. She opened it, and peered at the face across from her.

The skeleton was grinning as usual, but the underlying gleam in his eyes was a dead giveaway that there was something up. "Could I, uh... Could I come in?"

“Of course.” Toki nodded and stepped back, motioning for him to come into her room. She left the door open, and hobbled back to her bed, before taking a seat on it. She eyed him slightly; tiredness making dark circles under her eye sockets, and then canted her skull towards him while patting the space next to her on the bed. “Something wrong, Sans?”

"Yeah, well... No... I mean... I think... I don’t know...." he came in and closed the door behind him before he sat down beside her. "Well... You know how I’ve spent some... Extra time with Grillby?"

“That’s one way of putting it.” She flushes slightly and chuckles softly. “What about it? You two aren’t having problems, are you?” Her eye lights glimmer at him slightly, and she reaches out to pat his leg.

"... Tokes...." he looked at her with a small frown before he reached up and gently rubbed his stomach, "I... Uh..."

She noticed that motion, and her sockets widened marginally. “Are you... pregnant?”

His grin had long since fallen, but now it looked stressed, his teeth clenching together. "I haven’t told him yet... But... I think I am..."

“Shirt and jacket up please. Pretty sure I know enough to confirm or not.” She flicked her eye lights to his face, seeing the tense look, and tilted her skull quietly to offer him a gentle but confused smile. “... Do you not... want it? I didn’t think monsters could have accidents.”

"... I didn't think it would actually happen. We tried a few times but this hasn't happened before..." he explained as he lifted up his shirt. "It was just a comfort thing... We... I didn't think it would actually TAKE this time...." His usual gut was there, a gentle blue in color, but in the bowl of his pelvis was what had woken him up.
There was a tiny speck of light, flickering like a small flame. It was surrounded by a visible ball of aura, connected to the ecto-magic around it by thread like sinews.

Toki eased down to peer into his middle quietly. She hummed softly, eye lights roving gently over the generous swell of his middle. Her fingers followed shortly, bones pressing in with a careful touch as she peered down into his pelvic girdle. "Yeah," She says after a moment, "you're pregnant. It only takes once, Cae. Congratulations though! You're making me an aunt." Her fingers retract, and she gives him a gentle smile. "I... know it might be an odd time, but... this little one is a light in a dark time. We still have hope. When we get your dad back, he is going to be so surprised."

"A light..." he looked at her, then laughed weakly. "A light... Just like their Dad..." he commented as he lowered his shirt again. "I don't know how I'm gonna tell Grillbz though..."

"Telling Grillby should be pretty easy." She smiles slightly. "Just lift your shirt and say 'surprise, you're a dad'. You've been trying- I can guarantee he's going to be excited to see your little ray of hope."

"Heh... yeah, it'll... We'll get there..."

"You seem a little uncertain about all of this." She says softly. "Talking might help, if you have some worries." Given the state of her pregnancy, Toki might be able to offer a fair bit of advice. "I'd say I have an ear to lend, but I have no ears. Which is a shame. I miss my cartilage piercing." She cracks the tiniest joke to try and get him to smile.

"Well... I've gotten so used to things..." He mulls over how to phrase it. "Not working out for me. Like... things get better... and then..." He wiggles his hands. "Poof... It's all back to step one. Now that things are staying... permanently... I just..."

"You're scared of it all resetting again." Toki summarizes gently. "I understand that. Its... hard to adjust, and to believe that this is the last one. You've got to take it one day at a time though. Frisk isn't going to reset anymore. If something else happens, they will load a save."

"Yeah... I know." He sighed gently, before smiling at her, a little more assured now, "Yeah... I'll have to get used to it..."

"You will. We'll help though." She smiled at him softly, and opened her arms in an offer for a hug. "I'm excited to be an aunt again. If you need help to talk to Grillby about your little ball of hope, let me know."

"Yes please" he agreed without hesitating, reaching out and tugging her gently into his grasp. He hugged her tightly, but gently.

"Then I'll help you tell him. How do you want to do it?" She tilted her skull with a warm look, and snuggled into his grasp carefully. Her leg bumped his, and she hissed very softly at the painful touch.

"You okay?" He released her rapidly, looking her over with a worried gleam in his sockets.

Toki shrugs and adjusts how she's seated so her femur doesn't touch him. "I hit myself on a table earlier this morning," she says idly, "and I bruised myself a bit. Its tender."

“Oh.” He winced. “Ow. Bruises suck,”

"Yeah. It's a wicked bruise. My magic isn't up to snuff as far as defending me goes. Its not regenerating fast enough." She shrugs slightly and reclines back on the bed with a soft sigh. "Now did you have an idea how you want to tell Grillby? You're going to have to do it, but I can talk you "Well..." He huffed. "There's no way to sugarcoat this. I'm fucking pregnant and it's his."

"There you go." She quirks a slight grin to him. "That's how you can tell him."

"..." Sans covered his face with a frustrated groan. "Why do you make it sound so easy?"

"Because it really is." She chuckled heartily. "Grillby loves you, Sans. You literally have nothing to fear."

"... Yeah I know..." He then rubbed his face. "Shit... was it this hard for you too?"

"Papyrus fainted the moment he found out he was a dad, and I had a panic attack that required Grillby to coach me through calming breathing exercises. It was hard, but in a different way." Toki gave him a gentle but warm smile. "You and Grillby were planning to have a kid, weren't you? Planning makes all the difference. Grillby is a good dad, Cae. He'll probably take really, really good care of you." Toki recalls when she had gotten back from her first trip to Lana's place, and subsequently Fuku's. Word had spread over the Undernet that Toki had healed Fuku - and the massive bartender had fiercely hugged Toki the moment that she had gotten home. Grillby had even swung her around like a doll, before stealing her away to his bar for a free milkshake. She chuckles, and reaches out to gently pat his belly. "You, and your ball of sunshine."

He smiled gently and nodded slowly. "Yeah... heh... Sunshine." he reached and rubbed his stomach gently, before he sighed and leaned over to rest his head against Toki's. "Thanks, Sis." he murmured.

Han had called her that too. Toki resolutely did not begin to cry, and instead gently nuzzled his skull. Han would be happy to see the family expanding. "I'm glad I could be here to help, Bro." She smiles softly for him. "Sunshine... That sounds like it would be a cute name. Little Sunny. Pap and I have already come up with a couple of possible names for the jellybeans."

He adjusted his arm around her shoulders to give her a gentle squeeze, his usual grin returning to his face. "You mind if I hear 'em?"

Toki leans into him without issue, and chuckles at the soft squeeze. The skeletons were strong; horrifyingly strong sometimes, in all actuality. Without her magic there to reinforce her body, she could feel how her bones creaked just slightly, even under such a gentle touch. Toki peers up at him with a lopsided grin and twinkling eye lights. "Only if you promise not to laugh."

"I promise."

"Alright." She sighs softly and glances away. Toki shyly grinds her teeth. "We chose four. Skylar, Eras, Verdana... and Honey."

"..." He wasn't gonna laugh, he wasn't gonna- Snrrrk.

Fuck.

Toki frowned at him and swatted his knee. "Sans! You promised you wouldn't laugh!" And to her knowledge, he rarely made promises. She pouted at him. "It's not that funny, Sans." Though she did giggle slightly herself, even under her pout.

"N-no, no, I'm not laughing! Those are some great names!" He smiled at her gently. "I promise, I'm not laughing because they're funny, I'm laughing cause they're adorable.”

Amusement flickered in her soul, and she half-lidded her sockets at him. She contemplated him for a moment, before gently flicking his forehead. “You’re not always the best liar, Sans.” She chuckles softly. “They are adorable though, aren’t they? We chose one name for each gender, and then two gender neutral names.”

"I think that's a great idea."

Toki nods quietly. “I thought so too. I’m pretty certain I’m having a little girl... At least one, if not both.” She chuckles softly, and rubs her finger over her middle. Her eyes glimmer warmly up to Sans. “You know, our kids will grow up together. It’s going to be really cool.”

He smiled gently and nodded slowly. "Yeah... heh... It will be."

She smiles back at him and shifts. “Mhm... Well, all right. I don’t know about you, but I need to get up and move around before my back cramps up again. Do you feel better about going to tell Grillby now? It’s honestly not as scary as you think it is.”

"Right... we should... as soon as possible." he replied with a smile, standing up before offering her a hand.

She took his hand, and let him haul her to her feet. Her leg throbbed, and she hid a wince as she waddled for her door. “Oh no, this is not a ‘we’ thing. I’ll help you find what to say. This is something you have to do on your own, Cae. Really, you’ll be okay.” Grillby was the one that had asked Caeruleus about having kids, after all.

"..." He rubbed his head and took a deep breath to steady himself. "Right, I... me..." he then grinned at her gently. "I can do this."

“You can do this.” Toki grinned to him, and wigged her fingers. “You’ll have to call and tell me what his reaction is. I have little doubt that he’s probably going to keep you captive for the day. If you want, I can tell Papyrus when he gets back from checking on everyone.” Which should have been soon, barring anyone needing more intense care.

"Alright.” Sans followed her out of the room and down the stairs. Once they were at the ground floor, the ruffled skeleton offers her a slightly nervous wave, and then ducks out the front door to go deliver his news.

It didn’t take him long to make it to the bar. The problem was, it took him a long, long while in order to gather the courage to go into it. He sat out there for a long while, simply peering in as people came and left for the early breakfast rush.

He waited until it was over.

Sans took a deep breath as he walked into the bar. It was empty... good.

He slowly reached and gripped the open sign, flipping it over so that 'closed' was seen from the outside.

Grillby had been wiping down the bar and noticed Caeruleus come in. Setting his rag down, he was going to greet him until he saw him flip the sign. "... Sans... Is there something wrong?" he asked, concern filtering into his low voice. He came around the bar and met his mate in the middle of the bar, taking the skeleton into his arms to hug him close, and caress his skull gently as he felt the other hug him back in turn.
Toki watched him go and shook her head with a tired sigh. Once he’s gone, she slumps slightly, and rubs her fingers over her eye sockets, before padding into the kitchen to begin cleaning it. With all that had been going on, trying to get things planned for Han’s cremation, and just everything else that the universe deemed needed to go wrong, Toki had been remiss in house chores.

Now that everything was finalized- she needed to clean. It didn’t matter if she had the energy or not. Toki wouldn’t be up to cleaning after the cremation. Seeing her family, being with them for the funeral was going to wreck what little fragile peace she had built to keep the festering storm of grief at bay.

Usually Toki would sing or hum when she went about her chores, particularly after getting good news like the news she got from Sans. But, as she swept and mopped and did dishes and bumbled her way around the kitchen, no song found it’s way through her teeth. No hum reverberated through her bones.

Toki simply toiled in silence as she waited for either Pap to come home, or for Sans to finally work himself up to tell Grillby. She was no fool- it would take him some time to work himself up. She knew him well enough by now to tell that much.

Aliquam hummed quietly as he entered the home, closing the door behind him before he looked around. "Toki? I'm home" he called out.

The tile that made up all of the floors was freshly mopped and spotless, darn near shining in the light. The rugs had been shaken, the cobwebs swept, and dust cleared away. The house was clean once more by the time that he had gotten home. But it wasn’t clean enough, obviously. Toki was still hard at work, down in the bottom floor bathroom. It was the one that Han had used- and her brother had left it a mess.

Part of her had not really wanted to clean it- but she’d hardened up her spirit and set to doing so. It was one step at a time. Doing the bathroom- then removing the remainder of his things from the general house- and then tackling the hard, hard task of his room. That was for last. There was so much… So much of Han there, that Toki hadn’t even brought herself to open the door yet. She couldn’t. Not yet.

Toki stood in the shower, working to scrub something off of one of the walls. Human men could be so gross- and that was definitely one thing she hadn’t missed about not living with her brothers. The rest of the bathroom was spotless. The toilet had been scrubbed, the sink cleaned, toothbrushes and other cleanliness products that had belonged to Han had been set under the sink cupboard.

“Toki, hey... how do you feel?” he asked, leaning down and kissing her head.

He padded into the bathroom, having followed the sound of her voice. "Toki, hey... how do you feel?" he asked, leaning down and kissing her head.

“About the same as I did last night.” She grunts softly. Toki spares a moment to turn and give him a soft kiss, before it’s back to scrubbing. She favors her sore leg slightly as she shifts her stance against the tub. “I’m okay, Pap. How is everyone healing down at the school?” It was the only building with the space for everyone to heal together in a protected location.

"They’re recovering well enough so far." He murmured in response, eying her as she scrubbed. "I’m more worried about you."

“You’re always worried for me, Pap.” She responds with a soft sigh, and grumbles as she re-wets her scrub brush with tub water. Another few scrubs, and the stain to the shower tile began to truly come off. “I’m glad everyone is recovering steadily. But really- I’m fine. You don’t need to worry about me.”

"Toki... Are you lying?"

“From time to time a little white lie never hurt anyone.” She doesn’t give him a straight on yes or no answer, opting instead to focus more upon the task at hand.

He reached out and closed his hand gently over her shoulder. "Tokiko."

That was a tone he hadn’t used with her before. Toki tilted her skull to show she was listening as she switched arms for scrubbing. “Yes, Papyrus?”

"You’re lying to me now."

“Yeah.” She says simply. “I am.” Toki’s not mean enough to deny lying. Lying is a bad habit anyways. She’s also never been the best liar, even after growing up in a house full of boys. Toki swallows slightly, and sighs through her nasal cavity.

He sighed. "Get up and come with me." He ordered, releasing her shoulder to give her room to get up.

That… sounded suspiciously like an order. Toki’s teeth grind together indecisively as she was released, and she paused mid scrubbing to rotate her skull and look at him. “I’m not done cleaning, Pap.” The stain was mostly gone now- just barely even visible. It could probably wait, really.

“I don’t care.” He told her. “Please. Get up.”

“What exactly do you want me to come with you for?” She turns back, looking at the remainder of the stain, and heaves a sigh. Irritation bubbles within her, but Toki takes a calming breath so she doesn’t fire off something mean out of anger. At least he said please this time. The gravid skeleton gives the wall a few more scrubs- lo and behold the wall comes fully clean with those last couple of scrubs- and then rinses the brush and sets it on the non-slip mat so she can finish cleaning the area in general later.

Toki probably was a little intentionally sluggish with getting out of the tub and rinsing her finger bones. But she won’t admit that to anyone. Soon she is standing, hands clean and drying them on a towel as she looks at him to lead the way.

He led her to the front room, sitting her down on the couch. After a moment he looked at her and sighed through his nasal cavity. "I can tell that you’re suffering from Magi-Drain again."

“I’ve been dealing with Magi-drain since Han died.” Toki peered up at him from where she was situated on the couch, and crossed her arms. “And it hasn’t gotten better. Besides, I’m used to the chill by now.” It wasn’t so much suffering when she was used to the cold. At least she could walk mostly on her own now. “So I’m fine, Pap. Really. The house needs to be cleaned, and I’m not done yet. So… can I get back to it?”
"No." His answer was almost immediate.

She arched a brow up at him and pursed her teeth. "Hm… I don’t really have to ask permission to clean our house, do I? So…" She shifted and worked to gain her legs under her so she could get off the couch that she had been guided to. "Your suggestion is taken into consideration, but my work is not done yet. I still have to do the upstairs, and get the laundry done. If I didn’t get stuff done just because I don’t feel well, I would never get anything done at all."

"Toki, no." he said sternly as he stepped up to stop her. "I can’t let you. Not like this. We need to go find Grillby."

"Grillby is busy with some very important things right now." She informs him. “More important than funneling magic into me.”

There was a muffled shout that drifted through the open windows. It was obviously muffled- but the words were clearly Grillby’s and damn near clear as day. “I’M GOING TO BE A DAD AGAIN!”

Toki quirks a faint grin. “I told Sans that he would be excited. Congrats, by the way. You’re going to be an uncle. And Grillby is probably going to keep Sans busy for quite some time today.”

Papyrus stiffened, his sockets widening and his jaw falling open. "C-CAERULEUS IS PREGNANT?!"

His shout was unexpected, and she leaned a little bit away from him with a soft hiss. Her hands fly to her belly, which had jerked with his noise. The sudden yell had startled the twins, and they were nailing her ribs with all of their might. He certainly wasn’t this loud often anymore. "Ow, ow, ow, little ones, it's okay. Daddy is just excited about your new cousin." When the flurry dies down to a little less painful thrashing, she flicks her eye lights back to him. "Yes. He came to me this morning for me to confirm it."

He looked at her worriedly, seeming to debate between running out the door to go find his brother or to stay with her. He made his decision and then he sighed. "I trust Grillby will take care of him. I’m more focused on you."

“Grillby knows best how to care for Sans,” Toki makes one more attempt to get up, using the arm of the couch to haul herself upwards. Getting up isn’t easy, after all, particularly with the big skeleton standing before her like a sentry. "But you don’t need to focus on me, Papyrus. I’m fine enough, okay? I can handle a little housework.” She needed to do the housework. Sitting still, resting, it all gave her time for her mind to wander, and she didn’t want to deal with the thoughts and feelings that she knew would rise up. Keeping busy was how she coped with things- and keeping busy was how she was coping with Han’s death.

"Toki, no." he repeated sharply, "You're not. Not until your magic is replenished."

“Pap, I can’t just sit still and do nothing!” Frustration and growing irritation taints her voice as she gets to her feet. Toki steps around him carefully, and finds herself nearly dropping as she bumps her femur into the arm of the couch in an effort to step around him. She hissed, and took a seat on the arm while waiting for the bruise to stop hurting. "My magic isn’t regenerating fast enough to cope with what the twins are taking, Pap. And I can’t sit still. I can’t, okay?"

"It's not helping that you are draining yourself physically either! You need to rest!" He reached out and gripped her arms gently. "Watch TV, go on a walk, I don’t care what you do, but I want you to rest!"
“I can’t!” Her arms don’t fight his grip, and she just stares up at him through dark sockets. Her teeth curl into a sharp frown. The bones of her arms bend slightly under his gentle touch. Toki is so fragile without her magic to reinforce her bones. “Keeping myself busy is the only way to keep my mind off of Han. I watched him bleed to death in my arms, Pap. I watched my little brother beg me not to make him leave, not to let him die. When my mind is at rest, that is all that comes to mind, because his death is on my hands. I still sometimes think I smell his blood on my bones, Papyrus. I just… I can’t rest, Pap. I can’t. Not… Not until Han is laid to rest, okay?” She tugs just slightly on his grip on her, and frees one hand to rub her leg once more. “I’ll just… I’ll be careful, okay? I know I need to be careful not to run into things right now.”

"What happened wasn't your fault, damn it!" He snarled. "You did everything you could! Han would know this!"

“Just because it wasn’t my fault doesn’t mean that I don’t blame myself!” She didn’t lift her voice to a shout, despite him snarling at her. Her teeth ground, sending sparks over his hands that grasped her. “Han was scared, Papyrus! He didn’t want to die- and there was nothing I could do to stop it. You don’t understand. You’re not an elder sibling- and elder sibling is supposed to protect and guide their younger siblings! I helped raise him, Papyrus! I helped raise all of my brothers! They were as much my brothers as they were basically my children. Han had a hard life, and Han carried ghosts of his own that haunted him because of the things he had been made to do. He was going to find happiness, Papyrus.”

Traitorous tears pebbled in her sockets, and she jerked her arm out of his grasp so she could swipe them away as they rolled down her cheeks. “And he died. He had that ripped away with him just when he was starting to find happiness for once in his life. I failed to protect him. I had to listen to my mother sob over the phone. I had to listen to my dad break down into tears, because I failed to protect my little brother. That is something that I have to live with for the rest of my life, Papyrus. That’s what is in my mind when I’m at rest. That's why I can't rest.”

He watched her, and then he sighed and took a step closer, hugging her gently.

Toki sniffled quietly, but planted a hand on his chest and kept him from hugging her. She scrubbed her sockets and gave him a sharp look. If she collapsed into his arms now, she would shatter what fragile peace she had struggled to maintain. “If you can come up with something that qualifies to you as resting and also keeps me company or keeps my mind busy enough not to think of everything, then please, by all means, tell me and I’ll do it. I am tired, Papyrus. I am tired, and my leg hurts, and I want to rest, but I can’t. Until then, I have cleaning to finish. Excuse me.” She sniffled again, scrubbing her palm against the tear tracks on her face, and stood to return back to what she had been doing prior.

"No.” He let her body go, but his hand stayed folded around her wrist. "Tokiko. You're not going to exhaust yourself any further.”

“Then what do you suggest? Hm?” It is a struggle not to be sharp with him, and Toki knows the edge of it lingers in her voice. Her wrist is weak against his grasp, and she knows she can’t escape it without losing her hand. Tears still bead in her sockets, betraying her upset and her inner hurt. “I already told you. If you can come up with something that qualifies as rest, but keeps my mind occupied, then you are welcome to suggest it.”

"What about a bath... something nice and hot. Just you and me.”

“A bath…?” She was expecting him to pop off with a walk, watching television, or reading- none of which would help. Talking let her think- She didn’t have the focus for television, and that bled over to books as well. Toki took a deep breath, and quelled the instinctive part of her that wanted to demand to go back to work.

Papyrus was right- and she knew it. She was pushing herself too far; far too far to be good for her, and for their children. Toki’s free hand came up to scrub her face, and she heaved a sigh. It would be him and her in the bath. “Okay. A bath… A bath sounds good.” She murmurs tiredly. Her hand scrubs her eye sockets again. “I’m sorry I snapped at you.”

"I'm sorry I did too." He purred gently and pressed a kiss to her head.

Toki sighed gently and shifted to lean against his chest. Her arms hesitantly come around him to give him the hug she had previously denied. “You were right to be worried.” She murmurs. “I have been pushing too hard on myself and my body.” She nuzzles his shoulder softly, feeling her irritation deflate back into hiding. “Why don’t you get out of your boots, and I’ll go get the bath started?”

"Alright." he murmured, going to kick off his boots and jacket.

Toki pressed an apologetic kiss to the top of his head, and then left him downstairs. She made her way up, the stairs giving her a small bit of trouble with the tender spot on her leg, and then to their bathroom. Kneeling down was difficult with her middle, but she managed, and got the tub running with piping hot water. She toned it down a bit after a moment of consideration. Papyrus wasn’t quite immune to the heat like she was.

After rinsing the tub of any dust, and got the stopper put in the bottom, and left the massive thing to fill while she worked to get to her feet. She really was starting to have some serious problems getting up and down with the weight in her middle. Once upright, Toki slid her shirt over her head and then took a peek at her profile in the bathroom mirror. Her belly was large, distended from the once empty gap in her middle. The magic that wove up her ribs, keeping it in place, faded odd almost perfectly. Her pants sat oddly on her hips from how her belly sat, and she toyed with the elastic band with a small smile. The flesh was dimmer than it usually was, on account of her lack of magic no doubt.

A soft laugh trickled from her throat as one of the twins kicked, and a small lump appeared on her belly. She rubbed her fingers quietly over it and sighed. Her ecto belly even had the bellybutton thing going for her- and now that she paid it attention, it was very nearly on it’s way to being an outtie. “I’m sorry I haven’t been taking proper care of myself for you two.” She murmurs softly to them, the sound of the water rushing through the pipes blocking her from hearing Papyrus come upstairs. “I’ll try to do better from now on, my little Jellybeans.”

Papyrus soon made his presence known, smiling as he walked up to hug Toki from behind. He was mostly undressed, but there was his undershirt left to remove. It meant she was able to feel his form behind her, "Tokiko." he whispered gently.

Toki only had her pants and underpants left to remove, so his arms slid around her bare torso. She smiled slightly. “Papyrus.” she murmured gently in response, resting her hands gently on his for a moment, before making the effort to shimmy out of her pants. Once she got them below her hips, they could fall the rest of the way down her legs, baring them bruise and all, so she could step out. She did so, and once she was completely bare to him save her engagement ring, she leaned back and peered up at him. “I’m sorry I was a bit of an ass down stairs. I shouldn’t have tried to lie to you, no matter my reasons.”

He reached out and slowly ran his hands down to her hips, smiling gently as he looked down at her. "It's okay, Toki." he purred gently, "We're all frustrated... and tired... and..." his gaze lowered and he frowned. "Toki, your femur...!"

She spotted where his eye sockets had drifted, and she tucked her chin slightly towards her chest.
“Ah… Yeah… So here’s the thing. I hit my leg really hard on the side table this morning after you left, and… yeah. My defense isn’t up with as low as my magic is. So… My bones are really, really fragile. More like glass bones instead of glass canon, I guess. It’s just a bruise, I promise. I looked it over when I noticed it.”

Papyrus heaved a sigh and set his hand over it, humming quietly as he released magic to heal it.

Toki sighed as the bruise began to fade and the bone hardened up again. “Thanks Pap. It would have healed on it’s own, you know. There are other monsters who need the healing more than I do.” But still, she doesn’t fight him healing it. It feels good, the healing, and the twins squirm in response to the pleased feeling in her soul. “Mmm…”

He huffed softly and nuzzled her without answering her directly. Once her bruise was healed, he retracted his magic. "I'll get in first.” he murmured. He stripped his tank top off and dipped his fingers into the water. It was hot, but not too hot.

He slowly climbed in and leaned back with a small sigh, before he reached up and offered her his hand.

Toki let him get settled, and then padded to the side of the tub. Offering him a soft look, she accepted his hand and let him keep her balanced as she stepped over the high edge. She reached over to turn the water off, as it was now high enough for them to relax in, and then slowly eased down. Getting seated in the tub was a small chore, but going down was easier than going up was going to be.

She eased herself gently against his chest, pressing her back flush to his rib cage. The water was greatly displaced by the bulge in her middle, and she laughed softly. “Oh sweet gods above, it’s so warm…” The heat from the water felt fantastic, and her bones were practically ice cubes as they pressed back into him. The twins squirmed and stretched, enjoying the heat and letting it be known as they made tiny ripples in the water.

He kissed her skull, happily spooning with her before he set his hands on her stomach and released his magic into her body to make up what he could.

Her middle brightened like a light bulb, the twins greedily devouring what their father put forth. Toki heaves a huge sigh and slumps into him. “Mmm… They take almost more than I can make at this point.” She murmurs softly. “It’s probably safe to say that I’m not going to be able to do much with my magic here soon. We’ve still got four months or so to go, Pap. Provided they keep growing at this rate, of course. It could end up being three or two months- twins are often early.” Their need for magic would only grow. Part of her worried a little bit, about if they’d be able to keep up with it, or if she would be permanently tired and freezing for the rest of her pregnancy. Cae wasn’t going to be able to donate at all now that he was supporting his own, so it would fall to Papyrus more often now. Her worry flitted through her soul aura.

"You cannot use your magic other than what is absolutely necessary..." he told her, stroking her stomach gently to soothe her and the children both.

“I’m starting to see that.” She sighs quietly. “Which sucks, because I really like being able to boil water really fast.” Toki relaxes more into him, her arms coming down to rest along his thighs. Her fingers gently rub over his femurs, more to keep her digits busy than anything else. She can faintly feel the mark where Vikki had shot him. It had healed over nicely, but the fresh bone felt different than the old. “I don’t really know what to do.” She admits quietly. “I need to be able to defend myself, but… I don’t know. Those hell hornets, when they fired off those beams of light… I could feel it sucking my magic, faster than anything else I’d ever done.”
The twins shift in her belly, and one of them nails her in the rib hard enough to make her suck in a breath. “Okay, okay, no more negative talk from me, I get it. Good lord, you two.” Her finger rubs along her lower rib, and she grimaces.

"Boiling water doesn't really take too much magic." he chuckled softly, stroking her stomach gently as he took to humming quietly instead of talking.

The humming and gentle touches soothed them, and she exhaled softly in response. “Ow.” She breathed. Her rib stung something fierce. “Yeah, that’s true. I suppose cooking will be fine enough in small amounts.” She murmurs. Toki shifts, and nestles her head contently on his sternum. The glow of her middle is bright under the water, and the twins shifting within her makes faint ripples between his hands. “Mmm, they’re enjoying the warmth. So am I, really. It’s… nice. Very relaxing.” As tired as she is, she can feel her sockets begin to droop, and actively fights against falling asleep.

"Good. Sleep. Rest until fatigue no longer haunts you." he murmured, "I shall always be here to watch over you."

“Fatigue isn’t what haunts me. Or at least, isn’t the complete cause.” She murmurs back. Toki shifts against him, scooting up slightly and bracing her arms slightly on his raised knees. The position reminds her some of something from a parenting book she’d read somewhere- but it was comfortable enough that she wasn’t in danger of losing feeling in her legs immediately. She flicks her eye lights up to him. “If… I do rest… Will you wake me if you see a nightmare start to set in?”

"If you twitch out of place even once." he promised, kissing her head again.

Toki smiled quietly. “Thank you.” She murmurs. It takes her a moment of wiggling to find the best comfortable spot, but as she gets settled, so to do the twins. They settle high against her ribs, close to her soul, and she relaxes with his hands cradling them. Her sockets drift closed, and she finds herself drifting to the sound of his humming.
Chapter 54

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And now we actually get Han’s things moved along. And some other plot related things- y’know, nothing big. We didn’t really want to do the funeral- mostly because other than being overwhelmingly sad, it wouldn’t really progress any plot.

Don’t forget to visit the blog! http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: RIP Han 2016-2016. Will things improve from here? Or will they continue to get worse?

Only we know <3 Enjoy the chapter.

The funeral had been hell. What fragile peace that Toki had won had proceeded to shatter into a thousand tiny bits when her family brought her into their folds and the crying began all over again. It wasn’t heavy sobs- no, that was her mother’s tears, and her younger brother’s. Toki had long since spent her heavy sobs. No- it was the soft keens of a broken hearted monster mourning with her family.

Most of the cremation was done with everyone there, where all of the monsters and the humans could see. Only a choice few went with- and Asgore came along too. He helped coax the flames to burn hotter- and they got the jars of ashes that same day instead of the weeks that it would normally take to receive such things.

They mourned, and mourned hard. Everyone took a small urn home with them containing parts of Han’s ashes- Even Todd got a small one. Toki’s was settled carefully up onto the mantle of her fireplace, where it wouldn’t be easily reachable by any one who wasn’t a full sized adult.

When it was all said and done, Toki was burnt out. It took her two days to gather the energy to begin to pack Han’s things away. Her mother wanted all of his personal things to keep- which was fine. Toki didn’t think she could handle keeping them, not when seeing and handling them made her want to break down in tears.

Thankfully everyone was helpful. Undyne, Asgore, Grillby, her fiancé and her soon to be brother in law all came trundling upstairs to help her pack. Undyne and Grillby were running the instrument boxes over to the school while Asgore and Papyrus packed the instruments into their cases and the cases into moving boxes. Sans for the most part was tasked with keeping Toki company and keeping her from straining herself in moving things she shouldn’t be. It also kept him from hurting himself or his child- the mother and the little ball of sunshine were fairly fragile considering Cae’s HP level. Toriel and Frisk were watching the wounded for the day. Most everyone was recovering magnificently now- but there were a few still unable to be sent home on their own.

Toki was left sitting on the bed in the instrument room, fiddling with her brother’s favorite and most used violin in her hands, while Cae sat behind her and eased some stress induced knots gently out of her back. The king was settled on the floor, carefully dusting and cleaning the instruments with care before passing them to Papyrus.
Her fiancé was amazing at puzzles- and could fit the most instruments in each box with how he packed them.

She watched him raptly while listening to Cae’s commentary behind her.

“Hmm, do you think Undyne will be able to handle a box this heavy?” Asgore murmured softly, eying the box that the big skeleton was packing.

“She’s really strong, Asgore.” Toki chimed in softly. “She’d probably be offended you thought she couldn’t handle it.” And if she couldn’t, Toki was fairly certain that Grillby could.

“Ah, I know she is strong- but I worry, you know that. I trained her, after all. A teacher worries about his student.” Still, Asgore finishes packing up the next pile of instruments, and passes them over for Papyrus to pack.

Toki watches for a time, and simply hums in response to Asgore. Her fingers stroke over the violin in her grasp, bones making odd noises against the strings. She hums softly, and fingers the well-worn neck, where her brother’s fingers had held. “Hey… Pap? Would you like Han’s violin?”

His effortless packing came to a stop as he looked to her sharply. "His... A-Are you sure?” he asked.

“I am.” Her eye lights are soft as she flicks her gaze down to the worn instrument. It was well cared for, perfectly tuned, and still sounded good. A soft smile tugs at her mouth. “Maybe you can teach the twins to play with it if it won’t fit you.” It was sized for a human, after all. She strokes the sides of it once more, and sighs through her nasal cavity.

Asgore watches on silently, gaze flicking back and forth between the two.

“Han used to say that the older the violin, the sweeter the music.” She murmurs softly, mostly to herself. He’d mostly used it as an innuendo, spurring her on that while she wasn’t getting younger, her age wouldn’t be an issue for someone who truly liked her. “But yes. I would like for you to have it. You know how to care for an instrument, and I know you would treat it right.”

He smiled gently and scooted over on his knees to give her a soft kiss on the head. "I will treasure it like no other instrument," he purred.

Toki smiled up at him and gently stroked his jaw. “Good.” She purrs softly. “I know you will.” She shifts, and reaches to the side to snag its case. She packs it away carefully, and then nestles it on the bed next to her. “I’ll leave it here so it’s not accidentally packed up.” Though the case was telltale that it wasn’t a school instrument. The case was worn, with stickers and pictures stuck and taped to it.

“Hey punks! No kissing and bein’ cute while there’s work to do!” The fish woman flexes into the room and scoops up a big box. It’s shoved into Grillby’s arms, nearly knocking the fire elemental back out of the room as he appears behind Undyne.

Grillby looks slightly out of breath, his flames expanding and contracting with his heavy breathing. Elementals can’t sweat, or he surely would be soaked. “Undyne, they’re well within their rights to be affectionate.” He admonishes. “They are engaged after all.”

Quinn nodded in confirmation at Toki’s words before he looked to Undyne. "I get to be cute if I want to, just like you with Alphys!” he countered.

“But we’re cute in private!” Undyne huffs and crosses her arms. “I’m too tough to be cute in public.”
“Too tough, hm?” Toki’s sockets glimmer slightly, and she nudges Pap a little bit before wiggling her brow. “C’mere, Undyne. I want to show you something before you run off again.” Too tough her tailbone. The big fish woman was easier to melt than an ice cream in Grillby’s hands.

“Eh?” She squints at the skeleton warily, but does as requested. She pads closer, carefully stepping around boxes and bony legs, and perches next to Papyrus. “What do you want?”

Toki snags her hand, and guides it to her middle. There is a flutter of feet under a massive webbed hand, and Toki watches Undyne’s fins flutter in response.

Her eye dilates from its usual slit, and it practically sparkles as she coos. The pads of her fingers stroke over the wiggling lumps, and she coos again in admiration. Undyne liked many things- and she had a soft spot concerning children. “Awww, the guppies are swimming! Hello in there! It’s your auntie Undyne~”

“Too tough to be cute, huh?” It was like a piranha was fawning over her middle, really, and Toki was both unnerved by it and amused.

“Oh fuck you,” Sharp teeth are bared at her, and Undyne flushes and snatches her hand away. “You’re lucky I cant thump a pregnant skeleton, or you’d get Gib-smacked.”

“Oh gods, who let you watch NCIS?”

Cae and Aliquam both began to laugh.

Asgore echoed them, chortling heartily.

Undyne flares her fins at Toki and hisses, mock-angry as she rattles the bones of her fins at her.

Toki guffaws, but curls her fingers into Aliquam’s shirt, just perchance they actually managed to anger the fish monster into an actual rage.

Undyne huffs eventually, collects a box, and then pads for the door. “Gonna have to punch a fuckin’ wall to feel tough again. Damn guppies.”

“Everyone has to have their weakness,” Toki giggles, watching Undyne draw Grillby out after her. “Aww, I probably shouldn’t tease her too much. Sometimes I think she really wants to flatten me.”

“She has always been an easily flustered child.” The king chuckles in response, moving to take over packing while Papyrus takes a moment for his mate. “Does she truly scare you?”

“Sometimes.” Toki admits. “She reminds me of a shark sometimes. She’s a nice lady- but she is unintentionally intimidating sometimes.” And given the fragile state of her bones, Undyne thumping her, even mockingly, would probably be very bad. She already bore some blooming bruises from running into things while trying to help move things. Hence why she was being babysat.

“Well if anyone knows anything about being careful with themselves, it's me.” Cae assured her.

"And I know damn well I love you too much to stand by and let that happen." Quinn told her as he smooched her cheek affectionately.

Toki chuckles and smooches Papyrus back. “You both are very sweet. I do recall you threatened to make her into fish sticks if she intentionally tried to scare me, didn’t you Pap?”

Asgore bleated out a very goat like laugh. “Oh Stars, did he really?”
“He did. It was very sweet of him.” Toki grins. Even if it had been the most adorable threat she had ever heard.

"Nyeh heh heh~" Papyrus laughed quietly as he nuzzled Toki. "Well I don’t plan on letting anyone hurt you, Toki. Even his royal fluffiness will have to get through me first.”

“I wouldn’t dream of hurting your mate,” Asgore chuckled softly.

Toki pressed a kiss to Pap’s skull, and folded her hands over her belly. She doesn’t say that he can’t promise for nothing to hurt her- because promising such isn’t possible. Not with Humans Against Monsters still around. “I know you won’t.” She smiles gently instead of voicing her doubts. “I love you lots, you silly skeleton.”

"I love you too." he cooed happily, pecking her cheek a few more times. “And I love them as well.” Her abdomen is the next thing peppered with kisses as he snuggled her.

Everything was lighthearted despite sadness of the days prior. The group spent hours laughing and chatting in the room as Undyne and Grillby toted boxes back and forth. They even tackled her brother’s room proper, and everything was packed up and put away shortly. They had migrated back to the instrument room with the instruments that they had pilfered from Han’s room, and had taken time to get those packed too.

Riiiiiiiiiiing.

Toki perked as her phone went off. She shifts, leaning to the side to dig her phone out of her back pocket. The loud ringing echoed, and she was quick to answer it. It wasn’t a number she knew- but then and again, a lot of people were calling and offering their condolences for her loss. “Hello?”

"I’ve heard about the casualties, Miss Nara... I do apologize for your losses." The voice then chuckled, "Unfortunately, I realize you must already know that this is far from over."

Her voice tightened. “You apologize?” Confusion briefly flits through her tone, before the lights disappear from her sockets. “Who is this?” She demands.

Asgore goes quiet, and motions the skeletons to do the same. His ears prick, lifting as he listens in on her conversation.

"I need not say who I am. I assume you’ve already had a hint, my dear." The voice spoke with a calm tone, their words moving quick to the point, spoken smoothly.

“Cruelty.” The lights in her eyes flicked on and narrowed. She rumbled. “How dare you call me after what you and your people did.” She snarls. “Why are you doing this? What on earth could possibly have made you desire to do this? To create Humans Against Humanity?”

"There is a reason they were cast underground a millennia ago. You fail to realize that they were never destined to return, that they were cast from our world to live in the result of their sins upon humanity."
“And just what sins did they commit?” She hisses. “Just what gave you the right to decide that they deserved death? Hm? Monsters are kinder than any human I’ve ever met. None of them deserve this—none of them deserve the genocide that you keep trying to commit, Cruelty.”

"But this is what you think, reincarnate. I've been around for far longer than you have. I remember their sins. They know what they did."

“Anything that they did, it hardly garnered genocide and imprisonment.” She hissed. Toki took a deep breath and heaved a sigh through her nasal cavity. Her fingers clenched tight over her knee. “You don’t have to do this, Cruelty. People can change— you aren’t defined by your soul color. You can choose to be kind. You can call this off, disband your cultists, and turn yourself over. You can choose the right path.”

"Oh, don't get me wrong, my dear kindness... I tried. I was kind for so long. So many lifetimes... I was kind and generous right alongside you." He chuckled. "And as a result, I was cast out. I seemed to disgust the monsters and humans alike once they realized who I was... You failed to stay at my side. Just like now, you chose the monsters over our love. So in my eyes, you are another chess piece on my board. And you're in check, Kindness."

Toki frowned. “I’ve never met you before. I don’t even KNOW you to have ever left your side.” Unless one of her exes… But she had never dated anyone who had shown any sort of cruel tendency. “I’m in check, hm?” Her teeth parted in a ghastly snarl that had Asgore stepping away warily. “Fucking bring it. You might not have pulled the trigger, you asshole, but you sent the man who killed my brother. By proxy, his death is on your head. You leave the monsters out of it.”

"The monsters have always been a part of our feud, Kindness. I wish it weren't so. But not even the love you felt in your past lives remained." After a moment, he sighed. "So be it. You have fourteen days. That's two weeks, to cease all communication with the Monsters and send them back to the underground. If you do not comply, you will not like what I will do to you. Perhaps I will give you a taste of the betrayal I felt from you? Either way, I truly do hope you comply. They do not belong on our world. They've taken too much from us, and it would be far too easy for you to die again in this lifetime, Kindness. Our game is far too new for that yet."

"If you call the police, they will be silenced. Including humans into our fight will leave them just as dead as your brother. That nice officer- Mark, if I recall- would be a shame to lose. He has a family you know. This is your final warning " the line then went dead.

Toki’s finger’s clenched over her phone as the line went dead, and the force of her grip cracked one of her weakened finger bones with a loud snap. She stared ahead of her, sockets black and body tense, not even noticing the grip that was denting her phone and her hand.

Two weeks. Two weeks. She had a horrible, horrible feeling that something was going to happen in two weeks. Her insides churned with anxiety and anger, and her lack of magic was the only thing that kept her bones from roiling with heat. She wouldn’t give into his demands. No- not at all. Cease all communication? She had two monsters growing in her belly- there was no way to cease it. She was engaged to a monster. But… The other civilians would be in danger.

They needed to evacuate them. But where? Where would they be safe?

It occurred to her, sitting there with glowing marrow dripping from the crack in her fingers and slathering her phone in glowing color, that the only place safe was probably the Castle. But how could she voice that? How could she suggest that?

Aliquam slowly scooted closer. "Toki?" he then reached up and gently gripped her shoulder.
“Two weeks.” She croaks. Her phone is still clenched in hand, her dark sockets staring at the glow slowly soaking it. “Two weeks. He gave me two weeks to either cut all communications and send you all back Underground, or… He didn’t say. But… I don’t imagine it will be good.”

Asgore eases forwards as well, his large hand coming to cradle hers. His fluffy fingers gently tried to ease her fingers off of their death grip on her cellular device. “Let go of the phone, Toki. Please— you’ll hurt your hand more.”

Numbly, her fingers released it, and the phone dropped onto her leg with a faint clatter. Green magic and marrow dripped from her fingers like slime.

Aliquam took her hand and kissed it gently as he released healing magic to soothe her gently, “That’s enough. We need to cure you of your magi-drain.” he told her, before he glanced to the door.

Grillby returned again, to take the last box. Undyne wasn’t far behind him. He paused, seeing the healing wound on her hand, and frowned at the three skeletons and the king in the room. “What happened?” He asked.

“Did you hit your hand on something?” Undyne blinked around Grillby’s shoulder.

Toki shook her head and tucked her chin towards her chest. “Cruelty,” she murmurs. “Cruelty called. I… have two weeks to get you all back into the Underground or… or he’s going to do something. He didn’t say.” She murmurs quietly, not bothering to mention her need for magic. Papyrus could spout that off.

“Grillby, she’s been suffering from Magi-Drain and hasn’t listened to me when I told her to go find you.” Aliquam was not ashamed to say he was tattling on her.

Grillby frowned at her.

“Please don’t, Grillby.” She was in no mood for a lecture. “Give me magic if you wish, but don’t feel obligated to. Not with the shit that’s going down. I don’t… Know what to do.” She mutters quietly.

Grillby heaves a sigh and comes closer to the bed. He eases his hands down onto her shoulders, given that Papyrus has one of her hands captive, and then begins to fill the deep well of her magic from his own ocean of stores. “You should have come to me sooner.” He murmurs. “Papyrus, you should have brought her to me regardless of her fussing. Magi-drain on a gravid monster is not good. It teeters upon the edge of malnourish both the carrier and the unborn. Usually it is not a problem. Magic production is increased during pregnancy- but twins sap that more than a single one does.”

Papyrus ducked his head with a sigh.

Asgore heaves a sigh through his nose and shares a look with Undyne. “Captain,” he murmurs. “Your thoughts?”

The fish woman looked contemplative, a dark frown on her face. “If this Cruelty punk plans to cause problems, it’s likely he’ll target here. I’m sure as hell not abandoning Toki to this crazy person’s wrath. But… There’s too many civilians here. There’s no guarantee that if we took Toki elsewhere that he wouldn’t still target here regardless.”

“That’s what I thought.” The king mutters softly. “Then we’ll need to send the civilians underground, won’t we…?”

“I will start the alert to initiate the evacuation.” Cae offered Toki a comforting pat and hauled himself up from the bed. He wore a frown on his face. “I’ll see that that everyone’s got cars in working order.”

“Yes please, Sans.” Asgore nods. He draws himself upward, swelling with all of his kingly nature, and puffs a breath of hot air through his nose. It had been a long time since he’d had to put wartime actions into place. He no longer had the army that he used to. Everyone was retired or no longer alive. Of his army, only the Royal guard remained. “I want everyone who isn’t part of the Royal Guard back at the castle and the Underground. Undyne- ready the guards. I want twenty-four hour surveillance around the compound and the city walls. Armed surveillance. Everyone needs to travel in threes, if not in sets of four.”

“Yes sir.” She salutes him, and is off out the bedroom door and back down the stairs after taking the final box of instruments.

Asgore sighs. He glances to Grillby. “You’ll be expected to leave with the rest of the civilians too, Grillby.”

“I’m only going if Sans is going.” And the chance of Sans going was very small, given that Papyrus would stay with Toki, and Toki would be staying here. If she went with them, there was the chance the coming attack would simply be directed right to the castle itself. He eases more magic into the woman below his hands, and sighs heavily. “It has been a long time since I have fought, but I do remember how to, my King.”

“It has been a long time since either of us fought, general. Either way…” The king simply shakes his head, and then flicks a look to Papyrus. “Papyrus. You’re to guard Toki. These humans are not above underhanded tactics. You will need to be observant. You are to stay with her at all times. Is that understood?”

"Yes sir, your majesty." Aliquam replied with a salute.

"I'm not going anywhere." Sans growled softly.

"In an ideal situation, both you and Toki would be tucked away with the rest of the civilians to protect your young.” The king sighs. “But…”

“But I’m a risk.” Toki mutters softly. “I’m only one woman, Asgore. I understand. There’s a high chance that if I went with the civilians, the castle could be targeted. I… It’s best that I am here, where no one else is at as much risk. You can’t risk all of your people for one person. I’m not selfish enough to ever ask that of you.”

“We wont leave you on your own, Toki.” Asgore sighed. “I will be remaining alongside all of you. If this organization thinks it can continue it’s heinous acts, it will find that it is sorely wrong.”

Grillby smoothed his fingers gently over her shoulders, finally feeling a change in her magic levels. His own stores were nearly a third down, but hers were starting to regenerate more on her own now that she wasn’t running on fumes. He pumps a bit more in, and then draws his hands away. “Your magic is now regenerating at a more normal rate. You simply got too low for your systems to handle on their own.” His gaze flicks to Papyrus. “If she gets that low again, you take her to me, or any other monster you trust to do a donation, Papyrus. No matter her fuss- you do it, or you risk your children’s health.”

He gave a nod. "I'll bring her kicking and screaming if needed." he murmured, before he nipped the base of her horn.
He got a face full of sparks for his nip. She chuffed at him, and flailed her fingers vaguely towards his face. “If you think you can just throw me over your shoulder like a brute, you’ll have another thing coming, Pap.” Though tossing her over his shoulder wouldn’t work on account of the growth in her middle. But the statement holds true regardless.

“As your mate, he is entitled to care for you if you are being too stupid to do it yourself.” The fire elemental gave her a solid flick in the middle of her skull once he was certain her defense was back where it was meant to be. Grillby huffed, and glanced to Sans. “I’m coming with you to help you get things started now that I’m not needed here.”

Asgore straightened with a deep huff. “I must go inform the monsters in the village. There will be guards outside your home shortly. Please, try to stay inside of the private compound that surrounds your home proper. Your apiary will be acceptable as well, once we have a guard set around it.” With that, the King took his leave, leaving the two pairs of parents in the main room. He had things to do—many, many things.

Sans sighed with a tight smile and nodded to Grillby, "Come on, Grillby." he murmured to him, before he flashed a less strained smile to Toki. "Tokes, take care okay? I’ve got cars to prep."

Toki offers him a faint salute, and gains her feet. “Mhm. I’ll try.” She murmured. How she would do that, she didn’t know. Anxiously bubbled up inside of her, churning like a storm within her chest and soul. When Grillby and Sans are gone, leaving only Toki and Papyrus there, she turns to him and gives him a troubled look. Her mouth opens, closes, opens again, and then seals shut a final time before Toki shakes her head. Her fingers are stuffed into her pockets, and she proceeds to pace out into the hall to start, well, pacing.

Papyrus followed her after a moment. "Toki, hang on..."

“Hang on to what, Papyrus?” Her shoulders hunched, and she continued pacing, heading down the stairs towards the main room. From there she paced wall to wall. “I don’t know what to hang on to anymore. Cruelty is set on destroying it all and killing or locking you all away and I don’t know how to help stop it, and he’s going to come here and make me pay for my apparent betrayal from lifetimes ago and I don’t know what to do.” Was that panic escalating in her voice? Why yes. Yes it was.

"Hang on to me. To Caeruleus. Grillby, Asgore, Undyne, Wolfen, Todd." His arms boxed her in, bringing her pacing to a halt as he tucked her tightly into his chest. "Everyone." He murmured.

“I’m afraid,” She admits as she tucks her face into his shoulder. “I’m scared and I’m angry and I’m terrified and it’s a horrible, horrible mix that makes me feel like I’m going to explode. I don’t want to lose anyone else, Pap. I don’t want to lose you or Cae or Grillby or Undyne or… Or anyone else. I can’t handle another funeral.” She whispers. Tears bead in her eyes again and they trickle into his shirt. “I can’t, Pap.”

He held her tightly, slowly picking her up and walking with her to the couch. "You can't... That's why we're not going to have any more... we're going to win against them, they will not take any more of us.”

“You’re always so optimistic…” She murmurs with a quiet sniffle. The couch was a good idea, but sitting upright didn’t appeal to her very much. The couch wasn’t wide enough to spoon either.

“There’s no guarantee…” She whispers softly. “The only thing we can hope is that Frisk keeps their promise and saves daily. If… if something happens, they can load and we can try something else or run if we have to.”

Toki wasn’t the boss heart of bravery. Running was not something she was above doing, like any person with common sense. She sniffs quietly and shakes her head. “I really wish I could lay on you like I used to,” She whispers softly. “It’s silly, but I always felt so safe like that…”

"Who says you can’t?” He set her down carefully, and then took off his shirt. Ribs bare for the world to see, he then got settled on his back on the couch and opened his arms for her. He wiggled one of his brows, a roguish smile being flashed to her. "Come on, you know where to go~"

Know she did. “I never thought of that.” She mused. A soft, watery chuckle escapes her, and she carefully straddles him to start. She eases herself down, resting her chest to his, and leaving her belly to dangle almost weightlessly in the open space of his abdomen. Toki stretched out on his chest, nestling her arms into their usual spot while her legs tangled pleasantly with his. “Ah- holy shit.” She mutters. “Oh my gods, this feels so good…” Her back didn’t have the weight on it like it usually did. She could feel knots and tension ebbing off slightly, and she basked in it with a pleased sound. “Mmm…”

He cooed happily into her ear and reached up, pressing his fingers into her back gently as he gently kissed what he could of her skull and horns. "Nyeh heh heh heh~"

“Mmm… A little harder? Yes, right there. Ah, that knot’s been there for weeks.” Holy shit that felt amazing. Toki slumped into him quietly, sockets flicking idly over to the television. Her stressed tears were ebbing as he soothed her as best he could. It wasn’t gone- but she was calmer now. Being in a familiar safe position helped with that most certainly. She wiggled her fingers. Toki couldn’t reach the remote, but Stripe could.

With her newly borrowed magic, the green queen bee was summoned. She fetched the remote, set it next to Toki’s hands, and then proceeded to drape herself over Papyrus’ skull and buzz contently. She tapped the bridge of his nose affectionately with her foreleg. She had missed her television buddy.

He chuckled happily and reached up, his hand blanketing the queen bee effortlessly as he pet her for a short moment. "Hello, my darling Stripe." he cooed, before he returned his attention to Toki with a well articulated treatment of massages, caresses, and kind words that were muttered almost by the sound of his soul beat rather than his voice.

Listening to his soul beat below his bare ribs was soothing in many different ways. Toki felt her sockets drooping as she listened to the soft thrumming pulses, feeling his hands kneading and massaging at the ectoplasmic flesh that made up her lower back. The twins, hanging weightless from her middle, twitched and squirmed in response to the slow easing of her stress levels. She took the remote and turned the television on, settling the channel on some cartoons. The sounds of shenanigans were amusing. Almost lazily, Toki stroked her fingers over the side of his ribs as she listened and watched. "I love you, you know that?" She murmured. "You are my world."

Stripe buzzed in a pleased way and settled in to watch the television with her skeletal hive mates.

"I love you more, do you know that?" he purred, stroking her head gently before he leaned in and kissed the base of her horns softly. "Nyeh heh heh~"

“Nuh-uh. I love you more.” She quirks a soft smile and nuzzles up into his kiss. Toki angles her skull so her horns wont jab him, and then carefully presses a kiss to his sternum. The long scar that wrapped around her left horn was no longer as sensitive, so it didn’t sting when she pressed it into his kisses. “I love you. All of you- from your silly ‘nyehs’ to your happy laughs. I love you- all of you.” Her fingers curl into his ribs, clinging to him solidly. “You are my rock, Pap. I’d be lost without you.”
"Well I can't beat that." He purred happily, hugging her tight.

Toki kissed his chest gently, and smiled. “You don’t need to beat it.” She chuckles quietly. Shifting herself slightly, the skeleton scoots up as much as her belly will allow, and presses a soft kiss to the bottom of his jaw. The twins shift in her belly and their feet kick at his lower ribs, booting them firmly with hard little feet as they swish and turn inside of her.

He chuckled gently and kissed her happily. "Nyeh heh heh heh, oh well." he cooed gently, before he grunted and winced sharply at the kicks. "Ngh..."

Toki blinked at his wince, and tilted her head. “What- Oh! Did they kick you, love?”

Sure enough, another couple of kicks landed roughly against his ribs as the twins squabbled for space.

"A-Ah OW!" he winced and turned her soul blue to lift her up a little bit. "Nngh... They were attacking my ribs." he murmured, rubbing them gently.

Toki squeaked as her soul was made blue. She didn’t flail as she was lifted, but she did proceed to laugh gently. ‘Oh goodness, Pap. That’s what their kicks feel like from the inside. Kinda painful at times, isn’t it?” She was probably used to how hard they kicked. Toki squirmed, and scooted back down, so her middle wouldn’t brush his ribs or his pelvis. “You can let me down now. They shouldn’t kick you from here.”

"A-Ah, sorry!" he carefully moved and put her down on the couch. "Sorry..." he rubbed his ribs again.

Well, she hadn’t meant for him to set her on the couch proper, but whatever made him happy. He’d been fine until she’d scooted up- she had hoped to have gotten to stay in the same position. Toki rubbed her fingers gently over where they had kicked him and gave him a wry smile. “It’s alright, Pap. I didn’t think they would turn around and nail you. That’s about what they do to my ribs on a daily basis. I’m used to it- but I forgot you have sensitive ribs.” She rubs gently to soothe where the twins had kicked. “Is that better?”

He smiled gently and sighed. "It is, thank you." he purred, leaning to kiss her head.

She smiles slightly and sighs softly. “Silly jellybeans,” she pats her middle with a sigh. “Mommy was comfortable until you went and caused mischief for daddy. Naughty, naughty jellybeans.”

Toki receives a sharp jab for her efforts, and grunts softly.

He chuckled at that and sighed. "Oh well...

She gives him a slightly hopeful smile. “Maybe another time when they’re not as fussy- ow. Ah. They’re squabbling over space. I guess they must be getting pretty tight in there. We’re…. Gosh… heading towards seven months now, I think.” She blinks slowly. “Anyways, that was a really nice position. But definitely I have to remain settled lower so my middle doesn’t bump your bones.”

He nodded and snagged her close into a hug so he could kiss her.

She settled back against him with a content sound and pressed a soft kiss to his mouth. Toki sighed softly, and stroked his cheek, before chortling as Stripe came bumbling down to settle on her belly. The bee padded until a kick startled her. Her wings ruffled upwards, and she pressed down lightly on the foot prodding her.
“I love you.” She murmured softly to Papyrus. A soft sigh escaped her. “We’ll handle whatever comes, right? Together?” Two weeks wasn’t long to prepare for whatever HAM was planning. But... they could manage.

"Together." he promised, kissing her gently before steadily adjusting so that she was once more nestled into his form. "Let them come. With you, we cannot be stopped."

“All of us are strong together.” Once more nestled back as she had been, Toki settled down with a pleased buzz. Stripe, having been dislodged and jostled, grumpily settled on the back of Toki’s legs, and began to idly knead the back of her thighs.

As anxious as this tended to make her, Toki knew they would be okay. They were all strong, they were all loyal to each other- they could watch each others back. And if she rested well enough, she could play her role as a shield.

Toki, with anger simmering below the surface of her soul, settled down to rest and relax with Papyrus as she worked to stockpile and build the stores of her magic as best she could. She was going to need it.
One week into the wait had left Nara Village a ghost town in the literal sense. Every civilian and guard with children had left for the castle. The castle had been shored up, the front gates locked and sealed, leaving no way into the Underground. It also left Asgore, Undyne, the Gaster brothers, Toki, Grillby, and a massive platoon of guards locked outside.

There still had been no sign of Tenebris, and many feared the worst, but the brothers knew their father better than that, and held onto their faith that he was alive.

The sounds of village life were suddenly gone. The nights were nearly silent, save the noise of armor clanking on the guards. Everyone was in their armor during their shift. Asgore even took to wearing his armor once more.

The only one without armor was Toki. Even Undyne had her armor- heavily built, full bodied plate armor was hefty and nearly impregnable.

Toki was on total compound lockdown. The front drive way had been blocked off with trucks, and other than Grillby’s bar and her apiary, she wasn’t allowed out. Toki was generally a homebody, but she wasn’t even allowed to go walking the streets of the city without an armed guard. She was beginning to feel cooped up, caged in the walls of her private compound, and the semi-closed off field of her apiary.

She had jarred that weeks honey by day two. By day three she had paced the compound walls. By day four, she was damn near losing her mind. She could only pace the same walls for so long before it began to grow irritating.

By the end of day five, Toki was angry. Her anger just kept simmering and boiling and roiling- and there was little she could do to stop it. Meditating, relaxing, distracting herself- none of it worked to release the anger that boiled inside of her. She was snappy and irritable, sparking her teeth at monsters when they got too insistent with her. No one escaped- not even Papyrus. He bore the brunt of her sour mood, taking her grumbling with a good-natured grain of salt.

Despite her mood being the most sour he's ever seen it, Papyrus had held close to her, showing her the most support he could provide. The days of silence had affected him as well, the quiet scaring him once in a while, but he knew that Caeruleus had the worst of it. His brother was almost always in Grillby's company, and showed severe paranoia when he was absent.
It spilled over on day six, and over the most inane reason. She dropped a glass of lemonade while she was out walking the yard. It was her favorite glass- and she made an irritated noise as her magic roiled inside of her. Papyrus had stepped inside to fix them sandwiches so they could eat outside- and she had stumbled over a stone in the yard and the glass had shattered at her feet.

Maybe it was a combination of pregnancy hormones and moodiness alongside the trauma and the pain that HAM had caused, but…

It made her snap.

The guards patrolling the outside wall gave her an alarmed look as her buzzing filled the air. She didn’t even have the chance to stop it, before two massive shadows fell over her.

The larger hell hornet fell before her, landing heavily. It- she, her mind supplied- regarded the broken glass apathetically, nudging it with the spiny carapace of her foot. The hornet gazed at her blandly, the glass clinking against hard chitin. The big beast gave a hearty chuff, puffing air over her and over the pile of glass that had angered the skeleton so.

Toki swallowed nervously, staring down a horned hornet that stood easily taller than she did, but nearly thrice that in length. Her anger simmered still, but she could feel the hornets feeding on it, draining it away from her like poison drawn from a wound. They drained her magic no more than her flaming bees did so long as they weren’t using those horrible energy blasts.

The smaller of the two was about the size of a pony to her, and she bounced in place with the energy of a young beast. The hornet shoved forwards, butting her head into Toki’s side with a warm clack of sharp jaws, and proceeded to nuzzle her affectionately.

Hesitantly, Toki rubbed her finger bones through the blazing mane of fire as the smaller hornet nuzzled into her side like an affectionate hound. “Well… hello there…?”

The guards on the outside wall looked on with alarm, but really could do nothing. They had heard the tales of the decimation they had caused. They were understandable wary, but there was little that they could do to make them go away.

When he went in to make some sandwiches, he didn't expect to be interrupted by the booming sound from outside. Immediately going into guard mode, he ran outside expecting a fight, instead he came to see his mate among the company of what they had long deemed 'Hell Hornets'. Two of them, in fact.

"T-Toki!" he exclaimed after taking a moment to find his voice.

“I’m okay!” She calls back. She stumbles slightly as the smaller one nudges her again. “I, ah, lost my temper and they sort of… appeared.” He would no doubt notice the glimmers of glass shards littering the ground around her bare feet.

The largest hornet swings a massive head to Papyrus, and large jaws clack at him threateningly.

“Ahh, no! He’s good, he’s good!” Toki frantically waves the big one’s attentions back to her. “He’s mine. Don’t hurt him.”

The big hornet eyes her, and then huffs sharply. It makes a dismissive buzz, and begins to steadily take stock of the compound, wandering around on strong legs, ectoplasmic abdomen bobbing with each step. The ground trembles under it’s surprisingly large weight.

Papyrus warily approached, his shoulders tense as he observed them. The smaller one didn’t seem aggressive, but the large one had turned to him with the intent to harm. "Aren’t they heavy on your magic?" he asked as he snagged an arm around her and tugged her protectively to his chest.

Toki went with him willingly, leaning into his build as the smaller of the two proceeded to invade their personal space. She nearly tripped as her lower set of ram like horns hooked on Toki’s leg and nearly took her leg out from under her. “Only a little bit more than Stripe does.” She says softly. She runs her fingers through the green mane of fire, and strokes over the hard bone like structure of the skull. “It was the energy beams that did me in last time. They’re also… I don’t know. It feels like they’re eating my anger, or sucking it out of me.” He would read it in her aura that she was already much calmer. Her tone of voice was less hostile, and she sounded more and more tired and close to defeated as the wind was dragged out of her sails.

The bigger of the two approached again, nudging the smaller one out of the way, before shoving a large face into Papyrus’ own. Her mouth dropped open, double hinged jaws dropping down. She could easily fit his skull in her mouth and crush it like a pebble. Instead, she huffed, taking in his scent more like an animal might instead of an insect.

He could tell and he smiled warily up at the thing huffing in his face. "I'm glad they're helping you then." he purred happily.

“She.” Toki murmured faintly. "They both feel… female, almost. As close to female as their kind can get. They’re not… quite full queens, almost. I think… They’re too small? They’re… well, queens of my hive, I think. If I am understanding her thoughts right. She doesn’t think very slowly for me to understand completely."

The hornet gave Papyrus a steady look, and then rumbled an aggressive warning in his face to test his response. Thick green liquid dribbled from the inside of her mouth, and sizzled slightly against the grass.

The littler hornet padded around to sniff at his boot, and butted her broad skull against his thigh in a request for attention.

He reached down and pet the smaller hornet gently before he summomed a bone and brought it up, gently bopping the larger hornet on the nose with the round part of the end. "There will be none of that, missy." he said sternly.

A plume of fire is snorted from her mouth as she jerks her head back. She rears up a little bit, leering down at him through extended sockets, and clicking her mandibles in thought. It doesn’t take her long to come to her decision, and her gaze flicks over to Toki.

Toki grimaced and clutched her skull as a flood of thoughts hit her like a tide wave and made her wobble in Papyrus’ grasp. “A-aha, ow, okay, s-slow down there. I can’t understand- it’s too much.”

The hornet gave her a disapproving look, and slowed the sensations down.

“A-ah…” Her skull was left ringing from the sensation. Toki cradles her temple with a wince. “I’m going to need to get used to that. You’re louder than Stripe… Ah… She likes you, so that’s good. If she didn’t, she might… have eaten your arm?” She looks alarmed at that. “There will be no arm eating for anyone, or I won’t let you out. No negotiations there.”

The large sockets narrow down at Toki, but the queen does tilt her head in stubborn submission. She chuffs, steals the bone from his hand, and then trundles off back to her examination with her prize.

Well good enough, better the bone than his arm.
The smaller hornet, however, is right back nudging at his hip and making excited buzzing sounds as she nips at him insistently for more attention.

He looked at Toki with a smile, then turned and knelt to pet the hornet seeking his attention.

Toki laughed softly, and cradled her hand to her eye. This was not the time to be getting a headache of any sort, particularly with Tenebris being missing. Thankfully, the ache in her head seemed to be fully internal and towards the front, so it was more like just sore bone instead of a magic problem.

Kneeling was probably a terrible idea. The smaller hornet took this as an invitation, and proceeded to head-butt him square in the chest to knock him flat. She then clamored into his lap, and buzzed happily with her wings fluttering faintly.

"OOF!" He went down quickly, flopped mostly flat out in the grass.

Toki giggled softly and carefully settled down into the grass near him, which put them a little bit away from the spot that had the broken remnants of her lemonade glass. "The little one seems to be very… affectionate?" Having been mentioned, the littler hornet squirmed enough so she could plop her horned head into what little of Toki’s lap that wasn’t taken over by the swell of her belly. Obligingly, Toki stroked along her mandibles, carefully investigating the surprisingly sharp bone teeth that interlocked with the ones on the skull proper.

Papyrus glanced up to Toki with affection dancing in his sockets, before he sighed and smiled. "You're even more beautiful from this angle." he cooed.

Toki flushed warmly, and let out a genuine laugh. She hadn’t laughed like that since before her confinement to the family compound proper. “You are a flirt, Papyrus. I probably look like a beach ball with a head and limbs from that angle.” Not quite a beach ball, but it did look like she was smuggling something obviously under her shirt. “Hardly flirt worthy material,” she teases gently.

The big hornet stretched between them is ultimately content with where she was. She was getting scratches and attention- and she could turn and press her sharp nose gently against the flexible swell to buzz softly for the twins within.

"Well, you're still a pretty beach ball." He purred happily, petting the hornet splayed out on top of him.

"Thank you, Pap. I’m your pretty beach ball, and I hope you enjoy the view as best you can. You did after all say you wanted me forever. There’s no take backs.” She smiles warmly and briefly fingers her engagement ring. Toki scoots closer, and then carefully eases herself down so she can lay flat. It’s not, by any means, comfortable- but it lets her relax back with him into the grass. Peace of mind floods her, and her next sigh is deep and tranquil. “Whatever the big one is doing, she’s taking as much of my anger and stress away as she can.” She murmured softly. “I’m… I’m really sorry I’ve been such a raging bitch to you and everyone else. I’ll try not to do it anymore, yeah?"

The larger hornet wanders back finally, and snaps the bone into splinters, before spitting it out. She huffs, and settles behind the duo. Her wings stretch out, casting translucent green shade over the both of them as they lounge in the warmth of the sunlight.

"It's quite alright," he replied with a hum, before he shifted the best he could to rest his head in her lap. "But I am pleased to see you have found a new outlet for your fury." he purred gently.

Her fingers found his skull, and she propped herself up a little bit so she could actually see him over the dome of her belly. She found aid when a large chitin-covered leg pressed in behind her and created a stiff surface for her to lean against. Toki offered a hesitant smile up to the larger hornet, receiving an amused look in turn, and then began to gently massage the crown of his skull. “I shouldn’t have taken out my anger on any of you.” She says softly. “And it’s not so much an outlet as they’re literally eating it out of me instead of eating magic. It’s… weird. But I think it’s intentional. I’m not complaining though. I don’t like being angry.” She very rarely got angry. Nara were generally level headed most times.

The smaller hornet shifts and plonks her head onto Papyrus’ chest. A long green tongue flicks out and licks the bottom of his jaw, coating him in warm, brimstone scented saliva.

"You couldn't control it, but it doesn’t matter. What matters is that you now have a good venting method." he told her with a smile. It lasted until he was licked, and then he cringed and groaned, "Eeeuuuuugh!"

Toki laughed softly, and gently fluttered her hand to make the hornet leave him be. She scrubbed off the saliva, and wiped it into the grass. “I think the little one likes you.” She chuckles. “But I suppose so. It’s… nice not to feel so angry. I felt like a ticking time bomb.” She admits. Toki shifts, adjusting herself against the large hornet’s legs, and then resumes massaging his skull. “Hey, Pap? You can summon things right? I remember the skull you summoned last year. You used it to clear a path in the snow if I remember right.”

Toki just shook her head as the excitable hell beast took off like a puppy in a field.

"Oof." he rubbed his chest once he was free and looked up at her. "Well yes... Alright." he slowly sat up for a moment and his eye glowed, before after a moment two large cat heads appeared. One of them vocalizing like one would hear from a puma, the other rumbling gently in a idle purr.

“I didn’t mean you had to summon them,” Toki chuckled softly, eying them curiously. “You named them, right?” She couldn’t remember what he had called them, but she thought he had called them by name.

The large Hell Hornet buzzed at the cat skulls, and shifted slightly to defend the skeletons if the need arose.

"I did, yes." he whistled gently and they turned, lowering to nuzzle him gently. He reached up and pet the one who had spoke up, tracing marks over her face. "This is Bastet." he told her, before reaching and stroking the other, who purred loudly in response. "And this is Neko."

“Bastet and Neko?” Toki smiled slightly. She lifted a hand and offered her palm for them to investigate and rub on as they liked. “They’re really cool looking, Papyrus.” The hornet she was resting against was larger than the skulls, and Toki could feel a vague amused thrumming from the one behind her. “They’re sentient, like the hornets are?”

"Indeed."

Neko was the daring one and they leaned over to nuzzle Toki’s hand, crackling happily.

Toki smiled and gently rubbed her palm over the cat skull’s nose. Her sharp finger bones were gentle as she gave Neko a good scratch, watching the skull to see if it enjoyed the attention. “Hm… I should probably name the hornets, shouldn’t I? I can’t keep thinking of them as the big one and the little one forever.” She just had no idea what to name them.

The smaller one took notice of the skulls, and bustled back near with a snarl. Toki held up a hand and focused on the smaller hornet, and guided her thoughts over. The snarling came to a stop, and the smaller one regarded the feline skulls with something between a puppy’s curiosity and the wariness of a seasoned guard dog.

Bastet regarded the hornet almost in a bored manner, while Neko ratted and chirped quietly.

The smaller hornet eyed both skulls, which outsized her quite easily, before buzzing and lowering her front half towards Neko. Intense green eyes flickered brighter, and the hornet gave a playful buzz, bouncing slightly on her front legs.

Toki looked on with an amused look. “The little one reminds me of a sweet puppy. A very large, very deadly puppy, but a sweet puppy none the less.”

Neko’s eyes flickered happily and she rattled happily, clicking her snout together a few times before going over to the smaller hornet.

"She's sweet like sugar, isn’t she?” he purred gently.

“Sugar… I kinda like that for a name.” She muses slightly, watching the newly named hornet. “I think Sugar fits.”

Sugar bounced slightly, and reached a leg up to tap the cat’s snout. A little white chitin foot clinks against the bone of Neko’s snout, and then Sugar bounces briefly in place before taking off at a slow lope, trying to lure the friendlier feline skull into a game of chase.

A game of chase was definitely in order. The cat skull's pupils go wide as she lets out a happy yowl, quickly giving chase after the running hornet. She was content to play with her new friend.

Toki laughs softly and watches them run around her house and the surrounding area within the clan compound walls. “Sugar is very energetic. It will be good for her and Neko to tire themselves out. So what should the big one be named? Spice maybe?”

The bigger hornet chuffed and bumped the back of her skull with a disapproving hiss and a touch of her mandible.

“I don’t think the big one likes Spice. Darn. Sugar and Spice would have been adorable matching names.”

"Mmm... What about... Clover?” he suggested.

“Clover?” Sugar and Clover didn’t really fit together, but honestly, they were giant hell hornets. Who was going to mock their names and survive? “I like it. What about you?”

The big hornet simply chuffed and nodded, settling down. Clover approved.

“I think we’re golden then. Clover will be Clover then.” Toki chuckled gently. She slowly patted her lap again, offering him the chance to once more pillow his skull on her either her leg or her belly.

He smiled and snuggled into her lap with a purr. "Alright, perfect~"

“Indeed.” She chuckles softly. Her hands find his skull again, and she massages gently, content to bask in the sunlight with her fiancé. “Sugar and Clover. Heh… odd, but I like it. Thank you for
"You're welcome." he piped up happily, nuzzling her belly with a content sigh. "I love you, Toki, more than you may ever think."

"I think I know the feeling." She smiles and chuckled as he nuzzled her middle and fingers. "Mmm…" As Toki relaxes, she eases her free hand to her middle, rubbing along the tight skin at the top. "You and the twins are my world. Even if they’re steadily making me into a planet with my own gravitational pull." Amusement glimmers through her voice.

"Nyeh heh heh heh! I guess that means I’m a planet now, yeah?" he teased.

She snorted in amusement, a soft laugh escaping between her teeth. "Not quite, my love. I would have to be a sun for you to be a planet. But you’d be my moon." She rubs over the pale dome of his skull with a warm smile.

"You glow like a sun when you are happy, my love." Papyrus purred up to her.

"Do I really?" She blinked down at him curiously.

"It's unbelievable how beautiful your smile can be, the way your eyes glimmer when you're happy.” He smiled up at her. Toki flushed, and smiled warmly. "Gods above, I love you." She can't lean down to kiss him like this, with her belly preventing such movement, but she does buzz happily for him. "I'm glad someone likes my smile.” She certainly didn’t. Her teeth were the only things she didn’t like about her skeletal form.

He rolled over gently and sat up to pull himself close to her. His sockets glowed softly with the light of his eyes, and he gave her a soft look before he began kissing her with a lover's passion.

Toki leaned into his kiss, meeting it with the same passion. Her hand came up to cradle his cheek, stroking over the bone and cradling his skull warmly. She brushed her fingers back along the vertebrae of his neck, her other hand clutching at his shirt. "Mmm…”

He smiled gently and reached down to hike her legs up onto his waist, pinning her gently against the hornet her back was against. "It's been a while since I have treated you, my love." he whispered. "Let me touch you and bring you relief.”

It had been a while since they had gotten to enjoy each other. They had abstained while Han had been there after he nearly walked in on them at one point. And after… She had been too stressed and her soul had hurt too badly. The stress was still there, underlying in her body- but perhaps they needed this. They needed to relieve themselves through some passion and love. Toki nodded slowly and kissed him gently. "Please… Touch me. But… not out here? The, ah… Guards.” Sheflushes.

He smiled and kissed her gently. It didn’t take much effort for him to stand and heft her into his arms. He kissed her again as he stole her away to take her inside. "As you wish.” he whispered.

Toki waved her hand over his shoulder, and the sky rent itself asunder in an opening of hellfire and brimstone. Smoke rolled out, thick and cloying, and Toki gave a nudge to her hornets. Sugar and Clover took to the skies, returning obediently to their home. Once they were gone, the hole closed, and Toki tucked her face into his neck to press soft kisses along his spine where she could reach him. “Bedroom?” She murmurs as she mouths gently over his vertebrae.

With everyone coming by often enough, the living room was a risk of a walk in. Toki would probably combust if Asgore walked in on them.

“Bedroom.” He repeated, hefting her easily up the stairs once they got inside. Bastet and Neko faded as well as Aliquam lost focus on keeping them tethered to this plane of existence.

Toki gave a pleased sound. Once they reached the bedroom, she carefully opened the door for him, and then returned to loving on his neck with gentle nibbles and kisses. The bed loomed ahead, and she hummed. She needed to remove her slacks, but the current position didn’t let her get at the button with her belly in the way.

He tutted gently to her and instead laid her down, kissing her neck as he reached down and undid the buttons on his own. Her pants were guided down over her hips.

Toki lifted her hips for him to slide her pants and undergarments down, wiggling her legs so he could get her slacks off. Soon she was simply in her turtleneck, shivering slightly as he worked over her neck. “Mmm…” Her sockets fluttered shut, legs parting to let him settle against her as best he could. If he let his abdomen fade away under his shirt, he would probably be able to fold over her like he used to be able to.

He smiled and nuzzled her as he came to lay at her side, he pressed loving kisses to her stomach and side as his hand ran down, slowly rubbing against the bones of her pelvis as the ecto flesh gave way to smooth bone. "Summon something for me, please~?” he cooed gently.

Settling at her side was definitely better than folding over her. She nestled closer and gave him a smooth kiss. “Of course~” She purred. A moment of focus later, and the ecto flesh extended down and created her nether bits for his fingers to peruse. She shivered as the cool air of the room brushed against the sensitive magic, trailing one of her fingers lightly up his ribs through his shirt as she slowly warmed the room with her magic.

He smiled gently and kissed her stomach as his hand moved to between her legs, caressing it gently before he pressed his fingers to her slit, rubbing it gently.

The twins were calm in her middle, kicking only every so often. They didn't stir at his kissing, only shifting just slightly below the surface as his teeth pressed gently in on them.

Toki was another story. She shivered and trembled slightly as his mouth slid over her belly. Her flesh felt a little overly sensitive and receptive to his touch, and it left her making a soft pleased sound as his digits stroked over her lips. Her legs parted a bit further to allow his larger hand to settle between them without issue.

He purred and ran his tongue over her stomach before he pushed a finger into her slowly.

Toki couldn't hide the soft gasp that escaped through the tightly locked net of her teeth. The flesh of her stomach shivered, and she fist ed her fingers in both the blankets and the back of his shirt. "Ah~” his fingers were warm, and so much thinner than his actual member was. But she enjoyed them nonetheless, feeling each ridge and bump of his knuckles scraping intimately over her insides in the most pleasant way.

He purred and pushed his fingers in a little more before he curled his fingers, running them over her innards skillfully.

She trembled with a moan, and rocked slightly into his fingers. “Oh~” The curling of his fingers had her toes splaying, trembles trailing up her bared legs. “Ahh~”

"Does that feel good, my darling?” he purred happily.
“Gods yes, Pap~” Her mouth slides open, sharp teeth parting as she pants slightly. Her fingers knead slightly, gently rubbing his shoulder through his shirt. Slowly, she works her fingers up so she can stroke his neck, rubbing each vertebrae individually. Her hips rock into his hand, her walls trembling around his digits and slicking them up with green fluids.

"Good." he smiled and licked her stomach gently, giving gentle nips as he added another finger to his treatment. "Toki, I love you so much... without you, Monsterkind would not have gotten this far, you've made such an impact on us, we can never repay you." he whispered. “Without you... I don’t know where I would be.” His voice is soft, as he nuzzles her stomach gently. Without her, he would be a very different monster.

She squirmed a little as his tongue slid over her belly, a shiver making the surface of it ripple and shimmer brightly. “Without you,” she groaned softly, “I wouldn’t have half the joy that I do now. I love you- and I regret nothing about helping you guys stay up here. Y-you’re the best fiancé a girl could have.” The second finger felt good. It wasn’t the stretch she craved, but his fingers were more textured than his cock was. Even ridged along the bottom, it had nothing on bare bones. She trembles again, claws working the sheet as her legs shake. “Ah~”

"You're the best fiancé a monster could ever hope to call his own." he whispered in reply, before he kissed over the twins and smiled into the ecto-flesh as he once more curled his fingers, a third one slipping in with an effortless push.

The twins shifted inside, pressing slightly into him with a vaguely sleepy feeling bleeding over to the connection to their parents. Toki mewled as the third one slipped in, her hips bucking slightly into his fingers. Her hand fist once more into his shirt, her head rolling back on her shoulders as a moan tugs free. “A-ah! Mmmm, yeEEESS.” Shit that was louder than she thought it would be. “Ah~ You are mineeeeee.” She purrs. “And I am yoursssss.”

He chuckled and nodded to her, looking at her with a loving smile as he continued to treat her. He wasn't dramatically careful when it came to pleasuring her, but he knew her well enough to know how far to go to bring her bliss.

She rolled her hips again gently, and shifted to stroke his neck, sliding down there to stroke along his spine from under his shirt. Her hips rolled a few more times, finding his knuckles amazing to grind her button gently against. Between his attentions to her stomach and lower parts, and the sensitivity that pregnancy had brought for her ecto flesh, Toki found herself clamping around him shortly with a soft cry of his name.

He stayed still as she came around his hand and he smiled, pecking her skin softly as his purring never quieted. "Do you feel better?" he asked once she seemed to have recovered enough.

Any lingering irritation she might have had prior was wiped away by the after effects of an orgasm. Toki shivered, her magic bubbling through her bones and warming the air around them. “I do,” she purrs. She shifts, and snuggles closer to him. “Mmm... Your turn?” She was a little bit relaxed after that, but it was only fair that he got attention too.

"No, no." He shook his head. "You rest, I'm perfectly content." he purred.

“Are you sure?” She nestled closer, nuzzling her head under his chin. Her fingers stroke over his ribs, trailing gently down his side. “I would like to enjoy you if you would enjoy it too...” She murmurs softly. Though it wasn’t uncommon to simply seek to give pleasure and not receive it, she liked to make sure that her love was sated too.

"I will ask you no such thing, you're already tired and in need of rest. I'll be fine if left without." He assured her gently.

She tilted her skull and began to gently kiss along his neck. “Bringing you pleasure isn’t exhausting. I want to please you,” She purrs contentedly. She could use a nap- but it would be even better if he joined her in a blissful nap. Her teeth gently nibble along his neck, tugging his collar aside so she could kiss and nibble down to his collarbone. “Will you allow me this?” They both needed the touch, the love- the devotion to please the other without seeking pleasure for her self. To share love and affection- it is what they should have been doing, like Sans and Grillby. But her own sour mood had kept that from them- and she had a lot to make up for.

He stroked her body slowly, looking at her tenderly for a time, before he smiled and kissed her head. "I will be alright. I did this because I wanted to please you, not for my own gain."

Toki smiled softly up to him as well and snuggled close. Her bare legs draped over his, relieving some of the pressure that laying in that position tended to put on her pelvis, and she simply pressed a soft kiss to his neck and settled with a quiet sigh. “Mm… Mkay.” She murmurs. “You are the best…” Not many men she’d been with had ever pleased someone just to do it. It was another reason she loved him. He was different- and different was amazing. “Nap with me?” Yeah they had been going to have lunch, but she was more tired than hungry at this point. After days of wanting nothing to do with anyone, she found herself just wanting him close.

"You know I would never refuse such a request~" Aliquam purred happily. "I love you so much."

“I love you too.” She smiled softly, and snuggled tighter to him. The twins squirmed in her middle, and she gave a soft chuff of amusement as they stirred into motion. “Mmm… I think we woke them,” she says lightly. “Heh… I’m glad that me looking like this doesn’t bother you.” A tiny yawn escapes her. His hands settled onto her belly, rubbing and massaging the tight flesh to gently relax the twins into slumber or rest once more. "Are you kidding me? I don’t think I’ve ever seen you so beautiful."

Toki snorted a soft laugh into his chest. “Oh my gods, you’re such a dork. So waddling and awkwardly fitting clothes is what you like in a woman, hm?” She teases gently, eye lights glimmering warmly with love and affection.

"So what if it is?" he purred.

“Then I guess I’m the luckiest skeleton alive.” She leaned up to kiss him deeply. “And so are you. You’re marrying the smallest skeleton with the biggest waddle.” She teases gently. That reminded her… “Mmm… We’ll want to do the ceremony once we find your dad, right…?”

"Yes, once we know for sure that he is okay..." he rumbled gently, before he chuckled. "You may be small, but I don’t care. You're beautiful, inside and out, and I think you're perfect."

Toki smiled and nuzzled closer to him. “You’re far too sweet to me, Paps.” She chuckles. A pleased sigh escapes her, and she finds her sockets drooping slightly even with as active as the twins are in her lower belly. “Mmm…”

"I love you so much.” he whispered again, pressing his face to her shoulder as he cradled her. She looped her arm around his neck, cradling his skull to her as they lounged back on the bed. “I love you too, Pap.” She stroked her fingers along the back of his skull, and nuzzled him softly. “Rest,” she crooned softly. “You must be tired from handling me all week.”

"Nyeh heh heh." he sighed gently and settled down with her in his arms, staying put until slumber overwhelmed him and he allowed it to wash over him.

Toki buzzed softly for him to help him ease into sleep. Once he was snoring softly in her ear, she used Stripe to shut the bedroom door before nodding off in his arms.

Rest was something they would need. She needed to stockpile what magic she could because she didn’t know what HAM would be bringing. She needed to be ready. So did everyone else.

Toki didn’t have armor to repair- but she had bees and magic to prep. She would be ready.
Chapter 56

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And this is the chapter ya’ll have been waiting for. Enjoy, guys~

Don’t forget to visit the blog, lovelies~ http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: I am so sorry.

They call came in near dawn- and went straight to voicemail. Toki didn’t get the message until nearly ten in the morning, when she finally located her phone. She had played it while making breakfast, and had proceeded to drop her phone nearly in the eggs she was scrambling.

The message had sounded out, and the smooth voice of Cruelty floated over the speakers to her. “Good morning, Kindness.” He had purred. “Seeing as you haven’t answered it, you are surely soiling yourself while rolling in the hay with the beasts. We know you didn’t obey- and that was your final warning. It is time, Kindness, for you to feel a small taste of the betrayal that I felt. A package will arrive for you sometime today. It’s encoded for your magic, and your magic only. If someone other than you opens it, it will self-destruct and... well, kill the gift hidden inside of your punishment. It would be best if you were to open it, I assure you. You would mourn if it were to... explode... It should arrive near noon today, Kindness, just outside of your home. I’m even so kind as to do front door delivery. I won’t even charge you extra this time, Kindness. Be prepared.” And the line had gone dead.

She had shrieked- and everyone had come running.

The message had been played over, and over, and over again. They dissected it as best they could.

Inside her punishment, which was surely inside the container, was obviously something that could be killed. There was no way of knowing who it was- and when she tried to make a call out to her family, she found that there was no signal anywhere in the village. Someone had tampered with the phone lines and the cell phone towers.

They had cut them off from society- and there was no way of knowing if HAM hadn’t put one of her brothers in the crate. She wasn’t going to risk it.

They’d had two hours to prepare. She’d shoved food down everyone to make sure everyone was topped up, and then it had become a waiting game.

Near noon found everyone outside. Guards were still on patrol, but they ran in sets of two, while the rest of them took cover near Toki’s home. Toki herself had been bundled up in the strongest material they could find, and was seated on her front step. Undyne stood off to the side of the compound, talking struggling to maintain a connection to Alphys over the Undernet.

Whatever had scrambled that had made the connection to the Undernet quite unstable- but it was enough for her to relay to Alphys all that was going on.

Grillby was suiting up in his old armor, making use of some of the guards to help him get the old latches on. It still fit, surprisingly, and he looked intimidating done up in ebony colored plate armor.
that had vents for some reason. A long black long sword was settled at his hip, and a shield that was nearly as tall as she was dangled from his other hip.

Asgore was in his full armor as well, though he bore a helmet this time that covered most of his mane and skull. He stood off with the guards, making sure that everyone was outfitted. If someone couldn’t summon a weapon, he formed one for them with his magic and pressed it into their hands.

Toki wasn’t the only one not in any form of armor- but she was the only one who couldn’t dodge worth a damn. Sans was in his usual gear, but his dexterity was horribly high. Her stomach churned with nerves. It was a waiting game now, and they were at the mercy of time at this point.

Her fingers worried at the edge of her sweat pants, toying with the fabric briefly before tucking her shirt back down further over her burgeoning belly. It took all her concentration not to let her inner upset let her freak out. Her magic was already hair trigger with her nerves, and the last thing she needed was to set someone who was innocent on fire.

Aliquam, dressed in his armor, stood nearby Toki, a bone spear in his hand, his eyes narrowed as he waited as well.

Cae was quiet as he stood with his brother, shifting from one foot to the other, his breathing slow, but uneasy. His brother noticed and stepped closer to assure him with a touch to his shoulder. The two looked at one another, then looked away again as Aliquam returned to Toki’s side.

At first... Silence reined over the compound. Then a sound growing closer... and closer... It was a reverb of the air being sliced above their heads.

A pitch-black helicopter was coming closer. From the underside dangled a large crate branded with the mark of HAM. It had the same sigil that marked their masks.

As if planned and rehearsed, the helicopter swung low at the last minute and with a loud CLANK, had released the crate, allowing it to land on the ground as they quickly took their leave.

The guards got in position, while Aliquam went to Toki’s side, hugging her gently with one arm and helping her to her feet. “Are you ready?” he murmured.

“No.” She swallowed dryly. Toki honestly felt like she would be sick, but she controlled her nerves. “But I have to be.” The crate was large, perhaps big enough to fit a large animal in it. It made her wonder just what they had there. At the top of it was the binds, just within reach for her fingers to pull off, and attached was some sort of scanner and a bomb. The bomb made her nervous.

“Wait here, okay?” She glanced to him, rattling nervously as she slowly made her way towards the crate. “If it’s a bomb, I’m more equipped to handle the heat of the flames than you are.”

"Just give me the word and I will come." he murmured.

“I know you will.” She turned to him, and leaned up to kiss him soundly. “I love you.” Toki gave him a firm look. “I love you a lot...” And then she sighed, stepped away, and made her way to the crate.

Hesitantly, she tilted her skull towards it. It was quiet, save for the faint rasping breathing of something large inside. She swallowed again, and reached for the scanner. She pressed her hand to it curiously. It did nothing at first, not until she channeled magic into it.

The scanner gave a shrill beep that startled her, and then clicked sharply. The bindings that held the crate together retracted with a mechanical sound, leaving the disabled bomb and scanner on top of the crate. Toki hesitantly set them to the side, warily eying the explosive material. It looked inactive, but Toki wasn’t one that was good with bombs and explosives. There was a possibility that it could be a trap.

Her hands worked at the top of the crate, and it took effort to tip the top off. But once she did…

The sides fell down, and revealed inside a large form. They were curled up like a beast was. Their front limbs were bound together with metal clamps, as were their hind legs. A cuff hooked on the creature’s tail, a tail decorated with a scythe-like blade at the end, and kept it pinned by the beast’s foot cuff. She recognized the blade, as well as the pale skin...

Slowly she knelt to get a better look. Sharp looking spines protruding from its shoulders and back decorated the form. It reminded her of a porcupine’s quills in a way, but she couldn’t be sure of its identification, as over the beast’s head was a massive clamp that hid the creature’s head completely, drowning out sight, and potentially both hearing and smell as well. It looked to be a reinforced muzzle. The breathing echoed from within the muzzle, the sound escaping through only thin openings in the snout of the clamp.

She slowly scooted closer to the form and reached out, one hand touching the beast’s shoulder, the other resting on the smooth metal of the muzzle.

"Tenebris...?" Toki whispered softly.

There was a moment of silence from the beast, before he lurched in panic, pulling on the binds holding his limbs together while kicking his rear legs, missing Toki by inches as he then let out a distressed screech.

Toki lurched into motion, crooning softly even if he could possibly not hear her. “Easy, Tenebris, easy. It’s me. It’s Toki- you’re safe now, I promise.” She brought her hands up to the clamp on the muzzle, and made to remove it amidst his thrashing while she tried to undo the ones on his front paws. Gods above, whatever HAM had done to him, they had corrupted him. The tail was a dead give away as to who it was, but only the tail. “Shhh, you’re safe now, Tenebris. It’s okay. They’re not going to hurt you anymore.” This must have been the ‘gift’ that he was talking about. But what was the ‘betrayal’ she was supposed to taste?

Unfortunately, as soon as the muzzle was off, the 'betrayal' was revealed.

As a sharp snout opened wide, a jaw unhinging with feral purple eyes above it as he lunged, aiming for her throat as he roared.

Toki couldn’t back pedal away fast enough with how she was crouched. Pregnancy kept her limited in her range of motion, and all she could do was rush magic into her bones and reinforce her body as she fell back with a loud shriek, the chains on his front paws falling off as she got those undone by accident.

His snap missed her neck by millimeters, if less than that.

The roar and the shriek got the attention of everyone and without warning there was movement. Asgore, Grillby, and Aliquam were all racing to secure Tokiko's safety and seize Tenebris.

Tenebris' hands-

No.

His front paws came free as the cuffs came undone, sharp claws sinking into the ground as he used it to project himself forward. He was stopped by the chains still on his feet, so he hit the ground hard, but he took not seconds to recover before he lunged and grabbed her tightly by a leg, pulling her closer and baring his fangs, sinking them into one of her legs as his other paw lifted, aiming for her stomach.

Her arms went to protect her stomach but she could only do so much as pain burned through her leg. But when his paw lifted, she screamed. His paw hit her hard, cracking over her forearms and pushing them into the soft ecto flesh of her abdomen.

His arm lifted again to swipe once more, and do more than just crack the bone.

Thankfully, Aliquam shot out a well-aimed shot and a bone flew through the hole in Tenebris' paw, pinning it to the dirt.

It caught his attention enough for him to disengage Toki long enough for Cae to shortcut in, grab her, and shortcut her back out of range.

Tenebris turned his head and snapped at Aliquam before he turned his attention to his feet instead. His jaw unhinged, then to everyone's surprise, his throat glowed and a powerful blast of energy flew out, burning the cuffs and freeing both of his legs and his tail.

"Oh shit!" Aliquam gasped, bringing his staff up to block as the feral monster that was once his father rolled onto his feet before he lunged, his jaws still wide open as he screeched loudly.

Despite the magic she had pumped into her leg, the full force of his bite had practically shattered it. It was held together by the magic that she had used to reinforce her bones, and dripped thick green marrow from the bite impact. He had clamped down around her knee, which shattered part of her femur, and both her fibula and tibia. If not for her magic, he’d have shorn right through the bone.

