Toki collapsed, terrified and in pain near the steps where Cae had brought her to. Her arms were cracked too, and a bruise was forming on her middle from where they’d been battered against her belly- but the twins looked okay. Other than the aching pain from the bruise rolling in tight waves through her belly, they looked okay even if they were utterly terrified inside of her.

She could see Aliquam fending off Tenebris attack, and her soul flew into an outright panic. There was nothing she could do- Cae would die if he went in, and she couldn’t help. Undyne looked frozen, glancing between the king and the feral beast that was Toki’s to be father in law.

The guards had created a subtle wall, caging the beast in with their weapons and their bodies so he had nowhere to run to escape the compound. They were on the defensive, looking to their king for direction on how to respond to the situation.

Asgore, having secured Toki’s immediate safety, looked torn.

This was the betrayal that Cruelty had mentioned. Turning Tenebris on them, and setting him loose in what was obviously not his right mind. They would die before they tried to kill him. But… maybe subdue?

Her bees could fight. Toki grit her teeth and leaned up enough from Cae’s grasp to shove one of her cracked arms for the sky. She pushed thoughts of subduing Tenebris, of not killing him or maiming him too badly- and then tore the sky asunder in a belch of hellfire and brimstone.

She wasn’t going to let Papyrus get killed just because Asgore didn’t know what to do.

She didn’t get the bee she called for- but perhaps it was for the best. Sugar burst forth, her wings fluttering slightly as she took note of her orders, and took stock of the beast rampaging below. She buzzed, loud and long, a challenge from one beast to another to draw his attention from his son before Papyrus could be dusted.

Tenebris had managed to kick Aliquam back, but he turned at the summon of the hornet, and the challenging buzzing it gave off.

He growled, and then he screeched and unleashed another blast of energy from his maw, aiming for the hornet.

The thick chitin that made up the vast majority of Sugar’s body took the brunt of the blast, and the hornet came out remarkably unharmed. That sort of non-physical hit was shunted off with barely a flicker to her HP.

Toki had to tug at her connection when the hornet went to fire back instinctively, and she watched as Sugar swallowed down a glowing green blast.

At her prompting, the insect dove down and barreled into him horns first, landing as she rammed him with the broad part of her skull. Following that, she slashed at him with her legs, the sharp spurs on them glinting as she worked to keep his attention off of Aliquam, so her Queen’s mate could regain his footing.

The spurs tore his already destroyed clothing and he snarled. Unfortunately for Sugar, there was no one telling Tenebris to hold back. His tail swung around, the blade sinking deep into Sugar’s back as he pulled himself upward. His hind claws dug into the exoskeleton of the hornet and allowed him to climb her form as he pulled himself over her face, before he roared and grabbed the base of one wing in his teeth, the other in his claws.

Sugar screamed, a horrible rasping wail, as his teeth sank into the base of one of her wings. The mane of fire around her skull flared up, burning him in an effort to get him off. Her head lashed, abdomen automatically stinging the ground as she tried to backpedal, and her horns gored at the shield on his chest, while her mandibles bit and snapped at his legs.

Toki echoed her cry, fractured arms flying up to her shoulders. The pain echoed through the link- and she could feel the wings pulling, pulling, like her shoulder blades were being ripped outwards.

"Toki!" Caeruleus wrapped his arms around her tightly. "You gotta call her off! Get her away from him!" he hissed.

Tenebris reacted with pain and screeched. He left the wing he bit into half-attached, but as he broke away the other was torn almost completely off. He landed on the ground and backed up fast, panting roughly and snarling in pain, his legs trembling at the damage placed upon them by Sugar.

Her wings tried to flex and flicker, but they were too torn. There was no such thing as half-attached for an insect- and as she staggered, they fell from her shoulders, turning into a cloud of dust. Sugar was grounded- and there was no way to get her up into the sky. Green fluid poured down her shoulders, dampening the fire that bubbled upwards.

Her cries did not diminish, the aching pain of losing wings nearly making her ill. Cae’s tight hold widened the fractures on her arms. Toki’s sockets glowed green like the fires of her portal- and the open door way in the sky suddenly wrenched wider as she reached across her connection and demanded for her to appear.

Clover descended, regal and massive and dripping heated venom. She lowered down over the fallen Sugar, long legs coming to grasp the wounded hornet. She hovered, well out of Tenebris reach and nearly double his size, and then roared a sharp warning to him to submit.

He snarled and his jaws snapped together a few times, a loud ugly sound that was soon accompanied by another roar, his automatic refusal to the bigger beast.

But this was the opening that his majesty needed, and he charged when the beast unleashed his piercing roar. As he lifted his trident, all he could think was ‘forgive me, old friend’.

Asgore swung it like a bat, the round of one of the trident prongs slamming into the back of Tenebris' head. The roar cut off in a choke and Tenebris went down, wincing in pain as the blow had stunned him. Asgore was trembling as he regained his grasp on his trident. But he saw the look in Tenebris' eyes... there was no familiarity, only rage...

"Forgive me." he whispered, before he lifted the trident and brought it down again on Tenebris' neck.

The silence that washed over them was almost haunting after that.

This monster... Was this truly the kind, fatherly elder that everyone had appreciated, the same monster that the king felt love for...? Or was this a shell of what remained, his mind lost to ferocity and unbiased hatred?

Asgore slowly dropped his trident, and he knelt before the beast. He was unmoving, a black welt forming in the back of his head where Asgore had struck. But he was not dead, he was still breathing, albeit labored and painful... His neck was intact, his skull maybe cracked, he wasn't sure...

He reached out with a shaking, furry hand, and set it over the horns that seemed to be growing out of the back of Tenebris' head, before he lowered his hand to rest it over the beast's forehead and now-closed eyes. "Oh Tenebris... My dear old friend... What had they done to you...?" he whispered.

Clover watched impassively as the beast was dropped. Once the threat was contained, she shared a look with her mistress, and disappeared back into the gaping gate into the hell plane. Behind her, the brimstone and flames disappeared, and the sky was right once more.

Toki couldn’t say the same for herself. She trembled in Cae’s arms, leg in agony and arms beginning to hurt more as well. Her shoulders throbbed with phantom pain, and her magic stuttered and cut out as her abdomen throbbed and pulsed tightly. She curled her arms around it, curling up as best she could. Shards fell from her shattered leg, tinkling into the grass as she shook and shuddered. Her abdomen throbbed, stressed and jarred by the heavy hits she’d managed to block the most of, and then contracted tightly. “A-ahh,” she groaned softly.

Grillby left the carriers by the stairs, having moved to guard them as best he could. He bypassed Papyrus, and the king, and went to the crate. The intact shackles were claimed, as well as the muzzle- and he returned to Asgore. Wordlessly, he settled down and began to muzzle him again, shackling his front paws.

There was no chance in hell he was risking him freaking out again. Grillby shared a sharp look with the king. “His house.” He murmured. “Now. Shackles stay until...” Until they were sure that he was sane. And if he wasn’t... Grillby wasn’t sure what to do at that point.

"..." Asgore nodded slowly and after he secured the muzzle, he picked up Tenebris, frowning sadly.

Grillby followed closely behind, barking an order to Undyne and the guards. The explosives were to be deposited outside the gates, and they needed to call the police. The guards were going back on rotation just per chance that HAM had anything else planned- and then he was off, striding after the massive goat monster and the fallen beast.

Aliquam slowly got up, leaning against his bone staff for a brief moment before he hurried to Toki. Asgore had his father- and Aliquam had a duty to his mate and children before he did to his dad. "$T-Toki, oh my god..."

“A-ahh, P-Pap,” She groaned softly. Her middle ached and throbbed tightly again, and she winced as it contracted roughly. “Ch-check the twins, please, I tried to shield them, but-” But the bruise blossoming under her shirt bore the imprint of her arm bones, where they had gotten pressed into her middle. She hurt- and they felt panicked and terrified. Their terror bled into her and sparked up terror within her too. What if she was losing them? What if they were hurt and she couldn’t see it? Toki leaned a little bit heavily on Cae, her strength sapped away by the ache in her middle. “P-please, it hurts…”

Fuck her leg, fuck her arms- but please, please to all that was holy… Don’t take her babies.

He pressed close to her and hushed her gently while he removed his helmet and gauntlets. Once his hands were free, he was pressing his hands onto her cheeks and resting his head on hers, unleashing as much healing magic as he could. Once it was lit up in his body, he reached down and one hand went to her belly, the other going to her leg, glowing brighter as he worked to mend the bones and heal the damage to her belly.

Toki’s fingers clutched onto his armor as best she could. The edges of it were hard to grip in the bones of her fingers. The healing magic felt soothing, but she would rather have him focus on the twins first. Her sockets pinched closed as another rippling ache traveled over her middle, able to be felt under his fingers as a slow tightening of the ectoplasm. She whimpered just a little bit as she nuzzled her face slightly to his. The ache eased off a little bit, though the twins were eerily still.

The bones of her leg were trying to mend. Some of the bone shards continued to fall out, but the force of his magic blew through her limbs. The smaller cracks healed up, but the vast majority of the larger cracks and holes refused to seal. The bleeding stopped though, thick green magic and marrow slowing in its oozing down the cracked remains of her leg. Her arms still oozed slightly, but it was not nearly as bad as her legs had been. His magic wasn’t like his fathers- piecing together her leg wasn’t something she was sure he could do.

"Steady... steady..." he whispered gently, pulling back to help her legs by carefully reassembling them, only to tense up as he realized there was something embedded in her bone... He slowly reached, and gave a small tug. It didn’t budge. However, a firm tug had the thing coming right out of her leg.

It was a tooth...

He observed the tooth. It was broad, pointed, with a strong base. "... Sans... I think this is Father's tooth."

Cae looked at him with shock, "He lost his teeth?" he questioned in shock.

Aliquam nodded and looked down again, resuming helping her leg heal by putting the puzzle together, but not until he had extracted what had to have been many, many more fangs. All of them were from the beast that had attacked Toki moments ago.

"Oh Father..." His voice was sad, scared for the sake of the older monster, but even though he looked as if he was close to crying, he continued to work until her leg was at least solid enough to be moved. "O-Okay... I think the magic will hold the shards together... You should be safe to move inside now, Toki." he told her, moving up to kiss her, while resting a hand on her stomach, releasing magic to heal and assure the young within.

Her leg wasn’t healed completely, but his magic held it in place as best it could. The pieces shifted loosely in the binding of his magic, and she struggled to keep her leg still regardless. She wasn’t going to risk putting weight on it quite yet. Not for walking, that was. “I might h-have a pair of crutches in the sh-shed.” She murmurs shakily. She could get around on crutches, and wouldn’t be completely immobile with them to help. All she needed to do was probably bind her bones so they stayed in one place.

The hand that wasn’t on her middle was clutched, and she rubbed his bones gently, trying to comfort him. Her other hand moved to Cae’s knee, and she shakily patted it, offering the skeletons as much comfort as she could while Papyrus worked to soothe her middle. Now that his entire focus was on her middle, he made more progress. The tight clenching eased slightly after one more pulse of discomfort, and her shirt was edged up enough to show that the bruise was starting to fade under his magic.

“Ow…” She hisses softly. “Ah- Are they o-okay?” The twins were still afraid, but they were hesitantly moving again, just slightly under his fingers. She winced as they pressed where the bruise was. There was a reason pregnant women weren’t supposed to fight.

"They are distressed, but yes. They're okay..." He had Sans switch sides with him, holding her gently by her arms as he went to her back to give it attention as well.

“A-ah… Good.” She was rattled mostly, but the grasp that Cae had on her arms was painful. She grit her teeth and bore it as ooze slid through her shirt and stained the elder brother’s palms. “I was w-worried we would l-lose them.” Her back was not as bruised as her middle had been, but it was tight and knotted from the intense cramps that were fading from her middle. Toki takes a deep breath and shudders, grimacing as her leg jostles. “Are you two okay?”

Cae nuzzled Toki and smiled slightly. "I'm fine, Tokes..."

"I am alright too. A little battered, but my armor protected me." Aliquam assured her, before he moved again to pick her up.

She wasn’t hard to lift, but she did wince as her leg was touched. It was shattered from mid femur down to about the middle of her shin- there was no place on her leg that wouldn’t hurt to grasp, particularly as her leg dangled downwards. Her arms came to cradle her middle, and she shivered. “I’m glad you’re both okay,” she murmured softly. Toki glanced to Cae. “Will you get my crutches out of the shed? They’re tall metal sticks with padded ends. They should come up to about your arm p-pits. I just need to bind the b-breaks and they’ll help me walk.” Of course, her forearms were littered with cracks too- but she would have to make due.

He nodded and ran to go and find them.

But as he did, Aliquam stopped at the top of the stairs, shivering suddenly as his arms seemed to start struggling to hold her. "T-Toki... have you gained weight from the twins...?" he asked.

“Rude. You’ve never noticed it before. I have, yeah.” She eyed him and his quivering, and squirmed. “Put me down- you look like you’re going to drop me.” And if he, and his suit of armor, fell on her, she would be in a bad place.

He slowly set her down, but didn’t even last a few seconds after, unable to keep his own footing. "I... I don’t feel good." he murmured, leaning against her as little as he could.

Shit- Had he used up all of his magic? Toki shifted her shoulder under his arm to brace him upright, curling her arm around the back of his legs to keep him upright as she sat on the stairs. He was heavy- horribly, horribly heavy with all of the armor. “Did you use too much magic?” He had poured a lot into forming the orange casing piecing her leg together, and a lot into stabilizing the twins. “Easy, Pap… I’ve got you.” She murmured. She had magic to spare- she could, theoretically, put magic into him. She just wasn’t sure how to do that. Toki hesitantly pushed a little bit of her magic into him from where she was touching him.

"Nnh..." he shivered roughly and looked at her before he groaned softly, his eyes closing for a moment as his legs trembled... His last mistake was trying to take another step before he went down with a crash.

“Shi- Shit!” She instinctively went to try and catch him. It didn’t help, but she did manage to force her arm under his skull before he could crack it on the cement of her porch. “Shit.” She scooted closer to him, and hefted his upper torso up as best she could to settle his chest and head in her lap. “Pap? Please don’t faint… C’mon, be awake…”

He wasn’t.

It was about that time that Cae turned the corner, spotting the crumpled pile of armor on the deck with the smaller skeleton next to it. "PAP!" Cae ran over with the crutches in hand. "What the hell happened?!" He demanded sharply.

"He used too much magic in healing me I think." She pressed more magic into his skull, trying to rouse him carefully by filling up and replacing what he had spent. "He collapsed. I’m trying to give him a little bit of my magic to rouse him." He was surely going to get Magi-Drain, and she needed to tend to him until he was back in good health. "Can you get him inside in your condition?"

"I'm pregnant, not useless." He sniped. He helped her upright, and got her crutches under her arms. Once she wasn’t going to topple over, he pinged Aliquam's soul and carefully helped his brother inside.

That was one thing he wasn’t that she was. Useless. Toki heaved a sigh, sockets flitting over her fallen mate. "I forgot that you can do that little cheat with your magic." Once she was stable on her feet, Toki hobbled after him slowly. Being pregnant on crutches was undeniably the hardest thing to do, not counting the cracks racing up and down her radius and ulna. "I was referring to the fact that his armor is ridiculously heavy, and pregnant people aren’t supposed to lift a lot of weight. I suppose your method is the best method. Put him in the bedroom please. He needs to rest." She was damn near intimately familiar with Magi-Drain by now, and they needed to get Papyrus out of his armor and onto the bed. Then she could let him rest, put a little magic in him, bind her limbs, and go see what the King was doing with Tenebris.

"Of course." he guided his brother carefully around the things in the house, watching her all the while. "You gonna be okay while I get him out of his armor?"

Toki nodded slowly. “I will be, yeah. I’m coming up the stairs after you. My medical stuff is upstairs, and I need to wrap my leg and forearms.” Once the bones were braced, she would be okay to continue hobbling safely from there. She starts up the stairs after him, awkward and wobbling and a bit unsteady, but going well enough on her own. Each hop hurt her leg, but fuck, nothing wasn’t going to hurt it at this point.

"Stay there." He ordered. "I'll be back to get you." He got Quinn to the top of the stairs.

"You get my fiancé up to our room.” She eyes him tightly, and hobbles a few more steps up rebelliously. She was pregnant and hurt, but gods damn it, she wasn’t going to feel more useless than she already did. Toki refused. “I have to get up and down these on my own until my leg heals, Sans.
Go on, shoo. Take care of your brother for me, okay?”

He watched her, then sighed and took him out of her sight and into their room.

Toki watched him go, and made her way to the top of the stairs. It hurt, but hell, she did it. And then she was slowly making her way down the hall. The medical kit was in the guest upstairs guest bathroom, mostly so that she didn’t have to deal with someone who wasn’t her or Pap having to go get it if something happened.

She made it there, and left the door open as she collected it from the cabinet. Toki took a seat on the closed toilet seat, resting the crutches against the shower, and then carefully took bandages from the box. She started carefully wrapping her forearms, twining the bandages around each cracked bone to help stabilize the still leaking cracks, and reduce the marrow that could escape while she listened to the clanking and clattering of Sans removing Papyrus’ armor.

The older brother occasionally had to grunt to get the armor from his brother to the floor, but it was done by the time Tokiko had finished. What would not have been expected was what she’d come back to.

Caeruleus was curled up into his brother’s side, one arm over the younger brother’s rib cage ribcage as they both glowed a gentle blue color. Cae's eye was lit up brightly as he tried to help cure Aliquam's case of Magi-Drain.

Toki came hobbling in to the sight, and made her way to the other side of her unconscious mate. She made her way to the side of the bed, and eased herself down onto the side. Her sleeves had been rolled up, exposing the beginnings of stains on the slightly sloppy arm bandages, and that allowed her to press her fingers to Aliquam’s ribs. She shared a look with Cae, and then began to pump magic into him as well to ease off the strain from Sans’ magic stores. “How’s he doing?” She asks softly, stroking a hand up to his skull and cradling it as she eases magic in through there as well. Her magic was warmth and life, like basking next to a fireplace, or being covered in a heated blanket.
Her poor mate… He had done well to heal her, and he had managed to reverse whatever was happening to the twins. He had done well… And he was so drained.

"He's not as weak... if I stay with him, he should be okay in a few hours." he murmured.

“Don’t forget that you’re pregnant, Sans.” She gives him a faint smile over Pap’s chest, and continues to feed her magic in as well. “Just keep an eye on your magic levels. Pap would feel terrible when he gets up if you hurt yourself or your little ball of sunshine.”

He chuckled quietly at that, "Well yeah... but he's my brother, I gotta take care of him..."

“You’re not alone in this, Cae. He’s got a fiancé too- and you’ve got your little bun in the oven to think of. Our kids… They’re fragile right now.” She knew that quiet well, and one of her hands slid to her belly. A soft flutter of feet reassured her, and a deep sigh escaped between her teeth. “I can pick up some slack.” She wasn’t going to be good for much else. She swallowed thickly, and hummed a soft tune to fill the quiet. “Besides- you’re going to want to check on your dad eventually.
Pap is going to want to know when he gets up.”

"... Yeah... I guess you're right." he sighed softly, before he shortcut off the bed, landing nearby on his feet. "Go ahead and stay here then." He chuckled to her with a light grin. "I'll see you two later."

“...Yeah... I guess you're right.” She mutters dryly. “I’ll see you later, Sans. If you need anything, you know where I will be. I’m not going on long walks for a while.” She shifts closer to Papyrus, and props her leg up on the bed. The sore bones are settled next to his legs, so she’s glad he’s not overly squirmy while he’s unconscious. Toki settles, and resumes steadily feeding her his magic. Human magic was generally quite potent, after all.

"Heh... see you." He gave her a tired salute, and was gone between one breath and the next.

Toki watched him leave with a quiet sigh, and gently leaned her side against Pap’s. The twins could feel her disquiet, and though they were out of distress, they were upset and frightened, and they squirmed against their unresponsive father’s side. Toki petted them soothingly, and stroked his skull as well, her eyes closing as she focused on him. It had been a long, long day. A long day. But she couldn’t help but wonder… If Tenebris was the ‘betrayal’… Then what was the prize…?

Asgore was silent as he sat by Tenebris' head, the beast still unconscious and tied down securely. He couldn't believe this was his old friend. What had those humans done to him to make him so... Feral? He sighed softly and stroked his shoulder gently, before he looked up at Grillby. "I've never seen him like this before...

"Neither have I, milord.” They had put Tenebris in Papyrus old room. The room was the most structurally sound, and escape was nearly impossible from there. Grillby was carefully looking over the wounded beast, and doing his best to stitch up the wounds of his flesh. He quietly pressed and checked for broken ribs. “I... believe he might have been tortured, milord.” Grillby’s fingers and eyes located several spots that had broken and healed slightly wrong. His fingers worked over his bare abdomen, investigating and carefully noting spots that Papyrus would need to tend to when he finished with Toki. “There is... Well, frankly, a lot of damage here. Monsters... We do not handle torture well, milord.”

He’d seen similar things during the war. But most others fell before they reached this stage of violence.

He nodded slowly, before he reached and set his hand on the muzzle. "The look in his eyes... he was blind with rage. Or... a blood thirst... He didn't recognize me... even after I had struck him down the first time...”

“Those tortured either fall,” Grillby said softly, “Or become like this. Because of his more... beastly nature, Gaster seemed to have survived because he could regress into his base instincts.” Grillby’s hands flitted over the slit, and he frowned. “Has this always been here?” he inquired to the king, motioning to the long mark that ran up his abdomen.

He blinked and moved to take a look to see what he had meant, "Ah, He did not have that before his disappearance, however when he returned to us, it seems his torso had become a hollow cavity." he explained.
“I see.” Tenebris was an odd one. Grillby ran his fingers over the edge and frowned. “It looks like it’s gotten cut a couple of times. The edges are ragged here. He should be able to heal it once he is back in his right mind.” Grillby shifted, and pressed his digits a little bit inside, following the curve marks. “It goes in deep. Whatever did this was quite the blow. Perhaps his own claws?”

Asgore lightly shrugged, lethargic as he stroked Tenebris head as gently as he could.

Without warning there was a sharp flurry of kicks to Grillby’s hand.

Grillby startled, and his fingers pried open the flap swiftly. Inside, he spotted a dirty, bedraggled rabbit child.

He tilted his head, mouth falling open. “… Thumper?” he murmured. Was this what the voice mail had meant? The gift within the betrayal?

".... M-Mister Grillby...?" the child’s weak voice crackled out.

"By the stars." Asgore murmured, ears perking.

“Thumper,” Grillby gasped softly. He reached in gently, large hands so very gentle in collecting the battered and dirty child. “By the stars… We thought you were gone. You’re okay now. You’re back in the village.”

He was trembling and covering his eyes as he was brought out. "T-Too bright..." He spent too long in the darkness of Tenebris' cavity. "W-We're home...?"

Grillby’s hands weren’t much better, but he cradled the child to his chest, and gently covered his eyes with a warm hand and forced his flames as dim as he could make them. From behind Thumpers eyelids, it should help him adjust. “You’re both home, you and Tenebris,” he soothed gently. “You’re home and safe now. Milord- you can heal minor wounds, can you not?”

"I can... but this is considerable damage. I will do what I can." The king answered, reaching out and slowly taking the bunny. His fur was warm, and Thumper was curling up in his hands as he released some magic.

Grillby watched them for a moment, and nodded. He flicked his gaze to the King, and then back down to the fallen beast laying on the bed. He cleared his throat. “Once you’ve been healed a little, how about you and I go get you something to eat? I think Miss Toki has some of her honey tarts made up. Would you like some of those?” The poor child likely hadn’t eaten since he had been taken. They needed to get him fed and washed, and into new clothes. Grillby could handle two out of three of those- but perhaps he could convince Toki to help get Thumper washed up if she was healed enough.

"Y-Yes please..." he murmured, before he sniffled softly, "Momma... and Poppa…?", he started softly, unsure.

Grillby reached out to gently stroke the child’s dirty cheek, giving him affection that he had no doubt been starved of for some time. “Your mother and father did not make it, Thumper.” He said softly. “We… We had feared that you had been dusted with them.”

He leaned to his hand, nuzzling his palm slightly. "... Mister Tenebris protected me," he murmured.

That would explain why they had both been taken then. Grillby nodded softly. “We know.” He said gently. “He did a good job too. He got you back to us.” The fire monster gave him a warm smile. “And now that you’re both back, we’re going to take care of you both.”
He sniffled quietly, then nodded, leaning in to Asgore as he held him closer.

"I'll go wash him..." The king told Grillby. "Can you stay with Tenebris?"

"I will." The bartender nodded. "Take him to Toki’s place after. She should have honey tarts and some leftover food from breakfast. He needs to get some food and liquids into his system.” Children were strong, but even the strongest child could be devastated by undernourishment and dehydration. They’d seen it enough in the war, with orphans who couldn’t get enough food. Many of them fell down, or simply turned to dust.

He nodded and carried him to the bathroom.

Nearly an hour later and two tubs worth of washing and copious amounts of obnoxiously sudsy bubble bath, Thumper was finally clean. The boy had been bundled in one of Cae’s old shirts, as he was the smallest skeleton in the house size wise, and then promptly taken over to Toki’s.

The kind king padded up the front stairs with Thumper cradled to his shoulder, and slipped silently into the house. He came in just in time to see Toki carefully hobbling off the last step from the upstairs, bandages covering the leg that she was keeping her weight off of. Bandages also covered the woman’s arms, and Asgore felt a small manner of guilt and worry. Hadn’t Papyrus healed those?

Toki caught his eye, saw his look, but was distracted by the familiar bundle of fur in his arms. “Thumper?” She startled, sockets blowing wide. “By the gods- is that you?”

"H-Hi, Miss Toki." he greeted with a weak, tired smile

“Oh Thumper, baby…” He looked so tired and thin- but she knew better than to ask immediately. Every instinct in her cried out for her to take him into her arms, get him fed, warm, and tucked some place where he could be safe and could recover from his ordeal. She controlled herself only on the fact that she couldn’t carry him and hobble on crutches. She glanced to Asgore and jerked her chin for the kitchen. “Let’s get you something to eat, sweet heart. What would you like? I’ve got some honey tarts made up, and I’ll make you anything you’d like to eat.”

The king followed her into the kitchen, keeping pace with the fast-hobbling skeleton. More or less so she wouldn’t fall and hurt herself, or her babies. He nudged Thumper gently with his chin, and chirred softly to the rabbit. “I can cook as well, if you would like to sit with Miss Toki?”

"O-Okay." he replied to Toki... after when he was asked that question by Asgore, he smiled gently, "Y-Yes please..."

Asgore beamed brightly at the child, and nuzzled the soft fur between his ears. “You heard the lad, Toki. You take a seat and rest your leg with Thumper, and I’ll get some tarts out. Maybe some juice?”

"There’s apple juice in the fridge.” Toki nodded. Toki eased down into the larger of the chairs that was parked in the corner of the kitchen, usually reserved for Tenebris, and then patted her lap invitingly. “C’mera, Thumper. I could use some snuggles from my favorite fluffy bunny.”

The king eased the child down carefully into the skeletons lap, nestling the boy right up against her middle as Toki’s arms came to hold him as close as she could manage with her belly.
He was quick to curl up against the warmth, his dry nose twitching gently as he took in her familiar smell. It was a smell that had brought comfort to all the children of the village, all of them who had laughed and played with the wonderful woman.

"Mmmh~" He didn't stop the blissful sigh that escaped him as he quickly had grown comfortable.

Toki cradled him close, adjusting him so he curled around her belly and could pillow his head on her shoulder. Her fingers stroked gently through his fur, and she cooed softly to him, nuzzling the top of his head gently. He smelled clean, but underlying in his scent was the smell of dust, and fear. He had been afraid for a long, long time, and it lingered in his scent. Hopefully, curled to her middle and curved up with her, the scent would begin to fade away by other emotions.

Toki was warm, and she radiated warmth to the child, both through her limbs and through the gently squirming surface of her middle.

Asgore smiled as she practically enveloped the rabbit monster with her body. “So, what would you like to eat, Thumper?” He smiled warmly to the both of them, and rolled up his sleeves so he could get to cooking without having to get his clothing covered in food bits.

"Anything... I'm so hungry..." he answered quietly, surrendering into Toki's motherly touch without a fuss.

They would need to start him off small, lest he make himself sick. Asgore nodded and smiled, and proceeded to raid the woman’s cupboards. He found lots of pasta, and some strange ingredients that he concluded must have been a part of her pregnancy cravings. “I'll make up some buttered noodles.”

“That sounds good.” Toki smiled softly. “Pots are in the bottom cupboard by the stove.”

“Thank you!” The king hummed. He set a plate of honey tarts on the table near the chair, and then set to work.

The skeleton laughed gently as the king bustled about, ducking here and there to collect the things he needed to. In the mean time, she gently kissed the top of Thumper’s head. “It's good to have you back, sweet heart.” She murmured gently to him. She collected a honey tart, and offered it to the boy with a warm smile. “Here- let's start with a sweet treat. Not too many tarts though. We don’t want to spoil your appetite for some good noodles, do we? Don’t worry about crumbs either, sweet heart.
My belly makes a great table from time to time.” She winks playfully to him.

He nodded slowly and took the honey tart... Resting on her, he held the treat close and gradually nibbled on it, small bites that were only the result what had been shaved off by his teeth per nibble, though after a few minutes, he lowered his treat and swallowed, "I-I'm sorry... C-could I just have some lettuce? O-Or a carrot?” he murmured quietly, offering the tart back to her.

“Of course, Thumper.” Toki nodded, and set the treat on the edge of the plate to be handled later.
Asgore was busy cooking, but she could use her bees. She was running a little low, but not dangerously so. Toki gave a tug, and Stripe appeared with a fiery pop, shaking her fluffy self out from atop Toki’s crutch.

A few quick instructions, and Stripe was returning with a bag of baby carrots for him. The bee dropped the bag into Toki’s hand, and she offered the open end to the rabbit with a warm smile.
“You’re welcome to as many as you want. Carrots are good for eye sight, you know?”

He took the carrots and began to crunch on them, slowly, but with great happiness to him. "Mmh~"
It took only a portion the bag before he offered it back to her, his shrunken stomach content with what it had taken in.

If he was full now, the noodles could be nibbled on later. Little meals frequently would build him back up. Toki smiled and kissed his little nose once she set the carrots aside and let Stripe disappear. “Feel a little better, Thumper?” Food could do wonders for how one felt. She adjusted him gently, rubbing his thin legs to keep him warm. Rabbit monsters naturally consumed more ‘calories’ than most monsters did, simply because of their energy levels. He hadn’t likely had food since he was taken- it was little wonder that he felt as light as he did and was so hungry, but ate so little.

Asgore set down a glass of juice in passing as he worked on a meal for later times. Toki offered it to him to take a sip.

He took a gentle drink and smiled at her gently. "Thank you." he sounded better now that he had something to drink.

A wet throat could definitely be helpful to talking clearly. She smiled, and snuggled him closer to her once the glass was set down. Her fingers stroked through his fur, combing the long spots idly. Her good leg tilted the chair slightly, and she rocked a little bit to help him settle, and to keep the twins wiggling against his side from bothering him. “Are you warm enough?” She asked gently. It was a warm summer day, but being malnourished and tired could leave anyone chilled.

"You're warm." he hummed quietly, giving a nod.

“Good.” She didn’t have a blanket to wrap him in, or he would have been bundled up. As it was, the long shirt that smelled of Sans was more than enough to act like one on the small rabbit. Toki shifted him slightly, adjusting him so his weight wasn’t on her forearms so much as it was her elbows. Toki’s fingers stroked his cheeks. “I know you’re probably tired,” She began gently, “so I’m not going to ask a lot of questions, okay? When you’re ready to talk about what happened, we will listen. Sound alright to you, sweet heart?”

"Mmhm..." he nuzzled her and sighed, "You can ask." he murmured.

Asgore perked his ears, listening without obviously showing that he was.

Toki continued to rock the chair just slightly, humming softly to him. She needed to invest in an actual rocking chair- the motion was surprisingly relaxing to her. “Sweet heart,” she murmured softly back to him, “I don’t really know what to ask. What I meant by that was, no one is going to pressure you to talk before you’re ready. When you want to tell us what happened, you are welcome to. But not before you know you’re ready. We want you to start to feel better, not stress yourself and feel worse.”

He nodded gently and sniffled lightly, before he buried his face in the fabric by it.

Toki crooned softly and hiked him up closer to her neck. “You’re safe now, sweet heart,” she murmured softly to him. “I’ve got you…” Her fingers smoothed circles between his shoulders.

He smiled and closed his eyes not long after. He was so tired…

Toki shifted, and glanced up as Asgore gently draped his cloak over them. She tucked it up and around the rabbit, who was likely too big to be cradled like this really, and gently pressed a soft kiss to his forehead. There was no way she was going to let him go. Not now, not while he was so tired and fresh from having been found. Toki tucked him in, blocking the majority of the glaring light from the kitchen lights, and then began to buzz softly to help relax him.
Toki was quite the visage of motherhood, rocking on one leg in Tenebris kitchen chair, with a sleepy rabbit tucked into her shoulder and curled around her gravid belly. “Go ahead and sleep, sweet heart. I’ve got you.” she murmurs gently to him. Sans was up with Pap- and Pap would understand why she wasn’t up with him whenever he woke up. She just hoped he wouldn’t panic and rush down to try and find her.

"Toki, is there anything else I can do to help?" Asgore asked gently, keeping his voice low for Thumper's sake.

“Once the noodles are done, maybe you can help me into the living room?” she responds just as softly, keeping up her low buzzing to keep the tired rabbit lulled against her. “The chair is nice, but my leg really hurts.” Keeping it down so much had the bones throbbing painfully. “I’m not going to be able to carry him and walk on crutches.”

"Yes, of course." he nodded to her, before he leaned against the counter, looking at her quietly. Toki glanced back over to him, offering him a tired smile. “How is Tenebris doing?” She inquired softly, eye lights glimmering with worry. “Any improvement...? Cae didn’t tell me much when he got back, other than Grillby told him it wasn’t very wise to have him around him at this point.” Something about not knowing if Tenebris would wake up coherent and himself, or still a beast.

"He was still unconscious. But I fear he is no longer the Tenebris we knew..." he sighed. "What makes this worse... I know not if we will be able to wake him up from this reversion..."

“Give it time.” She said softly. “Try studying some of the human studies of psychology. It might help you at this point to try and bring him back once he’s awake. He... He’s not going to be the Tenebris we knew. Thumper isn’t the same Thumper that we knew. The experience that they went through... No one would be the same going through it.”

He nodded gently, before he sighed. "Are you okay?" he asked, "I know Tenebris’ strength, but un tarnished like that... we are very lucky he had not killed you with one blow..."

“I threw all of my magic into my defense.” She admits quietly. “That’s the only reason that he didn’t shear through my leg. He broke off teeth in my femur though.” Her leg throbs with the memory, and she grimaces slightly. “My defense on the norm rests at about two hundred. I threw all of my magic to reinforce it. My HP doesn’t always take huge damage to befit my body. My bones are pretty fragile. So... I’m not okay.” Her HP was still down a significant amount. Toki’s jaw tilts down, and she swallows. “When Tenebris comes back, please don’t tell him this. But... Pap had to dump a lot of his magic to stabilize the twins. I... We almost lost them today. When he cracked my arms, he battered my middle.”

She had realized not long after Sans had left that the pains she had been feeling had been forced contractions. Tenebris had nearly thrown her into a super early labor- and if not for Papyrus dumping his magic in to stop it...

His eyes widened in shock at this news. "Oh dear... I'm so relieved that the brothers were there to take care of you... Are the children okay now?" he asked, "and Papyrus... Making sure he didn't lose you or his children both... I worry he may have gave himself Magi-Drain."

“He did.” Toki nodded. “I gave him as much magic as I could before Sans returned again. He collapsed on the stairs trying to bring me inside. Cae’s up with him now, slowly giving him more. He’s still out of it.” Toki sighs softly, and adjusts the cloak covering Thumper, giving him a bit more cover. Trapped between her scent and that of the King, she hoped he was feeling safe and wouldn’t kick in his sleep. “I... think they're okay.” She murmurs. “They’re moving and stuff, but still really freaked out. I think Pap not responding has them pretty upset.”

"I'm glad you're alright." he rumbled, coming over to her for a moment to smile at her and the bundle in her arms. "It would have been disastrous to lose you."

“Everyone says that.” She smiles dryly. “I’m just one person, Asgore. I am just one person. It would hurt- but in the grand scheme of things, I am just one person. I am glad today went better than it could have. Despite… one of my Hell Hornets being maimed, things could have gone worse. No one died.” Just barely. Her sockets nearly water, and she shifts Thumper a little tighter to herself. “And we saved two lives today. We’ll help Tenebris get better. I know we will.”

He smiled and nodded in agreement. "That old predator is too cocky to go out like this." He chuckled, "I have hope that he will awaken to chase another day." He then snorted into a fist and started chuckling. "With his rattling tail behind him." He chortled.

“More like chase your fluffy little goat tail another day, hm?” She arches a teasing brow at him.

Asgore sputters at her, a faint blush growing under his pale fur.

Toki chuckles very softly, and jerks her chin towards the pan on the stove. “Your noodles are scorching.”

“Oh goodness!”
Chapter 57

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Little chapter with some stuff with Tenebris, and a bit of Toki and Pap to be seen too. Also- i might hold off on the next update until thursday when i get home from work. Otherwise i owe a reply Wednesday, and i barely have time to get ready for work before i have my next shift, let alone to squeeze in a chapter update. I'll try- but if it doesn't happen, it doesn't happen. It'll be out Thursday evening or early Friday morning if all else fails. So thanks for being patient with me, guys. :)

Don't forget to visit the blog, yo. http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Welp, only so much shit could hit the fan before we decide to give you guys a break...

Here you go <3

For everyone who remained at the compound, the days were tough. Tenebris had not yet come out of his primal state, so Asgore and Grillby had to think of ways to help him recover.

Finally they came up with the idea of company.

Binding him extra just in case, the casing had been removed from his head and replaced with a simpler, but nonetheless strong, muzzle. Lighting a bowl of the spearmint he would smoke in his pipe, they'd sit with him, and mind their own, but in the later days, they would then go and sit by him, he'd still be aggressive, but not frantic.

Finally, a miracle had formed.

Tenebris' breathing was slow, as it was always in slumber. The duo had just come to check on him to find his form had reversed. The spines were no longer poking out of his shoulders and back, his hands had returned to normal, though his claws were still long on both hands and feet, and his face had collapsed again back to it’s usual flatter form, giving him a less bestial appearance. His purple eyes were half lidded, pupils wide and no longer slit like a beast.

But Asgore's approach caught the beast's attention and he slowly looked up at them

They didn't know what to expect, until with a dry, croaking voice spoke to them. "A-Asgore...? Grillby?"

Asgore was the first one to step closer, taking care to move slow just per chance that this was only temporary. “Tenebris?” he spoke lowly. “Old friend? Are you back with us?” Stars, his voice was so dry and crackly… He shared a look with Grillby.

Grillby nodded, and collected a bottle of water from one of the side tables. He handed it to Asgore, but stayed back so he didn’t overwhelm Tenebris.

He pressed his cheek against the floor as best he could as he closed his eyes for a moment. He took a few deep breaths, before they opened again and focused back on Asgore. "W-Where am I...? Wh-Where's...." he was asking about the child he had hidden within himself.

Asgore crouched down near him, and gently reached out a hand. He didn’t touch, but he offered him the chance to reach out on his own. They needed to remove the muzzle to give him something to drink. “You’re home, old friend.” He says softly, and pantomimes taking a deep breath. The room smelled slightly of Papyrus- but most importantly, it smelled like the Village. “Both of you. Thumper is with Toki right now. She’s been taking care of him, and he’s loath to leave her. He wants to see you, but…” Not until they were certain that Thumper would be safe. Only Asgore and Grillby were allowed near him at this point, both of them old enough and strong enough to handle restraining him.

He shifted his hands, before he squirmed and looked down at the cuffs over his hands.

“Those need to remain for a little bit longer, my friend.” Asgore said softly. He reached out, and gently thumbed over the clasp holding the muzzle on. It was removed easily, and Asgore slowly lowered it down. The bottle was opened, and offered to the large phantom monster. “Here- drink. It will soothe your throat. You haven’t eaten or drank much since you returned to us. It’s been a little under a week.” They’d been unable to give him much while he’d been aggressive. Asgore had a few bites along his forearm from his attempts to care for Tenebris during his moments of intense aggressiveness- and subsequently, Tenebris had lost more teeth during it too.

Tenebris looked at him and then smacked his lips dryly, realizing at that point that he was missing several teeth. His tongue ran over where the fangs once rested and he rattled in distress. He was missing so many…

Asgore gave a soft croon to him. "Peace, my old friend. We will explain some once you have had a drink. Would you like to take a seat?" The beast had been more vested in being on the floor, Tenebris perhaps might like to sit upright like a person, now that he was himself for now. "Only your hands are bound, so I will help you stand if you would like, my dear."

He nodded slowly, slowly attempting to sit up on his own. "O-Old friend…" It sounded hard for him to talk.

Asgore carefully hooked his free hand under Tenebris' elbow. He helped ease him upright, and then pressed the bottle into his cuffed hands. He should be able to hold it and move his wrists to drink on his own. "It is good to have you back, old friend." He smiled at him gently. His eyes glimmered warmly. "Please, take a drink before you try to talk. We don't want you hurting your throat."

Tenebris nodded slowly and steadily drank the water from the bottle. Though he proceeded to empty the damn thing, dropping the plastic bottle onto the ground as he wiped his lips, swallowing once more to make sure his mouth was fully moist. The big monster sighed and looked at Asgore tiredly.

Asgore gave him a smile. "Do you feel better?" He inquired. "Grillby can make you something to eat if you would like something." He had kept the house stocked while he was staying in it.

"I'm starving." he replied, but he gave a small nod, smiling slightly. "Water... helped."

"How about a steak to start?" The protein would be good for him. "And another bottle of water with it?" The king gave him another smile, brightening at the smile that the smaller monster gave him.

Tenebris' tail began to wag as he rattled happily. "I would like that very much." he made a pleased sound.

The king nodded to Grillby, and the fire monster left the room to go begin cooking.

Now alone, Asgore carefully set himself down on the ground across from him. "May I see inside of your mouth?" He asked gently. "You lost a lot of your teeth, and some of them are cracked. I haven't been able to safely tend to them this far."

Tenebris looked up at him and opened his mouth easily.

The king slid closer and very gently slid his lip down to check his gums. He didn't touch, but he did observe and check a couple of his teeth. What ones he had still were pretty securely in the gums, even if they were cracked, and his molars looked like they would be okay. His sleeves slid up, showing his bite marks that had sheered off some of his fur. "You are recovering. It looks like your teeth are going to be regenerating, but it might take some time."

He looked up at him and rattled sadly as he saw the bites. Once his mouth was free to close, he gave a sad sound. That was his handy work, and the teeth marks matched up with what he could feel to be missing.

"Oh Asgore…" he reached out and carefully took his arm. He nuzzled his face into the fur before he ran his tongue over the bite a few times, grooming it apologetically. "Forgive me, old friend..." One could easily compare Tenebris' expression and demeanor to that of a guilty dog.

"There is nothing to forgive, Tenebris." He smiled gently, his palm turning to cradle his cheek. He rubbed a fluffy thumb over his cheekbone. "You were not yourself, old friend. It was not you who did what you did. There is no fault to you, and no one has laid any blame upon you. It is... it is reassuring to see you back. We were worried."

The warmth of the fur was welcomed and he rattled quietly as he nuzzled it, taking a deep breath of the familiar scent. His purple eyes closed after a moment, and he chirred softly. "Old friend… I'm so tired..."

"I know... let us get some food into you, and then you can rest. Though... we will need to keep the muzzle on for a while." The king looked like it made him sick to even voice that.

He looked up at him at that. "Asgore... What have I done...?" he asked hesitantly.

"A lot." He doesn't elaborate past that. "The agents of HAM... they intended to let you loose upon the compound for you to destroy things. I can tell you that you did not kill anyone while you were not yourself. I... we managed to subdue you before that. You might find the back of your skull tender... I had to strike you twice."

He looked up at him, and then he reached up with his chained hands, looping them behind his head to test what the king had said. He winced at the ache in the back of his skull. "Of course... Ouch..." He sighed quietly, before he looked up at him, chirring softly in response. "I... I tried so hard to stay strong..." He insisted, shifting one of his legs before immediately regretting it. His pupils turned to slits in reaction to the pain before he winced, claws tensing up as he hissed in pain. "O-Ow... Ow..." his body ached now that he was a little more aware of it. He didn't want to look, but with the pain infecting every ounce of him, he suspected that he retained physical damage from the abuse at the hands of HAM.

"A-Asgore... Thumper... Where is he...?"

"I told you before, Thumper is over with Toki. She's been taking care of him while we have been caring for you. He's also been helping her while Papyrus is recovering from Magi-Drain." Asgore gave him a patient smile, and reached out to ease healing magic into his leg. He wasn't the best, but he could ease the pain a little bit. "You held on as long as you could. More importantly- you came back to us. You came back to me."
He looked up at him, and then chirred quietly and pulled himself closer to nuzzle into the king's chest, his tail rattling quietly, "I still cannot help but feel..." he then shook his head and keened quietly, "I'm sorry, old friend..."

"You are forgiven, old friend." Asgore welcomed him into his arms gently, bundling him closer as he continued to numb his wounds and aid them in healing as best he could. Now that Tenebris was awake, they could begin to bring people back to their homes here. Asgore nuzzled his muzzle into the top of Tenebris' skull. "I have missed you, Tenebris."

He nuzzled close and began to purr, leaning his head back to rest it into the crook of Asgore's neck, "I missed you too, Asgore... I held on by thinking about you... and everyone else I promised to protect..."

Asgore tilted down and gave him a gentle, chaste kiss, nuzzling his furry nose to the bridge between Tenebris' eyes. "We have all been looking for you." He murmured. "I am so glad you're back, Tenebris. It pained my soul to see you so... lost. You're back now. And once Papyrus is back on his feet, he can help heal your wounds." The skeleton kept setting himself back, because he kept trying to mend Toki's bones further. "But... Until we are sure you will stay with us, you need to wear the muzzle. I am... so, so sorry about this. But..." It was for everyone else’s safety.

Grillby knocked, and then stepped inside. He had a tall glass of orange blossom tea, and a plate piled with steaks. They might have been a little less raw than Tenebris would like, but Grillby literally cooked food when he handled it, so there was no escaping it. “I have food.” And there was a fork and a knife for the meat to be cut up. Tenebris wouldn’t be able to rip and tear with as fragile as his teeth were.

"It's humiliating... but if it means that I don't hurt anyone..." he murmured, before smelled the air, a smile growing on his face as he smelled the meat. He lifted his head to look up at Grillby, but his pupils had turned to slits again as he let out a loud, eager rumble, tail rattling again as it wagged.

The slits had Grillby warily stopping a few steps away, as he eyed the bladed tail that wagged at him. He tilted his head, fixing him with a calm and flat stare, and then crouched down to hold out the plate. “Remembering your manners will save what is left of your teeth,” he mutters, “and help us be sure you are keeping in control. A relapse… would be bad.” He states softly.

The king takes the plate from the fire monster that kept his distance, so as to not crowd the monster in the king's lap, and then brought it into range for Tenebris to use. “You only have to wear it until we’re sure you’re going to stay you.” He says gently. “Let's see how you're doing in a week, okay?”

He looked at Asgore, then nodded. "I understand, Asgore... I will wear it if I must." He then looked at the knife and fork, before he looked at his hands, and back up to Asgore. "I... hate to ask... but I cannot use my hands properly with these... Cuffs."

“The cuffs are coming off.” The king nodded. “But it is a two-handed job. If you can hold the plate, I can remove the cuffs.” And once he was holding it, the king carefully worked the cuffs and got them off. He eased them off of his wrists, and then eased magic into the chafe marks to heal them up. “Here you go,” He smiled at him warmly. The cuffs were set to the side. “We wont require you to wear those, old friend.”

Grillby heaved a soft sigh, and scrubbed his face tiredly. He groaned slightly. He was tired- he’d had to top up Sans, because he had drained himself a little lower than he should have in trying to help Papyrus. “Muzzle yes, cuffs no. This one we modified so you could see and hear. It’s a bit more... comfortable. We can redesign one for your face currently as well. It would perhaps allow you to open your mouth and speak, eat, what have you, but it would limit how far you can open your... mouth.” If they could limit it a bit, he wouldn’t be able to bite someone.

"Thank you, Asgore..." He nuzzled into Asgore’s fur and got comfy as he began to slowly start into the meal. He did eat with control, but the plate was clean not long after.

Asgore smiled and let him eat. Once he was done, he took the plate carefully, and then handed it up to Grillby. “You look tired, General.”

“I had to give Sans magic this morning.” Grillby collected the empty plate easily, and held it as he watched the two of them. “He drained himself too much in tending to Papyrus for it to be good for the soulling. I have large stores, so I will be alright.”

Tenebris hesitated at that, swallowing a drink of tea to clear his mouth of any food debris, and keep it out of the healing holes where his teeth were missing. “Sans is... carrying?”

“He is.” Grillby nods. “It was... not long after you were taken. We took some comfort in each other and... it happened.” It was no secret that they had been trying- but they hadn’t expected it to happen then.

Asgore nodded as well. “Toki has done well to help Caeruleus thus far. When not with Grillby, he has spent a lot of time with her.” He nudges him gently with a growing smile. “More grandbabies, Tenebris. That is good news indeed.” He pretty much purred.

He sighed gently. "I'm glad he is supported in this..." he gave a pleased smile.

“He is.” The fire monster nods. “And once you’re back in good condition...” He smiled slightly. “He’ll be glad to have his father back in his life for this.”

“Once you’ve had some rest, we’ll see how you’re doing.” Asgore nodded. “You’ve missed a lot- and I’m sure you’ll be eager to catch up. Everyone has missed you. Maybe tomorrow, if you’re up to it, you can take a walk around the house. The smells might have changed a bit. Toriel, Frisk, and myself have been staying here.” This room smelled slightly like the ex-queen and the human child, as they had been staying here as well. It wasn’t as strong as Papyrus’ lingering scent from when he had lived here prior.

"A walk does sound nice... Thank you." he purred gently.

Asgore smiled and nodded. “Alright. Tomorrow then. For now, rest. Once you finish your tea, we’ll get you up and into your room, and get you settled in for sleep. Okay?”

"Yes please." he purred gently, smiling up at him. He took his tea again and lifted it to his lips, drinking the blend.

Orange blossom tea wafted up his nose, and he chuckled gently in response. “Tomorrow.” He nodded. “Tomorrow for sure. But for now... Rest. We’ll see how you do tomorrow, and then we’ll see about visitors, okay? You need to rest and heal. My healing skill is not so good as yours is, my friend.” Once Tenebris finished his tea, they would head to his room. “Maybe once you’re settled in your room, you can... try to tell me what all happened to you? If you are up to it?”

"Of course." He sighed. "It's not a pretty tale to hear, I'm afraid."

“I didn’t expect it to be.” Asgore murmured gently in return. Once the phantom had finished his tea, Asgore set the glass to the side, and carefully lifted Tenebris, taking the muzzle in hand as he got to his feet and helped the phantom stay on his. “C’mon, you. Grillby? I think he and I will take a little time to ourselves.”
“Of course, milord.” He smiled gently. He collected the glass, and opened the door for the king. “Go enjoy your time, and call me if you need me.”

He slowly stood up, needing to cling to Asgore to stay up. "Nnh..."

“Easy, old friend.” Asgore gave him a soothing look, and hooked an arm around his waist. He kept him supported easily, and took a few steps to take him out the door. “You likely have not been upright in a long while. Lean on me- I will help you.”

"Thank you, Asgore.” He murmured as he walked with him. "I feel... very heavy right now.” he admitted softly.

Grillby shut the door behind them, and then headed down the stairs with the dishes to put them in the sink.

“You're actually quite light.” The monster was still in the nude at this point, so his pale skin wasn’t burdened by anything. It did feel a little… loose. But it was likely from his dehydration. “We’ll take our time. How do you feel? I’ve tried to numb the pain of your wounds as best I can. Does it hurt to walk?”

"N-No... If anything..." He tensed, eyes widening in horror as his irises darkened, "I feel... Numb..." he then winced as his legs suddenly buckled as his skin started to darken, as if his blood was rising to the surface of his skin, staining it black before his form started to melt.

“Oh…” Well, that hadn’t happened to him in a long time. Asgore managed to keep the rapidly melting Tenebris from dropping to the ground. “Well, old friend, this hasn’t happened in a long time. Your meds are in your room somewhere, correct?” He kept a calm and cool tone, to help keep Tenebris calm as well. He continued his way towards the room, hauling the oozing form carefully with him.

He didn't want to dig his claws into Asgore's arm but that was the best he could grab hold of as his body continued to break down. But at the knowing question, he gave a slow nod.

Asgore gave him a soothing smile, slightly struggling to keep the blob from slipping between his fingers. The claws in his arms didn’t hurt too badly. It didn’t take long for the king to bring him to his room. The door opened, and the room smelled like a mix of Tenebris’ lingering scent, and the sweet musk that Asgore exuded.

The king brought him in, and gently guided him to the bed. “Pills- point, and I’ll get them.”

He huffed quietly and looked up, scanning the room before he raised a hand, pointing to the bedside. They would be where Toki had found them before.

Asgore opened the drawer and rifled through. He hummed softly, and pulled out the familiar bottle, and then unscrewed the top. He tapped out the usual two, and then offered them to the liquefying Tenebris. He gave him a gentle smile. “Here you are, old friend. At least you didn’t stain my fur like the first time, no?” He teases gently.

He shot him a look before he licked the two tablets out of Asgore’s palm, leaving a stripe of saliva in his wake as he leaned back to let the tablets work.

Asgore stared at the black saliva now tainting his palm, and chuckled with hearty affection. He felt some of the weight on his soul ease. “Good to see your sense of humor is intact, old friend.”

He kept his gaze playful but sour as he sat there, slowly allowing his form to come together once more. However, as he came to sink down to the floor, his coat now covered him. "..." He looked at it, and then let out a soft 'huh' sound.

His reversion went faster than normal, which was good. “Well… At least you’re not as naked anymore?” The turtleneck and slacks hadn’t come back, but there were plenty in his dresser. “Would you like for me to get you some clothes for you?”

"I would appreciate that, old friend." he sighed, nuzzling into the coat.

Asgore smiled slightly, and went to fetch clothing. He returned momentarily, and offered it up to him with a soft look. “Here you go. Lets get this on you, and then get you in to bed. Regressing to that form usually makes you tired, does it not?”

"Exhausted." he answered quietly, getting to his bed and sitting down before he slipped on his clothing.

Asgore smiled and nodded. “We can wait,” He said softly. “For your story on what happened. I want you to rest first, okay? First and foremost. You need rest. Though…” Asgore frowned sadly, and held up the muzzle.

He hesitated, and reached up to rub over his chin. He didn't want to, he looked at it like a cat would glare at a bath... "Even within my own home...?"

“Grillby and I agreed that it was best…” Idly, Asgore rubs at the bite mark displayed on his forearm, looking sad and upset at the idea of having to do this to his lover. “I don’t want to, but…”

"..." A deep breath, and he reached up, his palm facing up as to receive the item.

Asgore settled it carefully into his palm. “I am sorry, old friend. If all goes well, you won't have to wear it for more than a couple of days, I promise.”

He looked at it for a while, and then he sighed before he lifted it and slowly put it on. Securing it around the back of his head, Tenebris looked up at Asgore. His gaze was understanding, but upset and embarrassed. "...

Tenebris gaze upset the kind king too, and Asgore silently begged forgiveness with his eyes. “I know you don’t fully understand why you have to wear this, but… Thank you for being brave enough to put it back on.”

His gaze lowered and he sighed quietly, giving a small nod before he lifted his legs and rested them on the bedding, stretching them out before he turned and rested his head on his pillow, his tail coiling around him.

Asgore shifted and collected a blanket from the side of the bed, and carefully draped it over him. “Rest well, old friend. I will be here when you wake.”

He nodded gently in acknowledgement, but with the muzzle keeping his mouth closed, he rattled in his throat, but that was all he spoke.

Asgore gave him a fond pat to the head, and then went to take a seat in one of the few chairs in the room. It wasn’t largely comfortable like Tenebris recliner was, but it suited his needs. He took a seat, tugged out a book, and settled in to read and keep an eye on the old royal scientist.
Toki woke in the middle of that night with a frightened sound and a sharp lurch, flailing her way right out of the side of the bed. She hit the floor with a faint thud of bone on tile and scrabbled back, terror lighting her eyes a bright green in the darkness of the bedroom, and her bandaged leg ended up getting dragged with her.

The thing she’d seen in her dream had been large, with sharp teeth clamping around her leg as long talons curled and sliced for her belly. But instead of being saved… no one had come. She had been mauled, bones cracked, marrow and magic splattered, belly torn asunder and children taken. Toki had screamed and screamed and screamed, until it had gone dark… And then it had started again, with Tenebris lunging for her neck with teeth that shattered bone no matter how much magic she reinforced it with.

She had woken in a panic, and in her panic had bolted away from the nearest source of life, no doubt jostling Papyrus in his slumber. Not that she went far or fast. Her crutches had gotten scattered in her tumble, lost on the floor in the dark, but she didn’t stop backing up until her back hit her dresser, and she could curl her undamaged leg in front of her belly to aid her arms in guarding it.

Toki heaved for breath, eyes wild and alight with the fresh sensations of her nightmares.

Papyrus had been awakened with a start and he sat up fast, his magic stuttering to life. "Toki?" he gasped, eye lights tracking the panicked glow of her form through the dark. "Oh stars...!" he got out of bed as quickly as he could untangle herself and went to her side. "Hey!"

Her eye lights flickered to the quick moving form in the dark and she flinched automatically, curling in on herself with a desperate buzzing sound. His voice registered to her ears several seconds later, and she squinted her eye sockets shut tightly. "I’m not there, I’m not there, I’m not there," she muttered tightly.

"Toki!" he hugged her. "It's okay! It's okay."

His touch was calming, because it was familiar warm bones, a familiar smell, and not hard teeth gnashing through her. She rattled noisily, and leaned into him. It took her a while, but she calmed enough to stop hyperventilating and rasping rapid-fire muttered words. When she could put together a coherent sentence, she loosened her defensive position, and glanced to him. "I- I’m sorry. I didn’t mean to wake you." She murmured.

"No, no it's fine..." He shakes his head roughly. “You had a bad dream..."

Toki swallowed slightly and nodded. “I know.” Her palms come to her face, and her sharp tipped fingers dig into the base of her horns as she shakily tries to calm herself down. “Still… I’m sorry.” Another deep breath, and she shudders on its exhale. Toki was hesitant to talk to Pap about it. How on earth would she explain that her future father in law had left her with nightmares? She was just barely starting to get over the ones from Han. At least the ones from Han didn’t send her fleeing from the bed. “Why don’t you go back to sleep? You need your rest.” She murmurs softly.

"Because you do too." he told her sternly.

Toki shuddered slightly. Her middle was bright through her nightgown, and it provided a bit of light that kept the shadows of the room from being too dark. “I’m not very tired anymore.” She mutters. She was tired, yes, but she didn’t want to go back to sleep to experience the nightmares once again. Toki ground her teeth and shook her head. “That was a lie. Sorry. I’m still a bit tired, but… I don’t want to see that nightmare again so soon.”
"Come on, you're sleeping with me." he told her, picking her up.

Toki squirmed in his arms, and tried to wiggle away. "Papyrus Aliquam Gaster, you don't need to be straining yourself. Just get me my crutches." She sighs. "I was sleeping with you, you silly skeleton." She just hadn't been pressed to him, because he liked to try and heal a little bit more of the fractures on her leg while she wasn't awake to scold him for doing it. He'd already healed the fractures on her arms, but the ones on her leg were a lot worse.

"Nyeh." he nuzzled her stubbornly as he carried her to the bed, laying her down before climbing back into bed alongside her and pulling her close in a protective hold.

Toki fussed a little bit, but ended up just slumping against him, her soul thundering on at it's rapid pace in her chest. She shivers sharply, and peers at him quietly. "You're too stubborn for your own good." She sighs, and nuzzles her skull to his chest, carefully angling her horns away from his face so she doesn't hook one into his jaw. "I don't know if I'll sleep immediately…" She could end up lying awake while he drifted off.

"I don't care." he purred gently.

She sighed into his ribs, and peered up at him tiredly. "And what if I had wanted to go for a walk to clear my mind before trying to sleep?" If she had cheeks, she'd have puffed them up at him. As it was, she simply puffs hot air through her teeth and into his chest.

"Then I would walk with you, of course." He yawns, his statement matter-of-fact.

Toki swallows and nuzzles him softly. "Can we go on a walk then? I'm a little wound up…" She needed her crutches, and her slippers, and then she'd be good to go on a walk.

"Of course." he replied softly. He let her go, and rolled out of bed so he could go fetch their coats.

Toki took that moment of freedom to scoot to her side of the bed. Her crutches had gotten knocked out of her immediate reach, so she hauled herself upright, and hobbled for them as best she could. Bending to get them was hard, putting all of her weight on one leg and trying not to let her pregnancy throw her shaky balance off any further, but she successfully collected them, and shoved the padded ends under her arm pits as she righted herself. Toki's gown was thick enough not to be improper for going outside in, but thin enough to let her middle glow through like a night light.

She gets her slippers on, and then pads closer towards the door to meet in the middle with Pap and the coats.

He smiled and helped her get her jacket on, keeping her balanced as he slid it over her gown and let the front hang open. "Just a little walk around the house?" he inquired quietly.

"Yeah. Just around the compound yard." She might take a seat at the base of the clan tree, and just sit for a bit. For the first week of July, it was still slightly chilly at night. It would begin warming up soon though, and soon everything would be sweltering day and night. Toki shifts, adjusting her jacket, and muses that the zipper in the front will no longer go over her belly anymore.

She hobbles to the door and opens it, pulling it inward with a soft hum. She blinks, surprised to see someone on the other side.

Thumper had managed to start walking a little bit on his own a few days prior, but he tired out easily. His body had wasted away as his magic devoured itself to keep him alive- and they needed to build him back up again. He was standing at the door, his blanket tucked around his shoulders. One hand was rubbing his eye sleepily, while the other was poised to knock.
“Toki?” He blinked up at her slowly. “I had a nightmare…” He began softly. “A… Are you going somewhere?”

Toki offered him a soft smile. “I had a nightmare too, sweet heart. We were just going on a walk to help me calm down. Do you want to come with?”

“I want to, but I might get tired though…” The rabbit’s ears drooped, and he tucked himself further into his blanket.

"Allow me to fix this, then." Papyrus spoke up, gently scooping up Thumper, "Nyeh heh heh~" he then nuzzled him gently.

Thumper yawned slightly as he was lifted, little pink nose twitching. Papyrus’ scent wasn’t one he was as familiar with, but it carried an undercurrent of Toki’s smell, and Tenebris too, so he relaxed nonetheless. His arms looped around the skeleton’s neck, and he nuzzled him back, furry ears flicking back so their length didn’t bump into his face. “Mmm… This works.”

“Here- if you hold him close, we can zip him up in your jacket.” The shorter skeleton suggested with a warm look. He looked good, hefting the child up to his chest. Thumper was less heavy than Toki was, and therefore less of a stress on Papyrus. He was still sometimes unsteady, though his Magi-Drain was rapidly recovering.

Toki shifted around in front of Papyrus, and took hold of his jacket. She tucked Thumper in a little bit better, more than used to the slightly traditional method for carrying small children that her mother had used. She leaned around him to secure the blanket, keeping Thumper’s limbs from falling- and leaving the blanket as a smooth surface for the rabbit to lean into without fear of falling out from under the bottom of Pap’s coat.

A quick zip upwards, and soon there was a sleepy rabbit face visible from the front of his jacket.

He smiled at Thumper gently once he was settled, and then he turned to go. "Come on, let's go then~" he purred softly.

Toki shifted, and set off through the door. She headed for the stairs with a quiet sound. “Of we go indeed.” She chuckles softly. The stairs going down are more of a challenge than going up, but she’s not going to let Papyrus simply tote her down. She eases herself down carefully, leaning backwards and not forwards so she doesn’t go toppling face first down the stairs.

Thumper snuggles up inside of the skeleton’s jacket, another yawn stretching his mouth. His soft fingers sleepily cling to Papyrus’ ribs, and he latches on securely, snuggling close. His eyes are droopy, but he’s trying to watch and listen to what which is going on around him.

Pap easily helped her down the stairs while keeping one hand on Thumper, a smile on his face as he hummed gently.

Once they were at the bottom, Toki hid a yawn, and hobbled slowly for the back door. Her leg ached- but there was nothing they could really do to dull the pain. So she simply had to deal with it.

The rabbit was tiredly nuzzling to him, the humming coming from his chest lulling him slightly.

Toki guided them to the back door, and slipped out, yawning as the glow from her middle under her nightgown lit up the back deck area. She could vaguely see the glow of wolf eyes turning towards them, guards investigating the disturbance of noise so late at night. Toki chuckles slightly. “Well, you’re not going to lose me in the dark.”
"Not at all." he giggled quietly, before he kissed her head gently. "Come on~"

Toki nodded, and smiled. She couldn’t really take his hand, but she could hobble slowly beside him. She headed out, over the well-traveled grass path, and began her usual walking rout. Crutches gave her horrible back cramps, but she valued walking at this point over comfort. The twins were fussy in her belly, and she hoped that they would settle in her belly with some walking, and once her mind calmed down too. “It’s a lovely night,” she muses softly. “A little chilly for July, but not too bad.”

"I think it’s quite pleasant... What about you, Thumper?"

The rabbit child stirred, and tucked his head a little closer to his sternum. “It’s really pretty and nice out tonight,” he slurred tiredly, “and Miss Toki looks like a firefly.”

Toki flushed slightly, and chuckled gently as she hobbled on.

He laughed softly at that. "Oh yes, a very pretty one at that~"

“Mhm.” Thumper peered at her tiredly, and nestled his head back to Aliquam’s chest. “She lights up the dark.” He mumbles. “Like a star or something. ‘S nice not to be in the dark.”

Considering he’d been contained in the darkness of Tenebris chest, she could understand that a lot. “I’m with you there. For all of their fussing and wiggling tonight, the babybones make good nightlights.” She hums softly.

Thumper slurred a soft giggle. “Beeeebbybones.” He murmured, completely butchering the words into an audible pun. “Baby skeletons are called really weird things. How do you make them stop squirming?”

"I was thinking more like you said before; a firefly." Quinn replied with a soft chuckle as they walked. "I suppose when I give them a little of my magic, they get excited but then don’t take long after to settle down. Aren’t I right, Toki?"

“Very right. The excitement is sometimes really weird feeling, but it’s nice when they finally calm and settle down.” But that didn’t mean she was going to let him make a donation until he was back in perfect shape. Toki smiled over at the both of them. “A star, a firefly, a nightlight- I pretty much fit all three of those things.” Her crutches knock into a rock and send it skidding, and she startles a guard. Toki waves an apologetic hand to him, and continues on her way once his fur stops bristling.

“Mm…” Thumper’s little ears twitch and flick slightly at the sound, and he peers up at Papyrus gently. “It felt really weird when they kicked my nose yesterday. Babies are weird.” He decided sleepily. “So when are they going to get-” He yawned. “Get here?”

"We actually don't know yet." he replied.

“So far it seems like I’m following a pretty usual pregnancy as far as human ones go. I’m a bit bigger than most women with twins, but I’m following the same schedule from what the online websites seem to show. If we continue with this rate of growth, I should have the twins towards the last week of September, if not earlier. Twins run early verses singulars normally.” Toki elaborates easily, continuing to trek along on their walk. She veers towards the tree, inhaling the cooler night air and enjoying it greatly.

“Ahhh…” Thumper yawns again and closes his eyes. “Okay… I can’t wait to meet them…”

"Neither can I, Thumper. Neither can I." he purred happily.
The rabbit fell quiet, his fingers tightening slightly on the skeleton’s ribs as he clung to him. A faint noise of agreement leaves him, before his breathing starts to slow.

Toki hums softly. “I can’t either.” She hums. “I’m both curious and very nervous as to how it’s going to happen, you know? The whole… having them, thing.” Toki glances to Thumper, and chuckles as his soft snores float up. Well, they were safe to probably talk about anything now, so long as they did it quietly.

“We’ll be alright, Toki.” Papyrus smiled as he shifted Thumper gently, adjusting the slumbering child so he was better seated in his jacket. Now it was a hands free job, so his hands dropped down and tucked into his jacket pockets. "Toki... there's something important I want to talk about."

“Lets take a seat first.” Toki shot him a slight smile. The leaves on the trees rustle in a late night breeze, and Toki hobbles to the thick, gnarled roots. She takes a seat on a tall gnarled root, stretching her sore leg out with a soft sigh. The bones were throbbing- but it was a distracting sort of throbbing. Toki pats the root next to her and smiles up to him. “What did you want to talk about, Pap?"

"Toki... I want to have a wedding... and I want it to be as soon as possible.” He took a seat next to her as he spoke, and gave her a bright smile.

Well, that was not what she was expecting. But she could roll with it. “Okay.” She simply grins at him. “Well… it takes a little bit of time to plan one, but… we can do a simple one. Maybe… Sometime in the first week of August, if we can find someone to officiate it?"

He nodded once, "Perfect... I don't want anything else to happen before we do..." He purred.

Toki nods and gently takes his hand in hers. She laces her fingers with his, and hums gently. “I don’t either.” She says softly. She shifts, leans her head on his shoulder, and smiles down at the snoring Thumper tucked in his jacket. “We’re not going to be able to throw a big wedding, but… I think a small one would be perfect.” She murmurs softly. “Get you a tux, and me... Well, I’m not going to fit in any wedding dresses from any of the shops, but we can find something that isn't slacks.” She probably wouldn’t wear white. White was a sign that that you were a virgin- and given the state of her middle, she was as far from that as possible. “What are your thoughts on it, Pap? First week of August gives us… what… between two and three weeks to get a wedding planned. Think it’s doable?"

"It sounds perfect." he purred gently.

She lifted his hand and pressed a kiss to his knuckles. “It’s going to be a lot of work,” She warns. “We both are going to have to plan this… Where we’re going to have it, who all is coming, what traditions we’re going to follow, be it human of either culture or monster ones… It’s going to be a lot of work.”

"I know, and I don’t care.” He hummed.

She reached up to gently pinch his cheekbone, smiling at him as she wiggles it playfully. “Wedding planning tends to be stressful, you dork. So… What sort of wedding do we want? Like… I don’t know monster traditions. I actually like American style weddings over traditional Japanese ones.” Traditional Japanese ones tended to be elaborate, and there was no chance in hell she was putting on the multiple layered kimono that the clan head had to wear for her wedding in the middle of the summer. “Maybe… Asgore could officiate for it?"

The tall skeleton gave her a smile and an easy suggestion. "What about a monsterkind-originated wedding? It's simple and you don’t even need to wear anything super fancy unless you want to."
“That would work.” She nods. “I wouldn’t mind wearing something nice, but not very fancy. They don’t make a lot of fancy clothes for women in my size.” She rubbed her spare hand against her middle with an amused look. “What are monster weddings like?”

“You can always ask Lana, silly.” he purred. "They're never the same." He then answered. "It could be private, or as grand as a crowning ceremony, or everything in between."

“That is very vague.” She blinks slowly. “Well… Clan tradition states that the clan head have an elaborate wedding- but I really don’t like following all the rules.” She makes a face. “So maybe something… Private? Just immediate friends and family?" It would, of course, become big news if anyone found out there was a date for it. “That’s if it doesn’t get out to the rest of the villagers.” Amongst the monsters she was pretty well known. She had an inkling that if she had it anywhere in the village, probably more than half the population would show up for it. “I know I could ask Lana- but I am a silly skeleton and I don’t want to have to buy a fancy thing that I’ll only ever wear once- because I can assure you, I wont fit in it for anything else. I doubt I’ll ever get this big this fast when we next have kids.” Twins were pretty rare after all. Her family weren’t prone to them.

He shrugged loosely, too tired to really think too hard on everything just yet, before he blinked once at the last part of her statement. "M-More... Ah... Nyeh heh heh…"

“I’d kinda like a big family. I grew up with eight brothers. That’s a lot of kids, I know, but… It was nice. We all had a good relationship.” She was down to seven now, and she would miss Han for the rest of her life. Toki rubs his thumb gently, and glances up at him. “If you don’t want more than two of our own, I understand.” They may end up with three, if Thumper decided he wanted to stay with them permanently. She wouldn’t turn the child away if he chose them.

He smiled gently and leaned over to press a kiss to her horns. "I'd like that too~"

“Good.” She beams up at him softly. “We might end up with a third really soon though.” She jerks her chin towards Thumper, the little rabbit snoring and drooling peacefully against Aliquam’s sternum. “It’s his choice as to who he chooses to stay with- but there is a chance he could choose to stay with us.” All of Thumpers things had temporarily been moved from his old house and into one of the guest rooms.

“That's fine... I wouldn't mind taking him in." he chuckled, stroking the bunny's head.

The rabbit monster shifted in his jacket, nuzzling a tiny skull into a large skeletal hand, and settled right back into slumber without a fuss.

Toki watched him with tender eyes, love swelling up within her soul. She plopped her chin into her palm and watched him through warmly glowing eye lights, pupils affectionate little hearts. He was going to be a great dad. “I didn’t think you would, but I wanted to make sure. We’ll see what he decides. I'll support his choice either way.”

"Same here," He nodded, before he sighed. "The wedding... I still can't believe I actually get to talk about having one..."

“I know. It’s kinda surreal, isn’t it?” She shifts and nestles into his side, adjusting her crutches so they better lean against the root. “Your dad is back and awake- and with any luck, he’ll be in good enough shape to attend the wedding. I’m both excited and dreading the planning.” She chuckled. “I helped plan Ryushi’s wedding with Sarah. That was a nightmare and a half, and we had six months to get theirs planned. You and me have probably three weeks, if we do it towards the end of the first week of August. Speaking of- we totally need to invite Lana. She’s awesome.”
"I think she might like the surface," he agreed. "I don’t think we need THAT long to plan our wedding, honestly." he hummed gently.

"With the vast majority of the monsters on the topside, she might like to maybe move up here. I know a lot of the monsters here go to her for custom tailoring." She tended to recommend her to the monsters- because Lana was awesome. The Russian sheep was very sweet. “I’m actually going to need another couple shirts here soon.” The one coated in Han’s blood had been thrown out, as had the pair of pants. She couldn’t bring her self to clean it so she could wear it again- and she hadn’t even been sure she could wear the shirt she wore when Han had died in her arms. It brought unpleasant memories. And Tenebris had ruined another one when he had mauled her. The rest of them were starting to become a little tight across the peak of her belly. It had been a around six weeks since they’d gone to her for tailoring, and Toki had grown substantially in size from back then until now.

She offers Papyrus a wry grin. “Papyrus, dear, have you ever planned a human wedding? It takes ages to get everything ordered and arranged, and then there’s seating, catering, finding a location, securing said location- It’s a huge, huge mess, but ends up being really, really beautiful if done right. Why don’t you Google some of the different types of human weddings tomorrow, and see what I meant about planning. I take it monster weddings aren’t nearly as complex? That would be really nice.” She wasn’t sure how well she would handle too much stress at this point. She was still a bit… leery, after nearly losing the twins.

Papyrus chuckled. "There is no right way to do it with Monsters." he told her. "The only thing that is consistent is the blessing of his majesty." He explained.

“Well, that is quite easy then, huh?” She blinks, and chuckles softly. “We’ll still want to decide what we want to do for our wedding though. We do want it to be memorable, after all. We only get married once.” If you went into a relationship with thoughts of what came after it, it was doomed to failure. Toki shifted and nuzzled into his arm, a tiny yawn escaping her finally.

"Well that's the thing! We could have it right here!" he told her, turning to rest his hands on her shoulders with a smile. "In the compound, where friends and family alike will be able to watch. We can provide food, or everyone can bring a little something from home. We can have magic performances, we don't have to, every variable, every this-or-that you can think of!" he told her happily.

His exuberance is amusing, and she blinks as he takes her shoulders in hand. “You’ve been thinking about this for a while, haven’t you?” She grins slightly. “I’m down for all of it. Magic performances, the cooking, family and friends- I’m definitely down for it. We can have it in the court yard maybe, under this tree?” It was the clan tree. Clan ceremonies had been done here for centuries. It was old- probably older than the clan itself.

He looked up at the tree and he smiled. "Now you're getting it, take into consideration what makes you happy, what makes your life worth living..." he then cupped her cheeks. "And in this time... be wed to the one you want to spent that very same life with." he purred happily.

One of Toki’s hands come up to cup his cheek tenderly, and she smiles at him warmly. “You, my friends, and my family make my life worth living.” She says softly. “And there is no one else that I would rather spend the rest of my life with than you, Papyrus.” Toki leans up, careful not to jostle his burden, and then kisses him tenderly. “We’ll figure out our wedding plans.” She smiles. “There will definitely be dancing and music.” She did want to dance with her Dad- and with Papyrus too.

He smiled and hugged her gently with one arm, before he slid from the root and knelt to kiss her stomach. "I have many things to live for, Toki... but you... You three..." he smiled and pecked her stomach gently again. "You are what gives me life."

Toki’s smile grew, and she buzzed softly with love. “I love you, Pap.” She purrs. “I love you so much.” And the twins squirmed against his kisses, and tapped at his teeth with their limbs. “And they do too.”

Unfortunately, the tender moment was interrupted by a yawn that tugs her mouth open. She was finally relaxing and winding down from her nightmare, and tiredness was setting in. She still wasn’t completely over the Han nightmares either- so sleep was precious at times.

He smiled at her gently and reached up to pet her head softly as he lifted to his feet. "Come on, let's go home.” he purred, "Get Thumper in bed, and get you in my arms again.” He told her.

Toki nodded and collected her crutches again. She hauled herself upright, and hummed. “I’d like that. I’m finally settling down.” Toki set out slowly for the house, finding her leg slightly stiff from not moving it. It ached, not entirely pleasant, but getting in a nice warm bed would help soothe away that ache. “You might need some help getting him off.” She giggles softly. “He seems pretty firmly latched on.”

He set out after her, his legs eating up the distance easily so he could keep up with her. "If I can't get him off, then I suppose we could have him sleep with us, right?”

“Of course.” Toki nods. “The bed has plenty of room, honestly.”

The walk back to the house was pretty straight forward and short, and she slid the door open for the both of them once they got back. She hummed slightly and stepped through, motioning him in after her. “You’ll want to go up the stairs first, my love.” Going up was slower than going down.

He smiled and turned back to her, reaching out and offering her a hand, "Come on, I’ll help you up.”

“You can’t carry me and Thumper, dear.” She gave him a loving smile. “But thank you for the offer.” Still, she waits until he starts up, and then heads up slowly after him. “I might take a while, but I can get up there mostly on my own. I’ve been practicing. I used to be slower.” She sounds a bit proud of herself. She was more surefooted with the crutches now than she was before. Practice made perfect.

"I don’t want you falling.” He insisted.

"I won’t fall, love.” She gave him a grin. “At least not backwards. Now c’mon, your fine booty is blocking the stairs.”

"Nyeh~" he chuckled and turned, going upstairs and looking back at her to make sure she didn’t trip.

Toki saw him watching, and playfully stuck her tongue out at him. “Nyeh~” She teased, and made her way up after him. She was a lot slower, but she took her time so she went safely. And soon, she was at the top, and continuing on her way down towards Thumper’s room. “Lets see if we can get him settled in bed.”

He nodded and walked to where they had let him rest.

Toki edged into the room with Papyrus, and moved to wait by the bed. She abandoned her crutches, putting as little weight as possible on her leg, and then reached out to help Papyrus unzip his coat. Thumper stubbornly clung to his ribs, not even budging as his main support eased away. Toki smiled, eye lights glimmering a warm green in the darkness, and reached up to gently ease her fingers around Thumper’s fingers so she could slowly remove them from Pap’s ribs.
Thumper squirmed slightly, but his grip began to loosen under Toki’s gentle touch. “Mmm…” he sleepily mumbles, not stirring beyond his soft noise.

“Catch him as I loosen him, Pap.” She couldn’t quite lift the rabbit without using both of her legs to support the weight, and the cracked one would probably crumble more if she tried.

He nodded gently and settled his arms carefully between Thumper’s shoulders and under his backside for when he loosened.

Thumper gave away suddenly, his fingers curling towards his chest and clutching his blanket tighter to him. He was limp in Aliquam’s hands, snoring softly.

Toki smiled and tugged the sheets back, motioning for the bigger skeleton to settle the rabbit gently in bed.

He caught him effortlessly and smiled happily, laying him down in his bed and covering him up gently.

Toki took a moment to tuck him in, making sure his pillow was fluffed and that his ears weren’t caught under his head. Once he was sure to be comfortable, she hobbled a step back, and reached back to collect her crutches once more. She held a finger to her teeth to mimic keeping quiet, and then quietly hobbled back for the door.

He smiled happily and walked with her to the door, before he sighed quietly in contentment. "That was easy enough."

Once they were out, she eased the door shut and nodded to him. “Sometimes it is, sometimes it isn’t. If you rub his fingers gently, he’ll usually let go. Sometimes he won’t though.” She smiles at him slightly, and then heads for their room. The door was still open, so she didn’t need to open it to slip in. She hobbled for her side of the bed, and carefully set her crutches down, before wrestling herself out of her jacket.

Balancing on one leg was tiring, she noted as she got herself free. Toki had to gimp a couple steps to the bed, none of which felt good, before she could ease herself down onto it. She leaned back, and rubbed a hand over her middle. “Of course, when I get tired you two decide it’s time for a dance party.” She remarks in tired amusement.

Papyrus wasn’t long in joining her, shedding his jacket and leaving it to be picked up in the morning. He chuckled as he climbed onto the bed and reached out, petting her stomach gently, "Come on you two." he chuckled.

Toki settled back carefully, and then rolled onto her side so that she faced him. This left her sore leg pressed to the mattress, which kept it still and less likely to be moved and bumped. Toki smiled up at him sleepily, and then snuggled close to him. “Mmm… They’re just excited because their daddy is close,” she purrs softly. They weren’t kicking too hard, so it wasn’t like it would disturb too much of her sleep.

He pulled her close and kissed her gently as he reached up to massage her stomach, "Nyeh heh heh, they have my energy alright." he purred.

The massage relaxed her, and her sockets drifted closed as she smooched him back. She nuzzled her head to his chest, and rotated slightly so he could rub easier. “That they do.” She thruns. “They wiggle all hours of the day. But when they sleep… They sleep like I do.” She tended to sleep like a log when she was tired. And tired she was, nightmares notwithstanding. “Mm…”
His mate was surely sleepy, and she was relaxed and warm as she snuggled up tightly to him, eager to be encased in his grasp and settle into the safety of his embrace.

He kissed her head, and wrapped his arms around her, holding her tight.

“I love you.” She murmurs softly. Her breath slips out in a soft sigh- and she finds herself in blissful nothingness, as she latches on tightly to him.
Chapter 58

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: The breaks only last for so long… >) Also Silverwing sobbed during this chapter. She is such a soft little cutie patootie. Also, I got the chapter out for ya'll.
Thanks for being patient with us :)

Come visit us at the blog, bros~ http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: so I don’t know if this is a recovery chapter or another angst chapter but either way I don’t care. I'm going into depth about Tenebris here, stuff I have shared on his RP blog and then some.

Tenebris has to be the most emotional Gaster I have ever seen.

A week had rolled past. The civilians had been brought home a couple days after Tenebris had proven stable, and they were simply overjoyed to be back. The civilians visited from time to time, but they worked with Tenebris and Asgore to help reintegrate the old royal scientist into city life.

The town was abuzz with noise again, and it was perfect for filling the near silence that had been there when they had all been gone.

Toki’s nightmares continued, and kept her from actively visiting Tenebris. She had tried- but actually visiting wasn’t doable. She’d passed by the house, and had flinched upon seeing Tenebris through the window. He hadn’t been doing anything besides eating something, and she’d nearly stumbled on her crutches.

She didn’t visit- because it wasn’t fair to him if he were to see her weakness. It was obvious he didn’t remember what he had done. Asgore had even said as much. So Toki blamed her lack of visiting as being busy with getting things arranged for the wedding with her down time.

Her leg kept her in the house anyways. Some of the bones were still loose, the cracks slowly healing- but she wasn’t going to allow Papyrus to drain himself again to try and re-do the cast he had made for her leg out of his magic. She wanted him to be functional- and she had time to heal. Besides, he dealt with her nightly nightmares. The nightly walks were becoming a regular thing in order to get her to settle down enough to sleep without them.

Toki wasn’t the only one who had nightmares though.

And her nightmares were not nearly as violent as his.

---

He could hear the hard footsteps approaching and though his body wracked with fatigue, he slowly pushed himself up onto his hands and feet, looking up as he gave a low growl, his tail lashing as he backed up in the cage he was trapped in
"You might be big and scary, but you're still a fucking monster, and that means you can easily dust like one too." The H.A.M. guard taunted, sparking an electric prod he held in front of the cage.

Darkness consumed him, and when he could see the light once more, he was tied down. "No... STOP!" he screamed desperately, or, so he tried. The muzzle that held his jaw closed stopped him from having his final chance.

The masked human walked up, leering at him with cruel eyes.

A snap of fingers, and a breathing mask was lifted. It was shoved over his mouth and no matter how hard he struggled, he stood no chance to the gas, and his head grew heavy. His senses grew faint, but he could still sense what felt like beacons in the consuming darkness... he could see Thumper in a cage nearby... hearing him crying. A flash of white, the sound of an electric saw...

Suddenly agony as his shield was penetrated.

Then... a fatal spray of black.

Tenebris' eyes shot open, his pupils needle-thin in panic as he let out a screech, or, at least as best he could with the muzzle over his face. He rolled and bucked hard in the bedding, his tail and feet lashing without coordination before he fell over the edge of the bed.

He barked in shock from impact, and immediately pushed himself back, clawing desperately at the muzzle, cutting his own cheeks with his claws in the process.

Asgore had been vigilant but had ended up almost nodding off when Tenebris suddenly burst into action. He could not get near him with his legs kicking, and had to wait until he was on the ground once more before he could try to do anything.

"Tenebris! Snap out of it, old friend!" he barked out to try and get his attention as he approached. And he got it all right. Tenebris looked up at him then moved to his hands and feet, arching his back and hissing as his tail blade swung around threateningly.

Asgore held up his hands and stepped back. "Easy, old friend. You are here in the village- you are safe. You are going to be okay." He soothed gently, keeping his hands up in a non-threatening manner to try and ease Tenebris back to reality.

He rattled in panic and clicked his teeth together a few times as he felt his rear meet the wall, before he swung his blade again.

This is when Asgore struck. He lunged forward and grabbed the blade by the base, rendering it no longer a threat as long as he held onto it. Tenebris screeched and swung at him, but he used his strength to push the panicked beast to the wall, long enough for him to get the muzzle off. He could tell it was no doubt part of what had him so freaked out with the way he attacked it to desperately. Without letting a single moment pass, Asgore put his other arm around Tenebris' neck and tightened, slamming him to the ground and pinning him.

Tenebris' legs bucked without coordination and he screamed out now that his jaws were free, but Asgore continued to hold him. He held on through the bucking, the snapping, until the fight faded from Tenebris, and he was trembling underneath the king.

"Tenebris. Is that you again?" Asgore murmured softly in the other's ear.

His breathing rough, Tenebris slowly looked up at Asgore, his pupils loosening and opening slowly to look at the king, a moment to swallow, and he nodded

With that confirmation, Asgore let go of him and instead sat back, letting the terrified phantom crawl into his lap to be comforted.

"A-Asg-gore…"

"Shh... It's okay, Tene..." he murmured, using an old nickname of his, "It's over, you're not there anymore... You're home... with me..." he purred gently, tilting Tenebris' chin up to press their foreheads together. "You are safe..."

After long enough, Asgore's loving gaze settled the terrified beast, and the king relaxed where he sat, holding and cradling the phantom until dawn.

Tenebris hadn't been able to sleep since his nightmare, so he and Asgore had migrated downstairs. The muzzle was kept nearby in case Tenebris panicked again, but he looked to be fine for the most part as he waited for Asgore to return with tea.

Having been given help with refilling and lighting his pipe, Tenebris was quietly puffing at it until Asgore came and put a tea tray on the coffee table, though it seems Tenebris was going to drink from a thicker cup, instead of a fragile teacup.

"Do not worry, old friend, I know how you like yours." Asgore rumbled, making him his tea while he slowly put aside his pipe. The last exhale of smoke was released and Asgore held out the mug. Tenebris took it with trembling hands but Asgore kept his hands on the smaller pair as to make sure he didn't drop it in his trembling.

"Steady now, Tene. I don't want you to choke..."

Steady was considered, and slowly Tenebris was able to get down a gulp of tea, before he surrendered it to put it back down.

"There you go..."

There was a knock at the door, and Asgore sighed softly before he could take a seat. “I’ll be right back, old friend. Take a moment to relax- and take a drink when you think your hand is steady.” Asgore gave him an affectionate touch, and then the King was off towards the door as the knocking resumed again.

Undyne stood on the other side, clad in her armor, once he opened it. She saluted him. “Asgore, sir, I’ve come with the report from night shift.”

Asgore glanced back to Tenebris, and then motioned her in. “Come in, come in, Undyne. Please, sit. You must be tired.”

“A little bit.” She admits. “I’ve pulled doubles, and Alphys has been guiding me into setting up a security system along the outer walls, so she can help keep an eye on things too. All of that science and technological bullshit is beyond me, really, but she’s not comfortable coming out here without Todd being fully trained to cover medical problems in her stead.” She steps in, heavy armor clanking, and pads closer to Tenebris. Undyne offers him a sharp-toothed grin and a wave. “Hello, Tenebris. Drinking that gross grass-water again, huh?” She liked tea, but orange blossom tea tended to offend her senses. Oranges were gross.

"Hello, Undyne." Tenebris returned the greeting, before he folded his arms. "And yes. The tea often is able to calm me after my... less than pleasant nightmares..." he replied, rubbing his face with a sigh.

“Maybe try walks?” She suggests. “It’s helping with Toki. I see her and Papyrus out and about almost every night now.” The big fish monster flutters her fins, and glances back as the king joins them once more. “Anyways, sir, so far the nights have proven to be good. We’ve had a couple scares, but it’s mostly been animals in the woods. The wolves have been on guard- but wolves will be wolves, and if a rabbit farts in the trees, they’re all over the noise.” They were hyper vigilant for a good reason.

The king chortles at her choice of words. “I’m glad everything is going well. Perhaps when Tenebris is feeling up to it, he might be able to assist with setting up a security system?” The scientist was good with many things, after all, and it would give him something to focus on rather than his nightmares.

"It's been a while since I’ve calibrated something like that... but I’m sure if I just put my mind to it." He replied with a small smile, before he rubbed his eyes. "Better than just... sitting around, unable to do anything."

“That’s about how Toki sees it.” Undyne nods. “Though Pap is keeping an eye on her most of the time now. Since the scare with the guppies, and with her being on crutches, pretty much everyone is keeping an eye on her.”

Asgore nods. “It is for the best. I’ve heard that you’ve been recruited to help her clean house a couple times?”

“I did back when Pap was still on bed rest. He didn’t want her doing too much and risk more scares.” The fish lady nods. “Either way, I’d definitely appreciate the help. Alphys would too. She’s patient, but to me the red wire and the green wire are both wires and it doesn’t make sense that they could explode when crossed.”

"...!" What she said got his attention though. "Scare with the children? What happened?" he asked worriedly.

“Uhhhhhhmm...” Undyne glanced to Asgore, and then rubbed the back of her head. “Uh, well... it happened when she, uh... broke her leg.” They’d agreed to keep most of the damage quiet from Tenebris- about who caused it. “The guppies- well it doesn’t matter, really. Pap fixed it so that’s what matters, right?” Stars above, she wasn’t good at deflection.

"She broke her leg?!” He was now visibly concerned. "What happened to her!?"

“Aaand cracked her arms, but those are fixed now!” This was spiraling out of control. Undyne tugged slightly on her hair and heaved a sigh. “Uh... Well... Technically... HAM caused it...?”

Asgore sighed through his nose. “She is fine enough now, old friend. She’s on crutches, mostly because she is stubborn about Papyrus trying to re-form the cast he made for her leg. But she is healing, and has help around the house.”

Tenebris' tail rattled loudly with worry. "Is there anything I can do to help her?"

“Uh... well, you could probably heal her? But you’re probably not in the condition to do that yet.”
The captain shrugs, and glances away. “She’s healing, but slowly. Some, ah, parts of her shin keeps falling out of the cast. But you know Toki- she’s stubborn when she wants to be, and she doesn’t want Papyrus to drain himself again. Between her leg and the guppies, he fainted on the stairs.”

Asgore cleared his throat. “Let’s not stress Tenebris now, Undyne.”

His tail was rattling louder now. "This happened when I was gone, didn’t it... I should have been here to protect her..."

“Uh…” The captain shifted awkwardly. “About that… It wasn’t… before…”

“Undyne.” Asgore gave her a sharp look.

“Look, Asgore, he’s a big monster, he deserves to know.”

The blade slowly lashed back and forth on the floor where it rested, "Undyne."

The goat king’s fur ruffled slightly as he watched the tail on the floor.

To her credit, the fish monster didn’t look cowed by either of them. Undyne heaved a sigh. “Fine. It happened after you got back. That’s all I’ll say.”

“Damn it, Undyne.” Asgore glared at her.

"I... I don’t understand..." Tenebris sounded distressed now, reaching to grip his tail under the blade as to keep it from hitting anyone.

“You’re smart, Tenebris.” Undyne said softly. “Think about how you’re acting now… and how you were when you got back.”

He shook his head, "Undyne, I can’t remember a thing... The last I remember is being at the mercy of those terrorists..." he growled

“That’s not what I meant.” The fish monster swallowed. “You are smart. You’ve been wearing a muzzle, and that’s mostly for our protection. Put that big brain of yours to work and put two and two together if you want to know what happened with Toki.” Undyne’s fins ruffled slightly, and she eyed the looming form of the King. “I’m going to excuse myself now before Asgore reduces me to a paste.”

“I’m going, I’m going.” The fish woman huffs.

The door shuts gently behind her, and Asgore’s fur flares as he glares at the door. Damn it, damn it, damn it, they weren’t supposed to tell Tenebris. Not until they were sure he could handle it.

"..." A precaution well thought out... The angry confusion began to fade and the horror appeared to replace it in the phantom’s eyes. "... I did it...?"

The king hunched his shoulders and sighed roughly. He did not speak though. He refused. Instead he returned, and took his mug of tea to drink some. “Drink your tea, Tenebris. I’ll make us lunch soon.”

"Asgore... is she telling the truth...?" He growled weakly, looking up at him. "Did I attack Toki?"

“You’re not going to drop this, are you?”
“No, Asgore, I’m not.”

Asgore heaved a heavy sigh, and looked at him sorrowfully. “Yes, you did. Along with Papyrus, Grillby, and myself. You squared off with one of Toki’s summons, and that was the distraction needed to incapacitate you.” He didn’t need to explicitly say what Tenebris had lost most of his teeth in Toki’s leg, or that Tenebris had nearly killed his grandchildren.

Voicing that out loud was not a blow he could ever deal to his lover.

... He immediately moved to get up. "I have to see her..." he insisted.

“Alright. I need you to stay calm though, okay?” Asgore stood, and set his mug down. “Let me get my jacket.”

He rattled quietly and sat back down, his face in his hands, before he looked up. "Asgore... I want to go myself."

Asgore hesitated in putting his coat on, and glanced back. “Are… you sure?” He couldn’t exactly tell him no. Tenebris was not a prisoner, not by any means- and he was proving to be in control so far.

"Yes, I’m sure, old friend." he murmured as he stood up.

Asgore heaved a sigh through his nose, and nodded slightly. “All right… All right. Just… Please be careful. Try to keep a level head, okay?” He would be keeping an ear out for any such noises of Tenebris getting aggressive.

He nodded gently. "Of course, old friend."

The king nodded and motioned for him to go ahead and go as he went to resume his seat on the couch.

He walked to the door and slowly reached, gripping the doorknob... However, his tongue shifted and he was reminded of his... condition...

He released the doorknob and turned, looking upstairs before he teleported upstairs quickly for a moment.

The king blinked in befuddlement. “If you’re looking for your muzzle, it’s down here.”

But he wasn't looking for his muzzle...

He was looking for something to potentially use to hide his mouth, his embarrassingly fangless mouth...

There were a couple scarves in his room that Asgore tended to wear. It was about the only thing that would work.

That'd work. He took hold of a black one and wrapped it around himself, taking in the scent before he teleported back downstairs. "Alright, I’ll be back."

“Be safe.” Asgore nodded.
Toki was in the living room, having just sent Thumper upstairs for a nap. He hadn’t gotten much sleep the night prior- his nightmares had been bad, and he’d slept poorly. So he was going to get some sleep while she relaxed in the living room.

Toki had dug out her old yarn from the shed, and had settled down to do something she hadn’t done in a while. Crocheting was as frustrating as it was relaxing- and she was reworking an old pattern to make a set of matching beanies for Papyrus, Sans, and Tenebris, now that the elder monster was back and aware.

Toki had her leg propped up on a pillow as she relaxed, crutches perched next to her on the arm of the chair. The house was mostly quiet, but her phone was on the coffee table playing some quiet music as she relaxed and tried to keep the yarn from tangling between her finger bones.

The air was peaceful with the melody of the music she enjoyed, and left uninterrupted until there was a gentle knocking sound from the front door.

Toki made a slightly flustered buzz, and dropped her yarn on the table. Toki shifted, carefully using the crutches to haul herself to her feet. At thirty weeks along, it was damn near impossible to get up and down now, and if not for her crutches being in arms reach, she’d be stuck.

Toki padded for the door, crutches making a soft tktk tktk tktk on the tile as she made her way over. Toki swung the door open with a soft hum. “Yes?”

"Miss Toki." Tenebris' gently voice resonated from behind the scarf he wore over his mouth. He had lowered to sit on his haunches after knocking as to prevent scaring her with his height, he knew he had a bad habit of doing that, even without intention to.

It probably would have been better if he had towered over her. His height had never bothered her- but crouching on his haunches reminded her of his lunge, of large teeth coming for her death. She flinches back just faintly before she can stop herself, but forces herself not to back away. If she didn’t have such a death grip on her crutches, she’d have curled her arms around her belly. Either way, she shifted just slightly so the large swell was just slightly blocked by her crutches. In doing so, it looked like she was welcoming him inside. “Tenebris.” She smiles at him, slightly. “It’s good to see you up and around. I’d have visited but getting around on crutches is murder. Please, come in. Are you feeling all right? What’s with the scarf?”

"Mmh... " he slowly straightened upright again, taking a half step as to be sure that the invitation was just that, and not an assumption on his part. "It's quite alright, I’ve needed time to recover from the poor treatment I had received prior." he answered, "Ah, The scarf is... Well, ah..." he murmured, trailing off after a moment.

"Ah... Teeth?" She guessed lightly. Toki took a couple steps back to let him in, hiding another flinch as he straightened and stepped towards her. Keeping herself off to the side so he didn’t trip on her crutch, Toki motioned him in. It was indeed an invitation. Toki gave him a sad smile. “I’m glad you’re back.” she said softly. “We’ve all missed you. Thumper would love to see you, but I just sent him up for a nap. He didn’t sleep well last night.”

He rubbed his head lightly as he looked at her, before he turned and walked in, "I missed you too, I was worried sick..." he murmured, before he looked towards the stairs, "Poor lad... he had to deal with a lot..."

“You both have. You’ll have to take some time and visit him when he’s awake.” Toki leaned around him to shut the door, trying not to brush too close. Her nerves were not fair to him, and she struggled not to become distressed over her unease around him. He was a good person. He was a good monster. He’d been forced to do things he didn’t want to do- and this wasn’t right. He didn’t look like he had, all beastly and feral- but she was still unnerved. “So what’s the cause for your visit? Did Asgore run out of your tea again? I have some extra.” The king had made Tenebris’ tea while he had been missing- mostly because the scent had reminded him of the royal scientist.

"No, no, we’ve enough tea at home..." He replied gently, "I... I just wanted to talk to you about something... something important."

“Oh.” There was the chance that he knew about what happened… Nerves flittered through her again, making the twins lash out in response. She exhaled roughly at a kick to her ribs, and motioned for him to follow her. “Well, let's go take a seat in the living room. I was resting my leg a bit while trying to crochet. But I’m not very good at it.”

"Of course, lead the way." he responds, following her to the main room.

Toki is a lot slower than he is, but she makes her way to the living room and reclaims her seat. She eases herself down with a soft groan, and settles the crutches next to the arm of the couch. Once she’s seated, she motions for him to take the other half of the couch, and stretches her wounded leg out to prop it up on the coffee table so she didn’t take up a lot of space. Toki exhales heavily, and pats her middle as she’s kicked roughly. “Ugh... Really glad the wedding is in a couple weeks, or I won't be able to fit in anything nice without looking like a beached whale.” She mutters.

"I'm proud of you, Toki." he sat down, making sure his blade was pinned behind him as he looked at her. "You and Papyrus have come so far..."

“We’ve all come so far.” She murmurs softly. She adjusts, and stuffs a pillow behind her lower back to help support some of the weight in her bulging belly. “I’m proud of you too.” Though she wouldn’t glance over at him to start. It took a lot to sit there calmly, and not flinch at seeing his tail. Toki heaves a soft sigh, and forcibly relaxes as she itches slightly at the healing cracks in her leg with her other foots toes. “So what’s up, Tenebris?” She blinks, and finally shifts her gaze to him, rubbing her middle slightly to soothe the irate twins. They really did not like when she stressed over things, and at thirty weeks along, they were big enough now that most of their kicks, with their monster strength behind it, tended to be painful from the inside.

"Well... Undyne just stopped by my home.... And informed me of some... rather disturbing news..."

Toki was not a good liar, and she couldn’t meet his gaze as her shoulders tensed. “Oh... What sort of news?” She inquired lightly, fingers soothing her middle. Her non-wounded leg tapped her toes on the tile floor.

"... Is it true, Toki?” he then asked, looking at her intensely. "Did I do this to you?"

“She wasn’t supposed to tell you.” She muttered quietly, and hunched her shoulders with a sigh. “We were going to wait until you were healed and... and mentally prepared to hear about all of it.” It would destroy him if he knew about the twins. Tenebris was so excited to be a grandpa- losing them… Well, it wouldn’t likely be good. Toki swallowed. “You... bit my leg.” She admits slowly. “That's why all of your teeth are gone. If not for my defense, you’d have probably bitten clean through.”

Were he not already sitting, he would have felt his legs buckle in shock. "Oh Toki... I-I'm so sorry, were I aware, I never would have done such a thing...!"

“I know, Tenebris. I know.” Toki’s arms curl protectively around her middle, and she swallows softly. “You weren’t you.” She says simply. “The blame falls onto Cruelty for doing this to you. To both of you.” She idly rubs her lower abdomen, and forces her shoulders to relax. Toki heaves a deep breath and shakes her head.

He looked at her, and then he sighed quietly. "M-May I...?" He asked as he looked to her stomach.

Oh gods she really didn’t want him to touch her middle. She really, really didn’t want him anywhere near her middle with his hands. His claws had been trimmed when he’d been groomed up, and his hands no longer looked like paws, but... Toki heaved in a shuddering breath and shakily nodded. “S-sure. Just... gentle. Please.”

He nodded and slowly moved closer, before he reached and carefully touched her stomach, slowly feeling the pups inside with a shaky smile. "H-Hello you two." he purred weakly.

It had been five weeks since he had consciously seen them. She had grown a lot since HAM had taken him- and they were more active than ever. They shied a little bit away at the first touch, reacting more to her nerves than his- but the familiar voice that murmured to them had flurries of excitable legs kicking and stretching out to greet their grandfather.

It amazed Toki how aware monster children tended to be. It must be a magic sensing thing, because human kids weren’t this aware. They didn’t know who he was, but they knew he was family. Still, the flurry of kicks made her wince slightly, sockets tightening. Her middle was a bit tender since the scare, and a lot of their movement was beginning to become uncomfortable now. “They’ve missed you,” She manages against their slightly uncomfortable squirming. “They- ah- are very excited to have you back.”

They almost hadn’t been around to greet him though, because of him. Toki keeps that quiet, and lets the large hand on her middle simply feel the twins shifting and churning energetically within her. Part of her wished they took a little after her and were a bit less squirmy, but such was life.

He slowly lowered his form to sit by her legs and he smiled gently, stroking her stomach lovingly. "Oh Toki... I am so glad you're all safe." he purred gently, the sound growing stronger.

With him seated on the floor next to her legs, she found herself instinctually scooting her wounded one away from him. Toki swallowed and smiled just slightly. The purring was soothing, but her nerves and tension levels didn’t drop with the sound. She forced her body to relax. This was Tenebris. In his right mind, he wouldn’t ever hurt her or the twins. “We nearly weren’t, but here we are. I told you that we Nara are tough.”

He noticed her discomfort and he slowly let her be, moving away again to sit on the opposite end of the couch. "Indeed." he murmured in agreement.

Toki could tell he was slightly dejected, and her soul hurt for him. She took a deep breath, and then motioned for him to come back. “C’mere, you. The twins weren’t done demanding your attention.” She quirks a soft grin to him. “It... Really isn’t fair that you don’t know why I’m so uneasy, is it?”

"I wouldn’t want you to get too uncomfortable, I understand your fear."

“My fear is stupid, and I have to work to get over it, just like I did with the fire. You are you- and you weren’t you two weeks ago.” She wiggles her fingers at him. “I don’t think you do. What all did Undyne tell you, Tenebris? What... Well, did she tell you everything from start to finish?” She didn’t want to hurt him- but if she were in his position, she would be more afraid of the things she could have done, and would rather be told even if being told would suck.

"She mentioned an incident with the children... that... it didn't happen until after I came back... I was confused... then she told me... I've been wearing a muzzle... and it's most been for their protection...

“Wait, wait, wait, they muzzled you?” She stiffened where she sat, and her teeth ground, angry sparks flying over her couch. She squished her fist into an ember that tried to catch, and extinguished it. “If you’ve been conscious and no longer biting Asgore when he gets too close, then you shouldn’t have to be muzzled. For their protection my non-existent ass. You’re a sentient being, not a fucking animal to be chained and bound.” The muzzle and chains had been useful while he had been out of control- but now that he was back in it- enough for the villagers to come back- there was no honest need for it anymore.

Toki fumed for a moment, buzzing irritably, before grunting as the twins proceeded to try and bruise her floating ribs in retaliation to her irritation. Her anger rushed from her like a deflating balloon at the reminder. “I… almost lost the twins.” She said softly. “That’s what she meant by incident with the children.”

"Tokiko... They thought it was best... They have me wear it when I sleep... In case I wake up in an episode of terror... Like I did this morning," he explained, before he bit his lip, "It was because of me... Wasn't it..."

Toki ground her teeth slightly, and looked away. “You’re not the only one that gets nightmares.” She murmurs softly. Toki takes a shuddering breath, and nods. “Yes. It was… You had me down, and went for the most vulnerable spot on me. My arms took the blows, but it jostled them and… Pap had to dump most of his magic into healing them to get contractions to stop. Tenebris, it wasn’t your fault. Whatever HAM did to you… It turned you into something that wasn’t you. Despite my body’s reactions, I don’t blame you. Neither do they.”

His head had tucked into the scarf, his form trembling as he dug his fingers into his pant legs. "Toki... T-That's... that's where you're wrong..." he whispered.

Her sockets flicked to him as he did a good impression of a turtle into his scarf. “What… do you mean? What was I wrong about?” She asked, befuddled and uncertain.

"... That... was me..." he murmured, "What you see, who you know... It's all a facade I had developed when I grew into adulthood... I'm a Blaster Beast, Tokiko, born of an Alpha's blood and raised by monster kind’s magic. Just like you, a human, changed by the blood of your ancestors, and the great magic that was released upon the destruction of the barrier...” He said.

“My body grew in the blanket of magic that developed me to become more humanoid, I retained so few of my original features... But my mind, no matter how far I’ve come, how wise or how great, I am still a beast. The Heir of an Alpha, or so speaks my blood..."

"Distress forces a do or die when it's severe, and... I believe that my mind had collapsed, fallen back to primal programming... I was cornered for too long, I automatically wanted to kill anything or anyone near me to protect myself... Whether a Human working for a terrorist organization... Or my Son's pregnant Fiancé coming to ensure I was unharmed..." His voice cracked near the end and he reached up to cover his face with his hands, his tail rattling loudly behind in distress.

"I'm sorry, Toki... I'm so... So sorry..."

She… wasn’t entirely sure how to handle that information. That was a lot of information to swallow in one go. Toki’s spine crawled slightly with the knowledge that the beast inside was still in fact there, and that deep inside, it was still lurking and could come back. But… She never intended to let him get taken like that again, or get ‘cornered’ as he put it. She would find a way.
Sometimes someone needed a little touch of kindness, particularly after the cruelty he’d been exposed to.

Toki shifted on the couch, her sore leg dropping from the table so she could scoot closer to him. Toki reached out hesitantly and gently rested her tiny hand on one of his massive thighs. Her fingers rubbed soothingly over the thick muscles. “Instincts happen. After what you had gone through, I completely understand. It is a surprise, but… they happen.” She says softly. “What I said still stands. I don’t blame you. We don’t blame you. Despite what happened, despite my nerves, I still love you dearly… Papa.” She murmurs gently to her father in law, who was basically her second father. “Nothing will change that- not knowing who you are, what you are, or what you can do. I still love you. And so do they.”

He slowly stiffened when he heard her call him 'Papa', and for a moment he silenced, before he shakily reached out and took her hand... Massive hands, though tamed, could still easily destroy her hand, and yet they held it with extreme tenderness. "T-Tokiko..." he shakily moved to slip off the couch, and sit once more by her legs, but this time was looking up at her. His pupils were dilated as black tears welled in his eyes, and with so many of his teeth missing, he almost looked like a child from here, "I... I love you too..." he whispered.

Toki shifted as he slid off the couch, and gave him a warm smile. Her fingers curled up, and gently hooked on his scarf to tug it down. His hand still claimed one of hers, but she still had one free. It smoothed up and over his cheek, gently thumbing over the corner of his gap-toothed mouth, before sliding back to the back of his head. She leaned forwards… and sharp teeth pressed a tender kiss between his eyes, as she hugged him around the neck. “All is forgiven.” She says tenderly. It would take her time for her nerves and fears to fade- but she did not, for one second, blame him, no matter what his natural form was.

He looked up at her, tensing at first when she came close to him, but as she trapped his neck in her embrace, the shame he had felt, the disgust in himself and the unfathomable worry that he destroyed his relationship with his soon to be daughter-in-law... It all shattered, and with it, Toki was able to witness something that so few others had witnessed.

One could only be strong for so long. Tenebris had fought, he had suffered and survived, learned and served, adapted, created, and suffered some more...

His walls had been damaged in his resilience, and the relief of Toki's love, the love of a daughter and motherly figure in the same, had finally allowed him to break.

Tenebris completely broke down in her arms, reaching up to hug her as he pressed his head into her shoulder, not just crying into her form, but releasing a beast-like crying of his own. Howling wails, what almost sounded like screams... It could be compared to the anguish of a lost child...

Perhaps... He was crying for more than just the experience of his adult years...

Perhaps... She was hearing the fear and hopelessness of a lost pup... Crying for the one who loved him the moment he took his first breath of air, for the one who'd give him sharp nips to get his attention... For the countless scents and howls that would resonate when the full moon gazed upon their home...

He would cry out...

But nobody came...

Nobody came- but he was not alone. It was not a howl or a cry that would answer; no, it would be the kindness in her soul reaching out to soothe his pain and remind him that he wasn’t alone anymore, and that he was loved. He was no longer lost- that he was home.

His sounds broke her heart. Nerves or not, this was someone who was crying- and she looped her arms around his neck, cradled his face into her shoulder, and let him sob. Toki held him firm, and began to buzz gently, a soft crooning leaving her mouth as she rubbed her hands gently up and down his shoulders, one of them coming to smooth over the top of his head gently.

It didn’t take long, before a gentle piping filled the air, a call from a queen to soothe a wounded hive mate.

He held to her for what felt like forever, screaming his anguish into her shoulder before he pressed his forehead against it instead, his screams free now to fill the house and escape into the air. But the queen’s song was gentle, and loving. It brought the aged creature before her a sense of security, and though it was no grooming tongue like he would have had from one of his own kind, it seemed to soothe the burning in his soul.

His sounds gradually reduced from the screams, turning instead into soft hiccups and faint sobs as he lowered himself slowly, sitting on the floor to rest his head beside the twins in their mother's lap. His hands came up and softly rested on the ecto flesh, stroking it with his thumb before his eyes closed and he started to knead, a quiet purring starting to cut through his weeping as he finally came to settle down.

Some part of her tensed as he started to knead, those large claws on his fingers making her instinctively want to duck away. But Toki was more than her instincts when she tried to be. She firmed up her resolve, and rested her hand on his head, slowly stroking it as he occupied what was left of her lap and pressed close to her middle.

The twins had gone still with all of the noise, but the purring staring up near their enclosure eased them back into motions. They made Toki grunt in discomfort as a large foot pressed out to poke the bridge between his eyes.

Toki begins to hum very softly alongside her buzzing, and silently offers what comforts she could to him.

He grunted when he was kicked but chuckled lightly, and sighed softly as his breathing finally slowed, his breakdown passing, replaced with the happiness of feeling the children moving within their mother.

There was the soft clearing of a small throat, and Toki turned her head to see Thumper standing in the doorway, awkwardly shuffling his toes. "… Room for one more?" He asks, hopefully, eyes tired and wanting to seek comfort between the two monsters.

“Always.” Toki smiles gently, and welcomes him close.

He settles half on the couch, and half in Tenebris’ lap, burrowing his head against the other’s abdomen and looping his arms around his middle.

The heartbeat in his lap caught his attention and Tenebris lowered one arm to give attention to Thumper. "Young one.” he purred happily, his hand reaching up to stroke the bunny's ears gently, "I'm s-so glad t' see you safe..."

“‘It’s good to see you too, Mister Tenebris.’ The young rabbit murmurs softly. His tired eyes closed as his ears were rubbed, and he wiggled some, bony limbs probably jabbing the bigger monster, before he settled in his lap.

“Did we wake you, Thumper?” Toki asks gently.

“I didn’t get to sleep before…” He muttered tiredly. He hadn’t gotten to sleep before Tenebris had gotten loud.

"Thumper... I did not harm you, did I?" Tenebris asked quietly, his eyes closing slowly.

Toki continued to rub his skull, resuming her soft humming.

Thumper shook his head. “No, Mister Tenebris.” He murmured softly. “You didn’t let them get me. I hid in your chest.”

“He was in there for a long time.” Toki added gently. “We’re working to put weight back on him. He’s very thin.”

He sighed quietly and wrapped his arm around Thumper to hold him close to the warm fabric of his turtleneck. "At least I did that right..." he murmured. His hand that had continued to knead stopped, and instead moved under Tenebris' head as he used it for a pillow.

At this moment, the front door opened, and a frantic Asgore stormed in and glanced around to find her, surprisingly gentle on closing the front door despite his panic for her safety. "Toki!? Are you all right? A guard told me they heard screaming..."

“Shhhh,” She calls softly to the large goat monster. “We’re okay in here, Asgore. Nothing’s wrong.” Her once red shirt is stained black with his tears though, so it looks like she’s covered in some form of his body fluids. “Come on in- I’d stand to greet you, but my lap is full.”

Thumper clings tightly to the monster, and sighs contently. He doesn’t bother greeting the king- he’s wrapped in a scent he’d had to go to sleep to for weeks, and next to another that helped bring him comfort when he needed it most. He yawned- and was out before his next exhale.

Asgore walked to the room they were in and grew relieved to see Tenebris was settled in her lap, but at the same time... "What happened?" he asked, unable to tell off the bat what fluid had stained her clothing. "Your shirt..." Though as he approached he was removing his cape as to blanket the phantom and bunny.

“It’s not blood, if that’s what you’re worried about.” Toki used her hands to better adjust the cape to blanket Tenebris, and looked up at Asgore. “He broke down.” She said softly. “He knows what happened now... But we’re still okay, aren’t we, Papa?” She smiles gently, and rubs Tenebris’ head. “Why don’t you take a seat, Asgore? The couch has more than enough space.”

Asgore was surprised to hear her designate Tenebris as 'Papa', but was soothed as Tenebris began to purr quite loudly in reply. "I suppose I could" He came over and once he made note the location of Tenebris' tail, he sat down and sighed. "I was very worried. He said he wanted to talk to you alone and then I am told that there's screaming from your home... I was frightened that I had made a fatal mistake in letting him come alone... but now I am just very relieved that I was wrong..."

Toki nodded, and continued to pet Tenebris gently. She shifted some, her back sore. “He was upset.” She says softly. “Sometimes we have to break down completely before we can build ourselves up again. The screaming was him letting go.” She doesn’t mention her nervousness around the monster in her lap, but she’s sure the King can probably read a little bit of it lingering in her posture.

“Speaking of a mistake...” She squints at him. “A muzzle? Really? He’s quite aware. Think of how that must have made him feel, given where he just came from. Shame on you. He doesn’t even have that many teeth left to bite with.” And what ones there were would probably shatter if he bit anything harder than a soft steak.

"I know it sounds inhumane. I plan on speaking to Grillby about our alternative, as the one we have now seemed to prolong this morning's episode." his glance goes to Tenebris' cheek for a moment, before looking back to her, "We don’t know how quickly his teeth grow back, if they were capable of returning overnight, then we would have needed the muzzle. Even now we still do not know. But at least Grillby is working on a more gentle one that he can wear comfortably."

Toki tilts her head and sighs at him. “If they were going to grow back over night, they’d have done it in the two weeks it’s been since he broke them off in my leg. But I understand your wariness about it.” The collection of teeth had turned into this pile of weird, black sand. She had it in a jar somewhere in her fridge, and planned to give it to Tenebris to study at a later date. “Maybe try a night without the muzzle? At this point, all he can probably do is try to gum you to death. Hm… He might need dentures of some kind.” She murmurs. “Or he’s not going to be able to eat much.”

He nodded in agreement at that, and chuckled lightheartedly at the ‘gumming’ comment, before he took a moment to think. "I do not know if we have anyone capable of creating such a thing for Tenebris..." He hummed quietly.

“… I think I have a pair of giant toy teeth in my shed. We can modify them and see if they'll fit in his mouth. Well… Once I can find them.” They would be buried in her Halloween props. With any luck, they might fit the large phantom monster. Toki shifts, and ends up leaning slightly against Asgore’s arm as she stretches her back. The twins shift and kick, and she lets out a whoosh of air as she’s winded. Her free hand comes to pet them and soothe them.

"Toy teeth..." Asgore chortled at that, "I assume they're a mimic of a human's dental pattern?" he asked, "I know for sure that he's going to abhor that, after so long with pointed teeth." he joked.

She chuckles gently. “They are indeed. They’re basically a set of giant teeth that you can wind up, and they’ll clack noisily. I’ll need to do some work with them, but I should be able to make them work for his mouth. I don’t think he’s going to want to be stuck eating blended foods for weeks on end.” Toki shifts again, and her fingers come to press along the side of her belly. There is a stubborn foot shoving outwards in the direction of the king. “It wont take long to do them once I can find them. But I’m limited.” She tilts her chin towards her leg. “I can only do so much before parts of my shin fall out. Pap did a decent job, but he was more focused on the twins than on my leg.”

He chuckled into a fist as to keep quiet, not wanting to wake Tenebris with his laughter, but voicing her concern about her leg had him perking up.

"Ah, then allow me to help making that last bit a bit easier." He smiled at her, then he turned and his hand glowed gently, "Now I might not be able to do much compared to Papyrus when it comes to healing bone, but I still remember some healing magic that could do some good in keeping your shin connected." He chuckled quietly, focusing on her leg for a moment.

It actually ended up working, as a few of the lesser cracks actually began to close as the magic holding her bones together felt a little more reinforced.

Toki gave it an experimental twitch, and felt less bones shifting and rattling out of place than she normally did. She brightened slightly. “Thank you. I’ve had to have Thumper on bone duty, because parts have been falling out of the open parts of the cast. It doesn’t feel like anything is loose there anymore though.” Toki shifts and end up leaning firmly against Asgore with a soft sigh. “I wont be able to test it in walking for a while though. I’m pretty well trapped. Oooh. Your arm is very soft.” He made a surprisingly good shoulder rest with all of his fur.
He blinked at the sudden shift of topic, before he smiled and took a moment to shift and get comfy.
"I say you should rest too, my dear. You've had a long day, and you deserve a nap after what you've done for Tenebris." he rumbled gently.

"Napping probably wouldn’t be good for me at this point.” She said gently. “I find that unless Pap is here, my nightmares come more often.” And with the object of her nightmares literally sleeping in her lap, there was the high chance she’d end up with one right out of the starting gate.

"Ah, I see... well, if it's alright, I think I’ll stay here and keep an eye on Tenebris." he rumbled, before he looked down at Tenebris, though he could see his face shifting, his form twitching lightly.

He carefully reached over and gave Tenebris a hard flick on the bridge of his face. The phantom jolted in reaction and his eyes opened for a moment before they lulled closed again and he began to purr quietly once more, letting out a soft, relieved exhale.

"I am literally trapped between you, the sides of the couch, and Tenebris. I can’t go anywhere with him rumbling in my lap.” She arches her brows. “So you’ve got company. You’ll just have to put up with me using you as a leaning rest as best I can. Back aches and whatnot.” Too bad Pap wasn’t there to give her a back rub. With as tense as she’d gotten over Tenebris showing up, it was little wonder she was forming knots. “Also, really, was that necessary? There are other ways to rouse him without flicking him.” Adjusting her legs usually worked to rouse him. "That's fine," he rumbled, before he looked at Tenebris again. "He was starting to fidget. The last time he did that was right before his episode, so I at least had to ensure that he wouldn't have one here. If you've other ways of stirring him, feel free, though I’ll have to watch him with you, make sure we both can see if he's starting to have another one." he rumbled gently.

"I understand that.” She hums softly. She begins to buzz faintly, and fire magic pulses down her arm and into the crown of Tenebris’ head. She rubs warmth along his skull, and uses the sound and touch to try and keep his nightmares at bay. Sound and touch usually worked for hers- Papyrus couldn’t buzz, but he could gently rattle or hum, and she would usually settle. “Still, there are less rough ways. You just need to experiment and see what works for you and what doesn’t.”

Toki heaves a soft sigh, and rubs her middle. “I wish the usual soothing methods would work for the twins. They’re all worked up because Tenebris is back. They’ve missed his visits.”

The beast let out a soft rattling chirp and purred happily, nuzzling his arm again.

"Heh..." Asgore smiled and sighed, "He's precious..."

“He is.” She nods quietly. Toki lets her head relax against the King’s arm, and she sighs. Her sockets close, and she hums a soft soothing tune, continuing to rub along his skull as she eases herself into a tranquil state. Being wound up wouldn’t do good for her kids, or for Tenebris- so relaxing would be the best thing she could do.

She would need to work on her reflexive flinching when he makes an unexpected movement though. It’s not fair to him.

Asgore held onto Toki gently, smiling as he kept her warm. Tenebris had looked more peaceful here than he had in his bed, and with that, Asgore was brought his own sense of relief, allowing him too to close his eyes and rest.

Toki kept watch for the king and her magic kept the three resting monsters warm. She didn’t bother clicking on the television, and simply just basked and let her mind wander where it would while she radiated peace and tranquility.
Chapter 59

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And now a nice break. Family camping trip ahoy!

Don't forget to visit the blog :3 http://sinoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: Well, this chapter is a confirmed cute.

Also, for anyone who's wondering what kind of mask it specifies Tenebris wearing, it's This (https://www.amazon.com/dp/B013XOY2JO/ref=twister_B013XOY39I?_encoding=UTF8&psc=1) one.

I actually own this one, i love it <3

It took Toki an age and a half to find them, and then nearly four days to get them cleaned up— but she got the plastic teeth shaped slightly using her fire magic, and designed more to be used in his mouth. She had them all cleaned up and perfect now though, and had them in a nice carrying box to give to Tenebris. He’d definitely need them where they were going.

It was decided on a whim one morning that they were going to get a camping trip in now that the Gaster family were all back together once again. Toki, Thumper, and Asgore were going along, Grillby having opted out since they were going to go to a lake, and his business was usually busy all times of the day. He didn’t want to lose business hours either, which Toki totally understood.

Everyone had to pack a bag— they were going to go for a couple days, after all. Toki knew a private lake that not many went to, simply because the water was generally horribly cold. But, in the heat wave that had settled in on Ebott County, the cold water would feel amazing. Even she was feeling sweltered, and had taken to stealing a couple of Papyrus’ undershirt tank tops so she didn’t have to wear sleeves.

Thankfully Tenebris had enough magic to heal her— so she found herself on her feet by the time they were going to be heading out. Since nothing had to be re-grown, Tenebris had been able to help Papyrus in advancing the healing, so now all that was left on her legs were the bright and freshly healed bone. The spider web of healed marks would have to fade in time, but for now the middle of her shin all the way to the middle of her femur were covered in almost tattoo-like markings.

On Wednesday morning, Toki had all three bags packed for her, Thumper and Papyrus, and had her swimsuit on under her clothes. Thankfully, because she was simply bone now, her swimsuit still fit. The top fit a little weirdly, since she didn’t have breasts, but a bit of magic helped fill it out and keep it from sitting too oddly. She just hoped she didn’t look too weird in it. A pregnant skeleton in a bikini sounded like the start of a very, very weird joke.

She’d packed swimming trunks for Papyrus though, and made sure that Thumper had swimming trunks too.

A fourth bag had been packed the night prior with usual camping cookware, and food inside of that too. They could do some fishing if they wanted, but there wasn’t really any need to do so when they could just bring food to cook with. Stuff that needed to stay cold was packed into a cooler and layered with ice to keep it chilled. They would stick it in the water when they got there, and let the cold water of the lake preserve it for the days that they were going to be there.

They had to pack everything into the multiple cars. Toki had plans of taking the tents in her truck.
She just had to bring it around to the back near the shed so they could get it loaded up with the tents and the sleeping bags. She had a lot of them- and planned to bring all of them, since the bigger monsters would need more than one or two.

Toki slid her feet into her slippers, carefully tugged her shorts up to make sure they wouldn’t slide down, and called through the house to Thumper and Papyrus as she adjusted Aliquam’s tank top over her belly. Toki snagged the keys to her truck. “Pap! Can you get the bags out of the bedroom?
Caeruleus will be here any minute with Tenebris and Asgore, and you need to put them and the coolers in his truck. I’m going to take my truck around and get the tents out of the shed.”

"Sure thing!” He called back and went and to collect the bags, bringing them over to her. "They'll go in your truck, right?” he asked.

“Sure! Bags and coolers are going in the back of Caeruleus truck. I’ll be shoving tents and sleeping bags into my truck, and I have to take the extra large tents since everyone is a giant.” She chuckles.

“Except for me!” Thumper had his game system in hand, and extra charging packs to keep it going for the few days they’d be out there. “I’m not a giant.”

“You will be when you grow up.” She affectionately ruffles his ears as he bounces past her. Toki gives Pap a grin and jingles her keys. “Go ahead and put them on the front deck. I’m going to get the truck pulled around back.” She leans up, kisses him, and then is out the door with a gentle spring in her step.

Thumper watches her go, and gives Papyrus a wide smile. “She’s in a good mood today!” He chirps softly, thin cheeks spreading thinner over his cheeks as he beams up at the massive skeleton.

"I'm so thrilled to see her so cheerful.” he agreed happily, before hearing his brother's truck pull up.

Toki stopped not far before her truck, which was just in front of her house, and turned to wave at Caeruleus and his gaggle of companions. Toki turned to her truck, and opened the door. The seat had been slid back, like it usually did with the short circuit it had, so when she clamored in, she was nowhere near the pedals. She sighed, turned on the ignition, and then began to slide her seat forwards with the electronic controls.

Asgore stepped out from the back seat, having let Tenebris take the front seat in his Son’s truck. The front was less restricting, after all. He waved to Toki, and then to Papyrus and Thumper from where he could see them through the open door. “What all do you need help loading up?” The king calls cheerfully. He was out of his armor and cloak finally- and was settled in a sporty pair of sandals, cargo shorts, and a horrible monstrosity of a Hawaiian tourist shirt.

Toki guffawed at his clothing choices, and found her belly squished against the steering wheel as her feet barely pressed to the pedals. She frowned, and sucked in her belly as best she could- and it allotted her not much more space. Toki sighed. She could still push the pedals, but not enough to safely drive. “Well shit.” She muttered. “I guess I can’t drive.” She went to push the seat back again-and there was a grinding noise, before the door popped noisily and sparked. She squeaked- and found her seat locked into place, with her wedged tightly to the steering wheel. “Oh my gods, are you freaking kidding me? You choose now of all times to finally go out?” She mutters sourly to her truck.
Tenebris now had a soft cloth mask he wore his mouth as he climbed out of the truck, going to help pack things up into the truck as per Papyrus’ orders.

Cae killed the engine on his ride and climbed out of his truck. It took him only a moment to notice Toki's issue, and he headed towards her open door. "Tokes?"

Toki squirmed slightly, and pushed against the steering wheel. The seat refused to budge, leaving her sufficiently pinned to the wheel in an uncomfortably tight position. “So, uh… the mechanism in my door just broke, and my seat wont move.” And as she tried to slide out, she found her body trapped between the seat and the wheel. A soft laugh escaped her. Oh gods, she was actually stuck, wasn't she?

"...! Uh oh." Cae leaned down and took a look. Finding that he couldn’t quite see what the issue was with her sitting on it, he sighed, before he grabbed the seat and jerked hard to make it release. He grinned as he succeeded. "Got it!"

Her seat gave with a horrible grinding snapping noise, and then proceeded to scoot freely upon its tracks. Toki blinked, bracing her legs so she didn’t immediately bounce back and slam back into the steering wheel. “Well, uh… Thanks?” She wiggles, and escapes, turning off the ignition with a sigh. She nudges her seat- and it moves fluidly. Yeah, car seats weren’t supposed to move like that. Oh well! Her car was in need of some work anyways. “… Hey, Papyrus? You’re going to want to get your keys. The truck broke.” She lowered her voice again to speak with Caeruleus. “Uh- do you think we can fit the tents in your truck, Cae? We can probably fit all of the sleeping bags in Papyrus’ Mercedes.”

"Ah... Sorry about that...” he said quietly, before he smiled, "Yeah, they'll fit no problem."

“She patted his shoulder with a sigh. “My truck was breaking down anyways. I need to get a mechanic up to look at it.” She just didn’t really want to shell out to fix it. There was a lot that needed fixed. Toki sighed, and pocketed her keys. “Alright. Will you bring your truck around to the shed? Between you and me we should be able to get the tents in the truck. They’re not that heavy.” Gangly and long, yes, but they were also made from a fairly lightweight canvas.

Given that Papyrus didn’t respond, Toki turned, and called again. “Pap! Did you hear me?”

"Sure thing, yeah.” Cae nodded and turned to go back to the truck.

"Yeees!” Was the answer that came back from the house.

“Alright!” She called back to Papyrus, before heading around the outside of the house and for the shed. She bypassed her truck, and set out at a speedy waddle for the shed.

Once she got there, locating the tents was easy. They were just inside the door, four large sixteen-man tents. There were more than that- but they hadn’t done a clan gathering since Toki had taken over as clan head. She snagged one, finding it slightly heavy but manageable, and lugged it out the door to wait for Sans and his truck.

Sans backed in the truck effortlessly, a casual grin on his face. Papyrus soon caught up and gave his contribution of loading up as well. Though it seemed Tenebris had gone astray with Asgore towards the Phantom's private garage.... What they were up to?
"Take a marvel at this beauty, Asgore~" Tenebris was wagging his tail as he looked over his Charger. "Isn't she just magnificent?"

Asgore chuckled softly, running his fingers back through his mane. Even he was starting to get hot in the heat of the day- he was looking forwards to taking a swim in the lake. But for now, he ogled the dark colored car and nodded. “It is quite a magnificent ride.” He praised. It was a little dusty, but he hadn’t known it was there, or he’d have kept it immaculate for Tenebris. “Were you thinking of taking a third vehicle with us?” He inquired lightly.

"Not unless it was necessary, my friend... I just thought I’d come and admire her." He purred gently. "This vehicle has the magnitude of a roar to match my own." he chirped happily.

“I imagine she has quite the nice ride too.” He grinned slightly, though his ears perked. “Perhaps not roaring now though. It appears,” amusement tinges his voice, “you have a follower.”

Thumper had followed them- and though he didn’t enter the garage, the little rabbit was peering in curiously, trying not to interrupt.

He chirped happily, then he turned, and though it was hidden behind the mask he wore, Tenebris smiled. "Thumper, come on in. I was just admiring my vehicle."

The rabbit wandered in when called, and kept his hands to himself. His nose twitched, and his ears flicked curiously. “It’s a really nice car, Mister Tenebris.” The small rabbit settled by the larger monster’s legs, and looked up to him. “Are you going to take it with us today?”

“It is likely more economical if we all go in two cars instead of three.” Asgore chuckles softly. “The price of gas is rising once more, after all.” The king gives them both a fond look.

He nodded in agreement, and then he turned and gently pat the bunny's head. "If we do not fit in the cab, worst case scenario we ride in the truck bed." He chuckled.

“I think they’re putting stuff in the truck bed.” Thumper blinks up at him, and nuzzles the gloved palm of his hand. “Toki’s truck broke, so they’re going to take Papyrus’ Mercedes.”

“Ah yes, I did hear the seat break. Sans helped her get unstuck, but that does create an unsafe driving environment.” Asgore hummed. “I’m sure that between the two cars, all six of us will fit just fine. Who do you want to ride with, Thumper?”

The little rabbit flushed and looked away, his fingers coming up to curl quietly around Tenebris’ fingers. He wanted to ride with both Toki and Tenebris- but he didn’t get to spend as much time with the bigger monster. That’s who he’d rather spend the drive up there with.

He blinked once, and looked down at him, before he smiled gently and brought a hand down to effortlessly scoop the bunny up, "Riding with me then~" he chuckled.

Thumper squeaked as he was scooped, and hooked his hands around the neck of his jacket to keep himself upright. “Y-yes please, Mister Tenebris.”

Asgore chuckled softly. “Lets get back to the cars- we did just leave two pregnant monsters- one heavily pregnant, mind you- and Papyrus alone to load up tents and whatever else they deem to bring along.”

He nodded and nuzzled Thumper, before he turned to head out of the garage. "Alright, I’m done admiring. Let's go."
Heading back to the vehicles would let them find Toki rubbing her sore back, with Wolfen scolding her for trying to heft a cooler into the back of the Mercedes while Papyrus and Caeruleus tied down the tents so they wouldn’t fly out.

“Wolfen, really, I’m fine.”

“That cramp in your back says otherwise.” He’d been drawn over after seeing her attempting to lift something heavier than she should have been at her size. He gently shooed her away from the back seat of the Mercedes, and then carefully slid the cooler in for her. “You need to be more careful, Miss Toki. You’re quite a bit… farther along now- you need to treat yourself delicately. This is far more than thirty pounds.” It was closer to ninety- and he had no idea what she had put in there to make it so heavy.

Toki grumbled good-naturedly at him, and waved over to Tenebris, Asgore, and Thumper. “There you three are! We’ve got almost everything loaded up!”

"I do apologize for going astray, but I do not think Asgore had seen Eclipse yet." He purred happily, walking over before he gently pressed his mouth to her forehead, giving her a kiss through the cloth mask. "I hope you've saved the heaviest for us, you know." he chuckled.

Thumper too leans over to smooch her, planting a soft fuzzy kiss to her cheek as he giggles from his position in Tenebris’ arms.

It took a little bit of nerve not to squirm away from the kiss- but she was better in control of her instincts when she was on her feet and could flee if the need came. She wasn’t pinned between a couch and a sharp mouth. “You named your car? That is adorable.” She chuckles softly to the kiss, and gives the child a fond ear rub in return. "Ah… Well, no.”

“She did not.” Wolfen crosses his arms and huffs at her. “She was lifting the coolers, and they are far more than she should be lifting. Honestly, she shouldn’t even be toting the honey jugs to and from the hives.” He flicks his gaze over the bigger monster, and to the king, and waggles his finger at them scolding. “Hopefully you weren’t flirting in the garage with poor Thumper there to see it.”

"Not at all." he snorted, "I was just... well I can't lie. I was showing off my car." he admitted, before he lightly thumped his foot. "Now Toki you should know better, you're already carrying so much weight with twins on the way."

Toki gives him a mock offended look. “I do quite believe you just called me fat.” She winks at Thumper, making the rabbit giggle, and then kneads her knuckles into her lower back. “If that’s the case, I’m sure I’ve exceeded my weight limit a long time ago. I'm okay though, really.”

“You nearly dropped the cooler.” The wolf tattles.

She socks him in the arm for it, and huffs. “Yes, well, if you have the number of cramps that I do on a regular basis, you’d drop things too.”

Wolfen chortles. “Bo was much like you. You need to be gentle, Miss Toki. They are not nearly so tough as you are.”

“I know, I know.”

"You know damn well that's not what I meant, Toki." he snorted gently, before he shook his head. "Toki, you should relax, you're pregnant after all."

Toki planted her hands on her hips and cocked a brow up at him. “I am probably the most high strung Nara you know.” Her brothers were only rowdy when they were all together, really. “I don’t relax well. But... I guess I’ll try? I’m going to be relaxing at the lake with you guys, so there’s that.” Maybe she could find a sectioned off part of the lake and make a hot tub of sorts to relax in. Either way, the shortest skeleton quirked a grin up at the Phantom. “Oh! Speaking of high strung- I was busy these last couple of days...” She turned, and leaned into the front seat. She procured the box with his teeth, and then offered them out. “I made these for you. You’ll definitely need them later tonight.” Eating smores without teeth just wasn’t feasible.

He blinked once as he was offered the box and he set Thumper down to open the box, and pull out the... teeth...

He blinked, and then examined them quietly. "... Fascinating... false teeth..." he chuckled, before he placed them back in the box, "I will try them later, but thank you very much, Toki." he purred happily.

“I figured you’re old enough now that a set of false teeth would do you good, eh Grandpa Tenebris?” She teased slightly. “I’m glad you like them though. You’ll definitely need them. I brought lots of meat in the cooler so we can grill some up over the campfire.”

Thumper taps his foot on the ground to get their attention, and then points to the passenger seat. “Miss Toki, please sit! You know if you rest your back your knots don’t hurt as badly.”

She ruffles his ears gently. “We’re taking off soon, Thumper. I’ll sit then, okay?” Toki glanced over to see how Sans and Papyrus were doing. They looked to be about done... She flicked her gaze to Wolfen. “You’ll keep an eye on things, right?”

“Two eyes, as often as I can spare them. Which...” He trails off.

“You’re on shift.” She nods. “Go ahead- thanks for your help.”

“My pleasure.” He chuckles. He jogs off, leaving the two bigger monsters in charge of the stubborn pregnant one. It would be interesting to see who would win a battle of the wills there.

He thumped a foot in light insult, but at the mention of the meat his tail began to rattle eagerly so he was sated, but he tucked the box in his coat before he went to get the last of the gear. "Well, best Asgore and I finish up here."

Toki chuckles. “Payback for the comment on my weight.” She does nod though. “Alright. You’re all going to be riding with Caeruleus, yes?” The back of the Mercedes was woefully full of things. Not that it had much storage space. It was more designed for monster space than storage space.

“Mhm!” Thumper nods. “So sit! I don’ wanna hear about you having problems with the babies again.” He pats her belly softly.

She chuckles and ruffles his ears again. “I’m not going to have problems, Thumper. But all right, all right. I’ll sit.” And she does. She eases herself down into the front seat and relaxes some. Gods his seats were comfortable.

The king chuckled. “It wont take long, Miss Toki, and then we’ll be on the road.” They were going to be following Papyrus- since Toki knew where they had to go.

"Yes, Asgore and I will be riding in the truck. I plan on letting him... what's the phrase... 'Ride shotgun', as the front seat can be lowered, hopefully giving Asgore some extra room."

Toki didn't know what was worse; the way he sounded as he said that, or the sense that using that
A half hour more of packing, making sure that everything was secure and wouldn’t be tossed out by the winds, and what had already been two hours of driving had Asgore relaxing in the front seat, humming a soft tune that seemed to sate the need of ambience in the truck.

Caeruleus seemed content enough with the humming, Thumper had dozed off, and was now snoozing against Asgore’s side in the spacey front seat. Tenebris was silent in the back seat, no doubt the vibrations and familiar growling of the engine enough to let him get in a nap during the drive. Thumper had kind of wanted to join him but had been reassured that he could use Asgore as a pillow if he really wanted a nap. Though Asgore had keep his arm free as to reach back and occasionally give Tenebris’ head a gentle rub.

"...." Cae would be even quieter than he usually was, and Asgore caught wind of it when he’d hummed along to a silly part of a song- and had gotten no reply from the skeleton monster.

"Sans, I know you are worried about your father...” The king spoke softly, so as not to wake Thumper and Tenebris. “He has gone through a lot, and frankly I’ve seen its effect on him..."

"Is that why his claws were filed down and his blade was padded?” Cae attempted to joke, to hide his worry. Caeruleus used to pride himself for the fact that he never used to wear his metaphorical heart on his sleeve. He usually kept himself safely secured behind a wall of humor and terrible jokes—only a few had been given the privilege of seeing behind it. His brother, his father, sometimes Toki, and Grillby too had all seen behind the wall at various points.

But, pregnancy it seemed made him a bit more open to read.

"Yes, Sans.” Asgore sighed softly. “The little mask we gave him seems to have helped him. He doesn't wake up in fear, and when he does, it barely lasts but a few seconds as he realizes that which hides his mouth is but a simple cloth." The king glanced back to the mask, smiling a little as he looked at the little bit of decoration given to it.

It had been given a layer of white material, and drawn on to look like teeth, more specifically, his teeth, turned up into a ghoulish grin.

"Has Pops... told you about anything that he endured?” Cae asked after a while, quietly guiding the truck around a corner and a couple potholes in the road.

"I haven’t pushed him- I told him he can tell me if he wants to, but I wouldn’t ask specifically." Asgore responded, having a hunch by his panic when he’s coming out of a nightmare, as well as not wanting him to rethink it and reopen old wounds, both mental and physical... "That if he was going to tell me anything, it was on his own time..." He could remember the first morning that Tenebris had truly returned to them. To him... The vision of the pure panic in his lover's eyes, the streaks of black blood running under the straps of the muzzle that he had insisted Tenebris wear that night... The screaming still rung in his ears, even with the sounds of the present rumbling around him, and he still felt his shame coursing thick.

"Fair enough... He'll open up when he feels like it." Sans nodded, then he smiled, just slightly. "Hey,
"I think we're finally slowing down." He flicked his blinker on and then followed Papyrus as he turned in to what seemed their own little portion of wilderness to savor while they were on their much needed vacation.

“So it seems.” The king turned his attention to the window, and hummed softly as he watched the trees give way. He turned his hand back, and gently shook Tenebris’ shoulder to rouse him.

The thick forest gave way to an open lake. It wasn’t overly large, but it was big enough to host several different campsites at the same time. However, the lake was bare and empty of people. It was far, far out of the way, but it was one that the Nara as a clan tended to use often. Or had used often—because it had plenty of space for the old clan meetings. The compound was a little small for the two hundred plus people who had used to attend. There would be more than that now if Toki ever hosted another one.

The lake was decent sized regardless. It a deep blue color that told of its depth, and it had sandy beaches for about a hundred feet out from the water. From there, there was a stretch of pebbles, before it opened up into thick grassland. There were logs here and there on the beach, making seating areas that had been placed carefully a long time ago.

The Mercedes pulled over into a flat stretch of ground that had plenty of open space and then came to a stop. The passenger side door opened once the Mercedes was parked, and Toki’s arms and legs appeared, grasping at the top of the door so she could haul herself out. It took a bit more effort than one would think, and she heaved a deep breath of fresh forest air. “Well,” She chuckled to her fiancé as she waved at Cae’s truck, “We’re here. Welcome to our own little slice of paradise. Gods above, I haven’t been here since Grandpa died.”

The truck pulled in to stop near the Mercedes and Cae climbed out once he cut the engine, grinning as he looked around. “This is a neat little camping spot.” he chuckled.

He turned to see Tenebris slowly pulling himself out of the truck, taking a moment to stretch on all fours on the ground before he slowly rose to his feet, rubbing one eye as he looked around. He was soon awestruck as well at the beauty of the lake.

Toki grinned and waved at them cheerily. “My clan has used this place for a gathering spot for decades. I don’t do mandatory clan gatherings anymore simply because we really don’t need them.” In the new day and age, old traditions needed to evolve and change.

She heaves a soft sigh, and pads for the truck. “Alright! Lets get the tents up, and then we can cool off. I don’t want to try and do them after we tire ourselves out in the water.”

Thumper was awake when he and Asgore slid out of the passenger side of the truck, and he looked up at Toki as he stretched. “Awww.” He pouts. “Do I have to help put up the tents?”

“Nah,” she chuckles. “Leave the boring stuff for the adults. You’re free to explore- but don’t go past the tree line. There are toxic plants here that can hurt you if you don’t know what to avoid.” She did not want to imagine trying to help Thumper with poison ivy, or if he found a patch of stinging nettles.

“You’re not supposed to do stuff either, Miss Toki!” Thumper chuffs slightly. “Putting up tents doesn’t sound like an easy job.”

“It’s frustrating more than it is hard.” She chuckles.

"You're sitting your ass down, missy." Cae told her stubbornly. "I'll turn you blue if I have to."
Toki tossed her hands into the air with a frustrated sound. “Oh my gods! I’m pregnant, not injured. I can put up a tent, I promise!”

Asgore patted her on the shoulder and shooed her away from the back of the truck. “Really, Miss Toki, there are four of us here that can put up a tent, and there are only three tents. Please- sit, relax. We’ll dig out one of the camping chairs and then you can sit down and unwind. Why don’t you go locate a suitable spot for our camping location? Caeruleus and Thumper can join you.” Unlike Toki, Sans didn’t have the extra defense to buffer himself from overworking his body. The king had all intentions of making sure both of the gravid skeletons took it easy and relaxed.

Thumper grinned up at Sans. “You might have to turn her blue, Sans, or she’s going to end up helping anyways. We all know Miss Toki too well.”

"That goes without saying Thumper- Wait, wait why do I have to sit out?” he shot a look at Asgore.

The kind king grins sheepishly. “Well, you’re both pregnant. The rest of us are not. And since it wasn’t safe for Grillby to be here, I promised him I’d keep an eye on you for him. So… sit and keep Miss Toki out of trouble?”

“I’ll show you trouble.” She mock threatens, an amused grin splitting her face. Toki plants her hands on her back and sighs. “Alright, alright. I’ll go find a spot and relax. I’ll even be good and not clear a spot for a fire pit.”

"Alright, alright, right behind you, Tokes.” Cae chuckled, following her with his hands in his pockets.

Toki collected the promised camping chair first once the king dug it out, and then set off at an easy waddle. Toki ruffled Thumpers ears when the rabbit tried to steal the chair from her, and made use of her height to keep it out of his reach, giggling softly at his flustered huffing.

The skeleton lead the both of them some ways down the side of the lake, to a large grassy flat spot at the edge of the trees. It was well shaded, and slightly cooler than the rest of the air around the lake. Toki would have been sweating if she’d have been human- but as it was, her bones felt like they were covered in condensation. She was absurdly overly warm, even in the tank top and shorts that she habitually lived in.

The clearing had a couple of logs they could use for benches or whatever they might have needed them for. She was a little out of breath in the heat, but it wasn’t too bad. “Alright!” She chirps. “This is a good spot. Sheltered, shaded, and not too far from the water.”

“It looks good!” Thumper took a running start, and then flopped and rolled in the short, shady grass under the trees.

Cae caught up to Thumper and sat in the grass with a sigh.

Toki didn’t drop into the grass, but she did pad into the shade with them. She opened the chair and dropped into it with a soft sigh. “Gods, it’s hot.” She huffs. “I can’t wait until we can all go in the water.” The shade was cooler, but not much. Toki fanned herself with her hands, and waited not so patiently for Asgore, Papyrus, and Tenebris to get everything moved over to the clearing.

Thumper giggles and strips off his shirt. His ribs weren’t as visible any more, and he was putting on weight again. Weight went on slower than it came off when it came to magic starvation. “Neither can I. But the grass is cool and feels really good!” He rolls in it slightly, and then pokes Cae in the side. “The grass feels good on my fur. Does it feel nice on your bones too?”
"It does." he sighed happily, "Come on, Toki! Join us!" he grinned up at her.

“If I flop in the grass with you, you’re going to have to haul me up with a crane.” She chuckled softly, adjusting her shirt slightly. She slips her slippers off and threads her toes through the grass though, enjoying the tickle of the green blades over her bones.

He laughed at that. "Naaahh. Bullshit."

Toki snorts. “Bullshit my ass. Just wait until you’re as big as I am, and then you try and get up off the ground.” She shifted in her chair, folding her hands over her middle with a deep rush of air from between her teeth. “Ah… Alright.” She eased herself down onto the grass, and proceeded to crab-walk back to flop next to the both of them. She couldn’t quite flop as flat on account of the large swell of her middle. “Heh… The grass does feel nice.” The twins didn’t enjoy the position though, and kicked at her pelvis in retribution.

Thumper shifted and carefully flopped across Caeruleus so he could pet her belly. They fascinated him with their movements, and he enjoyed cuddling close and getting to look and listen to them moving. “Don’t worry, Miss Toki! I’ll help you get up if Sans is too lazy.”

“Well, he’s not exactly wrong, is he?” Toki shifted and rested her skull on her arms as she folded them behind her head. She smiled over at the larger skeleton and winked playfully as the grass tickled over her horns.

Thumper giggled softly, and patted her belly again. “They’re getting all wiggly again, Miss Toki.”

“Mhm.” She hums. “They don’t like it when I lay on my back.”

“Why not roll over then?” He hums, draping his light frame across the lazy skeleton’s chest.

“Laying on the ground on ones side is not comfortable.” She shortles affectionately. “It’s alright. They’re not kicking too hard, so all is well.” She grins, and elbows Cae gently. “You get to experience the joys of a fussy babybones too, huh bro?”

Cae snorted at that, then grinned at her. "Well I guess, but they're not exactly kicking YET but they will probably soon enough." he mentioned.

“You’re… nearly seven weeks? Or just at seven weeks, if memory serves.” Toki hums. “The twins started kicking at twenty weeks. You’ve got another thirteen before that, I’d bet. How are you feeling, by the way?” She had started getting sick at about seven weeks herself- but each pregnancy was a completely different experience.

"I'm taking this awfully well...” He mused. “Even though Grillby has cut off my Ketchup supply, lets me put a little on my fries but come on man.”

“Oh gods, please don’t get me started on Ketchup. I really want some on some ice cream right now.” She heaves a soft sigh. “Cravings, dude. They’re the most horrible things to exist.”

He covered his eyes with his arm and gave a loud sigh, a dramatic one.

“Ewww Toki.” Thumper made a face.

“I know, I know.” She covered her face with her hands, letting her skull plop onto the grass. She was still self-conscious as hell about her odd cravings- and usually didn’t voice them unless she trusted the person she was telling. “It’s so gross, and I know it. I’m definitely not going to ever indulge in it. I don’t even like Ketchup all that much. Mustard is so much tastier.”

"..." Sans wasn’t sure if he was going to disagree on that one, or find himself agreeing to it.

Toki peeked out of her fingers over at him. “Saaans? I didn’t gross you out, did I?” Heavens knows she did it to poor Papyrus often enough.

"I don’t like mustard... but I want it." he whined.

She was silent for a moment, before bursting out in guffaws. “Oh my god. Instead of morning sickness, you got early cravings. Oh my goodness,” She chuckled, heaving for breath as the weight of her middle winded her. “I- I packed mustard in the cooler,” she giggled softly. “Oh goodness, Sans. That is adorable.”

“Wehhhh.” He groaned at her and flushed slightly under his arm.

Toki giggled softly in response to his groan. She shifted as she picked up the sounds of footsteps approaching, and flailed as she tried to sit up.

Thumper slid out of her flailing range, and reclaimed his spot on the grass.

Asgore was leading Papyrus and Tenebris along, the guys having packed their arms full of everything in the traditional fashion, so a multi-trip set of camping gear suddenly became a single trip set. “Getting comfortable already, are we?” he smiled cheerfully.

Sans sat up and hefted her up gently by the shoulders, before grinning up at Asgore. "Hehe, yeah. The grass is nice and cool.”

“Thanks, Sans.” Toki nodded softly to him, and crossed her legs so she could lean her elbows on her folded knees. “The grass is nice. Looks like you all made it in one trip.”

Asgore had three tents tossed over his shoulder, and he gave the three on the grass half-amused looks as he carefully set the coolers down. He eased the bundle of tents down, and hummed as he arranged them gently. Aliquam dropped his load of bags, and then began to fiddle with one of the tents. “I will admit, the grass and the shade sounds like it feels amazing, but I personally cannot wait until we can go swimming.”

"I just realized... Can Pops swim?” Caeruleus then piped up.

“I don’t actually know.” Asgore blinked. “Old friend? Can you swim?”

“If not, I’m sure the shallows are shallow enough for him to cool his feet.” Toki gave him a bright grin, and then flicked her eye lights up to watch Papyrus. “You all brought your swimming trunks, right?”

Tenebris rattled quietly and he looked to Asgore. "I haven't tried... for a while, but... I’m sure I am." Though at the mention of swim trunks, Tenebris blinked then chuckled. Swim trunks...

Asgore shared a look with Tenebris, and tilted his head. He had packed a pair of swimming trunks for both of them, but using them was up to Tenebris. The phantom, like the skeletons, didn’t have anything to show unless he was aroused. “I do have swimming trunks for both of us, yes, though, like yourself, Tenebris does not really need them.”
“I suppose we’ll see after we get the tents up.” Toki hummed slightly. “I know skeletons sink, but we don’t need air. Speaking of tents… I rested while you all got everything over here, so that means I should be golden to help, right?” Getting up, however, was proving to be a feat she was incapable of. “Not needing them… Well, that is images I did not need flashing through my skull, thank you. If you don’t need them, don’t wear them if you don’t want to? I’m still going to wear my swim suit, simply because I would feel a bit naked without it on.” Never mind that it was literally a two-piece blue bikini with little deer tracks on it, and that it covered only parts of her pelvis and chest.

"There's not really much to help with, per say. Aliquam just finished setting up the storage tent." Tenebris answered.

Toki hadn’t been paying much mind to what her fiancé had been doing from her limited point of view on the ground. She leaned around the two monsters and blinked slowly. “Oh. Well then.” In the time that they had been talking, master puzzle solver that he was, Papyrus had gotten all of the tents up and was just adjusting where they were sitting. “Well alright then. That’s the fastest record ever for setting those up. The poles never like to cooperate. Huh… Well, I’d still like to get up. Can someone give me a hand? I’m stuck.”

Asgore had no problems stepping closer and carefully grasping her hands. He helped heft her up and gave her skull a soft pat. “Perhaps you’d best use the chair from now on.”

“Probably.” She chuckles softly. “Alright!” She claps her hands cheerfully. “Well, we should probably pick tents once Aliquam is satisfied with them, get our bags in, and then hit the water before we all get heatstroke.”

“I didn’t think Skeletons could get heatstroke.” Thumper blinked up at her.

“Extremes of any kind of weather aren’t good for anyone, including skeletons.” Asgore answered easily. “With heat like this, it is entirely possible to get heat sick, even for the skeletons.”

"It's not fun to get overheated." Tenebris agreed. He helped Sans to his feet, and scooped Thumper too, before heading to the tents to get his bag into one of them.

Toki watched him go with an amused look and waddled to Papyrus. She helped him get their bags inside of their tent, the sleeping bags being shoved into the fourth storage tent for now. Thumper and Cae would be rooming in the third tent, which left two monsters per tent. It worked out.

Once all of the stuff had been stored away, Toki stepped out of the tent again, squishing past Papyrus, and began to strip off her tank top and shorts. It left her bare of everything except for her bikini- and the blue deer track print fabric didn’t cover a whole lot. The breeze over her bare bones and belly felt scandalously good, and she stretched, rubbing her fingers along the glowing green flesh of her back and sides.

She being the first to undress to swim caught the boys' attention and one by one they began to follow suit.

Cae was the first ready, wearing a pair of black swim shorts with blue stripes on the sides, much like how his normal pants had a white.

Aliquam was next, and definitely didn’t look the same as he did when clothed. Though he had a bright, and strong looking ribcage that gleamed in the light, his swim shorts were a bright orange color, plain and simple.
He looked to Toki and smiled happily, "I agree, it's very nice."

Toki definitely admired the view that Aliquam gave off. Damn did he have a nice ribcage, and that was all hers. She grinned at him and winked slightly. "I am so ready to get out of this heat though. It's hot even on me."

"Probably even more so." Asgore chuckled. He slid from his shared tent with Tenebris, clad in dark purple shorts, with all of his fuzzy fluffiness for show. "Those of us with fur or fire natured magic tend to feel the heat more. At least those with ice natured magic can cool themselves off." He chortles.

Thumper was the last one out, and he bustled from his tent in a jumble of limbs, falling flat on his face. He huffed and pushed himself up, and finished tucking his tail into the hole designed for it. His swimming trunks came to his knees, and were gray with little carrots on them.

Aliquam got a soft chuckle from how cute Thumper was, and he stretched before he sighed happily. "Where's father?" he asked.

"I refuse to wear these things!" came from the tent.

Toki giggled. She'd bought swim trunks for him ages ago- and they were lavender, like his soul, with mint leaves on them. "But you’d look adorable!" She calls back cheekily.

Asgore hides a chuckle. "If you don’t want to wear them, you don’t have to." So long as Asgore kept his hands to himself, Tenebris wouldn’t have anything to flaunt.

Cae was cracking up where he was standing while Tenebris moved out of the tent, folding his arms with a soft huff. "Thank you, Tokiko, but unless necessary, I refuse to wear something while swimming... Except these." he then held up the black and purple webbed gloves he was wearing and he had a pleased smile.

It was now completely clear where Cae and Aliquam got their build. Lowering his hands once more, he walked around to Asgore, looking at him, "I don’t look too out of place, do I, old friend?" he asked.

“Not too much so, old friend.” Asgore gave him a smile, and chuckled softly.

Thumper’s nose twitched and he giggled softly. Mischief lit up his purple eyes, and his tail twitched excitedly behind him. He bounced slightly in place, before his back paws rocked further up onto their toes. "Excluding Miss Toki ‘cause she’s got bigger babies, last one in the water is a rotten egg and has to do the dishes after dinner tonight!"

And like lightning, the rabbit was off; sprinting for the water with loud giggles echoing after him.

Toki watched him go with an amused snort.

Tenebris' tail perked upward as he looked towards Thumper after his challenge announcement and he chuckled, tugging Asgore along, "Come on, old friend" he chuckled.

To Thumper's surprise, Cae was already testing the water with his foot when the bunny got there. "Oh, took ya long enough." he smirked.

Thumper flopped into the waves and made a face at Sans as he splashed in the shallows. The water was really cold compared to the heat outside. "Teleporting doesn’t count!" He stuck his tongue out.
Toki laughed, and urged Papyrus along. "Go ahead, love. I'll catch up." She was slow in waddling for the water, having no desire to heat herself up any more before getting in the water.

Asgore chuckled and scooped Tenebris up into his arms. He set off at an easy lope, his mane bouncing and a playful grin stretching his face. He didn't mind doing dishes, no matter who lost.

Cae cackled smugly, before moving into the water. "There we go" he sighed, shivering.

Tenebris let out a gasp as he was scooped up, before he laughed and looked ahead, his eyes gleaming at seeing the bright blue water.

Papyrus smiled and shook his head, taking her arm with his, "I always do the dishes anyhow." he purred gently.

Toki smiled up at Papyrus lovingly, and rested her head gently against the bare bone of his upper arm. "I'll help you." She promises softly.

Asgore hit the water like a freight train, nearly tripping as the water created resistance that he wasn’t expecting. He waded in some, the thick fur of his legs sucking water in like a sponge- and then grinned mischievously. He hefted Tenebris some, and then tossed, sending him a little deeper into the water, but not someplace that he couldn’t stand upright.

Thumper grinned and proceeded to splash water at Caeruleus.

Toki watched the mischief as they finally made it to the lakeside, and then smiled softly in amusement. “You know, for all that I am a girl, I have never been flung into the water like that. I always flung my brothers when we were younger- which was hilarious.” Kon had hated to get tossed- so naturally, she’d had to toss him multiple times, just to laugh at his angry sputters as he made an attempt to drown her in retribution.

Cae splashed back with a cackle, "It's on, Fluffbutt!" he cackled.

Tenebris gasped as he was lifted and let out an "ASGORE!" as he was thrown. He hit the water with a massive splash. Tenebris surfaced and gasped, yelping and whining in complaint, before he huffed and shifted to have his back on the surface, tail serving as a rudder as he swam around. The gloves were doing him some good, as he was getting around well enough.

Papyrus giggled lightly to see his father's attitude ease up, and he gently tugged on Toki's arm. "Come on." he purred, guiding her into the water.

Toki giggled softly, and padded into the water with Papyrus next to her. The water was cold and it lapped up and over her bones. The water around her legs heated rapidly. She chuckled slightly, and walked deeper, enjoying the sand between her toes. "Ah~" She let out a pleased sound.

Thumper squeaked and laughed, and dove under the surface to rapid-fire kick waves of water at Cae.

Asgore laughed and sank down to float as best he could. With all of his fur, he looked like a melting pile of pale pudding.

Papyrus blinked and sighed happily, basking in the water that was warming up around him and Toki. "O-Oh... Nyeh heh heh, I forgot you could do that~"

Sans shielded himself and cackled. "Oh come on! That's not fair!"

Tenebris swam over to Asgore after a while and nuzzled against his fluff, purring happily.
Toki gave him an apologetic look. "Sorry, Pap. I'm not very good to stay near if you want to cool off." She didn't venture too deep, but she did go out to one of the logs that rested not far out from the shore. She took a seat on it, and sank up to her chin. "It feels good to let off this heat though."

Thumper had to come up for air eventually, and he came up sputtering and laughing, valiantly trying to swipe water from his eyes.

Asgore welcomed Tenebris close, and laughed softly. He rumbled happily back, and tickled his fingers slightly over the others side. "The water feels good, doesn't it, old friend?"

"Are you kidding me? This feels so good!" Papyrus settled by her contently, and purred as he held her close.

Cae knelt down and did his best to swipe the water away from the rabbit monster's face. "Here." He chuckled.

He shivered at the teasing fingers and swatted his hand lightly. "Indeed, though the initial shock of the temperature was... less than pleasant." he admitted, "If you had planned to throw me into the water, perhaps I should have worn those shorts..."

"Does it?" Toki gave him a smile and leaned into his side. She snuggled to him contently and enjoyed the cool water flowing over her. It chilled her bones, and the twins kicked eagerly as they tossed and turned within her. Toki couldn't help but giggle. "The twins are enjoying the cooler temperatures. They've been pretty fussy."

Thumper giggled and scrubbed his face with his fingers. "I'm good now. Fur leaves water that drips everywhere."

Asgore nodded and cuddled him closer to his fur. He was warm and radiated warmth, similar to Toki did. "I am sorry, old friend. I couldn't resist." He chuckled. "You could always get out and get them on?"

"Though you're making it pleasantly warm~" he purred gently.

"Yeah, you'll have to really dry yourself off when you're done swimming." Cae chuckled.

Tenebris purred happily and chattered softly, before he scoffed and shook his head, "Nah, I'd rather swim as my predecessors did... Only with these gloves..." he murmured.

"Well, I do make warmth naturally," she chuckled gently. Toki shifted, and then grinned slightly. She peered into the water, and watched a fish swim curiously around her middle, before starting into Papyrus's rib cage. "You have a curious fish friend, Pap."

"In this heat? I'll be dry in half an hour. King Asgore on the other hand..." the king was a fuzzy monstrosity. Thumper grinned up to Sans, and then mischievously wiggled his fingers. "Hey Sans... you don't have to breathe, right? You should totally go tickle Papyrus's feet. Or Toki's."

"The gloves are very useful since you don't have palms." The king hums softly.

"I have a feeling I'll get kicked." Sans quickly replied, shaking his head.

"Very helpful. I can never be thankful enough to Toki for these." he purred happily.

Thumper pouted slightly. "Can't you teleport though? That is like the ultimate gift for doing pranks!" The gray bunny huffs slightly, and crosses his arms thoughtfully. "Hm..." he could play mischief later, he supposed. He had energy to run off after all and he could do some swimming instead.

Asgore chuckled. "Indeed. Just how fast can you go in the water with them, old friend?"

"Go ahead and play, kiddo, I’m going to go relax a bit." Sans pat his head then let him go.

Thumper made a face at him and nodded. “Okay.” And he was off, with mischief in mind, to swim some circles around the lakeshore that they were on.

Papy looked down as he was told of his guest and he blinked once, "Nyeh?"

"Now isn't that a question." he rumbled, before he turned and took off from the king, swimming almost effortlessly thanks to the gloves, as well as the nature of his feet and tail.

Toki giggled softly, and swished water through his ribs. The fish swished, brushing mucus-covered scales across the inside of his ribs, before zipping down to investigate the loose insides of his swimming trunks. “Nyeh,” she teases slightly. “You have a fish checking out your pants.”

Though the fish fled swiftly once Tenebris took off. Many others also were fleeing to deeper waters.

Asgore chuckled, watching Tenebris shoot off, and straightened up some so he could stand and see him better.

He was indeed getting a shiver from the feeling on his ribs, but he sighed as it fled. "Not the first being to do some diving in there." he teased her, before he turned to see his Father swimming, "Oh, looks like he's a natural at that.” he giggled, "Must be those gloves you bought him.”

Well that made her flush a bright, bright green. Toki giggled into his shoulder. "I do believe I have first dibs," she laughed softly. Seeing Tenebris swimming was an interesting thing. He moved fluidly, reminding her almost of a crocodile in the water. All he was missing was teeth like hers. “Probably is. I figured, y’know, since he’s got those holes in his hands, he’d need something to help him swim.”

"Well it helped, and I think he's very thankful." He wrapped an arm around her side and pulled her close, tilting up her chin to kiss her.

Toki smiled warmly and leaned into his kiss with a soft, jubilant sigh. Her fingers trailed up and gently stroked along his jaw, tracing the strong bones back and up to his skull with a tender and loving touch. “He’s not the only one who is.” She purrs to him. Gods above, she loved this skeleton.

"Well at least I’m able to show my thanks." he purred teasingly as he pecked her cheek.

Toki giggled softly and smoched along the strong line of his jaw.

Right up until she got a rabbit powered water blast to the face that had her sputtering and shaking water out of her eye sockets.

Thumper literally cackled. “That’s what you get for doing gross adult kissing stuff on a family trip!”

"NYEH! Hey!” Pap shook his head and shot Thumper a look. "She's my mate. I'm allowed to kiss her if I want to!"

Toki couldn’t help giggling as she drained her skull. Oh heavens above, Thumper was such a dork, and so was her Papyrus.

Thumper grinned at him in childish glee. “Of course you are, but kissing is so gross! Cooties are a thing!" And, with Papyrus looking at him, he took a wave of water straight into his face, followed by the rabbit’s mischievous giggles.

Toki splashed back, laughter trailing from her chest. She caught Thumper squarely, and watched as he sputtered and had to shake his ears out. She could enjoy a splash war with the kid- he did need attention, after all. She was in charge of him, after all, until he chose whom he wanted to stay with.

"Hey Toki…" he then grinned at her, "Why don’t you go give Thumper a little kiss?" he chuckled deviously.

“Oh no, no, no, no, I don’t want any Toki-cooties!”

The rabbit wasn’t fast enough in water to escape the hands that ensnared his ankles though. He squeaked, holding his breath as he was tugged slightly under water, and then into her arms. Toki settled him atop her belly, his weight lessened by his buoyancy, and then peppered him with kisses.

He shrieked with laughter, legs flailing and stirring up a load of bubbly lake foam. “Tokiiii!” He shrieked. “Nooooooo! No kisses!”

"Careful not to kick the babies, Thumper." Pap told him, knowing that would trap him for sure.

“My l-legs aren’t n-near enough to- AHH NO TICKLES!” His shrieks hit another decibel, squeaking as he laughed and flailed, splashing a wave of water into Pap’s face in retribution.

Toki roared with laughter, his thrashing rattling her just slightly. She peppered him with another couple kisses, fingers merciless against his side. She didn’t last long though, before the sensation of being out of breath hit her, and she slowed, her laughter fading into a few sparse giggles.

They were giggles that were shared by Thumper as the rabbit went limp in her arms, limbs twitching from time to time with lingering pulses from his laughter.

He sputtered as he was splashed and coughed gently, to clear the water from his skull, before he smiled at the sight of the cuteness between his mate and the orphan nestled so adorably in her arms. "Nyeh heh heh heh, how precious~" They truly were. She was good with children, and seeing her settled against his side, frame swollen with his young, giving attention to a child who needed it desperately made him feel warm and happy. He loved her so god damned much.

Thumpers foot gave one more twitch, a weak splash flailing towards the biggest skeleton. He giggled softly, limp and lazy against Toki.

Toki panted slightly, but her sockets were bright, and her being radiated with peace and happiness. She adjusted how Thumper was floating in her arms, cradling the tired bunny against her chest, and then leaned into Papyrus. She was a bit worn out from that, but her energy bursts were a lot smaller since the twins wore her out more often. Toki winked up at him. "I," she panted, "Know we are. Heh. You're precious too."

He smiled and kissed her head gently, rubbing his fingers over her back to soothe her breathing. "I love you~"

"I love you too." She nuzzled up under his chin with a soft purr.

"Mmm... You didn't tire yourself out, did you?" Thumper blinked up at her slowly.

"I'm a little winded, but when you're as pregnant as I am, that's pretty common." She chuckled softly.
"Nyeh heh heh." Kissing her head, Pap held Toki closer, smiling at them both.

"I'm sorry." He hummed to the both of them. He wiggled some. "Lemme go please? I wanna go see if I can get Mister Tenebris to play some."

"Making your rounds, hm?" She smiled softly, gave him one more smooch to his cheek, and then let him lazily swim off. She relaxed into Papyrus's side, sighing gently. "He has so much energy," she mused. "Think ours will be like that?"

"I don't know." he shrugged loosely with a chuckle, "I guess we'll see what happens, yeah?" he purred.

Toki chuckled. "We'll see indeed."
Swimming had ended up exhausting nearly everyone who had gone to enjoy the water, but after they had dried off and settled down in warm clothing, it came to be time for dinner.

Various foods had been cooked over the fire and set out for everyone to enjoy, while Tenebris himself had been given barely seared meat, which he was able to eat with his new dentures. Dentures that you could just TELL he didn't like, but it tore the meat and let him eat, so he was content enough for now.

"Dessert time!" Cae announced, bringing over a plastic bag with various treats inside, more specifically, Graham crackers, Chocolate bars, and Marshmallows.

"Who wants a S'more?" He laughed as he sat down.

Tenebris' attention was caught. "What is a S'more?" He inquired.

Toki beamed across the fire to Tenebris. She had her feet propped up carefully on Ali’s lap. All of the activity of the day found her feet hurting something terribly, and rather than demanding a foot rub, she opted for elevation instead. "A S'more is a culinary delight." She giggled. "Cae knows. I figured I'd need help in showing you all, and I was right." She was sore and achy, but she didn't want to just sit around. "Gimme a hand up and I can help make them. They are chocolate, marshmallows, Graham crackers. We're going to need sharpened sticks."

Thumper looked excited as he shifted in his chair. He hopped up, eagerly flicking his tail. "I'll get the sticks!" He called as he bounced off to gather a small collection of them from the edge of the forest.

Asgore smiled softly. "How about we just move your chair closer, Toki? You need to rest your feet. How are they feeling, by the way?"

"Sore."

"Sore." She admits. "But moving my chair would work. I still need to get up though to move my seat."

"We could use Dad's tail." Cae joked.

Tenebris thumped a foot roughly on the ground and growled at his eldest. "No."
Asgore chuckled softly. He stepped out of his seat, and then grasped the back of both Toki and Papyrus's chair. He hefted them up and set them down a bit closer to the flames, so she wouldn't have to get up. "There. Problem solved." He chortled.

Toki blinked, and then laughed softly. She successfully hid a flinch at Tenebris’ growl, well hidden by Asgore having moved them. “Well, that's one way to do it.” She relaxed as best she could, letting her ankles stretch in her fiancé's lap as she folded her hands over her middle. She was clad in shirts and a tank top again. "You remember how to make a S'more, Cae?"

Pap had squeaked in surprise, tightly holding onto Toki’s leg out of reflex, and then he smiled up at Asgore. "Ah, thank you." He smiled at him, then reached out and collected her ankles into his hands. He kneaded them and the bones of her feet, rubbing the sore bones to soothe them.

"Course I do!" Cae replied with a grin.

Toki couldn't help the pleased groan that pulled from her as his palms worked over her feet. "God's yesssss, Pap."

"You can ask, you know." Asgore chuckled gently. "That is what mates are for." He thrummed.

“I know,” Toki sighed blissfully. “I don’t like to ask though.”

Thumper squeaked as he came bustling back, arms laden with sticks. "It's really dark out there."

"Oh well done, Thumper. All right! One stick for everyone!" Sans exclaimed eagerly.

The boy grinned cheerfully. "Uuh! They're pretty sharp." Still, he passes out a stick to each person, and then flops eagerly in his chair with his stick. "What now?"

"We put a marshmallow on the point and hold it over the fire, you can let it catch fire, or you don't, whatever floats your goat." Sans grinned at Asgore.

The king snickered good-naturedly at the joke, whilst everyone else groaned.

Thumper grins slightly. "Cool! Gimme, gimme!"

Toki chuckled softly. "Manners, Thumper. We'll pass the marshmallows around. Cae? Will you be a dear and hand me a small thing of chocolate and a thing of Graham crackers?"

"Sure, here." he passes her the chocolate and the crackers, while giving everyone else a marshmallow to start. He took chocolate and crackers for himself.

She grinned to him in thanks and carefully cracked the cracker in half. It crumbled over her belly as she rested it carefully there, balancing one half as she plopped a small bit of chocolate on it. She grinned wider, speared her marshmallow, and then held the stick out over the fire. She didn't let it catch fire, but it began to turn a golden color as she rotated it.

Thumper shoved his right in, and it caught fire. He looked at it curiously, and blew it out. Then he shoved it in his mouth and squeaked. "Ah! Tho hawt buth tho thweet!"

Pap was careful with his and smiled as his ended up a golden color as well, "This looks good!"

Cae didn’t care about burning his, a grin on his face as he watched the external layer burn, before he blew it out and looked to Toki. "Ready for my cracker and chocolate when you are" he chuckled gently.
Tenebris blinked once as he watched his turn golden brown before he retracted it and looked at it curiously, taking in the roasted scent, "Mmh." he then blew on it gently and without thinking, popped it into his mouth, chewing before he swallowed slightly.

Right before he started to smack his lips, his tongue pressing against the top of his mouth, and got stuck.

Toki grinnned at Cae and motioned for him to ready his. She smeared hers gently onto her chocolate, smashed the second cracker down, and lifted it up to take a bite. Chocolate and marshmallow stuck to her teeth as she made a pleased sound. "Mmmm..." her eyes closed as she savored the taste. It was so sweet, but so good.

Thumper giggled as he watched Tenebris.

Asgore meanwhile was dealing with marshmallow gumming up his beard and the fur of his lips.

Tenebris began to rattle in distress, before he took his thumb and tried to dig out the marshmallow off the roof of his mouth.

Thumper dealt with his own gummy mouth, and he reached over to offer his glass of juice to the big monster. "Winse! Mallows ah schticky." He slurred around his mouthful.

He attempted a growl, ended up gurgling around the gooey mess that had his mouth gummed up, and took a drink of the juice. He swished a couple times, and it took some working at it before he successfully got the marshmallow free from his mouth and dentures. "Ah!"

Toki giggled across the way at Tenebris, finishing off her S'more quickly. "Ah. Heh. Twins enjoy the sugar." Not that they needed the energy. They would be fussy all night. She still didn't regret it. "Sticky mouth, Tenny?" She grins to him, cheekily swiping her glowing green tongue along her teeth to clean off the chocolate and crumbs stuck with the marshmallow.

He shot her a look and licked his teeth before he huffed.

Cae offered him another marshmallow, "Try to wait for the rest of the S'more this time, Pops" he chuckled, letting him take it and put it on his stick, going to go ahead and get his graham cracker ready for his first S'more while his father roasted the marshmallow.

Toki watched them both with a soft smile, and left her hands folded over her middle. Sans had the rest of the mallows, but she didn’t want to go pester him for them. So… Instead, with a flick of her finger, there was suddenly a glowing bee raiding the marshmallow bag to bring everyone their second round of mallows.

Stripe cheerily went about her task, and then settled on Toki’s knee until she was needed again.

Toki petted the bee gently, and chuckled. “I have embraced my inner Nara late into life. My grandpa would be so proud.” She snickered.

“Inner Nara?” Asgore blinked.

Toki grinned. “Nara are known for being very smart, but horribly, horribly lazy and un-driven. Most of us find things to be too troublesome to really do with effort. But, from time to time we can be motivated. I’ve always been a very active and motivated Nara. My grandpa blamed it on me being only half-blooded." She wiggled her fingers at Stripe. “I just used my magic to fetch sugary treats so I didn’t have to move or have someone else move. I totally embraced my inner Nara.”
Thumper giggled softly. “Well, growing babies is hard work. Using magic makes things easier!” Rabbits weren’t known for strong magic, sadly, and he wasn’t much different from the norm. Rabbit monsters were mostly earth based, which meant they could grow awesome crops. He was faster than most rabbits when he was healthy- but that was the only thing he had going for him. Speed didn’t mean much in the long run. “I wanna make a S’more!” he nudged Cae. “Can you show me how you put it together?”

Caeruleus cackled at Toki’s cleverness and shifted in his chair to be level with Thumper in his. "Come on, kiddo. I'll show you."

Thumper beamed and nodded eagerly. “Yes please!”

Toki giggled softly, shifting her legs in Papyrus’ lap. “So… You know another fun thing that my family used to do while we were camping?”

Asgore, having just finished clearing his beard of the gooey mess, glanced to her thoughtfully. “Hm? What other traditions did you follow?”

Toki grinned slightly more. “Scary stories. I will warn you now, I am the biggest chicken when it comes to scary stuff, but I love it too. I know a couple scary camping stories.”

Tenebris rumbled quietly as he carefully assembled his S’more, before he took a bite of it, able to eat it a lot easier now that it had other stuff alongside the marshmallow.

"Stories huh? Cool." Cae grinned at her. "So do we wanna go for really scary or somethin’ else?"

“That depends on Thumper.” She tilts her chin. “You want some super scary stories or some milder ones, sweet heart?”

Thumper contemplated as he assembled his S’more, and then nodded. “I want scary!” he grins. “I’m already rooming with Sans. If I get scared, I’ll flop with him.” Or if he got too scared, he’d go find Tenebris or Toki. But that was left unsaid.

Toki nodded. “Super scary it is. Though… I dunno if my human scary stories will really scare you guys. It’s based off of what humans instinctually fear.” She hums thoughtfully, thinking through her repertoire of stories she had collected over the many years. “So… who wants to go first?”

"Well, I have an idea for a story, but it's not exactly scary." Tenebris murmured, licking his claws to claim the chocolate smeared on them. "Why don’t you go first?"

“M’kay. I have two that come to mind- so I’ll tell the shorter one first. It’s actually told as a poem, so I hope you all don’t mind it.” The pregnant skeleton shifted and cleared her throat.

“A poem can’t be scary.” Thumper insisted.

“We’ll see.” Toki winked. “It’s not as bad as my second story, but I think it’s creepy.”

Asgore chuckled, and motioned for her to begin as he leaned back. He forewent more marshmallows and instead nibbled a cracker with melted chocolate on it.

Clearing her nonexistent throat once more, Toki got settled and then began to speak. “The shortcut through the corn field,

Tempt you as you're walking home.
The clouds above keep the moon concealed,
As you enter the swaying corn, alone.
The corn grows tall and thick, my friend,
The path you chose is muddy;
It grows in rows without scope or end,
And in the dark, you hurry.” She grinned slowly, sharp teeth glimmering in the firelight.
“You don't see the standing forms,
As you pass them on your way.
They stand still amongst the swaying corn,
Which hides their pallor, and decay.
Hundreds gather in this field tonight,
Though you see none at all;
Yet still you look around in fright,
But the corn grows too thick, too tall.
You tell yourself as you continue through,

'Its merely the rustling of the leaves,'

But they see you, and they hear you.” She leaned forwards slightly in her chair, and her eye lights glimmered in amusement.

“And they might not let you leave.”

Asgore’s fur had steadily fluffed up as he sat in his chair, and he swallowed slightly, chin tucking down into the fur of his beard and chest. “That was…” Well spoken and creepy, to be honest. “Very good.” He coughed slightly.

Tenebris cupped his chin while his tail rattled quietly, "Fascinating." he murmured.

Toki chuckled softly. “You think everything is fascinating.” She teased.

Thumper shifted in his chair, rubbing his ruffled fur. “Okay, poems can be scary too.” He glanced over to Tenebris, and scrambled over and into the bigger monster’s lap when the fire gave a crackling pop. The rabbit settled there, and curled his arms around his chest. “Okay! More scary stories please!”

Toki grinned. “I’ve got another one- but is there any that anyone else wants to tell first? My second one is really long.”

“Well... We're listening.” Tenebris rumbled, leaning back and nestling Thumper more firmly to himself.

"Don’t be shy, come on then!" Pap piped up with a smile.
“Alright, alright.” She chuckled. “The second story is actually based here. It’s something I’ve experienced too.” She chirps softly. “This is one that all of my brothers and my cousins and myself were warned about while camping here. It’s probably not true- but there’s always the chance. My family has a long and rich history- and we know monster magic was involved.” Given her current form, it was quite obvious that magic used to exist in her bloodline. The shortest skeleton shifted in her seat andiggled one leg free from Pap’s hands, letting it rest gingerly on the dirt that had been cleared away from the fire pit. She tapped her toes on the dirt, and was satisfied by the noise it made. She would need it later. “All right. Here we go.”

“Many centuries ago, back when the world was still filled magic and wonder, the ranges of our clan spanned far beyond this lake, nearly to the main mountain proper. The forests were ours to roam, ours to wander and to settle- but as time moved on, people encroached and began to take from us that which was ours. They murdered and they razed and ravaged, and slaughtered many of our kin.” She spoke softly, looking back on how her grandfather had told it as they sat around the fire.

“The elders and the healers took desperate measures here in these very woods. They took to heart our given name, and took upon them to catch a stag. The stag was tall and broad, pelt as pale as the moon, twelve points his antlers bore, and sharp were his hooves. They took his blood, they took his heart, and a sacrifice was made. Six men, six women, six children, and six elders gave their lives to lay a curse upon the woods just behind us.”

Toki took a moment to breathe and take a sip of her drink. She wet her teeth to prevent sparks, and then hummed softly. “The lives given were enough. The magic of the world took to vice the mortals’ plea, and took each life that was given and turned it into a beast. Its hide was pale as the moon; it’s fur short and thick. It walked on both two legs and four, a crown of thorn tipped horns sprouting from its head. It took most of the shape of the stag they slew, and during the day that is what it simply was. A pale, ghostly stag, eyes as black as coal and hide as white as the snow. By night, though, the beast took its ghastly shape, with a tail long and barbed, teeth sharp and strong like iron, eyes as black as it’s patchwork soul. It was truly a ghastly mix made by the blood of Nara and stag. Terror reined- and those who stole and ravaged and razed were slaughtered in the dark.”

There were a few crackles from the logs in the fire, and Toki tilted her head thoughtfully, sockets dark and ponderous. “The curse laid in place said that no land would be forcibly taken. None whose blood did not call to it would be allowed to wander its domain- and land not willingly given would house it forever. Those who wandered in when they were not of the blood were taken and never seen again.”

“The land where we live is the last of the land- and it is land that can’t be claimed forcibly by anyone. Given yes- taken no. But here at the lake, and the many, many miles between here and the Village, is land that was taken by the rising governments of the times. It was never given back- and the curse is said to still stand, even if it was smoothed over and payment was given many centuries later for the land that was seized.”

She shifts, rubbing her fingers quietly over her belly. “My grandpa warned us- warned me especially, since I was only a half-blood even if I was the Clan Heir- that it is said that age and time has warped the creature. Blood magic, black magic, the type that my ancestors had committed did not bode well to exist for long. They made an error in letting it continue- but the last who knew how to dispel it had died to give it life.”

“It haunts this lake, and walks the camps, taking any who wander out alone. We were warned to walk in pairs and, and to keep light on us at all times. We were to keep the fire going at all times of the night, for the beast feared it above all else. It had started to take even those of Nara blood, so twisted was its curse. He told us to listen for it. It had a distinctive gait, he said. We would hear the thumping of it’s steps, and the sound of it’s tail dragging. Thump. Thump. Shhhh.” She thumped her foot in the dirt, once, and then twice, and slid the bones slowly through the dirt to echo the noise. “He said that was the only warning we would have. It was said that it’s unholy creation rendered it mute.”

Thumper shivered.

Toki hummed softly. The twins stirred and settled lower in her middle. “When I was little, perhaps nine or ten, I thought that my grandpa was full of crap as most kids do. I had to use the bathroom, perhaps around midnight or one in the morning, and I didn’t bother to wake my little brothers or any of my cousins.”

She quirks a faint grin. “Worst mistake of my life, let me tell you now.” She chuckled softly, sockets black as she recalled her addition to her grandfather’s story. “Our campsite was large, so we had to go fairly far into the woods so we didn’t come across someone’s business in our exploration. I took only a flashlight and toiletries, and went down to the end of the lake.” She pointed behind her, away from the cars.

“It was quiet, and I was in the brush all on my own. I had just finished my business, when I heard it.” Her foot thumped slowly. Thump. Thump. Shhh. Thump. Thump. Shhh. “I froze like a deer in the headlights, and I fumbled with my lamp. The sound was slow at first, and it seemed to come close.” Her foot pressed harder, ignoring the ache it brought. The thumps grew louder.

“It got really close to where I was. It suddenly went silent though- and for a time I simply thought I had been hearing my own heart beat and had gotten scared.” She closed her sockets and her bones rattled faintly as she shivered. “I remember,” She said softly, “The bushes around me suddenly rustled. I shined my light on it, and found legs. Pale, pale white legs with cloven hooves. And I looked up, and up, and up, and found dark eyes glittering at me, soulless and mad. Teeth, similar to mine now, gaped at me as it reached for with human-like hands.”

She fell silent for a moment, gathering her thoughts. “I threw my lamp at it and ran as its jaws snapped shut.” She said softly, her jaws opening and closing with a horrifying snick of sharp, sharp teeth. “I ran in a panic. I know it gave chase- I had stalled it, left it spooked by the light of my lamp suddenly in it’s face. Pretty sure that’s what saved me.” She quirks a soft smile. “I made it to the supply tent on the edge of camp, and I ran inside. I zipped it shut, and hunkered down inside one of the old food crates. I was there all night.”

“It followed me to camp- and it circled the tent from there until dawn. Thump… Thump… Shhh… Thump… Thump… Shhh…” Her foot echoed each of the noises that she vocalized. “My family found me when the sun came up, but no one believed me. I kinda ended up not believing it myself, really. I’m pretty sure I just got spooked in the dark and was hearing things, and maybe my brothers and elder cousins were playing a mean prank. It was dark, and I was young. Kids have active imaginations, you know? And cousins can be mean little shits.” She chuckles. “Still- best to stay in your tents tonight, yeah? If you hear the sounds, beware and don’t go out alone. Well… Okay, we’re all monsters, so I’m pretty sure we can handle anything out there.” She chortles. “Besides, there hasn’t been a missing persons case in several decades.”

Pap’s eyes were wide as he leaned in to listen to the tale.

Cae was munching absentmindedly as he listened.

Tenebris had brought in his legs, gripping his seat tightly as his tail rattled loudly, caging Thumper to his chest.
Asgore was doing his best to hide in his fluff, while Thumper was peeking out nervously from where Tenebris had him caged to his chest.

Part of Toki felt really, really bad about unnerving them. Part of her had forgotten that Monsters were generally very, very nice people, and scary things weren’t likely to be good for them. She grinned slowly, and, in the back of her throat, she mimicked the sound of thumping and scratching, making it seem like it was coming from behind her. “Just beware,” She mused, watching as Stripe buzzed off of her to settle into the campfire’s flames, “If you go out tonight. Take a buddy, take a friend- and don’t go out alone.” She let the thumping start out low, her foot returning up to Pap’s lap so they wouldn’t think it was her.

The thumping and scratching picked up pace, thudding like a heart beat, louder and louder until it sounded like it was upon them- and Toki snapped her teeth again with a loud sound, and watched to see what would happen. Toki wasn’t a successful author for nothing, after all. She was good at spinning a story- even one from memory.

Asgore turned into the hairiest ball of fur that she had ever seen, his fists curling tightly over the edge of his seat as his eyes darted warily around.

Thumper covered his face and hid his eyes.

Tenebris’ tail lashed faster and he bared his dentures as he screeched reflexively, expecting something to pop out. One arm came tightly around Thumper, protectively holding him closer.

Caeruleus and Aliquam both tensed up slightly, the older rising slightly in his seat just in case he needed to teleport people away.

The screech was not expected, and Toki’s amusement disappeared in an instant as her limbs tensed up under a flash of fear, locking defensively about her middle. Her sockets bled dark, and she froze in place, tense and unable to bolt if needed.

Stripe buzzed up and out of the flames, little green bug planting herself between her frozen Queen and Tenebris.

“Old friend?” Asgore was calmer than the understandably nervous skeleton across the flames. “Easy now, or you’ll squish Thumper. It was just a story- a very good one that did what was intended.”

The child was a little bit crushed to Tenebris’ chest, but he didn’t mind overly much if he never had to hear that sound again so close to his ears. He whined slightly and held his ears in his paws. “That was really loud…”

At that moment, Papyrus reached out slowly, touching Toki’s shoulder with a broad and warm hand. His tail rattled before he slowly loosened his grip on the child and clicked in apology. "I'm sorry, Thumper." he murmured, before he looked to Toki, "Tokiko?"

Thumper was content not to leave Tenebris’ grasp, and thus stayed in his lap. His fingers massaged his ringing ears all the same, and he tried to listen to what was being said.

Toki was stock still, sockets dark as she stared blankly ahead. She was fully coherent, but that didn’t stop the flash of nerves that flooded through her. It Papyrus resting his hand on her, and Stripe gently buzzing down and resting on her knee for her finally exhale and close her sockets. Her arms didn’t move from their cage about her middle. “I’m okay.” She murmurs, not looking at anyone as she works to calm down. It was just Tenebris- she’s heard his sounds before, and this time she had startled him. He hadn’t been going for the twins- he hadn’t been going to hurt her or his grandchildren. He'd simply been scared. It was stupid that the screech was enough to make her lock up like a deer in the headlights. “Just… Give me a moment. I’m all right. It’s all good.”

Asgore stared across at her and took a deep breath. “Take a few deep breaths, Toki.” He suggested gently. “Perhaps no more scary stories for tonight, hm?” His fur was starting to lay flat again, and he eyed the gravid female’s mate, arching a brow at him.

Papyrus resumed gently rubbing Toki’s feet, hoping to help her relax a bit more. She did have to work through this mostly on her own, but he would support her as best as he was able to.

Tenebris looked at them, then he sighed and groomed Thumper lightly, though after a moment, he looked up at everyone. “Why don’t… I tell a story now? It's not frightening, but a tale of the past. It will settle us for slumber at least…”

Thumper simply slumped in his arms as he was groomed, and sighed contently as the ringing in his ears began to fade. “Sure!” he chirped softly. “We could all use something not scary.”

“Tale of the past?” Toki inquired softly, sockets remaining closed and body relaxing as Papyrus helped her ease out of her nerves. “I would love to hear it.”

“So would I.” Asgore nodded slightly, and resumed nibbling his crackers. They were quite tasty, even if they were a little dry.

He smiled gently, and nodded, "Alright." he then leaned back, and his hands glowed lightly, his magic harnessing the smoke from the fire to create little shadow forms, "This is a tale of a time since passed. Of a great species of beast. And of a pup." he murmured as he let the shadows start to shift form.

Toki leaned back slightly, sockets opening finally so she could see. Her hands rubbed soothingly over her middle to calm the twins from their upset from the moment prior, and she smoothed her fingertips slightly over the soft ecto-skin hidden under her tank top. She listened to his words, taking them in as she watched the smoke begin to change. Her hand stole up carefully and claimed Pap’s, holding it and rubbing his knuckles gently.

The king and the rabbit listened and watched raptly.

"There was a great race of beasts that lived in the forest, beasts of many kinds, Canis, Draconis, Felicae, Avian, the genetics were unique in every beast. Though different, they were always together in packs. They would have an alpha couple, but even with that, they were a family. Our story is of a pup birthed of an alpha." he murmured, letting the shadows take form of a smaller form than the first shadows he summoned forth, each and every one with bright purple glowing eyes.

"More specifically, it is the story of a runt, whose tale is unlike any other." he explained.

The start of the story had Toki’s rapt attention. Her eyes watched him thoughtfully, glimmering a pale green across the fire.

"This pup came into the world knowing naught but his mother and the siblings that wrestled on either side of him, each and every one seeking their mother’s milk. With many mouths to feed, one knows that many species would sacrifice abandoning the runt for the sake of the other pups.” The shadow of the runt could be seen as it was pushed and shoved by the larger pups to be cast away from the mother so that they could claim her teats.

"But these beasts would not allow this. They were a noble species, they were forever mated to their destined, and were dedicated parents, protecting each and every of their pups until they were old enough to join the hunt. And this runt was no exception." A second form, no doubt the shadow of the father, approached and nosed his snout between the pups before lifting the runt and putting him back where he could easily clamp onto his mother to suckle once more.

That was definitely different than a typical animal would do. Toki slowly eased her grip off her middle, leaving one resting just along her girth so she could entertain the twins. The other came up to pillow her chin, giving herself a headrest.

Asgore shifted slightly in his seat, eyes flicking between the purple-eyed beasts and Tenebris, making quiet connections.

Thumper was simply ensnared by the shadow play.

"The pup was happy, he had a good life, and as the son of the alpha, great potential. But there was tragedy that soon struck." Another wave of shadows and the beasts took a protective nesting form around the pups.

"There was a storm, a terrible one. It blew for a day and a night. The pup was terrified, its siblings were too, but the mother and father protected them valiantly through the terrifying time... But when the pup stirred the next morning..."

A wave of his hand, and all the shadows shifted to form a broken nest around the pup.

"He was alone. His Mother, Father, Siblings... All gone. He cried out, but the entire pack was empty, there was no one to respond to his calls." The big monster hummed softly.

"He was alone in a broken nest, with no sight or sound of his kin. It was as if the storm had simply... Carried them away."

Thumper sniffled slightly in his arms and watched raptly. He knew all too well what it was like to be orphaned- he knew it all too well. It was a very fresh wound to the heart indeed.

Pretty much everyone did as they listened and looked at his shadow play of the events to follow.

Toki slightly recognized the larger forms of the beasts the more she looked at them, and her eyes, slightly misty, darted between them and Tenebris. They looked like he did when he had… well, mauled her, to be frank. She tilted her skull, teeth grinding thoughtfully as she listened and watched.

"He called out for hours... Days... He was growing hungry, he was cold and scared, and growing weaker with each wail. But to his despair, no one was there to reply..."

The pup continued to cry out, before it collapsed with a puff of shadow smoke.

"Eventually, the pup could cry no more, and collapsed in his nest. The scent of his mother faded to the wind. He let out a final cry before his world went dark. But he knew not that his ancestors had given him a miracle."

Shadows formed around the pup, humans.

"He had been heard."

Thumper’s ears perked slightly and he swiped his nose, wiping his hand on his pants after.

Toki blinked slowly, watching the shadows.

"The pup had been found by hunters who heard it's last few cries, and had been taken to their home where they took care of it. They raised it until it was a little older, and then to their surprise," the pup suddenly lifted upright to walk on it's hind legs, "It was walking like they did, adapting to their habits, even starting to show signs of speaking their common tongue."

The pup was starting to look more and more like Tenebris did when he had been lost. Part of it was unnerving- and did little to help soothe Toki’s internal upset. But she faked it well, keeping her body slowly relaxing as she looked on and listened.

Thumper brightened slightly. “That looks like you did when you were all angry.” Thumper chirps softly.

Tenebris rumbled gently, then he sighed and continued. "The child grew in their care but it soon came time to send the child away from the forests, to where he could grow up with other monsters, as that is what they thought was best for him... They loved him too much to prevent him from reaching his full potential with the world he now knew."

The child grew taller than the humans before the smoke showed the humans bidding the child farewell.

Toki watched thoughtfully and nodded with a soft sigh. That would explain how Tenebris came to be with the monsters, then. She shifted some, stretching in her chair, and pressing her fingers against a stubborn foot pressing at her navel.

After a moment, he 'yawned' and dispersed the shadows, letting the smoke drift back into the rest of the air. "Ah... that's enough of story time..." he murmured.

Thumper pouted. “Awww! Okay…”

“Maybe he can continue his story tomorrow night?” Asgore hummed soothingly to the youngest monster.

“Yeah, that would be good.” Toki didn’t quite fake her yawn- her teeth parted in a large yawn that had her bones rattling. She shifted some, and scrubbed her sockets. “Sugar in those marshmallows or not, I’m actually getting pretty tired.”

"I'd say it's time for some shuteye." Cae sighed tiredly.

Papyrus nodded in agreement, getting up with a tired sigh.

Toki’s legs were jostled out of his lap, but she honestly didn’t mind. Toki shifted, and tried to haul herself to her feet. No such luck- her center of gravity had her stuck. She casually let Stripe go back to her home plane, and then sighed. “Pap? Can you give me a hand please?”

Asgore chuckled softly. “I think you are right. Come- let us retire to our tents. We could all use some sleep before we go frolic in the lake again.”

“I wanna have swimming races tomorrow. Well... For those of us who can swim. The skeletons can have... walking races? Along the bottom?” Thumper did his best to come up with something to include them, and squirmed in Tenebris’ arms. “Mister Tenebris! I need to get into my sleep shorts. Can you let me down?”

"Oh, right." Tenebris smiled gently and let him down, before he sighed and slowly stood up. "Ngh." he then pushed on his back, letting it pop.

Asgore flicked his gaze over to Tenebris and hummed. “Perhaps I can rub it for you before we sleep, old friend.”

Thumper bounced off for his shared tent to get into his sleeping shorts. “C’mon, Sans! We gotta get the sleeping bags laid out, or the ground is going to be all hard and not comfortable.”

Toki, once Pap helped her up, straightened as well. She kneaded her palms into her lower back, and then sighed softly. “Alright. We should be okay to let the fire burn out tonight.” The flames were pretty low as it was- and some part of her still believed a bit in the superstition her grandfather had instilled in her. That didn’t mean she wanted to feed the fire all night- but at least until she was asleep, perhaps.

She shifted, and made her way for her tent. She wasn’t going to change- none of her night gowns were decent, and if Thumper had a nightmare and came to them per chance, she didn’t want to flash the poor lad. She shifted, and eased inside, carefully easing down onto her hands and knees so she could begin spreading out the sleeping bags she’d portioned out to pad her and Pap’s tent floor.

"I would love that." Tenebris chirped happily, giving Asgore a tired smile.

Sans got up and laughed. "Alright, alright, I’m coming kid." he chuckled.

Papyrus had come with Toki, spreading his own sleeping bag before he smiled at Toki. "Thanks for bringing us out here, Toki." he purred, "It seems we all needed this.”

“I figured we all did.” Toki answered as she listened to everyone getting ready outside of their tent. She shifted some, stretching her back as she layered another sleeping bag out, spreading it so it could fit as a ‘mattress’ of sorts for both her and Papyrus. Her fiancé was, after all, horrendously tall in comparison to her. All of her sleeping bags were sized for her much tinier brothers, after all. Once a few layers had been settled, Toki shifted and crawled for their pillows. She was already down, after all. Might as well make use of it.

Once pillows were placed, she shifted, and tried to right herself so she could sit on her knees. It took her a moment, before she got herself upright. She heaved a few deep breaths in, and pressed her knuckles to her back. “Going to say it now- next time, we go camping before I’m this big. Getting up and down sucks.” She chuckles. Now to try and lay down… This was going to be interesting.

He kissed her gently, and helped her ease back. "God I love you." he purred warmly. "I'll make sure I help you, okay?" he purred.

She leaned in and kissed him again as she settled carefully into a seated position. “I love you too,” She purred softly, fingers coming up to cup his cheek. Her dainty bones rubbed along his broader ones, and her eye lights softened. “You are the best fiancé a girl could have. You’ve been a tremendous help.” He was generally aware of when she needed to get up, or wanted to sit down, and always seemed unbothered by assisting her to and fro.

He smiled and pressed a couple kisses to her, nuzzling her a few gentle times as well, before he settled down and closed his eyes, giving a final sigh to settle himself next to her.

Toki shifted, carefully rolling onto her side. She wiggled back, tucked her chest shoulders against his chest, and settled down to try and sleep.

Sleep was long in the coming, however. But she did, eventually, fall asleep with his slow breathing whistling across her skull.

Her dreams were another matter.
Chapter 61

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Toki has a dream~ Also, interesting note. The camping chapter was going to be a single one- and it evolved into three, just because of how well the rp flowed between us. It was really, really nice. Anyways, enjoy.

Don't forget to visit the blog~ If this chapter leaves you with questions- which it should ;));))- then feel free to ask, and we may possible be inclined to answer. Or to not.
Depends on the question ;3 http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: So, someone's probably asked (tho not to us) what about AU's?

Well... here's your answer.

Enjoy~

Her bones ached, her pelvis throbbed with the last remnants of long spent need- and Toki remembered this moment. But it wasn’t the same. Not at all. The ache was worse, the burn deeper, and she felt her face frowning at someone she couldn’t see. Her fingers were tipped in claws, sharper than the sharp bones she had now, and she watched as she crushed a mug of cocoa and splattered it across a familiar sink.

A black robe was draped over her, rolled up to her elbows, and it swished as she turned her head to glare at the one behind her. “It wasn’t fucking cool that your dad didn’t warn me about it, Pap.
Really. I’m supposed to be his pet science project- I set half the damn village into a heat, and now half of them are out for my goddamned blood again.”

Wait… What? Why would she be saying that? She… couldn’t get her mouth to take it back. Her mind stalled, however, seeing Papyrus before her. What…?

"Tch. Don’t sound so thankful that I managed to get you out of sight before they realized it was you.
And even if they did, these monsters are idiots, but they’re smart enough to stay away from you if you’re stupid enough to get near them." She was given a swat on the back of the head before Aliquam turned away, a sneer of annoyance on his face as his deep red gaze looked at the front room.

The way he stood, with his hands on his hips, it could tell this wasn’t the sweetheart she was engaged to. He wore deep black armor that spiked on his shoulders and dark black jeans, part of his spine showing as a result of his armor not completely covering his torso, only making it to the bottom of his ribcage. On his feet was a pair of deep black boots that came up to almost his knees, with the point of the toe being just that, a point.

"Fucking Caeruleus, that lazy twit. He didn't clean up his mess last night." he growled, and from where she stood, the sound of knuckles popping could be heard. "He's probably at Grillby's Club again... He's lucky if Father doesn't find out about this." he snarled.

What… What had HAPPENED to him? What had happened to her? Where- Where were the twins?
She couldn’t feel any weight, and what little she could see of herself proved that there was no green glow. What happened?

“I am more thankful than you’d think.” She snaps sharply at him, a hand coming up to rub the back of her skull where he had clipped her. Her fingers traced her left horn- it was partly missing, snapped off around the top, and her scar wrapped up into it with cracks. “I know what they would do if you hadn’t pulled me away.”

This was wrong. This was wrong, wrong, wrong, and that wasn’t her Papyrus. This wasn’t HER.

She felt herself walking forwards, and she jabbed a sharp finger into his back. “Leave your damn brother alone you asshole. He’s probably at Grillby’s because it’s the only damn place in this hellhole that you monsters aren’t allowed to kill each other in.” A thought flashed over to her- Grillby didn’t like his floors getting dusty. What. Just… What the fuck was all of this? “That includes your dick of a dad.” She sneers. “You tell him, and he goes after him there, he’s going to come back singed to high hell, and I can laugh my ass off at him like he did to me when I became this thing.”

He grunted sharply at the finger to his back and he turned to swat it away with a gloved hand, before he folded his arms. Sharp teeth glinted at her as he peered down at her. "One thing you would definitely have in common is that you ended up like that due to unfathomable stupidity on your part." he scoffed. "And you know as well as I do that I would save beating him to a pulp for after I’ve dragged him out of the club. What do you think I am, suicidal?"

“Isn’t that how you got the scar on your face?” She mocked, eye lights flicking to the ones trailing down over his eye socket. “Kindness isn’t stupidity, Papyrus. You know it isn’t. A little kindness could make the world a better place.” Her hand retracted and curled into her chest. She glanced away, and peered down at his boots instead.

Kindness? She had gotten this way because she had been kind? What… What world WAS this?

“No. You’re not suicidal.” She sighs. “But you’re far too slow to catch Caeruleus and you know it. You’d get angry and then you’d break something and storm off in a snit like a little bitch.”

His eyes flashed in fury and he clenched his fists tightly, before he turned and roughly backhanded her with a snarl. "How DARE you!" he hissed loudly, "If it weren't for us, you would be a measly pile of ashes, so you best learn to watch your mouth." he snarled, "You damn well know what happens when you try to be kind in a world like this, so remember it, human!“ he snarled again, before he stormed out of the kitchen, a bone shooting from the ground for him to snatch it up into his tight grip.

The front door slammed behind him as he made his exit.

Her hand flicked up to her face, finding a nasty crack running up from one of her now missing teeth. She collected the sharp thing into her hands, cradling it as her green blood dribbled down from her cracked upper mouth. “I’m not human anymore you ass-wipe,” She snipes back, watching him leave.

Toki felt the ache in the bone like it was her own. Her Papyrus was strong, and this one was no different. What strength had always been gentle with her had promptly split her mouth and knocked out the very same tooth he’d tenderly put back into place. This was wrong. It was so, so wrong, and she couldn’t control her actions or her words.

Her body moved, walking from the kitchen to the living room, where she began rifling through her clothes. The couch was shredded and stained green and red, and Toki couldn’t help but noticing that a lot of her clothes bore bloodstains. She picked out dark colors, and dragged a tattered shirt over her ribs, and an even more haggard pair of pants.

She had but only a little time to herself before the door opened once more. But there was no bickering of brothers, only rough, pained breathing as a massive form entered the home, pushing the door closed behind him.

Toki felt her body turning almost robotically to face the form, ducking her head nervously. Her eye lights didn’t move from him though, and she felt herself spit a glob of blood onto the floor. “I’d say welcome home, but this isn’t home.” She snipes sharply. “So welcome back to hell. Please, enjoy your stay.”

Oh gods, oh gods, oh gods why couldn’t she keep her mouth shut?

Sharp violet eyes glared at her with pure anger, a bright red ring in the middle of the irises glowing brighter than the purple had.

"Watch your mouth, Nara." Tenebris spat, before he winced and spat a glob of his own blood on the floor, bringing a hand up to rub his lip where it was split. "Gh... His Majesty was especially grouchy today..." he hissed quietly, limping to the kitchen.

“You probably deserved it, you sadistic psychopath.” She muttered under her breath, grinding her teeth in a spray of sparks that he missed. Still, she moved forwards without her desire to, and found her offering her hand. “Do you want some help with that, Gaster? It looks like he hit you pretty hard.”

He twitched at hearing her first comment, but he looked at her, his glare softening in the slightest. "... I suppose if you want to." he scoffed, getting the medical kit off the fridge before he turned, revealing his true damage to the skeleton.

The crack leading up his temple was wider, and where the split had shown on his temple, it was completely missing the middle section of skull, a black smoke seeming to waft off of it. It had a light layer of his black blood around it, and it seemed to bother him as he reached up and scratched over the edge of the bone, though at the same moment it hurt him as his claws were un-kept and would prod the blackness under his skull., "Gh."

Oh gods he was missing part of his skull. Oh gods, oh gods she could see the inside of his brain. How- how was he alive and how was he not a vegetable? Oh gods-“Don’t touch that, you idiot.” She swatted his hand as he came closer and glared at him. “You’ll make it worse.” She huffed. Her hands took the kit, and she began to tend to him like she always had. “So what did you say to set him off this time when you went crawling to him?” Toki’s tone was scathing and rough, but there was genuine worry under the rough tones.

Just what was sweet, gentle Asgore like if this is what Papyrus and Tenebris were like?

He growled in annoyance as he lowered his hands, his gaze sharp again as well as his hands and tail twitched, really fucking close to slicing her at the neck bones. "I told him exactly what he wished to fucking hear. A pity he wasn't satisfied enough, the rotten bastard." he hissed, "And watch your mouth. I spared you once already, don’t try your luck."

“You call pulling me from a fire to laugh at my misery sparing me? You call poking and prodding and taking samples from places that shouldn’t be touchable sparing me?” She snorts, and is a little rougher with her bandaging job than Toki felt she should have been. But she didn’t have control of this alternate Toki. She was realizing she was along for the ride. “You’re a coward if you let him beat you like this.”

He winced sharply and snarled in pain, but his glare was promising hell to pay as soon as she finished what she was doing.

She finished tending to his face, and then shoved the kit into his lap. “This is the last time I tend to your wounds after he’s done with you. If you’re monster enough to beat me for ‘misbehaving’, you can surely handle some asshole goat king.” She huffs, flecking oozing magic across his limbs as it spatters from her teeth.

This Toki apparently could not read the signs- because the Toki inside quavered at that look. That was not a look that boded well for them. She didn’t want to turn her back on him- but that was exactly what her body did. She turned, and strutted away from him, heading back to the living room.

As soon as she turned his blade had swung, and sunk right into her leg with a sharp, painful sounding crack.

She hit the ground with a cry, feeling the pain reverberating through her own leg. Toki turned, sockets lighting as she tried to pull free from the tail that tried to cleave her leg in half. “S-Stop!”

“You. Are incredibly foolish, Human.” He growled, putting the kit on the counter before he came closer, his tail pulling free before lifting again in a prepared position, “You speak so boldly, yet you do not understand just how lucky you are that I did not slaughter you on the very day you were pulled from that fire.”

“You lacked the balls,” she hissed sharply, scrabbling back away from him once he let her leg go. “Oh, that’s right! You’re a monster, not a human. None of you have balls of any kind. Must explain why you’re all bloody fucking cowards to attack someone weaker than you.” Her fingers heated, scorching his floors as she scrabbled from him. If she could get away and give him time to calm down, maybe hide in a closet until he finished his rage, surely that must work, right? “I’m not even human anymore. I’d rather be a human than be a cruel beast like you.”

His eyes flashed and his tail came down again, sinking into her other leg.

Toki shrieked again, bucking and trying to pry his tail from her leg. “P-Papyrus!” Papyrus always got her out of situations before- he couldn’t be far, right?

No, no, no this was all wrong- this, this never happened! This wasn’t- this wasn’t right! Not at all!

"Papyrus isn’t here, human. He can’t save you this time." The beast growled as he walked closer, his tail lifting again, his grin widening as his pupils thinned to slits.

He wasn’t coming. Not this time- no one would come.

Toki shrieked, and turned back to him with claws, stabbing her sharp little nails into his tail and leaning up to sink her teeth into the vertebrae as he tried to pull it back. “Then I’ll save myself!” She snarls.

No they couldn’t- they couldn’t handle a beast like this. He would crush them just as easily as he had crushed their legs- Gods above they were going to die-

No. No, no, no, this wasn’t real, it wasn’t real.

But it felt real.
The tail was protected, her teeth sinking into the hard plating that made his tail able to rattle, before he came with claws, grabbing her by the back of the skull and clenched hard as he used his other hand to push past her mouth, before he roughly pushed her jaw down to force it open, break it if he had to.

Her jaw popped open easily, leaving another tooth in the hard plating of his tail, as she squirmed and shrieked. Her magic lashed, untrained, and made an attempt to scald him.

He growled lowly before he moved his tail out of the way and threw her to the opposite wall.

She landed with a rattle of bones, her legs unable to keep her up. She cried out, landing in a pile of snarls and hisses. “Just stop! You’ve made your point!”

"Have I? Have I." he growled as he stalked closer, "Have I really?"

They quavered. Kindness was their strong suit, not bravery. “Yes!” Toki stammered. She curled her arms up around her skull, submitting with a shaken sound.

He glared down at her, and then he leaned down and picked up her leg bones, throwing them at her, "Pathetic. Learn your place, or see to it your last wishes are fulfilled." he snarled.

“Last wishes?” She laughed softly. “To put you all back under that damn mountain where you came from! Care to fulfill that?”

He glared down at her and his tail came around once more, lifting up before slamming right across her hipbones.

Pain seared across her body, her bones already sensitive from their prior heat, and a scream tore from her throat.

Toki fought hard to deny that this wasn’t real- it felt so very, very real. With him bearing down on her, she could feel panic fluttering through her in ways she couldn’t act on. No bees would come, no fire would light- she just screamed and screamed and tried to claw away.

He held his tail there until he decided to lift his tail up, looking at the glowing green blood on his tail with satisfaction before he turned and hissed. "I’ll be in my lab. Do not bother me." he growled, teleporting away just as the sound of bickering could be heard from two brothers.

She nearly sobbed as he finally let her be, shakily pushing herself up with her forearms. She hurt-they hurt, so, so badly. It was hard to tell where the phantom pain parted from the real pain- and she turned agonized eyes over to Papyrus and Sans as they came through. “P-Papyrus…”

"Why you gotta ruin my break?!”

"Break my ass you lazy fuck! You left the living room a complete mess!” the door slammed open before both brothers stopped at the sight of Toki laying on the ground

"Looks like he finally snapped." Cae commented, grinning widely as he looked at the carnage.

"Shut up or I’ll give you a second fucking gold tooth." Pap punched him and approached Toki, kneeling down and picking up what was left of one of her legs. "You ran your mouth, didn't you.” he chuckled lowly as he looked down at her.

“Y-yeah.” She stuttered. She shifted, rolling onto her back and propping herself against the wall. “I did…”
How could they act like this was normal? This… This wasn’t normal! No! No this wasn’t!

“H-help, please. It, ah, h-hurts a lot. C-can you fix my leg?”

"Well… cant say for sure, but I can definitely stop the pain.” he hummed casually.

Cae spoke up, almost eagerly. "Oh wait, wait, bro… Can I do it?"

The younger shot a look at Sans, before he rolled his eyes and sighed lowly, "Fine."

"Awesome." Sans stepped forward and his eye glowed a ghastly red, before bones suddenly tore through the ground, and through her body, missing her soul by inches.

She cried out as the bones tore through her body, shoving through her ribs and sternum and pinning her to their wall. “S-Sans,” She rasped. “P-Pap…”

Why?

Why would they…?

Why would they do this?

Why?

Why…?

"Sans you fucking idiot!” Cae was struck back hard and he hit the ground while Aliquam sighed gently and summoned another bone into his hand. "I wanted that to be easy. Oh well.” He tilted her chin up. "Ah... a pity... You were rather pretty. Perhaps, perhaps I could have even come to love you." he sighed, before he brought back the bone, holding it over his head. "I do apologize, Tokiko Nara, but this is goodbye."

Toki gave a sad smile, her soul pained for what was to come. “You always were too kind.” She murmured softly.

No- nonononononononoNONONONO!

His eyes shifted for a moment, but he didn't break eye contact, even as he swung the bone down.

There’s a fatal crack in the top of her cranium, but in the same moment, a loud sound of greenery rustling.

A sound not in the dream

And she jerked awake with a start, tense and trembling. In the heat of the night, Papyrus had rolled away from her, and thus it allowed her to jerk upright with a panicked inhale.

Oh gods. Gods, gods above, that had been a terrible, terrible horrible dream. It wasn’t real- it wasn’t real, it wasn’t real. She could feel the ache in her jaw from being cracked across the face, feel the pain of Tenebris’ tail- and the feel of… Of…

No, no, no, he wouldn’t. He wouldn’t ever. No- it had to be a dream. It had to be. Nothing more than a horrifying pregnancy induced nightmare. She shifted, rolling onto her knees. In a feat that surprised even herself, she stumbled onto her feet, jittering and shaking. She… She needed to walk.

Papyrus wouldn’t ever hurt her like that.

Yes- yes a nice walk would calm her.

She didn’t hear the rustling- or was too disturbed to notice it- and made her way out of the tent. She shook and trembled, her feet guiding her away from the camp and down through the pebbles to the sand along the shoreline. Once she was some ways away, Toki hiccupped, and felt tears begin to trickle down. Stripe was summoned, giving her just enough light to see the ground before her.

Once she was down at the water, she sunk her toes into the sand, and began to walk the length of the lake, scrubbing a hand over her cheeks as she sniffled. Her mouth ached, but a quick check let her know it was phantom- no teeth were missing.

What a horrible, horrible dream.

In the greenery, not far from the tent where she slumbered minutes before, was a plump mouse seeking a meal of bugs. It knew not of the predator nearing it...Until it turned to see the beast coming right at it.

"SQUEEEAK!

Toki heard the faintest of sounds, that of perhaps a rodent getting squished, and it stirred her from her quiet tears. She turned, eyes trying to take in the camp and the surrounding trees. It was dark, the fire long dead to the quiet of the night. She rubbed her sockets again, and also traced her belly. She sniffled. “H-hello? Pap?” It was always possible she had woken him, after all. She hadn’t been very quiet when she’d scrambled out.

The bushes rustled, before the mouse ran out in a panic. The predator lunged, revealing a large pale form with sharp claws. Their pupils were wide and illuminated in the moonlight as they lunged and brought a hand down on the mouse, only to need to reach with their other hand as it literally hopped through the hole in the larger creature’s hand. Though another smart lunge from the larger had the mouse hanging from his mouth, wriggling and squeaking in panic.

The white beast that burst forth startled her, along with the animalistic way that the beast chased the mouse. In the dark she couldn’t make out anything more than white- but though her tear-blurred vision she thought she could see horns and cloven hooves. She couldn’t run, couldn’t flee- her legs wouldn’t work, and she locked up. Toki didn’t stop to think, her panic and pain too fresh to forget, the dream-but-not-dream lingering with her. She curled her arms around her middle, protecting what was most important first- and then called across her bonds as Stripe vanished in a puff of flame.

The sky split asunder with a silent belch of green hellfire, and Clover came to rest not far above her. In the dead of the night, the glow of the hornet illuminated the lake, her fires flickering gently as acid green eye lights took in the familiar form of the beast.

Sugar slid out behind her, falling and landing roughly in the sand. Wingless and wounded, she still came to stand beside Toki, giving the rattled skeleton something to lean on. Sugar trembled as she stared at the form that had torn her wings from her- and part of her wanted to run. Only the instinct to protect her Queen, her hive, kept her from fleeing.

Toki closed her sockets and shivered, trying to banish it from her mind. Surely it must be a trick played in the dark- surely, surely it must. This wasn’t fair- it wasn’t fair that she had to have such a dream, and then deal with the predator before her.
With the mouse still hanging from it's mouth, the form lifted slightly and bright glowing disks stared back at her... before the mouse was dropped and the disks thinned to slits. The eyes flinched closed for a few moments. When they opened again, Tenebris blinked slowly at her. "Toki? What are we doing outside?" he asked, slowly rising before he stuck out his tongue and pulled a small hair from it. "Bleh." He flicked the hair away, then stiffened at seeing the two large Hell Hornets. "...!"

Sugar cowered into her leg, but valiantly tried to bristle and keep her supported and defended. The bee looked utterly petrified of him- and missing two very noticeable things since the last he saw her.

Clover on the other hand eyed him, large mandibles clicking slowly as she drifted down. Heavy legs came to bracket Toki on either side, not touching the ground, but looming all the same. She watched him with a warning in her gaze.

Toki’s hands came up to her face, and she covered her face as she tried not to flinch away and cry. Of course. It was Tenebris- she had called the hornets out on Tenebris. Again. And Sugar was so, so terrified that she was damn near cowering into her leg.

She hiccupped, scrubbed her cheeks, and utterly failed to stop crying. “I-I’m s-sorry.” She stutters.

He tilted his head slightly in confusion, but seeing her start crying had him tensing, and slowly coming closer. "Tokiko, hey... hey... It's okay, sweetheart." he told her gently, looking at her with a small frown before he looked at the hornets, "These creatures... aren't these the hornets from the first battle against HAM?" he asked.

He thankfully looked less threatening now that he was no longer on all fours. He was wrapped in one of his softer turtlenecks, the one that made him look more like a marshmallow than a predator, and that helped his image as he continued his slow approach.

Marshmallow or predator, it was still the same monster in Sugar’s eyes. The bee quavered, and let out a soft warning buzz.

Toki smoothed her hand into the mane of fire for the smaller bee, and then blindly swiped her hand. A hell portal opened next to her- and it didn’t take much urging for the smaller hornet to turn tail and flee from the bigger monster. She disappeared into the flames, which closed behind her, and left the world a little darker.

Clover remained, and slowly came to settle behind Toki. The hornet towered over her, but still watched Tenebris warily.

“Y-Yeah,” she sniffled. “Th-they are. This is C-Clover. Sugar was the one w-with no wings.” Her palms swiped over her sockets again, shoulders trembling. She refused to look at him until she didn’t feel at risk of fleeing for her life. “I-It’s n-not okay. It f-felt so r-real…” She leaned back into Clover, the large hornet guiding her away from the water so she could ease them both down into the sand. Toki curled at her side, one hand cradling her middle, the other swiping over her eyes.

He slowly continued approaching until he was able to sit at her side. "Toki... What happened...? Did you have a nightmare?" he asked gently.

She hiccupped again and nodded. She didn’t uncurl as he came to sit by her. “I d-don’t know if it was a n-nightmare.” She whispered softly, shifting as Clover moved behind her so that Tenebris could be watched and regarded while he comforted the distressed skeleton. “I was m-me, but I w-wasn’t. None of you were you. You... You had a hole in your head. We...We were all so... so mean. I c-could see and feel and hear- but I couldn’t control myself, and it was so, so scary. I c-can feel his hand hitting me- and his w-weapon…” She curled her head closer to her chest with a soft sniffle. “It h-hurt. I felt it… But it wasn’t real. It can’t be real. I’m h-here, y-you’re here, and y-you’re n-not h-him… P-Pap isn’t like h-him. He wouldn’t…”

She had to take a deep breath, before she distressed herself more. “I w-wanted to t-try and w-walk it o-off without w-waking Pap.” Toki shivered. “Y-you c-came out of the brush. You… scared me…” She admits quietly. “I w-was already on e-edge. I panicked and c-called them.”

Tenebris looked at her, rubbing his head gently, then he sighed and moved closer, before he reached out and hugged her close. "Hey... Hey... Things have been chaotic, and even here they haunt us... But I’m still here if you need someone to talk to, all right? You are going to be considered my daughter soon, after all." he chuckled.

“I know.” She gave a watery chuckle in return, and slid slightly to lean against his side in the dry sand. This was the Tenebris she knew and loved. Not... Not the one she saw in her dreams. “I s-shouldn’t be so upset. It was j-just a dream. And n-not even a u-usual dream.” Her hands scrub his sockets, and she trembles faintly. “P-Papa? W-what were you d-doing outside a-anyway?” She sniffled softly. It was stupid- it had just been a horrible, horrible dream. Toki should not have been this upset by a dream.

Clover shifted behind her, one leg coming to rest next to Tenebris. The long, pointed barbs on the back of the chitin-made limb mirrored some of the scars on his body, though much smaller. The Hornet buzzed faintly, and remained wary of her surroundings, and of the large monster leaning against her ectoplasmic abdomen.

"I don’t know." he replied, reaching up to slowly touch Clover's form, examining her gently as his other hand moved up to caress Toki's head. "I was dreaming I think..."

“I think you were.” She murmured. The touch to her skull had her flinching just faintly at first- but when it didn’t accompany the sharp sting of a hit, she relaxed. Toki heaved a deep breath and made to forcibly relax herself as the twins twisted fussily in her middle. “At l-least your dream seemed like a good one.”

Clover moved slightly, and her head peered down at him as he touched her. She rumbled softly. Unlike the chitin that made up the rest of her body, the ectoplasm was warm and soft. It was thick though, several inches thicker than his arms were, in fact, and it connected up with the skeletal part of her back. At least his touch felt nice along her belly. A pleased rumble left her.

He chuckled loudly and gave Toki a gentle squeeze. "Well how about this... I’ll stay with you tonight... make sure that no more scary dreams get their hands on you. It's not healthy for you or the pups." Giving Clover a slow petting, he turned his attention to carefully hook his arms under Toki's and heave her into his lap, where he was able to wrap his arms around her protectively and set his head on hers, purring loudly for her to feel and hear. "I'll keep you safe, Toki. Or my name isn’t Grandpapa Tenny." he purred gently, before he then reached up and poked her cheek, "A name that stays between you and me...” he then grumbled.

Grandpapa Tenny. It was fitting, and horribly, horribly adorable. Toki shifted slightly in his lap, her legs dangling over his, and leaned into his chest with a soft laugh. She had to take care to angle her skull so her horns didn’t jab his jaw. “Grandpapa Tenny.” She mused softly. “It’s very fitting.” She smiled. Her fingers curled around her middle, and she sighed softly. “A name that stays between us… at least until they start to talk, hm?” She wiped her tears away, trying not to let the green stain into his sweater, and then hummed gently. “Nightmares are pretty common now. Pap and I do a lot of walking until I tire out enough to sleep.” She murmurs to him. “You don’t think he and Asgore won’t be too upset if they wake up and can’t find u-us immediately, do you?”
The large hornet behind them is pleased enough by the pats not to be bothered when his attention left her. She had to be on guard, after all. There were still things out there that she needed to keep an eye on.

"Perhaps at first, but when he realizes I’ve just come out here to take care of you..." he hummed gently.

"Yeah... Should we move closer to camp maybe, so they don’t get too upset...? Pap is pretty protective of me, and Asgore seems to be like that for you too.” She sniffs softly, and nuzzles her head to his chest. The twins were fussy, and kept trying to knock the wind out of her.

"How about we go sit in the bed of the truck?" he rumbled gently, carefully boosting her to her feet, and then climbing to his own.

“That’s no nearer to the camp.” She chuckled softly as she gained her feet. The trucks were at the other end of the lake.

"Point made." he rumbled, stretching his back slowly as he yawned.

Toki chuckled again softly. “Lets just go back to camp. I’m feeling a bit better- and sleeping out here without anything soft is not going to be good for either of us.” She was still a bit shaky, but she felt better enough to go curl up with Papyrus again. She just hoped she didn’t wake him when she got back.

She waddled for camp, sighing softly to herself. Toki planted one hand in the small of her back, and found her other hand occupied by the large hornet that followed her closely. “If you don’t watch your feet, I’m going to step on them.” She informed Clover in a matter of fact tone.

Clover glanced over at her, seemed to scoff, and then turned back to the task at hand of escorting the Queen and the pale one back to their campsite.

“... I can’t even see my own feet, let alone someone else’s feet.” Toki snorts. “Best watch your tail, Tenebris. Your grandbabies have ensured that I have a very limited view.”

"My tail has been stepped on more than once." he chuckled, though he did pull his tail to the other side where she wouldn’t come close to brushing it. "Though I suppose it would hurt something nasty to trip on it... Alright, I’ll see you’ve safely returned to your tent, then I’ll have a pipe and return to bed as well." he then yawned gently, "I’m not as young as I used to be. I will actually need to sleep if I want to resume my nocturnal habits..." he rumbled.

“Being up super late isn’t good for you, old man.” She teased gently. “Grandpas need their beauty sleep to keep up with the grandkids.” Still, she didn’t mind him accompanying her. “I suppose I should send Clover back before her glow wakes everyone.” She hummed a soft sound, and carefully opened a hole to the Hell Verse. Sugar was very briefly visible, before she backpedaled away from where she could see Tenebris.

Clover glanced at the both of them, and then padded inside without an issue. It left the camp dark, now only the faint glow of Toki’s middle through her tank top to guide the way.

“Excuse you. I’m not old.” he chuffed, thumping a foot as he walked.

Toki leaned out to take his arm, using him to guide her. She wasn’t very surefooted in the dark- and night vision did not translate over into being a skeleton. She pats his bicep gently. “There’s nothing wrong with being old,” She crooned teasingly. “Han used to say that the older the violin, the sweeter the music. Of course, he said it with dirty intentions, but if you don’t take that into account, it’s a very sweet saying.”

He blinked and then nodded slowly as he put thought into it. "I suppose it is very true..." Though his tail then rattled softly. "I mean, if you wanted to use his primary intentions I’m still plenty ample at this point." he smirked.

Toki thumped him on the arm, which probably hurt her hand more than it did his muscular structure. She stuck her tongue out at him and made an obviously fake grossed out sound. “I don’t need to think of you chasing Asgore’s fuzzy little goat tail, Tenny. That’s like imagining my parents in bed. That’s just gross. I’ll stick to the more innocent meaning, if it’s all the same to you.”

Tenebris chuckled lowly, and pat her head gently.

Toki chuckled gently and gave him a tired but warm smile. As they arrived at the tents, she shifted and let his arm go. "Alright. Enjoy your pipe, and I'll see you in the morning, yeah?"

She padded for her tent, and paused outside to give him another tired smile. “Good night, Tenebris.”

He nodded gently, and smiled at her warmly. "Good night, Toki..." he purred gently, "Rest well, my dear."

“You too.” She gave him another smile, and then slipped inside her tent once she shook any lingering sand from her bones. She tried to move quietly, but there was only so much quiet that a pregnant person could stick to. Toki awkwardly got settled onto her hands and knees, and then began the process of easing down onto her side, trying not to stir her fiancé.

Papyrus seemed undisturbed as she climbed in, but once she had lay down and gotten settled, he rolled over and wrapped his arms around her. He nuzzled her as he glanced at her through dimly lit sockets. "Toki?"

“Did I wake you, Pap?” She whispered softly, snuggling closer to him despite the heat of the summer night. Her arms looped gently around him, and she tucked her abdomen into the empty cavity of his own so she could lie flush with him. Toki did her best to tangle her limbs with his, to take in his gentle touch, strong bones, and bask in the fact that this was her reality, and that whatever that dream was… Well, it was just that. It was only a dream.

"No." he murmured, kissing her gently as he helped her do what he sensed she was up to.

With his assistance, Toki was firmly tangled with his body. She nuzzled close, tucked one of his legs between her own, and then let out a content sigh. “Mm... Obviously I did,” she purred softly, “Or you wouldn’t be awake.” She wiggled her fingers, and then sighed happily in his hold. Yes- he was home and he was safe. She leaned up to kiss him again, gentle and soft. “Go back to sleep, Pap. I’m back now- I wont go out again tonight.”

He kissed her head again and smiled sleepily. "I love you so much, Toki..." he purred gently.

“I love you too.” She nuzzled her skull gently to his and smiled softly. “I’m sorry I didn’t tell you I was going out. I just needed a little bit of time to myself.”

"Nyeh~ I don’t care." "Don’t care that I went out all alone with the Nara-eating beastie out in the woods, hm?” Amusement trickled through her as she referenced the story she told that had spooked everyone.

"No such thing." he murmured as he nuzzled her.
“Mhm.” She hummed softly. Toki nuzzled up to his chin, and nipped his collarbone gently. “Lets get back to sleep, Pap.” And hopefully her mate’s grasp would keep the nightmares away.

He hugged her tightly to his chest, and fanned his fingers out across her shoulder blades. They were so, so small under his hands… “Toki. Do you want to talk?” he asked gently.

Toki contemplated that. Did she want to talk? Did she… want to tell him about what she saw? She swallowed. “I… Yeah. I would. That is if you’re not too tired. It was a… bad one.”

“I’m listening.” He purred softly to her.

Toki nodded, and closed her sockets for a moment. She took a deep breath, before sighing. “Alright… Well… The dream was about months ago- just after my first heat, in fact. But… It wasn’t like here. I could see, and hear, and feel- but I couldn’t control any of it. I couldn’t say what I wanted to, do what I wanted to. It was like I was seeing through the eyes of another… version of me? I know it wasn’t me- the other me was missing part of the left horn. I was there though- and I couldn’t escape. I felt… everything- but I knew it wasn’t real.”

Her sockets screw up, and she sighs. “It sounds crazy. But… You were there too. You, Tenebris, and Caeruleus. But… None of you were you.” She whispered, a soft shiver trailing up her spine. “You… were probably the edgiest set of armor I had ever seen. You had teeth more like your dads- and scars over one of your eye sockets. You were… I dunno. Sharper. You and I were arguing about me being stupid- apparently if you weren’t there, the villagers would have… probably killed me, I guess. We argued- and I said something about how you got your scars. You… hit me hard enough to knock out one of my teeth and crack my jaw. Then you stormed out.”

She nuzzled close to him and hummed, running her tongue along the inside of her teeth. All of them were there and nothing hurt. Not even phantom aches now. “Not long after you left, your Dad came back. Your dad… Well, he was missing part of his skull and brain. He was… really, really mean. He, ah… Well, lets just say he left me in a bloody heap at the wall with no legs.” She shivers again. “I had cried out for you- but you didn’t come. No one did. Not until he was done, and he left for his lab. After that… you and Sans came home. Sans… Well, he had a gold tooth, and a nasty attitude.”

“I asked for help- but instead, the both of you… well, you,” she flicks her eyes open and looked up at him, “you put me out of my misery. That’s when I woke up.”

Aliquam’s eyes were bright with shock, before he wrapped his arms around her neck, holding her tightly. "Toki... O-Oh my god... That's horrible...!"

“It was just a dream though.” She muttered. “It had to be.” She shivered, and leaned into his grasp. “That’s what had me out there calming down. I woke up when I died. It wasn’t… fun. I just… don’t understand why I had that dream.”

He whined softly, and began to pepper her head with loving kisses. "Tokiko... My Toki..."

“I’m okay, Pap.” She nuzzled into his kisses, and returned them with a gentle fervor. “I’m here, and I’m me, and you’re you. You are safe.” She snuggles closer. “With you, I can rest…”

"That's for DAMN sure.” He murmured firmly, kissing her before he nuzzled her closer to his chest. She didn’t mind the tight embrace. Toki nuzzled closer, and sighed softly. “Lets go back to sleep, m’kay? I’m kinda tired now that I’m relaxing…”

"Nyeh heh heh heh~” His laugh was soft, just like his smile, and he pressed his teeth gently against hers in a soft kiss. "Of course, my love.” he purred.
“Sleep well, Pap.” She murmured gently to him. She nuzzled her head under his, casually stuffing her pillow behind her back with one hand to better support her, before she settled down.

It was an interesting start to the camping trip- and Toki hoped that the dreams would stay away for the next several days. At least until they could go home.

And lo and behold they did- She didn’t have another nightmare the entire time that they were there. However- as they were driving away to return home, Toki, out of her peripheral vision, caught sight of a white flash in the trees.

A white stag stared out at them from the brambles, eyes black as coal as it watched the cars leave along the road.

She held eye contact with it for a short time. However, when she blinked, it disappeared from sight.
Chapter 62

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: BABY SHOPPING!

Don't forget to visit! http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: So, bonus info, these cats are actually based off two of mine.

One of them (Gracie) I gave to Strider since she needed a companion kitty, the Siamese point is actually named Sans, and he's still a sweet kitten

Though they actually are family

Gracie is Auntie Gracie to Sans and his little sister Frisk (A grey kitten)

They were all exhausted when they came back from the camping trip. Everyone got everything put away, and then it took a couple days to recharge their metaphorical batteries.

Well, most everyone. Asgore, sadly, had to return to the castle for work. Now that Tenebris was stable once more, the king had duties to handle back at the castle. Paperwork and other meetings had been put on delay, and were now piled up.

His departure left Tenebris upset and saddened- and the big monster took to seclusion in his house. Sans had seen him rarely- he was mostly up in his room.

Toki hadn’t seen him since they came home- and she had been too tired and sore to make the jaunt over to his place to go bother him. Camping for several days on only sleeping bags was not a good way to supply comfort during pregnancy. Not a good way at all.

She had all intentions of going to get him today though- but she had gotten distracted. While vacuuming the house, Toki had turned on the television to a basic channel and let it play while she cleaned up the living room and removed cobwebs from the damnably high ceilings. Some careful footwork and use of hose extensions had the cobwebs being sucked away.

That lasted up until the commercial that made her realize something hugely, hugely important.

She was thirty-two weeks pregnant- and they had no idea when the twins would actually come. It could have been between then and eternity for all she knew. And she only had one old hand-me-down crib in her shed.

They literally had nothing for the twins- the room wasn’t even done. Hell, they hadn’t even picked a spare room to clean out for the twins yet.

That brought her all sorts of anxieties that she didn’t even know she had the capacity to have. She barely finished vacuuming, managing only because freaking out over it was more energy than it took to actually finish the chore, before she had to go find her phone. Papyrus was once again back on duty- but a quick call to Undyne had his schedule for the day cleared away. The fish monster, faced with an anxious expectant mother, had been all too eager to soothe her worries, if only for the ‘sake of the guppies’.

For all of her toughness, Undyne was practically a blob of goop when it came to children.

The next call was to Papyrus himself while Toki gathered her purse and got into a fresh pair of clothes. A loose skirt and a loose turtleneck were chosen- because damn the hot weather, she had a desire to look semi-decent. Toki tucked the phone into the crook of her shoulder, and waited patiently for him to answer.

She needed only a few rings before the line went through. "This is Papyrus." His voice piped up from the speaker.

“Hey, uh, Pap… Can you come home?” She tried not to let her anxiousness bleed into her voice- but lo and behold it did. Her voice was fairly distinctive- and no one else was going to ask him to come ‘home’, after all.

He definitely picked up on it too. "... Are you okay?" he asked gently, seeming to move away for a moment to allow his side to go quiet before he resumed speaking to her.

“Physically yes,” She answers once he’s presumably able to hear her better. “I’m a little- actually, I’m really, really anxious right now, and trying not to freak out.” Her fingers tapped on the strap to her purse, and she tapped her slippers slightly on the tile. “Pap, the twins could be here any time between now and infinity- and we don’t even have a room picked out to be theirs, let alone cleared out, and we have only one slightly old crib and I was going to give that to Sans for our niece or nephew so we don’t have any furniture for them let alone anything to set up a nursery. I’m babbling. Shit. I’m sorry. I’m just…” She sighs. “It’s probably a stupid reason but… It’s making me really, really upset.” Most mothers got nesting instincts far, far earlier.

But between losing her brother, and all of the shit from HAM… Toki really hadn’t had time to consider it really. And now, thanks to a god damned commercial, it was hitting like a ten ton wrecking ball of anxiety and stress.

"... I’ll be right over. Sit on the couch and take deep breaths, okay? Keep calm." He told her. "I love you too." She echoed to the ending tone of the call. The abrupt silence on the other end didn’t do well for her nerves- but she took deep breaths, and finished getting herself together. She set her purse on the table where it usually went, and slipped her phone into one of her skirt pockets. She didn’t bother sitting on the couch proper- she needed to get up, after all- but she did take a seat on the arm of the couch and stroke her middle to help calm the twins. They reacted to her stress anymore, and she figured it was from the links in their souls.

She just had to wait for Papyrus- Papyrus wouldn’t likely take too long, though moving in his armor couldn’t possibly be easy.

It wasn't minutes before Papyrus made it back. He took a short moment to shed his armor and tuck it into its usual location, before he came to her side and tugged her to him. He hugged her tightly.

She slumped slightly in his arms and nuzzles her face into his chest. “I’m sorry I interrupted your patrol.” She said softly. Her anxieties were completely valid, however. They were entering uncertain waters at his point- thirty two weeks seemed far, far too soon in her opinion, but they were already large and making themselves known. There was no telling when they would come. “But… Thank you for coming.”
"Hey. You’re my mate. You're always a first priority to me.” he purred softly, nuzzling her gently.

She nuzzled him gently back, and let off a soft, pleased buzz. “Thank you.” She says earnestly. “So… I kind of… cleared it early with Undyne so I could have you today. Do you think maybe you could drive us to the city so we could get some stuff for our jellybeans?” Her truck was still out of commission- and with as round as she was, she couldn’t drive anyways. Toki was entirely dependant on the monsters at this point if she had to go somewhere.

"Oh of course." he smiled at her happily, "Get your coat, I’ll go change."

“Alright.” She gave him a lopsided smile, feeling a little bit of the anxiety ease off. It probably wouldn’t be gone until the room was done though. She shifted out of his arms, and got to her feet again. She was foregoing her coat- it was nearly ninety-five outside- but she did need to get her purse and get Thumper.

While Pap ran up to the room to change out of his under-armor clothing, she collected her purse and then called up the staircase. “Thumper! We’re going to town! Grab your shoes, kiddo!”

Thumper appeared at the top of the stairs, fresh from a nap, and then shook his head. He looked tired, but he did have his shoes already on. “I don’t really want to go to town.” He frowned slightly. “Can I just stay here…?”

“You’re too young to be on your own, sweetheart.” Her middle twisted slightly, and she tapped her finger on her purse strap.

“Can I go stay with Mister Tenebris then?” He perked slightly at the thought.

The boy had missed the monster while he’d been in his reclusion. Thumper had been having a lot of nightmares since they had gotten back- and the only one who really knew what they were about was not around to talk about them. He talked as best he could with Toki, but it wasn’t the same.

Toki nodded slowly. Even she knew Tenebris wouldn’t turn the boy away. “Sure, sweetheart. Do you want me to walk you over?”

“Nuh-uh. You and Papyrus go get stuff for the babies- I want to go spend some time with him. I can make the walk- I’m a big boy!” He offered her a tired grin. He loped down the stairs and hugged her gently, pressing a soft kiss to her belly and nuzzling it gently. “I heard you earlier. It’s gonna be okay! Papyrus will make sure you and the babies have everything you need to feel better.”

She rubbed his ears fondly. “When did you get so wise, hm?” He was growing up each day- it absolutely baffled her how much he was maturing. Sure, a lot of it happened because of his parents, but it was still quick. But, she supposed, she had matured quickly too. Some kids did.

“I’ve always been wise!” He smiles up at her.

“Wise when you dared Twitch into the clan tree, hm?” She winked at him, ruffled his fur, and then gave him a soft kiss on the cheek. “How about you go ruffle Tenebris’ feathers and remind him that there’s lots of other people here who love him and miss him.”

He simply grinned and nodded. “Uhuh! I plan to. Heh.”

“Walk safe,” She said gently, “And pay mind to the cars. You don’t always watch, and not everyone drives slowly here. Be good. If Tenebris isn’t in any mood, go see about getting everyone- and an adult- and going to play at the river.”
“I will!” He smiled up at her, and hopped up to kiss her cheek. “I love you, Toki! I’ll be good! You go have fun with Papyrus!”

And while she was still reeling over his words, the rabbit was off and running. She was left at the bottom of the stairs, cradling her cheek with the softest smile on her face. Thumper was a hell of a good kid.

Aliquam smiled at Thumper as he ran out the door, and then walked down the stairs to Toki's side, wrapping an arm around her before kissing her cheek tenderly.

Toki simply smiled and leaned slightly into him. “He’s going to go see about spending the day with your dad.” She informs him absentmindedly. “Heh… he’s a good kid.” She murmurs softly. She takes a moment to collect her thoughts, and then claps her hands slightly. “Alright! We’ve got a mission. Did you find your wallet? I found it in the laundry basket this morning, so I put it on your nightstand.”

"Yeah, thanks a lot." he chuckled, before he let her go. "I'll bring the car around if you'd like." He offered. "Or do you need help with something before I do?" he then asked.

Toki shook her head. “I can walk with you to the car, Pap.” She smiled slightly, and claimed his fingers in hers. She was good to go for now. “C’mon. Sooner we get to town, the sooner we can get shopping. Do you think we can fit it all in your Mercedes?” It was sized for a monster- but cribs could be big. And they needed two of everything, literally.

She tugged slightly, and waddled for the front door with him in tow.

"I figure it will. It was made to accommodate for us larger monsters, so, I’m sure it'll fit the parts easily." He assured her.

“If all else fails, most places do deliver things.” She muses. Toki heads down the steps, waving to one of the guards who gives Papyrus a knowing and bemused look, and then heads to where they keep the cars parked. “I’m thinking we’ll get paint too. I want to paint their room… What color though? I don’t really follow the whole colors determine gender crap; so really, we can choose what we want. What color do you think would work?” They’d probably ultimately decide once they were there- but she wanted to have a general idea of what color to look for.

"Why not complementary colors?" he suggested as he walked with her, "Or contrasting ones?"

“Hm… That’s a thought.” She mused. “I’m thinking just a solid color to start though… if all else fails, we can add another color later. So… Maybe a nice red? Or a blue? Hm… Green? Green could be paired with… Yellow maybe?” She’d suggest perhaps black and orange, but she didn’t want the walls of the nursery to be in Halloween colors. As they reached the car, she parted from him so he could go to his door. She opened hers, and carefully eased into the seat.

He nodded gently as he got into his seat. "We'll have to keep thinking about it as we look around."

“Mhm.” She nods. “But first- furniture. Cribs are a must- and we need something to put clothes in.” They needed clothes and bedding and pillows too. She got herself settled in her seat, and got the seatbelt clicked into place, before exhaling a great rush of air as she was kicked from the inside. “Do you need to top up on gas at the gas station?"

"It'd be smart to." He answered as he buckled himself in. Once he was certain her seat belt was secured, he started up his Mercedes, enjoying the purr of the engine.

“I’ve got some cash we can use to put into the tank.” She hummed. She adjusted her seat some, and then draped her arm over the armrest, and relaxed for the long drive to town.

"No need for that. I have money of my own, thank you." he chuckled, driving slowly to the front gate to confirm with the guard before they headed out.

They didn’t go back to the mall. Instead, they ended up going to one of the larger stores specifically for infants and the like on the complete opposite end of the city. It was infants and toddlers- no maternity wear in sight.

Or at least, that’s what they advertised. As Papyrus turned off the engine for the car, Toki undid her seat belt and carefully eased out. A couple other couples stared at her openly as she stretched, her shirt displaying her bump marvelously. Obviously they’d never seen a pregnant skeleton before.

The staring made her a little bit self conscious, and she adjusted her skirt and shirt before hefting her purse up and over her shoulder and waddling around the car to get to Aliquam’s side.

“Ah… That was a long drive.” She sighed softly. “It’s good to be upright again.” Sitting, standing, she could only do either for so long before she cramped up and had to move. “You know what I want to get? A rocking chair. It’s more of a western thing. My grandmother- my dad’s mom- has one. It’s amazing. I wonder if they’ll sell them here…” Her royalties on her books were in, and she’d just gotten paid for a shipment of honey- so Toki wasn’t particularly strapped for cash. Besides- this was for her little ones, not for herself. That was an entirely different scenario.

Papyrus made sure she got out well enough before he locked the car and walked to meet her half way between the sides with a smile, offering his arm. "A rocking chair does sound nice, now doesn't it?"

“It really does.” She nods. She laces her arm through his, and leans against his shoulder as she curls her fingers around his bicep. She sets off at a slow but steady pace, eying the carts near the entrance of the store.

She strives valiantly to ignore the mutterings of a few judgmental women who eye them both like they’re death incarnate walking into a children’s store.

Toki snags a basket, and carefully plonks her purse into the spot where it folds out along the top. “One should do for now.” She muses. She didn’t see a furniture trolley- but this would have to do for now. “So, you want to push the cart, or you want me to?” She grins up at him lightly.

"I'll get it, you just look around-" he turned and gently tugged down her turtleneck to make sure it wasn’t riding up, before he pressed a tender kiss to her head, "and see what you find that you'd like for the twins.” He purred.

She smiled at his tender doting, letting him make sure her turtleneck wasn’t riding up anywhere, before returning his kiss gently. “Alright. Heh. If you see something, speak up too. They’re ours, after all. If you see something you’d like to see in the nursery, let me know.” She smiled. She trailed slightly ahead of him as she set off at an even pace, her skirt swishing around her legs as they passed from horribly hot outside air, into the nearly freezing inside of the children’s store.

He secured his light coat around him and sighed softly, before he followed her with a small smile, humming a soft tune as he looked at a few things.
There wasn’t much to see near the front save for the several families that stared at them with open befuddlement or wariness, only a few with vague hostility, and several clerks who looked extremely tired of the angry toddlers they had to deal with on a regular basis.

Once they got past them though, the store opened up into isles of infant clothes that ranged in sizes. Several onesies caught her eye, but she also eyed the tiny baby socks, and tiny baby shoes. “Hey Pap.” She grinned. “Look there. Tiny baby socks- it’d fit those tiny baby shoes you bought months ago.”

He laughed gently at the sight before he spoke. "We should also take into consideration the potential that they will not grow like humans do. From what Father recently told me, he, as well as my brother and I, grew awfully quickly as we reached adulthood." he advised.

“Hm… Like how fast?” She inquired, turning to look at a slightly larger toddler shirt. They were going to be probably pretty big to start anyways, given the size of their father. If they grew like weeds… Well… “Humans take eighteen years to be considered an adult.”

"From what I remember. Father explained Blaster Beasts were considered being fully mature when they were considered able to 'be one with the hunt' for males. He did not explain what it was for females however..."

“Hm… Well, women tend to mature faster than men.” She shrugged slightly. That was more vague than she could have hoped. “We’ll have to see. I’m not like you and your dad. He’s… well, whatever he is, and you’re part of that too- but I’m just a regular skeleton. I’m pretty sure our kids are going to have some funky growing habits in general. Considering how massive I am, it’s not hard to expect.” She looked right around ready to pop with a single at this point, and it wasn’t hard to explain some of the stares the couple got from other patrons when they were out and about.

Toki thumbed over a tiny shirt, and then smiled and snagged a pair. On the front, they said ‘Thing one’ and ‘Thing two’. Twins totally got all the gimmick twin things. It was too cute not to. She shifted and added them to the cart, before sighing and rubbing along one of her ribs. “I know they’ve got your family’s abnormal strength. Pretty sure I’d have cracked bones if it wasn’t for my abnormal defensive stat.” With how hard they hammered her at times, it was little wonder they hadn’t hurt themselves. “To be honest, we really don’t know all that much about this.” She said softly. “This pregnancy is pretty new to even your dad- we have no idea how things are going, or where they’ll go from here. We’re going to have to play it by ear, as the saying goes, for both the duration of gestation and their childhood growth rates.”

He nodded in agreement. "I'm sure Father will love to help raise them, though I’ve a feeling he mostly will want to unleash the full potential of his bloodline." He warned with a soft laugh.

“There will be no blaster or serious weapons training until they’re at least a year or two into school.” She warned back. “Kids will be kids until they’re ready to learn that sort of stuff. Learning the basics of what not to do will be fine- but not beyond that. I won’t mind your dad helping with them- in fact, I’m counting on it, since he’s got all sorts of advice to give- but no weapons until they’re old enough to realize exactly what the weapons are for.”

Heaven forbid there be tiny cat skull blasters flying around, or tiny Hell Hornets flying around and causing all sorts of mischief.

That stated, Toki hummed, and collected a couple small shirts and baby-stretch pants, before returning to the onesies. She imagined a single piece of cloth would be easier to manage on what would be amounting to a tiny skeleton, so she collected a couple in various sizes. They wouldn’t know until the twins came- but she suspected they were going to be on the large side of the size spectrum.
"He'll be stubborn on that." he chuckled gently, though after that he quieted and looked at the clothes she picked up. "Let's start simple. Remember we could have Lana help us out any time." he told her, "She'd have no issue making clothing for the twins."

"That’s very true. I think we can do that- it would be nice to visit her more often anyways. Besides- we still have the two onesies Grillby gave us at Christmas. It should hold them over to start." She hums softly. Though, truly, she would pay money to see Lana try and measure a wiggly infant or toddler. They weren’t known for being easy to work with. She still takes a couple gimmick shirts though, but does relent on some of the other bits of clothing. Toki snorts as they bypass the diaper isle. "You know, I think I lucked out in becoming a skeleton. We don’t have to buy diapers now."

Diapers had always been her least favorite part of taking care of her baby brothers.

She kneads her fist into her lower back, and sighs thoughtfully as she pads along. They bypass an elderly worker arranging baby clothes by size and type on one of the racks, and then continue on back towards furniture.

"I've heard the less than pleasant comings and goings with diapers. Bleh." He then stuck out his tongue and made a gross noise.

Toki giggled at him. “Oh trust me, if I get any more nieces or nephews from my brothers, you’re bound to witness diaper changes. They consider me the diaper master- I’ve had to give lessons to both Kohaku and Ryushi concerning diapers. And, as Uncle Papyrus, you get to learn too.” She grins cheekily at him. Toki bade pause by a small rack of toddler beanies, and held up one that was designed like a little bumblebee with the cutest little antennas. Her eye lights glimmered as she held it up for him to examine.

He would handle diaper duty if it ever came to him. A soft laugh pulled from Aliquam’s throat as he glanced at the tiny bee-shaped hat. "That is adorable!"

“It is,” she purrs. “I’d like to get a pair- but I don’t know. What if they have my horns?” Hats with her horns were damn near impossible. Which sucked- she enjoyed beanies and knitted or crocheted caps.

"Then we can improvise, yeah?" he suggested with a small smile.

“I suppose so.” She smiled softly. Toki fingered the little hat, and then snagged a matching one. It was settled next to the rest of the clothes, and then Toki resumed her trek back for the furniture section. “I’m sure between you and me we can make it work.” Papyrus could sew, after all. Not on Lana’s scale, but she’s certain he could probably open up a couple little holes for horns.

Papyrus smiled and took a moment to gently press a kiss to the top of her skull.

Toki smiled in turn, and fell back to walk with him instead of ahead.

The furniture section was tall, with shelves far, far out of her reach. Displays were set on the ground level, with bulk products up high. They were organized by product- so each row had different things. Cradles, dressers, bassinets, rocking chairs, changing tables, toddler play sets- each had an isle dedicated to that specific type of furniture.

There was a lot to look at, and she was more than a little overwhelmed by all of the choices there were to make. “So… Cradles first?”

He nodded gently. "Yes. What do you think would work best, a solitary or a grouping cradle?" he inquired as he steered the basket for the isle with cradles and cribs.
“Hm… Well, I don’t know about monster twins, but human twins are often very close, and take comfort in being close to one another throughout most of their early lives.” She followed him down the isle, peering at the various models. “I did not know that they made round cribs. Those are weird.” She decides. They were aesthetically pleasing, yes, but weird as well, and not very good for saving space in a bedroom. “I’m thinking a grouping crib, maybe? That way we could reuse it for a single later?” The crib back at the house was not big enough for two babies to lay in- but some of the ones here were designed for it. “The jellybeans are close, despite their little spats over space.” Of which, they were in the middle of another one.

He nodded in agreement as he looked around. "I agree. A grouping crib sounds best."

Toki nodded. She padded along, and took note of the grouping cribs they had available. Several were single cribs that joined together at some point, but it wasn’t what she wanted. They were cute- but not what she liked. No- she found one that she quite took a liking to. It was probably too massive- but for fast growing skeleton children, who would probably take their size from their daddy, it seemed like a decent sized crib. It was dark wood of some kind, and she ran her fingers over the floor model in contemplation. “What about this one?” It wasn’t super fancy, and was decently priced for the size. It was also sturdy, and would hold up to the large monsters that would, no doubt, end up hip-checking it from time to time as they made their way around the children’s nursery. “It would hold them for a long while, I think, depending on how fast they grow.”

"It looks great." He agreed, smiling at her. Papyrus scooted the cart up near her, and then nuzzled her softly. "I say we get it." He smiled, before he stepped away from the cart and looked at the crib a little more, examining it with a hum.

Toki nodded and smiled. “I like it. I think the mattress for it is- ah, there it is.” The mattress was on the shelf above the boxes of cribs, which meant it was far, far out of her reach. It was well out of his reach too. “Y’know, for a store in a city of very small people, how do they think we’re supposed to reach things up that high? I mean, you can get the crib- probably- but the mattress is all the way on top.”

He shrugged, and then peered up at the mattress. It was way, way up there, just like she said. "You think I can reach that?"

“We probably could together, but being lifted up that high while I’m this big is definitely not something that is safe.” Her teeth grind thoughtfully. “… Hey, Quinn? You and Cae have similar magic, right? Do you think you could use your magic to bring one of them down?”

"I could try." He stepped back and his eye glowed as he lifted a hand and twitched it lightly, carefully pulling the mattress off the shelf and lowering it into reach. "Ta-da!"

Toki clapped slightly, and reached up to take the mattress. It was way, way up there, just like she said. "You think I can reach that?"

"Unlike Sans, I think that it's more worth earning something through true effort... but getting that mattress without magic would have been ridiculous.”

“That it would have been.” She nodded in agreement. She shifted, and reached up to try and edge one of the crib boxes over so she could help get it down and loaded up. “You’re not a lazy skeleton either- that was kind of a dumb question for me to ask, wasn’t it?” She chuckled.

He helped her slide it over, smiling gently as he nuzzled her. "Only a little~"
“It’s probably pregnancy-brain. Women get a little less logical as they get closer to having their kids.” Toki giggled softly and nuzzled him back- before grunting and very nearly dropping the crib as it slid down into her arms. That was heavier than she was expecting- but it contained solid wood parts, along with metal reinforcements to keep it stable. Really, pregnancy brain had her so addle minded. “Heavy.” she grunts softly. “Can you grab this? I’m going to end up dropping it if I try to pull it away from the shelf.” It was also far over her weight limit- and she wasn’t really thinking when she’d caught it from sliding off the shelf.

Aliquam chuckled and gently took it from her. "Up we go!" He hummed before he set it down carefully in the cart, making sure it wouldn’t crush the mattress with it’s weight.

“Thanks, Ali.” She smiled up at him. Toki rubbed her middle as it cramped slightly, and she sighed. “I need to watch how much I’m lifting.” She chuffs. “That was way over thirty pounds.”

"Let me sweat the weight, okay?" he purred as he kissed her head.

“M’kay.” She smooched him back gently, and then padded down the isle. “I can see blankets and the like down here… But I think I want to have Lana make a couple instead. Do you know if she does baby blankets?” Monster made was more likely to hold up against any possible sharp bits baby skeletons would have.

"Oh of course! As far as I know, she does pretty much everything." He replied with a smile.

Toki chuckled gently. “Good. Then we’ll definitely go to her for blanket ideas.” She hummed. Toki left him to bring the cart, as it was definitely going to be heavy, and then padded for another isle. “Dressers are up next it looks like!” She chirps softly.

There was a lot that they had to get- but each item collected soothed some of her inner anxieties bit by bit. They were definitely long overdue for this shopping trip.

Piece by piece the list was cleared and by the end of their shopping trip, the cart was snuggly filled, and Pap smiled happily at Toki. "Well! This was successful!" he said happily, starting for the cash registers.

“That it was.” She grinned. She was glad they had everything. Her back was starting to hurt again- Lana’s support band she made for her helped to some extent, but it was starting to work less and less to ease the weight off of her spine. Toki hummed, and eased her arm through his so they could walk in peace.

They were joined by a younger woman who was, like they were, out shopping for baby supplies and quite ready to check out. She eyed them curiously as she guided her own cart down the isle- she too was pregnant, but not nearly so round as Toki. “Getting some last minute shopping in?” She inquired curiously, giving them both a friendly smile.

"Indeed.” he replied with a smile. "How far along are you?"

The woman smiled wider and freed one hand from her basket so she could pat the small curve of her belly. “I’m only twenty weeks. It’s been a long twenty weeks though. Morning sickness was a bitch to handle on my own. How far along are you? You look… well, ready to pop!”
Toki chuckled softly. “Believe it or not, I’m only thirty two weeks along.” She hummed.

“No way!” The woman gaped.

"Nyeh heh heh..." He rubbed his head gently with a sheepish grin. "It's no lie, ma'am!"

“That’s unbelievable.” She might have gaped a little bit.

“Twins.” Toki chuckled. “Twins who take after their father in size.” She tilts her horns towards Papyrus, and gives her a bemused look. “And in strength. Some of the kicks are killer.”

“Twins would explain it. Doesn’t that mean that they could come sooner though? I heard twins are more likely to come early than a single one is.” The lady chuckled. “My little girl just started kicking a couple days ago. Happiest moment in my life thus far. Made all the sickness worth it, y’know?”

"My father was the first to feel the twins kick. He was so happy he started crying." Papyrus laughed gently.

“That’s really sweet.” She smiled. “My Dad’s been huge in helping me with my baby. He makes sure I get to my prenatal appointments, and my ultrasound appointments. He got to hear her heart beat- he damn near cried too.”

Toki smiled. “That’s really cute. Heh- you might not have gotten to feel them first, but you’re the only one who can simultaneously rile them up and calm them down.” She grins up to her fiancé.

"Nyeh heh heh heh!" He laughed and grinned smugly.

“Pap also drives- I can’t fit behind a steering wheel and reach the pedals anymore.” Toki chuckles. “That and my truck broke.” She eyes the lines at the registers, and notes that they, like most stores, have twelve lanes, and three checkers manning them.

“Oh yeah? That’s good.” She chuckles. “I don’t drive- Dad’s waiting for me out in the parking lot. I just stopped in to get a head start on baby clothes and blankets.”

“We stopped in to get- well, everything.” Toki grins sheepishly. “It hit me today that the twins could be here whenever, and we weren’t even close to ready.”

“Nesting hit you late, hm?” The lady smiled softly. “I’m glad you’ve got a doting man to help you shop though. That crib looks like it’s heavy duty. Did you get some of the paints from the painting section?” The store, oddly enough, had a section dedicated to painting babies rooms.

"No, we’re still trying to figure out which color we wanna decorate with in the first place.” Papyrus laughed gently.

“Choosing colors is hard.” She chuckled softly. The lady veered off slightly, heading for one of the shorter lines designed for smaller numbers of items as her phone began to ring. “Ah- that’s my dad. It was nice talking with you two!” She gave them a wave, before she was answering her phone and heading out of earshot.

Toki smiled slightly. “She was nice.” She chirped, butting her head lovingly against Pap’s shoulder. “Speaking of colors, we really do need to decide. I almost just want to do a burgundy color. Nice and rich and quite lovely, you know? We can get the paint later though.” No way in heck did she want to walk all the way back through the store again to go hunt down the painting section. They only had pinks, blues, and yellows at any rate. Toki didn’t particularly like yellow, and pink and blue were lovely, if stereotypical. She helped him choose a checkout line, and thus began the waiting game.

"What about burgundy and... A gentle blue?" he suggested.

“I like that idea.” She nods, pleased. “We’ll stop at the paint store another day, yeah?”

She relaxed against him as they slowly moved up in line. Her eyes flicked to the television that faced their isle, playing commercials after commercial for this, that and the other.

It didn’t take long for a different commercial to play- and the sad sounding music floated out as flashes of pets who were obviously at a shelter played across. “Starting a family?” The commercial questioned. “Every family needs a pet- and every pet deserves a loving family. Ebott City Humane Society has an influx of dogs and cats who so direly need the tender love and care that a family can provide.” It flashed over to kittens reaching out towards the cameras, and squeaking sadly.

Toki sniffled.

“Ebott City Humane Society is adopting out pets to good homes every day. Please- it would mean the world to these animals if you would stop by and take one of them home. Every dog deserves a child, every cat deserves a companion. Please consider Ebott City Humane Society for all of your adoption needs. Expand your family a little more- and make a new family member for a lifetime.”

Papyrus looked at the TV as the commercial came and went, then he looked at Toki. "... Are you okay?"

“Nooo…” She sniffled softly. “Those kittens looked so sad…” She makes a soft, sad sound, and presses her palms to her sockets. Oh no- it was a mood swing. Shit.

He rumbled softly and hugged her gently. "Oh there, there." He crooned warmly, rubbing her shoulders gently.

Toki sniffled softly and nuzzled into his shoulder, trying to keep quiet so she didn’t draw attention to her sniffling. “They were so cute, Pap. So cute and so sad…” She sniffed. “I just want to take them all in and give them a home, y’know?”

"Yeah...” He sighed softly, before he smiled and tilted her chin up gently. "Hey... why don’t we go visit the animal shelter?"

“Really?” She sniffs softly, eye lights glimmering up at him gently. “I... I’d love to. Can we go after we check out?” Which they were about to do. The lady in front of them was just finishing, and the checker was giving both skeletons a deeply amused look. Embarrassment flooded her, and she hid her face in his chest again. She’d just broke down in tears like a sissy because of a commercial. Toki wasn’t sure if she hated mood swings or morning sickness the most.

Aliquam pressed kisses to the top of her skull and smiled gently. "Of course! Now come, perk up! We're not done yet."

She sniffled and swiped her sockets again as she leaned back. Toki gave him a soft nod, and fetched her wallet from her purse. “You’re right.” Getting the mood swing under control wasn’t really feasible, but it was soothed by the knowledge that they were likely to adopt one of the family-needing pets at the shelter.

As the register person motioned them closer, he offered them an amused grin as he came around to scan the items in their cart. “Don’t feel too bad, lady. You’re the ninth woman today to burst into tears with that commercial.”
He chuckled gently, smiling at the clerk. "They did that on purpose, huh?"

“They did indeed. It’s targeted towards expectant moms, to urge them to get a family pet before their kid arrives. By the sound of it, it worked on you two.” He quirked a smile. “It’s a marketing ploy—Usually works on the moms. Surprised it worked on you though, big dude. Not every day you see the dad suggesting getting cats. Usually it’s ‘we’re not prepared for an animal, sweetheart’, or other excuses not to get an animal.” He carefully made sure he got the hats rung up too, and her rocking chair, before moving back behind his register to check for sales, coupons, and the like. “I’d actually suggest waiting— your… girlfriend? Wife? Whatever she is, looks like she’s about to pop. Taking care of a baby and acclimating an animal is a lot of work.”

Toki sighs. “I’m not due yet.” At least she hoped not. “I’m only thirty two weeks. I’ve got plenty of time to get an animal used to the house before I have them.”

“Ahh. Multiples. Always funny how big some women can get with them.” He whistled a merry tune, and casually input a coupon code. “Your total comes to two thousand, eight hundred and ninety nine dollars even.”

“I’ve got it.” Toki rummages through her wallet to find her card. It was expensive— but for everything they got, spending nearly three thousand wasn’t bad. It all could be reused too. Besides— she got an ultra padded rocking chair. She was going to enjoy that once Papyrus figured out how it went together.

Well it was pricey, but that didn't sound too bad since they had gotten quite a lot. Pap hummed quietly then he smiled at Toki.

Toki gave him a smile back in turn, and paid quietly. She was handed her receipt and her card back shortly, before she tilted her chin to him. “Thanks. Have a good day!”

“You too.” The clerk cheerily waved at her. “Good luck getting pets!”

"Thank you sir." he said warmly as he gave a small wave, pushing the cart away from the checkout and out the doors of the store.

Toki trailed along with him, sighing softly as they went. It was bright and hot outside, just like it had been before they went inside the store, and she fanned the front of her turtleneck with a groan. She just had to choose a warm shirt on a summer day. Oh well— at least she could roll up the sleeves. She began and completed the process of doing that while Papyrus shoved the cart towards the car.

“So, I think the animal shelter is near the mall.” She says conversationally, collecting his keys and going to open the back hatch for him so he could begin loading stuff in.

He nodded gently as he packed things in. "Not too far at all."

“Indeed.” She grinned cheerily. Though, it faded slightly, and she sighed. “You know, we don’t have any supplies for adopting a pet. I think the shelter will send a care package home, but… Are you sure you’re okay with it? I mean… We have a lot coming up. The wedding is only a week away, and I’ve heard rumors of Mettaton visiting for something or other… We’re going to be pretty busy.” She didn’t think he’d say it just to soothe her mood swing, but there was really no guarantee.

"Oh, of course...” He gave her a soothing smile. “A pet sounds nice to me, especially one that isn't a pet rock.”

“Your brother’s pet rock was… charming.” She chuckled softly, her smile returning. “Good. I think I want a cat. Maybe two cats, so they can entertain each other and not get into mischief. Though…
Cats bring litter boxes.” And she couldn’t bend down to do them, or she wouldn’t be getting back up. Toki also wasn’t sure if she should even do them, given that what was in them wasn’t good for pregnant women. Though, she wasn’t sure that applied to monsters. It was wholly possible.

She takes that time to take the now empty basket over to its drop off location, and then go get settled gently in her seat.

"Well... remember Monster Food doesn't digest like human food does." he told her.

Toki nodded, waiting for him to finish arranging things how he wanted them to be. “I suppose that’s true… But can you even feed monster food to a cat? Cats have pretty sensitive systems. How would they even react to magic?” Toki shifted, and quietly massaged her middle. It felt good to be off of her feet. Her lower lumbar was aching terribly.

"I'm not sure... but we will have everything in case it come down to needing it, all right?" He rumbled.

She pursed her teeth slightly, and then hummed. “Okay.” She sighed gently, and relaxed back.

The drive over to the shelter wasn’t ultimately that long, but it was just enough for Toki to rest her back some. Back cramps had plagued her for most of her pregnancy, but the larger she got, the larger they seemed to get too.

She hauled herself out of the car, purse and all, once they got there, and leaned slightly against the side of the Mercedes to let her spine stretch and pop. She closed her door, and glanced at the shelter just across the busy street. They’d have to jaywalk, as she had no intentions of walking three blocks down just to get to the crosswalk. She’d just have to fast-waddle.

“So… I didn’t ask, but… Did you want a cat? Or did you want a dog instead?” She really wanted a cat- but if Papyrus wanted a dog, she could deal with it. Though… She wasn’t sure if it was a good idea. Dogs liked to chew on bones, and they were living bones, basically.

"Cats sound nice." he purred gently as he clamored out of the driver’s seat. "Also... I have bad memories of dogs."

“You do?” She blinks at him as his head appears over the top of the car. She waits for him to walk around. “I actually really like dogs,” She admits, “but I don’t think dogs would be good to have while we have baby skeletons. Our kind of dogs- not dog monsters like Greater Dog, mind you- tend to like to chew on bones. That’s a bad thing for us.”

"There was an annoying little white dog that lived in the underground. He liked to steal my special attack!” he huffed, "And my femurs..."

“Your femurs too, huh?” She chuckled softly, and linked her arm with his once he made his way around. She tugged him carefully along, and made her way across the street and inside of the Humane Society. “Then we’ll stick with cats. At worst they might steal your toes.” She teases gently.

“Hello, how can we at the Ebott City Humane Society help yo-oooohh… uh… Hi.” The receptionist looked startled to see two skeletons. “Uh… Can I help you with… something?”
"Yes, we were hoping that we may have a look at your cats?" he asked with a smile.

“Our… cats. Uh… Okay… Follow me and I’ll show you to the cat-room.” The woman shook her head with a befuddled sigh, and stood. She motioned them to follow, and then guided them back through the back doors.

The back doors took them outside, where several dogs stopped barking to regard the skeletons with interest, before resuming their loud yapping.

Toki smiled slightly. They were lead down a long wall of kennels with dogs of all kinds in them, and then taken down another hall to a rather small door. Toki would have to duck- poor Papyrus would brain himself if he wasn’t careful.

“In here are the cats. You’re welcome to take some of them out of their cages- but keep the door closed, and no more than one cat per person out at a time.” The woman opened the door to usher them in. “There’s, ah, seating in there too so you can rest your legs. There’s a button on the inside of the door if you find a cat you want. We’ll bring paperwork and your proper starter package.”

Toki nodded and ducked to go inside the room. The room, thankfully, was plenty tall with several floor to ceiling play sets for the cats, and copious amounts of cat-fur covered beanbags to sit on. The main wall was a row of cages that were three high, and one adult cat per cage. Some of the kittens were in with their mothers or littermates depending on the age. There were so many colors and so many sizes- she had no idea where to start.

Aliquam looked around as he ducked down into the room with a small smile. "So, Tokiko, do you happen to know just what kind of cat you have in mind?" he asked gently.

“Not really.” She hums as the door closes behind them. She waddles for the cages and investigates them curiously. “I don’t think I want a kitten. Most people adopt kittens- but the adult cats aren’t chosen as often as kittens are.”

Most of the cats shied away from her sharp-toothed appearance, some of them fluffing up and glaring at her warily. A few curious ones gazed at both skeletons with interest, and rare few simply purred and rubbed against the bars of the crates, swatting playfully with the simple desire to be let out. There were many breeds- and a lot of black and white cats. Siamese too, now that she looked at them, but she wasn’t sure she wanted a Siamese. They were temperamental creatures, she knew, and she wasn’t certain how well they would do in a household where canine monsters frequently visited.

She padded along, and located a set of sibling cats. They were listed as mix breeds, but Toki would have pegged the female as a Russian Blue based on her gray color and green eyes, and the male for some sort of a Siamese. Toki smiled and wiggled her fingers into the bars, holding still to let them approach and sniff her if they so desired.

The first cat raised her head and her ears twitched gently, before she stood and came closer sniffing the fingers that poked through the bars.

Toki smiled softly, and gently tilted her finger to rub her chin. “Lets see… You’re… Gracie, I think. White collar means female according to the thing… Hey, Pap? Lets check out these two. Brother and sister- they think they’re around two years old.”

She purred loudly while the other, a male, walked up, looking up at them with a gentle purr.

Toki smiled softly. “Gracie and Gael,” she tests the names out on her tongue. Gracie’s name was definitely American, which was odd for being in Japan, while Gael’s was probably from some language she wouldn’t recognize- but she liked them. Toki shifted and opened the cage carefully, so she could reach inside and collect the cats. Toki took Gracie to start, and found her arms full, so she gently rubbed the male’s ears while she glanced over to Papyrus. “They really are. Do you want to take him? She fills my arms pretty nicely, and he’s pretty big.” And the female’s fur reminded her of the exact shade of Thumper’s fur.

He nodded and reached out, gently picking up the male cat and smiling at him warmly. "What a handsome kitty~" he purred, while Gael blinked up at him slowly, already purring loudly.

Toki shifted Gracie up, draping her upper legs gently along her elbow. The same arm supporting her upper half came down to cradle her backside, leaving one of Toki’s arms free to pet the feline. Like a rag-doll, Gracie slumped and relaxed, her purrs picking up. Toki smiled warmly, and made her way over to the fur covered beanbags.

She got settled, sinking in and no doubt getting stuck, and then let the cat get more comfortable on her. Gracie folded over her belly, and began to knead at a rapid-fire pace. Toki giggled. “I think Gracie likes to knead.” Which was sort of relaxing, if a little ticklish over her ribs and middle. She curled her hand up, and took her ear in hand, scratching it gently as the feline practically melted against her, though Gracie continued to watch Toki with intense eyes. “And ear scratches.” She purrs softly.

Aliquam smiled at Gael and nuzzled him gently, before the Siamese point leaned his head back and began to rub his face against Quinn’s, purring up a storm.

Toki chuckled and relaxed, rubbing Gracie’s ear. Her hand slowly worked her way down the cat’s back, and, true to form, her rump angled sky high as her purring picked up volume. Toki chuckled softly, feeling her sockets begin to droop under the relaxing sound. “What do you think of Gael?” She inquired softly to her fiancé.

"He’s affectionate." He giggled happily, rubbing his head against the cats.

“So is she.” She smiled softly. Gracie loved on her for a time more, before she hopped down to go make use of the litter box. Letting the feline do what she wanted, Toki shifted, and made to get up. “Ah- Pap. Can I get a hand up please? The chair is eating my backside in a non-fun sort of way.”

"O-oh yes!” he slowly put Gael down, and then padded over and gently helped Toki back onto her feet.

She leaned up to kiss his cheek once she was upright, and gave him a soft smile. “Thanks, my love.” She purrs. Toki waves her fingers to Gael in greeting, before padding over to investigate the cat playground.

There was the sound of litter landing on the floor, before Gracie was bounding back over with a soft squeak, following diligently after the small skeleton. She paused only to rub along Aliquam’s ankles, before continuing over to Toki. She squeaked softly again.

“I can’t bend down to get you, Gracie.” Toki wiggled her fingers softly, motioning for the gray cat to climb up the structure enough for Toki to collect her. “C’mon, cutie pie. I’ll give you all the ear rubs and butt scratches you could possibly want.”

The wiggling of her fingers was basically a universal sign for ‘come here’. It didn’t take long for the gray cat to bolt up, and jamb her face into Toki’s hand for loves, before flopping over for a belly rub. It was usually a universal trap among cats- touch the belly and get the claws. Not so much for Gracie. The cat just purred and looped her paws around Toki’s wrist so she could groom her radius diligently.

Aliquam watched with a bright smile, and giving Gael a last scratching, he slipped silently out the door and went back towards the front desk.

The lady at the front looked just as startled to see him again as she had been when he’d walked in. She fidgeted with her desk, nervously straightening things and collecting papers. “You recall there was a button to push so you didn’t have to walk all the way back here, right?” It had been right next to the door. “Either way… did you find what you wanted in a cat?”

"Oh well." He chuckled quietly. He had spaced it, yes- but it was much less lazy to just walk back to the front desk while Toki was distracted. "Yes, I think we've found a duo we will want to take home with us."

“Two? My, my, it’s not often we get a double adoption.” She tugs out two sets of paperwork, and glances up to him. “Which cats?"

"Gracie and Gael, please."

“Gracie and Gael…” She carefully looked them up on her computer, and then began the process of filling out the paperwork. It didn’t take long, simply transferring numbers from the monitor down onto paper. “Alright… All you need to do is pay and sign, and they’ll be yours. First though- are you going to want the starter care pack? It comes with one bag of dry food per cat, a bowl for food and water, and a litter box with a bag of litter. It’s twenty five extra- not per cat, but on the total itself.”

"Of course!” He chirped. “That would be helpful!"

“Alright.” She nodded. She marked it down, and then carefully tallied up the price. “We have a special going on for cats who are older than a year- so that puts Gracie’s price at… Seventy five, and Gael at eighty.” Siamese were more expensive, no matter what place you went to. “Seventy five and twenty five is a hundred, and eighty makes a hundred and eighty total. Uh…” She glances at him. “I do believe that’s… sixty gold, if that’s your preferred method.”

"I have cash." He replied simply, setting down the four fifty-dollar bills. "Oh, how much are your pet carriers?” he then asked.

“The cats do come with a disposable cardboard carrier, but it’s not a long term thing. If you’ve got a long drive, they could break open.” She fiddles with something, and looks them up. “For the reusable ones that will last you, they’re on sale for fifteen dollars per carrier. Regular price is thirty per carrier.”

"Oh wow! I think I’ll take advantage of that! I’ll take two please.” He did the math in his head, and then put down a ten dollar bill alongside the four fifties that he had laid down prior.

“Two it is. They come in Red, black, and blue. What color would you like for them to be?” She inquired as she collected his cash. She rung him up, and gave him a receipt for it, before turning the piles of paperwork around and scooting them, and a pen, closer to him. “Sign please.”

"I think I would like one blue and one black, please." He replied, signing his name rather eloquently on the papers before he put down the pen, smiling patiently.

“Blue and black…” She muttered softly, taking the papers and imputing some data. She hummed softly, did a quick records check, and then handed his paperwork back to him. “Alright. This is yours to keep- and you’ll definitely want to keep it even after you’ve brought them home.” She stands again, and collects two colored carrying crates from a shelf behind her desk.
The woman plops them atop the desk for the skeleton to catch. “If you want to go get your cats gathered, I’ll get your starter kit collected, and have it waiting here for you when you get back.”

"Thank you so much!” he said happily, bringing the two cat carriers to the room, "Toki." he called gently as he entered.

Toki was not technically covered in cats, but she had the both of them draped over her belly while she was, once more, stuck in the beanbag chair. She looked too content though, with Gracie nuzzling up close to her and kneading at her gravid swell. Toki blinked over to Pap as he padded in, and waved her free hand. “Over here, Pap. Where’d you get the carrying crates?”

"If we're taking them home with us, I thought we'd want them to have some nice carriers." he told her in reply.

She visibly brightened. “Ah! Did you get the paperwork done?” She wiggled some, to which Gracie fuzzed and kneaded her more intensely. “Heh… I kinda got lured into an adorably furry trap while you were gone. Apparently I make a good cat bed.”

He nodded gently, and then he chuckled and opened the crates, putting them upright before he went to catch Gael. "Indeed, but they'll have to wait until we're home." he chuckled gently. "Then they can keep cuddling you."

Catching Gael wouldn’t be hard. He was fairly limp over her middle, a lump of purring putty. Toki hefted him up, and then squirmed, keeping Gracie in hand as she tried to get up again. The gray cat fuzzed, not wanting to be disturbed from her place. “Preferably home on a surface that I can get up from on my own.” She chuckled softly. At least she wasn’t human and having to pee every half an hour. Thank god for invisible skeleton organs.

He nodded and took Gracie first, putting her in the blue carrier, closing it and setting it back onto it’s base. He then went back for Gael.

The Siamese simply purred up at him as Toki handed him over. She took a moment to use Pap’s arm to haul herself upright, and then went to go snag Gracie’s carrier. The quiet gray cat was very, very loud about her dislike of the crate. Very loud.

He patted his head gently and went to put him in the black carrier, putting it on its base next. Gael looked a little unhappy, but he was quick to settle, purring quietly to himself as Aliquam picked his carrier up, helping Toki out to the main room before he looked at the clerk with a smile. "I’ll be back in a moment, just need to see my mate to the car." He told her.

The lady had everything on the counter for them, and simply nodded. “Alright. It’ll be here when you get back.” After all, it wasn’t like they were very busy.

Toki smiled slightly and bade her goodbye as she was urged gently out the door. She kept a firm hold on Gracie’s crate as they crossed the street again to the parking spot on the other side. She held out her hand for Gael’s crate, so Papyrus could fish out his keys and unlock the door.

He was able to get his keys easily enough without handing over the crate, unlocking her side first before he pulled the door open for her. "Go ahead and climb in. I can put the cats in the back seat."

“Okay.” She flashed him a smile, and unloaded her purse carefully. She handed over Gracie’s crate, and then carefully eased herself into her seat. Her back thanked her, as did her feet, and the skeleton gave her mate a warm and affectionate look. They had cats now- they were damn well on their way to becoming a family, albeit in a slightly backwards fashion.
More like ass-backwards at this point. But Pap didn't care.

He went and put both cats in the back seat, before he went and collected the kits, a smile on his face as he came back out, humming a tune to himself cheerfully.

When he returned, Toki was in much the same position, though her door was closed. She had adjusted her seat slightly, and had a leg up on her other one so she could rub her arches slightly. Toki smiled, and leaned over to press the button to open the back hatch for him to slide the food, litter, and other little things in the back with the baby stuff.

He had a warm smile on his face as he put the kits in the back of the Mercedes, before he climbed into his seat and started the car. "All right. Is that all that's left to do?"

“Well, we need paint for the twin’s room, and maybe a couple rugs to cover the tile, but we can do that later.” She was wearing out after having been in town for so long. It was slightly visible on her face- her stamina wasn’t as good as it used to be with most of her energy going towards growing the eager little jellybeans in her middle. “I’d like to get home and get the cats in the house. And all of the furniture and stuff too. Though, we might want to hold off on putting it together until we’ve finished painting.” Everything would get messy otherwise.

"Sounds good." He agreed, pulling out and starting onto the road that would take them home.

“You know what else sounds good…?” She smiles slightly. “Some of your spaghetti.”

He blinked once, and then he smiled brightly. "Starting to like the idea of it again?" he asked. "Alright, glad you said so. I can make a stop real fast to get what I’d need to cook it up."

She smiles shyly. “I am, yeah. It’s about time too. I really did enjoy your spaghetti. Our spawn, however, did not.” Toki idly leans a hand back to roll down the window in the back to give the cats some fresh air. It was horrendously hot after all, and using the AC just drained the gas tank. “I don’t mind. Would it bothered you if I stayed in the car?” Her fingers continued to rub at her arches, though she switched feet so she could soothe them both. What she wouldn’t give for a full body massage at this point- but bone massages just weren’t a thing someone could go out and request yet.

"Not at all." He replied, "But wouldn't you rather just turn on the AC?"

“Running the AC tends to drain the gas tank.” She chuckles. “Besides, I don’t want to have you leave the car running while you’re in the store.” She shifts, wishing she could prop her feet up on something, and then sighs as she stretches. Her hands fold over her middle, stroking the swell affectionately. “Thanks, by the way. My feet are killing me.”

He smiled gently and leaned over to kiss her head. "I love you."

“I love you too.” She smiled back to him with warm affection.

Getting to the store wasn’t hard, and by the time they got there, Aliquam had convinced her to turn on the AC to keep cooler in the summer heat. He’d left the car on and unlocked on his side, and gone into the store.

When he’d come back out, she reclined in her seat, sound asleep with her ankles crossed up on the dashboard. She’d even left her shoes off so she wouldn’t leave any prints in the leather. Her skirt had ridden up slightly, but it was long, and the angle her legs rested at kept everything but her bare shins from view.

He didn’t bother to wake her. Papyrus simply packed the groceries away, and got them started on the road home with a simple, giddy smile on his face.
Chapter 63

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Heh. Sometimes you have to be a little naughty to lure the wild grandpa over. Also- baby skeletons are big enough to start developing and stockpiling their own magic now. :D

Silverwing Notes: Alrightie folks here’s something fun to take a gander at. Tenebris has decided to be a crabby little hermit (Get it?) so it’s up to Toki to fix the poor old bastard. Here’s how it goes XD Enjoy!

Getting the cats adjusted wasn’t all that hard. Toki and Papyrus were supposed to keep them inside for at least a week or two until they learned that this was their home and that they weren’t supposed to leave. They stuck the litter box in the downstairs bathroom, and left the door open for them to go in and out of the room as they needed. Their food bowls were settled in the kitchen, so they could eat as they pleased.

Gael had taken a liking to Papyrus, and was usually found draped across the skeleton’s broad shoulders when he was home from work, or in the early mornings. When he wasn’t around, Gael was either off doing his own thing, or playing with Thumper.

Gracie had, likewise, taken a shining to Toki. The gray cat followed at her heels most of the time, shadowing her like an adorable little stalker and generally being a cute underfoot pest. Toki didn’t mind. Whenever the skeleton settled anywhere for longer than a couple minutes, Gracie would spread out on the floor like a rug and go to sleep until Toki wandered to a different room.

If Toki sat down, she would find her lap full of attention seeking feline. Gracie would do what the skeleton liked to call Turbo Kneading, where she would knead at a rapid fire pace with little use of her claws. It was oddly relaxing, if a little ticklish whenever her paws would stray to her side or ribs. Once kneading was out of the way, Gracie would usually go right to sleep, but stay spooned to her leg or side. Or draped across her, really. It depended on what Toki was doing, and where she was seated.

Thumper was enamored by the cats, and spent most of his days entertaining Gael. Gracie gave him affection too, but she was far fonder of the shorter skeleton than anything else.

Between the cats, Thumper spent some time at Tenebris’ house too. He was having more nightmares, and found solace in someone who understood what they were about. Toki was good to talk to, but she could only offer comforts- she didn’t know what he had heard or seen through the slit.

Tenebris was still a recluse- and Toki was figuring enough was enough. She actually wanted to talk to him, as she still had the sand that his teeth had turned into, but he wouldn’t even respond to phone calls.

She sent out Stripe- who absolutely fascinated Gracie- and had the bee sneak into his room while he wasn’t in there. She’d had the hornet take all of his mint, and leave a note that Toki had written.
So thus, Toki waited once Stripe returned. She had taken all of his available mint, and now Toki was in possession of it. It was carefully set on the living room table, next to where she had settled the sand, and then Toki took a seat on the couch and continued to crochet.

It would all be down to a waiting game, to see when Tenebris realized he had no more mint, and see if he found the cheeky ransom note that she’d had Stripe leave in it’s stead.

Tenebris wasn’t happy, to say the least. Soon there was a familiar set of knuckles rapping against her door. "Nara!" Was a growl from outside said door.

Well, the growl was slightly alarming, and she was glad no one besides the cat was there to see her flinch. “Come in!” She calls cheerily, reaching forth to gather the mint and tuck it under her mess of yarn. The sand is left where it was, and she hums softly as she continues to crochet, while Gracie kneads at her side.

He came in and closed the door behind him. "Tokiko." He definitely sounded unhappy, though he was once more wearing his mask and his mouth was hidden so his growing scowl was unseen. "Did you steal my spearmint?" he questioned sharply.

“Little old me?” She blinked up at him with an innocent smile. “You think I could sneak into your house without you knowing, get your spearmint and get out unseen?” Toki’s sockets glimmered with mirth. The only smell he likely caught in his room was the smell of Stripe. Stripe usually smelled like brimstone and smoke. “I mean, I could, but you’ve been stuck in your house for a week or so. When could I possibly have snuck in without you hearing?”

"I know you sent your bee to steal my mint, my drawer reeked of her.” He then held up the note. "And this is your handwriting."

“Oh, so it is.” She grinned. Toki patted the couch, and adjusted her yarn. “So you read the ransom then. You get your mint back… for a price.” Her eye lights twinkle at him merrily.

"What do you want, Nara?” He growled, not sitting down just yet.

“Quite simple.” She chirps softly, fingers reflexively tightening on her yarn at his growl. “I haven’t seen you, and both me and your grandbabies have missed you. So… maybe a little bit of your company?” She knew he was upset that Asgore had to leave, but sulking for so long in his room was not good for his health.

"..." His look changed when she mentioned the grandchildren, and he sighed in defeat, before he tucked his tail to one side as he sat down on the couch. He didn't look happy, but it looked like she had him at the mention of his grandchildren.

After he looked away for a moment to collect and calm himself. Once he was certain he wouldn’t lash out at her, he slowly looked back at her, "So... How are they doing?” He asked quietly, his previous mood untraceable in his voice.

“They’re active.” She says softly. “I get a lot of cramps and twinges sometimes, but I think that’s more related to how large they’re getting and how fast they’re growing. It gets worse the more active I am, so I’ve been trying to slow down.” She shifts, and removes the yarn. Her crochet project is abandoned on the table, and she tugs out his mint from her side, and offers it to him. He sat- and was providing company- so his mint was offered up, as per the ransom’s agreement.

Gracie glanced over at the new monster, and then padded over to knead on his thigh as she investigated him.
He took the mint and tucked it away before he blinked in surprise at the cat. He hesitated for a moment, then he looked back to Toki, "You got a cat."

"We got two cats, actually. This is Gracie. Gael is Pap’s cat, and he’s probably upstairs with Thumper right now." Toki shifted, and sucked in a soft breath when a hard kick nailed her ribs. "We got them when I had my mild freak out a few days back. I trust Thumper told you about it when he visited?"

Gracie blinked up at him and chirped softly, continuing to knead his thigh at a rapid-fire pace.

"With a child's innocence comes ignorance. He mentioned you were worrying about something, but he could not specify."

"Baby stuff mostly." She curls her fingers over her middle and rubs the swell with a soft sigh. The ecto skin was tight and itched slightly. “I’m heading into thirty three weeks here soon, and twins usually come early from what I understand. We didn’t have anything for them yet, and I ended up with some serious anxiety over it a couple days back. The nursery still isn’t put together. We need to get some paint to paint the walls, and then put the furniture together, but that’s likely going to be after the wedding. Anyways, I kinda panicked a bit and called Papyrus, and we went shopping.”

He looked at her with a sigh, before he set Gracie to the side, standing up. "Which room have you decided to give to the pups?" he asked.

Gracie gave him an offended look, and stretched out in the warm spot he left behind.

"I'll show you." She shifts and gains her feet with a grunt of effort. She scoops up the jar of black sandy stuff, and offers it out to him. "Before I forget, here are your teeth. They turned into sand."

"My Teeth?" he questioned, before he realized and he looked at the jar with interest, "Huh... Never thought the day would come where I could examine my own dust." he chuckled to himself.

"It's more like sand than dust, to be honest." She quirks a grin at him and starts for the stairs. Gracie isn't far behind, trailing at her heels, and then darting ahead when she realized where Toki was headed.

He rumbled lowly as he followed her up the stairs. "Mhm..."

She guided him upstairs, and then turned to the room she had once given Todd. She opened the door, displaying the unfinished room. They still needed to move the bed to storage, and un-box and put everything together. Not even her rocking chair was finished. "We decided to give them the room across from ours so we can listen to better cater to their needs." She hummed gently.

Tenebris nodded gently, "Wise." He agreed. "Also reduces the need for a baby monitor."

"Precisely." She smiled softly, resting her hand on her hip. "The walls are pretty thin up here, so we should be good to hear them if we leave the door open.” Which they had been doing, since the cats were noisy if they shut them out for too long at night. Gracie twined around her ankles, and Toki nearly tripped as she made to walk to her rocking chair box. "Gracie please, foot space is a thing sweetheart." She sighed. "Anyway, I kind of want to get my rocking chair built, but we were waiting until we got everything painted."

Toki heaves a soft breath, and rubs over her spine. "Ah... your grandbabies don't like my spine right now. And they have your family's strength, I think. At least it feels like it. They're excited because they can hear you."
The older monster chuckled gently and came over, kneeling down before her stomach to nuzzle it gently. "Hello my grandpups."

They squirmed as he pressed his masked mouth to her belly. Tiny limbs flailed, and happiness flitted over their soul link.

She was still a little leery over his mouth being so close, but it made the twins happy, and they ceased their kicking at her spine. "They are very happy." She smiled softly. Her hand gently patted Tenebris' head. "They've missed you. So have I, to be honest. I'm sorry Asgore left, but... he'll be back, Tenebris. Your car still works too, so you can visit."

"Yes... yes of course" he murmured, before he sighed and gently nuzzled the stomach again before he rose, "I missed you too..."

She gives him a gentle smile, and huffs a soft breath. "Mhm. So, what do you think?" She rubs the top of the rocking chairs box. "We ended up getting a grouping crib so they can sleep side by side."

"I think you're going to need it, if they're of my blood then they'll want to stay together."

"That's what I was thinking." She chuckled. She shifted and smiled softly. "Want to help me build the rocking chair?" She was going to leave the crib to Paps, but... she really wanted to be able to relax in the chair. The rocking motion would hopefully settle the fussing twins in her middle.

"Indeed." He agreed gently, coming to look at the rocking chair, "Hopefully we will not require the use of power tools, like I’ve seen in those commercials..." he muttered to himself as he used a claw to open the box

"I have them out in the shed if all else fails." She quirks another grin to him, and moves to assist him with opening it. "Really though, you can probably just drive the screws in with the tips of your claws. All power tools do is aid humans with applying force and rotation they can't do naturally." Toki paused, and then frowned slightly. "Huh... I just realized that I don't really consider myself human anymore."

He smiled at her gently, though it was hidden behind his mask. "While physically, you might no longer be a human, you'll always be one at heart if you so choose." he purred.

Toki chuckled softly. "I wasn't a born monster. Deep in my core, I'll always be human. Whatever I am, human, monster, or some weird amalgamation between the two... I'm still me." She smiled back at him, and balanced a foam brick from inside the box on the top of his head. "I'll always have a foot in both worlds, and I wouldn't have it any other way."

"Nor would those who happily call you family." He purred, looking up at his new hat and miraculously sitting still enough to let it balance.

That was just inspiring all sorts of mischief, but Toki didn’t add any more foam. Instead, she simply smiled and giggled at him. “I’m glad.” She purrs. She shifts, and peers inside the box. “That’s a lot of parts and pegs.” She hummed. Toki rummaged through down lower, using her thinner arms to her advantage, and then chuckled. “Looks like it’s screws. And- aha! It comes with a little screwdriver. No power tools needed if you think you’ve got the force to drill them in where they need to be.”

"Oh perfect." He rumbled softly, starting to pull out the parts of the rocking chair. "It will be like assembling a skeleton." Tenebris mused to himself with an amused sound.

"And you've done that often?" She blinks at him and gets out of his way as he starts bringing out parts. She shifts, looking for a spot she could get seated on the ground with him. She could probably sit on the bed that was still in there, but she would rather sit with him. "... This isn't going to be like the Ikea incident, is it?"

One could see the metaphorical fur around him flare up in offence. "First of all, how dare you?" He huffed. "Second of all, I had my training when I was helping the boys when they were young."

Toki gave him an apologetic smile and made her way carefully onto the floor. Well. This was where she was going to be now until she could get a hand up. She scooted closer on her rump, and began looking at the instructions. "I didn't mean to offend you, but I recall the Ikea incident needing Papyrus to build it, I ended up with a loose tooth, and you ate my hand." She grins at him cheekily. "So what did the boys do that required reassembly?"

"They were clumsy." He replied simply, looking at the instructions for a moment and then able to start the rocking chair easily enough. Really, like the Ikea incident? That hardly counted as an incident.

"Really?" She blinks up at him and grins. "Got any adorably embarrassing children's stories to share?"

Tenebris snorted slightly, making his mask shift, and flicked his purple gaze up to her. "You want blackmail against my boys?"

"Not at all!" She smiles. "Just sharing family stories, kinda like when I told you about the skunk incident when my brothers and I were younger."

"Mmh... Aliquam was a bit more coordinated but he didn't have as much balance. Caeruleus bumped around a lot more." He explained.

"They sound adorable. Was Ali always the taller of the two?" She let him work, and leaned forward as best she could to rest her elbows on her knees. The twins didn't appreciate being squished, but she dealt with their kicks while she stretched her back some.

"No." He shook his head, humming softly as he sorted some parts. "There was a time where Caeruleus was taller as he was the first born, but while his maturity grew quickly, Aliquam's height grew swifter."

Toki chuckled. "I bet Papyrus was an adorable little beanpole. I was tall and gangly until I filled out with age. Sure made dragging my brothers out of trouble a pain in the butt." She shifts, and tilts her head softly as she leans back. Toki scoots closer to one of the other boxes, and crosses her ankles.

Gracie took that time to go flop right in the middle of what Tenebris was working on putting together. She squeaked, and rolled over for belly rubs.

"Oh come now, kitty." He scolded gently petting her head before gently scooping her up. "Go on now, little kitty..." He tutted softly, opening his hands for her to leave.

Gracie squeaked up at him balefully and went limp in his hands, purring pleasantly. As most cats are known to do, she went from a solid to a liquid almost immediately, and oozed all over his gloves for attention.

Toki giggled softly. "Gracie likes to be involved."

"I can tell this." He chuckled gently, setting the cat aside before he got back to what he was doing, "This isn't as hard as it let off, Toki."
Gracie sulked a bit, but remained where she was placed, shifting only so she could knead his leg as she purred.

Toki smiled slightly. "You are a scientist with an IQ that is definitely higher than mine. I am a beekeeper and an author- none of that requires building anything. My brother is the architect, not me." Kohaku was a construction worker, which wasn’t the same, but as far as she was concerned, it was close enough.

He snorted at that. "Carry on then, miss bee keeper." He teased, putting some parts together and setting them by her. "You can put the screws in."

She brightens as he hands her things. "I do have one thing you don’t, despite your IQ. And that is my sway with the bees." She buzzed at him teasingly as she collects the parts, and rests them in her lap. She slips the screws in where he needs them, and makes an attempt to screw them in further. It doesn't work, but hey, she wasn't known for her physical strength like they were.

"I suppose you have that." He chuckled lowly, continuing to assemble parts, screwing in screws with his tail blade when she was already occupied with another piece.

Bit by bit the rocking chair came together, and Tenebris rattled in pride at how well it turned out once he finished putting it together. "Well, would you look at that."

The wood was dark and strong, built with an arch to the back of it so that it cradled a back instead of forcing it into a particular shape. Toki smiled, and ran her fingers over the arms. It came with a pad that clipped onto it and gave the hard wood some support and comfort for whoever sat in it.

"It looks super comfortable." She looks pleased from her spot on the floor. "It doesn't look like we missed any parts either."

"Good." Tenebris stood and stretched, before he offered her a hand to help her up.

She reached up and took it, chuckling softly. "I hope you're strong enough to lift me. I'm getting heavier each day." She grins up at him cheekily.

"I am almost strong enough to lift his majesty." He arched a brow at her, and chuckled softly as he effortlessly hefted her up.

"I doubt his majesty has his own gravitational pull." Her feet skidded slightly on the tile, and she slid slightly into him as she was tugged upright. "I was teasing you, you goober." She grinned at him. "But on another note, I do feel heavier with them growing. Getting up and down sucks." And given that she was home alone a lot, she was slightly nervous about getting stuck at some point.

"Well then it's a good thing that you've got strong gentleman like my son and I to help you when you need a hand getting up, yes?" He chuckled.

"Only when you're here." She grinned to him. She shifted and stepped back, sighing softly and tugging her shirt down slightly. "Mind if I test out the chair?"

“Go right ahead, my dear.”

She smiled at him, and eased down into the chair. It slid slightly over the tile, and that had her sockets widening. She made it safely down though. "I think this thing needs some rubber stoppers on the bottom. It slides too easily on the tile."

"I can see about finding some rubber soles." he replied, "Or make them, worst case."
"You know how to make rubber?" She blinks up at him and rocks slightly. She makes a pleased noise as Gracie hops into her lap to join her.

"I can make do with my surroundings." He replied simply, "Whether reusing old rubber, or chemically creating some from scratch."

"That is fascinating." She blinked, and continued rocking. It felt nice, and the twins slowed their squirming as they began to be lulled into rest. "Mmm. Yes, they're finally resting again."

He rumbled happily and sat down by her legs. "Then, if I may be so lucky as to join them?" he requested, glancing down to her legs. As odd as it might have been, he’d come to love using her thigh to pillow his head. It was oddly comforting in the strangest of ways- and allowed him some time with his grandpups.

"So long as you keep your tail out from under the rockers, sure." She scoots Gracie up onto her belly proper, and opens up her lap for him to nestle his head in. For being a bag of bones, she was good for napping on. Toki gives him a gentle smile and rubs her cat's ear to keep her placid while he gets comfortable.

Keeping his tail out of harms way, he settled down and purred gently as he rested his head on Toki's lap. "Prrrr~"

“And the motorboat strikes again.” She murmurs softly, bemused. She settled a hand atop his head and rubbed gently.

Gracie stretched out and pressed her soft little toe beans to the bridge where his nose would be, before kneading his face happily.

He chuckled quietly and blew a puff of air on her palm.

Toki blinked as he blew air at her, and then chuckled softly. "That's about how it feels when you knead me." She teased softly. She resumed rocking carefully, and sighed as her sockets rested at half-mast. She relaxed with a soft, content sound.

He arched a brow up at her. Well, what he could see of her between her middle and the cat draped across the top of it. "At least I didn't knead your face."

"I think that would be awkward. My face is malleable, but isn't soft like my belly is."

"You're a snuggly skeleton, Toki." Thumper peeks into the room with Gael in his arms. He steps in hesitantly and wiggles his toe into the tile. "Do you have room for one more...?"

"Hello Thumper." Tenebris greeted happily, lifting his head to peer at the boy.

"Come on in, sweetheart." Toki smiled and motioned for him to come in. "There's always room for one more."

"Hi, Mister Tenebris." Thumper smiled to the bigger monster. "It's good to see you out and about again." He pads closer and peers at the chair, trying to figure out how to wiggle up with her without disturbing the two cats or Tenebris.

"It only took this little brat stealing my spearmint." The big monster chuffed softly.

Toki poked his masked cheek with a grin. "How else do you lure a bear out of the den?" She chuckled.
Thumper giggled softly and wandered closer to them both. He wiggled up into her unclaimed leg, depositing Gael onto Tenebris' shoulders as he snuggled into Toki's arms. "Well... you have been pretty sulky, Mister Tenebris."

He huffed slightly, and returned his head to one side of her lap. "Mhhh..." He huffed again in a slightly fussier manner. "So I'm in a funk, what's it matter..."

"It matters because we care, you silly old man." Toki smiled softly. "We don't expect you to snap out of it, but being a hermit in your room isn't going to fix anything. If you want to hermit, hermit here where we can all hermit together."

"Uuhh!" He nestled close, and then patted her belly. "How are the babies doing? Has Mister Tenebris done his doctor stuff and checked you out this week?"

He snorted at that and lifted his head to peer up at the gray rabbit child. "I'm afraid not, Thumper... I've been quite out of it recently, I haven't been able to do my job..."

"Maybe getting back into your work is what you need?" Thumper suggested gently. "It works in all the movies and books, so... maybe at least some aspect of it could be true?"

"You are a surprisingly large well of wisdom lately, Thumper." Toki gave him a smile and a kiss on the head.

The boy flushed. "I read a lot of stuff online..."

Tenebris chuckled and leaned up to give the young rabbit a peck on the head as well, before he sighed and moved to get up. "Well, then there's no use lingering here. I best go and get my kit."

Toki blinked. "Like, now? But we were so comfortable..."

Tenebris had a cat stretched across his shoulders as he stood up and Thumper began to giggle as he watched Gael stretch out contently.

He rumbled and chuckled gently, reaching up to pet the cat. "The sooner the better, you know?"

"Well, yeah..." Toki did have to admit that. "Going to teleport there and back?" She inquired lightly.

"That would be fastest." Thumper giggled softly. "Don't take Gael though!"

"Lazy kitty might want to stick around for the ride though." He chuckled, but did put the cat carefully down.

"That he might." Toki laughed. "So if you're doing doctors things, should I go downstairs where the lighting is better?"

"Not at all. Just stay wherever you are comfortable."

"Then I'm going to stay right here " she started rocking again, and sighed softly as Thumper nestled down with a happy sound. "Comfy?" She smiled.

"Uuhh!" He smiled. "I'll keep her here until you're back, okay?"

"Atta boy." He gave a hidden grin to Thumper, and then he turned and teleported from the home back to his own.

Toki chuckled as he left, and resumed rocking as her lap filled with fluffy adorable critters.
It didn’t take long before Tenebris appeared again with his appointment kit in hand. "Alright." He then rumbled warmly.

"Welcome back." Toki smiled softly. She was still covered in critters, but an insistent Gracie, who deemed her skull to be dirty, was grooming her intently. The soft rasp of a rough feline tongue over bone echoed her amused sounds.

He laughed gently at the sight. "Yes, thank you, Toki. But let’s get started, shall we?"

"Sure! Thumper, sweetheart, will you entertain the kitties?" She gave the boy a warm smile.

"Sure!" The boy gathered the cats, and carefully wiggled out of her lap. He went and flopped on the bed and began to love on the both of them.

That left Toki open for Tenebris to examine. "How do you need me?" She inquired up to him gently.

"I would answer that but I’ve a feeling my son would have my head." he replied without missing a beat, opening his bag and pulling what he’d need to give her a checkup.

"Which head?" She fired back automatically. Toki choked on air moments later as she realized what she said. "Oh my gods, Tenebris!" She laughed. "Oh my gods, we’re terrible. Heh." Still she tugged her shirt up over her belly, exposing the green ecto flesh to the air. It was warm in the heat of the house, and she adjusted her pants so he could investigate her middle without pause. Elsewhere didn’t need to be revealed, after all.

Tenebris laughed wholeheartedly at that almost perfect come back and he lowered to be more level with her, starting with her eyes in his examination.

She blinked at him obediently, and chirped softly to him. Her eye lights blinked off and on at him cheekily. "How do my eyes look, Doc?"

"Bright, that means you’re not deficient of magic." He replied.

"Pap hasn’t donated in a couple days, but I haven’t been as active either." Her earlier mentioned cramps had her staying home and trying not to be too active, therefore not spending as much energy. "Glad they're looking good. I didn't know eye brightness could indicate health."

"You’d be surprised." He chuckled, before he tapped her bones in a few spots with his pen, listening carefully before moving on to kneel and check on the young growing within her belly.

Her middle wasn’t as bright as it could be, but it was a healthy color, showing she wasn’t desperately hurting for a donation. Their souls were bright and healthy, and moving as they swirled and shifted inside of her belly. They fussed now that they weren’t being rocked, and one of them stretched, making Toki groan just softly.

She rubbed her fingers into a cramped spot along her pelvis and sighed. "And there's a cramp. You two are going to make me explode, I swear."

He sighed and smiled gently, before he set his hands on her midsection, humming gently as he gave some of his magic to her, while running his claws over the tense skin as to help relieve the cramps.

The magic was deep and dark like last time, and just as potent. It didn't take much before she was literally glowing again. "Ah, there's the 'I just ate glow sticks' look. Ah- Mmm..." she sighed softly as his claws rubbed over the tense skin. It was tight, and there were cramped parts of the ectoplasmic belly that could be felt by his fingers as he rubbed over them. "Mmm..."
"Tsk, my poor, poor dear..." He sighed. "This cant be that pleasant for you."

"It really isn't." She quirked a grin at him and sighed slightly. "But motherhood isn't always a beautiful trip. I love my little ones. Besides- the cramps have nothing on burning alive." She shifts in her seat, and grunts as they batter her ribs. Just like before, they were going absolutely bonkers with his magic. "They're going crazy from your magic. Apparently grandpa's magic is like jellybean coffee." She chortles softly. Her eye lights are tender and a soft, affectionate buzzing escapes her.

Yes, she suffered from serious cramps, but short of nightly massages, she didn't know how to get rid of them. She was still happy to have her kids- and that sort of mentality radiated from her being. Being a mother meant going through all the aches and pains- and she had those in spades for sure- in order to hold your little ones in your arms. As much as the coming months unnerved her, she was very, very eager to hold her babies and see them take their first breaths of air.

They would be the first monster children born on the surface- and Toki would never, ever let them be locked away underground.

"I suppose that'd be understandable, that's half of my liquid intake right there." Tenebris chuckled, before he sighed contentedly.

"Heh, hasn't it always been?" She shifted slightly, and pressed her fingers to the top of her middle to try and lure little feet away from her abused ribs. "Jellybeans, leave your mama's ribs alone please. Your Grandpapa’s fingers are right there- kick those." Toki sighed as they persisted. "You know, if I didn't have my insane defense, I would probably have some bruised ribs. They have their daddy’s strength."

He chuckled gently and began to tap a gentle rhythm onto her stomach.

The tapping drew one’s attention, and they stretched out to boot him in the fingers. Toki grunted softly as her middle shifted visibly, and eyed Tenebris with amusement. "So, I'd say they're healthy, if a little active. They definitely have Quinn’s energy levels."

"They will be very healthy at this rate." he chuckled, "I’m sure they’ll need only a small nap before they’re ready to run around."

"Papyrus mentioned they might grow fast." She gave him an amused look. "But you’re forgetting that they’re going to be half legitimate skeleton. They might not grow as fast as you think they’re going to. Though..." Her amused look fades slightly, and she sighs. "I am nervous about them coming." She admits. "My pelvis has been widening, so I think I know how they’re going to come, but... I’m admittedly nervous. They’re pretty big." She just hoped there were no complications. Even Grillby had mentioned that she was small for a skeleton, but she was still in a living human skeleton, not made of magic.

"I’m gonna go take the kitties downstairs." Thumper chirps from the bed. He collects them, gives them both a smile, and hops out of the room. That was not a conversation he wanted to stick around for. Nope, nope, having babies was gross and he had no desire to learn about how it worked.

Tenebris laughed gently as Thumper made a break for it, and he looked to Toki once the boy was gone from the room. "If it reassures you any, I was around for the birth of Prince Asriel, so I am aware of how to aid a birth."

"Asriel..." She blinks slowly. "That was Asgore’s son, right? That... does reassure me slightly, but also not at all. Monsters are all different, yeah? Asgore and Toriel are goat monsters. Or... something like them. I am a literal skeleton- and the only actual skeleton." At least purely skeleton. Papyrus was a skeleton, but he wasn’t as much skeleton as she was. She was the only… Well, pure-blooded skeleton, so to put it. No other Skeleton HTM’s had popped up yet. “We really don’t know how it’s going to go.”

"True..." He rumbled gently, "Well, I at least have some experience, and there's always room for learning more."

"That is very true." She nods softly. "We'll need what experience we can get for when Cae has his little ball of sunshine." Sans had low HP, she knew, and there was no real margin for error with him. She at least had the HP to soak any damage that could come from delivery, if any did come from it.

"Your birth will help me know what to do for Caeruleus." He agreed.

“Very true indeed.” She nodded. “However there could be some differences. Sans and Pap are like you.” She tilts her chin at him thoughtfully, and sighs. She adjusts her hips in the chair, grimacing as the twins stretch out in a demand for more space. “There’s a chance that he could have an entirely different sort of delivery method. On the flipside, each birth is different from the last. Eight brothers later, and even I know that.” She’d helped her mother with her youngest brother’s deliveries- but had been too young for the older ones. “I do have some knowledge of births, but I’m no midwife.”

"Your aid is still important, though." He replied with a smile.

“I’ll try to be.” Toki flashed him a grin. “I dunno how much help I’ll be during my own delivery though. I’ll be a little distracted… Heh. Hey,” She grins wider, amusement tingling through her eyes. “Think Paps will faint like he did when we found out it was twins?”

"I am actually not sure about that yet." He replied with a brief chuckle.

"I sincerely hope he doesn't." She chuckled softly in turn. "It would suck if he concussed himself before they arrived."

"He's got a hard head, he'd be okay." He snorted.

“Well yes,” she chuckled, “but it tends to stress me when he faints. He’s fainted three times since I’ve met him. I worry, y’know? It’s pretty natural to worry about those you love.”

"It's understandable, Papyrus is an odd young man, but I suppose his hard-headedness, in more than one way-” he stopped for a moment to snort into his fist, "- Is the very reason we all love him so much.”

Toki smacked his arm as she descended into guffaws. “I can’t believe I’m joking about my sex life with my father-in-law.” She laughed. “I don’t even know how it happened, you know? We just sort of… clicked, you know?” She shifted and adjusted her legs, finding her cramps lessening finally as his fingers worked over them. “I love him a lot, Tenebris. He’s my world.”

He nodded gently. "I know, my dear, I'd do nothing to part you two. You are happy together.”

“We are.” She smiles softly. “Very happy. We might be doing the steps backwards, but we’re getting married, having a family- we’re as happy as can be.” Even with the threat of HAM lingering above the compound, but that didn’t mean that they had to live in fear every day. “So- the knots are easing off for now. They’ll be back in a couple hours but thank you for now. The reprieve is nice. Anyways- how’s my bill of health look so far?” She inquired. “Pap has been taking peeks at me regularly, but he’s not as knowledgeable in this stuff as you are.”

"Healthy." he replied with a rumble, "As a pregnant horse."

“I feel more like a whale.” She puffed air at him gently and shifted. “Though they kick about as hard as a horse. I would probably have bruises all along my spine and in my ribs if I didn’t have such absurdly high defense.”

"While I agree with you about the comment of the fortunate that you have such high defense, I wouldn't go as far as to call you a whale, per say. You're too petite to be considered whale-like." He rumbled.

“Only among you monsters am I considered petite.” She shoots him a bemused look. Her abdomen shifts, and a small flash of an orange color shows faintly from inside her middle. She peers down at it with an arched brow. “That’s new.”

He chuckled, but upon seeing the flash of magic, he rumbled and leaned his head to one side in thought. "Well, well, well…” He rumbled. "It seems the pups are starting to develop their magic."

There was a splash of another color alongside the orange, and a bluer tinge crossed her middle. It was all muted by the green of her magic, but she could vaguely feel… Something. It was weird. “Huh… That’s what that means? It feels weird… It’s not going to hurt them, is it?”

"Not at all. If anything, it's part of their development.”

“M'kay.” She smiles and rubs over the orange colored blip of light. “Heh… Not so much orange as a soft peach… My little blueberry and my little peach. Oh! Did Pap and I ever tell you that we came up with names?”

"No, he didn't." He replied.

Toki smiled slightly. “You have to promise not to laugh. Sans promised, but he still laughed.” A pout crossed her mouth slightly, but it didn’t last as she watched the lightshow that was her middle. They were really flashing it up in there- though that was likely the shot of ‘coffee’ that Tenebris basically gave them.

"I promise. Let's hear them?” he purred.

“So… We chose four. Skylar, Eras, Verdana… and Honey.” She smiled slightly. “We might mishmash them though depending on what the twins turn out to be.”

"That's a wonderful set of names." he rumbled happily, "Absolutely perfect.”

“Mhm. We figured we could mishmash them as needed. Like… I dunno… Skylar Eras Gaster. Ah- I was going to take Pap’s name. It’s not traditional to the clan rights, but given that I’m clan head… I can sort of make the rules. Our ‘elders’ aren’t going to fuss that badly.” Her Dad would fuss more than her mother, but her mother could keep him in line well enough. “Hm… I kinda like that. Skylar Eras Gaster… Which would leave… Honey Verdana Gaster? Yes, I like them.” She smiles slightly and rubs the top of her belly.

"Those are beautiful names." He nodded in agreement.

“I think so too.” She smiles. “I’m also pretty sure I’m having at least one girl, so Honey fits. Skylar is pretty unisex.”

"Indeed, that sounds perfect," He rumbled with a bright smile.

“It does.” Toki smiles warmly up to him. “So… You feeling any better? Still upset with me for luring you out?”

"I'll forgive you this time." He snickered at her as he rolled his eyes.

“Good.” She gently pokes his knee with one of her toes. “Because if I have to do it again to lure you out, the price might go up.” She winks.

He smirked and nipped her cheekbone. "Excuse you."

She squeaks, flinching just slightly as his masked mouth comes near her face, and tickles her fingers along his sides in vengeance. “Hey now, it’s a long walk to your house, and I can’t teleport like you Gaster’s can. How else am I to get your attention but to send my minions out to do my bidding? Also, really Gaster. Biting is bad. I will get a squirt bottle one of these days, I swear.”

"You haven't called me Gaster in months.” He blinked. “And get a spray bottle to use against me and you will pay for it, Nara.”

“I won’t be Nara for long.” She sticks her tongue out at him. “You haven’t misbehaved in months either.” She wasn’t going to say ‘you haven’t bitten me in months’ because they both knew that was very, very much a lie. “And what will you do to me, hm?” Her eye lights twinkle merrily at him. “Flop on me for another nap and trap me for a couple hours?”

"Yes." he then got up slightly before he leaned on her to weigh her down, "Down we go.”

“Oh goodness,” she laughed. The rocking chair creaked as his weight went down onto it, and she gave it a slightly worried look. He was a hefty monster, and she wasn’t a lightweight anymore either. “If you’re going to trap me, at least be a dear and teleport us to the couch downstairs. If I fall asleep like this, I’m going to wake up with cramps you wouldn’t believe.”

He chuckled and got up, holding a hand to her to help her up. "Alright, come on."

She took his hand and clamored up out of her chair. Toki sighed softly, and then gently poked his chest. “Alright. I’d say race you down, but a snail could beat me to the couch.” She grins. “So, join me? If you’re done with your examination, that is?”

Tenebris nodded and offered her his hand. "Come, I know a shortcut.” He chuckled.

“Shortcut, huh?” She chuckles. She accepts his hand though, her dainty bones coming to rest in his broad, gloved palm.

He smiled at her and chuckled, before he effortlessly teleported downstairs.

They landed in the living room, and in what was the middle of a cloud of animal hair. Thumper was laughing, and in the middle of brushing Gracie, who’s backside was to the sky as her under fur was fluffed literally everywhere.

“She sheds more than I do!” Thumper grins at them happily.

“That she d-d-” Oh no. Sneezing fire plus cat hair was going to be a very, very bad experience. Toki did her best to cover her face so her teeth didn’t spark, and she stepped away from them as best she could. “AHCH-”

And in a blip of magic that was definitely not hers, she was gone mid sneeze.

Her backside hit the roof with a thump, and she clung to the tile with a startled sound. “What the hell!?”

Tenebris looked around, startled the moment that she had disappeared. "TOKIKO?" he then turned and ran outside, "TOKIKO?" he called again.

“I’m on the roof!” She called back, twisting slightly to grab onto the chimney. Her bare feet slid slightly on the tile, and she let out a startled shout. Her claws sunk into the brick of the chimney, and she tried to keep herself as still as possible. That was a long, long fall down to the ground, with each of her floors being a bit over twelve feet tall, alongside the attic space.

He turned then teleported to the roof of the house, his tail and claws dug into the roofing as he came closer, rattling loudly. He smiled soothingly at her. "Just hang on, i'm coming"

She spooked when he appeared, but didn’t lose her grip, even as his loud rattling made her buzz nervously. She couldn’t see his smile behind his mask, and she was too focused on not falling to bother staring at his eyes. Toki sniffed, and scrubbed her nasal hole on her sleeve. “I don’t understand why I’m up here. I can’t teleport, and it wasn’t my magic that brought me up here.” She looked utterly spooked, sockets wide and dark as she peers up at him.

“Toki?” Wolfen is down below, looking utterly bamboozled. He had heard her shout, and could see them clearly from the gate. “Doctor Gaster? What on earth are you two doing up there? Do I need to call Papyrus?”

"No need, Wolfen!" he called back, "Just a teleportation mishap!" he called.

“Alright! Just be careful up there!” The wolf nodded, and resumed his post.

Toki squeaked as she slid slightly. “Tenebris, get me down, please! Heights don’t bother me, but skeletons don’t belong on the roof!”

He smiled and wrapped his arms around her once he reached her, teleporting quickly back to the soft grass below.

Once she was on the grass below, she shuddered and straightened, bones rattling loudly. “What the hell?” She exclaimed, bewildered. “I can’t teleport! I sneeze fire, not teleport!”

"The children can teleport." he rumbled.

“… What.” She stared at him. “What. That’s…Fuck, please tell me you’re joking.” If they could teleport, and ended up teleporting Toki… There was no telling where she could end up.

"I'm afraid that's the only logical theory." he replied simply.
“That’s… Okay.” She takes a deep breath, and kneads a hand into her side as the twins fuss. “Stress is bad. Okay. That’s… Okay. We’ll figure it out. I need to keep my phone on me at all times, and we need to tell Papyrus.”

“Is she okay?” Thumper leaned out the window to look down at them both.

"Yes, she's alright, Thumper." Tenebris called to him in reply.

“Good. I was gonna call Papyrus if she wasn’t.” The bunny hums. “The cat hair is settling, Toki!”

“Thank you, Thumper!” She calls back. She scrubs her nose, and huffs softly. “Well… alright then. I’m just going to avoid sneezing from now on, if that’s all the same to you.”

"Fair enough." Tenebris rumbled lightly as he reached out to pat her shoulder. "I'll stay out here to have a pipe since we're here, so I'll see you if I come back in."

“Alright.” She sighed softly. “Don’t go hide away again, Tenebris. I was serious when I said I’d steal it again. Maybe make you hunt for it next time. Anyways, I’m going to go inside. I have to give Lana a call anyways.”

"Alright, alright, go on." he chuckled.

She gave him a smile, though it faded as she turned her back on him to go inside. Teleporting via sneezing was not something she wanted to do. Not ever again- what if she got stuck in a wall? What if the twins got hurt? There were too many thoughts and variables about it to make her stress less.

At least she would have Papyrus to keep an eye on her. She heaved a soft sigh.

She did need to call Lana though and make arrangements for her clothing for the wedding.
Chapter 64

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Makes wedding noises Also you guys have been pretty patient with us. Updates might end up slowing down- we've run into a bit of issue with Silver's muse, so our rp has slowed down. We've reached a point where we don't have many saved up chapters- so eventually it might end up going to go back to 'update as we finish them' sort of situations.

Also, keep in touch with us through the blog. :) It's a good way to keep up-to-date on what's happening, and if there will be delays or not. You can find us here at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/oh! I designed their wedding outfits. There's a picture of it on the tumblr page- you'll definitely want to check it out. :)

Silverwing Notes: Wedding bell sounds

The wedding hit them before they knew it. August third rolled around, and they decided that the third was perfect for it. The third found the clan compound filled with monsters and humans alike as Toki’s main family, and a few branch cousins, flooded it in time for the wedding.

Toki and Papyrus had everything planned out- and a large buffet with things that everyone had brought set off to the side for after. The only thing they had provided was the massive cake that Muffet had made upon request. Four tiers of cake was more than enough for all of the monsters that came. It was supposed to be a small wedding- but who could say no when half the village wanted to attend?

There were a lot of people, and most of the guards were on duty, making sure that HAM wouldn’t be causing problems.

Toki watched the crowd of people from her bedroom window, wincing as her mother tightened the laces on her heeled boots. “Lana?” Toki glanced back at her. “Are you sure this color is going to look okay on me?” The dress, as far as she could see, was going to be emerald. It had a gold trim on it, but she hadn’t been allowed to see more than that as the fabric swirled around her rapidly.

“The color looks lovely with your bones, Toki.” Yumei smiled up at her. Her tiny, petite mother hefted on the strings of her boots like a woman twice her size, making sure they were tight and wouldn’t flop or be too loose. “Miss Vestimoves, how is Toki’s clan sigil coming?”

"You look lovely, Tokiko!” Lana replied happily, "You couldn't look better. Green is VERY much your color!” she reassured her, before humming quietly, "And the seal is almost done." she then answered, humming a gentle tune as she worked.

“Thank you, Lana.” Toki heaved a soft sigh, and worried at the gloves covering her fingers. They were a similar shade as her dress, and arched up into a gold-trimmed point at the end.
“Good.” Yumei gave the sheep woman a pleased look, and then finished her daughter’s laces. Once her gold-trimmed boots were laced up, she leaned up and pressed a kiss to her daughter’s belly. “How are my grandbabies doing?”

“They’re fussy,” Toki responded. “They don’t like when I’m nervous, and I am both nervous and excited.”

“You and Papyrus have been living together since not long after you were pregnant.” Yumei blinked up at her. “What is there to be nervous about?”

“Weren’t you nervous when you married my dad?”

“Oh yes. I nearly fainted at the alter, never mind we had been together for a long time.” Yumei hummed. “I was the same for both of your dads. I think that is simply love, my sweet little girl. Hm… That does make sense. Your Papyrus is likely very much the same.”

Lana hummed quietly as she came around, having quickly finished the sigil on the back. The pink sheep woman smiled up at Toki. “May I feel them?” She asked.

“Of course, Lana.” Toki smiled at her warmly. Yumei moved off to fiddle with something out of Toki’s range of vision. Toki planted her hands on her lower back, trying to keep them out of the way of Lana’s magic fabrics. “They’re feisty today. Though, they’re usually feisty every day. They have Pap’s energy. Ah- Pap and I have been meaning to ask you if you’d maybe make some baby blankets for the twins?”

Lana knelt down and cooed as she rubbed her stomach gently, before she smiled up at her again. "Consider them done!" she giggled happily.

“Thank you.” Toki grinned happily, the twins kicking fussily at Lana as they put on a lightshow under her dress.

There was a knock at the door, and then Kon stepped in. He waved to his mother. “Hey, Ma. Think you can go give Sarah a hand? All of the kids are eyeballing the clan tree.”

“Again? If Dom ruins his tux, I will be very upset with him.” She huffs. She pats her son on the head, and then leaves to do handle her grandson and all of the other monster kids.

Toki snorts softly, and then eyes her brother. “Not helping Papyrus?”

“Nah, Ryushi’s got that in the bag.” Her brother padded closer, and peered at her dress critically. He flipped his hair, which was sporting a neon blue color to match his bright blue tuxedo, and reached out to thumb over the clan sigil. It was customized per clan head- and Toki’s sigil had a bee circled in gold, with golden deer antlers sprouting from it. The deer antlers were what marked the Nara- anything else was custom to the leaders. “Wow. I know you didn’t do this- your sewing is horrendous. Who managed this masterpiece? The antlers look amazing, and the embroidery is damn near orgasmic to look at.”

There was a quiet giggle from the sheep who peeked around Toki, and then moved to stand at her side. "Oh, I'm sure she's not that baaaad~" she giggled gently.

“Oh- Ohhhh. Well, hello.” He fluttered his lashes at her, and gave her a suave bow. “Who is this beautiful lamb I see before me?” He purred.

“This is Lana Vestimoves.” Toki chuckled softly. “And yes, Lana. I am absolutely terrible at sewing. Kon must have gotten all of my talent there instead of in social graces like he could have.”
“Lana Vestimoves,” he purred. “Beautiful name for a beautiful lady. Tell me, Miss Lana… Do you have a flock for this wedding? If not, I wouldn’t mind being your shepherd for the evening.” He winked.

She bleated a soft giggle and offered him a hand. "Hello there, it's nice to meet you. Though, no, I have a flock, they're just at home/" she told him, "Though I don't think I'd need a shepherd." she then giggled again sweetly.

He took her hand and brought it up to his lips, pressing a soft kiss to it as he gave her a roguish grin. “I’m Kon Nara. It’s a pleasure to make your acquaintance- and if you’d let me, I’d make sure it was definitely more than just a pleasure-” “Konpaku Nara, don’t you be making raunchy pick-up lines at my wedding.” Toki ruffled his hair with a huff.

“Hey! You know I hate being called that. It’s a stupid name, Toki!” He looks at her with a scolding frown as he patted down his ruffled hair. “But that’s besides the point. I’m trying to score with your hot sheep friend. Please, at least behave for your wedding day.”

She blinked once, then smiled gently, "I think that name is rather darling." she cooed.

He flushed slightly, a little off kilter, and rubbed his cheek. “Ah… Thanks…?”

Toki grinned. “Well I'll be damned. You’re flustered. That’s a first.”

“Oh shush, Toki.” He huffed up at her. He reached out a hand to pat her bump affectionately, and then turned a flirty smile back to the seamstress. “So,” he purred, “do you take clothes apart as well as you put them together? Because baaaaaby, I could totally dig a little seam ripping between us, if you know what I mean.”

Toki hides a snort. Good gods, he really was flustered if that was all he could come up with.

"If you have something that's losing a seam I can easily fix it for you!" she replied, before she bleated in panic, "O-Oh dear, unless you mean something on your coat!" she began to look on the seams, "Oh dear, I hope I didn't leave anything to tear...!"

“Lana, Lana,” Toki took the panicked sheep’s hands in her own, and gave her a soothing smile. “Deep breaths, okay? Kon doesn’t have any tearing seams.” She says softly. “He was… Well, attempting to flirt with you. Kon’s flirts are a hit or a miss.”

His face flushed a brighter color, and he stuffed his hands in his pockets. “I mean, if you want to check my seams, there’s another room just over that I wouldn’t mind stripping for you in.” He purred.

She bleated quietly, and then she tilted her head, "Flirting?" she asked, before she looked at him, smiling gently, "O-Oh... You don’t need to strip, Mister Konpaaaaaku." she bleated gently.

“What if I waaaaanted to strip for you?” He bleated back flirtatiously, his cheeks reddening more at the bleating sound of his name. “And please, beautiful, you can call me Kon if you like. No mister needed.” He winked.

She fluffed up and bleated again softly to herself. "O-Oh... ah... Well I mean... I..."

“So how about… You and I go get something to eat this Saturday?” Kon grinned.
"Oh, Lunch?" she straightened, and then she smiled gently, her expression almost too innocent. "I would like that, thank you!"

"Then it’s a date," he purred. "Where do I go to pick you up?"

"Uh... I'm staying with my distant cousin Bo."

"I didn’t know you were staying with Bo." Toki blinked. "Bo and Wolfen are awesome." She smiled. "I’ve actually been meaning to talk to you some. There has been a couple families that have moved out, and I was wondering if you wanted to... well, move topside and start up your business here?"

Kon blinked. "Bo... Bo and Wolfen... I know the house. Dom likes to play with Howl." Her nephew was some weird wolf-sheep hybrid thing, and Luna was enamored with his fluffiness, while Dominic liked to play with his friend.

"Oh, I'd love to!" she replied happily. "You see so many new people every day! My business would explode!" She threw her hands in the air as she gave a small hop, but as she did, her tail came free of her seamstress' apron, waving happily as she giggled.

"Your business would be most welcome. Human stores just don’t sell stuff that is monster friendly—you would have a lot of business." Toki grins.

The tail caught Kon’s eye, and, like the little kid he was at heart... he couldn’t help but reach out to touch it. "It’s so fluffy," He murmurs, slightly awe as he fluffs it lightly.

She giggled happily but it was cut short as she let out a panicked sound between a bleat and a squeal. Toki thumps her brother soundly on the back of the head. "Kon!" She scolds. "Grabbing monster’s tails is rude!"

“But it’s so fluffy!"

"I don’t know if I should feel overdressed now or not." Aliquam laughed to Ryushi, though he wasn't wearing anything too flashy. At least, he hoped not.

He wore his royal guard armor, allowed a little more decoration than usual. His armor was a bright silver color, shined to perfection, while the gold trim around the plates gleamed brightly, as if polished for a regal event, though he could suppose it was close enough.

He wore the delta rune on his arm, the brand gleaming his loyalty to his king. On his back he would wear a bright red cape, a little something he was able to add to his uniform that reminded him greatly of his favorite scarf.

He wore comfortable clothing under his armor, something to pad his bones from bouncing around inside the armor.

Aliquam took a deep breath as he stared at the mirror in his changing room, adjusting the last few straps on the underside before he looked at himself, taking a deep breath. "I... I look amazing... heh... don’t I..."
Ryushi stood just behind his soon to be brother in law, smiling widely as he took care to buff out some marks on his armor that were obviously from wear and tear. “You do.” He nodded. He had to put elbow grease into his forearms to make it sparkle. “You’re totally going to steal Toki’s breath away. You sure you’re going to be all right in this armor? I’m sure we can get Miss Vestimoves to make you a tux real quick. It’s really, really hot out there today.”

"Hot and cold do not bother me like they do humans, Ryushi. I'll be alright." he replied with a smile. "Thank you anyhow."

“Alright. I thought I’d ask since heat seems to be bothering Toki as of late.” He hummed. He continued to buff and shine, and then chuckled. “So what do you think Toki’s going to be wearing? Think it’ll go with this big ass cape?” He hefts it up, and buffs the metal clips that pin it in place to Papyrus’ under shirt.

"I just hope she likes it. And knowing Miss Vestimoves... She'll make sure she loves it." He chuckled quietly.

“Good. I want her to be happy. I want you to be happy too. So…” Ryushi grins. “You nervous at all?” The shorter man has to get onto a stool to shine up the big monster’s shoulders and shoulder guards, and he’s barely visible over the top of his armor as he polishes it to perfection. “You’re getting hitched, dude. I was so nervous when I married Sarah that I nearly got cold feet and ran. Heh… Toki and Han had to smack some sense into me. I’m glad they did.”

"I'm... I'll be honest... I'm terrified." He admitted with a soft laugh. "I'm marrying a woman who we owe so much to... a-and... She’s going to have my children soon... I... I can't believe it..."

“Toki is just a woman, dude.” He smiles slightly. “You guys did it totally backwards too. Heh. Usually you find out you’re having kids after the honeymoon. Speaking of, I expect lots of nieces and nephews from you two. Lots and lots. I want to spoil them all, since Sarah is limiting me to two.” He pats him lightly on the shoulder, and then removes the smudge marks his fingers make. Damn his squishy human hands. “I know Toki- and Toki doesn’t see herself as the woman that ‘everyone owes so much to’. She just sees herself as Toki. Just calm your non-existent tits, bro. You and her have made it through so much together already. You’re going to do great.”

He laughed gently at that, before he reached up to pat Ryushi’s shoulder. "Thank you for this pep talk, Ryushi."

“This is hardly a pep-talk.” He chuckled. “I wasn’t ever good at them. I just don’t want you getting cold feet and bolting. I’d hate to have to hunt you down for breaking my sister’s heart.” He gives him a cheery smile in the mirror, pats the top of his skull, and then hops from the stool to go shine up the pointy parts of his boots. “Dude, you could totally kick and stab someone with these. These are now dubbed your stabby shoes.”

He laughed at that gently, and then he took a breath and cleared his throat. "With this hand... I will lift your sorrows…” he murmured, "Your cup will never empty... For I will be your wine." He was practicing his vows.

Ryushi’s eyes lit up, and he nearly nicked himself on the sharp point of his boot as he hid an excited wiggle. “If those are your vows, those are the damn cutest things ever. I wholeheartedly approve.”

Aliquam cleared his throat lightly, "I... remember reading them from a book."

“Which book?” He inquires curiously. He finishes up on his boots, and then checks him over for any missed spots. He looked clean enough to probably serve food off of. Hmm… With the sunlight, he was probably going to be hot enough to fry and egg on. “Hm… Well, you’re damn near shiny enough to eat off of now. Though I wouldn’t suggest it. Polish ruins the taste of anything it touches.”

"I... can't remember." He murmured, before he smiled at him. "Thank you, again."

“Hmm... M’kay.” He grins. He gives him a cheery smile. “Of course! I don’t mind helping my brother in law. Alright, so… I’ve heard about your fainting spells. You’re not going to faint going down the isle, are you?”

"... No." He replied quickly, though he sure as hell wasn't sure.

He laughed. “If you faint, I’m taking pictures. You’ll never live it down, dude.” He claps him on the shoulder cheerily. ‘Good luck! I’m going to head down and get to my seat. It sounds like the girls upstairs are almost done- I bet you can’t wait to see your bride.”

He shot him a look, and then he took a breath, and cleared his throat. "Right. See you there."

“If you can see anything beyond my sister, that is.” Ryushi gave him a knowing grin, and headed out of the room.

"FIRST OF ALL HOW DARE YOU!" he yelled out at him.

“Not what I meant!” He cackled. “But I know where your mind leapt first off!” He called right back into the room.

"YOU WILL PAY FOR THIS."

“I’m not the one who’s first thoughts were that Toki was large~” He sang tauntingly back. “I meant that she’d be too beautiful for you to take your eyes off of. I’m not going to be paying for anything.”

He hissed at him as he retreated, and then he took a deep breath and sighed. He was right though...

"Nyeh... Okay... Come on... You can do this Papyrus..."

“Howdy!” There was a sound of some very nice tile being ruined, and then there was a disgruntled flower hefting himself out of some shattered rubble. “Golly, it sure was hard to get to you here. I heard you were getting hitched!”

He straightened at that, and then he turned and blinked. "F-Flowey? I-It's been a long time!!" He then smiled happily.

“I’ve been busy, here and there with Frisk, y’know.” The flower grinned, bouncing innocently in place. “But I just had to find the time to come and visit you. I heard you’re marrying some guardian lady- Tiki or whatever her name was. You look good though, friend.”

"Toki, and thank you!” he reached and offered him a hand. "You're doing well! It's good to see you again."

His roots stepped daintily up into the bigger monster’s gauntlets, and he took care not to get them pinched. He curled his leaves around a large thumb to keep himself balanced. “It is good to see you again. I had a free moment that I could escape from Frisk, and thought ‘golly, I should see Papyrus on his wedding day’. I wish you luck. I heard you’re gonna be a dad now? Are you excited?”

He smiled and lifted him up with a nod. "Yes! Twins actually. I'm rather nervous but... heh... you know! I'm the great Papyrus! There’s nothing I can’t do!"
“That’s the spirit!” He grins at him. “You’ll totally have to call Frisk and let them know when they get here. I definitely want to stop by and see the Mini Great Papyrus’s.” He chirred. His petals rustled slightly, and he hummed. “Is this Toki lady worthy of the Great Papyrus?”

"She's wonderful, Flowey, absolutely perfect.” He replied with a warm voice. "She's beautiful, kind... this land we're on right now was her family's, and she gave it to monster kind to thrive on..."

“Oh-ho, she did, did she? Well, golly, that’s definitely good indeed. I’ll have to meet her sometime, see that she really is worthy of the Great Papyrus.” The flower gave a jolly bounce, and hummed softly. “Are you happy up here with her, Papyrus?”

"Yes, absolutely... She's pregnant with my children, and I love her so, so very much. How could I not be happy?” He answered happily.

“Then that’s all that matters.” He purrs.

"Nyeh heh heh heh!"

"Hey Pap! I came to make sure you're ready for this." There was suddenly a call from the doorway as Caeruleus appeared, but as he turned, the elder brother tensed up, before his eyes slowly lowered to the monster in his palm. "Flowey."

Flowey tensed, and offered a fang-toothed grin to Sans. “Smiley Trash Bag. Or should I say, Pregnant Trash Bag now?” He eyes him slightly, a once over up and down. “Though I can’t say I see the difference in the before and after.”

His grin widened a little, "Heh... I missed you too, ya dumb weed."

"Sans, be nice." Papyrus scolded, before he looked to Flowey, "You be nice too."

Flowey gave Papyrus an innocent smile. “I think I’ve probably over-stayed my welcome, friend. Besides, you need to get out there to your bride to be! I need to get home before Frisk notices I’m gone, or before Pregnant Trash Bag gets a craving and tries to eat me. Go enjoy your wedding, yeah?"

He smiled gently and knelt down, holding him to the hole he made. "Be nice, Flowey. But of course, it was nice seeing you."

“It was nice seeing you too.” The flower nodded. He tucked down into his hole, waved once, and then disappeared with a slight grumble, and the displacement of a few more tiles.

Oops. Someone would have to fix Toki’s floor later.

"You know someone's going to end up hitting him with weed killer.”

"Yes, but the least I can make sure is that it's not you, Sans." Pap went to his brother and clacked his head, smiling as the shorter but older skeleton hugged him tightly.

"You know... I’m real fuckin’ proud of you, right?"

"Yes I do, Sans. And don’t curse."

"Heh... sorry bro..."
Toki was nervous as fuck as she reached the top of the stairs. She’d been given a couple minutes to herself to help relax her, but it hadn’t helped at all. She wasn’t sure if the knots in her stomach were nerves at this point, or the twins kicking up a mess.

Either way, her Mom called up to her that it was time to start, so she’d gotten herself up and out of her room.

Descending the stairs took a lot of skill, and she had to keep her eyes on them until she reached the bottom. Her boots were brown, and had a slight heel to them that made it just slightly trickier to walk down the stairs, since she couldn’t actually see the stairs with the large emerald boulder hanging from her middle.

Her dress was primarily emerald, but shimmered to different shades in some places. It looked a lot like her soul color, actually. It had a long train in the back, with her clan sigil sewn into the material. The clan sigil itself was golden antlers- but the antlers went with the person’s personal seal. Toki’s personal seal was a honeybee in a circle- so thus; it was a gold pair of antlers surrounding a gold honeybee. It trailed the end of her dress.

Her dress itself was trimmed in gold, and the top had a sewn in second layer. It draped down, a slightly darker green with the gold trim as well, and ended just above the massive bulge of her belly. She had gloves on, which were the same shade as the second, slightly pointed layer above the main part of the dress.

They glimmered slightly as she descended slowly, her legs easing through the raised front of the dress. It was shorter in the front than it was in the back- but it was lovely, and she enjoyed it greatly.

Once she reached the bottom, she took a deep breath, and carefully made sure that none of her dress had gotten caught on any loose nails on the way down.

As Toki came down the stairs Aliquam looked up at her, before his eyes widened and his mouth slowly fell open, "O-Oh my stars..." he murmured. She was beautiful...!

"O-Oh... Tokiko..." he spoke weakly, his breath taken away by the beauty of his soon-to-be wife. "You look... amazing...!"

Her eye lights caught him as she straightened, and they danced over his armor. "Oh…” She breathed, straightening the train of her dress. “Oh wow… You look so handsome, Papyrus… Wow.” She felt a little under-dressed, with how nice his armor looked. It was shined to perfection, the cape a new addition, and she felt… Well, a little lacking almost. She knew she looked good- but he looked amazing, and wasn’t bloated with children. Toki was, admittedly, self conscious as hell. But the look in his eyes… She could see that he didn’t see any of her flaws.

She smiled to her husband to be, and reached out a gloved hand for him to take. “Do you… like the dress? I wasn’t planning something so fancy, but… maybe I should have gone a little fancier to fit with your armor? You look so, so handsome, Pap…” She really didn’t compare. He looked amazing, gold and gray armor shined to perfection.

He came closer and cupped her cheeks, cradling her skull so he could rest his head on hers first thing. Smiling at her lovingly, his eye lights danced warmly at her. "You look divine, Toki." he purred gently, before he let one of her cheeks go to reach out and take her hand instead.

She leaned into his remaining palm, and smiled at him warmly. “So do you.” She purred softly. She stepped closer, and leaned up to nuzzle his face gently. “Are you ready?” Toki thrummed softly. She couldn’t rub his fingers, but she could lace her gloved ones through his gauntlet covered ones.

"No." He murmured. "Are you?"

“I feel like I’m simultaneously going to explode and faint- so no.” She chuckled. Her free hand slipped up to cradle his cheek, and silky material brushed over his bones. It was softer than her bare bones could ever hope to be. “But I’m with you- and I want to be with you for the rest of our lives… So I know I’ll be okay with you beside me.”

"I’d kiss you… but it’s about to mean so much more to us… so… I’ll do this instead." Though it would have looked hard in full armor, Papyrus effortlessly knelt down to lean in and kissed her swell gently instead. "I love you all so much.” he purred gently, "I don’t need to be ready if I have you next to me."

She smiled, and stroked his skull gently. The twins, who had been fussing, settled at his touch and rested a bit lower in her abdomen as they relaxed. “We love you too,” She purred. “Together we can handle anything. Even nerves from our own wedding.”

He chuckled and slowly straightened up once more to hug her, before he offered her his hand. "Come on..."

She laced her fingers gently with his, and smiled at him warmly. Music kicked up outside as one of her younger brothers peeked in at them, and she leaned slightly into Pap’s arms. “Alright. I’m in heels, and I can’t see my feet- so don’t let me fall, please.”

"I’ve got you.” He purred gently, "Don’t worry, I’ve got you."

“Thank you.” She smiled up at him warmly.

They made their way to the back door, and stepped out side by side from the wide entrance. The courtyard was full, everyone standing for the lack of room for proper chairs. All the chairs were at the side to be brought out later. Through the crowd, there was a distinctive path, littered with cherry blossom petals. The path moved up to the base of the huge clan tree, where Asgore stood in his full royal regalia, with little Luna finishing happily flinging the blossoms over the ground to cover the area where they would be standing.

Dominic and Thumper stood on either side of him, holding two pillows with rings on them.

On the brides side, Yumei stood, along with Sarah, Lana, and Bo.

The music kicked up another notch, and Toki’s fingers tightened slightly over his gauntlets. There was no telling if he noticed her nervous touch. She couldn’t stop to look. Slowly, they stepped out, making their way out onto the petal-covered path.

Tenebris stood on the side of the groom’s, his head high as he had a proud smile on his face. Caeruleus was behind him, holding back tears.

’I wonder if it's normal to make your father and your brother your best man.’ Aliquam thought to himself as he walked up the aisle. He did feel her touch and as a result he occasionally tightened his grip on her hands.

He looked to have a reminder of what it would look like for them. On the table were a few items. Three candles, two unlit, two small goblets, and a deep red bottle of an unknown liquid. He grew nervous and looked to Cae and Tenebris. The father gave a small nod while Cae gave him a thumbs up, they had this taken care of. Good.

He soon came to a stop a few steps away from the table, and he looked to the king as the music finally came to grow quiet, Asgore's cue to speak.

The king stepped up, and spread his great arms. As the crowd fell silent along with the music, he cleared his throat, smiled, and began to speak. “We are gathered here today, on this happy and joyous occasion, to join these two much beloved souls in holy matrimony.”

His gaze is soft as he looks down at the couple. “Marriage is a solemn institution to be held in honor by all. It is the cornerstone of the family and of the community. It requires of those who undertake it a complete and unreserved giving of one's self. It is not to be entered into lightly, as marriage is a sincere and mutual commitment to love one another. This commitment symbolizes the intimate sharing of two lives and still enhances the individuality of each of you.”

“Papyrus Aliquam Gaster. Do you take Tokiko Nara to be your lawfully wedded wife? Do you promise to love her, comfort her, honor and keep her in sickness and in health, remaining faithful to her as long as you both shall live?”

"I do." he replied, taking her hands and holding them tight as he smiled down at her.

Asgore smiled. “Tokiko Nara,” he rumbled warmly, “Do you take Papyrus Aliquam Gaster to be your lawfully wedded husband? Do you promise to love him, comfort him, honor and keep him in sickness and in health, remaining faithful to him as long as you both shall live?”

“I do.” Her fingers curled tighter over Pap’s, and her eyes glowed a bright, mint green. Nothing but love lingered in her eyes.

Asgore nodded. “You may now say your vows.”

He smiled, and then he looked to Toki. "Face the table, take three small steps, start on the left.” he whispered, turning to hold her hand, before he slowly extended his right foot to the length of step he meant.

His step was a lot different than hers, but she stretched her legs to match his, careful not to go too far with her lack of ability to see past her middle. Her fingers tightened carefully over his, and she stepped closer. One, two… and three. Soon she was near the table, and waiting for the next step.

He nodded gently and turned to face her, he released her hand to raise his right.

"With this hand, I will lift your sorrows.” He started, speaking slowly as to teach her.

She smiled warmly, her eyes meeting his as she watched his motions. She would need to remember them so she could do them too.

He then reached out and picked up the wine bottle and uncorked it, allowing the carbonation to escape. With the other hand, he gently picked up one of the goblets.

"Your cup will never empty, for I will be your wine.” he then slowly filled the goblet.

Oh no. Alcohol and pregnancy didn’t mix, even if people said a little wine during pregnancy wouldn’t hurt. Nervousness flooded her eye lights- what if she couldn’t do this part of the ceremony?

He leaned in to her, whispering, as he tilted the goblet up for her to sip from. "Don't worry, it's just sparkling cider." he assured her, pulling back again.
His assurance eased her. Sparkling cider she could handle— and really, she shouldn’t have doubted him at all. Of course he’d have come up with an alternative. Her soon-to-be-husband was resourceful, and she loved him all the more for it. Toki nodded, and leaned in to take a sip from the cider. It bubbled harshly inside of her mouth, the carbonation fresh and potent, and she nearly coughed on it.

He loosely re-corked the bottle after he set the mostly full goblet on her side of the table, and set the wine bottle back on the table, before he reached out and took one of the unlit candles.

"With this candle-" he spoke, leaning the candle to one side to allow it to light on the one that was lit in the middle. Once the flame caught, he held it up to be seen. "I will light your way into darkness."

Toki’s eye lights brightened, and she looked on warmly. The candles no longer bothered her in the slightest, and she was proud to say that she looked on them fondly now.

He then slowly put it down, and looked to Thumper, who stood at his hip, to extend his hand for the ring.

Thumper handed the ring over, displaying the pillow for all to see the larger monster collect the small ring of metal.

He reached out and gently took it, before he reached out and took her left hand gently in his. He slid her glove off, and draped it gently on the table. "With this ring." He lifted it up for her to see, "I ask you…"

Her eye lights lit up. This was it…

He then leaned in, and slipped the ring onto her finger. "To be mine."

Toki’s eyes watered slightly, and she gave him the most adoring smile ever. She had to take a moment to compose herself, the metal warm and well fitting to the bone of her ring finger, where it sat right next to her engagement ring, before she brightened.

She slowly stepped back, resuming her position as she was supposed to, before she lifted her right hand. "With this hand, I will lift your sorrows." She smiled.

Toki slowly stepped closer to the table, and popped the loose cork on the bottle. “Your cup will never be empty, for I will be your wine.” She filled his goblet, lifting it carefully and offering it out for him to take a drink. The cider inside bubbled and fizzed.

He lowered himself and took a gentle sip of the drink, covering a cough with a gentle chuckle as he rose again. He gave her a gentle nod of approval— she was doing perfectly.

She carefully set his goblet on his side of the table, and re-corked the wine bottle so it didn’t accidentally get spilled. She stepped to the table this time, having to turn slightly to the side so her middle didn’t bump it— ah the joys of being heavily pregnant— and then carefully grasped the unlit candle.

“With this candle,” She said, leaning it out to carefully catch it ablaze. Once it caught, she hefted it up for everyone to see. “I will light your way into darkness.”

The candle was carefully placed back into its spot, the trio now glowing softly in the sunshine of the day. Toki stepped back, and found Dominic at her side. “With this ring,” she purred softly as it was handed over. She held it up for everyone to see, and then braced it carefully between her fingers so she didn’t drop it.
Her hands came up and took his left, cradling it gently. “I ask you,” She continued softly as she worked his gauntlet off. The freshly oiled clasps gave way easier than she expected, and she was relieved that she didn’t have to fumble with it like usual. His gauntlet was carefully settled on the table next to her glove.

She smiled up at him lovingly, and slid his ring home onto his ring finger. “To be mine.”

He smiled, and then he nodded in approval, and looked to Asgore as he gave a nod to match.

"I now pronounce you Husband and Wife. You may now kiss the bride." the king rumbled gently.

Aliquam knelt down, and he looked to Toki, smiling as he leaned in slightly, his eyes closing slowly.

Toki met his kiss half way, her fingers gently holding his as her sockets drifted closed. They had kissed before, many, many a time… But there was something special about their first kiss as husband and wife. Tension bled out of her, leaving her damn near weak at the knees, and she leaned slightly into him with a happy sound.

He wrapped his arms around her as those who watched on roared with applause.

The applause was damn near deafening, and Toki laughed as she kissed him again, curling her arms around him in a firm hug. His armor was hard, but it made her feel safe and protected. “We did it,” She whispered to him softly, eyes twinkling merrily.

"We did it." he repeated before he smiled, "I'm so proud of you, Tokiko Gaster." he purred.

“That’s right,” She purred. “I’m a Gaster now.” She practically beamed at him. Her magic practically radiated from her in joyful waves, bright and lively and peaceful.

“Pictures!” Her mother chirped, pulling a camera from her purse. “Glove up, you two! Lets get your wedding photo done before you’re dragged off for cake!”

His eyes glowed brightly as he then turned and re-donned his gauntlet, before helping her get her glove on. "Then let's pose nicely for the camera." he told Toki, turning to face the camera as he gave a joyful smile.

Toki sidled up next to him as Asgore ducked out of the way. In front of the clan tree was as good as any place to take it. She eased close, tucking one hand on the small of her back as he rested his hand carefully along her ribs. Her skull tilted towards the camera with a warm look, eyes minty and happy.

As everyone cleared out of the way for the shot, Yumei got herself positioned. Once the two skeletons were ready, she took the photo- and several others- before calling it good. “I’ll get these developed for you and mailed over by next week.” She promised her daughter and son-in-law with a happy grin.

"Thank you, Miss Yumei." Aliquam chirped happily.

"Just call me Mother, dear." Yumei gave him a warm smile and tucked the camera away. She reached up a dainty hand, so much smaller than even her daughters, and patted his gauntlet gently. "Welcome to the family, Papyrus." Her gaze flicks over to Tenebris and Caeruleus as well, and she smiles wider. “Welcome to all of you.”

"Ah, thank you then, Mother." Aliquam chirped.

Tenebris chuckled quietly. "Welcome to the Gaster family as well, Toki." he purred softly.
“It’s good to be apart of it.” She smiled. “Legally, anyways.” She chuckled softly. Toki smiled at all of them, and then peered up at her husband. Heh- she could call him her husband now. “So… Shall we see about getting the cake served up?”

“Before the icing melts in the sunshine.” Thumper chirps cheerily. He shifts on his toes, and plops the pillow onto the table with the rest of the ceremonial stuff. “Though… I wanna tell you guys somethin’ first. You too, Mister Tenebris.”

"Of course, Thumper." Aliquam spoke.

"What's going on?" Cae then asked as he walked closer, Tenebris following as well while he lit his pipe.

“Well… You guys said it was my choice as to who I live with, right…?" He shuffles awkwardly, playing with the tie on his suit.

“We did, yes.” Toki nodded with a patient and encouraging smile. “Did you make your choice, sweetheart?”

“I did.” He shuffles slightly, and then glances to Tenebris. “If… If it’s okay with you, I’d like to go stay with you. Since Papyrus is living with Toki, and Sans is with Mister Grillby most of the day… You don’t really have anyone living with you, and… I don’t really either. If you don’t want me to, I- I would understand.” He was just a bunny- he wasn’t a particularly strong monster, and he never would be. Rabbits were, at the height of their power, used for couriers and fast message delivery. They weren’t strong like the skeletons were- and Tenebris, he knew, valued strength quite a bit, at least instinctually.

Tenebris blinked once in surprise, and he slowly lowered his pipe. "... Do... Do you really mean it? You actually want to stay with..." he slowly quieted, before he smiled, and knelt down, opening his arms to Thumper. "Oh Thumper... I'd love to have your company..."

Thumper stepped into his grasp and nuzzled his fuzzy cheeks into the massive monster’s neck. Happy tears pricked in his eyes- he was wanted. “Really? Thank you.” He whispered. “Thank you.”

Toki smiled warmly, and leaned slightly into her husband. “Well,” she mused, “It looks like you’ve got a little brother.” She wiggled her brows gently up at her husband. Hell, she loved that word. He was her husband. Heh. It made her horribly giddy.

Keeping his pipe in his hand, Tenebris embraced Thumper firmly, purring loudly before he scooped the bunny up, a bright grin on his face.

"At least I’m not the youngest brother anymore." Aliquam giggled gently, leaning down to peck his wife on the head.

Thumper let out a happy sound and tightened his hold. His legs came around the larger monsters side so he could hold onto him and keep himself supported. "What... what would you want me to call you, Mister Tenebris?"

Toki giggled and smiled up at her husband. "How does it feel to join the big sibling club?" She leaned slightly into him, eyes twinkling warmly. "Hm... we should probably go cut the cake before the frosting melts." It was ungodly hot outside after all. She was hot even in her short-sleeved dress.

"It's nice, but rather simple. Not what I thought initially" Aliquam admitted, nuzzling her before he nodded. "Yes of course, let's go cut that cake!"
Wrapping an arm around Thumper's back, he smiled at him, "You can call me what you wish, pup. Just don’t call me late for dinner." Was that a dad joke? Yes it was.

"Cake ahoy!" She smiled up at him, and waddled for the massive thing. Made by monsters for monsters- it was huge, decorated in shades of white, silver, and gold. "We might want to remove our gloves for this," she giggled, "or we're going to make a huge mess of them. Getting frosting out of your gauntlet would be a mess."

He groaned in good humor and nuzzled fuzzy whiskers to Tenebris' cheek. "You're already starting the dad jokes, dad."

He nodded in agreement and helped her remove her gloves first, humming a quiet tune as he did, "I love you so much."

Tenebris rattled happily and nuzzled Thumper again. "I cannot help it..." He chuckled.

Once her hands were free, she helped him remove his gauntlets, setting them to the side with her gloves. "I love you too." She smiled. "That's why we're married, no?" She teased gently. Her fingers fished out a couple plates, and she snagged the cake cutter as well. "You remember the cake tradition we talked about doing?" She smiled up to him.

"That's okay, dad." He giggled softly, his whiskers twitching happily. "So does this make Miss Toki my sister in law?"

"As if you just told me." Quinn replied with a grin.

"Yes, yes it does." Tenebris replied, walking with the bunny in his arms to follow Toki and Papyrus, with Cae lazily strolling behind him.

"Good." She laughed gently, and took his hand with hers. She looped their fingers together, and guided them together to cut a couple slices of cake, guiding them out and onto their plates. Once they were there, she eased the knife down and winked up at him. She collected her plate, pinching the slice between her fingers, and then offered it up to him. "Open up, love."

Thumper giggled, watching the two hold up cake for each other. Smash it, smash it, smash it! "I always wanted siblings."

Papyrus picked up a small slice as well, smiling as he leaned down to be better in her reach. "You open up too~" he purred.

"Well now you have siblings, and you're gonna be an uncle soon." Tenebris was rumbling loudly as he reached a decent distance to wait with the rest of the crowd around the cake.

She smiled and parted her teeth, opening wide for him to slide the cake into. She brought the cake up to his teeth and winked at him.

"Twice over even!" He grinned. His ears flopped slightly and he wiggles his fingers at Sans. "Big brother Sans! Do I get to baby-sit for you when you have your baby bones?"

He winked back, and then let out a "NYEH!" as he pushed it into her face.

Sans hesitated, and then he looked at Thumper. "Maybe when you're older, kiddo." He burst into laughter as he watched Papyrus mash cake into Toki's face. “Looks like that’s a cake-tastrophie.”

She hadn't intended to squish it into his- but, well... when you can't beat them, join them! She squeaked with a laugh, and then mashed his into his face. "Mmm, vanilla." It was very sweet but very good, and she flicked her tongue out to lick some of it off her teeth. Well, she was a mess now.

He waited a moment, laughing at Toki and Papyrus, and then grinned down to Cae. "I'm older now." He points out with cheeky amusement. "Heheh. Are you gonna baby-sit the twins?" He asked curiously. "Though... does it require experience to baby-sit? If so how do you get the babysitting experience to do the babysitting?"

"Nyeh heh heh heh!" he laughed happily as he leaned back, before he managed to get hold of a couple napkins, bringing them over and offering one to her. "Here."

"Worst case, we'll make pops baby-sit."

And with that Tenebris sputtered, "WHAT?!"

She giggled softly and carefully reached up to clean his face for him. "Heh, how did I manage to get frosting this high on your face?"

Thumper grinned wider. "Don't worry. Dad. So long as I'm not in school, I can help you!" His little bunny tail flicked happily and a mischievous smile slid over his face.

"You smooshed it." Pap chuckled gently, and took a napkin to do the same to her face. Sharp teeth made it harder, but he was getting better at handling her fangs.

"Oooh no you don't mister. You're going to school." Tenebris hummed.

She laughed. Once they were both cleaned up, she then stepped back to motion everyone else to come get cake. She would have stayed to cut and serve it, but her heels were starting to murder her feet more and more.

Thumper made a face. "At least there are a couple more weeks to summer..."

Aliquam stayed upright for a bit to help serve the cake, a warm smile on his face as he did, though it was soon clear he did as to bring two plates with a slightly larger slice of cage over to where his wife sat.

"Enjoy it while it lasts, pup." Tenebris snorted, putting Thumper on his shoulders before picking up two slices of cake, "Here we go."

Toki had chosen a seat in the shade, and she waited for him patiently as he handed out cake. As he joined her, she smiled and patted the chair next to her. "Here, Pap. You're lucky that the heat doesn't bother you as much. Your armor is steaming."

Thumper grinned and took his cake as it was handed up. He looped his legs around Tenebris' neck, using his head as a sort of table. Big monsters were useful for many things... "Mmm! It looks yummy."

"I best take it off soon then, eh?" Aliquam chuckled gently. "I want to be able to hug you soon."

"Save eating for when we're seated." Tenebris grumbled as he walked towards some tables.

"Want me to help you get it off before we eat our cake?" She inquired gently. She shifted and used the arms of the chair to boost herself upright. It was getting harder and harder to do that as her center of gravity was shifting.
"But I am seated!" Thumper chirped cheerily, but didn't kick up a fuss about it. He waited patiently for Tenebris to find a seat and get comfortable.

"Alright." he nodded once, setting the plates down and stepping out of the way before he started to undo the armor, "Thankfully the underclothes are decent enough to be worn alone." he commented.

Tenebris walked to a nice shady seat and put the bunny down in a seat, "Here you go, enjoy."

Her fingers joined his, and she carefully helped ease his armor off of him. "You look good in it." She smiled. His underclothes consisted of a red turtleneck, and black slacks. Once he was free of his armor, which was set into the shade to cool off, she opened her arms and gave him a grin. "You look good in your armor too. I love a man in uniform. But I love a man I can hug."

"I will!" He grinned. Frosting made a mess on his whiskers as he eagerly dug in.

"Nyeh heh heh~ I would have just gone wearing this. But for Stars sake I would be no better than Sans." he chuckled, hugging her tightly.

Chuckling, Tenebris leaned back and started into his slice of cake quietly.

She leaned into his grasp with a warm look, and leaned up to kiss him gently. She ignored some wolf whistles they got, and then smiled up to him. "You would only be like Sans if you wore slippers and shorts with a hoodie." She giggled. "I'd have married you even if you came in a big fluffy chicken suit, though."

He leaned into her kiss first, and then leaned back to wink at her. Papyrus leaned in for another kiss- this time to the top of her head- about the same time that he let out a sound not unlike a chicken clucking.

She broke into a peal of laughter, falling against his chest as his sounds registered to her ears. Oh gods, she had married the biggest goober- and she was absolutely giddy about it.
They got a week to themselves, wherein they helped Thumper get everything moved over to Tenebris’ home. Thumper took over Papyrus’ old room.

Toki did miss having him around— but he was happy, and it wasn’t like she didn’t see him from time to time. The boy tended to drag Tenebris over at least once a day to visit and say hello.

Her house was empty for several days though, besides her and Papyrus. It was almost lonely— except for the cats that romped through the house. However, the quiet didn’t last long. Her brothers weren’t able to visit, all of them having to return to either their school studies or back to work, but she got a slew of gifts delivered to her house. They were labeled for a baby shower— for her and Caeruleus too. She was befuddled. She hadn’t planned a baby shower of any kind— so what on earth were the mess of gifts for?

Mettaton was also scheduled to arrive that day— so her day was no doubt about to get much, much busier. Oh boy. At least she had the energy today.

“Papyrus?” She called as she hauled in yet another box full of wrapped gifts. She set it on one of the side tables, and groaned to herself. Gods above, they were running out of space! She was glad he was off work today— getting up and down to keep getting things from the door was exhausting on her back. “Do you have any idea why so many things are being shipped here?”

"I’m afraid not." Papyrus replied where he was cleaning the front room, humming a soft tune to himself.

"Hmm. Well, some of these are addressed for Sans. We can run them down to Grillby's later." She heaved a sigh, and then padded into the front room. She eyed him and his cleaning, and then went to go fetch the broom so she could sweep.

Of course, Gracie flopped at her feet and refused to move, so she had to sweep around her.

"Sound good." he agreed, before he hummed another soft tune. "Oh, by the way, Father called. He wanted to know if you’d like to join him for tea." He told her.

"Oh? Uh... Sure. Did he say when he wanted me to visit?" She needed several minutes to make the waddle to his house. Going fast was asking for pained cramps. Toki tuts gently and huffs as she scoots Gracie out of the way with her foot—until she wrapped around her foot and chomped on her toes. "Ack- Gracie, nooo leave my feet alone you adorable rascal."

"As soon as you could make it without hurting yourself." he replied, clicking his tongue against his teeth to get Gracie's attention.

The cat looked at him with wild eyes, and fluffed up as she let go of Toki. She arched her back playfully at him, and bounced at him cheekily.

Toki laughed. Cats were always interesting. She shifted to set the broom along the wall. "Well, now that I'm not besieged by my cat... I could go now, or whenever I find my shoes, of you don't need help with cleaning?"

He chuckled softly and wagged his toes at her before he looking to Toki, "No, no, I'll be alright!"

His toes were fair game. Gracie lunged and chomped onto his pinkie toe. She gave a playful growl, kicked her feet against his- and then stole his toe and scrambled away with her prize.

Toki giggled. "Good luck getting your toe. She hides them under the couch. I'll see you when I can make it back." She waddled for the front door, slipped her sneakers on, and took a moment to adjust her shirt over her massive swell.

"At least she's long since learned not to swallow them!" He called after her.

"Isn't that the truth." She laughed. That had been traumatic when Gracie had tried to swallow one of Pap’s toes, and ended up getting sick all over the carpet. Yes- she totally preferred magical skeleton vomit to cat puke. Yuck.

Once she wasn’t flashing her ectoplasm to the world, she gave him a wave and then headed out the door. It was ungodly hot, but she couldn't rush her waddling.

When she reached Tenebris' house, having passed Thumper as he and the rest of the kids played tag in the park, she was rather exhausted. She had a nasty cramp in the side of her belly. It was too hot to be waddling about. Still, she knocked on the door and waited patiently for him to answer.

Tenebris opened the door and smiled. "Toki, come on in." he rumbled, stepping aside, "I'm glad you decided to take up my offer."

"It might be really hot, but I enjoy your company." She stepped inside, where it was easily twenty degrees cooler. She heaved a sigh of relief. "Oh thank the gods you have air-conditioning. Next time I have kids, make sure to remind me to time it so I'm not this big at the end of summer."

"Duly noted. Iced tea it is then." he chuckled gently, closing the door before he moved to the kitchen.

She waddled after him with a soft sigh and smiled. "Iced tea sounds amazing. You have some made up?" She grinned. "Color me surprised if you do. I thought you lived off of hot tea and hot coffee alone."

"Excuse you, I have a sense of variety." he snorted softly, shaking his head lightly, "Sit down, I wont be long."

She made an amused noise at him and turned to instead go to the couch. "Sense of variety," she quotes teasingly, "says the monster that has tea every morning without fail." She takes a seat on one end of the couch and relaxes- as best as she could with what felt like forty pounds of belly weighing her down.

He snorted and thumped a foot as he passed into the kitchen. "Excuse you."

"There is no excuse for me." She grins cheekily. She stretches out, kicks off her shoes, and then grumbles as she notices the laces are loose. She’d need to tie them again before she went anywhere else. She reaches for them and is completely unable to grab them. "Agh- can't reach my shoes..."

He chuckled at that. "Don’t worry about your shoes, Toki." He told her.

"My laces are loose, Papa." She chuffed. "I will trip over them if I walk around with them unlaced." And she couldn't tie them while wearing them. If she tied them loose enough she could slip them on and off like house shoes.

"Then let me take care of it once I'm back out there."

That was a thought. "... Can you even tie shoes as small as mine with your claws?" She could probably fit her sneaker in the holes in his palms.

"I am a doctor, Tokiko. With surgical precision in my coordination, I’m sure I can tie a bloody pair of shoes."

"Ten bucks says it takes you two tries." She grins cheekily to herself as she calls to him in the kitchen.

"One try for each foot, smart-ass." He snarked as he came out of the kitchen with the tea balanced on a tray.

"Nuh-uh. Two tries for the first shoe. You'll have it down by the time you get to the second shoe." She grins. She shifts her feet so he can settle on the couch with her, and then relaxes back into the armrest and backrest. "Technically I don't have an ass anymore."

"Your Coccyx then!" he huffed, before he came and knelt before her. "Foot please."

"If you tie them loosely enough I can slip them on and off without having to tie them every time." She offers up her foot anyways, sore bones wiggling at him cheerily.

"Duly noted." he said calmly. He tightened the shoes a little bit as to make the shoe laces a little more equal, then he tied the shoe, muttering to himself about how he could very damn well tie a bloody shoe, letting it go, now tied, on the first try. He then moved to the other foot and did the same before he held out a hand. "Ten dollars please."

She chuckled. She hiked up a hip and fished around in her back pocket. It took her a moment, but she soon tugged out a ten and plopped it in his palm. "Fine, fine. You have proven your superior shoe tying skills, oh shoe-master." She giggles. "So... Tea, Papa? Iced for me and... Hot for you?"

He grinned and closed his hand around the bill, tucking it into his pocket as he stood, "Nah, I might be wearing my sweater but I’m not that crazy." he snorted, "Iced for me as well." he then spoke, "How do you like yours?"

"I'm in a turtleneck too, but I've outgrown all of mine and Papyrus's tank tops finally. So alas, unless I go nude, it's all I can wear." She chuckled softly. "I like my iced tea cold and sweet."

"How does three sugar sound?" He offered.
"Hm..." Toki pats her belly thoughtfully. "Babies say four sugars. Four sugars sounds good." She chirps.

"Four it is, little hummingbirds." he chuckled, making her drink for her before holding it out to her, able to serve it in a tall glass instead of a teacup, complete with a straw.

The straw was a bit of an amusing thing since her teeth were ridiculously sharp and tightly locked, but she accepted it easily. "Hummingbirds?" She queried gently, trying not to bite through the straw as she took a sip. Mmm, hella good. "Also, how are your teeth doing? Do you still have to use your dentures?"

"Hummingbirds are attracted to nectar, and in the same, sugar water." he replied, before he shook his head, "Goodness no. I appreciate what you were doing but I absolutely abhorred those things, I couldn't use them for long; though thankfully I don't need them as much anymore." He lifted his mask and curled back his lips, showing his teeth were actually coming back in rather well, "Wont be long now before I have my perfect grin back." he chuckled, before he lifted his glass and wrapped his lips around the end of a-

Was that-

It was a silly straw.

Toki neatly snorted the tea and choked as it redirected out of her nasal cavity. Her laugher kept her from being nervous over seeing his sharp teeth coming back. "Oh my god, you can't say perfect grin and then drink out of a silly straw. That is literally unfair." She guffawed, dabbing her nasal cavity with her sleeve. "But, uh hummingbirds is an apt description of your grandkids. They flutter around with the energy of a hummingbird."

He chuckled softly and leaned back, purring softly as he enjoyed his drink through the straw. "I'm a grown male I can do what I want." he chortled, before he smiled gently, "I cannot wait to see them born, they've come so far."

She giggled softly, and plopped her shoe covered feet into his lap. "Grown or not, I'm totally telling Papyrus you drink out of a silly straw. That is so cute. Heh..." she curls her fingers over her belly, and sighs as they squirm. "You and me both. I'm so ready for them to get here. I feel so huge already," Grillby had said she was horribly small for a skeleton. "Any more and I might explode. I'm thinking they're following human methods, so... like, maybe four to six more weeks until we can hold them. Speaking of... the hospital's might be preparing to handle monster stuff, but... I'd like to have them at home."

"And with me and Grillby here, that is completely possible," he replied gently, "Not only that, but Todd is here too, he can help us too since you may birth them the human way."

"That is possible. My pelvis has been widening quite a bit, so that might very well be the case." She sighed softly and chuckled. "Good. I feel safer at home, to be honest. I wonder though, which method would be easier? Have you Googled the different types of deliveries yet?" She hummed softly to him. "Papyrus and I need to discuss methods so he isn't too overwhelmed by the delivery."

"I have been learning. So I will be able to teach Aliquam soon enough."

"Good." She nods. She pauses, and then giggled into her tea. "Oh gods, I just envisioned you teaching a Lamaze class."

It was his turn to choke, only it was less pleasant as he didn't have a nose to expel the tea from.
She guffawed, and leaned over as best she could to pat between his shoulders. "B-breathe, Papa," she grinned mischievously. "Hee-hee-hoo." She was the biggest little shit sometimes.

He coughed, and shot her a particularly sour and scolding look as he thumped his chest to clear his airways.

"Oh c'mon, you'd be good at teaching Lamaze." She grins at him. "Heh... Either way, Papyrus would probably benefit from some of your knowledge. He's been pretty attentive so far, but I don't think he's looked up anything birth related."

"You, Tokiko Gaster, are a twerp." he huffed, reaching up to pinch one of her horns.

"Heh! Jokes on you, only the bases of my horns feel anything." She grinned. "And of course! I am the biggest twerp. I've been a big twerp since I became a big sister. Heh... I still need to get used to the fact my last name is now Gaster."

He snorted gently, then he pat her head, "That's right, you're part of my clan now." He chuckled, "Though if you continue to be a little shit I will call you by your maiden name, Nara."

"And I can call you by your last name too, Gaster." She chuckled back. "I still technically lead my clan, so its more like the merging of two clans. Though traditional merging usually means the heads marrying, or the firstborn being married. Hm... Anyways, I am forever going to be a little shit. Who else is going to give you your daily dose of sass?"

"Well before you I had Caeruleus, though I scarcely see him anymore."

"He's spending a lot of time with Grillby. To be fair, Papyrus spent a lot of time with me until he moved in." She poked his leg gently with her toes- and sipped from her straw again. "Heh. I am a literal homebody, so other than writing and tending to my hives, I have more time to visit. Speaking of, I need to clean my hives soon. One of them has a leaky spot and has the weirdest moss growing in it."

"That must not be pleasant. I can offer you my help if you'd like."

"They've been really testy as of late." She shakes her head. "They got really agitated when Pap helped me collect honey last week. I think they're just guarding me because of how far along I am, since bees can scent hormones and stuff, but... well, you have meaty bits and can get stung." She lightly pinches his muscular bicep. "And I'd rather not have half of my hives dying because they broke their stingers off in your skin."

"Well there's no way you can do that by yourself." He insisted.

"I've been cleaning my hives all alone for going on... gosh... sixteen years? My family stopped helping after I turned eighteen. They got tired of wearing the bee suits and Toki was fine with that. They just stressed her hives anyways. "Pregnant or not, it's honestly relaxing to tend to my hives."

He blinked once, and then he leaned back and sipped his tea. "Fair enough."

"Mmm, did you need another jar of honey by the way? I have some extra bottles left over from my last shipment. Family gets free honey." She chirps warmly, and finished her tea.

"Heh... sure, why not." he rumbled, "By the way, Asgore has been bringing up flora from the underground, the taste of your honey might change as the plant life grows."

"So long as he doesn't bring up anything toxic, I don't have a problem with it. What the bees take in can affect the quality. Toxic plants aren't good for honey production." She hums softly.

"Nothing toxic," he repeated, shaking his head, "He did mention he knows about your precious bees." he rumbled.

"Not just for my bees." She laughed. "Depending on the pollen they take, it could make my honey itself toxic. They won't know to avoid monster-toxic plants."

He took note of that, blinking widely at her.

"Mhm..." she sighed contentedly and relaxed more. Idly she waved as a passing monster waved in at them through the front window. "Anyways, if you see Sans today, will you tell him and Grillby to stop at the house? For some reason we have packages for him. Me too, oddly enough."

"Alright, I can do that." He chuckled.

"Thanks, Papa." She gently bumped him with her foot and grinned. "So, you think Asgore will ever move down here with you? He visits often enough."

"Up here, doofus," he corrected as he flicked her forehead, "and perhaps. It would be nice to have him, but I know he would be very busy, being the king and all..."

"Technically down here. Since he lives at the Castle which damn near on the outside of the mountain." She chuckled. "And the mountain is far, far higher than Nara Village. Hm... well, once things calm down from all the bills being passed, he probably can. There's no rule that he can't have a home here and work from home. Hell, I did paperwork for a thousand plus monsters all from my dining room table."

"Though now he won't need them really" he agreed, "It would be nice to have someone to keep me warm at night." he rumbled, getting a near-blissful look on his face from imagining it.

"Tenny," she made a face, "That's so gross. I don't need to think about you and Asgore spooning. Yuuuck. How would you like it if I told you about what shenanigans Papyrus and I get up to in the bedroom?" Which admittedly wasn't much anymore. Sex while this big was awkward, even if she was really missing his touch. She looked just a little saddened by that too.

He smiled at her cheekily. "You do realize if you started bragging, I'd hunt him down, thump his shoulder and go 'that's my boy'?"

She snorts softly and gives him a mock-frustrated face. It does well to hide the slightly sad look that had invaded. "Ughhh men. Monster, human, all the same with you guys."

"Only when antagonizing my daughter-in-law." he chuckled gently, before he hugged her, "There, there, my dear."

She leaned into his hug with a soft sigh, even as he basically drapes over her with their position. "I guess that's payback for me being a little shit to you... Heh. You should still totally teach Lamaze."

"Yeah well don't expect a miracle." He huffed, pecking her head.

She nuzzled into him with a soft sound. "But you're full of them." She teased gently.

"Oh? How so?" he snorted, pecking her head.

"Mmm... You just are." She smiles secretively and boops the ridge where his nose would be.
He chuckled and sighed. "I don’t think my son could have picked a better woman to marry."

"Oh yeah?" She blinked up at him slowly, a smile on her face.

"For sure." he rumbled.

"How do you figure? I know there are plenty of other monsters who are good people. Probably would have given you much less complicated lives." She smiles up at him merrily. HAM brought a lot of drama to their lives.

"The pros outweigh the cons with you." He told her firmly, hugging her tight.

Grandpa hugs were best hugs.

"Mhmm~ and it has nothing to do with my balls of steel when it comes to sassing you, does it?" None of the other monsters sassed him like she did. She leaned into his hug. Grandpa hugs were the best hugs. "Ah- heh. The twins enjoyed your hug too. Heh. I swear they got your legs somehow with how hard they kick." She guided his fingers to a spot on her middle, nearer her pelvis, and laughed. "They have Paps feet though. Feel how big that foot is! They're going to get so big when they grow up. I'm going to know how my mom felt when I shot over her height." She chuckled.

He chuckled and shook his head gently, then he leaned back and grinned at her, "I bet you wouldn't believe me if I told you that of the three that are myself and my sons, i by far have the smallest sized feet?"

"I would have to call bullshit on that, Papa." She chuckled. Her eyes danced mischievously. "Do you have tiny little pixi feet?" She teased.

"No." he deadpanned her and lifted one of his feet, revealing that while yes it was nowhere near as long as the boys' feet, they were definitely wider.

"You might have shorter feet, but dude. You have paws. Your feet are wide as fuck." She gives him an amused look. "You are such a dork. Your wideness makes up for lack of length. Pap has the widest feet ever, and he's still only a size eleven. I'm pretty rusty on my mathematics, but I'm very certain that you have more surface coverage than both of the boys do. Ergo- your feet are bigger."

He huffed gently and rattled quietly at her. "I suppose you're right."

She gave him an amused look. "Eh, it's just feet. All I know is that all of you have big feet, and the twins have inherited this. Speaking of the twins, I need to shift. They're making my legs tingle." When they weighed heavy on her spine, she tended to get a tingly feeling in her legs. It didn't hurt. But it wasn't pleasant either. She shifted awkwardly adjusting herself until she was comfortable again.

He chuckled gently and helped her adjust, before he nuzzled her and purred softly.

She smiled gently, and settled down to relax with him. "So how has it been having a kid in the house again?"

"It's definitely interesting, I’ll give you that" he murmured, stroking her head gently, before he perked as he heard a soft jingle rise from his phone. "Hm?" he pulled his phone from his pocket, and then he smiled widely under his mask. "Ah. Of course, I’ll let her know."

"Let me know what?" She blinked up at him slowly. She stretched again, one of her hips popping painfully. They kept doing that, popping out of place and just generally being a pain. All it did was deepen her waddles. Supposedly it was part of her pelvis widening to prepare for kids. Though really, she already had 'childbearing hips' anyways. Eh. Hopefully Papyrus enjoyed her new shape after the twins arrived. "Was that Papyrus?"

"Indeed." The bigger monster nodded. "He said that there was something very important at your home that needed to be seen to immediately."

"Oh." She blinks, brow furrowing. "Shit. Alright." She shifted, managing to set the iced tea glass on the table, and made to get up. She had little luck though, even with the armrest to boost herself up. She couldn't get up. "Uh... I'm... stuck. Can you boost me?"

He chuckled gently and boosted her up without an issue. "Up we go."

"I have officially reached the stage where I am too fat to get up without help. Damn." She heaved a soft sigh as she gained her feet. She shifted her toes within her shoes, and then glanced up at Tenebris. "I had hoped to not need to rush home so soon, but I did enjoy tea and spending some time with you. Will you be alright cleaning up the glasses on your own?" Pap wouldn't call unless it was an emergency after all.

"I'll take care of it in a little bit." He hummed. "I'd rather see what all the hullabaloo is about."

"Alright." She nods. "Join me then?" She offers her arm to him cheerily. "It's a long waddle back. Unless you want to teleport...?"

"Teleporting works." He stood, and took her hand with a smile.

She laughs, and steps closer so she doesn’t risk losing her grip on him while he teleported them. "You know, the sneeze-teleport thing is annoying as hell. It would be cooler if I could direct it."

"Indeed so." he chuckled gently.

Once they teleported, Toki let go of his hand and let her body catch up with her. "Teleporting is always so disorienting." She chuckled softly. She shifted, and slowly made her way up the front steps. Toki padded to the front door, and opened it, motioning for the big monster to join her.

He smiled and followed her, but let her go first in opening the door.

She stepped inside, leaving him to follow, and slipped her shoes off at the entrance as usual. Propping her hand on her hip, Toki padded further in. "Pap? What was the thing you called Tenebris about?"

The house was dark, at least for a few seconds, before a light was switched and confetti was thrown into the air.

"SURPRISE!"

Waiting for her was a baby shower.

And in the middle of her living room sat a box that moved around on a single wheel. "Congratulations on twins, Toki darling!" It spoke up happily.

She bumped into Tenebris as she jerked back, a squeak escaping her as she startled. That was a talking calculator. A massive one. Alright then. "Thank you?"

Around the talking box were presents in general. They were separated into two piles, each one distinct as to who it went to. The living room had several monsters all waiting and grinning at her. Across the top of the room was a large ‘congratulations’ banner, addressed to both her and Caeruleus.

“Oh wow…” She blinked slowly. “You guys did all this…?”

"Indeed, Darling" The robot spoke happily, one hand over it's 'chest' as the other was aimed upward, "How else are we supposed to celebrate not one, but TWO Pregnancies at once?! Oh ho ho ho!"

"I never thought I’d see you again, Mettaton."

"Oh my goodness me! Tenebris Gaster it's good to see you again!” The box wheeled over to the duo and he smiled gently.

"Pleasure is mine. Ah, Toki, this is Mettaton," He then spoke next, "The star of the underground."

"Thaaaaat's me, darling!" The box did a spin and another happy sounding 'oh ho ho ho!' laugh.

Oh stars, this was Mettaton? He was so… square. Toki gave him a warm smile nonetheless, and propped a hand on her hip. “Well, It’s nice to meet you, Mettaton. I’m Tokiko Gaster, but you can call me Toki.” She hummed softly. “I honestly didn’t expect… well, this. Who’s idea was it to throw a baby shower?” She inquired curiously. Everyone got big grins, including Grillby where he was carefully checking the holes in the side of one of the boxes, and her eye-lights trailed across the room to locate her husband.

Aliquam was standing tall with a happy smile. "Nyeh heh heh heh~"

She gave him a slight grin. “Was it you, Pap? I now see why Tenebris called out of the blue for me to visit.” She shot the elder monster an amused look.

Tenebris had an innocent smile as he walked by her to join the others. "Better come in quickly. Cae got called too, he’ll be here shortly."

“Sweet.” Toki grinned. She shifted and padded to the couch, so she could go take a seat on it. “I’ll just take a seat then.” The couch looked good- and it got her mostly out of the way. Toki took a seat, and relaxed as she stretched out in front of her pile of gifts. She crossed her sore ankles, and nestled down, brushing a small pile of confetti off of the couch so it could cover the floor in more of it.

She would need to sweep or vacuum during the night once everyone went home.

It wasn't before the door once more and Cae entered, only to be surprised when everyone shouted out 'Surprise!' once more.

Safe to say it took him a little longer to realize what was going on, but when he did he smiled happily and went to Grillby, hugging him tightly.

Grillby placed a warm kiss along the skeleton’s temple, and smiled happily. “That would be why I had you watch the bar while I ran ‘errands’ today, Sans.” He purred.

Toki giggled softly and leaned into the arm of the couch. “They surprised me too, Cae. I wasn’t expecting a baby shower… But,” She glanced up to Papyrus, made eye contact, and then flicked her gaze to a large, large box that was from them to Sans, “It looks like we have your gift all prepared.” They’d decided long ago to give him the old family crib, since it was too small for twins, and they didn’t make them in the same style anymore. Her eye lights then flick to the square monster rolling around her living room. “I am surprised to see you here though, Mettaton. You’ve been so busy making movies, I didn’t expect to see you out and about this direction.” Not for something as simple as a baby shower. Though… he did look different from in the movies.

"Oh well you know, Darling, there's nothing that I wouldn't do for my darling Papyrus~"

"Nyeh heh heh, Mettaton please" Aliquam rubbed his head shyly.

"P'shaw, Darling! There's no business like show business but even then a celebrity like myself must have a heart!"

Toki arched her brows. “Darling Papyrus, hmm?” She gave him a curious look, and grinned. “That’s cute~ I’m glad you visited though, Mettaton. It’s nice to finally get to meet you. I know you’ve been busy with the other celebrities.”

"The pleasure is mine, my dear Tokiko, but little do you know this party is just getting started! Oh Tenebris, darling, would you mind?"

"Not at all." Tenebris moved over to behind Mettaton and there was a click before the robot began to do his ‘Oh ho ho ho!’ laugh once more.

"But just you wait Darling!" Without warning, the panels of the box began to shift and open. "This party is just getting started! And I’m going to make sure it's-" the robot transformed into a bipedal robot with an hourglass figure and hair that looks like it would have taken hours to do, a bright pink heart on his waist pulsing brightly. "- Absolutely BEAUTIFUL!"

Toki admittedly stared. That was… absolutely cool. She was admittedly a little jealous. She missed her hair quite a bit, and he had absolutely fabulous locks for being a giant metal being. But, alas, a skeleton with hair would be weird indeed. “Well… I know one thing that is absolutely beautiful.” She blinks at him. “Goodness me, I absolutely love your hair.”

Grillby just chuckled softly, and nuzzled Sans. “Go sit down, dear.” He purred. “This party is for you both.”

"Why thank you Darling, I ALWAYS make sure to look my best for my fans~" The robotic performer boasted proudly.

"Whatever you say, Grillbz.” Caeruleus rumbled gently, going to sit down and relax while Aliquam slid in to take a seat next to his wife.

Thankfully the couch was large enough for all three skeletons to sit on- though Grillby’s much larger frame might have some trouble squeezing in too. Toki chuckled softly, and leaned into her husband, lacing her fingers gently with his as she smiled happily. “I will admit, I am a little jealous of your hair. How do you keep it so shiny?” She wondered if it was made out of actual hair, or a type of metal filaments or something. He was a large monster- it would take a LOT of hair to make a wig for him.

Grillby smiled happily, and stepped up next to the pile of gifts. “I do not know the protocols for a baby shower, but… I think gifts are opened before cake is had…?” He looks uncertain, and glances to Papyrus for confirmation. The skeleton was better at keeping up with all of everything event related.

"Only the best MTT brand hair gel." he replied, before he smiled, "Oh yes, Darling, you simply must get to your presents, there's not another moment to lose!"

“I don’t think I’ve ever gotten anything that’s MTT brand.” She blinks slowly. “Well, I don’t have hair, so that might be why.” And she didn’t use polish or wax or whatever on her bones.

Grillby smiled slightly, and shifted down to collect his gift to Sans. “If I may go first?” He tilted his head down to Toki, requesting her permission, rather than assuming.

“Of course!” She chirps softly, giving him a smile as the box in his hand wiggles and makes a noise.

“Thank you, Sans,” Grillby purred, “This is for you.” He crouched down, and held out the large box. It had holes in the side, and something could be heard whining from within.

To say the least, Sans was now very curious as to what was put down in front of him, and he slowly reached out, untying the bow from the top before he pulled off the top of the box.

From the top of the box popped out the fluffiest puppy that Toki had ever seen. It was fairly big, hence the big box, and she identified it as a Samoyed puppy. Big dark eyes blinked up at Sans, and it yipped, before tumbling out of the box and into his lap. The curly tail started thumping happily against his lap, and it- a little male, Toki noticed- rolled over in his lap eagerly for attention. A bright blue bow was tied about his neck in the form of a collar.

Grillby smiled, and pulled the box back once the puppy was out of it.

Sans eyes widened, and he gave a quiet coo before he hugged the puppy. "Oh my god~"

“Do you like him?” Grillby asked quietly. He reached out to rub the puppy’s ears. “He needs a name, if you like him.”

The puppy was all too eager to lick San’s fingers and face and wiggle with absolute excitement in his arms.

Toki rubs Pap’s arm, and nuzzles him with an amused look. “I’ll protect you from the dog, love.” She teases him quietly.

"I love him~" Cae replied with a pleased rumble. "Can we call him Serif?" he asked Grillby.

Pap on the other hand shot Toki a look.

Toki gave him an innocent smile, and leaned further into him. “It’s just a puppy, love. He probably couldn’t lift one of your bones, let alone steal them.” Maybe his fingers- but she’d keep that quiet.

“We can name him whatever you like.” The fire elemental looks pleased. “Serif is a good name. I had been informed that pets are good for children, and I had hoped you might like a dog. I know you are more partial to them than cats.”

Serif yipped noisily, and slathered a slobbery kiss over Sans teeth.

Ali gave a soft huff. "I can defend myself well enough." he murmured, though he smiled, "Ah... Cae looks happy though."

"Heh heh heh... I love him, Grillbz~ He's so cute." Sans chuckled, hugging the Samoyed tightly.

“Oh that he does.” She smiled. She gently smooshed his shoulder. “Oh hush, Pap. I defend you, you defend me. That’s how marriage works.” She leans up to smoosh his cheek. “Which means you get to handle the things that scare me- and I’ll protect you from a precious puddle of fluffy puppy-dog.”

The puppy’s tail wagged even faster, burring into a fluffy mop of white as he squished closer to Cae.
Grillby grinned wider. “I’m glad.” He purred. “He was the best temperament of the litter that I got to see.” The dog had cost a pretty penny too- but Grillby made enough from the bar in order to get him the dog.

Aliquam huffed and nibbled her cheek lightly, smiling at her. "I love you~" he purred.

"Thank you so much, Grillby." Sans snuggled the dog gently, his grin wide.

Toki giggled softly at the nibble. “I love you too, Pap.”

Grillby hummed softly. “Serif is a good name. We’ll get a collar and a leash made for him soon.” He purred.

“That it is.” Toki smiled. “I vote we do gifts one person at a time. So... Grillby? Think you can slide Sans the big one next to the table? Yes that one- ah, careful! It's really, really heavy. It's addressed to you both though.”

Grillby noticed that it was also from Papyrus and Toki. He eased it over closer to Sans, and opened his arms. “May I hold Serif while you open gifts? Unless... Papyrus would like to hold him?” The fire elemental shot Papyrus an amused look. Yes, the tall skeleton’s troubles with Annoying Dog had been shared across the land- even to his bar.

Sans looked to Papyrus, who held Toki close as if to ward off the fluffy white dog. "I already have something to hold, thank you."

"Heh... Here you go, Grillbz." Sans spoke, holding Serif out.

Grillby took the fluffy pooch with an amused smile, and rubbed his ears. Serif settled, panting happily in his grasp.

Toki giggled as she was practically squished to Papyrus, and simply scooted to sit in his lap. “There. Now you’re holding ‘something’. ” She winked up at him, and curled her legs closer to him. She looked on excitedly. “Open it, Cae. It’s from Pap and I.”

Sans winked cheerily at her, and then set into opening the gift with gusto.

The present unwrapped to form a large box. The box was old and slightly tattered, but the picture, along with various children’s names, were visible along the front. The names were listed in order of birth, starting with Toki and ending with Souta, her youngest brother.

“It’s the family crib. My mom got it when I was born- and it’s been used ever since.” Toki said softly. “It’s too small to fit twins, but... We figured you might like it? It’s a solid frame, so it should hold little Sunshine there even as they grow bigger and bigger.” Which, with Grillby for a father, who was even larger than Papyrus, she was expecting it would probably grow pretty fast. “And... Well, you’re family too. It stays with family.” She smiles.

He smiled gently, "Heh... I love it... Thanks Tokes..."

“I’m glad.” She smiled warmly. She shifted closer to Papyrus, and nestled better into his side. “I’m sure you and Grillby can get it together. It won’t be like the Ikea Incident, I promise.” Her eye lights twinkled in merry amusement.

Caeruleus chuckled at that, and then looked up at Grillby, "That takes care of that, eh Grillbz?"

“Indeed.” The older monster chuckled gently. He scooted closer, and took a look at the box. “I am certain we can manage to put this together.”

“I’m sure you can.” Toki smiled. “Well! There’s lots of other gifts too. I think I see a very… sparkly… one from Mettaton for you, Sans?”

With the ever so quiet "oh ho ho ho" from Mettaton, Sans pulled over the glittry present and opened it up.

Sans was a little confused with what he pulled out, lifting up a can of ‘MTT Brand Fire Retardant’, while around fourteen more cans sat in the box. "Well… i cant say this wont be useful..." he chuckled softly, before he smiled, "Thanks, Mettaton."

"Oh my pleasure darling, but that's not all!"

Inside, and just under the large quantity of cans, was a delicately made quilt- that was quilted in a pattern that depicted Mettaton’s body. His square form was on one side, and his rather voluptuous other form was on the other side.

Toki blinked as it was pulled out. “Wow. He even detailed his boots…”

Sans smiled as he held it up, then he looked at Mettaton, "This is nice, Thank you~"

"My pleasure Darling~!"

Toki giggled softly.

Boxes were handed to Sans- and many of them had baby clothes of many sizes, toys for all different ages, and blankets galore. With baby monsters that could have claws and sharp teeth, things could get ruined quite quickly.

Toki blinked. “Hm… Goodness… That’s… a lot of blankets.”

Sans’ grin never faded throughout the whole thing, and by the end of it he was murmuring ‘thank you’s to everyone through the fabric on Grillby's chest, having needed his warm-bodied mate to come give him a hug.

The big monster had leaned onto the couch and gently rubbed his mate’s shoulders. The poor skeleton was a little overwhelmed, understandably, but Grillby handled it well enough. He crooned gently to him. “Are you happy?” He purred softly to him.

Sans did not respond vocally. He simply nodded quickly.

Toki smiled, and poked Papyrus gently. “If you can reach the boxes with me on your lap, I could open mine.” She hummed.

Grillby chuckled gently. “I would hand them to you, but I must tend to Sans.” He crooned gently to him again, and massaged between his shoulders.

“Pregnancy emotions can be overwhelming.” Toki nods sympathetically. “I would say it gets better, but it really doesn’t. I cry at the pillow-pets commercial still.”

"Allow me, Darling." Mettaton started with one of the presents, passing it to her gently.

“Thanks, Mettaton.” She smiled gently. Toki carefully hooked her fingers in the edge of the wrapping on the box after looking at the tag, and then carefully unwrapped it. She balanced the box on her belly as she set the wrapping to the side, and then carefully tugged it open. “This one is from Lana,” She hummed. She perked as she peeked inside, and tugged out identical baby blankets. “Awww!” They were done in orange and green, matching Toki and Pap’s magic colors. “Look, Pap! Matching blankets! And they’re big enough that they can use them even into toddling years. Awww~”

"Typical of Lana, she makes sure her products last for a long time.” Papyrus chuckled gently. "So cute." he agreed, squeezing her gently.

She smiled, though squeaked at his gentle squeeze. “That she does. Though they might not last so long if our little ones get my teeth or horns.”

“Careful now, Papyrus. Your mate might pop.” Grillby gave them both an amused look.

"She might be full, but she's not that full.” He playfully stuck his tongue out at Grillby before he leaned and nuzzled his face into Toki's neck. "Mmh. Well, I think you talked Lana into moving into the village, so that won't be a problem.”

“Considering how little we know of skeleton births, she might be ‘ripe’ as the saying goes.” The fire Monster squinted slightly, before sticking a flaming tongue out at Papyrus. He was going to have to relearn childish things- it had been a long time since Fuku was little, and a long time since he had needed to entertain her with silly faces.

“True that.” Toki giggled softly. “With as many cramps and odd sensations as I get, I certainly feel ready to pop. Of course size has something to do with that too. Heh… Once Lana’s all moved in, I might need to commission some shirts from her again. I no longer fit in your tank tops, Pap. Not without showing off an indecent amount of skin.” Which she didn’t mind when it was just her and him, but if she was out and about… Well, Toki was self-conscious of her size, so flaunting it wasn’t on her list of things she really wanted to do. She flicked her gaze to Mettaton as she set the first package to the side, and waited patiently.

"This is odd." Mettaton piped up, holding up a dark gray envelope that had 'Tokiko' on the front. "There's no present attached to it."

Wariness flitted across her expression briefly, but she hid it away. There was no way Cruelty would send her something- he was probably still seething over his failed attempt at showing her ‘betrayal’ with Tenebris. She held out her hand, and offered Mettaton a smile. “Well, sometimes physical gifts aren’t needed. Cards are a good expression of well-wishes too.” She hummed softly. “May I?”

He nodded and handed it over with a brilliant smile.

Toki took it carefully in hand, and investigated it thoughtfully. It felt solid, so she didn’t think it could be anything bad, but who knows. She slid her finger under the edge of the envelope’s lip, and pried it open, using heat to loosen the glue that held it closed. Once it was open, she carefully extracted it’s contents, and took a good look at it.

Inside, was a card, it's outside blank. Upon pulling it out would reveal another two small items in the envelope Paint sample cards.

The text in the card started with a bunch of symbols, but stopped early on, and instead, written underneath in eloquent handwriting, was the rest of the script.
My Dear Tokiko.

_I had noticed these paint cards on your kitchen counter, and I hoped to make things a little bit easier for you and Papyrus._

_Go upstairs and have a peek in the Children’s bedroom._

_Your loving Papa, Tenebris._

_P.S. I apologize about the wing-dings at the top, it has been a while since I’ve written else on paper._

Toki blinked at the items, and re-read the card again. Her teeth quirked up into a half-grin. “Oh goodness. Hey, Pap. Gimme a boost up- we’re taking a quick trip up to the nursery.” Her eye lights flicked over to Tenebris, and brightened considerably.

Tenebris was only smiling as he looked back at her, watching as Papyrus carefully helped her to her feet, Cae requesting Grillby to do the same.

Grillby helped Caeruleus to his feet easily, dusting him off and handing over the wiggly puppy once he was stable.

Toki settled heavily on her feet, her back throbbing as the weight of her middle tugged roughly on her spine. She kept the card and contents tucked in her fingers, and then waddled slowly for the stairs. Going up was easier than going down, so she made decent enough time going up- but really, the slowest shouldn’t be leading the way.

Still, once the train of followers was at the top of the stairs, Toki padded for the baby’s room, and then opened the door, curiosity flitting through her gaze.

Waiting for her inside was a painted room, two of the walls a gentle sky blue color, the other two a vibrant but non-eye-burning orange color. There were deep red curtains installed over the windows, and even the rocking chair looked painted over, before given a sealing layer to protect it.

Toki padded in, eyes brightening as she slowly waddled for the center of the room. Her eye lights trailed over the walls, taking in the colors that matched those that flashed in her belly from time to time. Her fingers came up, pressing to her cheekbones as she took it all in. The red curtains, the darker rocking chair, it all looked so… so…

Perfect.

Her eyes welled with happy tears, and she turned to peer back at the door where everyone was peeking in. “It’s perfect.” She whispers. “It’s perfect.”

Tenebris was standing in the back of the crowd, a gentle smile on his face as he watched her have her happiness.

Toki sniffled slightly and motioned Tenebris to come closer. Once he did, she slumped into him and hugged him as best she could. “Thank you.” She murmurs softly. “Thank you…”
He wrapped his arms around her and nuzzled her, not responding vocally while purring loudly to her.

Toki sniffled, and clung tightly to him. It was her turn to be overrun with emotions- but it wasn’t without cause.

Getting the painting done was a huge chunk of her nerves gone for her- now she and Papyrus could take a day eventually and get everything put together and the room all ready. Once it was ready, she could relax finally.

It might have been a small thing to someone else- but to the expectant mother, it was huge.

So he got to wear her happy tears as she stained the front of his turtleneck with them, while trying to calm down so she could open the rest of her gifts.
Toki walked away from the baby-shower fully stocked with clothes, blankets, and toys for the twins, just as Caeruleus did. She even got a couple new turtlenecks for later, since cold weather was supposed to start to set in.

Which was utter bullshit, she was certain. Instead of the cold spell, which would have been a damn reprieve, they got the exact opposite.

The heat kicked up again. The third week of August was turning out to be the hottest on record, with temperatures reaching upwards of a hundred and ten degrees. Everything was hot and miserable, and those on guard duty were stuck going in their lightest under-armor, lest the wolves with their fur roast alive.

Toki handled the heat well enough, but she couldn’t hide inside with the air-conditioning forever. She had things to do- and her hives sorely needed cleaning. Unfortunately, all of the tank tops no longer fit, and she had no desire to mutilate any of her nice turtlenecks just to make something that would keep her arms cooler.

On the plus side, at thirty-five weeks along, Toki was finally big enough to wear the Honey Pot shirt she got from the Maternity store so many months ago. She might have gotten it a little bit too big- but it fit now, and was loose enough that the thick, black material didn’t cling to her like a second skin.

And, if she had to say so herself, she looked damn adorable in it.

After Papyrus headed out for early morning work, Toki gave herself a couple hours to bask in the cool air in front of the straining air conditioner, before she gathered up her cleaning supplies and set out for the hives.

Wolfen came across her path as she was making the slow waddle out to the hives.

“Should you be out here in this heat?” He inquired lightly, tongue lolling out the side of his mouth. He was soaking wet, smelled horribly like wet-dog, but seemed to be in a better mood since his apparent dip in the river that ran around the edge of the village.

“Work is work,” She chuckled softly. “Just because it’s hot doesn’t mean my bees deserve to wallow in gross moss. Besides, cleaning my hives is literally the most relaxing thing.” Even if the sun was hot as hell on her shoulders, and the grass was dry enough that it crackled under her bare feet bones, she still had things to do.

“Work is work, amen to that.” He chuckled. “But work is work when you’re not massively pregnant. You’re supposed to stay relaxed at this point, Miss Toki.”

“That might be true, but you know me.” She beamed at him. “I’ll probably still be up and about doing things until the day I have these two. Besides that, skeletons are immune to the extreme temperatures.” She bluffs. That wasn’t entirely true. She could feel the cold particularly well when she was severely low on magic- but Papyrus had donated a little bit the night prior, so she wasn’t anywhere close to deficient. In fact, she felt great! The hot breeze swirled her skirt just enough to help provide some airflow to her legs, and her shirt was cute enough that she felt like damn near flaunting her belly- she was in a fabulous mood.

“Mmm, that is true. I’ve seen Papyrus out in the freezing cold and in the scorching heat- Hell, he’s in his chain mail right now, and no one else has even dared to touch anything metal.” The wolf shakes his head. “Your husband is quite the guardsmen.”

“That he is.” She nods with a proud smile.

“Mhm… Alright, well, you be careful, okay? You and those babies are precious, Miss Toki. You really ought to be looking into bed-rest at this point. You’re not nearly so large as the rest of us monsters.” Wolfen gave her an affectionate pat on the head, careful not to poke his paws on her horns.

“Bed-rest schmed-rest.” She makes a face at him and snorts. “I run the house while Pap runs guard patrols- Most of my ‘jobs’ aren’t nearly so taxing. Bed rest isn’t something I can really do though, without someone there to haul me out of bed when I need to get up.” A laugh escapes Toki. “Anyways, I need to get this done before my back starts to ache.”

“Back aches are a pregnant woman’s worst foe.” He nods. “Do you need any help with the bees?”

“Help would be fantastic, but no.” She shakes her head. “Something has had them distressed and spooked, and I don’t want anyone getting stung. They even got aggressive with Papyrus when he helped me get the honey.”

They kept swarming near the trees, and were forcing the guards to take a longer detour around their usual patrol areas because they kept chasing them in large swarms. Whatever was wandering around in the trees had them hugely upset, and until Toki could figure out what had them so upset, she didn’t want to risk anyone getting hurt. They tended to swarm over her and guard her when she was out there, so it wasn’t like she needed someone to protect her either.

Wolfen grimaces and rubs his arm. “Oh yeah, I know that. I got stung yesterday. I wandered too close to the swarming spots and paid for it.”

“Oh no- were you alright?” Worry and guilt tilted her mouth down.

“I was fine, yeah. Stings don’t bother me any.” He gives her a soothing smile. “Alright- you go tend to your bees. I’m on patrol near the house, so give me a holler when you go inside, and I’ll let Papyrus know you’re safe, okay?”

“Okay.” She nods. Toki gives him a smile, and wanders on to handle her hives.

The bees were, as she suspected, swarming widely over her apiary field. They parted like the sea for her to enter their folds, and then converged on her like a possessive dragon over its hoard. She smiled softly as they flooded her body, clinging to her skirt and clamoring over her belly.
They crowned her skull like they usually did, and she pried the lid off the first one as she set to cleaning them. Only one had the nasty moss, but the rest of them were overdue for a cleaning. Her pregnancy was cumbersome and it limited her energy sometimes- and the days where she had no energy were usually her days where she was supposed to be doing thing with the hive.

Toki giggled softly as the bees buzzed around her, and let them possessively check her over and keep an eye on her while she cleaned and tended to them.

Hours later, however, found Toki woozy and exhausted. Heat might never have bothered her largely before, but with the bundle of warmth in her middle, she found herself more receptive to the large quantities of heat that were being beamed down on them from the sun above.

The heat wore on her and wore on her, drawn in by the dark turtleneck she was wearing. Her pale skirt tried to keep her cool, but it wasn’t enough to keep her well enough. With all of her movements, bustling to and fro from the hives and scooping an cleaning gunk, her body was generating more and more heat. She was practically an oven.

Toki persevered, however, and managed to finish all of the hives. However, when she tried to head back to the house, she found herself staggering, head swirling as her vision wavered. The twins had long fallen still, the heat even too much for them. Nausea and disorientation flooded her.

Fuck. She should have had someone at least watch out for her.

Heat rolled off of her in waves, and she just managed to catch herself with her hands as she tripped. She braced herself, but dropped, barely managing to shift her landing so it was on her side in the grass instead of face down. She was not far from her hives. The bees swarmed in alarm, and a cloud of them descended on her as her mind faded from consciousness.

Papyrus had been on patrol with a fellow guard at this time, allowed to wear his chain mail rather than his armor as a whole. At first it seemed all was well and there was naught to worry about, but it quickly changed as he caught wind of what sounded like... Frantic buzzing...Oh no...

Toki.

With a newfound speed in his step, Papyrus quickly started for the beehives.

The apiary was abuzz with life; the air thick and cloying with distressed and aggravated drones. They swarmed around the air, though none of them went to touch the fallen lump at the center of the swarm.

Toki was visible between the swarm, the bees worked into an almost rabid frenzy with their caretaker indisposed. She looked to be napping in the grass- but she wasn’t moving at all, and her basket of tools was spilled across the dry grass next to her. The air around her seemed to waver, distorting with the heat that was collected around her.

The bees buzzing grew more agitated as Papyrus drew near, and they battered his armor and face aggressively.

The increase in noise did not even stir her, nor did the clank of his chain mail. She was still- horribly, horribly still.
"Oh stars... Toki!" he gently shooed away the bees and lifted Toki's form up, tensing as he detected the heat coming off of her. Oh no...

Toki groaned gently as she was lifted. Her bones were hot to the touch, almost fevered. She stirred, eyes opening just faintly before closing again. “Mm... Pap...? S’... S’ hot...” She groaned again, and her mouth fell open as she began to pant.

The bees buzzed angrily, and their cloud thickened again. They jabbed harmlessly at his armor and bones.

He slowly knelt once more and began to peel her clothes off gently. "Toki, you overheated..." he told her gently, stripping her bare before he picked her up again and began for the river.

She wasn’t quite unaware enough for her nakedness not to bother her, and she tucked her face into his chest with a distressed buzz that sent the swarm into another brief frenzy. “Noooo,” Toki groaned. “No naked...”

"Toki you need to cool down." he told her sternly, "Just trust me, okay?"

“I trust you…” And she did. But that didn’t mean her cheeks didn’t burn with an entirely different sort of flush, and she refused to meet his gaze. She knew she was overheated, her bones practically scalding and the twins still within her. Her arms folded over her chest, and she curled up shakily in his arms.

As he exited the Apiary, the swarm didn’t follow. They buzzed angrily, but remained within their designated zone. The river wasn’t far from the edge of the Apiary, and the guards hovering nearby looked on worriedly.

“Is she alright, Sir?” One of them asked gently.

"She collapsed from a heat stroke." he told them, walking to the edge of the water and slowly walking into it, kneeling down as to submerge her.

She groaned as the water washed over her, and shivered violently at the drastic change in temperature. Steam rolled off of her as she twitched, sockets opening. Cooling her externally was a rapid process against the cold water, even if it hissed and spat angrily.

“Dousing her in cold water is good fast term, Sir, but she needs to get inside and rest.” One of them approached, and stood at the edge of the water. They awkwardly swallowed. “So, uh… I can… take over your work shift for you, sir…?”

“Noo…” Toki groaned softly, water making her voice gurgle and be barely audible. “I make you miss too much work…”

He nodded gently. "I appreciate this, thank you." he told them with a faint smile.

Toki squirmed in his arms, and forced her way to the surface. She sputtered, shivering roughly, and crossed her arms over her middle. “Nn-n-n-n-nn…."

“Get your wife inside and relax.” The monster nods gently. “Maybe take a hot bath or give each other massages… Whatever the hell married people do.” They shrugged, and then stepped away. “Maybe get your dad over to check on her. Heat stroke while pregnant probably isn’t good.”

"A wise idea." he agreed, lifting her up gently out of the water. "Can one of you go let him know?"
“Sure, sir.” One of the wolves nodded, and began a slow jog around the walls to head for the doctor’s house.

Toki was marginally more aware once she was lifted from the water, and her fingers curled into his heated chain mail. She squinted up at her husband. “Papyrus,” She murmured, bare bones uncomfortably displayed for all to see, “You don’t have to take time off work. Just… get me inside and I’ll be fine.” At this point she just needed rest, she hoped. If she were human, she would need lots of fluids, but… A skeleton with heat stroke is another thing.

"Out of the question." He told her sternly, "I am staying with you to ensure you recover."

“You miss a lot of work because of me as it is.” Toki huffs right back at him, sockets closing as the heat of the sun works to dry her bones alongside her magic. The air is hot, and it makes her head fuzzy feeling. She tucks her shoulders, and tries to practically disappear in his arms as she notices a few of the guards glancing at her.

Of all the times to be naked and self-conscious, it had to be now.

"You're going to miss more when the twins are here…” She wasn’t sure if he had limited days off or not, but surely he would be approaching his limit by now if he did.

"At least I would still be here for you at a moment's notice." He scolded lightly, "I might be a guard, but I'm your husband too."

“I know you are.” Toki huffed softly against his chest, but stopped her fussing. His worry was justified, really, and she didn’t feel like starting an argument over it when she felt faint. Things might have ended up a little fuzzy on her end, but she focused again when they were back at the house.

“Whoah… When did we get home…?”

He didn't answer, just cradled her as he hefted her inside, and got her into a cool shower to keep her from reheating too fast.

The cold water was not welcome at all, and she twisted slightly in his arms. “Papyrus,” she huffed, “That’s cold… I just need to rest, not be dunked in cold water.” Dousing her in more cold water wasn’t what she thought she needed.

The twins shifted faintly though, as the cold water made her belly shiver, and she dropped her fingers to touch the fevered flesh. They had been so still… Toki’s sockets drooped slightly, and she shuddered again. An ache traveled across her bones, the sort of ache that happened to someone who wasn’t feeling well. She shudders and sighs softly.

He slowly rubbed her stomach, cooing worriedly as he rested his head on her shoulder, "I'm sorry, Toki..."

The twins shifted just slightly again under his hands before falling still again.

Toki swallowed slightly, and nuzzled her skull to his as he cradled her in the shower. “It’s okay, Pap… The only thing I’m moderately upset about is having been stripped naked. I’m sorry I made you worry… I didn’t mean to get this bad. I was heading back to the house to rest when I got really dizzy and fell.”

"Your clothes felt like they had come right out of the dryer, I didn’t know what else to do..." he murmured.

“Tossing me in clothes and all might have been a start.” She murmured softly. She sighed. “It’s alright, Pap. You were worried. Just… Don’t strip me naked in public again, okay? Some days I’m not as conscious, but lately…” Lately she had been. She’d been feeling her size more and more, and while she loved her twins, she was… well… Her body wasn’t the same as it used to be, most certainly, and she was aware that there were some aspects that wouldn’t be attractive.

"It didn’t come to me. I’m sorry." he murmured, holding her close while gently rubbing her stomach, letting his magic seep into her sides.

“No more apologies,” she said softly. “You reacted instinctively, and I know this. It’s okay, Pap… Really, it is.” She nuzzled him gently, and let him tend to her. It soothed her, and him no doubt, while she reclined in his grasp.

The twins didn’t stir, even for his magic, and she sighed softly. Her middle was hot to the touch, so it was considerable that they were less active when they were hot too. Warmth was good up until a certain point, and they had passed that point a while ago.

“You’re going to rust.” She murmured softly, hooking her finger lightly in his chain mail. She tugged softly on the chain mail, and sighed up to him. “I’m cooler now, Pap. I need to cool off the rest of the way much slower though. Lets go dry off, okay? Your dad will probably be here soon, and I really am not interested in being nude around anyone but you right now.”

"Heh... alright, hang on." he kissed her head and laid her down in the tub as he went to change.

Toki didn’t stay stationary. Settled in the tub or no, she wanted out. Though… She was a bit stuck. Her middle kept her weighed down, like a turtle stuck on it’s back, but it didn’t limit her legs from turning off the shower that he had left on.

Toki grasped the sides of the tub and shakily tried to lift herself upright, at least so she could sit. Her arms shook slightly, trembling from her earlier fainting spell, and she toughed it out enough so she could sit up.

He came out again after a while, just wearing a pair of shorts over a pair of boxers as he came over with a towel. "Toki... Hey...”

“Hm?” She glanced up at him, eye lights dim. Sitting up made her a bit dizzy, but she was fine enough. “Ah, towel. Help me up so I can dry off?”

He nodded and slowly helped her up and out of the tub. “Careful,” He murmured softly.

Toki eased out onto the bathroom mat, her legs shaky but stable enough. “I will be,” She assured him gently. She still felt hot and flushed, like she had been far too active, but the cold water had done a lot to cool her off externally. The insides of her bones, and the mass of heat bulging out from between her ribs and pelvis, were not quite as cooled. Toki cycled air through her nasal cavity, and then carefully began to dry herself off.

She kept one hand on his arm to keep her balance, but was swift enough in drying her body off. Once she was dry, she tucked the towel on the towel rack so it could dry, and turned to him. “Alright… Well, I need something to wear… I don’t have any thin turtlenecks.” She muttered. And all of the tank tops were now basically too small to fit over her belly. “So maybe… I dunno...” One hand came to cradle her skull, and she buzzed softly. “It’s a bit hard to think.” She was still dizzy.

He smiled and offered her a pair of shorts. "I got something from Cae's recent load of fresh laundry. His hips are wider than mine, so these should fit.”

“Mmmkay…” Her shorts were tight across the middle on the best of days. She took the offered pair of shorts, and leaned against the wall so she could slip them on without losing her balance. Cae’s shorts fit damn near perfectly, sitting half way up her middle as she adjusted the elastic waistband. “Well, they fit.” She mused slightly, and crossed her arms over her bare ribs and upper part of her stomach. Toki remained leaning on the wall, and closed her sockets for a moment to let her dizziness calm down.

He chuckled, took a moment to collect the damp towel, and then shook it out before he draped it over her shoulders. "Here, does this work for now?"

She looked like some very overweight skeleton from a locker room commercial. Toki offered him a tired smile and adjusted the towel over her shoulders. It didn’t really leave her comfortable, but she didn’t have access to a shirt that wasn’t either too small to fit over her belly, or too thick for her to cool down. Being fussy didn’t get anything done- it was easier just to roll with it. “I guess, yeah. Lets head down stairs… though you might want to keep a hand on me. I’m still really dizzy.” Dizzy plus stairs was a bad combination.

He nodded gently. "I’ll get you some ice packs to keep cooling you down.” he told her.

“Just put me on the couch and I should be fine.” The air conditioning blew almost directly onto it, so it would help her cool off rather quickly. Toki shifted, heaved a soft sigh, and then half walked, half staggered out of the bedroom. “I feel very dehydrated, but skeletons don’t have set amounts of water they have to take in.” She mutters. “… Mmm… Maybe a glass of water with those ice packs…” They needed to get down the stairs first, and they kept… moving… Or at least looked like it to her. She wasn’t thrilled with the prospect of trying to go down them.

"Of course." he answered.

He had to aid her in going down the stairs. Not only could she not see where she was stepping, but looking down made vertigo swish through her. Papyrus ended up going first, and letting her rest her hands on his arm as he guided her down.

“You really do need rest, Toki.” Papyrus murmured gently to her.

“I know, Pap. I know. I’ll rest when I get down, okay? But we do need to go get my cleaning supplies out of the apiary tonight when it’s cooler.” She sighed softly.

They made it down the stairs just barely before the front door open and Tenebris appeared in the main room. "Toki!"

She hadn’t even gotten to the living room, she lamented as she took the last step off the stairs, and she was going to get fussed over even more. “I’m here, Tenebris.” She tucks the towel a bit better over her shoulders, and covers up as best she can. Toki is, to her credit, on her own feet, even if she’s bracing against Papyrus every so often.

"Tokiko Nara-Gaster…” Tenebris rattled at her in a scolding manner as he came over, gently taking her from Papyrus. He guided her with quick but careful steps over to the couch, and got her seated. Getting her settled wasn’t hard, and she sighed as she was promptly seated while her husband headed off to the kitchen to no doubt get her water and as many ice packs as he could fit between her bones. Being moved so quickly didn’t do well for her dizziness, but she did get to bask in the cool air from the air conditioning unit much quicker. “Mmm… I’m sorry I worried you, Papa.” She said the term of endearment in the hopes of his lecture not being so fierce. “I’m okay though, really, I’m just a bit dizzy.”
"Didn’t I tell you not to do your aviary duties without someone watching you?!” He insisted.

“Technically you said I couldn’t do them alone… I think… Nothing about someone having to watch me.” She tucked her chin with a sigh. “I would have been okay,” She insists gently, “if it wasn’t so hot… And if I hadn’t have been in a black turtleneck…” Toki grunts softly, and keeps her hands tucked along the edges of the towel to keep it in place.

He sighed gently, "Toki." He scolded gently, "Think about the children."

“I didn’t think the heat would get to me that much, Tenebris. Skeletons are supposed to be unaffected by the extremes, right?” Thinking about the risk to her children, the fact she nearly fell on them, and how still they were in her belly, made her hands tremble. Her sockets pinched tight, tearing up slightly, and she refused to meet his gaze. “I was heading inside to rest and cool off…” She had finished her task, and she’d been ready to call it a day- but apparently hadn’t called it soon enough. “I just… wasn’t quick enough.” She whispered softly. “I can’t change what happened. You don’t need to make me feel worse about it- trust me, I already feel terrible about it. I never… I didn’t intend to put them at risk. I would never, ever put them at risk. I guess… I just didn’t think that this was a possibility. Cleaning the hives hasn’t ever been too much of a task before."

Cleaning and tending to her hives had always been a relaxing pastime for her- but with the heat and her pregnancy, it likely wasn’t going to be anymore.

“Maybe… Maybe I shouldn’t be out there alone anymore though…” She muttered softly.

He reached up and cupped her cheekbones gently. "Toki..." he hushed gently, before he rested his head on hers. His chest expanded and contracted in a long, drawn out sigh, and Tenebris closed his eyes momentarily. "With everything that has happened... Will you promise to be careful?" he asked.

“I can’t be more careful if I tried to be.” She says softly, her teeth tilting down in a sad frown. She was careful- she was taking more and more breaks, finding herself slipping into impromptu naps… The only thing she could think of would be essentially bed rest, or house arrest of some kind. But Tenebris surely wouldn’t try to tell her to do that… would he? “I’ve been resting more and more, and trying to stay away from stress… But I’ve neglected my hives for too long, and it wasn’t fair to them…” She whispered softly.

He smiled at her gently. "I have an idea." he told her, slowly taking a step back before he focused his magic. A skull slowly appeared nearby and opened blue-purple eyes that blinked, before lifting itself and looking around. Tenebris touched his snout, settling the beast easily. "How about this..." he started, "This is Garrus. He can stay with you and keep you company."

“Uh…” She leaned back slightly and stared at the decent sized skull with a growing level of concern. There were a lot of things in her house that it could knock over, and she wouldn’t be able to bend over and pick the fallen item up. She didn’t even summon her critters here, besides Stripe. Sugar would have to see everything, and the wingless Hell Hornet would probably knock everything over. Her brother’s ashes were up on the fireplace mantle, and she didn’t want to risk those breaking. “Keep me company?”

"Indeed. If you want to go out again, take Garrus with you." he told her, "He will stay close by, make sure nothing happens."

“… So basically a babysitter…?” She queried lightly, looking over the large bestial skull quietly. So far, she’d seen that each summoned critter had a different personality. She’d never really interacted with Tenebri’s blasters, but Toki was fairly familiar with her own, and with Papyrus’ blasters. Toki’s brow furrowed slightly. Well, it wasn’t bed rest or house arrest. But being babysat by a large, sentient laser-skull was slightly humiliating in a surprisingly odd way. Huh. Perhaps that’s what kids felt like, having a babysitter when they were older. “He’ll have to be careful in the house,” she warns. “I can’t bend over anymore to pick up something if it gets dropped or broken.”

And if Han’s ashes got scattered because his urn got broken… Well, she would be rightfully upset.

"He wouldn’t come inside. You're safe inside." he told her, tapping her nose gently as he chuckled.

She pursed her teeth at him and fluttered one of her hands at his fingers so he didn’t make her sneeze. Teleporting at a sneeze was a serious problem. So was fluttering her fingers, because it made her dizzy, and she had to stop and close her sockets so it would pass. “It’s hot outside,” She says, “and you want to leave him outside? That’s just not fair to him to sit outside, waiting for me to do something. Really- it’s a nice idea, but the blasters are sentient too.” A bored blaster was asking for trouble, surely.

The creature rattled gently and rested itself on the floor. "Rrrr."

"He would not be summoned all the time, silly." Tenebris chuckled. "But if you'd rather he not be your babysitter, you could always summon Sugar."

Toki’s eye lights flickered over to Garrus as he made a noise and basically flopped on her floor. Oh no. He was cute.

“Summoning Sugar would be a terrible idea. She’s basically a puppy. A very large, very, very warm puppy that thinks she is a lap dog. Things would be broken, or the guards would get pounced for attention.” The only time she wasn’t basically a Labrador in a giant bee suit was when she was on the aggressive. “Can I just… Not have a babysitter? I’m thirty-two. I am really, really past the age where I need a babysitter.”

"You're large enough to look as if you're having a litter of at least four, Tokiko Gaster." he told her sternly, "Until this heat fades, I don’t want you alone."

“But I’m never technically alone. I have two cats.” That might have come out a bit saucy. She took a deep breath, sighed, and scrubbed a hand down her face. It came to rest on her middle, which was still not active. “Sorry- I didn’t mean to be sharp. Just… Look, I know I’m big. I can’t even get off the couch without help. But I’m not going to be doing anything strenuous for a long while, I promise. Other than feeding the bees and harvesting honey, I don’t have to handle my hives until it’s time to put them up for the winter.” Toki murmured softly. “Feeding the bees is a one person job- but I usually have Papyrus to help me harvest honey. Isn’t that right, Pap?” Her husband was taking a while in the kitchen, so there was no telling what he was making. All she needed was a glass of water- but when he fussed… Well, he fussed.

"Yes, dear." Was called from the kitchen.

Tenebris sighed gently, "Toki, Just be careful… you're my daughter and I love you very much. I just want to make sure you're safe… but I think there's a point where looming to watch over you might reach a creepy point." he joked lightheartedly.

“Well, if I see you watching through the window like a creeper, I might set Clover on you, even if I love you very much too.” She joked back gently. Toki sighed softly, and rubbed her middle. “I'll be careful, okay? With the exception of feeding the bees, I’ll stick to doing apiary work when Papyrus has a day off. Gives me time to work on my next novel anyways."

He chuckled at that, giving her a bemused look, and then looked up to see Papyrus walking back.
The tall skeleton had a small smile on his face, and his arms full of things. "Toki, sorry I took so long, but I decided to cut you some fruit to eat." he told her, sitting by her and offering the plate to her.

Toki took the plate and the ice packs he had brought. The icepacks were nestled along her sides so she could cool the twins off faster, and she gave him a warm smile. "Thanks, Pap. The fruit was a sweet thought." She murmured gently. The towel was shifted and draped across her front, because fruits were ungodly messy when you had teeth like a crocodile. Toki balances the plate on her belly, only to have to catch it as a hard thump from inside nearly spills it.

Relief floods her. The twins were moving again, and letting her know just how much they appreciated the blast of heat to their home. "Heh… There you two are. I was starting to worry."

Tenebris had knelt before Toki to check her over, but smiled gently when the twins kicked. "They weren't happy." He decreed with a joking tone, smiling up at her.

She smiled back at him, tension slowly bleeding from her. Exhaustion crept over her features, and Toki hummed softly. "They got overheated too. Now that they’re cooling off, they’re going to let me know just how upset they are.” Over the soul links, she could feel just how actually upset they were. And they were very, very upset and slightly scared. She hummed softly, and nibbled a piece of fruit. The cool juices were quenching, and she sighed at the sweet taste. “At least we know they’re okay now. Definitely no desire to go back out in the heat again any time soon… So Garrus won’t be needed…”

Tenebris smiled and rested his head on her stomach, letting his throat vibrate the ecto-flesh under her.

Toki gave him a bemused look, and sighed softly. The vibration tickled, but all it did was stir up the twins. They squirmed and fussed grumpily, and Toki took the time to kick her legs up and rest them in Pap’s lap. She nibbled her fruit until she was sated, sharing pieces with Papyrus and Tenebris as they worked to finish the plate.

Tenebris had taken his slices with thankful purrs and light chirps as he relaxed with the duo.

The longer she sat there, covered in ice and in direct line of the air conditioner’s air flow, the cooler she got. As each degree dropped from her bones and ecto flesh, Toki got more tired. Heat stroke was an exhausting venture, and eventually even the twins stopped their angry fussing and instead settled heavily in her middle to rest and recover their energies.

“Mmm… The dizziness is going away.” She informs the both of them softly, and offers the last couple slices of apple to Papyrus and Tenebris. She was full, and had no desire to finish it off.

"Thank you for coming, Father." Papyrus murmured softly.

"Oh no problem, Papyrus.” The elder responded softly. “None at all..."

“I hope we didn’t interrupt whatever you were up to.” Her eye lights flicked over to Tenebris, as she discarded the sticky towel. Topless she would have to go for now, it seemed. She wasn’t going to wear it while it was sticky.

Toki’s arms crossed over her bare rib bones, and the green glow of her belly escaped the confines of Caeruleus’ borrowed shorts. The glow was bright and healthy, letting the world know that despite the issue with the heat, she was still doing quite well. “Hey, Papyrus? We might need to put a call into Lana for some tank-tops, or lighter turtlenecks.” She liked the turtlenecks because it kept a lot of her bones covered. Things bumping against her bones felt weird, and with the clothes, there was the buffer space that her magic tended to fill out that kept things from actively bumping into them. “I’m really hoping they come soon. I’m outgrowing everything again.”

"I sent her a text, she’ll be here soon enough.” he replied.

“I didn’t mean today. Good gods- it’s too hot to be making a sheep monster go out in that.” Lana was covered in wool- the poor woman was probably sweltering in the heat. Toki chuckled softly, and stretched her toes. She rubbed them lightly against his thigh, and glanced over to Tenebris. “Likewise to you. I know you get cold easy, but isn’t it too hot for you to be in a turtleneck? You do have fleshy bits to you.”

"Well yes..." he leaned back, "I suppose snuggling with your stomach cooled me down in the long run, though..." he then moved back and straightened enough to free his wrists from his turtleneck, before he disappeared in his turtleneck, coming out the bottom as he shed the sweater.

He leaned his head back and sighed as the pent-up heat escaped from the clothing, "Hah..."

Toki shook her head with a bemused sigh. She did ogle him a little bit- it wasn’t often he stripped out of his turtleneck. He had on his usual undershirt tank top, but it was fairly tightly fit over his shield and body type. Her father-in-law was built. “The house is cold compared to usual,” She warns, “So if you get cold, I can warm your shirt for you before you put it back on.” For now though, she slowly slid down on the couch, her legs slowly encroaching more and more into her husband’s lap. Toki let off a tired sounding sigh, eye lights drifting over the both of them quietly. “Mm...

Aliquam had a settled smile as Tenebris sat down at her other side, rumbling gently as he folded his turtleneck and kept it on his lap. "Duly noted, my dear."

“Mhm...” Toki hummed softly. She wiggled some, and then wiggled her fingers at her husband. She brushed them softly over his ribs to draw his attention, and then smiled softly at him. “Think I can sit in your lap?” That was one thing she enjoyed about being smaller than Aliquam- she tended to be able to be tucked right into his chest. He was amazing to snuggle with, even without his shirt creating magical muscles to relax on. Aliquam had the nicest ribs ever.

"Oh of course!” Aliquam gently scooped her up and pulled her close, nuzzling her with a 'Nyeh~'

Toki snuggled up close to him and relaxed, her bare bones against his. She threaded her fingers gently in his ribs, clinging to him contently as she nestled close. The twins kicked at him as her middle brushed his bones, but she figured he wouldn’t be as bothered. It wasn’t the insides of his ribs this time. Toki’s eyes flicked over to Tenebris, and she gave him a soft smile, before nestling her face into Papyrus’ side. “Thanks, Pap. I might nap on you, by the way.” He was comfortable and safe- and he made her relax just by holding her. She ached some still, but it was less of an ache with her wrapped in his arms.

"The more comfortable you are, the better." he purred to her, cradling her in his arms effortlessly.

Toki nodded and chuckled softly. She nuzzled close, and settled down to wait for Lana.
Chapter 67

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This is a NSFW chapter. One that’s long overdue, I think. Pap and Toki could use some loves, really. Also this next chapter might come a bit late- Silver managed to cut herself pretty nicely with a new knife, so writing isn't easy for her right now.

Silverwing Notes: well, there's one way to take care of your wife, and there's another way.

Pap's proceeding to do both in this chapter, hehe XD

Doing the laundry was a daunting task sometimes. Not only were there usually mountains of clothes, but there were often bed sheets, quilts, and comforters to do as well. Toki, who was pretty much monitored by everyone, hadn’t been able to get the laundry done during the intense heat wave because she was supposed to be resting.

Between all of Pap’s clothes, and the new ones that Lana had made for her, and the fact that the bed sheets needed their weekly change, Toki’s washing machine was working overtime.

Usually, she spent his day off with him. They would read, cuddle, watch shows, or go for walks. Whatever really tickled their fancy- but it was his day off, which meant he was in the house in case she needed him. So, Toki could actually get house chores done, while Papyrus swept the house and removed any cobwebs from the ceilings.

She really was not fond of basically vegetating on the couch.

On the opposite side, she got six chapters written on her novel, so that would make her editors happy.

Toki still had a lot of laundry left to do, though. She’d gotten fresh sheets on their bed up stairs, so there was a pile of sheets set between the wall and the washing machine. Those would be done once she finished clothes.

Unfortunately, being large and doing laundry made everything an interesting task. She turned too swiftly, and knocked the clean clothesbasket right off the top of the washer, where she had just finished drying them with her magic and getting them folded.

“I just finished folding those.” She sighed sadly. They were now all over the floor- which was thankfully clean- and needed to be put away.

Getting them put back was a task and a half, and she ended up summoning Stripe. The bee could hand her smaller things, like socks, under garments, and lighter weight shirts. Stripe was useful like that- but the bee was also developing a mischievous side the more that she got to be out and about in the human world.
Toki would reach for a garment, and it would be flung at her, accompanied by an amused feeling over the link between their minds.

Toki retaliated, of course, by dropping washcloths on the large insect, and letting her find her way out. Making laundry fun was something that didn’t happen often, after all- and who could say that they spent their laundry day playing around with a guinea pig sized green fire bee?

All was well until the damned sock slid under her bare feet.

Tile was, she lamented, probably a poor choice to have for a floor when one was made entirely of bone. She’d only chosen it because tile didn’t burn like wood floors or carpet tended to, and under the tile was solid cement. Toki had designed her house to be damn near fire resistant, since it was made out of brick and cement, both of which did not burn easily.

But, alas, it was not good for bare bones, along with a freshly cleaned and soft sock.

Her foot slid out from under her, and she tumbled back with a startled squeak.

Toki landed right between the wall and the washing machine, and wedged in tight. Her saving grace was the mound of sheets and old blankets that needed to be washed, but she still bumped her head to the wall with a soft thump.

And then, to her horror, she found she was quite thoroughly stuck.

Stripe buzzed with laughter at her expense.

“Oh fuck off, Stripe.” Toki squirmed, but was unable to get enough of a grip to try and hoist her body up. The weight in her middle kept her pinned, and a slightly frustrated look flitted through her soul. She didn’t like to be so dependant on others- and damn it, she should be able to do laundry on her own!

The bee buzzed at her again, amused, and then went to go presumably fetch Papyrus, while Toki’s frustration grew.

Papyrus was curious when Stripe came to him, piping away in her laughter, but it was soon discovered as to why she was enjoying herself so much. "T-Toki?!!"

Toki looked up at her husband with frustration clear on her face. “Papyrus.” She responds to his bewildered exclamation of her name. “I’m… I’m stuck.” She admits finally, glaring at the bee that was piping with amusement. A swish of her hands, and Stripe disappeared back into her hell verse.

Her laughter echoed back to Toki even from there.

“I’m really getting tired of getting stuck…” She murmured softly.

"Oh my stars, Toki.” Papyrus couldn’t stop the chuckle that escaped him as he leaned over and gingerly tugged her to her feet.

Toki wore a look of mounting upset as she was set upright. She straightened her tank top and huffed, tugging up her pants. The sock that had made her slip was abandoned to the pile of fallen things. “Sorry I interrupted your house cleaning.” She spoke softly, evenly, and it did well to hide her upset.

She understood that she was huge, and only growing bigger with each day, but it was ridiculous. She couldn’t even do laundry anymore without someone watching, or she could slip and get stuck for hours. Toki didn’t have her phone on her while in the house most times.
Toki could feel the onslaught of a mood swing hitting her again, and she found herself sniffing. It was utter bullshit. “I think I’m going to take a break on laundry and just… go take a nap or something.”

He cooed and cupped her cheeks, gently stroking them with his warm finger bones. "Oh Toki…” he murmured, "Come on. We're going to take a break." He told her gently.

"You don't have to stop what you were doing, Pap." She sighs softly into the kiss, and leans her face into his palms. "You always get derailed from what you're doing."

"I don't care.” He gave her an affectionately stern look. "You're coming with me, and we are going to cuddle."

"I'm not going to say no to cuddles.” She sighs softly, and adjusts the hem of her tank top. "I need to rest anyways. The twins are fussy today." They were starting to wake her up at night sometimes—though she hadn’t told Papyrus. He needed sleep after all, and given his job... Well, a good night's rest went a long way. Toki shifted, and offered her hand to him. "I could use some cuddles..." She was feeling big, awkward, and remarkably like a whale. A little tender time with her husband was needed.

"Well cuddles are what you're going to get, Toki." Papyrus hummed. He took her hand gently and walked with her to the sofa. Sitting down and getting comfortable, it wasn’t long before he extended his arms to her with a warm look. “C’mere you.” He purred.

The sofa wasn't what she had in mind, for her back did ache something nasty and the softness of the bed was a hard lure to ignore, but it would work to cuddle with Aliquam.

She joined him carefully, grabbing a pillow to tuck between her legs so she could lean into him comfortably. Toki settled into his hold, and nestled into his side with a soft sigh. Nuzzling her face into his chest, she peered up at him quietly. She used to fit better in his arms, but her current size limited her. "Thank you."

“Of course,” He purred gently, “I love you.”

"I love you too.” She sighed softly. She shifts, struggling to find a comfortable position after a short while. She grumbles suddenly. "This is ridiculously stupid." She should be able to enjoy cuddling with him, damn it.

He looked at her, and then smiled and hugged her tighter, before slowly rolling onto his side. Shifting his legs, he opened his midsection to her a bit more, smiling as he moved to slip her swollen stomach into the empty space of his midsection.

She was gently sprawled against him, and she settled easily enough. The position wasn't one that they did often, because the twins kicking the insides of his ribs or his spine usually disturbed him. She still enjoyed it nonetheless, and she relaxed a little bit as she sprawled over his chest. The twins in her belly squirmed against his bones, but not as bad. They were targeting her spine mostly. "This is good." She hummed gently. "Thanks... I'm sorry I’ve been so..." Fussy, self-conscious, moody, huge, all the words came to mind but she wasn't sure which one to voice.

“Psh…” He let off a soft noise of dismissal, and peppered her cheeks with warm kisses from his teeth.

His dismissal bothered her just slightly, for he tended to do that a lot. Toki hummed softly as he peppered her cheeks with kisses. "I'm still sorry. I'm just... Well... Feeling off. Big and awkward and... Ugh..." She mutters the last bit mostly to herself, and has to pause as one of her teeth hooks on his shirt.

“Oooooooooh.” He hushed her gently, and pressed more soothing kisses to her skull.

She didn't want to be hushed, or for it to be brushed off. It was weighing on her, her size, how she looked... And she honestly, for the first time in a long, long time, was feeling unattractive. Still, she bit her metaphorical tongue, and let him kiss her. She fell silent and simply sighed, glancing down at his shirt and just trying to relax.

Papyrus tugged her a little closer, adjusting her so she was as flush as flush could be considering her middle, and then rumbled a soft, loving purr to her. “I still think you’re beautiful, Toki.”

"I don't feel beautiful." She admits quietly, tucking her face against his chest. "I feel big and awkward and everything always aches. None of that is hardly attractive." They hadn't even been... Well, intimate. Not even after their wedding.

Aliquam looked at her for a long time, contemplating his actions, and then he rolled them again so he now sat over her. He was propped up by one of his arms. "Tokiko Gaster," He growled softly as he pressed his face into her neck bones. "You are beautiful. Your eyes, your smooth bones, your life... Their lives." He stroked her stomach gently, feeling as his children squirmed and fussed within her. "You are so magnificent."

Being suddenly rolled on the couch was an interesting experience. Toki was thoroughly pinned under him, and not just because he was heavy above her. Once on her back, she was like a turtle. His growl sent trembling shivers through her bones, and she rattler softly as he pressed his face to her neck.

His words made her soul warm, and it glowed softly in her chest in response. "They are magnificent," she agreed, humming as they angrily squirmed in her middle. Her breathing hitched slightly, and she sighed, bringing a hand up to cradle the back of his skull. Her fingers stroked over his neck gently. "I know you think so... And normally I wouldn't really care what I look like, but... I don't know. I just... Don't feel beautiful. Even my teeth are bothering me, and I accepted those months ago."

He licked her neck and hissed softly, "Shush." he told her sternly, "You're beautiful." He would tell her a thousand times over and over again if he had to.

The lick to her neck made her squeak, legs twitching against his. Her fingers came up, brushing his ribs slightly through his shirt. "So says you." She flicked her tongue out and ran it lightly over his skull in response, also rubbing the base of his skull as she did so.

"Beautiful, amazing, wonderful, kind; all of those describe you perfectly." He murmured into her neck bones, "I love you so much, Tokiko."

"I love you too, Papyrus." She heaved a soft sigh under him and nuzzled her teeth into the top of his skull. "You are a truly wonderful husband, you know that? I don't think I could ever ask for a better one." Though she'd never dream of it. Aliquam was hers to have and to hold, to love and protect. She loved him with all of her soul.

"You're more than I could ever ask for in a wife, and yet nothing will make me give you up." He purred as he kissed her head gently. "I love you so much..."

She shifted his kiss, and kissed him soundly back in return. “I love you too.” She smiles softly, and strokes his cheek warmly. Her bones glided smoothly over the strong points of his cheekbones, and she leaned up to kiss him again.

He smiled and met her midway, leaning into the kiss as he pulled her close. "You're beautiful... wonderful~"

She flushed a little bit, green highlighting her cheekbones as her magic made her practically glow under his body, and buzzed warmly up to him. Her fingers slid back to his neck, and she stroked them gently along the vertebrae near the base of his skull. Toki’s free hand slid down and stroked over his ribs, trailing them lightly through the shirt he wore. It was tugged up, yes, to fit her abdomen inside of his abdominal cavity, but she couldn’t quite access his ribs through the bottom. So, simply stroking them through his shirt would work. Besides- there was no guarantee anything more than the kissing would happen. “And you're sweet,” she purrs softly in return.

He laughed softly, and let his free hand wander down her side, exploring her changing body with open affection. "It's been so long... How have you been holding up since I’ve last touched you?” he asked.

“I’ve missed your touch,” she admits softly. “I’ve missed it a lot.” She shivers as his hand explores down her body, and her fingers grow bolder as they explore his ribs through his shirt. Toki’s legs shifted, and she stroked her toes up the backs of his legs, offering him a growing smile as she does so. “I ache for you.”

"May I touch you?” he murmured gently, "I want to heal your ache." he purred, "And bring you satisfaction.”

“Only if I may touch you too,” She purred softly in response. “Though... I think the couch might not truly work for this.” It was narrow- and she could no longer be bent over the cushions to make it work. Her middle was too big to just wedge in anymore. Her fingers stroked along his neck, and she kisses him soundly again. Toki’s soul thrums warmly in her chest, its glow calling out to its mate.

"Then lets go somewhere more proper, yes?” Pap gave her another kiss, and then carefully extracted himself from her grasp. Instead of helping her up, he simply scooped her up into his arms.

Toki squeaked as she was lifted, and giggled softly as she looped an arm carefully over his neck. "Don’t strain your back lifting me, Pap. Though, that sounds good to me- bedroom?” She purred.

"Bedroom.” he chuckled, before he kissed her and shortcut to the bedroom.

They appeared, the shortcut making Toki briefly dizzy, roundabouts the center of their room. He didn’t shortcut often, but it was an interesting experience each time.

However, their sudden appearance startled Gracie, who had been lounging on the bed. Her plush fur fluffed, and she turned into a gray hairball as she peered at them in spooked bewilderment.

Toki giggled softly at her cat’s reaction, and barely covered a snort. “We might want to shut the door, unless we want the cats observing us.”

He laughed at that, and slowly lay her down, "Alright, allow me.” He pecked her head then went to shoo away their cats.

Toki managed to sit up to watch him try to herd the cats.

Gael at least seemed to understand his desires, and scooted from the room swiftly. Gracie, meanwhile, flopped at his feet and proceeded to groom her fur back down into position.
“Herding cat’s isn’t just a saying,” she mused with great amusement.

He chuckled at that. "Oh yeah, definitely." Aliquam then reached out and scooped up Gracie, humming softly as he hefted her up. “Come on, you.”

Gracie squeaked at him, but didn’t fight his grasp. She simply purred at him, pleased at the attention.

Toki giggled softly, and waited for him to get the room closed up so they would be alone. Toki loved Papyrus, really, but she had no desire to be observed by cats while they made love.

He went and put Gracie outside their room and made sure Gael was out as well, before he came back, chuckling as he slowly stripped on the way over.

“Oooh, a strip tease,” she teased lightly, “I definitely enjoy the view.” She was a little bit more limited, but she managed to slip her shirt off. Her tank top was tossed to the side of the bed, baring the gentle glow of her belly, and the flesh that clung tightly to most of her ribs now. Briefly, she wondered what her ecto-breasts would look like if she summoned them again, but she wouldn’t bother with it unless he wanted to see them.

“I, uh… need to help with my pants.” She flushed. Toki couldn’t quite get her hips off the bed- and getting up without help wasn’t doable anymore.

"Nyeh heh heh heh!" He came over and gently hooked his fingers on her pants, pulling them down slowly. "Such a beautiful woman..." he purred, getting her legs free of her pants before he leaned in and kissed her leg bones.

She was bare before him once he tugged her pants off, having gone commando for the day. Toki let out a soft, pleased sound as his teeth pressed gently against her femur, and she parted her legs for him with a soft thrum. Toki mused that they would likely need to be creative in order to make this work. But they would make it work. “Such a handsome man,” she purrs softly to him.

"Nyeh heh heh heh~" he slipped himself between her legs, before he leaned in and kissed her, her swell easily fitting in his midsection space as to allow him to reach her. "Prr~"

Ah yes, it was nice to be married to a skeleton. It allowed them to do things that fleshy people couldn’t- such as face-to-face sex while she was very round. Toki kissed him back gently, using one arm to brace herself upright, and then let the other rove over his ribs. She dipped her fingers in and stroked the insides, a pleased piping noise escaping her. “Prr~"

Toki hadn’t made that particular noise in a long while.

"You're wonderful, my dear Toki." He purred gently, leaning his head down to her neck as to kiss along her vertebrae. "I love you so much." He rumbled softly.

"You are my world," She groans softly, tilting her head back so he could have at her neck. She leans back slightly, pausing only so she could tug one of the pillows behind her back so she didn’t have to support herself, and then uses both hands along his ribs. Fingers dance softly over his bones, trailing along his ribs, his sternum, and traveling around to rub over the broad plates of his shoulder blades. “You’re so strong, so broad, so tall- I love every inch if you.” She loved Papyrus, and how sturdy and stable he was. She trailed her fingers to his spine, and gave it a firm stroke.

He jolted and gasped when her hand came to his spine, before he shivered and reached up, rubbing her ribs gently, "Every last centimeter of you." He moaned gently in agreement.

His touch was soft, and it felt nice over her ribs. A devious smile slid over her face as a soft moan was tugged from her throat, and she kissed him again. This time she mouthed down to his neck, gently nibbling her teeth over his vertebrae and scraping them tenderly against the bone. Her touch was feather light, so as not to hurt him with the daggers that made up her mouth, and she stroked his spine again as she purred for him.

"Mmmh~" He kissed her a few more times before he turned his focus to her hips, stroking and rubbing them before he ground against them lightly.

Her pelvis rocked gently against his own, her bones warm and darn near glowing under his touch. Toki piped again, and nipped his neck as her legs shifted to drape over his hips and tug him close. She didn’t have full range of motion to roll teasingly against his pelvic bone, but that didn’t mean she couldn’t rock and gently grind against him. “Ah~”

"You're getting eager." he purred gently, "Want to summon something for me~?"

“Pardon my eagerness,” she purred, “but I have an addiction to you and haven’t had my fix in a long time.” She rocked against him gently, stroked his spine, and then let her magic form her lower parts. She shifted to brush feather-soft lower lips against his pelvic bone, green magic slicking up his bones as she did so. Toki’s eye lights glowed an aroused green color, and she leaned back to peer up at him with a sultry purr.

Papyrus chuckled gently and kissed her, leaning back far enough so he could slide two fingers into her depths. He didn’t want to risk hurting anyone by taking her, and a little preparation never hurt.

Toki purred softly, patient while he stretched her to make sure she was ready. It wasn’t really necessary since her magic had farther limits than human flesh, but it was better to be safe than to be sorry. She was farther along, after all, and having sex this late could come with it’s own risks. Still, his digits weren’t what she was craving, and she nibbled along his bones with a soft sound. “Mmm, love your touch,” she purred. “I’ve missed it.”

"Good, I have missed your warmth around me." he chuckled gently, "I just have to be sure that the twins are not in harms way."

“This position has them resting further down in my pelvis, so they might be in the way.” She hummed softly to him, her walls fluttering against his fingers. Toki’s sockets closed for a moment, contemplating, and then she squirmed. “ Might be easier if I’m on my hands and knees.” It was a pretty common position, so she’d read, for later in pregnancy. Put less pressure on the pelvis.

"Oh that's dirty." he chuckled, "Alright then." he pulled back and gave her a small twirl of his fingers, "Go on then~?"

She giggled softly, and made to shift. Rolling over was a hell of a task, but Toki managed it all on her own. The pillow that had been being used behind her back was tucked against her chest. She leaned on it, keeping her hips up so her belly dangled under her. It wasn't as romantic as making love face to face could be, but they could cuddle after.

Settled and ready, she peered back over her shoulder at him and offered him a saucy look. "I am dirty only for you," she purred.

"Nyeh heh heh heh." He kissed her head gently as he bent over her. "Mmm, I’m not complaining. This is hot." he chuckled quietly. Stroking her body gently he pressed against her and lay his head down on her back as he ground against her backside. "Mmmh… Does this work for you, Toki?"

His bare pelvis against her backside felt nice, and she shivered pleasantly. A rumbling purr bubbled out of her chest, and she nestled down, resting herself lightly on the pillow. “I think I could make anything really work- I just want you. In me, around me, over me- I want all of your touch.” She purrs. She’s careful not to jerk her head back and jab him with her horns, but she does arch her back into him with a pleasant sound. This position took the weight off of her lower back, and it felt good as it stretched her too. Yes, she was quite pleased with this. “I’m all yours, Quinn. Now the real question is- what will you do with me~?”

"N-Nyeh..." She was... so good at dirty talk... Nuzzling Toki again, Aliquam ground against her before he shivered and groaned as he summoned forth his own anatomy. He ground against her a little longer before he brought his hips back, angled himself, and began to push in. "N-Nyeeehh~"

It wasn’t even honestly dirty talk- it was just… Toki talk. Toki’s back arched like a pleased cat, and she groaned not so quietly as his girth stretched her. It had been a long time, and gods, she had missed his member. She rocked softly, but let him set the pace as he eased into her depths. “Ahh~ yesss, Pap,” she purred. “Mmm… More~” She was tight around him, tighter than usual thanks to lack of use, and her growing pregnancy. Toki pulsed around him, hot and soft, already slick for him.

"As you wish." he murmured, pushing into her and giving a quiet moan before he began to rock his hips.

She groaned softly, and rocked back into him as well. Her pelvis rolled softly against his, and Toki spread her legs, letting him settle closer to her. One of her hands came up, locating his, and she laced her fingers gently with his. “Mmmm~”

He folded his hand with her and moaned lightly into her back. “I love you.” He groaned, "So much... so fucking much..." he hissed as he slowly began to thrust.

“I love you too,” she groaned back softly. Her breaths came out in soft pants as his thrusts picked up, and her eye lights flickered. Everything was sensitive from lack of use and her pregnancy in general, and Toki clenched and fluttered around him. She pulsed and fluttered erratically, matching the fluttering beat of her soul. “Oh gods, yessssss, Pap~ Ah~”

"Oh Toki…” he moaned into her spine. "Aah... I love you." he purred gently.

“I l-love you too,” she purred back. Her free hand kneaded the pillow, and a soft tremble trailed down her back. It felt good, so, so good. “W-we could h-have been doing this m-mooooooooonthssss agooo,” her words faded off into a pleased purr, and her fingers clenched tighter over his, kneading his hand gently as they flexed.

"I'm sorry I didn't do this sooner, my love." he cooed gently, keeping his hips at a constant pace as to make sure she never lost any of the pleasurable buzz from his movements.

Pleasurable buzz indeed. Toki’s bones buzzed, a loud, pleased piping coming from her as she backed in his movements and attention. Her hips rolled against his, and she was a mewling, quivering mess below him. It didn’t take overly long before she shuddered hard, clamping around him like a soft and warm vice grip. Pleased feelings rolled over her, and she felt them wash away insecurities, overriding her prior irritations for the day as she let herself be damn near swept away by his touch. “Ahhh~” She purred. It took her a while to be able to respond, but once she did, she tilted her head back to peer at him. Her eye lights took the form of little green hearts. “Mmm, we can make up for lost time~”

"As many times as you beg for it.” he purred to her, hugging her hips with one arm as he picked up his pace, "I... aahhh... Oh god.” he moaned gently.
“Mmm yesss~” She crooned. Her breathing came out in hot pants as he picked up his pace, and her bones rattled warmly. The air of the bedroom was warming up as her magic escaped her control, heating the air around them in response to their pleasure. Her eye sockets shut, and she felt herself fall off the edge. Toki came hard, clamping tight around him as she moaned into the pillow. His name escaped her teeth, and she shuddered, lost to pleasure as his thrusting drew her overly sensitive flesh deeper into the abyss of bliss.

Her climax was a flare of heat that infected the air around them, as well as the warmth around Aliquam's cock. A surge of excitement shot through him and he let out a choked yell as his grip tightened around her, "F-FUCK!” he bit down where he could and after a matter of thrusts, he let out a muffled shout as he filled her body with his release. “G-Ghhlnn!”

His teeth bit solidly into her shoulder, larger mouth easily taking a good portion of the bone into his grasp. His fangs poked small, slightly painful holes in her scapula, but she was too lost in her release to feel it much. She shuddered as he flooded her, her middle changing colors rapidly as the magic from his release was absorbed and drawn in to nourish the young growing within her. Toki trembled under him, spent and satisfied. “Mmmm~” She purred, warmth rolling off of her in waves.

Moaning tiredly, Aliquam hugged her firmly, smiling into where he had bitten seconds before, "Nnh... Toki..." he breathed out.

“Mmm, Pap~” She purred softly. Toki shifted slightly under him, her shoulder twanging just slightly. A little bit of green colored magical ooze beaded on her shoulder against his teeth, but the ache was more pleasant than it was painful. “Mm… Shift to the side- we can lay down.” She purrs to her husband. She’d rather settle on her side before he collapsed over her, because she was not strong enough to hold him upright.

He murmured something softly but nodded and slowly leaned to one side, sighing quietly as he slowly moved to lay down, "mmmmh…"

She nestled against him as he lay down, and snuggled back against him. Toki didn’t even bother pulling off of his member- it, and hers, would disappear shortly anyways. Toki sighed gently, and then tilted her head back to peer at him as she laced her fingers through his and draped their joined hands over the odd colored mound of her middle. “What did you say?” She hummed contently, warm and flushed bones buzzing happily.

"How did I end up so lucky to marry someone like you?" He whispered.

“I dunno,” she giggled gently. “Might have had something to do with you bursting into my backyard like a dork and bringing me headlong into the world of monsters.” Toki beams at him contently. “You were so adorable. How could I not fall in love with you?”

"Nyeh heh heh heh!” he kissed her head and neck a few times, "I love you so much~"

“I love you too.” Toki shifted as her parts vanished, and gently turned to face him. Her shoulder throbbed slightly, and she lifted her fingers to it thoughtfully. They pulled back from the small holes with flecks of green, and she laughed softly. “Well, I suppose that’s payback for the first time I bit you, hm?” Amusement coated her tone, and she tucked her belly into his abdominal cavity, the orange and green mass flashing with hues of blue to let them know the twins were awake and stretching their magical muscles, so to speak.

"Nyeh heh heh heh." he giggled his trademark once more, before he nuzzled into her unbitten shoulder. "Mmh~ C’n we just cuddle now?" he asked.
“That’s the plan,” she purrs. “My stamina isn’t what it used to be.” That one round had wore her out, even if she hadn’t done hardly any work. Toki tangled her legs with his, and nuzzled close. The twins squirmed in her middle, and she sighed softly. “I also think we woke them up. This is the first time you’ve gotten to see the lightshow, isn’t it?” Her middle was a mottle of colors. His orange was closer to the base, where her body had sucked it up, but there was a brighter orange, something between red and orange, nearer the top. Between the two colors was a bright blue, the color pulsing brightly. “So long as I don’t sneeze while the colors are lit up, I won’t teleport.” She’d figured that out the other day.

He chuckled lightly at that. "How nice." he purred, stroking her stomach gently, "Very vibrant, yes?"

“Very vibrant.” She agreed warmly. Her stomach was warm to the touch, slightly more so since her magic had stirred through her bones, and was active as they twisted and moved inside. A small tightness rolled over her middle, making the flesh slightly harder under his fingers for a few seconds, and she paused to let it pass. Braxton hicks were supposed to happen eventually- but she’d been so keyed up as of late… well, she supposed she hadn’t really paid them any mind. Thirty-six weeks sounded about right- that’s about when her mother started to notice hers.

"Mmm, how do you feel?" he then asked, hands crawling up to her back slowly.

Toki shivered as his bones slid up the soft flesh of her back, up to where the flesh stopped along her ribs. “Tired. Content. A little uncomfortable and tight, but that’s a braxton hicks contraction’s fault.” She hummed softly, sighing as his hands continued to touch her. She draped her arm over his ribs and snuggled close, a happy buzz escaping her. "How about you? How do you feel?"

"As a father would. Happy, proud, and also a little bit tired from worrying so much about his beautiful wife." he purred gently.

She laughed gently. “Your beautiful wife is tired in general.” She gives him a tender look, sharp teeth quirking up in a loving grin. “We’re nearly there. A couple more weeks at most, and we should have little ones in our arms. Braxton hicks means we’re in the final count down, Pap.” Excitement and nerves glimmered in equal parts in the bright lights of her eyes. “We need to finish setting up the nursery.” She chuckles gently. Everything needed to be put together and organized- but putting things together was Aliquam’s specialty.

She was so right… so accurate he was almost scared at how right she was… it wouldn't be long until he hung up his armor and instead…

Oh good lord would he start dressing like his father? The yoga pants and turtleneck were nice but he was more active, Tenebris had a big talk to him but it was clear to everyone that he was more than happy to stay home, mellowed out on his recliner. Aliquam was more active, so he made himself promise not to end up like that until he was damn ready to retire...

Though as she continued to talk, he listened, and gave a nod, "Oh, of course!" he agreed at her suggestion, "The sooner it's ready, the better, yes?"

Aliquam most certainly wouldn’t have to retire. Maybe for a few weeks as they adjusted to life with children, but it would be doable for him to continue to work afterwards. No yoga pants needed- though his ass would look mighty fine in them and his wife would surely ogle him even more.

Toki nodded and nuzzled him. "The sooner indeed. Braxton Hicks means we could have between a couple of days to a couple weeks before it's go-time. Ah, did your dad tell you I wanted to have them here?" The castle would have worked too, but home... Home was safe feeling, even if it wasn't super
"He mentioned it, yes." he replied, helping her sit up before moving to his feet, "And I don’t intend to force you to anything else."

"Good." She nods with a slight grin. As she sits upright, she notes the sore feeling between her legs. "Mmm..." After not having sex for so long, she was feeling well used and slightly sore. As was to be expected with the pounding she had just gotten. "Didn't you want to rest some?" She inquired lightly. Had her talk about the lack of time they had spurred him into motion?

"Nyeh... I mean... maybe..." He shrugged slightly. "Do you?"

"I'm a bit sore," she admits, "but not overly tired. I could nap, as all Nara can, but if you'd rather get up and do some stuff... Well, we can. I don't care either way."

"How about this…" He leaned over to kiss her cheek, and then gave her shoulders a gentle prod backwards. "You rest. I'll burn off some more energy by working and join you then, okay?" he suggested, a knowing smile on his face.

She's not all that hard to move. Toki is eased back against the top sheets of their bed, and she sighed softly as she shifts to lay on her left side. Toki eyes that little smile he gives her and chuckles softly. "... You're off to put the nursery together, aren't you?"

"Nyeh heh heh heh~" he gave her a gentle wink, "Well I suppose I never specified just how I would burn off my energy."

She winked back and laughed softly. "Feel free to build everything, but we'll decide on placements together." She purred. Toki shifted, easing herself under the first layer of blankets, and then tucked one of the extra pillows between her thighs. She would clean the stain later. Another pillow tucked behind her back, and she was finally comfortable enough to rest. "You may also want to put at least a pair of shorts on. You know Gracie likes to swat at your little tailbone when it wiggles, even though I love the view. You look good stained green and orange." Toki gave him a sleepy and sultry wink that only a Nara could ever manage. She might be a Gaster in name, but the Nara wouldn't ever leave her soul.

"I can at least do that to let you get a word in." he chuckled gently, before he huffed, "Silly cat. Tailbones are not for snatching up, and it's not gonna come off like my toes do." At that, he went and collected a pair of boxer shorts and put them on after a quick clean up "Alrightie, go ahead and get relaxed, and I’ll join you in a little bit."

She chuckles. "Neither of us are tall enough on our own to put the stars up, so it'll eventually need to be a team effort." Toki nestled down and nodded, a yawn tugging her teeth apart. Their bed was hellishly comfortable, and Toki could sleep at the drop of a hat if she so desired to. "Try not to let her steal your toes again either. She likes to try and help when we do things." Though, when the door opens for him to go out, a streak of gray bolts in and rushes to the bed.

Gracie, and all of her adorable fluffiness, stretched across Toki's belly and began to purr loudly and knead happily. Papyrus would be safe for a while yet, because the cat was demanding loves.

He chuckled at that and pecked her cheek gently, before he went to get the head start on taking care of the nursery, humming a gentle tune to himself as he did.
Toki only ended up taking a two-hour nap, before an irritating tight feeling along her middle woke her up. Ah. Braxton Hicks were going to be pesky until she got used to noticing them. She recalled her mother struggling with sleep through them- predominantly with her younger brothers. They were surprisingly big babies for being such tiny men.

Toki shifted, nestling back to feel for her usual bedmate, and rubbed her fingers lightly over her middle to soothe the ache. The twins fussed, feeding feelings of discomfort to her as they kicked in upset, not at all disturbing the gray cat that had draped over her belly like a rug.

She shifted and heaved a soft sigh, realizing that in her sleep she had gotten too comfortable, and had sunk into the mattress. She was going to be stuck until she could get free- which meant between the pillows and the bed, she couldn’t even roll over to shift positions. Blegh. Pregnancy had its ups and downs, and she was missing her mobility something fierce.

“Mmm, Pap? You there?” She couldn’t turn around to look.

There was no reply. Instead sounds of soft singing floated from the other room into theirs, where Papyrus was hard at work.

She could hear the sounds of things being assembled alongside his singing, and a warm smile tugged at her teeth. How sweet… She didn’t want to interrupt, so she took a moment to carefully unpack herself from the pillows. She had to shoo Gracie off, much to her displeasure- and then Toki made to try and get up.

She was, however, stuck like a turtle on its back. She huffed and puffed, and managed to swing her legs to the side of the bed. From there, she had to shove herself upright, which took a bit of work given her center of gravity. Toki heaved a deep sigh, and used the bedposts to haul herself upright. Thankfully, once she was sitting, her bed was tall enough that she could stand without needing someone’s help to get upright.

Once she was up, Toki padded into their bathroom and took a bit of time to clean off. Her middle was still several shades of colors, but it was meshing together and being processed by her magic finally. It took her a little bit to clean her pelvis and legs, since she couldn’t see through the green of her middle, but soon she was back into their room and simply tugging on a pair of panties and shorts. She wasn’t going downstairs for a while, and she didn’t often go shirtless.

She waddled out of their room, taking note that the twins were sitting heavy in her pelvis after her nap, and padded into the nursery. Toki adjusted the band of her pants and took stock of all that Papyrus had gotten built.

Aliquam seemed to be enjoying his time as he worked, having set up half of the furniture with effortless ease. The rest was all waiting for him, as if in a line.

Toki smiled slightly to herself and crept into the room. She moved to the side, where the rocking chair had been slid out of the way, and joined his singing with soft humming. Toki didn’t try to disturb him, and let him build at his pace, while she eyed the dresser that he had gotten put together. They had the baby clothes and blankets piled up in the rocking chair, and… well, now she had a place to put them, finally.

Toki continued to hum with him, wordlessly contributing to his song as she folded clothes, and went to organize them by size, color, and type within the baby dresser.
He perked up slightly and turned to her, a smile on his face. She hadn’t sung or hummed often since Han had died. It was good to hear her do it again. "Ah, hello my dear. Did you enjoy your nap?" he asked gently.

Toki nodded and gave him a smile. “I did. A little too much- I almost got stuck.” She chuckled. Toki folded another shirt, and tucked it carefully into one of the drawers. Baby clothes were lightweight, thankfully; so moving the dresser with clothes in it wouldn’t be an issue. “It looks like you’ve gotten a lot of the furniture put together.” Toki resumed humming softly as she tucked extra blankets into the bottom drawer.

"Indeed I did. It's quite easy once you get the hang of it." Papyrus replied warmly.

“Putting things together was never my forte. My brother actually helped me assemble my hives outside when I first got them. Kohaku is very, very good at construction.” Hence why he was a construction worker. He was busy a lot, but he did good to support her nephew. “I’m glad you like building things though. Maybe the twins will take after you with your love of puzzles, hm?” Her eyes twinkled merrily at the prospect. She could see them, years from now, hunched over the dining room table with one of those insane one thousand plus puzzle piece puzzles. A grin tugs at her teeth. “You know, there’s actually a hobby where people put together pieces of a puzzle, put cardboard on the back with some glue, and then hang it on the wall. Our walls are pretty empty, if you’d like to do that in the years to come.”

"Nyeh heh heh, that does sound like an idea.” he agreed with a soft laugh. "Well, if you've an idea for how you'd like to sort things, I say by all means go ahead, the drawers are all yours."

Toki smiled wider and giggled softly. She shifted, and glanced to him as she finished putting all of the clothes away. Once the drawers were in, she hummed and grabbed the edges. “I’m thinking near the window along the orange wall.” They hadn’t skimped out on the baby furniture though, and the dresser, like all of the rest of it, was solid and sturdy. She managed to waddle it back and forth over to the wall, and was thankful it wasn’t full of heavier stuff. The blankets, she mused, weighed the most.

Toki tucked it carefully in the corner, leaving a spot open for the ‘changing table’ of sorts. They had one, but it was going to be used for actually dressing their children instead of diapers. Multipurpose tool- it also could be used as a table for stacking laundry if need be.

“Do you have the changing table put together yet?” She inquired, stepping back and folding her arms across her topless front. The sunlight, particularly strong through the middle, caught the side of her belly and lit it up.

Vaguely, inside of her belly, the outlines of two small skeletons were visible to Papyrus. The details were fuzzy from the indirect light, but there were arms and legs clearly visible.

"Just about to finish.” he replied, standing up and brushing off his hands to come over and hug her, though after a kiss he lowered and smiled, "Heh... Do you see it?" he asked.

The hug and kiss had been nice, but her attention was vastly distracted. Toki’s mind was set on baby decorations. Her attention slid to him as he lowered down next to her side, and she arched a bony brow ridge at him. “Pap, if it’s something on the floor, I haven’t seen my feet in months.”

Inside, one of the twins stretched, long limbs unfurling and pressing outwards on her middle. To him, it was visible. To her, she couldn’t see it from the top. She only felt it.

"The twins." he purred gently, "You can see the twins."
“… No way.” She tried to crane her head to the side to see, but was unable. As she shifted, the beam of light lit up a different spot. When Toki straightened, visibility returned, limited as it was. “Awww.” She pouts. “I can’t see them. What do they look like?”

Only one of the skulls was visible, and it slid into view as the little one kicked their sibling. Tiny pointy fingers came up to be tucked against the silhouette of a cheekbone- and the skull was smooth, and shaped just like his.

He smiled and stroked her stomach. "They're little skeletons. I love them” he purred softly, "There's a smooth little skull that I saw."

She perked. “There is?" Her fingers traced along the top of her middle, and laced with his digits. “I wish I could see… How clearly can you see them?” Tenebris might like to know this was a thing- it could be a way to give skeleton monsters an ‘ultrasound’ so to speak. They could watch the development- or could have, if they’d have known sooner.

"It's a little translucent, but there's a little skull here." he murmured, touching her stomach, "With a little pointed hand by it." he purred gently.

“Awww.” She smiles softly. “That’s adorable. Hm… Oh goodness, Pap!” Excitement bolted down her spine. “Your phone- think you could take a picture so I could see? Would it even show up, I wonder?” His phone was likely still in his pants that had been discarded in his room.

"Hm...." he got an idea, "Of course, let's do this." he got up and moved out of the room quickly. It took him a few moments before he was coming back with a flashlight, holding it to her. "Just pick your lighting angle, eh?"

Toki smiled and nodded. She took the flashlight from him and clicked it on. She set it alongside the side of her abdomen, and then hummed as the brightness made the twins kick fussily. It lit them up great, though only one of the skulls could be seen. The other had it’s head tucked in her pelvis, well out of view, as they pressed their little feet against the top of her belly. “Can you see better? Though- you forgot your phone, Pap. We could put the pictures on the fridge.” She knew he knew what ultrasound pictures were, after all of the googling and research him and Tenebris had been doing.

"There they are." he purred gently, before he smiled and pulled his phone from his pocket. "No, I have it." he replied, before he reached to her hand with his free hand. "May I?"

Toki smiled and nodded. “Of course!” She chirped.

Taking the flashlight, he slowly moved it over her stomach until he was able to get the picture he wanted from his phone. "Alright, hold the light right there, please." he requested, knowing that she'd be able to reach the light where it was now on her lower stomach. "It'll work right there."

Her arm had to crane some, but she managed to keep the flashlight firmly in place. She beamed at him brightly. “Alright. Snap a couple good ones- we can bombard your dad with them later by text.” Tenebris was going to be fascinated, she knew.

The twin with the skull like their father’s shifted, and fussily kicked at the bright light invading their home. They stretched irritably, little fingers latching onto their sibling firmly, and rotated slightly in the murky green of her middle.

"Oh he'll like that." he chuckled, taking a few pictures of them.

Toki adjusted the light just slightly so they would have a few directions to take pictures of. Once he had taken several, she shifted her stance, and let out a soft breath. “I’m sure he will. Heh- can you get a clear shot of both?"

The one twin refused to show their face, and instead nestled closely in Toki’s pelvis, their sibling was facing the opposite direction. The one with Pap’s skull was photogenic though, and turned this way and that fussily as it tried to make the light go away.

"Indeed." he leaned in and pressed a long kiss to her stomach, before he got a perfect shot of the one at least, giving a determined and soon pleased sound. "Nyeh!"

“That’s good.” She purred happily. They both shifted inside of her, and she could feel them squirming at his kisses, beating fussy feet against his teeth. “Heh- I think the light is bugging them. Got all the photos you want to get, love?”

"I'm happy, yes." he replied, letting her move the light away from her swell.

The light was turned off and set atop the dresser, before she beamed and stole his phone. She lightly flicked through until she found the camera, and then took a look at the pictures.

“Awwwww~” Her heart practically melted. “That one looks just like you,” she beamed happily, her soul glowing brightly through her bared ribs. “Mmm… Can’t get a good angle on their pelvises to tell what they are.” She knew rounder and wider meant female, and narrower and smaller meant male. “Heh, either way our names will work. Heh…” She fiddled with his phone for a moment, and then handed it back. “I texted a couple to your dad. Wonder how long it’ll take before he’s busting down our door.”

"Knowing him, he wont need to." Aliquam joked gently, "He teleports, remember?"

“It’s a figure of speech.” She chuckles. “I should probably put on a shirt though, before he pops in. I am well aware he’s seen it all before, but being half naked around you is one thing, while being half naked around someone else is an entirely different one.” Toki couldn’t lean down very well, but she managed to do it enough to kiss the top of his head. “Heh- he has no way of knowing what room we are in though.” In the pictures it only showed the window and the light bleached the color out of the walls.

"Knowing him he'll be able to sniff us out as soon as he's upstairs." he cackled quietly.

“That could be good or bad though, given what he’d smell coming from our room.” She arches her brow ridges at her husband and quirks a sly grin at him. She and Tenebris fired dirty jokes at each other- but she wasn’t sure if Pap knew or not.

"So I have about ten seconds to go to the other room and open a window?"

"Nice try, son." Tenebris poked his head in, a half-smug look on his face.

Toki shared an amused look with Tenebris, and then discretely folded her arms over her chest. “At least he didn’t break down the door.” She mused lightly, arching a brow at her father in law. “I see you got the text, Papa.”

"I can teleport you know." he snorted, coming over and pecking her head softly before he knelt down and began to chatter happily. "Look at them, oh aren't they just beautiful?"

"Careful Father, you're starting to steal my spot." Aliquam joked.

"Can it be helped?"
"I suppose not." coming over, Aliquam hugged his father around the neck and smiled as the older turned his attention to rub his head against his son's, purring gently, "I spoil you. Why can't you go smoother my brother for attention?"

"Grillby would kill me if I tried to steal his spot."

"Can't argue there."

Toki laughed softly, and reached over for the flashlight again. She set it along the bottom of her belly, and turned it on. "There- you can see them better this way than with just the sunlight." She also gave them both an amused grin. "For the record, the first grandbaby is always special. I was special to my grandparents, and Dominic is basically my Mom’s favorite grandbaby, though she will forever deny taking favorites. Though… Yes, Grillby would probably roast you if you tried to steal his spot. That's fine though. There’s plenty of me to go around, isn’t there?" She gave Papyrus an unrepentant grin.

Her husband groaned at her.

Tenebris' tail began to wag fast behind him as he was able to see the twins again a lot easier, "Ooooh, how fascinating~" he cooed

The one that looked like Papyrus was still visible, their sibling having shifted to flash the vague outline of their pelvis along the edge of her belly. Feet pressed to the top, and Tenebris would be able to make out the motion outside her belly and connect it to the movement inside.

Toki grins faintly. "Do I need to get you a tissue?" She teases warmly.

"To blow what nose?" he chuffed, letting Aliquam take his place after long enough, "I'm sorry, carry on."

“I meant for your eyes, you dork.” She gently flicked above his mask, between his eyes. “You cry black- which is equal parts strange as it is cool- and black stains. You would sulk at me if you got it all over your turtleneck until I got the stain out for you again.” A sulking Tenebris was equal parts adorable and intimidating. Her fingers found Aliquam’s skull, and she rubbed softly, smiling with a warm, fang-toothed grin.

He winced, then huffed and looked up at her. "Makes me think I should invest in a favorite 'black' turtleneck, eh?"

“Black turtleneck to match the black body fluids.” She idly wondered if all of it was black. If it all was, that would explain the odd look Asgore had given her when Tenebris had all but sobbed into her middle.

She made a strange face.

She really, really did not want to think of what he thought it could have been.

Gross.

Super, super gross.

He had visibly stiffened, his face tainting a darker color, "A-And just what is that supposed to mean!?"

Well shit. She had to roll with it. No regrets- you only lived once.
Toki winked at him. “I suppose you’d throw away less laundry after your visits with the king, eh?”

“Oh my god.” Aliquam face palmed.

Tenebris sputtered at her. “TOKI!”

She cackled.
Chapter 68

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Haven’t had a Sansby interlude in a long while, no? Also it’s a slightly shorter chapter, but a chapter none the less. Thanks for being patient with us, guys :)

Silverwing Notes: So, in the time this chapter was being made, i went and hurt myself by accident. Being a five-finger typer, this definitely slowed me down a bit, but we'll keep doing our best to bring chapters to everyone

The weather thankfully cooled off, and for that, Grillby was thankful. He’d kept the air conditioning on in the bar, and had kept it cold enough that even he had felt uncomfortable. His patrons, and mate, however, had vastly enjoyed the cooler temperatures, and he’d found his business booming as everyone ordered milkshakes, and iced beers and the like.

However, the following week when the weather cooled off into the first week of September, Grillby found himself slightly under the weather, so to speak.

He would consider it a ‘common cold’ of sorts, for fire elementals. Sudden changes in temperature can mess with their flames, and even as old as he was, he was no different. It left him fuzzy headed, tired, his flames a dimmer color than usual, and with his magic depleted from recently donating to Sans, he fell victim to the nameless plague that was a monster cold.

After accidentally dumping a glass of water on himself, Grillby had to finally call it quits for the day. He needed rest, loathe as he was to close down the bar. So, when the lunch rush faded, the big monster locked up and turned the sign to closed, before blearily cleaning up the messes he’d made all day.

Burgers had come out slightly over cooked, same with the fries, and his milkshakes had been far too milky to be considered a shake. He wouldn’t even get started on his failures at making drinks.

Once the messes had been cleaned, he locked up his till and headed upstairs. He needed some rest—though what rest he would find, he never knew. Sometimes Sans came home in a randy mood, sometimes he came home in a snuggly mood, and Grillby was not one to deny him anything. Him, or their little one.

Grillby made sure their little one had an ample supply of fire magic to grow off of.

He headed into his living room, nearly tripping over one of Caeruleus’ socks as he slid inside his home. Grillby huffed and padded into the kitchen, intent on getting himself a bite to eat— and ended up spilling a glass of water all over his hand.

“Fuck,” he hissed softly, shaking it off as it darkened the flesh of his hand. It cracked and splintered, and he scrambled for a towel to dry off the dried, magmatic flesh that was usually made of flame. He patted it off with a towel, and pushed magic in to relight it.

"Grillby..." Caeruleus’ voice came from behind him and soon his arms looped around his back. He hugged him gently, nuzzling him as he did so. "You okay?" he murmured, "You're letting off more heat than you usually do... and you're not... angry."

"The change in temperature has me feeling off," he hums in response to his mate. He rubs the cloth over his hand again, and pulls back some black residue from his ‘burn’ of sorts. “It is a simple ‘cold’, as the humans call it, Sans. I’ll be all right. I closed up early so I could rest. How are you feeling?" He turned, so he could face the shorter monster, and tossed the black-coated cloth onto the counter for later disposal. His hand felt raw, but that always happened with water burns.

"Pregnant." he huffed, hugging him firmly before he pulled back to gently take the other's hand, running his phalanges over the flesh with a worried look on his face.

Grillby withstood his chosen mate’s worried fingers, though it stung something nasty. “Pregnant is very descriptive.” He rumbled softly with amusement. He let his hand be investigated, while he dropped the other to caress the pudgy middle that housed his little one. He hummed softly, and gave a pulse of magic just to top up on San’s stores. With his HP, there was no margin for error, and Grillby, sick or not, would take no risks. “It’s just water burn, Sans. I am all right.”

He sighed as he let the warm-bodied elemental touch his growing swell, though most of it was still that of his own, their child not yet large enough to create a bulge. "I've been worrying a bit more lately, you know that..." he murmured.

“Your worry is justified.” Flame elementals, for as strong and fearsome as they were, could be horribly fragile. Wind elementals could be killed by an absence of air, water by too much heat, fire could be extinguished by lack of air or too much water- Earth elementals were the sturdiest, by far. Grillby leaned down to kiss the top of Sans’ skull, and let his molten eyes drift shut behind his glasses. “How about we sit and relax? Maybe talk about some of the stuff you’ve been worrying about?” Communication could help ease worries, he knew.

"Either that or we just cuddle, and I listen to you crackle." he murmured.

“Talking about your insecurities is something you’ll need to get used to doing, Sans.” Grillby hummed softly. He kissed the top of his skull, and then guided him slowly away from the kitchen and off towards the couch. “My crackles aren’t very loud today, I’m afraid.” His fire might be warmer, but it was dimmer, and his crackles were softer, more muted.

The big fire monster settled heavily onto his usual side of the couch, and offered his lap to the smaller skeleton, while he idly flicked on the television. It settled onto the music channel, playing some soft classical music to help relax him.

Sitting on the couch, it wasn't long before Cae rolled over to nuzzle his stomach regardless, his eye lights dimming, "That's okay, it's still nice to listen to." he murmured, before looking up at him. "Grillby, do you want me to run the bar for you? I know how you do things after watching you enough. If you're getting sick, then you should rest." he told him.

“I closed up the bar for today.” A large, warm palm curled over Sans skull, and he began to idly massage the bone. “I’ll rest up here with you.” He hummed softly. “I find solace in your company-running the bar can wait. I’m ahead on profits for last month- I think I can allow myself one day off.” He had steady enough business to probably hire someone to work in his stead- but he loved his work. It kept him busy, since he was no longer a part of the King’s Army.

Grillby gently let his other hand rest along Sans stomach, and he rubbed his thumb over the plush ectoplasm, massaging gently there as well.
"Mmmm..." The hand on his stomach was nice, and Caeruleus found himself rolling over to further permit the touch. "You look like you're starting to get sick, though... You don't just get better in one day..." As much as he knew his mate loved his work, he couldn't disregard how it was doing on his health...

He was interrupted in his thoughts as Serif came and put his furry head on his femur, and reached down to pet his head as he continued speaking. "You're going to have to close the bar for a few days if you get any worse." he insisted.

Grillby crackled warmly at the concern Sans was showing. It had been a long time since he had had an insistent mate demanding he take better care of himself. “If I get any worse, I will close the bar until I’m better, I promise.” He purred soothingly. “We’ll see how I feel tomorrow. For now, I am yours for the day. Well, yours and Serif’s.” He made a warm sound at the fluffy puppy, who was steadily growing larger and larger.

He paused in his rubbing only long enough to give the puppy an acknowledging head rub, before returning his hand back to Sans. He eased it up under his shirt, and rubbed the warmth of his palm along the bare ectoplasm under it. Fire elementals had their uses- and heated massages were one of them.

"I'll decide what's healthy enough to work or not, you hear me Grillby?" he puffed, nuzzling him before he purred loudly. "Mmm, you're warm."

"If I was cold, you would have a real reason to worry." Grillby chuckles in good humor. He kicks up his feet on the coffee table, sighing as he stretches out as best he can in his slacks. “I hear you, Sans. If you think I’m unwell, I’ll keep the bar closed for another day. I doubt I’ll need more than a day to recover enough to work, though.”

"Promise?" he murmured into his shirt.

“I promise.” Grillby hummed gently in response. The flame elemental shifted, and leaned his head back with a soft sigh. His digits didn’t stop rubbing over the warm ectoplasm under his hand, and Grillby adjusted himself slightly, a soft sigh letting smoke curl into the ceiling. “Now,” he murmured, “What’s been wearing on your mind, Sans? You’ve been anxious as of late. Something has been bothering you.” He knew him well enough by now to know when something was gnawing at the shorter skeleton. His pregnancy made him more open to read as well, something he knew endlessly frustrated the shorter male.

"Mmmh...." he sighed and looked up at him, "I can’t stop thinking about everything that those humans have done... after so long in that lapsing nightmare... I never lost you, I was so thankful, but... I lost my baby brother, my dad never came back, my friends... I don’t want it to happen again."

He stroked his skull and listened, nodding softly as he lent his metaphorical ear. “We’ve made it this far,” he hummed, “and I heard about miss Toki making Frisk swear to load, not reset. I don’t think it will happen again, Sans.” The fire elemental hums. “But, if it does, it doesn’t mean that everything is bad. It means we start again- and you,” he nudges his cheek, “would know how I feel earlier, so we could have more time together.”

He hesitated, then he chuckled weakly and rolled over, hugging him tightly, "God damn it, Grillby..."

“Emotional again?” He inquired, and welcomed him closer. He hugged his shoulders as the skeleton curled around his middle.
“Yes.” He sniffled slightly.

Grillby hummed softly and rubbed his shoulders softly. His eyes closed, glasses sliding down his face, as he crackled gently to let the skeleton calm himself.

Caeruleus was fussy for a little while, but long enough nuzzled into Grillby's chest, the warmth of his touch on the swell, settled the skeleton

"Mmmh... Thank you...”

“Anything for you.” Grillby said earnestly. He would go to war for the silly skeleton- and he knew that Sans knew that. The fire elemental was rusty- he was thinking he really should brush up on fighting- but he would do anything for Sans. “Anything.”

As luck would have it, they ended up napping. Grillby woke up some hours later with the worst kink in his neck that he had had in a long time. Unfortunately, he was an older monster, so sleeping in certain positions weren’t good for him. This was one of those.

He didn’t quite feel any better when his eyes slid open again, his ‘cold’ of sorts still plaguing him. His glasses had fallen down, and were tangled in the flames that made up his teeth of sorts- and he realized that with his mouth open, Grillby had probably been snoring like a freight train.

Grillby could feel Sans still curled in his lap, though there was another weight as well. Serif had wiggled up on the couch, and was nestled between Sans and the couch, curled with his fluffy white butt against Grillby’s side. The dog was snoring softly.

Sans seemed content as he slept, hugging Serif gently as he snored into his fur.

Grillby needed to get up and move- and get something to eat. He’d gotten distracted by Sans, and his fire needed fuel. He shifted, and gingerly slid himself out from under Sans to let the smaller monster continue to sleep.

“Mmm…” He grumbled and yawned, but didn’t wake as he continued to snuggle Serif.

The puppy, however, stirred as the fire elemental got up, and wiggled slightly against Sans. He rolled over, shoving a cold nose under his chin, before settling back down again. Well, ish. He settled in to lick the bones of his master, excited and happy to be cuddled.

Grillby smiled and quietly padded for the kitchen. However, he wasn’t nearly so quiet in tugging out pots and pans, and setting up for cooking in his kitchen. It was about dinner time, so he decided to put together the bases for a good, filling meal. He needed the protein to help bolster his flames, and Sans needed a good meal to help fuel the baby growing in his belly.

Sans didn't wake up until he caught the scent of a wonderful meal being made, rolling onto his back before he took a deep breath, "Fooooood...?" he murmured, before he yawned widely.

Grillby figured that Sans would wake to the smell of food, and hummed quietly as he continued to work. He monitored the meat, preparing it how both he and Sans usually consumed it. Beef was a strange meat, and Grillby enjoyed it vastly. Potatoes had been chopped and we're grilling away in a separate pan, while he prepared some mango for a side treat.

"I'm making dinner," Grillby said by way of answer to Cae's sleepy inquiry. "Any special seasoning you want on your steak?"

"Mmmhh.... pinch of garlic salt and that Montreal steak seasoning." The shorter skeleton replied, coming into the kitchen with a yawn.

Grillby added it as Sans requested, carefully spreading a thin layer on with his fingers, flipping the meat, and doing the same to the other side. The fire elemental canted his head to the side and hummed softly. "Did you sleep well, Sans?"

"As well as I can with extra weight." he chuckled, coming to the table and sitting down, rubbing his eyes before he yawned widely.

"You're not that big yet, my dear." Grillby chuckled. "Though Serif is getting big, if that's what you meant." The fluffy dog had all but doubled in size already.

He snorted at that and stretched with a wide yawn. "Whatever."

"You don't sound quite awake." He laughed gently. Grillby shifted and nudged the bowl of fruit closer to himself so he could fiddle with adding some cream to the fruit. Made the sweetness a little more bearable.

"Nnnnnnnope," He murmured sleepily.

"Apparently not." The fire monster chuckled softly. "Why don't you get down two plates?"

Sans couldn’t help but whine. “You want me to get up?”

"You have gravity magic. It shouldn't over tax you to bring down a couple plates." The fire monster chuckled tiredly.

He pouted, and his eye lit up as he waved a finger around, pulling two plates from the cabinet.

Grillby took the plates once Sans had gotten them within his reach, and then carefully loaded the steaks onto them. Fried potatoes and fruit were loaded up too, and he snagged two sets of silverware and then headed for the table. He set his mate's plate down, and then sat across from him with a weary sound. He was still tired and not feeling completely well, but he was functioning well enough in the kitchen. He would be fine to work tomorrow. Well... Perhaps.

"Grillby, that looks so fucking good...” he commented at he looked at the food now on his plate.

"Well, I should hope it tastes as well as it looks." The elemental rumbled in amusement. He slid his silverware over to him, and then opened his own bundle so he could begin his meal as well.

The skeleton grinned at him. "You run a bar, Grillbz, I know it's gonna taste the fuckin’ best!"

“Not necessarily. You didn’t see some of the stuff I struggled with today.” He moderated temperatures with his magic- and when he was sick, his control was not perfect. There had been several burnt burgers he’d had to remake. Grillby hummed and started in on his meal, making a soft, tired sound. “So… Have you been thinking about names?” He inquired lightly.

"Yeah, a few names have come to mind." he replied, "Heh... Toki inspired me with sun-related names. Ray, Sol... You know?"

“Hm… I like them.” He smiled softly. “Sol… Like Solstice?” That would be an adorable name, and was gender neutral as far as he understood.
"See, you're good at that." He chuckled as he set into his meal.

"Mhm." Grillby took a bite of fruit, and enjoyed the muted sweetness on his tongue. Cream tasted oddly good with most fruits. "I like Solstice. Doesn’t Toki call our child Sunshine? That could be a possibility too. I’m trying to keep gender neutral names in mind."

He nodded gently, "That works." he replied, "Neutral names are a lot easier than thinking of names for either gender, heh..."

"Indeed." Grillby shifted and stretched out his leg. He brushed his toes against Sans shin, innocently pretending he wasn’t doing anything. “Solstice is a good name though. Our little Sol. It has a nice ring to it, doesn’t it? Solstice Gaster.”

"Yeah. That's a perfect name." he chuckled gently, nudging him softly back with his own food.

"Mhm. I don’t have a last name,” he chuckled, “So we’ll go with yours. Solstice Gaster... I like it. Should we go with that?"

"I was curious about that, actually.” Sans finished his steak, and glanced over to him. “I was gonna ask. Do you really not have a last name?"

“Well... I do, but I’m not particularly fond of it.” Grillby shrugs. “It doesn’t fit well with my name. I am technically Grillbert Fyrus the Third. I much prefer simply being Grillby.”

Sans seemed slightly taken aback, but he soon leaned back in his chair and laughed. "Grillby oh my god, that's an adorable name! I love it!"

Grillby felt his face burn hot, and he hid his face in his palm. It didn’t hide the blue flush that slid up to the flames that made up his ‘hair’ of sorts. “It’s not adorable, Sans.” He murmured in embarrassment. “It’s a silly sounding name.” His first mate had thought it was adorable too, and that sent a pang of longing through his soul. Gods, he missed her.

"I think it's a wonderful name, Grillbz, don’t think it's not, got it?” He purred. He slid out of his seat to go and give the embarrassed fire monster a hug.

"It hasn’t been wonderful since I was a child.” Monster kids could be mean sometimes, particularly to a scrawny, gangly fire elemental. “Grillburp Fyrebutt is what the kids in school used to call me. It might sound silly now, but words sting when you’re younger. It is simply easier to go by Grillby.”

Still, Grillby doesn’t begrudge Sans a hug, and nuzzles his smaller mate with a soft sigh. “Go finish your dinner, Sans. I’m alright.”

"Mph." he huffed, before he smiled and nuzzled him, "Love you, Grillbz~"

His flames cooled off slightly, though still ran hot in part to his cold. Grillby sighed, and nuzzled him again. “I love you too, Sans. Now go finish your food before it gets cold- I might burn it by accident if I try to reheat it.”

The skeleton chuckled and turned back to his seat. “Sure thing.”
The twelfth of September rolled around before they knew it, and everyone found himself or herself out in the village park, enjoying the cooler weather as the season began to shift. It was a lovely Saturday evening, the stars just starting to come out after their long day of play.

Toki was seated in a lawn chair with a pillow settled behind her back to offer the support she needed. Her arms were folded over her belly, rubbing relaxing circles on the mass of swollen, green magical flesh with one hand. The oblong sphere was tight and tense. The other hand had one of Thumper’s birthday gifts clutched in it.

Her eye lights roved over everyone else. Papyrus and Undyne were, hilariously enough, attempting to barbeque, grilling up a dinner of hotdogs and hamburgers. That was a spectacle in itself, and she was glad that the enthusiastic fish woman hadn’t set the grill too close to the trees. They alternated, Papyrus doing most of the cooking, with Undyne taking over with zeal so he could come check on his wife.

There was a growing pile of cooked meat being added to the table where the remains of the birthday cake were settled.

Sans and Grillby were spread out on a blanket just on the other side of Toki, the two cuddling and enjoying each other’s company while watching the spectacle before them.

As dusk had settled down, Thumper had broken out one of his gifts. He’d gotten a huge set of laser-tag gear, among other things, and the boy had been all but bouncing with excitement at the prospect of getting to try it.

There were two teams, as far as she was aware. One team had Thumper, Twitch, Howl, Rosie, Felix, and a small oodle of other children decked out in purple gear. On the second team, Tenebris was surrounded by the parents of each of the kids. Bo had opted to sit out, claiming she was tired from the days work, but Wolfen was there, along with Twitch’s parents, and a large collection of other monsters. Team Parents, as she was going to dub them, were decked out in red.
Todd fit in quite well, given the color of his fluffy fur.

Toki was technically acting as referee, which amused the turtle-neck covered skeleton to no end. She couldn’t exactly move to keep up with them and keep everything ‘fair’, but she did have the laser light, so she had the ‘power’ so to speak.

And her ‘power’ was totally abused, so the birthday boy had a better chance of winning.

Tenebris had a quirk. And Toki- well, Toki couldn’t help but take advantage of it.

As the next round began, with the children scattering like fleas as they took cover on the play-set, Toki aimed the light and glinted the bright green laser over the metal slide to distract Tenebris.

“You know that is cheating, Toki.” Grillby hummed from the blanket next to her chair.

“Ohhh yeah,” she grins, “But that’s what makes it fun.”

Tenebris had immediately moved to begin his hunt, with his laser gun in hand, but he saw the small dot darting around and his pupils widened. His tail was rattling as he tried hard to resist the little dot.

"I am so recording this.” Caeruleus chuckled, tugging his phone from his pocket and clicking it on so he could begin recording.

Toki grinned. “Good. You’ve got to post it on facebook.”

Meanwhile, she flicked the laser slowly up and down the slide, in a motion that was basically prey mocking the predator.

Rosie grinned, and lined up a shot. Tenebris vest made a noise- it took four shots to knock someone ‘out’ and Rosie had just gotten the first shot while Tenebris was distracted. “Woo! Got one on the enemy captain, Captain Thumper!”

“Good job, first officer Rosie,” The bunny beamed at her, and ducked a shot from Wolfen. “Neener, neener, neener!” He stuck his thumb against his nose, and blew a raspberry at the laughing wolf monster.

Tenebris jolted as his jacket went off and he bristled at Toki, trying to focus on hunting the children with his laser gun this time around.

Toki simply grinned, and turned the light off for the time being. She’d get him again when he least expected it.

Thumper, meanwhile, grinned over at Felix. “Third officer Felix, circle around the twisty slide and flank your dad- Second officer Howl and fourth officer Twitch, give him cover fire.” The birthday boy wasn’t a bad tactician, truly. A second way to ‘win’, other than tag everyone as out, would be to take the captains ‘captive’, of sorts, or take them out first. Thumper had full intentions of holding the ‘fort’ as it was.

Howl gave him a cheeky salute, mirrored by Twitch, and they took positions. Howl took a high point on one of the play structures, firing down on the adults who scattered and dodged good-naturedly.

Twitch, meanwhile, went kamikaze and bolted from the structure, laughing manically as she rolled and jumped, drawing fire her way while dodging with the same dexterity as she had on ice.
Tenebris was quick to react to Twitch’s act and laughed as he took cover, before he shot at her with his laser gun.

Twitch dodged Todd’s first shot deftly, but tripped in the tall grass, and ended up taking Tenebris’ shot before falling out of sight. The grass, however, moved to show she was sneaking around within it.

Thumper leaned up to shoot at his adopted father, missing completely as the bigger monster was behind cover, a grin making his teeth show. His vest went off, and he ducked a second shot from Howl’s dad, tucking in behind a post and trying to guard himself a bit.

Above Tenebris’ head, the green light appeared again, mockingly bouncing against the bark of the tree he’d taken shelter behind.

Tenebris saw the light and his eyes widened slightly, his pupils growing larger as he lost his focus on the hunt, reaching up to bat at the light.

Toki sent the light racing off across the grass, and laughed heartily at the larger monster. He was just like a very large cat.

Thumper took advantage of his father’s distraction, and Tenebris’ vest went off again as the rabbit got in another shot with his laser gun.

At the buzzing of his vest, Tenebris snarled, "TOKIKO GASTER YOU KNOCK THAT OFF!" he snarled, before he turned and disappeared into the greenery.

Toki all but howled with laughter. Oh yes, she was the biggest little shit ever.

Howl yelped, one of the adults shimmying up into his ‘roost’ of sorts. There was the sound of laser fire, before he was toted out of the roost over Twitch’s dad’s shoulder. “I’m out,” He calls.

“Both of us are,” the big rabbit laughed. “Good shot, kid.”

“You too,” The horned wolf pup laughed cheerily.

As soon as they were out of the line of fire, the game resumed, though much more ‘viciously’. Thumper fled from his roost, making use of his speed to bolt off into the grass with Rosie and Felix at his heels.

Thumper mused that they really needed to mow the lawn again, and tucked down low into the grass. Rosie and Felix moved on ahead of him at his signal, and reengaged the fight with the adults, providing cover.

Twitch bolted out with them, her soft pink fur covered in grass stains as she dodged and rolled, nailing Todd and taking her second hit as well.

Thumper remained low, creeping through the grass as he hunted for where Tenebris had gotten.

Tenebris chuckled as he continued to stalk the grass, his tail twitching behind him as he watched the children through the grass. His eyes widened slightly, while his pupils began to turn to slits, "Rrrrr...."

Thumper’s bare feet spread their toes, the paw pads on the bottom sifting down to touch close to the dirt. His fluffy gray ears flicked upwards, and he listened and felt, just like his mom had used to try to teach him. He wasn’t sure what he was supposed to be feeling, but he figured he would know when he felt it. He kept low and hidden, looking for his dad.

Twitch, meanwhile, bolted out of the grass, tumbling as she tripped on the long fronds. She landed in a neat roll, took her third shot, and bolted off on all fours, aiming to take cover under the slide.

“Twitch, here!” Rosie waved at her, and stepped out to give cover fire. Over her head, Felix was visible, and he took cheap shots, giving his little sister cover as their dad and Wolfen advanced towards them and the pink bunny bolting for them.

Tenebris twitched and he lunged with a cackle, firing at the vests the children were wearing.

Twitch took her fourth and final hit, and tumbled into the grass with a breathless laugh.

Todd bum-rushed his children, taking two hits, but scooped them up into his arms with a happy fox-laugh. “I got you!” He grinned. “You’re mine now,” he grins. “Which leaves Captain to hunt down your captain.”

“Daddy, no fair!” Rosie fussed at him slightly, but dropped into giggles as he nuzzled his nose against her ear. “Daddy, no! That tickles! You’re too fluffy!”

Thumper, meanwhile, bolted from cover, and took a shot at Tenebris’ back, before bolting back into cover again. That made three shots, as Tenebris’ took his third hit. He had one more- but one more could be enough. Just enough… But first he had to hide again before the bigger monster hunted him down.

Tenebris grunted as he took the hit but it allowed him to zoom in on where his little bunny was hiding. ”Thumper Phineas Gaster, I’m coming for yooou~” he chuckled in a sing-song voice.

Thumper poked his head out of the grass, stuck his finger on his little nose, yanked it up, and made a rude noise. “Only if you can catch me!” He kept his chest low and out of sight, keeping the vest well out of range. He ducked under the grass again, and thumped his foot mockingly at his adopted dad. He’d taken his last name- so he was a Gaster now, not a Hopperton.

He chuckled at that and continued to stalk closer, before he grinned and brought one of his feet around, giving quiet, but swift thumps of his feet, a little trick he learned to get the edge.

The trick worked indeed- and Thumper was flushed out as his hiding place was found. He bolted from cover, shooting between Tenebris’ legs, and then was off and running, quickly. “Neener-neener-neener! You can’t catch me!”

"Oh that's playing dirty you little brat!" he cackled before he aimed and fired after him. "You're mine!" he cackled.

Thumper took a hit, and laughed back at him cheerily. He ducked and dodged, and then began weaving back for him, firing as he went. “I learned to play dirty from the best!” AKA, his favorite babysitter.

And, to aid Thumper, said favorite babysitter brought out the bright light, shining it on the edge of Tenebris’ gun and wiggling it mockingly.

He chuckled and aimed before the light appeared and he stiffened, before he snarled. "TOKI!"

“Yeeeeess Tenny dear?” She grinned unrepentantly. “Do you have a problem?”

"YOU CHEATING LITTLE BRAT!" he snarled, before he turned to shoot the laser-gun at the
He would find that in his distraction, Thumper had disappeared again. However, the bunny appeared just under his shadow, gave his dad a grin, and then shot him point blank.

“Anything to help my little bro in law,” Toki grinned as Tenebris’ vest gave a mocking buzz, announcing his loss for all to hear.

“Good game, Dad.” The bunny beamed up at him cheerily, all happiness and excitement at winning on his birthday.

Tenebris bristled, then grinned and scooped the bunny up, "Hahaha!" he cackled gently before hugging him tightly, "Happy birthday, pup."

Thumper laughed heartily and wrapped his arms around his dad’s neck, hugging him tightly.

“Thanks Dad!”

“Yo, punks! Food’s finished! Come get your grub!” The aggressive fish had a plate full of hamburger patties hoisted in the air to beckon everyone closer.

It took a little bit for everyone to get their meals, but shortly, everyone had plates loaded with food. Some of the kids had a few of the last slices of cake, but for the most part, the adults took their turn to get in on the sugary treats.

Toki was still in her chair, having never been ‘let up’ as it were. The ‘fathers to be’ were conspiring together to keep her and Sans as relaxed as possible. For her, that meant leaving her some place she couldn’t scurry off to do something she ‘shouldn’t. At this moment, it was her chair.

But that was fine- she was seated next to her husband, and both of them were enjoying the last bits of their food. Hamburgers had hit the spot, and she settled down to ‘digest’ as it were, and nibble on a small slice of cake while Papyrus finished off his food. He’d brought her plate first, since she was supposed to stay relaxed, and getting bumped and jostled by the laughing monsters at the ‘buffet’ of sorts was not relaxing.

Though, she mused, it would probably put her into labor. She was two weeks from her due date- and gods above, she felt like they should be here now.

She shifted slightly in her seat, and sampled frosting off of her spoon as she looked across to Tenebris. Thumper was over with the kids, in their little hoard at the tree across the grass, and was animatedly discussing something with the other children. She had no idea what, but from the energetic waving of his fork, it was probably good.

Tenebris, the silly old carnivore he was, was more than happy to simply consume the hamburgers bare, though for the sake of variety he did enjoy one accompanied by the necessities. Lettuce, Pickles, condiments, and the like. Afterward, he simply took to resting under a nearby tree to relax while he processed the magic gained from his large meal.

A Braxton Hicks briefly stole her breath away, and she bit down on the spoon as one of the twins kicked in the middle. The Braxton Hicks were uncomfortable, but they only bordered on painful when the twins squirmed during them.

When it faded a few seconds later, she pulled the plastic spoon out to realize she’d cracked it in her

Grillby had finished his cake first, having had a desire to something sweet and sugary, and had no problem nudging Papyrus’ arm so he could hand the spoon over to his wife for the fire monster. Grillby certainly couldn’t reach her. “Here, you can have mine, Toki.”

Though something had caught Tenebris’ eye and he now played with what looked to be strands of a black essence, much like a smoke, but with enough solidity to be manipulated.

Papyrus had passed the offered spoon to his mate when he and Sans both saw what he was up to.

"When was the last time he did that?" Sans murmured to his brother.

Aliquam shrugged in reply. "Father almost never uses his magic nowadays... I wonder why he simply toys with it..."

With the borrowed spoon, Toki set to finishing her cake. “He’s kind of like a cat. Chases laser lights, plays with magical strings- hell, his purring alone is indicative of that alone.” His paw pads were also more feline in design than canine. “Cats are strange creatures. We have two of them, Pap- I’m surprised you haven’t connected the dots yet.” Toki tugged out Thumper’s laser light, and winked at her husband.

The dot returned with a vengeance, and danced lightly over the tendril he was playing with. The high-powered beam was easily visible in the dark with the grass as short as it was.

Tenebris tensed up as he saw the light again and you could see him struggling to not go swiping at the little dot, "You mock me, Tokiko." he growled.

“Mock? Surely not.” She guided it lightly over his tendrils, and then set the dot on the top of his hand. She swirled it tauntingly around the hole in his palm. “Tease you? Most definitely yes. There’s no shame in chasing the light, Tenny.” She giggles.

“You really shouldn’t tease him so much.” Grillby hums, watching idly. “Older monsters don’t have the energy for such play.” He comments with mild amusement. His energy went to better tasks, such as tending to his mate. Wandering fingers found Sans’ hip, and rubbed it soothingly.

Sans let out a pleased sound at the touch to his hip, and leaned further into Grillby. A happy groan escaped him as he rubbed softly over a tender spot.

Aliquam took the example and quickly did the same with his wife, though his hand settled more on her thigh than her hip. The chair got in the way some. He kissed her temple gently, and laughed softly.

Toki smiled and shifted in her seat, leaning into the kiss he had bestowed. His hand felt nice on her thigh, rubbing over the warm femur. “Thanks, Pap. That feels nice.” She hummed. She tucked the laser light away again, and leaned into his arm with a soft sigh. The cake was finished, and plate set off to the side where they could get it later.

It took the bigger monster several moments to realize just what was said and who had said it, and a snarl left him. "Who are you calling old?!" he bristled at Grillby.

Toki’s relaxation ended as Tenebris growled and bristled, and her chin tucked reflexively. It had been a while since he’d snarled like that- and it still set her teeth on edge and made her nervous. It was ridiculous.
“I was simply stating a fact.” Grillby hummed. “I know I have more magic than I know what to do with, given my age, but I would hardly have the energy to chase things after playing laser tag with the children.” The fire elemental shot him a bemused look. “Using your magic might tire you out too much. You should be careful.” There might have been some teasing there.

Tenebris growled and swiftly stood, tail swishing behind him. "That does it." He huffed loudly. "I'll show you." The big monster stormed across the way and towards his home, garnering the gazes of several curious others, along with the kids.

For a moment, Aiquam was worried that perhaps Grillby had gone too far and insulted his father's pride. But he was delightfully surprised when he could see Tenebris approaching the open park space once more. Draped over his shoulders, and surprisingly loosely fitting over his body, was his deep black coat. The cloak went to his feet, and on the ground it let out deep black smoke.

He never truly disclosed anyone as to where he came to possess this unique, magic-amplifying coat. He'd often simply say it's his old lab coat, and left everyone to their imagination.

"Father, you're not actually upset, are you?" Aliquam asked quickly, concern making his brow draw together.

"Angry? Oh no... No, no, no, not at all." Tenebris chuckled. "In fact, I have been feeling a little pent up," he purred, popping his knuckles as his eyes began to glow. "What say you, Grillby? A spar, for old times sake?" he offered.

Toki's brows furrowed with mild worry, wondering if this spar was going to completely annihilate the nice park they were settled in.

Grillby glanced down at Sans, and then sighed. “Well, I walked into that one. Sure, Tenebris. It’s been a while since I’ve sparred.” The last time he’d fought, he’d been in his armor and trying to keep Tenebris from slaughtering the guards of the compound. The big fire monster got to his feet, and rolled his cufflinks up to his elbows before clipping them in place.

The fire elemental padded out across the grass, adjusting his vest, before curling his arms into his ‘I’m the bouncer for my own bar’ pose. “Ready when you are, Tenebris.”

He snorted at the pose and he reached up, closing his coat over his body. Immediately it's unique magic took hold. The cloak darkened and extended. Tenebris' turtleneck collar was lifted up to press directly under his jaw, and as he pressed his fingertips together, his eyes closed, before opening again, his purple irises now much darker as his grin widened, fangs disappearing behind his lips.

he spoke, before his shadows flared, and seemed to ignite into black flames. The flames coiled around Tenebris, before he leaned forward. Immediately in front of Grillby, the grinning face and wide eyes seeming to bear into his friend's soul.

Grillby took the change in stride, gave a bark of laughter that sent flames from his mouth, and stepped forwards to initiate battle. Grillby was up close and personal, since actually using flames to fight would be a bad idea in the dry grass crinkling under their feet. He had no desire to set the city on fire just so he’d have an edge in a friendly spar.

His arm cocked backwards, and he lunged, aiming a flaming fist towards the monster’s middle. A legitimate confrontation required magic from both sides- so a physical spar would be just as good.
Probably more relevant, given their recent set of foes.

Too many humans to do a confrontation with them all, after all.

“Let me know if the heat gets too much for you, old friend.” The fire monster chuckles sharply.

The laughter that came from Tenebris was a glitch-toned cackle at the light-hearted counter threat and for a moment Grillby thought out his plan of attack. Tenebris himself was easy, but this was definitely new.

He would stick to physical, giving that would be the best edge against hostile humans, however he began to think that this would be a fight against Magic. "Tenebris, will you want to use your magic for this spar?" he questioned.

Tenebris nodded in reply.

"Very well."

Toki watched the spar with a worried look, before signing. "If you break the trees, you have to replant them!" She calls out in warning so they don't forget that they do have an audience, and that it was possible for them to get carried away.

"Kick mister Grillby's butt, Dad!" Thumper cheered from the gaggle of children clustered on the other side of the spar.

The monsters clashed with a shower of sparks and dark magic.

It had been so long since they had felt the magic of the master's. The master's were long since dead, and those of their line did not possess the magic. They had the blood, they had the potential for power, but the magic was gone from the world. It had used to be thick enough to taste, and taste they had. It had fueled them, powered them, when their masters had gone.

But it hadn't lasted. It never did. They devoured it, ate it, and when it was gone, they hungered. When those of the blood came to the forest they had been left to guard, they devoured them too. The soul, it lacked the magic needed to make a bond and power them, but they could devour that soul and gain some nourishment.

It sickened them, because they were made to protect those of the blood. But the hunger... The hunger was grievously overpowering. They hunted and hungered, and it was only when a small half blood escaped that they came free of their fury. The loss of prey woke them, and the souls of the blooded that had birthed them burned their scorn at the hubris they had committed.

And for nearly twenty five and then some years they refused to hunt. They touched nothing, ate nothing, and did nothing. They waited, seeking death- and then the magic came back in one fell swoop. Their hunger lingered, and they found themselves unable to devour the magic. It made them sick- it was not the magic that they remembered.

So they waited. Death would come, or they would wait an eternity until a master came.

And one came. Just a year hence, a master came. And, they realized, it was the little half blood. The half blood was no longer flesh though. They bore the form of a walking skeleton, and we're accompanied by others of similar non-human kinds. The half blood was ripe, bearing the next generation of masters.

Their form confused them, and it took them time before they would approach. But, when they did, the half blood was already leaving.

So they had followed. It took time to break the fetid spell that bound them there to that long abandoned lake, and even longer for them to gather the strength to return where their memories recalled as home.

The clan compound was similar, but there was now a village around it. They were confused. The clan had never been composed of monsters before, and now there were beasts of all kinds. They watched, for weeks they watched, their corruption disturbing the hives of buzzing stingers that the master tended to.

They did not know how to approach. But... There was a magic loose now, at the heart of the village, where they could sense the master's presence. Where she was bright and pure and hot, this magic was cold and dark, slick and oily. It made their fur bristle and flare, because this magic was not good magic.

The magic faced off against one nearly as bright as the master, and had them on the defensive. It was disturbing the to feel, as the master's magic flinched any time the dark one's magic got too strong.

The flinching meant fear. Fear meant a threat. A threat meant that they needed to defend the master, before the master could die, and they would be left so, so alone again. The hunger would surely consume them, for they were too twisted, too corrupt, to partake in the magic of the world again.

As darkness fell, their bones twisted and cracked, and their pale form rose up onto their hind hooves.

They opened their mouth, a garbled beastly noise escaping them, and they charged the wall. Good guards were not hurt, simply tossed asside as the massive being moved, crawling up and over the walls and houses that separated them. Guards were flung and ignored, their magic jabbing at the beastly thing as they tried to fend it off.

They would not be so easily dispatched.

They clamored up and over, until they came to the open space where the master was. There she sat, in a strange contraption, her magic growing more and more distressed as they grew closer.

They landed across from the dark one, mouth opening in a warning cry, human like hands reaching out to swipe the fire man away from the dark one. Their mouth opened, ghastly teeth unbefitting a stags mouth glinting darkly as sticky, sickly saliva clung to them.

They had to get to the master. They had to get to the master. The tall bone man would not stop them, the short one would not, nor the dark one or the fire one. The fox, wolves, sheep, bunnies, none of them would stop them. None.

Tenebris' shadows flared as he was now facing the monstrous creature, and he screeched loudly, raising his shoulders as he swung his tail in view of the stag to draw it’s gaze towards him.

Aliquam stood up as well and summoned a bone, his eye sockets widening slightly in shock at the monstrous creature's sudden appearance. It was sick and twisted looking. The horns were black and covered in something disgusting looking; it’s white fur more of an off white, as if covered in a layer of filth. It was thin and sickly looking with its ribs showing through the thin fur over its thick skin. The hooves were black as well, but cracked and unhealthy.

The breathing was ragged and shaky, coming out through a tightly locked mouth. The teeth were reminiscent of Toki’s, tightly locked like a crocodile, though no lips whatsoever were there to cover it. It looked like they had been chewed off, or worn off, in fact.

Eyes blacker than the magic of the dark one glimmered at them with a sickly, twisted sheen. As monsters flocked to get their children to safety, they ignored them and took a step towards the master.

Grillby recovered from being tossed, and he skirted around the fight to nab Sans, taking him away from the beast as swiftly as he could.

Toki had blanched, her eye lights disappearing from view. Panic had her mouth opening, and she stiffened in her seat, fingers clenching over the arms. "The Nara Beast," she whispered, horrified.

The beast screamed a defensive threat aimed at Papyrus, who was closest to Toki. It was a sound so horrible and shrill that the wolf monsters yelped and hit the ground, clutching their paws over their ears to try and stifle the sound.

They advanced, taking steady steps to drive the orange magic weapon away from the master. They couldn't let the master die. The master could fix everything.

The orange one was the more immediate threat to the master. They disregarded the dark one temporarily. They could handle him after the master was secured.

Aliquam let out a gasp and braced his weapon in his hands to counteract the monster while Tenebris snarled and lunged.

He landed on the creature's back and grabbed hold of it tightly with his claws, roaring angrily while biting into its antler and throwing his head back to try and get it's attention away from his son.

The antler was hard and sharp, and covered in rotten antler velvet. His weight staggered the beast, and it's shoulders popped out with a sickening squelch, arms turning around loosely in their sockets so they could grab at the dark one. Sharp human like fingers tore at his legs and tried to fling him away.

Tenebris back claws had sunk into white fur, and popped through the thick flesh. Vile, black liquid oozed out, the stink washing over everyone present. The pain and the body trying to distract them did not stall it though, and they continued to walk, albeit labored, towards the master.

Howl retched, nearly hurling on Thumper as the stink stung his nose.

The taste was beyond description, just like the stink, and Tenebris was thankful he did not have a stomach at this point as he released it's antler with a heavy dry heave, before he snarled and grabbed it's antlers with his claws, pulling again. "Get away from them!" He snarled.

Aliquam cringed at the smell before he abandoned his weapon to pick up Toki. He plucked her neatly out of her chair. "We need to go. We need to go. We need to go RIGHT NOW" he insisted.

Toki clung to him with a frantic nod, terror sparking over her bones. "Go, go, go, go!" She was no brave soul, and she wasn't going to stand up to the towering corrupted white stag.

They screamed again, and jerked their neck against his pull. It snapped with a sickly sound, but the beast was not stopped. The blood magic swirled within it, and its head swiveled around on its newly made hinge with a sickening crunch, snapping sharp teeth at Tenebris throat. Black, soulless eyes stared up at Tenebris.

At that point, Tenebris stiffened before he made to leap off, landing on all fours before he turned and hissed loudly at the buck, arching his back while his shadows bristled. What unnatural magic sustained this beast, he did not want to know. A broken neck should have done it.

But it didn’t.

The buck stared at him for a few seconds, before their neck righted itself, and they lowered their head. Their cloven hooves tore holes in the dry grass, kicking up clods of it, and they charged antlers first at the skeleton stealing their master.

Toki's sockets widened, witnessing the charge over her husband's shoulder.

Tenebris tensed and immediately flew after it, hissing to himself about the damned cloak around him and abandoning it partway to properly sprint after the charging creature.

Aliquam was still running but in panic, gave Toki a squeeze and teleported to the roof of their home as he picked up the sounds of it giving chase.

Teleporting brought on a nauseated feeling for Toki, and she clutched him tightly, screwing her sockets shut as she trembled. "It's not supposed to leave the lake..." She whispers nervously.

The beast shrieked angrily as the tall skeleton and their master disappeared. "Maaaaaasterrrrr," the word was hissed out, sounding nothing sort of horrendous between such sickened vocal chords. Words were hard. They turned on their heels, locating Toki's magic again, and made a beeline for the brick house at the center of the clan compound.

He stroked her head gently and he set her down on her rear right next to the chimney, "S-Stay here... Keep hidden if you must. I'll t-take care of this" he murmured, trying hard to hide his fear before he ran and leaped from the roof, landing on the ground before he summoned forth a bone spear, "That's far enough, Monster!" he snarled.

The beast greeted him, having torn up the wall just slightly as it scrambled over with the dark one hot in pursuit. They stared at the orange skeleton, and opened their mouth in a ghastly snarl, before lunging at the tall skeleton with fangs bared and hands ready to grab at his frame.

He twisted the Bone and began to spin it fast in one hand, striking it's snout and hands before he summoned another, thicker one and swung it at the beast's face, before Tenebris slammed into it and aimed to try and at least break the thing enough that it couldn't get up.

The spear split the skin of its snout and tore bloody furrows in its hands. As the dark one slammed into it, it turned and spat in his face. It's thick, sticky saliva mixed with the foul odor and taste of its blood, and splattered over Tenebris' face and mouth.

Their hands reached out to Papyrus, and took hold of his spear arm and aimed to break it. The spear couldn't be wielded if the arm was too broken to use it.

Immediately Tenebris was out of the fight, scrambling backwards blindly as he tried to wipe the thick substance out of his eyes, his tongue sticking slightly out of his mouth as he spat as well, having had his mouth open when the creature spat.

Papyrus tensed and yelled out in pain as the creature began to bend his arm painfully, before he summoned more bones to impale it, trying hard to get it to let go as he swung the thick bone again to hit it in the face.

It's jaws snapped shut over the bone as more shards of summoned bones stabbed into it. Black blood oozed with rancid odor, and the beast bit through the thick weapon.

They lunged to take the tall skeleton's skull into its mouth, when they were hit with a projectile from above.

Toki was carefully balanced at the edge of the roof, and panicked when it spotted her. As she scrambled backwards, the beast tossed her husband like a rag doll and proceeded to climb the side of the wall with surprising efficiency.

Papyrus hit the ground hard, screeching in pain as he landed on his damaged arm, which shattered under his weight and the force behind the throw. "TOKI!" He cried out in his pain, alarm and terror for his wife and children making his voice shrill.

"Pap!" She shrieked back. She was literally stuck on the roof, and she could only cling to the chimney and hope the beast couldn't climb well enough to get her.

They reached the top of the roof rather rapidly, and then wobbled across to her. Or tried to. Hooves on a sloped roof proved perilous- and the beast lost footing. It grabbed her arm as they fell.

The beast rotated on the way down, and clutched their master to them as they brought their hooves down to brace for landing.

Their legs shattered under their weight and inability to roll with the landing, and they dropped on the front lawn, dropping Toki gently as they let out a cry of pain.

Their arms caged Toki, but the beast didn't move to hurt her as it made pained noises.

"T-TOKI!" He shakily got to his feet, his skull ringing from the impact with the ground, and he summoned another spear in his still good arm, leaving behind what remained of his right radius, Ulna, and right hand as he came closer, his eye lighting up as he brought the spear back, aiming for the monster's head. "L-LET GO OF MY WIFE!" he roared.

The beast shifted and turned to put their body between their master and the spear. They couldn't move with their legs broken, so all they could do was put a barrier between her and the weapon and keen softly. They could not get the master away from the threat, so they would act as the master's shield.

Toki hesitated as its eyes screwed up in what was likely resignation and pain. She couldn't scramble back- the thing was partially pinning her leg. But... "A... Are you... Trying to protect me?" She whispered, voice shaky. It was hurt and in pain but it had protected her from the fall.

"Maaaaaasterrrrr." They manage to murmur.

The sudden change in behavior confused Aliquam, and slowly he let the spear fall to the ground, and he slowly moved around the beast to see his wife. "Toki?"

"I'm okay," she responded shakily. "It... Kept me from getting hurt in the fall. I... Don't think it wants to hurt me."

Its head jerked up and black eyes watched Aliquam warily, teeth bared in a defensive growl. It curled its arms tighter around Toki, ears flicking back and forth rapidly.
She hesitated, nasals momentarily reeling at the stench that was practically in her face, and then gently reached up to touch it's cheek. They stopped growling, and leaned into her palm with an almost relieved sound.

He looked at the creature for a moment, then he slowly knelt, warily watching it as it watched him. "Toki... Isn't this the creature from the camp fire story?" he asked hesitantly.

Black eyes watched him warily, waiting for another weapon to be summoned.

"It is, yeah." She rubbed the stag’s cheek slightly. "You remember it?"

"Yes... but... its condition is far worse than you let on." He murmured.

"It's been just a legend for a long time." She swallowed. "$I was also a kid the last time I saw it. But... Blood magic isn't good magic, Pap, and this thing is basically all blood magic... I might not know much about it," or anything about it, actually, “but I know blood magic isn’t good magic in any form of the sense.”

He looked at the stag with a small frown. "I... I'm sorry, Toki..."

"It’s okay, Pap... Are you okay? Your arm..." She couldn't believe her ancestors had done such a thing. This poor beast... It was probably longing for a mage of some kind. She gently pulsed some magic into it, to try and soothe the whimpering sounds it was making.

The stag latched onto the magic, and leaned into her hand heavily. The white of its fur seemed to bleach brighter, and it sucked out her magic greedily, making her gasp.

It burst into green flames, making the skeleton under it flinch heavily. From the fire that shrouded her and the stag, it rose upright once more.

Their black eyes had bled to a luminescent green, and golden swirls blossomed around its eyes. The fetid wounds and sickly stature healed as it devoured her magic and connected to her to purge out the blood magic that had birthed it's corrupt being.

Black antlers had burned painlessly away to gold, and it had actual lips to cover its crocodile like fangs. It rose up nobly, fur glowing almost like the moon, and then reached down to lift her to her feet with an almost tender touch.

She staggered, magic severely depleted under what it had taken from her.

He didn't answer about his arm, rather used his good one to hold her up, nuzzling her gently as he caught her. "I've got you." he whispered, nuzzling her before looking up at the stag.

The stag stared back at him, towering massively tall. It's rack even exceeded the kings own. They stared at the skeleton, and then looked at their staggered master. "Peace," they murmured in a low voice, a new voice with chords as pure as freshly fallen snow. "Master has brought peace."

Toki tucked into Paps side, clinging to him wearily. "You were born to fight and kill and defend, but no one gave you another purpose, did they?" She murmured softly.

They shook their head, and took a deep breath with lungs uncorrupted by decay and bad magic.

He looked at him with a surprised look on his face, but tensed as he heard groans and gagging sounds from Tenebris, "Father...!" He carefully tried to coax Toki to sit, so he could trust she wouldn’t fall while he tended to his dad. "I have to check on him..."
"Not with your arm," she stubbornly remained on her feet, and tucked herself under his shoulder. She looked up at the beast. "Protect. That is your task. Those who have bad intentions in their soul will be your target. No other shall be harmed."

The stag dipped their head. "As master wishes." The stag gave a tug of magic, and then there was an impossibly small deer standing before them, antlers and hooves golden and glimmering. Green eyes peered at them, before it bound off, out of the entrance and into the woods across the street.

Once it was gone, Toki shuddered and staggered as she aided Papyrus in returning to where they could hear Tenebris.

Tenebris was still rubbing at his face, Aliquam knelt beside him, speaking his name to let him know he wasn't a threat, before he helped him to the water, helping him wash his eyes out, before getting the god-awful taste out of his mouth.

Toki helped as best she could, tugging off her turtleneck to sink it into the water. She then scrubbed it gently over his face when just water proved to be impossible to get the sticky black ichors off of him.

"This is harder to get out than your saliva is," she mutters tartly.

"At least," he coughed, "my saliva doesn't smell or t-" he retched, tail rattling as he tried to keep from expelling magic, "Taste this bad!" he hissed.

"That coffee breath of yours can get pretty rank," she teased gently. Since water wasn't cutting it... She shoved a clean side of the cloth into his mouth and scrubbed, ignoring the part of her that screamed for her to get away from the sharp, sharp teeth settled inside. "Bite me, and I won't get the blood stains out of your favorite turtleneck." She covers her lingering nerves and shakiness with banter.

He bristled at the threat that accompanied the cloth in his mouth, but he played along, opening his mouth further and sticking out his tongue, hiding his bottom teeth.

She grabbed his tongue with one hand, and scrubbed it. Probably roughly, but soon it was spotless, as was the inside of his mouth. She hesitated with the teeth, and she knew he probably saw a flash of fear cross her face before she powered through and scrubbed those too. Once his mouth was spotless, she stepped back, staggering slightly and leaned against the house to calm her shakes. "I'll wash those since you were good and didn't bite. Fix my husband first please."

He gargled a few mouthfuls of water but afterwards, did as asked and as soon as his sight was solid enough he was led to where the remains of Aliquam's arm bones rested.

Toki staggered stubbornly after them, but ended up having to sit on the front steps as her energy levels plummeted. She kept her ruined top in hand, and mused that she would need help getting everything into the laundry.

The stag appeared again as Tenebris and Aliquam were piecing together his arm, and the stag peered at them through green eyes as it bounced back into the compound.

Toki eyed it. "Our forest is in the back of the house, not across the road."

The stag seemed bashful, or as bashful as a deer can be, and bounced towards the side of the house where the two Gaster's were.

Aliquam was quiet as Tenebris carefully reconstructed his arm, focusing to fix each piece perfectly before putting the pieces together like a puzzle.

He had just finished with reconnecting the radius and ulna to each other when he saw the stag and he tensed up, his tail rattling loudly.

The stag puffed his chest up and made a strange bleating sound, nothing like the screech from before. Then, they turned, fluffy tail flicking into the air, and bound off into the darkness behind the house.

Toki waved at Tenebris to calm him. "Stag is cool, I fixed it so it's not all corrupted anymore."

"Forgive me if I keep my edge." He responded.

"Probably for the best." She shifted, and was unable to stand. Not only did her legs tremble, but she was too heavy to haul herself upright. "Pretty sure the stag doesn't like you. Not sure why. You're a nice person when you're not being a dick." Which, from time to time, he could be. "How is Pap's arm?"

"I snapped its neck." He grunted, before he looked back to his work, "It's doing well, all the bone splinters are here."

"Well, that would do it. I’d be angry if you snapped my neck." She mused. "To be fair, I think it thought you guys were going to hurt me. It tried to protect me from Pap's spear." She watched him lightly and nodded. "I would summon a bee so you could see better with some light, but the stag drained me dry to purify the corrupted magic making it sick."

"Don't bother using any of your own magic, don’t want you drained."

She already was drained. But she gave a sarcastic salute, and then slumped against the railing. "Yes, Papa. When you fix Pap, you might want to let everyone know we're okay... Though I'll take your shirt first." His pants looked fine, though his feet needed a good washing for sure.

He nodded gently, and once the bone was fixed, he shed his shirt and helped Aliquam to the steps, sitting him down before going to assure his friends and family that he and the others were unharmed. Well, to a degree.

When Tenebris was gone, Toki shifted and leaned gently into Papyrus. "When we get inside, we are piling you in pillows and you are not getting out of bed." She informs him firmly. "And I'll be joining you once I get all of our clothes in the laundry, because this stench is worse than skunk."

"We are taking a bubble bath with that nice smelling soap." he insisted sternly, "THEN we'll get into bed."

"That's acceptable." She nods. "Try not to touch anything or it's going to have e to be cleaned too." She was gross. Toki paused, and then nudged his leg gently. "You know what, your dad doesn't need us waiting for him. Help me up. This stink is starting to make me nauseated, and I don't like sitting out here topless."

He nodded and carefully helped her up with his good arm, "I'll have to heal some more while we're relaxing."

"Yes." She nods, once she's upright, and then wobbles up the stairs. "You know... We kinda owe the stag. We fell off the roof, and I didn't feel anything when we landed." Though his legs had shattered. She opens the door for Pap since her hands are less gross, and motions him in. "That's a long fall for a pregnant skeleton."
She knows he's likely recalling the last time she took heavy damage. She'd gotten knocked into a super early labor. This time, other than angry kicks and Braxton Hicks, she was perfectly fine.

Papyrus gave a sobering shake of his head, and nuzzled her gently as he passes her. “We owe the stag indeed.” He murmurs softly.

“Mhm… Alright,” She closed the door behind them, and gave him a firm look. “No more thinking of what could have happened. So… Strip- I’ll get all this in the laundry, and we can go wash off before our stink makes me sick.”

“Or me.” He grimaces. “It is quite foul.”

“Very.”
The end of September came quickly. The following week was spent taking care of her husband and making sure his arm had healed up properly. Other than some fading scars, the bones had knit back together perfectly, and he was fully functional.

Which was both good and bad.

Good, because he was back at work and had been able to help put the bee hives away for the season. It was supposed to snow soon, so that was definitely a must.

Bad, because that meant that now he was healed, he was well within range to fuss at her.

Her due date was here- on the literal day- and she’d woken up with him up and about preparing the delivery of the twins.

But, she hadn’t been in labor, and Toki wasn’t sure she would be. The chances of babies being born on their due date was low- but with twins, really, she should be having them shortly. The only thing she had that she didn’t before was a set of parts that wouldn’t de-summon.

She stood in the kitchen in a turtleneck and a skirt, and a pair of panties that were totally necessary now given the glowing bits below that were actually there now, and kneaded one of her fists into her lower back.

The stuff for making cookies was spread out on the counter, but she’d gotten a cramp from being active, and was slowly trying to breathe through it. “Mmm…”

"How are you feeling, my love?" Aliquam murmured, wrapping his arms around her, as he pressed closer to her from behind.

"I gave myself a back cramp, but nothing yet. I was trying to make it go away so I could finish cookies." She glanced back over her shoulder careful of her horns, and nuzzled his chin. "Ah-hoooo. Okay, cramp is gone." But a Braxton Hicks had taken its place. They were sporadic at best, varying between ten minutes to six hours apart. They were all over the place, really. It was pesky.

He slowly ran his hands over her swell with a soft hum, but he stopped at feeling the tightness that had settled over her belly. "Toki...?"

"Hm?" His hands felt nice, large and warm over the taut magical flesh. She reached out for the Vanilla, and began measuring it out.

"Are you having a contraction?" He asked, running his phalanges over the tightness of her middle. His fingers trembled slightly, but rubbed soothingly with some effort.

The flesh relaxed slowly under his hands, and soon it was the same texture it usually was. "It's still irregular like it has been for the past couple weeks, Pap. But yeah, technically I am having a contraction." Braxton Hicks were technically contractions of a sort, but they were more or less preparing the body for labor.

Papyrus startled. Loudly. He also might have panicked a bit. "Are you having the twins now!?"

His exclaimed shout was practically in her non-existent ear, and she leaned slightly to the side to shoot him a dirty look. "Keep shouting like that and you might scare them out." She rolled her eyes good-naturedly, and started to mix the dough together. "I don't know, Pap. Time the time between the Braxton Hicks, and we'll see. This one just ended."

"Nyeeeh..." He made a fussy sound, and hugged her gently, "I'm sorry, Toki..."

"It's alright, Pap." She nuzzled him gently again and hummed. She was quiet in his embrace for a time, quietly mixing the dough and getting it sectioned out onto the cookie sheets. "You can make it up to me by helping me get the cookies in and out of the oven, yeah?" Not that he didn't anyways, because bending down for her wasn't usually a good thing as big as she was, but it was polite to ask sometimes rather than just assume that he would.

"Of course I could...!" He replied quickly, just a little desperate to do something to make himself useful. "Just lemme know when it's ready to go in."

Toki nodded and scooted the first tray over. "This one is ready." She chirped to him as she started in on setting up the second for monster-sized cookies. They were too big for her technically, but who was going to tell her she couldn't eat a cookie the size of a small plate? Not someone who didn't want a grumpy pregnant skeleton, that was for sure. "It looks like we'll have a couple spoons of dough left to enjoy after I get this tray done."

She glanced up and spotted the stag I'm her back yard. They shared a look, as they often did, and then they disappeared back out of the back of the compound, where Toki knew her hives were at. "You know, I think the stag was causing the aggressive behavior in the bees before. They calmed down almost immediately after the stag was purified." She comments softly.

"That's good to know." He sighed. "I was worried for a while there." He mentioned, putting the cookies in the oven.

"Bees are sensitive," She nods. She shifts, and finishes the second tray shortly. The rest of the dough is put onto a spoon and offered to her husband. She didn't really want to eat dough- her appetite had been coming and going all day and most of that was because she was nervous about what was to come. "Stag still doesn't like your dad. I heard they made a mess on his lawn yesterday."

He opened his mouth and took the spoon into his mouth and hummed happily in thanks, before he backed up and looked at her. "Well to be fair, it's a prey animal sassing a predator if anything."

"I'm not sure Stag counts as a prey animal. Have you seen those teeth?" They were like hers, and she did not have the teeth of a prey animal. She chuckles quietly, and shoves her knuckles into her lower back. "So, we've got thirty minutes for these cookies to bake. Want to go see what's on the television? Oh! Did the mail come yet? I'm expecting a package. You're not allowed to peek at it either."

He shot her a look, but nodded gently, "Sure, let's go see what's on. And no, I don’t know if they’ve been here. I’m sure they’ll be here soon though."

"M’kay. I'll keep an ear out." She hums, and waddles out of the kitchen. The main room is warm and she angles for the living room with a pleased sound.

Right up until her middle tightens and she pauses with an audible grunt. The Braxton Hicks rolls over her, and the twins stretch angrily in response, making her ache. "Mnnn..."

“Toki?” He was at her side in seconds, worrying over her once more as his nervousness escalated.

She briefly tuned out his worrying, and waits the short time until it fades. When it does, she exhales and sighs. "That was unpleasant. Now what are you saying?" Her attention flicks over to him and his fussing, trying to catch up with what he had babbled.

“Nyeh! I worry about you!” He fussed again.

"I'm alright, Pap. It was just a Braxton Hicks. Though... They're not usually as close together." She murmurs the last bit mostly to herself, though he could hear her clearly.

"Nyeeeh, Toki you're worrying me!" His voice raised a few octaves.

"Take a deeeeep breath." She glanced up at him and pantomimed a deep breath of air. "Calm down. It's not the end of the world, Pap. Agh. Back cramp. Shit that stings." She kneads along her back. "Ugh, right next to my spine. Seriously though, it'll be okay Pap. You and Tenebris know what to expect, yeah?"

“No! I don’t know!” Any knowledge he might have had practically flew right out of his head, and he was left being a shaky shell of ‘dear gods why’.

"You do," she cooed soothing to her obviously panicking husband. "You do. You're panicky though, and that's blocking some of your thought process." She took hold of his fingers and gently coaxed him into the living room and to the couch. "Sit." She orders gently. "Get comfortable, and I'll sit with you."

He took a deep breath as instructed, but it didn’t do much to settle his nerves. “I… I guess I believe you.” He muttered as he settled down carefully on the couch.

Once he was seated, she settled in right next to him, making sure to keep an ear out for the timer going off. "Good. Sometimes your wife knows best." She shifted and settled slightly on her side, sighing quietly. "Mm... Would you mind rubbing my lower back please? It really hurts right along my spine."

"Oh of course!" Papyrus was glad for something to do that was helpful. He set his palms over the curves of her hips, and then pressed his thumbs into her lower back. He located the knots along her spine, and began to rub in circular motions that both soothed her, and soothed himself.

Toki groans. "Mmm... Ever heard the saying 'it hurts so good'? That saying is totally applicable right now. That hurts something fierce, but it feels good too." She exhaled softly, and glanced back to keep an eye on him and see if he was calming, or if his internal panic was escalating.
Aliquam was starting to settle down as he massaged her back, leaning over to press soft kisses to her head and shoulders as he did so.

"Feeling better?" She queried gently to him, smiling at the kisses he pressed to her skull. She gave a tiny groan, her back tightening as her middle did for the third time in rapid succession.

He nodded slowly and gave a little more pressure to counteract the tightening of her muscles.

“Mmm… that makes three…” She exhaled softly, and groaned again. More pressure on the knots hurt something bad, but she knew it was something that needed to happen. She buzzed at him lightly, her breath hitching as her middle loosened again. “Mmm… I’m glad you’re calming down. Panicking isn’t going to do anyone any good, but I know how hard it is to stop panicking once you’ve started.”

"Nyeh...” Aliquam peppered her with more kisses, and nuzzled her shoulder lightly.

“We’ll be okay, Pap.” She smiled softly. “They have to come out sometime, don’t they?” She winks.

"Yes indeed... soon..." he agreed, pecking her head gently.

"Think of it this way- the sooner contractions come, the sooner we get to hold them." She gave him a loving smile, and shifted slightly on the couch. The magic flesh of her back was finally starting to relax, and Toki could heave a sigh of relief. "Mm..."

"Why does everything humans do have to hurt?" he then asked, "I mean... You wouldn't carry like this if you were a skeleton! Would you?"

"We don't actually know. I'm technically the only actual skeleton in existence, since you're not full skeleton yourself, and we don't know how actual skeletons reproduce since your dad never really studied skeletons. Probably didn't have time with the war. It also could be an influence from my human bones, or influence from your dad's influence on you." She props herself up a little bit and hums. "As for humans, they're organic based. Labor is basically the muscles contracting- but you know that thanks to the videos you and Tenebris have been watching. It's sort of like when Undyne hugs you around the ribs and squeezes harder and harder. Hurting is part of life." Toki tilted her head thoughtfully. "I'm a bit of a science experiment at this point, Pap. Humans are all squishy things and biology. I am pretty sure I still have my human bones." Given how much slower hers had re-grown and how long it took for them to heal compared to Pap's arm… It was entirely possible. She also still had a marrow like substance, and it tended to ooze with her magic when her bones got cut and fractured. "I'm sort of a weird hybrid of skeleton and human; Magic and biology if you will. Todd can still bleed and has some of his human functions. HTM’s are… strange.”

"Very strange... but I still love you, and I know I wouldn't have it... have you, any other way." He spoke quietly, reaching out and wrapping an arm around her gently as she sat upright once more. "I love you so, so much." He murmured.

“I love you too, Pap.” She nestled into his side with a soft sigh, and rubbed her fingers gently over her middle. The twins shifted inside, making the flesh twitch below her shirt, and Toki settled in to wait for the next contraction. “You sure?” Her eye lights glimmered up at him in teasing amusement. “You’d probably have a much simpler and less deadly relationship,” she meant HAM here, “if you had married one of the lovely bunnies in the village.”

"I'm willing to take whatever life throws at us. I mean… Heh...” He shook his head slightly. “At this point, is it really an option? I married you, damn it.”

“I was teasing you, love.” She patted his cheekbone gently and chuckled up at him. “But no, you’re stuck with me until the day I die.” She grins up at him cheerily. There was really no knowing when that would be either. They’d have to wait and see if he had her for sixty years, or six hundred years. “Though- ahh, there’s another one. That one is unpleasant. Ow.”

There was a distant beep off in the kitchen as well.

“Shit, the cookies need changed out.”

"Stay here. Stay right here. I'll get it." He told her, getting up to go take care of the cookies.

“Make sure to put the other ones in too!” She calls. Toki pauses though, and glances at her own position. “Also, literally, Pap, I can’t get up without you giving me a hand.” She was quite literally stuck, Braxton Hicks aside.

While Papyrus was gone, there was a demanding squeak, and then Toki found a gray kitty draped over her belly, and pushing her face into her chin, demanding attention. “Ack, Gracie, really?” Toki had no idea where Gael was, but she was sure he wasn’t far behind.

"Can do!" he called behind him, pulling the first batch of cookies out of the oven. He set them aside then moved to collect the next tray, perking up slightly at hearing the phone ring. Once he put the tray in the oven, he picked up the phone. "Hello?"

"Pap! Papyrus! Listen buddy is my sister there?" The voice of Kon rang through, insistent and slightly frenzied.

Whatever could have him sounding so... panicked? Papyrus had to definitely wonder. "Yes she is."

"I need to talk to her, RIGHT NOW."

"Of course, hang on." Pap left the kitchen to bring Toki the phone. "It is your brother."

“Which one?” She queried back from her position buried in cats. Gael had joined her, and had taken post on her lap. Or what was left of her lap. Her belly and Gracie took up most of it. The phone was taken nonetheless, and cradled to her non-existent ear. “Kind of awkward timing, but what’s up, little bro?” Considering she was the oldest, it was literally the easiest way to address her younger brothers. No matter which brother she was talking to.

"Sis! Tokiko, look, I need your advice. How do you ask someone on a date? I mean like... if they don’t eat meat or anything."

Kon’s voice rang through her ear, and she lifted the phone away slightly, so he didn’t deafen her. “Kon?” She blinks. “Uh... Well... you just go to them and say ‘would you like to go out to eat sometime?’ That’s pretty universal for most folks and vegetarians. I think.” She heaves a soft groan as her middle relaxes again. “You trying to muster up the guts to ask Lana out again? Oh! I’ve been meaning to ask. How did that first date go? I tried asking Lana, but she was too sheepish to answer me properly.”

And one could practically hear Papyrus' soul shattering as he groaned loudly from the kitchen. "Tokiii, WHY!?"

After a snort of laughter, Kon spoke again. "Well, I mean, isn't that like... cliché or something, or ask like that?"

“Because I love you and you need something to ruffle your feathers today.” She smiles slightly. The pun would ruffle his feathers and give him something to be huffy over rather than worry. "I could give you some Undyne advice and tell you to suplex her if you don’t want to be cliché.” Toki grinned. “But I don’t think your noodly arms can lift her, bro. Hm… Oh my gosh. Isn’t this like the first time you’ve ever taken a woman out on a second date? Oh my GOSH Kon!” Her voice made Gracie pin her ears at her, but Toki honestly didn’t care. “Oh my gosh, my little brother’s growing up. I’m so proud. I might even shed a tear, oh goodness.”

"Toki shut UP!” he was bristling so loudly one could hear it through the phone, "I just like her, okay!?"

“I’m not teasing you about liking her,” she laughed, unbothered by her brother’s bristling, “I’m teasing because this is the first time it hasn’t been ‘one and done’. Flirting with my father-in-law notwithstanding.” She shifts softly, kneads a fist into her side, and rides out a cramp with a few quick breaths. “Alright. So, you like her. Do you really, really like her?”

"Toki I swear to-" he stopped and took a breath, before he replied. "Yes."

As Aliquam sat down beside her, he scooped her gently into his lap and cradled her warmly in his arms. This dislodged the cats, and the both of them hopped down with grumpy sounds.

Toki leaned into him and inhaled contently. “You smell like cookies.” She informs him happily, sounding quite pleased with this. To her little brother, Toki chuckles. “Then you’ve got to show a little tenderness. Most women love romance. But be straight with her- you remember how your attempt at flirting with her during the wedding went, yeah?”

"Too well.” Kon murmured, before he cleared his throat. "Uh- yeah!"

Aliquam smiled at her words to him before he nuzzled her gently, rubbing her stomach.

Her stomach was warm and relaxed under his touch, but the magic made muscles twitched and flexed slightly under his fingers, a simple warning for what was to come.

Toki giggled, and rested her head against his chest, pressing the fronts of her horns affectionately against his jaw line. “Be honest with her. Maybe take her on a simple date to start. Go shopping with her, or take her to Ryushi’s. His restaurant has amazing food, and you know he serves a vegetarian line of meals as well, and they have private booths. Talk to her, spend time with her- it doesn’t even have to be a date if you really, really like her. If she really likes you too, she’ll jump at the chance to hang out and spend time with you.”

"I... Yeah... I'll try that out... Thanks a lot, sis..." Kon said gently.

“That’s what I’m here for, even when I’m possibly starting labor.” She teases gently. “Just enjoy time with her. And remember- if you want to start a legitimate relationship, don’t enter it with the end of it in mind.” She warns. If all went well, they would have a literal sheep in the family.

"I hope your husband is with you!” Kon snapped.

"I'm right here, little brother." Papyrus chuckled.

“He is. He’s been close at hand all day- and has finally calmed down it looks like.” She leans into him a bit more, and grunts. “Mmn… Back cramps and contractions are the worst thing ever. I think Mom dealt with the same thing with you, Kon. Though you were a little shit and made us wait eighteen hours before your little fanny decided to come out.”

"You know you love me, big sis!” He cackled.
“I do indeed.” She chuckled. “Now, remember, you should be safe to have sex with Lana so long as you don’t bump souls. Bumping souls means I’ll get a niece or nephew. In which such case, I shall spoil them rotten, but you had better not corrupt them, or I’ll shave you bald. Unfortunately, they don’t make a soul condom yet.” She eyes her husband. “We should get your dad to research that.” She had enjoyed touching souls with Papyrus- but getting pregnant had not been planned, and HTM’s didn’t get the leisure of choosing to have a kid or not.

Though the ‘soul condom’ comment made him laugh, Kon sounded much less frantic than he had earlier. "I promise I wont go down that hard on her when I do, Sis," he cackled, "Thanks a lot for that, Sis. Love you."

“That’s what I’m here for.” Mostly to tell him stuff he already knew but needed affirmed- but that’s what big siblings are for. “I love you too. Now, go make your plans, alright?”

"Yes! I just gotta… Gotta... Oh boy...” He drawled off as the phone left the side of his head as he hung up.

After a moment, Aliquam snorted loudly and began to laugh hard with an amused "NYEH HEH HEH HEH!"

Toki laughed lightly, and tossed the phone onto the table. “Laugh it up now, but you get to do that when Thumper starts dating. Bonus points to you, you married the first woman you dated.” She winked up at him teasingly. It ended shortly though as her middle clenched again, and one of the twins stretched against his hands in protest at both the motion and the loud noise so close to their enclosure. “Nng, ow, ow, ow, I do not like contractions. I feel like I am going to literally explode. At least when we have more kids, it’ll only be one. The chances of twins again is like, astronomically low.”

"You're right... But just let me know when you think you're gonna go into labor, I'll be right here for you." he murmured.

Toki stared up at him in slightly tight amusement. "Papyrus, contractions are a part of labor. I am very likely in the early stages." She said slowly. "Like right now."

"I know they're part of it but I still worry about you, you know!"

“Mhmm…” She sighed softly, and rubbed her digits over her middle. “Heh… Did I tell you what I told your dad?” As it fades off, she squirms in his lap. “I want to stretch. The cramps in my back are, well, back, and sitting is making them hurt.” She wanted to lay on her front to stretch them out, but the chances of that being comfortable for long were slim.

"Such a simple request, who am I to refuse?" He murmured, moving himself as to offer Toki a warm mate to lay on.

She eyes him lightly as he stretches out over the couch, and tilts her head as he pretty much presents himself. “Are you sure?” She questions. “I’m big enough there’s no way I can lay without my middle touching your spine. Are you going to be okay with that if the twins move?”

Considering he likely wouldn’t feel them move for much longer...

"I'll be okay, of course." He purred gently. "I will savor the feeling and I wouldn't have it any other way."

She quirks a grin at him. “You say that until they nail you in a squabble for space.” Still, she’s not going to turn it down. Toki shifts and wedges in gently, shifting her shirt as it rides up. She exhaled softly, spreading her skirt out over his legs so she didn’t get tangled. She stretches out on him and gets comfortable. “You know, we’re going to have to move in like… ten minutes. Cookies should be done by then…” She just hoped she didn’t fall asleep. Sprawled on his chest, she was super comfortable and relaxed, eye lights soft and warm as she peered up at him contently.

"Sounds good." He sighed gently, stroking her head slowly before he leaned in and kissed her head. "I love you so much."

She leaned into his touch with a soft thrumming buzz. “I love you too.” She thrummed softly, angling her skull so he could rub the base of one of her horns. “Mm… I love your touch. It feels nice. Very relaxing. Safe."

"A mate's touch must be, to comfort their wife and children alike.” He murmured warmly, and massaged his fingers along the base of her horns.

Toki relaxed rapidly, her eye sockets drooping as she hit a slump in her energy levels. She exhaled softly over his chest, nuzzled her chin into his chest, and then struggled to keep her eyes open. “Mmm… You are very, very good at it,” she praises sluggishly, a pleased buzzing sound escaping her.

"I love you. I love you so very... very much." Papyrus hummed softly.

“Mm… love you most,” she croons sleepily, shifting faintly as the twins stir and fuss in her belly. “Goodness, I’m going to fall asleep at this rate.” She could probably use it, as rest at this point was necessary.

He chuckled and slowly rolled the two of them so they could lay together, cradling her in his body’s curve.

She settled against him contently, curling an arm around his ribs to hold him close. “Mm…” With her back to the couch, he could get up and she wouldn’t roll off. Toki gave him a lopsided smile. “Well, this works… If I fall asleep, you won’t be stuck.”

"I love you. More than you'll... you'll ever know." She smiled slightly, and tapped a finger against his sternum, above where his soul was. “I’ve felt your soul,” She says softly. “I’ve felt your soul in mine- and I know you’ve felt mine in yours.”

That’s how the twins were made, after all. “So I know your love- I’ve felt it for myself. It’s been a long time- but I remember the feel of it. Warm and bright- it filled me to the brim and I knew happiness. Do you remember how it felt?”

He chuckled at that gently. "Yes, indeed..." he purred. "I remember it so well..."

“It’s a shame human souls don’t work like monster ones. I can’t give you the connection you deserve...” Not without constantly reproducing. They hadn’t even done anything with souls with her pregnant- there was no telling the effect it could have on the soullings that were nurturing themselves off of her soul.

"I don’t care...” He nuzzled her. “I’m happy with you like this anyhow."

“I know you are.” She nuzzled him softly in turn. “I’m gonna nap now, okay…?”

"Of course, my dear.” He purred, kissing her gently.

Toki nuzzled him gently and smooched him back as well, before nestling up to his chest, and "She woke up to hushed voices that weren’t actually all that hushed. They came from next to her, where a pillow that had been gingerly tucked between her arms to cradle her front and pillow her skull had replaced her husband’s frame.

Bless his soul, Papyrus had even carefully wedged a pillow between her thighs to provide the support her aching hips needed, even if it was awkward as hell thanks to her skirt.

Aching hips or not, Toki hadn’t expected to be woken from sleep by hushed voices- or the cramp that stabbed agony through her spine for remaining in one position for too long. A slightly pained noise left her, and she shifted an arm back without opening her eyes so she could rub at the painful knot in her lower spine.

Suspecting it was an unconscious action, a hand reached over and smooth, warm knuckles gently rubbed into the knot, while a second, smaller hand reached up to stroke her skull.

Papyrus’ voice was soft, so as not to stir her. "She's been like this all day.” He sighed softly. “She's so close to having them, a-and yet... would it normally take this long?"

Tenebris sighed softly as well. "Aliquam, I’m afraid I simply do not know enough about this to tell you what you want to know. I can, however, assure you that this delayed labor is not abnormal in human women. It must be the same with Tokiko."

She eased with a soft sigh, though the knot didn’t disappear fully. She’d need to move and stretch to make it fully go away- but the large hand, one she recognized as Tenebris, felt nice against her magical flesh.

One of her sockets peeked open, but she did not yet speak, simply listening to Papyrus vent his worries to Tenebris.

"Father, do you think you could stick around more often until she has them? I mean... I have work... and they said I can take all the time I need, but I cannot risk the danger that might come with my neglect of my duty." His hand tightened slightly on her skull, but he smoothed his fingers over it again to soothe the feeling away. He didn’t want to make the cracked scar on her skull worse. "HAM is still out there, and Toki has never been more vulnerable than right now. We know they’re watching us- but we just… don’t know how. If they see any lapse in our usual schedule…”

"Then they could choose to attack.” Tenebris rumbled softly, and exhaled a quiet sound. “Of course, my son. I will watch over my daughter-in-law and not let anything happen to her." The older monster purred gently. “Or my grandchildren.”

"Thank you, Father.”

The relief in Pap’s voice made her sigh softly. She knew he was torn between duty to his job and duty to his heart. By doing his job, he was keeping her safe- but he couldn’t keep her safe and be with her all of the time in her time of need.

“You’re only a phone call away, Pap, if I need you.” She whispers gently to them both. “But having Tenebris around would be good.” A tired sound leaves her. “My energy levels keep fluctuating, so the extra hands would be helpful while you work.” She knew he had today off- but since the twins hadn’t arrived…

Well, he would have to go back to work until they did. He and Undyne were technically the captains of the guard for the village- and one half of the captains did not make for a fully balanced team. She knew and accepted that- and let him know that she was okay if he had to go back to work concerning it.

Besides- work kept him busy, and she loved him dearly, but she could only take so much of his fretting before it would wear on her. She needed her strength- not to be too stressed out by trying to keep him from stressing.

"Toki... I hope we didn't wake you... But... Alright. I'll give you some magic to help you out while I’m gone." Aliquam came and kissed her gently as he caressed her stomach, giving her what essence she'd need.

“The cramp did, mostly.” The magic felt good, but she waved him away after a short time. “I’m fairly topped up, Pap. Thank you, though. Did you get the cookies out of the oven?” Toki questioned lightly as she shifted in place. She made to try and sit up.

"Yes.” He nods. “I got them all out while you slept.”

“Good.” Toki nods softly. Once she’s upright, she groans quietly and leans forwards as best she can. “Alright. I need to stand up- can someone give me a hand, please? My back is killing me.” She could really use a good hot soak in the bathtub, take some of the weight off of her spine.

"Of course.” Tenebris boosted her gently upwards, and glanced to his son once Toki was stabilized. “Aliquam, you can go ahead and go see to your duty. I'll take good care of Toki.”

"Alright, Father... Thank you.” Papyrus kissed her head tenderly, and her belly once she was stable, and then went to go put his armor on.

Once they were alone, with her husband heading out the door, Toki heaved a soft breath and kneaded her knuckles into her lower back. “At least he’s staying busy.” She sighs. “Mmmg. He hates to see me so uncomfortable. It’s probably better if he’s out and about keeping his mind clear rather than sitting and fretting.” Papyrus didn’t do well with stewing on his worries.

Still, green eye lights turn to her father in law, and she gives him a wry smile. “Pretty sure the twins are going to be little troublemakers. Don’t know if Pap told you, but I had steady contractions earlier. They faded off before I took a nap though, and all I have now are back-cramps from hell. Speaking of- I’m wondering if a soak in the tub would help at this point.” The tub did have jets… And jets would feel amazing on her back.

"Once he starts on his work, he'll stop thinking so hard about it, especially since I’m here with you right now." he assured her gently, before he nodded gently in understanding. "Then we best follow through with a nice soak for you.”

“Good. I am, uh, going to need your help. I can’t bend over to get the faucets.” A flush tints her bones, and she sighs, before offering him a hand so he could stand upright again. She’d probably need help getting out too. Once he was upright, Toki waddled for the stairs, dodging Gracie as the feline swatted at her feet from behind the doorframe.

"Without saying. Right behind you.” The big pale monster stayed behind her, keeping an eye on her.
as she headed up the stairs. The last thing that she needed was to fall- sure, she was, as far as he knew, to term, but falling didn’t mean a healthy labor.

Toki smiled slightly, and opened the door to her bedroom with a sigh. She shifts, stripping off her shirt as she steps inside. She was having one of her rare moments where she really didn’t care if he saw her naked- and it wasn’t like he wasn’t going so see everything soon anyways, when she had to deliver. “Totally looking forwards to being able to bend down and move again.” She hooks a finger into her skirt, motioning for Tenebris to head into the bathroom ahead of her, and slowly works it and her undergarments down.

Tenebris lifted his hand to shield his gaze as he walked by her, going into the bathroom to get the bath started.

Toki chuckled as he slid around her, and got herself fully undressed. She used her skirt as a cover, and padded in after him, leaning her backside against the counter. Her bones clacked coolly against the porcelain, and she chuckled gingerly. “Don’t mind me, Tenebris. You’re eventually going to see it all anyways when the twins decide to get their butts into gear and come see the world.” She was too uncomfortable to fuss over being properly dressed.

He chuckled at that. "If you're sure." he rumbled, before lowering his hand.

“I’m sure. Thank you for respecting my usual boundaries however.” She smiled at him warmly. Once the tub was half way full, she dropped her skirt, and waddled to the side. She sighed, and carefully stepped inside, more than aware of the summoned parts below that refused to go away. “So this is something you should note for later with Sans. My, ah, parts, appeared this morning and haven’t gone away.”

"Of course." he murmured softly, before he nodded gently. “Of course, I have been warned of this by Aliquam. I'm sure it's simply a sign of your nearing the time to birth your children."

“That’s what we figured too. It sure makes things awkward though.” She eased down into the tub, grimacing as her back ached, and then sank up to her pelvis in the hot water. “Mmm…” She sighs contently. “Gotta enjoy this while I can. We’re supposed to have a snow storm blow in soon, and they’re expecting it to be a bad one.” She hummed. “Water lines might freeze. If it does end up a bad one, you and Thumper are welcome to stay here where it’ll be warmer.”

"Blasted cold." he mumbled, before he smiled and gave a nod. "If it so ends up, we shall join you."

She nods and quirks a grin at him. As the water rises, she reaches over and turns on the lower jets. A slightly pained sound leaves her, and she leans her back into the harsh streams of water as they pound at the knots in her ectoplasmic flesh. “Make sure to keep an eye on Thumper. I’m sure you remember the incident from last winter. I’d rather not have to try and thaw him if a branch cracks and he bolts again.” She sighs softly, sockets closing, and then drums her fingers against her belly as the twins move and fuss. “You too. I recall you coming in half frozen. At least this time I’m not depleted from coming right out of a heat, though.” She wouldn’t have a problem keeping the house warm so long as she ate plenty and rested often. “… You know,” Toki suddenly laughs, “it would not surprise me if the twins waited until the blizzard hits to decide to come.”

"He knows better this time, he's insisted that he wants to stay in the burrow if we ever go out." he rumbled gently, "He finds himself most comfortable there, so I let him have that." before he snorted and laughed gently, "They truly would be little devils, wouldn't they, choosing of all weathers to come out during."

“Burrow?” She asks curiously- that wasn’t something she had known about. Toki relaxes down in the water, and once it reaches a good height, she turns it off with her foot. “It honestly wouldn’t surprise me. I haven’t had any more contractions since just before my nap.” Toki quietly chuckled. “Speaking of… I probably need to decide how I’m going to have them.”

"Ah, it's funny actually, I’ll explain later though. We can discuss the birthing method right now if you'd like," he offered.

“That would work.” She nods. “But I definitely want to hear about burrows later though. So, what methods have you and Papyrus been looking up?” Toki questioned, and teasingly flicked water at him with her fingers.

He flicks water back at her naturally, and takes a seat next to the tub. He props his chin on his palm, and looked at her softly. "So far there seems to be only two methods akin to human capability. However only one is natural.”

“And?” She presses lightly, grinning at him encouragingly. “I’d like to hear all of my options.”

"There may be more monster-in-origin possibilities, but now they are only theories.”

She pursed her teeth thoughtfully and tilted her skull at him. “That doesn’t really answer my questions.” She admits with a sigh. Toki adjusted in the tub, watching him intently, and rubbed her middle quietly. “In all honesty, I’d rather go as natural as possible, so long as it’s safe for the twins. Be it in the tub, downstairs, wherever, so long as it’s safe…” Personally, she wasn’t certain what she wanted to do. The tub would provide warmth and keep her more relaxed, but she didn’t really think it would be comfortable long term.

"If you want the birth to be natural, then I will make sure it goes perfectly." he told her, smiling gently.

Toki gave him a faint smile in return. “There’s no guarantee of it going perfectly.” She says honestly. “Anything can happen. We need to be prepared with a plan in case natural doesn’t work out… In which such case, cesarean would probably be easier on me than on a human.” She poked her belly, and got jabbed in return. “No organs besides the one that houses them. And if that happens- well, I’ve got the HP to tank it. Hm… I wonder how my cracks are doing.” She muttered idly. She hadn’t really paid them much mind in… goodness, forever?

“I’d bet by now they have long since healed, my dear.” He rumbled gently.

“Mhm.” She glanced at him, and then tucked her soul into her hands. It was cradled gently in her palms, and Toki turned it gently. She smiled at the stats. “Well, my HP is a lot higher. Fifteen hundred. I don’t see anymore red marks either.” She touched over the lighter green spots, marking where the red cracks had once marred its surface. She didn’t feel anything, other than slightly warm from touching it. “The healed cracks don’t hurt anymore either. Little more than a year, but my soul is back in good condition.” She quirked a happy smile up at him.

"You are a powerful young woman, Tokiko Nara." He purred gently, "And I’m proud of you for making it this far." He rumbled gently.

“I’m not just a Nara anymore.” She reminds him gently. “But, I wouldn’t be where I am without all of you.” She smiles and tucks her soul away. Toki shifts, grunting slightly as she tries to straighten up a little bit in the tub. No place is comfortable for long, sadly. The soaking feels nice though.

He rumbles and he leaned his back against the wall, leaning his head to one side before he rumbled, softly exhaling.
Toki lifted a finger from the water and gently flicked flecks of it at him, mischief glinting in her sockets. “So, burrow?”

He leaned over to flick water back at her with a soft snort. "My abdominal cavity has earned that title after he's found himself safest there."

“Oh my god.” She giggled. “That is adorable. Oh my goodness.” She laughed softly. A soft sound left her as her middle tightened, and she tensed up. “Ahah, that’s the first one since before I took a nap. Back to being irregular.”

He chuckled though seeing her tense up definitely made him do so as well. He rumbled softly, looking at her with great concern.

Toki eyed him lightly. “It’s just a contraction.” She soothed slightly, exhaling softly once it faded. “They’re uncomfortable, not painful, so long as my back isn’t knotted to high hell. Goodness, are you going to be as jumpy as Pap is?”

"Might end up more so.” He murmured, rubbing his head. "I can detect things much like a companion beast can." he explained, "Changes in scent and such."

“That’s… actually interesting but also weird.” Toki shifts, crosses her ankles, and then relaxes. “I wonder what I smell like to you… Anyways.” Her skull shifted into a more serious look. “Are you going to be able to do this?” She questioned him seriously. “Because if you can’t, I need to know. Come the time for the ‘show’ to start, I’m going to probably be too distracted and busy to focus on keeping both you and Papyrus calm.”

"I will, yes.” He nods. “I may want to record it for the sake of science, but I assure you, I will do this.”

“I trust you, Tenebris,” Toki nods slowly. She makes a face at him however. “If it wasn’t for the fact that the birth would definitely be useful for future science, I would tell you to shove your camera where the sun doesn’t shine.” She was not at all comfortable with having a camera on her while she delivered. But, Toki understood the necessity. If ever more skeleton HTM’s popped up, it would be good knowledge to have. As she had once said, she was a bit of a science experiment. “Just keep it out of sight, and I’ll be fine.”

In fact, Tenebris would likely have better luck if he had a go-pro or a small, micro camera that he could just stick to his shirt or something, rather than something that immediately drew attention.

"But isn't that what I would be doing initially?" he teased.

That brought a snort to her, and she laughed, churning up water as it bubbled up from under her jaw and out her nasal cavity. “Oh good gods, Tenebris, really? That’s terrible. True, but terrible.” She laughed.

He chuckled at that. "You have to give me that one, eh?"

“Oh yeah.” She giggled.
Chapter 71

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: LOL. We really had you goin’ didn’t we? HEH. No labor yet for Toki. Could be any time though. Any time between this chapter and the last chapter of book 1 of TOTU~

Silverwing Notes: Well we all remember how bad last year's snow day was, thankfully I think this one is a lot less painful heheheh

Enjoy the chapter!

The snowstorm hit two days later, sweeping Ebott County in a wall of white. It rattled the shutters and the walls for nearly two more days- however, mid-day on the fourth day since her due date had come and past, the snow faded away.

It left behind nearly five feet of snow and ice.

Alongside that, the temperature plummeted, dropping down nearly to zero, and being scheduled to drop even lower come nightfall. It was woefully, woefully cold.

The power was still on, however, so that was one small saving grace for the monsters of the village. Power meant food could be cooked, and heat could keep the houses functional.

However, with the layers and layers of snow and ice, another problem came to be. The doors were all blocked, and everyone was stuck inside. So, that lead to many monsters having to clamor out of windows and the like so they could all begin digging.

Massively pregnant and dealing with random bursts of Braxton Hicks or not, Toki was going to help. Even if helping was relegated to serving fire magic infused hot cocoa in large quantities to half frozen monsters, it was definitely something she wanted to do, rather than hunker inside while literally everyone else froze their asses off.

She was seated on a stool from Grillby’s bar, and had a high table in front of her. Toki’s little cocoa stand was dead center of the park, where the large fire monster whose barstool she had been temporarily given had melted a large circular clearing of snow away. A large pot was settled at one hand, and she was keeping the cocoa flowing as it were, while dishing out large mugs of it as monsters stopped by in droves. Grillby assisted her as best he could, but to keep up with supply and demand, he was also manning his own pot.

Keeping the pots warm in the nearly zero degree weather was easy with magic. The magic also infused the cocoa, and made for an easy time warming up the non-fire based monsters from the inside. Fire magic was just good like that.

Keeping the pots warm required keeping her hand on the pot for periods of time, and the only time she wasn’t touching them was when she was dishing up another mug for a chilled monster, or adding more cocoa, cinnamon, milk and vanilla to the pot to extend her supplies. It wasn’t, thankfully, too taxing on magic. It only took just a little bit of magic to give the cocoa the warming boost that it needed, and keeping the pot steaming was easier than keeping it boiling.

So, Toki was good to go for several more hours at least, until she too got chilled. Fire magic was good for warming, but using it externally would let her temperature drop. Not that she minded—Papyrus had literally layered her in as many turtlenecks and sweat-pants as he could, since she no longer fit inside of her jacket. She had on at least three shirts, and four pairs of pants. Other than her hands and skull, Toki wasn’t cold at all.

Likewise, Grillby had on several layers of clothes, but those were mostly to protect him from any water from melting snow, or any snow that got kicked up by the wind. It melted when coming into contact with him on the norm, so it was a safety precaution mostly.

“Here you go,” She smiled, handing over another mug of steaming cocoa to the shivering monster in front of her. The wolf monster took the mug silently, nodded to her, and then padded off to go huddle with the other monsters seeking warmth with each other in greater numbers.

Toki watched them go and sighed softly, before glancing to Grillby. “So… how angry do you think Papyrus would be if I summoned Clover and Sugar so they could act as living heaters?” Summoning them took a decent chunk of magic, but it wasn’t like she was short. Stag’s consumption had lowered as they devoured more and more of the magic that existed in the air, so other than what the twins needed, which had lowered considerably at tail end of her gestation, she was simply stockpiling it up day by day.

“If for the sake of keeping you warm, I don’t think he would care one bit.” Caeruleus replied, helping distribute blankets to those who show up.

Tenebris was outside of the area of the park, helping with plowing snow for making paths for everyone.

“I wasn’t thinking for me,” She comments idly. She eyes the half frozen monsters, and makes her choice. A quick tug of her magic, and Clover comes flying out of the rip in the hell void with Sugar clutched in her feet.

A quick order, and soon the massive hornets are buzzing down to provide an area of effect sort of warmth for the monsters huddled near the tree.

“There.” Toki looks pleased as the wolves and other various monsters press close to the hell hornets. Sugar is pleased with the attention, while Clover looks quite like she could care less. The skeleton leans back slightly in her chair and shifts in her seat, a soft, uncomfortable exhale leaving her as she spooned up more cocoa into a mug. “What about you, Cae? You need some cocoa?”

"Nah, the kid's keeping me warm enough.” he replied, rubbing his stomach and giving it a small pat as he replied, "You'd be surprised how warm I am right now."

"I was rather spooked when I detected his high body temperature, but upon realizing it was Solstice's doing, all I insisted was he wear his thicker clothing upon going out today.” Grillby chuckled. At Sans insistence, he paused in making cocoa so he could warm some blankets, and hand them out to help fight off the cold.

“I feel about the same way. Warmest spot on me is my middle.” She chuckles. “At least your lucky ass wasn’t this big over summer. Still, if you get cold at all, lemme know and you’ll have some cocoa to enjoy.” The skeleton glances over as she watches some fleet-footed rabbit monsters book it across the top of the snow. “Y’know, I sometimes wonder what life would have been like if I’d have ended ed as a different kind of monster.” She comments idly, and smooths a hand over her belly.

"You couldn't be more right about the seasons thing. But do tell, what kinda monster did you have in mind?” The taller skeleton hummed softly.

“No idea,” she laughed. “It was just a passing thought. Given the broad number of monster species, I’m just surprised I ended up a skeleton.” Another mug of cocoa went out, and Toki watched Todd skirt away across the top of the snow like the rabbits had. “As much as I miss my hair, I’d rather not have ended up with hair everywhere. I honestly don’t know how Todd manages.” The rabbits, at least, had shorter hair that rarely knotted or clumped, and only required minimal grooming. Todd’s fur got tangled in everything. “Eh, it was just a passing thought. My skull is full of weird thoughts. You’ve got that to look forwards to as you get further along.”

He chuckled at that. "Well, thankfully I haven’t had any thoughts like that just yet."

Toki waggled her finger teasingly at him. “Just you wait,” She grinned, “you’ll get them eventually, and I’ll get to be bemused by some of the stuff you come up with.”

A snowball sailed between her horns, and she startled.

“Score!” Rosie laughed, knee deep in the loose snow that hadn’t yet packed down into hard ice.

That had Caeruleus chuckling while Grillby gently wagged a finger at Rosie. "Now, now, imagine what could have happened if you aimed too low and hit her right in the face, eh?” he chuckled.

Rosie stuck out her tongue and made a noise at him. “I have impeccable aim, if you must know.”

Felix, who had several lumps of snow stuck to him in the shape of what was a smiley-face in the works, squished a snowball into his sister’s hair. “She really does. She doesn’t miss unless she intends to.”

Toki snorted good-naturedly, and tossed a loose handful of snow back. The wind carried it over, and coated the children in a light dusting of fluffy snow, much to their amusement.

That had Grillby and Caeruleus laughing, "Good aim, Toki!"

“The wind did all the work!” Rosie cried with indignant amusement.

“That it did, but I still got you both!” She chuckled. “Why don’t you and the other kids go work on digging out Twitch’s house?”

“But that’s woooooork,” Rosie whined.

“Work is good for building character,” Toki chirps.

"Tenebris is working with Wolfen to dig out his home. Why don’t you go help him?"

“We’ll get everyone together to go help.” Felix nodded, cutting off his little sister before she could fuss more.

The two children ran off to go find the monster kids- and likely more shovels.

Toki quirks a soft grin and sighs, leaning back slightly in her chair. Sitting so straight for so long sucked- but bar stools weren’t meant for long-term comfort. “Kids. Heh. You know, our kids are going to grow up getting into all sorts of shenanigans together, right?”
"Oh that goes without saying." Cae snorted, "Our poor weary father will have a hell of a time babysitting."

She laughed softly. “I’m pretty sure he’ll be fine. He seems pretty excited about having grandkids—and I’m pretty sure we can plop them in his lap and he’ll just sit there happily. Heh…” Toki snorts, and nearly spills a mug of cocoa as she hands it over. “They’re going to have him wrapped around their little fingers. He’s a big softie.”

"With a grandfather like Tenebris, there is little to no doubt that they would end up spoiled rotten.” Grillby chuckled gently.

“Don’t I know it.” She snickers softly. Toki shifts, sighs, and adds more milk and cocoa powder to her mixture. The smell wafted up, and she felt her mouth watering slightly. “Mmm, I love cocoa.” She sighs softly.

Her next customer of sorts is Wolfen, whose fur is matted with ice. He shivers, teeth chattering, and gives her a miserable look. “It’s too damn cold for anyone to be out and about. We’ve got most of the houses dug out though. Your dad,” his gaze flicks to Sans, “is half frozen, but stubbornly digging out the last of the pathways to give everyone some semblance of access. You may want to drag his ass here before his tail falls off.”

"I probably should go get him, yeah." he sighed, then he smiled at Wolfen, "Here, take a load off, pal." he told him as he got up, offering his seat before going to find Tenebris.

The wolf monster nodded his thanks and took his seat, snagging one of the blankets and curling it around himself. He sipped at the mug of cocoa that Toki had given him, and tried to warm up.

Toki sighed gently and shook her head. “Everyone’s been at it for a couple hours.” She hums. “We could probably call this good. It’s supposed to snow again soon anyways, and the temperature is going to start dropping. Any colder, and it’ll probably even start to bother us.” She glanced to Grillby.

"Agreed. I shall pack everything up and begin for the bar. I can continue serving people there if needed." Grillby spoke up.

“I’ll help.” She nods. Toki slips off of the bar stool, sighing softly, and carefully finishes handing out mugs of cocoa. Once her line was gone, she packed up the pot and remaining mugs, hefting them into her arms, and stared at her table and chair with a frown. “I can’t get the table and your stool. I can carry the pots and the mugs if you want to get everything else?”

“I can get the tables and stools, Toki.” Wolfen hummed. He knotted the blanket around his neck, swallowed down the last of his cocoa in one gulp—giving himself a cocoa mustache in the fur around his muzzle as he did so— and then moved to collect the tables for the fire elemental and gravid skeleton.

She smiled at him. “Thanks, Wolfen. Well, after you two, I suppose.” She’d have an easier time making it through the snow if she could step where they had. Toki was interrupted however as she squeaked, and suddenly found herself astride a wingless hornet.

Sugar bounced eagerly under her, while the shadow of Clover appeared above them, slowly herding half frozen monsters towards the direction of the bar.

With Grillby serving as the beacon at the front of the crowd, the group was steadily led to the bar, but Grillby stopped as he saw what turned out to be Tenebris digging into the snow by the door of said bar. Though just as he had finished, he lifted his head and smiled over at Grillby, "There you are, old friend!"

Toki waved at him from atop Sugar. "Sans is looking for you!" She calls, eying him firmly to see if he had any frost damage. "Wolfen tattled about you being cold. We're calling it good for the day. The temperature is starting to drop again." And any colder, and even the skeletons wouldn't be able to handle it, let alone those with actual flesh and squishy bits to freeze.

Grillby shook his head slightly and smiled. "Thank you for digging out my bar." The fire elemental hummed.

He chuckled at that, and he lifted himself. It looked like he had ended up needing to wrap his feet, but looked that he was still able to stand on them, meaning it wasn't actual damage affecting them, just the cold.

"My pleasure, Grillby. I'll go ahead and find Sans, and I'll bring him to the bar once I do. The cold is having its effect, but I'm not down yet."

Toki rolled her eye lights in her skull with a soft hum. "Keep in mind, if you freeze too badly, it'll be a bitch and a half to thaw you out." She shifted, twining her fingers into flaming mane of Sugar, and grimaced as the bee gave a nervous shift, refusing to come too close to the door with the big pale monster there.

Wolfen spotted the issue, and helped her unload her supplies onto the top of the table he was carrying. He then balanced it and gently brought it inside of the bar.

Grillby ushered people into his bar, his magic expanding to warm up the inside as he usually did. "Sans will return if he can't find you." Grillby hums. "I would rather you go get warm, old friend. See to it that Thumper gets warm, you stay warm, and Papyrus keeps the ice out of his joints."

He nodded once. "Then I will join you and the others inside shortly. I've just a few more things I have left to take care of."

"Alright." Grillby nods. "If you spot Sans, send him to the bar, please. Miss Toki," his gaze turns to her, "Go find your husband and go warm up your home. You've done enough for today- go relax, warm up, and get something to eat. You need your magic stored up for when the twins decide to come."

"Whenever that happens." She agrees dryly. Toki shifts and hops off of Sugar as Clover sets down. The wingless hornet skitters back into the hell verse after lifting Toki up onto Clover's back. She straddles the bigger hornet, sinking her fingers tightly into the mane of fire. "I'll go get Pap. Tenebris- you go find Thumper, and whenever you're done, you come on over to the house if you want to. If the power goes out, you'd better come over, so we can keep you and Thumper from freezing." If the power went out, the houses would become far, far too cold too quickly. The fireplace would help, yes, but there was warmth in numbers.

The beast nodded and turned, following the path he and the others had carved into the snow to return home.

Once everyone was inside or gone, Toki and Clover took to the sky. The big hornet was quick in locating Papyrus, and once they located the tall skeleton, they headed in his direction.

Flying was terrifying- but also horribly exciting. Had she done this before? Not at all. Should she have been up her with as pregnant as she was? Well, she trusted Clover, and Clover wouldn't let her fall. Was it fun and something she intended to do more once she could sit properly? Hell yes.

Clover came down to hover near Papyrus, and Toki grinned down at her husband from the flying hornet’s back.

“Heyyy there good-lookin’. We’re calling it for today,” She calls playfully. “Wanna hitch a ride and go home?”

Papyrus was, to say the least, happy to see his mate approaching with the offer of a ride to warmth. He was, however, a little bit hesitant about her being so pregnant but so high in the air. He kept his fussing to himself, however, knowing that summons would do everything to protect the one who summoned them.

"Nyeh heh heh! Well since you’re offering, I don’t think I could decline." he replied to her, speaking a little louder as to be heard over Clover's wings.

A quick command, and Clover landed. She crouched, offering a seat behind Toki for Papyrus to join her.

Toki grinned at him and held out her hand. “I’d have to tease you for being afraid of heights if you did,” She beams at him. “Lets go home and get warm. Even I’m starting to get chilly under all of these layers.” They were going to have to peel her out of them, like a rotund onion.

He nodded as he climbed on before he wrapped his arms around her, nuzzling her with a happy sound. “Nyeh!”

Toki laughed as his arms snaked around her chest, and leaned forwards to guide him into a slightly hunched position. Clover struggled a little bit to get upright, not used to flying with two unsecured loads on her back, but managed to get herself into the air.

Being up in the air was sort of feeing in an odd way. Toki had to keep a firm grasp on the mane of oddly solid fire, with Papyrus holding her tightly. Thankfully, Clover was very steady in flying, despite how hard and fast her wings had to beat in order to keep in the air against the freezing wind.

Still, it didn’t keep Toki from whooping happily, her laughter ringing out over the snow and rooftops as Clover brought them home.

Clover was simply amused at her mistress, and endeavored to make the flight as nice and smooth as she could. After all, her mistress was heavy with young, and though Clover did not have much of a concept of her mistress’ worries about something called a ‘due date’, she had to endeavor to make sure that her mistress and her young were safely delivered home.

Home and out of this horribly freezing air. Clover envied Sugar. Sugar was back, enveloped in the warm delightful flames of their home realm, while she was still out in what she decided was white, freezing gross fluff.

A short and absolutely freezing flight back to the house had Clover dropping them off right outside the door. Toki let Papyrus get off first, and then gave him a slight grin. “I need some help getting down.”

"Thank you, Clover." He thanked the hell beast, before reaching up and helping Toki down, nuzzling her gently. "Though next time, I’ll have you a saddle made to ride her properly," he told Toki before nuzzling her again.

“It was kind of spur of the moment,” she giggled softly, leaning into his nuzzle with a soft and happy buzzing sound. “Lets go get warmed up, okay?” She shifted and patted her summons, before letting her go back to the hell verse. Toki smiled as Clover disappeared, and then waddled for the stairs. “Maybe get the fire place going. I get the feeling we’ll end up losing power sooner or later, so we might want to dig the candles out too.”

He nodded gently and followed her into the house. "How is everyone else doing?” he asked, knowing she had made that effort to help out the rest of the villagers.

Once she was inside, she began the effort of stripping out of her many layers. The house was a lot warmer inside than the outside air was. “Cold,” she answers. “Grillby and I kept the cocoa flowing, but cocoa and warm blankets can only do so much against such cold temperatures. Even the wolves were cold.” She shakes her head with a sigh. “I don’t think everything got done, but at this point, any colder and they’d have started losing limbs. Besides- if it snows again, it’s going to be pointless.”

Nodding in agreement, he sighed, and then went upstairs to get some warmer clothes, as well as to make sure the heater was on for later.

Toki stripped down to her base layer, freeing herself from several shirts and pants. The damp layers were tossed into the dirty clothes, and Toki went into the living room. A bit of fire magic, and the fireplace was roaring, warmth flooding the room.

She went to go fetch candles, but had to pause for a moment as her middle tightened. Toki leaned against the doorframe with a soft huff, and massaged her back as she waited for it to pass. Contractions, she had decided, were utter bullshit. Particularly when they refused to be regular. “Hey, Pap? Grab the candles while you’re up there.”

"Can do!” Was his call from the second floor. He came down after a little while, carrying a bundle of warm clothing as well as a bunch of candles for them to light.

Thankfully Toki had straightened before he had come downstairs. She met him half way down, and collected the candles from him. Given that the power was still on, they didn't need to be lit yet, but she had intentions of putting them where they could easily get to them.

She gave her husband a warm smile and went to tuck the candles into the living room. "What would you like for dinner tonight?” She questioned gently. Fire magic meant that with or without power, she could cook dinner for them.

"I'm not sure.” He hummed. “What do we have available?”

"Well, we have soup, I think. I think we still have some potatoes, but I don't know if I'm feeling potatoes tonight. Hm... We have a couple bags of chicken, and some garlic... I could make garlic chicken and rice?” Once the candles were set down, Toki waddled for the kitchen, sighing softly as she went. "Go ahead and toss your wet clothes into the laundry basket, and go warm up by the fire.”

"Garlic chicken and rice sounds good, dear.” He gave her a smile, before laughing. “You don’t need to tell me twice.” While she went for the kitchen, he went to do as ordered, tossing wet clothes into the laundry basket before scooting into the living room to warm up by the fire.

Toki laugheded good-naturedly, and headed into the kitchen. She set out chicken to thaw, and then padded back to the living room. Scooping up an armload of pillows and blankets, she grinned at him cheekily and began to carefully scoot the coffee table out of the way. "Weather like this calls for a blanket nest. You game?”

“Beyond game.” He chuckled cheerily. “A blanket nest sounds perfect.”
"Good! Why don't you slide the cushions off the couch? We can sit on them instead of tile, and build our nest around those and some pillows." She chirped softly. Moving the coffee table was a chore, but eventually it was out of the way for nest building. "We might need more pillows though... Hm..." Considering how many it took for her to be comfortable... It probably wouldn't go amiss to have a couple of extra pillows between them and the floor.

"Alright, let's start with these." He murmured, pulling the couch cushions off, setting them on the floor before she got up, "Alright, go ahead and get started, I'll go get more pillows."

"Alright!" Once the cushions were down, Toki eased herself down. Getting down on the floor wasn't hard, however getting up again without help was impossible. Once she was down, she placed the couch pillows on the floor, draped a blanket over the whole mass to make a solid base for the nest, and then began to build up the walls. The front of the couch made up the backing, but the sides of the nest could be built up more. Particularly since the cats would be joining them, and Gracie had a tendency to roll in her sleep and fall off things.

All the motion brought a cramp, and she groaned, resting face down on the nest floor with her fingers in her lower back. Her knees kept her lower half up as she stretched and tried to ride out the initial cramping sensation next to her spine.

"I hope you're okay down there!" Aliquam piped up as he came downstairs with more pillows.

"Just a cramp!" She calls back. "I've been pretty active today. Not that it did anything to help kick start labor," she mutters the last part, well within range of him hearing her words. She was admittedly a little sour about it- as much as she didn't mind being pregnant, she was also quite thoroughly done being pregnant. Toki was quite ready to have the twins already. Alas, they were not ready to join the world yet.

"Alright, then I say you take a break!" He insisted, dropping the pillows where she could reach them.

"I'm going to be taking a break here in a minute, you goober." She took the pillows and set to work with what she had. Soon, there was a vast and fluffy nest, and she settled gently onto her side, leaving space behind her and in front of her, in case Papyrus wanted to lie between her and the fire. "There." She hums. "Now I'll rest. Join me?"

"I shall join you!" he announced, climbing into the nest with her happily. "Nyeh heh heh heh~"

The nest was warmed with her magic, but she still flinched slightly as he came to touch her. "Good lord, Pap, your bones are freezing. Get over here and lemme warm you up, you papsicle." She opened her arms and motioned for him to cozy up.

He happily scooted over on his hands and knees and pressed himself flush to her. His arms looped around her, and he groaned happily. "Nyeh~ my god you're so warm~" He cooed contently.

She looped her arms around him and snuggled him close. "Nyeh~ my god you're so warm~" He snorted.

"I doubt it." She chuckled softly and nestled closer. "You have this... Safe sort of feeling about you."
remember when I was little being held by my dad- it's the safest feeling in the world. They're going to love snuggling with you." She gives him a smile, and kisses him softly.

"Nyeh heh heh!" He nuzzled her gently and kissed her head, before he sighed and closed his eye sockets. "Well, I’m perfectly content staying right here." He murmured.

"Same. At least until dinner time, yeah?" She shifted, and rubbed her fingers gently along his spine to help him warm up a bit. She massaged and kneaded gently to help him relax a bit, and began to him a soft tune for them both.

The cats squished in too, and settled behind Pap's back to leech off the warmth that they were producing.

"Nyeh heh heh~" He purred and kissed her gently, body relaxing as she massaged and warmed him all the same. "I love you so much~"

She kissed him back softly and nuzzled her face to his. "I love you too. You're my world." She beams at him. "Thanks for putting up with my pregnancy grumps and aches, Pap. You are the world's best husband."

"You're the best wife I could ever ask for." He purred in reply, kissing her gently on the head before he shimmied down in the nest. Curling around her belly, Papyrus pressed several kisses to the surface, and massaged the sides of the globe affectionately.

She laughed as he burrowed down onto the blankets, and shifted as chilled teeth pressed to her middle. "Get your full of the belly while you can. It won't be here forever." She chuckled softly.

The twins shifted lazily in her belly, sleepy and content with her position to be calm and relaxed and not fussy.

“I love you so much,” He cooed, to both his wife and his unborn children. Aliquam pressed several more kisses to the soft surface, tracing the forms of the children inside with a tender touch. She was large and round, but she was still the most beautiful thing to him.

"I love you too." She smiled softly. Her middle shifted slightly under his kisses, and she laughed softly.

There was a flicker and a buzzing sound, before the lights and the heater cut out.

She chuckled suddenly, rubbing her hand over his skull as he nuzzles to her belly. "Power is out."

"We can easily light up the fireplace, if not we can go to Grillbys, he has his own generator."

"I think you meant the candles." She chuckled, glancing over the nest wall to the fire roaring not far from them. "I'd rather stay here if it's okay with you. I feel more comfortable being in our own home, rather than other ones right now." She hums softly. A lot of that was her anxieties about pregnancy and birth. Being at home made her feel safer- though it was also a little bit stifling. "Besides we can probably expect to see your Dad and little bro here eventually. Grillby's top floor home is a bit small for him, Sans, and four other monsters."

"Fair enough. My bad" he snorted at that, before he nuzzled her, and sighed, "Alright... let's rest for a little then, yes?"

"Mhm. Rest sounds good." She nuzzles him gently, and scoots so she can nestle under his chin. She exhales warm air over his neck. "If they knock at the door though, you'll have to get it. I'm stuck here until I have to get up to do dinner."

He nodded gently. "Fair enough." he then sighed and laid down, stretching at her side.

As he stretched out, she joined him as well. She let her mind wander, and nestled closely to him. A soft sigh, and she was drifting off into a content and relaxed nap.

The duo were happy and asleep for the while that they were unbothered, only being informed of another's presence when Tenebris and Caeruleus entered the home to recover from the cold

The door opening and closing woke Toki, and she opened her sockets slightly as a cool draft permeated the house from the sudden opening of the door. "Mmmm... Tenebris?" She called softly. "We're in the living room if that's you that just came through the door."

"Yes, its us." he murmured, "I hope we did not wake you."

"Mmm, you did, but it's fine. I probably need to do dinner here soon... But you must be cold. Come-let's warm you first. One of you can wedge behind me, and the other can fit behind Papyrus." She gave a soft yawn.

They would find her and Papyrus in a neat that had more than enough room for the skeleton and the void beast to fit as well. Toki had been expecting visitors after all.

Tenebris chuckled lightly as Caeruleus murmured his 'dibs' on snuggling with his brother, though Tenebris didn't mind one bit to curl up around the set of them.

Toki squirmed a little closer to Papyrus and motioned for Tenebris to join her. "C'mon, Papa, snuggle up. Where's Thumper?"

"In here." A fuzzy paw wiggled out from under Tenebris' shirt to wave at her, before tucking back into his chest cavity where it was warmer.

Tenebris chuckled and tucked in his turtleneck, "Let me know when you need some air, Thumper." he murmured before he yawned and slowly slunk into the den, curling up around the other three with a purr.

Thumper tapped at his middle with a foot, and then wiggled it down to make a small imperfection in his tuck job. "Now I won't need to let you know when I need air!" He chirps helpfully.

Toki giggled, and wiggled slightly so her back pressed to Tenebris' chest. She sighed contently, stroked Pap's cheek, and then grunted as another Braxton Hicks contraction rolled over her. "You are an ice cube." She comments sleepily. "Both of you are."

Tenebris chuckled lightly and sighed, before he wrapped his arms around Toki, "Good god you are warm." he purred with a heavy sigh. His fingers curled over the tightness of her middle, and rubbed soothing circles with his thumbs.

"Fire magic," she chuckles gently. "Fire magic and pregnancy make for one very warm skeleton." She nestled down between her mate and father in law, and hummed a soft, content sound as she closed her sockets again. His arms around her middle were cool against the tense muscles, and soon the flesh softened and relented in its tightness under the soothing circles his fingers were massaging. As it passed, she exhaled a soft relieved breath.
Tenebris soon dozed off, his breathing slowing into a quiet rumble, "Mmmhhrrrr..."

Cae was quiet, nuzzled into his brother's chest as he snored quietly. Aliquam had his arms wrapped around his big brother, a small smile on his face as he relaxed with his back pressed to Toki’s front.

Toki couldn't quite settle down immediately again, but she tried. She turned slightly, and shifted this way and that in an attempt at getting comfortable again.

Tenebris shifted and yawned quietly. "Rrrr..."

She unintentionally elbowed him as she tried to shift into her other side so she was facing him, failing with a soft huff, and just slumping down while facing her husband.

Tenebris grunted at the elbow and he chuffed quietly at her.

"Sorry," she whispered. "I was trying to roll over."

"Bah... all is well." The bigger monster grumbles.

"You say that as you grumble at me." She chuckles softly. Toki shifts and steals one of his hands to investigate. She sighs, and gently massages his palm to try and get him to fall back to sleep. Even if she didn't sleep immediately, everyone else had a long day of shoveling ice and snow. They needed it.

His hand twitched lightly upon the first press but he sighed heavily behind her and his hand loosened and relaxed under her touch.

Toki massaged gently as he sighed behind her, his breath making her shiver. She hummed a soft, soothing tune to get him to settle. "Go back to sleep, Tenebris."

He purred quietly and pecked her head gently before he closed his eyes and got comfy once more, "Mmhh..."

She continued humming softly, even as he pressed a kiss to her skull, and let her sockets slide closed again. The rhythm of the breathing going on around her was soothing, as was the purring of the cats slowly wiggling their way into the monster snuggle pile.

Even if she didn’t sleep, the snuggle pile was warm, safe, and comfortable.

And if she noticed the door opening and closing, and a small freezing white deer draping themselves over everyone’s legs, well, she wasn’t going to complain.
Toki was officially one week overdue. Seven whole days had passed- and shit, she had no idea when the hell the twins were going to come. She’d had three different false starts, and she was damn tired of getting her hopes up, only for them to be dashed.

They’d tried different things to jumpstart it too. Walking- lots of walking, to be honest. Papyrus had used his blasters to clear the pathways in her back yard, so they spent hours walking them. No dice. They’d tried sex- and had gotten a false start as a result, but again, no dice. They’d tried spicy food, but that simply turned to magic and made her fire magic a bit more potent. They tried everything short of a bumpy car ride- mostly because the roads were smooth, and there was still too much ice for them to actually drive safely.

It had snowed a bit more, but not much. Now they just had to wait for it to thaw- which was a long process. On the plus side, Ebott City had sent out a plow, and it had plowed the main road. The monsters cleared the streets inside of Nara Village, so there was access to the road. But, sadly, the road was covered in a thin layer of ice.

Everyone recalled the incident with Tenebris and the delivery truck the year prior, and no one had any desire to get anywhere near the road until the ice was gone. That was one way to traumatize monsters into being ultra careful driving on the ice, she supposed.

Regardless of the ice, it didn’t matter how many times Toki and Papyrus had sex- labor refused to start. It would seem she would just have to wait for it to start when the twins decided they were ready. Pretty much the whole town was waiting with baited breath for the twins to arrive. Everyone was well meaning, but Toki was pretty sure she would explode if someone asked ‘how are you feeling?’ one more time.

In the meantime, Undyne had called her up the night prior with a request. She wanted to be introduced to human horror movies in honor of the coming Halloween holiday that she would get the chance to participate in this year- but Alphys was too scared to watch them with her. Todd had refused her promptly, so the big fish woman had called the only other human- or someone who had been human- that she associated with regularly. Well, that wasn’t a child and limited by their parent’s willingness to participate.
So, Toki had agreed. Yes, Toki was the biggest chicken when it came to scary stories, but she didn’t want to let Undyne down. The blue fish woman could do an amazing guilt trip when she wanted to—and she had tugged on the fact that she and Papyrus hadn’t gotten to hang out in forever outside of work.

How was Toki supposed to say no to that?

Besides, better now than after the twins arrived. They’d find little time for a lot of socializing with two infants to care for. So, it fit in with some of the last minute stuff that they were squeezing in before it was go-time.

Thusly, Toki found herself in the kitchen preparing a late dinner, while waiting for Undyne to come over. They’d decided to do it late at night, for better ‘scary movie immersion’.

Toki leaned against the counter with a sharp exhale, and stretching her back as best she could, and then reached up to get the strainer out of the cupboards. Toki was making ‘spooky spaghetti’ which involved noodles that were shaped like bones. She left the sauce to Papyrus though—he was good at the sauce. Toki could handle the noodles, and the side for it, but he was the true sauce master.

Toki bumped the handle for the pot, and her spoon clattered to the floor noisily.

She stared at it for a moment, and almost visibly steamed. “Fucking- god damn it spoon.” She mutters sourly. She was in a bit of irate mood. Her back pain was getting worse and worse, and nothing was making it stop. Not hot baths, not rubs, and certainly not bending down to get the god damned spoon that her belly had knocked to the floor. Compile the usual emotional instability of pregnancy with the number of aches and frustrations she had, Toki was in a very poor mood.

There was a knock at the back door that kept her from struggling to bend down for the spoon.

Toki heaved a deep sigh, glanced to Papyrus, and then left him to man the stove while she stepped to the side to open the back door.

Cold air swirled into the kitchen, and with it came a massive fish monster who was shivering as she huddled into the warmth of the house. “Oh thank fuck, it’s cold as a witches tit out there.”

“Well yes- why on earth are you in a tank-top and shorts?” Her irritation faded to befuddlement as she took in just what Undyne was wearing. Toki was in a turtleneck and a skirt, her usual wear for this point in her life. It kept her plenty warm.

Undyne, however, was bedecked in a tank top and what could only be described as booty shorts. She had a backpack on that clattered noisily—no doubt full of horror movies. The fish grinned down at her with jagged teeth. “Because you guys keep your house horribly warm, and if I wore anything more, I’d probably be dying of heat.” Undyne tossed her mane of red hair, and then surveyed the kitchen. “Spaghetti?” she inquired cheerily.

“Spaghetti.” Toki shakes her head in amusement, and then steps back to welcome her in further. She withstands the jovial pat to her belly, closes the door, and then summons a bee to fetch her spoon for her. Once she rinsed it off, she checked the noodles again.

“So,” Undyne grinned, “How are you-”

“Finish asking me that question and I will shank you with this spoon.” It was a silicon spoon— and she had no idea how she’d do it. But Toki would damn well try.

“Oooookay,” Undyne turned her gaze to the tallest skeleton instead, knowing he was less likely to try and metaphorically bite her head off. Or shank her with a rubber spoon. “So, how are you both doing, Papyrus?” She grinned cheekily. Technically she hadn’t asked Toki how she was doing—she’d asked Papyrus how Toki was doing. There were ways around every rule.

"I'm doing alright. It's good to see you." Papyrus replied with a smile as he stirred the spaghetti sauce. "Hanging on and surviving at Toki's side."

"Sounds like it's more surviving than anything else at this point." Undyne gave him an amused grin. "Guppies sure are taking their sweet time. Have you tried anything yet?"

"Short of a bumpy car ride, we've tried everything that is safe." Toki hums, and flicks a noodle at the fish woman.

Undyne snapped it up like a shark and grinned. "Bone shaped pasta. Is that considered cannibalism?"

"Only if you eat it raw and it crunches." Cae joked.

"OH MY GOD, SANS." Aliquam groaned loudly.

Toki startled at hearing Sans voice, and whipped her head around to find him loitering in the kitchen behind her. "Where the heck did you come from?" She wasn't aware he was going to be joining them. Not that she had an issue with it, but a little knowledge helped keep one from being jumpy.

Undyne positively cackled. "Oh stars, that was a good one Sans. Oh stars! HA!"

"Sorry about the spook, Sis." Cae chuckled, patting her shoulder apologetically. "But come on. I'm like Superman. I know where I'm needed."

"Isn't Superman attracted to the sounds of screaming in distress?" Toki asked wryly, and flicked a noodle at him as well. The noodles were thankfully done now, and she poured them into the strainer. As steam wafted up and temporarily blinded her, Toki sighed.

Undyne grinned wider. "Don't apologize, Sans. If anything, maybe scaring her will make the guppies come out?"

He caught the weaponized noodle and popped it into his mouth before he grinned innocently, "I don't know, Undyne. I mean I could, but with Pap right there?"

His younger brother waved his sauce ladle in a mock threat.

"Hey!" The big fish monster laughed. "You're safer than me! You've got a guppy in your fishbowl too. He's not going to thump you for scaring his wife. You've gotta take advantage of your pregnancy dude."

"Undyne come on." He shook his head with a laugh. "I might be pregnant, but I'm not an asshole. Besides, Pops said they'll come out when they damn well feel like it"

"NGGYEAAHHH." The blue fish woman was admittedly whining a little bit. "But the rest of us aren't nearly so patient. I wanna see the guppies nowww. Well, hold them. We can already sort of see them if you've got a flashlight."

Toki snorted lightly, though the loud noise from the blue woman had startled her. She made scary noises when she wanted to, and Undyne still intimidated Toki quite a bit. "Undyne, patience never was your virtue. I would really like to hold them too, but they're making me wait just like they are everyone else."

"Yeahhh, but waiting sucks! I can't even go suplex something in my frustration with all of that ice and bullshit out there!"

"Did you ever consider suplexing the ice chunks?" Sans inquired lightly.

"The cold is almost as bad as the heat is. Unlike you, I've got fun fleshy bits that the cold and heat actually bother." She sneers cheerily at Sans. "Or I would. But that shit out there is colder than Snowdin was." She huffed.

“She’s right about that.” Toki hums. “From the times I’ve been in Snowdin, it wasn’t nearly so cold there as it is here. Here has some pretty severe weather. Which one should not be in a tank-top and booty shorts and running around in it.” She eyed Undyne pointedly.

“I heard your skepticism about my clothes the first time, Mom.” The sass was real in her voice. “Good gracious. So. You guys ready for some scary movies tonight?” She grins. “I’ve got ‘Dog Soldiers’, something called ‘Resident Evil’, and all of the sequels for it, and… well, a whole lot more. Lots of ‘monster’ movies.” She arched her visible brow lightly at Toki.

“To be fair, Monsters didn’t exist back when that genre of movies was named.” She points out. “I’ve seen all of the Resident Evil movies, but Dog Soldiers is new to me. I’m guessing werewolves?”

"Oh boy… Nyeh heh heh heh." Papyrus gave a quiet laugh. "I'm not sure how that'll turn out, though."

Undyne fished around in her bag and tugged it out. “Yep! It’s werewolves. Kinda look like less friendly versions of the wolf guards.”

“Werewolves are basically like the wolf guards, but not as… fluffy or sweet. If you toss a stick, they’re going to eat your hand instead of chasing the stick.” Toki hums. She dumps the noodles back into the pot, before beginning to dish up plates of them for everyone. “Why don’t you go put on Resident Evil first? I’d rather not get a jumps care while trying to eat, and end up with spaghetti all over myself.”

“I can do that.” Undyne nods and grins. “So these ‘Zombies’ aren’t as scary as werewolves?”

“Not the first one. Well, not since I know the movies. I don’t watch a lot of werewolf movies because they take place out in the middle of nowhere. And where did I live before I had thousands of fluffy wolf-like neighbors? Out in the middle of nowhere.” Toki chuckles. “I’m a huge chicken, mind you. Scary movie nights were usually done with all the lights on in the house.” She shakes her head, and then sets the finished plates on the counter. “Noodles are done, Pap. If you’re done with your sauce, we can have dinner and get movie night going. You alright with spaghetti, Sans?” She wasn’t sure if he had trigger foods or not- after all, she couldn’t eat it through a good chunk of her pregnancy.

"Zombies." Aliquam repeated, blinking once before he looked at her with a smile. "I'm on it." He quietly finished his sauce, and began spooning it generously over the bone themed noodles.

Sans shrugged. "Pap’s been sharing, but I think I’m okay with it, yeah."

“I meant, if it was a nausea trigger, I would make you something else if you wanted.” She gave him a quirked grin, and added some parmesan cheese over the finished plates of spaghetti. Tossing in forks, Toki handed one to Undyne, and then handed another out to Sans. “I know you didn’t deal with nausea so much as you did emotional fluxes and cravings, but I know how bad trigger foods
Undyne grinned as she shifted her plate on her fingers. “Hot, but it smells good. I’ll go get the movie popped in while you three waddle your way to the living room.”

Toki made a face at the fish’s back when she left, and sighed softly in amusement.

"Heh." Sans took his plate and shrugged, "I haven’t been feeling up for ketchup lately, so thankfully I’ve found myself a different way to have my tomatoes." He chuckled, gesturing to the sauce.

Toki laughed, waddling for the living room and leaving Papyrus and Sans to follow. “I’ve felt your pain. I couldn’t have cocoa for months. Thankfully, it goes away. Eventually.”

Getting to the couch, Toki took a seat near the middle, leaving the arm for Papyrus, and then a spot next to her for whoever wanted to sit next to her.

The spot was rapidly claimed by Undyne as the fish woman squished in next to her, leaving space for Sans. Idly, Toki was thankful she’d gotten the biggest couch that she possibly could. It fit the four of them seated just fine. “Fuck YES!” The bigger woman all but shouted. “I wanna see what humans think is scary!”

Sans took his spot and kicked back as he started into his meal. "Can't wait to see how that goes." Sans snorted.

Toki simply smiles and says absolutely nothing about what was to come.

The movie started up, following with the AI murdering all of the humans in the underground facility after someone let loose a virus. After the elevator presumably beheaded the screaming woman, the scene cut to the movie’s main protagonist. Alice woke up in the shower, and was soon captured by a recon squad.

“Alice is a bad ass.” Toki chimes to the enraptured fish woman next to her. She kept her eyes off of her though. Undyne had little table manners when she was busy watching something, and spaghetti plus shark teeth meant that her mouth looked like a crime scene.

“In that dress with those muscles? PFT. I doubt she can do more than shriek and run away. That’s what all human females seem able to do. Uh… No offense.”

“Considering that’s about what I did when we trained that one time, none is taken.” Toki chuckles. “Just watch.”

Toki finished her plate by the time that the movie had reached the lasers. No undead had been seen yet, but several members of the recon squad that had captured Alice had just, literally, been reduced to little more than piles of human spaghetti sauce. Nonchalantly, Toki nestled in against Papyrus and waited for their reactions.

Undyne made a disgusted face. “What the fuck? That’s sick!”

"I really hope no one makes the mistake of thinking that's edible..." Papyrus murmured, looking a little green about the gills, so the saying went.

Undyne wasn’t much better.

Toki simply smiled and collected plates that were done, tucking them onto the coffee table until the movie was over. “Well, these people wont. Human spaghetti is not on the menu for them.” For the rest of the people in the compound though…? Well, that was basically the main course. But she kept quiet about it.

The movie itself cut to a scene where it vaguely hinted at the final beast they would face. Alice looked in on tubes of some gross liquid flowing into… something that looked meaty and skin-less. She was distracted as one of the men called to her.

Then, what they thought was a survivor was found. Except the woman wasn’t a survivor, and she proceeded to bite the female officer with them. The woman took a spray of bullets, fell into the tubes, and then disappeared before the camera came back around to the pile.

Then came the zombies. The room was full of them. They came creeping from the shadows, several of them missing chunks from them. One of them was missing half of his face, his teeth bared between lips that had been chewed off. They ambled slowly, but in a large, growing mob as they were attracted to the sounds of the living.

To the sounds of food.

“However, these guys might like human spaghetti.” Toki chuckles.

Sans had an uneasy look on his face, while Aliquam tightened his grip on Toki, unable to really peel his gaze from the screen.

Screaming commenced. The living shot and shot, but none of them seemed to be able to drop the dead. One got a lucky shot- right in the skull. Blew the head right apart- and then the body dropped, lifeless.

“Shoot them in the head!” Became the mantra from the living.

There was a mad scramble as one of the recon group backed to the door, trying to get it open. There was chaos, as the dead kept coming. Soldiers were overtaken, their screams as they were devoured alive off camera joining the moaning overtone of the dead.

The one opening the door got it open finally- only for more undead to reach out from behind it, and pull him into his grasp.

“JT!” The woman who had been bitten managed to snag his hand, trying to pull him out of the grasping hands. She was bitten again and again, and so was he. There was a grisly moment where a woman reached out and bit off his cheek, devouring it noisily.

Ultimately, she failed- and he was devoured before her eyes.

The video cut to a different scene, with a small collection of the original recon group, plus Alice, resting on top of sewer bars with innumerous zombies reaching up towards them. The bitten woman was dribbling blood down on them with a sneer. “You like the taste of that, don’t you? Just like you liked the taste of JT.”

“Zombies are gross.” Toki agreed lightly, rubbing Papyrus’ knuckles soothingly.

Sans was starting to look a little sick, his gaze averting from the television. Papyrus looked sickly as well, the offer to turn it off sounding really good right about now...

“Do you want to turn it off?” Toki inquired gently to them, bemused and also slightly concerned that the spaghetti might make a second reappearance all over her floors.

“I… kinda would like that, yeah.” Undyne whispered, positively disgusted as the movie progressed. She flinched as the female soldier turned around and came face to face with the one they remembered getting his cheek bit off.

“JT…?” The soldier managed to murmur, before he bit onto her neck and it was a fight to get him off.

“I’m alright trying a different movie if you guys want to. Werewolf movies aren’t usually this gory?” Toki suggests gently.

Papyrus only nodded slowly, hiding his eye sockets behind his hands.

The ripping and crunching and moaning and groaning faded as Undyne turned off the television. The fish monster eyed the remnants of the spaghetti on the plates, blanched, and then got up. She changed out the movie, and then collected the plates. “I’m going to take these to the kitchen…”

Toki was not nearly as bothered as they were by the guts and gross things. Likely because she knew it was all quite fake, and had experienced it before when it had first came out. It was also likely that she- who had brothers who were horror-movie enthusiasts- was conditioned to not be as bothered by gore in movies. Jump scares, however, were her weakness.

Still, gently she leaned up to kiss Pap’s skull and rub his cheek soothingly. “Thanks, Undyne. I’ll get the movie started while you take as bit to calm down. How are you holding up, Sans?” She glanced to him gingerly, and opened one of her arms, offering him a snuggle if he needed the comfort.

When he didn’t respond, she glanced over to look at him.

Sans wasn’t even where he was sitting anymore, though she could hear gagging from the downstairs bathroom.

Toki sighed, and gently had Papyrus push her upright. Once she was up, she got a glass of water from the kitchen and then made for the bathroom. Gently pushing inside, she went to her brother in law and gently rubbed between his shoulders.

“It’s best to get it all up, Sans.” She soothed gently.

Caeruleus bristled slightly, but gave another hard cough, retching another mouthful of magic into the toilet. He groaned, before he reached for the glass of water.

She very gently pressed it into his hand, and then collected a washcloth so she could remove the magical bile from his mouth. “We won’t watch the rest of the zombie movies, okay?” Toki smiled at him gently. “We’ll watch the werewolf one. The werewolf ones aren’t usually so… gross. However people will still die in it. Are you going to be okay with that?”

"Eugh... I think I’m gonna head to Grillby's..." he murmured.

“Alright.” She gently patted his head and leaned against the counter. “Go warm up with your lover. Maybe nap, and eat something when you’re not nauseated.” She advised gently. “I’m going to go back out with Papyrus and Undyne, okay? You feel better soon. Next movie night, we’ll do comedies. Sound good?”

“O’ course.” He nodded, and nuzzled his skull gently against her hand.
Toki gave his head an affectionate rub. Once he was gone, she cleaned off the seat and flushed away the mess, before taking the glass back to the kitchen. She couldn’t see Undyne anywhere, and thought perhaps the fish woman had gotten sick outside. Well, she’d be back when she felt better.

Toki returned to the living room and eased down next to Papyrus, giving a slightly sore sound as her middle tightened. Too much up and down in too short of a time. “Mmm... Ow... Alright. Sans went back to Grillby’s. He’s pretty nauseated. How are you holding up, Pap?”

"I don't wanna see that ever again." he whined quietly.

Toki snuggled gently into his side, and nuzzled his shoulder. “I don’t think Undyne or Sans do either. Human horror movies are... Pretty gross. It’s okay, though, Papyrus. We don’t have to watch zombie movies anymore. Are you still up for a werewolf one? If not, it's okay. We can turn on a comedy and cuddle until you feel better. Undyne I think got sick too, so she's not around to be upset of we switch films." Toki hums soothingly and massages his knee gently with her hand.

“Comedy please...?” He groaned quietly.

"A comedy it is then." She had to get help getting up, but once she was up she switched movies and put in Kung Fu Panda. Jack Black was hilarious. Once the movie was in, Toki easied back down with a slightly uncomfortable grunt, and rubbed her belly as she nestled into her husband. “There.
Jack Black can overwrite the bad things.” She shifted, scooted away, and then patted her middle in an offer for him to use it as a pillow. Undyne wasn't here- she had no idea where the fish woman had gone- so there was no reason for him not to be able to cuddle to her and their children and take comfort in snuggles and the amusing shenanigans of the pudgy panda.

Aliquam smiled gently and had slowly settled down beside her, hugging her gently as he purred and gave a gentle and affectionate nuzzle to her middle. “Nyeh~” “Nyeh indeed.” She chuckled gently. She rested her hand gently on his skull as he used her belly for a pillow, and then settled in to watch the movie.

It was a decent film, with lots of hidden meanings in it. She enjoyed the silly humor in it vastly more than she did the gore and gross deaths in the zombie movie. She found some parts of the movie that she resonated with- and her laughter fell forth as she watched Po try to get up, stuck on his back like a turtle from his own weight.

“Po is my spirit animal there.” She hums to her husband. “If I lay flat, I’m pretty sure only a crane could lift me upright again.”

He chuckled softly into her middle. "Of course, I could always do that too. You're not that heavy."

“That’s not what you said when you nearly dropped me on the stairs that one time.” She teased him gently, referencing back to when he’d gotten Magi-drain and had nearly dropped her after picking her up. Of course, she’d had pretty nastily broken legs that had been hastily put back together, or she could have walked on her own. Toki was glad that he was distracted though.

"That was Magi-drain." he huffed, nuzzling her belly gently.

She chuckled softly. “That might be true, but it still stands.” She gently pinched one of his cheekbones and wiggled it. “You adorable dork. To be fair though, I have gained weight with the twins. Probably at least... I dunno, twenty pounds?” If not more than that, she silently mused.
Ectoplasmic flesh weighed more when it was summoned instead of just not there. Without the twins, she was only the weight of her bones and clothes.
"But that's them, not you." He told her, tapping her gently on the face. "You're still lovely and lean as you always are."

She gently took his finger in her mouth and teasingly gnawed on it. Her magic kept her teeth from actually touching his finger, but it gave that playful chewing sensation nonetheless. “They probably only weigh a small portion of that. The rest of that is whatever they’re swimming in, and the actual ecto flesh, which is part of me. Though I wouldn’t say I’m sleek. My pelvis is definitely not the same shape it used to be.” It had widened considerably during her pregnancy—probably her skeletal side of her adapting so she could better bear her larger mate’s offspring. Skeletons were supposed to be the most adaptive.

Though, she wouldn’t be surprised if she ended up with some sort of ghostly ‘after baby’ body. The television briefly caught her attention as Po shot himself up into the air with fireworks, and she snorted with amusement as he landed inside of the wall that had previously kept him out.

“I don’t mind though.” She hums softly. “It all marks the trials we’ve gone through. Part of parenthood, y’know?”

"What we go through with eagerness in our hearts." he purred, "I'm honestly just starting to grow fidgety in antici..." he then hesitated, a gleam flickering over his eye lights real quickly.

“-pation?” She finished his word, shifting as her middle twitched under his skull. “You and me both, Pap. You and me both.” Something caught her eye, a reflection of something tall in the television. “Hey, what’s tha-"

Hands closed over Toki’s skull, and she squealed, startled, at the cold plastic feel and oddly soft claws that painfully poked into her eye sockets. The hands tugged, and she made a panicked, alarmed sound as her skull stretched upwards. “HNN!?"

Papyrus had gone to laugh at the fact she picked up his joke, but it cut off as he didn't expect the sudden assault. Immediately moving to defend her by swinging an arm upwards and summoning a bone, he shifted to sit upright rather rapidly.

The bone thwacked into a solid arm, and the hands released Toki as the form stumbled back with an audible curse. “Agh-fuck, ow, Pap! It was just a joke- hey! You’re not watching the werewolf movie! This was supposed to be the scene where the werewolf jumps out of the bush!”

Toki’s hands came up to scrub her eyes, and she buzzed shakily. Holy shit that stung like a mother fucker. That was worse than an eyelash in an eyeball. “Your fingers went IN my sockets! The fuck, Undyne?”

"I was trying to scare you both! Well, more you than Papyrus, but...”

The bone lowered, but the look in Pap's eye sockets was dangerous. He let the bone disappear as he hopped over the couch, standing over Undyne with his arms folded.

Undyne rubbed her arm and gave him a sheepish grin and wave with huge, floppy werewolf-gloves wiggling on her hands. “I didn’t mean any harm by it?”

“I get that you’re impatient, but c’mon, Undyne. That wasn’t cool. God damn, my eyes, holy fuck that stings.” The pregnant skeleton on the couch didn’t get up—couldn’t, rather— but she did turn around to peer at her over the back. “Didn’t Papyrus say not to try and scare me?”

“But that was like, months ago after the incident.” The incident with Vikki, if the fish woman recalled. “This was a well-intended scaring!”
Papyrus didn't say anything, he just reached out and turned Undyne around with his hands on her shoulders, he then brought them down, and wrapped his arms around her body.

“Uh, Papyrus…?” The fish was confused.

He proceeded to suplex her right into a side table- and both the fish and the table went squish onto the hardwood floors.

Toki just stared. “Well… I did not know you were that flexible, Papyrus. Also, Undyne? Table’s on you.”

“Ghghhhg.”

He stood up again, and then popped his neck and knuckles. "That's for scaring the fuck out of my wife, and for hooking your fingers in her eye socket. That shit hurts." he growled, glaring down at her. "Do it again, and you're fish sticks."

Undyne gurgled at him and gave him a thumbs up.

“I think she gets the message.” Toki gave him a grin, scrubbing her sockets again. The sting was fading, but that was an unpleasant experience she never wanted to have again. “You’re hot when you’re all growly, you know that?”

He came around and he cupped her cheeks, leaning in and ever so gently kissing the rim of her eye socket. "Well, she wasn't about to get away with it." He purred.

She let him pepper her faces with a few kisses, and nuzzled into his touch with a soft sound. “You did warn her, after all. You’re a skeleton of your word.” She purred.

“Ugh, gross. Get a room for your cute snuggling, you two.” Undyne managed to haul herself onto her feet again, and was noisily gathering the broken side table into her hands. She’d get it fixed- it couldn’t possibly be that hard to put together a bunch of wood. “Gonna have to punch a wall to feel tough again. Knocked on my ass by my own signature move- what a laugh I am.” She snorted good-naturedly.

"Heh heh... Were we actually indulging in that horror movie, that would have been funny."

“I will admit, I probably would have screamed if she did that during the werewolf movie.” Toki chuckled gently. She eyed Undyne. “And you’d have found your ass filled with bees.”

“Filled with bees?” The fish looked uncertain.

“Well, filled with bees, filled with stingers- same difference, isn’t it?”

Undyne made a face. “Ugh, no, neither of them are pleasant. I’m just… Gonna go. I’ll come get my movies later.”

Toki nods. “You can have your movies back when you fix my table. It’s a fair trade.”

“I guess so.”
Chapter 73

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: You’re all getting impatient with us, aren’t you? No worries~ pretty sure Toki is too~ ;)

Silverwing Notes: Well... another weird dream... kinda adds to the list that Strider and i had this morning XD Enjoy the chapter, guys!

_Toki was there again. Except… this wasn’t like the dream from before. There was no darkness, no fear, no nerves… just this soul crushing tiredness that flooded her. She was old, so, so old- her body might have been thirty-two, but Toki was so much older than that._

_She’d been more than just Toki too. She had been Tim, Tim had been Frank, Frank had been Loui, Loui had been Shikaku, Shikaku had been Aleric, Aleric had been Judas- so many names that it was almost impossible to count. She didn’t remember nearly half of them anymore- and more of the names would fade as new lives overrode the old ones._

_Before everything, they had been one. Kindness and Cruelty- they had been… someone. She couldn’t… recall who they had been… But now, she was Cruelty, and Cruelty was cursed to- _

_No. No wait- this wasn’t right. Toki was Kindness, not Cruelty. They didn’t know who Cruelty was- what- why was- _

_Oh god it was another one of those dreams._

_Toki felt herself sighing as she drifted along her thoughts. She had long since lost hope. After the monsters had condemned her, and she had committed the greatest sin in retribution- well, she’d spent countless lifetimes raging against what happened. Once her rage wore off, however, she spent countless lives lost in limbo._

_Hope was lost._

_Family after family, times were hard, food was scarce, and she was never, ever loved the way she- or he, depending on what body they were born with- wished to be._

_Not until this one. One would think that as the eldest female of a Japanese family- and a half blooded Japanese woman at that- that she would have been scorned and laughed at, and shunned for being as outspoken as she was. But no- Toki had eight brothers, all of which loved her unconditionally. Eight younger brothers, a mother, and an adopted father who all loved her unconditionally- she was even named head of the clan._

_What a strange, strange family. Cruelty was enamored with them though- they gave her a chance at a fresh start. Yeah, they were close to the site of her original sin. It weighted heavy on her mind every day that she was alive- she could see the mountain just off in the distance, mocking her for..._ what she was and what she had lead the other Anti-hearts into doing.

And then the barrier had fallen- and monsters were on the surface once more.

Part of Cruelty hissed at this, and scorned the monsters for what they had told the people. After all, if the monsters had kept quiet about what the color of Cruelty’s soul had meant- well… The war would not have happened.

But the teaching and the love of her family- it made her want to try again. She was tired. So, so tired. She didn’t want to… continue on her path. She wanted to try and atone.

So she offered them a place to stay- and she began to fall ill. The doctors called it Monster Radiation Sickness- so Cruelty had laughed in spite of it all, and mused to herself that the monsters would manage to kill her at least once. They had failed the first time- and Cruelty had sealed them behind the barrier at the cost of her magic- and all of the magic in the world.

But… The monsters had proven her wrong.

They took care of her- and helped her make the change to her current form. She’d even ended up… Well, she’d ended up falling in love again. Toki never would have thought that she could have loved anyone after what Kindness had done- and how Kindness had effectively broken her heart like-

There was a tug on her clothes that jerked her back out of her memories.

Not her memories- the memories of… of the dream her? Of Cruelty? None of this made any sense…!

She stood in the kitchen, just like the dream from before. Snow was falling outside, thick and heavy, just like her middle felt. Her hand wandered down to it, stroking over the not-so-small swell that was blossoming there, while the other cradled a mug of cocoa.

Toki found small hands tugging on her skirt again, a tiny and impatient voice puffing up at her. She glanced down to spy… A tiny skeleton? A tiny hornless skeleton smiled up at her with teeth just like hers.

“Sorry, sweetheart.” She patted the child’s skull gently. “What’s up?”

“Grandpa’s here!” The voice was hard to tell a gender from- Toki thought it might have been male, but she wasn’t sure. “He’s gonna take us tonight while you spend time with Papa and Daddy. I just wanted to say g’bye, and I love you oodles.”

… Wait, what?

“That’s right!” She laughed gently. “I totally forgot. Your little siblings here make me so spacey sometimes. Alright, alright. You go have fun with Grandpa Tenny, yeah?” She leaned down gently and pressed a soft kiss to the small child’s cheek. “Be good for him too, sweetheart.”

“I’m always good, Mommy!” A cheeky smile was given to her, and then the child was wiggling away. Their striped shirt was a little oversized, but fit them adorably, Toki noted. “I’ll see you tomorrow!”

“I’ll see you tomorrow, my sweet one.” She smiled at the little one, and waved as they dashed off for the front door. Clamoring to her feet, Toki padded out to the living room after disposing of her cocoa.

The house was quiet without children in it, and she made her way up towards their bedroom, knowing where she’d at least find one of her mates.

Wait- what? One of them?

“Papyrus? Are you up here?” She inquired lightly, stepping over a bundle of toys that had been scattered on the stairs. She shook her head in amusement. Sans and the kids often set up hoards of toys and puzzles and would-

Wait, wait? What? Sans? But he- he was her brother in law!

"Snnrrrrr... hhhuuuuu..." there was snoring coming from their bedroom, but at the calling of his name, the skeleton gave a groan, before he sat up and yawned, "I’m in the bedroom, Toki." Was his call, "Gettin’ up, hang on…"

He sounded mellow, very much so.

That... Did not sound like her Papyrus. That sounded more like Sans mimicking Pap's voice. This Papyrus sounded more like... More like a stoner than anything, Toki mused to herself.

"No, no, it’s alright. I’m coming in anyways, no need to get up." She paddled in, not bothering to close the door, and gave him a lopsided smile. "The kids are with your dad for the evening. So, we can kick off our night together whenever Sans pops out of the woodwork."

"Nyeh heh heh" Papyrus was half-entangled with a bright orange hoodie, though he took it off once more and abandoned it onto the floor, "How about you come here and we get it started for him to... Walk in on~?" he purred, before he gave another soft 'nyeh heh heh', "I can imagine him now... And it’s getting me excited~"

Her eyes dipped down to the start of an orange glow from under the sheets. Both Cruelty and Toki raised a brow. "I can see that." She chuckled. She stripped off her shirt, baring her ribs and swollen middle, before shimmying out of her skirt. "Who knows? Maybe the sounds will lure him out." She purred.

Toki shimmied onto the bed and slowly crawled up towards him, a coy smile tugging at her teeth. She kissed the lanky skeleton softly as she reached him, and entangled her fingers gently in his ribs. "Mmm~ we haven’t had the chance to do this since the last time Sans went into heat. And, if I recall, that’s how you two did this to me, no?" She motioned to her middle as she gave him a wide grin.

"Nyeh heh heh~ Guilty as charged, but hey, I don’t fuckin’ care, you are hot when you’re pregnant~" he purred, running his hands up her sides, stroking her swell gently before he gently rubbed her ribs, moving himself to kneel between her legs.

She rocked back easily enough to let him take control, as he was often prone to doing, though she shivered and groaned as his fingers trailed down her ribs. By magic itself, he could always do the most wicked things to her bones. Her swell was soft, still early enough on that she didn’t have as much trouble as she did towards the end of the twins. Toki gave him a cheeky grin. "Well, best enjoy it then, no? Won’t be another couple years until you get to see it again." She teased, stroking his ribs firmly and teasing down towards his pelvis. She tugged lightly on his usual pants. "You’re keeping your poor beastie all tied up. Poor baby. Why not let him out to play?"

"Don’t mind if I do" he leaned back on his feet, and pushed down his sweatpants. yes, he was wearing sweatpants, and let his cock hang out, and lo and behold...

This Papyrus was hung.
Toki thought her Papyrus was well endowed, but by the stars this one had hers beat hands down. Well... Size wasn't everything. It was the skill of the wielder that made the talent of the tool.

From Cruelty's reaction, this one might have had the talent to match the tool.

"So, you want it nice and gentle, or you want it so good that you feel it a week from now~?" He purred.

She grinned and reached down to stroke his shaft. Her fingers curled around him, stroking from his base to his tip. "If I can't feel it a week from now, I would be disappointed." She purred by way of answer.

"Mmmh~" he smiled and kissed her deeply, grinding against her while leaning in to start kissing and licking her neck.

A pleased sigh left her, and she scraped her finger bones gently down the inside of his ribs while her other hand worked his cock. The orange girth was certainly impressive, and she had every plan of enjoying it. Mouth finding his shoulder, she nibbled over the edge of his collarbone, tracing old marks from the times she had bitten him.

Likewise, his tongue ended up tracing old marks he and his brother had left in her shoulders. Toki bore them proudly though, just as proudly as she bore the motley of colors they tended to paint her.

Firmly her fingers stroked him, from base to tip, and she purred up at him contently. "Your mark is a little faded," she purred. "I'll have to fix that before we're done."

"Damn right" he purred loudly, "God I love you," he cooed, his cock lining up before he quickly rocked his hips into hers. "Nnnnnh~"

The quick entrance brought a squeak from her, and internally Toki had a small freak out. Was this considered cheating if it was an alternate version of her husband and she wasn't entirely willing to be along for the ride?

Toki groaned and rocked into him, spreading her legs with as much flexibility as she could, and then nipped his shoulder gently. "I love you too," she purred. "Our family is my, mmmm, world~"

"Mmhh~ hhaah~ I wouldn't have to have it... ah... Any other way..." he chuckled as he rolled his hips in a steady rhythm, "F-Fuck you're so beautiful." he moaned quietly.

She rocked her hips into him, teeth nibbling along his shoulder. "You're so hot," she purrs, "hot and warm and big~ Mmm, my mates, hot and cold, I love you both." She crooned gently, and took a firm hold with her teeth so she could focus her hands on the insides of his ribs. His cock stroked along her walls, and she fluttered around him rapidly, matching the beat of her soul. "It's a shame your brother is lollygagging," she laughed. "He's missing all the fun."

Toki had the distinct feeling that lollygagging was something this Papyrus did instead of Sans.

"Nyeah heh heh, I don’t know. Maybe he is... Or he could be watching us, right now." he purred gently.

She released his shoulder to lean up and kiss him. “Well, if he is, he’s getting quite the show,” she purred. She rolled her hips gently into his, meeting the motion as she groaned and shivered, a soft keen escaping her as his member pressed into sensitive clusters of nerves.

The grin on his face was unmistakable, as if played on a script. He knew just where to find her weakest point, and he knew just how to abuse it.

Chuckling quietly, he kissed her to quiet her as he moved her hips up slightly, before he picked up his pace, aiming to hit that spot every time.

“Ah~” Her voice raised in octaves as he intentionally stroked over that cluster of nerves time and time again. Each thrust was almost painful in how good it felt, and she could do little but let him coax pleased cries from her mouth. Her fingers tightened around his ribs, stroking them in time with his thrusts, and using them for handholds to keep her grounded. “Ohhh Papy~ yesssss…!”

He winced sharply at first but licked his teeth and eagerly kept moving, panting and moaning between his thrusts.

“Papyrus! You started without me?” There was suddenly a pouting voice "That's not fair..."

"Nyeh heh heh... hey bro, you're just in time." Pap leaned back to see the other brother standing at the doorway, his arms folded with a small pout on his face, "Come on, there's nothing stopping you from joining~"

“Sansy~” She cooed, leaning back as well to peer at him as best she could. “Come join us~ you know you want to. I'm sorry you didn't get here for the start- but you're not usually one to run late.” She winked. “What kept you~?” She rolled her hips teasingly against Papyrus, trying to tempt the shorter stout skeleton to join them.

Oh gods that was her brother in law- but apparently not here and she was going to- oh god. Toki wouldn’t be able to look at Sans straight without seeing this. Oh gods.

"Mweh. Important royal guard business." He replied, coming over while stripping his armor from his form, quickly joining them in the bed, "But at least now I get to spend time with you~" he purred.

Toki leaned over to kiss him, hooking a finger gently in his collarbone to tug him right up against her and Papyrus. “Yesss. We’ve only got tonight before all of the kids are back in the house,” She purred. Her fingers stroked down to his ribs, and she firmly teased them as she winked at him. “You up for a little Skelesandwich tonight?”

Both brothers grinned at that and Papyrus rolled over onto his back, taking Toki with him to straddle him while Sans moved to hug Toki from behind.

"Whatever she wishes," The elder purred,

"Is to be our command." Papyrus finished.

“Is that so~?” She grinned. “Because then I want you both inside me. We’ll make it fit~” After having kids, her pelvis was permanently larger- so doublestuffing? Totally doable. “I want you both tonight,” She purred. “I want you deep and hard...” They didn’t get nights like this often. Toki shifted and rocked into Papyrus, shifting her pelvis so Sans could slide in from behind into proper sandwiching position.

She quivered, trembling, breathing hot and hard with excited anticipation.

This was wrong, so, so wrong- she didn’t want to see this. Toki could do nothing, however, but be along for the ride.

Papyrus leaned up to kiss her while Sans kissed her vertebrae and shoulder blades, and both gave a deep moan as they pushed inside-
And she woke up with a jolt, realizing she’d fallen asleep at the dining room table while working on her next book. That was a horrible, horrible way to end that dream. She was flustered, because she had felt all of that for herself even if it had been so, so wrong.

Ugh. Sans was her brother in law, not her lover. Trying to see him that way… Well, it could have gone that way, but he was too vested with Grillby, which was fine. Toki wasn’t sure how she’d balance two mates. Truly, she didn’t want two. One was more than enough for her.

She glanced down at her book with an idle sound, and realized she was in the middle of writing a smut scene. Well. That could probably have been why she ended up with that dream. The human woman was in the middle of a sandwich between her elf and dwarf lovers- and good gracious, she must have been tired writing that last line, because it made no sense at all. She sighed, backspaced it, saved the document, and then closed her laptop.

But ugh. Just… Agh. It was awkward and seeing Sans junk and alternate Papyrus’ junk was now seared into her skull. It was… kinda hot…

But admittedly wrong. They were brothers- and brothers didn’t usually share a lover. At least not human ones.

She could hear knocking at the door, and scrabbled to get to her feet. Thankfully the chairs in the dining room were tall, so she didn’t have to struggle as much. She waddled for it, and opened it, trying to push that… dream… out of her mind.

Surprise colored her face as she spotted Toriel and Frisk standing on her front deck. “Uh, hi?” She hums. “I… wasn’t expecting visitors today. Come on in though, it’s colder than a witches tit out there.” The ice was still there- the roads were safer, but it was still terribly cold out there, even nearly a week after the storm. But, what else could you expect from the beginning of October in Ebott County?

Toki steps back from the door with a smile and motions them in, trying not to let the obnoxious bulge of her belly get in the way of everything like it always seemed to. She was one week and three days over due- and was beginning to wonder if she was even overdue at all. They had thought she would follow a human baseline, based on how they were growing, but… well, who knew? She knew that any bigger and she would probably split down the middle like a ripe watermelon. The magical skin was taut and unpleasantly tight.

And was being patted and nuzzled by Frisk as the silent child stepped inside with a happy smile, gently feeling around for any kicks that might occur. When they felt one, they brightened cheerily, and then flounced off into the living room, leaving Toriel to follow.

"Thank you, dear Tokiko.” Toriel replied gently, a smile on her face as she entered the home, "I know we did not warn you ahead of time. I apologize for that."

“It’s alright,” Toki gave her a smile and shut the door behind the massive goat woman. “A little bit of surprise guests keeps me spry.” She smiles up to her, and waddles for the living room. It was the best space to socialize anyways. “Would you like anything to drink? I can get some tea made up? I think I have some soda in the fridge, if you’d like that instead.”

Frisk smiled over at them both from their seat on the couch, and signed to Toriel. ‘I’d like a soda, please!’
Toki had been looking up sign in her down time, got the gist of most of it. She grinned. “If it’s okay with your mom, I’ll get you a soda. Toriel?” She turned to her with a smile, and propped her hand into the curve of her lower back.

"I'll just have some water. Thank you regardless, though!" she replied with a smile, "I mostly just came to see how you're doing."

Toki fetched a glass of water and a soda for the human child, and made her way back. Once she dropped off both drinks, she eased herself onto the couch, and sighed heavily. “It’s good to see you. Mostly I’m alright—just… tired, I guess. A bit frustrated too. I’m ready for them to be here. False-starts are annoying as heck.”

Frisk took a drink from their soda, before bustling onto the other side of Toki, sandwiching the tall skeleton between the goat monster and four feet of eager child. Frisk shimmied up close, and then curiously began to get their fill of her belly.

Toki smiled wryly. “Best get your fill of it now, Frisk. With any luck it’ll be gone soon.” She sighs softly, and gives Toriel a tired and lopsided grin. “You want to feel too?”

"It’s been so long since I’ve felt a child within their mother, I suppose it wouldn't hurt.” the ex-queen chuckled gently, getting up to move close enough to reach out for her middle.

Toki guided her hand, and Frisk obligingly moved theirs as Toki guided her closer. She eased her to where the most motion was felt, and against the large paw the twins roiled and stretched irritably within her. ‘They’ve been fussy since they’re running low on space.” She hums gently, smiling tiredly up to Toriel. “I am so, so ready to hold them. Being on my metaphorical tiptoes waiting for it to start is… exasperating, to say the least. I’m starting to feel a little cooped up, but if I go anywhere, I’ve got so many eyes watching me for anything that could go wrong. I know the village is eager too, but it’s a little maddening, y’know?”

"It's quite understandable, I know how that would go as well." she chuckled gently in reply, smiling softly. Her fingers warmed, and rubbed soothing circles over top of the fussing children.

Frisk giggled gently. ‘I want to see them too, so I understand how the village is feeling. You’re the first one to have kids on the surface- though you’re a human turned monster and not a monster, so I dunno if it counts or not.’

“Technically, my children are monsters, not human.” She quirks a smile. “So they’re the first monsters born topside since everyone emerged, yes. It doesn’t matter that they were born to a human soul- they’re going to be my little monsters. Though, I would love them human or monster, really. They’re mine. I’ll love them unconditionally.”

‘That’s what makes you a good mom.’ Frisk nods, and grins at their mother. ‘Mom? When do I get a little sibling? I’d be the best big sibling ever. Twins would be good- oooh! Or triplets! I’d help you take care of them and everything!’

She chuckled quietly and shook her head, "I'm sorry, Frisk, but I don’t think I'll be having any more children. Besides, I think I’m happy enough with my little Frisk anyways." She chuckled, leaning and snatching the child up into a tight hug.

Frisk squeaked and clung to her, giggling happily as they were squished into a hug. They wiggled one hand out, and signed slowly. ‘Awww okay. I guess I do have Flowey, and he’s enough of a little brother anyways.’
“I’ve heard a little about Flowey from Sans. I’ve heard he’s a pain in the butt. But all little brothers are, aren’t they?” Toki folded her hands over her belly and smiled, though it faded as her belly tightened in another false contraction. “Sooo tired of those. Hey, Toriel? Any chance you know any monster tricks that can help labor happen?”

"I might have a trick or two..." she replied, "I simply waited for when it was time" she explained, "However, if you try hot rags, resting it over your stomach and waist, it should relax your body enough to aid with inducing..."

“Hot rags hm? Alright.” She nods. “I might try that then. Like... Hot rags in a bathtub or like hot rags fresh out of the dryer?” Which meant freshly heated by her magic because they didn’t have a drier. She might invest in a second washer though. If she knows anything from growing up with her brothers, children make messes of their clothes something fierce.

“Both work.” Toriel smiled gently.

“Pap and I will try that tonight then.” Toki nods. “We’ve, uh, tried everything else.”

‘Sex?’ Frisk chirps helpfully.

Toki sputters. “You are far too young for that to pop into your head!”

"Good lord, child, where did you come up with that?!" Tori too was shocked.

Frisk shuffled their toes slightly and kissed Toriel’s cheek. ‘You know what they say about the internet, right?’

“Noooo?” Toki squinted lightly.

‘The internet is for porn!’ Frisk grins cheekily. ‘At least that’s what Duncle Sans says.’ Not really, but it’s not like Sans could get in too much trouble, given his pregnancy. Frisk knew this- and Frisk was not above using this knowledge to their advantage.

"Oh Caeruleus..." Toriel groaned, face palming gently.

Toki snorted, and ruffled Frisk’s hair. “Don’t listen to Duncle Sans. He’s a bad influence.” She nods sagely.

Frisk simply grins, and wiggles out of Toriel’s arms to press a kiss to Toki’s belly. ‘You’re not wrong. Can I go play with the kitties? Thumper told me you have cats now. Hey mom? Can we get a cat? Or a dog? Or several of both? I love animals.’

"Why don’t you go see about finding the kitties. They are friendly, yes?” Tori looked to Toki for a moment.

Toki nodded. “Very. Gracie might get a little playful, but you don’t have toe bones to steal, so you should be alright. But if her tail is flicking and she rolls on her belly, don’t take the bait. That’s asking to get chewed on. Gael is a love though, and you’ll think he’s a doll, I’m sure.”

Frisk beamed. ‘Okay! I’ll make sure to be wary of the belly trap.’

“They’re probably upstairs. Gracie likes to sleep on my pillow. If she’s not in there, try the nursery.”

Toki smiles gently.

Frisk nods and books it, leaving the two adults alone downstairs.
Toki leans back against the arm of the couch, turns to face Toriel, and gives her a lopsided smile, prepared to talk and spend some time with the matronly monster.
Chapter 74

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: I have actually had Toki’s shipping issue often, hence why I don’t buy a lot of stuff online or over the phone. Stupid accidents that mean I have to go allllll the way into town to pick up a package that should have been delivered to my door. At least Silver LIVES in town. I’m all the way out in the fuckwilds of nowhere.

Silverwing Notes: Send me a Thing if you recognize where i'm being Fandom Trash from later in the chapter! -Giggle snort-

Toki woke up in a surprisingly good mood. It didn’t last, but her morning, up until rolling out of bed, had been good. She’d woken up with absolutely no back pain, or cramps- it had been a good morning, and she hadn’t woken up without some sort of ache or pain in months.

She’d even woke up in a sort of a… zen state? She was relaxed, mind clear and calm, and even shifting in bed hadn’t been uncomfortable. She’d gotten woken by Papyrus giving her his customary morning belly kisses before he rolled out of bed for work, but she’d gone back to sleep until a more respectable hour.

It was honestly surprising, given how far along she was.

One more day and it would be two weeks past her expected due date. Two. Weeks. Holy fucking hell, Toki was so, so done. Toriel’s method for kick starting labor hadn’t worked- but it had relaxed her enough to actually sleep soundly for a few hours. However, not only was she done with her pregnancy, but she was done with the damn game store too. The game store was mostly the cause of her morning going sour. Mostly.

She’d rolled out to bed to once more deal with sporadic and slightly painful contractions, and an email from the game store she’d ordered from. The damn place had fucked up on her order- and shipped it to the store on the far side of Ebott City, instead of shipping it to her home. She’d special ordered an X-box for Papyrus- one designed for hands much larger than a human’s hands, with a lot more storage for games, along with several large sized controllers along with normal sized ones.

It was supposed to have arrived several days before then, between the first and the fifth. It was now October twelfth. It was Papyrus’ birthday- and she had just got a message that the X-box was ready for pickup. On any other day, she would have rolled with it- but she couldn’t drive, and her truck wasn’t fixed even if she could fit behind the wheel.

Papyrus was working, Sans was already out doing baby-shopping with Grillby, and Toki really didn’t want to go pester any of the other monsters- who would surely tattle to Papyrus about what she was up to.

So that left… Tenebris. Of which, he didn’t drive his car anywhere, unless it was to a car show.
He’d already taken it to one- and good lord, he had strutted like a peacock when he came back with first place.

Toki had her work cut out for her. Well, she would think so, anyways. There was always the chance that things would go easier than she expected them to. She’d only know once she actually got him onto the phone for a chat, she supposed.

While gathering her things- because if she couldn’t get him to agree, she would have to have someone else drive her- Toki tugged out her phone. At least the cake was coming from Muffet’s, so that was one thing she didn’t have to go to town for.

She quietly dialed Tenebris’ number, because there was no chance in hell she was going to make the icy walk to his house to ask him, and collected her purse. The rest of Pap’s gifts had arrived- including the large collection of puzzle games she had gotten for him and the kids to enjoy eventually- but he couldn’t play his games without his consol.

She’d even paid extra for to-the-door shipping. Bullshit that was. Utter bullshit.

It was a little before noon- they would be able to get to town in two hours, give about two hours for in town things like getting around traffic, and then two hours back, so six hours… which meant they should be home by five, if not before then. Thumper would be out of school, but he would either go to Grillby’s, or go do his homework with Twitch and the other kids.

Toki waited, listening to the phone ring in her ear, for her father in law to answer.

After a few rings, there was a 'kr-click' and his deep, warm voice resonated from within the speaker. "Hello?" He rumbled gently.

"Good morning, Papa.” Toki greeted pleasantly. Her voice was fairly distinct, and only she called him Papa. “Did you sleep well last night?” She didn’t want to just burst into what she wanted- one had to ease into it, rather than just blurring a demand. In her experience, a little bit of general talk worked better than being too straight forward.

"Hello Toki. Yes I did… Is there something you need?” He inquired lightly.

Drats. She smiled slightly despite herself, and shifted the phone against her ear. “Well… Yes, but it’s rude to just call and ask for things, Papa.” She admonishes gently. “Usually you exchange pleasantries. ‘Did you sleep well, how has your morning went’ y’know, usual stuff.”

He chuckled gently. "Would you rather I ask you such questions, and then see what you need?” He inquired lightly.

Drats. She smiled slightly despite herself, and shifted the phone against her ear. “Well… Yes, but it’s rude to just call and ask for things, Papa.” She admonishes gently. “Usually you exchange pleasantries. ‘Did you sleep well, how has your morning went’ y’know, usual stuff.”

He chuckled gently. "Would you rather I ask you such questions, and then see what you need?” He inquired lightly.

"Well, most mornings, yes. This morning, probably not.” She chuckled gently. “I need a favor. And, for you, it’s a big favor.”

"Well we'll see how big it is when you say what it is.” He snorted.

“Well… I need a ride to town.” She sighs softly. “Specifically, more or less, to the small outlet on the other side of Ebott City. I’m willing to pay for gas for your car, since it is a bit of a jaunt and stuff.”

"I don’t know if Eclipse has snow tires...” he hummed in thought.

“The roads are clear?” She chimes softly, hopefulness in her voice. “I mean, Sans and Grillby went baby shopping earlier this morning, so… I mean, if you say no, I’ll… I dunno, ask Wolfen to borrow his van or something. I might be able to fit behind that…” Why yes, she was hinting that she would try to drive herself to town on her own.

"Tokiko Nara Gaster, you are not driving as pregnant as you are, you hear me missy?" He growled sternly, before he cleared his throat. "Alright. Give me a half hour and I’ll come pick you up."

“Alright,” she laughed gently. “Thank you, Papa. I’ll tell you more about why we’re off to town when you’re here, okay? Go warm up your car, and I’ll see you in thirty… it’ll take me that long to get my damn shoes on,” The last part is muttered more to herself, but she knows he hears it none the less.

Toki clicks the phone off, and goes to struggle into her shoes.

It doesn’t take her a full thirty minutes, but it does take her probably closer to fifteen or so minutes to actually get both of her shoes on. She has her laces loose, but they’re good enough for now.

The purr of the engine caught her attention once roughly thirty minutes or so had passed, and Toki perked up eagerly. She collected her purse, and adjusted her long skirt as it slid down her middle. She was the point where everything was just barely fitting- and eventually it wouldn’t fit anymore. She really didn’t want to have to get more clothes.

Toki padded out of the house after leaving a note for Papyrus that she was running to town with Tenebris, and then waddled down to his car. She took care to shake mud off of her feet before carefully climbing into the front seat of his Charger. It, like Pap’s car, was comfortable and luxurious.

She eased into the seat, carefully setting her purse behind her chair as her middle hitched and tightened. “Huh. That marks another one of those for today,” she mutters. As she got herself buckled, Toki gave Tenebris a bright smile. “Thanks for the ride, Papa. The game store messed up my order for Pap’s birthday and sent it to the entirely wrong place. It was supposed to come here like, a week ago almost, and it just arrived all the way on the other side of Ebott City.”

"Tsk." he shook his head then put it in drive and the car began to roll. "Well it's a good thing you have me... poor girl will need a bath after this…” He sighed. "But if it helps my daughter in law, it's worth it.”

“I can pay for you to take her through the car wash on the way into town, if you’d like? It might get some of the mud off.” She offered gently, well aware that he loved to keep his car immaculate and in pristine condition. As he pulled out onto the road, she could see mud splattered all along the side of his charger from driving to her home. Toki exhaled softly as the tightness in her belly faded, and gently kneaded along the top. “And yeah, I’d be lost without you, Papa. Or,” she grinned slyly, “I'd be driving Wolfen’s van down the road.”

He chuckled gently and shook his head. "I banter and groan but it's not as bad as I let it on to be.” he purred.

“That’s true,” she chuckled gently, and reclined the seat slightly. It took some of the pressure off of her middle and back, and she relaxed as best she could. “You’re my favorite grumpy old man though, and I don’t mind spoiling you a little bit. I might even splurge to let you get Eclipse waxed if you take her through the car wash- how does that sound?” She grinned slightly, eye lights watching the scenery pass.

The roads, as promised, were clear, save a few slushy patches that weren’t a problem for the heavy rig rumbling down the road.

He chuckled and smiled at her, "Deal~"
“Good.” She smiled. She leaned back and prepared for the long drive to town.

A long drive it was. The roads were smooth, the weather good, and the ride was like riding on a floating carpet. There were no distinguishable bumps or bounces, save a few potholes that the thick tires were too wide to dodge, but Tenebris charger was a good and comfortable ride.

It gave no reason for her contractions to pick up pace. They had been irregular but there for most of the morning, but they set a pace. She had the first one getting into the car, and the second one just under thirty minutes later. Toki had a total of four, all of them lasting what felt like forever, before they reached the car wash.

Toki kept quiet though. It seemed like any time she acknowledged the possibility of a pattern setting in, they stopped and didn’t start again for several hours.

Best to keep it out of mind for now. They had more important things to do- like wash his car.

The car wash, unfortunately, had a small line waiting for them. They pulled in behind a small electric car that probably could have fit inside of Tenebris’ Charger, and in front of the electric car was a big, absolutely filthy truck.

She quirked a soft grin as her middle ached, and propped her cheekbone onto her knuckles. “Well,” she hummed, “That’s a look I don’t imagine I’ll ever see on your rig, hm?”

He pressed his lips together, and then he took a deep breath. "Actually, it'd be counter-productive. We're going home after this."

"Um… We’ve got to stop at the game store first,” she said slowly, eying him lightly, "and then we’re good to go home. Though… maybe a stop at the super market first. I’d kinda like a watermelon slushy."

"You know what I meant." he told her, shaking his head and rumbling gently before he turned the car to leave, the line not being too tight.

“Ohhh, I suppose yeah, it’d get gross going home again, wouldn’t it.” She hummed slightly. “Heh. Well, I can help you clean it once the ice and snow is gone. Though… That might be a moot point since it’s only October, and we’ve got snow and ice that’ll keep falling until probably January, or even February. Sorry for misunderstanding- my brain is not all here. Pregnancy tends to make folks scatterbrained.”

"It's okay. My garage is concrete,” he started, "and it has a drain so we'll wash it there."

“That sounds good to me.” She nodded.

Toki fell quiet as he wove them through traffic and into the thick of the city. Despite the given time, the streets were still almost painfully packed with cars. It took them an hour to make it across the city proper, and fifteen minutes to find what she hoped was the proper complex. Toki honestly wasn’t looking forwards to the trip back through the city, because all sorts of aggressive drivers had honked at them for not going fast enough, for going too fast, or for taking a turn that they thought that Tenebris shouldn’t have.

Honestly, city drivers had no manners, and were a source of anxiety and stress for even passengers. Thankfully, they provided decent distractions from the workings of her body, and Toki hummed along with the radio to keep her nerves low.

If Toki began to get too stressed, Tenebris did once in a while pull to the side to let her breathe, but once in a while he'd just sing to her instead.

It worked marvelously.

Toki’s fingers curled over the armrest without meaning to, sharp digits pressing in on the leather as she exhaled softly, breathing her way through another contraction. They were annoyingly strong today, and took more of her focus than normal to get through.

“Mmmn… The complex should be just around this corner- yeah, this is the place that has Pap’s gift. Ah look!” She perked up. “There’s a super market right there just a few stores over from the game shop. I still want that slushy. And maybe a pumpkin spice muffin. Mmm…”

When they finally pulled up, he nodded gently, "Would you like me to go inside and pick these things up for you?" he asked.

Once the car was parked, Toki unclipped her seatbelt and reached back to fetch her purse.

“Nah, I’m alright to go get them. You’re welcome to come with me though.” The sidewalk was a bit icy looking, and she didn’t trust it. “… You’ll definitely have to help me up though.” She chortled. “I’m a wee bit stuck.”

“Very well then.” He nodded. He eased out of his door, and went around to her side. Opening hers, he reached in and offered her a hand like the gentleman he was.

Toki took his hand, and used both his strength and her own to haul herself to her feet. “At least they salted the parking lot if not the sidewalks.” She mused slightly, and shut her door behind her.

“Alright- I might have you carry Pap’s gift, by the way. It’s expensive, and if I drop it, I would probably be very upset.” He was less likely to drop it, given his ease on ice. The only time he had fallen was the year prior when she’d slid into him.

Literally into him. He’d fallen and she’d gotten stuck inside of the ‘burrow’ as Thumper called it. That had been… an interesting issue. And then Tenebris had gotten hit by the truck- which had really been part of what lead into the conception of the twins, now that she thought about it. The truck, and then Vikki- and then Pap’s heat had triggered, and they’d… Well, they’d had their fun with souls.

"Oh but of course, that wont be an issue at all." He assured her. "Mm… while I’m here, there's a shoe store I’d like to inquire."

“Thanks, Papa.” She smiled up at him warmly, took his arm, and then made for the game store. “We can hit the shoe store after, yeah?” Though what use he had for human-made shoes, she wouldn’t know.

He nodded gently, "Though, it'll be something I'll take care of myself. I don’t need to bother you by having you come and join me to go ask stupid questions." he chuckled.

“I suppose so.” She hummed. “I’ll probably tag along all the same.”

The store was clean and tidy, with all sorts of new games being advertised, and the air in the store didn’t have any particular smell that stuck out to either of them. There was a stack of games on the front counter, and a bald man behind the counter. He looked up at them, blinked, and then waved slightly. "You’re, uh… Tokiko Nara, right? You ordered the monster sized X-box and it got shipped to the wrong location?"

“That’s right.” She nodded, not bothering to correct him on her name change. Most people still recognized her for the Nara part of her name, though she was only Tokiko Gaster now. Even Tenebris called her Tokiko Nara Gaster from time to time- but she honestly didn’t mind. Toki was a Nara at heart, and she wasn’t ever going to be upset about being referred to by her old name.

She stepped further inside, leaving Tenebris to follow, and waddled for the counter.

“I’m so, so sorry it went to the wrong location. Sometimes the website can fuck up and whatnot- it happens to a lot of people, actually. You’ve already paid for it, and you don’t really need ID since… Well, I’d recognize you pretty much anywhere. I’ll go get your X-box. If you’ll just give me a couple minutes?” The man edged behind the counter, slowly moving towards the door to the storage area.

Toki nodded slowly, and leaned against the counter. “Take all the time you need to do your job safely.” She smiled soothingly at him, and watched as he padded into the back room. Toki glanced back at her companion and chuckled. “Well, at least I know I’m not the only one who’s had a package sent here.”

Tenebris watched her, and tucked his tail between his legs, wrapping it around one of them as he went to look around, a little curious about all this, "Toki, do me a favor..." he spoke up.

“Hm?” She glanced at him curiously, wondering what he could want.

"Explain to me how one is supposed to survive fighting against a zombie apocalypse..." he then held up a case labeled 'Lollipop Chainsaw', 'Dressed like a bloody cheerleader while wielding a chainsaw!"

She stared at him for a moment, before guffaws of laughter escaped her. She leaned heavily on the counter, and just brayed with laughter. “Oh my g-gods, I don’t think I’ve heard it d-described like th-that. Oh gods, I don’t know, Papa, oh my god.”

The man came out from behind with a large box in hand, and looked at the laughing skeleton with a small iota of worry for if she fell over from laughing too hard. “Lollipop Chainsaw is… a weird game.” He hums. “You’d have to play it for yourself to see how she survives, I guess.”

He glared at it for a moment, then put it down once more, "Hm, later perhaps," he murmured, coming back, though he noticed a little something below the counter, "Hm?" he then reached and picked up what revealed to be a bright red fox plushy, and he blinked once.

"That's from Five Nights At Freddie's." The man murmured lightly. "It's a horror game that focuses on jump scares and animatronics."

"Not a chance in hell." Toki snorted lightly, still quivering from her laughter. "Jump scares tend to make me- ah... Nnnnm." Ow, ow, contractions were much worse when standing upright. They were getting closer together, she noted.

"Uh... Miss Tokiko? Are you okay...?"

"Mhm." Came the terse answer as she braced herself to ride though it. Oh yes she preferred to deal with this while sitting. Standing was so, so unpleasant.

Tenebris reached out and set a hand on her back, rubbing gently by reflex as he looked at the man. "I’ll take that package, if everything is all set to go." He offered.
"It, uh, is." The man nodded and handed the package over. He at least seemed genuinely worried for the poor woman. "Is she going to be all right?"

"I'm fine. Just... A cramp." Toki hummed softly. His hand on her back felt nice, and the warmth of his palm grounded her. He would, however, feel the tightness of her muscles and be able to note them as more than just a cramp. It took several seconds for the contraction to fade, but once it did she gave them both a lopsided smile. "Alright. You wanted to stop at the shoe store next, right Tenebris?"

"I'll put it off... I'll get what you wanted from the supermarket while you settle down in the car." He told her gently.

Toki rolled her eye lights. "You literally only come to town when someone drags you here. Really, ten minutes in a shoe store isn't going to kill me." She eased away from the counter gave the man a cheery look, and then guided her father in law outside again. "I'm not gonna a just sit in the car while you run my errands, Tenebris. We'll stop in for your shoe questions, and then scoot." She wasn't feeling very hungry suddenly, but pregnancy did that to her sometimes.

He sighed and gave her a firm shake of his head. "No. I don't want you to overexert yourself, not while we're away from home."

"I am legitimately with the best doctor I know. I'm not going to exert myself by doing some easy stuff, Papa." She opened the door, let him put the game system inside of the car, and then hugged him reassuringly as they locked it again. "If you're really that worried, we can skip the slushy. I'm suddenly not very hungry. You know how it goes." She hummed soothingly to him.

He hugged her gently and sighed in defeat. "How about I get you a small slushy in case you do get thirsty? It'd last I'd say the few minutes I need for questioning about getting shoes made."

She hummed softly and nodded. "Okay. A small watermelon slushy would be fine. Mmm... I guess I'll sit in the car." She shifted and opened the passenger door again once he let her go. "I give you too much trouble sometimes, I know. I'll chill here. That last contraction was a bit rough." It had been progress at least. Toki was pretty sure that it might be soon. They had been regular for a while now.

She eased down into the seat with a soft sigh and cradled her belly in one hand as she got comfortable. Well, as comfortable as one could be with everything beginning to ache like hell. So much for her ache-free morning.

He helped her into her seat and pecked her head before he went to make his run. He brought back her slushy and a small pumpkin spice muffin as he promised, though as he turned to leave he paused, and blinked once as he 'smelled' the air.

Toki relaxed as best she could and nibbled slightly at her muffin and sipped at her slushy. Pumpkin spice and watermelon was an odd mix, but cravings could be the weirdest things. She glanced up at him as he paused, seeming to be huffing air in through his mouth. "Er... you alright?"

"Something smells strange..." he murmured, looking at her, leaning his face into the car slightly as he did it once more, "How do you feel, Toki?" he then asked.

She made a face at him, and leaned back just slightly as he leaned closer to her. "It could be the muffin? I'm, uh... Fine, I guess? Kinda tired and sore around my middle. I've had a couple contractions, so I'm a bit tender. Why do you ask?"

"The smell is... strange, and yet the first thing I can tie it to is 'birthing'." he then sighed and shook his
"Are you sure you don’t feel like you're going into labor or anything of the sort?"

“Well… maybe? They’re regular, and getting closer together. They started about when we left, about thirty minutes apart. They’re a little closer together now though, and a lot more uncomfortable than they usually are.” She peers up at him quietly and frowns. “I didn’t want to say anything because any time I get my hopes up, it ends up being a false labor.”

"You have your phone on you, right?" he asked.

“It’s in my purse, yeah. Why?"

"In the case it's not a false labor, you can call me... You were right about not getting out enough. I do want this taken care of before the day is done, so I’ll go and see to it real fast.” He nodded gently.

Toki smiled and tilted her head gently. “I’ll call you if anything comes up, okay? So long as you don’t take two or three hours, we should be good.”

"I'm not going to take even one! It's simply for questions!” he chuffed, before he turned, "I'll be back soon, my dear."

“I’ll be here.” She gave him a cheery wave, and closed the door to the car. She stretched out to finish her muffin, and then settled in to sip at her slushy. Toki idly rubbed her belly, massaging her fingers gently into where it ached the most, and closed her eyes to relax and wait for her father in law to ask the questions that he wanted to know.

As he walked into the store, the smell of leather and shoe polish was nearly overwhelming. Behind a short counter was an equally short older woman who was polishing a pair of black loafers. When the bell jingled, signifying a customer, the woman didn’t even look up.

“Welcome to Shimada’s. I’m Yuri Shimada, how may I help you find the perfect pair of shoes today?” Her words were kind and sprightly, though she remained dedicated to her task.

"Good afternoon, ma'am." He rumbled as he approached, his tail tucking away around his leg once more. "I was hoping to know if you were able to do custom shoe orders, now that there's more than one type of foot out in the world."

That brought her gaze up to him. To her credit, she didn’t startle. Wrinkled lips puckered, and she gave him a firm once over. “Not many come asking for custom shoes. Shimada’s still does custom orders, but it is a craft that is dying out. My apprentices will take measurements for your feet, and I will see what I can do with them, yes?” She leaned back in her seat, old joins popping and crunching as she stretched. “Hanzo, Genji! We need a measurement done for a custom set of shoes.”

There was a rustling of movement in the background, before a young man stepped out. He wore a pair of glasses that seemed to have tinted glass, hiding his eyes from immediate view. Tenebris didn't try to stare, but he did notice the odd looking belt keeping up the young man's pants.

"Genji is on break, Grandmother. You said someone has a custom shoe order for us?"

"Thank you very much." he rumbled, before the young man walked out of the back. From what he's heard, this one is Hanzo. What a handsome young man, looked quite able in his skill of aiding his grandmother. Upon the questioning of his summoning, Tenebris cleared his throat lightly as to make his presence known.
The young man blinked as the monster drew his gaze, and then gave him a shrewd once over. "Hm… Yeah, with feet like those, there’s no way you’d fit in a normal pair of shoes. Alright. If you’ll put your foot up here, sir, I’ll get your measurements. Are you getting a pair made today? It might take several days to get it made, as we’ll need to experiment and find out what leathers work the best and what shape we’ll need."

"If it does not take too long, I wouldn't mind simply starting with just the measurements." he responded, approaching and lifting a foot, placing it on the pedestal as requested.

"Measurements themselves don’t take too long." He assured, and carefully got out his measuring tools. He rested one next to the side of his foot, measuring from the tips of his claws back to his heels, and then carefully edged one under the highest point on his foot to measure the height. Quietly, Hanzo began to record the sizes. "If I might inquire, what has you in such a rush today, sir? Most people don’t come to custom shoe stores unless they’re planning to get a pair made and taken home with them the same day."

"I live far out of town, and was brought in with my daughter in law needing to make a run. She's pregnant and at the final stages before she has her children, and cannot drive on her own. I had been meaning to stop by sooner but once more, I do not get out as much, she insisted that I take care of this before we return home." he replied.

"Ohh, congrats! That’s nice of you to take her to town." Hanzo nodded. "Are these your first grandkids?" he asked curiously, carefully pressing down on Tenebris foot to see how his paws splayed out. He recorded the widest width, and the narrowest width, and then carefully investigated his claws. "We might have to go steel-toed on your shoes. Your claws will wear through any base leather we could use."

"Steel-toed is fine." he rumbled, before replying. "Yes. I have two sons, but soon enough I’m going to have three grandchildren." he replied cheerfully. "I suspected, but never considered that the first born would end up being twins, rather than one child."

"Twins on the first try? Lucky man!" Hanzo laughed. "Do twins not run in your family?" he asked conversationally, and quietly marked down a few things. "Do you want laces, slip-on shoes, or Velcro?"

"Slip-on please, and actually, it's rather the opposite. My kind would normally have larger litters under normal circumstances, however, the mother is, or rather, was human."

"Oh, really?" He perked up slightly, and smiled softly to himself. He reached up to tilt his sunglasses down, and peered up at Tenebris through bright blue dragon-like eyes. "HTM’s are pretty common, but I haven’t heard of any having kids with monsters. There’s not a lot of actual monsters in the city—but that’s for a good reason with those assholes out there hunting you guys… Anyways, humans can have several kids naturally, but it isn’t common. Single births are by far the most common, but… naturally, I think humans have had up to… four maybe? I haven’t really looked into it. I know one woman had eight at one time, but that was done by medical professionals. Anyways, when are your Grandkids due?"

He smiled gently at seeing that this woman accepted her grandson, as it was now clear to him that he was an HTM. "She's overdue, actually. Two weeks..."

"Ha! She should be popping soon then. Two weeks is usually when a doctor induces- any longer is usually detrimental to the mother and the child’s health. Though it might be different with monsters.” He gave him a grin, carefully catalogued a few more things, and then stood up. “Alright- I’ll get started on prototyping these. It could take anywhere from a few days to a week or so to get it done. If you’ll write your name and number down on one of the note cards on the front desk, I’ll make sure to call you when we get a possible prototype going. Heh. I’m excited!” His belt twitched, belaying the truth to his words as what was revealed to be a tail wiggled slightly. “I’ve never designed monster shoes before. It’s going to be fun!”

"Thank you very much. I'm glad I could give you the joy of such a task." he rumbled softly and allowed his own tail to unwind from it's hiding place, letting him know that he wasn't the only one to do that with his tail. "I'll bring pictures of the twins when they're born."

“That’d be awesome!” He beamed brightly, eying his tail slightly. He nodded, and moved to get a note card for him to write down his information. “Here- name and number will suffice- good luck with your daughter in law, and congrats again on the grandkids.”

“Mmm, bring them here if they need shoes like you, yeah?” Yuri hummed slightly from her spot behind the counter.

"I'll bring in my youngest, he needs a pair of shoes if I can convince him." he chuckled, writing down his name and phone number with skillful strides of the pen. "Thank you Miss Shimada, Hanzo. I cannot wait to see what you come up with." he rumbled happily, giving a small bow before he turned to leave.

“Such a respectful young man,” Yuri sounded pleased. “You do good by his shoes, Hanzo.”

“Of course, Grandma, I wouldn’t do anything less.” Their words followed him out.

Outside, Toki had the door open again and was brushing crumbs of muffin off of her self so they didn’t land inside his car. She peered up at him as he came out and tilted her head. “Did you get your questions answered?” She inquired lightly.

“Indeed. I hope I wasn't too long.” he replied with a smile.

“Not at all.” She smiled at him crookedly, and finished removing the crumbs from her person. She paused in sliding properly back into her seat, and leaned her skull against the door as a contraction rolled over her. “Mm… I’m ready to go home though. Pretty sure this is labor. I haven’t felt these kinds of contractions since Pap stopped my early labor.”

He nodded, quickly getting into the drivers seat and starting the car.

She righted herself and got herself buckled in her seat. Once Toki shut the door, she curled her fingers over the arm rest and exhaled slowly. “Mmm… Well, it’s going to be a long ride home.”
They had three hours at least. More if there was traffic. Toki gives Tenebris a faint smile. “So, you alright? Not getting all anxious over there, Grandpa?”

"Trying not to think about it, Toki." He answered.

“Alright.” She nods. She leans over to fiddle with his radio, and turned it to an ‘old’ music channel.
Old being anything that was made before the current year. Quietly, she leaned back and hummed along, trying to offer both him and her a distraction as they wove their way back into the city.

The traffic had, thankfully, cleared off somewhat, so they managed to make it through the city proper in about forty-five minutes, which was record time for Ebott.

About halfway home from the city, or possibly further than that since it was hard to keep track of time and landmarks when she kept zoning out, her contractions grew more uncomfortable, and edged into the painful side. Humming along with the music wasn’t helping. She couldn’t really shift positions to find another one that didn’t hurt as badly, so she was literally stuck until they could get home.

By the time the next one rolled around, she was very nearly putting holes in the leather of his armrests, breathing quietly to herself as she rode it out. Her teeth ground, a soft, squeak of flint-like bone grinding together, and thankfully the slushy she had slowly been sipping kept her mouth too wet for sparks to fly.

Tenebris’ tail was starting to rattle nervously behind him as he looked at the road, his foot putting a bit more pressure on the gas pedal.

The nervous rattle was not very comforting to hear, and Toki forced her fingers off of his armrest. She flipped her hand over and wiggled her fingers at him, offering to take his hand, or his tail or something other than ripping holes in his nice leather. “Easy, Tenebris. It’s all right. It’s all natural… Mmmnn…”

"So was that leather." He keened, letting her take his tail so he could keep both hands on the wheel.

"I'll pay to get it fixed." She ground her words out tightly. Her fingers curled over his tail, holding the noisy thing still as she tightened her fingers over it. "Hn... How long until you think we'll be home?"

"I can get us there soon… Can you call the boys?"

"Yeah." She fished with one hand for her purse, and managed to get her phone. It took her a few tries, but once her contraction ended, she dialed Pap's number. As the pain eased some, she gently rubbed her fingers over Tenebris' tail in silent apology in case she had hurt him.

Tenebris wasn’t bothered by her grasp; otherwise he wouldn’t have set it within reach.

"Toki?" Came Papyrus' voice from the phone.

“Hey, Pap.” She smiled slightly despite herself. “So… I hate to be the bearer of awkward birthday news, but… Surprise, you’re probably going to be a daddy very, very soon?”

There was a pause, where he was processing this information, but it didn’t last very long. "What do I need to do to be ready?" He questioned. He did sound like he was starting to panic, but kept himself chilled and calm enough to prepare for her return.

"Get some towels." Toki glanced at Tenebris, and hummed slightly. "Towels, and... Ah, perhaps put some of those plastic covers down on the couch? I dunno how long I'll be in labor, but I know it'll be a while. And... Keep yourself calm maybe? Your dad is a bit of a mess already. I need someone else to be calm. Can you do that for me?"

"I... I can do that..." He murmured, taking a deep breath to steady himself. "Yeah... I... I can do that."

“Okay.” She exhaled softly. “I know you can do it, Pap. Now… I’ll be home in… Shit, I don’t know. I haven’t been paying attention to the surroundings and landmarks… Probably thirty minutes now? Maybe forty minutes? Possibly less. Anyways, I need to call Sans. Presumably,” she eyed her father in law in the front seat, “so he can take Thumper for tonight, since we’ll need Tenebris with us.”

"I'll call him now, I love you and I’ll see you soon."

“I can call him, Pap, but alright. I love you too, and I’ll see you soon.” She waited until he hung up, and then slid her phone back into her purse. “Mmm… Okay. So,” she glanced to Tenebris, “Do you happen to know how long we’ll be? I was serious when I said I wasn’t paying attention to the landmarks.” Time had gotten a little fuzzy with contractions, and she probably kept missing them.

"Not long," he murmured, "Not stopping, not stopping."

“… Tenebris?” She eyed him warily. She shifted her grip and bundled his tail into her arms trying to draw him out of his probably panic induced daze. Toki tweaked his tail slightly, rolling the bone-armor between her fingers to distract herself and him. “You have to stop sometime, or you’ll pass right by the compound.”

His tail wagged slowly before he slowed down and looked at her, "If I hadn't had stopped I would have gotten you home before you went into labor…"

“Technically my contractions started this morning, but they only really got regular when I got into the car. So… Technically that’s not true.” She stroked his tail gently for a moment, before her fingers tightened. Toki inhales and braces herself, her fingers slipping between the hard bone to grasp what rested below. She pressed her forehead to his tail and moaned lowly. “Oh gods, I can’t wait to get home so I can move.”

"We're almost there…" he murmured, "Almost…"

Something gave in her belly as the compound gates came into sight.

A warm scent flooded the car, smelling strongly like Toki, but something… else. Her skirt was soaked with luminescent green fluid, and it oozed over his seat and down along the floor. Toki squeaked, and jolted slightly in her seat, having not expected that sensation. Some of the pressure died out in her belly though, and she relaxed just slightly. Not all of it was gone, but at least a little bit off made it feel much better. “Uh… I think my water just broke… Or whatever that is…"

Well, at least she knew for sure it wasn’t a false labor now.

Tenebris' pupils thinned as he picked up the scent and his grip tightened on the wheel as he drove, but he was relieved to see the guards already opening the gate. “Leave it to Papyrus to make sure they were ready... Atta boy…"

Shifting made another gush that stained his natural leather seats, so Toki chose to sit still. Well, as still as she could be. Leaving the road put them on the bumpy, muddy ground for a short time, and that was a painful experience that she never, ever wanted to have again. When the car parked in front of her house, Toki released Tenebris tail and opened her door. She couldn’t get out without help. “At least we made it?” she murmured to Tenebris, side-eying him briefly. They wouldn’t really know how bad his seats looked until she stood up…

Tenebris didn’t reply initially. He just got out, taking a breath to calm himself, and came around to her side and offered his hand to help her up. "Let's get you inside."

Toki accepted his help and hauled herself up. More ooze slid down the insides of her legs, and she visibly shuddered. That was the grossest feeling. It didn’t have the consistency of water, more like a warm and liquid like gelatin- just yuck. Yuck, yuck, yuck.

Standing upright, though, let them see that his seats were effectively ruined by the sticky luminescent fluid that oozed over them. Toki winced, and leaned a little heavily on Tenebris for a second, before going to fetch her purse and Pap’s gift out of the back seat. “I’m super sorry about your car,” She murmured softly, collecting her things from the back of the car before turning to let him guide her "Forget about that right now, right now I am focusing more on you..." He told her gently.

She can’t help the automatic roll that her eye lights do upon his words. Like father, like son. “You and Papyrus are a lot alike. He says that a lot.” She informs him seriously. Still, she hobbles easily up the front stairs, and lets Tenebris open the front door for her. Her arms are full, after all. “Pap?” She calls gently. “I’m home.”

"I'm here, Toki!" Aliquam called from somewhere in the house. "I just finished setting up." He slid out into view and gave her a shaky smile.

Toki gave him one in return, sure she looked like quite a sight. Her nice, white skirt was now an interesting shade of green, and she was making a mess of their floor. She hefts up the box, and gives him a sheepish smile. “Happy birthday?” She slips the large game system onto one of the side tables, and eases her purse off of her shoulder as well. “I am so glad to be home.” She sighs contently.

I’m already in labor,” she points out gingerly, “and this sort of stuff takes time. I’d… kinda like to get cleaned up though. Do you think you can go start a bath while I get my skirt into the washing machine?”

"You'll go with Father to the bathroom, I'll drop off the skirt and join you soon enough."

Toki nodded, sighing softly as she did so. She was goin to just have to accept that she was going to be babied. Toki slipped her skirt and ruined underpants down, giving no shits if Tenebris caught sight of anything, and bundled the clothes into a glob of gross. Her shoes, stained a horrid color, also joined the pile. She made a face, and offered it to him. “Alright. I'll put my shirt in the hamper upstairs- just toss that in with the usual mix, yeah? I hope that’ll take the goop out…"

He nodded gently and took them while Tenebris started upstairs with her. "Atta girl, come on."

"I'm coming, I'm coming." She chuffed slightly, and padded up slowly with him. She ended up needing his support on the way up, as she felt shaky and wobbly.

Getting to the top of the stairs was an achievement though, and she guided him into her room once she was good to go. Her shirt was discarded into the bin for later washing, and she stood nude once more in the bedroom. Toki took the time to spread some plastic over the bed, in case she wanted to move there later, before moving to the bathroom. “How are you holding up, Papa?” She glanced back to her shadow as she eased herself onto the bathroom sink counter, so she wouldn’t be in the way when Papyrus came up the stairs. She needed either him or Tenebris to start the bath, since bending down wasn’t a thing for her.

Oh. Oh. She’d be able to bend down soon. That… was actually exciting. She perked at the thought. Full mobility… gods, she was so excited for that, and to hold her kids.

"I'm steeling myself for this." He murmured.

She quirked an amused smile at him. “You and me both. Do we need to call in Todd? I know he’s been studying a lot of stuff- if you don’t think you can handle it, this is sort of your last chance to back out. Of course, you wouldn’t be able to get the delivery on film for further record if you’re not here…” Toki paused, and rubbed her belly with a soft sigh. “Speaking of- you can probably go get your go-pro and park your car if you want. Nothing’s going to be happening right now that Papyrus..."
and I can’t handle.”

He snorted at that, "Don’t sound so eager." he told her, before he nodded. He was nervously twitching for a second, loathe to just leave her alone- but he eventually sighed. "I'll be back."

"You don’t have to rush," Toki nods gently. “Go get your kit, and anything else you need.” In the mean time, she would keep her seat on the sink counter, and wait for her husband to come up to join her. She was growing a bit tired, but she supposed she was losing a lot of magic based on what was coating her legs- and soaking basically everything she’d touched since the car.

Tenebris nodded, gave her a gentle pat on the skull, and then padded out.

Aliquam soon joined her, sidling in and gently hugging her. "Tokiko~"

“Hey, Quinn.” She smiled and kissed him gently, leaning into his embrace with a soft sigh. “Looks like it’s finally time. Heh. Think you can get the bath going, daddy-to-be?”

Toki exhales gently, and smiles up to him with a tender look. This was it. They were going to ring their little skeletons into the world sometime within the next several hours. They would be parents. It was a little overwhelming- but in a good way.

"Of course." He gave her a tender kiss, and a soft touch to her belly, before going to get the water started.

Toki took a moment to ease off the counter, and then scrubbed it clean with a washcloth. Honestly, she was gross. Ugh. “You may not want to get in the tub with me initially,” She hums softly to him. “I am gross. This is like the worlds stickiest gelatin. Ugh.”

"Toki, what do you think I am? A clean freak?" He snorted. "I'll be fine with a little mess."

“Well, sometimes, but I think everyone has their moments where they just have to clean.” She chuckles, and rests a hand lightly on his back. His shirt is warm under her fingers, and she finds herself relaxing in close proximity to her mate and the calmness he was exuding. If he was panicking inside, he was hiding it a lot better than his father was. Toki couldn’t tell. Or was too distracted to tell. “If it doesn’t bother you, then I would love for you to join me.”

"I think I will then." He chuckled softly. He leaned upright, hugged her softly, and pressed a kiss between her horns. "I'll get in first so you'll have the perfect cradle."

“That’s fine with me.” She smiles. Toki shifts slightly in his arms and hums. “You might want to get in quick though. I can feel a contraction coming soon, and I’d rather be in the water than try and stay on my feet.”

Papyrus nodded, and gently stepped away from her. His clothes were discarded neatly but swiftly, leaving him just as bare as her. He gave her one more kiss, and then eased down into the filling tub.

Toki eased down after him, carefully sliding into position between his legs. She hadn’t quite gotten comfortable when the contraction hit, and she leaned back into him with a soft moan. Her hand clenched on his knee, holding him firmly as she closed her sockets and tried to breathe through it. She’d heard stories of contractions growing worse when the water broke- and they weren’t exactly false. The right side of her belly felt like it was made of hellfire, and she had to breathe gingerly through it.

He smiled and wrapped his arms around her, kissing her head gently. One of his hands briefly snaked down and pressed against her lower back, locating a pressure point that the books had talked about and then firmly pressing into it. "That's it," he purred, "Keep doing that."

Toki’s breath hitched gently, and she eased into his arms, letting his embrace and the use of her pressure points help to relax her. Pressure built in her middle again- and a second pop occurred, and the tub was suddenly flooded with green magic amniotic fluid. Toki didn’t notice until the contraction faded, and once it did, she eased against him with a soft shudder. Two different waters breaking meant that her children likely weren’t identical. “… Well, at least I was in the tub for this one.”

Not that it helped- now they were sitting in magic sludge filled water. It was… an unpleasant smell, at least to Toki. She reached out to drain the tub and let it refill while they were in it.

He reached up and gently massaged her stomach gently, helping her relax as much as he could before he reached up and grabbed the showerhead with his magic. Turning on the water to rinse her off as the water drained, Papyrus peppered the back of her skull with gentle kisses.

“Thanks, Pap. You are the literal best.” She let him rinse her, and scrubbed her leg bones and lower bits as best she could. The shower head helped most of it get down the drain, but she was slowly, slowly leaking little bits of the magical amniotic fluid. Once she was mostly clean and the tub was free, she turned the water back on, plugged the drain, and leaned back into him with a soft and tired sigh.

He turned the shower setting to massage and gently ran it into her femurs, a small smile on his face.

“Oooo, you spoil me.” She slumped into him with a soft purr. The massage setting set out little pulses of water designed to massage flesh- but it did wonders on bones too. “I love you.” She murmured suddenly. “I love you a lot, you know that?”

"I love you more..." he purred, kissing her cheek.

There was a soft knock on the doorframe. “Toki, Papyrus, I’m here."

“Mmm, come on in, Papa.” Toki shifted softly, and nuzzled into her mate with a soft sound. “Did you get everything you needed?”

Now that she was clean, and her femurs were being massaged, she could feel herself almost drifting. Her energy levels had been up and down at random since before her due date, and she found them plummeting again. She felt safe in Pap’s arms, pressed up against his chest. She was tired and slumped against him, and he was warm and safe- and the hot water slowly filling the tub felt amazing too.

"Yes, I did." he replied, approaching and setting up the camera. He tucked his go-pro into his shirt and clipped it on about chest height, so it would get everything that he was pointing at. "I appreciate you willing to let me record this for science. I'll turn it off if you get uncomfortable."

"It's all for the greater good, right? It'll help you prepare for helping Sans and any further children that come from us." Or from their children, and their children’s children. Toki heaved a soft, sleepy sigh, and then grimaced at a cramp in her lower belly. "You might not see much though to start. I'm... Mm... Pretty tired. Energy levels are flagging again." They were both used to her nearly narcoleptic spells that she had during the last couple weeks of her pregnancy.

Her body had been stockpiling energy, trying to fill up what the contractions took.

"That's fine, we can wait." he assured her, "You're okay to rest for a little while if you need to."
Her eye lights tracked over his frame, and she nuzzled her skull back into Pap’s shoulder. She was relaxing, contraction aches or no, and there was nothing she could do to stop it. Toki sighed gently, and curled one of her hands gently over Papyrus’ knee again. “I think I might need to.” She murmured softly. “If I’m gonna make it through transition, then I’m gonna need as much energy as I can get… I’d like to stay here for a little while longer though. I’m relaxed here.” And relaxed in labor was something not easy to come by.

"Rest.” Aliquam kissed her head gently. "I love you."

“I love you too.” Her free hand snared her husbands, and she laced their fingers together before closing her sockets and relaxing. Sleep would take some time- but she was safe. She was warm- she had her mate, and the protection of her father in law. Whatever instincts made these things a priority, they were certainly pleased. Pleased enough to eventually allow her to succumb to soothing, relaxing sleep.
Strider Notes: Sorry to end it on a cliffhanger~ but it was getting a bit long, y’know. Here’s the big event~ Silver and I are actually going to be taking a short break from posting chapters after this. This’ll give us time to unwind and relax, and figure out the majority of the rest of the plot. It’ll also give us time to stockpile chapters, so that when we do come back into it, we can come back in with a surplus and a steady plan for uploading them.

Also, other news that’s hilariously related to this chapter in particular- I’m now a mom. To a sweet little calf- her name is Tough Cookie. Her mom had her in the mud, and lost her, and then refused to accept that she was her calf when we reunited them. So… Yay? I’m a mom again in time for my 21st birthday, come the 13th.

ALSO THERE IS ART WE HAVE DONE OF THE TWINS UP ON THE TUMBLR. COME VISIT US AND SHOUT AT US.
http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Silverwing Notes: puts a needle to a balloon The time has come.

She had drifted in and out, rousing to awareness during some of her contractions, but otherwise she slept soundly. Or, at least she thought she did. She’d had a weird dream where she’d been growling at something or someone- but she hadn’t really been aware of it during her brief flashes into awake, and then back to sleep. Sometime during one of her contractions, she had been moved. She’d been aware of it, because the movement of being carried had been distinctly uncomfortable, and she’d instinctively growled at whoever was carrying her. She wasn’t dropped though, despite the hesitation she’d felt in the one carrying her, and Toki had been fast asleep again as the contraction began to fade off.

Contractions were horribly, horribly exhausting- and she woke up still feeling tired, but she felt… she wasn’t sure. Like something had changed while she had been sleeping. Her pelvis felt heavy, making her really wish someone had placed something between her femurs to provide some sort of support to her lower body, and her belly felt tight near constantly.

Toki woke up in what she realized was her bed. She woke abruptly at the tail end of a contraction, her sockets lighting to what she realized was the sound of a game playing. She could vaguely hear Tenebris and Papyrus behind her, and shifted slowly in bed so she could turn to face them. The plastic ruined her attempt at being quiet, crinkling noisily as it protected her sheets from the stuff sure to come.

They had apparently gotten the flat screen from down stairs, and had brought it upstairs. It was sitting against the wall, propped up on its stand, with the new X-box off to the side. Tenebris and Papyrus were visible from behind. Toki identified the game they were playing as the two-player version of Portal 2.
Ah, so he had found and opened her gifts. She idly wondered what time it was, and sought out the alarm clock on her nightstand. It was twenty minutes after midnight. She had slept for... probably close to five hours then. Likely, Toki mused, she had slept through the worst of the transitioning stage. Her mom had done that with two of her brothers- and Toki found herself glad that she had too.

She’d seen the transitioning stage at it’s worst- and it was a horrible, horrible thing to experience. There was no way of really knowing what all they had to see and hear- but she supposed, eying the camera propped up not far from her, that she could just watch the video and find out.

She shifted slightly on the bed, still bare and naked. Papyrus, she noted, was garbed in his usual orange turtleneck. She could smell him- smell them, together- on the bed below her, and it was the single most relaxing thing she could think of at the moment. Each soft whiff brought some sort of soothing feeling through her. She was safe within the reaches of her family.

Toki sighed gently, and turned her attention to Tenebris and Papyrus as they navigated through puzzles that she would have had a hell of a time trying to do. All of the monsters in her family were wicked smart, she mused.

Slowly, Toki reached out and gently rubbed her fingers over the collar of Aliquam’s turtleneck. She rubbed the well-worn fabric with the tips of her finger bones, and closed her sockets with a soft content sigh. The twins shifted inside of her, strangely quiet across the soul links, and she gave a soft grunt as their legs pressed against her ribs.

"Enjoying the game?" She asks quietly, a soft hum escaping her as she watched the screen from over their shoulders.

Tenebris sat up slightly as he heard her moving, and he let out a greeting chirp.

Aliquam paused the game to turn and kiss her cheek, gently rubbing his fingers over hers. "How do you feel?" he asked gently.

“Tired.” She says softly. “Kinda like I slept, but didn’t really sleep… Mm… Sore. Hungry. Heavy… A lot of things.” She nuzzles her face gently into his, and buzzes a gentle tone of greeting to Tenebris’ soft chirp. “Are you enjoying your game?” She inquired again.

"Yes, this is so much fun." he replied happily, "Definitely a new type of puzzle for me!"

"It definitely makes you think." Tenebris nodded lightly.

“Good.” Toki smiled at him warmly. “I’m glad you’re having fun with it. I watched some folks playing the game, and I thought you might enjoy the puzzles and the stories through both games.”

Toki shifted where she lay, and carefully lifted herself upwards so she could sit. Her bottom was tender, and sitting wasn’t entirely pleasant, even on the plush top that was her bed. She felt warm, like her magic was gathering in preparation for something. “Did you both get the chance to eat dinner while I rested?” She asked softly. “I figure Grillby probably dropped something off…” She knew Muffet was supposed to bring a cake by, but had no idea if the spider woman actually had since she was pretty certain her labor had been broadcast across the village.

"We didn't want to leave you alone for too long." Her husband hummed gently to her.

"So we ordered Grillby's for pickup. I'll only be gone a few minutes to pick it up." Tenebris explained.

“That’s fine.” She nods softly. “Go ahead and go pick up your order from Grillby’s, yeah? I'll be okay for a few minutes.” She smiles slightly. “Is he even open past midnight though? Or is…” Could everyone be awake waiting on news about her delivery? Something told her that this was likely the case. “Speaking of Grillby… a snack sounds good about now.” Mm… Milkshake.

Her magic was depleted after all. Even if most doctors recommended against eating during labor, she sure as hell didn’t want to chew on ice chips or something likewise. But… She wasn’t sure she really had time for more than a snack. There was an odd feeling inside of her- it wouldn’t be long, she thought. Not overly long at all.

"Perhaps after your labor. Right now you need something gentle on the stomach." Tenebris told her softly.

“That I do know. I could still go for something soothing, like a vanilla milkshake or something.” She hummed softly. Her sockets closed, and she shifted as her belly tightened in a contraction. Toki rocked backwards in her seated position, riding it out as her belly tightened and forced the tight feeling in her pelvis to grow worse. Her fingers found Pap’s, and she tightened her hold around them as she rode it out. “Hah… Ah… You might want to go get your food, Tenebris. Teleportation is your friend right now. Pap and I will be okay until you get back, yeah?”

He nodded and put the controller down, teleporting out to go get their meals.

“C’mere.” Papyrus set down his controller and stood up to gently slide his arms under her knees and back. He slid her up to the headboard, and then gathered a generous pile of pillows and rested them behind her. Te took a moment to ease his hand behind her and make use of the pressure points again to ease some of her discomfort.

Toki didn’t respond to him for a short time, until the contraction passed. Being moved during it was no less comfortable than sitting still, but she did take comfort in being able to lean back against a mound of pillows so she could be semi-upright. “Thanks, Pap.” She leaned heavily against the pillows, and then sought out his hand again. “Mm… I’m sorry I slept so long.” She thrummed softly. “I think I just needed it though.”

"You did need it, so I don’t care." He told her, stroking her stomach gently.

She smiled, and watched as the twins shifted faintly below his touch. She parted her legs just slightly to release some of the pressure in her pelvis, and sighed up to him. Idly, her fingers found his unoccupied hand and she held it, stroking her thumb along the backs of his knuckles. “Mkay… Heh… We’re getting close.” She murmurs, just a little breathlessly. “I can feel it… We’re going to be parents soon, Pap. Parents.”

"So soon." He purred happily.

“Mhm.” She smiled wider, and stroked her fingers along her belly again. “I’m ready to hold them, Pap… So ready. Mm… Do you have the blankets ready for them?” He probably did, but a mother’s paranoia wasn’t something she intended to ignore.

“Within reach,” He promised, purring gently and pressing a kiss to her fingers.

“Good.” Toki smiled at him gently, and then shifted. Another contraction built up, this time slow and steady, forcing her pelvis shift uncomfortably as something pressed down slowly from within her. She squeezed his hand slowly, and exhaled shakily as she brought his cooler knuckles up to press against the heated bones of her face. “You may want to eat fast when your Dad gets back,” She shot him an amused look. “I think the show’s going to start soon.”
"If I have to wait to eat, I will wait. I don’t care if I have to wait.” He hummed softly.

“I know you don’t.” She hummed, exhaling shakily as it passed. It was swift- but they would only grow closer together. “But I do. I want you to eat if there’s time.” She cleared her throat slightly, and shifted her legs, idly kicking the light blanket that had been covering her off down to the end of the bed. “S-so, how are we going to do this? The bed is comfortable, but against pillows alone I don’t really have that much freedom to change my angle if I need to.” Part of her wanted to have Papyrus behind her, sort of like their bathtub position, for when the time to push came. It was a safe position, and made her feel safe and supported. Toki was hesitant to ask, though.

"We can use the blankets to aid you, Father could move you as needed, or I could sit with you." He rattled off a few ideas automatically.

“I’d kinda like it if you sat with me,” she hums softly. “Kinda like we did in the tub. It was a very… good position.” And if she needed to be hefted upwards, he was tall enough to give her a little bit of support off of the bed. “Probably need to move to the edge of the bed though, and do it facing off the side.” That would give Tenebris, who was a large monster, plenty of space to do what he needed to down below her.

He smiled gently and nodded. ”As my mate wishes, just gotta scoot forward a little bit.” He hummed softly to her.

“Mhm… For now I’m okay though. I don’t quite feel the urge yet.” It was building, but not quite urgent yet. Soon though. Very soon. Probably within a couple contractions, she mused. Toki inhaled and exhaled, simply listening to the sounds of her mate as she relaxed and waited for her doctor to return.

"Deep breathes, slowly settle down, and just lean into me.” He murmured softly to her.

She did as asked, and leaned slowly into him. He might have still been standing next to her, but he was a reliable force. He wouldn’t let her fall. Toki leaned into him more firmly, and suddenly sighed as some of the pressure in her pelvis abated. “Ohhh… mmm…”

“Grillby, the sneaky bastard, got into our kitchen and cut us up some fruit. That means you'll get some too, Toki.” Tenebris laughed gently as he entered the bedroom from outside the door, carrying a bowl of cut fruit in his hands.

Tenebris appearing again had her perking slightly, and she straightened again. “Grillby’s had a mate before, so he probably knows what a laboring one needs.” She hummed softly, eying the fruit. “And that looks delicious. Is that strawberries and apple slices?”

"Yes, precisely." he replied, sitting by her and offering her the bowl.

Toki smiled and took a handful of fruits from it, settling the bowl gingerly on her belly. She nibbled them lightly, feeling the small flurries of magic they created as she ate them. “Mm… Fruit is good stuff.” She thrummed. She tilted her head curiously. "What about your orders though?” She hadn’t seen him bring that in- but to be fair, she had zeroed in almost immediately on the fruit bowl he had been carrying. She was still partially focused on it, nibbling through precisely cut apple and strawberry slices. Grillby had even removed the green tops from the berries.

"Right now we need to simply focus on keeping you calm and comfortable. When the twins are ready, they'll come out, and we'll be ready for them."

“Mmm…” She simply nodded in his general direction, and continued nibbling her fruits.
Toki finished a good portion of the bowl before her desire to eat was gone, and then she offered the rest to them. Her hunger was sated, which had her instincts kicking over to other more important things; like the contraction steamrolling over her. It had taken her fresh bout of energy that she’d ingested and tossed her headlong into another one. Her fingers tightened on the bowl, and she offered it out wordlessly, trying not to drop it and spill it across the plastic on the bed.

Aliquam took it from her without needing her to ask. "Thank you." he purred gently, setting it on the side table as he reached out to rub her stomach. "Easy you two." he murmured.

Toki grimaced as her muscles pulsed under his fingers. She took in several deep breaths, feeling something shifting in her pelvis. His fingers didn’t get any responding kicks, and Toki figured out why at the feeling that tingly over her more heavily than before. “I… I think we need to get into positions.” She murmured softly, rasping in a soft breath as she shuddered through the remnants of her contractions. The force resting heavily in her pelvis didn’t go away, and she groaned uncomfortably at the bed pressing in on her pelvis. “I, uh, think the first one’s head is engaged in my pelvis. It’s really uncomfortable.”

Tenebris moved into position and carefully shifted her as well so that she had her legs draped over the edge of the bed. He then propped up her legs on his shoulders, lifting her pelvis with one of his hands so he could ease a pillow under her.

Papyrus reached over and started the camera before he slid behind her, his arms coming around Toki. Nuzzling his face into her neck, he pressed several supporting kisses to the back of her spine. "Deep breaths. Push with the contractions… that's what the book said, right father?"

"That's right."

Part of her was honestly touched. They had both studied, and despite the earlier panic from them both, they were doing well to stay calm. As Toki settled against Papyrus, seated on her pillow, but also between his legs, she found a happy buzz leaving her. “You both studied,” she smiled. “That’s… That’s awesome. I’m proud of you both.” She thrummed softly. She relaxed as best she could, keeping her breathing matching Pap’s, and curled her hands gently over his knees. With his arms around her ribs, she felt secure and safe.

The next contraction came swift now that there wasn’t the counter pressure of her sitting on the bed. Her middle tightened, and Toki couldn’t help the guttural grunt that escaped her. Her fingers sank tightly into the fabric covering her husband’s knees, and Toki clenched her muscles, and pushed.

“Holy fuck, that stings.” She hissed quietly, closing her sockets with a wince. The head engaged in her pelvis felt massive, and she had a sudden growing respect for her mother. Her mother had done this nine times- Granted, she never had to do it twice in a row, but nine times trumped her two. “Ah, ow, ow…” She did make progress though. Faster progress than if she’d have been human, for sure. She could feel the skull moving down slowly- but it stalled and slid back some as the contraction lightened. It didn’t fully end, but it let her catch her breath.

Pap kissed her head a few times and muttered words to encourage her while Tenebris stayed focus, his gaze sharp as he kept one hand on her body, the other on her leg, stroking it with his thumb.

Catching her breath was for naught as another contraction stole it. Like a vice grip, it tightened over her middle in an unforgiving grasp. Her fingers, likewise, tore small holes in her husband’s pants, and she leaned forwards just slightly against him, pushing sharply. The comforting touches were nice, and well noted, but she had more pressing issues.

The skull moved swiftly downwards, making her pelvis shift positions as she adjusted to what she felt she needed. Toki pushed, rested, and then pushed again.

It was a long cycle, and she lost track of how long that cycle lasted. She fell into a single-minded focus, and everything else fell onto the back burner. Papyrus’ words were white noise to her ears, comforting all the same despite her lack of total comprehension of them.

She snapped out of it, though, as her lower lips bulged outwards. A small, green-stained skull began to peek through, even as the burning intensified many times over. She squirmed, a soft keen leaving her, and she took a long moment to shakily rest and get her bearings.

"That’s it... that’s it..." Tenebris carefully cupped the child’s head, holding it so on the next contraction it would come right out. "Papyrus, the blankets?"

"By the bedside."

A location easily accessed by Tenebris' tail. He hooked a blanket and draped it over his leg for when the first child came out.

Toki grimaced, panting roughly. Her bones were clammy, beaded with drops of condensation, and her legs rattled shakily. She used to think that burning alive was the most painful thing she’d ever felt- but crowning? Crowning took the cake. Her focus remained, unfortunately, as the next contraction rolled through. She leaned forwards with a grunt, and bore down, fighting past the ring of fire that seared agony into her being. She might have made some noises- but she’s not entirely sure.

Her being wound down into hyper focus on getting past the head. With several hard pushes, the head popped free, and she had to rest again. Tears beaded in her sockets- but she was close. So, so close and the first one would be here. “So close,” she whispered shakily, fingers almost kneading Papyrus’ leg as she tried to unlock the stiff joints. Another hard push, and she eased the first shoulder out- and well within range of Tenebris providing assistance there.

His second hand came and hooked the shoulder, a careful grip and he was able to start to gently tug, watching her body make sure that the counter pressure wouldn’t distress her. "Deep breath, and when I say, push, push. It's almost out." he ordered.

Toki shakily inhaled and nodded. Her fingers found purchase again, and when the next painful tightening came and he gave his signal, Toki pushed.

There was a slightly painful sensation of being stretched too wide for too long- and then the pressure was gone and she felt emptier. She slumped into Papyrus, shaky, with her eye lights trained on Tenebris.

Tenebris pulled the child out, and on instinct he brought the child up and ran his tongue over its face, cleaning it and allowing it to jolt to life. It's mouth opening in a screeching wail until Tenebris wrapped it in a blanket and passed it to Aliquam, who cradled it where Toki too could reach.

"Look Toki, you did it..." He purred.

“I did it.” Her voice was perilously close to a sob. Even if it had been weird to see her father in law lick her newborn, she was too tired and elated to care. She lifted a finger and gently held it up to the tiny, screaming bundle that was essentially cradled to her and Papyrus. She stroked gently over the not-very-tiny skull, taking in the softer jaw line that the little one had gotten from her. “Our little one has my teeth,” she smiled softly.

A tiny, angry orange spark lit up in its little eye sockets, sputtering and flickering as sharp, sharp baby teeth finally closed into a fussy whimper.

“And they’ve got your eyes, Pap…” She murmured again. “Gods, they’re beautiful…”

Papyrus smiled proudly, kissing Toki’s head gently. "Toki, I’m so proud of you... So proud." he praised happily, tears welling in his sockets and running down his cheeks again.

“We did it,” She smiled, and nuzzled him softly. She was a little shaky, but she managed to gently take the tiny fussy skeleton into her arms, so she could properly hold the little one, if only for a moment or two. Gently, she rocked the fussy baby, stroking her fingers softly over warm cheeks, and hummed a gentle song for her baby.

The fussing quieted down into softer burbles, and, exhausted from being born, the tiny being settled into a small nap in her arms. Tiny fingers came up to hold onto Aliquam’s finger.

Equally teary eyed as her husband, Toki gave Tenebris a shaky smile. “Do you… want to officially hold your first grandbaby? P-putting the blanket on them doesn’t count, y’know. That’s doctors duty, not grandpa’s duty.”

"What if I’m both, silly pup?” he chuckled almost as weakly as Aliquam sounded, "But no... It looks like they are clamped to their father... I'll hold the next one." he laughed shakily. "I'm so proud of you, Toki."

Toki smiled at him, and sniffled softly. “Thanks, Papa. I’m proud of you too. Of you both. You held together really, really well in a stressful situation. You did good… Think you can handle a repeat performance?”

"For you, anything." he replied, giving a smile and a nod, "I've been going crazy in anxiety for this moment."

Suddenly, there was a familiar FWIP of a shortcut.

"You could say you were going goo goo gaga in anxiety." Caeruleus truly was the superman of puns.

"Caeruleus!" Aliquam groaned, "That was absolutely bloody awful, but you have... uncanny timing."

And Aliquam’s loud groan proceeded to wake the baby again. The little one whimpered and released the bigger skeleton, instead curling tiny fists towards their chin with a fussy sound.

“Shhhhh.” Toki didn’t scold Aliquam for his groan- that was his instinctive response to puns, so the chances of him stopping were nil. Toki turned tired eyes to Sans, and offered him a smile while she rocked and soothed the whimpering newborn. “You have interesting timing, Sans… heh… You're an uncle now,” She hummed. “Though… dunno if you’ve got a niece or a nephew yet… Papa…? You mind checking since the little one isn’t latched onto Papyrus anymore?”

"Gladly." Tenebris gently took the infant, bouncing and cooing to it gently as he undid the blanket, examining the pelvis. "This one's a little boy." He purred, bouncing the child carefully as he re-wrapped him up, taking a moment to just... savor this feeling.

“His name," Toki glanced up to Papyrus, shared a look, and then smiled widely, “Is Skylar Eras Gaster.”

Tiny fists unfurled at the new presence, and Skylar blurrily reached a tiny hand up for anything to grab. His fingers curled gently over one of Tenebris’ massive ones, and he settled down, recognizing the feel of his grandfather. His fussing whimpers slowed, and he settled back into his nap.

His smile shakily grew bigger and he began to laugh gently, "Oh, little Skylar…” he murmured happily, nuzzling the child while purring loudly. "I think he recognizes his Grandpapa." His smile couldn’t have gotten any physically bigger, and neither could the warm feeling in his soul.

"I've never seen him so happy." Aliquam murmured to Toki gently, "Perhaps he was like this when Caeruleus and I were born."

A tiny stuttering purr rose up from the baby by instinct, though it sputtered out after a few seconds. Skylar was too thoroughly exhausted to be woken by the nuzzling and sounds.

“I’m sure he was.” She smiled gently, and leaned a bit more heavily into Papyrus. Her middle was smaller now, and it was so… odd to feel so much lighter. She hadn’t felt this light- or sore- in a long time. “The first grandchildren are special, Pap… Come time for us to have our own, I know I wont be any better than he is right now.” She shifted to look up at him with a tired but affectionate smile. “You’re a dad now,” she hummed. “How do you feel?”

"I can't believe it... I'm happy, I'm excited... and I’m scared..." he murmured.

Cae came over and smiled at the sight of the elder showing such pure happiness at holding the child, before he looked at Aliquam. "Hey, Pap. You're the Great Papyrus, you can do anything!"

"Sans, that was a childhood nickname in my moment of great ego." the younger brother laughed gently.

"So what? You're still great! You'll be a fantastic father" Sans encouraged him, "Just like how Pops is a good father, AND grandfather. And he just started that second job."

"Nyeh heh heh... That's... true."

“You’ll be a good dad.” Toki smiled softly, and nuzzled him. “Just be who you are. Being a dad will come naturally to you,” She purred softly to him. Toki shifted, and paused before she could say more though. Her middle tightened, and she winced. Gods, everything hurt, and she really wasn’t ready for round two. Round one had been painful, and everything felt raw. “Mmm…”

Tenebris was nearly attuned to the soft moan that he picked up on from Toki. He perked up, eyes flashing over her, and then he turned to his eldest Son. He was the only one in the room who wouldn’t be occupied shortly. “Cae, take your nephew.” Tenebris ordered firmly, gently passing Skylar to Caeruleus before he moved back to position. "Alright, Toki, are you ready for this?"

It was almost scary how quickly he went from happy nearly sobbing Grandpa to sharp and ready for anything once more doctor.

Toki swallowed shakily and shook her head. “No, no I am not, but my body says I am.” She trembled just faintly as the contraction worked the second unborn child into place. It wasn’t pleasant, but now that her body had figure out how it would go first one… The second one would hopefully go smoother. Toki keened softly as the head lodged into her tender pelvis, and locked her fingers gently around Pap’s knees. “Alright… Round two, here we come…”

"You're ready for this, Toki." Papyrus told her, while Tenebris reached up and was able to gently massage the skin around the second child, hoping to aid the contractions where he could.

“Mmmm…” The massage normally would have felt good, but her flesh was overly sensitive, and everything pertaining to it felt raw and overworked. She took a deep breath, and waited for the first one to pass. Come the second one, however, she was ready. Toki pushed- and almost immediately yelped and squirmed in discomfort. “Oh god, OW!” It felt like there was something sharp being worked down from inside, getting hung up on things that it shouldn’t, and sharp was not a pleasant sensation. She had to obey the contraction though, and pushed as the need came. However, once it faded, she trembled in place, looking shaky and sore as she leaned heavily into her mate. “S-sharp, something is very sharp on the skull.”

"This one has horns..." Tenebris warned her, before he spat onto one hand, carefully lifting up her hips with the other. "Toki... think about your bees, think about Stripe... Clover, and Sugar."

Her sockets might have gone devoid of light. She stared at him nervously, and rattled uneasily. “Horns… What… Why? What are you going to do?”

"Relax, Toki... I’m a doctor, and I’m your papa. You can trust me." he assured her, "I wouldn't do something unless it meant helping you."

“I… know… That doesn’t mean I’m not nervous… Nnn…” She winced slightly. Heavens above, horns. There were horns trying to work their way out of her. “Okay, okay, do whatever you need to do. Just… nnn ow, ow, ow, ow, it can’t hurt less than horns.” She couldn’t even pin the blame on Papyrus for the horns. Those were all on her.

"Your bees. Your hornets." he told her.

Aliquam caught wind and reached up, cupping her jaw with one hand as the other covered her eyes, while he gently sung to her to keep her focused elsewhere as Tenebris did as he had to.

A long digit slowly pushed into her until it met the child's skull. He slowly gave a small push to dislodge her, before moving his finger to use it to take the jabbing of the horns.

His other hand came up and rubbed over her midsection, waiting to feel a contraction.

Pap’s hand might have gotten nipped as Toki registered just what that was that was invading her body. She tensed, insides tender and raw and feeling every motion of that no matter how much she thought of her bees or of her hornets. Pap’s singing was once more white noise, and the sound that came from her mouth might have been a strangled snarl as her hands dug furrows into his bones.

The next contraction that came rolled over her hard, and she clamped painfully tight around his finger, body working to expel her child as best she could. It hit her hard, and she couldn’t quite brace for it. A pained cry escaped her, muffled by the hand cradling her jaw.

Knowing it'd be harder, Tenebris rolled his hand to coax the child out and he hummed as well, his tail rattling loudly to keep her senses distracted at all times. "Steady, that's it." He praised.

The distractions only worked for so long, before Toki lost herself to the same urges as before. Her teeth ground, sending sparks over her husband’s fingers, and she lurched forwards. She bore down with a buzzing snarl to rival Tenebris’, her fingers digging furrows in her husband’s ruined pants. Toki gasped sharply, eye lights still blinded by his fingers, and she pushed.

She wasn’t sure how long she strained and struggled- it was a slow and steady process, and it definitely took longer than her son. Tenebris’ fingers were an enormous help despite the discomfort, and they kept the horns from snagging and hanging up even more, but it was not pleasant and she liked none of it.

It was an endless ring of fire for her, her battered walls burning and stinging, and Toki wasn’t even certain when she snapped out of her brief trance. Her breathing was ragged, bones hot, and she shook and rattled like a fragile leaf in the wind. The head wasn’t out- but the skull was crowning, showing two pearly nubs of horns that had given her so much trouble.

His hand that rested on top of her middle was tapping gently, as if playing the keys of a piano, to distract her.

"You're doing good, Toki... now that the horns have gotten out of harms way, you can take a breather, focus on catching your breath more than pushing this time, and put your arms above your head."

Toki shuddered, mouth dry, and slumped back tiredly into Papyrus. She trembled, sockets closed, and lifted her hands gently to tug his away from her face so she could see if she so chose. “S-so tired,” she rasped softly. Getting her breathing under control was easier said than done when she kept getting the urge to push. Her abdomen trembled though, shaking and quivering, and she did as she was directed, and rested as best she could.

Arms above the head, however, took energy that she didn’t have. So she propped them up on Pap’s raised knees, and took a moment to gather her breath.

Papyrus helped her, whispering praise to her as he lifted her arms. Tenebris kept himself still as well, watching her carefully before he looked to Cae, extending his hand. "Let me have Skylar, I need you to get Toki some cold water rags."

"Gotcha, Pops!" Carefully passing over Skylar, Cae shortcut downstairs.

Toki trembled, and let him heft her arms up. With her arms up, she could take deeper breaths, and found herself regaining her breath quicker. She shivered, and tried to quiet some of her fussing so she didn’t wake Skylar, who was much closer to hear her sounds now. “I-I’m okay,” she panted, voice less ragged than it had been. “I’m just… tired…”

Tenebris nodded slowly, "You're doing fantastic, Toki... Don’t try to rush this, it'll be done soon."

“I’m n-not trying to r-rush… B-but Cae better come back soon, ‘cause I n-need to push again here really soon.” It wasn’t so much a want as it was a need- her body was building up momentum again, working and toiling to expel her last child now that she was so, so close. Toki nuzzled Papyrus, and blinked slowly. “You can let my arms down n-now.”

He nodded and let her arms down, "There you go." he murmured, rubbing her arms as Cae reappeared.

Toki eyed the wet rags that her brother in law had in his hands, and shifted faintly where she was seated. Her hips twitched, and her head rolled back with a pained sound as fire lanced up her pelvis. Her middle contracted again, slowly forcing the skull downwards, and Toki couldn’t utter a warning or ask what the cold rags were for before she was grunting and leaning forwards, toiling to bring her second child into the world.

Her hands found purchase in Aliquam’s, and she clutched his hands like a lifeline.

Using his one hand, Tenebris focused on helping where he could, while Aliquam comforted her, and Caeruleus dampened the rags and put them on key points on her frame, her forehead and her collarbone. He then dried his hands and took Skylar back, allowing Tenebris the use of his other hand.

The use of his other hand was necessary- as with a few pushes, far weaker in strength than the ones from before, the small skull was out. Toki didn’t stop to rest—her strength was waning, her body tiring out and exhausting from her labor and the several weeks of tiresome false starts.

She pushed and groaned, working to ease the shoulder out. The cold rags nearly sizzled against her bones, steaming as her body strained and worked. It took several minutes, but the second child’s shoulders slid free, first the right and then the left, and another push had them slipping right into Tenebris’ hands.

Toki collapsed like a marionette without strings, the glow of her belly dimming without a purpose to sustain it anymore. She trembled, eye lights shakily resting on Tenebris, waiting to hear the little one cry and news of a gender.

Tenebris caught the child and smiled, bringing them up to groom them as well, making sure they were breathing properly before doing anything else. It took a little longer than Skylar had, but soon the child was giving whimpers and whines until they were wrapped, though Tenebris hadn’t needed but a moment to check. "A girl." he purred.

"Our little Honey is a beautiful baby girl." Aliquam whispered happily.

“Honey Verdana Gaster,” Toki whispered gently. She shakily held out her arms, a silent request to hold her little ones. She caught Cae’s eye, and motioned for him to bring Skylar as well.

Her middle lost volume and opacity as she waited, and then proceeded to melt alarmingly like an amalgamate or an ice cream cone might do in the sun. It disappeared as the middle sloughed off, the magic spent and long since used up.

It left Toki visibly exhausted as a literal chunk of her magic tore itself away. But determination kept her going—she couldn’t succumb to exhaustion without holding both of her children. She refused.

Cae came over and helped Aliquam take both children into his cradling arms, before stepping back and giving Tenebris a rag to clean his hands.

Toki smiled, and let her husband brace their children against her chest as she leaned into him. She brought her arms up to cradle them as well, crooning a soft, wordless song to them as she leaned down to nuzzle and kiss each of them. They both had the thick, sturdy monster bones of their father. Where Skylar had her teeth and the soft shape of her jaw, Honey had her father’s more angular jaw structure. She was lacking the crocodile like teeth that both Toki and Skylar had, and instead a set of pearly and straight teeth. Other than the sharper canines, she had a very human looking jaw, with her father’s more pronounced cheekbones.

Honey fussily wiggled, her soft cries dying down into whimpers as she relaxed. Her eye lights were blue—Toki could see a blue tinge to her bones, in comparison with the orange tinge to her son’s bones. Her own, she noted, were tinted just slightly green, and she realized their magic probably colored their bones a bit.

Papyrus shared the same orange as their son.

“Honey has your smile, and the prettiest blue color to her little eye lights.” She says softly to Papyrus, stroking her fingers over soft, warm baby cheeks. “My horns though.” Or they would be. They might have felt sharp inside of her, but they weren’t quite to the quality that Toki’s were. But Toki couldn’t find herself caring.

She was exhausted, magically and physically, and her bones felt sore enough that the slight breeze from Tenebris moving made her bones throb in agony. She didn’t want anyone touching anywhere above mid femur or below her ribs. But… “They’re perfect…” She whispered.

None of the pain mattered. Not when, cradled to her and Papyrus, the most perfect little bundles of bones had been brought forth.

Tired tears beaded in her sockets and dribbled down her cheeks as the fussing twins calmed at close proximity to the soul that had nurtured them for months. Tiny fingers tangled in her ribs, and they settled down in their respective blankets as Papyrus held them.

They were worth all of that pain, Toki decided then and there. They were worth it- and she’d do it all over again if she had to.

After getting away from her body, Tenebris took to covering her bones with cool rags to cool them down, before he covered her lower half with a towel. He then covered her body up with a thermal blanket, already put on high to warm her comfortably.

"I’m proud of you, Toki. You did well." He praised gently.

“So did you two,” She smiled tiredly. The blanket felt nice, and she tucked it gently around her and the twins being held to her chest. She rubbed their backs softly, noting that they were fairly large for infants, and settled more firmly against Papyrus. The towel over her lower half felt scratchy and tender against her bones, but it was easier to simply cover her. “Mmm… Everything hurts.” She sighed softly.

There was a soft coo from one of the twins that caught her attention briefly, and Toki flicked her gaze to Tenebris. “They… look healthy, right?” She’d never seen a baby skeleton, so she couldn’t say right off the hand if they looked healthy or not.

"Physically, yes. They need only a bath. If I may take but a moment to examine their souls?" he requested, coming to the bedside and kneeling down.

Toki nodded. She helped shift them as best she could, angling them with Pap’s help so that Tenebris could pull their little souls forth. She adjusted their blankets so their little ribs were bared briefly. “Of course,” she sighed softly, “Anything to make sure they’re healthy. Though… both them and myself could probably use a bath… though I’m too tired and too sore to even want to attempt standing, let alone letting anything touch my bones right now.”

"After everything, you definitely deserve rest." Aliquam purred as he wrapped his arms around her, once he was sure she was stable in holding the twins.

"You can rest with Aliquam, how about I go wash them, and give them their first checkup?" Tenebris offered.

Toki hesitated, part of her not wanting to let them go so soon… But she could see the merit in it. Slowly, she nodded, and used her fingers to gently disentangle their hands from her ribs and then offered them carefully out to their grandfather. “Okay.” She nods softly. “I’d like that, yeah… Mm… Go ahead and get them in clothes too? The onesies that should fit are in the top drawer of the dresser in the nursery.”

He took them gently and purred to them, before he leaned in and kissed their mother tenderly on the forehead. "Atta girl. Rest as long as you need, Ol’ Grandpapa Tenny will take good care of the pups." he purred gently.

Toki nodded, a tired smile sliding over her teeth. “I trust you,” she purred softly. “I do… Have fun getting them washed up, yeah?” She shifted slightly, legs twitching and making her grimace. “I’m gonna try and get comfortable with Pap… Bring them back when you’re done? I want them close tonight.”

He chuckled gently, "As she wishes." he replied, before he gently toted them to the bathroom, humming to them gently.

When he disappeared into the bathroom, Toki smiled over at Sans, and then shifted against Papyrus. She grimaced, a soft pained sound leaving her. “Gods above, my pelvis is so sore… Nnn… If you can slide back, Pap, I want to try laying back against the pillows again.” The one under her backside was… gross, least to say, but it wasn’t like they didn’t have extra pillows.

He nodded gently and slowly moved out of the way to let her lay back. "There you go." He purred gently.

"I'm proud of you, Tokes, glad I could come and help." Cae said with a smile, before it fell, "though, uh... Am I gonna have to deal with that too?"

Toki eased back, the plastic covering on their sheets crinkling slightly, and managed to get herself into a good position. She was propped up, and could relax a little bit under the heated blanket covering her. Papyrus was given a warm smile, and a beckoning motion for him to snuggle up. To Cae, she simply smiled. “It’s possible it’ll be different for you,” She says gently. “Your pelvis is probably different than mine, and your makeup is different than my own. Mine is just a basis to go off of… Mm… But if you do deliver like I did, I can promise you, the pain is worth it when you get to see them and hold them. Though… Heh, you didn’t get to see Skylar’s delivery. It was a lot less painful than Honey’s. You don’t have horns, and neither does Grillby.”

"Hopin’... so... I'll go ahead and let you guys rest, you deserve it after all that." he chuckled, "See you later, Sis." he winked at her, then shortcut out.

When he was gone, the bedroom was quiet. Toki shivered slightly, and tucked the heating blanket around her better. She nestled into Papyrus, a soft, simple sigh escaping her. "We did it," She murmurs tiredly to him, a happy sigh escaping her. "We both did it."

“You did it, Toki.” he purred, “I’m so proud of you.”

“No.” She shakes her head. “We did it. I couldn’t have done it without you. I might have done the harder work, but you were my support, emotionally and physically. I don’t… really recall all that you said when I was pushing, but I could hear you, and feel you, and that was a huge comfort to me.” Toki shifts so she can snuggle into his side, and groans quietly as it makes her pelvis throb. “We’re parents now… We’re in this together. Speaking of- I didn’t… ask if you wanted the twins in here for their first night. I just sort of assumed…”

"Of course I do, don’t be silly." He chuckled softly.

“Good.” She smiled softly. Toki nuzzled into him and closed her sockets, not quite sleeping but simply resting and recovering as best she could.

Things were silent for a while, save the sounds of the twins getting their first legitimate wash- though it was broken as they started whimpering in the bathroom.

Toki wasn’t sure which one it was, but one of them started wailing, followed by the second, and her sockets popped open again by automatic instinct.

She shifted and sat up shakily, her gaze drifting over to try and see into the bathroom. “Everything alright, Tenebris?” Her voice might have been anxious, but she couldn’t help it. They were new and crying and she had no idea why they were crying. Did they not like water? Did Tenebris drop them? She could vaguely feel their emotions, but they were distressed and… hungry? That might have been hungry. That wasn’t something she’d felt from them before, since they had fed off of her while being within her.

"They’re alright." he called gently, "Just don’t like being out of their blankets."

She shifted, and gingerly eased back against her husband. “Partly that, at least…” She murmured. “I think they’re hungry too. It’s not an emotion I’ve felt from them before though.” How… did one even feed a baby skeleton?

She answered her own question moments later when something heavy formed on her chest in response to the needs of her children. Toki twitched, startled, when suddenly there was something squished between her and Papyrus. She glanced down- and there were very swollen, very tender and brightly glowing breasts on her chest that were squished to her husband’s arms. “Uhhh.”

Papyrus blinked, then he slowly retracted his arms, only to reach out and gently cup one of her boobs. "... What is that?"

“That would be a boob. You remember them from Valentines, yeah?” His touch was gentle, thankfully, but the globe was tender. Her magic swirled and gathered, and seemed to be collecting what it could into the mounds of flesh. “I… don’t understand why they appeared though. I didn’t summon them intentionally. They won’t go away either.”

"I remember." he murmured with a nod, before he smiled, "Perhaps this is how you feed our children?"

Her teeth puckered, and she sighed softly. “As a human, yeah, I’d say this is totally how it goes. But… I’m a skeleton. I can’t lactate.” Though she wasn’t absolutely sure something wouldn’t come out of the nipple if he squeezed her breast or put any sort of pressure on it. It looked like there was something inside of it, and the magic curled there felt warm and ready. Overall, they were tight and full feeling. “Hrm… Tenebris?” She calls. The twins were still wailing- and getting louder with their insistence for someone to make the hungry feeling stop. “Good lord, they got your loudness, Pap. Anyways, Tenebris? What do baby skeletons eat?”

Tenebris came out after long enough with them, freshly cleaned and wrapped and wailing loudly. "I’m not immediately sure. I hypothesize that since skeletons are so simplistic in their anatomical design, they adapt to the secondary species’ needs.” he explained as he walked up to the bed with the twins, "Here we are two clean, fussy, and hungry pups.”

Toki reached up to collect the twins, and gently cradled them to her chest. She leaned a bit onto Papyrus, using his side and the pillows to help keep her propped up. “That’s possible. Grillby did say that skeletons were able to universally reproduce with most monsters. It would make sense that we would adapt to fit the needs of our offspring.” she mused gently.

The wailing quieted down as they were bundled up against her breasts. They, and Toki, fumbled for a bit, trying to find a good position that worked for them. “I, uh… Think I need some help. I can’t… get their mouths close while holding them.”

Aliquam helped here, reaching up to gently coax the children to their respective nipples.

It took a bit more fumbling, but soon they latched on. Toki grimaced a bit, her breasts sensitive under the sharp and hard baby teeth. Skylar had teeth like hers- and didn’t have the grace or practice not to chomp on hard. Thankfully her defense was still in place, so she didn’t have a huge issue.
It took the twins some time, but soon there were the soft sounds of suckling, and the pressure on her breasts released. With the pressure going, she exhaled a sigh of relief, and leaned more into Papyrus. Her sockets slid to a half lidded position, and a content and tired buzz escaped her. “Mmm… Heh. At least we’re getting this all on film, yeah? C’n probably check out the boobs when they’re done eating. I wonder just what they’re eating…” Probably her magic. She could feel the slow drain on her stores. Nothing that a good night’s sleep wouldn’t fix, really.

Tenebris dried his hands and sat down at the end of the bed, observing quietly.

The twins drank, but not hardly enough to release all of the pressure inside of her breasts. Eventually they fell asleep, and released her. Toki was very nearly asleep too y then, but something sticky clung to her breasts, and she was loathe to let them smear it all over their faces- so she glanced to Papyrus, and very gently handed them over to him.

Papyrus cradled his children to his chest, and crooned softly to them as he just held them and ingrained their little faces into his mind.

“Tenebris?” She spoke quietly so as not to wake the newborns huddled against their daddy’s chest, “Can I have a wet cloth please? There’s somethin’ sticky on my chest… Whatever is inside my boobs apparently.” And her boobs weren’t going away. It appeared she had exchanged her belly for breasts- and she’d never bought more bras after all of them had burnt up in the fire. Oh well. “The twins are messy.” They were new at it and so was she.

He chuckled at that and handed her a wet rag, "Here you are."

Toki took it with a tired smile and carefully cleaned her chest. Unluckily, her right breast, the one that Honey had suckled at, began to leak a thick, glowing liquid. “Uh… That’s… Alright then.”

He noticed and reached into his coat, pulling out a vial before he looked at it, then glancing to her. "Toki, do you think I could borrow a sample of that for study?" he asked.

“Borrow? No. But you can have a sample. I certainly don’t want it back.” She nods, and motions for him to come closer with the vial. “Alright, bring that here. If you hold it, I’ll try and make sure I get it in the vial and not all over your hand or the bed.”

He chuckled at that and uncorked the vial before he reached over with it. "Here."

She guided his hand into a decent position, and then lined up her leaking breast with it. She wasn’t sure how to go about this, really. She had never… well, milked anything. Toki eased her fingers along her breast, and gently squeezed as she did so.

The luminescent green liquid thickened from a slow drip into a small stream, and she easily filled the vial for him. Her chest still felt heavy, and she was even more tired from the magic that was let off, but she found her breast stopped leaking. That must have removed just enough pressure.

She leaned back and peered up at him. “We’ll do that again in a week. I wonder if it’s like a humans- I know you looked it up, and for the first while the mother produces a special milk for her infant. Think it’s the same with this… boob juice? I hesitate to call it milk.” It wasn’t milky in color in the slightest- in fact, it sort of looked like a slightly watered down radioactive honey of sorts.

"Fascinating." he looked it over then he smiled gently. "Thank you." he then corked the vial and tucked it away but when he pulled his hand out again he ran his tongue over one of his claws real fast before he began to pat his other pockets for his pipe.

She squinted at him. “Did… Did you really just… lick the green stuff off your finger…?” That was… Gross. So gross. Toki shook her head and sighed. “You are so weird, Papa. First you lick my newborns, and then you lick… whatever it is my breasts are oozing. That’s just… so weird.”

He blinked once, with faux innocence. "Did I?" he chirped quietly, before he shrugged, "Huh… Tasted like honey.

“… And now I’m curious.” She eyed her chest. “But not curious enough tonight. That’s… so weird.” She shakes her head and then returns back to snuggling her husband. Her children are fast asleep on his chest, and she eyes her father in law quietly. “You can probably turn off the camera now, Papa. You’ve gotten all of everything recorded now, I think. You can-” a yawn interrupted her, “Go over the footage at a better hour or something… If you sleep tonight that is.” Her new parent jitters wanted her to stay awake, but her post-labor exhaustion was flagging her energy levels down.

He nodded and got up, turning the camera off before he tucked it away. The one on his chest was also clicked off. "I'm proud of you, Toki. Get some rest."

“Thanks, Papa.” She smiled at him softly. “I’m pretty tired too… Can you… Slide the blankets up please?” She’d kicked them down to the bottom of the bed before she’d delivered, and she couldn’t find the energy to do it. Toki wasn’t going to ask Papyrus, who looked so at peace and in love with the two infants sleeping on his chest for her to bother him to move. The woman had full intentions of just curling next to him and drifting off once she could.

He smiled gently and came over, gently pulling the blankets up before tucking her in and kissing her on the head. "Good night, Toki. I'll come check on everyone tomorrow." he purred.

She gave him a tired smile, dark circles highlighting the spaces under her sockets, and nodded. “M'kay… Night, Papa.” Toki turned carefully onto her side, gentle with her tender pelvis, and curled up to Papyrus and her newborns.

"I love you." Papyrus breathed out gently once she nuzzled close, his eyes opening the slightest bit to look at her. "My wife... My Toki..." he whispered.

“My husband… My Papyrus. Light of my life,” she smiled up at him gently, and eased an arm across his middle. The heated blanket along her back and pelvis felt good- but pressing to Papyrus and just relaxing… that was bliss. “I love you too. We did it. We’re about to enter a whole new chapter in our lives, Pap." She smiles wider, sockets drifting closed.

"A new story." he purred gently, "A new tale..." he then yawned and closed his eyes gently.

She rested her head on his shoulder, and tucked her forehead against his jaw. Toki exhaled softly, exhausted, and began to drift off against him.

It would be a new chapter, a new arc in their lives. Parenthood changed everything- they had something else to fight for, something else to protect. Everything was about to change- but it would be for the better, because they were together, now and forever.

They could handle anything the world tossed at them- they would always come back to each other, always have each other's back. Parenthood was a massive and imposing challenge. But together, Toki and Papyrus would be able to handle everything.
End Book 1 of Tale Of The Underground.
Chapter 76

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Hey, guys. It’s been exactly two months- which is about how long of a break we planned. We’re going to be operate on a slower schedule, with about two chapters a week. We’ll be trying to upload every Sunday and every Thursday. Time for book 2 to start- and dearies? It’s gonna be an adventure, I promise.

Silverwing Notes: WEEEE'RE BAAAAAAAACK! You guys thought Book 1 was good, just you wait until we dive into the depths of book two!

We're about to blow your fuckin minds...

... By starting out with cute civil talk between family >/u/<

Four months was probably a long time to wait before updating your will- but being a parent to twin newborns wasn’t something that was easy. Four months came and past before they even really realized it. The holidays were blazed through, birthdays too, and the weeks rolled past without them even really realizing it. Thankfully, despite the time flying, everything stayed mostly quiet. Though, it was mildly alarming to have heard nothing from Cruelty. They wondered if, perhaps, he was building up for something.

Toki and Papyrus were busy- between his work as a guard and the children, they rarely had time alone together. Not that they minded- Papyrus, like the rest of the village, was enamored by their young. Toki was too, and thusly they spent every waking moment enjoying life with the children, making memories from silly incidents and watching them grow swiftly.

And grow they did. The twins grew faster than a human- not as fast as Tenebris thought they might, but certainly faster than anything human or naturally monster. They attributed that to his lingering effects on their genetics. They were, after all, not purely skeleton like their mother. Even if they appeared purely skeletal, they were not down in their genetic roots.

For every month it seemed they gained two. They grew like weeds, their grips becoming stronger and stronger day by day. They ate and slept for the majority of the first month, waking only when they wanted attention or for bath time. The twins did not handle the nursery well with as young as they were, and were distressed to be away from their parents for too long. They were usually fine when the sun went down and they would sleep through the night- but during the day, they did not like to nap there or be away from their parents. So Toki had Lana devise a traditional carrying sling for them, and went about her day with two children sleeping nuzzled to her breasts while Papyrus worked. It was easier, truly, for they could feed when they wanted and had the comfort of a mother’s touch to keep them calm.

They slept just fine for Papyrus when he was home- and he had his own sling for carrying them as well when he was home. When he got home, they would transfer the twins from her sling to his, and they would spend some precious bonding time with their father while they got dinner going, or did their nightly chores.
During the feeding session that always happened before Papyrus got home, Toki sat down and finally got the gumption to call Simmons.

“Easy, Skylar. You don’t need to be so rough with me, my sweet.” Toki admonished gently, brushing her fingertips soothingly from his nasal bone up between his eyes. That was a calming motion that usually worked when the twins got too rowdy. Obligingly, the infant eased his abuse of her breast, and settled down with a sleepy coo to finish his desired snack. He wasn’t intentionally rough, but he was a baby with sharp teeth, and sometimes he got a little too excited for his own good.

Simmons picked up on the third ring, his voice rough and deep. “Hello, Miss Nara.”

Toki shivered and a frown tugged her teeth down. That was a lot like how Cruelty had sounded. But it couldn’t be- she’d called Simmons work number, and his usual ‘waiting’ jingle had been there. “Hey, Simmons. I actually go by Gaster now, if you recall. You sound like you’ve got a cold.”

“Ah, yes, my apologies. I’ve unfortunately gotten the cold that’s running amok in the office right now.” He cleared his throat over the phone, and his voice went back to his normal tones. “I recall that you got married last year. Or at least I heard rumors of it. I’m sorry I couldn’t make it to your wedding- work and all of that.”

“It’s quite alright, Simmons.” She smiled to herself, and eased down with her children. “I got married and had kids last year, actually. I was calling to update my will and make sure everything stays in order.”

“You did? Congratulations then. Kids, as in plural?” The clicking of a mouse sounded, letting her know that he was pulling up her documents so he could get everything recorded.

Toki kindly gave him a couple minutes to make sure he had everything ready before she began to speak again. “Twins, yes. I’d like for them to be recorded on my will. Skylar Eras Gaster was the firstborn and my heir- but should he not want to take the title as head of the clan when I am ready to concede it, then it will fall to Honey Verdana Gaster, his younger twin sister.”

The sound of typing filled her ears, as Simmons presumably began to record. “And your husband’s name…?”

“Papyrus Aliquam Gaster. Should anything happen to me, sole custody of any and all of my children go to him. If something happens to him, then my children should go to Tenebris Gaster, their paternal grandfather. Sans Caeruleus Gaster would come after Tenebris if something happens to him as well, or he is unable and unwilling to take my children.” She hums softly. This sort of stuff was not really what she wanted to think about- but Cruelty was still here.

“Not your parents?” Simmons hummed, surprised. “I would have thought you’d prioritize your own family over your in-laws.”

“My in-laws are monsters,” she chimes, “and my children are monsters. I love my mom and dad, and all of my brothers and sisters in law, but… They’re human. They would not know how to teach magic properly, and given the nature of one of my children’s magic… well, that could prove to be bad. So, my monster family does take precedence, because in the long run that is what would be best for my children.”

“I see…” He didn’t sound very enthused, but she could hear him typing away obediently.

“If Sans is unable,” She continued, “Then it would fall to Grillby. Er… Shit, I don’t know his full name.” It hadn’t been on his paperwork- so she was sure he simply went by Grillby. She wouldn’t know though, unless she asked.

“You can find out and call me about it later.” Simmons hummed. “I’ll just write down Grillby for now though, if that’s alright with you. That is G-r-i-l-l-v-y?”

“Change the ‘v’ to a ‘b’ and you’ve got it down.” Toki responded kindly. “Continuing on- if Grillby is unable, then my children should go to my family. My mother and father would come first, obviously, and then my brothers, from eldest to youngest.”

“And in the case that no one in your family is willing to take them, or is unable to keep them?” He questioned.

“Leave them in the custody of King Asgore. He’ll either take care of them himself, or he will find someone within the monster community who will raise my children for me.”

“Alright.” He quietly typed for a while. “And if something happens when your children are old enough to care for themselves?”

Toki contemplates, and gently rubs her fingers along Honey’s back to soothe the start of a fussy sound from her daughter. It didn’t help much- Honey wasn’t fond of Toki being on the phone for extended amounts of time, particularly during their usual nursing times. “If they are sixteen years or older, and there is no one left or willing to take them, including my eldest children should I have more in the years to come, then they will be given all of my estate and holdings for the to do with as they will.” She decides firmly. “If they are under sixteen, all of my estates and holdings will be frozen until they are of age, and then everything will fall to them, divided evenly between them. The eldest, however, will retain the rights to the house and property surrounding it, so that my children always have a place to stay.”

“Of course, of course.” More typing. “I’ll work on getting everything in order, and transcribed into the usual terms that it needs to be in, Miss Gaster. I’ll call back in a few weeks once the necessary paperwork goes through and is approved, and we can go over everything again to see if there’s anything you’d like to add or have changed. In the mean time, discuss with your husband and see if he can help you come up with anything you might have missed that you would like to have added.”

“Thanks, Simmons.” She smiled slightly. “You’re the best, really.”

“I’ve been handling your things, and all of your family’s things, for a long time.” He chuckled quietly. “Of course I’m the best. Anyways, Miss Gaster, I’ll let you go. It sounds to me like you have a fussy baby on your hands.”

“I do, yes. Honey isn’t fond of me being on the phone. It was good talking to you, Simmons.” She crooned gently to soothe the building tantrum her daughter was working towards.

“It was a decent chat, Miss Gaster. Have a good evening, and I’ll call you when everything is ready to be looked over once again. Did you wish for me to call everyone and let everyone know of your choices?”

“No.” She shook her head, never mind that he couldn’t actually see her. “I don’t plan on dying or going anywhere any time soon, Simmons, so there’s no need to alarm anyone with a phone call. I’ll look forwards to your next call, yeah?”

He chuckled quietly. “Of course, Miss Gaster.”

She hung up shortly after, and tucked her phone away before gently hushing and bouncing her Honey had finished eating, and was fussily nuzzling her breast, whimpering and making displeased buzzing sounds. Her daughter nuzzled her head into her palm, tiny horns catching on her fingers. Her horns were growing slowly longer and sharper, but she hadn’t torn anything with them yet or hurt herself or her brother so Toki saw no need to worry about them.

Her youngest pouted up at her and gave a watery sniffle. “Ohh... I know what this is,” Toki hummed gently. “Someone wants their daddy, don’t they? Oh, my sweet, he’ll be home soon I’m sure. It’s okay, Honey. Shhh...”

Toki was saved from a tantrum when the front door opened. She eased herself off the couch, careful not to jostle her young, and adjusted her sling and the twins. “Hey, Pap?” She could hear the sounds of his armor clinking as he stepped inside—no one else wore armor into the house, so it was little wonder who it was. “I think someone missed their daddy today.”

"Nyeh heh heh heh! Is that so?” Was the call from the front door where Aliquam had just closed said door. He reached up and undid his torso armor, setting it down and stretching in the underlying chain mail before going to greet his wife and children, "I could feel it from the front gate so I thought I’d take my break to come say hello to my favorite pair of ladies!" he piped up cheerfully, giving her a tight one armed hug before going to press a soft kiss his daughter’s skull.

Tiny fingers reached up from inside of the sling, and made grabby fingers for Papyrus. The twins, along with growing quickly, were learning fast too. Her fussing died off, crocodile tears drying up, and she cooed eagerly up at her dad.

Toki smiled warmly, and kissed her husband tenderly. “I think one of your favorite ladies would like for her daddy to hold her.” Toki smiled. She shifted, carefully eased Honey out of her sling, and then gently offered the wiggling infant towards her daddy. She could fix her shirt and her sling after, but it wasn’t like Papyrus wasn’t used to seeing her boobs now.

He chuckled gently and after giving Toki a kiss, he scooped his daughter up and held her up where he could beam up at her, "Ahh, there she is! Look at that beautiful baby girl!" he laughed gently.

Honey let out a pleased squeal, her little fists and legs flailing happily as he hefted her up. Her skull bobbed a little bit, but she and her brother were both holding their skulls up on their own now. Honey burbled at him happily, reaching for his face with soft baby fingers. She was adorable, bedecked in her striped green onesie. They weren’t large enough yet for the ones that Grillby had made- but soon they’d fit in them no problem.

Toki smiled and fixed her top. Skylar fussed at his sister’s loudness, but snuggled more firmly into Toki’s chest and settled into his usual after meal nap. “She’s been fussy all day. I think someone’s turning into a daddy’s little girl. On the flipside, I’m thinking someone else is a mama’s boy.” She patted his bottom gently, and smiled at the pleased sleepy coo she got in return from him.

"Nyeh heh heh, well I’m not surprised! You did tell me that laziness runs in your family." he chuckled, "Who knows, maybe when she’s a little older, I’ll take her out with me for a patrol. Would you like that little Honeybun?" he cooed to her.

Papyrus got an excited squeal for his efforts, and doubled wiggling of the infant held in his hands. Her fingers reached for him again, but she sufficed with his thumb, and claimed it for her own. Honey happily nuzzled it.

“I think that’s a yes.” She chuckled. “And that I did. It apparently skipped a generation though. Heh.
Honey’s going to have an interesting time trying to motivate her big brother into being active, isn’t she?” Skylar only really got excited sometimes during playtime. Mostly he was excited for food. “Who knows though? He could grow out of it. I did, didn’t I?” She left her son to sleep in his sling, and beamed at Papyrus. “I would at least wait until she’s walking before you take her on patrol.”

Toki wasn’t worried about Honey going on patrol. Not only would Papyrus watch her like a hawk, but every other guard on the force would also be watching her. That is, if her self appointed Auntie Undyne didn’t kidnap her to play with her first.

"That you did, though if Skylar ended up lazy, he'd be no better than my brother!” He joked, "I'd have to yell at him to get him to pick up his socks." he laughed, before nuzzling Honey, "Alright, we’ll wait until she's walking."

"Maybe not yell, but we’ll definitely teach Skylar to pick up his socks, even if he ends up being lazy." She chuckled softly. Toki leaned up to kiss her husband's cheek. "Indeed. Then I'll get to watch you and Undyne compete in keeping an eye on her, and that will be amusing." She giggled softly.

Honey cooed happily and snuggled into her Daddy's embrace. A soft and content sound left her, and she finally released a sleepy yawn.

He fixed his hold to cradle her in one arm, before he used the other to wrap around Toki, pulling her close to kiss her once more.

Honey settled in his arm, content to be cradled and held, and nuzzled close to his chest. Her tiny fingers tangled in his chain mail under armor, and Honey cooed sleepily.

Toki leaned into him easily, kissing him with warm affection. Her eye lights tinted a loving minty color, and she beamed at him tenderly. "Mmm... I love you, you know that?"

"Yeah, well I love you more." he purred as he nuzzled her, his smile one to match.

"No way. I love youuuuuuuuu more." She smiled softly, and then giggled. "We're such saps, you know that?"

"You're sappier." He cackled, gently clacking her skull with an affectionate kiss again, "And I wouldn't have it any other way~" She giggled gently and smooched him again. "Well, I suppose that's good then, 'cause I'm a mom. We're supposed to be sappy." She reached up to caress his jaw gently. "You're done with work for today, right? Because I don't think Honey is going to let you go now that she's got you in her grasps." Toki thought it was his last shift, but she could have been wrong.

He shakes his head softly. "I'll at least stick around until she is dislodged, but I have one more shift I'll have to do before the day is done."

She nodded softly. "Alright. I'll do a late dinner then. I'm glad you're giving her some of your time before you scoot- she's been fussy all day." Honey was usually a pretty easy baby, but she was very much a Daddy's girl when she wasn't hungry. "I think she got spoiled with your day off yesterday. She's not quite sure why you weren't home today." She giggled gently.

"Well, Daddy is a busy skeleton, he cannot stay at home all day like Sans does."

"Oi, I resent that statement!" Was a snarl from the doorway to the kitchen.
"Oh! Hello Sans. You know it's true though." Aliquam folded his arms gently under Honey as he turned to his brother.

"Whatever." The older snorted, coming over and gently punching Quinn in the shoulder.

Honey made a fussy sound against Pap's chest as he was shifted from the gentle punch.

Toki gently flicked the back of Sans skull, and then tugged the taller monster over so she could smooch his cheek. Toki's eyes glimmered cheerily over at her husband as she affectionately nuzzled her brother in law. "Hey, Sans. Raiding my kitchen for sweets again?" She had discovered he had a craving for honey, so she had made more tarts and tended to leave them unattended in the kitchen for her brother in law to steal.

"I'm hoping you have any of those tarts left." he replied with a smile, coming over and gently tapping the top of her head in his own skeletal kiss. "How're the kids?" he asked.

"Happy as they can be." Pap replied.

She smiled at his returned affection and nodded. "I have the tarts, but they need honey on them. I'll get them made in just a bit if you don't mind being patient." She hefted Skylar up a bit more in his sling. "The twins are good. Honey is happy since her daddy visited a bit before he has to go to work."

"I can be patient, yeah..." he replied, before he smiled and looked over at Aliquam, "I bet she'll be thrilled when you go back to work" he snorted.

Aliquam chuckled and shook his head. "Very funny, Sans."

"Oh she'll be sulky in her sling when he has to hand her over." Toki chuckled. "She's usually not too bad about crying, though she might chew on my breast until Pap gets home again. Speaking of, Pap-is your break nearly over?" Toki was loathe to see him go, but since the twins arrived he had been even more serious about his job.

"Indeed, I best get back to the gate" he murmured, gently bouncing Honey in his grasp until he was able to dislodge her, "Get the sling ready." he murmured.

Honey squirmed, her little fingers losing hold on his ribs. She yawned and curled her fists up to her face, blinking sleepily in confusion.

Toki nodded. She pulled the sling open, well aware that she was flashing her boob to her brother in law but not really caring, and angled it so he could deposit Honey back in.

Sans didn’t really look like he cared, either. He simply smiled and watched as they did their thing.

Honey made a fussy sound as she was deposited into the sling, curling instinctively around Toki's breast. She latched on instinctively and settled down.

Toki sighed softly, and eased the sling back around her. "Alright, she's settled for now. She'll nurse until she's asleep again." Toki shifted her gaze to her husband and gave him a soft look. "One more kiss before you go off to work again?"

"Only for my love." he chuckled as he leaned in and kissed her gently.

She kissed him gently back and caressed his jaw affectionately. He still had to get his chest plate on, but he was quick about getting his armor on and off anymore. "I'll see you when you get home. If you're going to run an extra late shift, let me know by text, okay?"

"Oh of course. Will there be dinner or shall I pick some up?" The tall skeleton inquired lightly.

"I'll have dinner ready." She smiled warmly to him. "Be safe, okay? And tell Undyne that we're on for our usual Saturday training session." Since she wasn't pregnant anymore, Toki could get some actual combat training in. Undyne was the best bet, because the fish woman still intimidated the fuck out of Toki.

Alongside that, Papyrus was hesitant to really attack his wife.

"Sounds perfect, but don’t feel obligated to make dinner, I’ll cut some fruit up if you can’t make it on dinner." he purred, clacking her head before he let her go and began out.

She smiled gently and watched him suit up and go. Shaking her head with warm amusement, Toki sighed. She had no problem making dinner. She was a bit of a housewife, but since she worked from home while he worked guard duty, she really didn’t mind. He helped if she didn’t have it done when he got home anyways. That’s just how house chores went. She’d done house chores before she was married, and she’d do them after she was married.

Toki clapped her hands quietly together and then turned to Sans. "Alright, let's get you and my little niece or nephew some honey tarts. How are they doing, by the way?" She inquired and padded for the kitchen.

"They're keeping me warm at night." he chuckled, rubbing his stomach gently, "Grillby is still overjoyed at the factor alone that it took and it's survived so far, but he put me on a diet, can you believe it? I'm starting to lose my gut." he pulled his shirt taut, revealing indeed he was starting to get smaller, excluding the pregnancy swell.

"I can believe it." She chuckled. "He loves you and your child. It would devastate him to lose you. I think he just worries- I mean, Papyrus pretty much did the same thing. He made sure there were healthy things in the house, and that I ate healthy things. The only thing he didn't constantly supply healthy things with were my cravings, which I think grossed him out." She does slip closer though and lean down to smooch his belly. It was smaller yes, but still big. At thirty-one weeks, Sans was getting close to that final stretch. "Do they move often?"

The attention to his midsection made him shutter and he sighed quietly, a small smile on his face "Despite being mine, heh heh... Yeah... I'm starting to pick up patterns too..."

She nuzzles his belly again and smiles affectionately. It really was warm, almost like hers had been. "Looks like you could use some belly rubs... Lemme make your tarts first, though, or we'll get distracted." She straightens, quirking a grin at him as she fixes the twins in their sling. "But patterns, huh? You'll discover that certain foods, activities and exposure to certain sounds will make the little one react certain ways."

She shifts and sets to work making him honey tarts for his cravings. At least her honey tarts were healthy, she mused.

"Oh god a belly rub sounds like the best damn thing right about now." He groaned, "But yes, go do the tart thing..." he waved her off, then he grinned once more, "Yeah, the kid seems to enjoy the casual ruckus of the Bar. I sit in there and just feel them react to whatever gets picked up in there."

Well, they are the child of a bartender. Alcohol is probably in their blood." She teased playfully. Toki worked at the tarts, and got a big plate made up quickly. She offered it out once it was finished.
"Bone-appetite~"

"Heh heh heh." he took the plate, "Thanks, Tokes..." he murmured, before he smiled at her gently, "So... You said something about belly rubs?"

"I didn’t forget, I promise. To the couch with you, and we'll see about those belly rubs." She grins at him and heads for the couch. They really should just rename it to the snuggling couch or something equally mushy. "Enjoy your treat and let me pamper you a little bit, yeah?"

He let out a happy sound as he started into one of the tarts, turning and walking to the awaiting couch.

A mischievous grin tugged at her teeth, but she said nothing as he headed for the couch. When he got settled, she eased down beside him and set her palms on his middle. His shirt was scooted up, and she began rubbing soothing circles with her thumbs, working over his flesh in the same way she had done to help relax her middle. "How are the tarts?" She inquired lightly.

His midsection was very warm under her hands, and the little ember inside reacted with a cheerful glow to her touch. Small movements were picked up as well.

"They taste so good~" Sans purred happily.

Toki beamed at the little cheery light inside his belly. He literally glowed. It was precious. She rubbed gently, and hummed a soft tune to the little ember inside. "I'm glad you enjoy them. You know," she said conversationally, "your dad told me once that my breast milk tasted like honey. If not for the glowing green color, one couldn't tell the difference from actual honey."

He let out a quiet giggle at that. "Is that so? That's hilarious."

"It was pretty weird." She agreed, easing her fingers to the base of his belly where it met his pelvis. She massaged gently, kneading his flesh expertly. "He actually took some samples at different times. Apparently there was a higher concentration of nutrients for the first week or so, and then it ebbed off into what it is now. Still highly nutritional, but not like it was. It's weird. We hypothesized that skeletons make what they need to match the needs of their offspring."

"That's interesting actually really cool if you ask me." he chuckled quietly, "So... you think it'll be the same with me?" he asked quietly.

"It's possible. You'd have to ask Grillby what baby flame elementals eat." She quirked a soft smile at him. "If that's the case, and you do get boobs, they're actually not all that hard to handle. You just don't want to pinch your nipple between your finger joints. That is painful." She knew from experience.

"Duly noted." he laughed at that, "Though seriously. Me. With boobs? I think... I would look ridiculous."

A slow grin crawled up her face. "Not really. You and I have a similar skull structure. You've got the softer angle to your jaw, unlike Pap. You could probably rock some boobs. In fact... You can actually summon them now if you want to look and see what they're like. Provided you know enough about what they look like to summon them, that is."

He blinked once at her as if she were crazy, then he leaned forward, his gaze trailing down… Right on to her pair, still quite visible thanks to the position of the sling and the twins.

She followed his gaze and snorted. Her boobs were milk filled monstrosities, and were quite full.
"Smart ass. Looking at mine can tell you what they look like, yeah. But do you know what they feel like? How they move? The texture when you hold one?"

"No I haven't. Not when they're that full." he answered, leaning back before he focused for a moment. After a short time, his chest swelled out, forming a pair of breasts under his shirt. He then looked at them. "Ah... What do you think?" he asked, reaching up and cupping them, leaving the plate of tarts balanced somewhere between the boobs and his belly.

"Uh-huh..." He stared at them for a while, squeezing them gently and weighing them in his hands, "They're... heavy."

"You're heavily pregnant." She points out. "Manifesting them manifests how they are in relation to your body. I first manifested mine during Valentine's. Er... Two Valentine's ago, technically. I was still early in pregnancy, and mine were smaller than they are now, but bigger than they had been when I was human." She explains gently.

After a moment, he focused and they got a little bit smaller in his hands now, now a smaller C before Cae smiled, "I think they feel better like this..."

"If they feel natural, then that's how they should be." She smiled gently at him and continued to massage his middle. "You should surprise Grillby with them. Boobs are actually a lot of fun if handled properly, believe it or not."

"Mmh... I'll keep that in mind" He replied, letting them linger until he stopped focusing enough to let them fade once more, popping one last tart in his mouth, he gently chewed it as he rested his arms over his chest, a relaxed look on his face as he let her do as she offered, "Mmmhhhh...." he eventually whined out, though it didn't sound like discomfort, it sounded like that one mood you get when you sob and laugh at the same time, absolute bliss but just about heartbroken.

Such was the ways of pregnancy one would suppose.

She arched a brow at his sound, and leaned back slightly so he could sit up if he wanted. "Sans? Are you alright?" She asked gently. Had something triggered a mood swing?

He was still gently chewing on the last tart in his mouth and had the blissful look on his face, but the tears in his eyes were definitely out of place, indeed a mood swing had hit him... He wished Grillby was here, this was so nice...

Toki simply sighed and continued to rub his middle. There wasn't much to do but let his mood swing pass, and try to keep him as calm as possible. "So, have you and Grillby thought up names yet?" She asked gently, hoping to distract him from whatever was making him feel weepy.

"Mmmh..." he finished munching the tart and swallowed it before he sat up and rubbed his eyes, "Yeah... Solstice."

"Solstice is beautiful." She beams at him warmly. "Fitting for your little sunshine here. Heh... How are you doing by the way? Grillby keeping up with magic donations?"

"He does really well, yeah." he replied, "He makes sure that the kid is glowing well enough before we go to sleep."

"That's good." She nods. "Older monsters seem to have a lot of magic stored up. I'm glad he's tending to you both though. You don't want to experience the exhaustion that happens from running low. It is not a fun thing to feel."
"He's a good mate." He purred gently.

"He is." She nods gently. "He takes good care of you. So... You two going to get hitched any time soon?" She grins. "You might fit in my dress. Maybe."

He snorted at that, "Yeah... I think he's been trying t' find a way to approach me about it, heh..."

"That's good. He seems pretty shy so it'll probably take some time for him to ask." She grinned cheekily. "Do I get to be your bridesmaid when you say yes?"

"Oh my god Toki." he groaned, before he cackled and grinned at her, "Like you even need to ask?"

"Well I thought it better to ask than assume. Assuming makes an ass out of 'u' and me." She laughed gently too, pausing only when the twins stirred. "Oops, we were a bit noisy." She leaned back, pausing in his belly rubs to gently rub their backs as they fussed sleepily against her.

He cackled a little more but when she took back her hands, he slowly sat up and pushed down his shirt, content with the belly rubs, "Thanks a lot, Toki... I feel better."

"I'm glad you feel better." She smiled at him gently. "I know the value of a good belly rub from time to time. Any time you need one, you need only ask. Heh."

Tiny fussy hands wiggled free, and Skylar wiggles his hands towards his paternal uncle. He cooed tiredly, wanting extra attention from someone he identified as family.

"Heh..." he looked down at Skylar and reached, rubbing his head, "Hey there, buddy." he chuckled, gently tickling his chin. "Looking good down there."

Skylar cooed at his uncle and took his thumb in hand. Sans’ thumb was guided to his mouth for a proper chewing- which wasn't a pleasant option given his type of teeth.

Toki simply smiled and grinned. "He wants attention. He's a snuggly baby- but he's chewing a lot. If he bites you too hard, just stroke between his sockets. He lets go easily enough."

He nodded gently, "Noted." He murmured. The teeth at least didn't hurt so badly at first, so Skylar had a little time to enjoy it.

"I'm not sure why he's chewing. Your dad doesn't see anything wrong with it, so maybe it's something you guys did when you were little?" She continued curiously.

Skylar's bites weren't too bad so long as his teeth stayed on solid bone and away from the joint. As his innocent gumming strayed... Well, it would begin to sting.

Sans indeed had to gently rub between his sockets, and the chewing let up long enough for him to shift to a less painful position. "His teeth are still growing in. I think he's just working on finding a way to make it hurt less."

She nodded. "That's possible, though he was born with a full set. I don't actually know if he'll lose them, or if he'll grow with them. They don't feel loose. Well, any looser than normal." She reaches up and wiggles one of her teeth for example. The bone they're attached to is flexible, hence how she's able to smile at him. Toki does so, settling for a crooked grin.

That got a small laugh out of him and his own grin extended on his face, "You know, I've noticed we kinda have the same looking kind of teeth. The difference is mine are a bit more uniform."
"You also have some sort of lips covering yours." She chirps slightly. "But yeah. Yours are a bit more uniform- I'd call yours closer to shark teeth than anything. Mine are sorta like a crocodile’s, considering how they overlap. It's... kinda weird though. I have a similar skull to yours too, but human skulls aren't as soft. They also have a defined hinge, sort of like Pap's skull- mine doesn’t. The rest of my bones stayed fairly human. My skull is really the only thing that changed a lot. Y’know. Horns and teeth."

"True. You know, I bet with a friend on whether or not you were gonna grow a tail.”

“Eh?” She looked befuddled. “Why on earth would I grow a tail? The horns I get. Clover and Sugar have a set just like them- but why on earth would I grow a tail? I’m a skeleton. You don’t have a tail, do you?”

"... Well..."

“More than just a tailbone.” She says firmly.

Skylar huffs and puffs and tugs lightly on Sans’ finger, before releasing it and turning back to his mother’s much softer breast to chew on.

Sans takes his hand gingerly back. "Yeah I was gonna say, I mean if it were in that case you'd have a tail too ya' know."

“Technically I do have a tail. Tailbone and all of that- but it’s not like... long? I don’t really know, Sans. I’m not flexible enough to look at the backside of my pelvis.” And she’d never really had a desire to see what her ass looked like. For all she knew, she could have a longer tailbone.

"You could use a mirror though..."

“Sans.” She eyed him with amusement. “How many people actively use a mirror to look inquisitively at their bare asses? I have never, ever done that, even as a human.”

"You mean you don’t? Really?” he asked.

“Other than checking out my ass in a pair of pants or skirt to see if it fits funny, no, really I don’t.” She blinked at him, baffled. “Is... Is that a thing normal people do?”

"..." He then shrugged, "I mean, maybe? I don’t know?"

Toki chuckles slightly. “Well, now I have something to look up later. Anyways- I need to go get dinner done. I was thinking honey roasted chicken breasts, and those take time to marinate.” She paused, and then grinned down at Sans. “… If I added some green food coloring to the honey, do you think Papyrus would freak?"

"That’s terrible." he laughed, "But maybe, yeah!"

Toki’s grin grew wider. “You up for helping me make some green honey, bro?”

"You're awful. Let's do it."
Chapter 77

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Silver and I have come up with the theory that the influence the twins got from their grandfather is the fact that they grow and mature faster than a normal child. You’ll get to see a lot of this later as they go through ‘growth spurts’ of sorts <: Also the irony is- they never do get to fuck, for all of their teasing at the end of the chapter. :D

Totally forgot to do this last time, but come hit us up on the TOTU blog. We're not always super active- I've gotten back into rp, so I'm not stocking the blog 24/7, but I check for things fairly often, I promise. You can find us at http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

Also there is fanart i made for this chapter! You can find it here! :D http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/post/159536254940/strider-this-is-actually-relevant-to-the-chapter

Toki had begun letting the twins down for small times during the day. They didn’t usually like to be on the floor, but they had, in the previous weeks, been slowly trying to crawl when they felt like being on the ground. They still wobbled and bobbed like newborn fawns, but they were adorable and precious.

Today was no exception. Toki had dressed the twins in their bee onesies, finally fitting them inside even if they were just a little bit, and they had tiny antennas and wings that bobbed and bounced with each precarious step they took. They were getting better at moving, and could actually make great time in following her around the house. Toki kept the doors closed, and put all sharp things well out of their reach, and then let them wander and play with their toys and each other to their hearts content.

They still came to her and fussed for their meals, but didn’t always stay for their after-meal naps. Sometimes the twins would play some more after, and then fall asleep in a pile next to each other.

Toki had lots and lots of pictures of them now, and was steadily adding them to the scrapbook that Tenebris had restored for her.

Toki was sprawled on the floor with the twins today, arms crossed under her chest to keep her breasts from getting squished by the weight of her bones. Toki wasn’t quite napping, so much as she was letting Honey play with her face. She couldn’t see Skylar, but she could feel him. Her son was playing with her toes.

Honey was laughing, loudly, her little green bee onesie making her that much more adorable. She reached out and tugged on one of Toki’s teeth.

Toki blew a soft puff of air on her- and Honey broke out into peals of laughter again. Toki’s eyes twinkled merrily, and she honestly hoped her Husband was seeing this cuteness for himself.
Oh he was doing better than that, Papyrus had borrowed his father's camera and was recording this for the memories.

Toki blew another puff of air into her daughter's face when her tooth was tugged on, and was rewarded with more laughter.

Honey giggled and patted her mother's face, before reaching up and curling her fingers around her mother's horns. She shifted, rocking on her little behind as she tugged on them.

"Those don't move, sweet thing." She smiled at her daughter. "Mommy's horns don't move." And hopefully they wouldn't ever move.

Honey cooed at her cutely, and spotted her daddy over top Toki's skull. A desire to visit her favored parent filled her, and she tugged herself upwards to take the shortest route. Honey managed to pull herself into a standing position against Toki's face using her mother's horns. "UbaAH!"

He laughed at that. "Careful, Honey! Don't go accidentally hurting momma, okay?" he cooed.

"She's fine, Pap. My horns are pretty tough. I caught a burning beam on them, after all." Though that had been what made that nasty crack down her skull, her horns had held and probably kept the beam from splitting her skull in half. Toki blew a raspberry against her daughter's belly, before she realized something. "Papyrus. Papyrus quick- she's standing. She's holding herself up but she's standing on her own legs." He totally had to get this on film. She didn't care if Honey was using her horns to hold herself up. She was technically standing- furthering Toki's beliefs that her children were growing at twice the normal rate. They were nearly five months old- standing usually started between nine months and a year.

Honey squeaked at her father insistently, before chewing harmlessly at her mother's horns.

"Aaaahiiiiiiiiiiii!"

"Oh my stars! She is indeed!" He giggled happily, "Look at her, oh my goodness, I'm so proud!" he cooed. His attention briefly slipped to his Son, making sure he hadn't endangered himself in his play.

Skylar was stubbornly working his way up his mother's backside. He sat on her lower back and then bounced, excitedly patting her back and cooing up at his sister.

Honey cooed back to him and then babbled... Something odd at her twin. They were able to communicate on some level with each other, though the extent of that communication no one really quite knew. She reached out for him, leaning into Toki's face and using her to balance herself.

Skylar reached back- and his little sister helped him pull himself up from the other side of Toki's skull.

Toki was effectively a jungle gym for her children, but she couldn't be happier. "What is Skylar doing?" She could feel him, but couldn't tell what he was doing. She had to keep her skull still or her little ones would lose their grip.

"Using you as a jungle gym with Honey's help! Nyeh heh heh heh!" he laughed at the sight, before he put the camera where it could keep recording so he could go join in. He then got up and came over, smiling gently affectionately. "You three are some of the best things to happen to me." He purred.

"I could say the same to you," Toki smiled warmly, and then sputtered as a cloth clad foot tried to use her very sharp-toothed mouth for a step stool. "Help please, Honey is trying to go up and over my skull."
Skylar looked pleased to be standing on his mother. He proceeded to bounce in place—until his little legs gave. He landed on his bottom and grunted, balancing on his mother's shoulders. "Nuhhh."

"Nyeh!" Honey chirped, and continued to attempt to climb between Toki’s horns.

"I'm on it!" he gently scooped both up, "I gotcha both!" he cackled, kissing their heads.

Honey squeaked as she was lifted and curled into his arms happily. Likewise, her bother did the same, though he met the kiss with a sloppy one of his own. He might have been a mama’s boy, but he loved his daddy too.

Toki took the moment to sit upright and cross her legs. She smiled and patted the floor for him to join her. "Let's see if we can encourage more standing. All the exercise will make them nap good and hard later."

He nuzzled them gently and sat across from her, setting the twins down gently, "Alright you two, go to Momma~" he cooed, his hands carefully supporting their tiny bodies as he gave them a little something to lean on as they stood for the first time.

Honey had no desire to leave her Daddy's grasp, and happily cooed as she wobbled on her feet. There were grippies on the bottom of the onesies, so thankfully she had something to keep from slipping on the slick tile.

Skylar was eager to go to his mother. He remained upright for about half a step, before dropping into his hands and knees with a grunt. Once he was in his usual moving position, he crawled for his mother's grasp.

Toki accepted her son gently into her arms. She lifted him up and kissed his little nose, before looking at Papyrus. "We may need to switch if we're going to work on teaching them to walk. Honey looks too content to leave your hold." She chuckled. "So... Baby trade?"

"Baby Trade." He agreed with a laugh, moving up to a better position before holding Honey out.

Honey fussed as she was held out and gave her mother a huffy glance.

Skylar had a grumpy look, but more because he had just expended the effort to scurry over to her.

The switch was seamless though, and Toki soothed Honey's fussing with a peppering of kisses and soft playful noises, while Skylar settled with a pouty face in his Daddy's arms. "We probably should do this one at a time, or they're going to run into each other." She quirked a grin at him, and eased Honey gently onto her feet. The baby bounced and stretched her metaphorical muscles, straining lightly against her mother's grasp and reaching for Papyrus with grasping fingers.

He nodded and chuckled gently, "Sounds perfect." he replied, "Let's have Skylar go first. He looks ready to start fussing."

"He is a Mama's boy." Toki nods smiling. One hand keeps Honey upright, while the other opens and beckons to her son. "Does my little Skylar need mommy snuggles?"

"Guhwa!" Skylar huffed, reaching for her with his little fingers. His sharp little teeth gnawed on his father's fingers since he wasn't letting him go.

He chuckled gently and slowly let him go. "Go on, Skylar."

Skylar wobbled on two legs for a moment, seeming to contemplate this newfound skill, before hesitantly toddling forward. He managed a couple steps before his legs crumpled, and he landed on his hands and knees. A displeased grunt escaped him as he scuffed his little palms, before he crawled swiftly for his mother. Once he reached her, he whined and held up his fingers.

Toki kissed them gently and welcomed her son into her lap. "Good job, Skylar," she praised warmly.

Her son beamed at her, and snuggled close, pleased to be back where he wanted to be.

Toki carefully released Honey, and kept her hands ready in case she fell immediately. The twins were a bit more resilient to falls given the sturdy nature of their bones, but likewise they were also prone to crying if they did. The falls didn’t hurt, not always, but falling was scary. As advanced as they might be, they were still babies, and a baby’s response to fear was to cry. Usually quite loudly, too. "Go to Daddy, Honey."

The little skeleton gave an excited trill, before speed walking away. Or trying to, anyways. She over compensated in her excitement and fell flat on her face about four steps away from Toki, and well out of immediate catching range for her mother. Honey landed with a grunt and laid there for a second, shocked at the impact of landing on the hard tile.

"Oh Honey," Papyrus scooted closer and scooped her up into his arms. He nuzzled her affectionately and crooned to her. "You almost had it." He praised gently.

Honey's little lower jaw jutted out in a pout, and her blue eye lights wobbled as tears beaded in her sockets. Like any child under the age of four or so that falls, she began to cry, and clung to Papyrus for comfort against the scary fall.

Skylar's teeth wobbled as his sister began to cry, and Toki tucked him gently into her neck and shoulder and shushed him. Predictably, it quelled his coming tears. Toki gave Papyrus a lopsided smile. "He doesn’t like it when his little sister cries. He’ll be a good big brother someday."

"The best protector if we cant be there when she tears up." He purred. He gently cradled Honey, resting her firmly against his shoulder. His palm folded over her back, and he rubbed soothing circles as she cried. Papyrus hummed gently, and let his fingers slide up to stroke the back of her skull.
Offering comfort and riding it out were often the best options for when Honey got scared. Cooing to Honey as he gently bounced her, Papyrus nuzzled the tiny budding horns on her skull. "Oh there, there, my little honeycomb."

“Quite true.” Toki bounced Skylar for a little bit, and the repetitive motion helped keep him from joining his sister in crying. It didn’t mean that he didn’t whimper, but it didn’t progress more than that. Toki shifted, and then winced slightly as a throb went through her skull. “… Ah, ow. Hey, did you know that summons, when they want your attention, can tug really, really hard on a mental link?”

Honey’s cries thankfully never lasted long unless she was in a serious snit. The attention from her father helped to calm her down, and soon she was back to just simple hiccups and sniffles. She nuzzled into his shoulder, tiny fingers fisting tightly in his clothes.

"Indeed. Honey mostly does that when she feels like something needs to be changed, usually it's her, Nyeheh heh heh heh." he joked lightly while pecking Honey's head.

Toki chuckled and cradled her skull with one hand. Clover- yeah, she was pretty sure it was Clover-was basically ramming against her mind like a battering ram. Their children could tug over the soul links too- though only did it when in a particularly foul mood or in what they considered to be a desperate need of something. “Oh sure, you can joke about diaper changes, but lemme tell you now, we have it easy since skeletons don’t poop. Just wait until one of my brothers has another kid- you’ll get to experience an actual diaper change.”

Honey sniffled slightly, and leaned back once she was calmer. Her face was streaked with little blue lines of magic, but now that the scary had passed, she was ready to move around again. She wiggled slightly against him, and gently headbutted her daddy with great affection.

Ali gently butted back and smiled at his daughter, setting her down slowly while holding her hands. "Come on, you can stand~"

Toki smiled quietly. “It’ll take a little bit before they’re walking on their own. But we can help them figure out how to stand, though.” Standing came before walking- they had to be able to keep themselves upright before they could walk. Toki shifted Skylar, who’s whimpering had quieted, and went to set him down as well.

He fussed at her, thinking he was going to be handed off again. His fussing stopped as she simply held him up, gently bouncing him so he could use his own weight to strengthen and exercise his legs.

His daughter peered up at him for a moment, before slowly wobbling to her feet. Her legs were like blades of grass in the wind, not used to supporting her weight in such an unusual position. Honey wobbled, but used her father’s hands to keep herself upright. She bounced contently, and cooed happily again.

"Atta girl!" Aliquam praised with a laugh, "That's it, Honey!" he encouraged her.

Eventually her legs tired out, so she simply sat down. Honey cooed softly up at her dad, and made grabby fingers for him.

Skylar lasted a little longer, but he too eventually sat down and reached for his mother. Toki scooped him up gently, and slipped him inside her sling when he pawed at her breast. The sling was getting a bit tight with two of them in there, but they didn’t seem to mind sharing the space. Toki supposed that several months sharing a womb made sharing a sling a bit more tolerable. “I think he tired himself out,” she chuckled gently. “Or he wants a snack.” She mused moments later as he latched on.

He chuckled and hugged Honey close. "Look at my pretty girl." he cooed to her, "Just so wonderful~"

Honey burbled happily and settled into his lap with a sleepy coo. After playing hard, the twins crashed hard as well. They might not have played long, but they had been active.

“They’re both wonderful.” Toki beamed at him gingerly. “They’re growing so fast, too. They’re nearly five months old and already trying to stand up. You were right when you said they’d be growing quickly.” They were going to have to cherish the memories with them this small- soon they’d be running amok on their own two legs, and before you knew it, they’d be off to school. That’s how it had been with her brothers- and good lord, now she understood her mom’s nostalgia at times.

"What will we do for their education?” He asked. "Father perhaps?"

“Well, the school here does have the capabilities for all grade levels. So, I think they can go to public school here.” Toki smiled slightly. “Magical instruction, however, I’ll leave to your dad. But, not until they’re in school.”

"Alright... do you think they'll be okay there? Being skeletons and all?"
“It would be in a human school that I would be nervous about.” Toki shakes her head. “The monster kids aren’t as… racist, frankly. Here, they’ll be safe and surrounded by other monsters.”

He nodded in agreement, "Right, of course... that would be better, wouldn't it?"

“I was thinking so, yeah.” She nods softly. Toki frowns slightly, and taps at her skull. “Are your summons going bonkers? Because Clover is going to give me a migraine if she keeps battering my skull like this.”

"Now that you mention it, Neko is being very loud..."

Toki grimaces and nods. “Let’s go see what’s bothering them. Outside though, please.” She just swept. Clover wouldn’t fit inside, but Neko could, and she really didn’t want the cat skull to knock something over. Toki shifted, carefully balancing Skylar against her chest as he nursed, and then offered a hand out to help Papyrus to his feet.

He took the offered hand and stood up. He carefully tucked Honey into the sling he had on, and clicked the camera off so it wouldn’t waste battery, before he linked arms with his wife and guided her out the back door. "Alright, let’s see what they want."

Toki went with Papyrus, adjusting Skylar just slightly as they stepped outside. It was starting to warm up towards the end of February, but it was still a bit chilly for the twins to be out and about too much. Toki squinted as she glanced to the sky, and flexed her magic. With a quick flick of her wrist, the sky tore asunder with a rush of fire and brimstone.

From the fire in the sky, Clover descended. Her new saddle was still on, as she never really let them take it off. Toki and Clover had taken to frequently flying together, as it was something they would need to know how to reliably do in case she ever had to fly with her in actual combat. The massive hornet was faster than she looked, and Toki had only fallen off once. She was caught, of course, by her mount, but she hadn’t ever fallen off again.

Leg straps helped with that.

Toki stepped forwards to meet her as she landed, and blinked as the massive hornet set down what looked to be a very large black grub. It squirmed on the ground, and turned to reveal a tiny set of horn nubs, and small legs on it. It wasn’t like any form of bee larvae she had ever seen- it had fully formed jaws, and was staring at the skeletons with lazy curiosity.

Aliquam summoned forth his feline, and given he didn’t have to fight or anything of the sort, he was able to summon Neko’s full form.

The skeletal cat landed in front of her master, before she put something down before him, sitting and holding her head high like the proud feline she was.

It looked... scraggly... like a naked blob... When it started to move and lifted its head, it revealed that it was some sort of baby bird demon. It was naked and awkward, blobby and wobbling on two skinny legs.

"What the..." he sounded... extremely confused now as the baby bird cheeped at him and Honey.

Honey perked up, having woken up with the noise from the arrival of the summons. Clovers wings were loud. She looked down at the peeping blob, and cooed, reaching for it and leaning out of the sling her daddy had her in.

"Uh..." Toki eased herself down in front of the grub, and reached out to touch it. Right about the time that it rushed forward and blobbed itself right into her lap. She looked bewildered as she gathered the rather large insect into her arms—where it wiggled right into the sling with her son, and then settled down to... Sleep? Skylar reached out to touch the grub, and cooed contently in his sleep. "... Do you think these are our kids summons?"

Clover looked on with fond indifference, and settled down to lay on the grass.

"If they are... I pray they'll age WITH the children." he replied, putting an arm around Honey as he knelt down to scoop it up.

The bird screeched and clamored into his arms. Featherless wings beat at his bones like floppy sausages, and it wiggled into the sling with Honey, before nestling against her. The bird peeped contently and nestled it's sharp beak into the crook of the infants neck, making small, pleased peeps.

The baby cooed happily and patted the bird, burbling happily as she nuzzled it. Honey made a sound closely resembling the peep, and settled contently.

“I… Guess we’ll see… How exactly do we take care of a… larvae and a baby blaster bird?” Toki looked absolutely befuddled as she straightened. The grub wiggled in the sling, draping against her Son as they both slept in her arms.

"... Uh...Well... I'll be honest.” He looked perturbed. “I have no idea.”

“Maybe your dad knows? H- Hey! Where are you going? Clover! I'm not qualified to raise a grub-thing! Clover!” Toki protested vehemently as her summons lifted into the sky again, and proceeded to disappear back through the gate. She got a distinct feeling that the insect would possibly come back- but there was no guarantee. “Damn it, Clover.”

The bird lifted its skull and peered up at the one holding it, and then proceeded to curiously peck at Papyrus’ chin. It peeped at him curiously.

Honey was bemused by the bird, and her giggles echoed out of the sling.

“To father’s then,” he insisted quickly as he deflected the beak away from his chin with gentle fingers.

Toki nodded. “No teleporting though. You know it make Skylar sick.” And she didn’t want to be covered in baby barf any more than the grub wanted to be, she imagined. Toki links her fingers with Papyrus’ own, and then heads off around the house, guiding him to the front to go find Tenebris’ house.

He nodded and followed her, keeping his hand gingerly on Honey to make sure that the needy bird didn’t hurt her.

The walk to the house didn’t take overly long, thankfully, though they had Papyrus’ summons shadowing them curiously as they went. Toki knocked soundly on the door, bouncing Skylar and the grub gently, and waited for Tenebris to answer.

"Yes? Who is it?" Was called out.

"It's me, Father, and Toki!"

"Come in, you two!" Tenebris called.

Toki opened the door, and stepped inside, shifting with a slight hiss as the grub used her rib to scoot closer to Skylar in its sleep. She knew they looked interesting—both parents with their slings full. Likely, Tenebris would wonder where they got the two extra children. She glanced up, looking for her father in law.

Tenebris was in the main room, watching a video while on the floor.

Toki paused as she spotted him. “… You’re doing yoga?” She inquired lightly, noting that he was ridiculously flexible. He was in his boxers, but was naked otherwise. With his feet nearly on his damn skull. “Nearly naked yoga. Okay… Uh… Well… Sorry to interrupt but Papyrus and I have a problem. Two, new, tiny and possibly hungry problems.”

"Did your breasts stop flowing?" he asked, "Or did you have a-" He was cut off as Aliquam dropped the bird on his head.

"Father, be serious."

"I was being serious." he growled.

The bird squawked loudly and beat tiny wings against the sides of Tenebris skull. It wouldn’t hurt much- the talons digging into his scalp likely hurt worse. The bird screeched up at Papyrus, tiny mouth opening in unhappiness.

Likewise, Honey whined, and reached for the bird from inside of her sling. “Nyehh!” She fusses.

“Do I have a what?” Toki blinked, baffled. She swatted Papyrus lightly, and then leaned down to collect the bird off of Tenebris’ skull and ease it carefully onto the floor. Tiny talons scrubbled and it went to bounce at the tall skeleton’s feet, demanding access to their daughter. “Skeleton beast bird or not, it’s still a baby. Don’t drop babies.” There was a stern edge to her voice- a mother’s warning not to do it again. “No, Tenebris. My breasts are still producing— but our summons stopped by today and gave us… these. We were wondering if you have any idea how to take care of them.”

Toki sits down, and eases the massive larvae out of the sling and into her lap. It fusses, until she rolls it over and rubs along its belly. It settles with a gurgle, and goes limp like a sack of Jell-o.

Rubbing his head, Tenebris sat up, "Well, it looks like you’ve been given the summoning for your children." he told her "A baby avian and what looks like some breed of insect."

“It’s a type of bee Larvae. I think. Clover brought it to me, so I’m assuming it’s a type of bee.” She adjusted it and draped it on her lap. “I can… sort of feel it. It’s distant though, more like… it’s a distant relative of my summons, or something. It might be a hive mind thing though. It feels… male. Not like the Queens. Anyways,” she eyes him. “Clover dumped it in my arms and then left. So… How exactly do we feed them?”

The baby bird eventually gave up demanding at Papyrus, as the tall skeleton refused to give in to it’s desires, and went to look at the bigger monster. It sniffed at him, flapped it’s stubby wings as it shivered, and then fusses noisily at Tenebris.

Tenebris gently picked up the bird, then sighed and rubbed its head, "Well. Lets see here... remembering back to Caeruleus and Aliquam...” he murmured slowly, getting up and sitting on the couch to examine the bird.

He got nipped for his efforts, but the bird did settle in his lap, sharp claws tangling in his boxers as it sought something to hold onto with its talons.

Toki glanced up at Papyrus and motioned for him to join her on the floor. No point standing like a stork, she mused. The grub shifted in her lap, and she lifted it slightly, stroking it’s back as it rolled over in her lap. It seemed content with the touch, and settled into the warmth she exuded. “At least the grub isn’t as fussy as Honey’s is. I suppose the personality matches the master, though.”

Honey was huffing and puffing unhappily in her sling, after all, since Papyrus had plucked her snuggle buddy from her.

Tenebris chuckled at that as his son took a seat next to his wife. "True indeed. Heinz was the laziest dog I’ve ever seen, meanwhile Bastet was the most active cat."

The bird fussed a bit more, picking up on Honey’s fussing, and huffily bit Tenebris in the soft part of his thigh.

Toki nods lightly. “I wonder what my summons say about me. Anyways- uh… It… is trying to eat your leg, I think.” She really hoped that it didn’t eat monsters. They couldn’t have a monster eating bird around- that would just be asking for bad things to happen.

"Ow." he chuckled, before he picked the bird up, "Let's see here... usually they fed themselves in the other world, but needed help discovering what they ate... so... we experiment." he told her.

The bird hissed at him and flapped feather-less wings. Beady blue eyes leered at him, before his fingers were pecked in a demand for him to be more careful.

“Allright. Well… Most birds with that shape of beak are carnivorous. Larvae at this stage usually are in combs and eating honey, but… This one apparently isn’t. It’s also got fully formed jaws- so the grub could be carnivorous too.” Toki wasn’t honestly certain. She shifted the grub and gently rolled it- him, she reminded herself- over, so it could sit on the carpet. It made a weird noise at her, and then flopped right where she had set it. “Though… I think this one is more lazy than anything. I’m more worried about the bird trying to eat the grub, honestly.”

"So... am I going to be sharing from my meat freezer?” he asked.

Toki shakes her head. “No. I’ll just have to order some from town.” She scrubs a hand over her socket, and then has to lean down to scoop up the grub as the noise of bone on bone makes him flee for the under side of the couch. She tucks him back in her lap, and then looks at Papyrus with sudden alarm. “We need to make sure they don’t eat the cats. That would be bad. Very bad.”

"Very, very bad. Keep an eye on this one." Tenebris warned her as he held out the bird, though Aliquam took that one and tucked it back with Honey. "That one looks like it'll take off some fur."

The bird nestled back into the sling with the cutest, happiest chirp.

“Pretty sure the cats can outrun the grub, but that’s a bird of prey. Once it grows into it’s stubby little legs, it’ll probably be hunting for them.” Toki sighs and rubs a hand tiredly over her sockets again. “They’re going to need names. We can’t just call them bird and grub. Though the naming should be up to the kids- Y’know, the kids can just rename them when they’re older.” She sighs. “Our summons are pretty smart. Clover sasses me when she thinks I’m not paying attention… So maybe these two are intelligent too?”

"Well, why don’t we call this one Sobek?" Aliquam suggested.

“You like your Egyptian gods for names, don’t you?” Toki quirked a smile at him. “But Sobek works. Uh… Not sure what to name the grub. Sugar and Clover are entirely different kinds of bees. He’s got flecks of orange on him.” Her Queens were black and green. She wasn’t sure what sort of larvae he was. “Spice maybe? Or Snuggle, because all this one seems to want to do is snuggle up to Skylar.”

"That does work enough." he rumbled gently, "Alright, Snuggle it is."

Toki snorted softly, and bounced the grub in her lap. “Snuggle the eventual Hell Hornet. Well… Looks like life just got more interesting.” She sighs. “Well, we had a pretty easy nearly five months of being normal parents?”

"Keyword: Had."

She lightly bumps her husband with her shoulder. “Well, we get to learn a new style. Two skeletons, a grub, and a screechy chick. Hm… Maybe we can use our summons to baby-sit the baby summons?”

"Neko can do that.” Aliquam nods.

Toki nods alongside him. “Clover can help too. We… might have to look into a possible stable being built. If Snuggle grows to be the size of my hornets…” The house couldn’t fit Clover. It could barely fit Sugar. Toki shakes her head. “And we’ll have to assume the possibility of any more kids we have getting summons, which could take years for them to grow too before they return to their realms- I’m thinking we need to make a space in the back yard for a stable.” The back of the compound had plenty of space, really.

He nodded, "But we don’t really have them out that often, would it be necessary?"

One could see the gears turning in Toki’s skull as she pondered that. And, predictably, her brows furrowed, and a word vomit proceeded to follow. “We don’t, no, but presumably until these guys are big enough to go back to their realms, they’re going to need to be here. Our kids likely have access to their own spaces within the planes of the summoning realms, so they likely have to let them back into their own areas. We can’t open their summoning doors for them. And,” she eyes their son, “The kids aren’t going to be practicing more than the basics until they’re in school. We don’t need them accidentally falling into their summoning realms. In that time, we could end up with more kids- and then we’ll have more oodles of summons to care for. The house only holds so many, y’know?”

"Okay Toki, you’ve made your point... Father, do you think you can help us?"

"Oh yes, of course I can help you." Tenebris rumbled, though there was concern on his face and the tiniest of flinches that he was quick to hide from his son and his daughter in law. There was a reason he had his form- though it wasn’t from falling into his summoning realm. "The children falling into the summoned realm is impossible, but there’s still that fraction of a percentage... Please do be careful when they get around to that."

“I don’t want to imagine trying to get them out if they did manage to fall in.” Toki shakes her head with a sigh. “Particularly if their worlds are like mine.” Any time she tore a hole between the worlds, hellfire and brimstone spilled forth. Anyone who wasn’t fire proof would roast alive. Toki shakes her head again and hums. “There’s a lot of left-over lumber from the construction crew. I’m pretty sure they covered it, so we should be able to construct something to start… Between you and Papyrus, I’m sure you can figure something out. You two did manage to put together Ikea furniture- anyone who can do that can build without issue. But we don’t need it yet, unless these two grow faster than the twins…”

Tenebris had been so sure that the twins would have been up and running around on their own after a ‘nap’ as he had put it. So, Toki was inclined to believe that blaster beasts grew faster than normal monster kids.
Toki sighed and patted her son's back gently. "Anyways, thanks for your help, Tenebris. You're a goldmine of information... I suppose we should let you get back to your nearly naked yoga, yeah?"

"I'm not sure if you were hinting on sarcasm right there, Toki, but of course my dear." He rumbled lightly. "Yes, yes, go and learn about your children's summons, have fun." He laughed gently.

"The world may never know," she wiggled her brows at him and then eased onto her feet. "More like set boundaries for the summons, however. Gotta make sure Sobek doesn't eat Gracie or Gael."

"Indeed so." He contemplated the chick in his son's sling, and then tilted his head slightly. "I do believe you're looking at raising a vulture of some kind."

"More of a scavenger then, but still probably able to hunt all the same." Toki hummed. She offered a hand to Papyrus, and smiled at her father in law as she helped her husband to his feet. "Thanks again, Tenebris. Papyrus and I would probably be lost if we didn't have you to bounce things off of."

He laughed at that. "Run along you two." He told them, waving them off with his tail as he scooted down from the couch to settle down on the rug, going to resume his Yoga as she suggested.

Toki laced her hand with Pap's, and guided him out the door. She sighed as the fresh air rolled over her. "Well, looks like we have two more critters in the house for the foreseeable future."

"Indeed." he gave a quiet sigh, and then gave her a cheeky look. "Good thing we don’t have to pay any additional pet fees on our home, eh? Nyeh heh heh heh!"

It took Toki a moment, but she caught the terrible joke that he made. She laughed warmly. "I dunno. The landlord might have some hidden fees we don't know about. We’'ll have to ask her really sweet like what the fees are for taking in a baby blaster vulture, and some sort of demon bug larvae. Think you can sweet talk her?” She winked at him playfully.

"Who knows? I might need to do her a favor~" He purred, trailing his fingers gently down her side as he slipped his fingers out of hers to tease her.

She smiled, a warm flirty thing, and leaned into his touch as they padded along. “Maybe once the kids are down for tonight, you can see about doing that favor, hm~?”

"Rrrr~" he smirked and nipped her neck.

Toki squeaked and jumped. “Papy!” She giggled. “We’re in public! Save that for when we’re home.”

Papyrus gave a quiet, shameless laugh, and slid a hand affectionately down to squeeze her hip. "If you insist, my dear~"
Settling into life with two blaster beasts was difficult- but thankfully, they were intelligent. Toki and Papyrus had set rules for them- such as no eating the cats, don’t scratch your talons on the couch, and no eating any of the furniture- and thusly the rules had been strictly followed. Snuggle was better at following them, but the grub was fairly stationary. He remained close to Skylar, but other than following the infant around and eating come time for dinner, the grub didn’t do much else.

Sobek was much more rambunctious. The bird was still unsteady on his legs, but followed Honey around as best he could. When Honey napped and he didn’t want to, he followed Toki like a curious baby duck. It was kind of cute, until he picked up Gracie’s habit for stealing toes.

Thankfully, both the chick and the grub didn’t seem violent towards each other, so they were fairly easy to keep together. The ease of which that Sobek and Snuggle got along meant that they could just plop them into one of the ‘baby jails’, as Sans called them, and keep them from running amok when they had things to do outside. Sobek was a bit more aggressive than Snuggle was, and anyone who wasn’t immediate family was usually pecked and clawed at.

Sobek and Undyne, for instance, had a hate-hate relationship. Sobek was quite fond of fish meat- and Undyne was a giant fish monster. She got pecked and clawed a lot.

The twins were easier to manage, as they were okay cuddling with whoever held them. In this such case, Honey was snuggled against Papyrus, while Skylar was draped over Stag, completely asleep.

The white deer was settled against Papyrus, legs folded daintily under him as he silently watched the proceedings in Toki’s back yard. Stag was fond of the twins, and the deer, despite their fierce meeting, had proven to be quite gentle around children and small things. He was playful and was the biggest dork of a deer that anyone had ever met. He was graceful in his bipedal form, but on all fours he tended to trip over anything, and if he got to running too quickly, it wasn’t uncommon for him to misstep and be sent tumbling.

Stag still disliked Tenebris, but he was no longer soiling the big monster’s lawn.

The grass had been cut and soaked heavily with a hose to reduce the chances of a fire breaking out- because Toki wasn’t sparring with Undyne today. The fish woman was off to the side, sitting next to Papyrus and keeping an eye on the baby jail and the babies themselves, while Toki faced off with the only sparring partner that can take her heat.

“Are you sure you’re up to a spar like this?” Toki gave Grillby a concerned look. He was an older monster, yes, and also made of flame- but Toki worried about hurting him. That was one of her main issues- she was worried about hurting her friends. It impeded her fighting, and impacted how well she did during practice.
They hadn’t managed to find a trigger to send her into attack mode yet. She fought defensively— but that didn’t help her expel much magic. Since the only thing she regularly used magic for was bringing out her summons, and general house chores, Toki had been steadily building a surplus. More of a surplus than she was used to, more like. Now that the twins weren’t draining nearly as much magic as when they had been gestating, Toki had a large, large surplus.

The surplus was causing odd effects— Grillby had been brought in to try and get her to release some of that surplus in a spar. Fire verses fire— and his stores were more vast than hers. It was a hope that she’d burn through her stores faster and leave her less jittery or moody.

He gave a nod. "Of course, Toki... You are no longer pregnant, so now you must learn the extent of your magical capability. By sparring with a fellow fire elemental, you can maximize your output without harming me. As a veteran, I am also aware of some triggers that might not come to the untrained mind. I am your best asset if you want what you came to me for." He told her calmly.

"Are you... sure I can’t hurt you?" She gave him a more concerned look. Toki’s magic had been even more unstable when it came to offense or defense. She wasn’t practiced at handling this much magic, and the instability came from lack of practice. “I don’t want to hurt you. I know you don’t burn like Undyne can, but...” She edges awkwardly, and shuffles her bare feet through the wet grass. “I don’t want to hurt anyone.”

"That’s the damn problem!" Undyne shouts from the side. “I told you, we’re tougher than we look!”

"I know, but..." She awkwardly shuffled in placed again, and nudged a pebble with her toe.

"Toki." He spoke her name sternly before he took a breath and lifted his weapons, a sword and shield, and stalked towards her. "I'm a member of Humans Against Monsters. I've just cut down your husband. After I kill you, I'm going to kill your children." he growled. The heat and venom in his voice was almost convincing as he charged at her, knowing that perhaps the best way to start a spar was a jumpstart.

Toki did her best to ignore his surprisingly convincing threat, though the way he growled sent a nervous spike through her magic, making her eyes briefly blaze. The jumpstart was effective in the manner that Toki made use of ducking and rolling. Though she couldn’t do a true summersault, as her horns would legitimately get stuck, Toki could throw herself to the side and dodge. Her tank top was tightly bunched behind her, covering the bindings she had over her breasts, and the grass stuck to it as she rolled to the side. “Shit!”

Knowing that dodging wasn’t the main goal of this fight, Toki scooped up a stick at her feet, reinforced it with magic, and threw it at him. It caught fire, but the fire burned out the moment that she let go of it. It clattered harmlessly against his shield, making a loud bang before dropping into the damp grass. Toki didn’t have a physical weapon to summon, unlike the skeletons and Undyne did, so the best she could do was imbue her magic into whatever she was using. Sticks and stones, mostly.

Her bees would be useless, and she’d rather not feel them get squished against a useless fight with Grillby.

He spun his sword in his hand, and shook his head, "There's no use in dodging. You can do it, but only for so long, Toki." He told her, before he slammed his sword against his shield, "Come on!"

Bravery was not her natural trait. Not at all. Toki swallowed nervously and gathered her magic around her. Flames gathered in her fingers, and she tightened them with her fingers. She didn’t have a physical weapon— but she’d seen Grillby turn his flames into ropes of sorts. Ropes could be used like a whip, not that she knew how to use one of those either. Toki formed her flames as best she could, though they lurched out of control all over her hand, and cracked the general shape of them against his shield.

She might have aimed for his shield, which didn’t do any good against him, but she hit it with a satisfying cracking sound. That was an achievement, and she perked slightly.

Though really, being distracted because she landed one mildly decent hit was not usually a good thing.

"One hit will not take your opponent down!" he told her, before he lunged at her again.

“Shit!” She hesitated, trying to figure out if she had an option to fight back. She hesitated too long, and soon he was bearing down on her. Toki threw her magic swiftly into her defense, like she’d practiced with taking hits from Undyne, and prepared to take his strike.

He struck her with a blow from his shield, and then swiped at her with his sword.

The blow from his shield knocked her off balance, but it was enough to save her from too harsh of a strike from the blade. The blade cut into her arm, and chipped the bone as she twisted away from it instinctively.

The chip was painful, and her fingers clutched at it as she gasped. She didn’t sit still though—chips and nicks could heal, as Undyne had proven when she’d battered her to help better her instinctive defensive capabilities. Papyrus and Tenebris could fix what they broke, she knew.

Toki tucked her shoulders and rolled again, ducking between the taller monster’s legs to scamper away and give herself space to gather the gumption to strike again.

"I apologize in advance, but when you are facing the enemy, they’re not going to ease up on their strikes and grant you mercy!" He told her, turning swiftly on his feet and swinging his blade at her unprotected back.

Toki took another blow, this time the sharp side of the blade cutting a furrow across the backs of several of her ribs. She cried out and kicked back at him, jetting a small stream of flame out of the bottom of her foot as she stumbled. Toki kept her feet though and turned to face him, irritation tugging her teeth down. “You don’t think I know that? They killed my brother, Grillby. I know they’re not going to give me mercy of any kind.”

"Nor would they spare your children, Toki!" he told her, swinging once more.

Toki braced for it this time, and forced flames to cover her bones and act as a temporary shield as she shoved her arm against his blade. Still cut her, but she repelled it, and danced away from him. “I know they wont!” She cried, gesturing angrily behind her where her family was seated. “I know they wont! They’ve burned me alive, murdered my brother, and are still after me and all of monster kind!
But you’re not Humans Against Monsters! You’re Grillby, and you’re not going to hurt my children!”

He slammed his shield against her and he glared down at her with a snarl. "... Would you really want to make that gamble?" he questioned. Without warning, he brought the handle of his sword up and hit her in the head, before he turned and lunged past her, going for the twins.

The blow to her skull caught her right above the scar that ran around her left horn. Pain seared across her vision, and it temporarily went white as she staggered back.
Honey cried out, a distressed shriek as her mother was sent staggering and the one that struck her stalked for her. She shrieked again, sharp fingers tugging at Papyrus in panic.

Toki didn’t stop to think about if he was bluffing or not. The pain sparked her anger- that was a dirty trick, aiming for the one place on her skull that couldn’t take a direct hit like that. Instincts struck first before rational thought slid into her skull, and she reacted to the panic that she could feel coming from Honey’s soul.

The sound that tore from her teeth was not quite human, and she lunged after the fire elemental with her jaws gaping. She hit his back with little force given her lack of physical bulk, but she scrambled up and sunk her sharp, sharp teeth into the junction between his shoulder and his neck. Her eyes blazed the same color as her magic, and green fire crawled over her, searing her clothes and bindings away as she savaged his neck in an instinctive measure to draw the perceived predator away from her children.

Her fingers clawed at him, sharp bones raking through his clothes and ruining them effectively, as her flames engulfed them both.

Grillby wanted a reaction- and Grillby got a reaction.

He tensed up and winced, shouting out as the fangs dug deeper into his shoulder, before he reached back and grabbed her horn. "That's it, Toki!" he snarled, before he fell right backwards, aiming to land on her.

She was light enough in the body, even with her breasts weighting her down, that she could use his own momentum against him. She scrambled up, letting him fall back, but not onto her, and used the force of his fall to rip her teeth from his shoulder, taking a good chunk of that part of his body with it. The burning flesh was spat out, orange staining her teeth a grisly color, and Toki roared.

Flames spilled from her mouth, and the flaming skeleton engulfed the fire elemental in the same burning green hellfire that her summons lived in. The stench of brimstone filled the air, spilling from the glowing part of her maw.

Grillby roared in pain at the sudden loss of flesh in his shoulders and he snarled, putting his shield up to deflect the enraged skeleton, "Well to be fair I was right about her trigger point!" he announced, before he winced. "Papyrus!"

Putting Honey down, Aliquam ran and grabbed Toki fast, pulling her off of Grillby and away from him. "Toki! That's enough!"

Grabbing her wasn’t the wisest idea. The green of her flames had engulfed her, and it burned through his gloves like they were made of paper. The flames seared at his hands, and only as she turned flaming eyes to him, did she realize who exactly had her. Toki shook him off and stumbled away, coiling her arms defensively around her naked form and trying to keep from burning her husband worse. She had burnt her clothes, and most of Grillby’s away- but the flames wouldn’t stop.

She winced, and clutched her skull with one hand, cradling the spot where Grillby had effectively concussed her with the pommel of his blade. She took deep breaths to try and rein her magic in, though it didn’t seem to be helping. The stopper that she’d had on her violent reactions had been effectively burnt away by Grillby’s insistence in making her fight, and she had no way of making it stop.

The magical build up that had been growing and growing since she no longer had her tiny leeches draining her was too much. She didn’t know how to stop it now that she had started.
Grillby looked to have underestimated her abilities, and was now holding his shoulder as he tried to stop the bleeding.

Aliquam slowly sat Toki down, ignoring the burns blistering over his bones and trying to calm her down.

Tenebris appeared with a sharp crack of displaced air and set a hand on his shoulder, excusing him to go help Grillby while he tended to Toki.

Tenebris knelt in front of Toki and held up his hand, holding the hole of it over one of her eyes. "Watch me." He ordered quietly. He waited for her to be focused on him for a moment before he pierced the back of her soul with a tendril, draining her magic.

The grass around her steamed and caught fire, but she couldn’t exactly stomp on it to force it to extinguish. She sat on her knees, chipped arm covering her breasts as she tried to rein in her magic. Her eye lights focused on Tenebris, staring at him through the hole in his palm like he demanded, though the sharp strike from his tendril had her crying out.

As it latched on, her magic lashed, unleashed, and scorched the ground in a hot circle in defiance of his attempt at subduing it. It pounded through her marrow, a raging inferno that she had no control of. This was what she feared- losing control of her fire, of burning someone and hurting them beyond repair. This was why she never fought full bore, why she never went onto the aggressive with her family or close friends.

Toki never imagined that she would have lost herself like that. Grillby, for all of his guff, would never have hurt the children. Never. But… HAM would. And he needed to hammer that into her- and if it took hitting her upside the skull to get it, then it appeared he would do it.

She shuddered and curled into herself with a whimper. The inferno around her was steadily turning into a wildfire, consuming the grass all the way to the cement walkway not far from her. “I can’t make it stop,” she cried out. It was her fire- she should be able to control it! She’d been okay controlling it before, but she’d never fought by hand before either. She’d always summoned something, her insects or her hell hornets, and they had done the hard fighting for her. The only exception had been Vikki, and Vikki had fled with a multitude of severe burns marking her skin-

Just as she thought it would peak, however, the flames began to die down. She could feel the magic being steadily sucked back into Tenebris, and shuddered as the overload was drained away. Slowly the flames receded over her, until she was simply a naked, scorched skeleton sitting in a pile of ash with the bloody marks from biting Grillby staining her mouth.

Tenebris’ breathing was a little picked up as he took a step back, tendril releasing her as he did so, and shed his turtleneck so he could drape it over her shoulders. "It's okay Toki... It's okay..." He told her gently, hugging her tightly for a moment before Papyrus came back.

They traded positions, her husband hugging her while Tenebris went to help Grillby.

“IT'S NOT OKAY!” She sniffed quietly. His turtleneck was swiftly coated in soot, and the slow ooze from where her bones had gotten damaged by Grillby’s sword. Her ribs were admittedly the worse, though the nasty clock to her skull had reopened the scar wrapping around her horn. It oozed lazily, though his turtleneck only really touched the one on her ribs that was nastily oozing soot and magic onto it.

She was hot still, her bones heating the turtleneck uncomfortably. “I hurt him...” She could see the pile of flesh that she’d bitten out of him turning to ash and blowing away in the wind. She gave it a nauseated look. “W-we were just sparring and I hurt him. I don’t want to hurt any of you- your hands!” She spotted the blackened parts of Papyrus’ hands and gave him a wounded look. “I burned you…”

"Calm down, Toki..." he murmured, "Come on, let's go cool you down." He told her, getting up and gently pulling her with him. Tenebris had collected Grillby and teleported away, leaving Papyrus to help his wife.

“I think you killed the lawn, by the way.” Undyne hummed conversationally as she and Stag relocated the kids, and the quite flammable baby jail, to the safety of the paved sidewalk. The flames had spread, and consumed the entire inside of the sidewalks dimensions. The sidewalk, however, kept the grassfire from spreading to the tree and to the flowerbeds.

Undyne got the hose turned on, and offered it out to Papyrus, the spray nozzle keeping it from spraying immediately.

Toki tucked her chin, not really wanting to hear that she’d destroyed several years of careful landscaping. It had even survived the house fire- only to be killed by her apparent magical tantrum. Anger sizzled through her again, but more at herself for losing control, and her bones heated up a little more under Papyrus’ hands.

“Is Grillby going to be alright?” She questioned quietly. She could taste him in her mouth- fire and embers, mixed with the brimstone that had rushed from her before. It was a gross mix.

He took the hose and turned the setting to shower to cool her down, before carefully running it over her bones. "He'll be okay. I promise, Toki."

She sighed through her nasal cavity, and turned under the spray. It hit her bones and steamed immediately at first, before she cooled off enough for it to actually run down her body. She carefully kept a hand on the turtleneck, using it to cover her chest, but let the water rush down her back as she turned. It stung in the cuts on her ribs, but it washed out any soot that had gotten into it from her clothes burning away. “I hope so.” She murmured. Toki shook her head. “I acted like an animal. I can’t believe I lost myself like that… Are your hands okay? Just scorch marks?”

"Just a little charred." He assured her, smiling warmly. "But I assure you, Toki, you gave Grillby exactly what he wanted... I'm proud of you."

“If that ever happens again, and I get out of control like I was, please don’t hold onto me for so long. Just toss me away if you have to but and spray me with the hose… Don’t let me burn you, okay?” her teeth grind, too wet to make sparks, and she opens her mouth to rinse it out with the spray from the hose. “I doubt he wanted a chunk bitten out of his shoulder, Pap. I was savage.”

"That is true..." he murmured quietly, before he smiled, "Toki... I’d never toss you away." He told her honestly. "Even if you were burning up."

She hides a wince at his agreement to her savagery, and simply nods to him as she scrubs herself clean of soot and debris. “You’re too sweet, Papyrus. But seriously- the only reason I didn’t try to fry you was… actually, I’m not sure. I just sort of turned and… it was you there.” She grimaced. “Anyone else might have gotten a face full of fire.”

"Toki... I don’t fear you." He told her sternly. "No matter what, you're my wife, and I can take anything you dish out." he then clacked his teeth to the side of her skull in a soft kiss. "I love you."

Toki leaned into his kiss, despite the sting it brought to the tender crack on her skull. “I love you too,
If ever there came a day when he was afraid of her, she would know that something would be wrong. She nuzzled him gently, and then shivered. “I think I’m cooled off now. Thanks, Pap.” She gave him a tired smile, and rung out Tenebris’ turtleneck so she could cover herself with it. A small puff of magic, which came to her far easier than it usually did, dried it out and made it warm and fluffy. His turtleneck was hilariously massive on her, but it served to cover her well enough.

“So, uh, can I bring your kids over?” Undyne had a sleepy Skylar on one hip, and a wiggling, fussing Honey on the other. The tiny horned skeleton was reaching for her mother with tears in her little eyes. “Pretty sure your little girl’s upset. Skylar is chill though. You sure he’s not Sans’ kid somehow?”

“Yes, yes, come closer.” Aliquam summoned gently.

The fish monster turned off the hose, and then padded closer. She offered out the two skeletons once they were in reach.

Toki took Honey and cradled her close, leaving Papyrus to take Skylar. Stroking between her horns, Toki held her as she hiccuped and nuzzled into her neck. She huffed and puffed against her, but seemed to settle since Toki smelled more like water, instead of the ooze coming from her cracked bones. “There’s my little girl. I’m sorry you got scared, baby. Momma’s okay though, I promise.” She crooned softly.

Papyrus took Skylar and hugged him gently, kissing his head gently. He gave his daughter a fond stroke as well, but left Toki to calm her down, since her mother was the source of her anxieties. “It’s okay, little Sky. Mommy and daddy are okay, I promise.”

Skylar snuggled into his daddy and clung to him quietly. He wasn’t as upset as his sister— but he had been napping on Stag during the fight. He’d only woken at the end when Undyne had picked him up so they could move off the burning grass. Skylar tucked his skull into his Daddy’s neck, and burbled sleepily.

Honey was slowly settling against Toki, hiccuping quietly and sniffing noisily. Toki sighed and winced slightly as it expanded her ribs. “Do you think you can heal up the chips in my arms and ribs? I don’t want to ooze too much on your dad’s shirt.”

"Of course... let’s get you and the twins inside first, okay?" he purred, pecking her cheek.

Toki smiled quietly and kissed him back. "I’d like to check on Grillby after we’re done, if that’s okay. I hurt him pretty bad, and I want to make sure we’re okay." Papyrus might have said that she’d given Grillby what he wanted, but that still didn’t excuse her hurting him so badly. She had just… snapped. It wasn’t fair that Grillby got the brunt of that.

"You did!” Undyne grinned. "That was a gnarly bite. I want a scar like that- maybe not the burns, but that would be a scar worthy of telling a story about. At least you didn't get sick. I was expecting to see you spew when you came to your senses."

Toki made a face at her and a rude gesture that the fish woman gleefully returned.

"Not in front of the children!" he scolded, hiding Skylar’s eyes.

Toki gave him a sheepish look. “Honey didn’t see, if it means anything.” Their daughter hadn’t pulled from her neck, and Toki was still smoothing her hands gently along her back.

“The guppies are too young to understand the shit we’re pulling,” Undyne rolls her eye lightly, and snorts softly. “Anyways, I’ll go talk to some of the rabbits and see if any of them have any grass seed. I'll get your lawn replanted while you go get healed up- it should be grown back at least somewhat by… I dunno, June?"

"Thank you, Undyne." Papyrus nodded. "Please make sure you don’t flood the terrain again, we don’t need a repeat of what happened last time."

She made a face at him. “I’ll make sure not to flood it.” The big fish woman made an immature noise at him, and trotted off with Stag at her heels, curious to see what she was up to.

Toki shook her skull with a sigh, and then headed for inside after grabbing a corner of the baby jail to bring Sobek and Snuggle inside with them. She bounced Honey gently, and took note that she was settling into a fussy sleep. “I think it’s nap time for the twins,” She hummed gently.

"Alright. You need one as well." He told her.

“Healing, then checking on Grillby, and then I’ll nap.” She hummed softly to her husband. “I’m not pregnant anymore, love. If I nap as often as I used to, I won’t sleep as well during the night.”

He looked at her for a moment, and then sighed. "Alright, we'll put them down and then you can go check on Grillby."

“Thanks, love.” She kissed his cheek gently, and had him help her get in the house.

She settled the baby jail along the wall of the living room, leaving Sobek and snuggle inside of it for the time being, and then carefully rocked Honey. She eased her off of her neck, and then lowered her down to settle her into the baby jail with Sobek. As much as she hated to admit it, Honey slept better when she could be close to both her brother and her summons.

Snuggle shifted over, and looked up at Papyrus. The insect gave him the bug equivalent of puppy eyes, in hopes of getting to spend time with his master as well.

Aliquam smiled and after he set Skylar down in the baby jail, he gently picked Snuggle up, stroking his head gently. "Aww~" he pecked his head, and then put him with the infant.

The fat grub, which honestly looked more like a weird bug-lizard mix, rolled over as soon as he was set down and snuggled right up against Skylar.

The infant cooed contently and nestled close to his summons.

It didn’t take long for all four of them to be asleep. Toki gently draped a light blanket over top so the lights in the living room didn’t stir them, and then sighed. She shifted and stripped off Tenebris turtleneck, leaving herself bare, and took a moment to check the inside. “Good. I didn’t bleed on his shirt this time.”

"Heh heh~" He hugged her gently. "I don’t think he'd fuss over a little blood."

"No, but if I stain it then I have to clean it. That's how it works." She rolled her eye lights gently and leaned into him with a soft sigh. "Careful where you hug me, or I'll ooze on you too. At least you're in dark clothing. Why your dad wears white and off white I won't ever know."

"I think he's trying to put more color in his skin, otherwise he looks like a ghost..."

"White on white doesn't help with that." She snorted, and then turned around so he could heal her back. Her skull stung something fierce, as did her arm, but neither were life threatening. The one that was bleeding meant the marrow had been breached, and could probably get infected.
He focused his magic on her wounds and smiled as he watched it seal. “I suppose that’s true.”

Her back healed up first, and then the chips in her arms sealed. The mark on her skull healed back up again, but only as far as it had been pre-spar. Toki gave him a warm smile. "I never tire of the feel of your magic." He was light and warmth, love and happiness. The naked skeleton touched her skull lightly and sighed. "You know, I wonder why the big crack in my skull never fully healed. The rest of me did, after the fire."

"Perhaps it was inflicted in the last few seconds you were human?"

“Problem is, I don’t know when that was. It happened when I caught the beam between my horns.” Toki hums quietly, and wiggles away once she’s healed. She pads for the stairs so she can go get into clothes, and motions for him to follow. “I’m pretty sure I hadn’t been human for a while. The fire hurt, but I was walking around even as my muscles literally burnt and fell off. You… saw flashes of what it was like when you touched the red marks that used to be on my soul.”

He nodded, a grimace touching his face as he recalled the searing pain that had dropped him to his knees. It was hard to forget. "I remember, yes..."

"I'm not sure, but I think a lot of my sickness was my body literally dying around my new form." She padded into their room to get dressed. "I don't really know though. I burnt alive before we could figure out how skeletons are made from humans. You saw and experienced it through me- did you glean anything from your glimpse that I might have e missed during the event?" And she hadn't heard of any cases of humans turning into skeletons. Toki sighed as she tugged a shirt over her head, and replaced the more traditional bindings around her chest. "Can you tie these in the back please?" It helped keep her from bouncing around as she went outside. They were useful for training too.

He nodded and reached up to gently secure the bindings, so she wouldn’t be bouncing around. As much as he enjoyed them, he didn’t particularly want others enjoying his wife’s breasts either. "Here we are."

"Thanks, Pap." She smiled, and went to put on some pants while he answered her first question to him.

He took the silence for what it was, and placed a contemplative hand on his chin. "Well... let me think... I’m trying to remember clearly, but it's been a while."

"It has." Toki nods. "I don't think you can see it again either. My soul has healed, after all. The scars on it don't trigger anything when I touch them... Maybe if you did?" She gave a curious hum and buttoned her pants. She'd had to toss out all of her pre-pregnancy pants. Her hips were too wide for them now.

"You want me to try again?"

Toki didn’t need to see his face in order to practically see the disdain at that thought. Truthfully, Toki wouldn’t want to do it again either. She shakes her head and goes to slip on a pair of flip-flops. "I wouldn't want you to do something you don't want to."

"It's not that I'd be against it, you know, if it means I get to help you..."

"Papyrus, my love, it's simply a curiosity. I won't die if I never find out why it doesn't heal." She rolls her eye lights fondly. "Besides, the next time you touch my soul, I'd rather it be whenever we're trying for more kids. But, y'know, not until these two are at least done nursing." She chuckles softly.

He nodded, a light chuckle escaping him. "Of course." He laughed gently. "Alright, once everything
"Maybe heal was the wrong word." She chuckles lightly. "It's just a scar now. I just wonder why it never closed. You can't even tell my rib cage got blown out the year before last, can you? Those healed up seamlessly." She gives him a gentle smile. "I'll go check up on Grillby though. You mind keeping an eye on the kids and making sure they don't wake up alone?"

"Sure thing." He nodded. "Of course he can." Watching the children wasn’t hard work, truly. He could play some puzzle games until Toki got back. Papyrus was fairly fond of the Portal games she had gotten for his birthday, after all.

Toki leaned up to kiss him gently. "I love you." She smiled warmly, and stroked her fingers over his sharp cheekbones. "You're the best, most handsome husband ever. While I'm gone, think of what you want for dinner tonight, m'kay?"

"All right." He kissed her head gently and smiled. "And you're the best thing I could imagine ever happened to me. You, and our beautiful children." He purred. "I love you so much."

"I love you too." She smiled and nuzzled him softly. "You're my world. You, and our sweet little babies. Alright- walk me to the door?"

"Of course!" Rather than just simply walk with her back down the stairs, Papyrus playfully scooped her into his arms, and peppered her face in kisses. He quietly pranced out of their room and down the stairs, enjoying the laughter of his giggling wife as she clung to his shoulders and enjoyed the ride.

Once at the door, he set her at her feet with a broad grin.

She gave him one more kiss, as a thanks for the rather playful ride down from the second floor, and then scooted out the front door. Toki meandered at her usual pace, which was much faster than it had been months ago. She was slowly getting back into shape- and then hopefully into even better shape than before. Undyne was… enthusiastic about her trying to get into shape and finally being able to practice her magic, after all.

A stop by Tenebris' home proved that the fire monster wasn't there. So, she headed right for the bar, and slipped inside once she reached it. The bar was empty save for Grillby, Sans, and Tenebris.

Toki nervously swallowed. "How's he doing?"

Tenebris smiled gently. "He's going to be fine." He told her warmly.

To Tenebris, she smiled slightly. "I'm glad he's going to be okay."

Grillby smiled up at her when he saw her. His voice was warm and low, and rumbled across the bar to her as she slowly edged closer. "Toki, you did well in our spar. I'm proud of you."

She buzzed sharply at Grillby. "Acting like a savage doesn't mean I did good, Grillby. Yes, I fought back and did decently, but I hurt your shoulder something nasty in what should have been just a spar. Speaking of... Sorry for hurting your man, Cae."

"He insists that it’s just temporary damage." Sans replied, smiling gently, before hugging Grillby with one arm. The other rubbed over the considerable swell of his belly, massaging where a tiny lump of a foot was probably jabbing at him.

"The damage is considerable, but it's still proof that you're not just a lesser threat. That would have been fatal for a human." The elemental hummed slightly. "You did as I asked."

"Yeah. Not so much asked as demanded, though." She shuffled awkwardly. "I don't want to kill anyone though." She eyes his bandaged shoulder, and hesitantly approaches. "I... Healed Fuku's scalds that one time. Maybe my magic could help your shoulder heal?"

"Perhaps it will work. I'd like to see you try." He rumbled. "By all means, Boys, if you'd be so kind."

Sans slowly moved away while Tenebris gave Toki room. "Go ahead." Tenebris rumbled.

Toki approached, and gently rested her fingers on the bare chest of the fire elemental. His pectoral muscles were warm, and she flattened her much smaller palms over them. Toki really was very dainty compared to all of the monsters.

Her fingers spread out, and then she pushed her magic towards him. Despite Tenebris draining a fair amount from her, she still had plenty to use. Toki mused that this was likely what a true boss heart could do. One whose soul wasn't damaged, that was. Toki exhaled gently, and guided the heat of her magic towards his shoulder, hoping to heal him.

He hummed gently and closed his eyes as he focused on receiving the magic to heal his shoulder. He guided it along with small pulses of his own magic, and felt the flesh of his shoulder tingle and pulse, slowly growing back and filling out what had been taken. By the end of it, Grillby settled and smiled up at her, with marginally less damage than when she had came int. "That helped considerably, thank you, Toki."

She nodded quietly and frowned. "I don't know how much that healed with the bandage on..." But she didn't want to take it off in case he was still bleeding, or oozing. She exhaled slightly, and stepped back. Her shoulders rolled lightly, and she shuffled her toes awkwardly. "Maybe not go after my kids in a spar next time? I don't like knowing I literally bit a chunk out of you."

She was civil, damn it, not some savage animal.

He chuckled lightly, "Yes of course. I'll be more careful next time."

Toki nodded. "Good." She sighs softly. "You know, it kind of sucks trying to spar when I can't summon a physical weapon. That whip I tried to make was terrible and half-assed."

"Perhaps we'll see if you can next time we train."

"Undyne and I tried." She shook her head slightly and sighed. "I can only conjure bees, not weapons. I can breathe fire like a dragon though, apparently."

The pregnant skeleton on the bar whistled lightly. "That's pretty damn cool o' you, Sis."

"So can you when you sneeze, apparently." Toki eyed her brother in law lightly. "Pregnancy fun, neh?"

He closed his mouth at that, before he looked away. "... Neh." Was all he replied.

Toki experimentally gathered magic in her skull, and exhaled in an attempt to puff out a tiny flame. It shot out her eye socket, making her squawk and bat at her face. "Okay, I need to practice at that."

That got a laugh from the men around her. "That was cute." Sans commented dryly.
She stuck her tongue out at him. "Just wait. You'll have a baby skelemental and my niece or nephew will sneeze fire at all the adorable but horribly timed moments."

“… Skelemental?”

Chapter 79

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This was originally going to be a short chapter, but like all things in this damn fanfic, it ran away from us. XD Well then. We were planning probably 2k words, if that- and ended up with well over 5k.

Silverwing Notes: Sometimes there's great battles, sometimes there's wounds that take weeks to heal...

and then there's this precious shit

enjoy the chapter~

Her practice was upped to twice per week. She would work with Grillby for one of the days, learning fire manipulation and how to better control her flames- including making weapons from them and breathing fire out of the correct area- and metaphorically exercising her magical muscles. Though it was slow, since he was still healing from the nasty bite she gave him. Training with Undyne was done on another day. The fish monster took over strengthening her physical skills, and making her stronger for her size and getting her into decent shape.

Truthfully, Toki was in better shape now than she ever had been. She could run for more than a few minutes without getting severely winded now. It was slow but steady progress.

Of course, being chased by a spear wielding shark-toothed maniac was motivation enough to make anyone run for longer. Undyne was a tough love sort of teacher with adults- not nearly so with kids. If Undyne got too much out of hand, Toki let her know with words- and if words didn’t work, bees made a wonderful persuasion tactic to make her listen.

Undyne’s ferocity unnerved Toki about as much as Toki’s swarms of flaming bees unnerved the fish woman.

That was to say, quite a lot.

When she wasn’t practicing, she was taking care of the twins, writing, and keeping in contact with the police station. They’d gotten a few sparse leads on Humans Against Monsters, but nothing had panned out yet. Toki was holding out on the hopes of them nailing the terrorist organization hard.

Today broke up her usual routine though- her husband was home, and it wasn’t his scheduled day off, either.

Toki crept out of the nursery silently, her bare feet barely making a sound on the tile as she eased the door partly closed. She left it open enough for them to hear, but for the noises of the night time house activities not to disturb the sleeping twins and their summons.

Toki eased down the stairs, and made it out to the living room where Papyrus was waiting. Her husband had, once again, pulled something in his shoulder. How a skeleton could pull something, she didn’t know, but he was sore and had to take the day off.

So, thusly, she was going to give him a rub down. They had to wait for the twins to settle down for the night, however, to really get into it. They’d been fussy most of the day, picking up on their father’s discomfort, and hadn’t settled down for their usual naps. They’d have done it while they were up, but Honey liked to try and help, and as much as she loved having her daughter join her for usual things, eating the massage oil was not healthy for her.

They had several hours before they would try to wake up, though. She’d put them to bed with full bellies, after half an hour or so of feeding in the rocking chair, so they would sleep like little logs.

Toki snagged the bottle of massage oil, specifically formulated for monsters and beings that didn’t have skin like other critters, before sliding into the living room. Mettaton was a ghost, after all, and the star did enjoy his massages. It was one of the few MTT brand items that she really used.

The couch had been moved, pushed back and away from the coffee table, for a large expanse of floor space to be opened. After layering multiple blankets and pillows along the tile floor, it had been made into a soft surface for the skeletons to rest on.

“Alright,” She hummed softly, “Strip off your shirt and lay on your front, dear. Lets get you rubbed down, and see if a hot bath after can help ease your aches, yeah?” Toki had gotten some lessons from Sans about rubbing bones properly- as he gave the best massages- when Papyrus had come home several months back with something strained. The life of a guard wasn’t always easy.

Papyrus looked at her with a shaky smile, a pained look in his eyes as he removed his shirt before he lay down, vocalizing in pain when he shifted something wrong. "F-Fuck... I really did it this time..." He groaned.

Toki eased up behind him, and carefully straddled his pelvis. She curled her knees gently into his sides, and then spread a bit of the oil into her palms. Rubbing it to spread it around her hands, and to warm it with her magic, she hummed soothingly to him. “You work yourself too hard,” She scolds gently. “You should take more than just one day off, Papyrus.” Still, despite her scolding, she settles her hands gently along his spine at the base of his pelvis, and begins to massage. She intends to work upwards, letting the heat of her magic and the soothing qualities of the oil ease his aches. Her poor husband really had done a number on himself.

"Nnn... Nyeh..." He made quiet sounds as she began to work on him, his eyes slowly lulling closed as he enjoyed her soothing touch. "Oh stars Toki, you are too good to me~"

Toki quirked a gentle smile, and worked up his vertebrae. “You would do the same for me,” she purred. “Besides, I don’t like to see you hurting. If I can help, I fully intend to do so. Let me know if I hurt you by accident, okay? I’ll go over it lighter until it doesn’t hurt anymore.”

"Nnnhh~" he moaned gently in response, settling himself on the pillows as he hugged them tight to his chest. The pain definitely stung something awful, and Aliquam was less than happy at his predicament, but he was undeniably pleased at his mate's gentle touch. Each caress, each rub and application of pressure made him exhale or moan quietly in enjoyment. "Ahh... nyeh..."

She took her sweet time working up his spine, carefully checking between the vertebrae to make sure nothing was caught between them. Toki smiled, enjoying each of his pleased little sounds as she worked up his back. When she reached his ribs, she eased her fingers between them and rubbed, stroking firmly and easing the heated oil between them. Rubbing oil into bone was an odd thing, even more so when the magic based product was absorbed into him like lotion on skin.
Toki smiled coyly, and kissed the back of his skull as she worked her way up towards his shoulders. He had a lot of ribs, and each rib got the same thorough and gentle treatment. “You know,” she hums softly, “I love the noises you make when I get my hands on you.” Was that a shameless flirt? Yes. Yes it was.

"Mmmhhh...." he moaned when she kissed his skull, then he chuckled and looked over his shoulder at her, eyes gleaming gently in amusement. "You silly woman.” he chuckled, before he winced and gasped sharply. "A-Ah!"

Her fingers had found a particularly tense spot along his scapula, and laid gently into it. “I’m your silly woman,” She purred softly. Her fingers eased under the edge of his left shoulder blade, and paused, before working her fingers further under. She fished around, and nudged something. “Love, I think you’ve got a rock lodged between your scapula and your ribcage. Isn’t this the shoulder that was hurting?”

"Nnh... Yes..." He whined softly.

She nudged it lightly, and it gave just a little bit with a noisy sound of stone against bone. She grimaced. “Alright,” She soothed softly, “I’m gonna lube up your shoulder something good, okay? Then I’ll get the rock out. It’s gonna hurt- but I’ll make the pain go away after, I promise.” Her husband was a royal guard- he was tough as nails. But, in her experience with her brothers, even the toughest man could be reduced to the biggest crybaby when faced with the oddest of wounds.

Toki liberally squirted oil between his shoulder and the rest of his bones, and then began to work it deeper around the rock.

He keened quietly and nodded before she started her treatment. He was mostly quiet about it, but when she succeeded in dislodging the rock, he gasped loudly, before he sighed in relief and let his head drop into the pillows. "Oh god... it's out...” He sighed.

Toki tossed the rock where he could look at it if he wanted, and sunk her fingers back under his scapula. Fire magic coiled in her hands, and she pulsed it into his bones, warming and relaxing them much like she had for Tenebris on several occasions. “You did good,” She cooed softly to him and nuzzled the back of his skull. “A little rock can sure put a kink in everything, hm?” Her thumbs massaged and worked over his shoulder, seeking to make the pain of the rock disappear.

"Oooohh..." He sighed and moaned gently in relief as his eyes lulled closed. "Thank you, Tokiko~" he cooed weakly.

She smiled and buzzed softly for him. Her fingers kneaded and massaged, and she worked over his other shoulder and the rest of his back slowly. Her hands ended up on his shoulders, with her having had to scoot further up his back so she could properly reach. “Anything for you.” The shorter skeleton was glad she could be of some use to her husband. “I don’t mind doing this, you know that. I love you- that’s reason enough to spoil you.”

"Nyeh heh heh heh~" He cooed happily and hugged the pillow under him, going to settle down and relax under her loving care. He really did have the best wife, no bones about it.

Toki smiled and continued to rub for some time. Once all of the oil had been rubbed in, and his body was sufficiently relaxed and eased, Toki eased down and layed across his back. Her breasts pressed softly between his shoulders as she made use of her smaller frame and used him for a bed. She wasn't idle, though. Toki acted like one giant heating pad to continue to soothe his bones. Heat, and alternatively cold sometimes too, could do wonders to soothe pain. "I love your laugh," she smiled, "it's absolutely adorable." Married or not, romance and flirtation were not something that would ever "Mmmhh..." he closed his eyes and sighed gently. "I love you so much~" he cooed, "And you make me laugh."

"Laughter is one of the key components to a healthy relationship." She kisses his shoulder, tasting him and the oil lightly against her teeth. "Laughter, communication, affection, understanding- there’s a lot of things key to a healthy relationship." Toki sighs contently, and relaxes on top of him.

"And massages, because you are just so good at that." He murmured.

She giggled lightly. "Those too. You know, I teased your dad back in the early stages of my pregnancy about taking up a third occupation as a massage therapist with my fire based magic. You should have seen his face. He was so disapproving of me taking even more onto my plate. This was before you all got your rights- back when I was doing mountains of paperwork daily." She had been basically a paperwork ninja.

Looking back, Toki wasn’t sure how she managed all of that without getting behind. It seemed unreal.

"Well you know this totally could work if you wanted to do that." He purred loudly. "You're really good at it~"

Toki laughed gently and kissed the back of his neck affectionately. Her teeth nibbled teasingly.
"Maybe when the kids are in school. I want them to be raised by a mother, not a nanny. With both of us working outside the home, someone else would be left to raise the kids, pretty much. My work thus far is mostly at-home sort of stuff. Speaking of- one of my books might be becoming a movie series. I just heard from my editor- she’d like to discuss it with me later once she hammers out some details."

He chuckled quietly at the nibbles and hummed affectionately, letting his rumble vibrate up through his bare bones and into her chest. "That's wonderful~"

"I thought so too." She smiled slightly. "It'd be a big boost to household funds." Of which, they weren't really lacking, but there was no such thing as too much money. They’d have something to fall back on if anything happened.

Her phone goes off and vibrates noisily between her pelvis and his. She groans, and fishes it out of her front pocket. "I just got comfortable," she whined fussily. Without checking the number, Toki hit accept, put it on speaker, and set it on the pillow next to her and Papyrus so she could snuggle back down on his back. "Toki here," She hummed softly to whoever was on the other line. "Who’s this?"

"Hello, my dear Kindness. Despite all that's happened, it's good to hear you so positive, you've maintained that habit."

Toki tensed on her husbands back, and shot a tight look at the phone. Only one person called her that- and Cruelty's voice oozed smoothly from her phone speakers. Her teeth curled into a snarl.
"Cruelty." She said evenly. "It's been a long time since you've bothered to call. I had hoped you'd given up after you failed spectacularly with Tenebris."

"The beast had a powerful sense of will, even when he reverted to his bloodsake. I knew it would not last long." He hummed. "Everything was played as per the plan."

Toki knew Papyrus was listening, and knew the bigger skeleton was taking note of everything Cruelty said. The smaller woman swallowed slightly. "So it was your plan to have him fail at killing anyone? That’s so mild. Murdering good people isn’t above you; after all, your followers killed my brother, orphaned a young boy, and killed several other monsters.” She sighs loudly. “Why do you even bother calling me, Cruelty?”

Aliquam’s eyes narrowed as he sat up and he growled quietly.

"I apologize for your loss, truly. Your brother was a good man... He had earned a purple heart, had he not?"

Her husband sitting up neatly dumped her off of his back. She didn’t care, however, and huddled up tensely in the pillows. She stared at the phone as if it was the man himself talking to her. “He did.”

She replied tensely. “He didn’t deserve to die like that. You and yours are hurting hundreds of people like Han with everything you’re doing. The Humans Turned Monsters are people who were like Han- and what you and Humans Against Monsters are doing is wrong, Cruelty. Why... Why do you insist on doing this? I know you think Monsters- and myself apparently- have wronged you... But... Why? Everyone deserves a second chance to redeem themselves. Why won’t you give them one? They’re good people. All of them are good people.”

"An opening of redemption is only the same as an opening of betrayal a second time.” He hummed evenly through the phone. “We are smart. We are careful. We are superior because we do not allow openings."

Toki didn't like the sound of that. She shot a mildly frantic look to Papyrus- he was in charge of planning guard shifts, so he would know if there were openings anywhere.

Papyrus didn’t like the sound of that either.

"Sometimes it's worth the risk of trying so you can find peace within yourself... Though that didn't answer my question, Cruelty." To her credit, her voice shook only a little bit. Toki crossed her legs and trembled quietly. "Why? You've had... Countless lifetimes to find and... And take your revenge against... Against my prior lives. When will it be enough? When will the killing stop?"

"When this all stops, Kindness.” His voice over the phone took on a sharp tone. "When the monsters finally die off. And we die together, and stay dead.” He growled.

"When we die together...?” Confusion glimmered across her face and through her words. When they stayed dead? She knew he apparently reincarnated or something, but she didn’t get memories or anything like them.

"The balance in no longer in synchronization, our sides will never again stand as equals, there is only the victor and the loss!” Frustration lingered in his voice.

"I don't understand," she said slowly, hesitantly. "The balance of what? Our... Our sides aren't equal because you seek mass genocide. That... That's on par with Hitler, Cruelty. And if you know anything from history, is that it always repeats. You... You will lose this fight in the long run, just like he did.” She was so, so sure of that.

"But do you really believe that?" Cruelty murmured. "You stuttered.”

"I..." Did she? There... There was a lot to consider, a lot to think about. Their sides weren’t equal-they couldn’t be. She would like to think he had the capacity to be an equal, but... His actions...

She swallowed and shook her head slightly. "I do. So long as we have hope, family, love on our side, and let kindness guide our actions, we'll win. The rest of the world is against you, Cruelty. I believe good will triumph. But... There is the capacity for good and evil in everyone. I... Might be Kindness to you, but I'm more than just my soul color. I am Toki. And... You're more than just Cruelty too. You could be kind too, if you wanted." Just as she could be cruel. Every fiber of her being, of her soul, cried out against the idea, but no one was perfect. She knew she would never be intentionally cruel to anyone.

But that didn't mean she wasn't capable of it. Toki just chose not to- and that, she thought, was the major difference between her and Cruelty.

"I could be kind... or I can be merciless. Either way, it ends the same." He growled, before he snapped. "IT DOESN'T END! We die, and you are the one allowed blissful ignorance."

Toki swallowed sharply and closed her sockets. “It’s not my fault that you’re the one cursed with having your memories in tact, Cruelty. Maybe it’s karma for what you’ve done and did?”

"No... It's not your fault... nor is it Karma. It's our curse. I have found you in every past lifetime. Did you know that? I've watched you grow and I’ve seen you loved. But only in one of our lives after the barrier was put up was my love your own." He growled softly.

“You... you talk about it like you haven’t been loved since then. Surely... Surely you’ve found love since then? You must have had brothers, sisters, parents? They... They would have loved you. You could have loved them, if you let them in.” She shuddered. He... He sounded so crazed- but living as long as he had claimed to? It was little wonder. She had to wonder how monsters avoided going insane from living such long lives. It must have been the company that they kept, the love of their bonds and friendships keeping them going. Toki shuddered again, and leaned into Papyrus. “How is it our curse? Why are we connected? How are we connected? It doesn’t make sense. You said long ago that we were... We were lovers, and that the monsters had something to do with... with us- my past life and you- not being anymore.”

"The magicians. All those years ago, my dear... We were perfection. We were a balanced force. Our power was harnessed and controlled for the sake of good, and yet those accursed mages sought to tear us apart." He snarled. "We wanted to reach out, didn't we... We all wanted to branch out and teach to the multi-verse our potential! And our punishment was our separation."

“Wait, what? Our separation?” She balked. “If... If we were so powerful,” As Powerful as Grillby had told her that the Boss and Anti-hearts were, “Then how did mere magicians ‘separate’ us?” He wasn’t making total sense, but it was likely that he was lost in his anger. “What... do you mean the Multi-verse? There’s only one universe- and it’s the one we live in.”

"Oh, that's where you're wrong." he chuckled, "There is indeed a multiverse... You'd dream of it..."

“I... I what?” She frowns. “I... I know I’ve had some weird dreams, but... That... that’s not possible.” But... It had felt so real. Then... Then it was real. Panic lit her eye lights up, and she stared in horror at the phone, before glancing to Papyrus. So... She’d really... She’d really seen another version of her self get killed by Papyrus? Or that world’s version of Papyrus, at any rate.

"It is. And you witnessed your lives." he purred. He was silent for a moment, seeming to gather himself based on the shuffling coming over the speaker. "You know more than you let on, my lovely Kindness." he told her with a now sane-sounding, casual voice. "You're not an idiot. Think about it." He told her.

“But... you couldn’t have known I witnessed their lives...” She ground her teeth, sending sparks over her clothes. “I... I don’t know what to think.” He had handed her a lot of information.
"You’ve… referenced the word ‘balance’ a couple of times, I think. Or at least, that’s the word that stuck out to me the most.” She didn’t know why it did. “What does ‘balance’ mean to you, Cruelty?”

"Not the same as you apparently." he told her. "We. We were balance. That was our souls element... I was not cruelty. You were not kindness. We were harmony."

"Balance?" Information was swirling in her head. It was overwhelming- it felt like she should know all of this, but she didn’t at the same time. Toki clutched a hand to her skull and whimpered. "You’re... saying we were once one in the same? We were one person? One being?” That’s what she was gathering from this. Her soul fluttered in panic. How could they have been one? How could they have been split so unevenly that whoever had split them called them Kindness and Cruelty? Who had the power to do such a thing? They were supposed to be the most powerful of all of the mages... weren’t they?

"Yes Toki. We were one, and I was so pleased to feel so important. We were admired, we were appreciated. We were mentors and we had a chance to make great leaps in the history of mankind!"

Toki swallowed, her shoulders slinking lower. There was a vague, aching feeling inside of her soul as he spoke, like hers was calling to something long lost. “But... What happened? Why were we split? Who... Who had the power to split us?” She asked quietly, sockets dimly opening. She was listening. “If we were doing such good things... was it because we... wanted to help the multiverses?”

There was something needling at her about this, and more than just the overwhelming knowledge that she and Cruelty had been one. They had been one person- one soul. They’d literally been one entity- she had been him, he had been her- could... Could she have ended up like him? If given a different track of life... She... She could have...

"Magic. Magic tore us apart- and yes. We wanted NOTHING from our actions! We learned, and we taught. And we wanted to keep teaching across the timelines. Look at what happened... If we simply took what we had instead of listening and taking sides with the monsters, we would still be perfection incarnate, we would be happy! We would be one. That is why I lead these people. For the truth! The truth that you cannot deny any longer."

Toki looked more and more stricken the longer that he talked. She shuddered, eye lights blinking out as she squeezed them tightly shut. Flickers of thoughts and memories reached her, nothing clear and coherent enough for her to keep. They slid through her mind like oil on water. If humans hadn't taken sides, if Cruelty hasn't decided to live up to the moniker the Monsters had given him... they would have been one. That was her main thought. But... A small, small part of her thought he was right. If the monsters hadn't coined Cruelty for being Cruelty, perhaps... Perhaps...

She hung up the phone with a click and buried her skull shamefully into her palms. A long, low keen escaped her and she trembled like a leaf in the wind. No, no, no, no, no...

"Toki..." Papyrus had stayed at her side to listen to every word and he hugged her tightly as she curled up. "Hey..."

“It’s true,” she whispers. “What he says is true. I... I feel it in my soul.” She whimpers, leaning into his hug shakily. “I... I was one with him. I was one being. I could feel it as he was talking- whatever he said triggered... I don’t know, but... but I know, and I don’t know, and it’s confusing- I don’t... I don’t know what to think...” She was overwhelmed by the knowledge that he had given her. “And I... I... Some small part of me agreed with what he said, and I...” She was a terrible person. She knows it’s wrong- The monsters didn’t deserve what happened to them. The large portion of her would always think that- but knowing what she did now, knowing what he had told her- it put a whole new perspective on everything.

Toki sobbed, trying not to babble in panic between her tears.

He held her tightly and stroked her head as he hushed her. "Shhh... Shhh."

Toki thankfully kept her sobs down- the twins upstairs stirred over the bonds but didn’t wake, and she strove to be quieter. She wasn’t sure how she could calm them when she herself was a mess of nerves and nauseated disgust at herself.

Toki didn’t manage to speak again until her sobs died down. And that task was a long one- but one eventually done. She shuddered, caught between anger, panic, and disgust. “It’s not going to be okay,” she whispered shakily. “I… It’s all so much…” She swallowed. “I… I used to be a single entity with him, Papyrus. I… We used to be the same person. But… But… Whatever… Happened… It made us like this, and… And then…” Presumably mages happened- the Monsters told what the soul colors meant, and mages and humans alike shunned Cruelty and the other Anti-hearts. “It doesn’t… It doesn’t make what they did right,” she whispered. Her hands clutched at her skull. Memories weren’t coherent- that, she recalled, was not her gift.

She paled suddenly, bones bleaching a whiter white. “The dreams…” She whimpered. “They’re real…”

He listened to her words and stroked her head when she seemed most distressed, but at the last things she whimpered… He paused. “Toki... What Dreams?”

“You… You remember the camping trip? Not… Not long after Tenebris got back?” She sniffled quietly. “Remember I told you about… about the dream where an… angrier, darker version of you mercy killed me after your father b-beat me badly? That’s… That’s the dream he was talking about. I… had another one too, just a little bit before the twins were born.” A laugh left her, but it wasn’t a nice one. It was torn between frantic and despairing- because she didn’t want to believe she had witnessed her own death. “I was cruelty, and it was some ass backwards world where you were a lazy mega-hung stoner and your brother was a hyperactive chatterbox and we had several kids and we were all three lovers and I just thought it was a weird pregnancy dream like the time I dreamed your spaghetti proposed to marry me.”

She cut her ramble off and laughed again, that same broken hysterical sound. “I watched a not-me-but-me die by a not-you-but-you’s hands.”

He listened as he held her and he stroked her head before he hushed her gently. "Toki... Toki... You're you... and you're here. You're here with me... You're here with our children and me. And that's never going to change."

She hiccup quietly, and leans into him more. Her fingers shake as they latch onto him. She needs grounding- and he is her rock, as she’s said before. “But it might,” she sniffs. “It might. H-he’s not going to stop, and eventually it’s going to be him or me and I don’t know if I can kill anyone…” She whispers. Her eye lights light up, and glimmer up at him with a shaky look. “Pap… I don’t… I don’t know how I’m going to handle this. He’ll die and then he’ll come back again and again until he wins.”

"Toki... we won't let him win." he told her, "Remember he'll be an infant, he'll be a child... he wont come back already grown and with his army. He'll have to go through all the stages of life again... and you know what? Maybe he'll know better."
Toki sniffled quietly. “He’s gone through so many already, Pap. He’s been born again and again and again- and I think each time has made it worse. He remembers everything- and if he told anyone, he’d probably be put in an institution or something. He’s not going to stop- he’s only going to get worse. What if he’s reborn as an HTM next time? Can you imagine him with all of his magical properties again?” She would say he was already an HTM, but… The chances of HAM allowing an HTM to lead them was slim.

"If he comes back as an HTM, then he's not going to grow up the same way, memories will remain but they will be... different."

His wife leaned more heavily into him, bones shivering. “In one of the other worlds, in the dream I experienced, I was Cruelty.” She murmured softly. “And I was... Different. So old. So tired. I remember feeling ready for it all to end, but knowing that it wouldn’t ever... It was disheartening. I lost hope- but... I found it in monsters. I don’t... Understand why Cruelty couldn’t have taken another approach. I think he’s too... Too lost in hopelessness and anger to find another path, Pap. It’s people who have nothing to lose that will do the worst things- and I think... I think that’s what scares me most.” She whispered.

He hugged her tightly and hushed her gently, stroking her head and back as comfortingly as he could. "Demons run when a good man goes to war..." he murmured, "But of a man with a broken heart and spirit..."

“He will run no more.” She finished gently, and shuddered against him. “Cruelty is broken, Papyrus. He is broken in ways neither of us will understand. It doesn’t justify his actions- but... I’m ashamed at myself that I can understand some of why he did it. I’m ashamed that... some small part of me thought, for a split second, that he was right. If... Monsters hadn’t... informed the world what soul colors meant...” She shakes her head vehemently. “Monsters only meant for humans to be wary, to know what they were dealing with, and to know the possibilities for misdeeds that someone of a specific soul color could do. It’s... It’s the fault of Cruelty, and the other Anti-hearts, that they gave in and proved to the world that they were right. We... We all have the capacity to be more than our soul color. We can be kind, we can be cruel, we can be brave, cowardly, determined, corrupt- we all have that capacity. That’s human nature. They... They chose the wrong path. And that’s the difference.” She was coming to realizations as she babbled, her soul, so, so old, older than she was, pulsing in a more rapid tandem.

Boss hearts reincarnated too- but they didn’t retain memories. Not conscious ones. The soul knew, but the mind did not. The soul was ageless, and so, so old. She wondered how many lives she had lived, how many choices she had made.

“Choice. That’s what differentiates boss hearts from anti-hearts. We... We chose, time and time again to do the right thing.” Her soul pulsed in her chest, almost painfully so, and her hand splayed on her sternum as she gave a slightly pained sound. Her soul was glowing brighter behind her shirt. “I could have been like that- there are times in my youth where I saw two distinct paths, and I chose the better of them. Cruelty chose to walk the dark path- and I always chose the light. This... Magic did this to us. Magic made us two equal parts, light and dark- but Magic didn’t balance the light and dark in either of us. We are too light, and too dark.”

He sighed and nodded, nuzzling his head to the top of her skull. "You are not too light. I think you're perfect where you are. You're kind, and you have mercy, but you do not lack the will the fight. You choose your kind heart. You chose to help us like this." Papyrus murmured firmly against her skull. "That's all that matters to me."

“Thank you...” She whispered softly, sockets closing. She pressed her face to his shoulder and took deep, shuddering breaths, letting his scent calm her.

It took a long time for the painful pulsing of her soul to ease, and for the all-consuming panic to stop feeling like it was overwhelming and drowning her.

When she was calmer, she leaned back quietly and looked up at him. “I… I do not want to fight. I will fight if pushed, but fighting isn’t my inherent answer.” Even after having grown up with her brothers for as long as she had, and getting into friendly scuffles with them on more than one occasion, fighting was not her first answer. Fighting should never be the first answer. “But… sometimes it is the only answer. Reasoning didn’t work with him… Papyrus? Eventually I will have to fight him. I don’t… Killing him isn’t the answer though. I don’t… know what is the answer. But it isn’t killing. I don’t… know what to do…”

"Tokiko. Toki..." he told her gently, trying to coax her off the topic, "Toki... The answer isn’t killing... but I trust you... you’ll find the answer."

She could see his coax for what it was. It was a common tactic to help someone calm down. She scrubbed her cheeks with her hand, removing the magic staining them, and nodded slowly. Topic shifting wasn't immediate though, but he had her now on possibilities. "Yeah... I don't know what the answer will be though. Unless there's a way to keep a soul from shattering after you die, he's going to reincarnate eventually. Humans only live so long, and Cruelty is probably my age, if not older. He probably only has another thirty to forty years. Even if we manage to capture him and put him in prison..." She shakes her head. "It doesn't matter. There's no way to do it, so... It's fine. We'll... Figure something out. I need to do something though or I'm going to go crazy. Think Undyne would be upset if I made cookies for all of the guards?"

"..." He looked at her, then he sighed, "It doesn't matter... yeah..." he then slowly smiled, "heh... I don't think she'd mind at all... you know..."

Toki sighed softly and gave him a wobbly smile. She had a lot of things to think about. "We need to tell everyone that he called again. Wish I had thought to record it... Anyways, it doesn't matter if she minds at this point. Stress cookies are a thing. If your back is feeling okay, you can join me in the kitchen?"

"I'll give Father a call to let him know, but my back is definitely better thanks to you. Of course I'll join you." he answered, giving her cheeks a few loving kisses.

"Please do. I don't think I can relay it without losing composure. You... Might want to talk with Undyne about doubling the guard. At least for a little while. He only calls when he has something planned." She meets a couple of his kisses with gentle ones of her own, and the gets to her feet. She's a little wobbly, but she stabilizes and offers him a hand up. "Want me to bake anything specific for you?"

"I'll take care of it, I promise" he told her, taking her offered hand to get up before he shook his head, "Go ahead and just work on the cookies."

Toki stepped closer to hug him and nodded against his chest. Hugs before cookies, always. "I don't know what I'd do without you." She sighs softly. "Probably be a panicked mess hiding in a corner or something."

"Well then it's better I stay with you, eh?" he purred gently, nuzzling her.

She nuzzled him back and nodded. "Definitely." She leaned up to kiss him softly, and then stepped back. "Keep me company after your phone call?"
“You know I will.”

"Good." She smiled at him, passed him her phone and then headed off for the kitchen.

She wasn’t okay. Not by a long shot. But... She would have to be. Toki was a mom now, and she had to protect her children. If that meant... Planning for Cruelty, then she would have to do it.
Chapter 80

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Alternate title for this chapter: ‘How To Improperly Finish Gestating Your Skelemental’

Silverwing Notes: So, this has a more complicated childbirth than chapter 75 did, there will be details that might make some men squeamish (I only say that because Women know this song and dance already, whether as a mother themselves or had before bore witness to childbirth.) Other than that, enjoy the chapter ^^

"Happy April fool's day!" Toki chirped cheerily to Sans as she stepped into the upper part of the bar. The twins were out with Papyrus on a self imposed 'take your kids to work day' that all of the guards were participating in.

The guards had been doubled after Cruelty called, and there were no guards left alone or unattended. The guards were all well-fed too- Toki had been stressed since the call, and had baked every day. Hoards of cookies went out of her house per day.

She had even sent a literal car load up to the castle with Tenebris.

He had gone up a couple days prior to visit his lover, and spend a little time up there before the final countdown for his youngest grandchild's birth.

Toki had taken it upon herself to spend some time with Sans- and Undyne had threatened to trash her kitchen if she kept fattening up the guards with loads of stress cookies.

So the woman had brought cookies for her brother in law.

Toki hefted the plate up and put them on his counter, before padding out into the main room to see him. She was tired- she hadn't been getting a lot of sleep thanks to Cruelty. Nightmares were an unpleasant part of her nightly life again. On top of the nightmares, the twins were painfully perceptive of when something was off, and had her up at all hours because they wanted to be held and comforted. Toki looked tired too, with dark marks under her sockets.

Still, she had a warm smile for Sans as she moved closer. Grillby was down in the bar handling business as usual. "I was surprised you're not down doing your whoopee cushion trick on all of the patrons today, Sans. Isn't today your favorite not-holiday of the year?"

"It is, but I've been feeling a little off today." he answered, shrugging from where he was worrying over a cup of cocoa on the couch. "Something's up... It's... not normal."

"No?" She tilted her head lightly and eased down on to the couch with him. Toki set a couple cookies down in front of him, in case he wanted to eat them. "What are you feeling?" She inquired gently. Toki was well aware of what the last couple weeks felt like. "It's been a while, but I still remember the end of my pregnancy quite well." Despite having a serious case of pregnancy brain to boot- it was quite impressive
"The kid is more active then I’d like..." He grimaced, and pressed his fingers into the top of his belly. It wasn’t visible through his jacket, but there was a set of feet shoving up to his ribs. "I'm starting to wonder... what the fuck's goin on with them, is it okay?"

"Active?" She inquired lightly. Toki tilted her head and scooted closer. "If you have a flashlight, we can take a look at them? It might feel more active since you're so close, but it's likely that they're running out of space." She gave him a soothing smile, and laughed gently as well. "Movement is normal. Lack of movement entirely for long periods of time isn't good, however. You had me worried, like sudden pain or something else."

"I mean, I’m getting that too..." As if the timing was pre-set, Caeruleus hissed in pain as a cramp washed over him and he stiffened on in his seat for a moment, before he shuttered and slumped, looking at her with a shaky smile. "Heh... yeah..."

She frowned slightly. "Is it like... A tightening feeling? Sort of rolls up from your pelvis, up to the peak of your belly, and holds for a while? How often are they?" He was early, two weeks early, but then and again she had been two weeks late. Fire elementals gestated different than skeletons did. It was possible... But also Braxton Hicks were a thing. The bane of her existence too.

He nodded gently, "Yeah, that sounds about right... They've been happening a lot more frequently today..."

"If they're closer together and lasting longer, then it's likely contractions." She smiled lightly. "False starts or real starts- they happen." She reached out gently, and rubbed her fingers gently over the peak of his belly. "Have they been spotty, or pretty consistent?"

"They're getting consistent, and it's freaking me out." He murmured, eye lights trailing up to her face uncertainly. "Is it cool if I stay with you, Tokes?" He asked quietly.

"I'll stay with you." She promised with a soft smile. With Tenebris out at the castle, with Todd there for lessons, she, Grillby, and Papyrus had the most experience to help Caeruleus. "I know it's a bit of a personal question, but... Have your, uh, parts summoned below and not gone away?" Hers had summoned on her delivery date, but it had been two weeks until she delivered.

"... Am I close to havin' the kid already?" Sans nervously inquired.

"If your parts summoned, then yeah. Mine summoned two weeks before I had the twins." She rubbed her fingers along his belly, massaging and seeking to help keep him relaxed as best she could. "Your little ball of sunshine has to come out sometime, after all. You're two weeks early, but we have to take into account the difference between your mate and mine. Skeletons change to meet the breeding needs of their mates." Toki quirked a gentle grin at him. "If the cramps get to be too much, I can give you a backrub with you sitting in the tub. Hot water helps. God, it helps."

He took a soft breath and tucked his hands into his coat-pockets, smiling at her gently. "I wouldn't mind that... but if I went into labor, wouldn't Grillby be unable to help...?"

"Only if you stayed in the tub." She quirked a grin. "I was in the tub for a while, and then Pap and Papa moved me. You'll probably want to wash off anyways. I dunno if you saw your dad's car, but if your water breaks, it's gonna be messy." Not all waters broke after all. There were children born with the sacks in tact, but not often. None of her brothers had that. "Anyways, birthing in the tub wouldn't be that comfortable. Your bottom gets tender, and porcelain is not plush and comfortable. Did you and Grillby discuss methods and positions that you are comfortable with?"

"You're the woman, you know more about this shit than I do." He laughed nervously. It was almost odd seeing the larger male this uneasy about having a child. One could only wonder how much one would pity the human male set with this sort of task... "As for positions, we did talk about it, but we don't know for the most part about how this would go... you know?"

"That's sexist." She quirked a brow at him, but offered a soothing smile. His nerves were visible, plain as day, and she read them like an open book. "I know that quite well. Really, positions are up to you and how you feel. You saw my position with Papyrus when you popped in. It made me feel safe, comforted, and supported. Those are important things to feel during that time. If it helps keep you feeling comfortable, then you should go with that. Have you practiced any positions to know how they feel?"

"I found that I really like one of those larger body pillows tucked at the base of my spine. Makes the weight shift a bit." The larger being explained gingerly.

"That's a common thing for pregnancy in general." She chuckled. "Pillows are basically a saving grace. Heh... Positions don't have to be with a partner though, if that's not your thing. There are singular positions, such as crouching, squatting and bracing against a bed or a couch- lots of variants." She leans back, taking her hands away from his belly and looking at him contemplatively.

"Hm..." he took a moment to consider any positions he took fancy to during his time of later-pregnancy relaxing. "Spooning with Grillbz was always nice."

"You might take comfort in having him behind you then... Assuming he's the big spoon?" She wiggles her brows playfully at him. "Speaking of spooning. You two haven't been too roughly intimate, have you? That can kick start labor."

"Yeah he's been the big spoon as of late." Hey, no point in denying it. "As for The... intimacy... No, we haven't done anything." He answered lightly.

"I figured." She hummed. "That's good. You can be intimate, but you have to be gentle about it. Anyways, how are you feeling? Still feeling off?"

"I never realized i could get pregnant in the first place, how off do you think I feel on that?" he sassed her before he sighed, and loosely grinned, "Yeah, still havin' that contraction crap..."

"Monsters of both genders can carry." She rolled her eye lights at his sass, and rubbed his leg gently. "Feel like trying to walk a bit? Sitting on the couch is good and all, but walking will either progress your contractions or make them ease."

"Yeah sure." he replied as he moved to get up, "I'm pretty sure a small walk shouldn't hurt."

"I wouldn't think so." She smiled. She stood up with ease, adjusted her chest wrappings, and then helped him up. "You want to stay in the apartment? Or go for a walk in the park?" The park wasn't far from the bar. Well within walking distance in case he was in active labor.

"Well... maybe we could just walk around a little bit?" he suggested, "Just a small walk around the block, you know?"

Toki nods. "That'd work." She smiled softly, and offered her arm out to him. "A small walk, and we'll come back if you're ready by then. Shall we, brother mine?"

Laughing gently at that, he locked arms with her for a moment. "We shall, dear darling sister." He spoke all posh-like before chortling warmly.

"Do that voice too much, and you'll sound like Tenebris does." She laughed. Toki guided him gently to the front door, where they collected their shoes, and then down into the bar.

Grillby was busy at the bar, making up lunches for several guards who had swung by on their breaks. He glanced up as his pregnant mate and Toki came downstairs and edged around him to get out from behind the bar. "Is something the matter?" He inquired quietly.

"I've been feeling a bit out of it lately, so I’m just doing some walking with Toki." He answered him with a smile.

Grillby hesitated, gaze flicking between the two of them, and then nodded. “You have my cell phone number if anything happens.” This was directed more towards Toki.

Toki rolled her eyes and patted Sans’ arm lightly. “We’re not going nearly far enough for that. If something happens, Clover can get us home.” The big hornet wouldn’t have a problem with hefting both her and Caeruleus.

The fire elemental nods slowly, and casts a faint glowing smile to his mate. “Be safe, and enjoy your walk, then.”

"Thanks, Grillby, we'll see you soon." Cae smiled at him and gave a casual wink before he followed Toki.

Toki lead him out of the bar with a soft smile, adjusting her top as the light breeze ruffled it. “At least the weather’s nicer. It’s warming up- Summer will be here soon, I think.” She smiles slightly. “I can’t wait to take the twins out to my hives.”

"Yeah it is, I’m kinda excited." He answered with some happiness of his own, a smile on his face as he walked. "A spring-born kid would be nice, since Spring isn't too hot or wet."

“Spring is the better time to be pregnant,” She countered lightly. “Or late-stage pregnant. Summer on the other hand, is murder. Be lucky you were in the early stages during my later stages.” She shudders and laughs with light amusement. “Next kids Pap and I have are going to be planned and timed just right- so I don’t have to be huge over summer.”

"Would you be better off during winter though?" The taller being inquired, laughing softly as he adjusted his grasp on Toki’s arm.

“Hell yeah I would be.” She chuckled. “It’s easier to keep warm than it is to cool down. Considering that, when I’m too warm, I can heat water I’m submerged in, going swimming doesn’t even help.”

"I'll definitely keep that in mind if I ever consider having a second ki-" He was cut off by a sharp gasp and he winced, hugging his midsection with one arm as he stuttered in his steps. Contractions were the bane of his fucking existence."Oh fuck that one hurt..."

“Walking during them hurts worse than just holding still.” She eased him to a stop, and let him lean on her. She probably couldn’t carry him, but she could support him. Toki traded hands for supporting, and smoothed the hand closest to him down to his lower back and rubbed gently. “Try to keep breathing,” she advised gently. “Distractions can help. So, you plan to have a second kid with Grillby? Going to populate the world with little skelementals?” She wiggled her brows teasingly, seeking to keep him talking while waiting it out and seeing if he was alright. "Or you just going to be tryin’ to catch up to Papy and myself for number of kids?”

He let out a soft whoosh of air and sighed as he waited it out. Once it faded off, he relaxed a bit and glanced down at her. "It was mostly sarcasm." He answered dryly.
She snorted and rolled her eye lights at him. Once he was able to walk again, she eased him back into an easy but steady gait. “If carrying the kid bothers you that much, just make Grillby carry the next one. You can choose who carries, right?”

"... We can?” he piped up, giving her a bewildered look.

“I… sort of assumed?” She blinked. “Since, y’know, you and he and…” She had a verbal brain fart, making a noise similar to a key-smash, and then shook her head. “Never mind. I sort of assumed… Maybe you can ask your dad? Tenebris knows a fair big about monster reproduction. I wonder if HTM’s can pick and choose… Probably not, since we don’t require intent to reproduce…”

"I guess if we ask Pops and Grillby both to get more than one opinion, we might get better answers, right?” He laughed gently.

“I’m pretty sure that’s how science works.” She chuckles lightly.

Toki guides him around the corner, and pauses to watch the kids romping through the schoolyard across the way. A smile tilts at her teeth, and she rubs his arm thoughtfully as she does so. “You know,” she hums, “Our kids will likely go to school together. I feel like we’re going to get a lot of calls. The twins are part Nara- and Nara on their own are lazy. But, in large numbers…” She wiggles her fingers teasingly at him. “Mischief happens. You remember when my brothers buried you in snow, yeah?”

He chuckled quietly. "Yeah I remember, those little shits." He snorted, "So when you say a lot of calls, how many do you think we're talking?” he asked.

“Well… My brothers- some in particular- got called down at least three or four times a week. Though, uh, most of that was for squabbling. Though… There was an incident with ketchup packets under the toilet seat that almost got Kon and Ryushi suspended.” She snickered slightly. “It wasn’t a student they pranked.”

Sans paused, then he snorted and began to laugh.

“You laugh about it now, but you didn’t see Mister Homura’s face when his nice slacks were ruined with your favored condiment.” She snickered lightly. “Anyways, Honey is going to be a handful. If she’s anything like me growing up, she’ll be able to coerce everyone into shenanigans. Your little ball of sunshine will probably be included.”

"Solstice will definitely be a troublemaker. I suppose I best get my 'I know my kid is in trouble' voice practiced between now and then, eh?” he laughed.

“You’ll have a few years to practice,” she laughed. “Though, since you’re an older brother you’ll have a head start on that. I’m sure you’ve had to use the ‘you’re in trouble mister’ voice on Papyrus once or twice.”

"Not as much as you think, he came out of old habits fast. I rarely had to actually scold him.” He hummed to her.

“You lucky dog, you. I had to scold my brothers more times than I could count. They made slingshots and catapults out of my bras one time, and kept shooting at Grandpa’s house.” She snorted wryly.

That had Sans laughing again. "That sounds hilarious." he chuckled, before wincing at another cramp, "Ow, fuck... okay... That hurt more than the others did..."
She let him lean on her as he needed, and hummed softly. “Well, they don’t get more pleasant.” She murmured. “We’ve got another corner or two and then we’ll be back at the bar, if you’re ready to call it quits. Just breathe through it slowly, okay?”

He took a slow, deep breath to try and let the pain pass, before he nodded, “Yes. Yes. I’m okay”. He told her, stroking his stomach, “Easy in there, kid.” he murmured.

She rubbed his bicep softly. “That one was closer this time.” She murmured softly to him. “It wasn’t even fifteen minutes since the last one, Sans. You feelin’ alright?”

"Yeah... yeah i think i'm fi- SON OF A" He winced and hugged his gut again as his eye flashed.

7/10

"Fuck... Ow... ow... something's wrong..."

And so said the fluid coating now running down the inside of his pants, "T-TOKI!" he gasped.

6/10

“Shit!” She squeaked. They weren’t far from the bar- but she couldn’t lift him. It didn’t take much for her to shout though- and this was part of her husbands rout today, and she knew, if she was loud enough, Papyrus could hear her. “PAPYRUS!”

All the same, she ripped a hole high in the sky, and called down Clover. If he didn’t hear her, he should damn well be able to see her. “Hold on, Sans. Clover will get us to the bar.” She pushed magic at him, hoping she’d be able to help even if she couldn’t heal.

"Tokes... I.... I don’t feel too good..." he murmured, leaning against her as his eyes closed.

5/10

Thankfully, Aliquam was sprinting closer, having heard his mate, "SANS!" he yelled upon seeing his downed brother.

He was heavy, and she struggled to hold him up. Her mate, however, was stronger. “His water broke, but there’s something wrong, Pap!” She called, shoving her shoulder under Sans’ to keep him upright. “We need to get him back to the bar and call your dad- Can you heal his HP?”

"Weren't you counting? Isn't he not yet due?" he asked, carefully hoisting Cae up before releasing healing magic to try and stabilize him, "He's already lost half his health..."

“He’s two weeks early,” she said. “None the less- keep healing him. Focus your magic there- Can you teleport us all there while healing him? If not, Clover can bring us to the bar.” The big hornet had descended and was hovering near them, ready to lend aid if the need arose. Toki clasped Sans hand tightly. “We’ve got you, Sans,” She murmured softly. “You and Solstice are going to be okay.”

"I can't teleport, not like this.” he told her.

“Clover then.” She motioned to the hornet to come closer. Clover didn’t bother mounting up- she set off at a brisk pace down the road as Clover grasped Papyrus with her legs, and lifted him while he held Sans.

It was a bit risky- but risky was necessary. Clover’s saddle wasn’t built for multiple riders, let alone someone who wasn’t doing good health wise, and that was the only way to get him there without jostling him too badly. Thankfully, she flew smoothly and evenly, and the jostling was minimal.

Toki met them at the front of the bar, with Grillby standing next to her. He looked worried, and kept twisting his apron anxiously as Clover set Papyrus and Sans down.

"Toki said his water broke?" The fire elemental had cleared out the bar the moment the shortest skeleton had burst in. “And that his HP was dropping?"

"Yes and yes, fast." Papyrus answered, carrying Cae in while trying hard to keep him stabilized.

Grillby guided him over to one of the tables as Toki took a moment to lower the blinds. All the seat cushions in the lower establishment had been fetched- and Grillby waited until Sans was settled before scurrying into the bar to grab the richest monster food he had that was intended for healing. He hurried back, and worriedly offered it to his mate. “This should help stabilize his hp…”

Once the curtains were down, Toki approached. She rested her hands gently on his soaked shorts, rubbing his femurs soothingly, and shot a quick look to Papyrus. “Kids with Undyne?” She was basically the emergency babysitter.

"Yes." he replied, helping Cae get the food down.

10/10

That bought them time.

"I'll call Father." Aliquam then told them.

“Please do so.” Toki nodded. She shifted, and glanced up to Sans. “Hey, Sans? I’m going to shift your shorts down, okay? Being in sticky clothes isn’t going to help you stay comfortable. Grillby, do you- Ah, yes, thank you.” His apron was handed over, and Toki gently draped it over Sans legs. “Talk to me, Sans. What are you feeling right now?”

Grillby took position behind Sans, and held him shakily. His fingers trembled as he laced them through the Skeleton’s, and his soul thundered loudly in his chest as he held his mate. His HP had dropped- and he could have lost him and the baby if Toki hadn’t been with him. Grillby couldn’t have handled another loss like that. His flames sputtered and dimmed briefly, before brightening again.

No. Losing Sans… he’d have fallen.

"Don’t care." the pregnant skeleton rasped out, one arm draping over his eye sockets as his hand clenched Grillby's, cutting a weak grin up to the elemental, "Don't you start none of that shit" he hissed, before he winced at another contraction, "F-Fuck...!"

8/10.

“Focus on breathing, Sans.” Grillby let him hold him as he needed, and squeezed back gently. His focus turned inwards, watching Sans’ soul. He collected another small thing of monster candy, and held it stubbornly out to his mate. “I’ve got half a bag of these- you’re going to be sick of them by the time this is over, but I’m not losing you.” His fingers trembled slightly around his mates, but his resolve is firm.

“We’re not losing either of them.” Toki hums. She shifts, and eases his shorts down. She… well, never really wanted to see these parts of her brother in law. She gave him a teasing look, hoping to bolster his spirits. “Hey, Sans? I guess we’re even now, since you popped in when I was having
She used the clean parts of his pants to gently clean him off, and then tried to gage how he was doing visually.

"F-Fair enough." he giggled at Toki's words, working on slowing his breathing as he rested his head on Grillby's form, though his gaze was obvious.

Monster Candy? Really?

Grillby was a master of silent communication. “It’s the smallest form of healing we have in surplus.” He says. “So yes. Monster candy.” The only other healing food he had in surplus was burgers and fries- and Sans eventually wouldn’t be able to eat more of those.

“It’s small enough that it shouldn’t upset your stomach.” Toki hummed gently. She glanced up at him and tilted her head. “Sans? You need to tell me how you’re feeling, alright? Contractions, pain outside of the usual stuff… Shit, I’m super out of practice with this.” The last baby she had help deliver had been her little brothers- and they were adults now.

He groaned loudly at that and laid his head down again. "I don’t know what the usual shit is, Tokes." he whined, "I can feel the kid moving in there... really riled up..."

“It… might be distressed.”

“It’s likely.” Grillby swallowed. “Fire elementals labor hard and fast- Sans’ body isn’t likely prepared to deal with it. We are a fragile folk and very defenseless during labor and birthing- so we adapted to deliver quickly.”

“His body might not be prepared for how quickly.” Her eye lights sparked up with thought, before she looked down to Sans. “Alright, bro? We’re going to see if you’re dilated or not. But first… Papyrus?” She glanced to him. “Tuck the phone against your shoulder and get me a big bowl of water, please.” Sanitary at this point would only help, and her hands were definitely not sanitized. Hot water, however, would help with that. “Did you get Tenebris?”

"Father is on his way. He thought it was an April Fools joke- I had to assure him this was not the case." He then went to get the water as asked.

"F-Fuck... heh... D-Don't think I'll ever admit this again... but... shit... ’m getting a bit scared, Grillby..." Sans murmured, before wincing at the lost of another 2 HP.

Grillby slid a candy into Sans mouth, keeping careful watch on his HP. “I know you are;” he murmured softly. He was a ball of panic himself, but keeping calm was important. “I know you are. But you and our baby are going to be fine.”

Toki soothingly patted his leg, and then gently spread them. He was like his magic, blue and glowing, and she waited until Papyrus had the water set next to her, before she shoved her hands into it. A flash of magic later, and the water was superheated. “Alright- I’m sanitized now. This probably isn’t going to be too comfortable, Sans, but it won’t be that bad.” Her hand, relatively, was probably smaller than Grillby’s dick.

He probably wouldn’t even feel it. “I’m going to see if you’re dilated- and see if your baby is hung up somewhere. Think happy thoughts- tell me what you think your baby will look like. Boy? Girl?” She readied herself for when he would start to chatter.

He munched on the candy and sighed as it brought his health up a few points, before he leaned his head back. "I just want it to live." He murmured. He really didn't have much to say about it, but he wouldn’t care that much about her hand anyhow...

Toki lightly pinched his femur to distract him as she slipped her hand inside. Oh. Gross. So, so gross. But, she knew what she was feeling for. Or at least, she thought she did. “Your baby is going to live,” She informs him simply, “so no bad thoughts, mister, or I’ll ban Ketchup until your baby is toddling.”

Her fingers wiggled up and up and up- and came to the opening of what she realized was his cervix. “So, uh, you’re pretty dilated. I can slip my fingers through- but the baby’s head isn’t small enough to fit out yet. I can try to stretch you a little bit to see if we can move it along faster, or we can wait for you to progress naturally. It’s a two hour drive for Tenebris to get here- and he’ll exhaust himself teleporting. An hour and a half if he really guns it. Your baby will probably be here before that.”

“An hour is longer than an elemental usually births. Labor can take time to build up, but once it gets going, it is swift. It is, however, your choice, Sans.” Grillby murmured.

"As long as she pulls it off before you run out of snacks," he hissed, "I just want to see the kid alive... Please Tokes..."

Grillby’s hand tightened on Sans, and his flames flickered nervously. “Papyrus- monitor his HP.” The old general rumbled shortly. He would apologize for his shortness later- there were more important things to handle than feelings.

“I’m not gonna let my niece or nephew die.” She stared up at him firmly. If… it did go bad, Frisk could load, and they could have Tenebris here to do this properly. Toki took a deep breath, and coaxed heat to her hand and gently began to widen him. Her fingers slowly splayed, feeling a skull slowly pressing against her fingertips. “I can, uh, feel the skull. If you get any sudden urge to push, let me know. And trust me- you’ll know the urge when it hits, Sans.”

Papyrus didn’t need to be told twice. He settled with his brother and began to keep him stable.

"I... f-fuck... I... I think whatever u-urge you're talking about is- Ghhahhh!!" he cried out in pain as the contraction rolled over him. His legs jerked and he leaned forwards reflexively with a sharp cry, and gave into the urge. He pushed. "F-FUUUCK!"

3/10.

After the contraction fell, Sans slumped, his gaze going blurry until Papyrus flared healing magic, allowing his HP to get an emergency boost.

A candy was shoved into his mouth almost frantically, and Grillby’s flames flickered a nervous yellow.

Toki’s hand had literally gotten stuck when he’d clamped around her, so she’d simply had to let him ride it out. “And that,” she said softly, “is what it’s like to push.” She widened him a bit more, until she felt that he was what ‘ten centimeters’ were equivalent to in a big boned monster. Toki slid her fingers in and gently loosened around the skull, and helped lodge it in the entryway of his cervix. There were tiny nubs- that made her pause, and she glanced at both Grillby and at Sans intently for a second. “So remember when I said you wouldn’t have to handle horns? You have to handle horns, Sans. Take it slow.” she said softly. “If you push too hard and too fast, you’re going to hurt yourself. Give yourself time to adjust- the skull is bigger around than any dick you’ve probably ever taken, and you’ll rip on the horns or… or something equally bad if you try to rush this.”
Sans groaned and leaned his head back. "Tokes... this sucks... Wait..." he half-sat up again, "HORNS?!" He then looked at Grillby, "You have horns?!"

Grillby’s head changed colors briefly, and he reached up to part his ‘hair’. Small horns were nestled within it, made of the same solid fire-flesh that he was. They were smaller than Toki’s horns- hence why no one would ever notice them. The flames of his ‘hair’ kept them hidden. “I... yes? I thought you might have felt them during some of our...” He flushed.

“Sometimes people are distracted when doing the do.” Toki gave them a bemused smile, and shifted to ease the horns out of his cervix a little better. “Good news is, they’re smaller than the nubs I had to deal with. Bad news is, they are very sharp, and might have been causing your health problem. Keep an eye on his HP- I’ve got them blocked with my fingers. Come the next contraction, let me know if it’s helping keep his HP from going down.”

"Grillby you bastard, you didn't tell me the kid would have horns!” he bared his teeth at his mate before he winced and held Grillby’s hand tightly. "This fucking hurts..." he hissed. "But... I’m really getting scared now... Something's wrong..."

“You never asked?” Grillby held his hand tightly in return, and let him squeeze as needed. His flames were a kaleidoscope of colors in his worry.

“I know it hurts, Sans,” Toki hummed softly. “I need you to tell me what you’re feeling. I’m not a doctor, Sans- and you’ve got a very large baby that is very ready to join the world. If you feel there’s something wrong, describe what you’re feeling- you’ve got a contraction coming, Sans. Brace yourself.” She just hoped his baby could fit.

That was a large, large skull, and she could see and feel his pelvic bones. His pelvis hadn’t widened like hers had- something she attributed to perhaps his health problems, or his gender. Either way- it was going to be a tight fit. She just... hoped it actually fit.

"Something's stabbing me..." he groaned, before the contraction hit.

His magic gathered, tensing in his middle with a sharp pulse. The pulsing grew stronger, and Sans cried out as it got worse and worse.

But instead of pushing, his magic suddenly snapped and dispelled in a violent outburst of energy and he went down, falling limp on the table.

0.1/10

"SANS!” Papyrus screamed.

“Sans!” Grillby’s voice echoed Papyrus’ own, and he trembled, trying to rouse his mate. His gaze was torn, however, because the swell of Sans’ belly was no longer there under his coat. “Heal him!” His voice barked at the younger brother. He was unconscious- you couldn’t force a monster to eat when they were unconscious, and they had to do something now or his HP would fade and he would crumble to dust in their arms.

Papyrus hugged his brother tightly and his soul began to glow bright as he reached out to his brother’s remaining soul essence to try and get him back.

Sans! Sans don’t die! Please!
Sans, I’m begging you! Wake up!

His magic shifted in color, it was burning with fear now as he held to his brother, keeping him from losing his last point but unable to immediately get through to him.

Toki’s hand was no longer encased in blue magic either- and she could feel a wet skull pressing tightly to her palm as she kept it from lodging in his pelvis. She leaned up, not hesitating to yank his coat up. “I’ve got the baby,” She said, shakily extracting the limp skeleton from inside his pelvic cradle. His bones had scratches from her horns- no wonder he was hurting so badly.

It- a she, she noted as she shifted to cradle the little one- was covered in a viscous blue fluid that gleamed like oil in the light of the bar. “It’s a girl,” She stuttered, gently patting her backside in the hopes of rousing her. The baby- who was quite massive and would not have fit through Sans’ pelvis- gave a weak whimper.

“You need to light her,” Grillby managed. “Use your magic and your teeth- light her. Elementals need to be lit when they’re born- quick, quick!”

Toki clicked her teeth to summon a flame, and sustained it with her magic. She pulsed it down into the baby- who promptly burst into blue flames in her arms with a titanic wail and a squirm. The change was astonishing.

She glanced up with a worried sound to look at Sans, who was still unresponsive. She leaned over, cradling the wailing, flaming baby to her chest, and pushed her magic into her husband, donating and giving him a boost in power. “You can do it,” She said softly to him.

“C’mon, Sans, c’mon,” Grillby whispered against his skull. “You hear that? That’s our little girl, Sans. She’s crying- she’s beautiful. C’mon… Open your eyes, please, please, please…” He begged.

There was a sound behind them and Papyrus looked up for a moment to see Tenebris panting roughly as he came closer, kneeling beside his son and set a hand on his chest. He closed his eyes and his magic joined the mix to try and rouse the skeleton

It’s time to wake up, Caeruleus.

...

You can dust another day, but today you are needed for something no other monster can provide... Think about your mate... your daughter...

G-Grillby...

0.5/10

That’s it, Sans... Open your eyes.

"U-Uhnn..."
The skeleton shifted, then winced and slowly his eye lights lit up. "...nnh..."

Toki perked, withdrawing her hand to better cradle her niece. The baby wailed louder, flames scorching at Toki’s clothes, and she rocked her softly, gently shushing her while Sans roused. The flames didn’t bother her- but she didn’t wear fire-retardant clothing, so her clothes? They were steadily becoming ashy under the baby’s lack of control. “Welcome back, bro.”

The sheer relief in Grillby’s face was enough to be considered heartbreaking. He held him tighter, and nuzzled him with a shaky inhaling of breath. “You scare me like that again and I’ll... I’ll... Do something probably terrible.” The fire elemental rasped shakily.

"I'm not afraid of you." he murmured, nuzzling his mate tiredly.

“I know you’re not,” he whispered shakily, “but sometimes I think you should be.” He shivered softly. “You’re going to be okay now. Right?” He looked at Tenebris tightly.

He chuckled tiredly and nuzzled him.

Tenebris gave a nod, "His healthy is rising quickly, Caeruleus is going to be just fine, as is the child, by the looks of things.” He purred.

“Good.” Grillby could have slumped in relief.

“Uhuh. She’s a screamer- real fussy.” She was also huge in Toki’s arms, nearly double the size that the Twins had been. “When you’re ready, I think she’d like her Momma to hold her.” She smiled warmly.

Cae chuckled quietly and reached up to take the child, "Little blue Solstice" he purred quietly, "She's... just gorgeous..."

Toki helped her settle into his arms, and then leaned back to give the new parents a moment. In the meantime, she scrubbed her hands in the still hot tub of water, and shuddered quietly. She’d nearly watched Sans die- what a fuckin’ spectacular day. “Happy April fools,” she mumbles to herself, “have a baby and a heart attack all in the same damn day.”

Grillby reached down to help support her, and stroked her little arms gently. The ball of fire was fully skeleton, but covered in a layer of fire-like flesh much like his own. He smiled, and kissed Sans temple. “She’s perfect, Sans. You did it,” he crooned softly.

Laying his head on Grillby's chest, he sighed and closed his eyes, smiling gently to himself. "I love you so much... thank you..."

“I love you too.” Grillby nuzzled him again and trembled with leftover shakes.

Solstice gave a fussy whimper, burrowing her little face against her mother’s chest. The flames licked at his jacket, and her little mouth fell open with a cantankerous fuss.

Toki smiled and stepped to the side to go stand with Papyrus. She dried her hands off on her pants, as her shirt was fairly soiled. “You did good,” She said to her husband. “That was a rough situation- but you did good.”

"You performed admirably.” He replied, cupping her cheek as he pulled her into a tight hug. "However. I never. EVER. Want to do that again... I'm very sure I've lost some years..." he chuckled weakly.
"You and me both." Her chuckle echoed his, but was doubly as shaky. Toki leaned into her husband with a tremendous shiver. "I was utterly lost on what I was doing. Very, very out of my league. So, uh... Think anyone would object to having at least one monster who knows how to handle this in the town at all times when we have someone pregnant in town? Because I don't really think can do a repeat performance without scaring years off me too." She leaned into her husband a bit heavier, and tightened her fingers over his. "I wonder," she mused, "If we could have had that happen if Tenebris hadn’t been there, or if my defense hadn’t been so absurdly high."

His arm tightened its hold once more as he released her cheek to set his head on her shoulder. "I don’t know if anyone else would, but Father will no doubt seek pupils." He explained as he thought about it, that next set of actions sounding most logical.

"As for when your labor had come around... I don’t want to think about it." he shook his head and pressed his face into her neck, "I only want to think about it and remember how everything went without a hitch."

The only hitch they’d had during her labor had been the pain from Honey’s horns, and how long it took to have her little girl. But, compared to Sans, who’s middle had literally burst because his daughter had been too big to pass through his pelvis and who had nearly died from the damage Solstice’s horns had done... Hers had practically been smooth sailing.

Toki buzzed gently for him, and stroked her fingers down his skull. She cupped the back of his neck, and made soothing sounds as she massaged the vertebrae, and held her disquieted husband close to her. “It wouldn’t be a bad idea for Tenebris to take on students. We’re learning as we go with our kind’s reproduction- but other species have other needs. If it wasn’t for the fact that I can’t seem to grasp healing magic, I would probably try to learn too.” Todd had tried to teach her- since she was the greenest that green magic could be, given her Boss heart status- but Toki couldn’t get it to work. Her magic always heated, not healed, or burned if she put too much effort into it.

"No doubt Father will see to consult Todd as well." he rumbled, "Have him more on call if that is possible."

“Todd is still learning more about healing at the castle. He was actually in a seminar with Alphys and other healing students today.” Toki hums softly. “Thumper was staying over with Rosie and Felix at Bo and Wolfen’s house while they were gone. He’s learning a lot- He’ll probably have everything memorized and be ready to open up that clinic he wanted to by the end of this summer.”

Todd, as they had discovered, was a scarily fast learner. The fox monster was as wily with his studies as he was kind to his patients. He intended to open up a clinic in town once he learned everything he needed to know. He was getting certified by monster law to treat monsters once his classes were done.

“Thankfully no one else is due to have any kids until next September, so we should be fine until then.” Toki murmured.

He nodded in agreement and took a moment to lead her to some chairs where they could sit down and focus their breathing.

She didn’t bother with a chair of her own, simply scooting into his lap and leaning against his armor. Not the most comfortable, but it would do just fine. She just needed to be close, and give Sans and Grillby plenty of time with their new baby. Tenebris could continue to heal him and make sure he was alright while the husband and wife relaxed.

The front doors opened inwards, and a large bee face peered in at them expectantly.
“Shit,” Toki muttered, “Sorry, Clover.” She’d forgotten to open a door for her to get back. A quick tug of her magic, and the bee was disappearing through another portal as the bar doors closed once more. “Did you want to go hold your niece?” She asked her husband gently.

"Only if Grillby and Caeruleus are willing to part with her long enough." he chuckled quietly.

“I’m sure they are.” She smiled, and scooted out of his lap. She patted his shoulder, and motioned him over. “Go on, you goober. Go see Solstice- she’s really cute. A little hot though- I’d advise keeping your gloves on.” Her singed shirt was proof enough of that.

Grillby looked up as he registered his name being mentioned, and motioned with his chin for the tall skeleton to come over. He was cradling Solstice now, his flames regulating her own and keeping her from burning his clothing, while Sans rested and Tenebris whipped up some ointment to spread on the deep scratches in his pelvic bones.

Aliquam stood up at his wife’s urging, laughing as she claimed his seat, and then came over to Grillby and offered a friendly smile. "She's beautiful, Grillby."

“She is,” The older monster smiled warmly. His large fingers stroked through the flames covering her little cheekbones. He looked exactly like Papyrus did when holding his children for the first time- and it must have been like looking into a mirror for the skeleton. Grillby shifted, and glanced back to him. “Did you want to hold her? I need to go get something upstairs really quick.”

"Oh, yes please!" he purred happily, extending his arms to accept the baby.

Grillby handed her over easily, setting the baby in the crook of his arms. He took the moment to take brisk steps upstairs to get some clothes for Sans, Solstice, and something else along the way.

While the twins had looked huge in Toki’s arms, Solstice looked massive in her uncle’s arms. The little girl was bigger than her cousins now, even though they were more than five months older than she was. She fussed unhappily, legs kicking out and flailing. She looked a lot like Sans, though the fire giving her flesh and matter was obviously Grillby. Solstice settled down slowly in his arms, the wild nature of her flames settling. Unlike her father’s head, her flames were lower, settling more into curls than the wild-flickering style that her father had for his ‘hair’.

Aliquam smiled gently and cooed warmly as he moved a hand up to stroke her hair. "Hello little one." He cooed gently.

Fussy blue eyes peered blearily at him, and she flailed her fists to try and grab his. Her fussing took on a hungry tinge, and she managed to land a hand into her mouth where she proceeded to gnaw on it instinctively. Her head leaned into his touch though, her bones dried by the flames that Toki had ignited for her.

“Hey, Pap?” Toki called lightly. “Can you check her soul?” Sans had bad stats- she wondered if he had passed them on to his daughter or not.

"Sure I can." he replied, sitting down and calling her soul to have a look.

The little upside down heart was close to the same color as her flames, though tinted something between blue and purple instead of strictly blue. Her health read out at thirty points, defense and attack at solid a solid one. All in all, her stats looked fine and healthy.

Solstice, of course, wanted nothing to do with her soul being pulled, and let out a screech befitting a banshee in response.
“You know, Sans and I both are very quiet. I don’t know where on earth she got that set of lungs from.” Grillby muttered as he came back downstairs. “How do her stats look?” He inquired. He had his arms full of things, and came to rest them on one of the tables. His hand came down to fiddle with something in his pocket as he came closer to Sans with a loose pair of shorts in hand for him to slip on.

He winced at the screech but smiled, "Her HP is at thirty right now, but her Attack and Defense are both at one." Right now, he was thankful enough with the good health.

Sans was still pretty out of it, resting on the table with a spaced out look in his eyes as he simply rested.

“That’s about what the Twins had when they were born. I think Skylar had a defense of three, but considering my skewed stats…” Toki wobbled her hands lightly, and made a ‘so-so’ motion, “Our kids are bound to be outliers.”

Grillby rolled his eyes lightly and nodded as he reached his mate. He was gentle in sliding the pair of shorts up and onto him, making sure to leave it loose around his pelvis. He recalled how sore Toki had been, and resolved to let him have as much space as he could between the loose fabric and his bones. Once his pants were on, Grillby scooted up and gently cupped his face. “Sans?” He called softly to get his attention.

Sans groaned quietly and slowly opened his eyes a little more, his eye lights focusing on Grillby, "Hn?"

Grillby gave him a shaky smile, and stroked his cheeks. His free hand fished around in his pocket, and he tugged something out. He eased down onto one knee, glad the table wasn’t very tall, as it still let Sans see him properly. “I know you’ve been patient with me, and I haven’t found the right time… But after nearly losing you and our daughter… Now, as odd as it seems, feels… right. Waiting longer would be wrong.”

He initially hadn’t ever planned to marry again. But… They had talked about it a few times, and Sans had seemed eager and willing to marry one day. Grillby… Well, Grillby wasn’t one to let Sans go without. If ever he was going to marry again- it would be the skeleton.

“Sans Caeruleus Gaster, mother of my daughter…” He held out the box, and opened it. Inside was a ring, with a stone the same color as Sans’ magic, and of their daughter’s magic too. “Will you marry me?”

He looked at the ring and his eyes widened. He was expecting some smack at humor... But this... "G-Grillbz... shit... Heh..." Cae shakily smiled up at Grillby, before he reached for him. "God damn, it get over here so I can reach you." His voice had a faint whine to it, and he sounded damn near like he wanted to cry- happy tears, however.

Grillby slid up and eased his hip onto the table. He tugged him close, and hugged him tightly with one arm, not willing to jostle him too badly just yet. “Is that a yes?” He asks hesitantly, the ring still sitting in the box in his hand.

"You think I would be crazy enough to go through all of that just to tell you no?" he murmured as he hugged him tightly, pressing his face into Grillby's chest. "I love you so much, Grillby, of course I’ll say yes." He muttered.

Grillby held him tightly and nuzzled him warmly with great relief. He had been so uncertain… “Good. Good.” He trembled faintly, and eased the ring out of the box and onto Sans finger, before holding him closer.

He nuzzled close and chuckled, before he looked up at Grillby, "I’m not wearing a dress though."
He chuckled.

“Dress, tux, either way you will be perfect,” The fire elemental hummed. Good humor made his eyes twinkle lightly, and he couldn’t help but tease lightly. “I could wear the dress instead.”

Solstice took that moment to shriek, and flail in her uncle’s arms.
Toki chuckled. “That’s a ‘feed me now’ cry.” She was all too familiar with those.
Cae laughed at that but when he heard Solstice start to cry he lifted his gaze and his eye glowed gently before suddenly his coat began to inflate. "Huh...?" he lifted his shirt collar to look down it before he groaned, "Oh man..."

“Might want to rethink the dress, Sans.” Toki winked, motioning to his chest as his coat filled out.
“Pretty sure you’ll rock it.”

Grillby motioned for Papyrus to bring Solstice closer, and held out his arm to take her from him.
Papyrus handed the child over while Sans continued to grumble about it but after some help he sat up a little and took Solstice to let her have her fill.
She huffed and fussed and squirmed in his arms, searching for his nipple but unable to find it first.
Grillby leaned over, and gently shifted his bared breast for Solstice.

With her Daddy's help, Solstice managed to get his breast in her mouth. Her fussing quieted as she figured out just what to do with it. Soon, she was sucking like a champ and making pleased noises.

Toki snagged her husband's arm as he came back over to the chair she was on. Her eye lights twinkled merrily at him. "I want more kids." She teased lightly, though was quite serious as well.
"Baby skeletons are so cute."

He looked at her for a moment like she was crazy, before he chuckled, "Alright, but not yet. First lets raise the twins."

She butted her head against his arm and smiled. "At least until they're not nursing anymore." She grinned. "Siblings usually do better if there isn't a hugely massive age gap."

"We would have help with raising the next batch." he agreed, giving a nod.

"Mhm." She chuckles, though it fades off. "I think we'll wait until... We handle Cruelty." She murmured. "I just... Have a feeling that something is coming. Not sure what though."

He nodded gently, "I know, it's gonna be hard, but we'll make it through, I know it." He purred.

"We all have each other." She smiled, watching Grillby and Sans with their new daughter, and Tenebris fondly watching his firstborn with his third grandbaby. "Cruelty might have an army of homicidal minions, but we have love and friendship. We'll be okay. I know we will."

He nodded gently, "That's right." he purred gently, before he kissed her cheek.

She smiled at him warmly. "Let's go get our kids. Grillby and Sans are okay in Papa's care. I need to change. I've got gross all over me, and our sweet little niece baked it into my shirt."
He snorted at that and nodded, "Of course. Caeruleus, Grillby, I’ll see you guys later." he piped up warmly

"Sounds good, Pap. See ya." Cae waved him off with his free hand, cradling his daughter close with the other.

Toki laughed softly and took her husband's arm. "Give us a call and let us know how your first night goes. Oh! Take pictures and put them on Facebook. Mom's going to want to see."

"Sure thing, Tokes." Cae called after her.

Toki smiled and nodded, and leaned into Papyrus. "I know you don't like to do it, but do you think you can just teleport? Everyone is going to stop and ask us how it went, and I don't have the energy after that to keep retelling it. Let Grillby do it while he runs the bar."

Aliquam nodded gently, "Alright." Wrapping his arms around her, he teleported them both home.

"Undyne watching the kids here?" She inquired as they arrived home.

"If you peck me again while I try to feed you, I'm gonna make roasted chicken out of you, I swear to all the stars in the sky!" The big fish monsters familiar snarl rang out of the kitchen.

"Sounds like she's having a discussion with Sobek." he chuckled quietly, "Come on, let's go diffuse her before she does something rash."

"Augh, Sobek no!" Undyne was nearly shrill.

There was a successful squawk, before the bird came running out of the kitchen with an entire roast in his beak. He ducked between Aliquam's legs, and then booked it for the stairs.

Undyne gave chase- and in full armor, the captain plowed into the skeletons like a freight train, having not expected them to be there.

Above the deafening clang of metal as Toki was squished between Papyrus, Undyne, and the floor, she could hear the manicual peals of laughter from her daughter, who thought the angry fish was the best thing since making fart noises on her mother's breast while nursing.

Aliquam hadn't expected to get hit by the fish woman, and groaned loudly where he laid, though he was the first to attempt getting up, "Right. Let's... Let's go and get that bird." He groaned, getting up for a moment before going down once more.

Toki wheezed as he managed to get up, only to go right back down... And into the impromptu dog-pile on the smallest skeleton. "Oh my god you guys are heavy," she wheezed.

Undyne wasn't so bothered, and she huffed and glared down at Toki, before lifting herself, and Papyrus, up. She shook her shoulders to try and dislodge him from her back. "You need to teach your damn bird some manners. He stole a whole roast. That was for him and the fat grub."

"I don't do animals, I do the bugs. Teaching Sobek manners was Paps job. Oh god my ribs, ow..." She groaned.

One would have to would have to see about rousing Aliquam in order to successfully pry the roast from Sobek's jaws

With Undyne up enough, Toki could slip out from under Undyne. She stood shakily and leaned down to rouse her husband. "Papyrus," she said, having used this one before, "the spaghetti is burning."

"Nnnnnno!" he sat up groggily, rubbing his head before he looked at Toki and shot her a look.

"Oh don't get huffy with me. You both squished me." His wife rolled her eyes, and motioned to the stairs. "Go get your daughter's mischievous summons and keep him from getting sick on the tile again."

She recalled the last time he had over eaten and shuddered. Ugh. Gross.

He sighed and nodded gently, "Yeah, I'm on it." he murmured, popping his back and starting upstairs.

There were little meat drips on the floor that lead to the nursery, where Sobek had wedged himself under the cradle.

"Alright, Sobek. You know how this is going to go." Aliquam sighed as he entered the room, "I'm gonna find you, I'm gonna catch you, and I'll put you in the time-out birdcage again."

The bird was quiet at first, save for the sounds of meat being ripped and torn and gobbled down. At the mention of the hated cage, pudgy wings beat against the ground like angry sausages in protest and a gurgled squawk was likely translated into something quite rude.

"I don't want to hear it, Sobek." He growled, reaching under the bed and grabbing the bird by the head, before grabbing his shoulder and pulling him out.

Sobek let out a muffled shriek, free wing flapping and beating at the hands that kept his bloodied beak from biting, and from hurting himself. Angry legs kicked out and clawed at his wrist, sharp talons ripping angrily at his gloves. Sobek was having none of his manhandling.

He pulled him out from under the bed and moved his other hand to grip his legs, tucking him under his arm to trap his wings as well as he carried him downstairs, tutting quietly

"Get the time-out cage ready, please." He announced his success to the ladies.

Toki was quick to go to the large bird cage they had for moments like this. As Sobek was getting bigger and more accustomed to his home, he was causing more and more trouble, so it had become necessary. He went in timeout for a bit, and then would be let out. He was smart enough to know better, after all.

She pried open the cage, and gave the bird a soft sigh as he came into sight. "You know, if you just behaved you wouldn't get in trouble, Sobek."

The bird looked mutinous, and was flailing harder in Papyrus' arms.

He put him on his back in the birdcage, then released him fast and closed the door, securing it.

His sharp beak closed over the bars and bent them as he bit down. Sobek shrieked angrily.

"None of that." Toki crossed her arms and leaned down to give the bird a stern look. "You know the rules, and you were incredibly rude to a guest under our roof. You do the crime, you do the time, Sobek."

He hissed at her.
She buzzed, low and sharp and met his gaze firmly, until he huffed and looked away.

Aliquam went back upstairs and recovered what was left of the roast, coming back down with it.

By the time he was back down, Sobek was sulking in the back of the cage, and Toki and Undyne had gotten to mopping the tile with towels on their feet. They scuffled along, getting the droplets of blood mopped up.

Toki grimaced at the mess of the roast. "Well, Sobek ate most of that... Snuggle shouldn't have a problem eating the rest of it. Oh- Gracie no! Don't roll in that!" She scooted closer and spooked her cat so she would leave the blood alone. "Good gods- at least Gael doesn't roll in things. Hhhhh. What a long day..."

"Was meaning to ask about that. Sans went into labor?" Undyne hummed, addressing the less frazzled Papyrus. "How'd it go?"

"It was a close call, but they are both alright. Father came back to take care of him.” Papyrus settled the meat into Snuggle's food dish, and then went to wash his gloves. Ugh. Gross.

"Close call?" Undyne frowned. "His HP give him trouble?"

“Yeah…” he grimaced. “He almost dusted.”

She nearly tripped over her towel as she scooted across the floor. Her eye went wide. "Holy fuck."

"UCK!" Honey mimicked giddily from the kitchen.

Toki's eyes could have murdered. "Watch your language. Honey is trying to mimic the sounds of words. She doesn't know what they mean yet, but she's trying."

Aliquam's eyes could match Toki's as he cleared his throat. "However." He then spoke up, "They're both okay."

Undyne gave him a nervous grin. "Uh, yeah, that's good. So what'd he have?"

"An absolutely massive little girl. I had to light her on fire. She's precious, though doesn't have control over her flames yet." Toki indicates the burnt mess of birth fluids covering her ruined shirt. "The stuff she was covered in was flammable."

"I didn't want to ask what that was, but that is disgusting." Undyne grimaced.

"Not as disgusting as you think it to be." Aliquam chuckled.

Undyne made a repulsed face. "Don't even give me that. I saw parts of the video of the guppies being born. That shits gross. You're all skeletons, and it's ectoplasmic, so it's less gross, but still as revolting as normal stuff would be. Yuck. At least with Alphys and I it's just eggs, and not... That." She shudders.

Aliquam folded his arms and raised a brow, before he chuckled, "Riiight."

She makes a face at him. "Oh shush. Eggs are much easier. None of that... Mess. Of course we have no intention of having kids yet, until she can move down here with me anyway."

He chuckled and shook his head, "Sure, sure, though do you think she'll leave the lab so eagerly?" he asked, "I mean, thinking back, Father called it his second home."
"She wants to come down here eventually. She's mostly... Waiting until the thing with Cruelty is handled, and she's finished lessons for everyone who is learning healing magic." Undyne sighs softly. "I'd enjoy it if she was here, but as it is I wouldn't see her much with our work schedules."

"If Father wasn't retired, I would say he'd possibly be able to help."

"He pops in from time to time to give lessons." Undyne rolled her eye lightly and finished mopping the floor. "But he's retired, like you said."

“That he is.” Toki shakes her head and sighs. “Anyways- Ah shoot.” Her eye lights flick to the cage where gross sounds were coming from. Looks like Sobek was regurgitating anyways- what a spiteful little shit. “Who wants to draw straws for cleaning the time out cage?”
Chapter 81

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: I don’t really like how the fight scene in this came out- but I suppose not all of them can come out good. This chapter just… didn’t want to happen. HUFF PUFF PUFF.

Silverwing Notes: Ah, the greatness of trouble in paradise. <3 Hehehe! Let's have some fun with our favorite pair of lovebirds!

It was closer to one in the morning when one of the twins fussed, and Toki pried herself out of bed to go tend to them.

It wasn’t often anymore that they fussed this early in the morning- but sometimes, just sometimes, they got hungry in the middle of the night. This was one of those nights.

So, slipping out of bed and trying not to disturb Papyrus, Toki padded across the way and went into the children’s room. She scooped up Honey, who was working her way past whimpering and into full out hungry crying, and then went to settle in the rocking chair.

She unbuttoned her nightgown, and freed her breast. Settling Honey, the infant greedily latched on and began to suckle. Tiredly, Toki began to rock, stroking Honey’s back even as she made fussy feeding noises.

Her eye lights wandered out the window, and she watched the lights in the village streets. The only ones out and about at this time were the guards- and she could see them moving in their groups as they patrolled and kept an eye on everything.

“Buuuubhhh.” Honey fussily made a noise against her breast.

Toki hummed, and stroked her cheek. She paused as Skylar began to stir, and mused that she would either need to wake Papyrus, or she’d have to disturb Honey so she could go grab her son. She didn’t want to wake her husband- he had shift early in the morning- but… Hhhhhh. Choices, choices.

Aliquam shifted as Toki had rose and he sighed quietly before he stretched. "Nnnnh."

"Toki...?" he murmured tiredly.

Given that the doors across rooms were open, he could likely see her across the rooms. She gives him a tired smile as she rocks. “Hey, Pap.” She murmurs softly. In the quiet of the house, only their chatter and the soft fussing of the children was audible. “If you’re up, can you bring Skylar here? He’s going to start up here in a minute, if his whimpers are anything to go off of.”

From the corner of her eyes, she could see the lights in the top of the bar flick on, and an amused look glinted in her eye lights. It seemed they weren’t the only ones up dealing with fussy babies—though theirs weren’t newborn.

"Yeah… sure I can do that." He murmured, yawning widely before he got up and padded to the nursery. He scooped up Skylar, pecking his head gently.

Toki gave him a soft smile, and opened her arms for their son. “Thanks, love. You can go back to bed if you want. I know you’ve got work tomorrow. I,” She yawned, “I woke up to Honey fussing. We’re not the only one’s up though.” She tilts her chin towards the window. Very, very faintly, the wailing of an infant is audible.

Solstice, unlike her father, is very, very loud.

Papyrus laughed gently as he heard it, "Oh my gosh..."

She settled Skylar against her chest, and nodded tiredly as he settled in to feed. “Where Solstice got those lungs from, I wouldn’t know.” She chuckles softly. She glances up to him with a tired smile. “Go back to bed, Paps. You look exhausted.”

"You think he could have gotten those lungs from Caeruleus?” He inquired, leaning down to kiss her skull and not bothering to acknowledge her comment on going to bed.

“I don’t know- other than when he was in labor, I don’t think I’ve ever heard your brother get that loud before.” She smiles and met his kiss with her teeth, gently nuzzling him warmly. She winces slightly, and rubs softly along Skylar’s mouth. “Ah, ow. No biting Momma, now.”

He shrugged loosely and then reached and gently pressed a finger into Sky's mouth to coax him loose.

Skylar let out a garbled snarl and chomped fussily on his daddy’s finger, grinding a loose tooth fussily into his finger when Papyrus pressed in on a sore tooth.

Toki tsks gently, and strokes the back of his skull, crooning to try and soothe her son’s aggressive sound and fussing against his father’s actions. “I think they may be starting to teethe soon. Which… is odd, since they already have teeth.” She frowns. “But we don’t know much about how these two will grow, I suppose.”

"Ow." He murmured gently, tugging his finger back before he nodded. "It's odd yes, but I'm not going to complain."

“It’s not your nipples that are going to be chewed on, so of course you’re not going to complain.” She comments dryly as Skylar goes back to working at her breast. He half chews, half sucks, but all the same it’s uncomfortable. Toki bears it strongly either way, and gives Papyrus a wry look. “We need to dig out the teething toys we have for them.”

He chuckled quietly at that, and then he nodded, "Let's take care of that." He agreed, "Give you a easier job when it comes to nursing."

“Mhm.” She shifts, and adjusts in the rocking chair, before sighing tiredly. The soft sounds of sucking, and Skylar’s grumbling, fills the darkness and the silence until she speaks again. “I think the teething toys are in the box in the closet. Can you check? If they’re not there, try the upper storage shelves. We can put some in the cribs- maybe Skylar will gum on them and sleep easier.”

"Alright, I don’t know if we want to put the part-liquid toys in there with him, he might bite right through it."
“He’s got my teeth- he’ll sheer right through them. Those are meant to be frozen first anyways.” Toki tilts her skull to watch him move in the dark, and hums softly to herself. “Try some of the solid rubber ones- I think they’re at the bottom of the box. We have them all sorted- but I just don’t remember what order in which they’re sorted. We can go ahead and take out the ones with the liquid centers though- the cold will help the ache in his mouth, I’m sure. If they do pop, it’s not like the liquid is toxic.” It was all baby safe- that’s why it was in a baby toy.

Papyrus nodded, and chuckled quietly. He went to fetch one of the solid toys, rifling through the closet until he could locate the box. Once he did, he pulled out two of them, and the freezable rings as well. The rings went onto a shelf to be handled in the morning. The solid rings, he brought back over to his wife.

By the time that Papyrus had found and selected two of the solid rubber teething rings, the twins had finished feeding, and were gumming at her fussily. Toki perked as her husband returned with the rings, and shifted the twins so they could give them the rings.

Skylar immediately went to town chewing on his, gnawing on it sleepily while burbling tiredly. The rocking motion kept him calm, and he was beginning to doze against Toki.

Honey was quieter, simply tucking the ring in her mouth and holding it. She didn’t chew so much as she wiggled it, but she seemed to be settling towards sleep faster than her big brother was.

Toki took the moment to button her night gown again, and then shifted the twins against her with a soft sigh. “They’re getting so big, aren’t they, Pap?” She hums tiredly. “So big, so fast.”

"I can't believe it either." He chuckled weakly, "Wow... Look at them." he purred gently.

The twins were growing like weeds, nearly doubling in size already. They were working on walking, talking- they were growing quickly. Very, very quickly.

Little tears nearly beaded in Toki’s eyes, but she held them at bay. Instead, she gave a wobbly smile. “I feel like they’re growing too fast. But, I think that’s just the mother in me. Mom used to tell me and my brother’s that too.”

He chuckled and hugged her to help comfort her. "We're all growing by the day." He murmured.

She nuzzled him gently in turn and sighed softly. "Yeah, we all are. Sorry I got all emotional there. It just... Happens, you know?” She sighs softly, and smooches his cheekbones.

"It does, but hey... we're here now, I'm so happy we are too~" he purred

"Me too," she laughs softly. "It's hard to look back and think that it's been... Gosh, nearly two years now? Nearly two years since you all came out from under the mountain. We've come a long way. We've all grown and matured a lot."

"We've all done it, yes." He agreed with a purr, "You're a fine young woman, I'm a silly guardsman, and Caeruleus is well... Caeruleus." He laughed.

Toki gently bumped her forehead to his and gave him a soft laugh. “You’re not a silly guardsman. You’re one of the best guards I know.” She smiles up at him gently. “Sans is... Well, Sans. He does ten thousand and one things, but no one really knows what they are.”

Skylar began to snore softly against her chest, finally drifting off to sleep alongside his sister. Both infants held their toys in their mouths.
He hummed in agreement, taking a moment to simply stroke the children’s heads, "No matter what, I always have you and my children to come home to... it's so reassuring."

“It is for me too.” She smiled softly, and simply watched him. The twins shifted, and turned their skulls into his touch instinctively. “It’s nice to know that I’ll always be able to come home to you and our babies. Though,” she laughs, “It’s not like I go very far. It might be stereotypical, but I enjoy being a stay at home mom.” Her work was in her back yard and dining room, basically.

He laughed gently at that and he gave her a content nuzzle, almost wanting to sigh at the peace...

Of course, the peace couldn't last as there was a booming sound in the distance, one that had Aliquam straightening fast. “What the?”

Skylar and Honey startled awake on Toki’s chest, and Toki lurched out of the rocking chair. She scooted to the window, and looked outside.

On the far side of the village, flames could be seen, and lights were coming on all across the town.
Several flares were going up, and shouts were raising.

Red smoke was shot up as well, visible in the light of the magic flares shot up by the guards.

“Red smoke- that’s, that’s the one for Humans Against Monsters, right?” Toki tensed, cradling the infants tighter to her chest as her eye lights tightened.

His eyes widened, "No, no, no, no, no...”  he hugged her for a second, a tight, desperate hug, before he ran out, getting his armor before going to investigate the cause of the commotion, he hoped the signal was an accident.

Toki watched him rush out and frowned. She gathered the cats with her into the twins room, and gently shut the door. She shushed the twins quietly, and settled them into their crib, before settling near the door. The house couldn’t burn- it was literally made of brick and cement, with tile covering.
The furniture could, but there was no wood bracings- none of it could burn again. And the window?
That could be broken if she really needed to get out.

For now, she looked out, and watched as all of the guards rushed to the commotion, frowning and hoping that everything would be alright.

Aliquam was fast to make it to the other end of town, where Tenebris was standing, already dressed and bristling slightly, "What's happening!?”  He inquires.

Undyne has a spear summoned in hand, and is directing it this way and that, sending guards scattering among the houses. “They blew through the fucking wall!” She snarls, indicating one of the walls around the village where there was debris from an explosion. Two houses had been ruined, but they still stood. However, dust piles were visible inside the homes. ‘Civilian and guard casualties reported, and HAM agents seen fleeing inside the village. There are more outside the wall- we can’t split forces to keep them out and track down the ones inside. I don’t know what the hell they’re doing- their plan makes no sense. They’ve got us scattered all over here.” She snarled. She glanced to Papyrus, single eye glinting sharply. “Cage and capture, do not kill unless you have no other choice. I’d like the chance to question these punks before the human police get to talk with them…”

The sight of the piles brought a sickening feeling to Aliquam’s stomach, but he knew he had to be strong for those who he could still save. Summoning a bone, Aliquam nodded to Undyne’s orders and Tenebris bared his fangs, ”I'll search the perimeter and see if there are any more set up to try and get in.” he told her.

Aliquam spoke up. "I'll find the infiltrators!"

Undyne shot Tenebris a look. “You’re technically a civilian, and I should be sending you straight back into your home. However, I know that’s a useless endeavor, so I’m gonna make use of you.” She said. “Take the deer, and if you see a bomb, don’t fuckin’ set it off.” She motioned to Stag, who was standing at the ready. He was usually under Toki’s control- but she’d ‘ordered’ him to train with Undyne.

Stag gave a soft grunt, and shifted to follow Tenebris.

Chuffing a respectful greeting to Stag, Tenebris moved out with him.

Undyne looked to Papyrus and hesitated. The last time something bad had happened, he had been forced to kill. She didn’t want to put him in that position again. “I’m coming with you.” She decided. “Wolfen!” She barked. “You and the guards keep everyone out. Papyrus and I are gonna get the rest of these assholes out of our city. We’ve got the skill sets for capture.” Spears could be used to cage just as well as bones could. “If more of these assholes get in, use the purple flare. If you manage to run them off, use the green flare. If shit goes sour, send up the yellow flare.”

Wolfen saluted firmly, and set to his task. He was barking orders rapidly, taking over for the two captains as they set out to capture the few that had gotten inside before they could kill or harm any more civilians, while the rest of the guards mobbed the breach in the wall from the rest of the city.

"I need to see that someone goes to my home as well! I cannot protect Toki and find these humans at the same time." He told Undyne, before barking said order to a guard that happened to pass at that moment.

The guard gave him a salute, and turned around to head back towards the house to guard Toki for Papyrus.

Undyne nodded, watching the wolf guard trot off. “He’ll keep an eye on her for you.” She said. “Now c’mon. We’ve gotta find those humans. Your mate can handle herself for now- she’s a fuckin’ boss heart, but the rest of the monsters here are just monsters. Now c’mon. These humans can fuckin’ sneeze and dust them.”

She hefted her spear up, and headed out. Her gills flared as she inhaled, taking in scents in ways she didn’t usually. Undyne could draw in the water vapors in the air, sucking them in through her gills and tracking the ‘scent’ through the particles in the vapors.

“Keep your eyes out,” She huffs.

He nodded and watched the shadows, his eyes narrowed as he focused on the task on hand, even with all his worrying about his mate.

Undyne tracked them through the shadows, and came to a stop. She knelt down, and tugged out a dark shirt from where it had fallen behind a crate. Small, but not a child’s shirt, and covered in dust. She grimaced, gills working over time. She set the shirt down gently, and continued on her way.
Her armor was heavy, but she moved quickly, tracking the humans that lead them on a merry jaunt around the village. They didn’t find anymore dust- but they found several doors that had been tried, and locks nearly broken, before the humans had been forced to move on.

The smell of dust clung to them, though, and that’s what let her track them better. “What the fuck are they doing?” Undyne hissed softly, steps rushed as she turned a corner. “They’re goin’ in circles? What are they lookin’ for?”

Aliquam took a second to think... then it hit him and he tensed, abandoning his weapon as he took off in a sprint. Panic flooded him. ‘Nononononono…’

“P-Papyrus! Stop! We haven’t caught the humans! What are you doing?” Spears came up to block his path, rising from the ground and barring his way. Undyne gave him a frustrated look. “Get a hold of yourself. You’re a guard- your duty is to the monster denizens. Toki is one of them too- but she is protected. She has a guard. We need you out here to prevent more dust piles.”

“They're trying to find her!” he snarled, whirling on her with a fierce look. "A group of humans with the intent to kill versus a single guard!!?"

“Stop and fucking think!” She snarls back. “Where the fuck do you live? Right by the main fuckin’ gate. Where have you always lived? By the main fuckin’ gate. If they were after her, they’d be headed for the main fuckin’ gate. They’re not headed for the main fuckin’ gate, are they? No. They’re not. They’re circling around here, trying doors and making dust piles of innocent monsters. How would Toki feel knowing that you left killers out here killing monsters- our friends- just because you didn’t trust the guard to keep her safe? I’m sure he grabbed others, Pap. He’s not dumb. He knows we don’t work alone.”

He grit his teeth, then sighed and pressed a knuckle to the space between his eyes. "Right... I'm sorry... still in father-mode... a little... let's go." He responded to her, going back to following her as told initially.

She huffs a sharp sound through her teeth and eyes him irritably. "I get it, I do, but get yourself under control and try not to let it happen again. Monsters could die because of incidents like this." And with that, she dropped it.

She turned, gills flaring, and darted down to the right. Her boots pounded, and she took sharp corners, lips curling into a snarl. "Take the left alley here, and then the next right. I can smell them. We'll box the fuckers in and have a little talk about why they're here."

He nodded and re-summoned his spear, moving into the alley and pressing to the shadows.

There were six men in the alley, working at a door. They had the lock undone- but there was a monster visible, holding the door shut as the men shoved at the door.

The first thing Undyne did, besides blocking off her end of the alleyway behind her, was shove up a barrier of spears between the men and the door, giving the monster the leeway to shut the door and shut the deadbolt again. The panicked monster’s face appeared in the window briefly, before they bolted upstairs to the second floor of their home.

Undyne faced the six men, waiting for Papyrus to block them off on the other end, and gave them a sharp grin. Spears rose up around them, slowly caging them in as they tried to scatter. “We’ve got some questions for you, boys,” She crooned mockingly.

“Ask away,” One of them spat, “You wont get anything from us.”
It was easy for Aliquam to cut them off and approach with a small growl.

“Shit- that’s the one that murdered Vikki in cold blood.” One of them muttered. “Fuckin’ beast. You’ll get what you deserve for killing her. You all will.”

The men didn’t fight capture- which was odd. Undyne frowned, gills flaring, and glanced over to Papyrus, hoping he didn’t take the accusation of him killing Vikki too hard. Her teeth bared, and she sealed them fully in with spears. “Why are you punks not fighting?”

“We’ve already done some dusting. Besides- we know we can’t take you.” The first one spoke with a snort.

"Smart thinking, keeping your weapons away." He didn't seem phased anymore, Toki had long since helped him clear his mind of the concern.

“Our real weapons are elsewhere.” The man said elusively. “We’ve got other objectives.”

“What are they?” Undyne questions sharply.

“Not fuckin’ telling a sardine.” The man snorts.

"She is not a sardine, she is the captain of the guard and you will show her respect." Aliquam warned.

“I’m not gonna respect a fish any more than I’d respect those bags of bones you call children.” The man sneered. “Toss them to my dogs more like, let them chew ‘m up real good. That’s all you skeletons are good for- chew toys. I wonder if the boss will let-”

“Quiet!” Another hissed.

“Right, sorry.” He grunted. He squirmed in his prison, and glanced to the sky. “Should be soon…”

He growled lowly, before he took a low breath and snapped his fingers, turning their souls blue, "That's enough of that. You're coming with us."

One of them grinned and began to laugh, even as their bodies began to sag under the weight of their souls turning blue. “Good.”

Undyne frowned. “You seem awfully eager to come with us… Why?”

“Reasons.” The man laughed. “We have our reasons.”

Undyne frowned, and then looked to Papyrus. “They wouldn’t be related to Toki, would they?”

The man simply grinned wider. “Should be done by now. In and out- we got you all here. We saw you all flood to the walls, like flies to a fresh wound. Easier than stealing candy from a baby.”

He tensed then looked at Undyne, his gaze filling with fear, as well as a powerful 'I TOLD YOU' aura.

Undyne tensed, and jerked her chin. “Go.” She said, giving him all the permission he needed. “I’ve got these guys. Check on them, and get them to Grillby’s so they’re not alone.”

He nodded and turned, the bone wall falling as he booked it for his home.
Toki heard the front door open, and heard footsteps in the downstairs. The footsteps turned into a scuffle- and then the clang of armor falling down as it dropped, suddenly not suspended by flesh anymore.

She tensed, worry flooding her. She didn’t know who had been in the armor- and it was the worry that had her venturing out of the nursery. It could have been Papyrus for all she knew- and she was a coward for having remained in the nursery hearing the fight, but… She just… She couldn’t…

Toki eased out of the nursery, and to the stairs. The house was dark, which was both a blessing and a curse. She couldn’t see, but no one else could see her either. She squinted, trying to see anyone moving in the shadows downstairs.

Unfortunately for Toki, hands lunged out of the dark for her. A dark gloved fist clawed at her eye socket, and she stumbled back, flailing blindly as pain twinged through her eye lights. “Ah!”

“Ha!”

It was dark, and there was blind scrambling on her part- a massive frame stumbled over her, rushing mostly, and lurched to the nursery to shove at the door.

It popped open, and the twins began to cry, the light from their irritated summons glowing from within.

Toki really didn’t stop to think- she was up, scrambling to her feet and racing after the form. He was after her babies- He wasn’t after her life, he wasn’t after anyone else but her babies.

The broad shouldered form was a man, but not as tall as Grillby. Several inches taller than she was, but broader across the shoulder- definitely not someone she wanted to be tussling with. But, tussling she was.

She hit him like she hit Grillby, scaling up his back. She was clear of mind, unlike when she snapped and went after the fire monster, and she hesitated a moment clearly unable and unwilling to hurt the man, before sinking her teeth into his shoulder regardless.

The padding of his vest ripped and tore, and he muttered a curse, and reached up to tug at her horns.

He ripped her mouth free the first time, letting her spit out the thick mouthful of protective padding that kept her from biting through the first time, but his hand slipped on the slick surface of the bone.

Toki went back in for another bite, and sunk her teeth into his shoulder. Blood flooded her mouth, and the man began to shriek.

The twins began to scream in response, Sobek letting out a squealing sound, and Snuggle making a few garbled buzzes. The man jerked forwards, and tried to shake Toki off- but she held on.

She might have hesitated on the first bite, but that didn’t mean she hesitated on the second. She held on, as he thrashed the nursery, and managed to keep herself in place for a short time- until he managed to get a hold of her arm. He pulled her around to his front, locking her arms at her side with bruising force.
She squirmed, unable to do anything, and watched as he rocked his head back to laugh at her.

“How I’ve got you, you fuckin’ biting menace-“

And Toki bit again, lurching her mouth upwards and clamping shut over his exposed throat. She didn’t think, she didn’t hesitate, she just reacted with the only thing she could think of short of setting the room- and her babies- on fire.

One of her arms was tossed away, landing somewhere by the door, and the man beat at her, his gurgles loud and gasping in her ears. The twins wailing was louder, and the crib had been jostled and knocked out of the way.

Blood was everywhere, thick in her mouth and over her face. It was running down her jaw, her throat- but she held on, and bit tighter, sharp teeth shearing through meat and gristle, scraping the bone of his spine.

The man shoved her away finally- and a chunk of him came with her.

He went down after, hitting the floor with a few spastic jerks. The entire chunk of his throat was missing, gushing blood that spurted in hot waves up and out of the gaping hole. In the light of the angry baby summons, Toki could see that he had night vision goggles on- and wondered, briefly, just what he could see.

The stuff in her mouth felt sour, but she felt numb.

Toki spat out the hunk of the man, noting that it seemed to be in the distinct shape of her teeth, and didn’t hesitate to grab her children. The cats had bolted the moment that the man had opened the door, but the summons and the terrified infants were still in the cradle.

Toki grabbed them, cradling them to her chest with her arm as they latched onto her firmly in their terror, and crept quietly down the hallway. She left bloodied footprints down the stairs, but she didn’t want to alert anyone else in the house- her children were a first priority- she had to get them some place safe. For the moment, she crept to the downstairs bathroom, which was one of the furthest points from the front door, and the least likely place for someone to look for her.

She tucked herself inside, shut the door, and sat against it with the children against her chest. Not that it mattered- the twins were wailing loudly, a beacon of distress for anyone to hear. But the door was thick, and if all else failed… There was enough space to summon Sugar in here. The concrete and brick, at least, helped muffle some of the children’s crying. Not much, but… Some…

Over all though…

Toki was numb.

She’d just killed a man. Ripped his throat out without even thinking about it- she’d just… done it. She’d killed. Ripped it out. She had his blood in her mouth, in her throat- she’d swallowed it too. It was all down her. She’d done it to protect her children.

She’d do it again.

Toki’s eye lights glinted sharply in the darkness, and she tucked her children closer.
Pounding footsteps was the only warning to Aliquam appearing in the broken-in doorway, his breathing rough as he looked around, before he lifted his head, "TOKI!" he called upstairs, moving past the dust-covered armor, hauling tail to get upstairs.

There was no immediate sign of her, upon his first appearance upstairs. However, just inside of the doorway to the nursery, Toki’s arm that had been torn away lay curled, spattered in a sticky, red fluid. There was a lump of flesh that had been dropped next to it. The trail of the sticky fluid made bare skeletal footprints that led downstairs.

In his haste, he had bypassed the bloodied footprints in the darkness of the house.

He looked around as he came upstairs before he felt something hard hit his foot. Or rather, his foot hit it. He reached down and picked up what he realized was an arm and as his vision came to him, now accommodated a bit more to the darkness of the house, he realized it was Toki's arm. Panic hit him again, cold and hard, and he had to force it down. "Toki!" He called again. "Skylar! Honey!" he turned, still unable to see the blood, other than the obvious pool around the dead human.

Toki shifted in the bathroom, still loathe to be making noise and bringing any more humans running straight for them. But, Papyrus was loud, and he would only grow more frantic if he couldn’t find her and their children. She shifted, but was unable to get up under the weight of two summons, and her children. So she scooted, and tapped her foot on the tile, the bone making a chilling, but obvious sound.

She was down stairs. She was here. They were here. They were safe.

He heard it and stiffened slightly before he moved downstairs again, "Toki...!" he made it to the bathroom and tried the door. It didn’t open inwards like it should, so he heaved with his muscles, and ripped it the wrong direction on the hinges, wincing at the smell of the blood that wafted out. "Oh my god, Toki... what happened?" he asked.

Toki didn’t say anything at his prompting. She sat quietly on the floor, having been leaning against the door he’d ripped open, and scooted momentarily over so she could lean against the counter. She simply shook her head, and curled her single arm tighter around their children, who whimpered more against her.

In the dim glow of the bathroom nightlight, Papyrus would see blood. Lots of blood staining Toki and her nightgown.

Honey spotted her daddy, and sniffled from her mother’s shoulder. She unfastened a hand and reached it out to him, the palm bloody from clutching tightly to her mother’s bones.

Sobek hissed in Toki’s lap, but remained stationary, watching and guarding warily.

He looked at her with a shocked look, but carefully eased down so as not to spook her. He carefully put her arm back into place, and quickly claimed his children, hugging them tightly in one arm before he reached out and pulled Toki over into his other arm, "Toki... Oh my god..." he murmured, "I knew it... I knew I should have come back sooner..."

Honey latched onto him. Bloodstained fingers making marks on his armor, she wiggled up until she could curl herself against his neck. She sniffed there, quietly.
Skylar, meanwhile, kept a hand on Toki. He gripped her clavicle tightly, little fingers shaking and not wanting to let go, even in his Daddy’s arms.

Toki kept a hold of the summons, now that she had the use of both arms thanks to Papyrus. Sobek took a perch on her shoulder, and the bloodied grub laid in her free arm. The other one tangled in Papyrus’s armor, latching on tightly. “He wanted our babies.” Toki’s mouth doesn’t move much- a little bit, but it’s enough to show there’s meat and raw things stuck between the tightly clamped laces of her teeth. “He wanted our babies.” That’s all she says.

That’s all she needs to say. She was a mother protecting her children- she wasn’t a meek little bee keeper anymore- she was a mother, with the power to protect her children. She had magic at her fingers- even if she didn’t think immediately to reach for it. She reacted physically. But it had worked.

He growled and he held them a little tighter, "Damn it..." He hissed.

“Ow…” Toki whispered softly at the tightness of his grip, her sore arm protesting the grip. “We… You need to report the guard… He died.” She whispers softly again. “We can… Grillby or… I don’t… I don’t…” She didn’t know. Shock was setting in a bit- shock and the numbness.

He nodded slowly. "But... only once I clean things up here... The smell..."

She lets out a low, morbid, hiccupping laugh. Toki is not all right. She just ripped out some guy’s throat with her teeth. “It tastes even worse.” She assures him almost blandly, trying to force her mind to focus so Papyrus doesn’t disturb the crime scene. “Dead guy’s not goin’ anywhere. Can’t clean him up. Police need his body. Can’t… Can’t clean me either. They’re gonna need photos of me too, or I’m going to go to jail for… For…”

For ripping a guy’s throat out like a savage.

"..." He growled slightly, then he snarled and he sharply thumped a foot, a habit from his father. "Toki... I will make sure you are the first thing they see to... so I can get you cleaned off... immediately..."

His habit, which he’d gotten from Tenebris, who had gotten it from Thumper, usually made her smile. Now she just laughed, hoarse and broken sounding, and it is not a nice sound. “Okay.” Is all she says. “Okay.”

His mate and wife is not alright. She’s not okay- she’s far from it- and she hiccups and stutters in his arms like a leaf in the wind.

He might recall how he felt upon killing Vikki- and realize she’s probably only holding it together because the children were there.

He kissed her repeatedly on her head and cheeks, comforting the children and his wife as best he could, he couldn't even find himself able to move from where he stood, simply holding them tightly to bring them peace.

There was no peace to be found for Toki- none at all. The kisses to her skull simply smeared blood onto his face, and she turned away from his kisses, trying to keep the gore on her face from spreading to him. It needed to be as undisturbed as possible.

The children, however, took solace and comfort in Papyrus, and soon came to rest against him again, with the summons also coming to rest on him.
Toki’s soul was too disturbed by killing someone to bring peace, or to be at peace. So she sat, eye lights unfocused, until the sound of boots clunking approached. A head peeked in, spotted them, and ducked back out again after a few moments of looking them over in the dim lighting of the night light.

It was silent for a time, though there was activity outside the house. Good or bad, Toki didn’t know.

The boots returned shortly.

Undyne ducked into the hallway, flicking on the lights. She flinched, seeing the red, so like her hair, staining Toki’s pearly bones red. She’d seen it in the night light, but under the florescence… It was worse.

Papyrus hadn’t gotten to see it in the light, but the gore was that much worse in the light. What could have been mistaken for small things in her teeth were veins, bits of trachea, and shards of human bone she’d scraped off of his spine from the bite she’d done.

Toki was a mess.

Undyne whistled softly, and glanced to Papyrus. “We got the men to talk. Planned diversionary tactics. They planned to either kidnap the children- your children- or kill them in front of you. Didn’t know why Cruelty wanted them- but I see they didn’t succeed.”

Toki’s mouth twisted up into a grimace, and she stared at Undyne darkly.

Undyne swallowed. “We got permission under the circumstances from the police to have a certified doctor take photos of you, and to document the evidence- I think that means clean your teeth and take your clothes- and then you can go wash up. We’ll have Tenebris in to have your teeth picked clean- just… Don’t move and shed anything.”

“Okay…” Toki whispered.

"It's going to be father... No one else is going to see this." Aliquam murmured, before he lifted his head.

"Undyne."

His voice was almost venomous as he spoke. He was upset. Not just at her, but at himself for doubting his instincts. His father had always taught him to never lose faith in his instincts, and because he did, a guard was dead, and his wife was covered in viscera.

"Make sure that no one else comes in. No officers, no guards. Only Father." That wasn't a request like he would normally ask politely. It was an order.

Toki's head ducked down at his words, and she wondered if Papyrus was ashamed of her. She had... She killed someone. Killed. Because it was either them, or her babies, like Grillby had said.

Undyne's fins flared, and she met Papyrus's gaze squarely. "Careful," she warned. "Remember who is the Captain here. I'll do what I can, but I can't control the human police. I'll go get your father now. I would suggest taking your children to Grillby's and letting Sans wash them up. The situation is contained, and the town is secure. Teleporting would still be faster, however, for moving them. Toki will be alright by herself for a few seconds, right?"

"I don't want them far..." Toki tensed, eye lights flicking to Papyrus.
"My children not leaving my sight." he growled, before hearing the footsteps of his father coming closer, the beast appearing from the back door of the house.

"Aliquam? Tokiko!"

The footsteps made Toki tense, and her teeth made a sickening squelching sound as they ground together in stress. She didn’t relax when Tenebris’ voice sounded out, only made a small sound and closed her eyes.

Skylar whimpered at the sound her teeth made, and turned his head into his father’s armor, even if his finger’s tightened on his mother’s clavicle.

“Down here, Tenebris.” Undyne’s voice was calm and collected, and she met Papyrus’s gaze calmly. “Take it from me, Pap. You might want to get them some place where they wont have to see her like this for much longer. It… makes an impression. The traumatic things stick the longest.” The way she said it spoke from experience, and there was something in her yellow eye that said it was true. She turned away, however, and headed for the front door. “Down stairs bathroom. Watch your feet- there’s blood on the floor, and the police need undisturbed pictures of it. You got your camera?”

"I do." The older replied, slowly stepping over the path of blood as he approached, "Papyrus, can you take the pups to your brother while I take care of Toki?" He questioned, coming and setting a hand on his clean shoulder. "I’ll take good care of her, I promise.” He rumbled to him.

Papyrus gave him a conflicted look of anxiety, but slowly nodded. "I... A-Alright..." he looked at Toki, "They're not hurt... I'll stay to make sure they're safe and I’ll come right back... okay...?"

Toki nodded slowly, and swallowed thoughtlessly. Iron burned a foul taste down her mouth, and her face twisted. “Y-yeah… Check them over please. When we were… fighting, he… hit the crib a couple times. I don’t know if they got jostled or not.” She murmured softly.

Her fingers came up to gently pry her sons hand off of her collarbone. It didn’t take all that much effort- but Skylar began to cry when she got him to let go, and her soul lurched in her chest. She longed to take him in her arms, to bring him close and make his sobs go away.

Undyne left them be, her boots clonking loudly on the tile as she went down the hall.

Papyrus slowly let Toki go and took both children into his careful cradle, as well as the summons from Toki, as he teleported out.

Once they were gone, Tenebris sighed and looked at Toki. "You can sit down on the toilet, Toki... You're safe, and thanks to you, so are your children." He purred to her gently.

Toki glanced to Tenebris in the sudden silence of the bathroom, and then she nodded quietly. She padded to the toilet, and took a seat, leaving bloody footprints as she went. She sat down, and glanced down at herself.

She looked like a bad horror movie prop.

“"I killed a man, Tenebris.” She said softly.

"No, Toki..." he told her, tilting her chin up with a single knuckle, "You killed someone who wanted to kill you, and your children. You fought back when you absolutely had to, and it just happened to come that the man had to be stopped by your last resort." He told her.

She stared at him.
“I bit down.” She said. “I bit down, and I held on. I didn’t use magic- I could have used magic- I didn’t think to use magic. I just… reacted. And… I ripped his throat out.” She gave a rasping laugh. “With my teeth. I’ve got parts of his throat in my mouth and- and the worst part… I’d kill him again. Because it was either him, or my babies.” Killing shouldn’t have been the only way.

But… apparently sometimes it had to be.

"Toki, if he was threatening you, or your children, know that i would not have hesitated to do the same. Instinct can shine brighter than any capability of magic" He told her, "You protected with the wrath of a mother" he purred, "That's nothing to be ashamed of."

Toki just shakes her head and looks away. She opens her mouth, teeth squishing, and motions for him to take pictures and remove the... Debris. "I don't regret protecting my babies... But I never wanted to kill or hurt anyone." She says softly.

"No one does, Tokiko." he told her, taking pictures of the evidence before he began to clean her teeth of the viscera.

She shifted, and squirmed as he began pulling viscera from her teeth. This was the remnants of someone in her mouth. Part of her was nauseated and wanted to hurl- but the other part of her was just too deeply shocked and disturbed. Too numb. The feelings warred on her face, Toki looked lost. She looked many things.

She knew for certain she would kill that man again- she would do it again in a heart beat. But... Did that make her like... Like Cruelty? Because she would do it? Or not, because she was doing it for her children, and he was doing it because he could?

"Papa?" She questioned softly. "How do monsters tell what marks a positive soul and a negative soul? What makes us different?"

He hesitated at that, then he sighed, and he stopped for a moment, before he continued, "A Negative soul is just that. It's cold... toxic. It's hurt and seeks to spread the pain if only to ease it's own. It takes a true sick heart to savor it for the sake of pleasure." he explained,

"A positive soul... It's not nearly as bad... it can show its pain louder than a negative soul does, as a Negative soul hides it because they often see it a weakness."

Toki nodded quietly and glanced up at him. "... I think you're right and wrong." She says softly. "I think you're what you choose to be. I... I choose to be kind. You can be more than your soul type dictates. But... But if you embrace it... If you embrace it like... Like Cruelty did... Then yeah... That sounds about right."

Her bloody fingers ache to hold something, but they can't, not while he's documenting and cleaning out her teeth. Toki sighs, iron scented air wafting over him in a vile wave. "I am afraid..." She says. "I'm afraid... Because I would kill again. It would be for my child or someone, but... I... I'm tired of everyone dying... I hid in the nursery while that guard died in the living room. I am afraid, because I would kill again... If I would kill again, even for someone else... Does that make me like him?" Her words didn't really make much sense- but a lot of that was a lack of knowing how to phrase it.

"Toki..." he spoke with a stern tone, "No more. You need time to let your mind settle." he then told her with a more gentle voice, "It's going to be okay. Let me clean you up."

She flinched at the stern tone, dislodging a shard of the man's spine from her teeth. It fell down and landed on her nightgown. "S-sorry."
"It's gonna be okay" he purred again, cleaning the rest of her off before he turned to start the water in the bathtub. He then turned back to Toki, his gaze gentle as he cupped her cheek, care little for the blood, "Toki... You're my strong, brave daughter, Nothing can hit you down and keep you there.
You're stronger than that."

She looked at him quietly, but didn't nuzzle into his palm like she wanted to. She shuffled awkwardly on the toilet, and glanced at the bathtub. "Thanks... Can you just... Take me to some place else please to shower? The police will be here soon..." And being naked with cops was not what she wanted to be doing, really. "I don't... There's a lot of b-blood still in here."

"The water's warming up as we speak" he told her, "For your privacy, I’ll leave your clothes on. It'll give me a head start in washing out the blood too." he chuckled, shifting his footing before offering her a hand, "To the bathtub then."

She didn't share his chuckle. She glanced away quietly, staring at the bathtub to the side of her which was flecked in specks of dried blood from who knows what part of her, but shakily reached up and took his hand. "I was just going to throw the night gown away." She wasn't going to be able to wear the same gown again that she took someone's life in, even in defense of her children.

"Then lets at least keep it on for the officers." he told her, helping her up and to the bathtub.

Apparently he had misunderstood her request to go somewhere else. Or just hadn't wanted to since the bathtub was already filling. That wasn't what she had meant by somewhere else. She had hoped to maybe go out of her house, away from the blood and the gore, and the fact that there would no doubt be police officers wanting to see her no matter what demands her missing husband made of Undyne.

Toki deflated a bit, but didn't have it in her to ask again more firmly for a different cleaning location.
She just hunched her shoulders, ducked her skull, and tried to ignore the sticky trail of footprints she had left since the up stairs of the house. Toki closed her sockets, and for once, wished she wasn't home as her toes slid into the hot water and stained it a rusty red.

He stroked her head and sang to her gently as he used the showerhead to clean her off. Her teeth got the most attention, his thumb stroking gently over her teeth, claw tips serving as a final pick to her gum line to clean her up.

Her mouth opened listlessly, letting the water rinse over her teeth and rinsing out the inside of her mouth. Her fingers twitched in the water, scrubbing uselessly against the pale nightgown that was quite thoroughly ruined by the carmine stain covering it.

Her eyes were dim, however, and listlessly watched as his claws removed the last of the stuff from her mouth. Her teeth interlocked fairly tightly, but they were flexible given her range of expression, so there has been stuff stuck. Not anymore.

The water rapidly turned red as she stood in it, quietly cleaning off what she could off herself.

He scrubbed her clean as he continued to hum, but he backed up for a moment, "I can remove your nightgown and wash off what's left, I have time, so it seems, to get you dried and changed before the officers arrive" he told her gently, "would you like that?"

By the time that she was clean, Toki had stopped scrubbing entirely, and simply let him do as needed. The water ran clear, even if the gown looked stained to high hell.

Her eye lights drifted to his face as he spoke, showing she was listening, but the slow blink showed that she was also not really processing much of anything happening around her. His question went right over her head, metaphorically. Toki simply stood there quietly, not at all home.

He looked at her for a little while, then he sighed and he gently sang to her as he continued his delicate work. This was almost as bad as her trauma from the fire...

He lifted her nightgown from her and discarded it into the sink. Before he continued cleaning her, using the showerhead on a gentle setting to run over her bones.

By the time he finished, he let her drip dry a little before he brought over his turtleneck and used it to turn her into a Toki-Burrito, picking her up before lifting his tank top and using it to cradle her in one arm, the other holding her head to his collarbone gently. His singing continued as he walked her out, looking for the officers in case they had shown up

The officers had shown up- but were not in the house yet. Undyne, however, was, and spotted him as he appeared in the main room again. She frowned upon at him, and held up a bag for him to take. "I got some clothes for the twins out of the dresser, and some of Papyrus and Toki's clothes from their room. The house isn't going to be available for them to be in for a couple days. It's a crime scene, as is parts of town. Trade you, evidence bag and camera for clothes. You can go ahead and take her to Grillby's... I wonder why Pap never came back." The last part was mostly mused to herself, but was said out loud anyways.

Toki was a limp lump of bones in his arms, but the right and secure position was safer and she responded by nuzzling just faintly into him.

He took the bag and rumbled quietly as he tucked it in Toki's lap. "They're both in the bathroom. All you need is the SD chip." He told her.

Undyne nodded quietly. Her gaze slid down to Toki, and she frowned. "I'll make sure to get everything for sure."

The bag garnered no response from Toki.

Undyne frowned deeper. "She shut down, didn’t she?"

He nodded slowly. "Yes, terribly."

Undyne grimaced. "Toki’s a gentle soul.” She said softly. "Killing just… isn’t in her. Just… We’ll do for her what we did for Papyrus- everyone is different, and reacts differently, but… We’ll be there for her. For now, take her and go to Grillby’s. I’ll handle the cops and we’ll… get this place cleaned up and the body removed.”

At the mention of the body, Toki curled up more and whimpered.

He gave a sharp 'sh' sound as he held Toki a little tighter. “Of course.” He nodded. Tenebris gave her one more look, shifted Toki slightly, and then teleported to Grillby’s home above the bar.

Grillby’s living room was dark, all of the lights off save for some candles that were lit to keep attention off of the bar- but there was a glow in the bed room, and the sound of fussing children.

The big bar tender came out as the sound of feet hitting the carpet came around, his sleeves rolled up over large biceps, showing he was quite willing to brawl if it came to it- and he sighed as he spotted Tenebris. He tilted his head, seeing the bundle in his arms. “Papyrus and Sans are in our room.” He says. “You are welcome to come in. Is she… alright?”
"Disconnected." he answered as he came over, "How are the pups?"

“Worn out, but distressed. They know their mother isn’t near, and refuse to settle.” Grillby says. He ushers the larger monster into his room, and shuts the door behind them. The bed had been foregone, the floor instead turned into a massive nest of pillows and blankets. Sans had their newborn daughter asleep at his chest, and was curled near his brother, who had the twins with him.

The twins were fussing, squirming and kicking, and gurgling to themselves. They’d been stripped out of their bloodied clothes, and washed, obviously, and their father was also cleaned and out of his armor. They were fairly naked, and clinging to Papyrus’s underclothes. Sobek and Snuggle were nowhere to be found- the summons had been stuffed away in one of the side rooms, so as not to risk Grillby’s newborn daughter with any of the bird beast’s roughness.

Toki stirred in Tenebris’ arms, reacting to their fussing. “Nn…?”

"Well thankfully, they've all gotten cleaned up and that will allow them to try and get some rest." he murmured to Grillby, before walking to the bedding where Aliquam laid.

The younger monster’s eyes opened and he looked up at Tenebris. "Father... Is she okay?" he asked, getting only an uneasy look in return.

As he reached up for his mate, Tenebris came and laid the young woman down with his turtleneck, allowing his son to pull Toki close and squeeze her tightly.

The bag of clothing fell from her lap, landing somewhere along his legs in the nest of things, while she was tucked gently into him. Her eye lights closed, and she shuddered quietly. Toki’s fingers curled into his chest after a moment, clinging to him quietly. “Nnnn…“

Grillby nodded quietly, and collected the bag that had fallen. A quick glance, and he frowned.

"Clothes?"

He nodded. “I can go and get more clothes from their home if needed, but this is a little something to start off…” Though, Tenebris mused, he shouldn’t be able to get in. But what the police and Undyne didn’t know didn’t hurt them…

Grillby frowned lightly. “Then their home isn’t accessible to them.” He says. He glances down to his mate, and frowns. “Our place is a little small, but it is open to them for as long as they need it.”

Toki shivers suddenly, and curls herself around her mate. Her fingers shift, and reach out to tangle with her babies, and they cling to her, their fussing finally quieting as they can touch both parents finally.

"I can take them if it comes to be too much." Tenebris rumbled as he shifted on his feet. "My home has enough room."

“It once held them all, I know.” Grillby nods. “But you now have your adopted son, so your house is not nearly as empty as it once was.” The fire monster shifts, and eyes the monsters huddled in the nest. “Go get Thumper, Tenebris. Let us take shelter here tonight- and keep watch over Papyrus and miss Toki.”

He nodded gently. "Yes." He turned and teleported from the home once more, going to collect his son.

While Tenebris went to fetch Thumper, Grillby went to fetch more blankets and the like.
Which left Sans, Papyrus, one sleeping infant, two calmer infants, and one traumatized woman.

The horned skeleton shifted slightly, eye lights dim, and rubbed her thumbs lightly along the back of Skylar’s hand, as her son brought her thumb up to his mouth to gently chew on it. He cooed lightly, and crooned to her, and she hummed a faint sound in response to her child’s noise.

Aliquam nuzzled and kissed Toki's head gently, "My beautiful Toki." he murmured. "I love you so much."

Toki shifted at the kiss, and her eye lights flicked up to him. They traced over his face for a time, trailing here and there, before dropping off and back down to his chest. She snuggled close, and kept contact with him and her little ones. A deep and shuddering breath escaped her quietly. “Love you too…”

"You were so brave. I'm so glad you are okay." he purred, "You protected our children."

Toki twitched against him, just slightly. Her fingers flex, and she trembles, and hides her face. “Not okay. Not brave.” She was neither of those things- she’d hid up in the nursery while the guard downstairs had been murdered. If that had been Papyrus… A shiver rattled up her spine, making her tremble inside the cocoon of Tenebris turtleneck. “Not, not, not,” she muttered. “Not okay…”

Grillby eased back into the room with a mass of blankets and pillows, saw that they were still waiting for Tenebris to get back with Thumper. He padded to the nest, and dropped the mass of blankets in, before glancing at the couple, and then sliding in to join his mate. “She’s not okay right now, Papyrus,” He said softly. “Think back to what happened after Vikki, and how you felt. She’s not okay right now- and she’s going to need some time before she will be.”

"I meant physically." he murmured as he hugged her tightly with one arm, landing kisses on her face and teeth.

Tenebris, in the mean time, came inside Grillby's home, wearing a deep black turtleneck while he had a sleeping thumper over his shoulders, the bunny draped in warm clothing to keep him snug.

Toki didn’t really notice as Tenebris and Thumper slipped in and tucked into the growing pile of monsters. The kisses to her face and teeth roused her again, and she trembled, eye lights quivering in their sockets. Slowly but surely, she returned his touches, though shakily.

“She’s not okay enough to differentiate that right now,” Grillby says softly, and pats the young man’s shoulder. He shifts, and eyes the duo, before looking at the twins. “… You both need the contact, as do your children. Are you alright with the twins as is? Or would you like for me and Tenebris to dress them?”

“They’re alright for now.”

Grillby nodded, and moved back to give them some space.

Aliquam nuzzled and kissed Toki's head gently, "My beautiful Toki." he murmured, "I love you so much, and I’m so proud of you... You protected them so valiantly..." He praised between kisses, stroking her head gently.

Toki shuddered shakily, and began to shake slightly under his words. Her fingers withdrew from the twins, drawing into the shirt she’d been bundled into, and Toki sniffled quietly as he peppered her with praise and kisses. “I… shouldn’t be praised for killing… For… For hiding. I didn’t... help that guard...”
"You did what you could." He told her, stroking her head, "You could only do so much, and you did plenty." He told her gently.

“No.” She shook her head. “I didn’t.” She just tucked her head against her side, and shakes slightly. "I didn’t even… try… I just… Hid and listened and came out after, and… No. Just… No.”

He sighed and nuzzled her, "Don’t worry about it..." he told her gently as he kissed her some more, "It's going to be okay, Toki... it will." he told her quietly.

Skylar and Honey shifted on his chest, and sniffled against him, squirming fussily.

Toki didn’t respond to his words, simply shaking her head, and reaching out. She brushed over her children’s bare backs, and frowned softly. “They need clothes…” She murmurs softly.

"Father brought them clothes." he reached with a foot and hooked the bag on it after Grillby nudged it over again, pulling it closer so he could grab it with a hand. "Looks like there's something for you too."

Toki shifted slightly in her bundle of borrowed clothes, and shakily sat up in them. The bundled the twins into her arms, cradling them to her chest, and nestling them close as they clung to her.

“Mmmhm… Help me…?”

He nodded and brought his hands up to help dress the twins, murmuring comforts to her.

Once they were dressed in one piece outfits, Toki tucked them into Tenebris’ oversized turtleneck with her, and curled around her. She looked at her hands as she cradled them close, and shook lightly. Her hands were blood stained now- even if they were clean. She took a shaky breath, and looked up at Papyrus as the twins nuzzled at her chest, seeking the comforting sensation of feeding more than they were the actual food. She shifted to adjust them accordingly, and let them nurse and seek comfort as they needed. “I… What do I do now, Pap…? What do… we do now?” She sounded lost.

"I don’t know... but we're not alone." he assured her gently, "We have Father. We have the rest of the village too..." he ran a hand down her arm, bringing it back up to squeeze her shoulder firmly, "We’ll be okay... no matter what." he purred.

She sniffled and nodded, and tucked back into him with a shaky sigh. “We’re not alone.” She murmurs in agreement, glancing out over the cramped nest, to Sans next to her husband, and Grillby across from him, and Tenebris and Thumper wedged in too.

No, they weren’t alone. And alone wasn’t what she needed right now anyways. She tucked her children in tighter, and nestled in closer to Papyrus, before closing her sockets and just resting.
Chapter 82

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So I know kids can change your sex life… but Silver and I just figured this out… Toki and Papyrus haven’t fucked in nine months. Nine. Not since before the twins were born. Dude. Just. Dude. He’s got the self-control of a damn saint. Also silver and I are gross and somehow we sexualized milking. _. We have no shame. None. Fuck. THIS CHAPTER IS MOSTLY NSFW. THE LAST LITTLE BIT IS NOT, BUT 90 PERCENT OF IT IS.

Silverwing Notes: So, We all know the definition of BlueBall, yas? We can all safely agree that pap is by now so blueballed you could mistake him for his brother.

Let’s fix that~

The men that they’d captured hadn’t said a word as to the location of Cruelty’s base. Undyne had questioned them, and the police had questioned them- but… Well… There was only so much that they could do without legitimately torturing them, and that was breaking all sorts of laws in many different countries, including their own.

They had people working on them, however, as updates came out across the news informing of any new information that the greedy press managed to suck from the police department. Nothing good or nothing new yet, but something eventually would come…

Or Cruelty’s men would get to the captive one’s first from inside the jail, according to the news castors gossiping and speculation. Either or seemed to be highly likely at this point.

It took a week for them- Toki and Papyrus that was- to be allowed to go home. It took two weeks for Toki to manage to scrub the last of the blood out of the cracks in the tile with bleach. At three weeks post kidnapping and murder attempt, they had managed to patch the hole in the wall of the village, and Undyne and the guards were going over Human tactics of war. Four weeks post incident, and Toki was still waking in the middle of the night with nightmares- but she was much better than she was four weeks before. Her nightmares were not violent ones, with her thrashing out of bed and waking her husband- but she’d wake with tears in her eyes, and the taste of blood in her mouth.

Thankfully, the twins seemed okay. They woke up in tears any time they slept for the first week and a half, but thankfully it seemed to have ebbed off. However, Skylar did not like seeing Toki wearing red shirts.

He would cry, until she changed.

Also thankfully, there was no LOVE in her soul, and no EXP- nothing that had gone up anyways. Sans had assured her of that the morning after the incident. That didn’t mean that it didn’t haunt her. Yes- she had technically killed before. She recalled that, in all technical truth, in the incident where Han had been murdered, she had initially summoned Sugar and Clover, and her summons had… well, they had slaughtered countless members of Humans Against Monsters.
Indirectly her kills, but her kills all the same.

But, they hadn’t been innocent people—no one in Humans Against Monsters was innocent. They might have been, before Cruelty and his minions had gotten their hands on them, but… After that? After that, they weren’t any longer.

They might have been redeemable though. And for that… That is what haunted Toki.

That, and the fact that she had sat back and let a guard die in her living room. She could have gone to help— and maybe, just maybe, the guard would still have been alive.

The nightmares didn’t just come at night, however. They came during naps too— and naps were more frequent, given her lack of ability to sleep straight through the night. There was nothing to be done, she knew, but to wait it out. They’d had to wait out the nightmares about Han, and the nightmares about Tenebris— but they’d been doable. These, likewise, would be doable. They just… needed time.

Dreams interspersed with the nightmares. Not just normal dreams— but the… World viewing dreams. One in particular stood out— and it was the one that woke her from her current nap after chasing a nightmare from her.

She’d flashed into a world very much like this one— everything was very similar. Except… well, Papyrus definitely was not a virgin, and the Royal Guard was not the Royal Guard.

Toki had never been a part of an orgy before. After experiencing that in that dream… She’s not sure if she wants to, or if she doesn’t want to. Either way, it was a hell of a dream to wake up to— compiled with the nightmare, she’s not sure what she was feeling when she opened her eyes with her head in Pap’s lap.

Dark circles marked the under parts of her sockets— Toki wasn’t getting a lot of restful sleep. Papyrus had been much the same when he had killed Vikki. He’d been a mess— but it had taken him time to want to talk about it. Toki had talked— and now it was just about waiting to see when it would start to begin feeling better for her nightmares and night terrors to stop.

Toki could hear their children, also sleeping in their napping cradle with their equally tuckered out summons nesting protectively around them.

She glanced up at her husband, hoping she had not been making any… noises in her sleep in response to the… rather interesting sensations she’d been handling in the strange lusty verse. If she had, she’d been right in his lap, and he’d have heard every one of them.

His eyes were closed and he was slouched over her, his hand unmoving on her hand. She was lucky. His secret was... safe.

Toki had the distinct urge to do… well, something, growing in her undergarments, and it made her shift uncomfortably, rolling over on the couch and sighing just faintly. She tucked her face further into his lap, settling onto her side and burying her skull into his belly with a tiny hidden buzz. At least he hadn’t heard anything— and didn’t have a sense of smell like Tenebris did. She idly played with his fingers, willing herself to go back to sleep and ignore the conflicting feelings the nightmare and the dreams had left her with.

Aliquam let out a quiet sound as she nuzzled into him, though he didn’t exactly wake, so she would be dancing in a snake nest. But, one could suppose that would make it that much more exciting.

A snakes nest could be exciting— particularly since she was nestled above a metaphorical den. The first thing that came to mind was exactly what could be under her head, and her face flushed brighter.
She shifted and rotated, bringing her arms up to press his hand to her chest. She could… Well, Toki could tease him. The twins were asleep, as were the summons, and they had a blanket over them. If she was quiet…

But they were in the living room, where the guard was…

Her magic churned against her bones, and against the hand she had clutched against her breast, ripe with indecisive feelings, and she huffed against his belly, nuzzling his middle and lap quietly.

The nuzzling made him stir again and his hand gently gripped whatever rested under it, in this case, her breast.

Which prompted a leak from the still nursing mother, dampening her shirt and his fingers as his hand gently squeezed her breast- which was full since the twins hadn’t eaten in several hours. Toki sighed slightly, a tiny groan escaping her as she hid her face in his lap again. Well, that was embarrassing. She hadn’t had that happen in a while.

But at the groan, his eyes opened, and bright orange orbs looked down at her, "...Toki... Just how pent up are you?" he asked quietly.

"… You just squished my boob." She squeaked quietly, her flush crawling down her skull as she realized she had woken him. Shit- shit, shit and a damn again. "Which is kinda… full again since the twins aren’t eating as often.” A lot yes, but not as often. Did she answer his question? Not at all. She didn’t look up to meet his eyes either.

"Does my dear wife need to be milked~?" he purred quietly.

Toki was pretty sure her face was going to combust. “A-Ah… Maybe?” She shifted, and finally peered up at him, eye lights tinting a minty green as she angled her skull upwards, horns curving back and over his opposite thigh. It wasn’t even a heat and she’d woken up feeling frisky- and all of that was to blame upon that damn dream with that place with all of the- Hhhhhnnn… “C-could we?” The twins wouldn’t be wanting to eat for another two hours- three maybe. Given her volume of magic, she’d probably be right back at the same quantity in another hour.

Toki kept the twins well fed.

She flushed harder, however, and glanced away. This wasn’t something they usually did- she usually handled milking on her own for if she was out of the house and he was going to be alone with the twins- and they hadn’t done anything like this since she had… well, killed that guy.

He chuckled and nodded, "Sit up, I’ll go get some bottles." He purred, running his hand over her skull gently.

Toki was pretty sure her face was going to combust. “A-Ah… Maybe?” She shifted, and finally peered up at him, eye lights tinting a minty green as she angled her skull upwards, horns curving back and over his opposite thigh. It wasn’t even a heat and she’d woken up feeling frisky- and all of that was to blame upon that damn dream with that place with all of the- Hhhhhnnn… “C-could we?” The twins wouldn’t be wanting to eat for another two hours- three maybe. Given her volume of magic, she’d probably be right back at the same quantity in another hour.

Toki kept the twins well fed.

She flushed harder, however, and glanced away. This wasn’t something they usually did- she usually handled milking on her own for if she was out of the house and he was going to be alone with the twins- and they hadn’t done anything like this since she had… well, killed that guy.

He chuckled and nodded, "Sit up, I’ll go get some bottles." He purred, running his hand over her skull gently.

Toki nodded quietly, and shifted to sit upright after nuzzling into his palm. His hand got the softest of kisses from her teeth, of which she was oh so careful with now, before she scooted over to let him up. “Alright, Pap.”

He got up and walked to the kitchen. He rifled around a little bit, making only a little bit of noise, before coming back after a little while with a few empty baby bottles in hand. "This should work.” He spoke as he came over, kneeling before her with a smile. "You'll feel better in no time.”

Her blush was rampant and not going away. Her breasts certainly weren’t her only issue, and she wasn’t about to tell him that. Toki simply nodded, and shrugged out of the shoulders of her shirt and baring her chest to him. “Thanks, Quinn.” She smiles quietly. “You’ve never helped me milk by hand before. Do you… want me to show you how?" Or did he just want to figure it out as he went?
She didn’t have a problem with doing either, she supposed.

"As eager as I am to help you. I have no idea how." He admitted with a quiet laugh. "Please, teach your student." He purred, eye sockets resting at half-mast as he peered at her.

Well, that made her blush deeper. “Of course, love.” She smiled. Her fingers flitted up, and lifted one of her breasts, cupping it gently. They weren’t like human breasts for all that they looked very, very similar– she’d looked up how those worked, thinking she needed similar techniques for draining her milk reservoirs, and those were particular in how you had to milk those. Those, you had to push into the chest wall, form a ‘c’ shape with your fingers, and make a lot of rolling motions, and be careful not to damage the tissue. These, you could just gently squeeze the breast itself, and it could leak. She guided one of the bottles closer, taking it from him, and giving him a lopsided grin. “You’ll probably have an easier time. Bigger hands and all that. It’s pretty easy- just be gentle. They’re very sensitive.”

She adjusted her grip, bringing two fingers down to grasp her nipple and keep it angled over the bottle, and then used the rest of her hand to gently work her breast. It eased milk out slowly, the glowing green fluid thick and warm. “A breast pump is easier,” she admits, “but it kinda… hurts. My breasts aren’t designed like human ones. At least, not on the inside. So doing it by hand is just easier.” Toki explains quietly. And this, she muses, is what she was doing any time she left him alone with the kids.

He watched as she explained how to do it and he nodded, giving her the bottles to hold in position while he moved behind her and nuzzled her while reaching up and cupping her breasts, "I'll do my best to be gentle then." He murmured.

Toki flushed a bit more, and leaned back into him as he took up a position behind her. She tilted a little to the side, so he could lean over her shoulder, and then let his hands take over once she had finished her demonstration. Without thinking, she quietly cleaned her fingers with her tongue, and then dried them on her shirt, before carefully shuffling the bottles into position under her nipples. “Just remember, gentle,” She says softly, “like how you are when you handle your, ah…” She wiggled her backside against his pelvis to make her point. “Remember that, and you’ll do just fine.” She smiled encouragingly, and waited for him to begin. His hands already felt nicer on her chest than her own did, and Toki couldn’t help the pleased purr that escaped her in response.

He shuddered and chuckled gently, pressing a few soft kisses to the side of her head with the flats of his teeth before he began to shift and massage her breasts, following her example to start lightening her unpleasant burden. "Like this?" He inquired.

The massaging motion helped to relax her, and urge her milk to ‘drop’ as it were. The motions gave irregular streams, without his fingers to direct the nipples or help work the openings, but he was getting it, slowly but surely. “Ah- you want to gently pinch the nipple between your fingers, like I did before.” Toki says softly, flush crawling further over her skull as warmth blossomed in her breasts. She angled her skull, and nuzzled it into his neck with a soft sigh. “It, hah, lets the milk release easier. Kind of like… Kind of like when you’re checking the temperature on the bottles for the twins. But ah- mmmm- yes, very good…”

It was very, very different having him handle her breasts than it was for her to be doing it. There was some manner of pleasure when she did it, but his hands always felt perfect when they touched her. This was no exception. Mmm…

"Mmm... You're soft. And warm." His voice purred gently along the side of her skull as he worked, fingers shifting to do as she directed, and he pressed a few gentle kisses to her shoulder. "I love you so much, Toki... Does this feel good?" he asked warmly.
“It does, yeah.” She nodded softly against him, pressing a few gentle kisses to the under side of his jaw line. She shivered, and traded out the bottles as they filled up, a soft, pleased groan escaping her without her meaning to. “A-Ah, s-sorry about that.”

He smiled and kissed her neck as he began to cradle and knead her breasts, getting creative with his milking method.

Her hands shook a little bit as they held the bottles, warmth spreading up from her breasts as his hands kneaded and stimulated them, making it difficult to focus and keep the bottles steady. The kisses at her neck prompted her to tilt her head away and offer more of her neck, conscious thought leaving her as she wiggled her backside back into his pelvis with a teasing rocking motion. “Ah~”

He smiled and kissed her neck some more as his hips shifted upwards to grind against her pelvis, "Feel good? It's been so long since you were so responsive... I missed this~"

Toki rocked back into his grinding, rolling her hips gently against his own instinctively. She leaned back with a soft sigh, a pleased sound escaping her. “It feels really good,” she murmurs softly. “I’ve missed your touch. The last time we’ve gotten to do something like this... Gosh, was before the twins? Nearly nine months ago, wasn’t it?” The comment on being responsive has her chuckling softly, and, as she’s trading out a bottle, she pauses to reach up and stroke his skull. “I’m sorry,” Toki murmurs softly. “It’s... It’s been a long month.” She admittedly hadn’t been nearly as affectionate this past month as she normally had. Her teeth... Bothered her a lot. Kisses had been more sparse-she just wasn’t sure how he could want to kiss something that had torn someone’s throat out. “I haven’t been a very attentive wife this month.”

"You were hurt. You needed time." He told her gently, running a hand over her nipple with a purring coo. "You needed to recover."

She let out a soft gasp, and managed to cap the bottles before she spilled them all over herself. “S-shit,” she squeaked, still having to mop up a few spilled drops. Her breasts weren’t empty, but then and again, they never truly did empty. They just depleted their stores. Such was the life of a nursing mother. “I, ah… yeah. I’m still... Not all okay. But... But I want… to do this…” Her head tilted to the side, teeth shifting to leave a soft peppering of kisses along his jaw as she wiggled back against him. “If, you... if you want to, that is...?"

He smiled and kissed her, helping her cap the milk bottles before setting them aside. "I want you... I want you so badly. And I want to make you feel better than you have in a long while." He murmured, "You’re my beautiful wife, and my wife is my goddess. I’d praise her on my knees if that’s what she so demands."

Toki giggles bashfully, and shifts in his lap. She fixes her shirt shyly, and peers up at him with a lopsided smile. “I’m no goddess, my love.” Her hand strokes up the strong line of his jaw, and she sighs quietly. “Definitely not a goddess. Just an earthly mortal- but an earthly mortal who loves you with all her being... And I... I want you...” Her hand slips down to tease the hem of his slacks. “I want you badly. However... we’ll have to be quiet...” Unless they turned on some music first, to drown out any... noises. The twins were just across the room.

And Toki was not going to go upstairs and leave them downstairs. Not after last month- and she’s pretty sure Papyrus wasn’t either.

“Though... Is it right to? Here, I mean...” She glanced away again, fingers hesitantly twirling teasing circles along his bones and stimulating him. “A guard was dusted down here...” It was their living room, yes, and it would also be a death site as well- but there were just things that they would have to get over. This, Toki supposed, was one of them.
"He was recovered and his body will be mourned... We do not do this to mock his memory..." He told her first-off, before he smiled and kissed her gently, distracting her as he quickly and dexterously stripped his wife with ease of memory he hadn’t put to use in a long time.

“I, ah, know we don’t…” It had been a while since Papyrus had stripped her, but her husband still remembered how, and he soon had her divested of her clothing. Toki quick summoned Stripe just long enough for the bee to turn on a light bit of music, so any noises wouldn’t wake the children, and then had her summons removed swiftly.

She shifted in his lap, turning to face him, and wiggled her fingers down to unbutton his slacks and slip them gently down over his hips. She didn’t manage to fuss much more, however, as his distractions slid her mind in other directions. She kissed him again, and unbuttoned his shirt and slid it off his shoulders. That left him in just his undone slacks, with her sitting bare bones in his lap, and she leaned closer to kiss him again, her breasts pressing softly to his ribs. “Mm… you might get a little damp,” she warns softly against his teeth, “if you squeeze them too hard.”

He smiled down to her as he shed his clothing, "So what?” he purred, kissing her deeply as he gently hiked her hips up, "I love you too much to care, honestly. Do you expect me to stop on the account of your breasts?” He purred.

“Well, no,” She shivered, teeth working gently against him as she rocked her hips gently against his. His pants were in the way, but for now, with her sitting on him, it would do. “It tends to be hit or miss though on what can bother you though. You were curious about them once, back when I was pregnant, but they didn’t tend to, uh, leak back then.” She hums, and licks a slow line down the side of his neck, so she can nibble at his collarbone. Papyrus also wasn’t Tenebris. Tenebris had… weird habits.

Like licking things.

“Mm, sorry. I just... worry. Self-conscious. Y’know. Mom-body stuff. ‘S normal.” Over all, she was probably more fit than she had ever been- except she had her breasts still. Once the twins turned one, she was probably going to start weaning them for more solid foods.

She shook her head, mind wandering, and turned back to the task at hand, and let her tongue slide out to lick a slick line up the side of his neck.

He smiled and slowly leaned his head back at her long lick, moaning quietly as his hands wandered, rubbing her hips firmly before slowly crawling lower to massage bones where more sensitive flesh would be if she had it. "You’re my beautiful wife, Toki~ nnh... I don’t care." He cooed.

“Don’t care, hm?” Her teeth parted, and she hesitated for a long, long moment, before gently scraping them lightly over the vertebrae of his neck. “Prove it,” she purrs, rolling her hips first into his hands, and then rocking them down to bump the bones against his clothed pelvis. Her hips were wider than they were pre-pregnancy, rounder and more bell shaped from carrying their children. She nudged him gently, with her chin, and nibbled his neck again, before threading her fingers into his ribs and stroking firmly.

He grunted sharply at the nibbles as well as the touches to his ribs and he gave a sound off, before he took her hips and ground them against his own instead. "Nnh~"

Her teeth were gentle as she nibbled, and she grunted, rocking against him as he ground down onto her. She shifted, and tugged softly on his ribs, leaning back to arch her brow at him lightly. Her fingers stroked firmly again, trailing firm lines along his bones, and then she dragged leaned closer to grab his spine and tease it too. She dragged her hand down, and slid her hand into his pelvis, swirling her fingers around and tugging him upwards to meet with her grinds slightly more roughly. “It’s been too long.” She whispers.

He chuckled lowly and licked his lips, before he groaned and summoned his magic, letting his cock erect under her before he began to rub her hipbones, "Summon... something please." He murmured.

“It’s been so long,” She teased again, “maybe I don’t remember how?” Despite her words, however, a flash of magic, and there was a soft green glow between her legs. The orange glow of his cock rubbed gently against the outside of her lips, and she shivered, rocking gently against him as she pressed her chest to his with a shivering breath. “Haaa… Ahh… I’m all yours for the taking, Papyrus. How do you want me?”

He smiled at the feeling, before he kissed her again, "I don’t care... I just want you... and I want you to love what I do to you." He murmured, giving her a deep kiss as he then pulled her hips down.

“I always love what you do to me.” She rocked against him, her hips about as flush as she could be as she rocked teasingly against his member, but didn’t quite mount up yet. “Shall I ride, my love?” Toki asked gently, rolling her hips slowly, teasingly, quietly wondering how much more his patience could take.

He nodded slowly, though it gained speed the more she rocked and teased him. "Yes... yes please..."

Toki nodded softly, and shifted up finally. She eased herself back down onto him, and worked her way down his shaft slowly. It had been a long time since they had been together, and she didn’t want to get sore or rush. She rocked gently, so gently, and eased her way down his shaft. He was still large and thick as ever, still filling her full- but there was an extra bit of space inside of her that didn’t used to be there, on account of her pelvis having widened from having kids.

Either way, Toki took her time slowly hilting him, and then just sat for a moment, letting her body adjust to him again as she leaned back and stretched, rubbing his bones playfully. “Ah~ You feel good,” she purrs, rolling her hips gently against his and grinding his cock gently against her walls as she clenched around him.

He moaned breathily at the hilting of his mate and for the longest moment he felt...

A surge spiking up his neck.

Papyrus shuddered and groaned, grabbing her hips and holding them firmly. "Mmmhhn~" He didn't move her himself, just let her do her thing for now. "F-Fuck... oh god this feels good…” He moaned.

Toki grinned gently above Aliquam, and gripped the edge of his pelvis gently with her hand. Slowly, she stroked up the pelvic arch, teasing him as she adjusted her legs and got herself into a good position. The nice thing about being made entirely of bone, she mused, was the fact her legs could collapse entirely flat against each other without it getting uncomfortable. Toki’s other hand took a firm grip around one of his lower ribs, and then she lifted herself on his cock.

As she lifted up, she slid her hands on both his rib and his pelvis, timing it so they slid in tandem with the motion of his member drawing out of her- once she reached nearly the tip, Toki sank back down with a quiet and pleased sigh, taking him deep again as her hands stroked down on his rib and pelvic arch, eye lights watching him pleasantly as she tried to keep quiet.

The music would help muffle their sounds, as well as the thick blanket blocking out the light and general house noise over top the cradle- but they had to do this quietly, or they would be waking up their children.
“Papyrus,” She crooned his name in an enthralling tone, “Do you like that~?”

"Oh god yes." He whispered, before he grit his teeth, "I want to lose myself... But I don’t want to hurt you..." He hissed gently.

“You haven’t gotten to have me since before the twins, Pap.” She purred, and bounced again. Her mouth came down, and she nibbled his neck. “I’ve got a high defense, love. Cut loose- you’re not going to hurt me,” she promised with a purr. “Lose yourself in me. Make me lose myself in you.” She nipped him gently, oh so careful with her teeth against his bones. “Do it,” she urged. “I want to forget everything but you right now.”

He shivered and glanced down at her. "..." He kissed her gently, and then he reached up and gripped her horn. "Toki... I love you so much." He purred, before the look in his eyes changed.

Follow the urge. Let the instinct take hold.

He kissed her, and then he grabbed her shoulder and turned her to press her over the couch arm.

Toki was pressed face first over the couch arm, a soft grunt escaping her as she shifted, carefully bracing her elbows as she took half a second to get situated. This left her back bare to him, bones and shoulder blades warm and ready for his touch. “Mmm~” She rocked her hips back gently into him- the change in position had disengaged them, but the new position left her wide open for him to take control if he so desired. The hold on her horn was new and nice, and she kept a nice, submissive position.

However, Toki piped at him, low and warm, and egged him on eagerly.

He stroked her hips gently and leaned in to kiss her neck, before he began to move his hips to thrust into her. "Mmmhhh~"

Toki arched her back, taking the position for what it was, for a time, and letting him thrust to his souls content. As he kissed her neck and rocked his hips into hers, Toki shifted and rocked back into him, a soft groan escaping her. She shifted and bucked back into him, challenging him just slightly from below him.

Papyrus held her firmly and gave a deep moan into her eat, before he bit into her shoulder and picked up his pace, growling quietly as he did. "T-Toki... fuck..." He snarled quietly.

The bite against her shoulder felt good in a way it probably shouldn’t, and she arched into him with a sharp buzz of pleasure. Her hips bounced back against his own, fingers clawing gently against the couch, and Toki’s mouth fell open. “Ah, P-Papy, yes~” She crooned eagerly. It had been so long since either of them had gotten this- and she was worked up from the dream prior- she could already feel her edge coming. “S-shit, nnn~”

He unfortunately hadn't had such a dream, so his rile was still growing, and he'd have a long way to go before he came, even with his body melded with his wife’s.

Toki shifted and squirmed under him, and managed to rotate under him with a moment of awkward positioning so she could face him. Face down was good- but face up? Face up means she could nip back, and her hands could play too. Her back bowed against the arm of the couch, pushing her breasts up against his chest, and leaving her neck bare for him to nip at. Her hands fisted in his ribs, stroking as her legs hooked over his hips.

Stroking her toes up the backs of his femurs, Toki met his thrusts with shaking and rolling thrusts as her breaths came in heavy pants, and Toki’s mouth nipped and nibbled over his shoulder, teeth leaving faint marks along the bone in her desire fueled haste as she marked him for hers. “Mine~” She moaned breathlessly. She was close, trying to hold on to the edge for him as her walls fluttered and clung to him tightly.

"Mmnh~" He groaned happily at her giving him attention and he held her a little tighter to himself as his hips continued to thrust, rocking into her with a near bruising pace. "Nnh~ yours... a-and you're mine." He hissed happily.

“I’m yours~” She crooned. Toki held out for a little longer, her attention she was giving him stuttering as her focus faded shakily as her end drew near. Eventually her edge came, and she toppled over however, and she came before Papyrus, barely managing to keep a shout from falling forth as her body arched back, thrusting her chest forwards as she gasped his name with a near forced quiet. Her walls clamped around his cock, and she milked his member tightly, legs hooking over him as she came. “Ah~ Papyrus~”

"My Toki... M-My beautiful wife." He purred, kissing her where he could while he let her ride her climax out, "Nnh~ You feel so tight around me~" He nuzzled his face against her chest as he groaned.

Toki trembled, and rode out her orgasm against him. When she came down, she was panting and flushed- but she knew he hadn’t come yet. So, Toki rolled her hips gently, flexing around him and milking his cock manually, hands coming to tweak at the vertebrae of his neck. “You’re so big,” she murmurs, “so thick... You fill me so full,” she purrs, “you always do~”

"Only for you, my darling." He cooed, leaning his head back before he began to rock his hips and continue his thrusting pace as he had before. "Mmmnh~"

Toki rocked with him, and leaned up to nip at his collarbone and sternum, lathing her tongue along them gently and then mock sucking lightly on one of his upper ribs as her hands stroked his neck. Her hips bucked and rolled into his, slightly sore from lack of use and then sudden over use- but she wasn’t going to complain. Not when she had been lacking his touch for so long, and he hers.

"I love you~" he whispered again as he began to pick up his pace, "hnnn... ahh... fuck... Oh you're s-so good... after so long~" he then lowered himself and hugged her tightly, pinning her arms at her sides as he started to buck his hips more wildly.

With her arms pinned to her side, Toki couldn’t touch him as well. Her hands could stroke up and down the broad bones of his arms however, so that’s what she did, sliding in and out of the spaces between his bones, trailing in and out of seams that only her daintier bones had access too. “I love you too," She purred, legs loosening a little over his hips to accommodate his more wild and frantic pace, “I love you so much…” her mouth peppered kisses along his neck, before she tilted hers back, and bared her chest and neck to him to do whatever with he could wish. “So strong," she purred, “my strong Papyrus, holding out for so long… you wont have to hold out any more though, my love. Let go.”

Papyrus slowed for a moment at her words, before he snarled and moved once more, grabbing her by the shoulders and now just holding her down as he positioned himself on his knees and began to fuck her without relent, truly pounding into her body after so long without having his mate’s touch.

The pace was rough- damn near painful- but Toki withstood it as her body adjusted to his bruising thrusts. She gasped softly, mouth falling open slightly, soft pants of heated air escaping her as her used sex rolled against his. Toki rocked into his motions, encouraging with her touch, her soft sounds, her submission. Papyrus was skeleton- but he was also beast as well, if only partly. It was easy to forget that, with how well mannered he was. But, Toki had introduced him to sex during her first heat- and had kept him sated many a time after. But now the beast had been denied his mate for far too long- and it was time to sate his hunger.

It was kind of hot to see him come so undone too.

Indeed he was coming undone and with losing himself came accompanied with carnal habits, meaning he'd start to bite her; delicately in some places, while harder in others. He'd go from only leaving small specks of glowing orange saliva, to full on bites that left teeth marks in her bones.

It felt so good to lose himself for her.

She took every one of his bites, even the ones that sunk into the soft flesh near her breast, drawing out glowing green blood that rolled heatedly down under his daze. The bites hardly registered under the haze of sensation from his touch, and Toki rolled her hips against his, before piping, not quite as quietly as she probably should have. She piped to him, a queen to her mate, as he lost himself in her, and she let him mark her. His teeth marred her bones faintly, rending faint scrapes and harmless bruises in the wake of her defense.

It felt good to let him loose himself.

“My Papy~” She croons softly, heat pooling in her bones again. It curls in her middle again, that invisible spring of heat that signals her second orgasm coming swiftly without her meaning for it to. Shit- she was so sensitive to his touch…

The piping that went off seemed to spur him on further and he ended up pushing her a little against the side of the couch, giving grunts of effort as he thrust into her harder and faster. "Toki... Hhhahh... Toki..."

“Ah- P-Papy, hhnn, hah- Pap~” She met each of his thrusts with her own from below, their pelvises grating together with heated friction. The arm of the couch groaned below the pressure he was putting on it, bowing just faintly under the pressure the guardsman was putting into it as he pushed her into it.

Toki shuddered and bucked, feeling her edge rising as his harder thrusts rose up. It didn’t take long for him to send her over again- and she lurched up as she came again, and her mouth closed over his clavicle with a snap as lights danced through her min, her body clamping around his again. “Mmm~”

This time, even when she came, he didn't stop, rather his bites roughened as his thrusts did, and he began to grunt with each thrust that roughly clacked their hips together.

Toki could simply hang onto him the best she could and ride it out, as his bites left deeper and deeper marks against her bones, fangs poking holes into her shoulders as his larger and the different shape of his skull let him take more of her frame into his mouth at a time. “Ah~” All the same, the sound that came from her mouth didn’t sound like she disliked the bites.

He looked at her when she gave that sound but didn't relent, rather just pressed on her more and growled as his pounding sped up, jerking her body with every last thrust.

His growl had her trembling faintly, a shiver down to her core as she was squished down more into the couch.

There was a creak of wood, and the arm of the couch gave a little bit more under his onslaught.

Toki opened her mouth once she came down from her orgasm, and bit down on his collarbone, meeting his thrusts with a nip and a rock of her own hips. Her pelvis was starting to hurt and her own motions were slowing, tiring- but he wasn’t slowing, wasn’t even hesitating in his pacing. He was almost frantic, almost- feral. She had told him to let go- but, she had to wonder how far he’d gone.

She shuddered, eye lights an aroused but exhausted green as she leaned back to look at him the best she could under the onslaught of his thrusts, baring her neck to him again.

His eyes flashed when she bit his collarbone and he snarled loudly, before he sank his teeth into her shoulder again. This time though, he didn't relent and the fullest of his bite came to her shoulder.

Crrk

Denting and cracking the other skeleton's shoulder as he seemed to be growing desperate now in his thrusts, growing close to release with each pound into his wife, Papyrus’ didn’t quite seem to realize fully what he was doing as he was lost in base instincts.

Her left shoulder splintered under his fangs, and Toki choked on her summoned tongue, head tossed back as pain seared over her shoulder. Her hands fistied on his against him, and she went still instinctively, striving not to make him worsen the bite.

Oh yeah- Papyrus wasn’t home.

There might have been more beast in her husband than Toki might have originally thought- and she might have poked a little too far.

"Kii... K-Kiii..." he vocalized ever so quietly, despite how loud he was moments before with his thrusts, but it wasn't long before he hilted into her, and snarled out in bliss as he filled her with his load, a load that kept coming... and coming... nine months worth of time finally releasing into her body where it belonged.

Toki whimpered as his load flooded her, his seed filling her walls, and then flooding back out around his member as she had no womb formed for it to flood into. She panted as his faint murmur of what might have been a mumbled version of her name registered to her, and Toki trembled under him, trying to keep her shoulder stable.

She shook under him, body sore and achy, also content full as well as in pain. Toki was a bundle of sensations- and waiting to see what her husband would do next- and if he would release his teeth from her shoulder.

The bite tightened a little more, but it then fell slack as he slumped over her, his eyes closing as he sighed in exhaustion, "Nnnyeh..."

His bite tightening made her whimper- she couldn’t stop it from happening, and she shivered under him. “Hhhh…” She panted lightly. Well... She’d asked for him to go wild. And... Well, he had. She just hadn’t accounted for him having the same bite strength as his father. Or similar. Goodness.

Ow.

“Mm... Papy?” She shifts hesitantly under him. “Is... that you?”

"Mmmmhh...?" A tired groan, it's him alright.

“Ah... that is you. Good... Can... you scoot down a bit please?” She squirms. She’s not going to complain- if she does, Papyrus sure as hell isn’t going to let loose like that again. That was hot as hell- she just needs to learn how to handle it better. She was doing fine until she’d nipped him again. Then he’d gotten aggressive that last time- so she’d just need to be careful about what she did.
“You’re squishing me a little bit, love. And uh, the couch arm sounds like it’s going to fall off.”

He whined quietly, but nodded and slowly pushed himself so they were now resting on the body of the couch rather than the arm, "Nyeh... Oh god... I’m exhausted... Wh-what happened?"

She was fairly limp under his touch, but held her shoulder stiffly so as not to jostle it. Toki was a bit of a mess, covered in bite marks, with a nifty looking one on her breast that was bleeding slightly. The exhausted skeleton blinked up at him slowly. “You don’t… Remember?” She inquired softly. “At all? We uh… Well, you cut loose.” She said. “You let go. Uh… Completely.”

He blinked once, then he sat up fast, "WHAT?! O-Oh stars, your shoulder!” He gasped, immediately worried for her, as she had no doubt predicted.

The fast motion jarred where she was still connected to his member, and she groaned. “Ah- Ow, Pap, ow. Easy- It’s okay. I told you to let go, didn’t I?”

He whined quietly, as if he were a guilty dog who had done something particularly bad, and his eye lights roved worriedly over her as he looked down upon her. ”Toki... I... I'm sorry...!”

"It's okay, Pap, really... You, hah, can just fix up my shoulder and I'll be fine? I mean, you were pretty pent up- it makes sense that you'd be a little... Well..." She pauses and winces as she shifts under him. She is very well used. "I'm not actually sure what that was. I will enjoyed most of it- it was hot to see you let loose like that. I think I just... I dunno... Set off your... Inner beast or something? I'm not sure what to call it."

"Father calls his 'Unhinged'." He murmured quietly as he reached and took her shoulder into the cradle of his hand to release healing magic. He aimed to ease some of her pain, if not heal the poor shoulder he bit down on.

Her shoulder responded well to his magic, as her body always did. The bone hadn’t fragmented or fully shattered- so the cracks sealed up once more, flowing back together into solid bone and stinging slightly as it settled. Any other nicks and chips healed as well, and her general ache in her upper torso eased some. She reached up to wipe the slightly bloody ooze off her boob. Apparently the flesh part could bleed. “Unhinged is a good description.” She said. “You were... feral. It was kinda hot, really. You uh… have some stamina when you’re like that.”

He rubbed his head as he slowly let his magic fade, allowing her the chance to slump where she laid. "Well... I am the son of my father..." he chuckled quietly, "I have beast blood within me, though diluted it might be."

She gently extracted herself from him, and eased upwards on the couch. The arm wobbled dangerously as she braced on it, and she listened for a moment.

The twins didn’t seem to have woken, which was good. The music had done its job.

“Even Tenebris has to let his beast out. I don’t think I’ve ever seen you let yours out.” Toki said gently, shifting carefully to sit. She winced. “Ah... ow. Wow, I haven’t been this sore since my first heat. Still not as bad as having the twins. Are you okay?”

"I'm fine.” He sighed. “I'm mostly just worried about you…” he told her with a shaky laugh, leaning down to press a gentle kiss to her teeth.

“I’m alright, Pap. You healed up that bite.” Toki kissed him back gently all the same, and nuzzled him quietly. “You don’t need to worry, okay? We’ll just… practice when it comes to… well, you letting loose."

He nodded gently and kissed her yet again. "I love you so much."

"I love you too." She said softly. "Now, c’mon. We need to, uh… Clean up. The couch is a mess… We might have broken the arm too."

"I'll fix it, shhh~" He laughed quietly. "No one will notice~"

"I'll notice." She rolls her eyes. "Now c’mon, up. In case you hadn’t noticed, y’ kinda flooded me. And the cushion. You were a little pent up, my love. We’re going to want to wipe this up before we flip the cushions."

"A little?" he teased, before he sighed and fell back, "I'm going to sound like my brother.... but first? I'm just gonna.... yeah... crash." He chuckles.

"Then crash on the other side of the couch," Toki laughs and prods his ribs. "I'll get the couch cleaned up while you nap," She says.

He sighed and closed his eyes, his head falling back, "God I love you." he sighed quietly.

Toki grunted, and then rolled him down the couch. "I was serious about moving, you great big lump." She laughed. Once she’d managed to roll him- which was a feat in itself involving lots of pulling, tugging, and the swinging of very naked breasts near his face- she set to mopping up the couch with their soiled clothes, and turning the cushions.

Aliquam was happy to be exhausted like this, his breathing slowed down after a while to show that he indeed had passed out again.

Toki rolled her eye lights, draped a blanket over her husband, and went to go properly clean up.

By the time she got back, freshly washed, with a hitch in her step that was entirely her husband’s fault, she just managed to catch the tail end of someone knocking on the door. “Pap!” She calls, speed limping for the living room with a wet washcloth and a pair of pants she had intended to use to clean up Papyrus with. “Up! Someone’s here!”

He groaned and looked up at her, "what...?"

She repeated what she said and flung the pants and the washcloth at him.

Though as it was repeated to him he got up and groaned, "Hang on!" he called out.

Toki left him to get wash off his pelvis with the wash cloth, and to slip on the pants and replace the shirt from before, which was still clean. In the mean time, she took the bottles of milk and went to put them in the fridge, where they would keep for a later date.

When she got back out to the living room, she glanced to Papyrus to see if he was done.

He was, and now making his way to the door, looking back to her to make sure she was decent as well, before he turned and opened the door.

There was a guard standing at attention at the door, though one arm was raised to knock once more. As Papyrus opened the door, he lifted his arm into a respectful salute, before nodding to Toki.

“Papyrus, Sir- we just apprehended a human who keeps claiming to be cowardice. He seeks refuge from Cruelty, or so he claims.”
He raised a brow at that. "The Anti-heart, Cowardice?" he questioned.

“Ah… yes." The guard nodded. “That’s what he keeps claiming. He seeks refuge, and wishes to speak with… Well, either you or Toki.”

He shifted his jaw, and then looked to Toki, "Do you want to cover this or do you want me to?" he asked.

Toki grimaced, and glanced away. “… I’ll do it.” She says. “I’m the Boss Heart for Kindness- it’s kind of my job to handle these anti-hearts. Just… stay with the kids. I’ll handle this guy.” She’d go too, with a hitch in her step and everything. “Just… I need to find my shoes first.”

He leaned down and kissed her gently, fixing her with a firm look. "Let me know if you need me, just call for me and I’ll be there for you." He told her sternly.

“I know you will be." She kissed him gently back, and slipped her shoes on. “Keep an eye on the twins- and get the laundry going.”

"Can do." he chuckled, kissing her gently before letting her go.

And with that, Toki grimaced, and gathered herself up and headed off to go see this supposed Anti-heart.
Chapter 83

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And enter Cowardice. He’s gonna be a fun little character for however long he lasts~ Also Silver came up with the name for Cowardice, so yeah :D more you know.

"Listen I know you're probably, ah... reasonable monsters, m-maybe we can work something out right?" The male voice stammering to the guards was clearly unnerved, terrified, as akin to his namesake, "You know? M-Maybe these chains aren't necessary, I mean, you're big, I'm small, you're strong, I'm weak?"

The voice itself is what drew Toki’s gaze as she made her way to him, and she made a face as she picked up the stammering tone. The guards didn’t respond to the human, only glanced to Toki as she made her way over to them.

The tall horned skeleton arched a brow at the man the guards had detained, and offered him a sharp-toothed but kind smile. Innocent until proven guilty- if he was hiding from Cruelty, maybe he could help them find Cruelty. “Sorry about the chains,” she said, “We’re not taking any precautions though. We know the power of a boss heart- and we don’t really want to know what an Anti-heart can do.” She gives him a once over, taking in his looks.

"Oh well of course! I understand that of course, yes, yes, yes!" he gave a nervous smile, his glasses half-hanging off his nose, "I mean, after everything’s that happened! You would want to make sure that no matter what happens the monsters are safe, you guys are good at that."

“We’re not as good as we would like to be.” Toki said, eyes roving over him. He was thin and wiry-with thick glasses askew on his face. She reached out to fix them, so he could see her properly. He had dark black hair, and the typical eyes for an Asian man. She tilted her head. “So I was told you came here seeking refuge from Cruelty- and that you claim to be Cowardice. I’m Toki, by the way; Boss heart of Kindness.”

"O-Oh yeah, I know you're Kindness!" he stammered, flinching backwards from her until his glasses had been pushed back. "O-Oh... thank you," he said quietly, fixing his glasses by crinkling his nose, before he cleared his throat, "Yes... I'm... ah..." he then sighed and took a deep breath, "I'm Koshinu Tamashi!" He introduced himself, "Carrier of the Anti-Heart Cowardice!"

“Koshinu Tamashi.” She blinked, and internally grimaced as she translated his name. That… was a bit nail on the head. Given the fact that anti-hearts remembered their past lives, she had to wonder if karma had a sick sense of humor when Koshinu’s parents had him. “I’m not Kindness.” She grimaces faintly. “Cruelty calls me that. Please- refer to me as Toki. I’m not just my soul color- and you’re not just Cowardice. If you are, that is. Would you mind if I…” She motioned to her own chest, and then to his- a soul check was the easiest way to tell.

Boss souls were different than non-boss souls. That was the only way not to lie. And the Anti-hearts lacked magic to pop souls anymore- or at least Cruelty obviously lacked magic.
His hands moved over his chest protectively, looking a little uneasy. Souls were private things to a lot of beings- and to one as old as he was, it was definitely private. Though he simply swallowed and sighed, before nodding lowering his hand. "Right, okay... Yeah... I know you'd want to be sure..." He murmured.

Toki nodded. “I’m not going to be cruel about it, Koshinu.” She approached him carefully, and crouched down. Toki offered him a quiet smile, and tugged on her own. “I see yours, you see mine-fair’s fair, right?” Hers appeared in front of her chest for him to see, as she reached out with her magic and drew his forth as well, coaxing it gently from his chest with a few gentle touches so she could examine and compare the colors of the souls. Papyrus was orange- she knew Bravery. Cowardice was the opposite of that shade- so it wouldn’t be too hard to tell, once she saw it.

He looked at the gentle green color and it seemed to distract him long enough for her to coax his soul from him, though it didn't stop him from shuttering roughly.

"Oh g-goodness..." he groaned, before looking at his own soul, almost as if he hadn't seen it enough before.

Where the color of Bravery was like the sun, orange and fiery and bright, Cowardice was dark and dim, like a dark amber stone that had been polished until it shone. Toki brought his soul closer, side by side with her own, and peered at it. It was the same size as hers, but his seemed faded and worn, torn by scratches and scars. She frowned, and cupped his soul gently, warming the seemingly cold heart with her magic as she held it.

“You poor man,” She said softly, true and honest empathy in her voice. “Time really hasn’t been kind to you, has it? Whatever left these marks has hurt you deeply…”

He shuttered again, then looked up at her quietly. "..." He opened his mouth as if to speak, but couldn’t seem to find the words. After a moment, though, his gaze lowered again. "I... I seek sanctuary..." He murmured.

“So you do.” She murmured. She let his soul return, and tucked her own away. “You’ll be under watch,” she says, “because… well, we can’t be too careful anymore. But… I’m pretty sure we can grant sanctuary.”

Once his soul was tucked away, he smiled at Toki pleasantly, "Thank you, Miss, I will not forget your given mercy to me." He bowed to her gently before he looked up at the guards. "Ya'see? We're all friends right? Heh... I guess I should next be saying, ah... lead the way to where I ah... hope to stay... yes?"

“My home is open to those seeking shelter from Cruelty.” Toki said softly. After all- you held your friends close, but held your possible enemies closer. She wasn’t going to house him among civilians and then find out he killed someone when they let their guard down. It would be just like Cruelty to send in a sleeper agent… She glanced up to the guards, and nodded. “You can let Mister Koshinu free from the chains now.” She says.

They hesitate, but nod, and release him from his bindings. “We’ll go inform Undyne where he’ll be. She’ll want to ask him some questions.”

“And questions she can ask him.” Toki says once he’s free. She turns sharp eyes to him, the kind smile not leaving her face. Kind she might be, but she was very done with Cruelty’s games. “I’m sure he’d be all too willing to help us as best he can, right?”

He rubbed his wrists as the chains were removed and he sighed in relief, before he smiled up at her sheepishly, "Yes, of course! Whatever you ask of me!"

“Good.” She smiled at him kindly, and motioned the shorter man to follow her. She turned, keeping him to her side instead of behind her, and then began to lead him for her house. She’d have Papyrus move the twins into their room for the time being- while they cleared their guest and made sure his intentions were just.

“So,” she hummed softly, “why did it take you so long to come seek sanctuary?”

He followed her quickly, sticking nervously close, but upon being asked the question, he slowed a little bit. "... Well... I'm not exactly brave, I couldn't muster up the strength to leave early on..."

Her smile fades little, but she nods. "You can be more than your soul color if you try." She mentions softly. "You managed now though. That's what matters. So... If you were with Cruelty... Are there other Anti-hearts with him too?"

"Yes, there is... One." He replied, "The Yellow heart."

"The yellow heart?" She inquired. "You're sure it's Corruption?"

He nodded. "Yes. Corruption is their spokesperson."

She paused, nearly missing a step. So many things clicked into place- how easily people seemed to be swayed, and how good people could be turned bad so quickly. Even without their magic, the Anti-hearts would still probably have tricks up their sleeves. "That... That would explain a whole lot about how Cruelty keeps turning decent people into these terrible, terrible people..."

"I fell behind in the food chain, and I knew that once I served my purpose... well..." He rubbed his head and sighed.

Toki ground her teeth, and sighed. "Yes." She said. "I know." She glanced to him, and tilted her head, making her horns glint in the light. "You should know that here is not likely very safe. If you’ve been with Cruelty this long, you know, undoubtedly, that I am a target. We’ll do our best to keep you safe- but there are no guarantees. Any information you give us is going to be helpful in stopping Cruelty.” Toki glances back to the road, and waves off the guards that look at her with concern. They adjust their grips on their spears, eying Koshinu warily.

It’s sad, that they have to be so wary. But it is good that they are- they’ve been trained well- and their wariness will help to stop more deaths, she hopes. Toki glances back to the man accompanying her. “But... Tell me something, Koshinu. Be honest with me, before I welcome you into my home. Were you a... willing participant in Cruelty’s plot to rid the world of monsters? Do you share his racist views? Or did he bully you into helping him?”

"I was a tag-along in the beginning, he made me think he was right... But long he did... I didn't like it anymore... His methods were no longer as harmless as he claimed they would be. And I began to think enough was enough... Especially after I saw what he did..." he trailed off, his gaze lowering.

“I doubt he meant them to be harmless at all, Koshinu.” Toki grimaces, but his trailing off is noticed, and she glances to him. “I don’t know who is right and who is wrong, Koshinu. He made me doubt my conviction too, at one point. But no one deserves to be locked up underground- and no one deserved to be ostracized for their soul color. I think monsters and man were in the wrong- and everything spiraled out of control. But... The boss hearts did nothing to stop it- so I suppose it’s my fault- or my... prior self’s fault too. Now... What did you see? There is a lot that he has done.”

He shifted his jaw, then he shook his head slowly, looking at her quietly, "I... uhm..." he then looked away, not wanting her to change her mind about helping him, so staying quiet.

“If it’s something that I need to know, please tell me.” She glances to him and purses her teeth tightly. “You’re going to be expected to answer everything, Koshinu, or there is probably going to be a lot of problems in letting you stay here. The monsters... They’re going to be very wary about having an Anti-heart here. But... I’m a firm believer in being more than your soul color. So... Please. What did you see?”

"The large beast...The one that he had captured after the fight that... killed your brother.” He started hesitantly.

It takes a lot for her to not reflexively flinch. But that doesn’t stop the furl of anger that bubbles up from within her, raising the ambient temperature around her a few degrees, before she quashes it with a harsh fist and cools it. Grief instead floods her, and her soul hurts in her chest. Han... “I see.” She swallows. “That was a long time ago. You know... It’s June.” She says, “It’s been exactly a year and some change since Han was killed. That’s... heh.” A sad laugh escapes her. “That’s kind of morbidly ironic that you turn up now. With everything going on, with all that’s happened and being a mother, I had missed the anniversary of my brother’s death. Thank you for reminding me, Koshinu. I need to light some incense for him.” Shame curled in her belly. She’d been so preoccupied with everything going on that she had missed it.

It had been three days ago.

She shook her head, taking a shaky breath before she could let it unsteady her. She couldn’t get knocked off balance with this one. “But I see. I... I see. That would be Tenebris Gaster, the former Royal Scientist- and my father in law.” She gave him a moment for that to settle in as she eyes the house coming into view. She spots Papyrus at the window, knowing he’d probably heard her talking, and was quick to try and straighten her face into something less upset looking. She just hoped he hadn’t seen the upset on her face. Koshinu wasn’t a monster- and reading a skeleton’s face was hard. But, to another skeleton, it was pretty easy to see that she was upset about something. “Come- this is my house. My husband is home right now- so you’ll be meeting him too, before Undyne comes.”

He was thankful he didn’t have to say anything more. She had completely gone off track at the mention of her brother. It was unintentional on his part, but he felt a throb of guilt in his own heart. "Of course... I'm right behind you..." His guilt rose higher and he spoke again. "B-But! If it's all right... I'd like to pay my respects... I know what he did. He was a hero for our country. And Cruelty or not, I respect those who fight for us.” He requested.

Toki had, admittedly gone off track. But being reminded suddenly that one had forgotten the anniversary of their brother’s death... That wasn’t easy. She swallowed as she guided him up the stairs, and headed towards the door. “Han was a good man.” She said. “He had just found happiness- and it was taken from him.” She exhales sharply, and shakes her head. “I don’t mind if you pay your respects. He deserves it- he did a lot for everyone, even after he left the service.” Her music loving muscle head of a brother had been a good man.

Toki’s soul mourned him still.

He nodded and offered a small smile, but it fell and he took a half-step back as Aliquam opened the door and stepped out.

The tall skeleton didn’t hesitate in embracing his mate firmly. "Toki... I'm here." He murmured gently.
She shuddered as her husband embraced her, and looped her arms around him gently. She gave him a soft squeeze, bones rattling with a noisy shiver, but didn’t let herself crack. She could do that later—not when there was a strange man there to see. She took a deep breath to steady herself against him, and glanced up. “I’m okay.” She said softly. “We, uh… We missed Han’s Anniversary.” She said. “We need to light some incense for him tonight. Ah… Papyrus- this is Koshinu Tamashi. He’s here to seek refuge from Cruelty— and he’s going to tell us anything and everything he can about Cruelty.”

"Koshinu." He repeated quietly.

'Coward.' The meaning stood out to the tall skeleton with certainty.

He gave a slow nod and with one arm, squeezed her as he extended the other to shake the smaller man’s hand. "My name is Aliquam." He introduced himself calmly.

Koshi smiled hesitantly and reached out, taking the offered hand and shaking it nervously. "Pleased to meet you, sir...!"

Toki grunted lightly as he squeezed her, and elbowed him gently. She was still a little tender from their rather rough round of sex. And, now that she thought about it, the house smelled like they had… well, been busy. She managed to force a flush down, and hoped the human couldn’t smell it. “He’s going to be staying with us.” She says. “At least until he’s cleared for a place for his own.”

She leans up though, under the guise of kissing his cheek, and murmurs softly to him so Koshinu can’t hear her. “We’re moving the twins into our room until he’s out of the house. I’m not taking chances.”

He nodded and once he released the human’s hand, he rose to his full height, intimidating the Cowardice heart with a sharp once over. "I'll go check on the children." he told her gently, before he turned to go inside, giving her hand a gentle squeeze before he left her with the smaller man.

Toki watched Papyrus head inside, and motions for Koshinu to follow her. “Come in, please. We’ll go prepare some tea, and then get settled in the living room.” It would give Papyrus time to get the kids upstairs and things moved into their room. “Undyne will be along shortly, and you’ll need it. She can be…” She pauses, and chuckles. “Intense.”

The skeleton leaves him to follow her, and pads straight for the kitchen. She gives the living room a glance, eye lights roving over the urn on the fireplace mantle, and her aura pings sadly.

"Thank you, Ki-… I mean... Toki..." he corrected himself as he followed her, keeping his hands close to himself, though as he passed the living room he could see Aliquam now holding his children. The look that he had when he lifted his gaze to the human made Koshinu uneasy, and he hastened his steps to follow Toki.

Toki guided him into the kitchen, and scrubbed her face as she picked up the sounds of him hurrying after her. She heard him almost address her by her soul color, and found herself smiling faintly as he corrected himself. “Koshinu,” She says as she goes to fish out bags of tea, “What type of tea would you like? I’ve got orange blossom, green tea, black tea, and some fruit teas.”

"Some black tea sounds wonderful, thank you.” He replied as he followed her into the kitchen.

She nodded, and collected the bags. She got orange blossom down for Papyrus, and some apple tea for herself, before quietly plopping them into some mugs and adding some cold water from the tap.

Toki turned around, holding the mugs, and then casually heated the water right there in her hands. Magic had it’s uses. Once the mugs were steaming, she handed it out to him. “Just give it time to steep.” She advises. “It’s hot too- don’t burn your hands. I can’t heal you if you do.”

He nodded and held it carefully in his hands as he blew on it, before he took a sip and smiled at her, "Mm."

Toki smiled at him quietly, and padded back towards the living room. She motioned for him to follow her, and hummed a soft sound to herself. “So,” she says, “I’m sure there are things you’d like to know. Do you have any questions you’d like to ask, before Undyne gets here?”

"Uh... well..." He took a breath, trying to think of any questions he might have as he followed her. As they came to his mind, they died before they could reach his tongue, so he gave up, and gently shook his head, before he took a sip of his tea... it tasted good and he felt himself relaxing a little.

“Alright... Well, if you have any after, we can go over them then.” She leads him back to the living room, which is devoid of her husband and children now, and gingerly runs her fingers along her mug of tea. She sips it, and cradles it, and Papyrus’ own, close, and motions to the couch. Thankfully, it had been straightened up while she had been out, so there was no sign of their activities. “You’re welcome to sit down- but mind the right arm of the couch. It’s, uh… broken.”

He nodded and sat down on the left side, keeping his mug in his lap, "Thank you." he murmured again, before he looked up at her, "I... do have one question... I hope to get off my chest."

Toki took a seat in the middle, leaving the end for Papyrus when he came back. No need for him to be put between her and Koshinu- that could just get... bad. Particularly if his beastly side was still lurking near the surface, she mused. She didn’t need him to get overly protective. “Please, ask away.” She nods with an encouraging smile.

"The... Beast... You said his name was... Ten-Something? It's about him...” he started, shifting as the front door could be heard opening.

The heavy stomping boots were no doubt Undyne as she stomped off dust and dirt- though what was undetected under the heavy armored footsteps were a more silent pair.

“Tenebris.” She nods. “What was your question about him?” She inquired. The orange blossom tea that she had for Papyrus smelled good, as the strong smell wafted through the room and covered up the smell of her and her husband’s prior activities, and she was tempted to steal a sip. The heavy steps had her pausing. “We’re in the living room, Undyne.” She calls.

"Well I’m wondering if he’s alright... Or still alive for that matter...” He didn’t know if Tenebris had survived after they set him loose... Cruelty hadn’t been particularly forthcoming with him about it- and Koshi had been kept further and further out of the loop of things as his usefulness began to fade.

"A good question.” a familiar, deep rumble resonated as said beast entered the room.

Koshi looked at him and paled.

A jolt of electricity was accompanied by a bellow of pain. He could see the hatred in the burning purple eyes, the bared fangs promising to rip his throat out if the beast ever managed to escape, and yet he backed into a corner like an animal as the prod came closer once more, pressing into his body and making him screech once more

His mug dropped from his hand as he almost immediately tumbled from the couch with a clatter as the mere sight of Tenebris caused his limbs to spasm.

Toki barely managed to catch his mug of tea with her pinky before it shattered, as the small man practically flailed off her couch and—fainted? He fainted. Her teeth pursed, and she glanced up at Tenebris. “You just made him faint.” She says.

The fish monster following Tenebris laughed heartily, and reached down to haul the human back up onto the couch. She deposited him none too gently, and patted his cheek to rouse him. “That’s a good one. Cowardly, this one. C’mon, human. Wake up.”

Tenebris planted himself in his chair and leaned back with a rumble as Undyne moved to rouse the human.

Enough of her bothering did cause him to rouse and his eyes opened as he let out a quiet groan, "...?" he then blinked a few times, before he sat up. "What just happened..." he groaned.

“You saw old man Tenebris and fainted.” The sharp toothed fish woman blocked his view of Tenebris across the way, and she gave him a shark like grin. “So you’re Cowardice, huh?”

“Koshinu.” Toki said tartly. “He’s Koshinu.”

“But he’s the Anti-heart for-”

“And I’m the boss heart for Kindness, but if you call me Kindness, I will do unspeakable things to you during our next practice. He is Koshinu.” The smallest skeleton was having none of this labels shit. She gave Undyne a flat stare, and then scooted the orange blossom tea across the coffee table towards her father-in-law. “Here, Papa. Quinn isn’t down yet, so you can have his tea. I’ll make him more later.”

Koshinu didn't respond before Toki intervened and corrected Undyne, and he gave the skeleton a half thankful smile.

"Don't mind if I do, Toki. Thank you." Tenebris took the offered teacup.

Koshi's absentminded glance towards the owner of the voice had him look at Undyne for a split second before he looked away again, chewing his lip, before he realized. "Oh goodness, I spilled my tea... I’m very sorry..."

“Actually,” Toki lifted his mug from where it was still precariously balanced on her pinky finger, “I just barely managed to save your tea. So, here.” She offered it back out to him.

Undyne stepped back out of his way, and took post just across the way from him. She peered down at him thoughtfully, letting him see Tenebris once more, and crossed her arms. The one-eyed fish monster rumbled lightly. “Hm… Well, Koshinu, I’ve got questions for you.” She held up a voice recorder. “And they’ll be going to the Police as well, once you answer. Now- are you ready to answer my questions, or do you want to finish your gross grass-water first?”

Koshi took the teacup and murmured a thank you to Toki, before his gaze traveled over to Tenebris once more.

He survived the look this time, as instead of being a scared, hostile beast, Tenebris was in his favorite black turtleneck, looking rather fluffy as he sat in his chair, sipping his tea and being all-around relaxed.

The human took a drink, and then lowered the teacup to his lap, "I... I can do both. I have n-nothing to hide anymore."

Undyne nodded, and thumbed lightly over the recorder. “Good. The entirety of this conversation is going to be recorded- however, I’m going to have to ask that mister Koshinu and I have this conversation alone, so there’s no interruptions from… outside sources.” She tilted her head to Toki and Tenebris. “Why don’t you both go check on Papyrus and the kids while he and I talk?”

Toki nodded slowly, and glanced to Tenebris. “I don’t mind.”

Tenebris nodded and moved to get up, "Sounds good. I too shall step out then," he rumbled, "Excuse me."

When they left, Koshi took a deep breath and looked at Undyne, "Alright," he spoke. "Ask away."

Toki too left with Tenebris, guiding the bigger monster up the stairs and leaving Undyne downstairs with Koshinu. She kept an ear open, listening to the quiet murmurings of the two beginning to talk, and then headed towards the bedroom.

She opened the door, to find her knees besieged by Honey, as the baby wobbled upright, and latched onto her. Her eye lights glanced behind her, and brightened to a happy blue as she spotted her grandpa.

“Appa!” She squeaked, butting her horned head against Toki’s knee affectionately, and then making grabby fingers up at Tenebris.

Skylar was toddling his way around the edge of the bed while Papyrus was reassembling the crib in one of the corners of he master bedroom. They were working, slowly, on walking. They weren’t very good at balancing on their own yet- neither of them had the balancing down pat- but walking while holding onto things was becoming something they were capable of. They just didn’t do it often- not when there were others they could sucker into holding them.

“Let Grandpa and Momma in, sweetheart,” Toki crooned gently, setting her tea on the nearby dresser to gently lift her up and turn her around. “There we go- go stretch your legs.”

The little horned toddler gave an excited croon, and wobbled her way surely towards one of the dressers, letting Toki, and Tenebris, slip inside.

Toki glanced back to Tenebris. “They like to be held.” She said. “Held more often than they like to stretch their legs anymore. Particularly after the… Incident. We’re trying to encourage them to toddle around.”

Skylar, having spotted her, gave a low buzz that Snuggle echoed, and Toki returned in kind.

Tenebris smiled as he entered and he scooped up the pups, nuzzling them while cooing to their guardians gently in greeting.

Aliquam, meanwhile, looked up to Toki, "Are you sure this is wise, Toki?" he asked.

Toki rolled her eyes at Tenebris. She says they’re encouraging them to walk more- and what does he do? Scoops them both up. She shakes her head fondly at him, however, and glances to her husband when he addresses her. She frowns, teeth flexing and furrowing nervously. “Not really. I once said my house would be a safe haven for anyone seeking refuge from Cruelty- and I can’t just… turn him away, just because he’s an Anti-heart, Papy.” She rubs her arm uncertainly. “That’s why I had you move the twins here. If he turns out to be dangerous, we’re both better equipped to handle him than the civilian populace. I’m… well… Me.” She’d killed before, and she knew she would do it again to protect her children- “And you’re the best guard I know.”

The twins cooed happily, drawing her gaze briefly, as they latched onto their grandfather. Honey bumped her skull roughly to his, her horns poking his cheeks, while Skylar nuzzled his face gently to his neck with a happy croon.

"Heh... That's very true..." He agreed gently, before he looked to his father, "Of course, Father would also be a good example of why he should behave himself." He chuckled quietly.

Tenebris meanwhile was proving to be the exact opposite of what Aliquam was talking about, nuzzling into his grandbabies and cooing happily as he gave both children attention.

Toki snorted, and came closer to her husband. She rested a hand on his shoulder, something she couldn’t easily do unless he was kneeling down most times, and gave him a faintly bemused look. “My love, I am fairly certain you were enough to remind him to behave himself. Don’t think I missed the look you gave him earlier. You postured at him.” She mimicked puffing herself up some, like he had done at the door when he’d risen to his full height and intimidated the smaller man, and rubbed his cheekbone affectionately. Though a glance to Tenebris had her chuckling softly. “Oh yes. Grandpapa Tenny, most terrifying of beasties. Rawer. He’s going to nuzzle you to death.”

Honey squeaked enthusiastically, recognizing the word ‘Grandpapa’ as she head butted him again with happy gusto. Yes- this was her Grandpapa, and she loved him lots. So did Skylar- but he was more gentle about his affections.

He leaned into her hand when she rubbed his cheekbone and he smiled up at her, before he chuckled warmly. "Well he just happened to be all nuzzly when I said that."

Toki chuckled. “That he did. Good timing on both of your parts.” She smiles slightly, and then scrubs her sockets with one hand. “How are you feeling?” She asks quietly, hoping not to draw Tenebris attention. “I know you didn’t get much rest before we were interrupted. And, uh… You looked pretty tired after…” After his beast had come out to play.

"I feel a lot better." He replied with a smile, "Thank you for asking. I hope you feel fine as well."

"Indeed, with how feverish it smelled in here I could have only wondered just how much more relieved you two felt." Tenebris piped up.

It had the effect of immediately flustering his son, who hid his face with his hand. "Father, oh my god..."

Toki flushed a bright green. “Well, I’ll be feeling better when I don’t have to hide the hitch in my gait, if you know what I mean.” She quirks a faint grin to Tenebris. “I’m walking about like you are after a long weekend with the king.” She wiggles one of her brows. “Of which you don’t complain about, do you, Papa?”

"Not at all. Touché, Tokiko. Touché.” He chuckled, grinning at her.

Aliquam continued to groan where he held his face in his hands. "Toki... Father... why."

Toki patted his shoulder gently, “Oh Papy, you know Papa and I poke fun at each other often. Lots of dirty jokes and the like.” She quirks a grin to him. “He has to have someone to tease him.”

“Grandpapa!” Honey shrieked, and reached up to bap Tenebris where his nose would be- before making an attempt to reach in and play with his teeth. She liked to play with sharp teeth- her mothers, her brothers, her grandpa’s, her auntie Undyne’s. If it was sharp, Honey usually wanted to play with Toki paused, and then blinked, shocked. “… I think that was her first full word.”

Skylar gave a fussy noise at his sister’s shriek, and hid his face in his Grandfather’s chest.

Aliquam and Tenebris were both surprised at the thrilled shriek, the latter not even bothering to stop Honey from playing with his teeth, but he did at least give Skylar a comforting bounce, cooing to him gently.

"Oh my Stars." Aliquam spoke quietly, before he smiled proudly, "Her first word."

“Heh.” Toki smiled, and cupped her cheeks. “Her first word was Grandpapa. Dawwww~”

“Loud.” Skylar mumbles faintly into Tenebris’ chest, grumbling at his sister and nuzzling into the comforting motion with a soft huff. “Nuh wan’.”

"And it sounds like Sky's was 'loud'." Tenebris chuckled, pulling his mouth loose before kissing Honey's cheeks, before moving to nuzzle Skylar, cooing softly to him.

“Oh my god.” Toki laughed. “Grandpapa and loud. That’s… I honestly don’t know what I was expecting, but it wasn’t either of those. At least it wasn’t a curse word.”

Honey happily squeaked at the kisses and gave her Grandpa a nuzzle in return. Her arms clung to him affectionately, and the little one giggled gently.

Skylar, on the other hand, puffed at his sister’s noisiness, and nuzzled into Tenebris, before settling down with a grumpy sound.

Aliquam got up and came over to take his son, smiling at his father before cooing and gently tugging at Skylar, "Come on, we'll go put you with Mama to settle down with..." he purred to him.

Skylar huffed, but turned to cling to his father, grumpily nuzzling into him. “Papa.” He mumbles faintly.

Toki smiled lightly, and went to meet him half way. “Is he getting fussy?” She asks. “I think his teeth have been bothering him. He’s been more irritable as of late.”

"Yes, teething no doubt. Next time I go into town, I can pick up some teething toys for him.” Quinn answered, handing the child over to his mother, "Though I think Honey is doing well enough through it."

Skylar cuddled up to Toki as soon as she took him, and she stroked her hand gently over his skull. He wasn’t so easy to hold anymore- neither of them were- but she made due. He curled his face into her shoulder, and closed his sockets. “Mmm…”

Toki rubbed his skull gently, rocking him soothingly. “Honey doesn’t chew right through them though. She’s got your teeth.” She points out. “He’s got my teeth- and anything that’s baby-safe is not really teething proof for irritable babies. I mean, I let him chew on my arm the other day when we were relaxing in the living room, but I can’t exactly just give him one of my bones for a teething toy.” She pressed a soft kiss to his skull, and sighed, glancing back to the mostly finished crib. “I think at this rate, we’re mostly just going to have to deal with his grumpiness. Freezing the teething rings helps- but he can break the frozen gel now.”

"Perhaps we should ask Father?" He asked, "He might know something we can use."
Toki shrugged uncertainly, and glanced over to Tenebris. She arched a brow. “He’s not paying attention, obviously,” She says, gently adjusting Skylar as he starts to chew on her shirt. “Sweetie, not my shirt.” The gentle scolding has him making a fussy sound, so Toki simply sighs, and offers her hand for chewing instead.

Sharp teeth go to town on her bones, working them over with irked grumbles.

Toki tilts her head back to her husband, and gave him a faint smile. He smiled back, then looked at Tenebris, before he cleared his throat, "Father." He spoke up to get the other's attention.

"What- yes?" The older looked at the two from where he was getting his face pushed on by Honey. Honey was having the time of her life pushing on his face- with both her hands and her horns. The nubbins weren’t sharp enough to hurt him yet, so it was mostly like a little goat playfully head butting a larger one. She made happy noises each time she managed to nudge him.

Toki motioned with her mouth towards her son, and then did a moderately creepy thing where she flexed her teeth at him, like flexible little crab legs. It would serve to draw attention to the feature that her son got from her. “Someone keeps biting through every teething ring we have- including the solid ones. So… Ideas?”

"Hmm... Have you tried giving him softened bones?” he asked, "You can make them more bendy and harder to fracture by soaking it in vinegar."

“We haven’t, no.” She shook her head. “Wont he hurt himself if he chews on those, though, even if they’re soft? I mean, I’m careful with how he chews on me, so he doesn’t just snap his little teeth off.”

"No. The vinegar breaks down the calcium and makes the bone softer. If his teeth come out, such is as it is, that's how a teething goes."

She contemplated that, and then nodded, before glancing to Papyrus. “We’ll give that a try then. Anything at this point would help, before he starts to eye the furniture. Do we have any bones in the freezer for making beef stock, Pap?”

"I think so. Unless father has been doing some snacking." A look was shot at the older male.

Tenebris held a hand up and wiggled his finger at his son. “I've been sticking to my own stock." He defended quickly.

“IT doesn’t matter if he has raided our freezer. We’ve raided his before.” She arches a brow at the both of them, and sighs as Skylar finally releases her wrist. “We kind of raid each other’s supply- it’s what living near family means.” She hums.

Aliquam settled and chuckled gently, "Fair enough, I mean, I know I bother Caeruleus sometimes..." he hummed, before he sighed and kissed her head gently, "I'll go start some bones then."

She shook her head, and grasped his arm before he could go. “You can’t.” She said. “Not yet. Undyne is still interrogating Koshinu. We can set the bones to soak shortly- I’m sure she’ll be done with her questioning here eventually.”

"Mmh…” he would have to pass through the living room wouldn't he, "Alright..."
“Unless you use your little trick.” She arches her brow. “Teleporting, that is. You use it sometimes, and sometimes you don’t.” It honestly made her think that sometimes Papyrus forgot he could teleport, in all honestly, with how little he used it. “Whatever you do, we have to keep quiet though. Either way… do we even have enough vinegar to soak a bone?”

Aliquam was thinking about his shortcut ability when Tenebris piped up. "I might have enough." he spoke, "I might be past teething age, but I always love a good bone to chew on." he rumbled with a shameless smile.

“Careful, Papa, or I’m gonna have to tell Asgore you’ve found another bone you like more than his.” Toki teased unabashedly.

Tenebris choked at that and bristled at Toki.

“Booooone!” Honey crowed, and beamed at her bristling grandpa. “Grandpapa bone.”

Toki laughed heartily, soothing Skylar as he grumbled at her. “Yes, Grandpapa likes bones, sweetie.” She grinned unrepentantly at Tenebris, and wigged a brow at him. Then she glanced to her husband. “I’m sorry if I’m embarrassing you, love. I always like to ruffle Tenny’s feathers- it keeps him spunky.”

Aliquam had his face in his hand, but he had a wide grin on his face. His broad shoulders shook with laughter.

Toki joined him, though kept her laughter quiet so as not to disturb her son. She rubbed his shoulder gently, and eventually the grumpy baby settled fully on her shoulder.

He didn’t get to settle to sleep though, before the stomping of heavy boots began to work their way up the stairs. They stop half way, obviously keeping Koshinu in her sights, but leaving her well able to speak to the three monsters in the master bedroom. “Hey!” Undyne calls. “I’ve got all of the questions answered that I needed. I’m going to take a trip to town- the police are going to want this information. With any luck, we’ll catch some of these bastards tonight.” She sounds smugly pleased.

Tenebris turned and walked to the door, pulling it open. "Thank you for your help, Undyne. Have a good day." He called to her.

“You too! Keep an eye on this punk, you three. He’s a big ass chicken, but it’s the ones that run that you can’t trust.” With that said, the monster’s footsteps retreated back down the stairs.

Toki heaved a deep sigh, and glanced to Papyrus. “You finish the crib,” She says, “Your dad and I will watch the kids. I’ll go put a couple bones on to soak for Skylar, and then get Koshinu settled into his room. Papa? You want to take Sky?” If she could get her clingy son to let her go, that was. If all else failed, she’d just have to do this with a baby on her hip.

Aliquam nodded gently, "You got it, Toki." Her husband gave her a smile, and went to resume finishing putting the crib back together in their room.

Tenebris took Skylar from her with only a little fussing on the boy’s part, and smiled at the male, nuzzling him and cooing to him gently to keep him busy. "Go ahead, Toki~"

Toki smiled and nodded, and turned to head down the stairs. She had a couple bones to soak- and a new human to get settled into her house.
News came later that evening, over the television while everyone was getting settled into the house. Mark had ended up driving up and picking up Koshinu- as he was technically affiliated with a terrorist organization, they had to take him into custody.

Thanks to the information from Koshinu, however, the police managed a raid.

They caught two hundred people associated with Humans Against Monsters- though no one of high ranking. But it was a start- it was a footstep in the right direction.
Moving the crib into their room had really been… well… not necessary, since Koshinu had been taken into custody by the police. It hadn’t been all that hard to move back, however. Once they’d done that, they’d spent the night lighting some incense for Han, and then spent the evening reveling in the fact that they’d finally made headway against HAM.

Cruelty surely wasn’t going to be happy that they’d caught so many.

A few days later had Toki and Papyrus out in the park with the whole family for a family picnic. It was the beginning of summer again- so it was starting to heat up. Nothing too bad- but it made for a good enough time to go have sandwiches in the shade of the trees, and watch Papyrus try to fit down the slide with Honey and Skylar perched in his lap.

Toki’s rather fit husband did not fit down the child-sized slide very well, even if he was made of bone.

Toki was on baby duty though- she had her niece tucked against her chest, the not-so-tiny fire baby sleeping and drooling on her shoulder while Sans and Grillby were up and about preparing things and stretching their legs. She didn’t have an issue with it- she leaned back against the tree she was perched at, and hoarded her adorable niece for the time being.

If she didn’t, Tenebris would swoop in and steal her- he was quite the baby thief, her father-in-law was, and she had no idea where he was lurking.

Toki patted the sleeping skelemental’s back with an amused snort as she watched Stag come running past, with Thumper clutching his horns like a lifeline. The boy was seated on the deer- and the deer was taking him for quite the rodeo as he bucked and bounced and frolicked. Stag was amused and having fun- and Thumper was too, by his hooting and hollering.

Solstice stirred against her shoulder, making a fussy whimper, and Toki cooed, gently rubbing her fingers through her niece’s flaming hair. “Awww, that’s just your crazy Uncle Thumper.” She crooned softly.

"I feel like I’d get bucked off, and spat on, in no specific order, if I tried that." Tenebris appeared beside her as he spoke, hanging upside down from the tree.

What of his tail that did not hold him up was rattling with a childish excitement that came with the pleasant energy of the day. Tenebris chortled happily, and then looked to Stag and Thumper, "Look at him go! I bet that's faster than he can even run." he laughed gently.

Toki startled as Tenebris’ voice appeared from above her, and craned her neck to look up at him, trying not to poke her horns into the tree bark as she did so. She ran her fingers lightly over the tiny nubs of horns that rested on Solstice’s head, and gave him a bemused look.

Thumper and Stag raced by again, the deer tossing his legs and nearly throwing the rabbit. Thumper whooped with laughter, and Stag let out his strange, bleating call, tinged with amusement, before racing off and around the play set. The good mood stemmed from the beautiful day, and the headway made into taking down Cruelty- and it seemed even the deer beast wasn’t immune to the good disposition.

"I wouldn’t be so sure," Toki laughed. “Thumper’s probably faster than you when he puts his mind to it. He’s a fast little rabbit, that’s for sure. And you probably would get bucked off and spat on- but at least Stag isn’t shitting on your lawn anymore. Or leaving dead things.” The monster might have been of a monster body when he was in his bipedal form, but his deer form, the fleet-footed golden-antlered form that Thumper was riding, was very much a basic animal with basic bodily functions. A leftover tidbit from the blood magic, no doubt- but all the same… gross. “The dead things were worse than the poop, honestly.”

"At least there's that, who knows, soon enough he might let me pet him.” Tenebris chuckled, disappearing once more into the tree before he dropped down beside her, landing much like a cat would. The big pale monster rose to his feet, leaning on the tree beside her with a pleased smile. "It's good to see everyone having fun." He sighed. "It’s rejuvenating."

"It really is.” She adjusted Solstice just slightly, rotating the infant on her shoulders so he could sit down if he wanted to without getting anything accidentally lit on fire by the sometimes-uncontrollable baby in her arms. “It’s nice to see everyone having fun. We’ve all been… well, walking on eggshells, waiting for the next bomb to drop, to be frank.” She laughs slightly. “It’s nice to just cut loose and relax. Even lil’ Sol here hasn’t cried all day, and she’s usually fussy and doesn’t like to leave Cae.”

"I'm glad she's opening up to everyone. It’s one of those little things that one wouldn't expect, but shan't complain about" he rumbled happily, before hearing a call from Aliquam.

"Father! A... ah... A little help please?” He looked up to see a slightly frantic Aliquam stuck half-way down the slide with his children in his arms. "I'm stuck!"

Tenebris blinked at the sight, before he smirked, and began to laugh, "Oh goodness, Aliquam!" he laughed, before starting over to the playground, "Coming, coming, my boy!" he chuckled.

Toki got up as well, following Tenebris over to eye her husband. A bemused laugh escaped her, as she cradled Solstice gingerly. “Oh my god, Papy, you really did get stuck.” That ass that she loved so much was wedged right between the metal sides of the slide, and he was definitely not moving.

The twins were laughing loudly though, their laughter spiraling into the air as they clung to Papyrus. “Daddy!” Honey squeaked. “Fuck! Daddy fuck!” Honey was more and more into words- and picking up things more and more. Both of the twins were, actually. Since their first words, they were absorbing language like sponges. ‘Fuck’ was not an intended curse word- so much as it was her attempt to say ‘stuck’.

“Stuck!” Skylar had it down, unlike his little sister. “Grandpapa!”
Tenebris stopped and pressed his mouth into what remained of his palm, letting out a loud 'pffffff!' sound into it as Honey unintentionally cursed, "Oh goodness..." he laughed, before he burst out laughing.

"Father!" Aliquam whined loudly, "Please! This is embarrassing! The least you could do is take the children!"

Toki laughed and reached out with her free arm. “Here- C’mere, my little clingy babies.” She took Honey, and slid her around onto her hip. The little one clung on tightly, and then Toki took Skylar, and eased him down onto his little feet.

After Tenebris had his fit of laughter, he came and took his son's hand, pulling him with a sound 'Shthunk' from the slide, allowing him to fall forward and catch himself.

"There we are, free as a bird." The elder chuckled, patting the younger male's shoulder.

Toki laughed, and eased Honey down to stand on the grass. The twins proceeded to cling to her legs, making her shuffle awkward as they weighed her down. “Free as a bird indeed.”

“Birb!” Honey croons from Toki’s left leg.

“Booob.” Skylar agrees cheerily from his mother’s right leg.

It takes all of Toki’s effort not to laugh heartily.

At least this time Aliquam was able to have a laugh with his father at the children trying so hard to pronounce things correctly.

“Save me from the cuties!” Toki laughs lightly. “I don’t want to drop Solstice, and I have little leeches stuck to me!” The twins had fastened themselves to her legs, clinging like small koalas, so shuffling was amusing.

“Daddy!” Honey crowed happily from her mother’s leg, and rubs her horns against Toki’s shin. “Uh!” She wiggles her fingers at him in demand.

He laughed at that and came over, picking Honey up and kissing her cheeks gently, "My beautiful baby girl~"

“Eeee! Keys!” Honey butted her head against his kisses, happily giggling.

“Speaking of baby girl- I think you have mine?” Grillby dusted off his hands on his pants, and approached Toki with a faint smile on his face. “May I have her back?”

“I dunno,” She tilted her head and quirked a grin to Grillby. “I kinda like her. She’s like a small, flaming bean. I might like to keep her. What do you think, Pap?” She wiggles her brows teasingly to her husband. “Think we need another one?”

He laughed happily as he nuzzled his daughter, before he looked to Toki. "Perhaps so. Would you want to go for having more children?” He asked.

She couldn’t tell if he was serious or not about that- so she’d just answer him seriously. Toki simply quirked a grin to him in response. “I do, yeah.” She nuzzled Solstice with a grin, watching as Grillby rolled his eyes at her, and then shifts the baby in her hands. “I did say I wanted a big family, I do recall.” She chuckles. “I want the twins to have lots of little siblings.”
“Ibbies!” Honey crows, and presses a sloppy kiss to her daddy’s cheek. She had no idea what her parents were talking about, but she was picking up more words, and words were good.

Grillby accepts his daughter easily, tucking her swiftly to his neck with a pleased crackling sound, and then pats Toki on the shoulder. He glanced to Papyrus and quirked an amused smile. “Have all of the kids you want,” he says, “but this one is mine.” He was wary of having any more with Sans after how Solstice’s birth had gone- but they’d discuss that later.

Her arms devoid of her niece left Toki able to gently heft Skylar up into her arms so she could pepper his face with kisses. He howled with laughter.

Tenebris was purring and rumbling loudly as he watched everyone speak of children. he himself would love to be a father again, but being with Asgore, and both with only siring anatomy... Or at least, only functioning siring anatomy…

But with all the grandchildren, he was still happy.

Such thoughts passing through his mind allowed him to settle and take a deep breath of air...

And that's when it began to change. Tenebris tasted something... something that didn't belong.

His expression fell and he took the air again, before he looked to the sky, listening, "Toki." He then spoke up.

When Tenebris spoke up and drew her attention to him, Toki had to ease up on her laughter in order to properly answer him. She eased Skylar down into the grass when he squirmed to be let down. "Huh?" She inquired. "What's up, Papa?"

He took in the air and growled quietly. "Is there very much air activity here?" He asked.

"Air activity?" She blinks, watching Skylar scoot over to cling to Aliquam's leg. "Uh... Not really, no. I mean, we get the occasional private plane practicing flying, but the air here is volatile so we don't get them often. Why?" She could vaguely hear the hum of an engine, and squinted to the sky, trying to see the plane. It could be a big one far off- Tenebris always got set on edge by the noise of the engines.

 Mostly, she thought, because they were louder than he was and he couldn't make himself louder than a plane engine.

"Something's coming closer... and the smell... It's..." he took another deep break, "Gas..."

She frowns. She could vaguely see shapes approaching rapidly. "I can see... Six planes? Maybe it's a performance group out to practice. I've seen air shows before. They're really neat." That didn't account for him smelling gas though. "Maybe there's a pilot in distress? Should I fly up with Clover and see if they're alright?"

He growled again, wary. "Be careful... That scent, it's so strong..."

"It could be a gas tank leak then." Concern grows on her face. Airplane crashes were messy- and traumatic. "They might not even know something is up until something goes wrong."

The small skeleton trots away from the play set, and lifts a hand to the sky. She tugs, and her magic parts the air. Clover comes forth at her prompting, and Toki rushes forth to hop into the saddle. She takes a moment to do up the straps so she doesn't fall off. "Please explain to everyone for me, Papa! Plane crashes are bad, and if I can prevent one, I'm going to."
"Mama?" Honey turns in her daddy's arms and puckers her little teeth, reaching for Toki as she mounts up.

"I'll be back, sweetheart!" Toki calls to her daughter. "Keep an eye on them, Pap!" She was the only one who had an air capable mount, and Sugar couldn't fly for her to take someone with her. So, Toki took to the sky on her own, Clover heaving into the air with a grunt and a sharp buzz.

Tenebris nodded, and Papyrus picked up Skylar, taking him and Honey and jogging for the house inside in case there was going to be danger. Caeruleus seemed to get the same idea, and began urging his mate to go home.

Toki flew out to meet the planes, which were flying in a staggered pattern. She was glad she didn't need oxygen, as the speed at which Clover was moving would have stolen her breath away. The buzz of her wings was heavy, drowning out the weighty growls of the engines until Toki got closer.

She leaned up once she was sure the pilots could see her, and waved her arms at them. She had no idea how to tell them that there was something wrong with one of their planes- she could smell the gasoline from here- but hopefully the skeleton flying in the giant hornet that looked fresh from the bowls of hell would let them know something was amiss.

Though... Those didn't look like any air show planes she had ever seen. They had sprayers on the wings? And looked to be leaking something. Weird.

The planes didn't stop, they seemed to be flying fine, but one of the planes then twisted, flying right at her.

"What the-" Going head on with a plane was not what she intended to do. However, Toki didn't have time to direct clover up- so they skirted just under the plane.

They barely made it, Clover having to stall her wings lest she hit the wings that skirted right over top of her. The plane clipped Toki- and one of her horns snapped off half way, lodging in the belly of the plane.

She shrieked, and clutched at her skull, clinging to the saddle as Clover was knocked ass over head by the wind of the plane blowing over the both of them.

As they fell a few feet, Clover tumbling and struggling to right herself under the sensation of pain from her summoner, Toki managed to catch sight of the big, red HAM emblazoned on the bottoms of the wings of the planes.

The big green form of the bug falling was obvious to anyone watching her, even from a distance. It didn't take Clover long to recover however- and she turned midair to speed back for the village.

Tenebris was already raising alert, warning citizens to get to the shelter of their homes.

The planes were faster than Clover, and ate up the sky faster than she could. Toki leaned into her mount to reduce wind resistance, and looked on with panic.

The two of the planes broke off as they reached the village. Four of them began to spray something over top of the village, blanketing it and the surrounding forest in a thin spray of harsh smelling liquid as the monster below began to panic.

Tenebris snarled as the danger escalated, "EVERYONE GET INSIDE!" he roared, "GO NOW!"
The Guards were moving, all trying to help get everyone to safety before anything worse could happen.

The monsters fled indoors, escaping the foul smelling liquid. As the village rapidly emptied of outside residents, the planes made a second loop, and sprayed once more. The thick liquid coated everything- and matted the fur of the guards as they helped citizens get inside.

The liquid, however harsh smelling, seemed harmless however.

Until the first set of planes came back around. Something small was dropped out of the luggage bay- and it plummeted nearly invisibly down towards the village.

However as it struck the pavement outside of the school, it exploded- and the liquid coating everything caught fire in the heat of the dried out and hot summer day. Fire rushed forth, and the screaming began, over the roar of more explosions going off.

Clover pushed harder, and reached the village in time to slam into one of the planes spraying what was obviously gasoline. Her jaws came down on the cockpit, and she bit at the glass, trying to shear through the metal.

Toki tugged upon her magic, pulling upon the massive well within her that made her a boss heart- and the sky filled with flaming bees that swarmed at the planes, trying to blind them and throw them off course, and away from her home. She threw everything into her attack- because she was the only one who could fight from the sky.

Toki was done letting Cruelty and Humans Against Monsters come into her home and hurt people. She hadn't been training for months for nothing, after all. She might have only been a civilian, but she was better now than she had been nine months prior.

Toki sent Stripe down to the house, the fat queen meant to go stay with Papyrus and her children, to keep her linked and informed about how they were doing.

She could see monsters with Earth based magic trying to fight the gasoline based Fire, and Monsters with water based magic trying to fight the fire that was rapidly consuming homes after having burnt through the gas that had acted as the fast acting ignition.

More bombs fell, blasting apart Muffet's bakery, and several homes, igniting more fires. Clover's jaws crunched through the cockpit, ripping it off of the plane and bathing the pilot in skin blistering heat.

Tenebris had by this time unhinged, now sending powerful blasts of energy flying at the planes as they flew by, hoping to shoot them down before they could cause any more damage.

The plane spiraled out of control, and went down in the park with a crash and dragging a deep furrow into the ground. Stag was there, hauling themselves through the fire to savage the pilot with their horns.

Clover locked onto one of the bombers, and having come to hover not far from the house, and Toki fed her magic as she gathered a blast of heat from within her belly.

The plane went straight for them, the other bomber heading straight for Tenebris- and Clover got her shot off first, damn near point blank.

The bombs detonated, the concussion and blast wave blowing over the hell hornet and her rider- and shrapnel puncturing the thick carapace and wings of Clover, and making Toki cry out as she shared her pain. Clover listed to the side, trying to stay airborne- and right into the path of one of the sprayer planes.

Tenebris yelled out as he went flying from the shockwave, bowling into a house with a crash, though he was soon up and fighting again, "TOKI!" he screeched.

There wasn't any time to dodge- the plane drove into her, sharp propellers slicing through the insects carapace. Clover gave a gurgling shriek, legs coming around to cling desperately to the front of the plane as it shredded her front and the saddle holding Toki in place.

Molten hot plasma squelched from the wounded beasts jaws, and the plane began a nosedive as its engines stalled, bringing Clover, and Toki, down with it.

Toki fisted her hands in the flaming mane of the fire bug, her belly burning with the phantom sensations- and the ground rapidly approaching had her sockets widening.

Clover shot one last beam of light into the sky as the plane came down on top of her and her summoner- and then all of the bees in the sky dropped from the air, dead and dying with noisy shrieks and buzzes as the plane crushed the small skeleton under the weight of her mount and itself.

Burning fire and crushing pain consumed her- and then it was all imposing blackness was sucking her down into it's dark depths and she was falling...

Falling...

Toki opened her sockets and laughed, glancing to Papyrus as she got the jelly out of the fridge. "Love, can you hand me the peanut butter? You put it on the top shelf again, and we need it for the finger sandwiches."

"Butt flies!" Honey patted the window, where she sat on the counter, and squeaked excitedly. Outside was a butterfly, flitting around with one of Toki's flowers. "Daddy! Butt flies!"

"Butt-Ter flies, Honey." he corrected his daughter gently, before going to the shelf and picking the peanut butter from the shelf, "Sorry, but I swear to you these two are devious. I’ve got to put it up there sometimes." He chuckled as he held it to her.

"Butt-turrrrrd-flies!" The baby spotted the peanut butter as he brought it out, and let out a happy shriek. "Peebutter! Want!"

Toki laughed and took the jar gingerly. "You can have some peanut butter later, sweetheart. You always manage to get it everywhere- and I don't want to have to rassle you to get it out of your eye socket again." She grinned up to Papyrus, and leaned up to kiss his chin. "It's alright, I know. They're walking more and more, and from there the climbing is going to happen. We're probably going to put a lot of stuff up high"

He leaned down and gave her a soft kiss in return, smiling for all but the two remaining moments of peace before there was a frantic knocking at the door.

Toki blinked at the knocking, and set down her supplies. She scrubbed her hands on her legs, and then moved to open the back door. She blinked, spotting Cae. "Whoa, whoa, where's the fire?" She jokes lightly. "What's up, Sans?"
One could immediately tell someone there was something wrong. The look in the skeleton's eyes was too tense. He was trembling lightly on his feet, and he didn't even snort at the joke; in fact, he seemed to flinch, as if it was taken in bad taste. "We gotta get out of here... We need to get everyone out of here NOW." He told her.

She blinked at him for a moment, a grown tugging at her teeth. "Wait- what? Get out of here- but what- why?" The baffled woman stepped back from the door, glancing over her brother in law with a worried look. "Did something happen?"

"Toki, you just gotta trust me on this... This isn't something that can wait... We need to get what we cherish most, and get back to the underground!"

"Wh-what?" She blinked, sockets popping wide. Her mouth parted, taking in the shake to his voice, and she glanced over to Papyrus, before speaking quietly. "... Alright, Sans. Alright. I trust you." She says. "But we need to have a reason to sound the evacuation alarms..."

"They're going to attack us again... and... It can't happen again." he told her, before he told her what their enemy was bringing to the fight- though leaving out what happened at the end. She didn't need to know that- not yet.

His words had her sockets widening. "Shit." She cursed. Again meant it had happened prior, and if they had to evacuate, then the fight hadn't gone in their favor. Toki wondered who had died, and hoped they'd make it out this time. "Alright. Sound the alarm." She glanced to Papyrus. "Tell them we got an anonymous tip about an incoming attack." Not everyone knew about the resets and loads- so anonymous would have to work. "Use Papyrus's guard code to authorize it- and then get out as fast as you can. We'll be behind you." She promises.

Cae was gone fast after hearing her promise, and soon enough the alarms had begun to sound off. Immediately, as if practiced, the inhabitants of the compound were loading up and moving out to where it would be safe, most of them beginning for the mountain, as the underground would be safe.

With that said, and Sans gone, she turns, abandoning her cooking and leaving Papyrus with the kids, and races off to go fetch and crate up the cats. They wouldn't be able to withstand the explosions- and neither would Cae's dog. Sobek and Snuggle would be easier to get- but Gracie and Gael would be a bit harder to herd into their carriers.

Once she got them crated though, it would be a scramble to get what valuables she could- her scrapbook from Tenebris, emergency clothing, baby stuff and the like- packed up while Papyrus got the twins into the car.

After the twins were secured in their seats, Aliquam had gone back in and come back out with a few of his own things, tucking them away in safe places in the car before he climbed in. "Have you got everything?" The tall skeleton asked of his wife.

Toki was quick to stuff the cat carriers into the car, along with their children's irate summons. They went into a large dog kennel though, to keep from shredding the seats. Stag had also folded themselves up into the car, laying in deer form along the floor boards of the back seats. It was a tight fit, but they made it work. Stag wasn't going to be left behind either- where Toki went, Stag went.

At the question, Toki paused, and then made one last dash into the house. She came back out with Han's urn, and tucked it gently into the back of the car, before flinging herself into the front seat. She buckled in shakily, and nodded. "Y-yeah." She'd gotten all of their important information, and her laptop as well, so they had everything legal they would need. As she got settled, seeing Grillby in Sans truck as they pulled out ahead of them, and Tenebris with Thumper and his car not far behind their rig, Toki paused, and frowned. "... We've got everything that can be taken..." Her bees couldn't- her hives would be destroyed, but they didn't have time to load them up into her truck. It would take hours- and they didn't have that much time.

"I'm sorry about your bees..." He told her, as if he already knew why she mourned. But he smiled all the same to her. "I'll help you start a new hive. Our own colony from the beginning." He promised, before he started the car and began to pull out with the line.

They were near the rear, and as the last few cars retreated into the trees, an overwhelming smell of gasoline blew in on the next breeze, making Aliquam gag silently.

He hit the nail on the head as to why she was upset, but there was nothing to be done for it. Her entire life work would go up in flames- again. Though this time, everything would be gone- not just her house. "I'd like that." She manages to whisper, and laces her fingers tightly with his.

The smell of gas reached even her, and she had to croon gently to the twins as they fusses about the smell. Toki rubbed Quinn's knuckles soothingly, having caught the lurch in his middle out of the corner of her eye.

She glanced in the rearview mirror in time to see the smoke start to rise up, along with the flames, and had to glance away. "He's getting what he wanted." She says sadly. "We're going back to the Underground..."

"Not for long..." he promised, reaching and taking her hand tightly, cradling it in the firm grasp he held for her. "They may have won this battle... but the war isn't over." he told her, "We'll get our home back."

She smiled shakily. "We're going to have to rebuild again." The boom-crack of an explosive going off rattled the car, even this far off, and her fingers tightened over his. She lifted his hand and pressed it to her skull, rubbing one of his knuckles gently over the crack that went down along her forehead with a soft sigh. "Everything is gone..."

"Not everything. We have each other. We have our family." he told her, his hand slipping down to caress her cheek, "Everyone is safe."

"Yeah..." She leaned her face into his touch, and shuddered gently as they listened to another bomb go off. It was farther off this time. But still audible. She was thankful the thick trees covered the road, or the line of cars would be visible from the sky. "We have each other, and we have our family." She heaves a deep sigh, and leans over in her seat to nuzzle to his arm- up until one of the twins starts to cry, where in she turns, and reached back to offer her hand to their distraught child.

"Where are we going to stay?" She asks quietly once Honey stops crying.

"My old home" he replied, "Despite everything that's happened... You'll love it there, and so will the children."

She smiled quietly, reclaiming his hand once more. "I’m sure I will. It was beautiful there… It’ll be nice to get to spend time in your childhood home.” He’d been living with her in hers- it would be nice to get to spend some time with him in his. She glanced at him thoughtfully though. “It was mostly empty last I saw it... I guess we’re going to be roughing it.” No bed, no blankets or pillows- though blankets were moot with her.

"We might not have much, but we have each other, and last I checked, I left everything on my bed, so you guys will sleep just fine." He assured her with a smile.
“We,” she corrects gently. “We’ll all wedge in together.” It would be a tight fit- the twins were getting bigger and bigger, but it wouldn’t be all that big a deal for them to wedge together. Toki sucks in a soft breath, and then sighs softly.

He looked at her for a moment, and then he chuckled and turned to continue driving.

The sounds faded off into the distance, and Toki slumped the further they got away from what was their home. It was no doubt just ramparts at this point- and she knew Undyne, or one of the other guards, would have called the police and fire department to let them know what happened. But, they were a long drive out- so Toki just hoped they managed to stop the fire before it consumed the forest.

Exhaustion settled over her suddenly, and she leaned over in her seat to rest her forehead against his shoulder, and just closed her eye sockets. They might have won a small measure against Cruelty with that raid- but... He’d gotten what he wanted. They were going back- not all of them, but the vast majority of them were going back.

The rest of the drive passed in relative silence- though they had to come to a stop quite some distance from the castle. There were a lot of cars, and only limited amounts of space. As everyone got parked to the best of their ability, Toki grimaced and sighed, before glancing to Papyrus. “Well, at least we have Clover to cheat with.”

Keeping the cars hidden by the trees was smart and Aliquam got out of the car, taking a deep breath. "I need to help with crowd control..."

“Right. Guard duties.” Toki eased out of the car with a deep sigh, and gave her husband a nod. “Go ahead, love. You’ve got your duties as a guard. I’ll get everything out of the car and onto Clover, alright?” The saddle on the hornet had spots for things to be tied to, so hauling their things up wouldn’t be hard to do.

"Alright. I love you so much." He came around the car to kiss her gently, and gave love, to the twins before he went to help the guards with the civilians.

Toki watched him go with a sigh, musing that she knew what she was getting into when she technically married the monster equivalent of a police officer. He was always going to be on call for duty- and she knew and accepted this. Toki was swift in getting Clover summoned and loaded up, draping Stag across her saddle like he was a fresh kill, and then she was mounting up with the twins strapped to her chest. She’d found the old sling in one of the bags- it was a little tight, but it served to hold the kids in place.

She didn’t fly high- more to keep out of sight, even if there was no way the planes could see her from a two hours drive away from the castle. She kept low, and searched for the rest of her family as she went. They could teleport, yeah, but that didn’t mean she wouldn’t offer to help if she could find them on her way up towards the castle.

Tenebris was helping with the crowd, making sure everyone stayed with each other, and putting them into three groups as to where they’d be going. Caeruleus was with Grillby and Solstice, leading the Snowdin group.

Toki kept overhead and kept an eye on everyone. She intended to wait for Aliquam, and watched as the crowd began to thin slowly as monsters made their way back into the castle. As the groups headed out, and the mass of monsters dwindled and dwindled, Toki soon found herself able to bring Clover in to land at the entrance to the castle to wait for Papyrus. They’d need to talk to the king, no doubt- if Undyne hadn’t done that already- or Sans.
One of the two- either way, they'd need to check up with Asgore, most likely, before heading down to Snowdin.

Tenebris and Sans were in the throne room when she and Papyrus caught up.

Tenebris was resting his head on the king's shoulder, while Sans explained to Asgore what was going on.

Asgore frowned. "We saw the smoke from here- but there was truly nothing to be done?" He had Tenebris on one shoulder, and Thumper clinging to the other. The rabbit had latched on as soon as he'd gotten past the front gate, and the king hadn't let go of the boy he had partly adopted with Tenebris. "You're saying that she really...?"

Toki stayed mounted on Clover- mostly because it saved on walking space- until they reached the main part of the throne room. As the big bee touched down, she glanced to Papyrus, and motioned for him to help her down, since she had the twins strapped to her. "Are you getting Asgore caught up?" She called to Sans, giving the king a friendly look, though saddened she might be.

The king looked properly horrified at her, but managed to hide it after it flashed across his face. He instead managed a nod to her, smoothing his hand gently along Thumper's back.

Toki looked befuddled at that look. "... What's that look for?"

"I'm just really glad that it didn't happen again." Sans told him with a frown, before he looked at Toki. "Pap can go ahead and head home now, the crowd's been taken care of by the guards down here already."

Toki nodded, reading the tense lines of his frame as she dismounted. She left Clover summoned- they did have some stuff to carry, and she had no desire to carry it all the way to Snowdin. It was a long, long walk- and the Riverperson was probably super busy. "Alright." She said. "Where is everyone staying at?"

"Tenebris and Thumper both are staying with me." Asgore said firmly. "I do believe Grillby and Sans are taking Solstice to his old bar, to stay with Fuku."

"Which leaves the old Snowdin house to us." Toki nods slowly. "Alright... Well, keep in contact, alright?"

"Of course." Asgore dipped his head gingerly to the boss heart. "Take care of yourself, Toki. You and Papyrus both."

"I'm gonna come with you." Sans piped up, "I... Kinda want to reminisce about home sweet home." He chuckled shakily.

"You speak as if it's a problem, Sans." Aliquam came to his brother and patted his back gently.

"You're always welcome with us." Toki nodded. She'd have hugged him, but she had her arms full of the twins, who wanted nothing to do with being confined to her grasp. "Grillby and Solstice too, if you'd rather all stay with us rather than at the bar."

She scoots over and nudges his shoulder gently, offering him a reassuring smile. "At least this time you can't trick me with that da-" she paused, thought over her words and the impressionable twins in her arms, and then changed it mid word, "-med treadmill prank. I'm on to your shenanigans, mister."

That got a chuckle and a grin from Cae, "I dunno, you never know", he chuckled smugly, "I might just getcha again."

Aliquam chuckled and looped an arm around his brother's back, "Come on you prankster," he gave his brother a grin to match his own trademark grin.

Caeruleus chuckled quietly, "R-right behind you guys."

At this, Tenebris smiled at the sight, and it warmed his soul

Everything they went though, no matter what. They were always brothers in the end, and it warmed Tenebris' heart to see his sons acting as family would.

"Heh..."
Chapter 85

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And here we explore some interesting things about what happens to those who died, or were in the process of dying, during a load. This was actually Silver’s idea- very spur of the moment.

Silverwing Notes: So you guys thought things were bad before, WELP, just you feckin wait >:3 you guys are gonna LOVE this

It had been a few hours since they arrived in the Underground, Tenebris had stayed behind with Asgore, while Caeruleus followed his brother home, back to Snowdin.

It was odd, being back there, but there was a familiar air that seemed to soothe the brothers. Well, more Aliquam than Cae, who was still severely disturbed by something he knew, but seemed intent on keeping to himself.

Cae had gone to his room to rest on his brother's orders, while the latter worked with his wife to get everyone comfy, as well as clean up a bit while Grillby took Solstice to go visit Fuku at the bar.

When it was done, Aliquam gave Toki time to rest on the old couch they’d managed to scrounge up as he went to talk to his brother.

"Caeruleus?"

Aliquam kept his voice low as he rapped his knuckles lightly on his brothers old door. The tall skeleton monster listened quietly, picking up faint sounds from within. They were mostly drowned out by his wife and children down stairs. Toki might have been tired, but the twins were not.

"Brother," he tried again, speaking just a hair louder perchance Sans hadn't heard his quieter indoor voice the first time, "it's me. May I come in?"

"... C'mon in, Pap..." Was a reply from inside, just barely loud enough to hear.

A frown tugged his teeth downward, but he masked it with a neutral smile before he stepped inside. He eased in, and shut the door gingerly behind him, glancing to his elder brother as he did so.

"Sans," he said, "are you alright?"

"No... Quinn..." His brother replied from where he sat on the unmade bed, his eye lit up. "I'm... I'm really fucked up this time..." He whimpered.

"Oh Sans..." Papyrus sucked in a soft breath, before exhaling quietly. He padded closer to the bed, and then neatly tucked himself next to his brother. He lifted his arm, and tugged the older monster close, tucking his chest against his side. It was... Weird, given his brothers... mammary glands. But, anything for his brother. And his brother looked like he needed a hug. "Talking about it always helps you," Quinn suggests gently, large hand rubbing his brothers shoulder. "I am here to listen."
Cae hugged his brother tight when the hug came around and the elder took a deep breath, "It was another... Load... a Bad dream now but... it was real... It was real. It could have happened again if I didn't remember..." He murmured into his brother's chest.

"I figured, since you warned us about the planes." Aliquam rubbed soothing circles on his shoulders, and let his sockets glow quietly to comfort his elder brother. "It didn't happen though, because you remembered and you saved us." He pointed out gently. "You took charge and you changed things for the better." It occurred to Quinn that this was not something Sans usually did. "You don't usually do that, do you...?" What could have happened to make him act?

"..." He sighed quietly, "A... A lot of people died, Quinn..." he started hesitantly.

Papyrus winced. "I assumed as such." He said gently. "Don't be afraid to tell me, Sans. I can handle it- and you need to tell someone. Who died?"

"..." his grip tightened, "Dad... Grillby... Solli... a-and..." His voice cracked when he spoke his daughter's nickname and he couldn't bring himself to speak, hiding his face again as his grip tightened.

Papyrus tightened his grip over Sans as well, and rubbed his arm more firmly. Losing their Father would be hard- but losing Grillby and Solstice would have ruined Sans. No wonder his brother was so distraught- losing his niece, father, and future brother-in-law was an upsetting thought to Papyrus too. He rumbled gently though, prompting him to speak more. "Thumper?" He guessed gently, speaking of their adopted little brother.

"Toki..."

His mind reeled, and it took only seconds for him to become entirely focused down onto the name of his wife.

Toki had... Died? There had been close calls before, but they hadn't ever lost her before- Sans would have told him if they had. "... How?" It's the only thing he can ask, even if he knows he shouldn't be asking it. Asking is only going to make his soul throb worse- but some part of him needed to know.

"She... n' Clover... Got fuckin' nose-ended by one of their planes..." he hissed, "And... Pap..." His grip was tight enough that his fingertips could have torn through his brother's clothing, "You fell... And nothing I said could pick you back up... I was gonna be alone... And the kids... th-the kids..."

How his brother could manage with this knowledge, he would never know. Just this small nugget of information was making his stomach churn with anxiety driven nausea, and the hands that held his brother struggled not to clench tight. Too tight, and his fragile HP would go down. It took tremendous effort to keep a steady front, and to keep breathing evenly as he listened.

He'd fallen. Of course he had... Toki was his love- his mate. She was... She was the one. Losing her... Papyrus never handled loss well. "What happened to my children?" He whispered softly, prompting his brother automatically so he wouldn't stall up.

"They felt it... they knew..." He murmured, "They got really bad... Lethargic, lifeless... Even Sobek didn't bite me... But... I went right to the kid... they reloaded... I... I stopped it... A-Are they okay?"

Papyrus just had to stop for a moment and just process that. That sounded like the infantile stages of falling, which... Which was not uncommon in children who had lost both parents at a young age. So Toki... Toki died... His wife died, and he fell, and then his children... Fell...

It took everything he had not to rattle uneasily. He took a deep breath to calm himself, and rubbed his brothers arm. "The twins are okay," he says. "They know we're upset about something, so they're on edge, but they're okay. You got to all of us in time, Sans. We're all alive." He had to remind himself of this as well. "We're all alive, and this is now."

"I... I'm just glad I was able to save them... to save you..." he reached up now, abandoning the other's clothes to grip his brother's head, "You're my baby brother, Pap... What kinda big brother would I be... if I went and let this happen"

"You'd still be my big brother." He leaned down to nuzzle his face gently against Sans, though his mind was reeling and his body was sending out so many upset signals that he wasn't sure which one to listen to. "You fixed it." He said. "I'm not falling, and Solstice and Grillby are alive, and so is Father and Thumper and Toki... We're all alive and perfectly healthy."

There was a sharp thud from downstairs, the sound of bone striking against something, along with a soft, floating groan that was obviously from Toki.

The twins were eerily silent, though began to whimper moments later.

And for all but that moment, Cae believed him.

But upon hearing the clatter, the pain in Toki's voice. Caeruleus was off of his bed like a bullet, going to see what had happened.

His door pulled open, and he was on the guardrail immediately, "Toki!?"

Papyrus was not far behind his brother.

Toki was braced against the entrance to the kitchen, and had a hand over her face. She leaned heavily on the doorframe, just barely in view. What was in view, however, was the trail of thick green luminescent glowing magic that was splattered on the floor. "Cae?" She called wearily, trying not to make more of a mess on the floor. "Do... Do you have a towel somewhere in your room? There's... Something wrong... I'm bleeding? I don't feel... Good..."

Skylar began to sniffle, and clung to his sister where they sat by the couch.

"..." The lights disappeared from his eyes.

He turned and returned to his room only long enough to push a towel into his brother's arms, before he shortcut from the room, disappearing from the house with a crack of displaced air.

Toki heard the sound of his teleporting, and groaned softly. "Couldn't even bring me a towel... Pap...? I need a towel please. I'm... Eugh, it's everywhere... Aww, Sky no, mommy's okay... Shhh, baby... Shh... It's okay..."

"I'm coming, Toki! I'm coming!" He called, leaping over the banister with ease, and landing beside her in a crouch. He straightened, before he held the towel out to her. He couldn't see a lot of what was wrong with her hands in the way- but he could see the magic dripping and it concerned him. "Here... take this and go to the kitchen. Use the faucet to wash off, I'll take care of the children." He told her, stroking her head gently before he went immediately to help the twins.

He scooped them into his arms, but immediately stiffened, "Oh my god..." They were hot to the touch... Were they... sick...?

Sick...
He held them close, hushing and cooing to them gently to comfort them as he moved to check on Toki.

"Toki, are you okay in there?" he asked gently.

The twins clung to him tightly once he'd lifted them, and they pressed there faces to his neck, clinging shakily.

Toki had taken the towel to wash off as instructed, and had made use of her height to use the ungodly tall sink the Gaster family had apparently decided they'd needed when they lived here. The towel was soaked and she scrubbed her face clean, her bones burning uncomfortably. She felt hot and light headed, and dizzy and nauseated- and it had hit out of the blue too. She had been fine one moment, and then not the next- and she’d been dribbling magic blood onto the floors, and stumbling towards the kitchen to try and contain the mess.

When he spoke to her, Toki turned to look at him, finishing swiping away the last of the mess on her face. Or what would have been- if a big stream hadn't come trailing unnaturally from her eye socket and nasal cavity. "I... I don't think so." Her chest convulsed, and she fought down the urge to cough. "Are the twins okay?"

"Toki..." He summoned Bastet, who opened her mouth widely and took the children into her protective cradling jaws. "They're... They've gotten a fever... But they're okay enough for me to worry about you... you're bleeding..." The father in him worried for his children- but there wasn’t anything he could do for a fever for the children at this moment. He needed to call his father- but there was immediate panic in the fact that his wife was bleeding from her face.

The twins latched onto Bastet just as easily as they did their father. They were well socialized with their parents summons, and their own- and it wasn't any huge surprise that they found comfort in the massive cat skull beast.

Papyrus came to her side and stroked her cheek, before he growled in frustration of his foolish actions of his younger years. He'd have to fix that damn sink... "Come on... come on." He coaxed her towards the bathroom, setting the towel on her chin to catch any of the dripping from her face. "The sink there is intact at a decent level. We can use it to clean you off better than I thought this damn thing could." He snarled.

Toki lifted a shaky hand to her face, keeping the towel in place to catch the dripping magic. "Nn... Tend to the twins first," she twits a little under his focus, her worry as a mother overriding her worry for herself. She didn't go to her babies though- because this could be contagious if she wasn't careful and she didn't want them to be bleeding. She still made her way towards the bathroom, her steps visibly unstable even if they were carrying her. "It's just... A little blood. I'm... I'm okay..."

"Bastet will carry them long enough to let me help you... This bleeding isn't normal!" He told her urgently, showing that his talk with Cae definitely had him stressed.

"It's not." She agreed, feverish bones brushing his as she staggered into him. "Don't want you to catch it though." She could detect his higher levels of stress coloring his voice, and went to inquire about it when her chest heaved again. She coughed, magic spurting last her teeth and dribbling in a grisly mess down the towel.

Her legs gave out, and she dropped like a rock.

"TOKI!" he caught her fast, picking her up bridal style and getting her to the bathroom quickly,
"Toki... It's gonna be okay... It's gonna... it's gonna be okay." he told her, stroking her head before he clacked it gently

"It'll be okay..."

More magic rolled down from her sockets and nasal cavity, and every exhale sent flecks of it out onto the towel she was using to catch it all with. Toki lolled into him almost limply. Where the twins had a steady fever, it felt like her bones were growing hotter by the moment.

"What's... Happening to me?" She asked blearily as they reached the bathroom. Toki reached out a hand to try and turn on the faucet, and struggled to get the towel under the edge of faucet so she could re-wet it. Her hands shook too badly to be of much good.

"I don't know..." He didn't know... and after what he heard from his brother... He was panicking. He set her down in the bathtub, tenderly easing her in so she wouldn't be too uncomfortable. He turned and pulled another rag from the cabinet, soaking it swiftly in the sink, before bringing it over and wiping her off. "Toki. You're going to be okay, I know it..."

Ultimately, Toki stopped fighting Papyrus tending to her, and let him clean her face. Every time he swiped the blood away, however, it just seemed to come back, rolling back down in thick, green waves. Eventually it started to ease off though. And the streams seemed to come less often. "I'll be alright with you here," she murmured. "I always will be... Mmm... Haven't died yet," she jokes gently, "so I'm pretty sure I'll be okay... Might... Might want to call someone though... Let them k-know our house has sick folks in it..."

Relieved at the easing of the blood, he nodded slowly, barely even breaking a reaction at her joke, "I... i don't think you're the only one..." he murmured, "Caeruleus... He may have led me to many more that we will need to care for..."

"But... Why? What makes us special?" She inquired blearily, eye lights trembling as they struggled to stay locked on him. She was shaky and sick and not obviously well. Toki shuddered roughly where she lay in the tub, and watched him toil over her. "I... Hope everyone is okay..."

He stroked her head gently, wiping away the blood as it came, sensing as Bastet cradled their children, shifting to bring them relief, "Caeruleus has already gone to check on others."

Eventually the blood stopped mostly, leaving her shaky and exhausted in the tub with only the occasional droplet escaping. Her fingers curl along the sides, nuzzling her skull up into his hand as it touched her. "Is that where he teleported too?" She blinks slowly.

"I fear so." he nodded gently, before he smiled and cupped her cheek, "Toki... I love you... I love you so much... We'll get through this... All four of us" he told her, setting down the rag to better lean in to embrace her, as he had done for his brother just minutes before. "I won't let anything happen to you... you're my wife... And what kind of husband would I be to let this happen..."

"I love you too..." she says. "It's not your fault that I'm sick. You didn't do this to me, and we can't control it." She closed her sockets and tilted her skull into his hand, a shaky sound escaping her. "Hah... I'm... Really dizzy, Pap... Is the bleeding stopped...?"

"It looks to have slowed down enough to start clotting properly... I'm glad... But for now, rest. I need to make sure the children are all right... But drink some water." He spoke as he stood and filled a glass of water from the sink. "And I'll be right back to watch over you once more."

"I spend a lot of time in tubs," she muses. "They're not very comfortable." The glass of water is accepted though, and she sips at it shakily. "Go please. Check the twins. Make sure our babies are okay." She grimaces slightly and pressed a hand to her sockets. She was burning up. "Twins need their daddy." She murmured.

"Just as my wife needs her husband." He told her, before he sighed and got up, going to his children. He cooed and hummed to them as he collected them from Bastet's teeth, pulling them close before he checked them over. "It's okay, Daddy's got you now."

Toki's sockets closed as he left, and she slumped in the tub, slowly sliding downwards. Without him there to distract her, Toki really did feel terrible. So maybe she could just close her eyes for a second... Just a second to rest them...

The twins were still feverish, but that was all that seemed to be wrong with them. Honey, however, seemed to be feeling like she was having quite the upset stomach, and the little girl was whimpering against Pap's shirt as she nuzzled into it. Skylar likewise was also whimpering, but he seemed better than his sister was.

He held Skylar in the crook of one arm as he adjusted Honey, singing to them gently as he rested his daughter against his shoulder, patting her back gently, "it's okay, my little blossom" he whispered to her, "I know you feel icky but you're going to be okay"

She hiccuped gently against the patting motion, and whined. The patting didn't help settle her stomach- in fact, it seemed to make the nauseated part of her magic react more. "Icky," she whined, voice pitched high as she rested her head on his shoulder. "Nuhhh..."

Skylar nuzzled against his father, content to cling where he could. He watched his sister, and felt out along his familial bonds with wary uneasiness.

He cooed and hummed to them both, no longer patting Honey's back, rather stroking it tenderly, "It's okay..." he cooed gently, smiling as he nuzzled them both. He slowly took them over to Bastet again, and collected their summons as well, before returning them to the safety of Bastet's teeth.

The twins settled without fuss in their father’s summons grasp, clinging to their own summons as they rested. They wanted their mother- but they understood, on some instinctual level, that there was something wrong, and that she would come when she could.

Once the twins were settled, Papyrus headed back to check on his wife.

Toki was slumped in the tub, her skull resting along the side of it with her chin resting on her chest, with a trail of blood having rolled down from her nasal cavity down over her interlocked teeth. The glass of water had been set down between her legs in the tub, but she was limp and still, sockets closed and dark when Papyrus returned. From her position, it was hard to tell if she was breathing or not- though skeletons didn’t need to do it, technically, it was still a reflexive action. One of her hands was hooked on her shirt, clutching at her chest, while the other was dropped at her side.

Bastet's mouth closed as she came to a stop at the doorway to the bathroom, though the panic from Aliquam definitely gave her a start.

His soul twisted in his chest, and Papyrus didn’t recall crossing the distance in the room to reach the tub. "TOKI!" He fell to his knees beside the tub and reached up, cupping her cheeks. "Toki! Oh god please wake up, please wake up!" He pleaded, before one hand moved over her chest to check her soul.

Toki didn’t rouse at his touch, and her skull rolled in his hands as he cradled it. Her bones were hot to the touch, in a way that not even her magic usually made them. Her breath did waft over his hand in small puffs, though they were barely detectable if one wasn’t focused enough to check for them.

The color of her soul was sickly and dim looking, reflecting about how she was feeling. It pulsed shakily in the grasp of his magic, twisting faintly- but it was there, and alive. Her HP wasn’t down though- so there was no damage to her soul or her body. There was no doubt that there was something very, very wrong, but there was no way to tell what was wrong.

“P-ap…?” His name was whispered shakily from between her teeth, and her sockets opened to look at him questioningly, eye lights dim and quivering. The sensation of her sickly soul being pulled forth wasn’t pleasant, and it had roused her.

He was trembling as he held her soul in one hand, her cheek in the other. Tears had welled in his eyes. "Toki... Oh god... I was so worried." He whispered.

Her hand lifted, detangling from her shirt, to brush against his face. She swiped the tears gently from one of his sockets, cradling his cheek. "I was just… resting." She manages to murmur. Toki took a deep breath, and seems to visibly gather herself, before taking note that he has her soul in his hand. Toki shifts in the tub, bones clattering slightly against the porcelain as she tries to sit up. “Pap…? Why were you checking my soul?”

"You... You stopped moving." He whimpered quietly, wiping his eyes, "I-I'm sorry."

Befuddlement flooded her. Her stopping moving didn’t quite equate to her the sort of panic she could see in his eyes. She managed to haul herself upright, trusting him to hold her soul, and shakily cupped his face after wiping her face off on her sleeve. “Love, no, it’s okay. I just don’t understand how that has you so panicked,” she says gently, confusion present in her face as she rubs his cheekbones gently. “Talk to me, Pap- what… what’s got you so upset?”

"I-it was what Caeruleus told me... He... about what he saw happen..." He whispered gently.

“What happened…?” She whispered softly. Her eye lights searched his for a moment, and it took her a few minutes for it to click. “He told you about the attack.” That was the only thing that made sense. With the click of the first light switch, others also connected. “And the only reason you’d be responding like that to me being still… I died…?”

He was so glad she didn’t make him say it... Trembling, he tugged her to his chest and hugged her tightly, letting out a shaking gasp. Tears beaded in his sockets, and rolled down his cheeks.

Being held while half in a tub was awkward, and Toki shifted, nudging the glass of water to the other end so she could properly hold him. Thankfully, he seemed to be holding most of her weight, so she could focus on making her arms work as she coiled them around his neck, tucking his skull against her shoulder. “I’m here now,” She says softly. “I’m here now, and it’s okay. I’m not going anywhere.” She wobbled in his arms though, weakly trembling as she held him tight and comforted him. “I’m not goin’ anywhere again, love.”

"D-Do you promise?” he asked quietly, before he grit his teeth. "N-no... You have to promise me... you'll never... ever go anywhere I cant go with you."

“I… That’s not a realistic promise, love.” She cradled the back of his skull gently, and nuzzled him softly. “After all, you can’t come with me into the women’s restroom, can you?” It was a gentle tease, trying to cheer him up a little bit. She didn’t have to use the bathroom- but the point still stood. “But… How about this.” She leaned him back some, and brought their skulls together. She rested her brow against his, blinking up at him slowly. There was another beading fleck of blood gathering at the edge of her nose, thick and lazily trying to drip again.
“How about this.” She says once more. “I promise… No matter where I go, or what happens, or whatever comes- I will always find my way back to you. I’ll always, always come home- to you, and to our children. I promise you this.”

"H-Heh... I... I guess I can agree to this." He whispered, stroking her head gently. "I love you, Toki... So... so much."

“I love you too. You’re my world, Pap. You and our kids- you’re my whole world, and I’m always going to come home to you.” She leaned into his touch with a wobbly sound, before humming. “Now… I want out of the tub.” She says softly. “It’s not comfortable.” It wasn’t their tub from home- which was comfortable as hell- and she didn’t want to be in it. “I want to lay down with the kids… Mmm…”

He nodded, and cleaned the rag he brought in the first time, wiping her off one last time before he picked her up gingerly. "Come on, then."

Toki urged him to let her soul tuck back into her chest once he’d lifted her, and she didn’t fight him hefting her up. She wasn’t feeling well, and she wasn’t going to try and fight that- but she wanted her children to feel better too, and sometimes they just needed a little bit of care from their parents. With her face cleaned up, Toki simply looked pale and shaky.

Once both parents were in sight, the twins started to fuss in Bastet’s mouth, squirming and prying demandingly at her teeth in an attempt to get down and get to their parents.

“Ma!” Skylar cried, wiggling his fingers for his mother.

"Come on, Bastet, we're putting them to bed." Aliquam told his summon, who rumbled and slowly followed him up the stairs, and into his room.

Once Toki was laid down on the bed and covered up by the blanket, Aliquam went to Bastet and collected the twins from her. "Good girl." He reached up and pet her head in praise, hearing her chirr happily as he set the children with their mother. "You're going to be okay, Toki...” He told her gently as he stroked her head. "I'm going to do some cleaning. Sleep, and I'll have Bastet stay nearby if you need me."

Toki leaned her skull into his touch and nodded, a soft, fevered breath escaping her as she nestled the twins gingerly to her chest. They shivered against her, basking in the heat her body was putting off, and she was careful to make sure that they didn’t get too warm.

She gave him a soft nod, and a lopsided smile. “I’ll be okay… Maybe… maybe call Tenebris too? This isn’t normal, whatever it is…” Her sockets drift closed, and she exhales softly. She lifts her finger to the sky, and a quick tug has one of her smaller bees out with them. It crawls into Papyrus’ shirt, and settles there against his neck, a dormant ball of warmth. “If I need you, I’ll have it buzz.” She says. “It’s easier than trying to communicate verbally sometimes.”

Honey whimpered softly against her, and Toki dropped her hands down to stroke over her horns. She massaged along the bases of the growing prongs, and exhaled roughly. Toki buzzed softly, and the soft sound seemed to help both twins settle better against her, even if it seemed to exhaust her more. The things a mother does for her children.

Aliquam smiled and pet the small ball of fluff, finding comfort in it as he clicked the light off and let his family rest, needing to clean up as he had said to help remove stress.

Though he worried... if Toki was this bad... and if he was right thinking others were going to get Grillby had taken Solstice to visit Fuku- they hadn’t gotten to visit often since Solstice was born, and it was high time that Fuku got to spend time with her little sister. The big fire elemental had been fine with Sans taking some time to go with his brother and his sister-in-law.

Sans had been a mess in the car- Grillby had to talk with him most of the drive up, and it had taken him a while to calm him down and remind him that they- Grillby and Solstice, that was- were alive and well, and that everyone was safe. But, he’d managed to get through to him- but there was no accounting for what Sans had seen when it came to his brother and to Toki.

The skeleton hadn’t wanted to talk about it, and Grillby hadn’t wanted to stress his already fragile mate. That was something he needed to vent to his brother first, he knew- and then, when Sans was feeling stable enough and ready to try and tell him, well, the rather large fire elemental would be there to listen.

Grillby watched his daughters at the bar with a smile on his face, and felt a tickle in his throat. He ignored it at first, sticking with carefully setting down and organizing what luggage they had on them at the time, but the tickle got worse and worse, alongside a less pleasant feeling. Perhaps the stress of the day was getting to him- it wasn’t often one had to pack up, endure a long, stressful car ride, and then tote a baby and multiple suitcases all the way back across the Underground. Grillby was in good shape for his age, but he was still an older monster.

When Solstice sneezed suddenly, a strange tingle crossing her bond with her father, the sound sparked a giggle from Fuku, and Grillby couldn’t help a laugh as well.

The laugh, however, bubbled into a cough- a hacking, horrible wet cough. A wet cough coming from a being made from fire is a horrifying sound to hear. He lifted his arm, tucking his mouth into his palm as he choked and sputtered, flames dimming as he struggled to make the spasm of his insides cease.

Liquid touched his hand, spattering his palm as he coughed.

Across the way, Solstice also began to cough, a stuttering wail of confusion leaving her.

It was hard to see when he drew his hand back at first, but as his flames began to dim, Grillby realized what it was. It was the strange magma like magic that made up his blood- they usually only got to see it when they got scalded.

He choked again, hand clutching the table as his vision swirled behind his glasses.

“Dad? Dad!” Fuku’s voice rose in a panic, and she hopped off the bar, cradling her coughing little sister close to her neck.

Grillby swayed on his feet, but was unable to answer her as he hacked and choked. His flames continued to dim, and the elemental felt them receding back into the dark coal like husk that made up his skin when it was cool.

Seconds into the panic, the door swung open and Cae entered the bar. "GRILLBY!" He cried out as he spotted the big fire monster first. Caeruleus had seen Toki's blood, and all he could think about was his own mate and daughter...

Grillby’s flames were rapidly dampening, like someone had sucked all the air out of the room. Blackened skin flecked with the red glow of his blood as he hacked and coughed. The clatter of the door blew in a gust of air from the outside- and it was enough to blow the last of the flames out.

The big fire monster collapsed, flames lit, but dampened and just barely flitting over dark skin. He hit the ground with a thud, knocking over the table he was leaning on, and sending up a small puff of smoke and charcoal. Without his flames, it was easy to see the small, dark horns perched on top of his head, and the glowing orange fluid bubbling from his mouth and eyes, and staining his hands.

Grillby was very, very still where he lay.

“Sans!” Fuku was torn, panicked as she held her little sister.

Solstice was wailing, though it was petering off rapidly- her flames were going out, no matter what magic Fuku was pumping into her. Her hands fisted along her skull, brushing her tiny horns, before they fell away, going limp at her sides.

“Sans!” The young elemental’s flames jumped high, the green lighting up the room as the blue of Solstice’s flames entirely died out. Her voice took on a shrill tone, as she half expected to suddenly be holding a bundle of dust. Like her father, Solstice simply went quiet- unconscious. “What’s wrong with them?”

"I-I Don’t know!” he choked out as he stumbled closer, immediately going to check on Grillby. "Oh god... oh god... Grillby..." he wiped the fluid away from Grillby's mouth but it smeared as he lacked a cloth, "Oh god..." His soul was racing and tears were blinding him as he tried to hear if Grillby was breathing on not, though unable to due to his panic. "F-Fuku... Help me." He pleaded from where he sat.

The younger elemental wasn’t much better, but she managed to come closer, cradling the limp infant in her arms with terror in her soul. She eased down next to Sans, and settled her hand in front of her father’s mouth.

Over the wet rasp of the blood still bubbling out, his breath could be felt. “He’s alive,” she manages to say. She rests her hand on his head and grunts, washing magic into her father’s frame. “C’mon, Daddy, c’mon, open your eyes…”

It brushes against his own, stirring the flames briefly along his head and horns for just a moment, before they’re gone again, not returning no matter how much she pours magic into him. He doesn’t stir, or make a sound, except the low gurgling of labored breathing.

“We need a doctor. He’s not responding to my magic. N-Neither is Solstice…” She cradles the flame-less skeleton infant in her arms, and looks lost. Fuku was young- she hadn’t been able to go to the surface because she couldn’t handle the rain of waterfall even- and this… was a lot to handle. “We need a d-doctor for Daddy and Sol…”

Cae had to think. He had to clear his mind.

He grit his teeth, and then took a deep, shaky breath to focus. "We gotta clear his airway..." he started, getting up to get a clean rag from behind the counter. He’d get Grillby to forgive him later, but if he was going to go try and get his dad... He knelt down and carefully pulled Grillby to be sitting up slightly, allowing him to wipe his mouth, "'nd... I need to go get Dad..."

Fuku helped as best she could, but she didn’t want to just set down the baby in her arms. Solstice had silent against Fuku, but she could feel the baby breathing against her. She kept her larger father propped up for Cae, and slid a chair over to keep him upright.

“I don’t understand what’s wrong,” She whispers. “He was just fine- so was Solstice. Solstice was giggling for me, and then she sneezed- and we all laughed, and then he started coughing and…” She adjusted the big infant in her arms, and looked at Sans. “If… if it’s something from escaping the attack, then how come you’re not sick too? Is… Is anyone else sick? Or… Or is he… Is he falling?”

She didn’t want to think about her dad falling. She didn’t want to ever entertain that idea- but it was a logical option. Except… falling was usually a lot less violent than that. At least, according to the books.

“Go get Mister Gaster. I’ll watch Daddy and Sol.” She glanced down at the baby, and her flames flickered. “Shit. Hurry. She’s bleeding.” She dabbled at the little line of blue magic trailing down from Sans’ daughter’s nasal cavity, swiping it away with her sleeve. It came trickling back down again, and she simply kept her sleeve there to keep it from dripping down onto the infants clothes.

"I..." he grit his teeth and gave Fuku a gentle hug, "Make sure they keep breathing, I’ll be right back." he told her, pressing his teeth to her forehead before he teleported through the Underground to the castle

"Asgore! Pops!" he called.

Most of the castle was empty- but there seemed to be a buzz of activity in the medical wing. There were healers rushing in and out, medical staff rushing in and out of several rooms.

Several monsters were sitting in beds, bleeding from their eyes, noses, mouths, or coughing up great swaths of blood into hospital pans. Most of them seemed to remain conscious, however, save a few which were unconscious and rapidly being hooked up to monitors.

As Cae worked his way into the buzzing area of activity, he would bypass a room with a familiar red fox in it- who was hunched in a chair between two beds. Todd wasn’t harmed- he hadn’t been at the compound during the attack. But he was clutching his children’s hands like they were his lifelines, and trembling ever so slightly. He wasn’t rushing around with the rest of the healers and doctors staff- but for good reason.

Rosie and Felix weren’t moving, and blood flecked their lips as they breathed shakily into the ventilators the healers had gotten set up for them.

Toriel could be seen rushing in and out of rooms, her clothes billowing as she picked up slack where she could. Healing didn’t seem to be working- magic wasn’t doing anything, and the monsters were freaking out.

Asgore stood outside one such room, his white fur and clothing stained in a familiar black liquid. Thumper was at his side, clutching tightly to a black stained hand as they looked in at the limp figure unconscious in the cot of the medical wing. Frisk was with Thumper, holding the child’s hand tightly and offering the trembling boy what comfort they could.

Frisk seemed calm about the whole thing, despite the chaos going on around them.

Asgore turned his gaze to the shorter skeleton when Caeruleus came into his view. “Sans,” he breathed. “I don’t… I don’t know what’s wrong… Tenebris- he just started to cough, and there was blood coming from his eyes and his mouth- and he collapsed. He’s not… He’s not responding…”

Cae could feel himself losing faith. "O-Oh no... D-Dad too...?" Standing before Asgore with such dire news being given to him... But he swallowed hard. He had something he had to tell them, and he wasn’t going to leave until he did. He took a deep breath to focus himself mentally, before he spoke, "G-Grillby... a-and Sol... And Toki..." he started shakily, "I need a doctor... they need help... But... How many are there?" he asked.

“We... We don’t know.” Asgore answered shakily. He lifted his free hand to rest it on Cae’s shoulder, but thought better of it. It was coated in black- and the red staining Sans’ hands wasn’t good either. “If it’s them too, it’s not just located here. So far it seems to just be certain monsters who came from the city- it’s not everyone.”

“My King!” There was a small rabbit monster who flitted up stopping long enough to give the both of them news. “We’ve gotten calls from the three city district clinics- they’re overflowing with monsters displaying the same symptoms as everyone else- fever, bleeding of the eyes, ears, nose, mouth, and or coughing up blood. Some of them are unconscious, but those seem to be very few and far between. All of the afflicted are refugees from Nara Village, Sire. None of them are responding to medical treatment- we have no idea what’s wrong, or how to treat them. They’ve run out of room at the clinics, so most of the monsters are staying in their homes- they’ve got friends and relatives caring for them as best we can, but we’ve got at least six hundred confirmed cases- possibly more coming in.”

“I see... Once everything is stabilized here, send out as many doctors as we can spare to go check over everyone down in the city districts.” The king’s order was weary- he wasn’t sure what good it would do, but he had to try.

“Of course, Sire.” The rabbit nodded, and hopped off to resume tending to patients.

Asgore’s frown grew, and he glanced down to Sans, completely lost. “… Bring Toki, Grillby, and Solstice here,” he says. “We will try to provide the best care that we can... and just... hope for the best, and try to keep them comfortable for... whatever may come.”

“They’ll be okay.” Frisk says softly, patting Thumper’s shoulder gently and glancing at them. They used their actual voice- their hands were busy consoling the terrified child clinging to the King- so it was guaranteed to draw attention to them. They did not speak often. “It will pass in a few days.”

"Kid..." he looked at Frisk with a sunken look, but he nodded, "O-Of course..." He looked at Tenebris, who's breathing was the loudest thing there when all was silent, and he slowly came closer, reaching out and setting a hand on his father's head. Tenebris didn't twitch, "... Damn it Pops..." He hissed weakly, before he sighed, and let him rest as he looked at Frisk. "Kid... You can help us, right? You'd know more than any of us know about what's happening..."

Frisk bit their lip, but nodded. They ushered everyone inside of Tenebris’ room- it wasn’t common knowledge about the resets, and they didn’t want it known to the general populace, even if the doctors seemed too busy to really care.

Once Frisk shut the door, isolating everyone inside of Tenebris’ room, they turned back to Sans, Asgore, and Thumper. For the sake of the fact that Thumper likely didn’t speak sign language, they continued to speak. “It doesn’t have a name,” They said, “not one that I know of, but for the sake of ease, lets just... call it Deaths Rebound.”

They walk closer to Tenebris, and reach out a hand to swipe away a dribbling tear of blood as it trails from one of his closed eyes. “It happens when I load, and someone dies, or is in the process of dying.
It doesn’t when there’s a reset- I don’t know why. I haven’t loaded after a bad attack in this timeline before… I didn’t know it could effect others.” They say. “It is… probably something to do with the body’s response to having died in another ‘world’ so to speak, before being brought back. I don’t really know.” They shrug. “The more you die and get loaded back, the less it effects you. It no longer bothers me."

They had died a lot though- but there were monsters out there that hadn’t ever died, and some that had on more than one occasion. The ones that were evacuated during the bad runs- or the ones that they hadn’t gotten to on the bad runs- they were the ones unconscious. There were several who hadn’t to deal with the deaths and loads before- and several that had. The ones less effected were the ones, Frisk mused, that had been through the death-loads more than once.

“Though…” They muse, “I never fell unconscious when it first happened. But I was very sick, for several, several days.” They had holed up in the Snowdin forest after they’d died and loaded the first time, before ever meeting Sans. “Monsters are a lot more fragile than humans are. Though… Rosie and Felix are both unconscious too… Is Toki unconscious? Remaining conscious might be a boss heart thing, if she is.”

The little Determination boss heart fixated their eyes onto Sans, and tilted their head, waiting for his answer.

Neither Asgore nor Thumper really knew what to say, and so they say quietly and listened. Asgore knew about the loads and resets- but to hear Frisk talk about it so… easily… It was disconcerting. And the fact that they had died before…

He frowned, and turned that thought away for later debating, turning his attention to Sans.

"Grillby never died... Pops only just got out of the void... A lot of the civilians were refugees." Cae murmured quietly, before he sighed, "I don’t know about Toki. As soon as I saw her bleeding, I went to see if Grillby was okay..."

Frisk nods. “We may want to call.” They say. “See if she is conscious. Just for curiosity’s sake.” They shrug lightly, and rub their fingers gently over Tenebris’ forehead. “They’re going to be very sick for a couple days. Fever, bleeding- some might even vomit blood, or just vomit if the discomfort makes them sick, if that’s how their bodies work. I did it once- that wasn’t fun.” They make a face, and shudder. “But they’ll get better. For the ones that are the sickest, taking them to waterfall might be best. The water helps- I soaked in it for a little bit, and whatever makes it glow helped me feel better quicker. Though, uh… Not for Grillby and Solstice. Fire and all that.”

Frisk had died a lot trying to escape Undyne the first time. They had died a lot. They’d gotten very, very sick from the buildup of all of that death energy, and had spent several days vomiting blood, and trying to survive it.

They shiver at the memory, and glance up to Sans. “We’re just going to have to ride this out. Three days at least, a week at most. You’re going to have to figure out how to feed Solstice though. We need to keep them fed and warm and safe. It will pass. I promise.”

He nodded slowly, "Thanks, Kid..." he murmured quietly, taking a deep breath before straightened up to leave. "I should go get them here now." He told them, looking to Asgore. "Can you see where an open room is?" He asked, "Or is there enough room here in this room?"

“I can have a bed brought in, if you can give us ten minutes before you bring them in.” Asgore nods, and rubs Thumper’s head gently. “And a cradle for Solstice. Though we will likely need another room if Papyrus brings Toki. Speaking of- call your brother. Let him know that Toki will be “Alright, and see if he wants to bring her here.”

Frisk makes a face. “And check on him too. If he died in the last load, or was in the process of dying, he might be sick or slightly sick. I loaded while in the middle of dying, and I ended up feverish and achy.” They cross their arms, and nod to him.

He nodded gently and pulled out his phone, giving his brother a call.

Aliquam was breathing quietly as he lay on the couch, his body feeling sore and not really wanting to move... but as his phone began to go off, he reluctantly reached out and picked up his phone.

“Nnh... Hello?”

“Pap... Hey...”

Papyrus straightened as he picked up his brother’s voice, forcing himself to sit up in case Caeruleus popped in. He’d only laid down for a moment- he’d been cleaning and working off his fretting, but eventually that kind of wore down into an unpleasant ache that he was sure was just sympathy pains for his mate and children- but it apparently it was enough for him to feel like he’d gotten stuck on the couch.

“Sans?” The stress isn’t fully out of his voice, and he takes a moment to clear his nonexistent throat. “Caeruleus, is everything alright? You left very quickly.”

"It's not as good as I want it to be, but look, how is Toki? Is she okay?"

“No, she’s not.” Aliquam swallowed slightly. “She’s up in my room with the twins. The twins have fevers- they’re sick too. Not bleeding, thank the stars, but... Toki was coughing blood, and bleeding from her sockets and nasal cavity. I just got it to stop not too long ago, but... She’s really weak.” The younger brother gave a shaky chuckle. “She passed out in the tub, and I, ah, thought for a second that she had... She wasn’t moving, brother, and she was hardly breathing. Does... Does Father know what’s causing this?”

"Pops couldn't tell me anything even if he did know... It... It got him too, Pap... Grillby and Solstice too... but the kid knew what it was... It's happening because of the load. It's affecting everyone who died. Or came close to dying."

Papyrus grimaced. “Father…” He sighed. “Grillby and Solstice too? Crap. Alright... Frisk knew? Is... Is it going to get better?”

“Yes... but only with time... we can only take care of them while they recover... Your kids... they’re gonna be just fine for sure, it's residual at best, but I just gotta...” Cae's voice cracked slightly. "Find a way to help keep Solstice lit..."

“Do you want to bring them here?” He shifted to haul himself off the couch, his joints aching. “I can get your room prepared for them- your old bed should fit Grillby. We can... We can take care of them. I know Asgore will be tending to Father. Unless you’re taking them to the castle?” Part of him hesitated, and he glanced up to the door to his room.

He could hear Toki coughing inside, and feel the faint buzz from the twins as it disturbed them. Papyrus made a faintly stressed sound, and went to collect a cloth from the bathroom again- if she was coughing, she’d probably started to bleed again. “Should I bring Toki and the twins?”
"We're going to move them to the castle. Get Toki and the kids too. I’ll be down there in less than an hour."

Papyrus swallowed and nodded. “Alright. I’m going to leave the Summons here- we’ll need to come back from time to time to check on them, but we can’t keep an eye on them around so many sick monsters. Where do you want me to meet you?”

“The bar.”

“All right. We’ll be there, brother.” He tucked the cloth into his pocket, and then began to move his way up towards the bedroom to get them ready. “I’ll see you shortly.”

"See you soon..." Sans murmured, before he hung up. He glanced to Asgore. "I'm going to go get Grillby and Solstice ready. I’ll be back with everyone."

“All right.” Asgore nodded. “I’ll go get another room ready for Toki and Papyrus.” The king hefted Thumper gently up into his arms, and Frisk as well, and nodded to Sans. “Get them here safe, and take your time. We’ll have a bed put in here for Grillby, and a crib for Solstice- and cribs for the twins as well. We’ll see you shortly, Sans.”

"Thank you, Asgore." He looked at him, and then teleported from the room to return to Snowdin.

Fuku was waiting for the skeleton in the bar where she had been before, with her Father braced on her legs, and her little sister limp in her arms. She rubbed her limbs gently, listening to the wheezing breaths of the sickly baby, and the deep gurgling coming from her dampened father.

When Cae popped up at the door, the relief on her face was obvious. “Oh thank the stars- did you bring a doctor? They haven’t gotten any worse, but they’re not any better.”

"We're taking them to the Castle, Fu." He told her as he came closer, kneeling down to look Grillby over. "I know what's wrong with them now, and it's nothing we can cure. We just need to sit through it and wait it out. But things will be okay." He assured her, "They're going to live as long as we stay and help them through it."

Fuku nodded hesitantly, and her flames flickered slightly. “Alright… I’ll close down the bar,” She said. “I’m not going to be much help, but... I don’t know. He’s my dad, and she’s my little sister- I’ll try to do what I can.” Right now, she was keeping the babybones warm in her arms.

Grillby was much the same, breathing ragged as Cae checked him over.

It wasn’t long before the door to the bar was opening, Toki pushing it open with a shaky hand for Bastet to walk though first, while Papyrus carried her. He hadn’t wanted to risk her carrying and dropping the twins, if she got too dizzy or lost consciousness again- so Bastet was on baby carrying duty, while Stag was staying behind to watch the cats and the baby summons.

She had a green stained towel pressed to her mouth, and looked worse for the wear.

"My god... Tokes." Cae murmured, before he scooped up his mate. It was a bit of an armful, given their height difference, but he did his best.

Grillby was limp, but he wasn’t exactly unconscious to complain.
Toki coughs again, a nasty, wet sound, and manages to catch it on the towel instead of her sleeve. “Oh dear… Little Sol,” she spots the flameless lump in Fuku’s arms, and grinds her teeth slightly. Grillby was positively frightening to look at - sort of like a solid lump of magma that had gone cold, though stained with still drizzling bits of his magmatic blood. “We- hah- we teleporting? Can… Can you both manage that distance with so many of us?”

"If Pap helps me out, we can." Cae nodded, bringing his mate over to his brother and half setting Grillby down to touch his arm.

"You can count on me, Sans. Just tell me when." Quinn replied.

"On three." The brothers looked to their company to make sure they were ready. Bastet nuzzled close, ready to go.

Fuku approached as well, and looped her hand tightly around Papyrus’ arm. She let her legs brush against the skull beast holding the twins, and grimaced to herself, hoping everything would be alright.

Toki stretched her free hand out and fist it in Cae’s jacket, taking a firm hold of his arm and completing the connection. “If you need to make several smaller jumps,” She rasps, “Go for it.”

He smiled and shook his head, "With Pap, I wont need to." He then leaned his head on his brother's chest, the other resting his head in turn.

"One... Two... Three!"

A surge of power came from them both, and in a matter of seconds they were standing in the castle hallway.

Slowly, Cae pulled away, before he blinked, smiling, "It worked... heh... holy shit it worked..."

Fuku stumbled away from them, keeping a firm grip on Solstice, but looking several shades paler than she did before. She looked vaguely ill. "That… that was the worst sensation I have ever felt. Teleportation sucks.” She informs them shakily.

Toki chokes, and manages to lean out of Quinn’s arms far enough to retch without getting it on either of them. Her middle heaves, and she chokes, spitting up magic from their meal they’d had at breakfast that morning, and the water that Papyrus had her drink earlier. It would appear that her body wasn’t quite in the condition for teleporting- and the disorienting feeling that came with it had her nonexistent stomach rebelling. “Nnnnn…”

“Oh dear…” The hall was still buzzing with activity, but not nearly as much- doctors were moving to other halls, now that this one was ‘full’. The room right across the hall from Tenebris’ was open, and Asgore stood at the junction between the two, waiting for them. He was alone this time, Frisk and Thumper having been sent to his home to relax while they got everyone in. The king was quick to get a sick pan, and carefully tucked it under Toki’s chin.

Though it seemed Toki wasn’t the only one feeling out of it. Aliquam stumbled to lean against Asgore and let out a loud, sickly groan as he winced.

The noise immediately got Cae's attention, "Pap! You okay, bro?" he asked worriedly.

Aliquam grit his teeth for a moment, and then he pulled away from Asgore and huffed. "I-I'm fine. Lets just get everyone to bed."
The groan definitely caught Toki’s notice too, but there wasn’t much she could do, since she was in his arms. Her fingers shook as they hooked on his arm, and she trembled against him faintly, supporting the sick bin under her chin as she tried not to be ill once more.

Asgore sighed, and gently hooked a hand behind Papyrus’ shoulders, guiding him around the puddle of purged magic and towards the open room. “Go lay your mate down- and lay down with her, for stars sake, once you get your children settled into their cradles. Your bones are warm to the touch, Papyrus. I got an extra wide cot put in this room for a reason.”

The twins were mostly asleep, but starting to stir against the new sounds of the medical ward around them.

"Th-thank you, your majesty." He wanted to try and last for the sake of everyone, but it was a battle he was losing.

He made his way to the bed with his wife, laying her down gently before bringing over Bastet. He'd had her summoned for a while now, and it was draining on him. "Nnnh. Bastet, it's time to rest.”

Bastet opened her mouth for him, and he was able to transfer the twins to the large cradle, laying them down before a final pet of praise sent her home. Aliquam covered them both, and then laid down with Toki, smiling at her shakily.

Toki had abandoned the sick bin, and mopped up her face as best she could. She wheezed faintly as she shifted on the bed, rolling over to face her husband. She lifted her hand, and caressed his cheek, giving him a shaky smile in return. “You’re sick too,” She rasps softly. “Why didn’t you say anything…?”

He looked at her, and then closed his eyes. "I must be strong for you..." He murmured, "I cannot let myself become ill when I must watch over you.”

““We look after each other,” she rasps gently, stroking his cheekbones gently. As his sockets close, she rubs over them, massaging with shaky hands. She pauses to lean back, however, and fishes another rag out of her pockets, dabbling at her socket when she feels more magic begin to dribble down. “In sickness and in health, even if those weren’t our vows.” She coughs again, a nasty wet sound, and covers it with the cloth. “Hah… We… we all need rest.”

Fuku took Solstice and went into the room with Tenebris, having spotted the crib for the baby. She got the baby settled down gently, and then went to help Sans get Grillby into the room.

Cae was tired, and relieved when his mate was laid down on the bed. He couldn't cover him, but sat beside him, stroking his head with a soft sound of worry, "Oh Grillbz..." he murmured.

Fuku gently stroked a hand over her father’s hand, stroking the blackened flesh with her fingertips. “He’ll be okay.” She says softly. “His flames need to stoke back up- so he needs to be able to breathe. Help me get him out of his shirt.” Her hands came to the buttons on his vest, and started to undo them. His pants would stay on- but his shirt could come off for the time being.

He nodded in agreement and reached out to undo his shirt. "I've never seen him like this. He's always been the one that survives..." he spoke quietly.

Grillby without his flames was an odd sight. The roping muscles were more visible- but so were the thick scars that were usually hidden by fire. His skin cracked and flexed as he breathed, the additional air stoking his flames just enough that the light peeking through the cracks in his skin brightened just a hair. He still didn’t rouse- but it was a minor improvement.

“I don’t know what that means.” Fuku says gently once they eased him out of his shirt. She doesn’t touch his pants, but she doesn’t cover him up. “But… Daddy’s a survivor. He survived when… When mom got dusted. He’ll be okay.” She sniffs quietly, and pats his chest gently. Then she moves over to Solstice, and scoops up the limp infant, doing the same thing to her. She stripped her bare though, and then lifted her up, brushing her magic over her with a sharp snap.

Solstice lit up once more, but her flames were low, just barely flickering over her bones. “There we go,” Fuku whispers. “Her flames are going again. We’re… going to need to figure out how to feed her… Baby flame elementals need food regularly to keep up their flames.”

"I can share my soul with her, she'll absorb soul aura if I feed her that way.” Cae murmured, stroking Grillby's jaw while examining him over another time, "Thank you, Fuku... For being so brave... I'm proud of you, kid.” he smiled up at her.

“That’ll do then.” She nodded. She brought the baby over, and glanced to him, before offering the bare naked baby out to her mother. “Here- I’m sure you want to hold her. It’s… It’s been a long day. And… Thank you, Sans. I’m not… I’m not brave. But I tried to be- because I needed to be.”

Asgore poked his head in, and peered at them quietly. “Fuku,” he said softly, “I’ve got a room prepared for you at the guest quarters of the castle, if you would like. The hospital room can only hold so many…”

“Ah, yes, please, Sire.” She nodded, dipping her head, and glancing to Sans. “You’ll be staying here?”

He nodded, taking Sol gently before he smiled to the green elemental. "Yeah, I’ll stay here... but Fuku... Don’t lie to yourself like that. You're a very brave young woman. And if I may go so far as to say this... I’m proud to call you my daughter." He told her, cradling Sol in one arm while the other extended for a hug with the young woman.

Fuku stepped around the bed to meet his hug, and tightened her arms around the taller man with a quiet sniffle. “Th-thanks,” She manages, “I wouldn’t mind if you wanted to call me your daughter. Heh…” She gives him a shaky smile, and then gently steps back and scrubs at her face. “I’ll be back to bring you guys something to eat later, okay?”

"Thanks kiddo." He kissed her head gently as he gave her a squeeze, and as she pulled away, he sat down, cradling Solstice close as he stroked her head. "I'll be here with the old men." He snorted gently.

“Alright.” Fuku gave him a smile, and patted his skull fondly, before scooting out the door.

Asgore gave her a bemused look, and then glanced to Sans as he skirted over to check on his lover. Tenebris was still unconscious- and he had to wonder when he would come around. “Old men, hm?” He rumbled teasingly to the smaller skeleton.

"You guys have at least a few hundred years on me, Asgore." He stuck his tongue out at him with a cheeky grin. "But you know I appreciate all three of you anyways, heh heh heh." Asgore chuckled gently, and quirked a soft grin at the small skeleton. “A few hundred years is generous, Sans, truly. I think I’m closer to several hundred years on you by now. But we appreciate you too, my boy.” The king stroked a hand over Tenebris head gently, and then exhaled with a warm sigh.

He chuckled, and then sighed and looked at Tenebris.

The older beast's breathing was still a little ragged, but it wasn't nearly as bad as before, the bleeding had definitely slowed, though another thought came to him as he watched his dad. "Pops might end up melting again if he can't keep anything down enough to take his pills." He mentioned.

"He took his pills this morning," The king mentioned with a sigh, "I was on the phone with him when he did. So… With any luck, he'll be awake tomorrow to take them. We'll see how he feels then." One of the king’s ears twitched, and he tilted his head, glancing across the way as he watched Toki squirm up and away from Papyrus, hunching over the side of the bed to retch into the sick bin she had previously discarded. The king grimaced. “Let’s hope he can keep stuff down. Having multiple monsters puking isn’t a fun process.”

He nodded in agreement, before he sighed and nuzzled Sol, letting his soul free to help feed her. "My poor baby girl." He murmured.

Asgore politely turned around to let him tend to his child, and sighed softly. “I’m going to go check on Papyrus and Toki while you tend to your daughter.” He hums, “And see if they need any help. I’ll be just across the hall if you need me, alright?”

"Thanks, Asgore." he purred, holding Solstice a little closer, relaxing to do as he said he would.

The kind king nodded, and stepped across the hall. He poked his head gingerly into their room, and winced quietly as he took in the sights.

Toki looked like a mess, to be frank- she had trails of blood dripping from her sockets again, and was leaning over the edge of the bed shakily, trying to keep as quiet as she could so she didn’t disturb the twins still sleeping in their cradle as she choked and spewed.

“Do you need anything, Papyrus?” The king inquired gently to the one who wasn’t occupied by vacating magic violently out of her mouth.

"Just some wet rags to take care of Toki." he replied, smiling to Toki as he rubbed her back. "Thank you anyways."

"I'll get some wet rags, and some water." The king nodded. He headed off down the hall with quick steps to go fetch the items he promised.

Toki sputtered again, spitting to clear her mouth, and leaned her back gently into his hand. "Hhhhh... Thanks, Quinn. Mmm..."

When Asgore returned, he brought with him several damp rags, and a few bottles of water for them to sip at. He brought them to the side of the bed where Papyrus was, and slid over a side table for him. "Here, son. Here's the rags, and some water to rinse your mouths out and stay hydrated. We might not be creatures made of genetic molecules like humans, but monsters need water too. Particularly fevered monsters.”

"Thank you, Asgore. I appreciate your help.” He purred gently.

The king chuckled gently, and patted Papyrus' shoulder. "I get the feeling that I'm going to be doing a lot of it, if you're sick too."

Toki coughed and spat, and leaned back, opening her mouth so she could try and scrub her teeth clean with the dirtied cloth. "I'm so tired of bleeding," she rasped gently. Fuck the bleeding, and fuck the nausea lingering from teleporting. "H-how are you doing, Pap?"

"My condition is of far less concern." He answered. "I'm spending more energy worrying about you, you need attention more than I do."

Asgore was kind enough to pass over one of the wet rags when Toki motioned for one.

The dirtied cloth just wasn’t cutting it. The new clean cloth, however, helped her clean up her mouth and face, and let the trembling skeleton collapse back against her husband with a rattling breath. She turned carefully over in his arms so she could face him, and then kicked him in the shin. Given that it felt more like a nudge than a kick proved just how weak her limbs were. “Far less concern my ass,” she grumbles. “Just because I’m sick doesn’t mean I’m not worrying,” She says. “So don’t try to push too hard for me, okay? The twins are an acceptable reason to push yourself.” She was not. Toki neatly tucked one of the rags under her head, to keep any leaking magic from running down and staining the bed, and then nestled against her husband. Fever hot limbs curled around him, and she buried herself in his scent, letting it wash over her as she kept part of her senses carefully on the twins.

"Ow." He chuckled weakly, pressing his forehead against hers before he wrapped his arms around her, cradling her torso in his arms. "I'm fine, and as long as I'm here, you, Skylar, and our little Honey are going to be too." He told her gently, stroking her skull with tenderness to match.

Toki nuzzles her forehead to his, the fevered bones feeling hot against his own. He might have a temperature, but it wasn’t quite as hot as hers- his bones felt almost cold compared to hers. “I worry too,” She murmurs softly to him, leaning into his touches with a soft sound. Her sockets half lid, dim eye lights flickering weakly in their depths as she focuses on just how nice it feels to have his bare fingers stroking over her skull and around her horns. “Mmm… If they start to fuss, you can bring them here,” She says, “and we can all four rest together. They’re asleep now though…” They’d settled down once they’d been tucked in and close to one another.

Sickly feeling babies slept well. “I just don’t understand why they’re sick too, or why you are.” She sniffs quietly, and muses that her nose wasn’t bleeding anymore at the moment.

“It’s called Death’s Rebound,” Asgore says softly from where he lingered in the doorway. “Frisk said it… happens to those who died, or were in the process of dying, when a load happened. It’s possible that Papyrus and the twins were on their way towards deaths door when the load came.”

"Caeruleus told me what happened… After you were… killed… I fell… and the children were suffering when we were both lost…” Aliquam murmured, not wanting to reminisce in the memory of what Cae had told him.

“That would do it.” Asgore nods. “They are young enough yet that they were likely falling as well- children do not do well losing one or both parents when they are at this young of an age.” The king sighs gently.

Toki nuzzled her face to his with a soft sound. “It doesn’t matter now.” She says. “We’re alive… Sick, but alive. We’ll… We’ll get better.” There is firmness to her tone, despite the weakness in her body and words. “I know it.”

“You will.” Asgore nods. He tips his head, and steps back for the door. “I’ll let you both rest. If you need anything, just call- either I or I imagine Sans will be able to hear too.”

"Of course, Sir… Thank you." Aliquam thanked him, before he closed his eyes and pulled Toki a
When the king left, Toki nestled closer to him, and wedged a leg gently between his so she was more thoroughly entwined with him. She rubbed one of her hands gently along his ribs, seeking to help him relax as best she could. “Get some rest, my love,” She says softly. “We’re not going to be going anywhere for a while…” She murmurs.

He nodded slowly, smiling as he gave her a tender kiss. "I love you... I love you so... so much."

“I love you too, Pap.” She returned his kiss gently, teeth flexing gingerly against his, and she gave him a tired look. “I’m sorry I scared you earlier…”

"You? Scare me? Pfft." he chuckled quietly, shaking his head, "No, you didn't scare me."

“You cried.” She said simply, keeping her voice down so others didn’t hear, and stroked his cheek. “Me passing out in the tub terrified you enough that you cried, Pap. I think that counts as scaring you.” Toki tuned her head to the cloth and coughed for a moment, before nestling back against him with a soft sigh. “Didn’t mean to scare you…”

He chuckled shakily, and then he sighed and kissed her gently. "You're forgiven. But don't you go doing it again. I don't know if I can handle that kind of scare again." He teased gently.

“I'll try not t' do it again, my love.” She smiles softly, and nuzzles him. “Mm... Now, are you going to panic if I try to get some sleep...?” She inquires lightly.

"Only if you don't wake up again." He chuckled seriously as he kissed her.

She kissed him back gently, and settled in close to him. She got as close as she could with her chest blocking the way, and settled down to rest. “If it makes you feel better, you can wake me every hour to check?”

"I wont fully wake you." He purred. "But at least I'll watch you stir enough to respond." He murmured. His arms slid gingerly around her, and he cradled her close, palm settling in the small of her lower back.

“Okay.” She nods softly. “I can work with that.” Toki exhales softly, and closes her eyes.

It’s almost scary how fast she drops off to sleep, her breath puffing faintly over his face as she rests.

The breathing made him content, and he smiled, closing his eyes as he nuzzled her, before he settled down to rest as well with her nestled safely in his arms.
The first day was rough. The monsters that were unconscious didn’t wake up for the entirety of the first twenty-four hours since they had gone down- and those who were sick were horribly sick. Toki spent the first day alternating between bleeding on and off, and being unable to keep anything down, sleeping in small bursts and waking up with cold chills and shakes to tend to their children and feed them as best she could.

Honey struggled to keep things down too- she would eat, and end up sick, and then would cry, which would set off Skylar.

Needless to say the first day was rough- Toki did her best to tend to her children as best she could, but there was a lot of messes that were cleaned up, and a lot of crying from the twins.

Thankfully, the medics rolled in old televisions for them to watch TV as best that they could, so that helped pass the waking moments a little easier for everyone.

News came in over the television as well. The firefighters had managed to stop the fire before it turned into a wildfire- but the compound, and all of Nara village were in cinders. Only the brick and cement foundations of Toki’s house had remained in the footage that had been shown- or a little of it did. It was collapsed, where presumably a bomb had been dropped on it.

The pilots hadn’t been caught- but the planes had been found landed and abandoned, and were being investigated.

The entire world was in a state of shock at the violence- and the people were rising up, demanding the governments step up and actually do something.

They would have to see what would come though- everyone was still reeling over the attack, and the decimation of a village that was nearly two years in the making.

On the second day, those who were unconscious began to stir, and those who were ill were beginning to bleed in less often spurts. Temperatures were still high though, but it was hopeful that food might be able to be kept down most times. However, body aches were a thing- painful, painful body aches. Touch was unpleasant, along with the weight of their own bodies, let alone trying to walk.

Solstice was one of the first of the unconscious ones from their group to stir, waking with a weak coo against Cae’s chest. Her flames were still flickering lowly, thanks to Fuku relighting her- but they were flickering, and she was awake.

The second to stir had been Grillby, the big fire monster inhaling with a deep sound and feeding the smoldering embers of his fires. The exhale had been a wet cough, prompting the fire monster to roll onto his side and vomit a wave of magma over the side of the bed- but he was awake, and very weak. The black color of his skin brightened to an orange-brown color as his fires tried to rekindle and heat him back up to the temperature he should be- but it was a slow process, and he couldn’t heat fast enough.

The last to stir was Tenebris. The older doctor had woken a fair bit more peacefully than he had gone down, but he was shaky and weak, and still bleeding from his eyes from time to time.

It was good though, that everyone was up.

Frisk certainly seemed chipper about it, even if everyone felt like shit the second day around. ‘I told you that they’d start improving.’ They spoke with their hands again, the medical ward quiet with monsters resting in their private rooms. The only rooms with their doors open were the Gaster and Fyrus rooms, so it wasn’t that hard for Frisk to be ‘understood’, even if Toki couldn’t really see from her hospital bed.

The shortest skeleton had wanted to cross the hall and visit Tenebris, Grillby, and Solstice, but her body ached too badly for her to put weight on her limbs. She had tried getting out of bed while Papyrus had been resting with the twins, but pain had shot up her joints, and she’d collapsed onto the floor, and scared the bajeesus out of practically everyone.

She’d been banned from moving on her own- as had any other monster, as the medical staff learned from her mistake.

Frisk glanced to Cae and tilted their head. ‘A trip to Waterfall still wouldn’t go amiss- though it wont help Grillby and Solstice. Might help with the aches Toki, Tenebris, Papyrus, and the twins have.’

Cae seemed reluctant to leave his mate and child, but if it meant helping everyone else, he could make a second trip with the others to Hotland for a lava-pool bath later on.

"Yeah... sounds like a plan. I'll go get them, then." He murmured, before he looked to Frisk and smiled, "Kid, thanks a lot for telling me what was going on. I was scared I was gonna lose everyone regardless of what we did." He chuckled, patting the young adult's shoulder before going to get Aliquam and Toki.

Frisk gave him a salute, and went to keep an eye on Solstice and Grillby for him while he was playing bus boy.

Toki was settled on her side in her and Quinn’s room, trying to keep from moving, because moving hurt no matter what she did. She had Skylar nestled at her hip, with the achy baby leaning on her and trying to relax as best he could. Quinn wasn’t in the room- he was down the hall, getting a new bucket and fresh towels for their room.

Honey was crawling around at Toki’s feet, and chasing a little bee that Toki had summoned to keep her entertained. The aches bothered the little girl too, but she was also bored- and a bored Honey was Toki stirred as Cae popped into the room, wincing as she lifted her head. “Sans? How’s Grillby, Sol, and Papa doing?”

”Awake.” He said. “But Frisk had an idea that I think would help you and everyone else here out. The glowing pools in Waterfall are medicinal in their own special way, and Frisk got me thinkin’ that it’d help you guys loosen up a bit, stop feelin’ so sore.”

“Mmm, maybe?” Toki shifted some on the bed, a pained sound leaving her as her body wanted to refuse to twist. Skylar made a concerned noise, and then whimpered when he turned to look at her. She strove through the pain, to rub a hand down his skull and soothe him. “I’m not going to turn it down if it’ll help. But, uh, I can’t walk, and Pap’s achy too.” Her husband could move- but she didn’t want him trying to carry her, and the twins, all at the same time. “H-hah… What about Grillby and Solstice? They can’t go into water…”

“They’re going to the lava pools after you guys are returned here, safe and sound.” He explained. Toki wasn’t sure how magma would work with the little skelemental, but she supposed Solstice would likely be all right with just being around the heat. Toki shakily nodded. “Okay. Hah… Should probably get us there first- I can heat up one of the pools with my magic, so Papa doesn’t get cold.” She did recall that waterfall water was very, very cold, even if it did have it’s own healing properties to it. “Mm… You should be okay to take them there while we relax in the water. No need to make them wait. We do have cell phones. Though… Hotland would probably melt those.” A quick flex of her magic, and Toki sent a hornet to snuggle into Cae’s jacket. “There… If you need me, the bee can contact me, and if we need you, it’ll buzz at you. Hotland wont hurt it either.”

He reached out and rubbed his fingers lightly over the hornet, and then he smiled. "Let's focus on getting you to waterfall first.” He chuckled. "Hunts can carry you if you can't carry yourself, and Heinz can take the twins. I don't want Pap using more magic than he has to."

The bee buzzed pleasantly, and wiggled into the space between his neck and his collar.

Toki nodded, and exhaled roughly. She coughed again, bracing herself automatically with one of the many cloths she’d kept dirtying, and grimaced as the feeling going through her ribs. “Yeah.” She rasps, and then rolls her eyes at him sharply. “I literally fell on my face this morning when I tried to go visit you guys in your room, Sans. Walking isn’t happening.” That didn’t mean she wanted to be carried in the mouth of a large skeletal dog thing, though, or whatever it was that Sans summoned. Toki tugged on her magic, and Sugar appeared at the side of the bed. “So long as you don’t drop us into the water, Sugar can carry me.”

The wingless hornet peered at her mistress quietly, and shoved her head up onto the bed to flick a long tongue out and lick both children in greeting. Toki urged her to behave, and made to sit up, though that was difficult with Skylar clinging to her hip.

“How are you going to get Papa there? You can’t lift him.” She grunts as she manages to sit up, arms shaking like branches in the breeze. “Mm… I can’t fit clover into the room with Grillby’s bed. Sugar might fit though. I could send her back with you?”

Cae came over and helped her up, making sure she didn't land on Skylar, and he sighed. "I'm thinking about it... If Sugar doesn't mind helping him outside, I'm sure Clover can carry him, no problem."

“If you can get him rolled onto her back, then she can carry him.” She glanced down at her summons, and worried her teeth together quietly. “She does better around him than she used to.” She says. “She’s still nervous, but not as bad. You’ll need to take me to the outside so I can summon Clover there- I can’t do long distance.”

Toki shifted where she was seated, and gently eased her son off of her lap and into the bed. Skylar fussed, and reached for her. “Easy, baby boy,” She cooed gently. “Mama will hold you in a little bit- we’re going to go somewhere that’ll make us feel better- but Mama can’t hold you until we’re there, okay?”

“Ma…” His teeth wobbled at her, threatening a tantrum, and she sighed, and scooped him up to her shoulder, where he latched on and refused to let go.

“If you can take Honey, I can hold Skylar.” She says, keeping a firm grasp on him as she shakily eases a leg up and over Sugar’s side. The bee eases her large self against the bed, and lets Toki slide onto her back, where her legs cradle her easily. “Mmm… Where’s Pap?”

“I think he went to get you some fresh towels.” He answered, "Want me to help you to the courtyard first, or should we wait for Pap?”

“If we leave, and he comes back to us gone, he’s probably going to panic.” She informs him. “So probably wait.”

Honey crawls to the end of the bed, and reaches out for Cae, making a grunting sound at him. “Unca Snas.”

He smiled and stepped over to the bed, scooping Honey up and rubbing his head to hers, "Hey there, sweetheart.” He chuckled lightly, "How’s my favorite little Honeybug?” He cooed gently.

She butted her horns up against his cheek, and puffed huffily. Her little blue eye lights peered at him for a moment, before nuzzling into his chest. “Nuh… Icky.” Her fingers took hold of the jacket above his breasts, and she nestled close, eyes resting at half-mast.

“At least she’s not throwing up.” Toki sighed. “Anymore that is. Yesterday was… long. You were a lot of help though.” As the only skeleton that hadn’t been sick, Cae had bounced back and forth and helped as best he could. So, he’d held a lot of sick babies while messes were cleaned, and vice versa.

"Icky she says, poor thing.” He kissed Honey's head, and then smiled at Toki. "Hey, what is family for? I wasn't about to leave you high n’ dry when you needed me most.”

“That’s true,” Toki shakily leaned into Sugar, and carefully adjusted Skylar. Her Son wasn’t letting her go, and he made a high keening noise at her when she attempted to dislodge his hands from around her neck. “Well, he’s not coming off.” She says. “Hm. Alright… Anyways… I just wish none of us got sick in the first place. I hate seeing my children sick, and being unable to make them feel better is… probably one of the worst feelings in the world.”

It was a perilous time- after having everything decimated, and with the governments having to reach out to Asgore… They couldn’t afford to have more than half of the Underground sick. Their force of guards and fighters couldn’t get out of bed.

Honey sniffled quietly, and chewed on the edge of his jacket, before huffing, and making a fussy sound at him. “Unca Snas- icky too?”

"No, Not Icky. I feel a lot better, though I’ve been kept busy helping take care of you.” He put her in the cradle of one arm and offered her a finger to chew on, not quite responding to Toki since he didn’t know how. It really was one of the worst feelings in the world- but he’d had worse. His daughter had died. And he remembered it.

Honey latched onto his finger and started chewing avidly.

Toki shot him a bemused look. “You don’t do that with Skylar.” She teases. For good reason, too- even Papyrus could hardly handle when their son chewed on him. Like she’d once said, her teeth were not made for gentle nibbling, and neither were Skylar’s.

She perked, hearing footsteps coming down the hall, and wondering if it was her husband.

"I think the only thing that could take his abuse is Pop's tail. If we're lucky, he'll shed soon." Cae chuckled gently, "Then he'll have a chew toy. But she's just got molars and two little fangs, nothing too bad."

Indeed it was. Aliquam had an armful of towels and a clean bucket in hand, he did lean against the wall for a little support but he seemed to be recovering well enough.

Toki waved at Papyrus as he entered the room, and nodded to Sans. “He chewed through the bones we soaked in vinegar, so… yeah, he needs something. I mean, he can chew on me, but after a while, it begins to hurt.” That said, she shifted in her seat. “We’re off to Waterfall, Pap. Want a ride?"

"Oh... Waterfall huh?" He piped up quietly,

"Frisk thinks the glowing pools will do you guys some good with healing. You, Tokes, Pops, the twins." Cae explained.

"Ahh..." Aliquam nodded in understanding, before he smiled, "Alright. I like the sound of this."

“Thought you might.” Toki smiled slightly. She glanced down at Sugar, and hummed thoughtfully, before patting the empty space of Thorax behind her. “C’mon, mister tough guy. You can ride with me, if you don’t feel up to walking. We have to stop in the courtyard first, so we can summon Clover.” Neither she nor Papyrus weighed as much as Tenebris did. They were bone- Tenebris was muscle and meat among other things.

"Sounds like a plan." He laughed gently, coming over and setting his collected things on the bed, before he sat on Sugar's thorax. He patted the bee gently. "Hey girl." He purred to her.

The big hornet buzzed at him with a chipper undertone, and it took a little mental guidance from Toki to keep the hyperactive insect from bouncing like a puppy.

Skylar peered over his mother’s shoulder to give his father a decidedly grumpy look, before sticking his tongue out at him and then burying his face into his mother’s neck.

Toki patted his behind gently, and glanced up to Cae, none-the-wiser to her son grumping at his father. “If you’ve got Honey, we’re ready to go. Keep a hold on me, Pap- Sugar doesn’t have a saddle, and we don’t need you sliding off her thorax.”

"I'm already sore enough. I don’t need a bruised tailbone on top of that.” Quinn snorted quietly as he wrapped his arms around Toki, nuzzling her gently before he leaned over and kissed Skylar's head. "Muah~"

"I've got her, let's go." Cae agreed, giving a thumbs up to his sister-in-law as he balanced the baby chewing on him.

“Alright. I’d say race you to the courtyard, but you can teleport, so that’s cheating.” Sugar’s feet clicked on the tile of the castle, and she squeezed through the medical wing door before padding down the hall at quick speeds. Toki kept one hand on Skylar, the other fisted in Sugar’s mane, and left Cae to keep up with the fast moving insect.

Skylar growled at his father, and tiny, sharp teeth nipped irritably at him as he clung tighter to his mother. Irritable orange eyes leered at him.

Cae rolled his eyes and chuckled, casually going after them while humming a tune to Honey.

"Nyeh heh heh..." He then leaned over to Toki’s other side and gave a small nip to her cheek. "Mind if I have a kiss~?" he cooed.

The nip caught Toki’s attention, and she tilted her skull to the side, turning easily around to give him a smile. “You have to ask?” She laughs gently. She kisses him tenderly, and smiles against his teeth, eye lights warm as she peers back at him. Sometimes being a skeleton without any flesh was nice—she could turn her neck nearly all the way around when she wanted to. “I never mind giving you kisses.”

Someone else minded though, and there was a tiny angry baby buzzing on Toki’s shoulder. The buzzing only made his little joints hurt worse, which made his mood fouler— and he hissed noisily at his father, possessively clinging to his mother. “Mine.”

He chuckled gently and gave her another kiss. "Muah~" Mostly it was just to mess with Skylar.

His son needed his feathers ruffled sometimes.

Skylar gave an unhappy shriek, and buried his face into his mother’s shoulder.

Toki winced at the sound, and patted his back gently. “Really,” She rolls her eyes, “You’re antagonizing your son. Shame on you.” Despite her words, her voice is teasing.

She ends up in a small coughing fit as they reach the court yard, and has to pause to catch her breath—and not splatter Sugar’s mane in the viscous magic she’s hacking up— before ripping the air open.

Clover settles down easily, though she too looks worse for the wear. The massive insect, too, had died, and it showed. Her colors were dimmer than usual, more washed out, and she seemed tired. But she landed in the court yard and patiently awaited orders while her mistress coughed and hacked.

"He's being cranky, and I’ve had a bad few days; we all have. I have my brother's bad sense of timing for a craving for some humor." He chuckled quietly, before he lightly patted Toki’s back. "Easy... easy..." he told her gently, before he looked up to Clover. "There's our big girl."

Toki’s coughing fit lasted until Sans caught up with them, and she unfortunately soaked the sleeve of her shirt again. She sighs, her ribs aching, and wipes her teeth clean as best she can. “Skylar’s also not even a year old,” she rasps, “even if he’s more advanced thanks to your Dad’s side of the genetics. Give him some slack, love— he’s your son, and tantrums are bound to happen.”

That being said, Skylar was sniffling quietly into her shoulder, thanks to the jostling from her coughing. She crooned softly, and rubbed his back, before glancing up to Clover.

The big hornet eyed Cae as he approached, and leaned down to brush her mandibles lightly across Papyrus’ skull in greeting. She really did not look well, compared side by side with Sugar— but the big Hornet was trucking on.

Toki lifted her hand and brushed along the side of her face. “Hey Clover... I know you’re not feeling well either, but we need you to carry Tenebris for us here in a little bit. But until then, you’re welcome to stay here and relax, okay?”

The beam of sunshine in the courtyard felt nice. The hole in the mountain up top that let it in was being visibly guarded by several guards- and it was safe to assume that any other entrances into the Underground were also being guarded.

Clover nodded slowly, and shifted to lay down.

Quinn reached up and gently massaged the hornet's head when she leaned down, "That's a good girl.” He praised gently, before he sighed and smiled, sliding off of Sugar to relax in the grass that grew beneath their feet. "Mmh..."

Toki snorted at Papyrus, as he sprawled in the grass. “You realize Sans is right over there, right?” She glanced at the medium sized skeleton holding their daughter. “And you’ve got to get back up now, and I can’t hold your weight to help you up.”

Being on the ground also put him right down in face licking range- of which, Sugar took advantage of. The big hornet shoved her face into his and began to briskly groom his face and skull with slick, slobbery licks.

Clover simply looked on with amusement and made no motion to help him.

He let 'nyeh!'s of regret as he was attacked by hornet tongue, and he reached up to ruffle her fur, "Alright, alright! Nyeh! I love you too, Sugar, but please!” he keened, pushing against her snout.

Like with getting licked by a dog, talking while getting attacked by kisses was never a good idea. Why? One often would get an impromptu French kiss. And in Papyrus’s case, that is exactly what he got, complete with slobbery sulfuric saliva all over his teeth, before the hornet finally subsided under his weak flailing, and instead used her mandibles to grab him around the chest and lift him gingerly to his feet.

Her eye lights sparkled at him, mane ruffled and fluffed. Sugar looked quite proud of herself.

Toki was laughing too hard to be of much help, and her laughter was making her cough again- but his near instant regret had been hilarious.

He leaned against her and let out a 'Bleehhh!' as he wiped his face.

Karma was a very cruel mistress... And Quinn had first example of this. "Bleh..."

“That’s what you get for t-teasing Skylar,” Toki choked as she laughed.

Honey shared her mothers giggles, and laughed around her Uncle’s finger as she chewed on it. “Nyeh!”

Sugar just looked very, very pleased, and offered her back to Papyrus once more.

He climbed on and coughed, before he leaned his head on his hand, "Blegh."

“Tastes a little bit like licking the devil’s butt, doesn’t it?” Toki wheezes and teases him lightly, before nudging Sugar over towards Sans.

"Vile.” he chuffed, casually wiping his mouth on the back of her shoulder.

Sans came over and patted Sugar gently, rubbing the hornet’s head with his hand as soon as he freed his finger’s from Honey’s chewing grasp. "So..."

“We’re ready to go when you are,” Toki gave the oldest skeleton a lopsided grin, and closed her sockets, curling her hand tightly into Sugar’s mane. “If you bring them both with you when you bring Papa,” she referred to the hornets, “then I can de-summon them there.”

Clover really didn’t need to remain out if she was sick too- she’d recover best in her realm, where the other hornets were. And, honestly, Toki wasn’t sure she could keep up the summoning for them for very long at one time. But, it wasn’t a big deal to call them back. She’d make sure to give Clover plenty of attention when they were both feeling better, however.

"Sure thing." Sans walked over to Papyrus, who had since righted himself on Sugar's back, and passed over Honey, before he whistled to Clover. "Good to see you up and kicking, big girl." He told her, smiling widely. "I'll go get Pops. Be right back." He chuckled, before he teleported back to the other rooms.

Toki rolled her eyes as Sans teleported. That wasn't the plan- but whatever worked. She was too sore to fuss- if he could get Tenebris over to them, and actually heft the heavy monster up long enough to teleport him to Clover so she could lift him, then Toki wasn't going to complain.

Clover shifted upright at Toki's prompting, sighing gently and moving over to where Sans had last teleported from. She settled down to wait for him to appear.

Within Tenebris' room, the elder was sitting up in his bed, his breathing slow and his gaze unfocused, though as his son arrived, his eyes lifted and looked upon his son

"Caeruleus."

"Hey Pops... Thought i'd come get you and take you out for a small field trip, we think it'll help you feel better."

"The glowing pools?"

"Yeah, how didja-"

"I know this realm, it was my home. I know better than that.

Frisk was still there with Solstice and Grillby, and was humming a soft tune to the dozing skeletal elemental baby in their arms while Grillby rested. They waved at Cae when he popped in. 'How are you going to get Tenebris there? He is very heavy.' They signed.

"Toki insists that Clover's gonna carry him" He replied,

"I may be hurt, but I will not be carried. I have my own damn legs." Tenebris gave a growl.

"Yeah, I knew you were gonna say that.” Sans shrugged. “Don’t sweat it, I can have Hunts help you out, worst case scenario."

'There is no shame in accepting help.' Frisk says wisely. 'Its less shameful than falling on your face or hurting yourself because you're too prideful.'

Tenebris rumbled quietly and looked at Frisk as they signed, before he huffed and brought his legs around. The pads on the underside of his feet pressed against the ground before his toes tensed, claws digging partly slightly into the tile. "Mmmh...." Why did he feel as if a pup tumbling out of the nest for the first time...? He coughed into a fist and his eyes pressed closed for a moment, before he opened them again and made to get up.

He made it maybe two steps before his legs buckled and he hit the ground with a hard sound as his shield struck the tile.

Frisk gave him a little smug look as they watched the big white monster splat out on the ground. 'And now you look silly.' they inform him lightly. 'Are you okay though, Tenebris? Dunkle Sans, you might just want to teleport him to Clover. How is Clover by the way? She died, if I recall. Does Deaths Rebound affect summons too?' It might have been a little eerie to ask, but Frisk was genuinely curious. It was also good information to know. Dark little eyes glanced over to Cae, and they hummed again, smiling as Solstice tugged sleepily on a handful of their hair.

"She was looking pretty worse for wear, but she's doing alright." He answered, helping his father sit up at least.

Tenebris was looking like his pride got dented, his form fluffed up a little bit even as he leaned into his son to help keep him upright.

'That’s good.' They hummed. Frisk watched Tenebris puff up and gave him a faint smile. 'At least you don't have a nose to break?' They shifted in their seat, and then gave both of them a cheerful wave. 'I'll keep an eye on Grillby and Solstice while you're getting them settled in, Sans!'

"Hardly need a babysitter," Grillby rasped faintly. "But I appreciate you watching Solstice. She likes your hair."

Frisk beamed. 'Hair is a lot of fun! I just have to be careful so she doesn't burn it.'

He had the pout that lasted even as Sans teleported to the courtyard.

"Here we are!" The younger announced.

"What took you so long?" Toki inquired lightly, tilting her skull at them quizzically. She spotted Tenebris sitting on the ground, and could only guess. He'd probably tried to walk- he could be so damn stubborn sometimes, honestly.

Clover rose to her feet without prompting, and the massive hornet came closer, and bumped her face grumpily to Tenebris’ own. She chuffed, and opened her mouth, wiggling her mandibles, before twitching a leg towards her saddle. She couldn’t speak- but it was obvious he had two choices. Saddle up if he could, or she would carry him in her mouth. Intelligent eyes focused on him, and she settled in to await his answer.

"Pops tried to walk, went down hard and fast." He laughed.

Tenebris looked up at Clover and reached up, patting her face. "I could use some help, girl." He murmured, before he got a better grip, trying to pull himself up.

“That sounds like Papa.”’ Toki snorted, and nudged Sugar closer. The smaller hornet was hesitant, and kept eying Tenebris warily- she hadn’t forgotten the reason for her lack of flight, and it was slow, but steady, progress for her to get closer to him again. It was hit or miss on if her nerves would get the better of her or not, though.

Clover chuffed against his hand, and curled her mandibles around his chest before hefting him carefully onto his feet. Once he was up, she buzzed sharply to Sugar, and tucked her head down so Tenebris could lean on her and work his way to her saddle.

The smaller bee stopped her anxious dawdling at the larger hornet’s scolding and skulked over as Clover rotated in place and settled herself as flat on the ground next to Tenebris as she could. Given that she was about fifteen feet long, and stood about nine feet tall on a good day, it was still a long way for him to go. And, since Clover lacked a definitive neck, she couldn’t exactly help him up into her saddle.

However, Sugar could. The smaller bee edged closer, and pantomimed using her skull to nudge him up into Clover’s saddle, shuffling awkwardly.

Toki was reading into their conversation through their bonds, and tilted her skull at Tenebris. “Sugar’s going to give you a boost up into Clover’s saddle, Papa. Quinn- make sure you’ve got a hold on Honey and on me. She’s probably going to rock onto her back legs- and we don’t need anyone falling off.” Toki might have been weak in the legs, but she was very surefooted when it came to staying seated on her bees.

"Sure thing..." Tenebris did appreciate the help, and as he climbed up, he gave a few small kicks of the air before he got a good foothold and was able to push himself up into the saddle. "Oof! There we go!"

Sugar had pushed her horns up under Tenebris’ backside, until the big monster was able to swing his leg up and over Clover’s back.

Clover grunts as he gets seated, and her wings shift, rustling against her back as she shifts and gets to her feet.

“Comfortable, Papa?” Toki hummed up to him lightly from her much smaller mount. The saddle was comfortable- and durable.

"Yes, thank you." He replied, adjusting his legs before he looked at her.

“Alright.” Toki nodded. “We- ah…” She broke off into another fit of coughs. Thankfully, it didn’t last long, but it rattled her all the same, and left her quietly trying to mop her mouth with her soiled sleeve. “We’re ready, Cae.”

"Sounds good." He grinned lightly and came over, "Ladies and gentlemen this is your captain speaking, keep your hands and feet inside the hornet at all times, thank you for flying Air Caeruleus." His eye glowed as he set a hand on both hornets and with a surge of magic, Caeruleus took a shortcut with the group to the end of Hotland, where it met Waterfall.

Though he was wheezing pretty damn hard, bent over with his palms on his knees by the end of it, the middle-sized skeleton managed it. Transporting two massive hornets was NOT as easy as he expected it to be.

Clover staggered as she landed, her feet sinking slightly into the watery parts of Waterfall. She hissed sharply, the water stinging, and growled at Cae for his landing placements. She only reason she didn’t shake herself off was because of her passenger.

Toki kept her balance on Sugar, and looked marginally less queasy this time of teleporting than she had yesterday. “You alright, Cae?” She manages to ask, as she pats Sugar’s side gently. The smaller hornet whines, not liking the sensation of teleporting.

“F-Fine!” Jus’ fine!” he managed to wheeze out after a moment, "Just... outta practice."
Aliquam and the twins took the shortcut well enough, though Tenebris looked a little green in the face. He didn't look like he was about to be sick, though he did look a little nauseated.

“Lot of bodies on a long distance.” Toki nods. “You need to rest some.” She nudges Sugar gently, and the bee grumbles, before easing her way towards one of the more secluded glowing pools. “We’ll all be okay here for a little while.”

Clover swayed slightly as she edged over to the pool that Toki was at, and she chuffed before glancing back at Tenebris, and motioning for the water with her face. She could only get so close—She was heavier, and the water bank would collapse, and she would fall in.

Cae wheezed again quietly and sat down to relax.

Tenebris caught Clover's hints and carefully slid off her back, using her as support as he sighed. "Alright... Thank you, Clover."

Clover chuffed and nosed him slightly, before extending her wings out over her back. They surrounded him on either side, and created railings of sorts that lead straight to the water—she might not be able to go closer, but that didn’t mean that she wouldn’t offer him walking support.

Sugar stopped once she reached a certain point, and Toki glanced back at Papyrus. “Hop off, Pap. She can’t get any closer without the ground giving in. If you can take Skylar, I can try to make it to the water on my own.” That way, if she fell— which she no doubt would—her son wouldn’t get jostled when she hit the ground.

Skylar sniffled against her shoulder, but it seemed his tantrum had faded off some. He peered up at his father and his twin from over his mother’s shoulder.

"That’s a good girl." Tenebris purred gently to Clover.

Meanwhile, Pap carefully climbed off of Sugar and took the children, "I’ve got them; be careful.” He warned gingerly.

Clover moved her head and urged the doctor onwards with a huff.

Toki nodded, and eased off of Sugar. Her legs shook, pain lancing up from her aching joints, and Toki managed a step before hitting her knees. “Ah- ow. You know… It’s not a long crawl. I’m not a very prideful person- I’ll just… do that. Slowly.” She began shuffling along the ground, grumbling softly.

Tenebris made it to the edge, and then he willingly fell back to land in a seated position, shedding his coat and starting on his turtleneck.

"Will you want to undress or soak fully clothed?” Aliquam then asked.

Toki eyed her husband warily, and de-summoned her insects once they were no longer needed. “I’d rather go without clothes.” She makes it to the edge of the pool, and starts to shimmy out of her top. She pauses, and buzzes at herself. “Agh, breasts. Whatever- we’re the only ones here, and it’s not like you haven’t seen them before.” And that went for literally everyone there.

Cae had walked in on her feeding the twins multiple times—honestly, it wasn’t that big of a deal anymore.

“Boobles.” Honey cooes.
"Yes, boobies, sweetie." Toki hums. "I can dry your clothes if you’d rather soak with clothes on, Pap."

"We're family, we've nothing to hide in shame." Aliquam laughed gently.

"I dunno," Toki hums mysteriously, "I don’t see you waving around your disco stick for your dad to see." She arches a brow at him as she divests herself of her clothing. Nude, the bare breasted and bare boned skeleton slips into the water. "Ah! Cold."

It doesn’t take long for the water around her to start to heat though- both her magic and her fever working to churn the glowing water’s temperature into something higher. Once settled, Toki lifts her arms. "Here- lemme see the kids. Gotta get you all out of your clothes."

"Nakkie!"

He chuckled and nodded, helping undress them before passing them over.

Toki took them in her arms, and settled lower into the water, while waiting for Quinn to join her. A small flush of her magic, and a space of water around her was sufficiently bubbling.

Skylar literally sighed and slumped against her, the heat and whatever made the water glow and have it’s properties helping to soothe his little joints.

Honey simply purred and relaxed.

Toki smiled, glad the twins pains were easing.

Aliquam soon joined her, his bones exposed to the water which summoned forth a blissful sigh, "As if a hot bath right from the faucet--" he cooed.

He could hear movement of the water behind them, Tenebris finally undressed and sliding into the water as well.

Toki quirked a grin. "Having a wife with fire magic has it’s perks." She hums. She drifts closer to him and nestles into his side, before beckoning with her chin for Tenebris to come near as well. She might as well act as a portable heater until she manages to heat up the whole pool. "C’mon, Papa. Water’s warmer over here, and I know you get cold when you’re in the nude."

Looking over, Tenebris made his way over. His legs were kicking a little easier in the water than they would carry him on land, so this was good therapy for those who were bedridden. He quietly coughed, then smiled and sat near her, purring as he could feel the thermal difference in the water, "Mmmh..."

His pleased sound had her chuckling, though that faded off into a wet cough. She sighed, and tucked her head against the bare bones of Papyrus’ shoulder, before nuzzling into him with a soft sound.

Skylar shifted in her arms, and reached out, fisting his hand into his father’s ribs. He slowly began to pull his way from his mother’s arms over to his father’s arms.

“I think someone is trying to say he’s sorry for being grumpy earlier,” Toki hummed gently.

Papyrus purred and took his son into his arms, pulling him close and pecking his head, "There's my boy." he purred.

Skylar nuzzled up to Papyrus with a tired sound, and curled his fingers tightly around his ribs. The child settled there, content to soak and cling to his father now that the heat and the water was making him hurt less.

Toki nuzzled her head onto Quinn’s shoulder, and adjusted Honey- who was beginning to doze off against her. “Mmm… The heat helps.” She murmurs.

"Indeed so." He slowly sat down and put Skylar on his shoulder, smiling tiredly, "We could all use a nap."

“Mmm… I know we can go without air if we nap in the pools, but can Papa?” Toki inquired lightly, glancing over to Tenebris.

"I do not require oxygen to survive, but my skin can be affected if I am submerged too long... But something short and simple like a nap is no harm." The bigger monster replied quietly.

Toki nodded thoughtfully, and closed her sockets with a soft sound. “Mmm… Alright. Well, I suppose if we all bundle close together, we can probably nap. I’m not going to be able to keep the water as warm in as large of a radius if I sleep.” Her subconscious output wasn’t that big.

Tenebris swam closer at that and curled around them, hooking his teeth on the vertebrae of his tail as he brought them a little closer together for comfort.

Aliquam smiled and sighed happily, leaning against Tenebris' back, giving Toki his shoulder.

Being curled around was a relaxing thing, and Toki couldn’t help the tired sound that escaped her mouth afterwards. She nestled into Quinn, and closed her sockets. “Mmm…”

Everyone seemed to settle down at that moment and in their little world, everything was perfect.

With Cae, who had since recovered, he simply watched on from the shore for a little, making sure everyone was okay before he departed. He had another pair who needed his help...
Chapter 87

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Sometimes, Humanity hurts more when it tries to help.

By the fifth day, everyone was mostly back on their feet. Some of the worst cases were still coughing if someone got them too excited about something, but everyone had, for the most part, recovered from Death’s Rebound flawlessly just like Frisk had promised that they would.

The castle was mostly empty once more, as were all of the clinics. Monsters had been released to go home once they were sure that no one was going to fall or turn to dust- and once everyone was nearly fully recovered, keeping them all confined to medical rooms was a moot point.

The only ones still lingering in the castle were the Gaster and Fyrus families, though they would soon be departing as well.

Thumper clung to Tenebris’ shoulders, the boy unusually clingy after watching his second father figure go down while coughing up waves of blood. He was quiet, watching Asgore as the king talked with some humans.

The governments had come together and sent in troops to help protect the monsters. The monsters were citizens, in all technicalities- and they had the right to be protected as well. So, there were dozens of armed squadrons that were beginning to unload into the castle- Asgore was talking with them about implementing them with the Royal guard for the time being, so they could be shown around and safely be guided through the Underground, until they got used to traversing it and all of the traps and puzzles through it.

Toki watched them warily while her husband and Cae chattered, standing near Tenebris as the brothers chatted and handled the children. She tilted her skull, and pursed her teeth quietly.

Some of the soldiers were watching her.

In a… decidedly focused manner that was almost disturbing. Their attention might have been on Asgore and their commanding officers, but their eyes tracked her movements.

She coughed slightly- she was one of the ones with a faint lingering cough- and glanced up to Tenebris. “Is it just me,” she murmurs softly, “or am I being watched?”

Tenebris didn't respond vocally at first. He held Thumper in the cradle of one hand, the other lowered and at his side, but his claws were tapping his side with either a mental attempt to control himself or a show of anxiety.

"It's not just you, Toki." He growled quietly, before he swung his tail around and let it gleam in the light where the soldiers could see.

It wasn't a threat as much as a warning. Tenebris could protect himself, but after all that's happened, he wasn't too keen on trusting any old human off the bat.
Some of the soldiers shifted nervously at the large bladed weapon coming into view.

The ones that just watched, however, didn’t seem perturbed by it. Instead, they seemed almost…

excited by it.

Toki shivered, a faint nervous rattle of her neck vertebrae. “You don’t… Think that maybe they’re with…?” Toki didn’t want to think that the Governments had HAM agents in it- but… Well, they could be anywhere. “Maybe they’re just… not monster friendly.” She wanted to give people the benefit of the doubt, but… Well. Past experiences were proving that giving benefit of the doubt was not always wise.

"They best hope they're not one of them, for if I find out…” The blade sank into the floor and his eyes glowed as he growled, "Monster friendly or not, they were sent here, they better get used to it.”

Toki nods lightly, and grimaces, before tapping his arm. “You’re ruining the floor.” She chides. “Stop that. But yes... We’ll just be careful.” She sighs.

Thumper nuzzles his face against Tenebris’ arm, and murmurs softly. “Are those bad humans? Like the ones that killed my parents?” He questions softly to the bigger monster.

"I hope not, Thumper.” He murmured to his son, stroking his head as he pulled his tail from the ground, "It's gonna be okay, Thumper.” He purred.

The rabbit made a small distressed sound and tucked his face against Tenebris’ neck. “I wish they would go away. They took my mom and my dad and our home on the surface- I don’t want them to take you too.”

Toki rubbed his back gently, stroking her fingers soothingly down the boy’s shoulders. “They’re not going to take Tenny from you, Thumper,” She soothed softly.

“I never thought they’d make us come back under here again either.” The boy sniffled quietly, tone morose as his little claws prickled at his adopted father’s clothes. He clung to him tightly, not wanting to let go. “But they did.”

"We're not staying down here, not for good..." Tenebris snarled quietly, giving Thumper a gentle squeeze, "Not again." He pecked his head a few times, and then turned to resume watching the soldiers who were awaiting their instructions.

“But if they don’t stop, we wont be safe on the surface…” The boy murmured quietly. “Then only down here will be safe…”

Asgore waved a hand, and groups of guards came forth. Several of them took groups of four humans or more along with them, implementing them into their platoons. Once they were divided up, they set out onto their patrol routs, and Asgore approached with the human man who was obviously in charge of the soldiers that had been sent to help protect the monsters under the mountain. “Tenebris, Toki, boys- this is the commander of the garrison the governments put together for our protection.”

He motioned for the man to introduce himself.

The man looked at the two and gave a nod, "I am Commander Nick Hancock. A pleasure to meet you both."

"Greetings, Commander. My name is Tenebris Gaster, and this is my son, Thumper."

“I’m Tokiko Gaster.” Toki nods. She motions back to Papyrus and Cae, who weren’t paying them very much attention as they talked animatedly about something out of earshot. “That’s my husband, Papyrus, his brother, Sans, my children, and my niece."

"Well met, all of you. I'm sorry for your losses and give you my word that I will do what I can to ensure that you are not put in danger again." The soldier gave a firm nod to the three of them, a hard look on his face, though contrasted by a gentle look in his eyes.

Thumper gave the general a wary look, but offered a shy wave of his fluffy paw, little pink nose twitching as he peered at him out of amethyst eyes.

“I’m pretty certain we’re bound to be in danger again sometime, Commander.” Toki gives him a faint smile, hoping he isn’t bothered by the gator-like grin of her teeth. She doesn’t have a nice set of teeth for a gentle smile, like Papyrus or Sans does, after all. She unnerves people more often than not- particularly with how she speaks without opening her mouth. “But thank you for your condolences and your support. It helps us to feel safer against the threat from Humans Against Monsters.”

Asgore nods lightly. “After the hard loss of Nara Village, it is good to have the support of the rest of the people to help us in our time of need. Now- the Commander and I have worked out a regime for his soldiers. They’re being split into small platoons, divided up per guard group and going out to learn the layout of the Underground.”

Toki grinds her teeth, and glances to Tenebris, catching his eye. Should they warn the commander about the weird feelings? Or were they just being paranoid about humans staring at them after everything that happened?

He looked unbothered by her appearance, nor was he really uncomfortable at all.

Tenebris nodded once before he spoke again, "And you can promise you've no turncoats amongst your men?"

"My men you see here were chosen for their reliability. Many of them volunteered to come, I have faith that we have no undercover agents from the organization.” The commander replied.

“I see…” Toki nodded slowly. She glanced to Tenebris again. Perhaps they were just being paranoid then. Still, those stares unnerved her. She’d be locking the door to the Snowdin house when they went home. “For the sake of the monsters here, Commander, I hope you’re right.” She says. “The organization,” she used his term for them, “has taken too many lives as it is. The mountain is our only safe place.”

“I doubt that the leader of that Organization could manage to infiltrate the governments of the world.” They couldn’t outright call him Cruelty, since the humans, or the vast majority of them, were not aware of the boss hearts and anti-hearts. If they were, it was likely they’d try to begin using their magic for weapons and the like. Asgore knew this- as did every monster who knew about the bosses. “Are the governments not secure from such measures?”

“I’m sure they are.” Toki hums softly. “But nothing is impossible.”

"Since the organization has reared it's ugly head, there has been governmental precaution taken, but no plan is one hundred percent guaranteed.” Hancock explained, "We can only hope that they had not already been inside before we took precautions."

Toki nodded at that answer. “That about sums it up, I’d wager.”

Asgore nods slowly. “You’ll have to forgive my blunders. I am more familiar with the terms of monarchy rather than democracy, and there is a lot of information about Democracy to retain within only a few short years time. Monsters still follow a monarchy, however loose my title might be now, and I have had a long, long time to memorize the rules.”

“Oldest goat to ever exist.” Thumper mumbles faintly against Tenebris’ neck with a general fondness for the old king.

"Mind your tongue, Kit. I'm only a few hundred years younger than him." Tenebris reached up and gently tugged on Thumper's cheek, rumbling gently in amusement.

Hancock got a chuckle out of it and his arms fell to his sides. "Humans have such a short lifespan - the range of a single decade... compared to the centuries you monsters must live, it is miraculous."

Thumper giggled gently and stuck his tongue out to lick Tenebris’ finger. “At least you can admit you’re old too, Dad.”

Asgore chuckled gently. “It is as miraculous as it is daunting. It is only boss monsters who have such a lifespan, you see. Most monsters live, on average, about a hundred years, to a hundred and twenty. But, boss monsters live much, much longer lives, so we often see our friends fade away with time.” He explains. “Myself, Tenebris, Papyrus, and Sans are boss monsters - as such, we will live much, much longer lives than normal monsters. There are several other boss monsters in the Underground as well.”

"That's interesting. I hope, once everything has worked out, that we start to learn more about monsterkind." The commander spoke with a polite smile.

Asgore returned the polite smile. "Perhaps once Humans Against Monsters has been dealt with, we can open up schools for learning about my kind." The king hummed. "For now, having a lot of information being common knowledge would be... Bad in the hands of those who mean us harm."

He nodded, "When the danger is no more." He agreed.

"Indeed. So, Commander Hancock, would you like a tour of the castle?" The king motioned to the general area with a sweep of his massive arms. "If you are to be here for long, it will be helpful to know where everything is at for ease of access and emergency response."

"Of course, Your Majesty, please, lead the way." Hancock responded

Asgore nodded, and guided him off.

Toki watched them go, and shook her head. She glanced over to Tenebris. "I'm going to steal Papyrus from Sans, and head back to the Snowdin house while he takes Grillby, Fuku, and Solstice back to the bar. Pap and I wanted to show the twins the Underground, since we're feeling better."

Thumper nods and tickles his whiskers along Tenebris cheek. "It's really pretty. I'm sure they'll enjoy it a lot." He hums softly.

"Go right ahead. I'll be here, with Thumper." Tenebris rumbled as he reached up to scratch his cheek, "See what I can find to occupy myself, now that my body can keep up with my mentality."

Thumper tickled Tenebris cheek again with his whiskers and grinned. "Could always go run around the courtyard? Or in Hotland."

Tenebris chuckled and put Thumper down, "You twerp."

"You twerp." He smirked gently.

Toki nods, and heads over towards her husband. "See you, Papa! Hey, Pap! C'mon, chatterbones, let's show our babies the world where you grew up."

Looking over, Aliquam smiled to Toki and came over, "Alright, Toki." he replied, coming over, before he gave his brother a wave

"See ya, Bro!" Cae chuckled with his default grin on his face, casual and friendly, promoting his improvement despite what had happened.

"See you Cae!" Toki waved to Cae, glad that he seemed to be doing better than he had been before, and then leaned up to tickle her children where they clung to their father.

Honey and Skylar shrieked with shrill laughter, and shimmied higher onto his shoulders.

"So, Hotland first? I bet I can handle it now. I don't have the cracks anymore." She beamed cheerfully.

"Of course! We'll backtrack all the way to Snowdin, or have River give us a lift." He snorted quietly, "Whichever happens first."

"It's a long walk." Toki hummed. "But we have plenty of time, and I'd love to see everything. I didn't get to see all of it the times I was down here. Well, I got to see a good chunk of it, but not all. I was freshly turned the first time," she recalled, "and heavily pregnant the second. Neither times did I get to see Hotland. It's going to be fun." She offered her shoulder as her daughter squirmed her way over, and then tucked the child onto her shoulders. Honey took hold of her horns, and rested proudly in place, rubbing her little nubbins against Toki's horns.

Sparks rained down, much to the little girl's amusement

Toki offered him her arm, and smiled. "To the elevator we go~"

He took her offered arm and smiled to her happily, "To the elevator!"

"Ele-" Skylar hummed softly.

"Vator!" Honey chirped, finishing her brother's word excitedly. She tugged on Toki's horns. "Up down! Nyeh!"

"Up and down is right," Toki laughed gently.

"If we cut through the hotel, the elevator I'm sure we'll be taking can actually go left and right too." Quinn mentioned.

"What, really?" She blinked, shocked. "That sounds like something out of Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory."

"Nyeh heh heh. it's rather amazing, this technology." He rumbled, "Then again, I wonder why the humans hadn't come up with it yet."

"We're pretty limited on what we can achieve feasibly. Mostly limited by our minds, human error, and our own lack of magic." Toki hummed softly.

"I suppose that's where the term 'only human' comes from." He chuckled, before he gave her arm a gentle squeeze, "Despite the consequences, it's nice to be back here... it has its own unique aspect that just screams 'home'."

She squeezed his arm back gently, palm resting on his bicep. "Pretty sure that's where they coined that term, yeah. Or somewhere along those lines." Toki chuckled gingerly. "I understand that. You were raised here- this is your home town, basically. Or your home... City, I suppose. Either way," she smiled at him, all sharp teeth and crocodile like grins despite the warmth that permeated her gaze, "it's nice for the kids to experience both aspects of their family heritage."

He laughed gently, and nodded in agreement. "You know, I just remembered. There's something you missed last time you were here in the underground..." He spoke with a small smirk now.

"Oh?" She heard the smirk in his voice, and tilted her skull as best she could with their daughter holding onto her horns to peer up at him. "I'm sure I missed a lot, Pap. What are you thinking of?"

"The vents." was all he giggled to her, before letting her go and moving ahead with a swifter pace, "Nyeh heh heh heh~"

"The vents?" She blinked, her shorter legs struggling to keep up as he strode ahead. She eventually let him gain ground, and simply met him at the elevator. She rolled her eye lights lightly. Really- they had the same destination.

The elevator opened with a ding and Quinn entered it with a smile, "You're going to love the vents, they're the best way to get around, it's so much fun!"

"Sometimes your definition of fun is very different than mine," she reminds him lightly. Puzzles and building and the Ikea Incident come to mind most immediately. She wasn't fond of any of that- but she knew he was, and liked to indulge him when she could. She scooted into the elevator with him and then suddenly chuckled. "You know... We're going to have to get all new furniture again. Which means you get to put it all together again."

And with that his face dropped from its ecstatic look to a different one. It settled on a flat glare accompanying a grin, "You're not pregnant this time. You're helping me." He told her firmly.

Toki laughed at the grinning glare he gave her as the elevator door closed and started to go down. "And you get to see how truly atrocious my building skills are." She grins. "But of course- I’m not going to abandon you to putting everything together on your own. We’ll grab Papa and Sans too. And we’re not going to Ikea again. Or if we are, Cae is banned from coming with us."

She remembers the puns.

She remembers them all too well.

"Agreed. So very… Very agreed." He groaned, clearly remembering them in the same.

“I know I tease you with the occasional one, but I’m nowhere near as bad as Sans is.” Toki chuckles. “The occasional pun does you good though. It’s good to have something to ruffle your feathers.”

“Uns?” Honey cooed curiously.

“Puns.” Skylar chirped. He paused, and considered the words he’d heard, and then leaned up to tug on his father’s shirt. He buzzed curiously. “Pr-preg-narrt? What?”

Aliquam laughed and kissed the child’s heads, "I love you two so much, oh my gosh~"

“Pregnant, sweetheart.” Toki chuckled softly, correcting Skylar gently. She then answered, since Aliquam didn’t. “We’ll tell you when you’re older.”

“Pregnant.” Skylar chirped, and leaned into the kiss from his father. “Kay.” His little teeth puckered, and he pressed a kiss to Quinn’s cheek, before snuggling closer to him.

Toki smiled wider and grinned. “They’re growing in leaps and bounds.” She says. “They’re absorbing words like little sponges.”

"And knowing how to use them as if they were already in school." He praised happily, "I'm so proud of you both~ yes I am~" He cooed to them.

Toki laughed faintly as the twins coo in response. “I think you and your dad were right about their growth rate. They might not be a year old yet, but they definitely act like they’re well on their way to being two.” She hums gently. “So… Makes me wonder… should I start weaning them?”

"It'd be wise." He agreed gently, before his more excited expression reappeared as the elevator doors opened, "Come on~" He told her eagerly, setting a hand on her back to coax her along.

"I'm coming, I'm coming." The warmth of Hotland washed over them as the doors opened, and Honey made a delighted sound atop Toki’s skull. Toki let herself be guided out of the doors, eyeing him with wary amusement, and let a smile tilt her teeth up. “The first kids are always the ones that end up being the ‘test’ children.” She says. “By the time we have the second or third round of kids, if we decide to do that many, we’ll have our methods down pat.”

“Hot!” Skylar chirps, delighted, and lifts himself up in Papyrus’ grasp so he could see better.

Papyrus gave Skylar a small boost as he led his mate along, a smile on his face as he approached a ledge, "I suppose you're right. You're the mother after all." He chuckled gently.

Skylar eagerly cooed as he peered over the ledge, gripping tightly to his father’s shoulder with his hands.

She watched as he approached a ledge, and tilted her head curiously. “And you’re the father,” she rolls her eye lights. “But I also came from a big family, and I was the first child. Mom was very, very good at the motherhood routine by the time she had Roshi. Ah- Pap? What are you doing?”

"Are you ready for this?" He laughed. He pulled Skylar close to his chest, and then ran forward and cheerfully whooped as he landed on the vent, before it gave a powerful gust of air and he went flying with a cheerful holler.

Toki froze as he bolted, eye lights locking on him as he stepped onto the vent. It shot him- and her son- into the air. And straight. Over. A chasm.

She might have made a strangled sound, and reached out with her hand for him as her eye lights disappeared from her sockets.

He landed on the other side, safe and sound though.

Skylar did not, however, share his Father’s enjoyment of having gone over the vent. His little orange eye lights flared bright, and he hunkered down in his arms, clinging tightly to him with a terrified buzz. He’d seen how far down that chasm had gone- and though he had no concept of how far that was, it had terrified him all the same. The fearful child buried his face against Pap’s shirt and whimpered.

He held Skylar close with a laugh and he landed with a shutter of the ground below him. He laughs again. "And he sticks the landing!" He then looked over at Toki, "Come on! The vent is safe!"

“Hel-ECK no!” Toki sputtered. She certainly wouldn’t be sticking that landing- she had no grace what to speak of, and she wasn’t going to risk tossing Honey by accident. “You can stick to your vents! I’ll just fly. That way if you miss, I can catch you and Skylar before you go splat.”

Skylar whimpered again.

"Don’t say that where he can hear it.” He scolded, stroking Skylar's head gently, "It's okay, I used the vents all the time when we still lived underground, they get fun after a few times.” He assured him.

“Noooo,” Skylar whined.

Toki grimaced, and quickly summoned Clover. She saddled up quick, and took to the air once she got Honey settled in her lap, rolling her eye lights down at her husband. “I think you took the wrong twin for your vent hopping shenanigans, Papyrus.”

"Then trade me, eh?” He suggested with a soft laugh, "Honey should get a thrill from the vents."

Toki rolled her eyes again, and drifted down with Clover. The hornet landed precariously on the narrow platform, and she adjusted their eager daughter in her arms. “Just be careful, okay?” She says.

Honey reaches out, eager to leap into her daddy’s arms.

Skylar, on the other hand, practically flails to get out of his father’s arms, and get to the safety of his mother’s grasp. “Mama!” He shrieks.

"Careful is my middle name.” he assured her, taking Honey and passing Skylar up with a smile. And yes, he was careful, but now that he was back in his natural environment, he felt young again, more relaxed.

Prone to having some damn fun for once.

“Technically, it’s Aliquam.” She snorts, and tucks her son against her middle. Skylar clings to her, and she takes off into the air again, and hovers above him in case he needs her help. She wasn't going to keep him from having his fun- but she wasn't going to be careless either.

Honey croons excitedly, and loops her fingers around his neck, bumping her skull against his chin. “Daddy!”

He stuck his tongue out at her with a soft laugh, and then he kissed Honey’s head. "Ready for some fun, sweetheart?” He purred to her.

Honey chirped excitedly and nodded, butting her horns briefly against his teeth in her exuberance, before she turned and clung to him tightly, more than eager for him to begin jumping. “Daddy jumpy! Jumpy jumpy jumpy!”

He chuckled and held her tightly with one arm. "Here we go!" He then ran to the end of the next ledge and leaped on the vent; the hot air sending them flying as he whooped and laughed.

Honey shrieked loudly, but it was a shriek of laughter, excitement bursting like fireworks along the soul connections to her parents. Her little fists kept a firm grip on Papyrus, but her legs kicked eagerly. “Eeeeeeeiii!”

Toki watched protectively from above, and hovered along as they went. Her daughter’s excitement made her smile.
He landed again, and with his daughter's excitement fueling him, he took off in a sprint, leaping from vent to vent until he reached the end. "Alrightie, last one! Ready for the big leap, honeysuckle~?" He cooed to his daughter.

"Ya!" She beamed at him, blue eye lights sparkling. His daughter had his grin, and his energy, and she was absolutely pumped for whatever the ‘big leap’ was going to be. "Jumpy!"

"HERE WE GO!" He whooped, running at the last vent. He slammed his feet into it and sent himself flying as the vent gave an especially strong shot of air, sending them high into the air, "WHOOO HOO HOO!"

Clover gave an irritated buzz as she had to dodge her master’s flying mate, and drifted well out of his range before coming back down again.

Honey shrieked excitedly, arms flying up and trusting her father to keep a hold on her as she enjoyed the rise. "EEEEEEE!"

His grip stayed locked around her body and he did a roll in midair before he landed hard on the ground, cracking it under his feet, before he fell back to his rear, his laughter pure and truly unleashed as he sat there with Honey.

Honey’s laughter rang with his, lighter and innocent ad she clung to her father. She cackled heartily, little shoulders shaking as she expressed her delight at the vents.

Toki brought Clover in for a landing, and quietly tried to quell the mild panicked fluttering of her soul. She didn’t want to rain on his parade- but watching him leap with their daughter over a several thousand foot chasm was very, very panic inducing. "So," she hums nonchalantly, “You feel up to just riding Clover the rest of the way home, mister chuckles?"

His laughter lightened and he looked to her with a gentle smile, "I suppose, heh heh heh~” Holding Honey close, he carefully got up and climbed aboard Clover, giving her a gentle pat before hugging himself close to Toki, smiling into her neck as he sighed happily. Honey was set on the saddle, gentle sandwiched between her parents with one hand kept around her.

Honey didn’t mind being sandwiched, and simply wiggled back against her father’s shirt, making it lift up so she’d have more space with his rib cage being open.

Toki heaved a softly relieved sigh as Papyrus pressed against her back. Her soul was probably damn hear able to be felt with how it was pulsing behind her ribs- so she simply hoped he wasn’t paying it much mind. Instead, she clicked her tongue to the back of her teeth, and leaned slightly in the saddle as Clover lifted off.

The hornet headed off, eating up the sky faster than they could over the ground. Monsters looked up and watched them go with various stages of awe in their faces. Not all of the underground-native or underground residing monsters had seen the giant hornets yet- but they’d heard stories.

As the heated faded away to the trickling rivers of Waterfall, Aliquam grew a little heavier behind her, sighing in relaxation. If one listened to the cavern around them, they could hear water dripping, landing and creating notes that practically formed a lullaby around them... It was very soothing.

Toki kept a firm grip on her husband’s arm around her, so he didn’t slip off, and let Clover take them home without issue. The big hornet didn’t have a problem zipping through the rain- it stung, but it didn’t come down nearly hard enough to extinguish her flames.

Clover took them down and out of open space. However, she reached a point in the waterfall caves, where she could no longer fly. The caves were too narrow for her wingspan to be able to fit. So, she carefully lowered down onto the ground, and began a fast crawl, speeding through on several powerful legs.

Aliquam's eyes had closed at this point, his hold on his mate and daughter firm but all else gone slack.

Eventually, the air started to get colder, and colder, though the heat from the bee they were seated on helped to combat that. Clover eventually brought them out from cramped spaces into an open, underground forest. Snowdin loomed ahead of them, and the hornet took to the skies, shaking the ice off her feet with an indignant buzzing noise.

Toki took note that Papyrus might have possibly fallen asleep while ‘riding bitch’, as Kon would say, on Clover’s back. She kept an eye on him as Clover flew- and made sure to hold him, and their children, very steady once they reached the Snowdin house.

Once there, she reached back and gently nudged his leg. “Pap? Pap, we’re back at your old house now.”

"Mmmn... Nyeh?” he slowly opened his eyes again and sighed, "Ah~ Good."

“Sounds like you need a nap.” She quirks a faint grin, and starts to un-do the straps holding her legs in place.

"Admittedly, I haven’t vent-jumped in a good couple years... I would even go so far as to admit... I’m rusty at it.” He spoke with a yawn interrupting him partway in before he sat up and collected Honey in his arms, a smile on his face.

Her faint grin widens into an amused smile, and she chuckles softly, finishing undoing her latches. She hefts Skylar, and once she’s sure Honey isn’t going to face plant without her there to brace her front end, Toki carefully hops off of the hornet.

She lands with her feet in the cold snow, and peers up at Papyrus. “You sure you’re just not getting a little older?” She teases. “We all get older sometimes.” He was only in his early twenties- unlike herself- so that wasn’t the case at all. But that didn’t mean she wasn’t going to tease him about it.

"Very funny." He chuckled sarcastically, climbing off as well, "There's no harm for the occasional nap, as Caeruleus insists. It's healthy."

“Given that you have nearly boundless energy, it’s just surprising to hear you mention naps.” She chuckles. Toki dismisses Clover, and steps over to the front of the house. A quick peek inside shows Stag asleep in the corner of the living room with Gracie and Gael asleep on his back. Good enough.

Toki slips inside, and glances back at him. “Then, shall we go to my room and get comfy?” He asked.

“That sounds fine to me.” She nods. Toki adjusts Skylar in her arms, and makes for the stairs. Her hips sway as she makes her way up, bobbing just faintly with each of her steps as she goes up and towards his room with a sleepy toddler clinging to her.
Likewise, Honey starts to yawn, but covers it with her Daddy's shirt.

He holds Honey gently as he stroked her head, "Don't worry, Honey." He purred, "It's nap time~" He cooed as he stroked her head, "We can all get some needed rest."

"We'll all pile onto your bed." She chuckles as she heads up the stairs. "Make a big nest of sleepy skeletons."

"Seepy..." Honey agrees with a soft sound.

"Mmmhm." His gaze lifted to watch her swaying derriere, and he smiled with tired mischief, reaching up and pinching her rear between two knuckles. "Nyeh~"

Toki squeaked, and glanced back at him. She chuffed at him, and rubbed her fingers over the spot he'd pinched. "Now what on earth was that for?"

"I appreciate this so much, such a perfect mate." He cooed tiredly.

When she reached the top of the short stairs, she turned around to face him, and gave him a crooked grin. She reached out to rub his cheek gently. "So a tired Papyrus appreciates my booty with butt pinches." She grins cheekily, and leans down to give him a quick kiss, before scooting out of reach and heading down the hall. "To be fair, I appreciate your backside too. It looks particularly fine in a pair of tight pants." She purrs. "C'mon, sleepyhead. Let's get settled into bed. You've been pretty active, even while you were sick."

He nodded gently in agreement, wiggling a brow at her cheekily in return. Ultimately, he didn't pursue it though. They had children in hand, after all. "We've all had one hell of a week, some bed rest sounds perfect."

"We literally just came off of bed rest. Well... I did. You were stubborn and kept walking around and doing things." Toki glanced back at him as she headed off for the bedroom. She eased the door open, and slipped inside. Sprawling on the bed was easy, as was tucking Skylar into her arms, and she scooted to the edge of the bed so Papyrus could wedge in with her. They'd make a little nest between them for the kids.

He lay down beside her and sighed, wrapping his arms around her after nestling Honey down next to her brother. "I love you so much~" He purred.

"I love you too," she murmured to him and gave him a warm smile. With the twins curled in the empty gap of their middle, Toki took notice that they were definitely getting larger. They didn't fit nearly as well there as they used to.

"I'm glad you're okay now... I was worried about you..." He murmured.

"We were all worried about each other." She gave him a soft smile, and massaged his hand gently. "We're okay now though. Frisk was right that we all got better."

"That's right." He agreed, "But we're at least safe now... we know we're safe here." He sighed gently, stroking her head.

"Yeah." She agreed, leaning into the touch to her skull. She tilted her horns into his fingers, so he could rub that too. Toki couldn't help but think about the guards that had disturbed her and Tenebris, and wondered just how safe they actually were. "Get some rest, Papy. I dunno when the kids are going to want up, but they're not going to want to be cooped up in the house forever. We're bound to go play in the snow."
"Mmm... After a last night of rest to see the illness off, yes?" He rumbled quietly, peering at her. He and the twins were fine, even if he was exhausted - but she still had an occasional cough.

"More like a morning nap." She laughed. "It's only morning after all. We'll probably be up after noon." She snuggled closer to him and nuzzled her face to his as Skylar wiggled up into her ribs and settled down to sleep. "But yeah. Nap first, and then we'll go build snowmen."

"True." He hummed, stroking her head gently as he thought about. "I think today we're gonna end up pulling a Caeruleus... and just sleep the day away." He chuckled quietly.

"Maybe." She giggled quietly, leaning into his touch like a cat does. "If we didn't have children we could. But you sleep. I'll handle the kids. I did more resting than you did at the castle. I'm not as tired."

"You positive? I'd hate to leave you t' do all the work..." He murmured, though he was definitely exhausted.

"Pap, I usually run the house while you're out doing guard work. I can handle the kids while you rest." She kisses him gently, and nuzzles close to him. "I'll rest a little with you though."

"Mmh... If you're sure..." His eyes closed as she nestled closer, and his exhaustion definitely overwhelmed him, as he was asleep within minutes.

Toki smiled, and cuddled him close, along with their children. She too soon joined them in sleep, sighing contently as she relaxed.

It felt strange, wandering these old halls... And yet Tenebris felt a nostalgic feeling as he walked down the corridors of the castle... The tiles were cool under the pads of his feet, and the old beast found himself purring at the relief the coolness brought. He stopped for a moment to simply take in the air about him, but that's when he heard it...

Rustling...

There was no one designated to this section of the castle, whether refugee... Or guard.

Tenebris growled and searched for the source, listening until he found the room where someone was knelt on the opposite wall, "Hey!" he barked sharply

The figure kneeling by the wall tensed, like a runner, and then turned, drawing dual knives from sheathes on his calves. There was only one entrance to the room - and Tenebris blocked it.

Behind the man sat a nearly assembled mass of parts - to the scientist in the doorway, it would easily be recognizable as some sort of explosive device.

The man didn't hesitate. He lunged, knives whirling, and aimed to take down the big pale monster blocking the doorway.

Tenebris had already been on guard, and the man stood no chance against him as rage and instinct took over the beast. He swung his tail and slammed them into the assailant's legs, knocking him off balance long enough to allow Tenebris to lash out and give an attack of his own, his claws sliced into the other's armor, reducing it to shreds. The man yelled out as Tenebris slammed him against a wall, before wincing and turning his head as Tenebris unhinged his jaw, screeching in his face before he closed his jaw once more and snarled at him, "How many of there are you? You've already destroyed our home, why must you continue to terrorize us?"

The man turned and spat in his face. "You'll all be buried." He hissed. He answered none of his questions, and instead struggled to stab him with the knives he'd held onto.

He caught the wrist that held the knife and easily disarmed him, leaving behind the knives as he dragged the man behind him, going to report him to Asgore, before executing him.

The man struggled and flailed, pulling hard to get away. He had no luck though, and that just seemed to make him angrier. So he turned instead and sank his teeth into Tenebris' wrist, biting down as hard as he could.

Tenebris snarled in pain and grabbed him by the hair, releasing him with his other hand. "Let go, let go!" he demanded

In response he bit harder, sticky black blood flooding his mouth, and shoved his now free hand into his ruined flak jacket to dig out one of his extra knives and run the blade over the pale monster’s arm as many times as he could. He would damn well try to bleed the monster dry if he had to.

Tenebris bellowed in pain as his blood began to run from his arm and he slammed the man against the wall repeatedly to dislodge him from his arm.

Several teeth were knocked loose, remaining embedded in Tenebris arm as he slammed him essentially neck first into the wall. Blood flooded his mouth and he choked on it, coughing heavily, and ended up releasing the pale monster out of reflex.

He gripped his arm in pain, hissing angrily before he grabbed the man by the back of the head, glaring at him furiously, "I dare you... try something like that one more time" he threatened with a venomous tone.

The position left him close enough to stab at his middle, swiping the knife across his turtleneck. He only grazed the skin, splitting it only deep enough for it to weep- but he thoroughly ruined his clothing, and then proceeded to laugh and spit one of his ruined teeth at him.

He snarled in fury and slammed his face into the wall again, before he roared to get Asgore's attention as he made it to the main hall of the Castle, his form bristling.

The man was limp after having his face smashed into the wall again, face bloodied and nose very much broken.

Asgore startled at the roar, ears and mane flying as his head whipped around in response. Commander Hancock was still with him, and the king paid him not mind as he took in the human dangling from his lover's hand. "Tenebris? What happened? You're wounded- and so is he."

"We... Have a spy in our midst." He hissed, before he threw the man forward, "he was planting explosives... and attacked when I discovered him." Tenebris hissed, now moving to cradle his bleeding arm, his black blood dripping off it steadily with the damage he sustained.

"We... Have a spy in our midst." He hissed, before he threw the man forward, "he was planting explosives... and attacked when I discovered him." Tenebris hissed, now moving to cradle his bleeding arm, his black blood dripping off it steadily with the damage he sustained.

Asgore stepped closer, healing magic coming to his hand as he took Tenebris arm into his grasp. He began to knit the bleeding flesh back together, and turned steely eyes to Commander Hancock. "I see... Commander. With all due respect, I'm going to have to decline the assistance of the human governments. If it is possible to have one traitor in your higher ranks," he says, "then there is no telling if there are others."
Tenebris leaned against the king, the healing magic now allowing Tenebris to settle down and allow the shock of the damage to wash over him.

Hancock, though shocked at the damage the man had taken, looked completely understanding as he knelt and checked the man's pulse. "I understand completely, Your Majesty." he replied, "And I will respect your wishes, and have all my men withdraw and return to the surface."

Asgore supported Tenebris easily, and nodded to the Commander. "You have my gratitude. Please, extend my appreciation to the governments you represent. I'll be sure to smooth things over with them later." When he could contact them, that was. The king sighed. "No more humans in the Underground- not past the castle, at least. Not until Humans Against Monsters has been handled. I will take no more risks. I am done being toyed with."

"It will be as you say, Your Majesty." Hancock gave a respectful bow, and sent a message to his soldiers to see that their cadets were immediately counted for to return above ground.

Likewise, Asgore palmed at the communicator at his hip that he had for talking to his royal guard. He lifted it up, and gave orders to have any and all humans who had arrived with the Commander escorted back to the castle and hereby removed for the time being.

Tenebris shifted and stirred at this point and he let out a quiet rumble to Asgore, "Tell them... beware of explosives..." He warned.

Asgore nodded, and quietly spread the word for them to be on the lookout for explosives, and for the wolf guards to check the scents for anything explosive related.

The man on the ground lurched into consciousness once more, kneeing Hancock in the face as he did so, and scrambled to his feet. He pulled another knife, and charged at Asgore's back while the king wasn't looking, a frenzied look on his bloodied face.

Were it not for Tenebris looking up at that moment, Asgore might have gotten stabbed.

But he didn't. Because Tenebris swung his knife first.

With a new surge of adrenaline, Tenebris shoved Asgore out of the way. One of his clawed hands swung for the other's gut, the other swinging for the man's neck with tail blade in hand.

Red insides spilled across the beautiful tile of the castle floor, as body and head fell in separate directions.

The king recovered from being shoved just in time to see the head land with a wet sound, spurting blood all over the floor. He frowned. "Oh dear..."

Tenebris panted roughly as it sank in what just happened, and he slowly pulled himself back, his breathing picking up slightly, "H-He was... Th-The knife...!"

Asgore stepped in, and gently took his hand. He turned him away from the mess on the floor, and murmured softly. "I know... You protected me, and for that I am thankful. It is alright, Tenebris." A knife to the back wouldn't have killed him, but his back wasn't as heavily armored as his front was most days. "Hancock." He glanced over his shoulder, voice firm and detached. This was not his first time seeing a dead human. He had killed many after all. "Have your men remove the body. We'll clean the mess."

It wasn't Tenebris' first time either, but the initial shock that he had killed the man in what had been a spur of the moment didn't make it any more pleasant.
"As you wish, sir." The commander called his men to now clean up the... unhappy mess.

The king's voice softened. "Thank you." He said gently. That done, he gently resumed checking Tenebris over, and fixed up the cut across his middle that had ruined his turtleneck. "Come, old friend. You need some tea and someplace quiet to relax while I go finish handling things. You may need company too..." But he had things he needed to do- immediately, given the severity of what just transpired.

Tenebris let out a quiet chittering as he nodded to Asgore, going to follow him wherever he was going to lead him, as he would in any other situation as well.

The king took him by the hand covered in blood, and guided him away from the mess in the main hall. With quick, prudent steps, he headed for his house.

Hancock, left behind with the mess, wore a small frown, how many others slipped past his notice... if any monsters died... it would be on his hands... he couldn't allow this to happen...
Aliquam had been blissfully unaware of what happened back at the castle- and the Guards kept it quiet, even into the following morning. As a result, spending time with his wife and children had gone well, as it had for Caeruleus and his fiancé as well.

Aliquam was in the middle of preparing breakfast for the children, whistling a soft tune as he did. It was good to be down in his old home... It brought back memories that would make him smile to himself as they passed.

Toki was gently dissuading Skylar from what he seemed to think was breakfast, while she waited for Aliquam to finish cooking. They’d decided to start weaning the children- starting with breakfast- and their clingy son was having none of it. So, she was keeping him busy with a few toys they’d managed to pack for them.

While Toki distracted Skylar, Honey was at her father’s feet, her little fingers fisted in his pant leg as she stood next to him, peering up at him curiously. Her little mouth worked, and she mimicked his whistle, completely botching the tune, but trying to join her Daddy in making music while he made up something that smelled really good.

With little Honey at his feet, he took extra precautions, but couldn’t resist showing off a little. He would flip the eggs in the pan with skill, a sprinkle of cheese here or a dash of spice there, he made sure Honey could see and enjoy the show. His work soon had two plates with omelet’s and two with a small amount of cheesy eggs.

"Breakfast is up!" He announced. He carefully scooped Honey onto his foot and let her ride as he moved around the kitchen a little, grabbing some silverware before heading to the living room.

Honey didn’t have an issue becoming a leech to his shin, gleeful laughter escaping her as she was carted about.

Toki perked up as her husband came out into the living room with a giggling growth attached to his shin, and gave him a warm look. She took a moment to clear the coffee table, lamenting momentarily that they didn’t have highchairs to feed the twins in, before carefully taking a seat on the floor. This was going to be easier to do while on the floor, rather than on the couch. She crossed her legs, and sat Skylar carefully on a pillow next to her, before reaching up to help him settle the plates on the table. “I see you’ve got a giggling limpet attached to you.”

"She is having the time of her life right now. I'm perfectly content toting her around.” He chuckled.
He set down the plates then lifted his leg and straightened his foot as to have Honey slide right into her pillow-seat. "But when it comes to breakfast, we sit at the table, right Honey-suckle?" He cooed to his daughter, patting her head gently.

"Ya!" Honey beamed up at him, leaning her not-so-little horns into the pats to her head. She wiggled on her pillow, and got onto her knees so she could actually see over the table. A gleeful giggle escaped her, and she sniffed, a happy coo following as she inhaled the smell of the food. “Oooo. Is yum?”

“It sure smells yummy, doesn’t it, Honey?" Toki smiles warmly. “When Daddy cooks, Daddy is an amazing cook.” She ruffled her little skull gently, and scooted the children’s plates closer to them. She glanced up at Papyrus and grinned. “Thanks for making breakfast today, Pap.”

Skylar shuffled in his seat, adopting a similar position like Honey. He looked at his plate of cheesy eggs, and poked at it with his finger.

"My pleasure. Cheesy eggs were one of my favorite meals growing up. Father always added something that made them extra delicious." Aliquam chuckled. He settled down with the intent of feeding Skylar the eggs, since he knew weaning would make him fussy.

Skylar made a face at his father, and poked at the eggs again. The cheese on his finger was licked off, and he contemplated it thoughtfully, before simply poking at the eggs again.

Toki laughed and directed Honey’s fingers to her fork, carefully showing her how to scoop the eggs up towards her teeth before the eager toddler could shove a fist full in with her hand. Bless her little soul, Honey picked up on what she was doing quite quickly, and was soon scooping slightly sloppy forkfuls up into her mouth. Egg and cheese still got everywhere- but slightly less everywhere than with her hands.

Toki took a moment to nibble at her omelet, and then grinned at her husband. “Eggs and cheese go really good together. The only thing that makes them even better is a little bit of salsa.” It was an odd quirk she’d gotten from eating at her grandparent’s when she was younger. They had a lot of different ways of cooking- and she’d adopted a lot of them for herself.

Aliquam fed Skylar with small forkfuls of eggs, playing airplane until he got the hang of it. Though at the statement of salsa, he made a face, "Sounds interesting, but I’ll pass."

Skylar reluctantly ate the eggs, enjoying the taste even if it wasn’t really what he wanted. He eventually just took the fork from his father, and sulkily continued to eat on his own.

Toki patted her son’s skull gently, and gave Quinn an amused smile as she ate. “It’s actually better than it sounds, I promise. Ketchup’s good too, but only in small amounts. Everyone’s got different tastes, I suppose.” She chuckles lightly. She gives him a warm look, and glances down to their sulking son. “Mmm. Skylar’s going to be a pain to wean, I think.” Skylar was close with Toki- which was partly why he was sulking so much.

Honey on the other hand, was close to her mother too, but was very much a daddy’s girl. Said little girl cooed happily, egg stuck to her face, and shoved another forkful in her mouth.

"He’s doing alright to start with, so I have some faith." He agreed, patting his head gently before leaning over to Honey to clean her up a little bit, "You're getting egg everywhere, Honey" He laughed gently.

Honey stuck her tongue out at him and blew a very messy raspberry, before stuffing more egg into her mouth.

Toki was quick to finish scarfing down her omelet, so she could take over for Papyrus. “He is, but he’s probably the sulkiest I’ve ever seen him.” She laughs, nearly choking on her last bite. Once she clears her mouth and her teeth with a quick swipe of her tongue, she leans over to shoo her husband over to eat his meal. “Eat, Pap. Cold eggs are gross, and reheated eggs are even worse. I’ll handle the kiddos.”

"Alright, alright." Once the baton was passed, he settled and began to eat, rumbling quietly as he enjoyed his breakfast.

Toki enjoyed listening to his pleased rumbling sounds, and smiled to herself. She cleaned up Honey’s face, and urged Skylar to finish his eggs, while mopping up his mess as well.

Honey finished her eggs first, and, like most kids, not so sneakily tried to steal a forkful of her father’s omelet just to see what he was eating.

His was a bit more adorned with additional bits and pieces of food, ham, onion, and such of the like. It was also a little more spiced.

Honey nibbled the bite she stole, and made a face, proceeding to pry out the small chunk of onion she’d gotten. The rest of it she ate, but she set the onion on her plate and poked it with her fork. “Icky!” She proclaims.

Toki laughs. “Someone doesn’t like onion.”

”That's usually why you try and put that on the back of your tongue, rather than near the front.” He chuckled gently to Honey.

“Why eat ick?” She tilted her head, and pushed her plate away. She was full, and content to go play now. “Is ick- ick is not eats.”

“Food, honey. Ick is not food.” Toki corrects gently.

“Ick is not food.” Honey obligingly restates.

"Onion is food though." He told her, gently laughing.

Honey looked at the plate, and then at her father, and then back at the plate again. “Nope.” She says firmly. She scoots off, away from the table, to go track down Sobek and play with her summons.

Toki watches her go, and chuckles, carefully mopping up Skylar’s face as her son finishes his eggs. “I don’t think you’re gonna win that one, Quinn. Some kids just don’t like certain foods.” She laughs. “We’re going to find out their likes and dislikes as they start eating more and more solid foods.”

"Fair enough." He chuckled, "But I hope to get points for trying." He then shrugged, before he finished his omelet. It was good while it lasted.

“You do get points,” she chuckles, “but we might have to wait until they’re older before trying to coerce them into trying different types of foods they don’t like.” She quirks a grin to him, and stretches a leg out under the table to brush her toes against his.

He chuckled and sighed, "Agreed, I suppose." he rumbled, "But at least we can cross onions off the list for her."
“True.” She nods. “But might not be completely. I dislike avocado, but I don’t mind it in certain dips, so she might not mind it in certain dishes. We’ll see.” She winks at him lightly.

He nodded, giving a light smirk before he looked to Skylar, "And how are you doing, Skylar?"

Skylar peered up at him and grinded his teeth before chuffing and dropping the fork on the completely empty plate sitting before him. “Neh.” He huffs. “M’ kay.”

"But you cleared your plate." He praised, kissing his head gently, "Good job~"

“Was hungry.” Skylar points out, puffing air between his cheeks as he’s kissed. He crosses his little arms and sulks at his dad, orange eyes peering up at him balefully.

“Solid food will stay with you longer than milk will, baby.” Toki smiles. “You might not even be as hungry come afternoon.” She glances up to her husband and chuckles. “If we give Honey the option, think she’d choose your cooking over mine?” she twitches her chin towards her chest playfully and wiggles her brows.

"I dunno, maybe. She downed her cheesy eggs pretty fast.” he chuckled, shaking his head.

“I thought she was just going to use her little hands and shovel them in.” She laughed gently. “Which is what human kids do, I mean, but I’m glad she picked up on how to use the fork.”

Honey toddled back and babbled something at Skylar, to which the little boy babbled something back, not entirely in an understandable language. The two of them left the table- no doubt to get into mischief- which left Toki and Papyrus alone.

Toki turned to watch the two children go pester the baby summons, and chuckled gently.

Papyrus chuckled as he watched the two children scramble off and he scooted around the table so he could lean against Toki with a happy sigh. He quickly finished his omelet as he did so.

Toki was glad as he joined her on her side of the table, and she offered him a lopsided smirk, before leaning up to kiss his cheek. “They’re going gonna be a handful when they’re a couple years old.” She laughs. “They’re already nearly a year old. I can’t believe time’s flown by so fast.”

"I'm so proud of how far they've come, as well as how far you have come, Toki~" He wrapped his arms around her and nuzzled her with a happy sigh.

“Oh yeah?” She tilted her head to the side and quirked a grin at him. “We’ve all come a long way, Pap. Every one of us.” She nuzzles him back. “We’ve got a long way to go even still. Our family will still grow- we’ve got a life to rebuild, and a home to restart. Just another leg in our journey… heh- I wonder how the twins will do when we decide to have more kids.”

Skylar was awfully clingy- her son would probably take the news of another baby the hardest.

"I'm sure he'd understand," Papyrus chuckles, having picked up on her trail of thought. "We're never going to stop developing in life, and we all have to branch out in our own ways... Find someone to love, to dedicate our future to."

“It’ll be a while before our kids are ready for that.” Toki chuckles. “I’m ready to be a mom again- not quite so to be a grandma.” She nuzzles his shoulder with a soft sound, and trails her hand down to his to play with it quietly. “I think they’ll be okay being big siblings- we just have to make sure they know they’re still loved, even with a new baby coming into the house. Kids can get the silliest thoughts in their heads- and we’ll have to soothe their fears. Heh… but that’s not for a long while.”
She sighs again. Which was a shame, too. She’d have liked to have planned around a year gap between them, like her mother did with her brothers- but… well… Humans Against Monsters complicated plans.

He nodded gently, and then he sighed, "Do you think though... we might wait until this all clears up?" he asked, "I mean... what with everything that's happening..."

“That’s been our plan, yeah.” She nods quietly, and pauses when her horn catches on his shirt. She hadn’t done that in a while- goodness, how embarrassing. Toki takes a moment to disentangle it without ripping his shirt, before glancing up at him. “I just… Don’t know how long we’re going to have to wait.” She says softly. “Wars against terrorism can… Can last a long, long time.” Her murmur is very, very soft. “The twins could be ten or fifteen by then, if things… if they continue to drag out."

"There's no way they could possibly consider tormenting us for that long." He growled quietly, shaking his head. "They can't... It's..."

“It’s wrong and it’s cruel and it’s disgusting… but they will, because they’re determined to see us wiped out… You’re not stupid, Pap.” She nuzzles his shoulder again at his growl. “I know you’ve done reading on human history. They’ll continue to plague us until they’re handled.” She murmurs. “But… I think we may be well on our way to doing that. I watched a little bit of the news while we were in the castle. The humans are upset about what happened to Nara Village.”

She sucks in a deep breath, and then exhales. “Alright, alright. Enough of the downer-talk. We need something a little bit nicer to talk about after everything that’s happened… Hm… how about... When we start to rebuild, how many bedrooms should we plan for in our home? I know a good portion of it is still standing, but it’s going to just be easier to knock it over and start again.”

He sighed and hummed quietly as she changed the topic. "Three at least... unless the idea of bunk beds appeal to you." He murmured.

“Maybe when the kids are, well, kids- but teens aren’t going to want bunk beds, I can tell you that.” They were all going to want their own rooms eventually. Toki sighed thoughtfully, and tilted her head with a soft sound. “Mm… We need to have extra bedrooms for the holidays too. Remember, when I host them, we have all of my family over too. And that’s a large number of people- who can all bunk together, yes, but you can’t fit seven men, their spouses, our nieces and nephews, and my mother and father all in our living room.” She ground her teeth thoughtfully, and sighed, scrubbing her hand down her face. “I’m thinking upwards of seven or eight. I mean, worst comes to happen, we convert them into different rooms until we need them for bedrooms. Like… a music room for you to teach the kids to play instruments in, or a playroom specifically for them to play in so we don’t have toys everywhere or something.”

"You’re right, that would be smart to consider, not to mention refugees... Heh... You know, this reminds me." He chuckled as he leaned back. "Father and Caeruleus, a few years back, would talk about a great mansion. I never understood much but the way they spoke about it was as if they had lived there.” He murmured.

Toki laughs softly. “I doubt our house would be a mansion- even if it is sized for someone of Asgore’s height to walk in. But huh… Maybe they did before you guys moved out to this place here in Snowdin?”

He hummed quietly, "Indeed... I just remembered and thought it would be interesting, but really, a mansion would take years to build, and forever to maintain.” He chuckled as he gave her a squeeze.
Toki laughed lightly and squeezed him back. She wiggled her fingers up under the edge of his shirt, and tickled them lightly over the edge of his pelvic crest. “Forever to maintain indeed.” She laughs. “We’d have to hire a maid. Keeping our old house clean was a full time job in itself for someone of my size. My trusty stepladder and I still managed to get everything clean though. What I couldn’t get, my bees could.” Speaking of bees… “Were you serious about helping me start up my apiary again?”

“What? Yes, of course!” Papyrus squirmed a little at the touch to his pelvis, but didn’t let that deter him from turning a bit to face his wife. "Did you think I was kidding? We can raise this new apiary together, in memory of your first colony.” He told her with a smile.

“Well… no.” She ground her teeth quietly and rubbed her fingers together. “But in the grand scheme of things, I wasn’t sure if you’d said it simply to help me calm down, or if you’d meant it or… I dunno.” Her hands retreat to her lap, and she kneads them into her knees. “It was probably a stupid question to ask- I’m sorry. I’d really like to raise an apiary with you.” She smiles to him quietly.

He chuckled and kissed her cheek gently, "I love you, Toki. You're really something perfect for me." He purred, "I would love to raise an apiary with you~"

"Good." She smiled at the kiss. “’Cause I’d love to raise one with you too. Heh- you can help me put the hives together. Kohaku helped me put my last ones together. The only one I put together on my own was the one that had the da-RNED leak in it all the time, and grew that funky moss in the bottom.” She laughed softly.

Toki smiled up at him and leaned up to kiss him warmly. “House first though- can’t have builder’s being bothered by bringing in new bees.”

"Agreed." He laughed gently, giving her another squeeze as he returned the warm kiss. "It would be rather rude for us to do that to the poor construction workers."

“It would.” Toki shifts a little and leans into him with a content sigh. She collects his hand and rolls it over, quietly looking at his fingers for a moment, and tracing her digits gently over where his wedding ring sits. She clinks her ring gently with his and chuckles softly. “You know,” she says, “I’m surprised I haven’t melted my ring by accident with the number of times I’ve lit myself on fire while training with you guys.”

"You think I didn't take the nature of your elemental magic into account?" He tutted, tapping her skull a few times, "Toki, Toki, Toki... I took great precaution into preserving your ring, just to make sure it survived as long as you did."

She chuckled, and played lightly with his hand again. “That you did. It makes me happy. I’d be really sad if it melted- and probably sore too, since it would melt into my joints.”

He chuckled quietly and nodded. "Of course... I made it so that would never happen." He purred as he kissed her cheek a few times.

Toki broke into a soft bout of laughter at the peppering of kisses to her cheek, and her eye lights twinkled a warm green up at him. “Well, my bones might be a little prettier if they were gold-plated~” she teased lightly.

He laughed at that. "Probably can't afford that much.” Papyrus’ amusement was palpable in his words. "But maybe... a gold tooth or... horn?” He tweaked one of her horns lightly and flashed her an amused grin.

She laughed. "Can you see me with a gold plated tooth? I'm not even sure how that would work.
They're tightly fit as is." Anything else on them just wouldn't work. Her mouth wouldn’t be able to properly close. She sighed and nuzzled him softly, before winking at him. "I could rock gold horns though. I'd match Stag."

Her phone began to ring, and Toki groaned. Laziness abound, she used a summoned bee to bring it to her, before flipping it open and hitting answer, turning it on speaker. Anything they had to say could be said between the both of them.

"That would be really cool." He chuckled again, and then went quiet to let her have her call.

"I must admit, I'm surprised... it was not even twelve hours before the humans were expelled from the underground. One if them within a body bag, I might add..." The voice on the line was calm and low in tone.

Unmistakable.

The mirth was gone from her voice in an instant, even as confusion flitted briefly through her mind. Humans? What humans? Did he mean the guards the governments had sent? Had something happened? "Cruelty," Her voice was flat. "I don't know what you're talking about with humans, but how dare you call me after what you did to Nara Village. What do you want this time? You only ever call when you're planning something bad."

He chuckled, and then a soft hum was made from his vocal chords, before he spoke up again. "I take it then that you are not with the king and his... company... Oh indeed you have missed quite a bit, Kindness..."

"I wasn't at the castle. I'm not at the castle." She corrects, a glance flicking to Papyrus. She silently motions for him to use his phone and text. They need to know what the hell happened at the castle. "I know a couple of the humans looked shady. I'm guessing you had plants?"

He nodded and pulled out his phone to text his father, doing that while Cruelty once again released a chuckle.

"Clever girl. Though, not clever enough, I must only wonder now who has blood on their hands... Could it be the King found one of my men and executed him without hesitation... Or was it the black-blooded creature who seems to have hatred sewed into his very being...?" He mocked, a grin evident in his tone that shone where physical appearance could not.

"I've killed too." She comments sharply, trying to distract him from commenting on her father in law or the king. She did this know who had killed the human- or what he did to deserve it... But Toki didn't want to listen to it. "Back when you schemed to try and take my children from me. I ripped his throat out with my teeth and watched him drown in his own blood. If one of your men was threatening us again, here under the Mountain, then I applaud them for doing so. I am through with your games."

"Ah, but there's no fun without games, now is there..." he taunted, "Games are what make things interesting, Kindness... And the games are not over yet."

There was silence only for a moment, before he chuckled again.

"I've taken it you met my little... runaway."

"Koshinu." Toki hummed in response. "Oh yeah. We met him. He's in Federal Custody. But, he sure helped us nail something close to two hundred of your little minions. Quite an impact on your little cult." She grimaces, digits tightening against the table.
"Or so you think, my sweet Kindness." He purred quietly, "The runaway rat may be safe for now, but I am not pleased with him thinking he has escaped me... The runaway mouse never knows when a promising offering brings round the metal bar to snap his neck." A growl was underlying his voice... that was a definite sign of Cruelty's anger.

Well, at least Toki could have that much, hearing that there was indeed a complication for Cruelty in his sick game.

"Better the metal bar that is quick and efficient than the poison in the nest that slowly and painfully kills and leaves you a frothing corpse." She retorts. His anger did please her a little bit. It always made her a little happy when something got under his skin. "Cut the crap. No more of your games-you can't get to us under here, but we're not going to be here forever. The world is rallying against you now, Cruelty. They saw what you did to Nara Village- and they're angry. They're out for your blood." She says. "It's a matter of time before you and your game comes to an end. What did you want when you called me? Just to taunt me and gloat at me?"

He chuckled quietly, "No, that's not all. I'm calling to give you... well... let's just call it... a challenge. The final challenge, if you will."

"... Final challenge?" She inquired, eye lights flicking to Papyrus again.

"Indeed. I've been playing nice, but it's clear you are being underestimated. Well... Why not we settle this... Mano-e-Monstrosity. Within the ruins of your precious village, bring your greatest and your strongest, and in return, I will bring mine. I will show you the true strength and might behind my organization."

"Are you going to be there?" She questions sharply. Toki briefly mentally apologizes to Koshinu in advance for this, but... "Or are you going to hide behind the skirts of your little terrorist groupies like Cowardice would?"

"Now that would be cruel wouldn't it?" He teased, "No, my dear... I will be there."

Did... Did Cruelty just fucking pun at her? What... What the fuck? She was flabbergasted for all of a minute, before she growled. "Fine. Nara Village. When? It takes two hours to drive there, but you probably know that by now with your nasty stalking habits."

"Seven hearts was what the king needed. Seven days is what I will give you." He told her, "The hour need not matter, but be there on the seventh day. Oh... and Kindness... One last thing."

"I'll be there before noon. Make sure you're not late." Noon was... Noon was an acceptable time, she thought. She swallowed, and made a noise to show she was listening. "What is it now, Cruelty?"

"Consider it a favor to me, as well as yourself. Show up, and leave the police out of it- I have no qualms about killing them, and if you do not show up, I will bring the mountain down on top of all of you... and truly, that is no satisfying way to bring forth my victory."

Silence reined for a moment.

"See you in a week." And he hung up on her.

The silence of the phone was punctuated only by the twins laughing in the background as Honey heckled Sobek, and the bird wanted nothing to do with it.

Toki on the other hand sat there, staring at the phone, and could feel her breathing quickening. Oh god. Oh god, oh god she'd actually done it, she'd actually practically made a fucking date with him to have a final showdown like some goddamned old school movie. Oh god people were going to die and she was going to die and if she didn't show up he was going to bring down the mountain on them and then everyone else was going to die-

It didn't take much to realize that the shorter skeleton was having a silent panic attack.

As soon as the line went dead, Aliquam advanced, wrapping his arms around Toki and pulling her close, "Toki..." he spoke her name quietly, but directly into the side of her skull to get her attention.

It took her several breaths before she was able to muster more than just a panicked internal monologue. Her bones were practically cold to the touch, her magic sucking inwards as she leaned into him, flighty panic bringing her fingers to cling to him. "O-oh god, Quinn, what are we going to do?" She stuttered. "People are going to be killed."

He held her tighter, hushing her gently. "Toki... I know... I know... but... we're going to lose people... but... we're finally going to see him... aren't we... he'll be there..."

"What if he isn't there?" She manages to gasp quietly, trying not to be loud and draw attention from the twins. She shudders, wondering if her husband had told his father about the call. "What if it's just a trap and we all... We all die...? Frisk can... Can load, but... How will we know it's him?"

"The evil that will resonate from his soul will tell us... Perhaps Father will recognize him..." He murmured.

Tokiko glanced at him and shakily nodded. She trembled in his grasp, limbs shivering against his. "We'll... We'll know... We'll figure it out." She sniffs quietly. "We need to tell the King. We're... Going pretty much to War in a week at noon." She hiccups an almost hysterical laugh. She didn't even have armor for going to war.

He nodded, "I'll let him know... No doubt he or father will be calling soon enough" he murmured, "Have faith, Toki... we are strong because we work together. As one. Because Monsterkind are family. Together to the end, whether you are born a monster..." he cupped her cheek, "Or you warm up to it."

"I do have faith." She whispers softly, and tucks her head into his hand. She snorts at his remarks, and lightly socks him in the shoulder. "But I accepted. I just... I just signed the death certificates for anyone who gets dusted while we're out there. It... It could be me, it could be you, it could be Grillby or Sans or Tenebris or any number of monsters. And... It'll be my fault " her voice cracks faintly. "I'm not... I'm not a soldier. I'm not a fighter. I... I fight off of instincts I've had only since I became what I am now. I... I just hope it's enough..."

Glad to see he could spark her sense of humor. He smiled and clacked her head gently, "We will teach you. You have learned much, but we will keep training you." he promised, "And even if we do perish, we will never die." He promised her, now tilting her chin up to kiss her properly.

She met his kiss warmly, shifting in her seat so she could face him better. She shivered at his touch, and her eye lights lingered on his bones. Even if they did perish, they would never die... Because of the loads Frisk could do. Toki swallow softly and nuzzled him. " Might want to get me some armor of some kind. Since, you know, my defense is rubbish once I go into attack mode."

He nodded gently. "Indeed, it's a wise idea." Aliquam agreed. “Armor would do you some good."

She sighed, and scrubbed a hand down her face, before shoving to her feet. “We've got things we need to do today.” Toki murmurs to her husband, having used his shoulder to heft herself up. “Sitting around panicking isn’t going to get anything done. I need armor and… to practice moving in said armor. Any idea where to get me some armor? We also need to tell Asgore and Tenebris everything and figure out an emergency plan, and… And what we’re going to do with the twins.” She swallows sharply. “I can’t stay behind to stay with them… and I know there’s no chance you’re going to let me go out there without you, is there?”

"Yes, I have a few ideas… It will allow me an upgraded set as well… Father and his Majesty will know everything by day's end… and..." he sighed and nuzzled her, "The children will be safe... But that means no- I’m not going to leave you to face him without me."

“I didn’t think you’d stay behind.” She quirked a faint, soft smile, and offered him a hand up. “We don’t have any time to waste, my love. We’ve got a timer. Seven days from now, at noon, we’ve got… Well… a date with the devil, pretty much. I would love to hear your ideas on the way to the castle though."

He nodded and got up with her help, then offering his hand to her to hold. "We best be swift, then." He rumbled softly.

She nodded, taking his fingers momentarily to kiss his hand, and then let him go. “Let me get the twins. Stag can watch the critters, but I don’t trust him to watch the kids yet.” Not when they could charm the deer out of pretty much whatever they wanted.

Toki was quick to go get the twins, hefting them up into her arms as she returned to him. They fussed at her huffily. She looked at him. “Think Fuku would mind babysitting while we… talk war stuff?” A war room was no place for children.

He nodded gently, letting her get the children while he gave them a call.

Fuku answered the phone on the second ring. “Hello, this is Fuku speaking. Can I help you?”

"Hey, Fuku. Something’s come up and Toki and I need to head to the castle.” His voice was firm, though polite. “It’s serious and we would rather leave the twins in good hands, than take them with us for this. Are you available to watch them?” He inquired.

“Uh… Sure? I mean, I’m watching Solstice too, but she’s in a sling on my chest, so I can manage the twins. Go ahead and bring them by- do I need to send Sans and Dad to the castle? They’re, uh… upstairs,” Her voice briefly edged into awkward, because she knew what they were up to, and didn’t want to allude to it, “but I can go get them, no biggie.”

"Toki, will we want my brother and Grillby to accompany us?" He looked to his mate when the question arose.

Toki paused, and pursed her teeth as she juggled two squirming toddlers. “No. If we don’t have to involve them, I don’t want to.” Cae had a new-ish baby- one that was still quite firmly attached to him- he didn’t need to be out fighting. “You can tell them something’s up when they’re done with… whatever activities they’re up to.” She was close enough to hear that much over the phone.

Poor Fuku.

Fuku heard Toki, and hummed. “Alright. Go ahead and teleport over then. The grill’s closed, so it’s just us- tables are cleared out, so you’re not going to hit anything if you just come right inside.”

"Alright, thank you, Fuku, see you soon.” He told her before he hung up.

Toki shuffled closer to Pap, and sighed softly. She pressed shaky kisses to the twins, and tucked them tightly to her chest, before glancing up to him once more. “Alright. Ready to go when you are, love.”

He nodded and held her close before he flared his magic, teleporting them both to the bar.

They landed successfully, as Fuku had promised, and he smiled at the younger girl as they arrived. "Hello, Fuku."

Fuku was gently bouncing a sleeping Solstice in her arms, and steadfast ignoring the noises from upstairs. She smiled at them pleasantly, and took in Toki’s pinched features before sweeping in to kidnap the children from her. “Hey, guys.” She smiles at them gently. “Whatever’s going on, I’m sure you two can manage- I’ll keep an eye on your kids as often as you need me to, okay?”

“We’re going to need it often.” Toki says softly. “For the next seven days, at least.”

“Seven days?” Fuku looks curiously up at Papyrus for explanation.

He had to contemplate carefully on what to say for a moment. "Something has arose that requires us to be at our best... and in order to be, we need to make the time we have count."

“The time you have count…?” Fuku frowns. “You sound like you have a time limit or something.”

“We do.” Toki says quietly. “Listen, Fuku, I can’t explain right now. Maybe… maybe later. But… Not right now. Thank you for watching them though.”

“Sure, Toki, it’s no problem. You’re family, you know- I don’t mind.” She lets the twins down to play, and nods. “If you’ve got limited time, please, go ahead and go. I’ll watch them for you.”

"Thank you.” Aliquam smiled at the girl. Then, he turned to Toki and set a hand on her shoulder, before teleporting them out.

The landing in the castle was rough- as multiple teleporting tended to be- but they made it. Toki took a moment to link her arm with his, and nuzzle his shoulder gently. “We can do it.” She murmurs softly. “Together.” The little civilian beekeeper, and the co-captain of the Nara-Village guard- they could do it. She hoped so anyways. “Now… where’s your dad and the king- ah, I smell tea. Follow the tea.”

He chuckled at her immediate recognition of how to find the eldest of the Gaster clan and his mate, and was quick to follow her.

In the tearoom, Tenebris was sitting with his hands folded in his lap. His tea was beside him, left untouched, on a small table, but his eyes were closed, his face nuzzled into his turtleneck.

He was tired after his blood loss, as well as his age taking this time of any to catch up with him, even if would be just a short-term condition.

His wounds from the assault were mostly healed, though still woefully tender and wrapped up gently, and the blood cleaned from his tail, which was now curled up behind his feet.

Asgore not far from him, the kind king exhausted from having to deal with the fallout that came from refuting help from the governments- and for having taken the blame for killing the human. He took the fall for it- had to summon his trident to prove he could have made the killing blow. Either way- it had been a mess.

The king had his ankles crossed, with a fresh cup of tea in hand as he stared down blankly at the tea. One of his ears twitched, picking up the sound of bones moving down the hall. “Tenebris,” he murmurs, “One of your children is coming. Possibly two.” It didn’t matter which skeleton it was- Sans and Papyrus were his sons, and Toki was basically his daughter.

The blaster beast's eyes opened a crack as Papyrus appeared in the doorway, but his eyes closed again as he let out a quiet rumble, "Hello Papyrus... Toki..." He murmured.

Toki frowned at the lethargic look about her father in law, and stepped past Papyrus to go to him. She brushed her fingers faintly against the bandages, trailing her eye lights over them quietly. “Well, I guess he was partly right and that it was you who found the human.” Toki murmured softly to herself, and pulsed her magic gently against his arms. His skin felt cold- likely from blood loss- so the warmth of her magic likely felt good. “Hello, Papa, Asgore.”

“Toki, Papyrus.” Asgore dips his head, and glances at the taller of the two skeletons. “What brings you to the castle so soon?” He hadn’t caught her softly muttered words with the distance between himself and Tenebris.

Tenebris rumbled out a soft, happy sound as the warmth enveloped him and he leaned into it, purring quietly.

"We... got a call from Cruelty..." Aliquam started hesitantly.

Like ripping a bandage off, it was best to do it quick. “Seven days from now, at noon in the ruins of Nara Village, we’re going to face off.” Toki says. “He’s going to be there, with all of his men.”

Asgore tensed, and rocked up in his seat. His teacup was nearly spilled as he set it on the table. “What.”

“Exactly as I said. He gave me seven days, or he said he’s going to bring the mountain down on top of us. I don’t know how he’ll do it, but… I don’t want to find out.” Toki wasn’t sure he wouldn’t stoop to dropping suicide bombers in from the holes in the tops of the Underground. A big enough bomb… all of the caves would collapse.

Toki pursed her teeth, and continued to warm her father in-law’s arms, trying to hide the tremble to her fingers.

Tenebris had stopped purring, and now had a worried frown on his face. "In ultima pugna..." he spoke quietly, "He's finally decided it's going to end... I just hope we have what it takes to beat him..."

“That’s what I’m worried about too.” Toki murmured. “Look. None… none of you are required to come with. It’s… Well, it’s pretty obvious that a lot of people are going to die if they come with me.” She rubs her fingers lightly over his arms. Toki won’t meet his gaze. “Pap is going to help me get some armor, so I have some protection. I’m going to end up fighting, and… Well, my defense goes to shit, and I’d rather not die so easily.”

“You won’t go alone,” Asgore murmurs. “I will be joining you- as will any of the Royal guard who so chooses to come with.” He would not make it an order- but an option? Yes. He’d give that option to all of the monsters. “The castle armory hasn’t been used in a long time- but it is still functional, and still has armor from the last war. Still in good condition too.” It was taken care of- polished and checked on weekly- so he knew quite well the condition of the metal. The great king rose to his feet, and rubbed a hand back through his mane, arm bumping one of his horns. “Seven days at noon. Alright. I’ve worked with less.”

Tenebris lifted his gaze as Asgore stood up, and he let out a quiet chatter, "I will come as well..." He insisted, "I will not sit idly by while you face this threat."

“You don’t have to come.” Toki said gently. Her fingers rubbed lightly on his arms. “Cruelty... He’s probably going to... do a lot of bad things, and mess with your mind if you’re there. He likes playing games- and he’ll play you like a fiddle if he can, Papa.”

Asgore sighed through his nose, and rubbed his forehead again. “If you are coming, you will be coming in armor, old friend. I do believe I still have your old suit- though we might need to make some adjustments. You were much younger then- I think you have filled out some in muscle tone.”

“You’d know better than most, huh Asgore?” Toki manages to joke lightly.

The king flushes under his fur. “Must you tease me like you tease Tenebris?”

“No one escapes my terrible humor; not even a King.”

Tenebris snorted at that and he leaned up to nip Toki’s horn. "You're awful." He chuckled. "But I will be there when it comes time to fight... If he wishes to play me like a fiddle, he better be ready to have the devil holding the bow.” He growled.

Toki didn’t flinch at the nip, and instead, simply quirked a brow ridge at him. “You know, I can’t even nip you back, or you’ll be missing flesh.” She flexes her teeth like crab legs at him, and then settles them back into their stationary position like usual again.

The motion of her teeth unnerved Asgore just slightly, and he shifted awkwardly. “That was... creepy, Toki. Anyways, up, all of you. We’re going to the armory- and then we’re going to open up the war room again. I’ll call my generals- we need to plan what to do, and set up a contingency plan for the children of the underground.”

At his bidding, Toki nodded. “Alright, alright.” She stood, ruffling her hand over the smooth plane of Tenebris’ skull, and lightly pushing his head with a playfully affectionate shove. “You sure you’re alright to be moving, Papa?”

"It was my arm that was shredded, not my legs.” He rumbled, "I'll be fine.”

“Blood loss.” She flicks his forehead lightly. “I was once a meaty flesh creature too- blood loss is not a fun thing. Last time I experienced it, I was hurling it up by the liter. If you’re not up to it, you need to rest. The wrists and stuff bleed easy.”

"If I’m going to let a little blood loss slow me down, what good am I on the battlefield?” He insisted, rubbing his forehead as he slowly got up, chuffing at her stubbornly.

She chuffed right back at him, but moved back over to her husband. She linked arms quietly with Papyrus, and nuzzled her forehead to his upper arm. “If you say so, Papa.”

Asgore hummed slightly, and motioned for the three to follow him, before slipping past the skeleton duo. He padded out the door, and headed down the hall, quietly summoning his generals with his communicator as he did so.

Toki watched the king slip past, and nudged Papyrus to lead on, offering her other arm to Tenebris so they could make a chain, if he so wished to join in.
Tenebris rumbled quietly, though with his dominant arm still rather sore, he carefully offered his tail instead. Quinn chuckled quietly though and indeed took her other arm in the chain, aiming to play her light-hearted game if but for a moment.

It would likely be their last chance to have a truly light hearted moment- and Toki wanted them to have as many as they could… there was no telling what would happen in seven days. She did know, however, that monsters were going to die.

She just didn’t know which monsters would perish- Monsters, or monsters in human skin.

So she brightened up a smile for the both of them, and the trio followed the king towards the armory, to get fitted up for the days to come.
Chapter 89

Chapter Notes

Silverwing Notes: The final countdown approaches, you can hear the seconds playing down in your head until the moment they come face to face with the fucker that’s ruining their lives...

But hey, why stress about it when you can fuck your wife, innit that right PAP!

Enjoy the chapter folks, some lighthearted sex between our happy couple before the fateful day that is very much nigh <3

Strider Notes: They have prepared, though we don’t get to see it all. OWO we get to have some sweet love. This is an NSWF chapter- also there’s some soul stuff thrown in, so that’s something to note too. ;3

ON THAT NOTE. It has come to our attention that there are several under-aged readers reading TOTU. This story was not intended for minors. However, given that we can’t stop you from reading it, and we’re not going to discourage you from reading it given that the smut content is fairly low per chapter count in general, all we ask is that if you are UNDER the legal age of 18 that you please skip any and all smut that you come across. Neither Silver nor myself can continue to write if either of us are in jail, and neither of us want to go to it, so if you respect us as the authors, you’ll abide by that. So… that’s that.

And we do have a tumblr account- you can find us here.
http://sinsoftheunderground.tumblr.com/

All of the Nara Village Guard, and the Royal guard, were going to go down to the village. Several of the civilians had stepped forwards as being ex-military. As in pre-war ex-military; and they’d armored up once more, offering to stay behind underground with those who didn’t want to fight, or those who couldn’t. Grillby was coming out to fight- as was Caeruleus.

There was an influx of recruits into the Guard, however- all fresh and green, and eager to help bring down Cruelty once and for all. The greenest of the Guard were remaining behind with Toriel to keep the children safe.

Toriel was taking charge of the children of the underground- and they were going to escape through the Ruins of the old city if things were to go sour. Honey and Skylar were also going to be entrusted into her care- as it was unfair to leave Fuku saddled with a fairly new baby, and with two mischievous twins- but Papyrus and Toki had their children with them for one more night, to spend what time they could with them no matter how the following day happened to go.

They had a plan to handle Cruelty.

Asgore had the containers used to hold souls. Toki wasn’t privy to all the details on it but frankly, she didn’t want to know; sometimes there were things better left unknown. The plan was to kill Cruelty and whoever was closest when he died simply needed to encase his soul in their magic and hold it together and stabilized in time to bring it to one of the capsules- and then he’d be caged, and unable to ‘die’, for the rest of eternity.

Toki wasn’t… Sure on the idea. It seemed a little too much like what he had done to them- trapping them under the mountain, and leaving them there to rot. But it had brought a unanimous vote from everyone else- save her- so there wasn’t much that she could do to fight it.

But she was left thinking about other options- and Toki had an idea of what to do, if she could get it to work. She kept it to herself though- it wasn’t likely to be a popular idea, and Papyrus wouldn’t allow her to go out to fight if he had any idea about what she was possibly planning.

Alongside the contingency plan, everyone now had full suits of armor- including Toki. Her armor wasn’t very heavy- as they didn’t have any fire-enchanted armor to work with, outside of Asgore’s set, and Toriel’s old set from back when she had been Queen. But, the ex-Queen’s armor would not fit Toki by a long shot- not just around the shoulder’s either. The goat woman was broad all over.

Toki’s armor set off to the side, with Quinn’s armor, and well out of the way of the children getting hold of it and the weapons that had been installed inside. The last thing they needed was for an accident to happen- the children didn’t need to get hurt.

But the armor was well out of the way- so there was no risk.

Toki shifted on the floor and stroked her fingers gently along Honey’s skull, smiling as she stretched out. Skylar was astride her back- the position familiar in a strangely distant way- with their daughter switching between playing with her horns, and with trying to coax all of Papyrus into sitting on the floor with her instead of up on the couch where he was perched in the most awkward position possible.

Aliquam was happy where he was though. He was more or less resting his head on Toki’s ass, his eyes half-lidded and occasionally closing before he’d take a deep breath and open his eyes again. "Toki..." he murmured, before he sighed and nuzzled his head back into her again. "I couldn’t imagine having done any of this without you... You're so wonderful... an asset I never want to be without..."

His head was pretty much on her ass, and with leaving his part of his body on the couch, it was an awkward position, but obviously he was comfortable. She hummed softly as he spoke, and then smiled softly. "An asset, huh?" She chuckled. "I know I wouldn't be here without you. And... Well, they wouldn't be here without either of us." She rubs Honey’s chin, and then laughs as their daughter huffs.

Honey gets up and toddles over to flop across his chest, squirming up so she could sit on him like how Skylar was sitting astride their mothers back.

He chuckled at that, and tickled Honey’s little feet. He was rewarded with a gleeful giggle. "That's very true... but things happened, and now we have two wonderful children. Which is bound to increase as soon as you get a case of baby fever~" He teased.

"I have baby fever now," she laughs. "But... It's not the time." Not with... Not with them facing Cruelty tomorrow. That was a somber thought. "Maybe... maybe after tomorrow... So," she glances back at him lightly, and grins. "What about if you get baby fever? Though you're probably too young for it." She teases lightly. He might have her on physical age- since Monsters aged slower, particularly boss monsters- but she was still technically older than him in some ways.

Honey pats Papyrus’ face and chirps at him. "Daddy! Love you."
"I love you too, Honey." He kissed her hands, and then smiled up at her, before looking back to Toki out of the corners of his sockets. "Perhaps in the future, but my mind is elsewhere at this time... something that has more precedence over having any more children." He shifted until he could embrace them into his protecting arms, "Keeping safe what I already have to hold and cherish; my beautiful wife, and my priceless children." He purred.

Skylar squeaks as he scoops him off of Toki, but doesn't fuss as he's snuggled into his dad's arms. He croons, and pats his arm, nuzzling him gently. "Daddy squish!" He chuffs softly.

Honey giggled, all too pleased to be close with her daddy.

Toki chuckles gently, and rolls so she can sit, and actually pillow his head in her lap and not on her ass. She sits up, flexing 'muscles' she didn't have months ago, and strokes a hand over his skull as she peers down at him. "Once we get this handled, and we're all back home... I think it would be nice..." She smiles softly. "The twins will be safe. Toriel will keep them safe, no matter what happens." She rubs his cheekbone gently. "I don't want you taking hits for me though, Pap. I've got armor for a reason." She hums gently.

He looked up at her as her hands came to rest on his cheeks, and he gave a small smile, "Forgive me in advance if I end up taking one or two smacks for you. A mate has his protective urges..."

"So you do," she smiles gently down to him. "But who's the one who has the absurdly high defense stat when not in attack mode?" She rubbed his bones gently, loving him gently as she savored his touch. If all went well, they'd get to do this again and again... If not... If not, one of them, or both, might be dead. She swallows, and her eye lights shiver in their sockets. "I want you to promise me that whatever happens, you'll be okay and stay okay for the twins. If I promise to always come back to you, you have to promise to be okay. Can you do that for me? Please?"

He looked up at her, and then he smiled, "I swear it. Nothing will bring me down... I could lose a leg... my arm... My entire body, and I would still manage to kiss them good night every night..." He promised, before he made a contemplative face. "Though now I wonder, how well can one make pasta when you've only your tongue to use..."

"Good." She smiles gently, and kissed his forehead. "You're a good man, Pap. A good man, and one heck of a good father. The twins will be safe with you no matter what. Not that I plan on going anywhere." She chortles. "I plan on staying around for a long time."

At his comment on using his tongue, she laughs. "Oh goodness. I dunno. Use it to summon a couple bones, and make yourself a body out of summoned bones?"

"I'd be like one of those silly skeletons from those old black and white cartoons I found.” He laughed.

She laughed. "You would. It would be silly. But I could see you doing it." She leans down and nuzzles him again, a soft sound leaving her. "I love you." She says firmly. "I love every part of you from your silly toes to your silly nose."

"I love you too. And I couldn't find myself happier than I am now with you." He purred, nuzzling her before he gave her a gentle kiss.

She met his kiss gently and smiles warmly. Toki gives him a fondly affectionate look, and nuzzles his skull again. "I think I could." She admits softly. "I'll be happier when Cruelty is handled." She still didn't agree with sealing him away... But she had an idea. One that might... Might possibly work. "I'll be happier when he's handled and gone and we can be out from under his threat."
"And be under the blue sky instead." He chuckled quietly

"Yeah." She smiles wanly, and kisses his forehead.

Honey yawns on her father's chest. She rubs her little eye socket. "Daddy. Tired." She pouts.

"Looks like it's bed time for the rugrats." Toki smiles softly.

"Indeed so." He braced the children to his chest with one arm, and then carefully rolled backwards onto his knees, and then stood upright. His lack of horns allowed him to do that motion- if his dear wife tried it, she'd get her skull stuck in the ground and have to be pried out.

Toki helped to boost him upright, and followed him upstairs as he took them to the bedroom. Toriel would be by in the morning to take them- and Toki had all intentions of joining the twins and sleeping cuddled to her babies later- but she wasn't ready to sleep yet.

Skylar yawned, and scrubbed his face on his dad's chest, before nuzzling his chin. Honey did the same, and both twins cuddled together as he settled them down on the bed, and got them tucked in.

Toki watched with a smile, and waited by the door to let them have a moment.

The two were tucked gently into the bedding, in their own little spots as they usually went.

Quinn kissed their heads gently, a loving look in his eyes to match the smile on his face as he bid them goodnight.

"I love you two so very... very much" he purred,

"Love you 'oo," Skylar croons sleepily, and snuggles into his sister. His orange eye lights, so like his father's, disappear behind his bone lids as his sockets close, and he settled into sleep.

The blue haze of honey lingers a little bit longer, but ultimately she too begins to succumb. She doesn't give him any verbal words, but the feelings over the emotional bonds are thick with what she wants to say but is too tired to try and think of the words for. Her eye lights blink out as she settles to sleep, little arms clinging tightly to Skylar.

He slowly moved away, smiling warmly. Her silence was more than enough to him...

Toki smiled warmly and waits for her husband to back out, so they don't wake the children.

As he backed out of the room, and quietly closed the door, he sighed, and then smiled at Toki.

As the door closed, Toki hooked her fingers gently in his, stroking her digits gently along his finger bones, before tugging him with her down the stairs. She let him go down ahead of her- let him reach the bottom of the stairs first- and then had him turn around so she could use the stairs to stand at an even height with him.

Toki curled her arms around his shoulders, and pressed a warm kiss to his teeth, simply basking in his presence and staring at him. She quietly ingrained him into her memory, rolling her fingers tenderly over the vertebrae along the back of his neck, and sliding one hand up to cup the strong line of his cheekbone.

“So,” she murmurs gently, “We have some time to ourselves. What do we want to do?”

He stroked her cheek gently, and then he smiled at her weakly. "If it's... alright... I have one thing in mind~"
The weak smile pulls one of her own, and she cups his face to bolster him into a slightly less weak smile. “Oh?” She leans into him a little bit, enjoying the boost to her height the stairs give her, and gives him a warm look. “What did you have in mind, my love?”

Her bolstering gave him a more confident smile and he chuckled quietly, before he let his hands wander to her sides, caressing gently. "I want to feel you... take the most of our last night of peace before the final battle..."

“Feel me?” She inquires lightly, and tilts her skull. She lets out a soft, pleased sound as his hands wander over her sides. Toki grins slowly and wiggles a brow. “Does feeling me entail clothes?” She teases lightly.

"More accurately, the lack thereof~" He purred gently.

She blushed brightly, and chuckled. “Only if you strip too. If I’m going bare bones, I want to be able to enjoy you too. You have such a lovely little tailbone~” She waggles her brows.

He blushed a little at the mention of his tailbone and it pulled a quiet 'nyeh heh heh heh' from him. Though he didn't really play hard to get as he lifted a hand to tug up her shirt slightly, Papyrus gave her a flirty grin all the same. "Deal~"

Toki lifted her arms willingly, her shirt sliding up over her skull easily. She had a bra on- and she didn’t waste time having him remove it for her. Her arms twisted behind her, and fisted in the material at the back so she could unhook it, and then carefully undid it. “You know,” She comments to him with a coy grin as her bra fell away and let the deep green weight of her ecto body’s breasts fall forth, “I honestly can’t wait for my breasts to go away. I miss being able to lie flat on my front. Soon though, once the twins are weaned.”

Boobs were nice and fun- but she liked being able to lay flat on her front. Men did have that going for them, she supposed. She never realized what she was missing out on until she actually got to do it- and then when she couldn’t anymore… Well, she definitely missed sleeping flat on her front.

Once completely topless, Toki didn’t waste time in reaching out, sliding slim fingers under the edge of his turtleneck. She eased it up, and leaned down to press a kiss to one of his lower ribs, gently teasing her teeth across the bone, just to see him squirm.

The gesture did indeed give a reaction and Aliquam shivered as he let a groan slide past his teeth. "Hhnnn..." His hands traveled to her own ribs, stroking over them gently as his gaze met hers. "Heh... I know you'll be happy they're gone, but part of me will miss them.” He teased.

Toki shivered as his fingers ghosted over her ribs. The long healed cracks from the ill-fated shotgun incident had left no remnants of scars- but the ribs were always very sensitive. A soft gasp is tugged from her teeth, and her sockets close, a pleased sound leaving her. Her fingers gently grasp his lower floating ribs, and she strokes them, fingers curling along the insides. She lets the sharper points of her fingers scrape lightly along the insides, stimulating as she goes, and she purrs for him, a wide grin crawling up her face. “Mm... Yeah, but they can come back any time we want.” She grins and gently nips at his shoulder. “I can summon them- they just wont be all leaky, or permanent.”

He chuckled at that, "True. Very true.” He agreed, before he nuzzled her with a few appreciative kisses.

Toki smiled and peppered him with a few soft kisses. “Won’t be permanent- unless you knock me up again.” She teases playfully. Her finger swirls gently over his ribs again, and slides up his sternum, tapping gently against the broad bone there. “… May I?” She motions to the white light fluttering behind his bones.

"Nnh..." He hesitated when he caught on what she meant, and he sighed, before he nodded slowly. "A-Alright."

She smiled, but paused, and then took him over to the couch instead. The stairs was no place for this. Toki pushed him down gently, and clamored into his lap, leaving her pants, and his, in place as she seats herself against him. Once she’s perched, she gives him a warm look, and reaches out, and gives a gentle tug.

His soul floats free, whitish orange and beautiful and whole- and she cups it gently in her hand, before lifting it to her teeth. She nuzzles the whole of his being, giving him a warm look, and speaks behind her teeth. “You’re welcome to... take mine out, if you want.” She murmurs. A soft kiss is pressed to the core of his being, and she strokes him with her fingers. “You’re so amazing, Pap. Such a warm orange color- the most beautiful shade.”

And Toki's plan was so very well thought out, for if she had begun to do this on the stairs, he would have eventually buckled there and made quite the noise.

Though now even secured on the couch, it didn't stop his vocals from letting loose, and he let out a moan before the invitation to return the favor was made. He looked at her with a shaky sound, and then he smiled at her, his breathing shaky as his soul was caressed as it was.

Again, the offer to take her soul was just that, an offer. She didn’t expect reciprocation- she simply wanted to feel him- all of him. She’d love to meld souls with him again… but given the fact that human souls didn’t need intent to reproduce… They ran the risk of her conceiving. Or him, she mused, since Sans had gotten pregnant. Though… maybe it worked differently with human souls.

Toki shook her head momentarily, shaking the thoughts from her mind, and slid her tongue out to gently rasp it over his soul. “Beautiful,” She murmurs, “Handsome, amazing, strong, kind, sweet, brave, mine…”

"Mmhh... W-what else would I offer to someone l-like you, Toki?" He murmured, shifting and arching in pleasure as it shot through his limbs and pooled deep down in his groin and lower abdomen. "Hhhnn~"

“Nothing,” She murmurs against his being. “You don’t have to offer me anything- because you’re perfect, and I love you as you are.” Her teeth part, pursing just slightly so she can rub the tips against his soul, scraping gently, oh so very, very gently against his core. Her tongue rasps out again and lathes over it, as she massages her fingers against the back.

Toki rocks her hips against his, and drops a hand to guide his hands back up to her ribs so he’ll have something to hold on to. She purrs against him, watching him steadily, and gives him a warm, tender look, before gingerly brushing the tips of her teeth over him again.

He choked and gasped loudly in the pleasure that surged almost painfully from her treatment of his soul as it continued. His hands, moved from the couch to her ribs, twitched and tensed repeatedly, but he let out a keen. He knew her defense was miraculous when passive, but he always had the urge to do her no harm, so as a result, he tenderly rubbed her ribs, before lowering his hands once more, smiling at her weakly as he shook his head.

“You’re not going to hurt me if you touch me, Papy.” She kisses his soul gently, and rocks her pelvis into his again, teasingly gyrating on his lap. Toki could read the hesitance in his face- after he’d let himself loose on her that one time and cracked her bones with a bite, he was so, so hesitant to hurt her again. Toki wasn’t going to be that stupid to egg him on improperly again- it was a learning experience for them both. “If not my ribs, then my femurs?” They were covered in pants, but much more sturdy than her ribs appeared to be. “I just want your hands on me.” Her tongue licked along the top curve of his soul, and she savored his taste with a pleased moan. “You taste like sunshine, Pap. I have no idea how, but you do.”

He shuddered at the lick, but couldn't resist laughing lightly at what she had said next. Though he did get an idea from her offer, and he acted upon it. He hoisted her up and rolled her over onto her back, taking his position over her, “I suppose... I could work with that.” He chortled quietly, moving to take off her pants. "As well as... a little something else I have in mind."

She giggled as he rolled them over and took the top position. He was so cute- he was not a very dominant man most times, try as he might. She lifted her hips a little to help him, and soon she was divested of pants. Toki curled her tongue around the edge of his soul and sucked gently on it. "Something else in mind, hm? Pretty sure you have too much pants covering you for that, Papy."

She purrs, eye lights blazing a loving green. He shuttered and gasped sharply as his soul got sucked on and he moaned, before he shivered and chuckled quietly, "H-Heh... I might not have what you think I have in mind." He murmured. "Oh?" She lifted a brow at him, and sucked again, dragging her finger gently against his soul with a playful purr. "We're you thinking... Maybe your tongue~?"

He licked his teeth and smiled at her, his shoulders shivering as she stroked his soul. "Hhnn~ heh~ I'm that transparent?" He cooed.

"Well, I can see right through you." She winks, and wiggles a finger through his rib. She pauses at that, and gives him a momentary curious look as she played with his soul. "You know... If I can summon breasts and a belly for carrying the twins... I wonder what you'd look like with a summoned body. Full body, not just that delicious dick of yours."

He blinked, "You... think I'd look good with a solid form?" He asked as he slowly sat back on his knees. He focused on his magic and slowly his body built into form, his body glowing orange under his bones.

"I dunno. You look good with what your magic fills out with clothes, so it's possible?" She shrugged lightly. She releases his soul for the moment and lets it float back home, and sits up enough to rub over his ribs as he started to form his body under his bones. "You look good in bones. I bet you'd look good in flesh too." She smiles and then sits back to let him get it situated. "It might be fun to let you feel what touch feels like on skin." She winks.

He cupped his soul, now able to focus his magic, and he sighed gently as he was able to better harness his magic, "Mnh." As the magic utilized, it better inflated his body and allowed him to build his body for her to see.

"If you're sure. What do you think?" He purred gently.

She looked him over with a critical eye. He wasn't heavily muscled like the thick material of his turtlenecks might have suggested. He had more of a runners body, almost- but he still had muscles and abs to die for.

Toki grinned and leaned up to lick a trail up from his navel to his pectorals. "I could lick every inch of you. You're perfect, my love. How does it feel to have flesh constraining you?"
He shivered as her tongue started giving attention to the somewhat new exto-body that, "I-It feels weird..." he murmured

"You've never had skin before." She grins. Her hands slide up, and she traces over his hips and up his sides, tracing over the flesh hiding his sensitive ribs. She circles his nipples with her fingers, and pinches them gently.

"Nyeh..." He let a shaky breath pass before he smiled at her and reached to gently cup her hips in his hands, "Mmh... so what... you intend to rub it in?"

"I intend to rub something in." She wiggles a brow at him, and purrs as his hands settle on her hips. She groans, and rolls her hips in his hands. Her fingers tweak his nipples gently, before they slide up to his shoulders. She suddenly grins. "Ohh. I think you're gonna like this." She gently rakes her fingers down his back, dragging the sharp points gently so as not to hurt him- but enough to leave little scrapes. It was definitely different than on bones.

He arched and his own fingers curled back slightly as he let out a hiss, but the look in his eyes when he recovered told her that what just happened was definitely not discomfort.

She grinned. "Oh yeah. You definitely like that, didn't you? There are some benefits to having flesh. Would you like me to do that again, my love?" She trailed her fingers back up his back, awaiting his response to her offer.

"Yessss~" He purred eagerly.

"As my love wishes." She drags her fingers down his back again, and nibbles her teeth gently across his chest. "I love you, my good mate~"

He shivered and moaned at that, "that feels... so odd" he cooed, before he wrapped his arms around the small of her back and pulled her into him, their hips pressing together as he pushed his face into her neck, allowing him to kiss and nibble happily.

She raked her fingers gently up and down his back as he kissed and nibbled at her neck, letting her head loll back with a soft blissed sigh as warmth crawled down from where his touch trailed. Heat blossomed across her bones, and Toki smiled warmly. "It's a good kind of odd though. Mmm, this is what it felt like when you touched my ectoflesh. Sensitive, isn't it?"

"Mmm... It feels really nice." He purred into her neck as he rutted against her, easily growing excited with everything new going on.

She chuckled, and rocked her hips up into his as he rutted against her. She kissed his neck, nibbling along the flesh that stretched up to his jaw. She peppered it with kisses and scraped her teeth along his neck in time with her finger tips up and down his back. "My good mate," she purrs, "my good, strong mate. You like this, don't you? You like me leaving marks on you, letting the whole world know you're mine~ I bet you like leaving marks on me too." She purrs. "I know I sure do. It let's the world know I'm yours~"

"Hhhnn~" He kissed the vertebrae of her neck before giving a few nips along the bones, grinding again as his cock, which had accidentally been summoned with the rest of his body, hardened and ground against her bare body.

Toki grinned, and shifted under him. She wasn't going to leave him as the only one doing it. She paused in her attention for just a second, and formed her full body under him. It was all soft rolls of green, with muscles and toned parts interspersed with soft places from bearing children. Her hips plumped out, and she rocked against his hardening cock with her soft folds as she raked her fingers over him again. She left her neck bones bare, more than content to not have an actual throat. She hooked her legs over his hips, and craned down to give his ass a squeeze. "Mmmm, that ass, and it’s all for me~"

"All yours~" He cooed, his hands moving up and gently groping the plump folds of magic, smiling at the feel, "Mmhm, and every last one of these beautiful curves..." he murmured, looking up at her as his eyes gave a excited glow, "Every last one is mine to treasure and praise~" He cooed. His hard-on ground against her a little more before it withdrew as he pulled back his hips, a hand lowering to line it up with her entrance.

"Every last one is yours," she purrs in agreement. Where Toki was soft curves and the remnants of a mother's body, Papyrus was harder edges and a runners body. She was the soft to his hard- but she always had been. She gave a pleased squeak as his fingers lined himself up, and she angled her hips to help him drive home. Her soul strained in her chest, and it fluttered against her ribs and conjured flesh, aching to be one with the mate it could sense just above. It made a glowing light below her flesh, and she panted as it drummed against her ribs.

His soul was pulsing hard in his chest, now that it was tucked away in the safety of the summoned flesh, it yearned the same, but he knew better, it was not the best time for children. "I love you." He cooed to her again as his hips closed the distance with hers.

She rocked her hips with his and cried out quietly with a pleased sound as he eased into her. She hadn't been prepared so much, but she didn't need it. Toki just wanted him in her, around her. And he was filling her now, the orange glow of his shaft visible from within the green of her body. "I love you," she rasped, "my love, my mate, my Papyrus." Her fingers raked down his back again.

Her soul popped free between them, and floated between them. She took it in hand, and offered it to him with a shaky look. "I know we don't want more kids yet, but... As much as we don't want to face it, this could be... The last night together for one of us. I want no regrets."

He hesitated as he listened to her words and his soul gave a soft hop in his chest, before he slowly summoned his own, "I... I don't want to risk impregnating you at... such a poor time... But... I feel the same..." He murmured.

"It... It took what, three or four days for the ecto body to show up last time?" It had been during his heat, and she'd woken up with it the day after it had ended. Who knew which soul merge brought upon the twins conception? She swallowed. "Even if... We do, it won't matter. We have... We have until tomorrow. Tomorrow might be our last day, so... Let's make the most of today." With that said, she lifted her fingers and offered her hand to his, offering to link their hands, and souls, together like they had before. Toki smiled gently. "And... If things go... Go amazingly, we'll win with no casualties, and have another baby on the way."

He looked at her offered hand, then sighed, and smiled at her, "V- Very well." He murmured, before he leaned in and kissed her, entwining his hand with hers before gasping as their souls touched.

It had been a long time since they had touched souls, and Toki couldn't stop the open mouthed gasp that pulled from her. Her feelings washed against his, like a scorching wildfire blazing against the sun that was his soul, and he fed her embers and made them bloom. She trembled around him, her walls flexing with sudden need and the sudden sensation of feeling him being in her- and feeling her being around him, through him. Joining souls was something she could never regret.

Love flooded him from her, and she likes ked their hands tightly as her soul pulsed and latched onto his. "Oh god, Papyrus, I love you so much, with all of my soul, and all of my being... Mmm..."
Her words brought a smile to his face but he lost focus on his ability to reply, and rather spent it on fucking her like she deserved, with all the love and passion he could offer.

She met every one of his passionate thrusts with a buck of her own, her free hand raking down the skin of his back and her teeth biting gently into the flesh of his shoulder. She made sure not to puncture skin, as every rocking thrust brought a blissed cry from her.

The sensation of her teeth definitely gave him a surprise and he gasped out, before he put more weight on her, no longer holding himself up as well as his hips continued to move, his thrusts meeting her with a sharp smack that was accompanied by a quiet sound from him.

Toki cried out and mewled under him, lost to sensation as he drove into her. Her hand and mouth urged him faster, legs tightening around him in time with his thrusts. The feedback loop of sensations were driving her insane- so surely they have to be driving him insane too. "Ah~"

Indeed they were, but he seemed to have a grasp on it, at least until a surge went through him and he snarled as his thrusts grew faster, his grip tightening on her hand, "H-hahhh...! Toki!" He growled with happy eagerness.

"Ah!" She arched against him, mouth opening wider. "Papyrus! H-haahh!" Her fingers flexed, tightening against his own, and quashing her soul more firmly with his. It beat faster against his as her free hand shifted from raking down his back to simply trying to hang on. She didn’t have a grip on the sensations- and her lack of grip had her lost in a storm of pleasure that had her coherent thoughts struggling to come through. All she could feel was love, so much love, so much lust, so much need, and the desire for more.

He tried to focus on anything he could, but the sensation of the pleasure was too much and he let out a choked sound of ecstasy as he dug his fingers into whatever rested below them before he let out a blissed cry, his soul shuttering hard as he gave a last few hard thrusts before a final jolt filled her with his magical essence.

His orgasm triggered her own, and she came hard, walls clamping around him like a vice. She cried out a wordless sound that might have been his name at one point. Her fingers made faint marks down his back as she arched under him, chest pushing against his own. Her breaths came in heated pants as lightning flashed back and forth between the souls fluttering like mad in their palms.

It seemed to take forever for the reverberations of their orgasm to die down, and by the time it did, Toki was a twitchy, panting mess under him, her green skin glimmering with glistening beads of sweat as she heaved for breath. Her eyes were open a crack, focused dimly on him as she tried to catch her breath and get her wits about her.

"H-h-holy shit," she rasped.

Where she still had a thread of consciousness, he was shuttering above her, very out of it as his body was drained of both cum and energy.

Her rasp did seem to stir him though, and he looked up at her face, smiling weakly, "H-Heh..."

She shakily loosened her fingers from his, and kissed him gently as she did so. Their joined hands were stained a sticky mottled green and orange color, the secretions from their soul- and Toki gingerly released her hold on her own soul. It was reluctant to part from his- but she didn’t want to let it linger too long, lest they tempt fate. The true test would be to de-summon her ectobody and see...
Her stained soul slid between their hands, and slowly crept back into her chest, easing back through her ribs reluctantly as she heaved for breath under him. “Mmm… W-wow… That… That was good…” She smiled up at him lovingly.

"W-wonderful." He whispered, trembling as he slowly fell to the side, laying on his back with a shivering sigh.

Toki gave a soft sound as he slid out of her, and cuddled up to his frame. She traced her fingers down his chest, tracing over the muscles of his abdomen, before going back up his ribs with a soft hum. It was several minutes before she had enough of her wits about her for a full coherent sentence- and to tease him some. “Mm… you can go ahead and drop this.” She hums. “As much as I enjoy you being so soft,” She teases, referencing the fact he always calls her soft. “I’m used to your bones.”

Her body flickers, but disappears without a fuss. The only thing that staunchly refuses to go away is her breasts- but she didn’t think they would.

He hummed quietly and smiled, taking a deep breath before he sighed and allowed his magic to fade, returning to her his bones. "Mmm, better?"

She kissed his ribs and ran her teeth teasingly over them as she settled against his bones. Hers brushed with his, and she sighed, pleased. “Mhm. I’m so used to being with a skeleton, it feels weird to be with someone who has flesh. You do look dashing in your meat suit though, Pap. You, ah, actually have a very attractive physique.” She flushes a bit. “Very yummy.”

"Glad to hear you approve of me either way." He purred happily as he wrapped an arm around her, pulling her into a gentle squeeze.

She laughed, and nuzzled him gently. “Heh. I’d love you even if you were soft and flabby like some parts of me seem to be. I might not show the baby weight like this, but boy, I sure noticed where it lingered when I summoned my body.”

"Mmm, that body type is more Caeruleus." He chuckled, before he sighed and stroked her hips gently. "I love your 'baby weight'." He purred. "I wouldn't have you any other way~"

She quirked a smile at him, and shimmied up to press a kiss to his cheek as his hands stroked over the crests of her pelvis. “Cae did have a baby not too long ago,” she reminds him with light amusement. “I’ve had a long while to get rid of mine. I suppose I probably look better now than I did right after having them.” She chortles.

"Of course you do. But then again, you always look 'better'." He chuckled, pulling her close now with his other arm and planting a few soft kisses on her head.

That just made Toki laugh quietly. “You’re such a flatterer.” She relaxes as he kisses between her horns, and sighs softly, contently. “Hey Pap…?” She rubs her fingers lightly over his collarbone as she simply relaxes and basks in him, “When… When tomorrow is over, do you still want to rebuild in the old compound? Or do you want to… I dunno. Find someplace else to start over?”

The question had him pause and he leaned his head back to think it over.

It took him a little bit to come up with an answer he liked, but when he did, he then smiled. "We'll start where we were, and we'll keep growing." He answered, "Stretch out where we can... welcome more monsters to the sweet surface air, and the freedom that will start the beginning of their new lives."
Toki smiles slowly, but warmly, and laughs quietly. “I like that idea. That… that sounds perfect. We’ll rebuild right where we were, then.” She nuzzles his chest with a soft, content sigh. “You know what I think I want to build when we rebuild our house? A balcony off our room, so we can sit outside from the top floor, and watch the stars. A skylight would work too, but that lets the sunlight in during the morning and wakes us up earlier. But… a balcony would be nice.”

"Mmm, now you're getting the idea." He sighed happily, stroking her head gently as he chuckled. "A balcony sounds like a perfect idea, and a skylight even more so, since I wake up early anyways.”

Toki laughs gently. “Yeah, but for those of us who aren’t up at the ass crack of the ass crack of dawn, it’s murder. Particularly when we have more kids- and you like to let me sleep in for hours on end. Though that might be moot, since we have children now.” She chuckles.

"Indeed so, we're parents now, and I'm still a guard, so we both have our responsibilities, and then some." He sighed, stroking her head gently and letting it go to the tip of her horn. "Perhaps we'll hold off on the skylight, so my dear wife gets her beauty sleep." He chuckled as he gently pinched her horn, giving it a small, playful tug.

She laughed at the playful tug, and gave him a playful grin in turn. She kissed him gently, and then bumped her nose to his. “Welcome to parenthood. And I suppose we could get a skylight… if we can get a cover over it too so we can sleep without being blinded.”

"Automated so you don’t get the waking light until you need it." He suggested with a soft laugh, smiling up at her as he gave her horn another tug.

She laughed at the tug on her horn, and tilted her head into his tug. She playfully shook her head at him, making sure not to point her horns at him. “That would be a good idea. Automated… Maybe one in all the rooms, so the kids can enjoy it too.”

"Keep a kid-proof lock on those ones though." He chuckled, before he leaned up and clacked her forehead gently, "You're silly". He cooed.

Toki playfully blew a curl of smoke from her nose towards him. “Considering our kids can summon possible flying minions, yes.” She chuckles. “Unless we don’t have opening skylights, and just stick with stationary ones with covers.”

"It would be wise to have the stationary with the covers." he replied, before he giggled, "I just hope Sobek doesn't think it's an open window."

That made Toki burst into giggles. “Oh goodness. All I can think of is those pets that don’t see the glass sliding doors and run right into it. I’m sure we can tell him that it’s not a window.”

"We hear a thunk, check on him and the poor bastard's out cold." He laughed gently. “We’ll have to watch and make sure it doesn’t happen.” She chuckles softly. She gives him a soft smile, and kisses him gently, before nuzzling closer with a sigh.

Toki closes her eyes, and simply basks in his presence for a time. They would need to make sure it didn’t happen… but they first needed to ensure that it could happen, by making sure that tomorrow… Tomorrow, they succeeded, and that Cruelty was defeated.

By whatever… whatever means were necessary.
The following morning, bright and early, Toki and Papyrus were visited by Toriel, who lead a small smattering of children, young adults, and those unable to fight as they headed for the old ruins and the emergency exit. Stag, Sobek, and Snuggle would be going with them, along with the twins and the family cats.

Toki cried at having to leave her children. She tried not to- but she did. She managed to see all of them out the door after they cried and clung to her and Papyrus and babbled incoherent words of distress at being forced to go- but the tears came after, and a good ten minutes had been spent in tears just trying to get them to stop.

Once they did, she sobered up, and then it was off to the castle with Papyrus and every other guard who was coming with. Once everyone had gathered, they set out for the ruins of Nara Village.

It was pretty much a small army that they had upon arrival to the ruins of their home. Everyone took a moment to take in what had become of Nara Village- and

The fire had been stopped, but a small portion of the forest had burned. All of the houses were gone, as was the park, and the gardens. The only thing still standing were the stone walls surrounding the compound and the vast majority of the village, and the brick and cement portions of Toki and Papyrus’ house. At least, the portions of it that hadn’t collapsed from spots where the material had heated, expanded, and then cracked when the fire department’s hoses had rapidly cooled it.

At least, that’s what they could assume. It could have been… the explosions from the bombs the airplanes dropped.

Even the clan trees, which had probably been around since the days before the monsters had been sealed, had been burnt to nothingness. Between the gasoline that had been sprayed, and the dry summer heat… Well, not much had stood a chance against the man made wildfire that had been created through the illegal activities of Humans Against Monster’s cruel acts.

The whole area seemed to be pretty empty- but one of the wolf guards that had come along could smell a massive amount of humans- along with a lot of foreign technology just on the other side of the old crumbled wall on one side of the compound. No doubt Cruelty’s minions… They didn’t seem to be doing anything, however- so at least Cruelty was punctual.

It was thirty minutes until noon, and counting down on the time. No one was milling about- everyone was preparing themselves, and double checking their armor time and time again and making sure weapons were stocked, primed, and sharp.
Frisk had saved, of course. They had insisted on coming along- and so, they too were here. But they were up near the back- and well out of range of fighting. Their entire purpose was to load if things went sour- which, knowing Cruelty and the company he kept, things would likely go sour a lot. Frisk was their contingency plan. They were manning the save and reload button.

They even had armor that kept them safe.

They weren’t the only one’s now bedecked in armor. Sans wore an identical set of armor as Papyrus did, albeit sized to fit him better, and there were several rabbit monsters garbed up in full plate as well. Tenebris had a full set on as well to keep him protected, though his were customized severely since he had grown some since the time that he had last worn it. It still fit- but places had to be reinforced and extended some for him to fit.

Toki’s armor wasn’t much different from the usual royal Guard armor. However, Lana had gotten hold of it- and the royal guard symbol had been removed. Instead, the symbol that had been on her wedding dress had been painted on the arm bracers of the silver plate armor- and then an even larger one had been painted across her chest. Instead of the red cape to mark her as part of the royal guard, Toki wore a cape that was the same green color as her soul, with clasps that came around and secured around her neck. Because Toki couldn’t carry all that much, the armor had been modified to be thinner and lighter. It would crumple easier- but she could carry it, and it was guaranteed to make people think twice about shooting her and potentially wasting a bullet.

She was bent over the tiny card table they’d brought with them, peering down at the container that Frisk was going to be guarding. It was supposed to hold Cruelty’s soul when they killed him and took it. She still… She still didn’t like the idea. It made them all hypocrites, and she didn’t like to be a hypocritical asshole like some folks like to be.

She watched it intently for a moment, before sighing, lifting an armored hand to rub the back of her neck. Toki had her idea- and she fully intended to work with it. But… she had to play along for now. The others… surely wouldn’t go for it. And… honestly, if her idea didn’t work, then they could still fall back on the more hypocritical idea.

The clanking of armor was so, so loud around her. Clover and Sugar were off getting fitted into their armor, which was designed to protect the soft and squishy part of their abdomens, as well as reinforce their hard chitin that kept them well guarded normally.

Toki quirked a smile and watched as Sugar was a handful as per her usual self. She bucked and bounced and was just a general pest, but a quick thought from Toki had her sobering and standing patiently while the monsters got her into her armor. Clover was much better behaved, and the massive insect was even behaving while they reinforced her saddle to put armor along her wing joints, so she’d be protected from anything that might seek to remove them. In close quarters, the armor could also be used for fighting.

Toki seemed to like the idea, so Toki didn’t mind.

Though Aliquam looked well adjusted to his own armor, Caeruleus and Tenebris looked a little uncomfortable, the latter grumbling about ’had he grown to a full-fledged blaster beast, he wouldn’t even need this metal armor around his form’.

Cae didn’t complain about his, rather stayed close to Grillby, whose armor had seen days almost this bad back during the war. But his hand had went tight around his mate’s, and he pressed close. It was obvious that he was a little nervous. Seeing resets never really helped him steel his nerves, and he knew that after this, he wouldn’t be able to sleep, if they even survived at all.

Toki slid closer to Aliquam after she left the table and nudged him lightly, her armor clattering against his own. She peered up at him gently with a soft, quiet sound, and nudged his hand gently. “How are you doing?”

“I’m alright... a little unnerved if anything, but hey, aren’t we all?” He chuckled as he wrapped an arm around her shoulders. ”And how are you?” Aliquam asked gently.

Toki nuzzled her head to Papyrus’ armor, and hummed at the metallic clank it made. Cuddling in armor wasn’t fun. “That’s true… I’m alright. Just… Kind of tired. Drawn out, I guess. I dunno. I’m ready for it to be over, but not ready for… well, for the fighting that’s going to come.”

“We’re both ready for it to be over… but it just will take us that last leap to get there… but it will be worth it in the end, for us, for our children...” He purred to her.

“Yes.” She agreed quietly. She sighed, and turned to look out over the forest. She kept her voice quiet as she spoke to him. “Do you really think he’s out there watching us right now? Do you really think he came?”

“If he didn't, then we by default should be victor... he issued the challenge...” He murmured.

“That’s not how war works, and you know it.” She nudges him gently, and she frowns, watching the trees. The clock was ticking down, and noon was approaching. She felt like she could be sweating if she had skin- skin beyond her chest, that was. “So how do you think this is going to work? Are we just going to… I dunno, walk out, meet in the middle, and start fighting? Or is someone going to take a potshot first…? Mmm… Knowing Cruelty, he’s going to want to gloat to my face, isn’t he? ‘Muhaha, you’ll never win, Kindness, I’ll get you and your little monsters too.’” She does a horribly cheesy impression of his voice- completely intentional, since mimicry was something she was fairly good at.

He laughed at that quietly, before he shrugged lightly. ”I’m afraid I haven't a clue... I don’t think we'll be able to really expect anything and be sure of it.” He admitted, giving a shrug again.

“I think you’re right.” She agreed softly. Toki sighed, and glanced up at him for a moment, before looking back out to the trees. “War... War never changes.” She muses quietly. ”It’s always caused by someone hating someone, or someone offending someone to cause this hate... It’s a never-ending cycle of cruelty and malice and death. But there’s no way to bring about world peace. It’s in human nature to seek conflict, to strive to fight and do battle...” She rubs her forearms quietly, and catches a glimpse of humans moving around in the trees. “They’re watching us, just as we’re watching them.” She mutters.

“We have not provoked them, so they will hopefully stay away until it comes to the fight.” Quinn took her hand and began to walk towards the ruins of the house.

The compound was ashy, and they kicked up small puffs of it that clung to their armor as they walked. Their house loomed not far from the remnants of the gates- or what was left of their house. The bombs had hit it, obviously, and knocked the cement and brick foundation down. Several spots on it had collapsed, including their bedroom, and the children’s nursery. The fire had swept over it too. Nothing remained inside of the house- it was a hollowed out burnt husk of what it once was.

Behind the house, visible just outside of the house compound walls, were the burnt husks of Toki’s beehives.

Toki swallowed thickly, and tightened her hand on Pap’s hand. This was her home… It had been her home, and her families home, for centuries. It had been bad when she’d lost the first house in the fire… But now… Now it was all gone. All of the old clan trees, all of the old store houses, her apiary, everything. Every last, single thing she had ever owned, or had been owned by them… gone.

The only thing that remained were the trees far around the edge of the compound, which were thick with HAM members, and buzzing with low voices of conversation. Likely humans doing the same as they were- talking before battle. Toki was hesitant to go too close to the trees, and so stirred her husband away from them- but she let them come close to the burnt husk of their home. She reached out to touch the cold brick, her gauntlets making a faint noise against the charred material. “At least I had the right idea in making it out of cement and brick…?” She tried to be optimistic- but that just came out slightly hollow sounding. She’d originally done it out of fear of accidentally burning down her house with her lack of control.

"Very true." Quinn gave a chuckle to assure her it was not depressing for her to joke about such a thing.

Tenebris gave a soft sigh as he looked to where his home was, though Cae kept his gaze lowered. They had stuck close to Papyrus and Toki- and did not wander far. They shadowed the two of them as soon as they had broken away from the pack.

"I was surprised to see you actually came." A voice cut the dead air and immediately Tenebris, Cae, and Quinn were on their guard.

"The same could be said for you." It fell from her mouth before she could stop it, and Toki whirled to face who had spoken to them.

From out of the darkness, a middle aged man stepped out. He had dark brown hair, marked by a smattering of salt and peppered flakes at the temples, a hooked nose, and plump lips. He was well built, though not of great height, and he walked with a steady gait in thin plate armor with an old sword at his hip. Blue eyes peered over them with the shrewdness of a lawyer, or someone who handled official documents often.

There was an age to his gaze that Toki had never noticed there before. She had never thought to look for it before.

She frowned. “Seymour Simmons?” Shock and hurt flitted through her, though it was primarily shock that overtook her at the sight of her agent, who had been with her since the very start of everything, walking out of the woods with armor and an old sword at his hip. “No… No, no, no, Simmons, you’ve been a family friend for a long time.” Her mouth opened slightly, and her fingers tightened over Papyrus’ own. “It… It was you? You’re Cruelty?”

"I do hope you'll eventually forgive me, young Tokiko. Family friend I might be, but as soon as the monsters were freed, and you opened your heart to them… well, I realized who, and what you were...” He sighed, shaking his head. "I simply had to bide my time... it is a pity that we lost one good human in the crossfire, but a life of one weighs naught to the weight of humanity as a whole. We are a species that does not need the blight of monsterkind at its heels."

“One? One good human?” She bristled. “You and your people have been abducting and no doubt murdering HTM’s! And anyone associated with monster lineage, or related to them! They’re human too- I’m still human at my core! They were good people- and monsters are good people too. They’re no blight. If anyone is the blight, it is you, Simmons.” Toki pauses, and frowns, before shaking her head. “No. No. Cruelty. You’re not Simmons- Simmons died the day you decided to take up the mantle of an aspiring genocidal monster.”

The monsters began to rally behind Toki and Papyrus, spreading out and readying their weapons for when it would come to blows. Asgore came to stand beside Tenebris, leaving Toki at the head. As king, he should have been leading- but this… This was a clash between titans of power beyond even him.

Fire crackled along Toki’s armor, and the thin plate heated and struggled not to warp. “I will give you one more chance, Cruelty. Turn around now- disband your people, tell them to go home. Use Corruption and tell them that this is over. That it’s done. If not… If not, you’d better make your peace, because your time is up.”

"Oh Tokiko…” He sighed quietly, shaking his head slowly. "It... Truly is a pity... First Han Nara was lost... and now the Nara family shall lose yet another. But then again... who would miss a monster?" He his face blossomed into a lopsided grin, before his attention was snared away from her. He turned as a man approached him. "What is it?" His brow’s furrowed and he practically growled at the other. The other man replied, too low for anyone but Cruelty to hear.

He grinned once more and turned back to Toki. "And with that, I’m afraid our conversation is over... I will not sound a retreat. Not as long as any single one of you monsters exist in this world." He chuckled, before his grin widened, turning up in the corners into something between a grin and a baring of one’s teeth. "NOW, CORRUPTION!" He roared.

A weapon was fired from the shadows and Papyrus gasped, shoving Toki out of the way to take the brunt of the weapon himself. He gave a shout of pain as the shot hit him. The impact had a recoil, sending him flying into the crowd of monsters.

"PAPYRUS!” Sans cried out.

The monsters did their best to catch Papyrus, but Toki lost sight of him as she hit the ground. She scrambled to her feet, still unable to catch a glimpse of her wounded husband, and opened her mouth and shrieked, an unholy noise that was not entirely human, not entirely monster. It was laced with an undertone of a buzzing sound- and with that, Clover took to the sky, speedy movements slowed with the weight of her armor. Sugar plowed over the ground, working her way around the monsters.

From the trees, Cruelty’s men surged, flooding out in numbers that far, far outweighed their own. Where the monsters might have had four or five hundred fighters tops, Cruelty’s numbers exceeded a thousand easily. Several humans had guns and made use of them- but a lot of them had old school weapons like what Cruelty was using. It made sense, given his age, that Cruelty would have trained them in how to fight with weapons that the monsters would use. Guns were harder to get hold of- particularly in mass amounts.

Between Toki’s war cry, and the sound of human footsteps charging forth, that was all the monsters need. “Go forth!” Asgore shouted, before he summoned his trident and drove it through a man with crushing force. The humans and the monsters collided with a clash of war cries- and the fighting began.

Tenebris didn't need to be told twice. He summoned forth his blasters and let them reign hell on the humans. Cae did the same, hells fire having been ignited in his eyes at seeing his brother go down.

Toki lunged into battle with a cry, drawing her own sword at her side and funneling fire magic through it. She, and the blade, lit up in a blaze of green hellfire, and she locked onto Cruelty with driven intent. He’d sent the command- he’d sent the command, and had Papyrus shot… It was time.

It was time for his reign of terror to end.

Cruelty grinned and pulled from his sword from his hip, giving it a twirl in his hand before he bolted for Toki, "This ends now!" He roared.

“It ends just as it begins- with us.” Cruelty was old, Toki knew. Thankfully, she had been fighting for a while with someone who was also old- and good with a sword. She might be clumsy, but she knew well enough how to block and parry by now. Grillby had drilled it into her until her bones had cracked and bled.

She met his blade with her own, sparks and cinders flying from the force of her strike. She was taller than he was, her skull and body wreathed in flames. She struck out at him hard, parrying and dodging, and then striking in again and exhaling a belch of flame at him.

He dodged the fiery attack before taking the second after it to lunge and have a stab at where her bones were exposed.

His sword struck true, and glanced off the exposed bones along her elbow joint. She cried out and jerked away, pressing a hand to her arm to briefly staunch the wound as she felt her HP ticking downwards.

Toki could see humans and monsters alike falling- some were dying in the crossfire’s of attacks, some were dying in the active combat. She could see humans trying to roll some sort of tanker out of the forest, and had a brief flash of horror as to what it was- but others saw it too, and began mobbing for it.

She clenched her fist and seared the wound shut with her flames. Papyrus couldn’t heal her- she… she just hoped he was alright. The wounded were supposed to go to the back, near Frisk, for wounds to be treated if they were too severe to keep fighting.

There was a thump behind Cruelty, as Clover set down, the massive hornet squashing several humans as she took to land based attacks. She created a barrier, however- she kept Cruelty pinned between her and Toki, and gave him nowhere to run and nowhere to hide. Nowhere but sideways, that was, and both Toki and Clover could follow that way.

Toki twirled the sword, her arm throbbing, and gave him a nasty snarl, before lunging for him again with tongues of flames curling from her orifices.

Another human struck at her from behind, and shoved their blade between the armor pleats covering her shoulders. It slid between the pleats, and stabbed into the ecto flesh under them, making her cry out again and botch her initial lunge. She swung just short on the first swing, but recovered and made to swing a second time at him.

Cruelty had been ready for her attack and he deflected her blade before positioning his feet as to spin, slicing at her and Clover’s face in the same.

Clover took the slice across the flat of her face, her eyes taking the brunt of it. She shrieked, a horrible, wounded noise, and lurched back, rearing up on her back legs as she flailed her front legs at her bleeding, blinded eyes.

Toki dodged the slice- but the pain from her summons nearly made her drop her sword. As it was, she cried out, covering her eyes as the pain reverberated through her. Not far off Sugar shrieked, and her blaster blast went off, incinerating several humans. “Clover!” Toki cried—unwittingly vulnerable before Cruelty.

The big beast lurched backwards, and managed to huddle down on all fours again— but she was blind now, completely so, from weeping gashes that bisected her face. She cried out, wings spreading and flailing viciously as she tried to locate enemies without being able to see them.

He grinned at her moment of exposure, Cruelty turned and quickly plunged his sword for Toki’s throat, aiming to take her head off with a single strike.

Time slowed down in an instant for Toki as she watched the blade come sweeping for her neck. There wasn’t any way to dodge—she was too close to bend back or forwards, and to the side wasn’t going to cut it. Going down wouldn’t work—

As the blade neared her neck, her mouth opened, and she lifted her blade in an attempt to parry it and divert it off course—

Toki had a split second of awareness where she sees the barrel of the gun coming just as Cruelty shouts out to Corruption, and she twists just as Papyrus goes to shove her out of the way. She twists— and shoves her body against his. The shot slips right between the plates of her armor, and blows through part of her spine.

Agony makes her cry out, and down she goes, green cape fluttering in the wind as her legs no longer work— but Papyrus is unharmed. Her husband isn’t hurt— and that… that’s what matters.

"TOKI!" Papyrus caught her as her legs gave out, keeping the force of the blast from throwing her and possibly wounding her worse. He laid her down on the ground carefully. It wasn’t hard to see where her spine was damaged— most of it was broken through, and only a small part of it remained connected, keeping her upper torso connected to her lower torso. "No...!" He gasped, horrified. His horror only lasted a few seconds before rage set in, and his eyes took on a harsh orange glow. Papyrus summoned a wave of bones. "CHARGE!" He screeched, sending the bones flying at Cruelty and any movement he had caught in his vision in that split second.

The monsters charged, running on either side of them as he carefully picked her up again to get her to the back while the humans were sidetracked with the swarm of monsters mobbing around the fallen Guardian Angel.

Toki cried out as he lifted her, her spine protesting the movement by sending painful signals up the part of her back that definitely could feel everything happening to it. Her legs felt nothing. “J-Just leave me and go,” She gasped, fingers shoving faintly at his armor. “Go—fight! I—my spine is… I’m done for, Pap. I… I’m... Just leave me and fight. Survive. Please...”

Cruelty gave a slow grin as the tall skeleton picked up Kindness and tried to take her. His blade was palmed, and he deftly dodged the bones, or sliced through the ones that he couldn’t dodge. He pursued, cutting a path through the monsters that his humans swarmed to fill in. “Ah, ah, ah, I don’t believe I gave you permission to take Kindness from me yet, Papyrus. Be a good beast and listen to your mistress; put her down so she can watch everyone die.”

He gave her a small hug as he slowly put her down, before rising to stand over her protectively, summoning a bone spear while shooting a loathing look down at Cruelty. "The only one who will die on this day is you, Cruelty!" He snarled sharply, his eye glowing brightly as he summoned Bastet.
and Neko, twirling the bone in his hand, "You will not succeed in your assault!"

“You think I won’t?” Cruelty smiled pleasantly, and tapped the tip of his blade on the charred earth. “I’ve already won. I’ve knocked out your key player- and once Kindness dies… well, you’ll have already lost. There are no other boss heart human turned monsters that my organization could find.” He grins. “We tried. And, even if you do survive today, and Kindness dies… you’ll have lost in a whole other way. Kindness will come back, just like I will- but she’ll never, ever, ever remember you.” He twirls the blade and eyes the blaster beasts, before grinning wider. “Corruption!” He shouts.

A blast pops off- and hits Bastet about the same time that Cruelty lunges for Papyrus with his sword aimed to slice the taller skeleton’s knees out from under him.

He grit his teeth and roared in pain at the hit that his blaster took, but even with tears of pain beading in his eyes he twisted the bone to block Cruelty's blade, before he lashed out a foot to kick him back.

Papyrus was well over a foot and a half taller than him- the foot that kicked into his chest sent him reeling back. However, centuries upon centuries of training had him tucking and rolling smoothly, and gaining his feet once more in another practiced motion. He didn’t wait- he simply grinned and lunged, sweeping towards him as Corruption took another shot at his blasters.

Toki squirmed and tried to get up, shoving with her arms to try and haul herself upright to at least try and help defend Papyrus and his blasters- but there was no luck to be had, no hope to be given. She couldn’t get up. The only thing she could do was turn over and wave her hand, and send a hoard of bees to shield as many people as she could- and aggressively sting the humans that she could get. The attack mode would put her defense on the low- but… But she had to do something.

Bastet was dismissed, and Neko rattled in apology as she scooped Toki up in her teeth, taking her farther away from the duo that clashed, as to put her out of danger.

Papyrus didn’t bother waiting until his foot touched the ground before he swung his bone again, his eyes glowing in fury as he faced off against the man who dared threaten not just the life of his wife, but of everyone he loved and called family.

The clash of bone on metal was noisy, and Cruelty grew moderately frustrated as the other pest stole Kindness once more. A quick shout to Corruption- and the running feline skull beast was shot down, and sent toppling with Toki entangled with its body.

Cruelty laughed, good and hard, and ducked an angry sweep from Papyrus, before bringing his blade down and driving it into his hand, severing it partway up his metacarpals. Not where he could attach it again once more- no, he’d have to grow whole new fingers to use them again.

He screeched in pain as the pain from both the loss of his fingers and the pain that surged to his head, and he stumbled backwards, his breathing growing rough as he summoned another bone spear to take into his left hand. "Gh..." His wounded hand now tucked close, Papyrus bared his teeth at Cruelty again, though was no longer as aggressive in his fight, rather now stood as more of a defensive.

Neko had gotten far enough with Toki that a new head had spotted her and made its way over.

"Toki!" Cae called to her as he shortcut to her side, kneeling to check her.

The tumble had done the rest of the shot’s work- and her spine had snapped clean through. The way her top was twisted was unnatural- even for a skeleton. She had landed face up, however, and grimaced, fingers clawing at the ashy ground under her. “S-Sans,” she rasped, “Help Pap, help him, please…”

She could see Cruelty and him fighting from here.

Cruelty took his defensiveness in stride, and lunged harder, striking at his hand instead of at the bone. He aimed to take his fingers- but there was little that Papyrus could do. That was the difference in wielding a sword, which had guards for one’s hand, and wielding a weapon made of bone with no such thing constructed.

Where his fingers had fewer defenses, the gauntlet on his hand protected it, so thankfully his bone weapon made do in their situation. The sword made a dent but failed to penetrate the armor, allowing Quinn a momentary upper hand.

Cae stroked his sister-in-law’s head, taking in the fact that her body was bent in a way that it very, very clearly should not have been, and then he growled. "Damn it!" he then got up and shortcut towards where his brother was fighting the terrorist, and he snapped his fingers to turn Cruelty's soul blue. "Got him, this should make him sluggish!" He barked to his brother.

Hearing that, Papyrus planted his footing to make up for the lack of his predominant hand as he made a sharp jab for the other's torso with the end of the bone.

“Make me sluggish yes. Make them sluggish? Not at all.” Cruelty grinned, and swept the end of the bone spear away with his blade- and then gave a shrill whistle.

Several of the men around them turned from the monsters they were fighting and lunged in unison, some going for Caeruleus, others going for Papyrus. They drove their weapons in for any visible bone they could see, others with broadswords aiming to cleave through the thick armor that the brothers wore.

Cae grinned a little and would move just out of harm's reach when they swung at him, before he summoned bones that impaled many of the humans.

Papyrus summoned a large bone plate to serve as a shield, and he used it to strike away the soldiers that got too close, at least until Cae finished with his own bunch of fighters and he shortcut closer. "Up we go!" He threw his hand up, taking Cruelty with it, "Ever heard the phrase, ‘karma is a bitch’?" he snarled, before he slammed his hand downward towards the ground, using the other hand to impale more of the soldiers with bones.

Cruelty let himself be flung, smirking at something behind the tallest skeleton, and in the wake of Papyrus’ rage, a shot rang out from behind them.

And a bullet blasted into the back of the tall Skeleton’s skull, and out between his eyes. Somewhere in the scuffle he had lost his helmet, and his bones offered no resistance to the bullet that bore through them.

“No!” Toki cried out, scrabbling to try and pull herself upright.

Papyrus hadn't a moment to react, the lights in his eyes going wide before they went out.

"PAPYRUS!” Cae cried out, unable to find the will to move as he saw his brother die, and dissolve into a pile of dust where he once stood.

"Pap...” Cae's eye glowed with fury as he then turned on Cruelty, lifting him up again before slamming him towards the ground, this time summoning spiked bones from the ground to impale Time seemed to slow down as Cruelty neared the ground, and his smirk only grew, like he knew what was happening. He winked at Caeruleus, and let himself fall-

As the bones began to shove through his armor, however, time ground to a halt-

And then…

_Load._

Caeruleus had but a second to realize what was happening, before it all began over and over again.

_Tenebris got caught in the crossfire of a blast, and a bullet blew half his skull apart. He collapsed into a pile of black kinetic sand._

_And again._

_Grillby died by the tanker of water the humans brought out- and Asgore lost his head._

_And again._

_Someone got to Frisk and killed them._

_And again._

_Undyne was killed after using her gift of the Undying._

_And again._
Toki was killed by a wayward spear.

And again.

Grillby by water.

And again.

Asgore, Papyrus, Tenebris.

And again.

Sans, Grillby.

And again.

And again.

And again.

And again.
And again.
Toki had a split second of awareness where she sees the barrel of the gun coming just as Cruelty shouts out to Corruption, and she twists just as Papyrus goes to shove her out of the way. She twists-and shoves her body against his. She’s too late- it still hits him, but it hits him on the hip, and not in the body where it had been aimed. She goes down on top of him, spares just a second to check and make sure he’s not dusted, before she’s back on her feet.

Fatigue hits her from nowhere- she can see humans and monsters alike staggering from it, confusion hitting the lot of them like battering rams, and she has no idea why. Well… She does. She wonders how many loads there have been. How many… How many deaths? How many times had everyone died in rapid succession?

“Enough!” She cries, voice shaking. “Enough! Just you and me, Cruelty. One on one. Here and now, with both of our sides for witnesses. Are you man enough to face me without resorting to calling on Corruption to take a cheap potshot?”

Cruelty’s breathing was shaking in the slightest. A few of those resets, they actually succeeded in killing him, but not as many times as the others had suffered.

Caeruleus was leaned against Grillby, and Tenebris was on all fours, his breathing already rough and heavy as he stood on shivering legs.

Papyrus barely had the stamina to even sit up, holding his hip in pain as Undyne helped him sit up as best she could. "T-Toki...!"

Cruelty however let a chuckle rise from him before he leaned to one side, resting his hands on his hips, "Me and you... you think that will really stop my men from killing the rest of you, no matter which of us fall?" he asked, before he chuckled, "Fine, I’ll indulge you. But this battle is already lost for you." He told her, drawing his sword.

“It’s okay, Papyrus.” Toki swallowed. “This… This is something I should have taken care of. That kindness should have taken care of back when this all started. This shouldn’t have been allowed to happen like it did.” It was her job to fix it. She swayed a little bit on her feet, but drew her sword. Her magic gathered at her fingertips, and she reinforced the steel of her blade and the armor covering her frame as she took a step closer to meet his draw. “Your men are hardly in any position to fight.” Some of them were- but very, very few were managing to stay on their feet. Several of them looked close to being sick right then and there.

Deaths rebound was a hell of a kicker. And to show up so soon… She had to wonder how many times they’d all died.

Toki took a deep breath, and exhaled smoke. Ash swirled around her feet, and she shifted on her toes, stroking her boots through it. She was born into this body from the flames- it was almost comforting, in an odd, twisted way, to be surrounded by ash at the place where she might end up dying. “Lets finish this just how it started, Cruelty. Together.” She lifted her blade, and took a stance, motioning him to come for her.

"Ashes to ashes. Dust to dust.” Cruelty chuckled, before he stepped forward. He picked up speed at the last meter and swung his sword at her.

She lifted her blade to block his, and then kicked her leg out at him, nailing him harshly in the calf as she danced a few steps away from him. Toki had learned a lot of things fighting with Grillby- and keeping light on your feet was one of them, even if it felt like your feet were made from lead.

She danced out of reach, and then slipped back in for her own strike, swiping at the hand holding the sword in an attempt to wound him and make him drop it.

He grunted at the kick, but it did not make him falter. He blocked her swing with his blade, before pulling his blade back into a ready position and lunging for her shoulder plate. Disabling her seemed to be his idea.

She could read what he wanted to do- and ducked his lunge for her shoulder, lashing out as his blade went over her head. She scored it across his thigh, partially glancing off his armor- but the rest ducked down into soft, squishy flesh, and split it wide open. The heat her magic had pumped into it also put the smell of burning flesh into the air.

Red stained her blade, and she nearly locked up at the sight, flashing back to the time she tore out the man’s throat. She swallowed hard, and tucked and rolled away from him, getting out of range and trying to work on whittling him down. She was tired- but so was he.

Cruelty roared in pain as the blade tore through his leg, but with the adrenaline, the pain was short lived. He swung his sword again, going for her hand the same way he had for Papyrus as he lunged after her, following her swiftly.

Toki’s armor wasn’t thick enough to stop the blade from cutting into her- however, she did have enough time to reinforce her magic into her bones, turning any offense into defense. So when his blade struck down, it sunk past the thin metal plates of her gauntlets, and hit onto the bones of her hand- and bounced off with a noisy clang, and ruined that part of the edge of his blade. There might have been a small chip- but he was human. He was human- and he couldn’t hit hard enough to break her bones. Not with the high defensive stat reinforcing them.

She grinned at him at the realization, all sharp teeth in her crocodile like grin, and swung for his leg again. She kept her magic tucked close to her, reinforcing her bones, and advanced on him.

He tried to dodge this blow but yelled out as it made impact again.
He was starting to back away.

He was losing.

No. No, no, NO. He was not going to lose. He was so close, so, god damned close to wiping out these monsters, to ending them once and for all- he was not going to lose and have to start all over again, to scrimp and scrounge and try to start everything all over from the very beginning.

His face twisted in anger, and he lunged at her again, aiming his sword up high for her unarmored neck- and his boot slipped.

The ash under his foot slipped and gave way, and his eyes flew wide as his arms pin-wheeled, trying to help him gain balance again.

Toki wasn’t one to usually take advantage of someone- let alone someone who slipped and fell in combat- but this… She wasn’t going to pass this up. Not for him- not for Cruelty.

While he was flailing for balance, she lunged forth, and shoved her blade into his throat, driving him down and back into the ground and following him down to ensure he stayed pinned. Hot blood spurted out and up onto her face as she severed an artery- and his face twisted into panic as his hands let go of his sword to claw at the one that had ripped into his neck.

She knelt there, her knees pinning his chest, as the world went silent around them. The humans were silent in a sort of horrified stupor- like they couldn’t believe that their leader had fallen. The monsters… Toki didn’t want to look and see.

She didn’t have time.

She reached out with her hand and tugged on his soul with her magic, drawing it up and out of his chest as his body’s twitches and spasms faded into soft convulsions. She only had a little bit of time before he cracked and broke and scattered like Han had done- so she had to make it count.

“Toki,” Asgore’s voice rose up from out of her field of vision. “The container… Get him to the container.”

“No.” She said. “No. Putting him in the container makes us no better than him. He would have imprisoned you for eternity- and you would do the same to him. Two wrongs do not make a right.”

She tugged out her soul instead, drawing upon the idea she’d had based upon his words. They had been one, once. They had been one- and they could be again. As she drew out his soul, its color was vastly different sort of green than hers. Hers was rich, like an emerald… his was sickly, almost like an acid, and covered in cracks that were so old, she wasn’t sure they would ever heal. She held firm, looking at his stats as his body died. He had a LV of twenty- an attack of two hundred, and a defense of nearly zero. No wonder he had on such thick armor- and why he’d never shown his face in combat before then. This really had been his last stand.

When the tethers holding his soul to his body dimmed and snapped, Toki didn’t hesitate. Despite the sounds of disbelief and protest rising up around her she brought his soul to hers, and pressed them together. A bright flash lit up the area, and she had to close her eyes so it didn’t blind her.

She could feel his soul melding with hers, and the heavy weight of magic suddenly thickening in her body. She felt too heavy, too full… But they were stabilizing. In her mind’s eye, she could see her stats equalizing with his- attack two hundred, defense two hundred, HP four thousand… and her LV… Her LV… God, her LV was equalizing with his too. He might have had a LV of twenty- but now… Now she had a LV of 10.
They balanced out- they equalized, harmonized- back into one.

When the light faded, she managed to stumble upright, limbs heavy and hot and trembling- and her soul larger than ever as it pulsed just in front of her chest. It pulsed before her, half of it the rich emerald that she knew, while the other half was the cracked and acidic green of Cruelty. Not… Not a perfect blend, not by far- but better than nothing. In the center, there was no clean line- the line was blurred and mixed and muddled, and seemed to blend into one interesting shade at the very core.

"T-Toki." Papyrus called on a cracked voice, a moment of fear and worry showing for his wife, "Toki!"

Tenebris quickly moved closer, his eyes widening as he gazed upon the fused result of the trait and counter-trait heart.

"Tokiko... What have you done?"

Toki didn’t answer Tenebris. She turned to face Papyrus and everyone else, a relieved smile on her face even with her husband on the ground. It was over- it was finally, finally over, and he was alive and they could fix him and it would be okay. They had done it, after so, so many loads and so many times of dying. Cruelty’s body lay dead at her feet, and Cruelty himself had been absorbed into her body before his soul could crack and scatter to the wind to be reborn once more. It… Hadn’t been the plan, but leaving him caged in one of those soul tubes? That was no fate for anyone, even one so cruel as Cruelty.

Toki wasn’t going to let herself do something that he would do out of spite.

So- absorbing him had been the only real choice Toki could see. And it worked. Her soul felt full, almost painfully so- but the merging process… it hadn’t hurt at all. Their souls had… almost been easy to merge together. She felt full of magic, too full almost, but it was a feeling she could get used to.

The monsters were celebrating, their cheers and whoops echoing off the stone town walls towering behind them and around them, their voices exuberant even if their bodies were beyond the point of exhaustion now. The trees sent their cheers down over the ruins of the village, over the mob of humans that were whispering among themselves in horror.

Toki brightened considerably as the forces that Cruelty had brought with him backed away, wary now that their leader had died. She opened her mouth to speak to them, to tell them that Cruelty had gone and that their cause was lost. She opened her mouth to tell them to give up and face justice for their crimes, sharp teeth glinting with blood from Cruelty’s slit throat-

But it wasn’t her voice that spoke.

“You… You’re so stupid.”

The voice that pulled from her throat wasn’t her own. It was deeper, richer, with a darker undertone that nearly gave it a rasp. From her throat, Cruelty spoke, despite Toki’s best attempts at stopping him. His soul burned in hers- it was their soul now, and Toki realized her folly.

Souls were aware when they were contained. There wasn’t any reason that Cruelty wasn’t aware within her.

Her hands moved of her own accord, and clenched up at her chest. “Yesss,” he purred from her throat, “So very stupid. There was a reason, dear Kindness, that we never merged back then. Magic gave us two personalities- made our souls fuller, so we would long to be one, but never be able to. I never knew why- I guess this is it. Sharing a body- what a petty, petty thing… But you just did what we were forbidden to do. And guess what?” Cruelty smiled, and it wasn’t a pretty thing coming from her teeth. “We now have the powers of Balance again. Or equal to them. But… you don’t know how to handle them, do you, Kindness?”

Toki’s sockets stretched in her obvious panic, and she struggled to take control again. She managed to catch sight of the horrified monsters staring at her, and gave them a panicked look, a silent plea to run and escape while they could.

Cruelty surged within her, taking full control of her body with his anger overpowering her. She might have been the dominant soul, but she was young, so young, compared to his ageless rage. “But I do. It’s been so, so long since I used the last drops of my magic… but still I remember how. I know what to do. We’ll reincarnate, Kindness, like we always have. Do you feel that pressure in our bones? You feel that tightness, fit to burst? We are so full, Kindness. So very, very full. What happens… if we add more power to that?”

Cruelty turned her body back to his people, and a wicked smile tugged up her teeth. “My loyal soldiers. You’ve served the cause so, so well… And now, you will help our cause even more.” He purred.

Her mouth cracked open further, and her magic- his magic, their magic- reached out to all of the souls. Hundreds and hundreds of human souls were tugged forth, to the extreme panic of their owners. There was a flex of their metaphorical magical muscles, and all of the souls jolted forwards, surrounded by the green color of their magic. The color drew out of the souls, flooding into the barriers and leaving behind a hollowed out gray shell in the shape of a soul.

Bodies dropped by the hundreds, every man and woman dropping dead where they stood as the power and life in their souls were physically yanked from their husks. The gray husks, once empty, crumbled into colorless dust and blew away with the last breaths of their hosts.

The soul colors, a whole rainbow of colors in every beautiful shade under the sun, moved with the motion of her hand. Cruelty raised her hands and clasped them together- and all of the souls crushed into one dark, black ball. The power from them was immense and heavy, so, so heavy.

The air under the mass of magic heated, scorching over the stone by the weight of the magic. It scoured over her bones as Cruelty urged it closer, and Toki wanted nothing more than to get rid of it and give them all their souls back. Cruelty betrayed all of them. All of his people- and that rankled inside of Toki.

“And with all of you,” He purred from within her, “With all of you, we’ll flatten the entirety of Ebott County, and bring Mount Ebott down to nothing but a mole hill. All of the monsters, inside and out- they will be nothing more than dust in the wake of our explosion.”

And then Cruelty swallowed the black orb.

Cruelty reached out, and took hold of something she had only heard Frisk describe. The save, load, and reset buttons appeared to her, as their power overshot that of the child hovering at the back of the battlegrounds. He laughed, voice loud and shaking with the power that was settling into her. “Ha! Now, Determination, this is mine. The power to save, to load, to reset- this is mine, and I’m not giving it back. You can’t cheat me out of this victory now, you nasty little pest.” He shattered the reset button with a blow, and reached out to hit the save button.

He made it to the button- and shortly after it saved, he reached for the load, just to see what it would do.
The magic didn’t settle into her body gently like the merge of souls had. It blew into her bones painfully, the force of it blowing the clasps of her armor off of her body and fractures appeared along the surface of her bones as the sheer power of far, far too many souls flooded her. The pain wasn’t something Cruelty was prepared to handle, and Toki surged back into control several seconds too late as he fled back away from the pain.

She screamed as she was thrown headlong into it.

Her bones buckled, shattering and melting under the pressure of the magic literally blowing out of her. Her arm melted away, but reformed shortly after. Her body was breaking down and reforming too quickly for her to follow, every moment of it an extended agony. The weight of the magic sunk the ground in around them, and Toki, weighted down by the amount of magic that had been sucked from the souls, collapsed onto her knees.

They came in pulses. It didn’t start out slow- it started fast and hard, each pulse tearing some other part of her into nothing before the magic reformed her bones again. It was pain and it was agony- but Toki could feel it building up in her chest. This mass of magic, dark and promising bad intentions, was growing and getting denser and denser within her.

Vaguely through her ribs, she could see thick and oily tendrils of sickly magic, thousands of lives and souls trapped within her and mounting their power. It was a sick blob, and she retched with pain as it thrashed inside of her.

Her ribs cracked from the inside, and Toki heaved out magic that was thick and black and writhing like it was alive. The ash at her feet blew away, and the black mess began melting the soil with the caustic toxicity that was trapped within the inside of her body and trying desperately to escape.

‘It’s going to explode,’ Cruelty’s voice purred inside of her. ‘It’s going to explode, and decimate everything. The power from a single human soul is the equivalent of thousands of monster souls. We’re a living nuclear bomb. We are going to explode beautifully, Kindness. I can see your thoughts, I feel your memories- oh yes, your pain is going to be glorious when you kill everyone you’ve come to know and love. Your children, your husband, your brothers, your monster heathen family- all of them will die by our hand. It will be the most glorious revenge I could have ever conceived.’

“Run!” Toki cried to the only living things still standing in the clearing. She clutched at herself, trying to expunge the power as much as she could. She couldn’t do it fast enough, couldn’t shed it off fast enough. It was too much, too fast, too powerful-

She was going to explode, and there was nothing she could do to stop it.

But… But Toki could hide it.

There had to be some place to hide it. She needed some place to tuck herself away, where she couldn’t hurt anyone with the violent death she was about to meet. Toki plunged backwards into herself, and forced her way into Cruelty’s memories.

‘What? What are you doing?’

She delved deeper. He knew everything there was to know about Balance- about why they were torn asunder, about how they became what they did. He mentioned that they wanted to cross the universes, that she could see through what he called the void, into the other universes that were all connected by core threads.
‘No! No, stop, Kindness! Stop!’

That was it.

It was dark- she could see glimpses of it, from the time long before, that had remained in his memories. It was dark, so dark and so deep. It was an endless plane of darkness, but it served the purpose of bridging the gap between universes.

The void. The void- the expanse between worlds- that could hold the explosion with no detriment to any of the verses. That… That could work.

“That was it.” It was Papyrus- she could hear him, and see him trying to reach out to her. He seemed to be struggling against the air- the magic that was pulsing off of her in waves. “Toki!” His desperate cry of her name reached her soul. He tried teleporting closer, but the energy pouring off of her blasted him back and singed his armor- and his bad leg collapsed and sent him sprawling once more with an agonized cry.

The pulsing waves were coming faster and faster- she didn’t have enough time to say what she wanted to say…!

Tears beaded in her sockets. If she stayed, everyone would die. If she fell into the void… There was no chance she could find her way out. “I love you,” her voice was warped, and ethereal as the magic made it ricochet through the air. “I love you, I love you, I love you forever and always, and I’m so sorry. Take care of everyone for me- Take care of our children. I love you, all of you.”

“Toki!” Papyrus was desperate- her words reached him clearly, despite the magical pressure deafening nearly everyone there.

Toki simply smiled at him. Her love for him gave her the strength she needed, that last final boost to make her decision and ignore the screaming man trying to fight her for control of the body they shared. She reached out behind her- and tore open reality. She dug, deeper and deeper through layers and layers of realities and realms near the surface, where all manner of creatures could be summoned and called. She ignored them- she had to find it. It was-

Darker, yet darker.

When she found it, she tore it wide open, the edges wobbling and trying to close, but unable to fight the sheer magical pressure that tore it asunder. It was black and writhing, alive and oily and dark, so very, very dark.

“NO!” There was a petrified shriek from Tenebris, and he seemed caught between wanting to bolt as far away from the terrifying darkness that was reaching out from the rip in reality, and trying to reach for Toki even though there was no way to get close to her.

As he began to try and move for her, Toki leaned back-

And Toki let herself slide willingly back into the void.

The black expanse of space shut tightly behind her, and suddenly the crippling magical pressure was gone.

But so was Toki.

And at that moment, one could swear the mountain itself screamed with the voices of all those who witnessed as the one they loved disappeared into the place that never gave anyone back.
“TOKI!”
Chapter 91

Chapter by AutobotNightStrider

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Well, what did you think of that, hm? 8) What a good cliffhanger that was~ ;) Got some healthy responses out of you all. Heheheh~

ALSO. PLEASE READ AND NOTE THIS. I DID ART FOR THIS CHAPTER. I DID THIS MONTHS AND MONTHS AGO BACK BEFORE MY SAI PROGRAM WAS RETURNED TO ME. SO ITS SHITTY SHITTY ART. BUT IT IS WHAT TOKI LOOKS LIKE NOW. THERE IS NSFW IN THIS PHOTO SET. SO DON’T SCROLL PAST THE FIRST ONE IF YOU AREN’T OF AGE.

Silverwing Notes: WELL. Wasn't that a fun way to end the chaos! LOL JK WE JUST GETTIN STARTED FAM.

Everything was black and cold and so, so heavy. If her power was a nuclear explosion- then this…
This was a million of them. It compressed around her, pressing her tightly into a shape that she didn’t recognize. It shaped and reshaped her, working her in an endless darkness with a painless touch that warped her bones and poisoned her body.

Every breath she took, she breathed it in, and it was thick and choking, cloying. It filled every surface of her, inside and out- and Toki had no space left not invaded by the darkness of the void.

But it was dark… it was… comforting… it was almost a solace after the pain she had experienced prior. She didn’t want to be here, though. There was… There was no place to go though. She wouldn’t… She couldn’t see her children now- she couldn’t see Papyrus. The last vision she had of him was his face stretched in horror, as he reached for her.

At least she’d gotten to tell him that she loved him and her children. So there was that small mercy, she supposed. She at least got to tell him that.

“At least the void is peaceful,” She murmurs to herself, her words muffled by the thick darkness that choked her existence and kept her confined.

‘Peaceful you say. Tch.’

Oh. Right... One could almost forget how she now shared her mind with the maniac who had terrorized her family so relentlessly.

She sighed, making a burble of darkness crawl past her teeth. “It doesn’t hurt. It’s… It’s so heavy here. It outweighs the pain from out there. From all the soul’s who’s power you sucked into us. Including… Including the power of Corruption.” She grimaced. “He was there too, wasn’t he…? You stole his soul power.”

‘I wonder if I did. He was as cowardly as Cowardice. I'm sure at first sign of bad news, he ran for his petty, pathetic life.’

“He might not have run if you’d been as loyal to them as they were to you. They were dying for you.” She murmured tiredly. “They did die for you and for your cause— for what you and Corruption made them believe. And you… You turned around, and you sucked all the power… all of their lives… into my body.” She chuckled a tired and quiet laugh. “You know what… It doesn’t matter any more, Cruelty. It doesn’t matter. We’re… We’re together now. What did you say? Ashes to ashes, dust to dust? It is as it should be. We’re one once more.” She sighs. “And we’re never getting out of here.”

‘Heh… You really don’t remember anything, do you, Kindness…?’ Cruelty chuckled quietly, before he sighed. ‘Ashes to ashes, dust to dust. My tears to your tears, my blood to your blood.’ he began, ‘Take my life with you, to find the things we left behind.’

That struck a chord in her, and something inside her half of the soul pulsed against his own. She inhaled shakily, and the darkness flitting against her core. “An uncertain path to the future, revealing a past imperfect.” The words came unbidden, from somewhere deep inside of her. “Flickers in the mirror, glitter and swirl, darkly fading into twisted reflections, blurring the lines between you and me.

One could almost hear the smile on his voice ‘Yes, that’s it. You do remember, if at least a little of what we shared...’

“I don’t… know where that came from.” She whispers softly. “I don’t… It just… I dunno… my soul sometimes knows things that I don’t. It remembers, even if I don’t.”

‘Ha ha ha...’ He chuckled quietly at her words, before he went quiet.

The darkness pulsed around them, and Toki grimaced as an uncomfortable feeling flooded her soul.

“Kindness and Cruelty. It is good to see you again.” The darkness spoke to them both. “I’m afraid you can’t linger here. It is not your fate to linger here and remain as you are. You have something important to do for me, Kindness. You have something very important to do— something that requires all of what you have with you now. You’ll find out what that is when the time is right. I have given shape to what you need to hold the power of which you now possess— there is a block as well, to keep the vast ocean of it under lock and key.”

“A block…?” She blinked, slightly dazed. The voice booming through her head was everything and nothing, and it made her head hurt just to listen to it.

“Yes.” The darkness spoke. “A block. Do not break it, Kindness, nor you, Cruelty, or you will undo all that I have done. Now it is time… Make your peace.”

“Make my peace…?” Toki rasped.

“Make your peace.”

She stirred, body starting to ache— when there was a pull behind her navel. She shrieked, and cried out, body twisting as the darkness began to pulse and twist and warp around her— and then it began to pull her, faster and faster and faster and deeper, down and down into a place that felt even darker—

And then there was light, as the darkness opened up and spat her out.

She twisted, falling through cold, cold air, and spread her hands out to stop her fall— though there was no stopping it. It was only hundreds of feet of falling— but there was snow down below.
Her… Her hand? It… it was a hand. Not bone. With curved talons and fingers, cuffed with a pale link of green fur around her wrist. Something spread on her back, trying to catch the air, but she couldn’t- she didn’t know how to do it-

And she hit the snow, which was just as pale as her pale skin- and she knew only pain and cold.

She sank a bit as she came to meet the icy snow, having made a comical sound one could imagine hearing when one in a cartoon landed in snow so deep.

'Well... that's one thing I can cross off of my bucket list. Oh wait...' Glad to hear Cruelty was reacting with shitty humor. ‘Real glad you’re in control right now, I can't feel anything.'

‘Oh shut up, Cruelty.’ It might have been thick, fluffy snow- but it hurt. Her body was durable, but her skin- her skin- would be mottled with bruises within a couple hours. She struggled upright, finding a foreign weight on her back, and a strange shape to her legs. “That… What happened to my body?” She tried to suck in a breath through her nose- and choked. She didn’t have a nose. “Where’s my nose? Oh my god, I don’t have a nose. What the fuck. What the fuck happened? Where am I? Oh my god, everything hurts.”

Standing upright was doable with the help of one of the numerous trees, and she took a moment to crane behind her, having to look past the fluffy mane of green hair she seemed to have around her neck.

Wings. Big, massive, green insect wings. She had them. Holy shit. Holy shit she had wings. “… This isn’t my body,” She whispers. “This is not my body.” Her hand comes up to her skull and brushes over it, and she nearly stabs herself with a hidden stinger in the green fur of her wrist. At least she still has her scar- she can recognize that about herself, even if it’s covered in what feels like short warm fur. Her horns… her horns feel different though. Much, much different.

Wait. Wait one moment. That was…

That was one too many hands.

Toki glances down.

She had four arms, under very bare and naked breasts. She had two larger ones, broader, stronger, set in the place of usual arms, with a smaller, daintier pair tucked just under those. They’re both identical, down to the green tuft of fur, and the stingers on the insides.

Panic wants to hit her- but dizziness does first. “Oh god… Okay… Okay, I need… I need to go… find shelter. No wonder I’m so cold. Okay.” She manages to stagger a few steps, dual sets of arms keeping her upright, and works her way through the forest. “I can… I can panic later. I need to get home. I need… I need to find home.” She didn’t know where she was. A glance to the sky showed a ceiling as dark as the night, despite the fact that the snow reflected the light like it was daytime. It felt like daytime, anyways.

There was snow and thick trees everywhere- but she had no idea where this was. It was… it was summer where she was, heading towards the middle of it actually. Where was she?

‘Cruelty? I know you’re going to be dick about it, but… Can you see through my eyes? Do you know where we are?’

'Oh wow, am I so obvious?' He was going to be snide whether she called him out on it or not so he ended up being so anyways. ‘I can see through your eyes, and then some... I haven't a clue where we are, however. Whether it helps or it doesn't, I don't care. I think I'm starting to prefer you back when you were a walking pile of bones. You would have been easier to kill like that.’

‘You’re like the malicious shoulder devil that no one ever wants to hear, so yes, you’re obvious.’ Toki grouses as she makes her way. Walking comes easier than expected- like becoming a skeleton for the first time, she found extra instincts there that hadn’t been there before. They were tinged with a dark, sticky magic, and seemed to be stuck to her consciousness. The more she touched them, the more they entangled with her, and became a part of her.

It was unsettling. Deeply, deeply unsettling. What… What had the void- What had MAGIC done to her?

Toki can’t help but snort as she listens to him. ‘You realize that I’m the one alive, and you’re the one dead- so I’m pretty sure me being a walking bag of bones has little to do with me being easier to kill. You lost- and took out your whole army too, in a failed attempt to kill everyone. But I still beat you- I stuck us in the Void, and it might have… done something to me, but it worked. You lost- and we’re one now. You can’t hurt monsters ever again.’ She exhales shakily, and comes to a stop among several roots. Her vision swirls, and her legs throb. It takes her a moment to look down- and realize that some of the fuzz coating her ankles is not just fuzz.

She’s bleeding? She’s bleeding green from several splits in her pale white skin, no doubt from the fall to the snow- no matter how soft it was, it was still a long fall and she was a being of flesh now. How… How strange. How positively strange… She hasn’t had actual blood in so long… It feels so weird. She’s left a little trail of droplets all through the trees as she had shuffled along. She shakily breathes through her mouth, cycling air through her teeth, and makes to stumble on.

Her legs collapse however, and she hits the ground again on her knees. She hadn’t made it all that far from where she fell… or so she thought. She wasn’t sure. Looking far from her wasn’t easy.

A rolling cough escaped her, and green flecked the ground. What…? Oh… Oh no, this… This wasn’t the place to go through that. She’d… She’d die out here in the cold. But… Where?

The tree next to her had a thick root system, with a small inlet in it. She could… Burrow? No. She didn’t have the strength.

But- there was a wall of rocks not far from here. She could see a small alcove. Toki could make it. Toki could do it. She hauled herself up, her mouth opening in a heated pant. She tried to gain her feet again, but the ground swam too much before her eyes. So on all fours- or all sixes, technically, worked best.

Her larger pair of arms supported her easily, while the smaller pair steadied her when she wobbled. She made it to the alcove, coughing up mouths of blood and blinking green out of her eyes. Toki pauses to vomit up a stomach full of blood- she was bleeding there too?- and then crawls away from the mess. She managed to shove her way inside of the cave. It looked… it looked like it should have fit, but it was a tighter fit than she’d have thought. Or she was just really tired. She crawled into the stone cave, and curled up as tightly as she could. Shivers set in- partly from fever, partly from not.

She curled her dual set of arms around herself, settling on her sides. Her wings, despite being insect-based in nature, seemed to be fairly flexible. It allowed her to drape one over her side, and use it as a sort of blanket.

It was… Going to be a long time in waiting it out.

Outside, the wind started to kick up into a snowstorm.
'What the hell is happening to you?! Kindness!' Cruelty snarled out to her, a bit freaked out about what just happened. 'I demand an explanation!'

'It’s called Death’s Rebound.’ She responds, tucking her face into her arm and closing her eyes. She didn’t have any cloth to wipe away the blood- so this was the best she’d have to do. ‘It happens when you die, but you’re… loaded back. You know the reset button you broke for ‘Determination’, as you called Frisk? Well, Frisk can control the resets and loads- and they’re the reason we were all exhausted. I don’t know how many times we died- but… we died, and they loaded. And now we have to deal with Death’s Rebound. Which is going to make us wish for death, trust me.’

Her breathing grew ragged and she choked, coughing up another spattering of green ooze. He growled at that, but he heard something through her ears. Unable to physically shut her up, he simply started with hissing at her in her head. ‘Shut up! I hear something! Or... Someone!’

‘Maybe it’s someone who can help…?’ But who would help a naked, hemorrhaging monster in the woods? Particularly one who… well, she didn’t exactly think she looked very friendly. Toki tried to quiet down, but she couldn’t stop choking. She had lungs now- actual lungs and not phantom lungs that kept trying to fill with blood, and she had to clear them out or she would drown.

She couldn’t muster the strength to move, regardless, even as her coughing came to a stop. The wind was chill against her back and wings. She managed to tilt her head a little bit, one of her strangely angled horns catching on her arms as she angled so one of her bleeding eyes could creak open and peer at the entrance of the cave.

The form looked large, and rather fluffy. It gave a quiet growl as it started to enter the cave, shaking off snow before lifting it’s head, which seemed smaller than the rest of it. However, the growling stopped, but the form began to stalk closer.

It stopped partway into the darkness of the cave, before there was rustling from within the shape.

The sound of a lighter sparking then could be heard, accompanied by small sparks before a flame took, revealing a pale white face belonging to a form bundled up in a very warm-looking coat, large purple eyes looking upon Toki with surprise, "Oh my goodness..."

'... The beast!?'

Relief flooded her immediately. She couldn’t… see him all that well- but she knew those eyes. Those large, purple eyes belonged to only one monster she knew- along with that voice. She knew him. “Tenebris,” she rasped quietly, before she broke into a fit of coughing again. Her wings bristled but settled shortly, and she shivered, her pale, bare skin already starting to take on a greenish tinge from the bruising she sustained from her fall. Toki couldn’t reach him- but she… She was found. Tenebris had found her.

But… Why was he speaking English? He spoke it miraculously, as if he had been born knowing it, or just had a really long time to learn it. Longer than her Tenebris had, that was for sure.

His pupils thinned in surprise as she spoke, before they widened again slowly and he set the lighter aside as to provide a bit of lighting, as weak as it was, "You poor thing... absolutely miserable...” He came closer, shifting in his coat in the shadows and suddenly she was warm.

"What could have brought such a poor condition to one such as yourself...?" As concerned and eager for an answer as he was, the question was obviously rhetorical as he examined her as best he could,
"You look beaten within an inch of your life..."

He had draped his coat over her- or something close to it, she thought. It was warm- god, it was warm, and it felt heavenly, even though she was fevered and it would do nothing to bring her temperature down. She shivered again, and turned as best she could to see him better. A fresh drop of blood rolled from her eye and down her face, and she panted, before a wet cough spattered more blood from between her teeth.

One such as herself? Wha- He didn’t recognize her. Wait- Wait no. Her Tenebris didn’t speak English as his primary tongue.

Toki’s eyes closed, and she seemed to deflate a little bit. She sucked in a breath through her teeth. Maybe… Maybe things had just changed. There was no telling. Who knows what had happened while she’d been in the void? “I… fell.” It took effort to switch over to English- but she was proud that she did so without too heavy of an accent. “I fell a long ways. Where am I? It’s so… So cold, Tenebris…”

He tensed at that, and then he sighed gently and reached out, setting a hand on the side of her cheek.

'It’s touching me! Make it stop touching me now!

"You are in the deeper parts of Snowdin Forest." He answered, "But please, try to relax and rest, I’ll get you somewhere safe by the time you’re awake." He told her gently.

‘Oh grow up, Cruelty. He’s not going to hurt us.’ She sniped to her ghostly pest. Her eyes closed at his touch, fevered skin burning up. “Snowdin…?” She queried. “But… I was… Nara Village…”

She murmured, trying to sit up. Sitting up proved to be a bad attempt to make, and she swooned right back down onto her forearms. She groaned softly, making a quiet, distressed sound in the back of her throat.

"Easy... easy." He soothed gently. "Rest. Please... I’ll be able to help you better once the storm passes, but you need to rest."

“All… Alright…” She shivered under the coat all the same, and eyed him quietly for a moment. “Are… are you going to be okay? It’s… It’s very cold… you usually get cold really easy…”

Bleeding out of her eyes, spewing blood from her eyes and mouth, and she still worried about others. That was something she was glad hadn’t changed with the addition of Cruelty on her soul.

He didn't answer at first, and then he smiled, and shook his head. "Don't you worry your beautiful little head about me. I'll be okay." He told her. "Rest."

'Flattering from an old man, makes me want to retch.'

‘Good thing you can’t, so keep your retching feelings to yourself.’ Her stomach was woozy, no doubt filling with blood again- but there wasn’t much to be done for it. She wasn’t strong enough to get out of the cave- and she didn’t want to hurl blood on either of them. She nodded quietly, and tucked her head into her arms. She curled them up, her breasts sliding slightly across the stone and making her wince, and then settled down with a faint noise. "If you get cold, take your jacket." She murmurs. “Fire magic… has its uses.” She just wasn’t sure how it would respond, given the volume of magic she could feel at her disposal, but she’d use it if she needed to. She shuddered, coughing again, but let her body settle down.

She didn’t really sleep, so much as she dozed. Solid sleep was hard when she was fighting nausea, and constantly coughing up blood.
I'll make you regret saying that.

Thankfully for Toki, the shock of the cold, even with the offering of the jacket, allowed her to pass out.

What she didn't expect, however, was to wake in what looked like a hospital room.

"..."

The room was dim, she could guess it was intentional, but it was also warm... really warm... or... at least she was. Shifting herself had her discovering she was draped in a blanket that was radiating heat. Oh god it felt good compared to the snowstorm she passed out in.

She took a breath, before wincing and immediately regretting it as a wave of nausea made it feel like there was more than just air wanting to come back out.

"Careful... You're in what I could only consider a critical condition." His voice again. It was like a beacon in the darkness, so to speak- but it spoke with a different tone than she was used to.

Her gaze searched until she discovered who had saved her, and for a moment she almost called the name of her father in law again. But to see him again... she could only guess it impossible. His tone, the way he spoke to her... The youth she could see in his face. It made it impossible.

Toki took a shallow breath, hissing through teeth, and closed her eyes again as grief hit her. She wasn’t home- that wasn’t... That wasn’t her Tenebris, was it? The closer she looked, the younger he looked. He looked so, so much younger than her Papa did. He looked... Hell, he looked closer to his Sons age than the age he actually was.

Her eyes felt sticky and crusted, like the worst case of eye-sleep she had ever had. However, she knew that wasn’t the case. Death's Rebound meant that was blood- and the stickiness meant that there was still fresh blood rolling down her face.

She coughed, nearly retched, and shakily tried to sit up. "It’s a temporary condition," she rasped. She had a fever, she noticed. Alongside the bruises marring her front from her fall, there was a green flush that had lit up her moon-pale skin, and had nothing to do with embarrassment at her very, very naked state.

"And if you know it's length of effect, you know whether or not it is contagious, correct?" He asked.

That was telltale in itself. Her Tenebris knew what this was, and what the symptoms were. He had lived them, intimately, before. "It's not contagious," she coughs, angling her head so she doesn’t spatter blood on the blanket. The bed gets a fresh coat of green however. "Its... It's called Deaths Rebound." Toki rasps to him, trying to clear her mouth. "Probably... Probably a week. Maybe... Maybe longer. Maybe two. I don't know. It might be longer." She hadn't ever cheated death that many times. "But it'll end, I promise. With me alive." She says that pointedly, because it did look like she was quite looking like she was dying.

He watched for a moment, then his shoulders lowered from their tense position and he came closer, "This knowledge is critical, and I'm thankful you know as much as you do, or this process would not be as easy." He told her as he held up an empty bucket to her. "Here." He set it in her grasp before he sighed. "I will not ask too many questions of you right now; you must get some rest. I will do what I can to help you in the meantime, but rest is your most valuable asset as of now,"
The bucket is settled in her lap, and she holds the edge with one hand. Her stomach is twisting, but not ready yet. "Thanks, Tenebr- ah... Thank you." She coughs. "Unfortunately, I'm not one of the ones lucky enough to be unconscious during this process. Rest is few and far between." She glances up at him with weak, feverish eyes. For all her weakness, the power thrumming through her being has her lucid. Or her fever just isn't high enough to make her thoughts blur. "Please. Feel free to ask what you want of me. I'm sure you must be very curious about a lot of things." She coughs.

He tilted his head slowly at first, then he sighed, "I am... But it can wait... I can offer you a dose of anesthetic to help you sleep, or if you think slumber is impossible, a moderate painkiller that might make you drowsy."

"I..." She swallowed, closing her eyes briefly. "You seem pretty dead set on making me sleep." She tilts her head to regard him, her breath rasping from her lungs in wet gasps. "I... Guess a painkiller wouldn't be bad. I feel like I've been hit by a truck." Which he had. Well... His other self had. She wondered if he even knew what a truck was.

Her wings hinged up against her back as her stomach gave a lurch, and she groaned as she leaned over the bucket. It didn't take long before she vomited- a thick wave of blood sliding forth into the bucket. God, that was awful. Her mane of hair flopped faintly into her face. And one of her smaller hands shakily leaned up to push it out of the way.

"There's no worse feeling than feeling this sick while forced to stay conscious. I was trying to be considerate and offer what I thought was best. Forgive me if I was wrong." He muttered dryly. "If you'll allow me a moment, I will prepare the painkiller."

Toki finds her first of many uses of having more than just two hands. Two hold the bucket, one holds her hair, and the other is left to give him a thumbs up. Her mouth is too busy purging her stomach of the blood it had retained, and she's struggling not to choke on it.

The thumbs up would have to suffice for approval until he got back. She'd apologize for ruffling his feathers when he returned.

He returned a short while later with a syringe and cleared his throat as he approached, "This won't hurt a bit," he told her gently, "I've also added an agent that should help with your nausea." he told her, "Might I see one of your arms?"

She had finished purging her systems by then, and had set the empty bucket on the floor by the bed. When he returned, Toki turned to him and presented one of her arms, giving him a lopsided smile as she folded the second pair sloppily in her lap. She had given him one of the longer ones, leaving the smaller ones curled in her lap. "The nausea aid would be nice... I'm sorry about my comment earlier. I'm just... Not quite all there. I'm not usually that harsh. And, ah, yeah... Needles always hurt."

"It's quite alright, my dear. All is forgiven." He purred gently as he took her arm, "I'll do this real quick, then I'll leave you be, if you'd like."

Toki lifted the smaller arm that was on the same side that he was going to inject into, and used it to cover a cough. Her other arms kept the blanket up around her chest so she didn't flash him. "I... Would not mind company. As I said before, I don’t mind if you ask some questions. You don't have to ask them all at once... You're kind of entitled to them, helping a stranger who's name you don't even know."

He hesitated as he saw her second pair of arms, as they had now made themselves more prominent, before he shook his head and turned back to the task on hand, he found a vein in her arm after long enough, and began to push the needle in...
Only...

It didn't break the skin....

"What the..."

The thick white skin of her arm simply flexed under the needle, but didn't give way. In fact, the needle seemed close to bending from the pressure he was exerting on it to slide it into her arm.

Toki glanced at him as his befuddlement reached her. She cleared her throat. "What's wrong?" She didn't look at the needle- no one in their right mind could look at a needle sticking out of themselves. He was right though. It was completely painless. Which... It shouldn't have been.

Her eyes flicked down. ".... Oh. Ah... Shit, sorry. I forgot about that." That was probably her defense. She'd never had to deal with needles being hooked up as a skeleton, since she hadn’t had flesh. But this... Oh goodness. She took a shaky moment to focus, and lowered her defenses.

The slightly bent needle sunk into her flesh, making her wince. "Painless huh...?"

"I'm sorry, I had not realized you had such a powerful epidermal layer." He apologized, "I would have prepared a stronger needle."

"Ah... It's not my skin that's the problem. I forgot to drop my defense for you. It... Toughens my skin." She pulled that right out of her suddenly very fleshy ass, and she’s proud to say that it sounded like the damn truth. Toki exhales through her teeth and gives him a shaky smile. The painkiller was already numbing her arm, a coolness that was spreading through her veins like heavenly ice. Well, except that it made her feel chilled. Her magic churned, trying to warm her in response. "No harm, no foul. Its okay."

"I understand, it's a good asset... should I be fighting you." He chuckled quietly, "I'll make sure to use thicker needles next time you need a shot, you're only getting away with this once, my dear." His chuckle ended with a soft snort.

She laughed just faintly at that, her soul panging with quiet longing for her Tenebris back home. For her mate. For her children. They surely were not here... And who knew if she would ever get to see them again? She would... She would have to see about opening the void again- about going back. If she was... if she was stable now, she could probably make it back. She just needed to access the magic, and use it to force her way to the void. "We'll see, Tenebris, we'll see." She shifted a bit and laid down, her arm bleeding only a little from the needle mark. For the most part, she was starting to hurt less. Now only her soul hurt.

"Mmh... Before I forget... How do you know my name?" His tail rattled with agitation as he spoke to her. "Please answer me honestly... I really haven't the patience for playing hard-to-get with this topic." His arms folded behind his back, and his shoulders squared and straightened as his gaze darkened.

"Playing hard to get is my favorite game." She rasps, the familiar tease falling instinctively from her throat before she could stop it. She swallowed however and closed her eyes for a moment, taking a deep breath. This wasn't her Tenebris. She needed to remember that. Teasing him like she knew him would probably make him hostile. Toki took a few deep breaths to collect herself, and give her a moment to think of what to say. If only she could slip off into sleep and leave this as a conversation for after dreaming. Dreaming. Dreams. Wait... "Dreams." She answers, lying to him through her teeth. She couldn’t exactly tell him she was from another world where she married his son and had two beautiful children. "I've had dreams. I've seen... Things. A lot of things. Many, many things and places and people. One of those was..." She coughed. "You, Tenebris."

He growled as she sasssed him, not taking it as well as his counterpart might and his tail gave an angered shutter, but as she explained himself his gaze shifted, and from fading aggression came a gleam of curiosity, "Dreams...?" he questioned, before his shoulders lowered from their stance, and his head rose once more, "What kind of Dreams?" He inquired.

"You're going to have to get used to the teasing. I do it to everyone that I'm familiar with." She'd seen him bristling at her like a cat that had been dropped in water, and had sent him a singularly unimpressed look at his visible threat. For once, Toki was pretty sure she could handle herself if she pissed him off. A hacking cough had her trembling, and she cleared her dry mouth as best she could. "Dreams. I see things. People, places. Other worlds, mostly." She answers. "I've seen you before. That's why I know your name."

"My pack-born name..." He corrected her. "Since I lost my pack, I've lived with the name 'Tenne'. I do not share this information lightly, and I must ask you keep it secret, as I have done for this long."

He then sighed, "Speaking of pack... what caused you to be separated from yours? Such terrible damage... Do Insectis not aid their kin as Drake or Avari would?" The tall purple eyed monster inquired.

"I'm Tokiko... Nara." It physically hurt to slip back into using her old name. She had been a Gaster since she had gotten married, and had loved being one. But... Listing herself as one would probably be bad, depending on his last name here. "Just call me Toki though." She sighs. "I'll keep your pack name quiet."

His question makes her flinch, and her wings draw tight to her. What excuse could she give...? He obviously knew more about his kind than she did, but... Well... She wasn't sure. Pack... Pack... Hive stood out more to her. "My... Hive and I. We were... In a big battle. I... I took damage to save my hive, and I was... Successful in doing so. However, I was sent here as a result. There... There is no way back to them that I know of." She murmurs softly, a soft, sad buzzing droning on low in her throat. That was the sound of a broken Queen who had lost more than just her hive.

"Sent here...?" he questioned, "What do you mean by that...?" though he did notice her sounds and detected the sorrow of it, and he slowly came closer, his posture fading as he came to offer her consolation with a hand on her shoulder.

"I was... Taken." She said. "I am not from here. I was taken through somewhere dark." The hand on her shoulder receives a gentle pat of thanks. She wants to let her touch linger, to savor the comforting feelings it could give- but she doesn't. She is lying to him. She doesn't deserve them, despite her very real grief. "It was dark and so heavy, seemingly empty but so full. It just... The darkness just was." She can't explain the Void better than that. "And then it dropped me here. It was... A long fall. Our wings are slow to respond if we are stunned, and... Well... I didn't have enough time to recover before I hit the ground." Once more pulled out of her ass- but she had seen enough stunned bees to assume she might be the same. Who knew.

He listened to the clever lie and tilted his head slowly, taking her words to mind and seeming to believe them, "I see... how... strange..." he sighed, before he looked to her wings, "thankfully you did not crush them when you landed." He mentioned.

"I landed on my face." She grimaced, wings twitching under his gaze. She could see belief starting to take root in his gaze, and felt guilt twisting her belly. If not for the anti-nausea agent in the painkiller, she probably would have vomited. "If not for my absurd defense, I probably would be a pile of broken bones and flesh bits."
"A good thing indeed... it kept you alive long enough for me to find you." he chuckled as he patted her shoulder gently, before moving away to give her personal space once more. "I've already started a medical dossier, if that's alright. just to have this... interesting disease down."

"Very true." She agrees lightly. Toki glanced at him as he stepped away, and sighed softly. "You shouldn't see any more cases of it popping up." Not... Not if she was still in possession of the save and load button that Cruelty had taken from Frisk. She had no intention of hurting anyone- so there was that. "But... If it does, I don't mind helping you with them." She had experience with the 'disease', after all. Toki swallowed thickly and felt like her mouth was full of iron filled sand. "Is there anything you need to add to my dossier while I'm coherent?"

"I suppose..." he collected a pen and paper and set up the paper on a clipboard, "You said your name was Tokiko Nara? Is there any special way of spelling it?"

She did suppose her name was definitely foreign to him, given the strict English he was speaking. "T-o-k-i-k-o N-a-r-a." She spells out easily for him. "It's spelled exactly how it sounds like it's pronounced." Toki shifts, and carefully turns onto her side. The blanket shifts, exposing a bruised but milky expanse of her hip and thigh from the strange shape to her legs. She needed to practice walking when she was strong enough... Or he was going to find out her lie right off the bat. "You can just call me Toki though, Tenne."

"N-a-r-a. Okay." He then moved his pen to the next part of the page, "How old are you?"

Her first instinct was to fire off the fact that she was thirty four- but then she remembered that blaster beasts and boss monsters aged differently. She swallowed and couldn't recall the exact age lineup, but... She'd just wing it. "Three hundred and forty." She says lightly, hoping she hadn't just said she was an old hag, or that she was a young sprout. "What about you, Tenne? How old are you?"

"... I am Three-hundred ninety four." He answered, jotting her answer down on the paper

Older than her, which was to be expected. She shifts her arms, and grunts as the blanket falls. Her hands scrabble for it, urging it back up to hide under the warmth again. "I see. Not much older than me then."

"Indeed so, only half a century." he replied, before he looked at her, "I... need not guess your species. Though if you don't mind I'd like a look at your stats, i had only checked your HP when i brought you in."

"I guess it's pretty obvious what I am." He'd called her an Insectis, which was obviously a subtype of blaster beast. She swallowed faintly. "Sure. Here." She eased her soul from her chest, the massive and full two toned shape warm and bright. All save for the new crack glancing along the upper curve of the darker side of the. The crack was new, obviously fresh. She winced, know in where that was from. Losing ones mate was a traumatic experience, as was losing ones children.

He came closer and gently took her soul into his left hand. He began to write down some things, bouncing the soul as to weigh it, though the entire time the crack was avoided.

Though he then wrote something down and underlined it

'Condition?'

He then proceeded to check over her stats and wrote down his findings

LV: Undetectable.
"So what's the verdict, doc? Everything look good?" She asks quietly. The bouncing of her soul had been an... Odd experience to feel, and she wasn't sure how to process it. She simply watched him handle the soul that filled his hand easily with some to spare.

"I'm not going to lie to you, my dear... I've been a doctor for almost a hundred and fifty years and never once did I see a soul as... unique as yours..." He seemed uncertain about using that as a description for her soul. "You're missing quite a lot of stat indicators, and your LV is unreadable, not to mention the weight of your soul... Almost feels like the weight of two souls, if not more. The unique color and shape is also... concerning."

'Gee, I fucking wonder why that would be.' She grumbled to herself and her slumbering companion-who paid her no mind. Toki simply nodded quietly. "It's a consequence of my actions to save my hive. What I did was... Risky." She grimaces. "Though the... Missing stats are new. Last I checked, my defense should be resting closer to two hundred. Not... Whatever you have right now. Attack too." She'd gotten Cruelty's stat alongside hers when they had become the Franken version of Balance. Toki choked again, and had to clear her mouth before she could continue to talk. She was missing that about being a skeleton. She had been able to talk while she did things with her mouth. Now she couldn’t. 'I think a lot of my stats might have been... I dunno. Messed up when I came here? The dark place- the Void- did things to me when I passed through it. Maybe it... Muddled things?"

"Two hundred... impressive." He rumbled as he jotted that beside his notes. More like outstandingly high. "Perhaps it did, it seems that time is our most valuable asset in your indicators righting themselves once more."

"We'll have to see indeed." She nods slowly. "And yeah. I had some... Fairly high stats among my hive." She comments softly. "Everyone else was strong, but so... Fragile." She sighs, and watches him handling her soul. "I wouldn't touch the crack." She advises. "I've got experience with them. You'll feel the cause of it, and it's not pretty." Heart break, losing your mate and children... They were hard, hard things to witness and experience. Idly, she coughed and flexed one of her slightly aching wrists, taking in the stinger that flexed out from the incurve of her arm. All of her arms had them, it seemed. They seemed able to be withdrawn though, so that as a good thing.

"Noted." he replied, looking at her soul and letting it turn a few times in his hand before he held it back to her, "Here." he rumbled, "Even if it was not as unpleasant as you claim, I really would not want to put that much stress on you. Especially now." He rumbled, before he sighed, "I'm proud of you for lasting this long. If all that you speak of is truly as awful as I imagine..."

She looks up at him as she takes her soul, and lets it slide back into her chest. Blood trickles from her eye again, mimicking the trail of a tear drop. “It’s honestly probably worse.” She admits quietly. “But… I am strong. I have to be strong. If I am not…” Her fingers tighten on the blanket, claws trembling over the surfaces as she slowly eases herself down into laying down. “If I allow myself to crack and break… I don’t know if I would recover.” She murmurs tiredly. She can feel the painkiller starting to make her drowsy, and it’s helping her pain levels a lot. All the same, she’s still coughing and bleeding from everywhere- but she hurts less.

It is a small mercy.
He nodded in understanding. "I'm proud of you." He repeated, "You are a strong soul and as long as you are given the help your body needs, you'll stay strong enough to fight this disease."

She smiles slightly, just the smallest quirk of her teeth. It didn’t matter if he wasn’t her Tenebris… His voice was similar, though… different in it’s own way. It was soothing. Her eyes closed, and she took a shaky, wet breath, before glancing up to him again. “All I need is to stay hydrated,” she rasped, “and warm. My body will recover in due time. The first few days are the roughest.” She whispers.

"And hydration will not be a problem," He replied quietly, “we have running water and the river water that gets piped from the caverns is pure and rich in minerals."

“Mmm,” she closes her eyes again, “The… The water that…” She couldn’t name the place- she wasn’t supposed to know everything. “The water that glows. It… it helps ease Death’s Rebound. But… thank you, again.” She shifts a bit and sighs. “Can I ask where we are…? Everything is so… white.” It looked like a medical facility to her, but she only knew of one at the castle.

"My new research facility in the burning lands." He answered, "As well as our second-most progressed medical center." Though he lifted a brow at the 'glowing water' she spoke of. He hadn't any idea what that was just yet...

Burning lands…? Hotland? She blinked her eyes slowly open at him, and buzzes gently. “Burning lands…? Huh… Sounds like it’s really hot.” She sleepily closes her eyes, though they jerk open again as she’s hit with a coughing fit. Once it subsides, she curls up, and peers at him quietly from under the heated blanket. She shivers a bit. “Mm… I hate to be a bother, Tenne, but… can I get some water, please…?"

Tenne nodded. He was quick to leave, and even quicker to come back. Upon his return, he had a few bottles of water, all of them showing to have chilled the air about them, promising a very cooling effect on her throat.

She gave him a thankful smile, and extended one of her arms out to him. They weren’t all that hard to move, honestly- there was something in her head, a secondary instinct helping to guide her along, and keeping her from accidentally hauling off and punching herself in the face by accident- but she was sticking to simple tasks so far. Toki took the bottle. She fiddled with the cap for a moment, trying to figure out how to get it undone with her claws.

She’d never had these before- and these were… definitely a hindrance. She missed having just bones. Her bones might have had pointed tips to them forming ‘claws’ of their own, but these… these were actual claws. Between the claws and the general weakness in her limbs, she was having a hell of a time getting it open.

She got it eventually though, and took a small sip, both relishing in the cold that chilled and soothed her throat, and hating the cold because it made her feel chilled. “Mm… Thank you.” She sounded less raspy, voice it’s usual warm tone now.

"You sound better already." He chuckled gently, setting the bottles where she could reach them, though he went ahead and loosened the caps a little for her for later. "Is there any questions you have for me?" The doctor then inquired.

“A little water goes a long way for a dry mouth.” She responds lightly. She coughs again, but there’s nothing to be done for it. “Well, one wet with blood, anyways.” Toki licks her teeth, and then nods slowly. “… Yeah.” She nods again. She needed to figure out how she was going to survive in this world- if she was going to figure out a way to try and get home… Well… she needed to know how to survive. She knew gold was the currency underground- Papyrus had still been paid in it from the king for his services, and she was quite up to date on the conversion rates of gold to cash- but she knew little of this world’s economy or… well, anything. “Can you tell me about this world? What I need to know? My dreams do not cover… well, the finite details.”

"Heh... a world... if only we were so lucky..." He chuckled quietly, a frown growing on his face,
"We're trapped under a great, vast mountain, our prison, and our punishment."

She frowned slowly, but nodded quietly. “I... I see.” She was supposed to play clueless- somewhat clueless- so she tilted her head as she choked and coughed. She leaned over to spit blood into the bucket. “Can you not simply dig out?”

"Unfortunately is it not the earth that seals us in." He replied gently. "Rather the magic of humanity..." He murmured, before he growled lowly. "They punish us for existing, and sealed us here."

She grimaces at his growl, and simply nods. “I... I see.” She makes a note to ask Cruelty if there’s a way for them to help the monsters get out. “Where... Where I came from,” She says softly, “I was outside. Outside of... this... this Barrier.” She recalls the name for the prison that kept the monsters caged. “If I can help get you free, I will.” She promises quietly.

Boss hearts were supposed to be horrendously powerful- even in her own universe. Maybe she could do something now that she's Balance.

"A valuable promise, but I do not expect you to follow through with it, so do not worry." He chuckled gently, "It is a task impossible..."

“It’s not,” She protests, coughing weakly. “Nothing is impossible if you’re stubborn as hell and try hard enough. You’ll see. When... When I’m back in good health,” she rasps, “I’ll see if I can figure something out. I’m no scientist, but... sometimes you don’t have to be.”

"We will see." He had no hope for escape, but if she was so sure.

“We will.” She promises. Toki gives a soft sound, and closes her eyes again. “I... think I’ll rest now, Doctor. The painkiller is making me drowsy. Good painkiller, by the way. Other than my breathing,
I don’t feel anything.”

He nodded slowly and smiled to her gently. "Your prognosis is looking good, my dear... you deserve that rest."

She nodded at him shakily and smiled faintly. “Yeah... Thanks, doc.”

When he left, she turned over onto her side and cuddled up under the blanket. When she was sure she was alone, Toki quietly wept. The tears mixed with her blood, the same, sticky green fluid, just like her Tenebris used to do. He bled black, cried black, slobbered black- everything with her was just... green.

She wanted to go home. She wanted her mate, she wanted her babies, she wanted her mother, her father, her brothers, her Papa- she wanted her family and her people. She... She hoped they were okay.

Toki fell into a fitful sleep, plunged deep into dreams dark and twisted- dreams not wholly her own, but those of the soul she’d taken into her own.
Chapter 92

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Now we get a bit of a skip- and now Toki has been in this new world for about eight and a half weeks. 8) Read along and see what happens.

It took Toki two and a half weeks to fully recover to the point where Tenne felt comfortable in releasing her from his care. He had plans of taking her home with him, and slowly introducing her to his world. The problem with this idea was, Toki needed to get more sure of her body- she needed to learn it more. She could manage walking- she practiced in the hours he was away, and she was now a pro at pacing the halls. But flying, and finite management of her arms was beyond her- and she needed to get better at it.

He’d given her a turtleneck with holes ripped in the bottoms of the arms underneath, so she’d be able to use both sets. It was a little chilly on her lower arms, but she made do. They were small enough to tuck inside her shirt- they just gave her weird lumps and looked sort of like tumors. On top of that, he had given her a pair of pants to wear, when she had stepped off the table and very neatly flashed him.

He’d turned a bright hue of purple and scurried for clothing.

Tenne was sweet at times- in strange, strange ways that not all of Toki really understood.

But it didn’t matter- Toki… Toki had needed time. So she’d taken time. The last night that she was supposed to stay at the facility, Tenne had ended up falling asleep at his desk. She’d crept up to it, and wrote him a note stating that she was sorry for leaving on such short notice- but that it was necessary. She needed to see the world for herself, and experience it first hand, and that she needed time to work through her losses. She told him that they would see each other again soon.

The tall once-skeleton hadn’t specified how soon- because she wasn’t… She wasn’t sure how long she needed.

She’d left the lab that night, taking only the clothes that she wore and wiggling her way out of one of the windows, using her new claws to slide slowly down the wall. It didn’t take her all that long for her to reach the bottom of the surprisingly tall building- and then Toki was making her way off into the magma lit brightness of Hotland. Or… The burning lands, as Tenebris- Tenne- called them.

Toki left Hotland shortly, and took to the massive cavern between Waterfall and Hotland, where… Well, it looked like the castle and surrounding city was under construction. If it was this early… She had to wonder what time it was above the ground.

It didn’t matter.

It ultimately didn’t matter.

Not to Toki- Toki needed first a safe place to hunker down. She just needed time… She first tried the void again. She gathered her power in her hands- and she grabbed through space and time, digging deeper and deeper down to that empty black void that was not nearly as empty as it wanted her to think and tried to pull it open.

It seemed to laugh at her- muttering something vague about her purpose not having been fulfilled yet- and instead it ricocheted her back through the layers of fabric and space, and instead she tore open a space full of hellfire and brimstone, and got a lapful of wingless flaming hell hornet that was bound and determined to lick her face clean of the new layer of strange bony-skin she had.

Toki had not lost it all- but she’d lost what she held most dear to her. Her family, her friends, her husband, her babies- everything that gave her strength… And now that she had the strength to bend the magic to try and get back, the void simply laughed at her and threw her away.

The bee beast gave her summons the attention they needed. They were still decked out in their armor from the battle, though they did not seem worn, if only a little singed from the hellfire. Toki didn’t divest them of it- it was her last link to her world. She wanted it kept safe where nothing would get to it- and where better a place than in the realm of her summons?

Once her summons had been given ample time for the love and affection that they so desperately craved from her, Toki took time to herself. She… She needed time. She needed time to grieve.

And grieve she did. Tucked away from everyone and anything living, she curled up in the dark with only her own glow to provide her light, and she wept. The only one she had for company was Cruelty- and he was, as suspected, no help.

He made her feel worse.

It took her two weeks- two weeks of soul crushing grieving, where everything crashed down onto her and made it feel like the crack on her soul was simply growing larger and larger- to drag herself out of the darkness where she neither ate nor drank anything. She might have been right when she told Tenne that she was holding together because breaking meant she might not come back together- she broke only enough to grieve not being with her mate and her children and her family, and it took entirely too much effort to slip into waterfall and clean herself up in the semi-warm water when she managed to barely piece herself back together again to do such actions.

She wondered briefly if that was what Falling felt like.

Toki had to claw and drag herself out from a pit of despair that Cruelty seemed hell-bound on helping her throw herself in with carefully aimed jibes and painfully thrown memories. He raged through her mind like a wildfire- but Toki just… took it. He burnt himself out after long enough, and when she stopped responding to him, he seemed to stop trying to goad her into responding even faster. It seemed he didn’t know what to do with himself when she didn’t acknowledge him.

The bee beast cleaned with her clothes on, and just used her magic to dry her clothes and her fur. She came out of the water pearly white again- but vastly thinner than she should have been. Her body had never been the thickest- and it didn’t seem that her post-baby body had came with her with the change over- so there hadn’t been much stores saved up. After two weeks of being horribly, horribly sick with Death’s Rebound, and two weeks of being unresponsive to her body’s needs, Toki was… underweight, to put it simply.

She didn’t feel the hunger though- and that, she’s quite sure, was not a good sign. Either way, Toki re-hydrated her dehydrated self with the glowing rivers of Waterfall and then set out to explore and learn and see. The glowing water helped more than any regular water would- and she made sure to drink plenty of it while she was in the area.

But for the most part, once she had recovered enough of herself that she could think about moving,
Toki wandered. She explored. She tried out her new body, and taught herself how it worked. She tested her limits, traversing some days on two legs, some days scuttling around on her back legs and larger set of arms. Her smaller set curled up tight to her chest, and she could use them to carry things or to do whatever tasks she needed.

Having four arms was as pesky as it was rewarding. The same with her new horns- she got everything caught on the new curly ram like horns that made up the ones along the side of her head. But she learned. She learned and she grew.

There was success in teaching herself to fly- not without her own errors, though. There were new dents in the stone that weren’t there before. But, three weeks past the time she had grieved, Toki was proficient in flying. She had felt natural up in the air on Clover’s back before- but this… This felt even more so.

She explored and she found out many things. She found the dump, for one. It seemed untouched so far- there were so many things. Many, many things. She found old, old swords, old armor, and things only got newer from there. The most recent things she could find was a Super NES that was cracked in half with a ‘NEW’ sticker still on it, and an old, old phone. She remembered these things, and when they came out. Except there were a few… Things, like music, that were quite out of their time. Phillip Phillips, for one, wasn’t a singer until well past 2010- but there were CD’s down here from him, labeled for ‘top hit of the 90’s’ or something.

The woman could only guess the time upstairs was around 1990- but she honestly wasn’t sure with the fact that there were things that definitely were not from the 90’s down here. Honestly, this world was… weird.

It was not her world- and this was becoming ever more clear. This wasn’t even some time in the past- this just… was not her world.

She managed to loot a couple of decent blankets, and dried them with her magic. They were necessary, as she worked her way slowly, so slowly, towards Snowdin.

Toki came across… Well, she could only call them small bands of settlers; small groups of monsters trying to make homes in parts of the cave that they didn’t know and didn’t understand. They were spooked by anything and everything to do with Waterfall, from the glowing water to the echo flowers that whispered hushed murmurs and babbles from the brooks and streams in the caves.

Toki took days to help get them acclimated- she had spooked them too, dropping from the ceiling like some sort of demon- and directed them to head to the warmer side of Waterfall. The more she said the name, the more it seemed to stick- and Toki realized that she might be in charge of the goofy names these places had.

Oh well.

She helped them get settled in an open cavern, where she’d found an abundance of snails and salt- an odd combination, given snails fragility when it came to salt- and left them to getting settled.

She’d continued from there.

She finally made her way out of the glow of Waterfall and into the icy chill of Snowdin nearly a month since she’d managed to push through what she was very certain was her close call with Falling.

Toki regretted having eaten as little as she did over the time she’d been out and about. With as little as she’d eaten, she’d gained no weight back, and the sheer wind and snow of Snowdin blew right through her. Hunger wasn’t something she felt much- and she attributed that to the pain ever-present in her soul. If Cruelty didn’t rudely nudge her or remind her to eat, she usually forgot to rummage around to find something, be it a snail or something she could roast black with magic and consume.

Toki survived though.

She pushed through the snow and the ice and made her way through the thick trees, following the river on the familiar path that she’d walked several times with Papyrus while she’d been in Snowdin with him. The town was… bigger now, than it had been when she’d been here. She attributed that to the fact that there were more monsters in one area, and they were less spread out than they had been before.

The one thing she did notice, however, was the lack of electricity. There was none- none at all. However, each house seemed to be lit by candles, or lanterns, and seemed to be well insulated against the cold. The people bundled up in layers upon layers to keep warm.

Toki only had one, and she was missing shoes, and gloves, and a coat. She did, however, have two thick blankets draped over her shoulders, pinning her wings to her back as they radiated warmth.

The town as abuzz with activity, and Toki wasn’t quite ready to handle the curious gazes of people yet. So she skirted the edge. She spotted Grillby’s as she did, but mused that since she didn’t have any gold to speak of, that it would be a moot point for her to go inside of there. She didn’t know this Grillby- and she wasn’t about to start a tab that she couldn’t pay back. It wasn’t like she had a job here. What use did they have for a writer or a beekeeper? Technically she could be considered a recruit for the guard, but… being a soldier wasn’t for her. She… she couldn’t.

Not with it having been Papyrus’ profession. It hit too close to home.

Likewise, her lack of income meant that she didn’t have the coins to stay at the inn- and the number of houses and their different shapes and sizes made it hard for her to try and recognize which one was Tenne’s.

If he even lived here.

Either way, Toki skirted the town and made her way into the woods. She located herself a good thicket well out of the way of everyone else, and well off the beaten path, and then… dipped a little into her instincts.

Whatever the void had done to her, it had set a whole slew of instincts into her that proved to be incredibly helpful at the time being. She was sure there would come a time when they wouldn’t be so helpful- but this was not one of those times. Her instincts had kept her alive thus far- they helped her survive in this world that wasn’t her own.

Guided by what her body knew best, she used the world around her, and constructed what she could only call a den of some sort. Brambles covered the top, painted white by snow that she had been careful not to disturb. It created a near invisible shell from the outside- just another pile of snow-covered branches out in the woods. Nothing to see, nothing to investigate.

Inside, she’d dug it out, shoving the cold snow up and packing it into the ceiling, sort of… well, like a reverse igloo. The ice stuck- and soon, her makeshift home was air tight, safe for the entrance. She sacrificed one of her blankets to cover it, half folding the massive quilt one over the floor and then using the other half as a cover.
It was small and cramped- but it was warmer than outside. It was warm- and most importantly, it was safe.

There were a lot of smaller monsters that made attempts to pick fights with her from time to time. She didn’t know what they were, but she wasn’t sure if they had the same intelligence as the larger monsters seemed to have.

They didn’t seem to bother her new den- and she could cover the front when she left. She slept soundly that night, the wind whipping and howling around her shelter, while she was as snug and as warm as a woman sleeping on ice, in ice, and around ice could be.

Still, come the next morning of being in Snowdin, Toki finally gathered herself and headed into town. She skirted the edges again, keeping well out of reaches of large groups, and instead headed for the only familiar place that she knew. She couldn’t buy anything- but she had bets that it would be warm inside. Her magic was heating her up, yes, but that didn’t mean a chill couldn’t set into her bones.

Being seven-foot tall now- a lovely new addition to her new body- meant that Toki couldn’t exactly blend in with crowds anymore. She could, however, duck behind some very large dog monsters that came panting into the bar. They blocked her gaze from the bar itself, but she still got in unobtrusively, before scooting to one of the booths in the back corner.

It was dark inside, lit by candles and lanterns instead of electrical lights- but it was warm. Blessedly warm.

Toki slid to the back of the booth, trying to keep herself out of sight of the harried looking fire elemental as he bustled out from behind the counter, carrying order trays with him. Grillby looked so young… Well, much younger. Less haunted too. She wondered where Fuku was, briefly, before closing her eyes and resting her head on her arms. The table was cold, but everything else was simply divine.

She listened to the sounds of the guests and their flaming bartender and server flitting around with a quiet sound. It was warm and… well, about as peaceful as her pained soul would get. It smelled good too. She could smell whatever he was cooking, and it was amazing. Hunger briefly tingled through her, before it was gone just as quick.

Toki could nearly doze- probably not a good idea. It meant she wasn’t paying attention to who was nearing her table.

Not that she could see him anyways. The form that approached was small, shorter than the table, and failed to get her attention until he began to pat the soft leather of the seat beside her. "Nyeh! Nyeh!" His voice was soft and squeaky.

The soft sound was painful to hear, and her soul twinged at the familiar verbal tick from her husband- coming out of the tiny form of a very small child. Her soul felt like it cracked just a bit more, but she knew it hadn’t. She’d checked her soul multiple times when she’d felt that sensation before- the crack was no deeper or no wider. It just… hurt.

Toki sucked in a breath under her loose turtleneck, and turned to peer at him. Green irises glimmered from black sclera, and it took little effort to bend down to his height. She was face to face with a miniature Papyrus. But, knowing this world… That was likely not his name. So, she simply put a soft smile on her face, finding it stretching her teeth automatically, even if it was not an honest smile anymore. It was easier to smile- or to fake an earnest smile- than it was to scare a child. No matter what child it was. “Hello there.” Toki murmured softly. “Can I help you with something, little one?”
"Nyeh!" He reached up at her, before he gripped the seating and hefted himself up a tiny bit, giving effort-laced 'nyeh's as he tried to pull himself up. "Nyeh! Nyeh!"

A softer smile curled at her teeth, and her smaller arms uncurled from her chest where they had been wrapped. Her larger arms braced on the table and the backrest of the booth, and used them to keep herself braced as she hefted him up into the seat with her. He wasn’t heavy- not at all- and she probably didn’t need to brace, but it was more out of habit than anything. She sot him settled gently on the seat next to her. “There you go, kiddo. You got a name, little one?”

"Nyeh!" He threw his hands up with a giggle as he was seated.

There was another voice that answered her, however. "All he says is 'nyeh'." It was another small boy, this one more rounded looking, bright blue eyes looking up at the both of them. "His name is Quinn."

Quinn- she’d called Pap that too, on account of his middle name. Aliquam- Luna had called him Uncle Quinn, and Quinn had stuck. Something felt lodged in her throat, but she swallowed around it. Her voice was surprisingly steady as she spoke, smiling to the other boy- who looked so much like Sans that it wasn’t funny.

“It’s adorable.” She says softly. “It’s nice to meet you, Quinn. And you too, kiddo.” Her gaze flicks to the kid whose name she doesn’t know, but she knows it isn’t Sans or Caeruleus. Her teeth quirk up into a warmer smile. “I’m Toki. You need a boost into the booth too?”

"Nah.” He went to the other side and climbed up, sitting with just the top of his head and his eyes showing. He peered at her curiously. "Nice to meet you, Toki. I'm Kai."

Kai, huh...? Sounded a lot like Cae but with a much more American ring to it... She took a breath and shook those thoughts off. These were different people, even if they looked similar. Different world, different circumstances, it all made for different people. She offered Kai a smile. "That's a nice name, Kai." She scooted a little over in the booth to give Quinn space, and adjusted her wings as she watched the boys lightly. "So what are you doing here, kiddos?"

"Auntie Saph told us to come sit down and she'd get us something to eat." Kai replied, watching Quinn find himself entertained by getting to his feet and running his hands through Toki's neck fur.

Toki looped one of her arms behind him instinctively to keep him from losing his balance and falling. She had no idea how old Quinn was- but obviously not very old, if all he said was ‘Nyeh’. “Auntie Saph, huh? Well, sounds like a good plan for you two. Is this your usual booth you two sit in then?” Her luck, she’d probably taken the booth the kids usually sat in, in an effort to keep out of peoples way.

The hands running through the fur around her neck tickled a little bit, but it was soothing in it’s own way. Her fur had tangles in it, but she didn’t have access to a brush or grooming appliances. Claws only did so much- so she was pretty much permanently wild haired. At least her fur was warm- like her wings, the fur around her neck and wrists tended to be warm from her magic.

"Yup."

"Nyeh!"

Kai chuckled at his brother's outburst, but he then tilted his head, peering at her curiously once more. "So... is it okay if I ask... What are you?"

“I don’t mind answering.” Toki smiled quietly, and gently rubbed her hand over Quinn’s skull while he ruffled his fingers through her fur. She willed it to fluff up for him, and then rested one of her elbows on the table. Her chin came to rest on her palm, and she hummed, watching him lightly. “I suppose I’m a bit strange to look at. I’m a… blaster beast. Insectis, to be exact.” She answered lightly.

Toki wasn’t sure what she was anymore. She had been human, she had been skeleton- and now she was this. She was still human at her core- but… was she? She had a human soul shape, but… after all she had been through… was she still…? Was she still even her?

She shook her head lightly, and quirked a gentle smile to him. “We’re not exactly common from what I can gather.” Her gaze flicked over to Quinn, and she hummed. “Are you enjoying my fur, little one?”

"Nyeh heh heh!” Quinn beamed at her.

She’d take that as a yes, he was enjoying her fur.

"You mean like Daddy? Have you met him yet? He might really, really like you!” Kai asked with a big grin.

“If your Daddy’s name is Tenne, then yes, I have.” She nods lightly. A thin arm extends, and she gently taps Kai’s nasal ridge. “He helped me get better when I was very, very sick. I haven’t seen him in a while though. I had some adult stuff to take care of, and I wanted to see the Underground for myself.”

"Oooh, you're the patient!” His eyes brightened as he seemed to realize whom he was talking to. "He told us about you! Yup! He really liked you!”

“Oh? He did, did he?” She quirked a soft smile again. It had been six weeks since she’d seen Tenne- she wondered how he was doing while she had been wandering and… well, taking time. She wasn’t fully recovered, but… She wasn’t sure she ever fully would be. “I liked him too. He was very nice, and very polite.” She smiled slightly. “He actually gave me this turtleneck, and helped me modify it for my arms.” Hence why only her upper most large arms had sleeves, and her little ones did not.

“Doctor Tenne is a good man.” A warm voice responds lightly.

A blue glow takes over Toki’s line of sight, though the glow is dim and not precisely healthy. Toki glances to it, and spots a quite pregnant fire elemental carrying two plates- and two booster seats. One of the seats is set next to Toki on the bench, while the other is set next to Kai, with a nod for the boy to take a seat in it instead of on the bench itself.

The plates are set in front of the boys, piled high with good smelling food. She carefully cuts the burgers into quarters for the boys to have an easier time eating, and then gives them both fond pats on the head, and then runs her hands up over her head, between the horns curling between her flames.

“I take it you’re ‘Auntie Saph’?” Toki queries lightly, peering up at the fire monster with a kind, though hesitant smile. She wasn’t honestly sure how this world would work- but not a lot of places in hers appreciated people coming inside just to warm up some.

“I am.” She nods. “I’m Sapphire Fyrus. I’m Grillby’s wife.” She hummed. She rested a hand on her swollen middle, and looked her over with a critical eye. Her dim flames flickered slightly, and she wobbled on her feet. “And you must be Tokiko Nara. Tenne came in here a couple weeks back quite distraught over you disappearing and leaving just a note.”
Toki gave her a sheepish smile. “Mrs. Fyrus then. You can call me Toki; and yeah, I sorta knew he would be. But I knew he wouldn’t have let me go off on my own if I asked, so…” She shrugged lightly, and rubbed her hands over her smaller arms. She tucked them to her chest again to keep them warm. “I just needed some time to myself. Anyways…” She gave her a concerned look. “Are you alright? Your flames look dim, Mrs. Fyrus.”

“Sapphire, please, Toki.” She waves a hand. “I understand it fully. Tenne is a good man, but he frets. He hasn’t let me back in the lab since I found out I was pregnant. Anyways, I’m fine. A little under the weather, but… fine enough.”

Toki wasn’t entirely sure about that. She looked at her belly, and then up at the flickering blue flames. Concern knitted her brows together. “That does sound like something he would do. Why don’t you sit down, Sapphire? Rest your legs a little bit? I can help out in your stead while you get some rest, if you’d like.”

"I must admit I need to sit down, but really, I wouldn’t ask you to just up and take my place. You need not feel like you must.” Sapphire replied, slowly taking a seat beside Kai, who was fist deep in fries soaked to the bone in what looked like ketchup of some kind.

Toki watched Kai gobbling down his food, and gave the boy a gentle amused sound. She gently scooped up Quinn, and traded places with him, so he sat on the inside of the bench and not on the outside. She settled him in his booster seat, and scooted his plate closer for him to eat from, before giving Sapphire a smile. “I don’t mind helping. You need your rest.” She glanced up to the bar, and flicked her wings as she slid out of the booth and got to her feet. “Your husband was Grillby, right? I’m assuming he’s the red-orange one behind the bar?”

"Yes, That’s right." She answered, before she shifted to get up herself. "But really, I only just met you and I’d hate to- ooooooh." She winced and slowly lowered back to her seat as she reached up to cradle her head.

“Sapphire?” Grillby’s voice carried over the din of the bar, and everything went quiet.

It was much the same as Toki remembered it to be.

Toki was quick to crouch down in front of her, and gently rested one of her hands on leg. “Easy, easy,” she murmured gently to the pregnant elemental. “You need to rest, Sapphire. You’ve got a baby on the way and your flames don’t look so hot.”

An orange glow appeared over her shoulder as Grillby quickly came around the bar to his mate’s side. The big monster had Toki shuffling over so he could crouch down. He gave her a concerned look, looking nearly as tired as she did, though much brighter with his flames. He was keeping the bar warm, yes, but he wasn’t growing their baby. That took far more magic. “Sapphire? My dear, I knew you needed to take the day to rest…”

“You both look exhausted,” Toki murmurs softly to them. She shifts the toes of her paws, claws working faintly on the floors of the bar, and gives them both a concerned look. “I’m… I’m not a healer, but… I might be able to help?”

Sapphire slowly smiled up at Grillby to reassure him. "It's just a headache, my dear." She told him gently, before looking to Toki, "I would appreciate some help... I haven’t been able to see James or Tenne as I would have liked to, to see about curing this simple illness.”

Toki nodded softly. She lifted her smaller set of hands, and rested them on Sapphire’s legs. She went slowly, watching Grillby eye her many limbs with trepidation. “I’ll do what I can.” She promises softly. She takes a deep breath, and channels her magic up through her smaller arms, letting the heat pool in her wrists, and then in her palms. It brightens the fur around her wrist for a moment, before fire magic spools from her and into Sapphire.

But that’s not all. The stingers on her wrists deploy, and sting into the flesh under her legs- and molten heat floods Sapphire- who’s flesh brightens visibly under her clothes. Toki nearly goes to jerk back- but she recalls bees who sting, and try to yank out their stingers, and know she’s likely to rip her wrists apart of she tries.

Instead, she keeps her calm forcibly, and plays it off that she meant to do that. The molten venom seems to be doing her some good- a whole lot of good, actually. Toki watches her fires brighten with the help of her magic too, and knows, whatever she’s doing, is helping. Or appears to be.

Grillby frowns at the stingers, but seems pleased as her color improves. “How are you feeling?” He smoothes a hand gently over her head, brushing his fingers gently over the horns curling through Sapphire’s flaming hair.

Her eyes had widened at the prick of the stingers, flinching a little at the pinch and bite of them, but the sudden flood of heat and magic rushing through her body had her donning a smile and a deep sigh of relief. “Oh goodness…” She murmurs. “I feel so much better, my dear husband.”

He cupped her face gently, and stroked her cheek. “Truly?” He queried warmly. “You do? You’ve been so sick…"

Toki swallowed and took gentle care to ease her stingers out of her leg. She rubbed fire magic over the holes she’d left, for her stingers were not small things, and felt them seal up under her magic. She smiled softly, watching color slowly flood back into her as her venom worked it’s way through her. “You’re going to be okay.” One of her larger hands came to rest on Grillby- and he too got a dose of magic. No venom for him though- but magic yes. Once he was brighter and more vibrant, Toki straightened and gave them a quiet smile. “You still need to rest though, Sapphire. Why don’t you keep Kai and Quinn company? I can help Grillby. I know my way around a kitchen.”

Grillby stood as well, rolling his broad shoulders. He was still a foot taller than Toki was, even with her new height. He rolled his shoulders again and stretched his neck. “Wow,” He murmurs. “I feel better than I have in a long time. I wouldn’t mind you helping me, miss…?”

“Toki.” She supplies quietly.

“I wouldn’t mind you helping me.” He nods. “I’ll pay what wages I can. Sapphire… I want you to rest.”

"Alright, my darling, alright...You win." Sapphire chuckled quietly as she leaned back in the booth. “I’ll take some time to rest... and keep an eye on the boys.” She then looked at Toki, and gave a warm smile, "Bless you, child. You have my gratitude.”

He chuckles gently, and leans down to kiss her head. His hand smoothes over her belly, and gently feels for the kicks of their baby within.

“It’s no problem at all, Sapphire.” She smiled back to her. “I really don’t mind- you need to rest, as far along as you are-” Toki lost her train of thought as there was a soft tug on her wing. It wasn’t a pleasant sensation, no matter how gentle the motion was, but she didn’t start. Those were tiny baby hands on her body- one didn’t startle with tiny baby hands grabbing onto you. She turned and gently swept Quinn into her arms, booping his nasal ridge gently with one of her fingers. “Hey there, Quinn. You be good for your Auntie Sapphire, yeah?”
“Nyeh!” He chirped at her, orange eyes wide and innocent. His fingers buried themselves in her ruff of fur, and he made a soft noise at her.

She laughed softly, and set him back in his seat. “Finish your food, little one.” Her gaze flicked back over to Grillby. “Alright. How would you like me to assist you?”

“I can handle cooking.” He hums. He straightens after kissing Sapphire gently- making Kai make obnoxious noises at the sight- and turns to peer at her. “Lets get you an apron. You can run orders to the tables, and help me in the kitchen between running orders.”

Toki gives him a cheery salute and nods. “Yes, sir.”

He grabs her arm lightly, and gives her a faint look. “And I’ll be sending you home with a meal as a thank you. If you are like Doctor Tenne, then you are far too thin for your species.”

Toki gives him a sheepish smile. “Yeahhh, I haven’t been eating that well.” For various reasons that she wouldn’t be sharing with the fiery bartender. “But thank you. Alright- lets go. I know how to make an interesting drink if you’d like to add it to your menu.”

“Oh?”

“Mhm. Death Shot.” She smiles faintly. “I wouldn’t advise giving it to lightweights though. All the same- it’s alcoholic.”

Grillby chuckles. “We’ll see. Come- we have work to do.”
Chapter 93

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So, Toki is working at Grillby’s. A four armed barmaid- what an interesting sight. Also, if any of you recall my munster picture, that’s what Sapphire looks like. Ish. She’s a prettier blue. XD She also has horns.

Toki ended up picking up Sapphire’s work shifts- at least for the time being. The fire elemental was still under the weather, but she was improving. Daily doses of Toki’s venom seemed to be improving her health bit by bit, but both Toki and Grillby were in agreement on her resting.

That didn’t mean that Toki let Grillby pay her full wages. Yes, on the normal days she did enough work to warrant earning them- but at every turn, he was trying to feed her. She usually ended up sharing it with the boys- who followed her like adorable ducklings- and refused to take more than she felt she had earned. So she took half wages, and let him send her home with a burger after shift, from which she would retreat to her den and curl up under her blanket and pick at the burger.

Several weeks of eating very little had left her with a small appetite even when she did have it. Cruelty nitpicked at her though until she ate- and he could be one hell of a nag when he wanted to be. SO by the end of the night she had usually consumed the whole thing, and could sleep soundly.

She had been working for only three days for him when she detected a thin film of grease developing in her fur- and found herself moderately repulsed. Quinn had a habit of cuddling into her mane when she was working, or taking a break- and the boy did not need to be cuddling into a mop of greasy, grimy fur. Not only that, but Toki had always been a very, very clean person. She didn’t have a problem getting dirty- so long as she could get clean again.

So Toki had crawled out of her den early in the morning, and flown off for Waterfall again since she didn’t have access to running water or a shower. She’d heard rumors of there being a bathhouse in the Capitol, but she had no interest in traveling there. She didn’t go deep into Waterfall- she worked at Grillby’s from morning until night, so traveling far was out of the question- but she went just far enough off the beaten path that she was pretty sure no one would bother her.

Toki then stripped off her clothes, and scrubbed them against some rocks, using the abrasive surfaces and the clean nature of the running water to make sure that her clothes got clean. Once they no longer smelled like a burger joint- though she was longing quietly for laundry soap of some kind, or just some sort of soap in general- she pulled them from the rapids and draped them over a dry rock, before clamoring into the water herself. She began scrubbing her skin until it was pearly white again, her long claws making it a slow, slow task so she didn’t cut herself.

Working the grit and grime out of her ankle fur was a nightmare- as was preventing her from stabbing herself on the stinger hidden inside of that when she accidentally triggered it to come out. She had stingers on all of her limbs, it would appear- which was better than having one on her butt. All the same, her claws worked at detangling the burs and snags from the fur of her ankles, before working up towards her shins. It was a long task- but hopefully one she wouldn’t have to do for another couple of days.

She could hear voices approaching, however, and did her best to cover herself with her partially translucent wings. Not that it did much to help, but she tried. Either way, she simply tucked her head and tried to pretend that she wasn’t hearing someone closing in on her. She remained half submerged and seated on the little rock in the shallows, working at scrubbing herself clean.

“Mom? What’s that green light up there? That’s not the color of the water.”

"Luminescence I guess. Nothing compared to the stars but hey, it's better than nothing, isn't that right, Undyne?” An older voice replied to the younger. The forms that soon appeared had matching features, deep red hair, bluish scales, though for the younger of the two the scales were more pale, and sharp-pointed teeth and claws on their hands, with webbed fins along the sides of their heads.

Toki was sure for half a second that she was seeing Undyne and a Mini Undyne- but they both had eyes, and the big one had called the little one Undyne, so that couldn’t be.

She blinked, hard, and very nearly cooed. The big fish monster who usually terrorized her a little bit in her world was… fuck, adorable to put it bluntly.

It took a moment to keep her cool, for that train of thought brought a pang of longing that made the glow of her wings briefly dim. She instead turned on her rock, not bothering to hide her breasts. They were all women anyways- and she was supposed to play the role of blaster beast- they were not typically body shy. At least Tenebris had never been. Shit, he’d gone swimming practically naked, save for swimming gloves before.

Of course, he had no visible genitals, and she most certainly did… but no matter.

“Whoa! Mom look! A naked winged lady!” The miniature fish monster practically bounced at her mother’s heels.

Toki lifted a hand awkwardly and waved it, the fur along her neck ruffling lightly at being called a naked winged lady. How… typically Undyne. “Ah… Hello.” She murmurs lightly, and swishes her legs through the water. Her magic was permeating the part of the stream she was in, so it was starting to heat up and steam just a little bit.

"Well hey there." The mother of the adorably blunt guppy gave a light smile, "I was expecting to see someone sooner or later, the water here does wonders for one's scales." She chuckled, "Name's Ariel. This is my little guppy, Undyne. Nice to meet you miss...."

Ariel. As in the little mermaid. Oh golly- Toki was learning so many things. Well, Ariel had the red hair to fit. She wondered if Ariel, who had spoken of seeing the stars, was responsible for the old stories of mermaids.

Toki tilted her head to her lightly and offered a soft smile. “The water here has good healing properties. You’re welcome to join me- I’ve warmed this part of the river, so it’s… well, a little less chilly.” She rubs her arms, and shifts to sit a little lower in the water. Her secondary set of hands work over her body while her main set keep herself above the water. “I’m Tokiko- but you can call me Toki. It’s nice to meet the both of you.”

Undyne gave her a sharp toothed grin, and immediately began to strip out of her clothes. “A warm bath? Are you kidding? I’m not turning that down. The bath houses in the Capital are warm but everyone uses them and they’re always super, super busy.” It didn’t take long before there was a very naked fish child making a dash for the water, and aiming to belly flop into it.

Toki simply gave the child a fond look, and glanced back at Ariel. “Not a lot of people know that Waterfall has good water here.” She continues. “I’ve been trying to spread the word though. I’ve caught some people in Snowdin trying to bathe in the Snowdin river, and… well, that’s just painfully cold.” She barely managed to live in the ice and chill in her little den, let alone take a bath in water that habitually had ice chunks floating in it.

Ariel snorted as she resisted a joke and after collecting Undyne's clothing on a nearby rock to keep them clean, she undressed as well to join them, "I don't complain. It’s good to have a personal little spot where you can bathe to your heart's content." She chuckled, sitting in the water with a comfortable exhale. "Won't catch me swimming in snowfall waters, huh-uh, nope." She huffed, before she looked up at her, having sunk to her chin in the warm water. "You're calling the regions these names like you grew up knowin’ em... and yet I can't help but realize they do indeed fit well."

Undyne swam back towards her mother, keeping under the water, and made a grab for her feet with a mischievous burble of bubbles from her gills.

Toki watched the blur of the child under the water, and tucked her feet close to her. She couldn’t guarantee her stingers wouldn’t deploy if they were grabbed. As Ariel continued to talk to her, she hummed and nodded. “I live in Snowdin right now. It’s… really cold there. Hotland is nicer, but no one lives there, and I really don’t like eating magma slugs.” She admits. “My den is decent enough though. But you’re right. Anyways… I just have different names for different places. Hotland is… I think I heard it called the burning lands?” She shrugs. “Hotland is nicer. Short and descriptive. Anyways- it’s also a long ways from where I work, so the commute would be he-ck.”

"I mean, hell, my legs still get a bit sore when I have to make trips from one end of the caverns to the other." Ariel chuckled quietly, stretching said legs before folding one over the other as she relaxed in the water, lightly shooing her guppy away from her with practiced ease.

Undyne, foiled, huffed and went to go bother the fish- and stalk her mother’s companion.

Toki chuckled, and eased further under the water. “Trust me, I know. I spent several weeks just exploring everything there was to see. It’s… bigger than a lot of monsters realize. There’s a lot left to be colonized and built upon.” She took a moment and dipped fully under water, so she could scrub her mane clean. She scrubbed it roughly for a time, along with the rest of her body, until her lungs burned for air.

When she needed air, she came up once more, and shook herself off slightly. “Agh. What I wouldn’t give for some soap and a brush.” She combs her claws through her mane a little bit, and sighs, before brushing the wet mop of fur and hair out of her face, baring the long scar down around her left horn to the world.

"We have both if you need." Ariel offered, knowing she wouldn't be able to wash her daughter's hair until the guppy burnt herself out by swimming.

“Yeah?” Toki tilted her head to peer at her, and gave her a slightly chipper buzz. “I’d actually really appreciate that, if you wouldn’t mind me borrowing it. It’s been ages since I got to properly wash my hair.” Brush it too. She hadn’t had hair since she lost it all before she’d lost her humanity.

Undyne burst from the water like a particularly aggressive piranha, and latched onto Toki’s shoulder like a limpet. “Why do you have fur anyways? It’s on your hands and feet too, which is super weird. What even are you anyways? You’ve got super, super sharp teeth, whoa.”

Being right up in Toki’s face would definitely give Undyne an up close and personal view of her teeth, definitely. Toki simply chuffed lightly, and flicked her tongue out at Undyne. “I’m an Insectis- a Queen Bee Insectis to be exact. Bees are furry- so I’m furry. And the teeth… Well, I don’t exactly have lips to hide them, do I?” She lightly tickles the child with the smooth sides of her claws, and ushers her back out into the water. “Off with you, you little piranha. Swim off your energy so your mother can shampoo you.”

Toki gets splashed for her efforts, and she sputters in amusement, before turning to glance at Ariel. “She’s a spitfire, isn’t she?”

"A spitfire, a whirlwind, whatever disaster, you name it, I can name an instance." Ariel sighed, though she had reached back to the shore and picked out from their belongings a bottle and a brush, offering them to Toki. Her smile was lighthearted and humorous despite her sigh.

Toki accepted the bottle and the brush lightly, offering her a faint smile. She tucked the brush onto a rock, and then set to shampooing her hair. “I know how you feel.” She laughs softly. Her throat tightens for a moment, and she’s glad they’re alone on top of the water. She has to take a moment and clear her throat against the knot that builds up in it and threatens to choke her. “I know all too well how you feel.” Despite the light hearted smile she’s given, there’s something sad in the one that Toki gives back. She soaps up her wrist fur and leg fur, and makes sure they’re nice and frothed up, before plunging them under the water to rinse. Her mane could soak up the soap a little bit first.

Ariel caught wind and she tilted her head, before she sighed and leaned against the rock she had claimed. Her red hair floated around her. “I’ve got a question for you... If you don’t mind me asking.” She started slowly.

“I don’t mind.” Toki hummed softly, and swallowed to clear the lump in her throat. A couple of deep breaths later, and she was in control again. “What did you want to ask, Ariel?” She took the brush to her wrists, starting to work the tangles out slowly and carefully.

"Well... I’m... actually a first-time mother with Undyne... Her... ah... her dad died not long b’fore we were... cast underground." She continued slowly, watching Toki for her response. "Do you have any... well... pointers?"

“I’m sorry for your loss.” She murmured softly. Toki rubbed her arms lightly against her legs, and sighed. “My... My children were smaller than Undyne when I lost them,” She said softly, “But I did help raise my brothers. So... yeah. Just... Love her. Unconditionally. Back her up if things get rough- if someone tries to hurt her, don’t let them. She’s going to learn from example- she’s going to look to you, see how you do things and how you handle things, and learn how to do it. Of course, she’s going to be her own little person too, so they might be done differently. Don’t yell at her- if she makes you upset, take time to cool down and explain yourself. It might be easier to yell at first, but trust me, she’ll remember and it’ll teach her that it’s okay to yell at her children when she has them.” She sighs softly. “A lot of parenting is... Is learning on your own. If you feel you’ve done something wrong, don’t feel afraid to apologize- and then change your methods so you don’t do it again.” Her smaller hands come up to rest against her chest, where the twins liked to be cradled, and she sucked in a soft breath, before humming and resuming grooming her wrists. “Parenting is trial and error, Ariel. You look like you’re doing alright with Undyne though.”

"I'm really sorry about your loss..." She mentioned quietly, before she smiled at her slightly. "That's great advice. Thanks a lot."

Toki gave her a weak smile, and took a steadying breath. “It’s no problem.” She swallowed slightly, and then shifted on the shore. She ducked under the water, and began to scrub her mane clean, her wings slipping under as well.

Once her mane was clear of soap, Toki slid back to the surface, and shook her mane free of water, before working the brush through the tangles and snarls. Four arms made quick work of it, and soon it was slicked back and out of the way. Well, as much as it could be considering the nature of how it grew around her neck. She cleared her fur from the brush, let the glowing green hairs rest in a pile on the shore, and then offered the items back to her. “Thank you again.” She quirks a smile. “I’ll be going into work looking less like a tornado blew through my mane.”

Undyne surfaced not far from them, and huffed, before paddling closer. “Water’s colder further out,” she complains slightly, and then bustles into her mother’s lap. “It’s warmer here though. How can she make the water warmer, Mom?”

Ariel wrapped her arms around her daughter’s form and gave her a tender hug, before looking to Toki. "That is a good question. Magic I suppose, might be the cause of it." She chuckled gently.

“Fire magic.” Toki agrees lightly, and chuckles softly. She runs some through the fur on one of her wrists, and the water evaporates into steam as she dries it. “See? It’s a handy trick for drying off.”

“Ooo! That’s really cool!” She perks up and chirps, before grinning up at her mother and cuddling close. “The Queen and the King can do fire Magic, can’t they? And the Prince?”

… The prince…? Toki’s attention was grabbed almost immediately, and her eyes focused on the child curiously. That was Asriel, she knew- but wasn’t he dead…?

"That’s right, they can indeed." The older fish monster replied to her daughter, though she did notice Toki's sudden perk of interest. "Hm? What's with that look?" Ariel inquired curiously.

Toki shook her head lightly and simply smiled. The lie fell from her teeth almost too easily- she’d been covering for her mistakes for weeks with people she’d run across Underground. “I just wasn’t aware the Prince was able to use fire magic, that’s all. It’s a rare talent outside of elementals.”

"They’re boss Monsters, I guess it’s just sorta their special ability, or whatever you want to call it."
Ariel replied with a grin, "Every boss monster has their own special capability that makes them especially cool, right Undyne?"

"Yeah!" The Guppy replied with gusto, "But nothing's cooler than Mom's spears!"

Toki laughed softly. “I’m sure your Mom’s spears are amazing.” She offers a toothy grin to both fish monsters. “My special abilities aren’t anywhere near that cool. I can’t summon a physical weapon. I can, however…” Toki took a moment to crook one of her teeth to the side, creating a gap in her usually perfect crocodile grin. She tilted her head away from them, and focused her magic up into her mouth. She exhaled a small puff of flame. “Do that, among summoning other things.” She didn’t really want to bring her summons out near water, since they were particularly susceptible to it, but fire breathing near water was damn near the safest place to do it.

‘Aim a little further over, and you could have deep fried fish sticks.’

‘No, Cruelty.’

Undyne’s gold eyes glistened at her eagerly. “Oh my GOSH MOM! SHE JUST BREATHED FIRE!”

"She did. Wow." Ariel was gawking a little, "That was pretty cool." She then laughed, "Never seen someone do that. I've seen the Prince summon from his hands, but never seen anyone do it from their mouth."

Toki smiled wryly and corrected the placement of her tooth. “I’m not good at doing it through my hands.” She says. “But through my mouth I can do. I can channel warmth through my hands though-but not fire itself. I can actually channel warmth out of all of me- that’s how I’m keeping the water warm around us right now.” She sighs pleasantly, and finishes scrubbing herself clean. Toki lifts a little out of the water, leaving her lower legs in so she can keep it warm, and then dries herself off with her magic. She’s still an unhealthy sort of thin- but it’s only been a couple days of eating semi-normally, and even monster food isn’t enough to fix that. Her elbow brushes her ribs. “Anyways, the only weapons I have are on my body.” She rolls a wrist over to show one of her stingers. “I’ve got them on my feet too,” She warns, “So you might not want to grab my ankles, you little shark.”

Undyne grins. “I was gonna do it, too, but you tucked your feet out of where I can reach them.” She doesn’t quite understand the concept of what ‘too thin’ is, but thinks that the white monster could do with more meat on her bones. As her mane dries though, she grins. “Wow. Your hair is almost fluffier than Mom’s hair is!”

”Very nice, I know one little boy who would love that fluff of yours.” Ariel chuckled gently, before she took this chance to pull Undyne back and start washing her hair. She wasn’t daft- she saw how thin the other was. It was not, however, any of her business.

“I already know one who does.” Toki laughs gently, watching Undyne sputtering as her mother starts to shampoo her hair. “Speaking of, I need to get going. I have work soon- and I’m supposed to watch him and his brother for Sapphire while she gets rest.” Toki shifts, and stands fully. She steps out of the water to go grab and flash dry her clothes, giving them a sheepish look as the aura of warmth begins to fade a little. “It will linger a little while longer, but it wont stay long. Enjoy it while you can- and maybe we’ll see each other again here for a bath soon, yes?”

“Totally! AUGHGHPPHHHTHTHPBB IT’S IN MY MOUTH!” Undyne scooped water into her mouth to chase out errant soap bubbles.

Toki laughed gently. “I think that’s up to your mother and her work schedule, little one.”

Ariel chuckled and had her take a mouthful of water to rinse out her mouth, before tilting her head back as to reposition the effect of gravity. "It was very nice to meet you, Toki, and thank you.” The red haired buff fish lady gave her a smile. “Hope to see you again!”

Toki adjusted her clothes as she tugged them on, and nodded. “I’m sure we will. If you want to see me again, just stop by Grillby’s Bar.” She quirks a smile. “That’s where I’m working for now.”

With that said, she waved to the mother and her daughter, and turned, fluttering her wings. Magic had dried them too, so she lifted off without issue, a buzz overtaking the cavern briefly as she took to the air and headed out of Waterfall and back into the icy chill of Snowdin.

Immediately her toes practically froze off, as did her secondary arms. She tucked them close to her and pulsed her magic into her limbs to keep them warm, and headed for the familiar shape of Grillby’s bar and grill, spotting the sign just getting flipped to open as she buzzed overhead.

The town itself was just waking up- but Grillby’s was always busy. There were morning regulars, afternoon regulars, night time regulars, and then there were the all-day drunkards, who got a kick out of her Death Shot.

She dropped down at the door, and opened it as it unlocked. She slid in, grabbing her apron from the coat rack, and busied herself with tying it on. She turned her gaze to Grillby and smiled. “Hey, Grillby. How’s today looking?”

“Sapphire is feeling much better.” He responds lightly. “She is tired, but I think that is just our emberling taking more magic from her. It is good that the boys father is returning for a time- James is taking over shift for a while. Quinn was beginning to miss his father.”
“Oh?” Trepidation tingled through her belly. She was ready to face Tenne- but she wasn’t sure if she was ready to face whatever he had to say in regards to her leaving, or her current physical state. He was a doctor- he was sure to pitch a hell of a fit about her current state. She swallowed. “That’s good. Quinn was really clingy yesterday when it came time for me to get off shift, and Kai stuck pretty close to me all day yesterday too. I think I remind them of their dad- probably all the white skin.” She laughs lightly.

“Perhaps so.” Grillby chuckles quietly. “Still, come in and warm up for a minute or two, and take a moment with the boys. Tenne should be along shortly, so they’ll be out from underfoot before long.
You’ll have full use of your arms and legs today without stepping on any teeny tiny feet.”

“I felt really bad for stepping on Kai’s toe.” Toki frowns a bit, but chuckles all the same. She comes inside, and heads for the bar, keeping a lookout for any wayward kids that she knows are soon to be coming once they heard her down below the house above the bar.

It didn’t take long indeed before there were two small limpets on her legs, one slightly larger than the other. They both peered up at her happily, and Toki was helpless but to heft them up into her arms, and on her back, for a proper cuddle until their dad came to pick them up and take them home.

Only Tenne didn’t show up.

Hours crept past, with Toki eventually settling into work with the kids alternating between clinging to her, peering out the windows impatiently, or helping her take orders like the adorable little skeletons they were.

The morning rolled past, well into noon- and noon rolled by into late day, and from late day into late at night- and still no Tenne. Cruelty spent the day filling Toki’s head with all sorts of horrible scenarios about what could have happened to the doctor, and she steadfast ignored him until he tired himself out and went back to sleep again.

Grillby offered to take the boys upstairs again for the night, to which Kai vehemently refused, and Quinn nearly had a small fit. They were quite certain that Tenne was coming, and Toki was sure he would too. He wouldn’t just abandon his sons- and she was sure he was a monster of his word, even across the worlds.

Toki had waved the fire monster off, and sent him upstairs, telling him that she’d lock up the bar for him once Tenne had come to get his kids- and if all else failed, she’d stay with the boys all night, so he could have a night with his wife.

It was easier said than done- as time rolled closer and closer to midnight, Quinn got crankier and crankier, fussing with the saddest sounding ‘Nyehs’ that simply broke her heart. Kai was less verbal, but he seemed to droop the longer it took for Tenne to come get his kids.

So Toki had hefted both boys up against her shoulders, looping her arms gently around them. Four arms were useful in this instance, letting her cradle them to her shoulder without much issue. She might not have been as plush and padded as she used to be, but she was still a nice thing to cuddle with the plush and freshly washed ruff of fur acting like a pillow.

With them in her arms, she began to sway gently, a familiar motion that she used when Skylar and Honey were tired and needed to sleep.

The boys were fussy about it, of course, resisting her attempts at getting them to sleep- so Toki resorted to her next thing. Singing.
“When life leaves you high and dry, I'll be at your door tonight, if you need help, if you need help. I'll shut down the city lights, I'll lie, cheat, I'll beg and bribe, to make you well, to make you well.” She wasn’t necessarily quiet, but she wasn’t necessarily loud either. The song came unbidden- and she recognized it. A pang of loss hit her soul- and it very nearly choked her up.

For their sake, she forced her way through the knot in her throat. “When enemies are at your door, I'll carry you away from war, if you need help, if you need help. Your hope dangling by a string, I'll share in your suffering, to make you well, to make you well. Give me reasons to believe, that you would do the same for me… And I would do it for you, for you.”

Toki both loved and hated the next part of the lyrics to the song, because that throbbing emptiness in her soul, and in her arms, only felt deeper. Here she was, singing to baby Papyrus and Sans- and they weren’t hers. The void had spat her back and told her no- and she couldn’t go home. She couldn’t… She couldn’t see her mate and babies. “Baby, I'm not moving on, I'll love you long after you're gone. For you, for you, you will never sleep alone; I'll love you long after you’re gone… And long after you're gone, gone, gone.”

She faded off into soft humming, listening as Quinn began to settle down finally. “When you fall like a statue, I'm gon' be there to catch you, put you on your feet, you on your feet. And if your well is empty, not a thing will prevent me; tell me what you need, what do you need? I surrender honestly. You've always done the same for me. So I would do it for you, for you.”

Toki stroked her fingers gently over Kai’s back as the boy made a fussy sound, and he stilled. “Baby, I'm not moving on, I'll love you long after you're gone. For you, for you, you will never sleep alone; I'll love you long after you're gone… And long after you're gone, gone, gone.”

Toki felt lightheaded- and her eyes were misting, fogging up with luminescent green tears. Grief was present in her voice- very, very present. Thankfully, the children didn’t seem to notice, nor notice the glowing tracks of tears beading from her eyes. “You're my back bone, you're my cornerstone, you're my crutch when my legs stop moving. You're my head start, you're my rugged heart, you're the pulse that I've always needed. Like a drum, baby, don't stop beating. Like a drum, baby, don't stop beating. Like a drum, baby, don't stop beating. Like a drum, baby, don't stop beating. Like a drum, my heart never stops beating…”

A quick breath in, and Toki continued. “For you, for you. Baby, I'm not moving on. I'll love you long after you're gone. For you, for you. You will never sleep alone. I'll love you long after you're gone. For you, for you. Baby, I'm not moving on, I'll love you long after you're gone. For you, for you. You will never sleep alone. I'll love you long, long after you're gone.”

There was a soft snore from her left shoulder, where Quinn had fallen asleep. Kai wasn’t out yet, but he was starting to doze. Toki’s voice softened automatically, so as not to wake him. It fell in time with the ending of the song. “Like a drum, baby, don't stop beating. Like a drum, baby, don't stop beating. Like a drum, baby, don't stop beating. Like a drum my heart never stops beating for you. And long after you're gone, gone, gone. I'll love you long after you're gone… gone… gone…”

Toki was left standing there, with no way to mop the tears on her face, as she cradled the two children she clutched to the empty voids where her own should be.

Tenne had shown up partway into her singing, his breathing rough with how quickly he had sprinted to pick up his children. He had a massive list of apologies to give to Grillby and his mate, but he had frozen at seeing Toki cradling his children.

To say the least, he was surprised to see her there, but even more so with his children in her arms.

He watched her, heard her song, and watched the tears well in her eyes before running down her cheeks, staining them with her pain. "..." He couldn't see the pain of just losing a pack- He saw more... so much more. If she was in this much pain...

She should have fallen by now, it not long ago.

But to have so much strength...

He slowly entered, and approached her. He didn't know what to say, and was not sure how to get her attention.

Choosing a method he best thought would work, he purposely put weight into his footsteps to make them heard in the gentle silence. He came around to her front and examined his children, long-gone Quinn, and newly surrendered Kai... They were so comfortable... A smile came to his lips before he reached out and cupped her cheeks gently with his hands, wiping her tears away with his thumbs, before pulling her into a tight hug.

Toki heard his footsteps in the silence that followed, but wasn’t sure what to do. Here she was, green tears staining the snowy white skin of her face, with his children pillowing their heads on the ruff of her neck. She half expected anger for her disappearance- for having simply left a letter and nothing else, for having said naught a word to him in... In weeks. What she didn’t expect was for him to gently wipe her tears, and then tug her into a hug.

Toki was much thinner in his arms than she was when she left all those weeks ago. She’d been in the world for nearly nine weeks now- and that meant it had been close to... Close to two months, since he had last seen her. That was a lot of time to be suffering and not eating right. She was under weight, under fed, and it seemed like she was still trying to handle her grief.

A handle on which she did not have a very good grip on. There was a sound, like a wounded animal, that was muffled by his shoulder, as she hid a choked sob so she didn’t wake the children. She shuddered faintly, her wings trembling on her back, as she tried to gather herself. It took several long minutes, before she managed to reconstruct the mask that the song had broken down. The tears had left faint stains along her face, but nothing a good scrub in the snow wouldn’t remove. She would have sniffled if she had nostrils- instead she made the oral equivalent, which was a strange whiffing noise between her teeth. “Thank you,” She murmurs softly against his shoulder. Her arms shift with his children in them, and she looks up at him from tired eyes in thin cheeks. Toki manages to give him a smile despite it all. “Your boys have missed you.” She could see a couple of singe marks, making her wonder what had happened to the doctor.

He held her tightly until she recovered, and he smiled at her gently as they withdrew from one another. Listening and giving a small nod she spoke, Tenne simply gave her a gentle smile. "Of course... and yes, I know... I hate doing this to them... " He sighed, stroking Quinn's head, "My dear boys...” he purred, before he looked to her once more. "You deserve a good bed to rest in... The least I owe you is an offering of a bed to rest your head on...” He offered to her, "I do not think the pups will let go as easily either... Please. Let me make me make up to you the time you have been so kind to my pups..."

She shifted slightly, the lure of a warm bed out of the cold and ice quite strong against the desire to be independent on her own and not mooch off of someone else like she had when she’d lost her home the first time. “I... don’t want to be a burden,” She murmurs softly, gently rubbing her fingers along Kai’s back. In truth, she doesn’t want to let the children go either. Toki inhales quietly, and then sighs. “If you’re sure, then... okay.”

There was a creak from the stairs, and Grillby’s glow appears. He peers at Toki and Tenne, and gives Tenne a stern frown for his tardiness, before holding up a bag to Toki. “Don’t think you can forget this,” He murmurs softly so as to not wake the children. “Don’t worry about your apron tonight- you can bring it back tomorrow,” He continues as he pats close. He pulls a clip from his pocket, and clips the sandwich to her apron, with a quiet murmur of, ‘maybe it’ll help keep you warmer’, and then hums softly. “Your wages and burger are in there. I’m going to be very upset if you don’t eat it.”

“As will I. This emotional pain is no excuse to let our body waste away into nothingness.”

“I’ll make sure to eat it, Grillby.” She sighs at the double insistence, and glances to Tenne.

Tenne definitely had a kicked puppy look at Grillby's look, but he smiled at him after a moment nonetheless. "Thanks for everything, Grillby. How’s Sapphire?" He asked.

Grillby tilted his head slightly. “Still sick, but better. Toki has been helping. Her venom is surprisingly good for fire elemental health, as is her magic- she has also stepped in to fill in for Sapphire, so she can rest. Toki’s been very helpful in watching the boys these last couple of days as well.” He eyes the white bee blaster lightly. “With Toki’s help, Sapphire has been improving. I’d still appreciate you taking a look at her, however, when you get the chance. For now, Toki’s venom seems to be helping.”

Toki nods quietly, and adjusts her grasp on the children. “She’ll probably need a dose tomorrow.”

She murmurs. “You’ll have to let me know or not when I come in, alright?”

“Will do.” Grillby nods. “Now, get somewhere warm, both of you. It’s supposed to storm the next couple of days. Toki- you have enough gold by now. Please, stay at the Inn if you’ve nowhere else to go. Anywhere but that… little twigs and snow den you call a house.”

“Well… I’ll be staying with Tenne for a little bit… If I over stay my welcome, I’ll see about the Inn.
No promises though.” Toki shuffles quietly. “I would have rather you didn’t tell everyone where I live, Grillby.”

“You live in twigs and snow in a snowy forest.” The fire elemental raises a brow. “That’s such a pinpoint location.” He snorts. “Now off with you, shoo, shoo, you have children who need their father just as much as they need their bed.”

"I'll definitely take a look at Sapphire on the morrow.” He nods. “James took over the lab for the next few days as the projects we were working on are now wrapped up. It'll give me a chance to catch up to my duties." Tenne replied with a light smile, before he looked at Toki. "If you would, my lady." He rumbled lightly, walking to the door and pulling it open to hold it for her.

She gave him a faint smile, and moved to the door. It was cold as the air blew in, and she shivered roughly, wings trembling. She tucked the boys closer to her as her fur ruffled in response, and puffed her magic into the air, heating the air around her and creating a buffer against the chill. The boys might be made mostly of bone, but that didn’t mean they couldn’t still be bothered. They were children, after all. Toki rubbed their backs as she stepped out into the snow, her bare feet crunching lightly on the ice. Her paws were perpetually cold- but it was a cold she was growing used to.

“Thank you, Tenne.”

Grillby took the door for Tenne, and waved the taller monster out. The lankier beast and the smaller bee based one made an odd pair, stepping out of his bar. Either way, Grillby waited until they were both out, before shutting the door and locking it behind them.

Toki glanced up to Tenne, and adjusted her grip on Kai and Quinn as she shuffles her toes to keep them from getting too cold. “I don’t know where you live here.” She admits quietly. “So… Lead the way…?”

He removed his long-coat and draped it around her, keeping her and his sons warm. "This way, my dear." He replied as he led her down the path of Snowdin, past the patch that had been where Cae and Quinn's home resided.

A little while of walking later and he revealed to her a path between two greatly grown trees, their branches hiding the opening that laid between them.

Breaking off onto this once-hidden path, Tenne led her to a great home built just out of reach of Snowdin's hustle and bustle.

"Now... I know it's not much... but it's home..." He told her gently.

Toki smiled slightly as the house came into view. It was a log cabin style house, like most of the houses built in this part of the Underground seemed to be, and had little unlit lanterns decorating the outsides of it. She shivered a bit under his coat as a cold breeze stole the cloud of heat from her.

“It’s beautiful.” She smiles softly. Definitely better than what she had been staying in. Toki continues to pad for the house, and strokes her fingers gently along the boys backs. “I can get the fire place lit, if you've got firewood, Tenne.”

"Of course." He got ahead of her and unlocked the door, pushing it open until it stuck and getting a head start on lighting the lanterns around the home.

"Go ahead and get comfy while I get everything ready." He told her once she was inside, gesturing to a couch with his tail.

She tilted her head at his fussing, and quietly hummed. She shook her head at him, and carefully lifted a thin and long-clawed hand from behind Kai, who was firmly clinging to her without much assistance. She tugged on her magic, and around them her bees formed, filling the house with warm, green light as they clung to the walls and buzzed faintly. She directed them with a simple thought to go light the lanterns, and then gave him a smile. “Please, allow me. It’s the least I can do, since you are sharing your home. Allow me to help warm it. What else is fire magic good for?”

That done, she went to carefully disentangle the children from her, attempting to carefully ease them down onto the couch so she could cover them in their father’s jacket. While she did, the familiar form of Toki’s favorite single striped Queen drifted down to Tenne, gave him a quizzical buzz, and then made to land on his shoulder. She was marked differently than the other bees by the harness that she wore.

He saw the bees and paused with awe, but had definitely flinched upon Stripe growing close. Though as she landed harmlessly, he settled some and smiled. "Oh... how lovely..." He cooed gently, "Hello big girl... A pretty queen, aren't you?" He purred, reaching up and slowly rubbing her head with a finger. "A pleasure to meet you, your highness~"

Stripe let out a pleased buzzing noise and rubbed his finger with her head. She was very small compared to him, but all the same, she let out a pleased sound. She turned on his shoulder, and then made a piping sound at Toki, while spreading her wings and twitching her thorax at her.

Toki spotted the motion, and the corresponding thought that came with it, and sent her a venomous look out of the corner of her eye. “Her name is Stripe,” She says with an even tone of voice. “She’s one of the things I can summon- and she’d got a bit of a personality of her own, for being a lesser summons. She’s sassing me.” Her own wings flick slightly on her back, glimmering surfaces glowing brighter for a moment as she manages to get both boys nestled together and settled on the couch. Once they’re down, she curls their father’s coat around them, and then carefully takes off her apron.

She’s left in the slightly tattered turtleneck he gave her when she left, and the pants he had as well. She adjusts her waistband, and then heads over to the fireplace, where she grabs several logs and piles them on. Like with the river, she lets her magic build, and exhales a small plume of fire onto the wood. The dry wood catches, and the flames consume it hungrily.

"Impressive." He commented, though whether it was on Stripe or what she had just done, it wasn't clear. He came over and looked at his boys with a sweet smile, before he glanced over at Toki. "She's very lovely, matches her summoner..."

A faint smile crawled up her teeth at his compliment, and she couldn’t stop the dusting of green that crossed her cheeks. Compliments were always nice, no matter what body you were in. “She is fitting, isn’t she?” She hums softly. A soft laugh leaves the bee blaster beast as she stands however, momentarily warming her chilled toes by the flames as she relaxes some in the glow of the firelight. She shivers faintly still, her thin body chilled despite her magic working to warm her. “If you think she’s impressive, you should meet Clover.”

"I bet she's as wonderful as this lovely little one here." He purred as he slowly coaxed Stripe onto his hand, now able to pet her with the length of his hand instead of just a finger.

Stripe let out pleased buzzes, and leans into his hand as he pets her.

Toki chuckles softly. “Clover can be a grump, and she’s big enough that if she gets too grumpy, it could be a problem.” She glances to the ceiling as her swarm returns, and they flood the room in soft green light once more. They settle on the ceiling, and all at once begin to buzz and emit heat, working to raise the ambient temperature of the house. Toki sighs pleasantly, and rolled up her sleeves a little bit. “Much better.” The bag of food Grillby sent home is fetched, and she wiggles it at him lightly. “Did you eat anything at your work today?”

'A 'grump.' Cruelty scoffed, 'More like frenzied hornet, moody or not.'

"Well, ah." Almost immediately Tenne's stomach growled loudly at the mention of food, "I... had a snack... yesterday?"

Toki snorted, and then padded to him. She plopped the bag in his hand, “Eat this then.” She then hesitated. “If you like, I could cook something. It might be late, but it doesn’t take long with me. Please, accompany me to your kitchen? I don’t want to snoop into things that I’m not allowed to.”

He chattered quietly before he smiled and shook his head. "Nonono, please, keep this! This is your food. I can easily make the pups and myself something to eat. You have that, eat, and get comfortable, please, my lady."

“You’ve obviously been working all day,” As had she, but she wasn’t going to point that out, “And you ran late, so you worked over your hours.” She shakes her head slightly, and gives him a smile. “I made sure the pups were fed, by the way. I kept them fed all day- they ate a little bit before you came to get them. I don’t mind cooking, Tenne. I’m actually not bad at it, I promise. It would be something normal for me. And, ah, well... I don’t have much of an appetite myself.” She admits quietly. “So the burger is a little much for me. I’m good for... maybe half of it.” If that. She rubs her arms lightly and sighs softly.
"I couldn't possibly ask you to make me food, Miss Toki... After you took care of my pups so kindly... I'm so sorry about that, I honestly... I mean... I should be a better father than that." He sighed as he sat down on a chair, putting his face in his hands. "I'm shocked my pups still love me as much as they do..."

She moved closer and rested one of her hands on his shoulder. “Tenne,” she said softly, “You work hard to provide for your boys. You are, from what I can tell, a single parent trying to do the best he can for his sons. They’re smart boys- they know this. They miss you- they miss you a lot. But they have nothing but praise for you.” She gives him a smile. “Why don’t you go wake them up and cuddle them for a bit, okay? I’ll make the three of you something warm to eat and drink, and you can spend some time with your sons. I’m sure they’d appreciate some attention from their dad.”

Look at her- giving parenting advice to two different parents in one day. Well, in less than twenty-four hours. Go her.

He looked up at her, his pupils a little wider as she spoke, before he smiled shakily. "You're too kind, Toki... Thank you." He purred quietly.

'Ugh, you mean to tell me I had him tortured for hours to break that mind of his, and what, twenty years earlier all I had to do was tell him his boys didn't love him?' Cruelty hissed in frustration.

'You’re never going to get the chance to torture him again, so I guess that’s information you can just rot on for eternity, hm?’ She bites back sourly.

To Tenne, however, she only smiled softly. “I’ve been told that before.” She pats his shoulder again, and then gently brushes past him. One of her wings brushes against his knees. “You’ve done a good job with your sons so far, Tenne. I was serious though. Wake them up and cuddle them a bit- or just pull them to you and let them cling.” She turns back to tap where her nose would be if she had it. “They recognize your scent- let them know you’re back. They’ll smell you in their sleep. You can keep me company in the kitchen with them that way, if you like.”

Her wings flick, and with that, she pads quietly into the kitchen to make him and his children something to eat. If they didn’t eat the burger, she supposed. Remembering that Tenebris liked meat, she went to what looked like a freezer, and opened it, only to find it was… an ice box? With a direct line to the snow and ice outside. Well, that was one way of keeping everything chilly.

She quietly collected what looked like decent meat, and moved over to the sink, and began to thaw it slowly with her magic, so she didn’t just flash cook it in the package.

As she went to prepare the food, Tenne did as he was told, and collected his pups in his arms. He was happy to have a nearly-instant reaction from them as they grew active in his arms for but a moment to get comfortable.

He kissed their heads gently, and then leaned back with a gentle sigh of what could have only been relief. "My beautiful baby boys..." he purred gently, before he whispered to them both, "Nec sine te nihil sum." He whispered.

Once the pups were comfortable, and their grasp on their father was locked, he slowly got up to his feet and made his way into the kitchen to keep Toki company.

By the time he got into the kitchen, Toki had the meat setting in a cast iron pan, and was heating it up in one of her hands. It was sizzling away. The other hand had a pot full of water in it, and a vegetable boiling inside. She leaned against his stove, which remained unlit and dark. Her final two hands were working on heating up a pot of tea for him. She looked up as he came in, and slid the pot of tea to one hand, before waving with her now free one. She poked at the steaks lightly, and flipped them over to brown the other side. “Just seared, right?”

"Yes, precisely." he rumbled, a smile on his face as he leaned against the counter. "There's seasonings on the rack by the stove." He pointed them out with his tail, before he realized she was starting the kettle.

“Thank you.” She hummed with a nod. She braced the hot kettle against her chest, her flesh thankfully still impervious to fire and all things hot, and scooted over to collect spices. She thumbs through them, picks out a few, and then rubs them gently into the meat as it cooks. A flash of fire magic cleans her hands better than any hand sanitizer ever could, and she gently flips the steaks again, before scooting to rifle for mugs. She pulls one down initially, and thinks better of it, before grabbing a second one for her. A warm cup of tea sounded good about now, she mused.

She huffed through her mouth, scenting out the familiar taste of orange blossom, before collecting the tea. She put some into each mug, and then poured the hot water over it to let it steep. The hot kettle was set on the stove, which freed up her upper most hands, so she could continue to work with the boiling broccoli and the searing steak. Once it was browned on both sides, she set it off to the side, and then glanced to him. “How do the kids eat theirs?”

"Rare." He answered for the steaks, before he chuckled quietly. "Well... Orange Blossom huh?" He asked.

She nodded to the children’s steaks, and took theirs off when the pan was done. She hadn’t cooked any more than three- the largest of the cuts for the biggest monster. She glanced up at him, and then moved to drain the broccoli. “Ah... yeah.” Her wings flick, and she tucks her head down self-consciously into the fluff of her neck. “It’s the tea I’m most familiar with. Plus it... It reminds me of home.” She murmurs quietly. Her throat tightens, and she huffs in a soft breath, before shaking off anything that might be building. She instead goes to the fridge and gets butter for the broccoli, before mixing it in and melting it, and then dishing it up onto the plates. There’s a little itty bit left over, and she scoops that onto a fourth plate for her to nibble at, before setting the pots and pans into the sinks.

The kids get glasses of ice water, before she quietly sets them all at the table in the kitchen. She goes hunting for silverware next, procuring them and then bringing Tenne his tea. She shuffles awkwardly, and collects the bag from Grillby’s that had been set there, before taking it to the counter. “Well, ah... Your dinner is served?” She picks up her plate of broccoli and nibbles at it lightly. It tasted good, soaked in butter. Definitely a change from cave critters and fried food. Her mouth thanked her.

The smell is heavenly to Tenne and he let out a hungry keen, before he looked to his boys, nuzzling and bouncing them gently to see if they’ll stir for their probably second dinner. "Quinn, Kai." He cooed to them gently, "Time for food."

As if the F-word were magic, Kai’s eyes opened and he let out a quiet grumble, before he yawned and stretched in his dad’s arms.

Toki gave Kai a smile and took a moment to sip her tea. It smelled and tasted heavenly, and warmed her from the inside out. Speaking of warm... The living room went dark as she willed her bees away, and Stripe disappeared from where she had been lingering around the kitchen. “Hey there, kiddo. I told you your dad would come for you,” She smiled, “He was running a little late, but here he is. And look- he’s even got dinner for you and Quinn. Think you can help your dad and get your little brother up for us?”
Kai opened his eyes a little more, and then hugged his father's neck tightly, "Papa!" he chirped happily. He then leaned back and turned to his brother, gently shaking his brother who whined and squeaked until he consciously realized who it was he was clinging to.

Quinn’s orange eyes lit up with joy, and he flailed against him happily. "Da!"

"Hello my boys~" He cooed happily to them.

Toki’s soul both warmed and ached, and there was a torn expression that crossed her face, before she covered it with her mug and closed her eyes to steel herself. So much for Quinn only saying ‘nyeh’. Still, it was a cute sight, even if it made her long for her own children. She wanted her babies clutched to her so badly… So badly that it almost physically hurt. “It looks like someone’s learned more than just ‘Nyeh.” She smiles, and then goes closer to scoot their plates all to one side of the table, so the boys don’t have to leave Tenne’s lap. She gives him a lopsided but knowing smile, and then eases herself down across from them to nurse her tea and pick at her broccoli. Hardly a meal for a predator monster, but she could nibble the Grillby’s burger later if Kai didn’t eat it. He seemed to enjoy Grillby’s food often.

He let the two have at the meat on their plates while they settled on his lap, though even with how quickly he downed his broccoli, Quinn had his eye on Toki… He gave a small noise and squirmed in Tenne’s lap. He was gently let loose, and Quinn waddled over to Toki.

"Quinn, what are you doing?" Tenne asked, arching a befuddled brow.

"Nyeh!" he reached up and patted Toki's lap, before looking up at her. "Nyeh!" he demanded again.

Toki blinked down at him, before laughing gently. She knew his demands by now. “Up?” She supplies for the child, and gently lifts him into her lap. She settles him there, and smiles at him. “Wanting to sit with me, kiddo? Or just want to steal my broccoli?” She’d seen how fast he’d scarfed the veggies on his plate. She wouldn’t deny him her broccoli if he wanted it- a growing boy needed his greens, after all.

"Nyeh!" He claimed her lap, and then reached over towards his plate, until Tenne got the message and pushed it over.

Quinn, for a moment, looked proud of himself, and he took her smaller plate of broccoli as he hopped right out of her lap and returned to his father's side, putting the plate on the table before getting his father to help him back onto his lap.

Now he looked even more proud of himself, having successfully switcheroo'ed his plate with Toki's.

Toki for her part could only blink and stare for a moment. She then laughed lightly, and rubbed her palm against her cheek. “Well, I guess someone likes how I do my broccoli.” She simply gave the boy an amused look, and glanced down at the untouched steak now sitting on what was now her plate. She could probably eat it- it certainly smelled good, and it made her stomach clench hungrily. She didn’t usually like her meat to be… well, so bloody, with the exception of when she was pregnant. But it looked damn good. She glanced up at Tenne to see what he thought of his son’s shenanigans and his apparent lack of desire to eat his meat.

"I think it's less that and more he'd be happier if you ate such good quality meat while he enjoyed your broccoli." Tenne chuckled gently, "Don't worry though, Kai doesn't mind sharing, does he?"

Kai looked up from where he was chewing a mouthful, before he blinked, and swallowed, before he stuck his fork into his meat and somehow managed to lift some of it over onto Quinn's plate.
"Thank you, Kai~"

Toki chuckled gently, and smiled slightly. "Well, thank you then, Quinn. You’re a growing boy though—meat will help make you grow big and strong. And thank you, Kai, for sharing with your brother. That was very sweet of you.” Since the boys were sharing their steak though—which was probably fine, given the size of the steaks that Tenne had in the packages—she simply sighed and gave in. She worked slowly into it, nibbling bites with her fork between sips of tea. It tasted good—very good—and the semi-raw nature of it settled well with something inside of her.

Probably the blaster beast nature, she assumed.

Either way, it prompted a soft, pleased buzzing to thrum from her in a low, continual tone. Toki was graceful in the way she ate. Lacking lips, her external teeth worked as a sort of flexible grabbing lip, pulling the small bits back into the teeth she used for proper chewing. She ate without mess too, managing to keep the dripping steak from getting into her plush fur, or on her shirt. Since she only had one shirt she’d practiced at keeping it clean. It was a hassle to have to keep cleaning it because it got dirty.

Toki was still done before they were, with most of the steak finished. She slid the plate across the way, offering the last quarter of it to the whichever of the boys wanted it, while she leaned back in her seat, reheated her tea some more, and sipped at it pleasantly. “Mmm…” She was almost uncomfortably full, but in a good way. She would sleep well tonight.

"If you'll go ahead and relax for a little, I’m going to clean the boys off and get them to bed. After that, the bathroom is yours." Tenne told her, finishing the last of his dinner before he scooped up his boys. "Don't sweat the mess, I'll get it after they're in bed, you've already done too much for me, Toki."

“I’ve already had a wash today, Tenne.” She gave him a faint smile. She smelled of Ariel’s shampoo, though faintly. She mostly smelled of the river water in Waterfall. “Thank you though. I’ll see you when you come back?” She relaxes in her seat, looking for all intents and purposes like she’s content to finish off her tea right there.

"I don’t go to bed for a while, you'll have company for a while before I call it a night." He chuckled as he started for upstairs.

In the time he took upstairs, Toki finished her tea, and did the dishes. He might have told her not to, but that didn’t mean she was necessarily going to listen. When they were done and dried, she put them away, and then returned to the couch, where she curled up and quietly played with the bottom of her shirt. Her eyes were drooping a bit, wings flicking behind her as they pressed against the couch. She was glad they were flexible—or they would be impossible to handle.

Toki nearly dozed off as she relaxed in place, eyes closing as she listened for the sounds of Tenebris coming down from having finished bathing the boys. She quietly basked in the lingering warmth of the room. It was leeching to the rest of the house, making the living room cold, but near the fire was still warm, and still good enough for her to feel comfortable in.

He came downstairs after the boys were successfully put to bed, but upon seeing the mess cleaned up, he made a small flurry of gestures with his arms before he scooped them and sighed. "You are persistent."

"I'm stubborn." She quirked a smile up at him and patted the couch next to her for Tenne to join her. "It's a trait many find frustrating. But my stubbornness has kept me going this far." She said softly. She sighs, and listens as the wind starts to kick up outside. It would have been cold outside. She's definitely glad for a warm room to stay in tonight, that's for sure.

He chuckled quietly and came over, revealing a blanket he had tucked under his arm. Said blanket was then held out to her. "Here. Why don't you get comfy?"

She smiled to him and accepted the blanket. It was tucked around her, leaving her wings free so they didn't get squished. She cuddled into the arm of the couch, curling up for space. "Thank you, Tenne. Mm... Its much warmer inside." She sighs pleasantly. "Easier to keep warm too." She nuzzles into the blanket. The fire light gleams off her eyes, making her pupils shine at him.

"Well I couldn't imagine maintaining a very high heat in an igloo, well made or not. When it gets cold, it gets cold." He chuffed, "And as a personal loather of said cold, I find myself content in the safe warmth of my cabin." He chuckled.

She chuckles dryly. "It wasn't so much of an igloo so much as it is a den. It works well enough. I have blankets." She snuggles the one he's given her, and hums slightly. "I don’t mind the cold so long as I'm properly dressed for it. I've only got sleeves on one set of my arms and my paws are forever cold." She laughs gently. "My den isn't the best, but it works. I only sleep there, and I’ve only got blankets, so storage isn't an issue." And it pleased some primal part of her to have made her own little den. She theorized that it was part of being a blaster beast. She was having to learn a whole new set of instincts, just like when she became a skeleton.

"Once this blizzard passes I’ll see about making you some proper footwear." He rumbled gently, "My own keeps my pads safe from the thermal terrain and are rather easy to replace when they've been worn out."

Her mouth pinches a little bit, and she rubs her arms lightly. "I couldn't ask you to do that for me," she says softly. "You've done so much for me already, Tenne. You really have. I'll be okay." Her wings flick, and adjust against the couch, tucking against her back.

"I said the same thing to you not twenty minutes ago." He chuffed, "I'm going to make it fair, the least I can do."

"That was doing dishes and cooking." She rolls her eyes. "This is getting shoes custom made. That's... I don't even make enough gold to pay you back for that, Tenne. I don't even know how much it would cost, but I know I don't make nearly enough. Its okay." She smiles at him lightly. "I'll be out of your way after the blizzard anyways. So its okay."

At this point he thumped a foot, a habit that seemed to be shared across the verses, even if her Tenebris had picked it up from Thumper. "Out of the question. You're..." his voice started sharp, if not slightly frantic, before he paused for a moment. His stance softened, and he sighed. "You're the only other Blaster Beast I’ve met since I lost my pack... I cherish knowing you exist... And if I had the chance to protect you... E-Even if there was nothing meant by it..." he trailed off slowly, his gaze lowering to the floor.

Toki sucked in a soft breath and sighed. Part of her was torn. She wanted to tell him about Papyrus, about her mate, about Honey and Skylar and the children she had lost and the family she had been deprived of... But she didn't. She couldn’t bring herself to break that fragile hope she could see lingering in his eyes. There was no excuse in the book that she could use. There were no other fish in the sea- as far as he knew, she was the only other blaster beast that existed in his world. The hope in his eyes... It was the same hope she had seen dashed from Tenebris' own. Maybe it was influence from Cruelty, but... But she couldn’t bring herself to tell him. It might have been kinder to tell him. But... Toki couldn’t. She just... She couldn't.
She lets out a soft sound, almost a choked sound, and rubs her palm against one of her eyes. "I... I understand." She sighs softly. "I... I understand." She swallows again, and finally glances up to him. "Okay... If... You're sure it's not a bother... I don't mind hijacking your couch." Just like old times, when she lived on their couch until her house was rebuilt.

His eyes gleamed gently and he smiled, "It would not be any trouble at all, miss Toki" he purred happily, "We are family, our blood runs true, and winged, feathered, or scaled, we are kin."

There was almost a sour taste in her mouth as she forced a faint smile onto her teeth. "Yeah..." She agrees lightly. "Our blood runs true." That was about the only thing that did. "And please. Just... Call me Toki. If I'm going to be staying with you, then you're welcome to call me by my name, no additives to it."

"It will be a hard habit to drop, my dear," he replied with a soft laugh, "But as you wish, M-... Toki."

"Thank you, Tenne." She smiles quietly. "Is there anything you would prefer that I call you?" She's done very well not to call him Tenebris by accident, but she's wanted to a few times. It was easy to forget... Even though he looked so much younger than her Papa back home.

"Tenne is fine when we're in public. But here, I care not if you designate me by my nest-name."

She nods slowly. "Alright. I... Can handle that." There was no guarantee of her calling him Tenebris at the house though. She was more likely to call him Tenne. They were... They were different people. "T... Thanks, Tenne." Toki offers him a faint smile. "Really. For sharing your home, for helping me when I was sick, for the clothes... Just... Thank you. I'm... Sorry I disappeared for as long as I did."

"I was upset when you disappeared, but I was not about to try and hunt you down. You're a grown woman.” He sighs. “But I’m thankful that you didn't leave until you were healthy enough to survive."

She nods lightly. "You'll find that I am... A fairly independent woman. I took time to explore, and see things, and... Grieve my losses, honestly. I'm still not... Over them. But..." She shrugs faintly. "Some wounds only time can heal." It was partly why she looked too thin to be healthy for a blaster beast. She still gives him a smile all the same. "I did tell you that I would find you again though. Here I am?"

Jazz hands with four hands is twice as effective, she decides.

The snort and laugh that accompanied his smile was pure, and due with what previously marked his face

"Hahahaha!"

His laugh is rich and pure, and it makes her own bubble up to join his. She settles down on the couch, long since past longing for the comforts of her own bed, and simply laughs. It’s a surprisingly relieving motion, making something tightly balled in her chest begins to loosen up.

She could do this. She could... She could survive somehow. It wouldn’t be so bad. Toki needed to get past the pain and the hurt first, but... It was something she was fairly certain she could do. She was human at her core. Humans were built to survive.
Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Toki’s trying to survive in a world where she pretty much got told ‘no, you can’t see your kids or your husband anymore, get used to it because you have work to do’. So she’s trying to find as much light as she can in a dark, dark situation. Tenne on the other hand, seems to fancy her a little bit. But, as the only other member of his species… Why wouldn’t he? It’s also why she’s not utterly shattering his heart- because she doesn’t want to wreck his fragile little shreds of hope. Maybe it’s crueler, maybe it’s kinder- but remember… She’s not alone in her soul anymore. ;)

It took four days for the blizzard to pass, and that was four days that the boys got to spend with their father. Toki worked during the day, leaving a small swath of fire bees in the house with them to keep them warm while she was gone, and then would return by evening to help get dinner going for them. It gave the boys and their father some private time to bond and enjoy each other’s company while she was gone- along with time for him to get some of his work done, as he did come to work with her once to tend to Sapphire- since Tenne was so insistent on her staying with them. It was… It was almost a painful normalcy for her- but… it was a good sense of normalcy.

This wasn’t her family, but it helped soothe the pain in her soul any time Kai or Quinn would run up and cling onto her legs. They weren’t her children, but it helped fill the ache in the core of her being just a little bit each time. It was… sort of like a therapy for her soul. It was slow going… but it helped. She… She missed Papyrus and her children every day, and the pain always felt like it was growing worse. But… it was a little less with the distraction.

Of course, Cruelty was an asshole about it the whole time, about her replacing her family so soon, but she was good at ignoring him. Toki didn’t let his words rankle at her.

Well… too much.

Eventually Tenne had to go back to work though. The day after the blizzard ended, he got a call, and he said his goodbyes, and Toki was left in charge of the boys. She didn’t have a cell phone to make calls, but she did heft the boys up onto her back and make the trek over to Grillby’s to let him know she was going to take the day off to spend with the boys.

He was alright with that, and Sapphire, who was doing much better after Tenne tended to her, stepped up to take Toki’s place again.

That left Toki with the two melancholy boys, who were missing their father already. She packed them up onto her shoulders, which were now covered by an old but modified jacket from Tenne, and then paid for a couple to-go lunches from Grillby with what meager gold she had before setting out into the snow. But she didn’t return to the house- instead she lifted off into the air, and buzzed off across the trees.

“Alright, kiddos. Lets go on an adventure today.” Her magic created a buffer around them, letting her speak to them as she zipped through the air. “But, where would you like to go today?”

Quinn trilled as he held onto Toki, looking around excitedly, while Kai shrugged, "I dun care, where do you wanna go?"

She hummed as she zipped around, looking across the skies. "Well... Do you want to go explore Waterfall? I'm not comfortable taking you to Hotland. Too much lava around you both." Quinn was too little to be around it, surely. She hummed thoughtfully. "Do you want to see the Capitol? I haven’t been there yet."

"Waterfall?" Kai questioned quietly as he blinked once, "You mean the caverns!" he corrected.

"If it has glowing water that falls, yes." She nods, and chuckles. "So we've got Waterfall or the Capitol." She could suggest the new castle that was being built... But that was probably going to get them in trouble, so best to just not.

"Waterfall, then." Kai replied, nuzzling her shoulder with a happy sound.

She nuzzled him with a soft sound and then turned her angle away, heading back towards Waterfall. It didn't take long for her to reach the cave, and she dipped down, darting inside. Her wings made a racket as she buzzed through the corridors, and she flung herself amused at the echoes it made. She made her way deeper, quite familiar with the tunnels by now. Once they were a decent way in where no one else ever seemed to go, she touched down and set the boys carefully down on the marshy ground. She grinned to them. "Alright, little ones. Pick a direction, and lets explore. We might even come across a couple of settlers while we're out here. Who knows?"

"Go anywhere" Kai suggested, while Quinn giggled, "NYEH!" he would announce, patting her arm gently.

Toki laughed and straightened, patting the boys heads. She offered them her hands on her longer arms, and held their lunches in her smaller ones. "Alright. Hm... How about... We go see the echo flowers? They're very neat." She gently tugged on their little hands, and then was guiding them off through the not so dark cave. "They echo what you say." She grins. "And each other. It can get a little silly when it distorts."

"Echo flowers?" Kai piped up, before he smiled, "those sound cool"

"They are!" She smiles. "Maybe we can bring back one for your dad with a little message for him on it?" She laughs cheerily, and flicks her wings happily. He walls glow with bioluminescent moss, and it is a beautiful sight to witness. The echo flower cave isn't far off, actually. She'd brought them out this way for a reason.

The boys were enjoying the show, but were surprised to see guards standing point, before one stepped forward to stop Toki

Toki paused at the sight of the guards as well. "Those are new." She said lightly, gingerly tucking the children closer to her. She offered them a light smile. These weren't the guards from her world. There was no telling what these ones were like. "Hello," she greets lightly. "Can I ask why we're being stopped? I just wanted to show the kids the echo flowers just beyond your... Barrier there."

"This area is under investigation to ensure safety for civilian inhabittance." The guard spoke, "If you wish to get to the burning lands, please use the marked detour just back down the cave a bit."

"We're not headed for the burning lands. We did want to see the echo flowers, but I guess thats not happening." She rolls her eyes a little bit. "And this area is plenty safe. I survived here for a couple of weeks on my own, and there should be some settlers making homes some where in here. If you're worried about the echo flowers, dont be." She flicks her wings slightly, and stoops to scoop up the children. "So long as you don't eat the... I think it's the stems... Yeah, the stems, you'll be fine. The petals make a great tea."

"Your advice is noted, and will aid the conclusion of our investigation, but i must insist, Madame."

"Aren't those doctor Tenne's sons on her back?" the other guard spoke up.

"Fine, fine." She sighed. She turned her gaze to the boys clinging to her. "Looks like the echo flowers will have to wait, little ones."

The comment on the kids, and something in the tone of voice the guard took, however, made her tense, her neck fur bristling a bit. She glanced at him and lifted a brow. "They are." She said, voice deceptively even, "What of it?"

"We were not informed there was a new guardian of the children."

"On a different note, I don't believe I have scented you before." The first guard spoke, folding his arms and giving her a suspicious look. "Do you have ID?" he asked, which was most commonly possessed by those in the Capitol.

“Uh…” Shit, she didn’t have ID. She hadn’t even considered that- Grillby hadn’t asked for ID when she went to work for him. Her neck fur bristled slightly, and she cuddled the children closer to her. “I’ve only recently started looking after them while their father is at work. Very recently.” She answers. Well, that just sounds sketchy as hell, and she sounds like a kidnapper. Do monsters even have those? Toki swallows. “And no. I don’t have an ID.”

The guards exchanged looks, and then turned back to her, before the one who had been talking stepped forward. "You're going to have to come with us, Miss."

"To protect the citizens of the underground, we were ordered to ensure any and all are known and accounted for in the underground. If you are truly Doctor Tenne's sitter for his children, then he will be able to vouch." The first wolf guard said. His eyes narrowed at her. "However, failure to discover your identity will lead to incarceration."

Incarceration. Shit. Well. ‘Failure to discover her identity’ was bound to happen. She didn’t have one. There was a moment of instinctive fight or flight within Toki- the fight wanted her to let magic build up in the back of her throat, into something decidedly not flames, while the flames wanted her to bolt and flee.

Toki took a hard moment to stamp these out, forcing her narrowed pupils to widen once more. She forcibly relaxed her shoulders, and took slow breaths. “Alright. Fine. Where are the kids and I going to be taken to while you get verification?"

"A sentry point not far from here, we will be able to contact the doctor and have him verify. Please come with me." The ‘please’ at this point was more or less just a pleasantry, because the rest of it was clearly an order. Gesturing for her to follow, he began walking to the detour road.

Toki heaved a sigh through her teeth, and turned to plod after the wolf monster. She hefted the kids up a little higher and nuzzled their shoulders. "I'm sorry about this, kids. Your dad will get it all sorted out though." She reassured them gently, keeping them tucked close to her. She kept an eye on the guard, and made sure not to step in any holes in the cave floor as she went along. A rolled ankle wouldn't serve her well at all.

Quinn let out a confused whine, while Kai grumbled and huffed as he rested his head on Toki's shoulder.

The guard led her to the sentry point as he had told her, and approached a phone that had been wired and tucked under the desk.

Toki nuzzled Quinn gently to reassure him, and came to a stop just outside of the sentry point. She bounced them both gently, and looked at the old ass phone wired into the booth. Good lord, that was a ground line. Who even used those anymore? She knew Tenne had a cell phone. A brick of a cell phone, but a cell phone all the same. "I don’t know his number, if you need it." She warns the guard lightly.

"That wont be necessary." The guard responded. He picked up the phone, and dialed Tenne's number, before holding it up to his ear and waiting for the doctor to answer. Everyone had Tenne's number. When there were few doctors, you kept the doctors you had in close contact.

After a few rings, the phone picked up, "Gaster speaking."

"Doctor Gaster," The guard greeted lightly, keeping his eye on the beastly woman who stared at him flatly, "I have in my custody a woman who claims to be babysitting your children. However, when questioned, she was unable to provide identification. Do you have a new babysitter we didn't know about, or do I need to appropriate your children from her and take her to incarceration?"

"Her name is Toki Nara," Tenne spoke evenly, “ and she is to be trusted. However, I apologize for her lack of ID. It slipped my mind that she needed to be registered with the guard with her presence now in the rural section. Would you please run her through the verification process? I will be there soon to meet you and collect her myself to take her to his majesty for the final step."

"Of course, Doctor. Miss Nara and myself are out at outpost b-12. We'll see you soon." With that done, the guard said his goodbyes to the doctor. He then turned to collect the start of the paperwork from one of the boxes under the outpost. "Doctor Tenne will be here soon. I'm going to help you get started with the verification process, Miss Nara."

Toki blinked and stared. "Oh... Okay." He changed his tune quick. But she supposed being vouched for was one of those things... "What do I need to do?" She questioned, and quietly gave herself a mental shake for having been so hostile and snarky with the guards.

"Simply some paperwork." He replied, and handed her a stack. “It's a swift process and we will complete the first step by the time Doctor Tenne has shown up.”

Toki nods slowly. She shifts the boys so they can cling to her back and braces them there with her larger set of arms. Her smaller pair come to her front, and she pads to the outpost to collect a pencil from him. She looks over the paperwork, and begins to fill out what she knows.

Quinn wrapped his arms around Toki's neck and closed his eyes as he settled for a nap, while Kai huffed and stretched with boredom against her back.

It didn't take long to fill out the paperwork, given her experience with doing loads and loads of it back before the Monsters had their own rights in her world, and soon she had it done. Toki set down the pencil, and twitched her wings, looking back at the kids with a faint sigh. "Your dad is slower than a frozen grease trap at Grillby’s." She tells them with a mock forlorn tone, hoping to get some giggles while they waited.
Quinn was already dozing, while Kai grumbled against quietly against her shoulder, before squealing as he was suddenly plucked off her back.

"Ye of so little faith, my lady." Tenne laughed gently.

The squeal initially had her bristling, fur rising and fluffing out, and she was all fangs as she turned around to reclaim Kai back from whoever had taken him unceremoniously from her back. Tenne's voice and familiar face stopped her from... Well, probably doing something not very nice. She still had to take a moment to pat the fluff on her neck down, as it was still bristled and on edge. "Pardon me for not having expected to have to wait to get cleared." She rolls her eyes in good humor. "So... Sounds like I apparently needed ID to get around." She lifts a brow at him. "Sorry for making you come all the way out here and interrupting your work, by the way."

Kai swatted at his father but surrendered when Tenne simply pecked his head before resting him on his shoulder, "I completely forgot to have you registered while i was taking care of you the first time. But we have the IDs to ensure no imposters."

She was one huge imposter. "Imposters?" She inquires lightly, hands folding faintly across her chest. She leaves Quinn where he's at, dozing on her shoulder, and tilts her head at him. Her horn brushes her shoulder. "It's alright, Tenne. You were a bit... Overwhelmed at first, I think. We can take care of this now, and ensure I don't end up locked up or something. So what does it take to get an ID besides this small stack of paperwork?"

"A simple recognition of the king and his signature on the paper." he answered, but also didn’t answer. Picking one of the paper sheets up, pointing to the one spot left unsigned, he nodded to where the signature would go.

"Oh, I see. That makes sense." She nods slowly. She then makes a face and sighs. "Ugh. It's going to be a long walk back through Waterfall and Snowdin to get to the Capitol. You can't fly." And walking was so slow...

"You are new, you do not yet know." He chuckled lightly, "There is one who will get us to the castle easily." He ruffled the fur on top of her head lightly.

"We're gonna see River?" Kai asked eagerly, grinning when Tenne nodded

Holy shit, River was old then. Toki played clueless easily enough, but simply nodded. "Okay... Lead the way then. If we can even reach this River, through the blockades these guys have set up." Toki chuffs slightly. The patting of her head had prompted her fur to fluff on the grown of her head, and she ran a hand over it lightly. "Hey now. I don't have a brush to untangle it."

"You're with me now, you'll get your clearance." He rumbled to her, "They were just doing their jobs, my dear."

"I wasn't aware I needed clearance to see flowers, but I understand, I do." She adjusts Quinn a little bit, and gives Tenne a glance before looking at Kai. "They spoke in tones that... Triggered my desires to keep them safe, so I am a bit on edge. I'm sorry if I'm snappy." Given that he knew she had lost her 'pack', it was fairly understandable for her to be a bit edgy after having it hinted at having her charges taken from her. Toki sighs, rolls her shoulders, and forces her fur flat. "Lets go see this 'River', and head to the Capitol then. It's one of the only places I haven't been yet."

"The flowers?" He blinked once, before he smiled with a slightly thoughtful tinge to it. "I see. Come along then, my dear." He rumbled to her, starting away from the checkpoint.
"Mhm. I was going to show the boys the echo flowers. They're beautiful." She followed after him dutifully, larger arms remaining locked behind her to keep Quinn from falling off her back. It wasn’t the most comfortable of positions, but it worked. And it wasn’t like she didn’t have hands—though her spare hands currently held fast to her paperwork and the lunches from Grillby's bar that she’d bought for the kids. She sighed, keeping pace with him easily. Toki glanced up at him lightly. "Sorry for causing trouble, Tenne. If I'd have known I'd need ID to do things, I'd have waited on taking the kids on an 'adventure'."

"It's alright, it's my fault," he assured her as he led her past the guard's barricade, waving to the guard as he passed

Toki also waved at the guard, who waved at them lightly and then went back to his duties. Toki glanced up at Tenne, and bumped him lightly with her elbow. "Accidents happen, Tenne. Its alright."

"I’m just glad things didn't get any worse." He sighed, "I'll admit, I’m shocked. Not many people here know of the flora that we had closed off for studying. I feel like there's something you know that I don’t."

"I've seen it before...?" She shuffled awkwardly because hoo boy, there was a lot that she knew that he didn’t. "When I was on my own. I wasn't... In the best of places, so I wandered. I probably went into a lot of illegal areas, now that I think on it. But I found the echo flowers, and the room that looks like it's covered in stars. I've seen lots of things, Tenne." She murmurs softly.

"Don't let the guards catch you saying that. You might have gotten off lucky this time but you're still a civilian with civilian clearance." He gave her a sharp glance.

"I didn't even realize the areas were blocked off." She rolls her eyes. "I never came across any blockades. There are more paths than just the foot paths though." Her wings twitch for emphasis, and she points to several of the caves on the 'ceiling' of the cave they were walking on. "So nothing was intentional. I'm not a rule breaker by nature." Cruelty on the other hand was a genocidal terrorist, so breaking rules was pretty much his cup of tea. She was a civilian beekeeper. Breaking the law was not on her list of things to do. Toki sighed slightly and hummed a soft sound. "I don't plan to hang around many guards. Maybe Ariel and her kid, but only if I see them during bath trips."

'A chip off the ol' block, eh Kindness?' Cruelty teased with a low chuckle

'You're a bad influence that I can't ever get rid of.' She informs Cruelty with a sigh.

'Heh heh heh heh heh...'

"Ah, Miss Ariel, a darling woman, and her daughter, Undyne.... hahaha, what a spitfire."

"Indeed. Ariel is a sweet woman. Undyne is a little terror, but she's a good kid." Toki nods lightly. "Ariel let me borrow her shampoo and hairbrush. It was very kind of her."

"I recognize the shampoo... and how did it go for you? It was pleasant, no doubt." He rumbled. "The running waters are very nice, but perhaps a bit of a cold shock initially."

"I can heat the water that I step into, so cold water isn't an issue for me." Toki chuckles softly. "Fire magic has its perks. You and the boys should join me one of these days. A hot bath in the glowing waters is amazing. Its also good for you." She nudges his arm. "It's good for health."

"Only if you are comfortable with it." He chuckled at her nudge, "I would not mind a hot bath in the rivers of the caverns." He murmured, before he looked ahead and stopped. "Well. Here we are." He purred, sounding pleased. "The flowers, as you wanted." He announced quietly, not allowing himself to disturb the gentle silence of the echo flower field.

"I would not have offered if I minded." She'd long since gotten used to Tenebris running around basically nude. His genitals were hidden. Hers? Not so much. But after having kids... She didn’t have much pride left, so it honestly didn’t matter much. Toki was quiet for a moment, before she smiled at the flowers. She hadn’t expected him to take her here.

She moved closer, brushing her wing to Tenne's shoulder in thanks as she went, and keeping quiet. She leaned down to one of the flowers, and brushed a petal, before reaching back and nudging Quinn to wake him up so he could see the flowers. "Quinn," she spoke quietly, "little one, look. Echo flowers."

Quinn whined but slowly opened his eyes, rubbing one tiredly, "Nyeh?" he squeaked out softly, before stretching and kneading his hands on her horn. As his hands tucked back in, he lifted his head and looked around before he saw the flower. He tilted his head then made another sound as he began to make grabby hands for it

Toki laughed quietly as his hands kneaded one of her horns. She leaned down to pluck one- for there were many upon many in the field, and they would not miss one flower that would make a little boys day- and lifted it up. Before she gave it to Quinn, she pressed it to her mouth and whispered softly to it. She was then quick to hand it back.

As it was handed over her shoulder to the eager little boy, Toki's voice echoed out of the flower. "You're adorable, Quinn."

Toki glanced back to Tenne and gave him a lopsided grin.

Seeing Quinn's thrilled reaction to what it said, Tenne relaxed, and gave a gentle laugh, "I'm glad to see they're harmless..."

“Only the stems are toxic,” Toki agrees as she chuckles, “and that’s only if you eat them. The petals make good tea.” Like some of the things she spouts off, that’s bound to be a mystery to him. She smiles, and moves back over towards Tenne now that Quinn has his flower. “He’s probably going to play with the flower all day.” She laughs lightly.

"I might as well hire you as a scribe for our work at this rate." Tenne chuckled lightly, watching Quinn play with the flower as it sustained a little life left after being picked.

Toki quirked a faint smile. “I might have four arms for faster scribing, but I doubt I have the smarts to work in a lab. I just know flowers.” She motions to herself. She was a literal insect based blaster beast. “Besides, I’m better as a waitress. Doesn’t require credentials.” Toki hums slightly with amusement. She shifts the load of things she seems to be carrying, and then manages to free one of her arms. “Think we can stop back at your house so I can drop these lunches off? I bought them for the kids,” with what gold she had earned thus far, “but I don’t think they’re going to get to eat them while we’re out here. They can eat them later though- but my arms are a little full, and I have four of them, which is saying something.” Bagged lunches, a decent sized stack of loose-leaf paperwork, and a child. Very full arms indeed.

He rumbled softly, "Of course, we don’t mind stopping while you run things back to the house. It would give me a moment to leave the children in Grillby’s care."

"Aww." Kai pouted gently.
Toki groaned lightly at Kai’s pout. He was surprisingly adorable. “I just don’t really fancy carrying bagged lunches all the way up to the King and Queen- so thank you.” She had no intention of making a habit of seeing royalty- not in this strange, different world- but she didn’t want to make a bad impression to start. “So, where do we find River?”

"You speak as if they're delivered food on silver platters." He snorted, before he made a gesture with his head, "This way, we're almost there."

She rolls her eyes at him and buzzes at him. “For all I know, they are.” She reminds him lightly that she’s never met these monsters. Her Asgore did in fact have a set of silver platters- it had been used to help haul paperwork from time to time when she’d been at meetings at the castle before. Very handy, the platters were. Very pretty too. Still, Toki flicks her wings and heads off in the direction he gestures, her claws clicking lightly on the stone.

She knows these tunnels well enough by now- she just doesn’t know where exactly to find River at here.

He led her to the dock, and started to whistle gently. He continued to whistle until he heard someone whistling with him. He chuckled lightly then looked out to the river as the boat with the cloaked form approached the dock, slowing to a stop by the ledge.

"Doctor." River greeted quietly,

"Hello, River." Tenne greeted with a smile, "We would like to go to the castle."

"You are fortunate to meet me, then. I will take you there." River gestured to the rest of the boat-space for them to board.

"Ladies first, Miss Toki." Tenne hummed softly, watching River offer one end of their staff to her.

Toki chuckled softly and smiled to River. “Hello, River.” She greeted lightly. Her free hand accepted the end of the staff, and she eased onto the boat. Getting onto the boat was easier as a skeleton, she mused. Her legs wobbled, and her wings flicked up to help her balance. Still, she was quick to take a seat at the end of the boat, where her wings wouldn’t get in the way.

They did, however, stick out past the boat and brush the water a little bit. Unfortunately, they only folded up so small against her back.

She shifted Quinn, so the boy was in her lap instead of behind her, and sighed as she shuffled her load of things to her other arms. What she wouldn’t give for a backpack about now. She glanced up to the cloaked driver of the boat. “Thanks for the help.”

River nodded to her.

Quinn got comfy in her lap and cooed gently as he leaned into her stomach while he watched his father climb into the boat. Quinn cuddled his flower happily.

Tenne was a bit unstable as well, but it wasn’t long before he was sitting down comfortably with Kai settled in his lap.

"And so we are off." River spoke quietly, before pushing off the dock to start down the river.

Toki’s wings idly flitted along the surface of the water, and she found herself glad that her wings weren’t designed like actual insect wings. The water wouldn’t bother them. She hummed as she held Quinn, letting the boy nestle to her chest and fluff comfortably as she did so.
She idly glanced across the boat, and smiled to Tenne, before flicking her gaze curiously up to the cloaked form of River. She studied them for a moment, before humming gently. “So, how long do you think it’ll take to get to the Capitol?”

"Not long. Not long at all." River replied quietly, before humming quietly. "A cruel mind and a kind heart; previously existing as two, are now as one somewhere... A task they were given, a task they must complete. I wonder who they are, and where they are..."

‘WAIT, WHAT?!’ Cruelty’s unsettled voice boomed in her head. ‘River… Tends to spout off things. This though… This is a little creepy. And a little too all knowing.’ She responds, just as equally unsettled.

The only sign that River’s words unsettled her, however, is the faint narrowing of her pupils as she looks up at them. Toki swallows slightly, and inhales, before exhaling again. She cuddles Quinn closer to her to keep her cool, and simply tilts her head. “Cruel mind and a kind heart, hm? I wonder indeed.” She settles back against the backing of the boat, and is thankful for the fluff of her neck that she can hide her mouth in as her teeth twitch with nervous worry. “Mhm. I’m glad it’s not too long of a jaunt.”

“How very interesting, River. What brought this concept to you?” Tenne asked, looking back to the hooded being.

"A disturbance amongst threads of space... tut tut..." River replied softly, before going quiet again.

Toki’s head slid further into the fluff of her neck, and she did a very good impression of a turtle, because she was very, very sure that she was the disturbance among the ‘threads of space’. Her pupils thinned further. Oh yes, she knew indeed that she was the disturbance. Rather than incriminate herself, she simply changed the subject, and focused instead on petting Quinn, and simply letting the boy play with the flower on her lap.

“So,” She murmurs, “What’s the Capitol like?”

"It's the most developed area we have managed so far... though it's not nearly as much as it sounds to be..." Tenne answered as he leaned back and sighed.

“It’s still better than a lot of the places I’ve seen, I imagine.” She murmurs softly. Toki sighs. “Things will be better once the new Castle is up and running, I know it.” She’d seen the kingdom at it’s prime in her world- and there had been lots, and lots of houses, with markets and venders and all sorts of things. It was… well, frankly, quite neat.

The insect woman sighed slightly, and scrubbed one set of her fingers lightly through her mane. Her claws were sharp and ungodly long, but they still caught on the gnarls and tangles her mane always seemed to get. “… Hey, Tenne? Do you think they’d sell a comb in the Capitol?”

"Perhaps. Though I’m sure I have a spare still tucked away somewhere I can give you.” Tenne hummed in thought.

Her eyes flicked to him, and her mouth pinched. What. Why would… “Why do you have a comb?” She blinks at him owlishly. “You don’t have fur…?” Not anywhere that she could see, and she’d seen her Tenebris naked. Completely naked. He had no hair in sight. Anywhere.

‘Somehow I don’t think I’m going to like this answer.’ Cruelty grumbles in her mind.

"I shave, my dear... My mane is not nearly long enough to require combing."
“Wait, what?” Her eyes go wider, and rake over him again. She peers at him closely, and then buzzes in utter bewilderment. “Where the heck do you even have to shave at? I haven’t seen any stubble around your neck to show hair growth.”

‘He might not be referring to a mane that we can see.’ Cruelty sounds disgusted. ‘He’s probably trying to give you some sort of… genital comb or something otherwise beastly.’

‘Shut up, Cruelty, Tenne wouldn’t offer me something like that. That’s just… Gross. Genital combs are just gross, and you get to go to the shame corner of my mind for even uttering those words to me. Now get.’

"Since I began work in the lab, I’ve kept it short, and I think I look silly with stubble so I shave my face every morning." He answered, reaching up to cup his chin, running his fingers over where said facial hair supposedly grew.

She followed the motion of his fingers, and openly stared. Her teeth parted for a moment, before closing with a soft ‘snk’ sound and a small flick of sparks. “I’m not going to believe it until I see it.” She shakes her head. “A mane and beard. Good gracious. I can’t even imagine you with it.” She snorts softly, and then grunts as she tangles one of her claws in her mane. She works to free it. “I doubt whatever comb you’ve got could get through the knots in my mane. My mane is long and thick- it tangles up with pretty much anything. I wish I could shorten them,” She mutters the last part with a huff. “It would probably break your comb.”

"You'd be surprised. I had quite the mane growing up." He grinned to himself before he chuckled, "The comb I own was made to survive the thickness of my fur. Rest assured, it will certainly conquer whatever mess your fur has to offer."

“I don’t believe it,” She laughs lightly. “But anyways, you say that now, but you’re not the one who has to try and tame it. You should see it before you get downstairs in the morning. It’s worse than what it usually is. It’s just… Really, really easy to tangle, and horrendously fluffy.” Toki gives him a lopsided smile. “I guess we’ll see though.”

He laughed gently, "I take that as a challenge, my dear" he teased

'Ugh if you two keep flirting I'm going to retch........ no, no better yet... I'll make YOU retch.'

'You can't control this body, so try as you might, you can't. We're not flirting though. It’s just... It’s just teasing. It’s just teasing between friends.' Toki snorted to her mental menace.

"Challenge accepted then. We might want to pick up an extra comb just in case you can't find yours." She chuckles quietly at his tease. "If all else fails, and yours breaks, then we'll have a spare." She probably had enough gold to cover it. A brush couldn't be more than twenty gold, right?

'I'll pull it off sooner than you think, Kindness.'

He laughed at that, and turned away again, "Indeed so..." He purred gently.

'And what is that supposed to mean?’ She inquired with waspish curiosity to her mental menace.

Toki gave him a smile that he didn't see, and settled in to wait out the rest of the ride, and grill Cruelty as best she could about what exactly he meant.

No response. Cruelty just chuckled and went silent, retreating back in her mind.

The rest of the ride was quiet, save for River's quiet humming, and soon they pulled to a stop at Snowdin dock. "Here we are."

Toki gave River a pleasant smile, and hopped off the boat with Quinn in her arms. She gingerly set the boy on his feet in the snow, and shivered violently as the icy chill that permanently made Snowdin well, Snowdin, once more assaulted her toes and the bottoms of her paws. “Alright, Quinn.” She nudged the boy gently. “Go with your daddy- I’m going to go drop these off at your house.” Her eyes flicked up to Tenne, and Toki gave him a lopsided smile. “I’ll meet you outside of Grillby’s?”

Quinn cooed gently and waddled over to his father once everyone had disembarked from River’s ship. Tenne scooped his pup up and kissed his head. “Sounds like a plan,” he replied, giving a smile to her, “See you there.”

Toki nodded and gave him a smile in return. She shifted the lunches in her arms, and held her paperwork more securely, before flicking her wings and taking off with a noisy buzz.

It didn’t take her all that long to locate the house from the air- and even less time to dip down and slip inside to drop everything off. Once she’d dropped off all of her packages, Toki had adjusted her paperwork and then took off into the sky once more.

Honestly, flight had its perks. By ground, there were so many obstacles you had to go around, and strict paths you had to follow. The only paths she had to follow here were the strange air currents that the massive cave system seemed to have, but her wings were strong enough that she could mostly ignore all but the strongest of the currents.

Flight was freedom. Now Toki knew how Clover felt- and felt even more sorry for poor, sweet Sugar, who no longer had wings.

Grillby’s came back into sight shortly, and she came to land on the top of the bar, waiting for Tenne to come back outside. She could see his footprints in the snow- meaning he’d taken the kids inside. So she lurked on the roof, amusement curling at her mouth as her smaller arms kept her papers flush to her chest. Her larger pair supported her as she adjusted along the roof, dangling slightly so she could look for him easier, and drop down when he came out.

"Alright, I’ll come back later. Thanks again, Sapphire!” Tenne was just coming out, a smile on his face as he waved back to his sons and their sitter. Once the door was closed, his shoulders slumped, and he sighed gently.

Toki noticed the slump to his shoulders, and tilted her head slightly. What could have caused that, she wondered...? Though she mused it was likely having to leave behind his sons. Toki shifted on the roof, and wiggled her rear a little bit. Her paws were cold from the snow, but they rocked forward and let her drop down in front of him with a lopsided smile. "Why the long look, Tenne?" She inquired, fur ruffling against the cold.

He leaped backwards with a yelp and winced as he crashed into the door, falling to the snowy ground with a pompf!

And at this moment, Cruelty roared with laughter at the sight, filling Toki’s mind with the sound.

The sound in her head made her wince, and she struggled to tune him out for the force of it. Still, she managed enough to give Tenne a concerned look, and to offer him one of her longer arms. “Oh goodness- Are you alright? I didn’t mean to startle you like that, Tenne. Maybe make you jump, but definitely not like that.”
He sat up slowly and shook his head, before he took her offered hand.

At this moment, the door opened and Grillby looked outside, "Are you alright?" he asked Tenne.

The doctor smiled at him gently, "Yes, yes I'm fine!" He assured him.

"Good." Grillby then looked at the door, before shooting Tenne a look.

Toki gave Grillby a wince. “It’s my fault. I’ll work on paying for the damages to the door, Grillby, I promise.” It wasn’t much, but it looked like the wood was cracked in a couple of spots, and one of the handles might have been dented inwards. This Tenne might have been built leaner and thinner than Tenebris was, but it was obvious he still had the strength and force in his frame that her quite buff Papa did. “I’m glad you’re not hurt though, Tenne.” She gusts him off once he’s upright, making sure to get the snow off of his back, before washing her magic over his clothes to quick dry and warm them for him.

"Well I’ll be fine, but I do indeed apologize for the door." He started, before he cooed and purred as he nuzzled into his turtleneck as it was dried and warmed. "Ooh... Oh I’m going to have to have you do that more often~ It feels fresh from the drier~"

She’d heard that before- many, many times. It made her laugh lightly, and she patted his arm. They might be two separate people, but they had a lot of things in common. “Fire magic has it’s perks. Now come on- let’s get to the Capitol so we can get this signed, and get me an ID.” She waved at Grillby, and then set off in the direction that she was pretty sure the Capitol was in. “If you get too cold, I can warm your clothes again, Tenne.”

"Yes, of course!" He looked at her, and then straightened and began to lead her through Snowdin. "By the way, how do your pads feel? I plan to make your shoes but I just need to know if there is urgency."

“I dunno? They’re pretty cold.” She answers with a loose shrug. “I don’t feel much in my pads, honestly. They hurt for a while when they’re thawing, and then they don’t hurt all that much when they’re thawed out. I manage. You don’t need to worry about shoes for me, Tenne. It’s okay.” Her wings fan out a little bit, and with them warmth fans into the air. Toki might be cold all the time here, but she exudes warmth like a flame. She glances back at him with a warm smile. “I don’t do a whole lot of walking when I’m outside normally anyways. I’m usually in the air- except, I don’t know where I’m going, so I can’t just race you there. I would probably win though,” She grins playfully at him.

"Tut tut, if anything, that told me exactly what I needed to hear." The doctor murmured lightly, waving a finger at her, before he shook his head. "You underestimate me, silly woman." He hummed.

Toki rolled her eyes, and put a little pep in her step. Her paws had ice sticking to the bottom of them as she jogged lightly to help keep her warmer. “So says you.” She sticks her tongue out at him, and the dark green appendage glimmers at him wetly for a moment, before she tucks it away. “I underestimate you? I dunno, doctor. You spend an awful lot of time up in that lab of yours- maybe you’re a little out of shape?” She gives him a teasing look.

"You say that and yet I commute daily back and forth." He snorted. "I am a prime example of fit and physique."

“Most days,” she corrects with a grin. “Well, at least that I know of. You might do it daily on the norm, but recently you’ve been staying at the lab with your current project and working in shifts.”
Her wings twitch with an amused sound, and she hums lightly. The papers pressed to her chest help distract from the sudden pang from her soul. Papyrus had done the ‘daily commute’ by foot. “I suppose I have to admit you look quite good- so you must manage to stay fit somehow.” She quirks a smile. His build was closer to Papyrus own, actually, now that she thought about it. Tenebris was much, much more bulky.

Tenne had more of a runners build that she could see- a lot like her husband’s ecto body had been. He was probably fast as hell.

He chortled proudly and grinned as he straightened and began to walk with more of a strut, his tail held high behind him. "Indeed so, my dear." He hummed pleasantly.

She watched him strut past her like a peacock, minus the tail fronds, and she found herself guffawing. “Careful, Tenne, or your tail will get stuck like that.” She teases. As they leave town and head into the woods, she muses that it’s a lovely walk this way, and that the path itself is very well worn. She hums to herself. “I could be in better shape. Not physical shape, mind, but… health, I suppose.” She muses to herself. Physically, she was very fit. The Void had upgraded not only her body, but her muscle mass and muscle tone as well. She had the body mass to fit with what she needed it for. She was, however, underweight. “I didn’t take as good care of myself as I should have when I was off on my own for that long while.”

He turned to her and gave her a sweet smile, "Well, don't worry about that. If you're staying with me, I'll be sure to do my damndest to make sure you improve."

Toki watches him as he half walks backwards, and makes sure that he doesn’t trip over any errant twigs and the like. The bee beast monster gives him a lopsided smile all the same. “Tenne, I doubt you’d let me out on my own anyways. Besides,” her neck fur ruffles pleasantly, “the couch is more comfortable than a blanket over ice, I can assure you that.” She gives him a cheerful look, and reaches out to steer him around a branch, lest he fall flat on his back. Her hand remains curled around his upper arm for a moment to make sure she can keep him from tripping. “I'll improve in time as I eat more.”

The only reason she was doing as well as she was health wise was because of her absurd amount of magic that was pooled in her soul because of what Cruelty had done. It was keeping her going and healthy- and she could probably stop eating in general, and it would probably just keep her running. But Toki liked food- even if she didn’t necessarily feel hungry all the time. Grief was a funny thing like that.

Upon almost tripping, he turned and resumed walking forward, but he seemed a bit happier with her arm around his, as he had slightly tightened his grip around her arm. As he did so, a happy purr began rising from him as he walked. "I do have a spare room. I could see about building you a bed.”

Toki found her arm fairly firmly stuck against his. There would be no discreetly slipping her arm from his- but that was fine. He was warm, and her hand was cold, despite the heat that she put out. Her body seemed forever cold, as if the weight of the energy inside of her was forcing the heat out of her instead of retaining it where she would like to keep it. “It’s alright.” She smiles to him. “The couch works. You’ve already done a lot for me, Tenne. I honestly couldn’t ask you to do more. I really could not. The couch and the couple of blankets works. Besides, it lets me keep the house warmer easier.”

"Hrm.” He gave a stubborn pout, but didn't look ready to give up the fight just yet, though he did go quiet as they walked.

They eventually came to a doorway, after having crossed over a couple of bridges and several large gaps. The door was pinned open, and was now simply a guard checkpoint.

"Afternoon, gentlemen." He greeted casually.

The guards gave respectful nods and stepped aside for him as he walked past with Toki.

"Thank you very much~" He rumbled as he passed them.

Toki gave them nods in turn, and shuffled after Tenne. Once they stepped inside the door, it was much, much warmer. She hopped to the side and shook off her feet, giving a soft displeased sound at all the ice so tightly packed between her toes. She shuffled after him as she went, hopping occasionally as she tried to shake impacted ice from between her toes. "So the Capitol is through this way?" She asked, using his grip on her arm to keep her steady as she shook out her feet. Her magic was melting the ice, slowly, but it was a process.

"That's right." He answered. He too stepped to the side and tapped his feet off, stretching one of them and letting his toes reach out, curling in to pop quietly before returning to the ground. "It's not much farther to the throne room." He rumbled, "That's as far as we really need to go."

"Oh really? Huh. That's handy." She blinks. Well, she supposed she wouldn’t be buying a comb then. That was fine though- she needed to save up to pay for the damages to Grillby’s door.

Toki’s toes are still partially frozen by the time that they resume walking, but there’s not much that she can do for them. All the same, she continues towards the throne room once they’re both ready, and hums a soft sound. “So we just… drop in and get these signed, and we can go back to your house?”

"Easy at that. Of course unless he asks us to tea… I can never not feel bad about declining a cuppa tea." He keened quietly before he sighed. "Oh well…The king makes a real good cuppa so who am I but a fool to decline?" Tenne chuckled.

Toki chuckled. “I bet he does make a good cup of tea. But,” She hummed, “I’m sure he’d understand you wanting to get back to your sons.” She quirks a grin at him, and then bumps him lightly with her hip. “We do have an unbearably long walk back at your slow land-walking speeds.” She teased lightly.

"Oh whatever, I’m just slow so you can keep up." He bumps her back with his hip. "Then again, I think his tea has finally met its match, now that you’ve come around." He chuckled.

“One of these days, we’re going to have to test who is faster.” She guffaws in good humor, and then gives him a happy grin at his compliment. She’d had Asgore’s tea before- and the king, at least hers, made very good tea. To get a compliment to compare hers to his was definitely a high honor. “Well, thank you, Tenne. That’s really, really sweet of you. I would think he’d be better at it than me. He’s had more practice than me.”

"And yet you knew just how long to boil the water, how long to steep the tea, and flavor to it; down to the very grains of sugar. It was the most divine cup of tea I’ve had in a long time." He sighed wistfully.

Toki flushed a little, a bit embarrassed by his ornate praise of her skills, and her pale white skin turned a lovely green shade. She’d learned how to make his tea in her world- and while Tenebris originally liked his unsweetened, a little, tiny bit of sweetener in it made it just a little bit better. Honey was best- but sugar was the only thing they had on hand here. “Well, if you want, I can make you a cup of tea when we return to your home. I wouldn’t mind one myself.”
"Hhhhhh yes please." Yes, he made the dragged out, quiet exhale before he spoke, his tail wagging behind him happily.

'You're flirting with your father-in-law from another timeline, Kindness. How do you sleep at night?'

‘I- I’m not flirting with him!’ She snapped. Was she? If she was, it wasn’t intentional. It’s just how she was. ‘I’m just being as much of me as I can be, Cruelty. And I sleep just fine, thanks.’

No she didn’t. Toki had nightmares of all sorts when she slept. Lots and lots nightmares- about the things she’d done, and the things that Cruelty had done.

Toki managed a soft laugh for Tenne though, and gave the happy monster a smile. “Well then, some tea for us both, and hot chocolate for the kids it is.” She lets out a soft, pleased buzz, as they reach the end of the corridor. She heads up the stairs, Tenne in tow.

'Liar~'

For the life of her, Toki had nothing to say back.

Tenne chittered happily as he followed and as they made it to the top of the stairs, there was a fluffy form approaching them, a bright smile on her face. "I knew I heard you coming up the corridor, Doctor."

"My Queen, how good to see you again." Tenne respectfully bowed to the boss monster, "You look full of life, as per the usual."

"Oh you flatter me." She chuckled, waving a fluffy paw lightly, before looking to Toki. "And who's this lovely young woman?"

'Ah. The goat.'

‘One of them, at least.’

Toki took a quick moment to observe Toriel. This one was still the same apparent age as the one she knew- but there was something… Off about her. Different. This one carried herself differently- as if she had less of a burden on her soul. Toki wondered if it came from having not lost her children.

Toki’s hesitance lasted only a second, before she tightly clutched her papers and bowed to the other boss monster. Her magic flicked nervously over her fur, thick and powerful. “Tokiko Nara, Ma’am. I’m, ah, coming to register for my ID.” She wiggles the papers quietly, and flicks her wings.

"Well met, Miss Nara." Toriel replied, before she chuckled. "Alright, Asgore's out in the garden. I'm sure we need not the formalities to take care of this." She then leaned in, "He's wearing his 'Sunday best'." she giggled, before she leaned back and turned, starting for outside.

"Oh boy. Sunday best." Tenne laughed as he followed Toriel.

“Sunday best?” Toki gave a quizzical buzz, but followed along, her wings tucking behind her lightly.

As they reached the garden, it became apparent what it was. While the king was in long pants, his Sunday best appeared to be a hideously neon pink shirt, with bright orange, yellow, and white hibiscus flowers printed on it. He was elbow deep in dirt, churning the dirt with his paws as he prepared to spread out and plant several of the beautiful golden flowers he had growing in his garden.
He looked up as Toriel entered, followed by Tenne and Toki, and gave them all a jolly wave. Standing and dusting off his paws, he gave them a jovial grin. "My beautiful wife, my dear friend, welcome. Welcome to you too, miss…?"

"Tokiko Nara."

"Welcome to you then, Toki." Asgore nods. "What brings you here- ah, paperwork. Coming into the rural district, are you?" He glances to Tenne. "I’m assuming you’re here to vouch for her?"

"Yes, sir." Tenne replied. The doctor leaned over and rifled briefly through the stack of papers in Toki’s arms, before pulling out and offering him the paper he would need to sign.

Asgore nods, and takes the paper. He looks it over lightly, and then flicks his gaze up to Tenne. "She's an Insectis?" He inquires, surprise coloring his tone. "That would mean she's a subspecies of your kind, isn't she?"

One could hear Tenne's excited chittering sounds from where he stood beside Toki in the moment he answered. "Yes, sir!"

Asgore beamed at Tenne and at Toki, and signed the paper swiftly. It was handed back to Tenne. "Congratulations on finding more of your kind then, my friend. Does she have a place to stay? I’m sure we could make accommodations for both of you and your children, Doctor, up at the lab where it would be warmer if you would be happier there. She could help with your research?"

"I’m not a scientist." She adds lightly, awkwardly flicking her wings and giving the King and Queen a sheepish smile. "What a way to burst your bubble that Toki isn’t nearly as smart as Tenne is. She’s average at best. "I’m a waitress at a bar- and keep an eye on Tenne’s boys when he’s not home. It’s enough for me.” She shrugs lightly. "You don’t exactly have my chosen profession here. So doing what I do now works, I assure you."

He reached out and gripped Toki's shoulders, smiling happily as his tail wagged behind him. He slipped the paper into her stack of paperwork. "She claims she's not as smart as I think she is, but I believe she's full of potential, Asgore. And yes, she is currently staying with me. She's absolutely wonderful with my sons!" He chirped happily.

"They’re wonderful boys." Toki squeaks, keeping her grip on the papers as the signed paper is added to her stack, and Tenne’s hands fall on her shoulders. She struggles not to bop him with her wings as he pretty much stands behind her. She leans a little into his hands, and warms them with her magic. "Besides, I like kids, and they seem to like me, so it works…? Quinn really likes my fluff and Kai is happy if Quinn is happy." Or if he’s given a burger loaded in ketchup.

The position pleased some foreign instinct inside of Toki that she didn’t understand, and she was stuck puzzling over what exactly it was as her wings twitched lightly against him. His words, however, made her chuckle, and she nestled her head lightly down into the thick fur around her neck. "I was the eldest and only girl among nine children- I had eight younger brothers. I helped my mother keep them in line- so I’ve got the 'mom tone’ down pat, and I’ve got experience with little
The mom tone keeps anyone in check.” Asgore barks a laugh. “Toriel uses it on misbehaving guardsmen and it works like a charm.”

“I use it on you too,” The Queen laughs, “And it works just as well.”

Tenne chirped gently as he nodded in agreement. "Very impressive." He purred, before looking to Asgore, "Thank you much for your time, my friend." He chirped happily.

Asgore gave Tenne a smile. “Of course, Tenne. Anything for you and your lady companion here.”
The king dusted off his hands, and rocked on his heels faintly. “I’d offer you a cup of tea, but I’m afraid it would be more dirt than tea at this point,” he shortles. “It’s going to take me ages to clean the dirt from my fur.”

“I know your struggle, trust me,” Toki quirked a faint smile. “Anything and everything gets tangled in my mane. Anyways… We’ll let you go now, King Asgore, Queen Toriel. It was lovely to meet you both.” She wiggles a little away from Tenne so she can properly dip her head and bow her goodbyes.

He does let her go, and gives a small bow to Asgore and Toriel, before he chuckled. "Have you thought about a short cut length of fur?” He suggested, "I found it much easier for me when I cut my mane short."

Asgore chuckles. “I have,” he nods, “But it’s much, much harder to do when your entire body is covered in hair. I get it regularly trimmed, but there is only so much you can do for it at any rate.” He offers a lopsided shrug, and an equally lopsided smile. “Besides, Toriel likes my mane long.”

“I do,” Toriel admits with a laugh. “It is fun to run my fingers through. Chara and Asriel also like to braid flowers into it, when the time permits them to do it.”

Toki had no idea who they were, but she simply gives a faint smile all the same and simply nods.
“Quinn likes to play with mine.” She says by way of agreement.

He chuckled lightly. "So I'm the odd one out?" He put a hand over his chest, looking hurt for a moment before he cackled, "Perhaps once I retire, I let my fur grow out, and I’ll end up looking like King 'Fluffybuns' here."

Toki snorts a neat plume of unintentional fire, and startles the King and Queen with it. “Tenne, I highly doubt you could get as fluffy as King Asgore.” Her neck fluff ruffles lightly, and she lifts one of her hands to lightly fiddle with one of the curls. The fur on her wrists is shorter than around her neck, thankfully. “But you’re welcome to try.”

Asgore blinked at the fire. “You use fire magic? I hadn’t read that far down on your page.”

“Yeahhh…?” She glances at him uncertainly.

“It’s just uncommon, that’s all.” The king responds lightly. “Rare outside of certain species.”

"He's talking about himself. Boss species all have unique capabilities. His species harnesses fire, while I myself harness a plasmatic, almost laser-esque energy." Tenne explained.

“Oh.” Toki blinked. These were things she hadn’t quite learned in her world. The more one knew, she supposed. She pursed her teeth, and then glanced at Tenne. “My summons can do the laser thing.” She said. “I don’t know if I can. But my summons can. Not the little ones that you’ve seen, though. You haven’t met my bigger ones.”

Asgore sighs. “I really should have read the whole page, shouldn’t I…?”

“It might be helpful for future references, dear.” Toriel pats his arm lightly. “You were excited though. Only two blaster beasts in existence so far- it’s an exciting find. No one would blame you for getting a little too excited.”

Tenne smiled at Toriel. ”You must understand how overjoyed I was to discover I was no longer alone, am I right, dear Tori?” He rumbled happily.

Toriel laughed gently at the scientist’s seemingly childish excitement. It often reminded her of her dear children, "Indeed, Tenne. Indeed."

“Speaking of your summons,” Asgore jumped back a bit, and glanced to Toki, “Would you show us?” He questioned curiously. “Your larger ones, that is.”

Toki gave him a sheepish smile. “I’d rather not. One is… Definitely not an indoor beast, and is generally grumpy, and the other can fit inside, but has the energy of a puppy. Everything would be in shambles, and I would feel very bad about wrecking the throne room.” Her wings flick lightly, and she glances up to Tenne. “Speaking of things- you probably need to get back to work, since you left erly to take me here for my paperwork.” She hefts it up, and offers it out to him. “Your turn to carry the stack, by the way. My hands are falling asleep from carrying it.”

Asgore stares a bit. “Four arms must be very handy.” He sent a sly look to Tenne, that Toki completely missed as she was trying to hand over the paperwork. “And it’s quite alright, Miss Nara-I fully understand pesky summons. A few of my guards have summons of their own, and they have gotten out of hand a few times.”

"Where did you pick half of this up? This shouldn't all be the bloody paperwork for an ID..." he murmured, before he huffed. "Well, best take care of this before I forget!” His eyes glowed and the stack in his hands compressed into a card. He cradled it gently and blew on it gently before he smiled at Toki and held it out to her, "Here we are."

Toki shrugged initially. “I was handed a stack, so I just filled it out.” She’d honestly done more.
Tenebris’ file had been many, many times thicker than that. She did pause, however, watching Tenne compress the papers down into a card. She blinked, and took it. “Uh… What.”

"Isn't it quite impressive?" Tenne rumbled happily. "Oddly enough, Asgore's signature is a core factor in performing what you just saw. Without it, it does not work. Oh, by the way… There's one last thing to take care of."

At that, Toki looked up at Tenne with slight confusion, before feeling a slight wave of discomfort overwhelm her as he leaned in, and took the card in one hand, before taking her hand in the other.
He faced her palm up as he looked it over before he chuckled quietly. "Eenie, meenie, miney, moe…” He then swiped it across her palm, making her gasp in pain and attempt to pull back.

He held her firmly as blood beaded in her palm, before he slowly ran the card through it again. The blood was absorbed into the card, and she watched with shock and awe as the outline of the card turned green, before a bust-image appeared in one section, a perfect ID picture, as if she had posed for a picture in a camera.

"All done.” He rumbled, gently waving the ID card to dry as he lifted her palm again. "Tsk, I always hate having to shed blood, but at least this was for a good cause...” he sighed, before he smiled at her gently, "Allow me to soothe any pain that might linger." The doctor rumbled, before he leaned in and gently ran his tongue over her wound, cleaning it of blood and sealing it with his thicker-concentrated saliva.

For a moment, she just watched him. The licking of the wounds wasn’t all that unfamiliar- Tenebris had licked the twins when they had been born, and she suspected it was something unique to blaster beasts and their more animalistic nature. She opened her mouth, intending to ask him just what on earth he had been doing and why he didn’t just ask her before hand.

"I’ll admit it," He then spoke quietly, rendering her quiet as he interrupted her, "I didn’t expect that to work, my dear Toki, what with your defense as it is." He told her, definitely catching her by surprise.

Toki blinked at him owlishly. "You half expected me not to bleed?"

"Indeed." He agreed.

Toki just snorted, and lightly flexed her hand. The black saliva coating her palm wasn’t really necessary- she’d have made due with a bandage or something of that ilk. “Well, I guess if you catch me off guard, you can slice me.” She hadn’t really been preparing to brace for it- and her defenses... Well, they hadn’t exactly been at their highest around him. “For the record, you could have just pricked my finger and got blood that way instead of opening up my palm.” She gives him a faint smile. “Hopefully it doesn’t scar up like my head, ne?"

Asgore simply chuckles slightly. “It shouldn’t. At any rate, your ID card is fully functional and realized now- you’ll have no problems with access to civilian areas on your own. Tenne- take good care of her, and take the day off. The projects are not going to go to ruin if you take one more day off to spend with your sons.”

"As you wish, Sire." Tenne smiled up at him, and handing Toki her ID, he gave one last bow to Asgore, before he looked to his companion, "Shall we?"

Toki nodded, to both the king and the queen, and then grabbed Tenne’s arm lightly. She tugged him back for the stairs as she tucked her ID into her pocket, where she hoped it wouldn’t fall out. “We shall. Come on- Quinn and Kai are going to be excited to hear that you get one more night with them.” She smiles crookedly at him. “I can probably stop in and pick up my shift at Grillby’s, if you’d like some time alone with the boys.”

She did have damages on the door to pay off, after all.

He followed her with pleased chitters, his tail wagging as he followed her cheerfully. "Right behind you, Miss Toki~"

Toki laughs lightly and gives him a smile as she trots down the stairs, making great progress as she goes. “Tenne,” she scolds lightly, “Haven’t I told you to just call me Toki?”

"Old habits never die, I suppose." He chuckled quietly, "I am a gentleman, after all..."

“That you are.” She does have to agree.

The walk back out of the Capitol and Castle entrance doesn’t take nearly as long, and soon they’re back out in the ice and chill.

Toki gives the icy ground a glare as she steps out into it, and then huffs. Her toes pang with the chill, and she dances slightly in it with an irritable buzz that makes the wolf guards swat at their ears.
Her wings twitch and flex, and the desire to take off and fly home is very strong. However her land bound companion poses a problem. She glances to the larger monster and tilts her head. “So… I don’t want to walk to your home. It’s cold, my feet hurt, and I’m ready to go back to your home. So… you up for a little bit of flying?”

The doctor adjusted his coat, and had just been about to offer it to her when her words bade him pause. He turned, eying her lightly in time with the curious guards at the doorway. “I beg your pardon?” He queried. “What?”

“Are you up for a bit of flying? It’s faster than walking, and my feet are cold and would really like to go warm up by the fire.” Toki shuffled on her toes, and flicked her wings. They fully spread out, brushing the massive lengths against the snow and a few trees that lurked not far behind her. “You keep your coat, Tenne. You get cold too, you silly man.”

The doctor snorted at her gentle chiding, and fixed his coat as demanded. “My dear, I hardly think you could lift me. I’m not exactly a light weight, and you’re not…” His eyes trailed over the thin qualities of her arms.

She rubbed them lightly, and gave him a faint smile. “I know, I don’t look it, but I’m surprisingly strong. So, is that a yes?”

“It’s not a no.” He chuffs. He looks at her for a time, purple eyes glancing over her critically, before he nods slowly. “I suppose, if you think you can. Don’t strain yourself for me, my dear. If you can’t, then we’ll walk.”

Toki rolls her eyes at him. “If I can’t, I have someone who can.” She snorts. All the same, she slips around behind him. Her wings flick and flutter and buzz, and as she lifts off, she slips her largest set of arms around the underside of his arms. She grasps him firmly around the barrel of his chest.

Her fingers lock firmly around the broad and strong shield of bone that makes up his chest. Toki gives her wings a quick, experimental flap, and then grunts, before managing to haul him up and into the air.

His back legs kick and churn the air for a moment, a startled noise leaving him, before he curls into himself and dangles from her grasp like naughty pup.

Toki barks a laugh, and heads off in the direction of his home.
Chapter 95

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So we finally get to see a little bit more of what happened to Tenebris. Well- Toki does. 8) Hehehe.

The feeling of floating washed over her, but there was not a drop of water in sight... a wave of shadow however, was more than prominent. Toki knew she was dreaming again... Just... what was going on? Normally she would have started to see something by now...

As if on command, a door appeared, and the dimension steadily shifted and rotated to put her on her feet. She touched a solid ground, but to her shock, she began to move towards the door without thinking to do so.

'Another dream where I simply get to sit and watch...' She just hoped it wasn't as unpleasant as the dream she had back at the campsite...

She reached out and gripped the doorknob, but contrary to her hesitation, the door was opened without a wasted moment.

Behind the door was a large room, walls a dull white with hard tile covering the floor. Inside the room were cages, and she could swear some creatures that she recognized occupied a few of them, and some that she didn't.

A... A few of them, she thought, looked like some of the missing HTM's that had cropped up back on the surface of her world.

She wanted to look around further, but she was forced to look forward, off to where two HAM agents stood at attention.

"Well?" The first voice broke the silence... coming from Toki- no...

Coming from Cruelty's mouth.

"Captured successfully and transferred to cage. We're waiting for its awakening, Sir." One of the agents responded flatly.

"Force it to wake up." Cruelty commanded.

Is this a dream? Or a memory... At this point, Toki didn't want to find out.

One of the HAM agents grabbed an electric prod, and approached the larger cage that sat in one corner of the room. It was occupied.

Toki could feel a pit in her stomach... if this was a memory.... Then the one in that cage...!

The HAM agent pushed the prod into the form lying within the cage. The body within lurched upright, screeching in pain as it was electrified. Bright purple eyes flashed with pain as they opened, their worn out form pushing up onto his hands and feet to pull away from the electric assault.
"Well... didn't take much to wake him, now did it..." A chuckle slowly washed over the room, a sound that was heard over the ragged breathing and growls from the rudely awakened Tenebris.

Cruelty approached the cage, and took a look at the blaster beast inside. "I do hope you're uncomfortable. We wouldn't be doing our job if you were anything less." He spoke calmly and evenly, as if talking about the weather.

"Tch." Tenebris scoffed, slowly moving to sit up, though he had to stop and reach up, gripping at a chain that led to a clamp around his neck. "You mock me, you vermin." He hissed.

"Oh no, no mocking. I'm simply putting a beast in his place and keeping him in proper chains where he belongs." Cruelty replied smoothly.

"Remind me never to pay admission at any zoo you open." Tenebris sneered.

Such an attitude, that was her Papa... It made her want to smile, but she could feel Cruelty's face pull into a displeased frown.

"Such a foul attitude. I almost feel sorry for your 'family' to have to put up such disgusting behavior."

"I'm an old man. I'm allowed to possess a bit of attitude to my every day life. You on the other hand are a bit too young to be such an impolite little snot. So if you'd please, get this damn thing off of me and perhaps we still have a chance to communicate like civilized men."

"Oh, but you're no man are you. You're a monster. A filthy monster that is a blight upon this world." Cruelty spoke sharply. The beast's confidence even in this predicament was proving to be a bit annoying to Cruelty, and Toki could feel the emotion curling inside of her from the dream.

Though of course this was expected, such was the disgusting sense of spirit in monsterkind, one that peeved Cruelty, but made Toki proud.

"In the sense of a situation such as this, I would think it more logical for one to deduce that you're the 'monster' in this world." Tenebris retorted flatly. "I'm a scientist for my king, a doctor for my people and a father to my children, nothing of this would propose I've got the monstrous reputation among the other beings in this room."

It was good to hear Tenebris' confident voice again, his deep resonating tone without compare in the world. Even as he mocked the one in front of him, Toki could feel a sense of safety in his presence alone. Though more properly, right now it was dangerous.

Cruelty of course wasn't going to have any of it; he snatched the prod from his underling and pushed it between the bars of the cage, sinking it into Tenebris' collarbone, watching with satisfaction as Tenebris could only resist the pain for a few seconds. He held the prod against Tenebris' skin for what felt like forever before pulling away, watching the beast collapse against the wall, his breathing rough as a hand reached up to cover the burn marks against his neck.

"Hf... hf..."

Cruelty chuckled lowly, "Your words are only that, beast, simple words. You have no power here, and I'm not afraid to say that your time here is going to be painful and unpleasant." He told the stunned beast, tossing the prod back to one of his henchmen. "We're going to make you regret ever being born a disgusting monster."

"Hn... G-Good luck with that... I've survived fire, getting hit by a truck, and your barrages, Cruelty. What's another week of torture after retirement?" Tenebris chuckled lowly.
"Oh, you'll see. I have plans for you, beast." The look on Tenebris' face at that statement brought a feeling of pride in Cruelty's mind.

"Plans for you indeed~"

The scene went dark, and Toki hoped that it was the end of the scene... she didn't want to see what came next...

Unfortunately... Cruelty wasn't finished. So she was rendered to be a captive audience.

When Toki could make out her surroundings once more, they were in a larger room. Almost immediately, she could detect the sound of someone's breathing picking up. She did not need to see to know it belonged to her Papa. Toki didn't want to look... she really didn't... But Cruelty looked upon their victim, and Toki was forced to look with him.

What she saw made her stomach sink and twist with a nauseated feeling.

He was bound to a table, his limbs all pinned down with powerful clamps. His clothes were in tatters, and where they were torn, she could see damage that had never been mentioned by Grillby or Asgore after Tenebris was put under recovery watch.

Electrical and fire burn marks, slash marks, blunt-force bruises decorated the pale white canvas of his body where it was visible. Tenebris looked absolutely exhausted. The bags under his eyes told her that he hadn't been sleeping, and she wasn't sure if that was on his part or on HAM's. It didn't matter- he obviously hadn't been sleeping in days, and exhaustion seemed to be catching up with him.

She wished she could help him- to reach through time and space and undo the clamps that bound him and burn everything else around them to the ground- but all that came from her mouth was malice and hate, and the voice of the man who lived inside of her head and soul.

"Comfortable, you filthy beast?" Cruelty spoke to Tenebris with the casual nonchalance of someone talking to their favored dog, before chuckling as the monster gave no answer. It was not like he could anyway; there was a belt going under his jaw to keep it from being able to open, though he was at least able to open his mouth a crack to breathe.

His gaze however told all that she needed to know; under the underlying hatred was exhaustion. He could barely stay sharp enough to remind Cruelty just how much he loathed him at this moment. His look, however, still spoke measures to the man who’s body she was hitching an unwilling ride upon.

"Oh don't give me that look." Cruelty chuckled, "We've only just now gotten to preparing the best part of your visit... Do you not remember what we intended?" He leaned in, peering horribly, horribly close to Tenebris' face. Toki could see the minute flexes of her Papa’s pupils. "Make you regret being born... We're going to break you, beast, and I'm going to enjoy watching the spirit fade from your eyes." Cruelty's voice hissed out pleasantly.

Tenebris gave no reply.

Cruelty chuckled before he turned to glance back at one of the doors. "Bring it in." He ordered aloud, making Toki’s soul flutter with something burgeoning on panic.

Toki watched in horror as they brought in a large machine. She might not know machines, but Kohaku did- and she’d Googled a few to know what he was talking about.

Cruelty had brought in a hydraulic press.
"Do you know what this is, beast?" Cruelty chuckled lowly, watching a wave of horror fill Tenebris’ eyes. "Oh you do, don’t you. Did you think I was kidding?"

Toki felt new wave of horror wash over her as one of amusement ran over Cruelty's mind, and a chuckle came from him. "Let me repeat myself. We're going to break you."

As the device was brought closer, Tenebris was shadowed, and Toki watched with dismay as her papa, her brave, often unbreakable Papa, began to tremble in terror at the sight of the device. His fists clenched tightly and he began to strain against his binds, his efforts bearing no fruit as they held too well.

"Which limb do you enjoy the least?" Cruelty looked back at Tenebris, chuckling at the terrified look on his face.

No, no, no, no! She didn’t want to see this! Please!

“How about we start with your hand? I like your hands. They’re lovely and sculpted- pity about the holes through them though. Such strange, strange holes. I don’t remember hearing reports of them back before you were all sealed away under the mountain.”

Tenebris didn’t seem to hear Cruelty’s taunt, his eyes locked onto the press that was moved above his hand. It was slowly lowered down, and Tenebris unclenched his hand, trying to flatten it out and keep his hand from being crushed for as long as possible.

It was inevitable though. The press came down on his hand, and Cruelty leaned down to watch as Tenebris knuckles slowly gave in and crumpled under the pressure from the press. One by one with sickening pops, his fingers were broken and ruined.

Tenebris whimpered.

“Oh come now, that’s all you can give me? A pathetic whimper? Surely a beast like you can give me more than just that. Was your hand not enough? I can do more, I assure you. How about... We move to your shoulder? That’s a nice, easy spot to access.”

As the press was lifted, Cruelty patted his crushed and bleeding hand, where the tough white skin had split in a few locations, and reveled in the pained sounds that pulled past Tenebris’ gritted teeth.

Toki felt her soul speed up. She couldn’t watch that again- she couldn’t, she couldn’t, she couldn’t. She couldn’t watch her Papa being tortured before her very eyes- she couldn’t bear witness to that which he had told no one about. He hadn’t even told Asgore about what happened to him.

The press was rolled upwards, and Toki fought every step of the way, her panic growing tighter and tighter and harder in her chest.

Cruelty leaned down to watch as the press was lowered, so she got to bear witness as it took his shoulder, and one corner of his shield, into it’s grasp. The press began to bear down- and for one, hopeful moment, Toki hoped that the shield over his chest would hold. She hoped that the tough, skeletal like structure over his skin would keep the press from going down.

It didn’t.

The corner of his shield cracked and bent away with a horrible noise, and the press lurched downwards, bone and meat crushing under it’s pressure.

Cruelty laughed.
Tenebris screamed.

And Toki had to bear witness to more and more- the press was brought down over and over again, on his chest and on his arms, his legs, his tail- he broke his toes, he broke his femurs- he broke everything that could be broken, and made sure that it was broken good.

Every time a bone broke, Tenebris screamed.

He screamed, and screamed, until the press lifted, and he could take shuddering, gasping breaths that broke her soul, twisted her stomach, and made her panic worse- she couldn’t make it stop!

“We’ve got one more thing left to break,” Cruelty purred,” And then I’ve got someone coming in with scalpels and some monster food to heal you up. We can’t have you dying on us yet, beast.”

The press was exchanged out for a larger one- and it was settled firmly over his shield. The full shield spanned the full length of his chest and ribs, and it moved up and down with the panicked fluttering breaths clawing from his mouth.

The press lowered slowly, so slowly, down to his chest- where it clamped over his shield. The hydraulics groaned above them, but began to bear down- and the shield began to crack.

The scream that he let out was nothing unlike anything she had ever heard- and she echoed it as she lurch ed forcibly in her mind.

Her body forcibly woke itself as her back hit the floor with a noisy thump, sending pain up her back as the joints of her wings too the brunt of her landing. It wasn’t a hard fall, but she wasn’t made of just bone anymore, and the joints were sensitive to the touch. Being crushed under her back and between the floor was not a pleasant sensation- particularly not since she had been slowly putting back weight on while staying with Tenne and his sons.

Toki flailed incoherently, mind lost in the haze of panic and revulsion from her dream. The pain was a shock, and not a shock that helped. She managed to roll over, her four arms clawing at the carpet as she shook, her mind reeling at what she’d seen, at what she’d experienced doing through the hands of Cruelty.

Watching what he’d done to Tenebris… What she had done to Tenebris through his hands… It made her stomach sick, and made her soul hurt, and she felt a fresh wave of anger for the being that was now half of her soul. Cruelty was dead and they weren’t even in her world anymore- he could never hurt Tenebris again. But Toki could never escape Cruelty- he was apart of her now, a permanent fixture on her being, because she had been stupid and thought this was the kinder option than sealing him away for all eternity inside of a what amounted to her to be a glass preserving jar.

The memories rolled over her again, and her wings hinged up, thumping hard onto the roof of the second floor above her. She scrabbled for a minute, trying to calm the magic pulsing in rapid waves over her bones, and barely managed to keep her body from throwing up as she retched at the memories. She’d heated the room up, she notice, to an almost unbearably hot degree to anyone who wasn’t immune to fire. Toki panted, steam and smoke curling from her mouth, and tried not to hurl on the floor.

A shaky sob left her without her permission, and she curled her smaller hands around her horns and cradled her head.
She couldn’t get Tenebris’ cries out of her head- his sobs and his screams and his howls of agony, they echoed inside of her thoughts and inside of her brain like someone had left them on a feedback loop. It was a sound she never, ever wanted to hear from her Papa- it wasn’t a sound she had ever, ever wanted to hear period.

She could hear his screams echoing- even over Cruelty’s attempts to talk to her. Probably to taunt her- she couldn’t… She couldn’t listen to him right now.

There was a creak on the stairs, and her panic fresh mind reacted with the instinctive defensiveness of a wounded animal. Her fur bristled, and her mouth opened in a snarl, the light of a blast not unlike that which Clover could use building in the back of her throat, bringing with it a horrible screeching buzz that echoed in a sort of hellish, ghastly sound. Narrowly slit pupils locked on the massive white form standing on the stairs and her wings raised as high as they could above her, trying to make herself appear bigger to ward him away from her frightened self.

Tenne was rubbing one of his eyes, obviously having been woken by the ruckus she’d been making downstairs. He looked down at her with concern as he fanned a hand through the air. It was hot- he liked the heat, but this was a little much even for him. “Toki?” He rumbled sleepily. “Are you alright?” Concern colored his tone, though he warily watched the bright green laser light that budded in the back of her throat. He raised his hands gently, as if to pacify her. “Easy, Toki. Easy. It’s alright- It’s just me. It’s Tenne- It’s Tenebris.”

The sight of his form and voice and the use of his ‘pack-name’ as he called it, happened to be too much too soon for Toki. She hadn’t had enough time to properly calm down and to force the memories back, to get her mask back in place.

He might not be the exact same as Tenebris- Tenebris was broader, stockier, and had a certain age about him that made him entirely different from Tenne the more that she was spending time with the younger version of him- but the visage was too much.

Her mouth clamped shut, the horrid noise and light dissipating in a puff of smoke that curled towards the ceiling. She turned instead and bolted, body switching from fight to flight in an instant. She turned, and the door was only an obstacle as her thin form crashed into it.

It was knocked open in the direction that the hinges definitely were not supposed to bend, and her face hurt though she couldn’t recognize why. It was dark, the ‘night’ in the underground, and Toki bolted, her legs and arms pulling her from the house as fast as she could on all fours.

Her wings spread once she was out in the snow, and she took off, her instincts driving her to the one place she knew she could calm down- where she knew she could be ‘safe’.

The shabby little den she’d made back when she’d first made it to Snowdin.

Toki didn’t recall any of the flight there, only that she’d flown like the devil himself was on her heels- and then she’d landed, and had crawled her way back inside of the den. It was still in the same shape it had been, albeit a little bit more snow covered, but she’d managed to wiggle inside.

There were no longer any blankets to help pad it from the cold- Tenne had come to get them for her at some point- but it didn’t matter.

She didn’t feel the cold or the ice that threatened to nip at her body. The heat that she was putting off was leached up by the night air, and the den did little to keep much of it. Toki was shivering for an entirely different reason- and she was trying very, very hard not to throw up as she sobbed. She curled up into a tight ball and simply wept- she didn’t know any other way to make it stop but to let it run it’s course.

The time she was alone was unknown. Whether it was minutes or hours, she had no idea. But she had been left alone for a time, before there was a soft ‘plap plap’ of small shoes on the snow that formed the entrance. "Nyeh?" Could be heard just out of sight from outside.

By the time that the soft ‘Nyeh’ was heard, Toki was no longer sobbing as hard. Her eyes still leaked the sticky, slightly luminescent green fluid that was her tears, but she was no longer loudly sobbing and scaring off all the lesser monsters for miles. She was curled up on her side in the snow, her body chilled but lacking the enthusiasm to do anything about it.

She sat up a little bit at the soft sound, however. Her eyes were blurry with tears and exhaustion. “Q-Quinn?” She croaked shakily. Maternal instincts kicked in, and concern for the child outweighed her fear and her panic- and her instincts drove her to draw the child inside of her den where she could keep him safe from anything outside. Her cold limbs creaked as she sat up. Toki didn’t leave her den- but she knew her voice would reach him all the same. “What a-are you doing out o-of bed?’”

"Nyeh!” He announced proudly.

Tenne appeared close by, kneeling down beside his son with a smile so he could peer into the den to look at her. "He refused to stay in his sachet when he realized we were looking for you." He explained with a light chuckle.

She exhaled shakily when Tenne appeared in her line of sight, and hunched up slightly. She’d had enough time to calm down, however- he didn’t bring up too many memories of what she’d seen. Toki was able to stuff them back and away like she did with everything else, even if more tears fell.

They landed on the ice below her, and froze to the surface.

“I didn’t mean t-to wake you all up.” She murmured, arms crossing together as she shivered and glanced away from him and the child. Her sides still trembled with shaky breaths, the remnants and painful and obvious proof of her sobs remaining for all to see. “I… I would have come back. Y-you didn’t… have to come looking f-for me.” Toki sniffles quietly. “I just needed… A moment to calm down.” She whispers softly.

"We needed to clear house anyways... I had to vent the front room.” He explained, while Quinn crawled into the small igloo.

He snuggled up to her quickly and reached up, gripping her neck fur tightly in his little hands. "N-Nyeh... Moaahh..." He mumbled into her fur.

“You’re a good boy, Quinn.” Toki sniffled quietly, and tucked Quinn tightly to her. Her arms looped around him, shielding him from the cold as best she could against her chest as her fur fluffed up instinctively to help keep him insulated and warm. She nuzzled her chin atop his skull, and glanced up to Tenne quietly. Toki had no idea what Quinn had tried to murmur against her neck.

“I’m… Sorry about the front room.” She cleared her throat quietly, and swiped at her eyes. They still watered mutinously- but she hadn’t… She hadn’t cried in a long while. With everything pent up, she was overdue. Green eyes glimmered at him damply from inside the refraction lit din of her den. “I… told you that I… saw you, before I came here, yeah? Well… I… see other places too.” Which was true. She still had dreams of other worlds. Not hers, sadly. Not the one she wanted to see. “And… not all of these… other places are nice.” She whispers. Her world was a good and honest place- but there were people in it who were not so good. “I was seeing into one of these not so good places. It… It made me panic. I’m sorry I overheated the house.”
He knew she was distressed over what she saw... but with little knowledge of what this nightmare was, he could only offer his emotional support.

"Not at all, it's quite alright, my dear..." Tenne assured her as he reached in, offering her a hand, "But if we want to save some of that heat, we must return home soon and close the windows and doors. I didn't bust my tail to ensure good insulation for nothing." He laughed gently.

Toki watched his hand for a moment before sniffling quietly. Her smaller set of arms tightly clutched Quinn to her chest, taking comfort in having the small child clinging to her mane, and she used her larger set of arms to rotate her body. She took his hand with one of her larger ones, and eased her way out of the den.

Her hand was cold against his- she hadn’t been working on her own insulation, so she was a bit chilly to the touch. “I can just heat your house again.” She reminds quietly, as she lets him ease her out of the den. Toki sniffs quietly again, and carefully gets to her feet. She’s cold and shivering and her magic is radiating warmth, but none of it seems to be reaching her.

She doesn’t offer up an elaboration on what the dream was though. Not with a child curled in her arms.

And he didn't ask her to. Rather, he pulled her into a gentle embrace as soon as she was cleared of the igloo. Quinn of course squealed in complaint at being between them, but it only took a small wiggle to adjust and grow quiet once more as Tenne held Toki. "You've already been through enough tonight. I wasn't going to ask you to." He rumbled quietly.

Being held was… Was nice. It felt good to be surrounded by a frame larger than her. Toki closed her eyes, and just inhaled quietly. Tenne smelled similar to Tenebris, but… only in a base sort of way that she could recall. It was still a comfort to be able to look at unblemished pale skin- or what she could see of it- and put the memories from Cruelty behind her.

She relaxed slowly, with each slow breath that reminded her that she was not witnessing Cruelty torture him- or Tenebris- and that Cruelty could never hurt anyone ever again. Quinn in her arms was a major help- but just being surrounded and feeling safe… It did wonders.

He had a good embrace, she decided. Very securing.

“I don’t mind.” She murmurs. “Heating the house doesn’t take all that long or all that much energy to do, honestly.” She mutters into his chest.

Tenne smiled sweetly to Toki, and rested his head on hers. "I know, but still... I'm not going to ask anything of you like that... not right now. All I ask is that you come with me, come back to your home. I'll get you wrapped up... Get you something to eat..." he spoke into her fur.

“…” She knew it was useless to argue. She didn’t have it in her to argue tonight anyways. She was too rattled, too unsettled- Toki didn’t even point out that it wasn’t her home. It was his. “Okay…” She murmurs quietly against him. “Okay. Lets… Lets get back to the house before all the heat escapes then.”

He smiled at her, and gently led her back to his home. Quinn, all the while, stayed clinging in her fur, mumbling to himself with the occasional 'nyeh' that arose from him.

Once they arrived, he sat her down on the couch and went around to close up, before going to the kitchen to start on something for her to eat.

Toki winced as he had to force the door back into its proper path for opening and closing. She’d apparently forced it open the wrong way- she just hoped she hadn’t ruined it. It didn’t appear so, but all the same.

She sighed, and kept Quinn tucked to her chest like a small bony security blanket. She relaxed into the couch, enjoying the faint warmth that it exuded still, and found herself too awake to doze. She was always awake to doze after bad dreams- and she… she really wanted to think of the memory from Cruelty as a horrible, horrible bad dream. She shook her head, and petted Quinn. “Are you comfortable, little one?” She murmured softly, listening to the sounds of Tenne in the kitchen area.

"Moaaaah.” He replied quietly, nuzzling her tiredly before looking up at her, blinking slowly before closing his eyes and nuzzling her again.

She smiled softly, and stroked her smaller hands gently over his skull. “You must be very tired,” She coos softly. “Such a strong boy though- so strong and so very good. Thank you for coming to get me, little one.” She brushes her teeth gently to the top of his skull. “Why don’t you get some sleep, Quinn? I won’t go anywhere, I promise. You can practice your words tomorrow when you’re not as sleepy.” Nyeh and Daddy seemed to be his only words- and whatever Moaaaah turned out to be.

"Moaaam..." he mumbled, before he yawned widely and settled in her fur, holding fistfuls to keep her to her promise.

It had been a long time since she’d had to discern toddler babbling of this sort. Her children had sort of hoarded their knowledge until they were ready to try- and then jumbled words together to form frankinwords. Toki still had no idea what he said- but whatever it was, it was surely endearing. So she simply crooned, and nuzzled her teeth to his skull again, letting him nestle down against her chest and cling to the fistfuls of fur he’d grabbed hold of.

When he was out, she sighed and closed her eyes, settling down to wait for Tenne to reappear while she kept an eye on Quinn.

Tenne returned to the living room not long after Quinn fell asleep. "Toki, I forgot to ask... how do you like your steak?" He asked gently.

She glanced up at him from the couch, eyes tired and covered in the dried remnants of the nights trauma. “Ah…” Her first response was lightly pink. However something deeper inside of her made her stomach twist at the idea of such ‘burnt’ meat. Her pupils narrowed in thought, and she chuffed softly through her teeth. “Blue is fine.” The last thing she wanted was blood- but she needed… well, something iron and soft, according to her riled instincts. “Or… Or whatever really.” She flushes and looks away. “I’m not picky.”

"You sound unsure." He mentioned gently, before he nodded, "Very well." he returned to the kitchen, and after a few more minutes, came out with two plates and a tea tray. "Here we are."

Toki sat up carefully with Quinn sprawled out on her chest. She supported him with her smaller arms, and slid to the edge of the couch, offering him a faint smile, motioning for him to sit. “I’m… Not a picky eater,” She says softly. “So I usually just eat whatever.” She was eating more and more now- not what she should be, but better than she was. It took time to build ones self back up to where they were before. “I’m used to taking cooking orders, not giving them.” She chuckles quietly.

Either way, she reached up and took the tea tray from him, settling it on the table so he could actually shuffle the plates on his hands and take a seat with her. She spotted Kai on his back as he moved around, and smiled faintly. “Didn’t even wake up, did he…?”

"Stirred long enough to fuss about being put in the sachet, but oddly enough when he's on my back he doesn't really get bothered by anything."

"It might be that instinctive response to being close to you." Her children, unless they had wanted down very, very badly, usually were hard to disturb when they had fallen asleep against her.
Particularly her son. He slept like a log, her little Skylar did. Had. He had. Her fur ruffled faintly at the mental reminder, and she nuzzled Quinn slightly as her chest panged silently with longing.
"Quinn likes to sleep on my chest. I think he really likes my fur though. He can sleep anywhere so long as he has a hold of my fur."

"How sweet." Tenebris gave her a smile, but chuckled shortly after. "Perhaps that means he takes you as a parental figure, or perhaps it's because when he was young, I still had my mane so it brings him a sense of comfort... though yours is definitely fuller than mine was." He rumbled happily, setting the two plates of meat down on the coffee table. One of them was barely seared as she had asked, but the other looked more cooked, medium, if not medium well.

Her stomach twisted some at the thought- torn between delight at the idea and something that was more torn over the thought of 'replacing' her children. She shunted the thought off so she didn't stress herself more, because they weren't her children and would not be replacing the hole in her heart where her babies should be, and simply gave him a smile. "Maybe indeed. I think it might be the mane thing. The first thing he did upon meeting me was stuff his little hands right into my fur, so its probably the fluffiness."

She noticed that her steak was very much more raw than his. Strangely enough, while her mind was more attracted to the thought of the medium well steak, her body was very eager for the blue one.
She hummed a soft noise, and reached out for her plate. Oh well. You only lived once. "Thank you for cooking, Tenne." She murmurs softly.

"He'd do that... It's absolutely adorable.” He chuckled lightly, before nodding gently as she took her plate. "It was my pleasure." He rumbled as he collected the other plate of meat, having cooked it that much just to make sure she was sure of herself. Not that he minded eating the more medium one- it was just as good as blue. "Enjoy, then. I've also made some tea for when you're thirsty."

“Thank you.” She said again. “Quinn is adorable. Kai too- Quinn is a bit more clingy to me, however. I think he misses your mane.” She collected her utensils, and then quietly set into her steak.
It was warm all the way through, thankfully, and though her mind was thoroughly disgusted, her body seemed pleased. It occurred then to Toki that some subspecies of bees, like wasps and hornets, were very, very carnivorous. She looked fairly similar to her Hell Hornets- so it was not out of the realm of belief to think that she was, perhaps, very much a carnivore, despite the fact that she still enjoyed her leafy greens.

A soft, pleasant buzzing filled the front room, originating from Toki. Other than the sound that meant she was quite pleased with her meal, despite her mental revulsion, she ate quietly, until she was full, and then offered out the rest to Tenne since Quinn was sound asleep in her fur.

He took the leftovers and set them aside, not quite done with his own yet as he ate slowly in her company. But the sound of her buzzing had him feeling happier, and accomplished, so he settled down and ate at a more regular pace.

It wasn’t so much that Toki ate quickly- it was the fact that she didn’t eat much. It took more time to build an appetite back up than it did to shrink one’s stomach in size. She watched him quietly for a time, and then rubbed her fingers gently along Quinn’s skull, before smiling to herself. “You know… There’s one question that’s been bothering me for a little while.” She murmurs. “If we’re all trapped underground with no way to the surface… What is the meat made of…?”
He hesitated, and then he swallowed his mouthful before he chuckled. "There's a common species of deer in the snowy forest. They are not the brightest, but are plentiful due to what must have been centuries unbothered before." He explained, "They're fun to hunt, easy to kill, and their meat is very good quality."

“That would make sense.” She nods lightly, glancing over at his plate with a thoughtful hum. “Subterranean cave deer. Huh. Well, better than grilled up cave snails or something. Pretty sure Grillby sells a snailburger. But the venison is definitely good.” She nestles back into her neck fluff, and hums quietly, passing her tongue over her teeth to carefully clean them. She takes a moment to flex them out, pressing them apart so she can run her tongue between each of the flexible teeth and make sure nothing is caught. She might have teeth like a crocodile, but that didn't mean she wanted to keep bits of flesh between her teeth like one too.

Of course, it didn't keep him from staring, not making a face or anything in the process, but just watched curiously. "Your teeth are very fascinating." He mentioned.

Her old reaction would have been to flush brightly, clamp them tightly back into place, and sputter an apology for just doing that out in the open. However, in light of the fact she was exhausted, she simply flushed a bright green in embarrassment anyways and crooked one of them at him and wiggled it cheekily. “They’re pretty weird.” She agrees. “But they work. It certainly makes drinking fun, though.”

He laughed at the sight. "Makes me wonder if I should invest in some straws for you, my dear.” He teased lightheartedly.

She laughs quietly at that, letting her teeth fall back into their usual place. “Straws wouldn’t go amiss. You’ll go through a lot though. My teeth aren’t just for show.” She chomps them lightly- and they do, indeed, still spark. “Very sharp. I'll bite through a lot of them by accident.” To prove that she didn’t need straws, she leaned down for her cup of tea and lifted it, bringing it to her mouth. She’d been drinking this long without straws- she was honestly well practiced. It was very easy for her to take a drink, though she did it slow so as not to spill on Quinn.

He chuckled quietly, and leaned back in his seat, sighing gently. "I see. You're well off without them. It was a silly idea anyhow.” He rumbled, finishing the last bite of his steak.

“Most of the time I manage. After all, I’ve had these teeth for a long time.” She winks playfully. “Sometimes though, I do end up with spills. Straws are nice with certain cups.” Most of the mugs for tea were fine. Some glasses though, she dealt with constant spills. As he finished, she hummed and tucked her feet up. Her wings twitched lightly where they were pinned, and she grimaced a little bit, adjusting herself. They still hurt from where they’d been slammed into the floor.

"It's still rather early, so if you need to get some rest I can loan you my room for the rest of the night." Tenne offered to her quietly.

"Thank you for the offer, but I don't sleep well alone after...after what I’ve seen." Toki murmurs softly. She didn't have Papyrus to chase away her fears, to make the nightmarish memories and dreams go away. He wasn't... He wasn't there when she needed him to be. Or rather, she wasn't there when she needed to be with him. She couldn't be, because the Void had pretty much told her no.

Toki swallowed, and closed her eyes with a sigh. She then glanced up to Tenne. "It's... Probably confusing to you- my... my dreams. But... I saw you. Another... Another version of you, from another world." Her fur ruffles slightly. She was being truthful within a lie. She was so tired of lying. "I... Watched you- him, perhaps- get... Captured and held by a terrible, horrible human. This... This human and his associates did terrible things to him. I can't un-see and un-hear his screams as his shield," she motions to her chest, to show him that she knew about the bone plate that she had never seen on Tenne, "and limbs were broken. That’s why I panicked. It... Was very distressing."

He reached up when she mentioned his shield, free hand brushing his chest briefly in surprise as she mentioned something she should have no way of knowing about, and he hesitated to speak, before he sighed, and smiled gently. It was another one of her mysteries, he supposed.

He then moved Kai off his chest, tucking him in the cradle of one arm, before he looked to Toki and lifted his arm, offering his side to her. "Then we will rest together."

"So you will know every moment that I’m right here, that no one has me, no one will hurt me here. Especially some human."

'Heh heh heh, we’ll see about that, beast.'

'If I have to spend every moment of the rest of our lives acting as your prison, I will make sure that you never, ever hurt another living being.' The queen bee monster responded to her soul companion tiredly.

Toki hesitated as he lifted his arm, and her fur ruffled and settled a few times as she debated accepting his offer. Eventually she exhaled softly, and then scooted over to his side and carefully settled against him, her wings awkwardly flexing and moving as she cuddled up. She tried to angle her head as best she could so her horns didn't stab at him or tear holes in his clothes. "One on one, I know you could take a human. But humans... They come in numbers." They way she spoke, she spoke like she knew from experience. Toki gave a tired mumble. "They came in numbers when they took him..."

He smiled as she joined him, and he gave her a soft squeeze before he sighed at her words, "Indeed so, my dear... it would be an ugly fight..." he agreed, before he rested his head on hers, "If he is me. Then I know... He would be broken... but he would not stay shattered for long. We are a Blaster beast.... we must be strong, for our family... for our friends..." his grip then tightened a little, "for our kin."

She settled a little as his arm draped over her shoulders. Her wings flexed a little bit, and she exhaled with a soft, sleepy sigh. Toki gave him a lopsided and faint smile. "He was broken," she murmured, "for a long while... But his pack and his family were there for him. I have... I have seen a lot of his world." Her voice thickened a little bit as longing washed over her. She had seen a lot of his world indeed. She came from it and wanted to go home... Toki sighed, and turned her face into his chest. She still had tear tracks on her face. She did not need more fresh ones. "You are strong. You are always strong..."

He smiled and gently brought his hand up to wipe her eyes, "And so are you, but you must find your strength within." He told her.

She glanced up at him as he wiped her eyes. She blinked slowly and sighed gently. "I use more of it than you know." She responds honestly, her arms tightening on Quinn as the boy cuddled to her chest. She used a lot of inner strength... If Toki didn't, she would shatter and break over her losses, and Cruelty would be free to have rein over her body.

"All the more reason to encourage you to stay strong..." He purred warmly, "You're a wonderful woman, Toki... and I already love knowing you... you've great potential here, you know...

"Just because I've got my... Damages... Doesn’t mean that people don't deserve as much kindness as I can give them." She murmurs softly. "Sometimes it's the only thing that can distract me from... Well... Everything." Toki sighs, and then flicks her wings. "I love knowing you too. You and Kai and Quinn..." They helped. They really helped in many, many ways. "You help make it hurt just a little less sometimes." She hums. "Potential...? I... I don’t know what potential a beekeeper turned barmaid has, honestly."

He smiled and kissed her head, "More than you give yourself credit for. You are very intelligent, you know things, and this gift you have..." He purred softly, "Imagine if we harnessed it to develop our home further. Perhaps make it that much better to live here."

She hummed softly at the kiss to her head. Her fur ruffled, shifting and baring the deep scar that wasn't always visible thanks to how her mane rested. "My... gift," she tested the word, obviously not seeing it for one with the nightmares she tended to get, "is not something I can control. I only know things that I've seen. And I've seen a lot of things... We could make life better down here." She agrees quietly. "Or... Or we could get to the surface. I don't... Know how to break the barrier. But I know it can be done. The other you... He was on the surface."

"We have been theorizing..." He admits softly, "but we are not sure yet what it would take to destroy the barrier..."

"What sort of theories do you have right now?" She asks curiously.

'Cruelty? Do you know what it takes to destroy the Barrier?'

' Wouldn't you like to know. Of course I know what it would take!'

'And you're not going to tell me, are you...?'

'Give me a good fucking reason, Kindness.'

'Because he looked at our soul, and didn't immediately ask why we have both the colors for kindness and cruelty. I don't think they have a spectrum like our world did, Cruelty. You could choose for once in your life- or lack there of- to do the right thing.'

'This is the old beast's counterpart? He's an idiot!' Cruelty sneered, before he huffed, 'why would I help them... as soon as they find out they're going to kill humans and take their souls.'

'So it does require human souls. Thank you, Cruelty.' She murmured softly, her brow furrowing at the fact the humans would have to die.

"Not many... Monster magic itself is not strong enough... But we have started the possibility that it would take the power of a human soul..." Tenne explained.

Toki frowns at that, and feels her soul speed up in her chest. "I see... And... Have you had any way to test your theories yet?" She wondered if he knew her soul was human.

"No... Not yet... The only human down here is His Majesty's child... and I could never ask such a thing of them." Tenne replied with a grim sigh.

She shakes her head vehemently with a sharp buzz. "No harming or experimenting on children." She says firmly. "Human children are still children. Just... No." She sighs. Toki grinds her teeth nervously for a time. "What sort of... Things would you need to do with the soul? Would it harm the host?" She asks quietly. Hers was... Damaged. There were the cracked scars lining Cruelty's side, and the wide one from losing her family on the other. There was no telling if the soul dwelling on her body would hold up to testing or not.

"We believe perhaps there is an attribute within the human soul that allows them some... extra asset of power, not magic like we possess but... something..."

Her brows knit tighter, and she can feel a building headache in her head. She lifts one of her hands and rubs the bridge where her nose would be. "Mmm..." She groans softly. "Its called Determination. And... It's something human souls have." Hers had it in spades, given the fact she was still in control of the save and load buttons, though obviously for this world. The reset button was not broken. Toki had only used the save button so far. "It makes them resilient." She responds softly with a quiet sigh against Quinn's skull.

"I see..." Tenne leaned his head back, thinking about it as he tightened his grip on her once more, "How did you know this?" He asked.

Wordlessly, Toki lifts a hand and taps her head. Then she explains. "I've heard it used before in one of my... What are we going to call them? Dreams? Seeings? Either way, I've heard it used there. It was utterly useless information to me until you needed it."

"Visions, perhaps will do" he rumbled, before he smiled and reached up to gently comb her mane between his fingers, "Indeed, it's useful to me... but i have no reason to act upon what I've learned unless I know that you are sound in body and mind..." he rumbled, "Sleep, Toki..."

"Visions works." Her eyes start to droop as soon as his fingers settle into her mane. That... That was a feeling she hadn’t had in a long time. It was different with Quinn playing with her mane- but someone combing their fingers through her hair... She hadn’t had a sensation like that since Papyrus had braided her hair before it had all fallen out. Gods, she had missed this feeling. It was one of the most relaxing feelings in the world. Her head tingled pleasantly, and she slowly slumped against him. "S'not fair. You have sssssleepy fingers..." Her voice slurs into his shirt. "Playing dirty, Tenne."

He chuckled gently and began to purr as to further dull her senses from the ache of reality, "Sleep." He told her again.

The purring was probably overkill. Toki fell asleep curled next to Tenne, with Quinn in her arms and Kai in his father's grasp. She hardly made a sound- and for once, she didn't dream.
Chapter 96

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Bath time for the blaster beasts. A whole new set of instincts helps move things along- also clothes are a thing. And we learn a new quirk about Toki's venom. 8) Don't let it touch things that aren't fire elementals. Just. Don't. It could be very bad.

Silverwing Notes: So, I think so far Toki's doing well, don'tcha think? Welp, time for more shenanigans!
Enjoy the chapter!

Additional note, dear readers. I am currently in the process of a rather large move from a house to a home of lesser proportion the next city over. I have a lot to pack, and not enough days to pack it, not to mention what I have to do for the sake of my cats.

Since this started, I have not touched my laptop. My only media access is Netflix and all else on my tablet. This has limited how much writing has been completed since it started, and I can only hope I adjust quickly to my new residence, and be able to quickly pick back up where we left off.

Also I am very excited! I am turning 20 in less than 24 hours Eeeeee Right, update over. Enjoy the chapter!

It was time for a bath, Toki decided. The boys had picked up a bunch of grits and grime from every day running around with her between her job at the bar and taking care of Tenne's house. While being made of bone meant they did not technically get an odor about them, it didn't mean they did not pick up odors from their surroundings, and both boys definitely stunk.

And so did Tenne, Toki noticed. Whatever they were working on at the lab, he had obviously gotten some on him somewhere. Whatever compound it was, it stunk to high hell. He was used to its stench- or his tongue was scent blind from it now, she couldn't honestly tell- but either way, Toki had scentless soap and she had full intentions of scrubbing everyone and everything down.

She had every intention of scrubbing them down- but definitely not in Snowdin. They had very little running water, and the bath tub that they had was, quite frankly, not built to house someone with wings. Not even with wings her size, but wings period. She couldn't even angle them to try and wash them. So the river was her best bet, and the river in Snowdin was too cold for her to even attempt to try.

One morning, after breakfast, Toki smiled at Tenne and the boys and tossed four towels over her arm, and clutched in her hands her comb Tenne had given her, and the scentless soap and conditioner that she had gotten from the general store once she had paid for the damages to Grillby's door frame. "Bath time," she announces to the three of them, planting two of her hands on her hips. "And laundry day too. Bring any clothes you want washed, and I'll get them cleaned after we wash up."

Tenne blinked once as he looked up at her from where he was having a cup of tea, while Kai grumbled about not wanting a bath.

Quinn on the other hand gave a coo and giggled happily to her. "Nyeh!" Such the optimist, he was.

Toki cocked her hip and twitched one of her wings. She ruffled her mane at Kai. "Don't even give me lip, mister. Go get your clothes, Kai. Grab your brothers as well, please." She lifts a hand and points it towards the stairs. She then glanced at Tenne. "You're not excused either, Tenne. I don't know what you're doing in the lab, but you smell... awful. Clothes, and we're off for a bath. Right Quinn?"

"NYEH!" The youngest chirped happily.

Kai groaned, and huffed, before going up the stairs.

Tenne chuckled, and only stuck around long enough to finish his tea. Once it was done, he stood, and began to go collect his laundry. "Alright, alright. I admit that last experiment did leave a bit of a stench on my tongue," he admitted, "I was considering a bath regardless."

Toki chuckled slightly and watched Tenne go up to fetch his clothes. "Considering is not the same as actually doing. This way you actually get a warm bath, and actually get clean. I can't even get fully clean in that tub you have." Her wings flick. And she leans down to pat Quinn's head. "C'mon, kiddo. Think you'll help me get all the clothes scrubbed up while your sleepy brother no doubt naps on your Daddy?" She inquires playfully to the youngest skeleton.

"Nyeh!" He reached up and grabbed hold of her hand, nuzzling it before giving a playful, "Nyeh heh heh!"

His laugh still hurt her heart a little bit, but she drove it away as she bent down to pick him up. She propped him on her hip, glad the change hadn't gotten rid of her 'childbearing' hips, as her mother had called them. They made a good seat for the stinky skeleton kid she had successfully nabbed. "Of course you will," She smiles. "You're a good boy, Quinn." She presses her teeth to his forehead, and then moves to the living room. She still only owned her one pair of clothes- but that was fine. It was less she had to wash. She washed religiously anyways, because of all the grease she got on her regularly. The boys? Not as regularly. That was going to change though. "Now we just need to wait for your Daddy and your big brother to come downstairs. Who do you think will be faster?" She coos softly.

"Dadda!" he squealed, looking at the staircase as Tenne started down, carrying a small laundry bag. Kai was right behind him, empty-handed "Don't think I plan on making you do all this laundry by yourself, Toki." Tenne spoke with determination in his tone.

"Looks like you were right, Quinn." She smiled lightly. She glanced to Kai, and arched a brow.

The boy rolled his eyes and shrugged, before he pointed at the bag Tenne had. "Dad has it."

"Indeed." She sighs. She flicks her gaze to Tenne and smiles lightly. "I don't mind doing laundry. I have four arms, so scrubbing is easy. I've even gotten good at not tearing holes in the fabric." She had a couple holes in the bottoms of the legs of her pants that she was not going to talk about.

"Anyways, let's be off." She nuzzles Quinn again, and then gently adjusts him on her hip. "It's a bit of a jaunt over to where I like to bathe, so we're going to fly."

Kai stares at her, blue eye lights doubtful. "You can't carry us all... Can you?"
"Nope. But I've got a friend who can." She chirps cheerfully. Toki winks at Tenne, and then bounces to the door. Bath time was one of her favorite times. She could relax and soak and get the stresses of the week out of her muscles.

That statement had Tenne curious and he tilted his head, "A friend?" He had forgotten a few of the details from when they saw the king, so at the moment he had no idea of what was coming.

"A friend!" She chirps again, and then she's out the door and into the snow. She goes a little ways out into the snow and ice, where she can have plenty of space to call her out, and then lifts her free hand to the sky once the Gaster family had followed her out to the deck.

A twist of her magic, and the air in front of her ripples, before tearing open. Burning green hellfire bursts forth, spilling smoke and brimstone into the air with a ghastly noise and scent. Toki perks up, her wings flicking, and waits.

Her wings tense, however, when the wrong hornet answers her call. "Sugar, no!"

The massive bee bursts forth and slams into her like an overly zealous puppy. The towels and the soap are barely held as Toki is flattened in the snow, the wingless hornet pinning her down with aggressive licks to her face and what amounted to a full body cuddle. Toki noticed immediately that Sugar didn’t have her armor on- or it likely would have actually hurt. She wondered where it was- and with a quick thought from the hornet, was swiftly informed that it was safely stored in their world, but that it got uncomfortable after a while.

Toki could understand that.

The kisses, however, she could not.

"Sugar!" Toki nearly shrieked a laugh. "Get off! No kisses! Ack!"

Quinn, also pinned under the hornet, gave a loud squeal as well as he found more fluff to hold onto. "NYEH! NYEH!"

Tenne had tensed up in surprise while Kai gawked. "Whoa, giant bee!" He laughed.

A giant bee that was missing two very key factors in what made it a bee, and not some sort of stinging ant. There were two scarred holes on the back where the others could see, where the creature had lost her wings.

The sudden noise made Sugar startle, and she bounced off of Toki with her new leech firmly attached. She buzzed in befuddlement and tried to see past her mane to the lump clinging to her.

Toki laughed and got to her feet. "That is Sugar. She's not the one that I was calling." She turns to the hole again, and plants her hands on her hips, now that Quinn is latched onto her smaller summons. Sugar still dwarfs her all the same. "Come on out, big girl."

There was a grouchy grumble from within the portal, and then a massive hornet slid out. If Sugar was large, this one was larger yet- dwarfing even the doctor standing on the stairs, and the king far, far up in his castle. Clover leered down at Toki with a grouchy look, and then pointedly lifted her foot, now coated in snow, before shaking it off. She huffed, massive wings lifting as she shook her horns at the much smaller monster standing calmly in front of her.

"I know, I know, the location is terrible, but I need you to give Tenne and his boys a ride to Waterfall with me." She gives her larger summons a smile. "Your saddle still works, so... Yeah. Fitting Tenne and the boys shouldn't be an issue. Speaking of... Tenne! This is Clover, my other summons!" She motions to the saddled hell hornet with a smile.

Kai didn't have a comment for the larger hornet. The boy just gawked, slack-jawed at the sight

Tenne was more or less the same as his son, looking up at the giant hornet, "By the ancestors..." He spoke quietly, before he looked at Toki. "It's not going to... hurt us, us it?" He asked.

"What?" She blinked over at him, and vehemently shook her head. "No, no, never. I wouldn’t have summoned something that would hurt any of you. Sugar is as sweet as they come, and Clover might be grumpy, but she's well behaved." She says. Toki pats her summons, and gets nudged in turn. She motions the bigger hornet closer. And then goes over to steal Quinn from Sugar, before motioning the smaller hornet back towards the portal to her own personal hell. "You're actually going to be riding Clover." She explains.

Quinn was giggling madly as he held onto Sugar's fur, but was just as happy to return to Toki's fluff.

Kai admittedly shifted closer to his father, who was still standing where he started, looking up at Clover like looking away was going to get him killed.

Toki chuckled and hefted Quinn closer as Sugar sulked back into the portal. She padded for Tenne, with Clover lumbering right behind her. The massive hornet took care not to step on her wings as the portal closed behind the smaller hornet.

She came to a stop at the bottom of the stairs, and looked up at Tenne. "Come on down, you two. Lets get you saddled up so we can go take a bath."

Clover locked eyes with Tenne and peered at him flatly. Intelligent eyes roved over him from head to foot, and she took him in slowly, before cocking one of her mandibles like one would a brow. She buzzed faintly, a tiny sound from something so massive, and ruffled her mane at him pointedly as if pleased by the hesitance his other self had never shown her properly, before laying down in the snow so he and his sons could mount up.

He took a slow breath, and then sighed as Clover flattened into the snow, coming closer at a slow pace as he examined her. "Such a miraculous creature..." He commented, running a hand over Clover's side before making his way to the saddle, climbing up before securing Kai in his lap.

Clover just sighed and rolled her eyes as he got seated.

"She is, isn't she?" Once she was sure he was secure, and that so was Kai, Toki secured the laundry bag to Clovers saddle, and then glanced to Quinn. "You want to ride with me, or ride on Clover, little one?"

"Nyeeehhh..." He was looking around now. If he had the option to choose, where did the fluffy bee go?

Clover leaned her head down curiously to him, her mane ruffling lightly. She chuffed at the child in her mistress's arms, and tilted her head, buzzing at him faintly.

"I had to send Sugar home, sweetie. She can't fly. So the water in Waterfall would have hurt her badly." She bounces him gently. "Clover is fluffy if you want to ride with her, Quinn. She's got even more fur than I do, and you can reach it from the saddle, but you have to be very gentle. She doesn't like to have it tugged."

He blinked, then let out a pouty 'Nyeh' and nuzzled Toki, happy with staying with her.
"So..." Tenne started slowly, "You'll stay close by, right?"

Toki smiled, and smooched his skull. She tucked him close to her, securing him with her smaller arms as she turned to face Tenne and Kai. She nodded to them. "Of course. I'm not going to just leave you alone with Clover. You have no idea how to fly her, and she has no idea where she's going." Toki gives him a warm smile all the same, and then lifts her wings. She takes off first, and spirals up where she's out of Clovers way.

Once Toki is up in the air, Clover's massive wings lift up. They don't hesitate to start beating, and she lifts off with a faint wobble, before heading straight up in a slow hover. Her flight is not as strained as Toki's was when she had carried Tenne, but it's also not as smooth either. She bumps and wobbles, a much larger being to get battered by the breeze. Still, she makes it up near Toki, and then the duo head off towards the cave into Waterfall at decent speeds.

Toki is close enough for Tenne to talk to, however, particularly as she extends her magic out to blanket him and Kai and keep them warm from the chill wind that comes with riding a flying hornet.

Thankfully the underground had high ceilings, and the caverns were at least long enough to allow Clover to pass, though Tenne was still understandably tense as he sat upon the hornet.

"How is this possible, I’ve summoned forth my blasters and they've only showed up as skulls... am I not putting enough magic into my summoning or..." He was mostly talking to himself.

'I can practically HEAR the gears in his head grinding to figure this out.' Cruelty laughed.

'Of course he's trying to figure this out. I'm not exactly a normal blaster beast. Shit, I wasn't even a normal skeleton when I was one. I've always been fucking weird.'

'So you admit to being a freak of nature. Good.' the anti-heart drawled.

'I was the only six foot tall half Asian who frequently hung out in the middle of an apiary in my high school. I was a freak of nature before I met the monsters.'

"I have too much magic maybe." She comments lightly to his chatter at himself. "They've always shown up like this ever since I first summoned them. I think it's the summons choice maybe. They're... More vulnerable like this. Stronger too, as they have more they can physically do. But... Sugar lost her wings, and there's no sign of them growing back."

"Oh... I saw that... I'm very sorry to hear that..." Tenne mentioned in a quieter tone.

"It happened a while ago. She's still a little... Flighty after it, so if she flinches around you or the boys, it’s not your fault." Toki responds gently. "But please don’t try and compare to me, Tenne. I'm a bit of a freak, if you recall my medical records."

"You're no freak." He looked at her almost immediately after she said that, head snapping up so fast he nearly gave himself whiplash. "Don't call yourself anything like that." He told her sternly.

Toki gives him a flat look as she adjusts Quinn a little, tucking him closer to her chest. Her worn turtleneck flaps in the wind. "Tenne, how many monsters do you know that don't have visible attack and defense stats? I'm the definition of freak." She states in a matter of fact tone, fur ruffling with the breeze. "Unless an anomaly is better. I'm definitely not normal, Tenne. I accepted this a long time ago. I was different even in my pack."

He went quiet after she said her part, and sighed as he simply focused on holding onto his son.
Toki sighs, and buzzed ahead to take the lead so Clover doesn't take a wrong turn.

Clover bucked a little under him as they reached the caves, and then it was single file with Toki leading the pair of them through the winding glowing caves. Toki guided her with her mind, and the duo buzzed through the caverns, making a horrible racket as they went. There wasn’t as much of a breeze here for them to deal with, so flight went smoother and faster.

Kai glances up at his dad once Toki is out of earshot, and elbows him lightly. "She's kinda right, Dad. She's kinda a freak. But she's our freak... right?"

Tenne straightened at that, before he chuckled and gave his boy a squeeze, "That's right, Kai... My clever boy." He chuckled softly, running a hand over the pup's head.

Kai grinned happily. "I have my moments. Dunno where I got it from though." He comments cheekily, fisting his fingers lightly in the fluffy mane of the hornet they were riding.

He chuckled and gave his son a gentle noogie. "That's my boy!" He snorted lightly.

Kai squawked, and swatted at his father's hands. His tiny mane ruffled at him. "Hey! Stop that!" He laughs.

Clover huffs at the two of them on her back, and then carefully starts to descend as Toki comes in for a landing.

Toki and the big bee land next to Toki's preferred bathing spot. It's a bit more private than the one she had shared with Ariel, and had a small waterfall off to one side that she liked to use for rinsing her mane out. It had a rocky pool, with a stream that ran out of it that kept the water fresh, so she didn’t have to worry about using soap.

Toki hums slightly, and goes to get the bag of clothes off the saddle, so Tenne can get down without jostling it or anything. She keeps her head tucked though, and doesn't look at him, aware she had upset him with her comments about herself. She sets down Quinn once she has the clothes, and gives the boy an affectionate ruffle to his skull, before scooting to the edge of the water.

Kai scrambled off of the hornet, and lazily began to strip out of his clothes. Once he was naked, he balled them up and flung them to Toki, who caught them without a fuss. He stretched, tail unfurling from its position around his leg. He wagged it lightly, and looked at Quinn. "C'mon, little bro. Naked time!"

Quinn perked up and giggled at his brother's announcement, "NYEH!" he squealed, before wiggling out of his clothing, freeing his own tail and dropping down to run after his brother on all fours.

Kai crouched down as well and took off, tail kiting high to the sky as he laughed. His mane was coming in, fur sprouting along his usually hidden neck bones. It was short still, but filling out. He rolled along the banks, playfully tossing glowing moss at Quinn.

Toki blinked as she spotted the tails. Something inside of her eased some. These were not... Not the same as her Sans and Papyrus. Neither of hers had tails. She had seen the intimate parts of both, as awkward as it was to say that about her engaged brother in law, and there had been no tail nor any sign of there having been one ever. A soft sigh left her, and she had a few smaller summons collect Quinn's clothes and bring them over to her pile that she was sorting on the bank.

Clover shook herself and rumbled up at Tenne, a sharp reminder for him to get his tail moving before she unseated him herself. She was a ride, not a personal lounge. The big hornet sprawled on the ground, massive legs spreading out as she sighed grumpily.

Tenne realized exactly what the massive hornet wanted, and he dismounted swiftly before he could be forcibly removed. He patted Clover gently. "Thank you for the ride." He told her, before he stepped to the side and focused his magic, opening a small rift to summon his own blasters.

The three came out quickly. In this realm, they looked as different as their master did from Tenebris. One had blue streaks on his mandible, another had red, and the last had silver. It looked like they had part of their spine attached to the back of their head, but only a few small vertebrae. Nothing compared to the greatness of Toki's summoning, which would make sense to Tenne's befuddlement.

The sound of the rift opening drew Toki's gaze, and she blinked as she watched the summons come forth. How... How odd. She supposed it made sense however that they too were different- though now that she thought about it, Papyrus had summoned his summons with their full bodies. Maybe with how this world worked, things worked differently and it equated to how much magic you put into it. With how... How odd this world was, she wouldn't be surprised. Toki could hardly expect to see Garrus himself come waltzing out of the rift like it was nothing. At least, the Garrus she was familiar with.

She gave Tenne a hesitant smile, hoping he wasn't upset by her comments about herself, and fingers the edge of her shirt while the boys romp. "They're impressive. I like the colors." She says softly.

Clover lifts her head to look at them after having ignored his touch and words. She buzzes at them, and then sprawls out better, content to ignore them as best she can and sleep.

"Thank you." He replied proudly, before setting them off to keep the boys safe while they romped, before he turned to speak to Toki. Though even as his mouth opened, no words came out as he watched her.

As he had gone to set his blasters to watch the boys, Toki had worked her pants off of her legs. With how they were shaped, it was a time consuming process, working the legs down and over her paws until she was free without getting anything tangled up. She got them off, and then carefully shimmed her shirt up and over her head, disentangling all four arms with careful motions. The bottom two tugged at the worn holes that had been torn in the armpits of one of his old shirts, but thankfully didn't rip them any wider. Her upper most arms took some work to ease out, as did her wings. She was honestly glad her wings were flexible, or she wouldn't be able to wear anything that didn't button in the back. Buttons might be easier anyways.

Soon she dropped her worn shirt down with her pants, and shook her mane out so it spread across her shoulders better. She hummed lightly, shifting on her legs and flexing her wings. "I may need to borrow your sewing kit soon. I have another hole in my pants." She muses lightly to Tenne as she bends down to collect the clothes and toss them into a small rocked off pool of water that worked for a wash bin. A bit of soap, and she stirs it with her arm before its frothy then flash boils the water. "Tenne? I need your clothes. I'm going to let these soak with some soap so they smell better."

He didn't want to stop staring, but while her back was turned he smacked his cheeks repeatedly and snapped out of his daze. He scooped up a handful of clothes for her and handed them over. "R-right! Here!" Now all that was left to do was not look too eager to undress as well.

"I meant the ones you're wearing." She laughs gently, but accepts the armload he hands to her. She stuffs them into the bubbling froth and stirs them up, the glowing water churning and boiling against the rough stones. Toki glances up to him and rocks into her toes, angling around to see him better. "You don't have a problem with me borrowing your sewing kit later, right...?" She inquires lightly, realizing she had just assumed and not asked. She scuffed her toes and looked down at her chest, arms crossing as she looked away to give him some privacy to undress.

"O-Oh no, not at all!" He replied, before he cleared his throat quietly. It was unintentional, and more to actually clear his throat. He started to undress, starting with sweater, and then tugging his shirt off from under his sweater, before unbuttoning the strap over his tail and freeing his pants to let them drop to the floor.

She listened to the sound of his pants pooling on the ground, and then held out her hands for him to set his clothes into. Toki hummed patiently, waiting quietly. "Thanks, Tenne. I'm going to have to actually invest in some clothes eventually. The pair you gave me are starting to wear out from being washed so often." Buying clothes meant... Her stay was more permanent though. That... That she couldn't ever go home. That she... She was accepting this fact.

Her throat felt tight, and she had to swallow to clear it of the knot lodging itself in it.

He handed them over, then noticed the tense look to her, "Are you alright?" he asked gently.

Toki swallowed again and shook her head. "Its..." She wanted to say nothing. She really did. She wanted to write it off with another lie, to just... Brush it off. She didn’t.

She eventually sighed, and tossed his clothes carefully into the wash after making sure his pockets were empty of anything important. She stirred the sudsy water for a moment, before straightening and shaking her arms off. "Just... Getting clothes and... And other stuff is sort of cementing that I'm... In here." She murmurs. "That... That there's no... No going home, you know...?" She glanced to him, eyes flicking over the bare expanse of his frame. He was just like Tenebris, but much more lanky and less bulky- though he was missing the abdominal cavity that Tenebris had. In it’s place was a smooth and well muscled plane of his abdomen, and it was quite nice to look at in her opinion. Though that was a thought she probably shouldn’t have. Toki sighed. "It's fine, Tenne. I'm just... Being stupid. Let me go hop in the water and get it warmed up, alright?"

He watched her for a moment, and then he ran a hand over his head and sighed quietly, giving a slow nod of defeat before he whistled to his boys and moved to enter the water as well.

Toki had glanced away, and missed the defeated look he had. While he and his boys went to get into the water, she slipped in as well, and flicked her wings. Her magic suffused the water, making it feel thicker, heavier, as it began to heat.

She honestly had too much of it- she had far, far too much of it because of what Cruelty with the souls- so expunging it wasn’t hard. She focused on heating the water, bracing herself as she worked on heating the big pool so they weren’t limited to a small area for romping.

While Toki missed the look, Kai had not. He might be young, but he was smart, and he was observant- and he wanted them to be happy. He bustled for the water, and flung himself around his Dad’s shoulders, leaving Quinn to splash in after them. He hooked his arms around his neck, and latched on like a limpet. “Don’t give up, Dad.” He nuzzles him softly. “It takes time for grief to go away. And girls are soft, you know that. They get their feelings hurt and they can hurt for aaaages.”

He sticks out his tongue and makes a face.

Kai definitely gave Tenne a small start, but his words were wise. He chuckled as he turned and gave his son a gentle kiss on the head. "So very true, my bright young man." He praised quietly. "Time is the most valuable asset for one to heal with, but that does not mean I won't offer what I can to help her.” He chuckled gently.

Kai licked his dad’s face in return, and smiled at him. “I think we all help.” He nods, keeping his voice very quiet so their feminine bath mate didn’t hear. “She’s… she’s really hurt inside. I don’t really know how much, but she used to look at me and Quinn and you could see the hurt. It’s not as bad now.” Kai was a very, very observant child. “I think you help lots by listening when she chooses to talk. But just don’t give up, okay Daddy?”

The water begins to steam around Toki, and she sighs, before sinking up to her ruff in the water. Her wings flick, before sinking below the surface. She slowly works lower, until only the top of her head is visible, and then she closes her eyes, looking reminiscent of a crocodile lurking on the surface. She had to have air now- so sitting at the bottom of the water was not what she was able to do, despite what she wanted to do.

“You're going to make someone a very happy mate when you're older.” He purred, pulling Kai into his lap to groom and wash him.

“A mate? Ew, no!” He sputtered, squirming initially as he was groomed. “Mates are gross! I don’t need one of those. Blegh!”

Quinn on the other hand, with his freedom, chattered and giggled as he ran over to Toki, before tackling her with a trill, before starting to lick and groom her fluff.

Toki grunted as she suddenly found herself with a small skeleton child clinging awkwardly to her as he groomed her. She ruffled her fluff at him, and then gently shifted him around to her front and lifted herself some out of the water. She laughed gently as he groomed her fluff, his tongue getting tangled in the damp green strands. Her tongue flicks out before she can stop it, and rasps over the faint puff of fluff she can see trying to- somehow- grow from his neck bones.

She hesitates only a moment- because where the heck had that come from?- before deciding that it was just a quirk to her new body. After all, she was, out of the corner of her eye, watching Kai being groomed by Tenne. She simply gave in, and groomed him gently, her spare hands fetching her soap and getting some to scrub into his bones while she cleaned his tiny puffs of fur that were usually hidden by his clothes. As she set to cleaning him off for the first time- as Tenne usually handled cleaning the boys since he was their dad- Toki realized something very important.

They might look like they had some spots of bone- but they had bodies like Tenne. She hadn’t noticed when she’d glanced at them the first time- tails were distracting, very distracting, particularly when they were kiting high in the sky while the kids romped around like the mostly hairless puppies they apparently were- but now that she was getting him cleaned up, she could see that he was actually very much not like her Papyrus. Where her husband was more skeleton than blaster beast, these boys were more blaster than they were skeleton.

Wow- she had been classifying them entirely wrong. She felt really, really stupid.

Tenne laughed gently and just continued to groom Kai, before letting him go to swim around.

Kai floats off and settles on one of the rocks that had heated up from Toki’s magic. He rumbles happily and sprawls against it, pleasantly basking in the warmth.

Quinn trilled when she groomed him like his papa did, but this new secondary method, with soap and water, had him curious and he chattered as he splatted his hand against the occasional ball of suds on his skin, though other than that he was happy lump of purring puppy in Toki’s hands.

Toki groomed him until he was squeaky clean, and then soaped up his mane too. She rinsed him after that, and then cuddled him close to her, tickling his chin gently with a soft laugh. “Enjoying yourself, Quinn?” She smiles, glancing over to Tenne and shifts on her back a little bit. One of her legs lifts out of the water, the toes on her paws splaying, and she lightly kicks the water.

Her free arms collected soap, and she leans her larger arms back to scrub it into her mane, taking the time to also shine up her horns, before working her fur into a big, foamy lather. Soon she’s got an afro of bubbles, and she sighs, letting the shampoo strip the grease and grime from her fur.

"Nyeh!" Was Quinn's response to her question, before he squealed happily at the sight of her foamy mane, pushing his hands into it as he would when it was dry, "Nyeh heh heh!"

"How precious." Tenne laughed gently, before scooting closer, "May I borrow that soap?" he asked.

Toki shifted Quinn so he could be better balanced against her chest, settling her against one of her shoulders so he could play with the bubbles in her mane. “Watch my horn, sweet one. It’s hidden in the bubbles, and you could hurt yourself on it.” She says softly.” She shifted as Tenne came closer and nodded, holding out the shampoo and the soap to him with both of her left arms for him to choose from. “I’ll help you condition your mane after you shampoo, if you would like.” She offers lightly.

"I'd be silly to decline such a nice offer." He rumbled happily and selected his soaps. "Thank you very much, my dear Toki."

Toki smiled and drew her hands back once he had his soaps. “Of course, Tenne. I don’t mind at all.” She lifts a brow lightly at Quinn, and then huffs in soft amusement, before lifting him gently away and settling him on a rock. “Sit right here for just a second, Quinn. I need to rinse, and there’s a lot of fur to rinse. I don’t want to jostle you.”

Quinn giggled and happily wagged his tail as he watched her rinse off, before lifting his gaze to his father to watch him massage the shampoo into his semi-short mane around his neck and collarbone.

Toki popped free of the water moments later, her mane unusually flat against her back. It lacked the volume it usually did when it was wet, and it streamed down her back and shoulders. She flicked it back, brushing it up and away from her breasts as best she could. She snuffles lightly, and then huffs, before glancing to Tenne. “Think I can convince you to help me condition my mane? It’s gotten longer since I got here.” She liked it long- it was really nice. It was just a bitch to keep it conditioned.

"It would be my pleasure." He replied with a smile, rinsing his mane quickly before coming over and gently making a ‘turn around’ gesture with his hand.

Toki smiled at him and turned around. She bared her back to him, wings lifting up and over his head so she could nestle him between them. They glistened with the water, and flickered faintly as she handed the conditioner back over her shoulder towards him. “Thanks Tenne.”

He chirped happily and his tail wagged behind him as he gave a small nod, "It's my pleasure!" he piped warmly.

“You say that now. Just wait until you’re actually conditioning it.” She laughed lightly, and settled down to wait. She reached out to tug Quinn back into her lap, cuddling him to her chest.

He tutted stubbornly, his tail swaying behind him as he poured the conditioner into her fur, before bringing his hands to gently knead it in, noting how many times his claws got snagged.

His claws got snagged a lot initially at first- until the conditioner began to seep into her fur, and it began to soften. Soon it was silky and smooth in his hands, and he could freely work it deeper into the mass of her mane. Toki’s eyes half lidded a little bit as he set to work on her mane, and she leaned a little back into him with a pleased buzz. “There’s something very relaxing about having someone else playing with your mane,” She murmurs softly. “Very relaxing.”

Kai snorts, and makes his way over to join the group of monsters in the water. “Unless it’s being licked.” He huffs, and eyes his father as he paddles along.

“I wouldn’t know.” She chuckles softly. “I wasn’t groomed in my hive- not like how your father groomed you, at least.”

"Nyeh!" Quinn giggled, going to lean up and start to groom Toki's collar fluff- at least until she blocked him with her hand.

"That's not a good idea, Quinn." She tutted to him with a gentle tone, "at least not while it has soap in it."

Quinn whined but gently suckled on the base of her thumb, stirring a lighthearted chuckle out of her and a rumble of amusement from Tenne.

"Well we here enjoy grooming one another. It's a very healthy social exercise for us." Tenne explained.

Toki didn’t mind Quinn sucking on her thumb, and simply just rubbed his skull lightly with the pads of her fingers, angling her claws away from him as best she could. She rumbles a soft, pleased sound in her chest, and then runs her fingers gently through Kai’s fur. The boy melts, and lets her drag him into her lap alongside his brother. “I can see that,” She murmurs softly to Tenne. “It’s a very relaxing experience. I don’t mind joining in more often- but you’ll all need to be careful if you’re grooming me.” She lifts a hand, far out of reach of the children, and flexes her wrist. Out of the soft fluff that cuffs her hand slides her stinger. “It’s got some touch triggered reflexes, and it would hurt to get stuck with it.”

“That’s what you used to help Auntie Saph, wasn’t it?” Kai murmurs lazily. “And… whatever came out of it.”

“Indeed.” She murmurs slowly, a soft, relaxed sound coming out of her as her arm relaxes and the stinger draws back.

"Speaking of, their rejuvenated energy after you gave them that… sting I suppose, is very fascinating." Tenne commented. “I do hope you’ll allow me to borrow some of that venom for study.”

She blinked slowly and then hummed. “Sure,” she says slowly, and then laughed. “You can’t borrow it. But you can have some. I can give you a vial or two when we get back to your house later. I certainly don’t want it back.” She glances back at him with a soft thrum as her hair soaks in the conditioner, and then turns to face him a little bit. She adjusts the boys over her shoulders so they can enjoy her body heat and the heat of the water as she remains close to Tenne. “Are your vials resistant to heat?”

"Well of course." He answered, smiling warmly as she turned her head to look at him. "And you're right, borrow might not have been the right word." He chuckled gently.

Her eyes twinkled at him merrily. “Definitely not the right word.” She laughs gently. “But don’t worry. We’ll get you some samples before you go into work next. Though I think I need to swing into town before I return to the house with you.” She had something she needed to get- or look into getting. Toki takes a moment to heft up the boys and offer them out. “Here- can you take them for a moment so I can rinse?”
"But of course." he rumbled as he reached and scooped up his boys, giving them an appreciative squeeze, getting a whine from Kai and a giggle from Quinn.

She chuckled, and dunked under the water once she was clear of children. It took a quick, but thorough, scrub with all four of her arms to get all of the conditioner out of her hair. But once it was out, her mane was silky smooth, and she surfaced once more with a pleased sound. Toki ran her fingers through her mane, and got no tangles and snarls with her claws. “There’s something to be said for conditioner. A little bit goes a long way when concerning tangle-happy manes.” She muses.

“It does look softer than before.” Kai nods lightly from his dad’s grasp.

"Beautiful." Tenne purred quietly, a subtle awestruck look in his half-lidded eyes as he got a small smile across his face.

She gives them both a closed eye smile, and rolls her magic up through her mane. The damp and silky strands proceed to fluff up with her magic, drying as heat turns the water to steam. Her mane settles into messy curls across her neck and back. “Thanks, Tenne.” She shifts a little in the water, then scoots closer to him. She collects the conditioner, and then reaches up to his neck. She starts at the front, where his mane is thinnest, and massages conditioner into it there, slowly working it towards the back of his neck. She’d have to get him to turn around for that, because she was still a lot shorter than him and reaching was impossible when all of your arm length went into making up the distance in heights. Toki’s hands were gentle all the same, and she was very careful not to deploy her stingers as her palms worked the conditioner through his hair.

When the front was done, she scooted back, and motioned for him to turn around.

He let out a thrilled coo as her hands came to massage into his mane, and purred all the while as she scrubbed. When asked to turn around, he accidentally forgot to hide the happy, goofy look on his face as he smiled down at her.

Toki simply gave him a goofy grin in return, though it certainly probably was not nearly as charming as his. Crocodile teeth did not translate to a nice smile. Fangs and lips however, usually did. Her hands returned to his neck, and she worked more conditioner into the back of it. His mane was short- he was only growing it out, she knew, to mostly prove to her that he could. Also partly because he was the odd one out without a mane- now that she knew the boys apparently were in the various stages of growing their own.

It felt strange to have him purring right under her hands- she hadn’t had that since she’d cuddled with her Papa in what felt like ages ago. Toki simply smiled and found herself buzzing happily in response, a low thrum filling the cave. When his hair was sufficiently soaped up, she pulled her hands back and rinsed them in the water. “There we go.” She smiles. “Let that soak in for a little bit, and you’ll be as soft as me. Kai? Did you want some conditioner too?”

“Nahhh,” the boy snorts, “No one touches mine, so I don’t need it to be soft.”

"Thank you, dear." Tenne purred without thinking, before he smiled at Kai, "Oh come now, boy." he tutted, "A little soap won’t hurt.”

Being called ‘dear’ simply made her smile lightly. He called her ‘my dear’ often enough that it was just a simply endearment.

She shifted to lean over his shoulder, pressing her chest against his back so she could peer down at Kai. She reached down over Tenne’s shoulder and booped his nasal ridge. “Your dad is right there- soap’s just going to get all the gross stuff out of your fur and make it that much nicer.”
Kai snorted at her and nipped her finger. “Yeah, but it’s so much effort to wash it out. Gotta soap up, rinse it out, condition it... too much work.”

Feeling her perky, semi-firm mounds against her back brought a blush to his cheeks and a quiet chattering rumble deep in his chest. Tenne had to clear his throat to get it to stop. "Now, now, Kai. Just give it a try."

Kai saw the dark black color dusting his father’s cheeks, and grinned up at him. “Fiiiiine. Only if you wash it for me though. Too much effort otherwise.”

Toki laughs, and grins down at the boy. “Your dad can wash it for you.” She chuckles. “I need to go finish the laundry, and get it dried so we can bring it back to your house.”

Kai made a fussy noise. “Or Daddy could help you after.”

“I actually enjoy doing menial house chores, despite what you all seem to think about me doing them on my own.” She chortles to the young... skeleton blaster beast monster- to the young boy. “Besides, that will give you three some time to spend together.” She tried to give them as much time together as she could- parents needed time with their children, after all, and Tenne worked so often and for so long... Time was precious.

Tenne chuckled quietly at Kai’s attempts to spite him getting shot down, and he grinned as he held up the soap, "Nice try, Kai."

Kai huffed and rolled over with a sulky sound so Tenne could tend to his mane.

Toki laughed and leaned away. She worked her way to the edge of the water, and then carefully clamors out. Her magic quick dries her wrist and ankle fur, and her flesh dries off as well. Her wings fan out to help them dry off as she scoots over to the little ‘bowl’ in the rocks, where the clothing had finally settled into a non-boiling state. She crouched down, and moved a couple of rocks, letting the soapy water wash out with a swift current as she set to scrubbing the soap and grime away from the clothing. “Hey, Tenne?” She calls lightly. “I think I’m going to run into town for a little bit when we get back to your house, alright?”

"Sounds good." He replied lightly.

Toki nods and hums a soft tune as she settles into simply cleaning. It was a moot point to dry her wrists, since she’d have to do it again, but all the same.

By the time Tenne had his mane scrubbed clean of the conditioner, and had wrangled Kai through both a shampooing and a conditioning, Toki had gotten the soap washed out, and was flash drying clothes as she hung them over her many arms. She sorted the clothing by owner- Tenne’s clothing went on her upper most arm, while the boys clothes went on her smaller arms, given the size differences.

Once she had it all sorted, she stood up, collected the bag, and stuffed all but a fresh pair of clothing for each of them back into the pack. She got herself dressed in her pair of clothes, and then kept their clothing tucked close to her, keeping them warm as she waited for them to finish washing up and enjoying the last dredges of warmth her magic was leaving in the glowing waters.

Gosh, the glowing water did amazing things. Toki’s muscles felt more relaxed after that. Her wing muscles could get sore from flying, she’d found. Given how much fun flying was, they were sore fairly often.

Quinn had long since taken one of the hot rocks for a nap, even while Kai got his washing. He only stirred once Tenne gently scooped him up, giving quiet squeaks before he yawned widely and nuzzled his papa, who set Kai on the shore before pulling himself out of the water.

Toki scooted closer to them, and offered towels initially. She draped one over Kai, who began to briskly dry himself off, before carefully kidnapping Quinn into a towel. Tenne’s towel was then held out to him as she ruffled up the sleepy child, and worked to get him dry. Many arms were very… handy.

“Quinn,” She coos, “you’ve got to wake up fully so you can get dressed, little one.”

Quinn gave a soft 'Nyeh' but did as told and shook his head to stir further before taking his towel to start drying off.

Tenne took his towel with a rumble of thanks before he began to dry off.

She set Quinn down so he could finish drying, and then carefully sorted out and re-warmed their clothing.

Kai was the first to dive into his, and he wiggled back into his clothing and coat, and happily chirped as he nestled into its warmth. “Mmm, fire magic is awesome. It feels like it’s been sitting by the fire place all night.”

Toki laughs. “It has its perks.”

"A perk I find myself absolutely adoring." Tenne admitted, drying his form off before dressing in his warm clothes with a pleased purr.

“Glad to be of service.” She smiled. Once Tenne had his clothes, she helped Quinn get into his, and then scooped up the boy, and plopped him right in her arms. “Alright- I just need to get the bag of clothes secured to the saddle, and then we can get going.”

“I call shotgun on the giant bee!” Kai grinned. He booked it for the big grumpy insect, and made an attempt to scramble up the side of her saddle- but alas, he was too short.

Clover sleepily rumbled at him, and crooked one of her legs to give him a boost.

"Sounds like a plan." Tenne agreed, chuckling as he came over to Kai. He scooped his older son up, climbed aboard the hornet with a bit more confidence, before getting settled, putting Kai in front of him. "There we go..."

Kai grinned and wiggled in place, before cuddling back against his dad. He took handfuls of the fluffy green fur, and got himself comfortable. “It’s weird how Toki is fluffy like her big hornets.”

Toki laughs, hearing this. “Clover and I might not be that far off in genus.” She tucks Quinn closer to her, and then secures the laundry to the saddle once they’re in place. Loose items are tucked into the bag. Once it was secure, she lifted off, her wings buzzing noisily as she hovered in place.

Clover rolled to her feet, massive form hauling upright with a disgruntled grunt. She shook herself off from dirt clinging to her, flicking each of her legs pointedly, before lifting off as well. She took off after Toki, letting her mistress lead the way out of the tunnels. Clover projected warmth this time around, knowing that the blaster beasts were easily chilled, and that their damp manes would make them colder easier once they reached the chillier parts of the air. She might be a grump- but she was not completely heartless.

The trip out of the tunnels didn’t take long, and Toki and Clover made haste once they reached the cold air. They could only do so much— and it appeared to have dropped some degrees since they had entered the caves, making it even colder.

Monsters looked up at them as they traveled, guards eying them and civilians gaping at the duo as they buzzed over the Snowdin forest. The town came into sight shortly, and Toki buzzed over the town once to orient herself, also to take a quick gander at the shop she wanted to visit and to make sure it was actually there, and then made a straight line back towards Tenne’s house.

The house was much the same as they left it, cold, covered in snow, and lit faintly from within from the dying embers of lanterns. Toki banked down, and came in for a landing. As soon as her paws touched the snow, she began to do the ‘cold, cold, cold’ dance, prancing in place.

Clover was much less finicky. When she landed, her heavy feet simply sunk into the ice, and she gave her mistress a miserable look and an irritable buzz, before crooking one of her legs and offering Tenne and his son a step down. No way she was laying on her belly again. Nope.

Toki danced over for the laundry bag, waiting until the cold feeling in her paws numbed, before she took the bag and draped it over her shoulder across from Quinn. “It’s gotten colder,” She pouts. “Oh well.” It would make her pondered task definitely a good idea.

“It has indeed.” Tenne agrees as he dismounts, carefully hefting Kai with him. He bundles his son close to him, and then usher’s Toki towards the house.

Toki pauses only long enough to let Clover back into the hell verse, before letting Tenne guide her inside. Once indoors, she sets her bees to lighting the fires and the lanterns again, and warming the house, while she detangles Quinn from her arms and settles him on the couch. She tucks him in with her sleeping blankets, so he can settle in for a nap, and then rummages under the couch for her pouch of gold.

She draws it out, and gives Tenne a smile. “Alright. I’m going to head out. I’ll be back in a little bit, Tenne. I’ll see you soon.” She promises.

He frowns at her as he settles Kai on his feet, letting his son scramble up to join Quinn under the blankets on the couch. The doctor faces her and gives her a firm but concerned look. “Are you sure you wish to? It’s awfully cold, Toki, and you don’t have a coat or shoes.”

“I do.” She nods. “If I get too cold, I’ll stop in at Grillby’s and warm up before coming back here, I promise.” Toki gives him a smile. “I won’t be too long, Tenne. Keep warm, and see about putting the laundry away for me?”

The doctor sighs, but nods. “I can do that.”

The bag of clothes is traded over as she heads for the front door, and Toki ruffles her fur, before stepping out into the cold again. She shuts the door behind her, leaving her bees to keep the house warm, and then takes off into the sky with every intent of reaching the shop before it got too cold.

For all of her bluff and guff about getting back in a short amount of time, it was nearly five hours later when Toki managed to get home again, and well past noon. She might have missed lunch, but she returned with a new bag on her back, a spring in her step- and a new wardrobe.

In as much as seven pairs of clothing could be considered a wardrobe. It was a far cry better than the one set of clothes that she had been wearing since she’d been given them, nearly three months back.
She was now dressed in a brown turtleneck that actually covered all four arms, and had a semi-open style backing for her wings to fit through. Cold it might have been, but it also made for a much easier time trying to get her clothing on. Part of the reason she had been gone for so long was because of how awkward and hard it was for someone who had never done something for someone with four arms to try and make something for someone with four arms. There had been one failed attempt before they got it right- but now, the brown turtleneck, edged in black, had six other companions in various other colors.

Toki had managed to afford five pairs of pants total- including the one she was wearing now- and two skirts with deep pockets for storing things. She wasn’t a huge fan of skirts- but they were free moving and comfortable, and so long as she flew with her undergarments on, it didn’t really matter if she had a skirt or pants on, really.

Toki crept back to the house, the cheery pep in her step not fading. She’d found good company in the Vestimoves. Lana was still a child- just a little older than Quinn- but her mother and her father were lovely people, and had the most interesting difference between here and her world. It was a difference that, for once, Toki was glad of.

Easing the door open, she stepped into the main room, claws clicking slightly. The long and billowing sleeves of her shirt flapped in the wind as she shut the door behind her. “Hey, Tenne?” She calls, not seeing him or the boys in the living room. “I’m back.”

There was silence, then a quiet clatter, and Tenne’s head peered out from the kitchen. "Ah, welcome home To-” he stopped however, and his face lit up. "Toki! Your clothing!” He exclaimed with joy, “It looks wonderful! Absolutely perfect on you!” He seemed to cheer up as he exited the kitchen and made his way to her, examining her new outfit with a strangely overjoyed glow in his eyes.

‘For what it’s worth, the beast is right. The clothing is… fitting.’ Cruelty grudgingly chimes in from inside of her, before tucking away again.

"Thank you.” She gives him a lopsided smile, and twirls for him, careful not to hit him with her wings. Her back is mostly exposed, so it’s going to be even chillier, but there’s not much she can do for it. She spent all of her gold on what she had now. Custom clothes were expensive. At least they were warm, however. When her twirl comes to an end, Toki gives him a small smile and scuffs her feet on the floor. Her eyes glow a warm green color. “I figured it was time. I’ve been here for a little over three months now.” Obviously she wasn’t going anywhere any time soon- and Papyrus would disapprove so much of how she was taking care of herself if he could see her now. That thought was fueling in it’s own right. “So,” She shifts her bag, and jiggles it. “It’s not much to start, but seven pairs of clothes means I won’t have to wash them as often. I’ve still got the pair you gave me though, so technically eight.”

She intended to sleep in those, though. They might not be as warm given how worn they were, but they’d make good pajamas.

His tail wagged happily and he trilled- yes, the young beast gave an overjoyed trill- before speaking once more. 'I'll have to build you a wardrobe, or at least make you a closet to use for your clothes!” He chirped happily, tail flicking. "You look absolutely lovely in this clothing. Typical performance of Madame Vestimoves to make clothing that was born to be worn by you and you alone.”

Toki gave him a soft laugh. “You’re on your own for building a wardrobe. My brother was the one better suited for construction, not me.” Hence the shoddily built den out in the snow. She was not good at construction. She just tended bees. Tenne’s words of praise had her mane ruffling with pride, and she beamed. “She really is something else. It took some tries to get it right, but we managed to get a working pattern fitted for someone with four arms- so she’s got my sizes down and everything.” She chirps. “Though- a wardrobe might be a little bit big, Tenne. I live on your couch, and all of my clothes fit in this bag.” She jiggles what amounted to a backpack with a light grin. “Maybe a small dresser to slide under the table or something would be nice. Something small would work.” She nods slowly.

"Ooh, then perhaps let's think on this.” As quickly as he came, he was off, looking at the coffee table that sat by her couch-turned-bed.

"Could you imagine perhaps integrating a drawer system here? Or would it be better perhaps to simply implicate shelves? I was never sure which of them were more efficient, drawers or shelves... bah.” He snorted and thumped his foot lightly on the ground, before he looked at her with a smile. "Toki, what say you?"

“What say me, hm?” Toki had watched him bustle off with a smile upon her teeth. She padded closer to the couch, and set the bag onto the arm as she watched him fuss over the coffee table with a renewed energy that was very refreshing to see. However, she was not entirely sure on how he got the sudden burst of energy. “Hm... Well... I don’t know about which one is more efficient, but drawers are nicer because I can store my personal things in them without it looking obviously like I live on your couch, perchance you do have some visitors over.” She quirks a soft and amused smile at him. “But shelves work just as fine too, and are much less work than doing drawers. Whatever works the easiest for you, Tenne, I’ll be alright with either or.”

"Well, perhaps I could work out a drawer system. It would be more beneficial." He rumbled happily. "Have a key for them or some sort of special tab that permits you to access them without fear of peepers."

She rolls her eyes with light amusement. “I don’t have anything that’s really all that private besides my undergarments now, Tenne. I mean, I doubt the boys are going to go rifling through my panties. Though…” She recalled her brothers doing that to her once, when they were little, and found herself nodding. “It might not be a bad idea.” She admits. “Though maybe not a key. Things tend to melt with me by accident, and it’s a waste of resources to make it Toki-proof.”

He tutted at her lightly in response to that. “A woman deserves a little bit of privacy.” A smile followed his words as he glanced to her.

She laughs. "I had eight brothers, Tenne. I haven't had privacy since I was a small child." She still smiles at him though, and offers him a pat on the shoulder. "Thank you though. It's a kind thought, and I wouldn't mind whatever you could manage for me. So...what were you doing in the kitchen?”

"Just having a cuppa tea." He answered. "Would you like me to make you some tea as well?" Tenne then asked.

“I’d like that.” Toki nods and flexes her bare toes. “If you’d like, I can help you with it. The kitchen tile always helps my toes warm up better after I get back inside, when I can get it properly heated.” With her bees in the house, the tile was sure to be warm- because the hardwood flooring was warm too.

"I suppose there's no harm in that, now is there." Tenne purred softly, "Alright. Let's go then.” He rumbled as he got to his feet, stretching a little before starting for the kitchen.

Toki trailed after him once she’d made sure her bag wasn’t going to fall off the couch. She hummed softly, bare paws clicking over the floor as she made her way to the kitchen. The tile was warm, as she had hoped, and her wings spread briefly to fan the warmth over herself. “Mmm… Only thing my outfit is missing is the backing. It gets a little cold along my wings and shoulders, but a coat modified enough to be easy for use with wings like mine was not on my budget list.” She chuckles. “The air in here feels really nice though.” She sighs pleasantly, before starting over to the stuff he had set out for tea, so she could get it whipped up real quick instead of using his ghastly fire-operated stove.

"I wonder just how we could make something of that sort work." He rumbled quietly. "Perhaps a magnetic system to permit openings for your wings when necessary alone."

She glanced back at him with a perplexed look as she hauled the teapot into her arms to begin heating it. Toki was used to being financially stable- she’d been financially stable since she’d been young, and since her royalties had really started to roll in with her books alongside profits from her apiaries- so being not so stable was slightly unfamiliar territory. Not wholly though- every family has had its tight times. Hers is- was, rather- no different despite it’s massive size as a large clan. “I can’t afford a coat,” she says slowly, “let alone the sort of gold that sort of modifications would cost. That’s probably more than I would make in… forever. I only take half wages- and I’m only working at Grillby’s probably until Sapphire has the baby.”

She expected to get laid off after that, honestly. No need to pay for an extra worker when you didn't need them. It was bad business- and Grillby was anything but a bad businessman.

He looked at her without an immediate response to what she said, and simply set up another teacup for her while giving a slow nod, "I see..."

“Speaking of;” Toki hums, changing topic easily, “Sapphire is due soon. Like… I think she’s got another month left.” She glanced to him, and juggles the warming pot for the tea. “Her scent has changed. Grillby’s had me keeping an eye on her when I’m on shift. I mean… I’ve assisted in a birth before,” Sans birth had been a nightmare, and she’d helped with her mother’s ages ago, “but I’m not a doctor. Maybe because I’ll smell it before she notices, and be able to call you.” She shrugs.

"That’s very good to have on hand, someone who can detect subtle things like that..." He agreed, "and your element will help with rousing the child safely."

She quirs a faint grin. Well, she did know how to rouse a fire elemental child safely indeed. Not that she could tell him that- though she knew her eyes had to have twinkled knowingly. “Considering that my venom helped her health wise, I figured pretty much anything to do with my magic is good for fire elementals.” She chuckles merrily, and lifts the now steaming pot to fill the mugs and let them steep. She adds the usual sweetener to his, and a little extra to hers. She’d been craving sweet things- and part of that, she figured, was her nature as a bee monster.

"Mnhmm... Speaking of; is now a good time to extract some venom?" The doctor inquired. "I do indeed wish to study it further." He rumbled.

Toki nodded lightly. “Sure. I’ve got plenty to give- if you’ve got your vials, I don’t mind filling several for you while we wait for the tea to steep.” She gives him a smile. “Go ahead and bring several- there’s six separate stingers that you can take from. It’s not really doing anything else besides sitting in me anyways.”

"That would be fantastic." He chirped happily, "Thank you, my dear." He got up while she waited and came back after a couple of minutes with a handful vials that had a rubber-like cap on the top. As he put them down, he revealed to have six. "Perfect.” He sounded pleased. “One for each stinger then.”

Toki smiled at him. “You might have to help me with two of them. They’re down on my ankles- I might be flexible, but I don’t want to drop the vials if I lose my balance.” She takes one of them, and examines the rubber-like tops. She lightly nudges it, and hums. It reminded her of how they milked snakes. “So, do I take the cap off, or push my stinger into it?” She questioned lightly.

"Push into it, much like one would milk a snake." He replied as he came closer. Tenne knelt down by her feet, holding two vials to her to take care of herself while he got her lower stingers.

“Alright.” She nods. Toki pops her lower stingers out for him first before she fiddles with her wrist, and turns it over after a moment. She hums, and flexes, before her stinger on her largest inside wrist slides out. She eases it through the cap of the first one, and then pauses, trying to figure out how to trigger her venom. She’d done it by instinct last time- this time it was intentional. She hummed for a moment, and then lightly massaged her wrist.

After a few moments, her arm tingled, and a thin fluid eased out of her stinger. It was clear, faintly glowing, and slowly filling the vial. She eased her stinger out bit by bit as the tube filled, and then popped her stinger out once it was at the top. The liquid seemed to be thickening a little bit, but not a whole lot as she held it. It was a little warm in her hands. She shuffled it to her other hand, and then repeated the process with her second arm.

The second larger arm was, much like the first, fairly easy to ‘milk’ the venom from. Once she had two very full vials, she held them firmly to her, and turned her attention down to Tenne to see how he was doing with trying to get her legs to work. She had gotten her stingers out for him, so he didn’t have to do that. She was attempting to will herself to release the venom as best she could, but it wasn’t an easy process. Yes she had practice- but it had been instinctive practice- and she’d never tried to do it from just one limb at a time.

“What’s going on down there?” She questions gently.

"Well enough." His hands were gentle on her feet. Within moments the vials were full, but he seemed to be stuck on her feet, his hands simply holding her left foot in a cradle. He was curious... or... perhaps entranced by the feeling of touching another of his kind; such a factor would never get old for him... it'd always be an amazing reality for him.

She watched him cradle her foot, and arched a brow at him curiously. She still needed to fill two more vials- but he seemed to be entranced by touching her. She supposed, however, that spending a lifetime of believing that you were the only one of your kind would make you… well, want to see and know as much as you could about another one if you found them.

Toki spread her toes, claws flexing slightly in his hold. Her paw pads were soft, despite all the barefoot walking she did, and warm to the touch thanks to being on the kitchen floor.

“Enjoying my foot?” She teases gently, toes splaying for him to examine to his soul’s content.

He purred loudly as her toes spread, and he gently rubbed the softer skin that rested under the pads. "Even your feet are beautiful..." He spoke quietly, before he leaned down and placed a gentle kiss onto the top of her foot.

Well, that just made her flush a little bit. Toki awkwardly rubbed the back of her head, ruffling her mane. “Really?” She questioned lightly, toes twitching and flexing wider as he rubbed the soft skin between them. It tickled a little bit, and she couldn’t help the soft giggle that escaped her. “I always liked yours better. I mean… I’ve got three toes. It’s kinda… awkward. You’ve got four though- it’s a really nice number.” He also didn’t seem to lose his balance when he tried to balance on one foot- though that might have had to do with his tail. She only had her wings- and they made her top-heavy.

He chuckled quietly at that. "It's harder than it looks, my dear... I still must put effort to maintain my balance." He murmured, "I suppose I have good feet, but yours are rather lovely as well."

Toki simply smiled down to him and murred gently into her mane. "Thank you." She said honestly. She still wasn’t sure how to feel about her feet- but it was nice that someone else thought they were nice. They were different, that’s for sure. But… It was a good sort of different, perhaps. "So… Did you want to help me with my smaller arms?" She questions gently, toes wiggling again at his ticklish touch. "The larger ones are easier to do, but the smaller ones are a bit more… delicate." Her wrists were much thinner on her secondary pair- and she really didn’t want to accidentally break them or something while trying to get him the venom samples. "Ah… Tenne, that tickles." She admits bashfully after a moment. Her ankles were tingling with the ticklish feeling, and it was hard to restrain the urge to wiggle.

He chuckled quietly, and he slowly let her foot down, before he picked up the last two vials. "Of course I will lend a hand..." He purred gently, "I apologize... I didn't realize they were ticklish."

She wiggled her foot a little bit, and set it down. "It’s alright, Tenne. I didn’t know either.” She gives him a lopsided smile. "I haven’t really had a lot of folks touching my feet. The pads themselves aren’t ticklish, but the skin between the toes is.” Toki offers out her smaller arms to him, turning her wrists up. Her stingers slide out from their sheathes in her wrists. Unlike the upper ones and the ones down on her legs, these ones are smaller, much more fragile looking. While the other four look like fighting stingers, these look like anything but.

He looked at the stingers and carefully lined up the bottle membranes. Once sure they would penetrate the lining, he pushed them into it and rumbled in satisfaction at the two pops he heard of the stingers breaking the lining.

She let out a soft, pleased noise as her stingers popped the lining. Her wings twitched, and her wrists warmed and tingled. Her fingers flexed lightly as she followed the flow of the sensation, and venom began to drip without much prompting- it wasn’t a steady stream or a fast one, but it was better than nothing. "You might have to rub a little bit to get a better stream.” Toki chuckled lightly. "It worked with my primary arms. And please, be careful. The glass heats up really quickly.”

"Yes, of course.” He responded. He carefully angled the vials, and then reached up and gently rubbed the base of her stingers.

His thumbs working over her wrists helped to make the venom come quicker- and the vials began to fill faster.

Toki watched with interest as they filled up, and hummed a curious sound. “It looks like my venom thickens as it cools.” She observes curiously. “How odd.”

The vials on her smaller stingers topped off faster than the ones on her larger ones did. Her smaller ones gave venom faster when prompted correctly, it seemed.

"It's almost like working with honey... albeit... a no doubt dangerous one should it get into your blood stream." He laughed gently.

“Probably.” She laughs. "The exception being the elementals. They could probably bathe in it and be fine.” She chuckles. Her hands flex again, and she draws her stingers slowly back as the vials filled. Once they reached the top, her stingers popped out, given the lack of space with which to deposit more venom.

A few droplets leaked out of her stingers before she could stop it.
He noticed the drops and kept his hands back from it, putting down the vials before he pulled a handkerchief from his pocket and moved to wipe up the droplets.

She kept her hands still. The venom sat on her skin and did nothing harmful to her—however, upon touching the handkerchief, it began to steam, the fabric sizzling as the liquid burnt at it. She blinked, staring as the corners began to smolder. “I wouldn’t let this touch anything not fireproof.” She warns warily, realizing just what sort of bad stuff she has literally bubbling inside of her wrists. Fucking lovely.

Toki needed to be even more careful now.

"Oh dear." He looked at the smoldering handkerchief, before he skirted around her to quickly put it out.

Toki assisted him by gingerly dumping the rest of the un-used water from the tea pot on it, and watched as the burnt flakes of the handkerchief floated down the sink. She hummed softly. “Well… I owe you a new handkerchief. I am so, so sorry about that.” Her stingers withdrew, and she sighed, before offering out the last two vials she held. “Well… Please don’t break them. We may have a problem if it gets everywhere. I really don’t want to go through another fire.”

He took them and chuckled, offering the handkerchief to her. "I suppose if it's already got a few scorched marks, what would be a few more... would you like to keep this one?"

Toki smiled lightly and took the kerchief, tucking it carefully into her pocket. “Sure. Might as well- it will make more sense me carrying something singed than you.” She chuckles softly. She turns then, and collects their tea, before carefully cradling them. “You go put your vials up, and I’ll meet you in the living room with the tea.”

Toki could vaguely hear Quinn babbling to himself, and figured the boy was playing with his action figures up in his room again. What a cute kid.

She gives Tenne a smile, and heads off to the living room, toting the tea with her and keeping it warm while he went about storing the venom for the day he went back to work.
Chapter 97

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Well, I was not planning angst and then this happened. This is what happens when you hurt your characters deeply. 8) Toki is a very, very wounded woman. Very wounded.

Also I’m sorry this chapter was late. I’ve been feverish since pretty much Friday, and I had to go to Urgent Care today to get an IV bag of fluids put into me because I got too dehydrated in my sleep.

Silverwing Notes: let’s see. What did we cover. Oh yeah.

SOME FUCKIN FEELS.

ENJOY THE CHAPTER, DEAR READERS.

True to word- not three weeks later, Toki got to play her hand at midwife once more when Sapphire went into labor several hours into Toki’s work shift. Tenne was at work again- so it wasn’t like she could send her bees to get him, and she still didn’t have a phone of some sort. Either way, Toki had to go about it on her own, with Grillby to assist.

Sapphire was a doll about it though. The fire elemental put Grillby in charge of Kai and Quinn, and had him run the bar through out the morning while Toki kept her company while she labored. Fire elemental births, Toki learned rather quickly, were horrendously fast. And very, very messy. Very messy.

Sapphire’s labor was considered ‘long’ for being four hours long, and the delivery was considered even ‘longer’ for taking nearly an hour to push. Apparently twenty minutes was supposed to be a long birth- Fire elementals, because of their relative fragility, were very, very easily killed when they were in the stages of labor and delivery, as were their young. It was very easy for a mother to dust during a delivery too, if they got too stressed or distressed over something. Hence Sapphire sending the worrying Grillby downstairs until the last minute to occupy the children, while Toki kept her energy up with jolts of venom to her system.

‘Better than coffee’, Sapphire would tell her each time.

All the same, Fuku Fyrus was born shortly after eight at night- and ignited just a hair after her delivery. The squalling, green infant had her mother’s horns, and her father’s size, which likely accounted for her mother’s struggles in delivering her. Toki had cradled the muck covered baby to her equally muck covered clothes, and was glad she hadn’t ignited with her, unlike with Solstice.

Once Sapphire and Grillby had cuddled and assured each other that she was alright, despite the dimming of her flames and general fatigue, Fuku had been passed over, and the new parents had proceeded to remain upstairs for the rest of the evening.

Toki had strapped on an apron over her shirt after turning it inside out, and then gone back to work to finish up the rush, before closing up the bar. She and the boys made a slow way home.
Toki was beat—honestly exhausted—by the day. She had been beyond paranoid about Sapphire getting hurt or dusting once the blue elemental had explained the fragility of fire elementals in labor to her, and Toki had dumped a lot of her energy into her. Her magic wasn’t even nearly depleted—no, she’d basically taken a spoonful out of an ocean; an ocean behind a dam with a leaky faucet on it, but a spoonful all the same.

The delivery had reminded her quite frankly that her children’s birthdays had come… and gone. She’d been so lost in this new world that she had completely forgotten the date—and her twins, her beautiful, amazing twin babies… they were a year old now— or should be a year old now. It made her soul hurt inside, and made her feel old. Old and worn and hollowed out, and it made her feel very, very tired, instead of happy like she should be.

Kai and Quinn helped to some extent—but not completely. The balm was there, but… not enough. Not enough to soothe the ache of loss that the birth of a new life brought on.

She was just tired, and her feet were dragging through the snow, and it took every ounce of her being to build up her walls and mask so that the boys didn’t notice the chip in her facade.

The boys seemed to have boundless energy—even if they were actively keeping up-wind of her. Even Quinn seemed to keep ahead of her.

She smelled something god-awful, according to Kai. Toki honestly couldn’t smell anything—she was coated from her chest to her knees in viscera from Sapphire’s delivery, and she couldn’t smell anything past the taste of grease from the fryers on her tongue. She was, effectively, scent blind.

It didn’t matter, honestly. She’d go wash off in the morning—she was too tired to make the trip during the night. Though… She might just anyways. She may just need the time alone, to think and to ponder her children.

Though pondering might not be the best idea, she knew. Cruelty had been making snide comments all day—they were grating on her slowly, and being alone wouldn’t help. Being with others gave her something else to focus on besides his hateful words and tone.

As they reached the house, Toki trudged up to the door and let the kids rush in. They headed up to their rooms in a whirlwind of motion to go change their clothes, and left Toki standing in the doorway, haggard and tired from the day’s activities, and the ever present and pesky wound to her soul.

She scrubbed a hand down her face, and stepped inside. Her shirt was pretty ruined—the blue was not going to come out of the white, she knew that much. She didn’t have the materials to do her mother’s old concoction to get stains out—so she was going to be down one shirt out of her available seven. At least it was her white one—she didn’t look her best in it anyways. Like she had told Papyrus, white tended to wash out those who had white skin, and she was no different. Toki looked better in her earthy tones of browns, blues, and greens. Blacks too, now that she thought about it.

Toki shut the door and plodded for the couch. She eased her bag off her back, and set her daily gold down next to it on the coffee table. Her tired wings flexed, and she rolled her ankles, trying to coax the feeling back into her toes before she went to go cook. As she breathed, she could vaguely scent something on the air—and she wasn’t sure what it was. The grease was too thickly coated on her tongue. She needed a good drink of something to wash it away, so she could properly inhale.

"Sounds like you had a long day." There was a gentle rumble of a voice that came accompanied by a tall glass of water for her to drink. "And by the smell of things... We've got a new Fyrus to welcome to the world."
Toki quirked a smile as she turned to the voice, and her eyes flicked up to Tenne. It took effort to move her frame, and she made her way to him quietly. “Yes to both things, though that’s not all.” The glass of water was accepted, and she savored it as she used it to clear her mouth. “Mmm… Little miss Fuku was born about eight-o-clock tonight. Ah- are you cooking?” Now that her mouth was clearing itself out, she could detect the smell of food- and of her shirt. She glanced down at it and sighed. “Ah… I’m sorry about the smell. I’ll dispose of my shirt and go wash my pants and myself in the morning.”

"No need, just put them in the side-sink and I’ll take care of them myself." He told her gently. "But for now, I don’t want you to sweat anything. I made you dinner, and I want you to enjoy it before you get some much deserved rest.”

Toki didn’t have it in her to argue. She simply sighed, and gave him a soft, grateful look. “Thank you.” She says softly. “I wish you the best of luck getting my shirt white again, but… Thank you. For dinner, and everything. Let me quick change, before I offend the boys even more with my ‘stench’. ” She chuckles gently. The glass of water is set down, and Toki heads out to the living room.

She doesn’t bother going elsewhere to change- her wings make more than enough of a barrier to keep others from seeing, and she’s swift anyways about removing her shirt, and slipping a new, clean one on, along with her pants. She foregoes her pants, however, for a loose skirt, and balls up the gross clothes into a wad that she brings back into the kitchen. They’re stuffed into the side of the sink as requested.

Quinn and Kai are back downstairs about this time, and she waves to the boys as she comes to take a seat at the table. Her wings droop over the back of her chair.

Kai sniffs as he comes in. His face scrunches. “Still stinky, but not as bad.” He decides, and slides into his own chair. He tugs Quinn’s out for him, and settles down to look up at his father.

Toki chuckles. “Alas, I’m too tired to go to the river tonight. You’ll have to deal with the smell until tomorrow, kiddo.” She yawns. She glances up to Tenne. “Speaking of tired… How was work?” They were waiting on results from her venom, she knew.

"It might not be as warm, but I have a bucket and rag in the back for emergencies that you could use after dinner." Tenne chuckled gently as he set about moving around the kitchen. "Work was fine. Your venom is still being studied. However one of the caps was loose and the venom inside cooled down. I discovered that once it's cooled, the enzymes break down and what results is a very rich, albeit green, honey."

Toki blinked at that. “… So what you’re saying,” she says slowly, “Is I apparently make honey once the venom cools.” That… that was just… Hilarious. She laughed lightly, a hand sliding tiredly up to her face. Who needed a hive or an apiary when you could literally make your own honey? Toki scrubbed her face a little bit. “Is it safe for consumption?” She wondered. She could probably give it away as a treat in gift baskets if it was. Well. Once it had cooled and become non-toxic.

"Well it tasted pretty good in my tea." He chuckled. "And I'm still standing, as you can see."

“You tested it on yourself?” She asked him incredulously, eying him lightly. “You are… probably the craziest man I know, good lord.” Toki huffs and runs her claws through her mane.

Kai blinked at her. “Well, better daddy than someone else, I guess. Daddy’s tough.” He nods. Then he grins. “So can you make more of this ‘honey’ stuff if it’s so good? I bet it’s really tasty, right Quinn?”
“Nyeh!” Quinn beamed, patting the table excitedly as he glanced at Toki, and then at his dad.

Toki chuckles. “I suppose I could, if you’ve got some jars.” She might have used some of it today, but Toki had the feeling that her venom was tied to her magic- and thusly, was going to be never-ending until she got rid of the massive ocean inside of her.

“I have a few put away. They’re still clean inside, so you could start draining immediately. It would be beneficial if you have a build-up of magic in you, though don’t overdo it, alright?” Tenne gave her a smile.

'\textit{Drain all you want, you have a mass of magic within you that will never fade until the day I detonate us.}' Cruelty grumbled, voice sliding into her mind like hot oil.

‘I’ve got a tight rein on the magic, Cruelty. It’s locked behind a nice little dam- and you’re not going to break it.’ Sure the dam had it’s leaky spots- hence her never-ending flow of magic- but he wasn’t going to burst it.

Toki gave Tenne a smile. “I can work on draining after we have dinner.” She says. “Because I do have a small overabundance of magic, and I can drain and relax at the same time.”

"Sounds like a plan." He chuckled, "In the mean time, I can start to fill the pail with some water for you, so you can at least freshen up a little bit without going to waterfall. But first, your dinner." he announced, scooting around the kitchen as he collected it.

Toki laughed as she shifted at the kitchen table. The boys shifted with her, and watched Tenne flit around the kitchen. She hummed, and smiled to him. “Thank you again for doing dinner, Tenne.” She says softly.

“We already had ‘dinner’ of sorts,” Kai chirps. He still eyes Toki all the same.

Toki eyes him back and chuckles. “I’ll share mine with you both,” She smiles obligingly.

"Nyeh!” Quinn then proceeded to pat her leg stubbornly, pouting up at her.

"I don't think Quinn wants you to share."

"Probably because Pops told him how he- Mmh!" Kai was suddenly cut off by a napkin flying into his face.

Tenne quietly put Toki’s dinner down in front of her, though without a napkin, that was no doubt what had been used to pelt Kai.

Toki simply arched a brow at all three of them and chuckled, wondering what the boy had been trying to say. “If you’re hungry, I don’t mind sharing.”

Kai spits out the napkin. “Not really,” he sputters, wiping bits of paper off of his tongue.

She chuckles, and glances down to her meal, carefully picking up her utensils. She shoots Tenne a thankful look, and begins to eat, an appreciative buzzing rising from her. “So… told him how he what…?” She inquires lightly, curiosity glimmering in her eyes. The distraction from her internal thoughts was nice.

Tenne smiled at the thoughtful look, though at her question he flushed and turned his head away. "M-Made sure to cook it the way you liked."
His stutter was, she decided, adorable. Toki chuckled softly, and smiled to him. “It’s perfect.” She purred softly.

Toki was back up to nearly her usual eating habits. She ate slowly and diligently, so as not to overwhelm her body, and gave him a lopsided smile as she slowly cleaned her plate. When she was full, she set her utensils down, and did a quick cleaning of her external teeth, before smiling up at him with a sated sort of tiredness. “It was very good,” she praises. “Very… fresh.” She purrs.

It tasted like he had gotten it fresh from the butcher’s shop—not from his freezer.

Quinn chirped and giggled quietly, before disappearing from view under the table, only to run out the other side with a bone in his teeth.

"Fresh, you say… I’m glad." Tenner rumbled gently.

Toki watched him run off with an amused glance. There was a bone still on her plate, and she contemplated wanting to chew on it, before deciding that she would rather not have a mouthful of splinters. She hummed, and flexed her teeth slightly, before humming up at Tenner. "Indeed."

"Hey, Toki? I’ve been meaning to ask, but… How did you get your scar?" Kai asked curiously, motioning to the mark partially hidden by her mane. His dad had some too, but he knew how those came about.

Toki blinked, and realized she’d exposed it when she’d ruffled her mane earlier. "I caught a burning beam with my head." She gives him a lopsided smile. "It caught me pretty good. It goes further back, but my mane covers it."

"That’s very impressive.” The doctor nods. “No doubt you were saving a life when it hit you."

Toki laughed. "You know me too well. I was, yes. A pup. Thumper— a wily little male, who often got into all sorts of mischief. He got himself into trees, or others into trees, and wouldn’t know how to get down, so I’d have to go get him." Her soul panged again, and she clenched one of her secondary hands with a soft sigh. Shaking her head, Toki continued. "He had gotten trapped in the house, along with several other ones I was babysitting at the time, and there was… Well, the start of the conflict that ended up with me coming here. The house was burnt around us, and Thumper and I were the last ones out when the house started to collapse." She hums. She shakes her head with a soft sigh. "No one died though. Several got singed, and we contained the fire before it spread." Her wings flick slightly, and she sighs, before hauling herself up out of her seat. She collects her empty plate to take it to the sink, and makes her way there slowly.

"My hero." He laughed gently, following her to rest a hand on her shoulder. "And I bet he was alive and well when you departed." He rumbled.

"He was." She nods. "He… Lost his mother and father to those who we were fighting." Her secondary hand came up to rest gently on his, her fingers so dainty compared to his. "Thumper found a new family though, within the circle of my pack. He was family." She smiles softly. Her fingers tighten on his, and Toki sighs. She missed him. She missed them all. "He was alive… As were the rest of my pack, thanks to my… My sacrifices."

Becoming a living prison for Cruelty had not been her intention. She hadn’t known he could control her… But she paid the price for her lack of knowledge and her ignorance. She would handle her consequences as they came.

He smiled, and as his hand stayed firm on her shoulder, the other came around and gave her a tight hug, his head coming to rest on hers. "Every time you tell me this, it just reminds me of how I’m looking into the face of a brave, selfless hero~" He purred sweetly.

Unheard to Tenne, Cruelty snorted loudly for Toki to hear, 'Oh please! Don't make me laugh.'

As his chin nestled against her fluff, Toki folded her wings so he could properly hug her. It felt... It felt honestly nice to be hugged. She was so tired and hurting inside... Just being held was nice, even for a little while. She leaned into him faintly. "I'm anything but brave, Tenne." She smiles awkwardly. "But... I'm kind. And my drive towards being kind lends me a sort of false bravery sometimes. Sometimes it works and sometimes it comes around to bite me in the arse."

'I'm not brave. But I was selfless enough to try and think of a more merciful way to keep you from reincarnating. And rather than seal you in a genie lamp for the rest of eternity with no one to talk too... At least I'm more fun than solitude, eh Cruelty?'

At her words of denial, Tenne chuffed stubbornly as he shook his head into her mane, "Your effort to get to where you are now shows bravery in its purest form." He murmured softly, 'I see it, even if you are struggling to."

'I'm starting to wonder...' Cruelty replied sharply.

"I don't feel brave all the time." She smiles quietly, mane ruffling against his touch. "But... Thank you. I try to be brave. I... I knew a bravery soul quite well within my pack. He was an inspiration for everyone." She smiles faintly. Her Papyrus had been her... He had been her will to fight, her will to protect, her titanium, her everything. He made her feel invincible. But... She wasn't. Well... She sort of was now, to some extent. But not completely. "He inspired me to try and be more than what I am." She glanced back at him and gave him a slightly lost smile. "I know I probably confuse the heck out of you sometimes, and for that I am sorry."

'You have fun flinging salt in my wounds and you know it.' She replied tiredly. 'You know... You could choose to be a decent person and try to change, Cruelty. I know I'm picking up habits from you.' Toki had never been able to lie well in her life. Not until now. And that, she knew, was from Cruelty's side of their soul. She could feel the bleed over from their merged beings. 'Are you not getting anything from me?'

"Heh heh heh... Indeed I admit I'm a tad confused in what you mean by a 'bravery soul', but I will inquire more about that later. I've other things to do right now." Tenne chuckled gently as he gave her a soft squeeze before he let her go

'Not likely...' Cruelty scoffed, 'Even if I did, it's not like you'd let me take control to find out for myself.' He sneered.

"Confused-? Oh... Oh right." She glanced back at him, wings ruffling. "This place doesn't have titles for the colors and natures of souls." She muses softly. A soft laugh escapes her, and Toki shakes her head vehemently. "Don't bother, Tenne. This is one bit of information I think I will keep to myself. It has brought nothing but bad to my home, and has brought conflict and strife and prejudice over specific colors and natures. No." She shakes her head one more, her stance on this firm. He already knew she was a kindness soul- she'd mentioned it prior, though he might not have taken her at her word for it. He might recall it now, but who knew. Toki gives him a sad smile. "I don't want to see what happened to my world repeat in this one. So... No. Anyways... You have something I can use to sponge bathe?"

'Not while I can feel hate curling in your being, and filling your every thought. When you can let something other than cruel and hateful feelings rule your thoughts and actions... Maybe.' Toki murmurs with a soft sigh to her prisoner. She mused that she was once more a gilded cage— but this time, for a real monster.

Cruelty scoffed at her words, and settled down in her mind, going quiet once more.

Tenne's gaze changed for a moment, glimmering thoughtfully at her, but at the mention of the sponge bath, he let his thoughts be distracted away for the time being. The doctor nodded to her and turned to head upstairs. "Right- I was getting that ready for you. Please, excuse me."

"Thank you." She nods softly. She watches him go, and then sighs. Her shoulders slump, and she rubs her cheeks quietly as she turns back to the sink to lean against it, momentarily forgetting that she wasn't alone in the kitchen. She sagged a little in her joints.

She was so, so tired. Part of her was glad Cruelty had gone to 'sleep' of sorts, because she wasn't sure she had enough in her to banter wits with him again at this moment. She felt hollowed out inside, the reminder of the hate and the prejudice weighing heavy on her soul. If she delved back, she could feel the utter heartbreak and betrayal Cruelty had felt when she— when Kindness— had failed for the first time to back him up against the monsters. When, for the first time, the boss-hearts made the mistake of allowing the anti-hearts to be treated so unjustly just because of their colors.

If everything had been done different... Maybe...maybe she wouldn’t be here now. She wouldn’t have missed her babies first birthdays; her husband’s birthday, her family. Her everything.

Toki sucks in a soft breath, and curls her hands tightly over the edge of the sink. Her wings tremble, and she has to take a moment to rein herself in, lest she crack and break. She missed her children. God, she missed her children. She... She wanted to hold them, and bump her horns to Honey's and cuddle her son close to her chest.

The ache was very real and very deep, and she struggled to bury it again.

Kai and Quinn had been sitting there observing her with worry as she had her moment, and as she made to regain her calm demeanor, both boys got up.

Kai went for the stairs, while Quinn came up to Toki and began to pull on her shirt, giving soft and distressed 'Nyeh!'s as he did. Once she finally turned to him, he reached up and made grabby hands, releasing another "Nyeeeee!" to emphasize his desperation for up.

It's with a slow sort of motion that she turns, like dragging her limbs through cold honey. Quinn's desperation to get into her arms didn’t make much sense to her, at least not at the start, but it didn't stop her primary arms from reaching down and lifting him up.

He felt heavy in her arms, like she was trying to lift the world. He didn't weigh all that much—even being more blaster beast than he was Skeleton, the small child was willow and spry. She tucked him to her chest with a quiet, defeated sort of look in her eyes.

"Yes, Quinn?" Toki says softly. She can't scramble fast enough to put up her mask— it's moving at the speed of chilled molasses, and is going nowhere. "... Where did Kai go?" She murmurs a moment later as her eyes scan the kitchen for the elder child.

He gave one last 'Nyeh' and hugged her around the neck with a newfound strength, and held tight to her as he whined and mumbled into her fur.

She now had a little pup attached to her chest, and had very little chance of getting him off anytime soon.
Toki simply sighed, and tucked him close to her as he whined and mumbled into her mane. She curled her arms gently around him and nuzzled her chin to the top of his skull. "I'm sorry you had to see that." She murmurs gently to the boy. Of course. Him and Kai had probably seen her almost-meltdown. She was still struggling- she knew she probably smelled like it too. Well, what they could smell above the pheromones coating her. "I'll... I'll be okay, Quinn." She murmurs softly to the boy, voice soft and shaky.

"Mweeh... Maah..." He whined quietly, before his grip repositioned, now holding handfuls of her soft fur. "Maamah!"

Toki froze, throat tightening and a soft, choked noise left her initially until she managed to swallow past the massive lump in her throat. Her chest throbbed tightly, soul clenching in her chest like someone had snared it in a vice grip, and she felt her eyes prickling. "W-what?"

"Maaam... Mah... Mama!" Quinn practically yelped into her fur.

The timing was impeccable, as Tenne had just returned with Kai. Tenne had been worried at hearing his yelp, but the word was recognized and it rendered him stiff, purple eyes blowing wide.

There was no hiding now- no hiding what had been lost. The word shattered the fragile control she was trying to gather for herself, and Toki's vision fogged over with green tears as Tenne and Kai returned. Her shoulders trembled, wings shivering, and her arms tightened around Quinn.

The sound that came from her was not loud, nor was it scary. But there was a low, bubbling keen that warbled up from inside of her chest, and it escaped her mouth in sob as her eyes flinched closed. It wasn’t just a sound of loss- no. That was a mother who had lost her children- and who still mourned their loss.

Her children might have been alive and well back in her world- but she would never know. She wouldn’t know how they were doing, she wouldn’t see them grow, hear their stories, watch them change and mature- she had nothing to assure her that nothing hadn’t happened in the wake of her leaving, to either her children or Papyrus.

All she had was the empty holes in her soul where the bonds to her children had been torn away. Forty two weeks she had carried them- forty two weeks, and then almost a year in her arms, and she had been ripped away from them.

Being called Mama hurt. It hurt in so, so many ways.

Toki's stiffness melted away into heartbreaking sobs as she clutched one of the only small balms she had to the endless ache the missing soul bonds her children had left behind.

Large tears grew from Quinn's eyes and ran down his cheeks as he nuzzled her, and it wasn't long until Kai had his head lowered, his strange bone-like lip between his teeth.

Tenne was no longer tense as he listened to the sounds of her sorrow. With one hand he slowly scooped up Kai, hiding his son's face in his shoulder, before slowly coming over to Toki. He remained watching for a moment, as if hesitant to interrupt that which she was cherishing with Quinn.

After a bit, he reached out and rested his hand on her shoulder. “Toki…” He murmured softly.

The touch to her shoulder grounded her faster than a blow to the wings mid flight would. Her eyes popped open, shoulders still trembling woefully, and Toki very nearly flinched from his touch. It was supposed to be a happy night. A good night. There was a new life born underground, her venom could make honey, and he'd been very sweet to make her dinner since she'd been late home from work. And... Well, she'd just ruined it by bursting into tears. She had also probably just confused the hell out of him.

"I... I'm sorry." The apology fell from her mouth before she could stop it, and she hiccupped helplessly, wings giving a distressed flutter. One of her hands lifted away from Quinn so she could scrub at her eyes. The tears didn't stop, and neither did her shaking. "I'm... I'm a b-broken mess." She sniffles quietly. "I... I'm sorry..." She couldn't make the tears stop. All she could do was hold onto Quinn and just plead for the pain in her soul to ease long enough for her to block it up once more.

"Toki... If you feel like you need to cry... There's nothing stopping you... I encourage it." He told her gently, reaching his hand to cup her cheek now as he lowered his forehead to hers. Now that she was a bit more attached to reality, he felt a bit more comfortable getting close to her in this state. Blaster beasts were an unknown entity- particularly females, and he had no desire to be on the opposite end of her stingers if he moved too quickly and she got defensive. "It's not healthy to bottle things away..."

"Crying... Crying doesn't help. It never helps." She whispers softly. Her eyes close again as his forehead comes to rest against hers, and she can't stop the shaky sob that bubbles forth. Her hand latches onto his shirt, clinging shakily to him. "I cry and I cry... I cried for days after I left and I tried to get home and it doesn't... It doesn't change a fucking thing. It... It wont give my babies back to me." Her whisper is just as heartbreaking as her sobs.

Her whispers hit him as if she had screamed them... and with the power of the words that escaped her, she might as well have done just that.

Kai gave a small squirm, and Tenne put him down, allowing him to embrace Toki around the waist, hugging her tightly as Tenne ended up doing the same.

'T-Tch...' That wasn't the normal scoff that would come from Cruelty. It almost sounded like there was a lump in his throat.

Toki had no comment or reply for Cruelty this time either. Her consciousness simply brushed his, and then left him be. But she would remember this.

Her arms were everywhere, a tangled mess as she clutched Kai to her, and Tenne to her as well, as if they were helping to keep her grounded and from being blown away on the winds of her internal agony. Quinn was shifted and tightly held to her chest, but where he wouldn’t be crushed- and Toki simply let the kind family that had taken her in bring her back down from the waves of pain she had been lost to. Her sobs took time to pass, and she had stained Tenne's shirt a garish green color by the time her tears, and subsequent shakes, came to pass.

When she felt less easily shattered by something as simple as a light wind, her arms loosened around them just a tad, and she sniffled softly. Toki wasn’t... Better or fixed. Not by a long shot. But... But it helped. Just... Being held, and holding someone while she let go of her tears. She felt hollow, but not in the same way as before.

Where there had been only loss and pain, there was now something else. She had friends here- this might not have been her world, or her home... But these were her friends too, and Quinn... Sweet, sweet Quinn, he loved her like she was his mother, and he didn’t know any better. He hadn’t known any other- and Toki was always one to take care of children.

And she... She was not afraid to say she loved both boys. She had been helping care for them- and Toki... Toki always loved very easily.
Part of that might have been one of her flaws—she loved too easily. She was also so easily hurt by it.

So she was... Hollow. But more of an exhausted hollow than the empty hollow that she was before.

"Thank you." She rasps softly, shakily leaning into Tenne. Her limbs felt like they were made of pudding.

"Of course..." He purred gently. A soft chuckle left him as he glanced at his youngest, who was still firmly clinging onto Toki’s fur, with no intention of letting her go. "It looks like you're going to have Quinn stuck to you for the night... I will see if he will let you go long enough to bathe, but tonight, you deserve a bit more than a night's sleep on the sofa. You've deserved it longer than that, from what I’ve come to learn tonight..." His voice trailed off, to a small, sort of bitter note.

"I... I'm okay on the sofa. I doubt I'll be alone, so... It's okay." Quinn likely wasn't going to let her sleep alone tonight. Probably not Kai either, based on how tightly the boy was holding onto her leg. Toki leaned back enough to scrub her eyes, and huffed softly through her mouth. She had made a mess out of his shirt, she realized. Toki knew she had tear tracks on her face still. "I... I still do need a wash though. Especially after crying like that. Ah... Kai? Are you okay, sweetie...?"

The boy simply sniffled and nodded into her hip. He didn’t let her go either.

Toki had two limpets it seemed. Though the one with his hands in her fur would be far harder to remove.

"Toki, please. I insist. It will allow Quinn to stay close to you tonight as well." Tenne told her gently. "I'll sleep in my chair tonight. It's comfortable, so you don't need to worry about me."

“I’m going to worry anyways.” Toki murmurs softly, and rubs Quinn’s back with one of her hands. She bounces him gently, hoping to get his little tears to stop. “You’re not used to sleeping on something that’s not your bed. You’re going to get a crick in your back.” She was used to the couch. She’d been sleeping on it for months now— it was practically as familiar to her as her bed back home was.

“Why don’t we all just sleep in your room?” Kai’s muffled voice comes from her hip. His hands tighten on her skirt. “Your bed is big enough, Daddy, to hold the whole pack. And it... seems like it would be one of those nights where we should all be together...”

Tenne reached out and tenderly set a hand on Kai’s head, "It is indeed big enough, my son..." He then sighed. "Emotionally compromised beings, especially mourning mothers, only risk falling deeper into despair if they seclude themselves. As a father, I would feel the same were I to lose that which I cherished, and I know a few faces that would refuse to leave me alone in such a state. I will not force you, but I plead you will reconsider."

Quinn looked up at Toki, and gave a quiet whimper as he reached up and cupped her cheeks. "N-neh...” He hiccupped. “Nyeh..."

‘G-God damn it... Kindness! Just accept his fucking offer! Do you really think you're strong enough to get through this yourself? Just say yes!’ Was a sudden snarl from Cruelty, 'He's as fucking hardheaded as you are! So just take the offer!' Cruelty’s sudden snarl was not expected, and it took a lot of control not to flinch. ‘I didn’t think you cared enough about me to tell me to do anything for my own good.’ She comments quietly. ‘... Thank you, though.’ She murmurs softly.

‘T-ch.’
Toki nuzzles the small hands touching her tear-stained cheeks, and leans forth to kiss Quinn’s brow gently. She held him gently, sighed softly to the three of them. “Okay.” She murmurs. “Okay… Once I get cleaned up, I wouldn’t mind if we all crashed together for the night.” She rubs Quinn’s cheeks with hers, purring soothingly and rubbing her hand along Kai’s skull.

Kai sniffles into her leg and nods. “Good. I’ll go get the bed all ready. Daddy can help you get cleaned up. And see if he can get Quinn to let go.” He nuzzles her leg once more, and then his Dad’s hand, and runs off up the stairs.

Tenne smiled a little, and watched Kai go. ”That’s my boy.” He purred, before he reached out and gently rubbed Quinn’s back. ”No more tears, my pup. It’s going to be okay…”

”N-Nyeh!” Quinn shook his head stubbornly, and then reached up and rubbed his eyes with his fists, hiccupping from how hard he had been crying into Toki’s mane.

Toki crooned gently and bounced him, her hands tenderly stroking his lower back. ”It’s okay Quinn… It might not be okay now, but… in time… it will be, I promise.” She soothed softly. One of her hands came up and stroked over his cheeks, gently brushing his tears away. ”Can you go to your daddy for me?” Her voice remains soft and gentle, despite the rough undertone from her sobs that it retained. ”I need to get washed up, sweetie…”

The child gave another hiccup that seemed to interrupt a ’nyeh’ before he looked back at his father with watery eyes.

Tenne gently scooped him into his arms, and propped him up against his shoulder. ”Oh Quinn, my sweet pup.” He purred softly as he cuddled him close to his chest. ”I’ve got you.”

Quinn didn’t fight his father’s hold, but he was whimpering a bit as he looked back at Toki. He was clearly eager for her to go and wash off and be done with it; the sooner the better.

Toki lifted a hand to give Quinn’s head a gentle pet, before smiling up at Tenne. ”I’ll meet you at your room.” She murmurs softly. She skirts around him, moving sluggishly, and makes her way up the stairs and towards the ‘bathroom’ of sorts. Running water wasn’t applicable until the core was functional enough to run power lines out here, but… Well, that just wasn’t going to be a thing for a long while.

All the same, Toki made quick work scrubbing herself up in the bathroom. The water bucket was heated up and sanitized, and she cleaned and dried herself off, before doing the same to her clothes.

When she left the bathroom, she was cleaner and more refreshed, and she smelled less terrible. She still looked exhausted and spent though, her wings drooping and dragging along the floor instead of folding up neatly like they usually did. She made it to his room and hesitated, before quietly knocking on the door.

”Come on in.” Tenne’s voice called out to her from inside, followed by an excited ‘NYEH!’ from Quinn.

Toki smiled at the ‘Nyeh’, and trudged inside. She very nearly shut one of her wings in the door, and had to actually expend the effort to move it out of the way, instead of her body instinctively just shuffling it for her.

Once her wayward limbs were out of the way, she did a quick scan of his room, before her eyes settled on his bed.

Kai had done a very good job of turning it into a nest. There were pillows- obviously from his and Quinn’s bed, based on the childish prints covering the cases on the outside-lining most of the edges, and blankets strewn everywhere. The pudgy child was stubbornly trying to weave a blanket into the edge of a pillow casing so it wouldn’t fall off the edge of the bed, effectively tying the whole thing together into one smooth ring. He was making small frustrated sounds as it refused to obey.

The whole nest was not unlike the ones she and Papyrus used to make on the living room floor when the weather was bad- and they’d usually find the nest filled with Tenebris, Sans, and pretty much the whole ‘pack’ as it was.

Tenne and his children had obviously done the nesting thing several times before, if Kai had this much practice.

Toki smiled faintly, feeling a little like she was intruding upon private family time, and shuffled on her paws. “… Where do you want me to settle?”

“Well, if you're in your sleepwear, simply climb in and get comfortable. I usually take the outer ring, but there will be room for your wings if you face inward.” Tenne explained, now in more comfortable sleepwear, plus his sweater.

Toki glanced at her skirt and shirt. The skirt would be a little pesky, but she didn’t have the desire or energy to go down the stairs to go fetch pants. “… I don’t really have sleepwear.” She comments softly. “So yeah, I’m good to go.”

Toki approached the edge of the bed, gently brushing Kai’s fingers away. She gingerly tucked the blanket into the pillow casing and secured it, and then smiled as the boy huffed and flopped over to land on his father. She settled in on that side, opposite on the outer ring from Tenne, and stretched out on her side.

Her wings flopped limply over the edge of the bed, draping like sad rice paper with bones.

His bed was comfortable, she had to admit. Toki settled down, and with her settling, the ambient temperature of his bedroom rose as she warmed it instinctively. “Is here alright?” She was just across from him- facing him, actually- which left the center of the nest for the boys to curl up or sprawl out in. Her feet brushed Tenne’s tail, as well as the loose pleats of her skirt.

Tenne grunted as he was landed on and he chuckled, giving him a squeeze before letting him go once more, as Toki got comfy. He watched her to make sure she adjusted well enough, but as her feet brushed his, he rumbled and responded as his feet extended and gently hooked on hers. A loud purr resonated from him at this point and he smiled happily. "Absolutely perfect." He replied.

Once she was settled, his tail came around and slowly formed another ring along the exterior of the nest for as long as it could reach.

She glanced at his tail as it curled around the length of the nest. One of her fingers came up and brushed the edge of it, trailing over it lightly. She hummed a soft sound, toes flexing against his. She stretched her legs, and let them tangle more with his and simply savoring touch in general. Toki gave Tenne a tired smile.

“Hey, Toki? Can I see one of your wings?” Kai asks quietly as he settles against Tenne’s side. He poked Quinn, and got him to shift so he wasn’t sitting on his tail.

Toki nodded. Her closest wing lifted with great effort, and extended over the nest as she shifted her shoulder. For the lack of energy to hold it up, she simply plopped it down lightly on Tenne.

It was thin and gossamer like- and felt like it weighed nothing as it touched down against him. Her wings were so delicate, the thin membrane glowing, but also translucent.

Kai pressed his fingers to her wings and petted them gently, and was rewarded with a soft, relaxed buzz from Toki. "Whoa." He blinks. "Daddy, you've got to feel these. They feel so weird!"

His tail shuttered under her hand and Tenne gave a soft exhale, a smile on his face. At the beckoning from his son, he tilted his head and chuckled, "If Toki has no problem with it."

"I don’t mind. You won’t hurt me.” Toki smiled faintly. Given the fact that her wing was touching him, it was only fair he could touch it back. She sighed softly, and glanced to Quinn. “Are you going to stay over there all night?” She questions teasingly to the smaller monster.

As soon as he was spoken to, Quinn happily scrambled underneath her form, getting comfortable in her mane.

Tenne had waited for Quinn to get comfy, as it would no doubt result in Toki moving, but once it was clear, he gently set the wing in the palm of one hand, using the other to gently stroke the wing. "How lovely.” He purred.

Toki nestled Quinn up into her mane, and tucked him close with a content sigh. Her fur fluffed and settled in waves as Tenne started to stroke her wing. It felt not unlike a silky paper-like his claws could break through at any moment. However, it wouldn’t give, even if he pushed on it.

Toki murmured contently, and closed her eyes, a soft sound leaving her. Her joint relaxed, letting her wing go boneless in his grasp. “That feels nice.” She murmurs gently.

He rumbled quietly as he continued to stroke the thin yet strong wing in his hands, and steadily his hands wandered higher, towards the base of her wings on her back. "They do too... such an intricate and unique texture.” He mumbled in reply.

Kai sat back against his father, his hands returning to his lap with a pleased smirk growing on his face as he relaxed. His feet stretched out, draping over Toki’s hips, and he settled down to relax and watch.

Toki shifted closer bit by bit as his hands worked towards the base of her wings. Her wings could get so sore when she flew for too long- the muscles could get tired and overworked. It was an unpleasant sensation, but the higher he worked, the more she could feel the flesh loosening and relaxing. Her shoulder rotated towards him a little bit, arms bracing so she didn’t squish Quinn, and she did buzzed softly. Her fingers stroked Quinn’s skull. “Insect wings are definitely different,” She mused. Hers weren’t like normal bug wings- but she wasn’t a normal bug. “I’m glad you like feel of them though… Mmm…”

There was a complaint growing from Quinn as Toki moved, but he went quiet again as he realized she was just adjusting.

"They are very nice, I’m not quite sure what I could compare them to, though..." Tenne mused.

“There’s nothing really that you would know of.” She chuckles with a wry amusement. Rice paper was definitely not something English-speaking monsters would use habitually. Toki sighed gently, and opened her eyes to look at him again. “But that’s okay. You don’t have to compare them to anything.” She quirks a smile. “So long as bug wings don’t bother you, that’s alright with me.”

"I think they're beautiful.” He had a sweet look waiting for her when she looked up at his face, though soon he returned her wing to her and nestled into the bedding with a sigh.
“Thank you.” She smiled. Toki wondered if Papyrus would think they were beautiful. She shook her head, and tucked her skull down gently, curling her arm through her horn so she could pillow her head on her bicep. Toki gave him a faint smile as she shifted back onto her side again, her wing simply dropping down to rest against her back.

She radiated warmth in the nest, and soon, Kai squirmed away from Tenne to settle against her stomach, curling up into a ball against her with a soft, pleased sigh. He stretched his legs out to his dad, trying to tug him closer with his heels.

He didn't need the pulling from his son. He was unconsciously lured closer by the warmth, his tail coming over the rim of the nest to coil around her a little tighter.

As the warmth better washed over Tenne, he gave an appreciate chuff and his toes curled, before relaxing once more.

Toki, for all her tiredness, didn’t quite settle to sleep as soon as Quinn or Kai did. It took her some time, so she was fully aware as Tenne started to ease in closer to her. Her warmth was a hard lure to resist, after all.

She didn’t settle until he had eased closer to her. The familiar feel of having a larger body near hers, even if it wasn’t wrapped around her, was comforting, as well as having the boys pressed to her. It wasn’t a replacement for what she had been taken from… but it helped make it hurt less in that particular moment. She sighed softly and nestled closer to him, air passing between her teeth as she curled up just slightly around the boys.

Nothing could replace what she had. But one could suppose the family she lived with now took this as a message. That though she had lost much, it did not mean that she would be forced to be with left without.
A particularly nasty cold snap hit in the Underground only two weeks later, and it made walking to and from work unbearable. The winds were rough though, and Toki didn’t feel like braving them to try and fly through the worst of them.

She wasn’t the only one suffering though- everyone was struggling to keep warm, and the fireplaces were constantly belching out smoke, making it more unpleasant to fly.

She wasn’t coming home from work though- Toki had just gotten back from her now-usual run to the market, where she was selling her jars of honey. The jars were always returned- Toki always bought the jars back from people who had paid for them and she would refill them, and begin the ‘honey making’ process again.

It was… fun in a way. Very relaxing and just… familiar, even if it was a completely alien sort of process in how they did it. The venom had to be cooled, where in it thickened and turned inert and harmless. It was pretty cool to watch. It wasn’t all that lucrative a process for making money though- but Toki just didn’t feel right about charging high prices to the monsters Underground.

The only reason she was selling it in the first place was because they refused to just accept it for free. So she was selling the large jars for no more than fifteen gold, and the smaller for ten. She felt that was fair enough- it helped her get by, and she ended up only paying two or three gold per jar to get them back, if the people would even let her buy them.

Her honey was a fairly big hit too- ever since she took it to market a week back. She was getting lots of gifted jars from folks who didn’t need them anymore, apparently. She suspected some of the gifted jars were ones she had sold- but given that she had no way to make labels… well, there was no proof.
That was a ‘hint hint’ if she ever saw it.

She’d need to fill up more jars, once she got inside and warmed up. She’d been standing in the snow and ice for more than just a couple hours, and her paw pads were so numb that she couldn’t feel them.

She made her way up to the house, and got inside, shaking the snow and ice off her clothes with a gust of magic.

The jars in her backpack rattled, announcing her return home as she settled them on the couch. She’d need to wash them before refilling them, but it wasn’t something that she minded doing. A bit of snow in a bucket with some fire magic worked wonders.

Toki hummed and plodded for the kitchen, intending to make herself some tea and honey to help warm up.

She hummed a merry tune, and fluttered her wings as she collected down some extra mugs. The kids liked her tea- particularly with extra doses of honey in it. The smell of it brewing would bring them running, no doubt. It would bring Tenne down from where the trio were no doubt spending time together while he was off work.

Indeed there was the sound of the upstairs doors opening, as well as footsteps of eager pups coming down the stairs.

They stopped short, however, and silence was thick for a few moment.

Without warning, a scream pierced the air before erupting into wails.

The teapot was nearly dropped and shattered. Toki scrambled to put it down, her fur fluffing at the shriek and wails that followed, and she was out of the kitchen and into the living room swiftly. Her eyes scanned the room for the kids, and found them by the stairs. She zeroed in on the distressed children. “Boys?” She calls, concerned, and makes a beeline for them. “Boys, what’s wrong?”

Kai was holding Quinn but looked very happy to see Toki, "Oh thank goodness, you're okay..." he spoke.

His words caught Quinn's attention and he looked up at her, reaching up and making desperate grabby hands for her. "Mama! Mama!" He wailed.

"BOYS!" There was then a roar from upstairs before Tenne leapt over the banister of the stairs, landing on the bottom floor on his feet. His tail swished, blade scraping the floor, before he stood tall and looked at his boys worriedly. For a moment relief was present on his face as he realized that they were okay and unharmed. It faded away to panic the moment that he saw the blood tracks leading right towards the winged woman standing before them. "T-Toki! Oh my god! What happened?!"

Toki had stooped to scoop up Quinn, her soul flinching a bit at being called ‘Mama’. She wasn’t going to deny him, however, and simply cuddled the distressed child to her neck, and tucked Kai gently to her side. Tenne’s arrival was expected- but it did draw her attention.

His words, and those of the children, only confused her. She gave him a blank look. “... What?” She glanced down at herself. She looked otherwise fine- except for the small green stains around her otherwise usually snow white feet, and the not so small stains on the floor.

Oh. Oh. That’s what they were panicking over.
As she walked, she had left bloody green paw prints on the floor from the lacerated spots on her paws that she couldn’t feel. Like Tenne’s trick with the card, her body hadn’t expected to need to defend- and apparently the ice did more than enough to open her feet up nicely.

She lifted one of her feet, and looked at the deep oozing cuts on the bottoms of her usually soft pads. She had rocks and all other sorts of stuff stuck in there. She made a face. “… Apparently I cut my feet while I was down at the market.” She supplies, sounding unsure. “I don’t really… know. I didn’t notice until you all said something.” Her feet were effectively blocks of ice still. “I’ll be okay if I can just get a wet cloth to scrub the stuff out with, I promise.”

At that, Tenne thumped a foot and gave her a stubborn look. "No. Absolutely out of the question, Toki." He growled, before he pointed to the couch. "Sit your thorax down on the couch right now." He ordered, before going to the kitchen and avoiding the tracks she had made to grab a towel and a tub, which he then proceeded to bring out to the front room.

Was that his dad voice he was using on her?

"The only work I want you doing right now is heating the water to get the feeling back in your feet. And after that, I am taking you to get some shoes for your pads, young lady." He was definitely using his dad voice.

Toki sighed, and made her way over to the couch. Not alone, however. Kai helped her over, seeming concerned about her possibly limping, and Quinn was attached to her neck tight enough that they might never pry him off.

Toki really just needed to buy a sling for Quinn, honestly, and just let him cling onto her ruff all the time without her needing to use her hands.

She made it to the couch, and rolled her eyes at the dad voice he gave her. “Yes Daddy.” She replies teasingly, using Kai’s name for him, and then gives him a dry smile. “I am many years too old for you to take the dad tone with me, Tenne.” She hums. “Go get some snow, and I’ll melt and heat it, alright? Not a big deal. And, ah… Really with the shoes? I haven’t earned that much from honey sales yet.”

Kai huffs. “If you can’t, Daddy can help pay for them.” He head-butts her shoulder irritably. “Right, Daddy?”

Though his cheeks tinged a shade of gray at being called 'Daddy' with that tone of voice, he gave a nod. "There's no 'if' about it. I'm going to pay for them myself, and she can keep her money." He told him, before grabbing the tub and going outside to scoop up some clean snow.

Kai nodded after his father with a pleased look. “Good. See Toki? Daddy’s going to get you shoes, and you wont have bleeding feet anymore.”

Toki sighed, letting her head thump back onto the couch again. “I can’t win between the both of you, can I?”

“Nope.” Kai shakes his head, and then nudges Quinn. “Quinn. Quinn. Toki’s gonna be okay. We’re gonna get her some shoes, and she’s not going to hurt her feet anymore.”

Quinn whimpered in reply and looked up at his brother, sniffling softly. "Momma." It was unclear if he was answering his brother or correcting him.

Toki tilted her head down and peppered Quinn’s face with soft kisses. “No more tears, Quinn. I’m gonna be okay.” She smiled for him. “Your Daddy’s going to use his doctor skills and fix me up, and I’ll be all better.” Her feet would probably ache, unless he healed up the cuts instead of just bandaging them.

She might have a small fit if he tried to seal them with his healing saliva. She had her limits.

Toki smooshed Quinn’s little cheeks in her secondary hands, and wiggled them. “It’s gonna be okay, squirt.”

Kai grins. “Yup. Like she said, it’s gonna be okay.” He pats her arm, and glances back at the door as Tenne comes back.

Tenne returned with what looked like a fire in his eyes as he toted in the tub full of snow before he put it down in front of Toki. "There. Now you can work your magic." He told her, before he gave a small smile, "Literally."

Quinn whined as he was smooshed but rubbed his eyes and seemed to recover well enough with this reassurance.

Toki offered him a smile, and rubbed Quinn’s cheeks, before leaning forwards. She set a hand on the tub, and pushed her magic into it. It steamed a little bit, but the snow rapidly began to melt inwards, turning from a thick pile into a puddle of slush- and from slush into cold water. The cold water, after a few minutes and a bit more magic, began to heat up a bit. As it began to warm, Toki lifted her hand away, and replaced it with her feet.

She made a small face, and grimaced as her frozen toes slid into the warm water. “Well, that’s uncomfortable.” She grumps.

'I'm going to especially hate you when the feeling comes back to our feet, Toki.' Cruelty growled.

As her feet soaked, Tenne went around and collected some things he'd need to wrap her feet up.

‘Cruelty, I'm pretty sure I'm going to hate myself more than you will. At least you get muffled feelings instead of the full ones most times.’

Indeed she would. As her frozen feet started to thaw, the water started to stain more of a green color as her frozen veins started to really open up. Her nerves, however, started to go off, and it took everything she had to not shred the arm of the couch. She hummed a pained tune, and tried to keep herself as distracted as she could.

As soon as her feet showed signs of proper blood flow, Tenne stepped in to help. He gently took one of her feet in his hands to clear the wounds of debris before bundling them in soft towels, and then set the first on his large thighs as he tended to the other, "With defense as high as you claim I am disappointed, Toki..." Tenne huffed.

She looked at him and rolled her eyes. “I’m not a god, Tenne. You cut me with a card. Even my defense has its weak moments. I got too cold, and my defense couldn’t compensate, I guess.” She shrugs. She still pulls faces at him as he cleans and bandages her feet, because damn does that hurt.

He gave her a look, but continued to wrap her feet. "As soon as your feet have healed, you're getting a pair of shoes." He muttered sourly, "Such damage..."

Toki wiggled her fingers lightly. “Too bad I have no idea how to heal.” She pouts. “I’m only good at burning things.” Toki waits until he’s finished one foot, and has started on the other, before giving him a cheeky grin. “But I’ll be okay to make the walk down to the clothing store. See? I’ve got shoes on.” She wiggles the bandages binding her foot.
Kai giggles.

She winks at him. At least someone found her funny.

Tenne chuckled weakly, before he sighed and shook his head, "I don’t want this happening again."

"Then we’ll make sure it wont.” Toki sighs. “I can walk down to the Vestimoves, Tenne. It’s not that long of a walk.” And the cold would re-numb the pain from her soles anyways.

He looked at her for a short while, as if contemplating this, before he sighed and nodded. "Alright. It should take some of the pain from your feet." He rumbled quietly, before he stood to go and get his own shoes. "Kai, get you and your brother's boots and coats please."

"Okay, Daddy."

As Kai scrambled up to go get the boots and coats for him and his brother, Toki shifted and gently extracted Quinn from her fur. She turned him around so he was sitting in her lap, and then played with his little feet while she waited.

Quinn snuffled quietly as he rubbed his eyes before hugging Toki's arm, nuzzling her gently with a sniffle.

She let him cling to her arm, and simply cuddled him gently. Her toes twitched in their bandages, and she sighed gently, before leaning down to make a soft tooty noise against his skull. She didn’t really have lips to do a raspberry, but she made due with what she had. “Awww, c’mon, Quinn. Perk up a bit- I’m okay, I promise. A little bit of sore feet isn’t going to slow me down.”

Quinn giggled quietly, reaching up to hug her face lovingly, "Mweh~" he purred gently.

Tenne returned moments later, adjusting his coat. The doctor smiled to Toki. "Are you ready?"

“As I’ll ever be.” She smiled up to Tenne, and peppered Quinn’s face in small kisses first. She carefully set Quinn on the couch, and then got to her feet.

Her face twisted at the unpleasant stabs of pain shooting up her legs.

Kai returned, bouncing down the stairs. He was fully dressed. He headed over to Quinn, and got his little brother’s feet into his boots, before holding his coat out. “C’mon, Quinn. Time for your coat!”

Quinn chirped and accepted his coat, sliding it on before watching as Tenne knelt and proceeded to scoop Toki off her feet and into his arms. "Up we go." He rumbled.

Toki flailed a bit, her wings spasming and briefly buzzing as she was scooped up and into his arms. "Ah! Tenne, really? I can walk!" She protests, four hands latching onto his coat as she clings to him reflexively.

Kai snorts and takes Quinn's hand, helping him off the couch and moving to stand by his dad.

"I'm not listening!" He sang cheerfully, giving her a gentle squeeze as he gave his tail to his boys, letting them trail behind him as he out the front door, and then for town.

Kai, tiny lazy genius that he tended to be at times, proceeded to use Tenne’s tail blade for a sled, seating himself on it and letting his father pull him along across the surface of the snow. He tugged Quinn down with him, and together they rode along behind their father.

Toki watched the boys over his shoulder and smiled faintly to herself, before huffing up at him. "If you throw out your back carrying me, I’m going to laugh at you.” And then probably give him a rub down because she would feel terrible. Toki wasn’t as light weight as she once was she was putting on weight again, and she was no longer a skeleton, so… That accounted for some extra pounds, even if her wings weighed practically nothing. Her legs were thick.

"I'm not that old!"

Quinn gave a giggle and a squeal as he held onto his brother as they slid over the snow, and though Tenne gave Toki a stiff look, he soon recovered to smile at the sound of his children’s happiness.

Toki reached up and poked his cheek, sticking her tongue out at him. The dark green organ flicked at him, wiggling in a prehensile way. “I wasn’t calling you old, Tenne,” she rolls her eyes, “You’re not that much older than me. I’m not a light monster to be just sweeping into your arms, however, and it’s not a short ten-foot walk or something to the Vestimoves. You could hurt yourself if you slip on the ice.”

Kai giggled with Quinn, keeping his little brother balanced. He leaned a little to the side, directing his tail from side to side. It didn’t work very well because of the shape of the blade, but it worked well enough that they were leaving very strange lines in the snow.

He pouted at her for a moment, before he chuckled lightheartedly and smiled back over his shoulder at his children trailing behind him. "Having fun, my pups?" He cooed to them.

Kai grinned up at his dad. “Uhuh! Almost as fun as flying. It’s like walking, but without the effort.”

Quinn was simply giggling.

Toki snorted. “Sledding is fun.” She laughs lightly, shifting in Tenne’s arms. One of her arms curled around his neck, and she coiled up and over his other shoulder so she could see better behind him. It brushed her horn against his neck. “Maybe once we get me some shoes, your dad and I can go pile up some snow and make you a little hill to sled on.” Most of Snowdin was flat, after all- but they could make an artificial hill.

He chittered quietly as the horn grazed his neck and he shifted, adjusting so that she could watch his sons comfortably from the grip of one arm. "Indeed so. I could see about getting the snow off the roof.” He offered.

“The snow off the roof would work wonders.” She beams to Tenne, and tickles her horn against his cheek in thanks. She hums, and grins down to the boys. “What do you think?”

“Yeah!” Kai beams. “After shoes- and after your feet are better.”

"Heh heh heh, you can't get anything past that boy." Tenne chuckled to himself as he walked, "He's impressive, isn't he? Going to grow up a young genius, he is."

"He's already a little genius." Toki beams proudly. "He just needs motivation sometimes. I am very good at motivation."

"What you call motivation, I call nagging." Kai blows a raspberry at her.

Toki blows one right back. "First off, I'm a big sister to eight little brothers. I am very, very good at encouraging others to do the things they need to do."

"So... Nagging." He grins at her.
She rolls her eyes. "Lets ask your father. Tenne? Do I nag?" She gives him a teasing grin. Whatever his answer, she's not going to be upset.

He looked at her for a moment before turning his head away with a wry smirk. "You don’t want me to answer that." He chuckled.

Toki laughed with him. "Probably not."

"Good choice, Daddy." Kai grinned to his dad. "Gotta be nice to Toki."

Toki chuckled and nudged Tenne with her horn as she settled back into his arms again. Her paws flexed.

'Hey, Cruelty? If I have combat magic, wouldn't you have had healing magic? Now that we're Balance... Or Franken-Balance, rather, shouldn't I be able to heal if you... Well, helped me learn how?' She could delve into his mind and take the info, but... She didn't want to do that just to learn to heal herself. Though counting on Cruelty to help her with something was probably moot and she had no idea why she was trying.

Maybe it was the small bit of softness she had seen in him when she had her meltdown.

What Toki didn't expect was how calm Cruelty was when he answered ‘... I would have imagined any potential magic I possessed would be passed on to you, and frankly hoped you had a point in learning how to harness it.' he seemed to pause, as if he needed to take a deep breath. 'Unfortunately, we Anti-hearts lost many attributes that you and the other Boss-hearts have come to inherit through your countless incarnations... If I ever possessed magic such as what you speak... I haven't a clue how to use it. I would be learning with you.'

‘Drats.’ Toki sighs. ‘I had kind of hoped… Since we’re two halves of a whole, and green magic is best known for healing more so than combat, that you had inherited the healing aspect. Oh well. I guess we’re both learning together, ne?’

Toki nestles into Tenne, and hums a soft thoughtful tune as she contemplates how she could practice. ‘Thank you for telling me, Cruelty.’

Tenne rumbled as he was nestled and promptly nuzzled her in return.

'Yes, Kindness...’ After a moment, though, Cruelty spoke up again, 'I think... I would like that. Regardless of having a choice or not.'

‘You always have an option.’ Toki answers as she sort of gives up and just relaxes again. ‘I’m not going to steal into your memories just to help me learn how to escape a few bruises.’

'I never would have thought... You caught a few things from me, I wouldn't have seen it past you to follow that lead as well...'

‘Well… I’ve already done it to you once. That’s how we found the Void- but… I was sort of desperate at the time. I’m not going to do it now. It’s a violation of privacy.’ Toki replies lightly. Her eyes shift, and she glances up, staring off into space. Well, not so much off into space as staring at Tenne with a thousand yard stare while he carried her along. ‘I’m not going to apologize for doing what I did to save my family and friends.’ Even if it resulted in them coming here- she knew her family was alive and not dead by her hands.

Even if she couldn’t see and couldn’t hold them… It was better to not know what they were doing, than it was to know that she had killed them because she had exploded.
Cruelty sighed, but went quiet in her mind.

Tenne spoke up. "We're here." He lowered Toki to the simplest carry in one arm against his chest as he approached the door to the clothing store.

Toki smiled and opened the door for Tenne, holding it open for him to step through- and for the boys too, as they scrambled off his tail and slid around his legs to duck inside the shop.

The shopkeeper had been singing a quiet tune to herself as she tucked away rolls of fabric in a shelf, and threads of different strength in a nearby drawer. However upon hearing the jingle of the door opening, her ears wiggled and she turned, her wooly coat giving a soft bounce as she turned to face the front door.

"Konbaaaaaanwa!" Came a friendly bleat from the lovely sheep woman behind the main counter.

The woman behind the counter was not Lana- Toki had figured this out on her first visit here. Her name was Hitsu Vestimoves- and she was Lana’s mother. Lana was about Quinn’s age, and spent a lot of time with her father. Hitsu was the sweetest thing, however- and it was easy to see where Lana had gotten it from.

Toki squirmed in Tenne’s arms, her wings perking up as she beamed at her from her place as a ‘captive. Hearing her familiar language always made her soul thump happily in her chest. She didn’t even stop before she replied to her, switching fluidly from English to her native tongue.

“Kon'nichiwa Mrs. Vestimoves! Hisashiburidesu ne. Watashi wa saishūtekini ikutsu ka no tekitetsuna kutsu o tsukuru tame ni kite iru- Tenne wa watashi ga kutsu nashi de iku jūbun'na motte ita. Watashi wa kōri de chīsana jiken o keiken shite iru kamo shiremasen. Kare wa... U’ n, jūbun ni motte imasu.”

Kai paused inside the shop, and his head whipped around on his neck. He gave Toki a strange look, sockets wide. His blue eye lights were huge as they looked at her.

Tenne tilted his head and brought Toki closer to the counter.

The sheep gave a thrilled bleat, happy to hear her guest once more speak a more familiar tongue compared to what they normally spoke, though her happiness quickly faded to worry. "Tokiko, dārin! Ā, anata no mazushī ashi! Watashi wa anata no ashi ga kizutsuite shimatta koto o taihen zan'nen ni omete imasu. Watashi wa anata ni nanjūnen mo tsudzuku kutsu o te ni ireyou!" She came around the counter and gently took one of Toki's feet into her hands, looking it over tenderly while tutting quietly. "Watashi no mazushī hito..."

Toki beamed to her, and twitched her toes as the sheep seamstress came to look over her paws. Her touch was light, and it didn’t hurt all that badly. “Mrs. Vestimoves, hontōni, watashi wa daijōbudeshou. Watashi wa sukoshi itaidesugata, watashi wa hayaku iyasudeshou, watashi wa yakusoku shimasu. Kutsu no pea wa machigainaku tasuke ni narudeshou. Tenne wa karera ni shiharu no o tasureu tsumoridesu. Kare wa toidoki sono yōna gankona hitodesuga, sore wa yoi kotoda to omoimasu. Tonikaku... Don'na shurui no kutsu ga giku to omoimasu ka? Umaku ikeba, watashi no ashikubi ni amarini mo toku ni iku mono wa arimasen. Watashi wa soko ni sasu yōna koto ga arimasu, soshite, sore o osu to, mono goto wa sore ni karamitsuku koto ga arimasu.”

Kai tugged on Tenne’s pants. “Daddy?” He whispers. “Why is Toki speaking gibberish with Mrs. Vestimoves?”

Toki flushes slightly. “Oh my gosh, I’m so sorry. I spaced that you guys wouldn’t understand.”
The sheep chuckled gently at the comment of Tenne's stubbornness, while the male carrying Toki had completely befuddled look on his face. When she spoke in English once more, he smiled lightly. "Ah, it's quite alright, Toki. You two seemed happy to speak together, though I don't suppose you'll share what you said that mentioned me?" He reached up and chuckled as he gently poked her cheek.

She turned to nip at his claw, since her teeth couldn't harm the sharp surface. Her eyes glimmered merrily at him. "Oh you know, just the usual." She explained, without explaining anything at all. Her wings flicked happily against her shoulder.

"Oh, yes." The sheep piped up with a mischievous smile. "Toki was just talking about how the gentleman to carry her in his arms is just so breathtakingly handsome~"

And with that his cheeks darkened and he sputtered slightly, "Wha-... R-really?"

Toki sputtered, her cheeks flooding a green color. "M-Mrs. Vestimoves!" She says in a flustered but scolding tone to the mischievous sheep woman smiling at them. Her secondary arms flail slightly. "Ohmygod."

Kai grins up at Toki. "Do you really think Daddy is handsome?"

Toki swallows and glances down at Kai. "W-well yes, he is handsome, but tha-"

"Ha! I knew it!" He beams cheerfully, and glances down at Quinn. "See? She thinks Daddy is handsome. I told you so."

Toki buzzes and buries her face in her palms, flustered and embarrassed. Oh good gods, what on earth were the children up to?

"Oh goodness." Tenne couldn't hide his face due to holding Toki, so Tenne had to do the next best thing...

And he proceeded to hide his face in Toki's mane.

Toki squeaked as he burrowed his face into her mane, and her fur fluffed slightly, eyes popping wide. "Tenne! You cheater! That's not fair!" Her hands only covered so much, even if she had four of them.

Kai grinned. "Aww look at Daddy cuddling her." He gave a shit eating grin to his little brother and then beamed up to the lady running the shop. "Hehehe. So, you're going to make Mo- I mean, Toki, some shoes?"

"Mama!" Quinn corrected his brother.

"Hai, of course I will. Tenne need not even let go of her." Hitsu giggled gently.

Despite Toki's fluster, Cruelty... chuckled?

'Are you... Are you laughing at me?' Toki accused faintly, huffing sourly at her mental companion.

'No... Not at all.'

She peeked out of her hands and huffed at the sheep woman. "Hitsu," She pouted, using the seamstress's first name, "Why are you so mean? It's apparently tease Toki and Tenne day." She huffs. "So... shoes?"

Kai had simply patted Quinn, and then grinned. He leaned up to tug on his dad's coat. "Daddy likes holding her, so he’s alright to just keep doing that.” He gives his dad a shit-eating grin.

The sheep smiled innocently and giggled, "Of course, darling, I’ll set started once I’ve properly bandaged your feet. Towels and medical tape are a good short-notice bandage, but proper bandaging will allow you to better use your feet.” She told her.

Tenne bristled a little as he shot his son a look, but as sour as it looked, both boys knew though as much flustered malice as it would carry, there wasn’t actually any anger behind it. It was mostly just bluff and guff- absolute fluster, nothing more.

Kai looked absolutely unapologetic. “Don’t look at me like that, Daddy. I’m not the one who was using that as an excuse to sniff her mane.” He tickles Quinn a little bit. “Quinn and I know it smells really good, huh? Kinda like her honey and… Smoke? It’s weird.”

“I smell like smoke and honey. That just doesn’t sound like an appetizing mix to smell.” Toki snorts faintly. “Maybe I should go to scented shampoos so you kids can smell something besides my apparent ‘smoke and honey’ scent. And ah… Well, would it be easier if Tenne sat me down?” She looked down at the shorter sheep. “So my feet aren’t like… in your face?”

"Smoke and honey is actually a wonderful smell. Like a barbeque.” Hitsu giggled as she replaced Toki’s wrappings with better bandaging. "And no, not at all, this is rather comfortable for me to work like this."

“So I smell like a barbeque. I guess that’s why Quinn always drools in my fur.” She hums. Toki glances back at Tenne. "If you drool in my fur, we’ll have problems.” She quirks a grin at him and wiggles her toes slightly as Hitsu changes her bandages. “Watch my ankles, Hitsu. I’ve got a stinger down there, and it’ll eject if you press on my ankles.”

He chuffed in reply, but stayed quiet.

Hitsu nodded in reply, "Of course, dear.” she murmured, being careful with said stingers as she wrapped the bandages around the new soft gauze. Once it was done, she smiled. "There. Now, let's get to work on those shoes."

Toki nodded and smiled, and fluttered her wings slightly against Tenne’s coat. “Alright.” She hummed slightly. She glanced up at Tenne again. “You can probably put me down so your arm doesn’t get tired, Tenne.”

Tenne rumbled quietly before he smiled and half did as suggested. He put her down; but right into his lap, as he himself took a seat on the counter top. Otherwise, his arms stayed firm around her, his tail wagging behind him as he purred faintly into her mane.

"Nyeh heh heh heh.” Quinn giggled quietly.

Quinn wasn’t alone in his laughter. Kai’s was much more mischievous and plotting, however.

Toki squeaked and huffed slightly, her fur fluffing at him as he kept her captive. “Tenne,” she pouts and rolls her eyes in amusement. All the same, she doesn’t fuss. His lap is more comfortable than the counter is anyways, and if he wants to bruise his backside on it in her stead, than he was more than welcome to do so.

‘He’s... rather warm isn’t he.’ Cruelty spoke up quietly.

As Toki watched Hitsu putting together her shoes, she replied silently to her companion. ‘He is, yeah. Why do you… say so?’
'You should ask him to do this more often...' It was so quiet, it was almost unheard if it weren't in her head.

Toki had to pause to make sure that she actually did hear it, and that she hadn’t imagined it. Her befuddlement almost made it onto her face. ‘... Uh... I’m... I’m technically a married woman, Cruelty. Even... Even if I can’t be with my husband here.’ She does the mental equivalent of tapping her fingers on her knees. ‘It is nice though, being held. There’s no shame in enjoying it.’

'Mmh. Don’t think this is me accepting him though... he's still a filthy monster.'

'We’re a filthy monster, if you do recall.’ She mentally snorts at him. ‘Tenne’s a good guy, despite what you might think. And you’re enjoying being cuddled. I can feel it. You can’t hide it from me.’ As weird as it was, the mass-murderer was... enjoying it.

Tenne hadn’t a clue what went on in her head so he simply watched over Toki’s shoulder as Hitsu worked on her shoes. Magic made it an effortless task so it seemed close to completion.

Toki also watched the shoes being made, and relaxed quietly back into Tenne. She idly toyed with the edge of his coat, and hummed a soft, thoughtful sound.

Kai tugged on Tenne’s coat. “Daddy, are we going to get Toki a coat too?”

"A conversation for another time, my son.” He purred in reply, winking to Kai where Toki wouldn't see.

Toki rolled her eyes nonetheless. “Shoes are enough. A coat is too much.” She huffs at them both. Her gaze remains on the shoes, which are rapidly being finished in front of her eyes.

Kai grins up at his father and mimes zipping his lips and locking away the key, despite Toki’s fussing.

He chuckled gently and rumbled. "Look at those! Those are very nice." He rumbled.

Toki smiled faintly. They were... odd to look at, that’s for sure. But they were definitely nice, and well constructed around her paws. The shoes were made out of some sort of black leather, and were very thick and well insulated. They were super, super comfortable. “They feel very, very nice.” She nods with a bright look. “I’m excited to try them out... Am I going to get to walk in them to go home?” She queries, looking up at him with an amused glance.

"Of course you can walk in them." Tenne purred gently.

Toki chuckled. “I dunno. You’re pretty keen on not letting me go.”

"... Mrh..." He hid his face again.

And right back into her mane he went. Toki heaved a sigh, and then intentionally flattened her mane just to see what he would do.

"Not fair." He'd pout, but he wouldn't just drop her, that wouldn't be fair.

“Says the man holding me and hiding his face in my mane.” She rolls her eyes, and lets her mane fluff out again. “You and the boys all seem to enjoy my relative fluffiness. Is that an issue you deal with too, Hitsu?”

"Hai! Not that I mind it; my wool is especially soft!” She laughed, watching Tenne's face disappear once more into the plush green mane he’d been presented with.

Toki rolled her eyes, and then rolled her ankles as Hitsu finished the final touches on her shoes. “I’m sure your wool is very, very soft.” She agrees. “My fur is very soft and very warm. It’s always getting cuddled.” Or held onto, or clung to, or a whole slew of other things that involved touching her mane in some various way.

Kai chuckled. “None of us have such plush manes, Toki. You can’t expect us not to want to touch it when you’ve got all of that fluff.”

She chuckles. “I suppose not. That would be asking the impossible. Speaking of.” She squirmed a bit. “My shoes are done, Tenne. Lemme down- I want to try walking to see if they fit well over my toes.”

"Of course, Toki." He rumbled as he let her go. "Be free, my beauty." He joked lightheartedly.

“Why thank you, handsome.” She teased him back, giving him a flash of a charming grin over her shoulder as she eased out of his lap. Her feet hurt as she touched the floor of the shop, but it was a tolerable pain as far as she was concerned. She rocked on her feet, bouncing and bobbing and testing her shoes, before taking a few careful steps.

The steps were unpleasant, but the shoes felt good. Toki perks up and smiles. “They feel good.”

Hitsu clapped her hands together with a pleased smile, "I'm so glad to hear it!" She laughed happily.

“So am I.” Toki beams to the seamstress. “They’re very comfortable and very warm. It’s going to be a lot better than barefoot, despite all of my earlier huffing about me getting shoes for my feet. Thank you, to both of you, for doing this.”

"It's my pleasure!" Hitsu replied.

Tenne nodded in agreement. "I couldn't find myself allowing you to suffer any longer bare footed." He rumbled quietly.

“Meaning you got tired of my stubbornness and just decided to out-stubborn me.” She gave him a smile and lightly pinched his cheek. “Thank you, all the same.” Toki said sincerely to the larger monster. “I’d have gotten shoes… eventually.”

"After how much more abuse would your feet have taken?" Tenne chuffed as his cheek was pinched, retaliating by doing the same.

Toki retaliated by flexing her teeth at him and wiggling them like a prehensile set of crab legs. She then licked his fingers. “I dunno. Probably a lot? I can handle a lot of stuff though, you know that.”

"But you can't handle walking through the snow without cutting your feet." He countered.

“Almost four months I made it without cutting the pads of my feet.” She argues lightly, and then shifts to poke his lip. “I only got them cut because I got too cold to boost my defense.” She wiggles it like the mature adult she is. Man. She missed playing with folks who had skin-bits. Tenebris usually chomped off her hand if she got too playful, and Papyrus and Sans just had bones- Tenne was… a lot less of a grump than her Papa was. Probably lack of age and experience. “So there.” She wiggles her brows lightly at him.

“You’re both silly.” Kai giggles.
He chuffed and stuck his tongue out at her, which was saying something given it was rather long. It stuck a few inches out of his mouth as he blew a raspberry at her.

"Already like a married couple." Hitsu whispered to the boys, offering them both a small lollipop.

The boys eagerly took the candies, and Kai grinned to her. "Uuh."

Toki fluffed at Tenne, and then blew a raspberry right back at him. While his tongue was longer than her own was, hers was a lovely shade of green, and her raspberry was blown between horrendously sharp teeth, which made it all that more impressive. "Pppphhhbbbllttt." Half of it was a real noise, half of it fabricated with her nifty mimicry skill.

Tenne laughed at the sight as he released Toki from his cheek-pinch-of-doom, leaning back as his tongue returned to his mouth. "Miss Hitsu," he spoke up, making the sheep look over to him, "Do you think you would be able to make me a pair as well? My pad-guards are getting a little worn out." He requested, lifting one of his feet up to display the worn out nature of his shoes.

"Oh, yes of course, Tenne! That would not be a problem at all" The sheep replied with a smile.

Toki chuckled and got out of the way so the sheep could work on his shoes as well. She instead went over to scoop up the boys, and peppered their cheeks in kisses, much to Kai’s ‘ire’.

The boy sputtered and shoved his hand against her face. "Augh no! No kisses!"

"Awww, c’mon," She grins, "Who can turn down Toki-kisses?"

Quinn on the other hand loved Toki's kisses and gave an overjoyed squeal.

Tenne removed what he revealed to be simple pad-protectors, which were rather pathetic looking at their state, having only been bits of leather held together by thin, nearly snapped, leather straps.

Hitsu let out a furious bleat, taking them and pelting him on the head with it a few times. "Is this what you made of those leather scraps you asked me for?!"

"Hitsu, ow! Not in front of the children! Come on!" Tenne ducked his head and shielded it with his hands as the harmless pelting continued.

Toki snorted. "His shoes have been in a sorry state for a while now." She continues to pepper the boys with kisses, until Kai just gives up and goes limp in her arms like a particularly petulant ragdoll. Quinn is cuddled up to her shoulder, and she bounces Kai to see when he’ll respond. “Bit of a hypocrite, aren’t you Tenne? Telling me to get shoes, when yours are falling apart under your feet.” She quirks a grin at his back, and nudges him with her wing. “What would you have done if the straps broke and you were stuck walking barefoot?"

Kai groaned and shifted to flop across her shoulder like a lump. It put his rump near her head, and he thwapped her in the forehead with his tail. “Probably sent me to get more straps.”

He grumbled as he let the pelting continue until Hitsu was satisfied that he had learned his lesson.

She tossed away the old leather and started measuring his feet to make him some shoes.

Toki chuckled, and lifted herself up to sit next to Tenne. Her wings shifted and draped over the table, making a tent between her back and the edge.

Kai scrambled off of her and onto the counter, before wedging between her back and her wings. He made a pleased noise, and peeked up at his dad with a smug grin, before cuddling close to Toki’s backside. “You can’t win between Toki and Hitsu, Daddy.”

He let out a frustrated noise, folding his arms and puffing his cheeks out a little bit as Hitsu worked. Though when she came to complete the new, much better looking shoes that fit comfortably around his feet, he donned a more content look.

"There.” She sounded pleased. “Now no more simple leather protectors, Tenne. They might have protected your pads from the cold, but that doesn't mean they were the best for your feet.” Hitsu scolded gently.

Tenne nodded, a sheepish look on his face. "Yes, Ma'am."

Toki beamed. “They look good on you.” She offers lightly. Her wings twitch and flutter, and she shifts on her seated spot. “Should hold up to the general wear and tear you put them up to, yeah?”

"Indeed, they should last much longer." He rumbled, before he smiled at Hitsu. "I suppose there's just one last thing to take care of." He rumbled as he stood up.

"Indeed so, my dear Tenne." She chuckled gently.

Toki hopped off the counter and scooped up Kai before he could fuss. He was returned to her hip opposite from Quinn, and she relaxed a little bit as she watched Tenne and Hitsu. “How much?” She inquires lightly, wings fluttering faintly. There was some small part of her that was very pleased at him getting her shoes- but another part of her still worried about the costs.

"For you, nothing at all." She told her, gently shooing her and the children away from the register as Tenne approached, pulling his wallet from his pocket.

Toki puffed her cheeks at her and huffed, but willingly waited a little ways away from the register with the children in her arms. Her wings flitted in agitation, and it took careful work to keep them from knocking into things.

When Tenne had finished paying, she gave him a faint smile, and adjusted the boys. Her paws ached a bit, but not too horribly thanks to the new and proper wrapping they had with the bandages on. She hummed, and shifted on her paws. “I suppose we’re good to return back to your house now…?”

“To our home, yep!” Kai chirped against her shoulder. “You and Daddy have shoes, so we’re good to go.”

She smiled faintly. “Yes, that’s true, we do have shoes. Anyways, thank you, Hitsu. And thank you, Tenne, for my shoes.”

"The pleasure was ours." Tenne laughed warmly.

Hitsu put away the gold and gave a pleased smile to Toki, "I will always be here to make you yet another pair whenever you need it, darling!"

Tenni seemed to carry the same reaction as she did, though his was far more calm, and his tail slowly bounced in the snow behind him as he walked. No longer was it being used- or rather, was it needed to be used- so desperately to maintain his balance in the snow.

"Nor are mine." He purred gently, "The warmth is so very welcoming, even if it is just my feet affected by this gift."

“Yeah. My feet are thanking me something fierce, and it’s definitely nice. The rest of me is easier to warm up, but my feet always take the longest.” Toki gives him a warm grin. She might have been less calm, but Toki was a playful being at heart. Always had been, always would be. Speaking of…
Toki’s fur ruffled mischievously and she flicked her wings, and managed to splatter him in snow using the tips of them like small shovels. She gave him a cheeky grin, pupils expanding playfully as she clutched the pups more tightly to her. She gently set them down so they could join in on the

Toki then took off in a playful lope, bouncing in the wake of his old footprints as she leapt through the snow and back towards the house. Her laugh, and the children’s, rang back at him, enticing him to play her game of chase as the children took off after her.

He grunted as he was pelted with the snow, before he chuckled quietly.

So, it was going to be a game of chase. Very well.

He lowered a little in the snow, shifted on his legs, and took after her on all fours. He was swift in snatching up his children; it was effortless to heft them up so they could cling to his back while he ran. It was then he let his bark-like chuckle resonate loud enough to be heard by the retreating hornet.

‘Who let the dogs out?’ Cruelty comments with dry amusement in her mind as Tenne’s laughter reached them.

Toki can’t help the amused snort that is lost to the wind at his comment. Tenne’s laughter was reminiscent of the baying of a hound in pursuit, and it made her fur ruffle with instinctive nervous anticipation. She remained bipedal to start, bouncing from foot hole to foot hole as she glanced behind her from time to time.

He began to gain ground on her, however, and her wings twitched as if to fly. Instead, she too dropped down onto all fours, dodging past monsters laughing at the playing blaster beasts as they wove their way down the streets of town and made their way out of the main city. Her transition was smooth, and she didn’t require time to stop- simply falling forth onto her primary arms which carried her forwards with ease as her secondary arms tucked up to her chest, well out of the way of her fast moving limbs.

Toki’s laugh was laced with a teasing sort of buzzing that trailed back to the blaster beast giving chase with his sons hooting and hollering on his back, rooting for him to catch her.

At the sight of Toki lowering to her hands, the sight of kin filled his vision, everything else simply a blur as he ran past. He could hear the sound of the snow under his feet, the hollers of his pups egging him on in this chase.

His eyes widened, but his pupils grew to disks in his indigo irises. Tenne’s heart rate picked up, sending his black blood shooting through his body faster than he could’ve sworn it ever had before.

The doctor’s mind came to life and filled his body with magic, and for a moment, time seemed to stop. But only for a short, short moment.

As his feet met the snow, he bound forward, but this time with much more energy, sending him flying over the footsteps he left behind on the way there.

He caught up to Toki in a matter of strides, and yet he kept going. But, it was not before he hooked her torso in his grasp. With her flush to his chest, he shifted to two legs and ran through the town, skidded and leapt into the path between the trees, and came to a powerful stop in front of their doorstep.

The snow was almost melting around his feet from the energy resonating from the beast, coming off of him in thick waves as his sides heaved with his breath.

And for a moment, he simply stood there, his body coming off it's high, the pups clinging to his back, laughing and cheering while blissfully unaware, and Toki, who Tenne held to his chest, refusing to let go in his current state.

Toki had hardly expected to get snatched right off her feet, let alone carried by swift strides all the way back to the house. She clung to Tenne the whole way, feeling the swirl of his magic as it raked over her skin in a palpable warmth. It was dark and familiar- but it was missing a certain… depth of darkness that she was used to. She wondered what caused that depth to Tenebris’ own.

All the same, she laughed the whole rise back to the house, and took a moment to catch her breath when they got to his house. Her fingers had latched onto his jacket and turtleneck, the tips of her claws curling over to latch onto the shield under his shirt, and when she’d caught her breath, she glanced up at him slightly. “Heh… I guess you caught me.” She grins.

“Daddy gets a prize then!” Kai beams. “He caught you, so he gets a prize, right? Isn’t that how the game of chase works?”

Toki chuckles. “I suppose so.” She glances up at Tenne, face flushed from the wind and from her happy laughter. Her pupils were still slightly dilated, but she looked, overall, happy and amused. She had fun. “I what sort of prize would you like…?”

He looked down at her with his pupils dilated to their fullest, and he reached up, gently gripping her chin. He stared down for a moment, and then he leaned in and pressed a gentle kiss to her forehead. He then smiled, and pulled her close. "I already have claimed my prize." He whispered.

For half a second, Toki was sure he was going to kiss her, and she wasn’t… she wasn’t sure what she would have done. She was not… Not ready for that. Not at all. But the kiss on the forehead… that was acceptable. Her eyes blinked shut, and then opened again, and she gave him a lopsided but radiant smile. “Oh yeah? What’s your prize then?” She asks curiously up to him.

Kai leans over his dad’s shoulder, hauling Quinn with him so his little brother didn’t slide off. “Yeah, Daddy. What’s your prize?”

"I have not felt so alive in these many centuries that have passed." He purred gently into her fur, before he let her go, carefully setting her on her feet. Once she was balanced, he headed inside. "Come along, boys, it's time for a snack, and then it will be time for your nap."

“I’m glad I made you feel alive, then.” She smiled to him.

Kai made a happy noise on his Dad’s shoulder. “Snacks and naps sound good.”

Toki chuckled and followed them in. She eyed the bloodstains still on the floor, and went to go clean them up while Tenne got the boys their snacks, and then off to their rooms for their naps.

Tenne made his boys some sandwiches and let them down it with a cup of a milk. He toted his boys upstairs and came down with a few rags, as well as some peroxide. "Toki, would you please melt some snow for me?" he requested as he came down the stairs, "We'll need to take care of those blood stains before they stain any further."

"Already ahead of you." Toki had the tub from earlier drained out in the time he’d been feeding the boys, and had hot water boiling away. She’d gotten a dishtowel from the kitchen while he’d been upstairs, and was currently on her hands and knees working at some of the stains near the kitchen entrance. She tsks gently. "I really got it everywhere, didn’t I…?"

He rumbled a soft chuckle and steadily made his way along the bloodstains, carefully saturating each puddle with peroxide.

Toki hummed a soft sound as she worked, toiling away as the peroxide fizzled and bubbled. “You know… You’re a scientist, right…? How is it, you haven’t managed to make a super ultra floor cleaner? Or something similar? Everyone who has to clean a house at any point in their life would thank you.”

"I'm more a scientific engineer, not a chemist." He laughed gently, "Besides, peroxide works just fine."

"Peroxide works just fine, he says,” She huffs. "For most things, yes. Not all things.” Still, it works well enough to get the blood out, and she makes swift work of the drops after that. She makes her way into the kitchen slowly but surely. “Anyways, how are things going at the lab?”

"Oh just fine. I do need you to come by so I can take some more of the venom samples I need, but I will have to see to the paperwork before we can do any of that.” He rumbled.

Toki nodded as she scrubbed, answering without looking at him. “I don’t mind giving you more venom. Though… Why do I need paperwork? Wasn’t I there when I was sick? Or was I in a different sector than where I need to go to drop off more venom?”

"You were in the medical bay.” He clarified. “You need proper clearance for the research and development area.”

“Ooh.” She nods slowly and glances up to him as she scrubs. “I suppose that makes sense. Wouldn’t want too many people wandering around in R’n’D on their own without clearance.” She nods again. Toki shifts and sits up, straightening her back with a soft hum. “How long do you think it’ll take to get clearance? I’ll need to have the boys stay with Grillby and Sapphire. Kai won’t mind- he likes little Fuku.”

"Not long at all. Verification will be done by the end of tomorrow, I’d wager." He answered.

“Then if you get the paperwork done tonight, I’ll call and make arrangements for tomorrow with Grillby and Sapphire.” Toki nods lightly. She gives him a chipper look, and then turns to focus on her task.

It doesn’t take her overly long before the floors are spotless. Four arms and peroxide do wonders for making the floors spotless. When it’s clean, she hauls herself upright and stretches her back with a soft, pleased sound. “There. Spotless.”

"Perfection." He rumbled happily as he gave Toki a pleased smile. "Thank you for your help with cleaning up. I’ll go ahead and get the paperwork going while you go make those plans, okay?"

Toki nods. “Alright.” She gives Tenne a smile, and then heads off to go make the plans necessary for their excursion tomorrow.
She honestly didn’t mind giving them more venom to study. If they could find various health benefits for it, or uses for it outside of cooling it and turning it into oddly green but delicious and nutritious honey, then she was all for it. Toki didn’t mind at all. The more she knew about her new body, the better.

Chapter End Notes

Translations in order of which they appear:

“Good evening!” Though stretched out because of the aaaa tic.

“Hello Mrs. Vestimoves! It's good to see you again. I'm finally coming in to get some proper shoes made- Tenne has had enough of me going without shoes. I might have had a small incident with some ice and he's... well, he's had enough.”

“Tokiko, Darling! Oh, your poor feet! I'm so sorry your feet got hurt, my dear... But worry not! I'll have you a pair of shoes that will last you decades to come!”

“My poor dear...”

“Mrs. Vestimoves, really, I'll be okay. I'm just a bit sore, but I'll heal fast, I promise. The pair of shoes would definitely be helpful. Tenne is going to help pay for them. He's such a stubborn man sometimes, but I suppose that's a good thing. Anyways... What sort of shoe do you think will work? Hopefully nothing that goes too far up my ankle. I've got a stinger up there, and things can get tangled with it if it presses on it.”
Chapter 99

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And so continues a surprisingly big continuity of sorts. This is the day after the last chapter. We haven’t done one of these in a while. OWO HUEHUEHUE.

Silverwing Notes: So, i put in a reference in this chapter that dates back to a old book series i used to read, serious points to anyone who recognizes it, also if anyone recognizes it, do not be shy or hesitate to tell us ;D

Enjoy the chapter, and happy hunting!

Update comes a few hours later: HAHAHA! I’m TRASH! THERES MORE REFERENCES!

Toki had slept exceptionally well after getting her new shoes- even if her feet were sore as hell- of course, that was partly because of the lack of jibes she got from Cruelty that night, and the cuddles she got from Tenne’s boys come night time. Honestly… they really were such pure little beacons of light in her life, and they helped keep her going when she needed the boost. Them and Tenne both, really they did.

She could smell breakfast wafting through the air. Was Tenne cooking? She could hear the sound of pancakes cooking on the griddle.

Wait... That was a quiet sound. She would have to be in the kitchen to hear that, but she hadn't even gotten out of her bed on the couch yet.

Toki opened her eyes, and she discovered why things felt so off, and Toki felt nothing but deep, unending horror.

She was standing in front of the stove, flipping pancakes. Her body was moving without her commanding it to, flipping the pancakes and letting them brown and putting them on a plate before moving to where some bacon was skillfully being sizzled over an open flame on the stove.

Toki never cooked with the stove- she had always used her magic for cooking, as it was faster and more reliable than the method of stoking the fire on the old fire-lit grill. She wasn’t used to it and had no desire to learn. Magic was just as good for it.

Had... Had Cruelty finally taken over like he wanted? Had she failed to protect her new charges?

The questions swam in her head only to be cut short as her controlled body reached up and scooped up the plate with pancakes and bacon on it, turning to reveal Tenne and his boys enjoying breakfast at the table.

"Who’s ready for seconds?" Her voice came from her throat- but not by her command. Cruelty was speaking through her voice- or was unable to use his. He might not know how to use her mimicry skill, so that was entirely possible.

"I am!" Kai replied happily, shoving a chunk of bacon into his mouth and then wiggling his fingers at her eagerly.
"NYEH!" Quinn squealed.

Tenne didn't answer, simply lifted his hand. "Might there be any more coffee?" He asked.

"Oh yes." Cruelty in Toki's body nodded to Tenne. "There's plenty."

‘Cruelty?’ Her voice edged in as she watched him serving Tenne and the children. She discretely checked the air that Cruelty was breathing. Nothing smelled off with the food… Since Tenne was an engineer and not a chemist, it was probably safe to say that there were little to absolutely no poisons within the food. Tenne was good, but he wasn't good enough to make them. Scentless and tasteless poisons weren’t likely his forte given his lack of expertise with them. ‘What… What are you doing with my body? And… And why?’

She knew Cruelty had been getting ‘unpleasant’ back feed from her, and had been… well… softening, might be too harsh a word yet. Reforming, definitely not. She wasn’t sure what was going on and what he was up to, honestly, but it was disturbing her. But If Toki kicked up too much of a fuss, he’d be unable to ignore her which could result in that their cover being… well, blown.

‘… How long have you been able to do this?’ She then inquired, and settled down to wait while he answered her slew of questions.

'I would think you could see through your eyes as I could in your position...' He was a smart ass this morning now wasn't he...?

Despite his moment of sass regarding her question as to what he was doing, he proceeded to answer her questions, 'I felt like making breakfast... As for how long I've been able to, I haven't a clue. But I had a schedule before you trapped me in your body and had me adhere to your schedule, you know... I woke up before you did and wanted something to eat. Something to eat that I got to experience on my own.' he explained, putting pancakes on the young pups' plate before doubling back to take the bacon off the flames and onto a plate to cool a little. The pancakes were set down and the coffee pot was picked up and taken to Tenne, refilling his mug with practiced ease that spoke of perhaps a lifetime where Cruelty had waited tables.

'But why are you feeding them too?' She then questioned, suspicion tingling through her tone.

'The younger child is an early riser, as is the beast. They smelled what I was cooking and I decided to hell with it.' Cruelty hummed nonchalantly.

'I... I see.' Toki watched him serve the children and Tenne, and nervously fidgeted inside of her body. This was... This was strange and alien and definitely not what she had expected to wake up to in the morning. Toki shifted inside of her mind, and mentally eyed Cruelty. ‘... I don’t… I don’t mind, if you want to take control from time to time for small things. Stretching your metaphorical legs is probably really, really nice. But... But the first time you try and do something bad. The first and only time you try and hurt someone with words or physically- you’ll never take control again. Ever.’ She warns. She’d figure out some way to make sure he never did.

'Of course.' His answer didn't help at all in making it clear whether he was simply agreeing to her demands or blowing her off.

'I'm serious, Cruelty.' She huffed. She watched him work and cook with interest, and then sighed softly. 'So how do you plan to change control over...?' She inquired lightly. Monsters didn’t need to use the bathroom, so that wasn't an excuse they could use, and she had no idea if switching control would be flawless.
'Uh... I'll get back to you on that.' He murmured in reply. 'I had yet to figure that out.'

'We need to figure something out soon. Quinn likes cuddles after he eats and I doubt you can keep up this charade as me well enough to cuddle him.' Toki comments slightly. She draws his attention to Quinn, who was rapidly working through his breakfast. 'Maybe intentionally spill something on my shirt? If you make the excuse to go change, we can do the switch then.'

'Hm... You wish I were that subtle.' He grumbled. He grunted as he accidentally dropped the bowl he had used to mix the batter. It landed on the counter and remained intact but they did get splashed with a bit of batter. "Dang it..." He then spoke aloud.

"Are you alright, Toki?" Tenne spoke up, glancing up to her with concern.

"Oh yes, I’m fine. I just had a little spill, that’s all." Was his- her?- reply. "I’ll clean up, and then go change my shirt." She even managed a smile as she replied to him.

"No need.” He shook his head. “I’ve finished my breakfast. I’ll clean up, and you can go ahead and go get cleaned up.” Tenne spoke up as he stood.

"I would appreciate that. Thank you." And with that, Toki and Cruelty were able to make their getaway to the upstairs bathroom. Which, hilariously enough, lacked a toilet.

Toki had seen the bathroom many times, and the lack of toilet both surprised and did not surprise her. They didn’t have running water, after all. But at the same time, they didn’t have any sort of disposal system to run to if someone got sick. Toki had never needed the toilets in her old house after she changed, but her brothers did. And she’d used them a lot when morning sickness hit hard.

She shifted inside of their shared mindscape, and pressed forwards. 'All right... Try and relinquish control. Oh... Are our wings a different color?' They looked to be a lighter shade in the mirror that the bathroom had, but she couldn't be sure.

"They are, yes." He replied quietly, before he closed his eyes and tried to figure out what to think of that would allow her back into control.

Toki did much the same, and pressed her consciousness up against his. She slid against him, slowly trying to ooze around him and get back into control. Her mind reached out, trying to connect with her limbs, trying to take control of the body what had once been solely hers and hers alone.

Eventually it succeeded, and one could compare the feeling to feeling their ears pop as Cruelty relinquished control and allowed Toki control once more

She rushed back into full control, and swayed a little on her feet. Her hands came up to catch herself on the sink, and Toki got a front row view of her wings visibly changing colors back to the usual tones that they rested in.

She swallowed, shook herself out, and then set to changing her shirt as she needed to.

'That was a singularly disorienting feeling and I definitely do not enjoy switching over when I am conscious.' Toki informs Cruelty as soon as she's not so dizzy and is out of her food stained shirt and into a clean one. 'We also need to be careful or they'll catch on that something is up. My wings don't switch colors normally, and they're usually pretty observant monsters. At least Tenne and Kai are sometimes.'

Mostly Kai.
'Good thing I don't have your gag reflex...' Cruelty sounded a little worse for wear as he settled down in what was honorably deemed his little spot inside her head, like a damn parasite that could wrap itself around her brain and possess her.

'I wonder how much of that time was spent by the beast looking at our rear end.'

'With the exception of a few times, and the time that I was pregnant, I actually have a very... Well, strong gag reflex, I think is the term. A little dizziness isn’t going to make me wear those pancakes again.' She informs him. Slowly she makes her way out of the bathroom and down the stairs, after tossing her soiled shirt into the laundry bag for later. She continued to chat to her nasty little parasitic companion as she made her way back towards the kitchen. 'Tenne wasn't looking at our ass, good gods. He has some class, I'm sure. He was probably too busy eating to be doing that.' She snorts to Cruelty, before pausing and doubling back to get her shoes from beside the couch.

She steals one of the kitchen chairs once she’s in there to put the shoes on, humming a merry tune as she does, her wings twitching slightly.

'Feh...'

As soon as she was seated in the chair, Quinn scampered over and hugged her legs, squealing happily.

Toki laughed and scooped him up, tucking him gently into her lap for his after breakfast cuddles. While he got his snuggles, she worked on getting her shoes into place. She glanced up, watching Tenne cleaning the kitchen. His back was broad as it faced her, and she nudged Cruelty lightly, smug mischief tingling through her. 'So, you like how warm he is. Have you been ogling the doctor?'

'Why would I even make a second glance at that damn monster!?' Aaaand there was the Cruelty she knew and hated... Or was it his typical aggression accompanied by a little something else, something Toki would no doubt teasingly call him out on.

'I dunno, sometimes I feel like you're lurking there in the back of my mind when I'm talking with him. Maybe you're ogling him from afar. He's not bad to look at either. Broad shoulders, strong back, strong arms... very much eye candy. There's no shame in admitting that, Cruelty.' She's glad she has Quinn, because the smile on her face has some explanation. Maybe Cruelty got something from her after all. If she got his skill at lying... Maybe he was getting her love for monsters in general. 'It certainly doesn't feel like you're disgusted by him.' She hides a chuckle by smooching Quinn's skull.

He growled loudly at that, but stopped when Quinn squealed again.

The boy laughed and giggled as he hugged her face, nuzzling her lovingly as his little tail wagged behind him. He didn't look back as Tenne approached, a warm smile on his face.

The doctor was quiet for a moment, simply watching them for a short time, before he finally opened his mouth to speak. "Thank you for breakfast, Toki. Every bit of it was phenomenal, like usual. You even made my coffee how I like it."

'For a hard bastard like he is, he sure likes his coffee light.' Cruelty snorted quietly under his non-existent breath.

'Not everyone enjoys their coffee as black as their souls aught to be,' She retorted sarcastically to Cruelty.

'Ouch.'
'You walked in to that one, Cruelty.' She replies lightly.

To Tenne, Toki smiled warmly. "Well, I tend to make your tea just how you like it too." She winks. "One of my gifts, I suppose." She hums. Her wings twitch again at the lie that falls forth so easily, and she buries her face against Quinn and nuzzles him affectionately. "Did you get enough to eat?"

"Oh indeed I did." He rumbled, "Just like when you made that fine dinner when you first came."

Toki quirks a faint grin to him. "That was just me whipping up meat and veggies. A fine dinner is much more extravagant than that." But they lacked... Well, a lot of the things necessary to do one. Spices, for one. There were some, but not the kind she needed. Salt was about the only thing plentiful down in the Underground. "Maybe I'll go hunting for some herbs in the various parts of the Underground and see if I can make you a real feast." She hums faintly to him. "Though not today." She laughs. "We have a date at the lab today to get you and the other scientists more of my venom. Though... Mostly them, since you're an engineer and not a chemist."

"To a wild beast it's a luxury alone to have meat cooked." Tenne tutted gently, before a lighthearted chuckle escaped him as he flashed a warm smile to her. "Oh indeed so. I cannot wait to see how this goes." He chirped happily. "I bet they'll absolutely adore you!"

"That's true. Fire magic ensures nothing has to be raw or cold though." She quirked a smile up at him and then gently set Quinn down once her shoes were secured. Toki carefully got to her feet and stretched. "I hope they like me. I mean, I'm no scientist so I'm going to be confused as heck at some of the doodads and gadgets you've got at the lab, but... Yeah." Toki gives him a sheepish look. "It'd be good if they at least tolerate me. They're more likely to be fascinated to see another blaster beast though. I'm expecting all sorts of probably invasive questions." She chuckles. Scientists would be scientists, and she went through all of them with Tenebris when she was learning about being a Skeleton. "Females often differ from males. Anyways... If you and the boys are ready, we can head out. We need to drop them off anyways."

"Of course, I'll get them dressed-- you can get a head start if you'd like." He rumbled pleasantly.

"I'm not just going to leave you guys to catch up." She laughs lightly. "I'll wait for you outside."

Kai nods and bounces up for the stairs. "You can help Quinn get dressed, Daddy!" He calls back down to them. "I'm fine on my own."

Toki simply grins. "He's only excited because he wants unlimited access to all that ketchup and Grillby's burgers and fries."

Tenne laughed at that, "Even after your miraculous breakfast? Really, Kai?" He gave his son a hard time, rubbing a hand over his own head with an amused sigh before picking up Quinn and taking him upstairs to his room to get him ready.

Kai's laughter rang down to them both. "There is always room for ketchup and burgers."

Toki simply snorted and went out to wait on the front deck. She had little wonder as to why Caeruleus had ended up being such a pudgy fellow in his adulthood, now that she was literally basically raising one of his child counterparts.

Toki ruffled her fur as she eased out into the cold, and gave a pleased sound. The air was cold, but it was considered a 'warmer' day in Snowdin. Her wings flickered, and she stuffed her hands up the loose ends of her sleeves, using them as a sort of pseudo kimono sleeve. It helped keep her fingers warm while she waited for Tenne and the boys to come back down the stairs.
It wasn't long the boys joined her, Quinn hopping from his father's arms to claim his place in Toki's grasp. "NYEH!"

Toki swung him up into her arms and laughed. "I feel like Quinn has a favorite fluffy lady that he likes to be carried by." She comments to Tenne with a quiet grin. She didn’t say favored parent, because she wasn’t his real mother for all that he called her as such, and she didn't want to step on any toes. She smooched Quinn's skull.

Kai was content to lean against Tenne. "Everyone has their favorites." He chirps knowledgably. He was a daddy's boy, obviously.

And a hand that warmly plopped itself on his head made it that much more obvious as Tenne gave a soft laugh, "That's no problem at all. Let's go, if we're all ready."

Kai beams happily.

Toki just laughs at the blue-eyed boy. "Alright. Let's go." She has pep in her step as she bounces down the steps. She doesn't quite look, but her steps are not slow as she bounces her way down the path and towards town.

He nodded and practically had the same hop, skip, n' jump to his own walk as he took off after her.

Her wings flick and flit from time to time, and kick up puffs of fresh snow. Toki grins over at Tenne. "So, you really think your co-workers will like me?"

"Well you've already met Sapphire, and I’ve got no doubt James will like you. I don’t think he's capable of really hating someone." Tenne rumbled thoughtfully. "I've heard of James from Sapphire. Isn’t he a lizard of some kind?" She blinks at him curiously.

"Indeed so." Tenne nods. "He's a brilliant man. He and his wife, Catherine, work in the hydro-division. That daring duo have made plans for this miraculous water purifier. It would take any contamination in the water that we have running through the underground- toxins, bacteria, radiation, you name it- and absolutely eradicate them. It would be ensuring the water would be completely safe and clean to drink." He rumbled happily, before he chuckled a little deeper now.

"But I smelled a potential pregnancy, so the project is on a temporary hold until they know for sure it’s viable or not. Those two must have been getting cheeky in one of the study rooms again while my back was turned." The doctor chuffed slightly in amusement.

Toki snorts a laugh, and grins up at Tenne. "Husbands and wives will do the silliest of things, won't they?" She couldn't count the number of times her and Papyrus had sex in the weirdest places. She chuckles gently and bounces her wings. "So I assume he has a baby on the way?"

"I can only suppose it. It’s hard to tell with egg bearing species- the smell is very different, and it hasn’t fully settled yet." He rumbled happily, "Not that I mind. It would be fun to have more little ones to keep around, keeps up charisma."

"Little ones do bring hope." She smiled slightly. Her wings drooped a little but, but she didn't let her thoughts wander to her kids. She spotted the town shortly, and then grinned. She elbowed Tenne. "I'm honestly surprised you don't have more than just Kai and Quinn."

He grunted, and then chuckled. "I only have two palms. Any more holes in me and I'd have more air in my soul than I would soul matter. Besides," he then scooped up Kai and gave him a squeeze, "I'm perfectly happy with my two boys~"
Kai laughed and smooched his dad's cheek. "We're happy with you too, Daddy. But siblings wouldn't be all that baaaad." He gave him a pointed grin and nipped his cheek.

Toki nearly trips on her feet, and color rises to her cheeks as she realized what Kai just said. "Well then. But I understand that. You don't have nearly the amount of hands that I do." Or soul matter.

The monsters on the street wave to the group as they walk, and clear the way for the much larger beasts.

Though the crowd indeed parted to the size of the duo, Tenne made sure to smile and look thankful as he walked, but the blush was undeniable on his cheeks as he seemed to catch on to what Kai was saying. As a result, he more or less pulled on Kai's cheek, and wiggled the boy's head in a scolding manner. "Hahaha I'm not entirely sure what the silly boy had meant by such things, but I assure you, I would never ask something like that of you, my dear Toki!" Tenne gave a faint laugh.

"Ah! Daddy, ow!" Kai protested, flapping his hands at his dad and trying to yank his cheek away.

Toki had to simply scrub a hand against her face to try and remove the flustered flush Kai had landed there and nod. "Mhm."

Thankfully she was spared from much more of a reply by Grillby's appearing. Grillby himself was outside, and he spotted the group. He offered them a merry wave. "I'll take the children so you both can get back early." He says by way of greeting. "I don't want you getting the doctors habits of running late, Toki."

"I won't, I won't. Goodness me, I wouldn't be late to pick up the boys unless something major happened." She shakes her head vehemently.

"You make it sound like I was the source of this habit, Grillbert." Tenne stuck his tongue out at Grillby as he set his son down.

"... Grillbert?" Toki couldn't help her face puckering at the laugh trying to escape.

Grillby's flames flickered with brief but very deep irritation at his full and very much detested name being used twice, and he shot them both a look as he scooped Quinn into his arms. "My full name. Use it, and we will have problems." He informs her waspishly. His gaze turns to Tenne. "You're more addicted to your work than I am, twinkle-toes." He fired back.

"Twinkle-toes?" Kai blinked in confusion.

He got scooped up too. "I have stories for you, kid, about the first time I ever saw your dad set foot in the snow."

Toki couldn't help but laugh now, her fur fluffing faintly. "I bet that's a story for the ages. But Tenne and I have a date at the lab, where there's no snow for his toes to be twinkling in."

Tenne bristled a little at the name before he growled, "Tell them that and I will do something unpleasant to you, Fyrus." He warned with a growl.

Grillby just cracks a grin. "Well... You were young, and Asgore was just a young buck of a Prince back then... He did throw you an impressive distance for one so scrawny. What was impressive was how fast you made it back to snow-free ground. And that cry..."

Toki's interest perks. "Oh my god, he really did earn the nickname twinkle-toes, didn't he?"
His brows furrowed a little before he grinned. He then drew back his fist and punched the frame of the building. There was a quiet rumble, and Tenne hip checked Toki to send her to where she would proceed to get piled by snow.

Toki was thoroughly buried, however, and went down with a yelp as she was covered. Her arms failed as she tried to dig her way out.

"And since I know doing the same would probably kill you…" He then took a small pinch of snow and flicked it at Grillby, nailing him in the forehead. "There."

Grillby sputtered at the snow that puffed in his face, and huffed at Tenne. "Mature, Tenne, real mature. Flick snow at me while I'm holding your kids." He rolls his eyes, and then looks at Toki. "... Aren't your kind susceptible to cold temperatures?"

"My boys know how to be good distractions." Tenne grinned, before he chuckled. "It's not pleasant, but we can withstand it for a little while." He then pushed his arm into the pile of snow, grabbed Toki, and pulled her out and into the warmth of his coat. Once she was secured to his chest, he closed the coat around her so all that could be seen of her were her legs coming out the bottom and her horns and the fluff of her mane poking out the top.

Which left Toki face to face with Tenne's chest, and she was left inhaling the warmth of his body... And... His musk? Yes. His musk. He... Well, he certainly did not smell bad, and some part of her felt guilty for thinking that. She shifted and squirmed in his grasp. "Hey." Her voice was muffled against him. "I know you smell nice and all, but I'm not too overly chilled. I wasn’t I'm there long enough and my clothes are nice and thick." Her back was cold though, but that was nothing new, given the fact her shirts had no backings so her wings could be more easily maneuvered into her clothing.

Grillby chuckled. "Alright, alright. Take Toki and go enjoy your day, you two."

Kai waved. "Bye bye!"

"See you later, boys. Thanks again Grillby!" He chuckled, and then reached down to open his coat for her. "Fly away, Stanley, be free" He joked faintly.

Toki was again struck with a wondering thought of when the hell this timeline was, because that quote was from a movie that was very much from the late two thousands, and she was seeing all sorts of stuff from pretty much everywhere. She wondered what the hell sort of timeline this was.

She leaned out of his coat as Grillby took the boys inside and chuckled up at Tenne. "I could fly away, but it’s been a long time since I sought out the lab. No idea where we're going." She laughs, casually taking one more wiff of his scent, before stepping out of his coat. Her wings shake out and her mane fluffs up again. "Alright. Lead on, good sir~"

He chuckled quietly and offered her his arm, "Shall we then, my lady~?"

Toki smiled and laced her primary arm through his offered one. Her secondary arms folded under her breasts, tucking into her sleeves to keep the smaller hands warm. "We shall." She chirped. She headed off, pants swishing faintly as she walked with him.

He chittered happily and as they started out, his tail could be heard rattling behind him.

Toki glanced back at his rattling tail and then laughed as they made their way swiftly through and out of the town. She was familiar with this path, after all. "You can always tell when you're in a good mood. Your tail rattles." She smiles. "It's kind of adorable."
"Nothing I do could prevent it from rattling, I'll be honest." He laughed faintly, before he tilted his head down to look at her better. "It has its momentary annoyances as it also seems to display a few other emotions I possess. Frankly, that's my only quarrel I have with it."

"Really? I couldn't imagine having a tail. The emotions thing wouldn't bother me, but I'm a fairly open lady most of the time." Unless she was hiding things. "I imagine people would step on your tail, or you'd sit on it funny or all other sorts of things. Or trying to sleep on your back. It would get so kinked up." She hums. "Its adorable all the same. Just like..."

"I think it's the tail blade that does the worst for me." He mentioned, bringing his tail around and taking a look at the small blade. "This thing can get so sharp... I've been keeping it dull because of my boys, and this isn't even how long it'll get. I'm still growing!" Though he then looked at her as her final words registered, and raised a brow at her lightly. "Liiiiike?" He drawled faintly.

"Keeping it dull around children is for the best." She nods slowly. "Unless you would get a pad that you could wear on it? Then it could grow and be sharp all it wanted without issue." At his prompting, Toki grinned and light green dusted her cheeks. "Adorable... just like... twinkle-toes." She couldn't resist.

It was too cute not to, and Toki was not known for making wise choices regarding smart-mouthing folks. Or egging them on.

He hesitated at that, before his brows furrowed and he sighed heavily. "Alright, let's do this." He stopped walking and withdrew his arm from her. He raised his arms to tuck them behind his head as she stared at him in confusion, before he swung his hip to the side and knocked her into some nearby trees.

Trees that were covered in thick layers of snow- or had been, until she'd collided with them.

Said snow now piled onto her once more with her impact

From under the snow echoed buzzing laughter. The knock into the trees had stung some, but not enough to hurt her too badly. "Twiirririrriiinkle-toereeess." She croons from under her snowy cover. She doesn’t even try and get out immediately. If she can lure him close enough, she can drag him in. It was good for him to cut loose and relax. She had to do the same thing to Tenebris too, but much less playful like this. Toki waited to see if her taunt would work.

She didn't even need to drag him in. He came close, and then dead-man fell into the pile, landing with a WHOMPf, and a puff of snow up into the air.

He landed right on top of her and she squeaked, flailing under him as he squished her, forcing snow down the front of her shirt. The second the icy slush brushed her breasts, Toki gave a full body spasm and a sharp buzz of alarm. "AH! THATS COLD!"

Satisfaction. Tenne gave a quiet, dark chuckle as his tail rattled again.

The dark chuckle prompted a rumbling buzz from her, and one of her arms popped out of the snow to loop around the back of his head. She squished him face first into the snow above her chest, effectively making him 'eat snow', and then hooked her leg over his hip. Having an extra pair of arms meant she got to use them to roll them over, and suddenly all the snow that was trapped between them was now pouring down onto Tenne.

She laughed and used her secondary arms to shake the snow out of her boobs once she was seated semi-upright.
Where she was seated right now...

Tenne's fine with this.

He doesn't squirm much, but she could hear a quiet munching from within the pile of snow covering his face.

Toki squirms a little bit on his hips, and peers down at the munching sounds coming from his face area. The little shit was eating the snow. What a dork. She grinned, her wings giving an ominous buzzing sound as she grabbed a handful of snow from beside them... And then stuffed it right down the front of his pants where she was sitting perched on him. He might not have any visible genitals, but that didn’t mean the skin down there wasn’t likely just as sensitive as her breasts were.

And that got the flailing she wanted as he let out the most unholy of noises from under the snow and he made to sit up.

And she proceeded to lay on him like a rug to keep him flat, just like he did to her. Though he was much larger than she was, so his rug was more effective than her attempt at being one was. She grinned. "Paybacks a bitch, huh Tenne?" She teases affectionately.

He pouted at her, "You are awful." He grumbled.

'Aannd yet, he's got his hands on your hips~'

'Probably debating tossing me off. Ice on my genitals would have me launching anyone off of me as soon as I could.' She replied.

"I am the worst." She agreed with a laugh, and then squirmed off of him to let him up. Her wings took a moment to straighten out, and she had to shake them and the snow out from her clothing. "Alright, alright. Go ahead and get your snow out. I'd say we don't want you freezing your balls off, but there's nothing visible, so it wouldn't really be a valid point." She laughs lightly.

He huffed and got up, turning his back on her as he did just that, scooping it out of his undergarments before shaking it out of his pant legs. “Damn near froze my slit closed.... Gonna need a heat pack soon as we get to damn Hotland, we will." He could be heard grumbling.

Toki chuckled at his grumbles, before quietly sliding up behind him. It amused her to some extent that her names for things were sticking a little bit- he wasn’t the only one calling Hotland… well, Hotland, now. She slid her hand just up under the back of his shirt. Truthfully, she initially felt like a small ice cube sliding up under his jacket and into his shirt- but then she quietly pulsed her fire magic over him, and redirected it to his frozen nether bits. "Poor baby," she cooed, "I'm not that cruel. I 'froze' it, I'll thaw it." Applying her hand directly to the affected area was the best method, but she was not palming his slit. Nope. Nuh uh.

'I can think a few ways you can thaw him out, Toki~' Cruelty teased.

'You're the one with the hots for the doctor. Are you sure you wouldn't rather do it, Cruelty?' She teased him right back.

Tenne shuttered hard at her interjecting, before he sighed at the wash over of warmth, "hhhhmmn..."

Well that moan was definitely sexual sounding. She flushed. "Well then. Didn't know my magic felt that good." It fell out before she could stop it, and she flushed brighter. Good god, her tongue was out of control today.
'Says the one who just wrought a moan out of the bastard.'

'Oh my god, don't remind me.'

‘Oh no, I plan to.’

'Oh come on, don't be a dick.' She pouts to her mental pest.

He only chuckled much like Tenne had when he thought he had won.

"Warm~" was all Tenne could squeak out, making sounds not unlike cougar squeaks as he enjoyed the newfound heat.

"Well yes." She coughs slightly. She keeps up the heat for a short time, until she's sure he's thawed, and then she draws her hand back to her chest and tucks it close to her. She blinks at him slowly. "...Well, those are sounds I cannot un-hear. I think squeakers is more fitting than twinkle-toes."

He was pouting when she recoiled, but he sighed and gave a nod as he regained his composure. "RIGHT. Let's be off."

"Right." She nods. She shakes herself off, and then bounds a few steps forwards. "We're going to run late if we dally much longer."
Chapter 100

Tenne and Toki arrived at the lab without too much delay. Toki had been stopped for ID and authorization at multiple checkpoints along the way, and Tenne had vouched for her at every one of them, as well as providing the necessary paperwork needed to get her inside of the laboratory.

When the lab came into view, it was still a sight for sore eyes. It was a long, long jaunt from Snowdin up to the lab in Hotland. She was more than ready to rest her feet by the time they made it inside.

In all honestly, it was mostly because she hadn’t had the chance to break in her new shoes yet. One did not go for long walks until they had adjusted to their new shoes. She was sure she would have blisters when she took them off of her feet.

Inside of the lab was cool and air-conditioned, and felt good after the intense heat the magma filled cavern had outside. The Core, still in construction, loomed in the distance. It obviously had enough power for the lab, however, so Toki was thankful.

"Mmm... I'm pretty sure I'm going to get a blister." She chuckles, enjoying the cool air. "Mmm... Alright, mister scientist. Where are you taking me?"

Tenne had removed his black coat once they entered the lab, and hung it up, before pulling out a lab coat and pulling it's white sleeves on over his shoulders, "There we go." He rumbled. The doctor then lifted one flap from his side to reveal the back had a long slice that went up to his where his tailbone began. His tail swung around and he gently grabbed it, hooking the vertebrae on a clip that secured his tail blade at his side. His tail gave a few tugs, but the clip did it's job in allowing him to travel around within the lab without worrying about his tail lashing and hitting anything.

After checking to make sure he had his clearance card, he began towards one of the many hallways within the lab. "This way, my dear."

The white coat was definitely different than the black coat. She followed obediently. "Hm... I think you look better in the black." She comments lightly. The white washed him out. But white was a doctor’s color. Though she never understood why, given the fact white stained like a motherfucker.
Either way, Toki followed closely, her wings carried high as she looked at everything there was to see.

"I do like my black, but I like my white robe as much as I do the other one." He replied with a chuckle. Leading her down the hallway, he walked for a short while until they came to some sets of doors. He stopped, however, when he heard noises behind one of them. His head shifted slightly before his eyes narrowed and he barked at one of the closed doors. "JAMES! I better not be hearing you getting busy with your wife in there! That's expensive equipment you're rutting on!" He snarled loudly.

There was yelp and a crash. "SORRY, DOCTOR GASTER!" Was no doubt James' call from inside.

Tenne chuckled quietly. "Were I mated, I would worry that I'd be no better." He rumbled before he continued on, "I wonder how long it'll be before Sapphire comes back to work. She's our geothermal genius, and I need her for our latest project. Of course I wouldn't have the gall to demand she work while pregnant, and have had her risk darling little Fuku. She was worth the wait." He rumbled softly.

"And here we are in my office, where I expect everything to be in order, as I..." The door opened, and immediately Tenne's gaze turned sour upon spotting a monster in his large chair, as if a lackey upon the CEO's throne. How annoying.

"Galloway. We discussed this. Skilled or not, you are a temp, and this is my office. You have your own temporary lab, and you do not have the clearance for the projects I possess in my data records."

His voice grew venomous and a bit more aggressive as he walked closer to his desk. "So tell me. What are you doing in my office?" His voice was sharp, and edged with a tinge of a growl.

Galloway was a shrewd looking monster who looked much like an otter. Toki, however, thought he looked more like a rat, and wondered if he was a hybrid of some sort.

Shrewd eyes leered up at Tenne. "It's not my fault you're too busy to be doing your proper job, Doctor Gaster." He sneers, voice deeper than one would think. Galloway made no motion to move from his seat. He continued to type up his report rapidly. "As a temp, I'm limited in what I'm capable of doing from my own desk, and since you're never here doing your job in the shifts that you should be doing, I figured one of us needs to actually work towards getting us our freedom to the surface."

Galloway sniffs and sneers at Toki with great disdain. "You might have found your happiness in your female, but the rest of us are not content to live down here like savage troglodytes like you are, apparently. You have slacked off since she appeared. So I'm picking up where you are failing."

Toki blinked, startled. "... I wasn't aware that I was impeding Tenne's work."

"Your mere existence is a hindrance." Galloway huffs. "You come along, and now he has us running tests on your venom? What purpose towards breaking the barrier could that possibly serve? Absolutely none. His children were bad enough from the moment he took time and resources from our facility to create their hybrid bodies, but now adding you to the mix..." He tsks in a short-tempered manner, and then hits send. "There. That's done and sent to Asgore for approval."

Toki frowned and rubbed her arm awkwardly. "First off, you're a dick. His children aren't a hindrance. Your attitude is. I might be, but they definitely aren't. Call them that again, and I might make you wish you had an antivenin to my venom."
Tenne's conversation about his tail came into great relevance at this moment, as Tenne was absolutely furious with Galloway's words. His tail was rattling up a storm behind him, his tail blade pulling repeatedly on its clip in yearning to slice his tongue out.

"First, do not forget that while we seek our escape, we also aim at making ways of living a little less painful for the civilians. I'd be as eager to escape as anyone else, but miracles do not fall out of the sky!" He rumbled, a snarl trailing up the inside of his throat. "Second, how dare you speak so lowly of not only my kind, but my pups, and my guest?" His eyes were practically glowing with fury at this point,

"And third of all, you are supposed to wait for me to overlook a report BEFORE you submit it to His Majesty!" He snarled, storming over to his desk before he slammed his hands down, leering down at the temporary scientist with unhindered rage. "I will not tolerate this disrespect, especially from a insufferable self-entitled capitol pencil-pusher who thinks he has permission to do anything he wants just because his higher-up is out of the building!" He snarled. "Get out of my office, and get to work in your own goddamn area!" He ordered in what might as well have been a furious roar at this point.

Toki even fluffed at the furious sound, shrinking back a bit instinctively from the harsh roar. Her mane had bristled and she did her best to try not to show how nervous it made her. Not afraid- she had mostly worked past her fear at this point- but nervous. Very nervous.

Galloway was even more so, with all of his fur standing on end and a rancid stink of fear on him. He swallowed all the same, and sneered up at Tenne with the same haughty attitude from before. "At least I didn't get here by bending over and taking it up the ass from the king. I got here on talent." He sniffs. He hops out if the chair, revealing that he was sitting on a stack of Tenne's textbooks in order to be able to access everything, and made a swift waddle for the exit.

Toki watched him go with a flat gaze.

He paused, and then stared up at her. "I'll see you in the bio-science division for your samples of venom. I expect that you will not be late, or give me any trouble, civilian."

Toki arched a brow and then glanced to Tenne questioningly. Was she going to end up letting this guy take her venom?

Tenne waited until the other scientist was gone before he walked over to a wall that had a few stab marks in it. He reached to his hip and freed his tail, before he slammed his head into the wall, denting it as his tail lashed violently, sinking into the wall and floor repeatedly until he seemed to burn himself out.

