Once done with that, he tucked his tail back on his hip and trudged back to his desk, picking up his textbooks and dropping them on his desk before collapsing into his chair, rubbing his temples. "Ugh..." he groaned quietly "Not even ten minutes and I already feel that fucking migraine coming back." He hissed to himself. "I hate that parasite. Who the hell even gave him his goddamn certification?" It was almost as if he had forgotten that Toki was there; that her light was gone and he was back to the way things were before.

Toki hesitated near the door, having watched Tenne work himself over on the wall. When he was done and slumped into his chair, she approached. Gingerly laying her secondary hands on his temples and brushing his own away, Toki massaged lightly with a bit of fire magic in her fingers.
Her fur was still ruffled and she was unsteady from the roar. It was too much like the one that Tenebris had done when he had nearly mauled her, and it had her on edge. She was trying to calm though. The nerves in her scent wouldn't help. She swallows, and hums softly. "Obviously an utter moron gave him one. Or he sucked a lot of dicks to get it." She commented queerly. "He's gone now, Tenne. It's okay."

"I am not a wild beast... I am not a wild beast, I am his majesty's royal scientist..." He murmurred to himself before he sighed gently as her hands came to his head. As the head radiated into his skull, he grew visibly relaxed as he closed his eyes and leaned back, "God I love you." He whispered quietly without realizing, seeming to feel a lot better after her short though tender treatment.

Her fingers continued to rub soothing circles, even as his quiet whispers reached her ears. She swallowed and closed her eyes. She knew he did. She cared for him too. But... It was only close to four months since she had been ripped from her husband. She couldn’t... Say that she loved him. Not like he wanted. It was too soon. So she simply smiled to him, that warm affectionate smile that she always had, and brushed her fingers gently along the cracks in his skull. "Do you feel better, Tenne?" She asks gently.

"Mmh... I do... You're wonderful, Toki." He purred happily as he smiled up at her.

After a moment to regain his proper composure, Tenne sat up and took a deep breath, and began returning things to how he had them. He saved the reports he hadn't had on his computer before to an external drive, and then rolled back his computer as to return it to his settings. Once the files were reloaded, he began to look through them, grumbling about how many there were that he had not yet seen.

Oh right. The reason she was there...

"Toki... I really don't want to send you to him..." He groaned quietly.

"Then why don’t you just do it?" She questioned lightly, offering him a faint smile. "I would be more comfortable with someone else doing it, honestly. We can even do it in a different division, if you would prefer. Though that might cause some hiccups, I'm sure..." She pauses, and smoothes her mane down. "You've done it before, so maybe you can show the others how to do it right?" She could eject on her own, yes, but she did not have the finite control to stop immediately in filling a tiny vial and keeping it from overflowing. She was not that good yet, despite all the practice she'd had with the honey she had been selling.

"I know, yes, but there's so many reports here, I need to make sure none of them are flawed or delivering the wrong message because if something misinterpreted is approved or denied, this could set us back."

"Oh." She nods softly. She then pauses and worries at her shirt. "... Do you have a map then? Because I don’t know my way around here and this place is pretty big. Reports are important and I don't want to interrupt those, so I don’t mind going on my own. I just... Don't know where I'm going."

He nodded, and pulled out a quick map given to new workers. "Here's my office, and the Bio-Division is down here... I'm sorry again, Toki, but I thank you for understanding."

Toki gave him a smile and took the map. "It's okay, Tenne. I'll see you later, okay?" She gives him a small wave and then ducks out of the office. Once she's out, she sighs softly, and sets her course to that which the map marks for her to go. It doesn’t look to be a long jaunt, so she makes her way there slowly but surely.
When Toki finally arrived, Galloway was waiting as if she had taken an hour to get there instead of the fifteen or so minutes that she actually had instead.

"About time! If there was anything slower than your beast minds, it was your goddamn feet." The otter monster hissed as he folded his arms. "You've already wasted so much of my time… let's just get this over with so you can get back to your incompetent stud."

Toki bristled immediately at him, something prickling and rousing inside of her. Something that wasn’t Cruelty, either.

She rumbled at him initially, and then she sighed, before taking a seat across from him. “Mister Galloway, your language and treatment of your peers, and of a guest visiting the lab, are not acceptable.” She says softly, giving him a firm look. “When I return to Tenne, I’m going to ask him how I can put in a complaint, and then I’m going to file one. I understand that you want to get to the surface- I really do. But being a dick about it is just going to slow everything else down and is not conductive for a working environment. That being said- Tenne is anything but incompetent as I am very sure he has proved time and time again, and neither is he my ‘stud’ as you so put it- neither are our minds slow. Racism, I don’t imagine, will go over well if mentioned to Asgore.” She gives him a flat, firm look, and smooths out her fur. Toki had played games with bureaucrats back when she’d been a skeleton. There had been all sorts of slander she’d gotten- all sorts.

His words didn’t faze her any, and rolled off of her like oil on water. It was visible as such too.

Toki then offers her smaller secondary wrists, since they’re smaller for his much, much smaller hands to practice with first. “Now… I have six stingers to choose from. You’re welcome to take from them all. There’s a spot you can press on my wrists that will cause my venom to release. Please don’t get it on yourself- it’s very toxic and it will hurt you if it touches you.”

"Tch." He scowled as he set up the sample bottles, using a thumb behind the stinger on her left hand to locate it before he pushed it out a little to line up the opening of the vial. "What would you know? You’re just a damn civilian. I bet you’ve never even met his majesty." He scoffed, before he pushed on the spot with a little more pressure than what was necessary, watching with little interest as her venom filled the vial.

She visibly winced as he put extra pressure onto her thinner wrists. The more fragile limb already started to bruise a bit in the shape of his hand where his fingers pressed in, until she reinforced her defenses around it so he couldn’t hurt her intentionally. “Oh I’ve met him, yeah, when I got my ID. He and the queen are quite lovely people.” She gives him a flat look. "He seemed quite interested in my summons, as well as my ability to wield fire magic, much like he can."

"Blah blah blah," he mocked, “showing off gets you no where. I got where I am today by working for it, unlike that damn beast who calls himself head scientist. HA!" He removed the vial when it was full and moved to the other hand to do the same as the first. "Bastard didn't even need to go to school to learn, he just somehow had it all swirling in that bald head of his!"

Toki tilted her head as she listened to him rant, and sighed through her teeth. “Everyone is different, Mister Galloway. It’s in our best interest to accept everyone for who they are- just because someone has something that appeared easier, doesn’t mean that it was necessarily easier for them. Everyone goes through the same trials, just in different ways.”

Her second wrist is already reinforced by the time he gets it, and she lets him fill the second vial as she sits patiently before him. “A world full of hate is not a good one. Mister Galloway. Your hateful words and cruel actions do nothing but create more of the same- and it is something that we sorely need to do without.” She watches him for a moment while she grinds her teeth a little. “Is there perhaps something going on in your home life that has you so on edge with everyone? Sometimes the littlest things can set people off, but it’s not fair to redirect it and take it out on others if this is the case.” She’d like to give him the benefit of the doubt, but from Tenne’s reaction, this was something that had been occurring for a long, long time.

“How every monster has to be full of vim and vigor and be a pleasant person to be around.” Galloway sneers at her as he stoppers off that vial and grabs one of her primary arms to drain that one. “My home life is none of your concern. Keep your nonexistent nose out of my business—”

Toki tuned him out after that as he struggles to get her primary arms to let off the venom that he needs. He doesn’t quite have the hand size or strength needed to get her stinger to let off at the rate that it needs to, so it’s a slower fill than with the smaller ones, and he bitches about it the entire time that he has to keep adjusting her wrist or his hand.

She’d made an effort of kindness, and he’d pretty much told her to fuck off, though in a much more proper way about it, and was continuing to do so with every word uttered from his mouth.

So she zoned out, staring off into space between faint nods to let him know she was ‘listening’. She discovered that his eyebrows got very, very animated when he was ranting about this and that, and any time he called her anything close to beast or savage or simple, they would shoot almost straight up on his face. It was fascinating in a horribly morbid way, but provided a small bit of entertainment to her as she sat and let her stinger casually fill the vial with venom.

There was, however, a loud thud and a roar that rattled the walls of the lab and made him rapidly release her arm as he fumbled not to drop the half full vial. “W-what?” He spooked, his fur standing on end.

Toki lurched onto her feet nervously, her wrist arching from the rough extraction of venom from her stinger. She aches something nasty, and she can’t stop the faint tingle of irritation at the doctor—however a secondary roar has her bolting out of the bioscience division. She didn’t even hesitate to wait- she didn’t need to hesitate when the sound of that roar was the only reason she needed to bolt out of there even with Galloway complaining and sputtering behind her.

The roar sounded like Asgore- and she had heard his roar on the battlefield. She knew it quite well. It was unforgettable, that roar.

Also equally unforgettable was the bristling, massive titan that was the king, holding Tenne up by the throat with him pinned to the wall in the hallway and snarling in his face with a set of very sharp teeth that were usually not on display beyond the ones he usually smiled with. His sharper molars were being bared as he snarled, in quite the impressive display.

The hallway roiled in heat, the fire magic flooding the area so densely that beads of sweat were gathering at the temple of the one held captive in Asgore’s hand. Asgore’s oppressive magic bore down on Tenne like hellfire.

“This is one too many reports and insistent demands Tenne, that you’ve sent in about using Charas’ soul to break the barrier. You might be my friend, but she is my daughter, and I’m not going to let any of you do anything to her to hurt her.” His eyes glinted, hand tightening around Tenne’s neck as if he were going to bruise the pale flesh under the prickly mane the doctor wore. “You and this damn lab will burn before you get her soul.”

With his grip, Tenne might as well have the bruises now rather than later.

"Y-Your majesty! Please!” Tenne was gasping from both from the heat and the tight grip around his neck. His hands were grabbing desperately, his legs pushing in vain against the bulk of the king’s powerful body.

"I-I didn’t send those in!” He gasped, "I wouldn’t..." The squeeze made him wince, fear-induced tears welling in his eyes. "I-I’d never c-consider the child!” His brain was running out of air, and he was losing his fight to keep conscious. "A-Asgore... p-please...!

What came from Tenne next was weak, desperate, a whimper. "I only j-just... got back..."

Between one breath and the next, there was a different magic flooding the halls, and Toki’s washed over Asgore’s with frightening ease. Her primary hands reached up and took hold of the King’s massive wrist between one breath and the next, where in she hadn’t even realized she had moved, and she felt her stingers slide forth and press through his fur. The pointed tips bit into his flesh as her hands flexed, applying counter pressure to his massive forearms to make his grip loosen.

Temper or not, justified or not, Toki wasn’t going to stand by and watch him strangle Tenne. She wasn’t going to watch the black tears welling in the white beast’s eyes fall, or watch him lose consciousness.

Toki was not going to stand idly by while someone was hurt again. Not like the guard back in her home. She wasn’t going to listen to that whimper from Tenne, and do nothing.

The beastly feeling lurking deep inside of her wouldn’t allow her to, even if she had wanted to in the first place.

"Let him go.” Her voice is not the friendly tone it usually took. “Now.” Narrow and slightly feral pupils are nestled in her green eyes as she peers up at Asgore, as her teeth stretch into a the beginnings of a truly frightening snarl to ward the King away from her and the closest thing she had to a family here in this world that wasn’t her own. “Or we get to see what happens when my venom meets flesh. Drop him. Now.” Her magic bears down on the king, and her claws bite into his forearm like sharp needles.

He hissed at the initial assault to his arm and his furious gaze moved to Toki. "I understand you are defending another of your kind, Toki, but I cannot allow this treasonous behavior and blatant disrespect to continue. I could have you sent to the dungeon in chains for threatening to assault me.” He warned her. "Tenne has sent countless reports considering the use of my child's soul to counter the barrier. That's where I draw the line in what I’m permitting him to pursue in his research.” His grip tightened a little more and Tenne could only squeak out a shaky gasp.

The shaky gasp from Tenne had her eyes flicking to him briefly, her pupils constricting tighter as the rumbling feeling in her mind grew closer, before she was shoving herself between the king and the pale monster. She shoved with her arms, bracing Tenne on the wall with her back so he didn’t move with Asgore’s arm, and physically tried to shove Asgore’s arm back so Tenne could breathe. “I said let him go. I will do more than threaten you, Asgore. No chains of yours could hold me.” Her voice dropped an octave, a threatening buzz rising from her. Her stingers pressed further into his arms, and the tip pierced his skin, though she held her venom back from automatically injecting.

Her eyes glinted at him flatly as she recalled a conversation that she and Tenne had about using children’s souls for the barrier- they had both agreed not to. “You are lost to your anger, Asgore. You are strangling one of your people- one of your friends- because you’re not thinking clearly enough to realize that Tenne would never, ever consider doing that. He’s a father too. He would never- let me rephrase that. He could not ever use your daughter’s soul. He’s not the one that’s been sending reports. He’s been at his home more and more with me and his children. In fact, he’s more pressing for bettering life underground than anything else, but you’re not looking at what he has been doing—only what is happening now. Let him go. Last warning.” Her mouth opens. She’s shorter than him—but a bite from her would be nearly as bad as a sting. Her teeth have already torn out one throatripping through the fur lined arm above her horned head would be easy.

A deep chuckle resonated from within Toki’s mind. Cruelty was savoring the pure rage coming from her. Oh it was delicious to him—though that looming presence suddenly joining him in his little home… not quite as delicious.

Asgore gave a growl as he felt the stingers pierce him under his fur and he glared down at her with fury, though as the fire faded in his eyes, it was replaced by anger blanketed in confusion. "Then...
Who's been sending them...?" He spoke again, voice a little more calmed down, before he slowly lifted his grip from Tenne’s neck only to watch him hang limply from it, barely conscious.

Toki’s back pressing to the doctor’s chest kept him from slumping flat to the floor, as did Asgore’s faintly remaining grip. As his hand loosened, however, she took the opportunity to throw his hand back with surprising force, and whirl around to catch Tenne under the arms so he didn’t slump and hit his head. She cradled his head gently to her shoulder, her massive wings flaring out and making a barrier between the king and the semi-conscious doctor in her grasp.

Her mane was still bristled, but she answered him neutrally. “The same man who bruised my wrist when I gave what few venom samples I managed before you interrupted us. Galloway down in the bioscience division is the only one I know of that has the driven desire to break the barrier, and that has been actively in Tenne’s office without his permission. There was a fiasco today when I came in, and he sent something to you. Obviously something bad.” Toki stroked her magic gently along the bruising on Tenne’s neck, wishing desperately that she could heal him. The heat would just have to help as best it could. “But Tenne would not have done that. And shame. Shame, shame, shame on you for thinking your dearest friend capable of such a thing. You should have came to him when you first started getting those.”

The look he gets from her is decidedly waspish and still hostile.

Asgore's eyes gleamed in recognition as he realized the source of that name, and he growled, turning to some guards who had scrambled to accompany the king. They looked a little winded in the effort to keep up with him. "Find him." He ordered with a growl.

The soldiers nodded and began down the hallway, leaving the three alone.

Tenne, to say the least, seemed thankful enough to be able to breathe again. Though he did not stir from his state, he took a few thankful gasps of air. They came a lot easier to him as he was now submerged in Toki's heat, which was the heat that would constantly fill his home and keep him and his sons snug while they slept.

His mouth slowly closed and if one looked close enough they could see some shifting on his face where hidden nostrils either lingered or were simulated by the muscle as his breathing slowed once more. One could look to his neck and see that his mane had definitely been scorched short once more, and his black blood was quickly rising to the surface, marking the presence of a first-degree burn and bruise in the shape of the King’s hand.

Asgore watched Tenne, and he grew ashamed of his thoughtless rage, fearing what could have happened if Toki had not been there to stop him.

Toki’s wings flexed on her back, the gossamer surfaces a nearly translucent barrier between Tenne’s would-be aggressor and himself. She adjusted him to make sure she wasn’t smothering him in her mane, and gently skirted her fingers over his neck, and brushed the warmth of her magic over his Deep, deep in her being, Toki truly wished she had the power to heal, so things like this didn’t have to happen. Despite her wishing, she didn’t get to see the first-degree burn lessen any, or the dark bruising begin to fade at all. All she could do was offer some warmth of comfort and she wasn’t even sure the warmth was a comfort at all at this point.

Her gaze slid back over her shoulder, and she turned one poisonous green eye to Asgore. “When he’s fully conscious, you have a lot to apologize for.” She says shortly. It showed this Asgore’s relative youth in comparison to the one that Toki knew—the one that she knew… Well, she’d never seen him really, truly angry, but she did not think he would ever raise a hand to his subjects, no matter what they did. “I understand your rage. A threat to one’s child is something to be angry over.” She had killed to protect hers. She had ripped a man’s throat out with her teeth. “But you should have stopped and considered what you knew about the man you thought was sending you those requests, and spoke with him before you lost your cool.”

Asgore had handled it very, very badly for a leader. Very badly.

And he seemed to know it too. He wilted before her, his fur deflating under the scolding tone she took. “I… I realize my folly.” He murmured softly. He looked at his hand, which carried singe marks from Tenne’s mane, and clenched it into a fist. Asgore met her gaze, and lowered his arm. His fur had a few stains from his blood, where her claws and stingers had punctured him. “I’m sor-”

“No. I don’t want your apology. It’s not me who deserves it. Tenne does. He’s the one who got strangled and burnt for the misdeeds of another. Misdeeds… Misdeeds all because of that god damned barrier.” Her wings shifted, canting higher. The presence in her mind, lurking like a looming horror alongside Cruelty, agreed with her anger. Toki wanted to call that presence her beast, perhaps—and her beast had been roused.

“The barrier is a source of anger and irritation for many.” Asgore shrinks a little under her short reply. Their second meeting was not how he had hoped it to be—but he could understand her ire with him. “There are… many who think human souls are required to break the barrier. Nothing else we have tried so far has worked. My daughter… Chara, she… she is human. Many hate all humanity for locking us down here, and for those who have started to fall because of it, so they… target her aggressively. I feared that Tenne had become one of them.”

“So they want her soul to try and break the barrier?”

“Yes.” Asgore continues uncomfortably, listening as the sound of someone yelling kicks up. No doubt Galloway had been secured by the guards, and he was very displeased about it.

Toki’s hand nearly tightens on Tenne, but she forcibly smoothes it out over his coat instead, and tries to breathe through the surge of rage that floods her from the presence in her mind. Her own anger builds with it, but the beast, oh, she is a creature of anger and she does not like the thought of a pup threatened just for her soul.

“All of this,” her lip curls, “Is because hate is a never-ending cycle. Humans hate monsters, and put monsters down here, so monsters hate humans, and kill them for their souls.” It occurred to her, back in her world, that there was likely a reason why her Asgore had soul containers to capture Cruelty.

‘He would have needed to hold the souls somehow until he had enough.’ Cruelty murmurs quietly.

Her magic pulses through the hall again, and Galloway chokes on his angry shout as the guards carry him down the hall. The guards stagger under the pressure and very nearly drop the otter they have secured in their grasps.

For all of her talk about not being as smart as Tenne or any of the other scientists, Toki is not a daft person. She is, sometimes, a little thick, as any human can be, but she is also perceptive at the best of times. This is one of those times.

It takes all of Toki’s control not to burn the lab down in that instant, because she realizes what was in those containers, and where those containers had to have been developed.

Disgust burns through her faster than her fire would burn through a forest. Rage and disgust, because she knows what will happen here should the paths of fate continue, as they seem to be doing.

Humans- men, women, most likely and quite possibly children- would die, and their souls would be harvested and used to break the barrier. Something would happen- the death of Asgore’s children, perhaps- and it would trigger the shift in the man who was so against this plan, and he would be all for it.

Perhaps, she muses, perhaps that was why her Toriel and her Asgore were no longer together and so, so in love like these two were. Toriel was not the kind of woman to watch the man she loved go on a rampage, even after the loss of his children.

“When Tenne is recovered…” She finally speaks, her voice piercing the gasping breaths that had filled the silence. Tenne was not the only one gasping now- Galloway and the guards were struggling for breath under the weight of her magic. “When he can stand. I want you to take me to the barrier.” She glances to Asgore, giving him a sharp gaze.

It took Tenne longer than Toki would have liked to come back around, but she’d had time to calm down by the time he was fully aware. She was going to be taken to the barrier once Tenne was up and walking around- once she knew he was going to be okay. The pressure from her magic likely didn’t help him in rousing- ultimately, it had even Asgore sweating, and he was giving her wary looks every so often.

Galloway had been stripped of his credentials and sent back to lockup to await trial on counts of treason. The counts of treason came from the very obvious threats and pressures from within the reports he had been sending to Asgore under Tenne’s name. It also didn’t help his case that he opened his mouth and spouted off all sorts of slander at her and at Tenne, and then at Asgore himself for harboring a human and raising her instead of killing her like he should have.

The scary thought came from the fact that there were more monsters out there that were anti-human, just like Galloway.

It was for the best that he was being put into jail though. Crimes against the royal family were not to be excused. It honestly surprised Toki that she wasn’t being hauled off too, for essentially assaulting and threatening Asgore.

Though… The wary look the guards had shot her, and the fact the King kept looking at her tense form with intense apprehension, was probably the only reason she wasn’t being hauled off in chains.

Not that the chains could hold her, like she had told him. She had too much magic bubbling in her veins for anything to hold her.

She brushed her fingers gently over Tenne’s shoulder, and eased the ice pack off his neck again to check the bruise around his throat. He was currently laid down on a medical bed in the medical ward- Asgore had taken him there upon her request- and she was icing his neck as gently as she could to make sure his esophagus didn’t swell. It also would help with the pain from the burn. He was to be bandaged soon- but they wanted to make sure he didn’t swell.

Toki’s face was still pinched and tense, along with her wings, and any time her fur ruffled with an agitated thought, Asgore would tense up on the other side of the room. Now that he had calmed down, and the actual culprit had been caught, he was almost… a little afraid of her, in a sense. Only he and his guards had really been aware enough to witness the full extent of her power, and she wasn’t sure how much Tenne would remember of it.
“How are you feeling?” Her voice is gentle despite the lingering agitation that taints her scent, making the usual honey and smoke smell have an added pepper tinge to it.

"Were it not for the pain in my throat," He sounded hoarse, "I would've thought I died 'nd gone t' heaven." He purred as he slowly smiled up at her.

Toki smiled back down to him, though hers was tighter and more stressed. “I’m glad you’re okay.” She adjusted the icepack over his neck again, and then fetched a bottle of water from next to her for him. It had a straw in it- and she held it to his lips. “Take a sip, Tenne. It’ll help a little bit with the hoarseness… When you’re okay to move, you should go get some rest at home.” She stroked a hand gently over his head.

He took a few drinks, and then sighed, "Asgore...?" He then questioned as he peered back up at her.

"He is here. He has something to say." Her eyes tightened irritably, and she huffed out a rumbling sigh. Her eyes flicked over to the king, and she motioned with a tilt of her horns. “He is here. He has something to say.”

The king stepped forward once she leaned back, and he swallowed awkwardly. He sighed, and rubbed his arm where her claws had dug into him, and then glanced to Tenne. “I… I do not have an acceptable apology, Tenne… I... I... I acted reprehensibly.” He murmured softly. “I did not stop to think- I did not stop to think about how the reports were starting to sound less and less like the man that I know, and have known for many years. I just… got so angry, and I acted. And I hurt you- I would have done more, if not for Tokiko.” The king pursed his lips, and then closed his eyes.

And then Asgore did something surprising. With only the three of them in the room, he settled down onto one knee next to the medical bed, and bowed his head to Tenne. “I do not deserve your forgiveness… but I would beg for it, if you would be willing to grant it it.”

Tenne blinked once, before he chuckled quietly. "Oh Asgore..." He reached out and gently tilted Asgore's chin up with the tip of his fingers, before he used the bottom of his palm to push against Asgore's snout, mentally hearing a quiet 'honk' when he did. "Get up, old friend." He told him. "You're too big to be on your knees." He chuckled.

Asgore glanced up at him, eyes large and remorseful, and glanced at the hand that pushed against his nose. It tickled him, and he had to lean back as it made him sneeze, his mane fluffing up in response. “I might be too big to get on my knees, but even a king can admit when he is wrong. I hurt you, old friend. I bruised your neck and seared off your mane- and you were just growing it back out again.” Still, he did as requested, and eased back onto his feet.

"You do it again,” She says, “and I’ll do worse than scratch you and lightly sting you.”

Asgore ducked his chin as he looked back at her, and huffed faintly. “Threatening a king is a high offense.”

She levels him a flat stare and her mane bristled at him.

Asgore wisely looks away.

"Toki..." Tenebris tutted to her gently, then set a hand on the ice pack on his throat and sat up, taking a breath before he looked up at Asgore. “It will heal.” He assured him, reaching out to set a hand on his arm.

She glanced away, and huffed a rough sound, before trying to shove the beast in her mind back so Cruelty could deal with it- with her, rather.
Asgore nodded slowly. “I know. Get some rest, old friend. I know you will heal, but you need to take your time and rest for you to do so. Take some time off work to do so… In the mean time, Miss Nara…” He glances to her. “Are you ready to go?”

She shifts and stands. “He’s not standing, but… Yes. The sooner we do this, the better. I’m ready to go.”

"Nonsense, I took too much time off work and look what happened." He snorted, before he gave Toki a glance, "And just... where are you going?"

“Asgore is taking me to the barrier.” Toki says softly. “What happened was not your fault- it was the fault of someone who was too lost in his hatred for humans, and in his desire and greed to get to the surface.”

“I don’t know what she’s going to do there.” The king comments softly, running his fingers through his mane with a sigh. “But she demanded I take her there once you were up. I’m not going to tell her no.”

Toki’s eyes glint, and she glances to Tenne, because she wonders if he knows what she is planning. She says nothing though, even with the kings casual prompting for her to speak of her plans. “You’ll see when I get there.” Her fur ruffles and settles, magic flexing over her skin. The ocean behind the dam was beating against it in anticipation, the leaks from the faucet coming faster and filling her veins quicker.

He reached up and took her hand tightly upon hearing she was going to the barrier, and a distressed look coming to his eyes. "Toki, I can't let you. It's dangerous..."

She squeezes his hand very gently, and meets his distressed eyes. “You can’t stop me, either.” She says gently. “I’m doing it with or without your blessing, Tenne.” She lifts his hand and pets his knuckles gently, and exhales a soft breath. She gives his hand one more squeeze, before drawing away from his hospital bed.

“I would say you could join us, old friend, but…” Asgore shuffled faintly. “I am not sure you’re in any condition to be making that trip.”

He whined for a split second before it faded into a growl, and kept one hand on his neck and the ice pack, the other planting behind him to push him off the bed while his tail extended to wrap around her.

"N-Not going to hear it!" He hissed, "No... I refuse... t-to let you go there!"

The tail ensnaring her about her hips put a stopper on her movements. She turned to look at him, and Toki frowned at him. "I have never let anyone forbid me from doing anything.” She says. “And I’m not going to start now.” Her hands are gentle as they come to his tail, and she grasps it by the blade to start unwrapping it from him with slow but gentle motions. “Tenne… I’m going to break it. I’m not just going there to sight see. I’m going to shatter it and break it and turn it to dust in the breeze.”

Asgore blinked slowly. “So that’s what you’re planning… you know… None of us can do it. I get that you are strong, Tokiko, but you’re not going to be able to break it- no monster can.”

“I’m stronger than you might think.” She responds softly. She glances to Tenne. “… You’re not going to stop me, Tenne. But if you can walk… you can come with.”

"Toki... please... I can't lose you." His voice rasped a little as he spoke, "Please... Don't do this..."
“You’re not going to lose me.” She says softly. “Nara are tough, and I’m no exception.” It’s words she’s said to Tenebris a thousand times over- in a world a million, billion, probably unknown number of cosmic miles away. She pets his tail as she gets it fully unwound, and then offers her hands to him. “If you’re worried, come with me. But it’s time, Tenne. It’s time.”

He whined quietly, but quickly took her hand when it was offered.

She shifted to help him to his feet, and support his weight while he got his feet. Toki gave him a faint smile. “It’s going to be fine, Tenne…” She murmured.

He whined quietly as he followed, but by flipping the ice pack, it was a little clearer that he needed to rest his voice if he wanted to get it back.

Toki let him cling to her fingers as she moved to join Asgore, and together the three of them set out for the new castle being constructed. It was the closest source of the barrier- the only other entrance was in the sky, back down in the Capitol according to the king.

It was a long and slow walk back to the castle- but at least they had an elevator. Though… a primitive one instead of a high tech one like the ones that she was used to. It fit all of them, but it was more like a rickety lift instead of a safe, enclosed elevator that she would have preferred.

She was anxious the whole ride up, and clung to the side, and to Tenne’s fingers. She’d rather have flown, in all honesty, but that wasn’t a choice, given the fact that Tenne had her in a death grip, and kept tugging her fingers and giving her pitiful pleading looks every so often.

The castle was beautiful though- it was grand and gorgeous, and it wasn’t even finished yet. It really would be a work of art once they got it done- with stained glass windows, a courtyard, and a small trickle of artificial light from some lamps they had hooked up. It was set up to be a promising sight for all of monsterkind all of the same.

At the castle, Toriel waited outside with two children clinging to her skirt. One of them was a small goat, just like her- the other was a rosy cheeked human who peered at them quietly.

Toriel gave Tenne a concerned look, and healing magic gathered in her palm. “Oh dear- Tenne! Come here, dear one- let me see your neck.”

Asgore ruffles faintly. “Ah… Tori… There was a misunderstanding when I charged from here. I… hurt the wrong person.”

The small goat clinging to the back of Toriel’s skirts blinked up at him. “It’s okay, Father. I’m sure you didn’t mean to- and if you apologized, it’ll make it okay. Right Chara?”

“Right.” The little girl looked scarily like Frisk, but with more reddish brown eyes instead of chocolate brown. She peered up at Toki curiously, but ultimately didn’t say anything to her. She instead looked at Tenne. “Are you okay, doctor Gaster?”

“He will be when your mother is done with him.” Toriel mutters.

He stepped forward to Toriel’s beckoning hands and lowered the ice pack as he leaned his neck back, allowing her full access to his neck, and the damage that became of the misunderstanding.

He did not speak, though his gaze moved to the children and with his free hand he gave a thumbs up that accompanied a wink and a smile.

The children gave him weak smiles in turn as Toriel set into healing his neck. She eased the bruising out of his flesh first, along with the damage to his esophagus and vocal cords, before she began to work the burns out of his flesh. “There… keep the ice pack close at hand. You'll still ache for some time, but you should be okay to talk, Tenne.” She checks along his singed fur for a moment. “I can’t help your fur, but it will grow back, I’m sure.” She nods.

Toki shuffles as the kids look at her, and she waves faintly, offering a faint lopsided smile to them. Her fingers gentle wiggle free of Tenne’s, and then she pads a little deeper into the courtyard, her eyes wandering over it. Her wings flick and twitch, and she hums thoughtfully. “Soon we’ll be free…” She murmurs more to herself than anyone else.

"You're a miracle worker, Tori dear." Tenne purred appreciatively. His voice sounded less rough, after her magic had soothed and healed them.

'And pray tell how you think you plan on pulling this off, Toki.' Cruelty spoke up in her mind.

'I have the equivalent of what amounts to probably several magical nukes trapped behind a dam in my soul. I’m sure we can figure out something.' Toki glanced back at the group that was chatting, and then began padding silently away from them. She knew the way to the barrier from here- the castle seemed to be shaping up into a similar shape to the one she had grown familiar with, so it the way to the barrier was no doubt the same.

She headed off while Asgore started to talk to Toriel, only to find a small set of curious feet shadowing her. The soft tapping of shoes over the unfinished granite courtyard was unmistakable.

“Where are you going? Dad says we’re not supposed to go that way.” Chara was following her, and reached up with curious hands to touch her wing. “Hey, lady- that way has dangerous stuff down there. We’re not supposed to go that way.”

“I know, little one.” Toki said softly. “But that’s where I must go. Why don’t you go back to your dad, hm?” She turned to look at her, hoping to redirect the girl in the striped sweater. “I’ll be alright.”

Chara gave her a skeptical look. “The last monster who went to the barrier alone got dusted.” She says. “So… No.” Her hair swishes when she shakes her head.

“Chara, dear,” Asgore calls, “It’s alright. She is… dead set on going to the barrier. It’s best just to let her go, my daughter. Come here.”

The girl’s hand tightens on her wings, and then she skulks back over to her dad once she lets Toki go. “But… Dad, she’s going to get dusted.”

“She’s not going alone.” Asgore shakes his head gently, and lifts her up and peppers her cheeks with kisses. “I will accompany her. Now go with your mother, sweet one.”

‘I’m not going to die.’ Toki murmurs to Cruelty. ‘I might not have much to live for anymore, but I’m not going to die.’

Tenne made a move while Asgore comforted his child, and he quickly stepped in front of Toki. Avoiding her wings, he reached out and wrapped his arms around her before pulling her close.

"You're not going to change my mind, Tenne." She warned him.

"I know..." His words were trembling "I just... I wanted to do this... just one last time." He whispered.

“It’s not going to be the last time, Tenne.” She hugged him back gently as well. “The next time will be outside and under the sun… or under the moon, depending on what time it is outside.” Toki gave him a soft smile, and then wiggled from his arms. She looked up at him gently, and reached up to pat his face with one of her secondary arms. “It’s going to be okay.”

“I don’t know about that, Miss Nara.” Toriel murmured softly. “We’ve had… We’ve had monsters dusted in there. I think you can understand Tenne’s fear. Could you… perhaps heed the plea of a Queen and not attempt this…?”

“No.” Toki shakes her head. “If the barrier has dusted monsters before, then it is all the more reason for me to do this.” She steps back, and gives them all a confident smile that she certainly doesn’t feel inside, before turning and marching for the barrier.

Toriel steps up, and she rests a hand on Tenne’s shoulder. “Go with her, Tenne. If… If anything happens, a doctor is going to be her saving grace. I will come too. Between the both of us…” Her voice drops low. “Between the both of us, we can keep that crazy woman alive, alright?”

He looked at Toki as she walked down the corridor to the barrier, before he looked up at Tori, and gave a shaky smile. "She's crazier than you were in your youth." He chuckled quietly. "I just hope you and I can protect her like Asgore and I did for you in your reckless age."

“You and me both, Tenne… You and me both.” Toriel sighed. She left Asgore watching the children, before taking Tenne’s arm, and leading him after the fast walking blaster beast.

Toki only stopped when she reached the rainbow of lights that were the barrier. She blinked at it slowly, and then prodded at Cruelty, planting a hand on her chin as she looked at it so she would look like she was pondering and thinking instead of staring off into space while she had a conversation with her mental companion.

‘Cruelty?’ She nudges him. ‘Take a look at this and tell me what you think. I never got to see the one you erected- not up close. Do you think this one is of similar quality and of similar power?’

‘If it means anything… I just got a massive headache accompanied by a wave of nostalgia…’ Cruelty’s murmured reply to her was quiet against the thrum of the barrier. He gave a dry snort. ‘It’s the same Magic- or perhaps the Void is a better name for it now- that we sealed away in our world. Though… I have to say, this is the shittiest construct of a barrier that I have ever seen. Comparatively, I’ve seen children put up better barrier’s back when I was still teaching classes for young mages when we were still together and at peace.’

‘So… would you say it’s going to be easy to break this barrier then?’ She questioned lightly, giving him an amused nudge. ‘You as a teacher is an amusing thought. All the same… How do I break the barrier? Any tips, oh great teacher you?’

‘Abso-fucking-lutely not.’ He answered, ‘Where this thing lacks in quality…’ After a moment, there was a prodding in her mind. ‘Do you mind?’

Toki hesitates and glances behind her out of the corner of her eye. ‘We’re being observed, Cruelty. We don’t have a good place to switch- and you recall how disorienting that is.’ Otherwise she would go for it, if he knew how to break the barrier.

‘Tch. It was only disorienting when you took over again! You have a weaker willpower than I do, idiot!’

Toki gives him a mental thump, and steps closer to the barrier, inspecting it thoughtfully. ‘All the same- they’re watching me like a hawk. They’re going to notice any change in behavior and probably make us leave. It’s going to be safer just to stay as we are. Besides- you make a decent back seat driver. And you’re not quite that good at working four arms. Don’t think I didn’t notice you focusing extra hard to work all four of my arms this morning.’

‘Am I usually this nosy, Toki?’ He hissed quietly.

‘Not unless something really has your interest, no, or you’re hounding me over something.’ She tilts her head, and regards him lightly. ‘Is something worrying you, Cruelty?’

‘Yes! Just... can I at least borrow an arm?’ He grumbled, prodding at a mental nerve in her arm.

She slid out of her arm like trading a glove, finding it easier than a full switch over, and found it numb and unresponsive as she guided him into control of one of her secondary arms. ‘Of course.’ She says softly. ‘Of course. Just try not to act too strangely. God- this is definitely weird.’

He flexed the hand a few times to grasp control of it and he mentally scowled, before he extended a hand, only to immediately retract it and he hissed into her skull.

‘The Ward of Draining Life...’

‘The fact that you phrased that like it’s said in all capitals is definitely alarming.’ Her teeth purse together, and her wings flick tensely for a moment, before she sighs. ‘I’m going to guess that it drains the life from anyone that tries to break it then… Well… Shit… Alright. Since Monsters are made of magic, and magic is life, does that mean it’s designed to drain magic? Because if that’s the case… I’m pretty sure we can still tank it.’

‘... I can’t even believe I’m gonna say this... But... what if we utilize the detonation... On the barrier?’

‘That might be an idea of warrant.’ She agrees. ‘Though… maybe not blowing ourselves up. I quite like living… But… I think if we shatter the dam holding back our power, we should be able to put all of that power into breaking the barrier. I can shoot… shit, mouth lasers, I guess. Think a super charged one of those would blow a hole in the barrier, Cruelty?’

‘Well it depends. Is our definition of the word ’super charged’ the same?’

‘I’m thinking enough power to potentially blow my teeth out of my mouth, if not more- how much power were you thinking?’

‘Coughing out that soul ball while managing to stay connected to it to be the trigger mechanism. I’d wager putting it against this barrier would overload the fuckin’ thing.’

Toki is glad the others can’t see the face she suddenly pulls. ‘You make it sound like all of those people’s soul traits and magic are one big hairball to hack out. That’s just… ugh, that’s so gross. I don’t even know if I can do that- I don’t know how much exploring of our system you’ve done while you’ve been floating around inside my head, but I think the magic ball is pretty integrated into our system by now. Also- detonating that is basically like setting off a nuclear explosion- and we’re going to collapse the entire Underground if we do that. I mean, yeah, it would totally do it- but we’re also going to kill everyone and us too, probably.’

‘I mean... we still could.’

Aannnd typical Cruelty at it again with that terrorist bullshit.

‘Bad Cruelty. Bad. You’ve been doing so good until now. No- we’re not going to blow up the underground. I can’t believe you.’ She huffs to him. She shakes her head.
Toki squares her shoulders, and walks a few paces away from the barrier. She glances to Tenne and Toriel, and tilts her head. “You may want to stand back.” She advises gently, as she reaches deep within her to the dam inside of their soul. She digs her claws into the foundation, and she grabs hold. “This might get a little… Messy.”

Tenne took an uneasy step back, whining quietly. “Be careful...”

Cruelty relinquished control and murmured a soft ‘sorry’ before he helped her focus to find the pent up energy within. ‘I don’t know what will happen after this is released... so... good luck.’

‘Thank you, Cruelty. I’m going to need it.’

“Yes, please do.” Toriel nods. She too takes a step back, but she watches her carefully and readies her magic.

The barrier crackles eagerly, sensing magic use.

Toki glances at it, and then puffs softly. “I will.” She nods to Tenne and Toriel.

She turns to face the barrier, and rolls her shoulders. She can do this. She can do this. Well... She hopes she can do this. Toki takes a deep breath in, her ribs expanding below her flesh, and then exhales roughly. Her fingers in the dam inside of her soul tug once, twice, and thrice- and the dam cracks.

The weakness in the dam holding back an ocean is more than enough. The weight of the power behind it pushes against the crack and forces it open, starting with a fast trickle, into a steady stream, until finally the ocean is just pouring into her without any form of restraint.

The power floods her limbs, making the air around her turn heavy. The weight of the magic hits her again in ways she hadn’t expected it to- and it washes over her with agonizing quickness as it fills her past the point of full, and then just keeps going.

Some of it leaks out of her skin, rolling out of her in a sickly black ooze that wafts into the air like a toxic mist. Toki lifts her arms and beckons it back to her, knowing she will need every ounce of it that she can get. She gathers it up in front of her, mashing it into a ball like she had seen Cruelty do.

She funnels the escaping magical smoke back up into her grasp, and compresses it all into a ball so heavy that the rocks around her began to rattle.

Once smoke stopped rolling from her body, Toki compressed the massive ball of smoke as tight as it would go- and then ate it.

And immediately regretted it.

Her body had tried to bleed out the power that it wasn’t meant to hold- and she had basically told it no and where to shove it.

She hit her knees as the rest of the dam shattered, and the ocean did it’s best to drown her. Her body visibly warped under the weight of the magic, making the stone sink in under her, and she struggled for breath as she tried to gain control of the bomb she had just wrought upon herself and the other monsters.

Her magic took on a beating pulse that was increasing into a rapid crescendo, like the rapid ticking of a bomb, and she couldn’t stop the pained cry as the magic tried to melt down and reform one of her arms. It was unable to- but the sensation of it attempting to do so was no less unpleasant.
Watching her body surge and warp under the pulsing of heavy magic beyond even them must not have been a pleasant sight- and Toki spared her companions a glance as she tried to gain control over herself.

Toriel was watching with horror, having sunk to her knees under the weight and pressure of the magic that Toki was putting out. Her chest was heaving for breath, and she was struggling to stay on her hands and knees as Toki labored to control the power of the magic she had unleashed.

The sheer force of the magic would have put Tenebris on his hands and feet. Tenne buckled to the knees.

But in his stubbornness and refusal to lose her, he began to crawl closer, or at least make an effort to. With each shaking pull he felt himself skid back an inch for every two he managed. "T-Toki!" His words couldn't leave his throat; he felt as if the energy pushed the very air he breathed back down his throat. It didn't make things easier.

He finally got an idea that sort of worked when he used his tail as one would use an ice pick, ever so slowly attempting to pull himself closer.

As the pressure of her magic seemed to just keep growing and increasing, however, he couldn't get close. He tried to shout to her, but his words were lost in the thundering pressure of her magic.

"You... you better survive this, Nara!" Cruelty sounded strained as she proceeded. 'If you die, I'll kill you!'

Tenne’s actions warmed her soul as well as confused her, for she couldn’t hear what he had shouted at her over the ringing in her ears. She coughed, and used Cruelty’s voice to center her focus. ‘If I manage to die from this, I’d definitely want to kill me too.’

She gather’s the power, and lets it build in her mouth and throat, and she can feel it scorching at her and burning like no fire ever should. She can’t even breathe past the heat of the light building in her throat.

The noise that comes from her is something between nails on a chalk-board into an amplified megaphone, and the ringing of one of those glowing root things from that game Papyrus had dabbled in playing before deciding he didn’t like slaying skeletons. It deafened her, and only grew worse as the light in her mouth became solid, and forced her jaws open.

Her wings straightened up behind her as she lifted her head, her mane bristling with the pain from the magic inside of her. She drew more and more of it from where it was bruising the pale flesh of her limbs and ruining her clothing, and funneled it straight up into her throat.

The light grew and grew, a bright, horrible green color that crackled with power beyond what should be earthly possible. She wasn’t a god- only a god should have this much power.

It was time to put it to use- and get rid of it.

Her whole body lurched as the laser went off. The sound of it striking against the barrier was horrible indeed, and the barrier visibly rippled, bending against the force of the blast. Thick, black spikes shot out from the barrier, and they pierced through her wings as if her high defense were nothing- and Toki screamed around the light as the Barrier’s defensive ward fought back.

It pinned her wings to the floor like she was an insect on display, and then began to suck the magic from her to try and repair the damage that was being done to it. It was repairing the damage as fast as she could cause it, initially.

Instead of reinforcing her defenses, she threw it straight into her attack, and watched as her precious teeth cracked under the force that skirted past them and scoured the roof of her mouth. The ocean in her was thrashing, seeking freedom, and she pumped more and more of it into her throat and mouth, until her mouth felt like it was nearly splitting in half for the force of the magic that she was throwing into it. Between her mouth and what the barrier was taking, the ocean was rapidly draining, turning from an ocean to a lake, and from a lake to a pond.

The light grew brighter, more intense, and the beam hyper focused at the initial point of contact. Slowly but surely, she was causing more damage than the barrier could heal. Eventually, the barrier warped and under the force of the beam, the massive barrier gave an ear-shattering crack and a hole was blown straight through it.

Her laser shot straight through, and she carved a furrow in the barrier as she lost her fight with saying upright. She carved it from the ceiling to the floor- and made the first door to the outside, a door large enough that the barrier struggled to seal.

Her magic was running out though- it and herself had chewed through the massive stores that Cruelty had given her. The barrier was wobbling, warping, and pulsing like the bomb she used to be. Her limbs no longer pulsed, no longer hurt- but her insides hurt, for the magic had blasted through her and burnt her from the inside out like a worn out light bulb.

The barrier was working through her magic, and Toki collapsed as it began to take from her private stores rapidly, trying to knit the barrier together from the point of impact down to the last spot of damage.

The magic was too unstable, even for the barrier to properly use- so it went after hers. And, acting like a mosquito, it did it’s best to drain her dry.

Toki began to wilt before their eyes, crumpling from her hands and knees down onto her belly, and being unable to move as the magic invigorating her body and keeping her healthy began to be drawn from her. She’d done as she had promised, and blown them a hole to freedom- and she was paying the price, as she always did. The barrier still had her pinned, with the thick black spikes stabbed through her wings like spears.

She did it. Tenne couldn't believe she did it. Tenne had felt as the barrier gave and he looked up to praise Toki, only to watch with horror as she began to lose the fight. "NO!" He screeched.

Now with the energy released, it was easier for him to get to Toki and his throat glowed before his mouth opened and he released a blast of his own to strike the spikes impaling her wings. Successfully breaking the spikes just above her wings, he pulled her off the stumps carefully and pulled her close before he looked up to the damaged barrier. She had damaged it, blown it wide open with the blast from her throat, but it was healing fast- far too fast.

He held her tighter. "I'm not losing you." He hissed, before he unhinged his jaw to unleash a blast of energy at the Barrier.

His boys were going to see the sunlight; his king was going to bring his people to freedom, and he'd be damned before he let her blessing go to waste!

The barrier gave a mighty pulse as his blast hit it, and it wavered visibly under the hit. The conflicting types of magic, and the sheer amount of it that it had absorbed from the fallen woman that lay sprawled in the great beast’s arms, did not mix well within the barrier.
It shuddered, and made a shrill sound, like glass cracking- before it sucked in on itself. The healing edges pulled away, ripping wider, and there was almost a vacuum effect as it sucked air inwards towards them, blowing over them like a sharp, sharp breeze.

The barrier unceremoniously fell, bringing with it a tremulous silence in the wake of its absence.

The shaky rasp of Toki’s breathing filled the silence, echoed by the winded ones from Tenne.
Chapter 102

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Lots of stuff is happening in these consecutive chapters, ne? 8) Kinda nice, ain’t it. Bet ya’ll are anxious for the usual skippy chapters where stuff is much less traumatic. HEH.

Also sorry for being later in the day with this chapter. Taking care of everything for my mom after her surgery has proven exhausting, so I’m in bed earlier than I normally Am. On a side note- we’re running out of stockpiled chapters. Once we’re out, updates will go to a ‘when chapters are finished’ basis, because both Silver and I are at a hectic point in our lives, and real life must come first, sadly.

Translations: “This... This is not my home. This isn't where I came from. I... I'm really never going to see it again, am I...?”

Silverwing Notes: The only other time I’ve heard this much Freedom in the air is during the 4th of July, but baby is it good for our babies to be free! Whee!

Enjoy the Chapter!

She looked worse for the wear. Her teeth were cracked, the skin holding them in place having cracked and split from the force of the power that had come from her. The inside of her mouth was burnt and raw.

Her body had shriveled some, the mass amount of magic supporting and sustaining her no longer there, her once bright pale skin a now unhealthy shade. She was lighter, almost scarily light compared to what she was before. She was also limp in his grasp, though her eyes were open. She looked at where sunlight streamed in through where the barrier had been.

She could have sworn there was a cave there- but now it looked like there was a massive tunnel straight to the outside that had been carved in a straight line. The stone looked like it had been worn smooth by something. It let the sunlight in though. And the sunlight… It was so blessedly beautiful. Her eyes began to drift closed, exhaustion washing over her.

“D-did it…” Her voice is so wrecked- but she manages words all the same. “D-did… It…”

As the sunlight came, so did the fresh air. It washed over them and Tenne could only sit for a moment as his lungs took in the pure air, flooding his body with fresh oxygen and the energy that came with it. "Toki… You did it..." He carefully collected her in his arms and brought her over to Toriel, shaking slightly as he went. One short blast took a lot out of him- he could not imagine sustaining the sort of attack that she had done. "That took a lot of magic... I’m surprised you didn't buckle sooner." He murmured to the bee based blaster beast.

“It’s g-gon-ne no-ow.” She manages to say as she wilts in his grasp. Her mane is flat and limp against her chest. “S-spent it. Now I j-just have m-my magic…” She rasps. “Feel… Feel lighter… Was s-so heavy… So f-full…”
Toriel stirs from her daze as Tenne brings the fallen woman to her. Her gaze lands on the massive holes in her wings, and the sorry state of her body in general. “Oh! Oh you poor, brave dear…” Healing magic lights up her hands, and she closes them over Toki’s wings. It’s quick work to seal up the weeping punctures in the glowing surfaces, and from there she works up to her face. She can’t fix it all, but would do what she could. She frowns, and does a quick scan down from her throat down to her chest and belly. “Oh… My stars… It’s like you’re burnt from the inside out, Toki.”

“No.” She shushes her gently. “Quiet. Let me heal you first, and then you can talk.” She focuses her magic into Toki’s chest, and starts with the worst of the wounds inside of her.

Toki doesn’t even move when Toriel starts healing- and things turn painful. Her eyes just close, and she lets Toriel work.

The Queen works with swift practice, and then makes her way back to her face. She brushes her hands up along her throat, and then begins to work on that as well, though she’s sweating bullets by that point.

As she’s healed, Toki regains some color, but her body doesn’t regain mass. She’d still been drained- and it had literally sucked away what progress she had made towards being healthy again. Her breath comes easier now that her insides aren’t cooked, and soon her voice no longer throbs as badly.

Toriel manages to seal the wounds around her mouth, and a little bit of the cracks on her teeth, before she had to stop. “I’m sorry… I must rest.”

Toki swallows and nods. Not everything is fully healed- but it’s no longer as painful. “Thank you.” She murmurs softly, and takes a deep breath of fresh, fresh air. She then turns her head, accidentally putting one of her horns through Tenne’s doctor’s coat, and presses her face against his chest. “I told you,” She whispers, “I told you… I would give you and the boys freedom… everyone freedom…and you… you helped too, Tenne.”

Holes in his coat were the least of his problems, and he smiled as he stroked her head. ”You're a miracle to us, Toki..." He whispered, "Thank you, Toki... Thank you..."

Toki gave him a shaky smile, and glanced up at him. “You're welcome…” She breathes softly. “Do you… Do you want to go get the boys? So they can see… See the outside world for the first time?”

Toriel glanced to Tenne. “I can watch Toki, Tenne. Moving her now might not be wise. I want to watch her and make sure I’ve got her healed… You should tell Asgore as well that… That the barrier is gone.” She smiles. “You and Toki both will be honored as heroes.”

Tenne nodded a few times and he slowly put Toki down beside Toriel. He then stood up and headed back to the unfinished throne room, looking for the king and his children. "Asgore?"

Asgore was waiting in the throne room, sitting on the finished throne with Chara and Asriel in his lap. He glanced up as Tenne came out, and his ears perked. “Old friend? What happened? We heard quite the commotion…”

Asriel whimpered and buried his face into Asgore’s coat.

Chara patted his back. “Azzy,” She admonishes, “Don’t be such a crybaby. I’m sure no one died this time, okay?”

"She did it, Asgore." He told him, "She did it... It's destroyed. We're free."
His fur ruffled and the king stared at his best friend, his mouth slacking open. “… Truly? Are we truly free? This is no jest?”

"I dare you, Asgore. Step into that room. You will feel the sun on your mane; you'll take in real oxygen, taste the winds that have crossed the oceans! She... She's a miracle to our species!" He laughed, trying not to sound too overwhelmed.

Asgore stood, hefting his children into his arms. His eyes went wide. “She’s... certainly something.” Frightening more like- but a miracle as well. “A miracle yes. Is she... all right? The barrier did not harm her too badly?”

"You should have seen it, old friend! She summoned power I’ve never seen before! A-As if she faced a human army and harnessed every last soul within her! But... It did take a lot out of her. I had to intervene to free her from it, and land the final blow to the barrier myself, but Toriel's with her now... I...” The doctor hesitates, and then scuffles his shoe. “I'll be honest... another blaster beast appears in the underground with the power to free us from our prison... My sons love her, and I love being around her...” He gave a shaky laugh and rubbed his head. "When she recovers, I find myself the undeniable need to court her fully... such a miracle to our kind... I cannot lose her..."

“She is... frightening in her power, for sure.” Asgore nods faintly. He swallows, and listens to his friend. “Just... be careful, old friend. Do not court a being of this power just because she saved us and is a miracle to us- court her because you love her. You obviously do- you talk about her often enough for me and Toriel to see it.” He smiles. “… Speaking of your sons- go get them. You have a long run- but they should see the outside world, before there is a stampede from everyone to get out. Gather your essentials while you are there, Tenne- I doubt you will wish to go that far underground again to get them.”

"Yes, of course!" He gave his old friend a hug around the midsection before he turned and ran out of the castle with a bright smile on his face.

Asgore, with his children in arms, toddled his way to the barrier room, which was now more of a tunnel than a room, to see for himself their freedom. The fresh air that filled his lungs almost beckoned tears from his eyes.

It was true... They were free...

"Toriel, how is Toki?” He then looked to his wife, coming over to her side.

“She is weakened but seems to be resting.” Toriel answers. She had shifted Toki so her head rested on her lap, and gently rubbed her hands over the weakened monster’s head. “I’m out of magic for healing her though. I did my best to heal the worst of it- the magic that she used… While powerful… it tore her up inside. It was like… it was like it was weaponizing her, turning her into a living… explosive of some sort.” Toriel frowns, and brushes Toki’s mane back from her forehead. “She must have been hurting so much…”

Toki blinked open her eyes and exhaled softly. She wasn’t nearly as asleep as Toriel seemed to think she was. “It did hurt.” She murmured. “It was… designed to turn me into an explosion. I… I used it for something different. Rerouting it was… not easy.” She murmured.

"Do not over exert yourself, my love. You've done everything you could.” He kissed Toriel’s head, and then smiled to Toki. "We owe you so much, Tokiko. You will be knighted for your bravery.” He rumbled.

A soft laugh left Toki, and her face pinched in pain at doing so. “You don’t need to knight me, Asgore. I’m no knight- I’m just… nnn… I’m just a bee keeper.”

“Try not to laugh, dear.” Toriel smoothed a hand over her mane to help calm her. “Knighted or no, you will be honored.”

“I don’t need to be.” She shakes her head faintly, and exhales softly. She looks up at Asgore. “I just… I don’t need fame and glory. I’m a barmaid and ex bee-keeper- I’m no hero. Hah… Mm…”

Toki swallows. “You and Toriel can take your kids to see the outside… I’m not going anywhere.”

"But neither are we, Toki. We’re not leaving you alone." Asgore announced adamantly.

She gives him a faint smile from cracked teeth. “Ah… Alright. Well, I’m not going to complain. You’re all good company.” She shifts some, wings twitching under her. She winces. “Ugh…”

Toriel flicks her forehead. “Stop moving, darn it. None of that is going to help you now.” She huffs irritably at the woman. “I know the floor is uncomfortable, but there’s not much to be done.” She unclasped her cloak, however, and draped it over her as she noticed a small bit of breast showing through her tattered shirt. She glanced up to Asgore. “It will be an hour or more before Tenne returns… Why don’t you sit down with the children? We can all wait here for him to return. The kingdom and the guards can man themselves until you’re ready to announce the barrier being down.”

"I'm not going anywhere." Asgore chortled as he sat down beside Toki, putting the children in his lap. "Knowing Tenne, though, he's going to be a lot faster than an hour or so." He chortled.

“Unless he teleports,” Like her Tenebris could, “He’s going to take at least half an hour. I’ve walked this place, and I’ve flown it- flying is faster than running.” Toki murmurs faintly.

Asriel shifts in his father’s lap, and reaches out to touch one of her horns. “Dad? Is she gonna be okay…? She didn’t look this… skinny… when we saw her outside.” He looks up at Asgore with a worried frown on his face.

“Anyone who breaks the barrier has to be tough.” Chara comments, though she too looks concerned by Toki’s state.

"She had to fight quite a fight, but Tenne will take good care of her, don't worry." He gave his children a squeeze, glancing to Toki for a moment.

Toki met his gaze and tilted her head. “I’ll be okay, kids. I promise. This isn’t my first rodeo being underweight. I’ll get better.” She smiles to them. “Nara are tough.”

“Not any good ones.” Chara mutters.

“There are some.” Toki corrects gently. “Not all of them are good- and none of them are going to know how to treat a monster. I just need rest to replenish my magic, and food to restore my body. It will take time- nothing that a doctor wouldn’t prescribe.”

“Speaking of… Are you going to regain all of that power once more?” Toriel inquires gently.

“No.” The pale beast exhales. “That was sort of a… one time use sort of deal. I wont ever have that much power again. Not if I can help it.”

'I don’t think I can handle another outburst like that.' A groan from Cruelty floated up, who literally sounded facedown in something in her mind as he said that.

‘Neither can I.’ Toki replied tiredly to Cruelty. She idly wondered how he did his mental sound effects.

Toki had called it. It took nearly an hour, in which time Toki rested and was healed a little bit more, before the quick footsteps and breathless sound of winded lungs heralded Tenne returning, his boys in his arms and a pack on his back.

"I-I'm here!" He sounded a little winded as he set down his boys.

Asgore blinked up at Tenne, and shifted to stand once more. “Old friend, did you run the entire way?” One of his ears cocks at him slightly.

“He probably did.” Toki chimes tiredly from the ground. She waves at the boys, knowing they were bound to panic and squirm in Tenne’s arms any moment. “Hey, boys. Look what your dad and I did?”

Kai’s eyes were primarily on the sunshine at first- but they flicked right over to Toki as she spoke. His eye lights faded, and he flailed where he stood. He reached for her, but seemed hesitant to approach the battered form, as if he would hurt her. “Mama! Oh my god- Dad, dad, she doesn’t look okay, Dad-”

And there it was- it took him longer, but she had to have expected it to come sometime. Toki gave Kai a shaky smile, and sat up with Toriel’s help. She adjusted the borrowed cloak the Queen had loaned her, and made to try and stand. “I’m okay, Kai. I’m okay. Or… I will be okay, honest.”

"I know, I know." Tenne scooted over to Toki and slowly scooped her up to pull her close to his chest.

Quinn followed him and whined loudly as he hugged her arm. "Mama!” The pup whimpered.

Toki gathered Quinn to her, and tugged Kai to her gently when the boy finally wandered close enough. She leaned against Tenne, and cuddled them to her. Broken teeth peppered Quinn’s skull in tender kisses. “Oh boys… I’m okay.” She crooned softly. “I’m okay…” She glanced up to Tenne with a small smile. “Well… Shall we go outside, Tenne? I don’t know about you… But I’ve missed the sun.”

“Screw the sun!” Kai exclaimed as he clung to her as best he could without hurting her. “I don’t want it if you’re going to get hurt to get it!”

"Kai!” Tenne scolded sharply.

“I already got it for you though, Kai.” She smooched his face next, to which he made a face. “Your dad and I both did. So… let’s go enjoy it, yeah?”

Divested of her charge, Toriel got to her feet as well. “I’m all for seeing the sun. I want to make sure the surrounding area is safe before our people go charging out into it.”

“A sound idea, my dear.” Asgore nods. He glances to Tenne and his armload of the sickly looking woman, and both of his sons. “If you think you can walk and carry so many, would you and your family like to be the first outside?” The king says softly to his oldest friend.

Tenne sighed and smiled to Toki, nuzzling her gently. "Of course, Asgore." He then spoke up, lifting his gaze to the King with a happy smile. "But only if my king and queen are at my side.”
As he spoke this, he scooped his boys up to plop them down into Toki's lap, holding them all close before slowly starting the ascension to freedom. "Toki... None of this could have happened if it weren't for you..." He told her as he walked, a quiet rumble that vibrated through his chest carrying his words to her, carrying his praise and happiness.

Asgore and Toriel were not far behind him. They gave just enough distance, however, to give the doctor and Toki some privacy as they walked.

Toki was thankful for it as she used her arms to secure the boys as they cuddled into her chest. She exhaled softly, and curled her head into his chest, letting the hardness of his shield press against her horn and her temple. “I wouldn’t be alive if you hadn’t have saved me,” She said softly to him.

“So… We did it together. It was a group effort… But,” She glances up at him through one eye, “I did tell you I could do it, couldn’t I?”

Kai nipped her hand and glared at her. “Don’t sound smug for almost dying.” He scolds, voice thick.

She croons and nuzzles him gently as Tenne makes the climb to the outside world. The sunshine grows brighter, and the fresh air tinged with the smell of the trees.

"There it is, boys... the surface." Tenne rumbled, before laughing happily and giving the three of them a slightly tighter embrace. "We're free..."

Quinn giggled slightly through his upset sniffles over Toki’s state of being, but was quickly enraptured by the green of the sunlight over the trees, which was much like his Mama’s mane.

Kai glanced to the sky, looking at the cloudless expanse of blue that seemed to go on forever. “It’s… It’s so big…” He said, voice awed.

Toki, however, found her gaze drifting out- and to a city that should not have even been visible. Her mane tensed a bit, before she forcibly relaxed it, and she inhaled softly. These weren’t the trees that were native to home- no, these… These smelled like Christmas trees? Thousands and thousands of Christmas trees, intermingled with hundreds of other scents that were slightly overwhelming. The ground smelled damp and slightly like moss and mildew, like this place was somewhere that rained or snowed perpetually and the ground was always soggy and cold.

In the short distance, however, was a city with tall, towering buildings. It was built up along a massive river, with a big bridge crossing over onto the other side.

Toki’s brows furrowed, and she took a deep breath in, before exhaling.

She’d been here before. This… This wasn’t her home.

This was America. No wonder the monsters spoke English.

She was… She was even farther from home than she thought.

Her native tongue fell from her mouth without her meaning for it to. “Koreha... Watashinoiede wa arimasen. Kore wa watashi ga doko kara kita monode wa arimasen. Watashi wa... Hontōni mōichido sore o miru tsumori wanai, watashi wa... ?” Her voice was soft, sad, and with a sort of bitter acceptance as she closed her eyes and sighed.

Tenne looked down to Toki and gave her another squeeze before he nuzzled her. "Toki… It's okay." He murmured gently.

She gave him a faint smile as she heard Asgore and Toriel gasp, as well as a sound of surprise from Asriel. Her eyes slid open, and she looked up at him quietly. “I’m sorry… I suppose part of me was expecting- no… hoping, to see my family home just down the mountain.” It wasn’t visible- but if she could have seen the familiar trees… she’d have known it was there. Her eyes closed again, and she curled her face into his chest, and stopped looking out at the world that wasn’t her own.

She was so tired of fighting and fighting only to get nowhere… She didn’t even know what the void wanted, besides for her to ‘make her peace’, whatever that meant.

Kai squirmed in her arms, and her grip loosened around him. “Daddy! Put me down! I want to go see the trees! Is that a city in the distance? Whoa! The buildings are so tall!”

Toki took a moment to gather herself against his chest, and when she leaned back, she had affixed a mask into place, not unlike the time before she had confessed about her children. “They are.” She says gently to Kai. “They’re very tall. Humans live and work in them, and they’ve built towering buildings straight up into the stars rods of metal and glass. It’s really fascinating.”

"Can't put you down yet, okay?" Tenne tutted to his boy, nipping his head gently. "In time we will venture out... but first." He held them a little tighter and looked up as he heard the distant blades of helicopter blades. "Well... looks like we drew a bit of attention to ourselves..."

“Probably when the barrier broke…” Toki murmured softly. She took a few deep breaths, and then mustered enough magic to launch one of her little bees up into the sky. It was small and glowing green- but it would be enough to alert the helicopter that there were people- of sorts- down on the ground.

Once the bee had gone high enough, she let it de-summon itself, and then slumped into Tenne with a tired sound. “We should… Probably wait… Until we make sure everything is safe with the humans before we bring everyone from underground.” She murmurs.

“A good idea.” The king murmurs. All the same, he hands his children to Toriel, and then glances to Tenne. “Step off into the trees, old friend. Rest with Toki- let me do my duty as king and negotiate with these humans.”

“I’ll help.” Chara chimes from next to Toriel.

"If it means the same to you, Asgore, I’ll surrender the lead, but I’m not going very far." He rumbled as he slowly backed up.

“I did not think you would, old friend.” Asgore nods. He waves to him, and then proceeds to settle down and wait for the helicopter to come in for a landing.

Toki is content to cling to Tenne and hold the boys as the helicopter thumps overhead. She tucks her face into his neck, and sighs. “Be prepared.” She says softly. “For a lack of true freedom at first... It will come, but it will take time.” She wondered how much time. Between her, Asgore, and all of the others who had fostered monsters, they had gotten the monsters their rights in less than a year.

She had a feeling it would not be so quick here without a boss heart to be fueling the movement from the human’s side of things to get the monsters their rights.

The chopper didn't land for a while; it saw the small group of monsters and seemed to hold there in place until there were the sounds of sirens from down below near the bottom of the mountain.

The sirens had Toki's wings instinctively tensing, and she rattled softly. The instinctive beast at her core was growing anxious- she wasn't in top shape for defending the pups cradled in her arms, or the male holding her, and that was a source of stress for her. Toki breathed through it as best she could-she would need to learn how to handle her beast successfully.

"What are those... Wailing noises?" Kai asks, rubbing a hand over his skull.

"Police sirens." She says. "They might be... Slightly hostile at first. Just... Don't be aggressive. They're going to be scared and not know how to handle us. Getting shot is not what you want to have happen. Do you hear me, Asgore?"

"I hear you." The king nods, a grim look crossing his face for a moment, before he plasters a pleasant smile on his face.

Tenne lowered to a position that he'd be able to better support Toki, and gave her a gentle squeeze as the helicopter turned and started for where the sirens were blaring.

"No doubt that machine will be bringing them to us rather than them ascending on foot." He growled quietly.

Toki glanced at him with a soft sigh, and nudged him faintly. “Perhaps… there might still be officers that come on foot.” She says. “They will likely be armed- and very wary. We’re going to be very scary to them- I mean, I don’t exactly have a friendly looking smile. Just… don’t bare teeth, or you’ll probably get hit by a taser or worse.”

She shifts in his arms, and then squirms lightly. “It might be better if I try to stand…” The beast inside didn’t want to look weak in front of all of these people. She already looked sickly-thin and gaunt with watered clothes peeking out from under the cloak she had been loaned from Toriel. No need to make an even worse impression. First impressions were everything.

"Don't force yourself if you're not strong enough, Tokiko." Asgore told her, turning back to her for a moment, "But by having women and children, I hope to think they do not think we are out here with malicious intent."

Toki sighs, and kicks her feet slightly. “I can probably try…” She squirms a bit, and sighs. “But I don’t think I can stand and hold the children… So… maybe it’s just best I just… sit.” Even though her scent was twisting with anxious agitation. She hadn’t been here for the emergence of the other monsters- and they had never really talked about how it had gone, so Toki had no idea what to expect.

The unknown was terrifying- and she had no idea how these humans, these people, would react.

As the helicopter blades came back into hearing range she hid her face in Tenne’s chest and tried to calm herself with his scent.

Kai’s eyes were wide with awe, and his mouth popped open as he watched as not one, but three helicopters, laden with people, came into view. “Wow… The humans really can fly in their machines. That’s really neat. But Mama can fly better than they can.” He sounds proud, and cuddles into Toki and Quinn stubbornly.

Toki manages a faint smile as the helicopters come in for landing, but keeps her cracked crocodile teeth out of sight. They were alarming on the best of days- probably horrifying now.

Tenne had quickly taken the chance to make sure his tail was secured in its hook and tucked behind his coat as the helicopter came to land.

Asgore straightens, and affixes a smile on his face. As the whirring of the blades fades as the machines are powered down, he slowly raises his hand and offers a jolly wave. “Howdy!”
A few humans emerged from the copter in military fatigues; all carrying a weapon that looked like it would damn well hurt to get shot with. But as they got into position, none of them drew their weapons; rather they all looked a little surprised when he gave such a pleasant greeting.

Another officer in fatigues got out, but it was clear he was of higher experience with a rank to accompany. He too looked a little surprised at the friendliness of the greeting, but did not falter. "Hello." He greeted in return, managing not to sound too out of sorts.

Asgore tilted his head in greeting, massive horns gleaming in the light. He keeps his posture open and friendly, and his hands loose and relaxed. He gestures lightly to himself and his companions. “I am King Asgore- and this is my wife, Queen Toriel, my son, Prince Asriel, and my daughter, Princess Chara. My companions are my royal scientist, Doctor Tenne Gaster, his two sons, Kai and Quinn, and his companion, Tokiko Nara.” It was best to have names out there, so there were no misunderstandings. “We mean you and yours no harm- and we are very sorry if we scared you with our emergence.”

Kai offered a cheery wave from Toki’s arms.

Asriel drops into a formal bow, as does Chara, while Toriel curtsies pleasantly.

With Toki in his arms, Tenne couldn't bow properly but gave a small nod.

Quinn whined and hid his face in Toki’s fur.

"I'm Sergeant Nate Adams of the Mt. Hood Military base. We were mostly surprised when you did whatever it was to break out of the mountain." Nate gave a calm nod to them. “Though we hadn't realized you would be emerging from it, many stories of the past that mentioned monsterkind were skeptical at best, and not considered as I imagine it should have been."

Asgore nods. “I figured some form of military or guard would come.” He flicked his ear, and tilted his head. “I imagine that I will need to do more conversing with one of your leaders, yes? There are more than just us, I can assure you. The bulk of my people do not know that the barrier is down- and once they do, they are going to want to be on the surface. Perhaps we can work something out- I know it will be a long process to work something out for integration, but perhaps we can work on setting up a camp here at the mouth of the cave for all of my people to see the sky. Who would I need to speak with to negotiate this?"

"As long as you are within the perimeter of the Mt. hood base, you're in protected ground. We need only to inform the commander." The Sergeant answered, before looking past him at, presumably, Toki. "She doesn't look too good. We have medics back at the base if her condition is one to be concerned about."

“Toki and Tenne were the ones to break the barrier- and Toki unfortunately took the brunt of the barrier’s backlash for us.” Asgore comments softly. “Though… It is up to her if she would like your medical care.”

Kai’s smile faded in an instant and he puffed up defensively in Toki’s arms. He bore his little teeth at them. “You’re not taking my Mama nowhere.”

Toki shifted and exhaled, turning her head to face the humans where they stood. She watched a few of them stiffen at the sight of her teeth, and offered a smile that did not seem to make them relax. Well- cracked teeth, even mildly healed, were bound to be a sight to see. Particularly ones like hers. “Kai, it’s alright.” She soothed the defensive pup bristling in her lap. “Thank you for the offer,” She says to the soldiers, “but at this point I just need to rest and to heal. I can do that best where I have a
“If she wants to stay here instead, I have no qualms. I'll see about bringing up a first aid kit when we come back up with the Commander.” Nate commented.

“That would be useful, thank you.” Tenne rumbled with a smile.

“Alright then. I'll leave you all to get a feel for your surroundings. If the stories really are true, then I guess it's appropriate to say ‘Welcome back to the surface’."

Asgore nods. “Thank you- and that would be appreciated. We’ll likely need to down a few trees to make space for all of us,” he comments. “There are close to thirty five hundred of my people underground currently.”

“Three thousand, two hundred and sixty nine, to be exact.” Toriel chime, and strokes her fingers through Chara’s hair.

“Mom reminds when Dad forgets.” The human child standing next to Toriel chimes lightly, tugging on her striped sweater.

"And to this day I have no idea how she does that." Tenne whispered to his armful, snickering quietly.

Toki simply smiled.

“Ah, yes, thank you dear.” Asgore nods. “Like I said, there are many of us- we will need space to spread out. Will it be a problem if we cut down a few trees to make space for shelters? We will replant the forest when we are able to leave the mountain.”

"Well once again, we will talk to the commander, as well as a representative from the local Nature Reserves and the Fish and Wildlife." Adams answered. "So if I may, your Majesty. I will see about having them on the next chopper over."

Asgore nods. “Of course. We will be here, though there may be more of us depending on what occurs between now and then. None of us will hurt any of you, so long as you extend the same courtesy to us, of course.” He dips his chin, and motions to the chopper, which has started to fire up again. “Please- have a safe flight, Sergeant Adams, you and your soldiers.”

Toki sucks in a soft breath and brushes her horn against his chin. “We may want to choose our location for where we’ll be settling when the soldiers are gone.” Voice kept very, very quiet, Toki speaks against Tenne’s neck as he cradles her. “When we get everyone up here, it's going to be a mad scramble to get locations for everyone to camp at…” She murmurs softly.

"It would be wise." He nodded slowly, watching the copter take off before he looked to Asgore. "Toki suggests we get a head start in making ourselves a location where we shall stay. After all, there's going to be thirty two hundred and sixty nine other monsters who will want to find the same before each other.”

"It would be wise.” The king agrees. “However, I don’t have supplies on me for putting up a tent. You and Toki are welcome to go find your location, however. Toriel and myself will need to retrieve proper supplies from the Underground, first, before we can begin to put up a tent.”

“Can we scout a location though, Dad?” Chara tugs on his cape, and looks up at him with big, nearly crimson eyes. “Please?”
He chuckles. “Of course. You and Asriel can go with your mother. I will arrange the guards, and have things brought up. In the mean time… I would suggest getting your location, old friend. Once the guards know, gossip is bound to happen- the whole underground is bound to know.”

Toki nods. “Yeah.” She says softly. She squirms. “Let me down… I’ll help find a spot for your tent, Tenne…”

"I’ll handle the terrain, once we’re on more level ground I’ll put you down, Toki, you’re drained and probably don’t have the best balance." He told her, pecking her cheek.

Toki puffed her cheeks at him and huffed. “Well I won’t know if I have balance until I try to walk.” She says pointedly. She puffs her cheeks at him again all the same, and then just slumps in his arms. “Alright… Well… Lead the way then, Tenne.” She inhales lightly.

Kai chuffs and leans up to peer at his dad. “C’mon, Daddy. Let’s find a spot to settle down. I wanna get a comfortable spot and get our tent up. And a view! Gotta have a view. And I want a tree so I can nap in it.”

"Alright, alright! I’m going!” He laughed as he started the trek to find a place for them to sleep.

Toki kept Kai from tumbling right off her lap as Tenne made his way through the unsteady and unruly terrain, and tucked him against her with a put upon sigh. “Boy, you are going to fall on your face if you’re not careful. Then you’ll get snaggly teeth like me.”

“You don’t have snaggly teeth. You have cracked teeth.” Kai chirps. Then he frowns. “… How are you gonna eat like that? Your mouth is gonna hurt real bad. Maybe we can just do soups…?”

“I do have more teeth than just my external ones, you dork.” She nuzzles him gently. “I just can’t bite through anything right now, or they’ll break off. Besides- soup is boring after a while, and I don’t want to have to cook two separate dinners. I’ll figure out how to feed myself, Kai, don’t worry.” She boops his nasal ridge gently with hers.

He puffs at her.

Tenne chuckled and stopped for a moment, kneeling and resting Toki on his leg to free his tail, "There. Now this won’t be an issue of balance." He rumbled as he rose again, already feeling a lot more centered as he continued down the slope.

Toki’s wings flexed, and she chuckled up at him. “Oh ye tailed critters, can’t balance without your tails.” She gives him a tired but cheeky grin. She shifts, and glances around at the trees. “There might be a clearing just ahead. I see more light between the trees. Should we go check it out?”

“Would be easier from the air.” Kai chirrs.

“I can’t fly right now, kiddo.” She admonishes gently.

“… But Clover can? And I’m big enough to ride Clover.” He puffs his tiny chest.

Toki snorts, and buries his face in her neck next to Quinn. “Nope. When you’re tall enough to reach my shoulder, you can ride Clover on your own.”

His reaction was a little delayed, but at her remark, Tenne tuck his tongue out at her and gave a stubborn raspberry, but he indeed started for the clearing.

Toki’s fingers snaked up and grabbed the tip of his tongue between her digits. She arched a brow at him, and lightly held his tongue, before blowing a raspberry back at him. “You’re such a dork, Tenne.” She lightly tugged on his tongue before letting him go and wiping his black slobber on his white coat, further ruining it. “So… you actually brought a tent, right? Or are we roughing it?”

"We're blaster beasts!" He announced, "The trees are our tents!"

After a moment of deliberation, Tenne then continued. "But yes. I did pack our tent."

Toki laughed. “Tough words from someone who shivers if he gets ice down his pants, eh twinkletoes?” Her words are teasing all the same.

The clearing they arrive in is decent sized, and completely and utterly overrun with blackberries. All the same, it is sheltered on most sides, and has a decent view on one side from a very, very steep cliff that drops off for quite some ways. There is plenty of space for a tent, and the ground seems fairly flat and clear.

"I will drop you." He hissed warningly, setting them down before he swung his tail around to grab it. He then proceeded to go on ahead, using his tail to slice the brambles.

Toki couldn’t help but laugh. Once she was set down, she urged the children gently off her lap, and tried to get onto her own two feet. And then proceeded to do a spectacular face plant, and eat some grass while she was at it. “Well, that was a mistake. I think I’ll just lay here. This is nice grass. I like this grass.”

The sarcasm was thick in her voice, as she made an attempt to instead get onto all fours. That was doable, but not exactly a way for her to move, given the thick cloak covering her. “So… Is there any chance you managed to snare a change of clothes? The only thing I didn’t ruin was the new shoes.”

"I've still got my coat to spare, but yes, I went ahead and packed your clothes." He rumbled, doubling back long enough to drop off the pack on his back.

“Great- thanks, Tenne.” The pack was accepted, and Toki enlisted the boys in holding Toriel’s cloak up so she could use it for a curtain to change behind, just perchance Toriel and her children wandered over. Once the ruined clothes were gone, Toki sighed and slumped into the slightly damp grass. She settled onto her side and watched Tenne, before humming softly. “You know,” She says gently, “as much as I would have appreciated using your coat, I don’t think I would have liked the possibility of human soldiers getting to peek at what I would be hiding under it.”

Kai chuckles and eases gently into her side to watch Tenne work at clearing back brambles. “Nope. Daddy wouldn’t have liked it either, right Daddy?”

"Not a bit." He replied without thinking twice about just what he was answering, hissing at the occasional poke of the bramble.

Toki blinked at his answer, and then chuckled faintly. “Well I’m glad you agree- no strange humans or monsters ogling my private parts. Also, Tenne? I think that’s enough brambles cut. There’s plenty of space for you to put up your tent. Speaking of… You still want me to stay with you…? A tent is smaller quarters than a house. I’d understand if you wanted me to bug off- no pun intended.”

“Yes.” Kai answers immediately, and headbutts her ribs. When she makes a faint pained noise, he whines a soft apology, and cuddles her instead. “Stay.”

"It is out of the question, Toki. Not after so long..." He gave a final slice, before he sighed and tucked his tail at his hip. Tenne returned to her side and grabbed his pack to disconnect the tent, before opening it and starting to unravel it.
Toki sat up as he returned, and wiggled away from both children. She shimmied over on all fours to help him unroll the tent and get it set up, using her wings to help her stay balanced. “Alright, Tenne, alright. Just be aware, wings go everywhere in small quarters. You’re going to probably get bopped at least once.” She hummed.

Kai rounded up Quinn, and went to go investigate one of the berry bushes to see what it was.

"I didn't care in the nest, did I?” He chuckled as he looked at her for a moment.

“Nope. But that was only for a night.” Her wings twitch slightly. “This would be more than one night. I’m not that wiggly, but my wings do weird things when I sleep on my front.” Which might be a thing. Toki shifted and stretched out the material, humming faintly and then easing the spikes in for keeping the tent material in place. Crawling around on the ground wasn’t all that comfortable, as it made her breasts hang, but it wasn’t the worst feeling in the world. At least she wasn’t falling on her face. Her teeth couldn’t take more hits.

He snorted and used his tail blade to slam the spikes into the ground, securing them. Soon the tent was completed in whole, revealing to be a bit larger than Toki no doubt expected.

The tent was larger than expected, probably easily able to hold her, Tenne, and probably two more monsters of their size. Toki tilted her head as she looked up at it. “… Why did I expect something smaller? Just… why.” She shakes her head with a soft sigh, and then flicks her wings. She shifts, and crouches shakily on her haunches. “It’s a nice tent though. Mmm… And we’re fairly secluded- so we should be alright out here.”

Exhaling softly, Toki makes to stand- and manages it with wobbly efficiency. She has to brace on the tent- but she’s upright. She glances to Tenne and buzzes her wings faintly. “Alright… Well, we have other things we need to prepare, along with the inside of the tent. Boys?” She calls. “Think you can hunt up some dried twigs?”

“Sure!” Kai nods. He takes Quinn’s hand, and sets off into the underbrush to get dried twigs as requested.

Toki glances at Tenne. “Alright. We can split forces.” Even if she doesn’t look like she could split a muffin, let alone forces, she’d try. “You want to take the inside of the tent, while I prepare the fire pit?”

Tenne chuckled and stretched with a sigh. "I'll go pick blackberries.” He chortled as he then turned to the pile of brambles.

Toki puffed her cheeks at him. “That wasn’t an option I had in mind- but might as well see if they’re still in season.” It felt like it was nearing the end of summer- however it could be middle of the summer though based on the colors of the leaves- so they should still be, from the times she remembered summers at her grandparent’s house. Her grandparent’s on her biological father’s side, that was.

Toki sighed, and ended up back down on her hands and legs as she grabbed the bag and scuttled into the tent. She was quick in spreading out the sleeping bags that she could find, and rolling up the blankets for pillows, before setting the bag in the corner where it wouldn’t get in the way. Once the interior of the tent was good enough, she scampered out.

She chose a spot that was ample distance away from the tent, and ample distance away from any brambles or grass, before she started to dig the fire pit.
Quinn watched his brother go around collecting firewood, having abandoned him to his task when his older brother’s legs proved faster than his own, and his father going to harvest berries. However, when he saw Toki start digging, he chattered happily and bound over to join her—because this was something he could do to help. "NYEH!" He squealed, taking her hands’ place as he started to dig.

She blinked as he took her place, and then chuckled softly. She let her hands pull back, and motioned to the places where the exuberant pup should widen or deepen the pit while he churned the dirt and kicked out small rocks and clumps of roots. “Good job, Quinn.” She cooed softly. “Very good job.” She sat back to avoid being spattered in dirt, and used her primary arms to keep herself balanced while her secondary set applauded him gently.

His tail wagged happily behind him as he continued to dig until the hole was wide enough, as well as deep enough.

Once it was perfect enough, she scooped him up and peppered him with very, very, very gentle kisses so as not to hurt her teeth more. Her secondary arms cradled him to her chest as she leaned her weight on one arm, and rifled through the dirt to find stones to line the side of the pit with the other arm. “Thank you for helping me, Quinn.” She buzzes softly to the youngest.

"NYEH!" He squealed happily, hugging her face when she gave him his kisses.

The hug just makes her smile, and she nuzzles him again, before finishing the pit. When she’s done, she shifts and rolls onto her back, leaving Quinn perched on her chest as she just takes a moment to close her eyes and rest under him. “You cutie pie,” She croons softly. She glances over to Tenne’s back, where she can see him picking berries. “How goes the berries, Tenne? Pricked your fingers yet?”

"Marvelous! Not a single thorn has jabbed me!" He answered proudly.

“Good job.” She chuckles. “The thorns suck.” She probably wouldn’t have an issue with it thanks to her defense stat. Though… come to think of it, what were her stats like now…? That was a thought for later tonight however. Toki hummed softly and stretched out on the ground. “Mmm…” Her eyes start to drift closed a little bit without her meaning to. She was exhausted— and the grass, while slightly chilly in the shade and slightly damp, was so soft and so much nicer than the snow she had gotten used to in Snowdin…

Kai proceeded to drop an armload of sticks and small branches into her lap, and then flop across her legs like a loaf of bread. “Maaaaan, camping is such hard work,” he groaned faintly.

Toki grunted, and shifted to sit upright again. She eased the sticks next to her instead of on her, and then patted his skull. “You’ll be doing your fair share of hard work, Kai.” She chuckled. “At least until I’m on my feet again. Once I’m no longer half dead, I’ll be good to go as far as taking over the rest of the work. Though I think finding dried twigs is an acceptable chore for someone of your age. What do you think, Tenne?”

"Of course, when I was your age I would've had to help scrape the dens and replace the elder's moss." Tenne replied, bringing over large handfuls of blackberries, cradling them in his gloves.

Kai stuck his tongue out at his dad. "You're like a billion years old, Daddy. You don't count." Blowing a raspberry at his father, Kai sprawls out in the grass like a little child sized bearskin rug. "I don't mind doing twigs. We're not gonna be sleeping in moss anyways. I don't want fleas."
Toki can't stop the little laugh that bubbles up. "No caves with moss for us, little one. We're beasts but we're civilized beasts. We have caves with blankets." She teases.

"I am not a billion years old." He huffed at his son, before he folded his arms. "And moss is a lot more comfortable than you think. It doesn't have fleas in it."

Like the mature child that he was, Kai stuck his tongue out at his dad and blew the biggest, wettest raspberry he could. "Ick no, I'll pass, thanks."

"Kids huh? That's the differences in generations, I suppose." Toki muses faintly, and tickles her fingers gently against Quinn's side. "They're all new aged and technologically smart. To be fair though, most of the outside world has fleas in it. So... Moss out here probably has fleas. Most of the animals do." She would need to pretty much flash boil anything if they got fleas. Ick.

Quinn giggled when she ticked him and gave a squeal that seemed to diffuse Tenne from being cranky towards his son.

Though he still sulked towards Toki. "I thought you were on my side." He gave her a sulky look.

Toki gave Tenne a crack-toothed smile. "I am on your side. But I'm also on the side most vested in not getting fleas. You're all short-haired critters- if I get fleas, I will be very cross." Her luscious mane ruffles and then settles flat when she doesn't have the energy to keep it fluffed. Toki gives him a tired smile, and lifts a hand to tap her fingers to her head. "I also know stuff, and fleas are a very big problem. Ticks too. Those with fur will need to be watchful or they'll be feasted on. And I, for one, hurt too badly right now to be anything’s feast."

"Mmh... You best take refuge in the tent then, my dear." He chuckled, shooing her away.

"That requires effort to move, and I have to light the fire later this evening." She puffs her cheeks at him from where she's sprawled in the grass with Quinn hanging on her. There is also the high chance that she can't walk with a child clinging to her- she could barely manage without one. Crawling... Maybe. "Besides... There is still stuff I can help do, yeah?"

Kai sits up and then frowns at her. "You broke the barrier. You... You really need to rest, Mama. You're not... You're not indestructible."

"He is VERY right." Tenne scooted closer and patted his hands clean, before leaning down and squatting behind her. He gingerly took his time in wrapping his arms around her to pick her up carefully, doing his best to support her back where necessary.

Toki squawked as she and Quinn were scooped, but she dangled limply for the most part. "Tenne really, I feel fi- ah... Ow... Careful, careful please that hurts when you bend me that way." She flinched a little as he bent her abdomen, and the recently fried and mostly healed up organs inside complained by throbbing painfully. Her breathing hitched and she curled up a little bit around the boy nestled in her mane.

Kai arched his brows at her from the ground in a look that was very decidedly one that she tended to give to someone when she was right about something.

"Okay, okay, maybe I do need some rest..." Toki admits quietly. "I've never been one to just sit idly though. I can't. It gives me time to think and sometimes that's not a good thing."

He murmured some apologies and set her down within the walls of the tent, nuzzling her and chirping gently. "I'm sorry, my dear..." he cooed gently, nuzzling her gently as he wrapped his arms around her.
At least the floor of the tent was plush thanks to the sleeping bags she had stretched out. Toki managed a faint smile for Tenne, and lifted an arm to hug him around the neck. "It's okay, Tenne. You didn't mean to hurt me." She says softly. "I'm just sore inside. I'll heal." It was mostly like the sensation of having a very large and very nasty sunburn inside of her body. She didn't notice until something moved and rubbed together. And then everything connecting to it hurt rapidly. "I'll get some rest as best I can with the helicopters sure to be coming in and out. Get me if anyone needs me for anything, please?"

He chittered quietly and gave a soft kiss to her cheek. "Of course~" He let her get comfy and slipped out as he set the berries aside for the boys to munch on as he started up a fire.

Toki ended up falling asleep, and only woke up when the sky was dark and the air was chilly. Her body had needed the rest. She had fallen asleep with Quinn on her chest, but woke up without him.

She also woke up with marginally less cracks covering her face, and less pain in her insides. She was alone in the tent, but she could hear the Gaster family outside of the tent. Kai was laughing about something or other- she didn't really know.

Toki shifted inside of the tent and got into all fours, her secondary arms curling up towards her chest. She inhaled quietly, and then flicked her wings as she carefully crawled from the tent. The firefight wasn't the only one lighting the air. No trees had been cut down, but there were hundreds upon hundreds of other campsites, where fires blazed and monsters sat in the distance. Not far from them. Actually, was Asgore's massive tent, with a rather exhausted looking Toriel nearly sleeping against his shoulder.

It would appear that Toki had slept through the mass chaos that was the great migration of the Underground population. All the better, really- Papyrus had practice with crowd control, not her. Still... It was good to see do many happy monsters just sitting, enraptured by the sky and the stars above.

Toki finally glanced down to Tenne and his sons, and then slowly crawled the rest of the way out of the tent. She gave him a faint smile, her teeth no longer hurting like they were.

Kai spotted her and beams. "You're awake! Good. Queen Toriel didn't know when you would wake up when she healed you again. That's why you're all better by the way. She didn't want to leave a job unfinished, so she came by not too long ago and healed you up more. How do you feel?" His blue eyes twinkled hopefully at her.

Toki still looked thin, but there was no way to magically put weight on. "Better." She answers softly. "I feel... Better. Still a little sore, but vastly better. How are you three doing?" She asks, her mouth opening to taste the air and make sure they had gotten something besides berries to eat. Berries were not a suitable food by themselves.

Quinn trilled at her reply and came over to nuzzle into her fluff with a quiet but happy sound. "Mama!"

"Better. After King Asgore got here, Papa went out and came back with a big buck. We're makin' dinner, though I think a lot of the other monsters brought their own food, no one's come hungry." Kai mentioned.

Tenne looked tired as he peered over and gave a smile, though he turned away again to groom himself while watching what appeared to be chunks of meat speared on sticks over the fire. There was a promising smell wafting from the cooking meat, no doubt due to Tenne packing what was most likely just a small handful of random spices out of the cabinet in his adrenaline-fueled rush to get back to Toki.

Toki gave Quinn's tiny sparse mane a gentle grooming as she nuzzled him, and she scooped him up so he could lay between her wings as she remained on all fours. She scooted closer to the fire, inhaling the scent of fresh kill. Unflavored meat, however, was usually not very tasty. She hummed thoughtfully, and then opened her mouth.

She huffed in a few breaths, before gently wiggling Quinn off her back. She moved him near Tenne, as she found herself compelled by another instinct to go and get the items that she could scent and present them to Tenne - particularly since he had done the obvious hunting.

"I see that your dad brought back a deer." She thrums to Kai. "Which is good. I was worried all you had eaten was berries... Speaking of." She glances to Tenne. "I will be right back."

It's obvious she's feeling better than she was before she had gone to rest, because she buzzes off swiftly to track down the scents she had picked up. They weren't far - just down the steep cliff side they had made their home on, but definitely far out of reach of anyone who wasn't able to fly. She made her way down, and rooted around for a moment, before finding what she was after.

It took her maybe three minutes before she returned, claws slightly dirtier, with a large, gnarled root in her hand, and several long sprigs of a plant she was familiar with.

She landed again, reclaimed Quinn, and held out her hand to Tenne. "I can go hunting for better herbs tomorrow. These were just down the cliff and I could smell them from here. Ginger and yarrow. They're both safe to eat, I promise." She chirrs to him. "Since you did the hard work of hunting, I could at least do something to help contribute to your catch?"

Tenne yawned as he had minded the meat, but upon the offerings by Toki, he let out a pleased sound like one would call a cougar's 'squeak' and he took them, taking in their scents, "These smell wonderful, Toki. Thank you~" he purred happily.

Toki beamed at him, pleased. "Of course. You look tired, Tenne. Why don't you turn in for the night after dinner?"

"I wanna go look at the stars!" Kai chirps. "I cant really see with all the trees since those fish and wildlife guys told us we can't cut them down since this is considered a... Whatever this is." Kai shrugs. "Can we do that while Dad sleeps? See the stars, that is?"

"Sure, sweetheart." Toki nodded with a smile to Kai. She was still tired, but taking the boys for a quick trip up above the trees was doable. "So what did I miss concerning fish and wildlife?" She glanced to Tenne questioningly. Obviously they hadn't needed her, but something had indeed occurred and she had no idea what it was.

"For the more primal consumers we've been granted temporary permission to hunt and fish, with rules of course. Spare the Does, Velvets, and young prongs, release anything under seven inches and all breeding season fish." He answered, before rifling through his coat and procuring a small book. He waved it at her. "Even gave me a pamphlet telling me the area's fish seasons."

Toki tilted her head and hummed. "I see. Well, that's good. We're not allowed to cut down trees, so I can assume that we're not in a permanent location?" She inquired gently. "Fishing is good though. Deer are good, but you can only eat one thing for so long before everything becomes bland. Any chance you got a book on all local herbs?” Her eyes flicked over him thoughtfully, and Toki gave a soft pleased buzz. She had never hunted- and she wasn’t exactly sure what she was supposed to tell Tenne if he ever asked her to go hunting with him. With her wings and stingers, she was probably an aerial drop predator, verses a pursuit predator, but she still had no idea how to go about doing any of that.

"This is indeed temporary.” He nodded, before he looked towards his pack, "It might be a bit outdated but I have a book of that sort in my bag." He answered.

"I figured." She takes a look at the trees around them and sighs. "Do you know where they're going to let us stay?” Toki wasn’t familiar with all of the areas of Oregon. But she did recognize the smell of the trees and the sort of scenery in the surrounding area. She thought that might be Portland up ahead, but she might have been wrong. She didn't think there was a military base near there. "Out dated or not, it might help. The ecosystem cant have changed that drastically in... Uh... Well, I don't know how long you all were sealed." She flicks her wings awkwardly- she’d only been down there a few months, and there was no telling how long they had been down there. "It might just be better to ask for a book on local flora the next time one of the wildlife guys is up. If you see them before I do, will you ask for me?"

"From what I heard, we are not being forced to stay here, but the human officials heavily recommended we stay with the nature reserve until the world has been introduced to our return. As for residence, many have come out to see the sky, but have returned to the underground for temporary refuge while they figure out housing for us. His Majesty will have audience with more human officials come tomorrow. However, I do not know if he will ask us to accompany him. I'm not going to complain either way.” He rubbed his head.

"Though, if he asks for us to accompany, I may end up needing to tote the pups in their satchel to keep them close while we work."

Toki nods and sighs. "It's possible they might just set up a small town for us all to reside in to start. It wouldn't be bad... As for monsters staying topside, there seems to be quite a lot that plan to do just what we are." Toki glances around them pointedly to the mass amount of tents visible via the faint glowing of lights from campfires. "I've had my fair share of politics. I know how to handle officials and the like. I don't like to do it, but I know how." She'd done it a lot back in her world, frankly.

Kai makes a face and groans. "Ugh. I'm big enough not to get into any trouble, Dad."

"I don't mind watching the boys.” She chimes. "Trouble finds you anyways, brat.” She tugs his cheek affectionately.

"I have no doubt that mischief will find it's way to you, Kai" Tenne snorted as he patted his son's head, "Alright, I can see about fitting the satchel to have it mostly centered on your back as it would on mine, make it easier to tote them around without hampering your capability of flight." He offered to Toki.

"It's not like I try t' find it, though.” Kai puffed his cheeks at Tenne, but relented to the head pats.

Toki hummed, and lightly groomed the top of Quinn's skull. "That would be good. It would sure free up my arms when it comes to flying with the kids, that's for sure.” Gaze landing on the meat, she quietly inhaled through her mouth and then licked her teeth with a soft sigh. "Mmm... The meat smells amazing."

"It'll taste better next time when I rub in this ginger and yarrow." He told her with a smile, reaching to take a kebab off the fire and offer it to her. "Would you do the honors?” He requested.
"When in doubt, you can rub berries into things. Though I think you'd have a problem with the holes in your hands." She gestures to her palms to pantomime where his holes were. Toki did lean out to accept the first kebab, and took it in hand. She was glad her mouth was mostly, as she sampled it gingerly. The cracks held up to the soft meat, and once she could get it past her external teeth and back into her molars, she could make quick work of it. It wasn't as good as it was when they had their entire range of spices to choose from, as she expected, but it still tasted good. "It's good." She smiles. "Thank you, Tenne." She adjusts Quinn so the boy can get down and get a kebab of his own as well.

"I'm... steadily finding myself a solution for these...." He murmured as he looked at the holes in his hands, before smiling up at Toki. "I'm glad you like it." He rumbled, sounding deeply pleased.

"Maybe try gloves?" She suggests lightly. "Perhaps fingerless gloves? But yes. Its very good." She smiled to him and nibbled some more. "The rest of the kebabs are done, correct?"

"They smell done to me." Kai chirps, and makes grabby hands for one.

"Oh, that's an idea... and yes, I’d say so." Tenne carefully plucked the rest of the skewers from the fire and blew on them gently, he handed one to Kai and held Quinn's out to him so he could eat from it.

"Fingerless gloves would still allow you to properly touch and feel things and allow your palms to be covered." She hums. "Just don't pick white, for the love of all that is sacred. I don't have the right materials to keep them clean out here." Her mane ruffles, and she works carefully through her kebab. She hums faintly and glances at him. "Is this... Back-strap?" She'd had it once before. It was considered the best 'meat' of the deer, the tastiest and tenderest of the cuts.

Kai started to work through his kebab, pleased noises coming from him as he feasted. Likewise, Quinn made small happy sounds as he ate, holding his kebab in both hands as he leaned back into Toki and chewed through the meat.

"I think I’ve a better idea, now that I need not worry about the barrier. I've had some bits and equipment I’ve had laying around since before the boys. A few trips to my lab while we work out living out here and I could make something work indeed." He rumbled, before he chuckled, "That's right! The boys have the other one, and I’ve got some of the tougher meat. It'll give me something to chew on for a while." He pulled the last skewer from the fire, only to reveal it wasn't a skewer at all. It was a leg bone with all the meat still attached, "Been a while since I've had surface marrow." He purred happily to himself.

Toki was very glad she was used to seeing her Papa chew bones, because watching Tenne set into a whole deer leg was… kind of gross. But not as gross as it would have been months and months ago. She was acclimating and changing to her environment- and apparently to being around this family and their more bestial habits.

The queen bee woman only laughed gently, and slid a chunk of meat off of her stick. She ate it swiftly, before nodding to him. "You do like to tinker in your lab. I think I’ll stick with the surface for now though. Anyways, I also think I’ll stick with the skewer." It wasn’t as meat heavy, since back-strap didn’t come with a lot of meat, but that was fine. "Given the fact my teeth just got healed, I’d really rather not test them on anything hard anyways." She chuckles. “I would probably be even scarier.”

“You’re not scary though.” Kai chirps. “Right Quinn?”

“Nyeh!” The boy cuddles against her leg as he works on his meat.
“You haven’t seen me when I’m angry, little ones. And hopefully you never will.” She hummed softly.

"Angry hornets I already like to avoid in general... though I wonder if you'd make it look good~" Tenne flirted shamelessly before taking a bite of his meal.

"There is a definite line between pretty and horrifying." She flushes a pretty green all the same at his flirt, and brushes her fingers up through her mane. Her tongue flicks out to run over her teeth. "Pretty sure I cross from moderately acceptable looking right over into nightmare worthy. It works pretty good to get my point across though. That's not even counting what my venom does." And if it was anything like Clover and Sugar's venom... Well, she recalled what happened to that man when Han died.

"Oh but there you go, flushing green as a leaf." He chuckled, "A lively color that does you justice. Terrifying or not, all I would see is the green, and your pleasant smile that accompanied close behind."

She blushed brighter and then fluffed at him. "You might not think that if you ever get to see me angry." She finished her skewer and then carefully ran her tongue between her teeth to clean them. Her usual flex and clean routine began as normal. "I love how you say I have a pleasant smile, and then I start cleaning my teeth." She laughs in good humor. "All the same, Tenne, I'm a very easy going lady on the norm. I never used to be easy to anger. Hopefully you'll never have to see me angry."

"I dunno, I think it'd be neat to see ya do a mom smash on someone." Kai grins at her.

Kai makes Toki snort and roll her eyes. "Mom smash. That's one way to put it."

Tenne snorted at that gently from behind the meat, hiding his chortle with a crack of the bone as it gave in his teeth.

Toki chuckled and then carefully took Quinn’s skewer when he finished. She took a moment to clean up his face with the edge of her shirt, and then glanced to Kai.

Kai cleaned his own face, and tossed the makeshift skewer into the fire. Then he flopped back and patted his belly with a pleased sigh. "Mmm, nice and full." He purrs. “When Daddy’s done, we can go see the stars?"

“If he wants to come with.” Toki nods. “He seems fairly tired.”

"Nah, nah, you guys go on ahead. I've got a bit more belly to fill." Tenne dismissed them with a gentle wave. "Go on and have your fun!"

A soft laugh rolls from her, and the green haired woman nods. “Alright- I don’t imagine it’ll be hard to find us, o’ mighty hunter you.” She scoops up Quinn, and then rolls Kai into her arms. Standing is easy, and she hums, glancing up the mountainside. “Though... You might not be able to reach us, since you can’t fly.” She glances back at him. “Enjoy your dinner, Tenne. We’ll be back in a little bit.” She promises.

“Yep!” The elder boy in her arms nods and clings to her. “We’ll be back when we’ve seen all the stars we can.”

Toki chuckled and nodded, before lifting off gently from the ground. Her wings made a loud noise as she headed up the mountainside. Toki could see fairly well in the dark thanks to her new body, and it didn’t take her all that long to locate a cliff just far enough out of range of the trees.
They had a clear shot of the cloudless sky, and the deep, endless abyss of darkness that was the sky as it was speckled with white flecks of starlight.

Toki settled as far from the edge as she could, and cuddled the boys in her lap, leaning back against the uncomfortable surface so they could recline on her and look up at the stars. “There you go, boys. Full view of the stars.”

"Wow." Kai cooed quietly, a smile on his face as he looked up at the sky. "This is so beautiful…” He made a soft happy noise.

Toki smiled warmly and kissed the top of his skull. “The stars are beautiful.” She agreed gently. “When we’re settled, and the humans are more adjusted, I can see about getting you a telescope if you would like? Gold to paper money translation rates need to be worked out first, I think.” She mused.

"Oooh, yes please!” Kai lit up at the offer, while Quinn cooed quietly and giggled, hugging his brother happily.

Toki smiled and nodded. “Then I’ll start saving up for that.” She smooched the top of his head again, and then sighed as she relaxed. Her wings perked. “Oh! Look, Kai. A shooting star!”

That got a sound of awe from them both.

Toki smiled. “Make a wish, boys.”

The boys looked at her for a moment, and then closed their eyes and seemed to make wishes, before looking back up at her again with happy smiles.

She smiled and nuzzled them. “Good boys- what did you wish for?”

"Will it still come true if we tell you?” Kai asked lightly.

Toki pondered that lightly, and then nodded. “Of course. It comes true if you confide it to someone who you trust. Do you trust me?” She hums gently to the boy, running her fingers through his stubby mane.

"Always." He purred happily as his tail wiggled against her. "I wished for you to always stay with us." He chirped gently. "We might not be the same as what you lost... but we love you anyways..."

"Mama!" Quinn giggled.

Toki felt her eyes water a little bit, and she cuddled them closer. “Oh boys… You’re not a replacement for the two I lost- but no child should ever be a replacement for anything. You’ve taken up your own spots in my soul- not replaced others.” She noses them gently. “I love you both too. I’m not going anywhere any time soon.” The words of admission slide from her finally, and she sighs. She’d been mothering these two for months- and finally telling them that she loved them…

It was sort of cementing it even more that she was here to stay. But for once… it didn’t hurt as badly to think about it.

They held tight to her and Quinn chirped happily as he held on, while Kai simply smiled and nuzzled into her neck.

"Promise?”
Toki nuzzled him back and smiled tenderly. “I promise.”

The two of them held firm to her, both clinging to the hornet like the mother she was.

Feeling the loving hold they held, a gentle whisper resonated from within Toki's mind.

And yes, development and cute beans. Tis a satisfying chapter.

Enjoy the chapter!

It had been calm... for only a small time. Humans- non-military humans, that was- were informed of their existence.

And so came their reaction.

First it was confusion- disbelief, fear, anger, and then curiosity- and then they came.

Reporters.

Lots of them.

It had started out simple, with the reporters simply bothering the higher-ups of the military camp. But they spoke naught of the monsters, not without permission.

So the reporters decided to take this matter into their own hands, and began to sneak up the mountain and into the camp in search for the king, or whoever ruled the new race upon the surface.

It was only after Toki was interrupted during a bath in the river that Asgore and Tenne, the latter who was more so upset about the river bathing incident, went to the camp at the base of the mountain to give answers.

The swarm of reporters that were stuck outside the gate flashed cameras and let out a cacophony of voices as they all tried to ask questions at once. Tenne didn't take well to the flashes, and hissed as he moved to Asgore's other side, his tail rattling loudly with irritation.

"Damned Flashes... Too damn bright..." He hissed bitterly.

"Easy, old friend.” Asgore patted his shoulder, and managed a friendly smile to the reporters.

"Now,” He opens his arms to them and lifts a brow. “I understand you have some questions- however, what you did, sneaking up into our temporary settlement like that, was very wrong. You walked in on a woman washing in the river- and took pictures no less.”

"She crushed our camera, so we didn’t even get to keep the pictures!” One of the reporters cried with mild upset.

Asgore lifted his brow higher. “Would you not have done the same had you been in her position?
Strange men and women snapping photos of her while she bathed, and then refusing to scrap said photos—tell me, what is right about that? It is a violation of much privacy.”

“I would have, yes— but is she really considered a ‘woman’ to even have rights of privacy?” One of the reporters waved another microphone at the king, hoping to pick up more of his voice through the locked gate. The woman continued to speak. “Our station has had some leaks from private contacts—we know that she, along with several other monsters, are considered ‘beast’ types, and are allowed to hunt on federally protected property instead of being required to retreat underground to find food, as they are more in tune with their animal nature than you non-beast types. Isn’t taking pictures of her basically just like going to a nature reserve to take pictures of the deer? Deer don’t have rights of privacy. Though the deer don’t crush multi-hundred dollar cameras in their hands.”

Despite the displeasure at the flashes, Tenne's attention was full as he heard the topic immediately go to Toki.

At the reporter's words, he bristled with rage and bared his fangs as he moved in front of Asgore, almost pushing the larger male as he immediately took to his infamous stance of his head held high, and his shoulders squared. His tail rattled with rage behind him as his pupils thinned to slits. His jaw loosened, nearly unhinging.

"How dare you!" He snarled. "She possesses the voice and capability to give consent to such parasitic photography! If she told you to dispose the photos you better damn believe she means that you utterly eradicate them!" Despite his rage, it was good to see Tenne defending Toki's rights as a woman. "It's no different than if you took pictures of your own women! She deserves as much right as the next pink-skin who relies on nature's assets!"

The reporter withdrew her microphone as Tenne stepped forward. Flat eyes looked him up and down. “...Right. She’s as much of a woman as you are a man— which you barely are, obviously. You look like you want to be rabid at me. You’re that beast one that they got pictures of savaging that poor deer. Not a good image you painted—monsters murdering Bambi’s mother—"

Asgore set a hand on Tenne's shoulder, and stepped around him. “Enough.” He said to the woman. “He is defending the rights of the only female of his kind. Tenne and Tokiko are very... special— and she is very, very precious to both of us and to our kind. I would suggest you speak of her— and of Tenne— respectfully, if you wish to continue getting questions answered.” The king tilts his head flatly, giving no option on that.

The woman sniffs and then huffs. However, another steps up and glances at Tenne, and then waves the microphone in her hand, before extending it slightly towards Tenne. “What do you mean the only female? Are you and this Tokiko considered an endangered species within an already endangered species of people?”

Of all the voices, of all the questions, he had detected the less aggressive microphone first, and decided for a moment to zero in immediately on the reporter who asked this question.

She was less of a gaudy image compared to the rest of the female reporters, her clothes were not flashy, and that which stood out the most was her auburn hair, which was a lovely color. Though her question, he took to mind over all the other banter, and like a hunter, he zoomed in.

He set a hand on Asgore's arm as he slowly stepped around again, his shoulders slack as he pulled on a pair of fingerless gloves that Hitsu had made for him. Toki had been right—fingerless gloves had been the right idea.

A simple glance to the king assured him of his calm state of mind compared to a moment ago, and he slowly stepped closer to the gate, gesturing to the guards that all was well. "You, with the auburn hair." He then spoke up.

Immediately there was a wave of silence, some were surprised at the sudden change of behavior; others wanted to hear what he had to say.

The reporter in question straightened up and held her microphone a little higher. "Are you and Tokiko part of an endangered species?" She asked again.

He approached her and leaned down to speak to the microphone a little better.

"Toki is what she would rather be called. If you wish to designate her, please, use that instead." He started, "As for your question, please understand I have distrust towards reporters and am reluctant to explain the status of my species given the comments of your fellow reporters. But I will tell you this."

He could feel the weight of the reporters leaning in to hear his words... But at the same time he felt smug. So much for being almost rabid- his calm tone having just silenced an entire swarm of reporters was practically a slap in the first woman’s face.

"'The only female in my company’ is what my old friend and king meant to say. I would defend her because it is her right for privacy, as I would for any woman who felt violated in a time she thought she had privacy.” He spoke.

The reporter blinked, and nodded. “If your words are true, then it sounds like you’re a good man.” She comments. “I don’t mean to be pushy, Mister Gaster, but my station does have some leads from reputable sources as to some of the population numbers- Monsters such as rabbits, wolves, dogs, and lizard folk seem to be quite high. Skeletons- which old history reports show existed way back before you were all sealed away- seem to have gone extinct, as have lots of other species. Elementals are in decline as well- even King Asgore’s family species seems to be limited to three and one human child. Our sources also show that… well, only you, Miss Toki, and two small boys, which are often around you and Miss Toki, seem to be in existence.”

She looks troubled. “Despite the outcry of hate and fear from a lot of channels, there are a lot of our viewers who have displayed concern for monsters and their population. Do you have any comments on that?”

The silence around them is still strong, as other newscasters’ listen and record Tenne’s conversation with the woman.

"Indeed. However first I must consult my friend. I will answer your questions, as you seem to speak for the right cause, but first I wish to see if he wishes me to speak naught of a certain topic." He told her. "I will be right back." He rumbled.

He turned, and then walked to Asgore who had retreated some to give Tenne privacy for his talk. "I want to answer that one's questions. She speaks to answer concerns of people who seem to feel more than fear and hatred towards us. As your royal scientist, may I have your permission?"

Asgore nods to Tenne. “You may. I trust you to use your discretion about what you do and do not say.” The king motions for him to return to the woman, who was waiting patiently at the gate.

"Thank you, Asgore.” He rumbled, before walking back to the gate. "As the Royal Scientist, I am willing to answer questions as His Majesty's representative on this matter." He announced. Tenne’s gaze slid back up to the armed guards at the gates. "Perhaps might we be able to invite her just within the gate? And perhaps offer her a seat. I would suppose that humanity has many, many questions."
His words were a carefully poised request.

The guards hesitated and nodded. Within a few minutes, they had the auburn haired woman and her crew inside of the gate, and a chair and rickety card table for both her and Tenne to be seated at.

The guards kept watch to make sure she didn’t wander.

She politely kept seated, and her crewman stayed right behind her, holding his camera at the ready and recording all the while. She had a smile for Tenne. “Thank you for the interview, Mister Gaster. You’re the Royal Scientist? That’s fascinating! Please, sit down. I’m Nikki Foster- and we’re ready to begin whenever you are.”

"Please, call me Doctor Gaster." He rumbled as he sat down as well. "I am ready, now, your last question, would you kindly repeat it?” He requested.

“Of course, Doctor Gaster.” Nikki nods. She sets her microphone down, and gets situated, before tilting her head toward him. “We have sources that show that several species of monsters are in decline, and that there are some monsters that have species that number in the single digits- including your species and King Asgore’s personal family. We have viewers concerned for your population numbers- what are your comments or any information you can provide on this?”

"Our population has indeed been decimated in the long time during which we were sealed underground. But we are only so few within the numbers of our own realm- Monsterkind were once as frequent on the planet Earth as humans are to this day."

Tenne continued lightly. "Perhaps we were the only who made it to Mount Hood, but I have faith. There are more of us out there, we simply need the chance to seek out and find our kin... Which we can achieve by humanity understanding our story, and helping us grow to live in this world that we thought we would never again see."

The woman gave him a solemn nod as she listened. "Well, for your sake, and everyone else's, I know I speak for my producers as well as myself when I say that I surely hope that there are more Monsters out there. It would be good to see the return of the populations and... Well, frankly, to make sure none of you could be considered 'endangered.'" Nikki gave him a faint smile. "Though that does raise some questions- the one that everyone has been asking, but that no one has been able to answer. How did you get out? From what old history records show, the very last of the mages sacrificed their lives to erect the barrier and seal you all underground. The power of sacrifice is particularly potent, particularly self-sacrifice. How did you all manage to get free? Is this a process that can be recreated to free other monsters should any other barriers be located?"

"We made it to freedom by a miracle; a miracle I fear that may not be repeated for any others we may find." He sighed quietly, before he smiled again. "But this miracle... Because of her, my sons get to see the sun, the sky... the moon and the stars."

Nikki picked up on that. “Miracle... Her... Hm... The moon and the stars are really beautiful- I’ve heard the view from where your temporary settlement is located is... well, to die for, frankly. Now, Doctor Gaster, I’m going to take an intuitive leap here, but by chance, would you be talking about miss Toki? She’s the only one that I’ve heard murmurs of from the other newscasts that uses magic frequently- and at a much higher potency than the other monsters. Are you saying that she’s the one who broke the barrier?"

He straightened a little, and then he sighed again. "Yes. She's our miracle." He answered, a faint smile tugging at his lips. "None of us were prepared for the power she possessed, but she insists it was a build up that had needed to be released. I am thankful she recovered as well as she did, even if “it was but a single dose of power.”

His words brought a loud murmur to the crowd at the gate, but they fell silent to listen to Nikki’s response.

Nikki swallowed faintly at that and rubbed her fingers lightly on the table. “I see. Never in recorded history has there been a monster with that sort of power— it’s always been recorded that humans had more power in their souls than monsters did. It’s… frighteningly impressive that one monster managed to break what many human mages gave their souls to make. It must have taken years upon years to build that sort of power.”

“Who’s to say she couldn’t do it again and turn it on us?” Someone shouted from behind the gates.

One of Nikki’s brow’s twitched in thinly veiled irritation, but she kept a schooled smile on her face. “Please, disregard the people outside the gate. Anyways- I did notice in reports that her health did seem to be less than stellar- and in fact, that she was unable to stand and seemed… ‘tattered’ was what we got from the soldiers who first saw her. Her health has improved? Or is she still very ill?”

"She indeed was in very poor condition after the barrier's destruction, but she's doing a bit better now... I've given her good food, made sure she's gotten plenty of rest, and my boys are there to keep an eye on her when I am needed elsewhere." He rumbled. "She listens to them as much as she listens to me." He laughed gently.

“As a woman myself, I take it that it means ‘not much’, am I right?” She laughs gently with him. “I’m sure once you’ve had more than just a week up top, she’ll get more of a chance to recover. Now… Speaking of more time topside- I’ve heard whispers that the government is thinking of setting up a settlement for everyone somewhere in the rolling hills and canyons between Maupin and the Dalles? Do you have any confirmation on that? And if so, are you excited? I’ve heard there’s good hunting out there. More than just deer, that is. Elk herds are common.”

"Alas, she is a woman, not an animal. I do not control her; I can command, but it's up to her if she actually wishes to follow through." He chuckled, before he tilted his head at the news of the settlement. "Actually this is the first I've heard of this. I am, however, rather excited to hear about it. The diversity of the species that can be hunted will be beneficial." He rumbled.

“I’m sure.” She laughs lightly. “Well, I’m sure King Asgore might know more- or perhaps the government officials. You can probably ask them later. But yes- the diversity of hunted species would be good. We’ve got a good informant- they’re going to give you guys farmable land. They’re talking about…” She makes a faint face. “Giving the ‘bestly’ monsters animals to farm. Honestly, that turn of phrase makes it sound… very racist.” The way Nikki says it shows her obvious displeasure at such a phrase. “Because apparently seeing a sheep monster farming sheep would be too weird for them.”

"That’s fantastic, I’m very pleased indeed to hear about this." He rumbled, "When one describes me, or, at least, my appearance, one would call parts of me more beastly, or of bestial origins, and I believe it would be an accurate enough term." The doctor then explained. "It becomes a bit of a rude jab if you use it to describe one's behavior unless they really are acting so impolite. Perhaps ‘carnivorous Monsters’ is a better way to describe we who enjoy eating meat?" The suggestion slipped out easily. "It insults no one, the term itself simply stating a dietary fact."

“Carnivorous Monsters is a better term.” Nikki agreed immediately. “My network will work on spreading and trying to coin the term and getting it to stick.” Something past his shoulder caught her eye, and she squinted for a second, before blinking. “Ah, Doctor Gaster, I do believe your-”
Kai, followed by Quinn, slid between the King’s legs and then barreled into Tenne’s side like a tiny bullet. He latched onto his father’s coat with a happy bark of laughter, and grinned at his little brother. “See? I told you I could find Daddy.”

Nikki blinked. “Oh my- those are your children. They’re simply precious! Gary- Gary, get this on film.”

Tenne laughed happily as he wrapped his arms around his pups, pulling them into a tight hug, ”My boys, my precious sons.” He laughed happily as he nuzzled into them, ”Hello my boys~” he cooed gently. “You two were looking for me, you say?” He chuckled as he gave the two several kisses on the head and cheeks.

“Daddy!” Kai grins. “We tracked you here. All the way down the mountain! It was lots of fun. We scared a deer, and then Quinn chased a bunny but it got into its hole.”

“Buh-nyeh!” Quinn chirped, and nuzzled his father happily.

Kai positively beams. “Yeah, Quinn. Buh-nyeh. It was loads of fun though, Daddy. I wanna do it again sometime.’”

Cameras were flashing from the front gate as other news crews tried to capture pictures of the family reuniting in the recorded interview.

Nikki smiles. “They are positively darling, Tenne. Did you two come here alone?”

Kai’s smile faltered and he gave a sheepish look. “Well… We uh… Kinda… forgot to tell Toki we were following you.”

“Mama!” Quinn perks happily.

Tenne chuckled gently as he set his boys down, ”Don't worry, Quinn... You'll get the next bunny.” He encouraged him, before he looked to Kai, ”You do realize she'll be wondering where you went off to, and not in the good way. She'll be very worried.” He tutted. Though he heard Nikki speak and he looked up at her, ”My pups love Toki as much as I do, and greatly consider her their mother. I haven't the heart to tell them otherwise. With how wonderful she's been to them, she might as well be their carrier.”

Kai’s sheepish look didn’t go away, though he did look a tad ashamed, since they knew Toki wasn’t really in the condition to be stressed. “I know Daddy. It’s just so boring up in camp all the time. Undyne is fun to hang out with, but she’s always ‘SPEARS ARE AWESOME, FIRE IS AWESOME, LETS GO STAB TREES’ and I don’t want to stab trees all the time, and neither does Asriel or Chara or Lana.” He pouts.

“Eees.” Quinn blinks and looks up.

“Neh.” Quinn shakes his head. “Eees.” He points to the sky.

The air above the forest is wreathed in a sea of glowing green— and the glowing green was growing closer to them at a rapid pace. As it grows closer, there was a heavy sound in the air— and the sound registers as the buzzing of thousands upon thousands of glowing green fire bees. They converge towards the compound, sweeping the forest like a tidal wave.

Several of the reporters start running in the opposite direction from the gates— while others began snapping pictures.

“Mama!” Quinn chirps happily.

"Oh dear." He got up with the pups and moved to where he was visible. "Toki! Hello! We're over here!" He called as he began to wave at the swarm with one arm.

The swarm converged towards their location, seemed to confirm something within themselves, and then buzzed over the compound like a deafening thundercloud. The guards raised their guns warily, but the bees did nothing but circle, until all at once— they were gone.

In their place, Toki appeared out of the trees, looking harried and mildly tired from her frantic flight down the mountains. Her mane was ruffled, and her eyes were wide and frantic. Seeing the boys safe however, soothed something in her, and as she came in for a landing, she looked less terrified of them possibly being dead.

That didn’t stop her from flicking them both lightly on the head as she hurried up to Tenne and looked them both over with a critical eye. “Shame on both of you for not telling me where you were going. You could have died and I wouldn’t have known!” Her mane fluffs at them. Then it smooths out and she leans out to press a kiss to their heads. “I’m just glad you’re okay. But good gods, if you do that to me again, you’re both grounded.”

Tenne eased an arm around her, hushing her gently as he stroked her head. "It's okay, Toki. These boys are Gasters! Do you really think they’d die that easily?" He chuckled as he then nuzzled her and gave a few sweet kisses to her head and cheeks, "Gasters never die." He cooed gently, "And from what you've endured, apparently neither do Naras." He purred gently.

Toki would not be so easily soothed- her fur ruffled again even under his soothing pets and kisses to her cheeks and the top of her head. Her mane fluffed at him, and she puffed her cheeks. “Nara are tough. Believe it or not, I’ve been through worse than what you’ve seen.” She sniffs. “But it doesn’t matter. They are children- pups. They don’t need to go wandering off into the wilds without an adult until they’re at least able to defend themselves. The coyote’s out here are bigger than Quinn!” Her pupils slit faintly as she huffs at him, very much the protective mother bear, for all that she was a hornet.

Toki had already lost two- she didn’t want to lose two more.

He cooed gently and pulled her to his chest, stroking her head as he transferred the pups to her arms. "There, there, darling matriarch. Your pups are safe and sound in your arms now. They're safe with their mama." He purred gently as he wagged his tail where she can hear it. "At peace my dear." He rumbled as he set his head down between her horns as he tightened his hold.

She chuffed softly to him, but it did soothe some part of her instincts when she could nestle both pups within her arms. Toki nuzzled them and scented them carefully, checking for any wounds on them. Finding none, the woman relaxed, and sighed. “Thank you, Tenne.” She didn’t even comment on him calling her the matriarch- or on him calling them her pups.
The boys both called her Mama- Kai more in private or around other monsters than around a lot of humans- so that’s what she was.

“Matriarch?” Nikki inquired curiously to Tenne. “Pardon my interruption. I’m Nikki Foster.”

Toki flushed a bit, and hid it with Kai’s head and part of her mane. “Ah… Tokiko Nara. Call me Toki, please.” She leaned a bit into Tenne. Calling so many hornets had left her tired- she hadn’t had enough time to fully recover from the barrier falling before she was off dumping mass amounts of magic into trying to find the boys.

Tenne gently pecked her head before he turned to face Nikki. "This woman has questions from a concerned public; people who are worried about us and how we are doing." He explained with a smile, "And I’ve been answering her questions.”

“It sounds like she’s got another one for you.” Toki prompts him gently, and then gives Nikki another shy smile.

“I did, yes.” Nikki nods. “What do you mean by matriarch, if you don’t mind my asking?”

"It's a pack term. Properly used, it is defined as 'Mother of Mothers'. A nanny I suppose is another word one would use." He rumbled gently, "But Toki; she's so wonderful. She took upon her the love and nurturing a mother would offer to a child, and she gave it to both my boys. If that's not a deed worth the honoring name of a matriarch, I honestly do not know what is." Tenne rumbled another purr and nuzzled his face into the top of her head. His mouth pressed another soft peck to her fur.

Toki simply flushed. Praise was something that she was not very good at taking and never had been.
“Tenne,” She fussed, “I’m hardly worth anything like that. I’m just… Me.” She puffs her cheeks, cuddles the boys, and does her best to hide her face and pretend that there was not a swarm of people snapping photos of her as she blushed a bright green. Her wings twitched against him in sudden nerves- she never handled press well. They made her nervous- she wasn’t particularly fond of them snapping photos of her and the boys either.

“That’s fascinating.” Nikki blinks. “And very sweet. I can see that she loves your boys very much-and that you care for her a lot too.” She smiles.

“ARE THERE GOING TO BE MORE BABY BEASTS IN THE FUTURE?” Someone in the back of the crowd shouted.

Toki did her very best to disappear into her neck fur just then. Nope. Intrusive questions and paparazzi were not her thing.

Tenne went black and he turned his back on the people, hiding Toki and his children as well. "N-No more questioning." He murmured, before he looked at Nikki over his shoulder. "Thank you for your time, but I believe there was a reason my boys came to find me." He chuckled quietly. "We best be on our way."

Nikki offered him a faint smile. “Maybe next time we’ll be able to do an interview without everyone else chiming in.” She hums. She gives him a cheery salute as soldiers come to her side, and stands from her chair. “Alright- Thank you for your time, Doctor Gaster. You and Toki have a wonderful day.”

“You too, Miss Foster.” Toki manages a smile over her shoulders, but it doesn’t stop her face from burning. She buzzes softly and hides it against the boys. Ugh.

"Let's go home, shall we?” He patted Toki's back gently. “Get you some food, find some entertainment for the pups, and decide amongst ourselves what to do next.”

Toki nodded. “I’d like that.” She said to Tenne. “I’d like that a lot. Though… You were here on business with Asgore- to figure out why the reporters kept coming up…”

Asgore waved over at her. “I can handle myself, Miss Toki. Please- take the boys and Tenne and head back up the mountain. See if you can’t wrangle him into catching another deer for you. You do need to put back on some weight.”

Toki rolls her eyes. “Everyone trying to fatten me up. Alright… Alright. You’re released from duty, so… let’s go.” Her wings twitch. “… I dunno if I wanna summon Clover where all these reporters can see her.”

"Just wait a little until we're out of range." Tenne suggested, before he looked over to Asgore. "I will see you later, old friend. I’ll put the teapot on!"

“You mean I’ll put the teapot on- you haven’t quite gotten it down for the ‘over the open flame’ style of doing tea.” Toki chuffs.

"I'm working on it." Tenne pouted at Toki.

Asgore chuckles. “I’ll see you later, Tenne.” He waves him off and then goes to find an official.

Toki sighs, and then glances back at the mountain. She lifts her wings, and flutters them once against Tenne, before passing Kai and Quinn to Tenne. “I don’t want to risk dropping them. Summoning the bees tired me out.” Her arms were quivering slightly, betraying the fact that she needed to replace the magic that she had spent.

Kai didn’t have an issue switching over. “Okay. I don’t mind hanging on to Daddy anyways.” He smiles. “It’s a long walk back and my legs are tired.”

The doctor took his boys into his arms without issue. "Anyhow, if you're that tired, don't even bother trying to summon them. I'll admit that was quite the awful spook the pups must have given you." he sighed, "I understand how you would go all out to find them."

“I already lost two, Tenne.” Toki gives him a sad smile. “They… they weren’t even done nursing yet.” She admits quietly. That was a little tidbit she hadn’t told him prior. She’d only just begun starting to wean them when… Well, she was taken from them. “I don’t want to lose Kai and Quinn. You’ll have to forgive me if I’m a little flighty over them disappearing suddenly. Anyways… I can manage Clover. It was the swarm that was draining, and having them so far from me to scout and scan the mountainside.” The woman motions to Tenne and his sons, and then heads away from the gates and back towards the back wooded area of the base.

Her words however, had Tenne stop for a moment, his eyes having gone wide... After long enough, his feet moved again and he caught up to her.

It wasn't until they made it to camp that Tenne then acted again. He set his boys loose to play, and then approached Toki once the boys had scampered off on their own. "Toki..." He started hesitantly.

Her feet moved again and he caught up to her.

It wasn't until they made it to camp that Tenne then acted again. He set his boys loose to play, and then approached Toki once the boys had scampered off on their own. "Toki..." He started hesitantly.

Once they were back in camp, Toki could relax. Mostly relax that was. Her wings dropped once the boys bolted off after a squirrel, and she sighed and scrubbed her hands against her thighs. There was safety in being surrounded by numbers of those like you and yours- but she knew that was the bee blaster instincts speaking. Her beast inside wanted her to be surrounded by blaster beasts, or by give, and for her to eventually build a nice around them for them to live in. Her instincts were weird.
When Tenne spoke to her, she glanced to him, one of her horns brushing her shoulder and slightly tangling with her mane as she craned her neck around to look at him. "Yes...?" She murmured softly, green eyes dark and even as she peered at him. "What's up, Tenne?"

"I... I hate to bring it up... but had you really been torn from your pups so soon?" He asked quietly, a hand extending to rest on her shoulder.

She hesitated at his question, a sore pang running through her soul at the reminder. Toki sighed softly, and lifted a hand to gently touch his. "Yes." She says softly. "I was. My pups... They hadn't even seen their first year yet." She glances back at him. "I had a little boy and a little girl. Skylar was my son, and Honey my daughter. Honey had horns like me- Skylar had my teeth." She gives him a sad smile. "It's okay to bring them up, Tenne. It... it helps it hurt less, oddly enough. Exposure therapy, maybe."

"I am glad you believe that you are healing, that's always good." He purred quietly, before he gave her shoulder a squeeze. "I bet they were wonderful."

“They were.” Toki gave him a slightly watery lopsided smile. “Skylar was a mama’s boy. He was my shadow, and didn’t like to be away from me. Honey was more adventurous. I’m never... Going to heal from losing them. It’s going to only hurt less. Mothers are not made to lose their children, Tenne. It’s not how we were created.” The woman takes a deep breath, and then sighs, before lifting one of her legs.

Quinn darts under it, hot on the heels of a squirrel.

She sets her leg back down when Quinn is out of range. “But... You and your boys help. You don’t... You don’t replace what I lost- the family I lost. You’ll never replace it. But... you’re something different- something completely different, in a good way. And it helps, if that makes any sense.”

"I never want to replace what you lost. A wound never re-grows the skin it lost..." He murmured as he set his head on hers, pulling her close as he did. "The least I can offer is to bring you happiness.” He said softly to her.

“Happiness is hard-won for me. Every time I seem to find it... It seems to get taken from me...” She murmurs softly and leans into him with a tired sigh. “Here isn’t my home.” She admits finally. “This area... This is not the area that I came from. That is... why I was so sad when we came out of the mountain. I had hoped to maybe... At least be in a familiar area, if not familiar world.”

He leaned his head to one side as he listened to her, before he sighed. "I see..." He murmured.

"We're both lost here, we don't know what we will learn while we're here..." He then had an idea and he smiled, "Toki... Come with me." He purred as he moved away from her, before he reached and took her hand.

“Alright.” She nodded gently. She paused, and looked behind her. “Boys!” She called.

“Yes?” Kai’s head poked from the brush.

“You stay near the camp, or no night time flights for a week.”

“Yes, Mama!” Kai chirps.

That done, Toki turns and lets her hand relax into Tenne’s hand, and gives him a faint smile. “Lead the way, Tenne.”
"Wait, night time flights?"

“To see the stars.” Toki nods. “Sometimes they badger me after you’ve gone to sleep.”

He chuckled at that, but didn't comment further as he led her into the trees from their camp.

It took definitely longer than Toki thought it was going to take. He took her back down the mountain, through the trees, and after nearly half an hour of silence, he began to hum.

His words carried to her shortly after. "Hold onto me as we go... As we roll down this unfamiliar road." His grip tightened a little bit as they seemed to near a break in the trees. "And although this wave, wave is stringing us along... Just know you're not alone."

They made it to the break of the trees and with a push of the branches, Tenne revealed a clearing that had been left empty. It was large and open, with plenty of space.

"Cause I'm gonna make this place your home~"

He was singing to her- honestly singing to her. Toki’s throat closed a little bit, a knot forming thick with emotions, and she felt her breath hitch. She let him tow her along, and had to shield her eyes as the sunlight nearly blinded her in the clearing. It was a beautiful clearing though, bright and open and warm... But still on the reservation. They hadn’t walked nearly far enough. So... As much as she hated to, she would have to burst his bubble.

"Settle down, it'll all be clear. Don't pay no mind to the demons," He took her other hand and slowly pulled her to the grass where the sky was most clear, "They fill you with fear. The trouble... it might drag you down, if you get lost you can always be found." He sat beside her and reached up, cupping her cheek. "Just know you're not alone," He smiled at her happily. "Cause I'm gonna make this place your home~"

Toki smiled as the little song concluded, and sighed. She relaxed in the clearing all the same, and gave him a warm look. “I understand what you mean.” She says softly. “This place… This place could be my home too. Not literally though.” She lifts a brow at him. “As sweet as the notion is, this is still the reserve- we can’t cut trees or build permanent lodging here.” She shakes her head. “We have to wait until we can get land elsewhere… And hopefully own it. But... I know what you mean.” A lopsided and warm smile is graced to him. “And... It… It’s becoming home for me.”

He pouted a little bit before smiling, "This may not be our permanent home, but at least I know you've caught on." He chuckled quietly, pecking her head.

Toki smiled faintly in return. “Indeed. It’s a little separated from the rest of the monster population though. Are you going to move your tent here? Er... Our tent, I suppose.” It had always been his house, his home, his tent- now it was their tent. At least... a little bit. It was a little slice of home for her- something for her to turn to when times got rough, and her demons weighed heavy on her soul.

"Would you like to?" He asked, arching an inquisitive brow at her. "It's much more clear out here. I suppose it would give the boys more room to play where we can watch them." He rumbled gently.

“It would.” She agrees. “But we’d be fairly isolated. It’s a forty-minute walk back to the camp, if not more. Faster by flying or running, yes, but if something happened, and they needed our help, we’d still be a long ways out.” The bee woman turns to face him slightly, and reclines a bit in the grass.
The sun plays over the hollows in her cheeks, highlighting her cheekbones. All of their previous work in getting her healthy and well was undone— but all of it undone to get them outside into the sunshine. It was worth it in Toki’s book. “It is away from that cliff edge though. The way that the boys race around, I’m afraid one of them is going to topple over. So… maybe? Do you think it’d be a good idea?”

"Well now when you put it that way…" Tenne then nodded in agreement. "I’d say this place is a wonderful idea for our temporary residence."

Toki smiled faintly. “Sounds good to me. It just means that I have to walk a bit further than one tent over to talk with Sapphire and see little Fuku. But I don’t mind. Walking keeps me healthy.” She opens her mouth and inhales contently. “Mmm… I can smell herbs here. I’ll have plenty to do while you’re doing whatever it is you and Asgore do for most of the day. Well… Shall we get moved, then?"

He chirped happily and his tail wagged behind him. "Yes of course! I'll get started right away!" He agreed with a happy tone to his voice.

“We’ll get started.” She corrects cheerfully. “I wasn’t in any shape when we came out here to help. I barely got the inside set up. Let me… let me at least do something this time besides be a lump. I’m strong enough to move, even if I used magic today.”

"Sounds like a plan.” The doctor nods. “You mentioned smelling herbs. Perhaps you can look around and keep an eye out before anyone else thinks to claim this spot, yes?"

“I could do that, yes.” She nods. “If you’ll get the tent and the boys, I’ll do some herb hunting while you’re out. Ah… Let Sapphire and Grillby know where we are, yes? If Fuku gets the sniffles again from the change in weather conditions, my venom helps her a lot.” She’d had to help the baby the first day when she got the flame elemental version of colic. A little bit of venom, and she’d perked right up. Toki was basically a cure-all for fire elementals.

“I smell spear mint and thyme.” She chirrs happily. “We can have delicious something good with that tonight if I can find it.” She rolls onto all fours and shakes herself out slightly.

"Oh yes, of course. I'll make sure to let them, and Asgore know that we'll be heading out here.”

“Maybe just Toriel. Asgore is probably still down at the government camp.” Toki chuckles quietly. She stretches, and gains her feet, and then offers the hand of her primary arm out to help him up.

"As long as one of them knows this is good enough.” He said, taking her hand and getting up, before brushing himself off. He perked up at hearing her speak, however. "Spearmint you said? Would you save me a few leaves?"

“I’ll bring several sprigs if I can find it.” She nods. “Go ahead and get the boys though. I’ll see you back here, Tenne.” She waves him off, and then heads off for the underbrush, following the scent of herbs.

"Sure thing, Toki!" And with that, he left her to be.

'Toki... Can we talk?' Though she wasn't alone for long.

Toki blinked as Cruelty’s voice floated to her. His voice sounded… Different. More feminine, verses the masculine voice that she was used to. Maybe it was just because she hadn’t heard it in so long. It had been shifting for a while, now she that she thought about it. Weird.
She inhaled softly, and continued her hunt. ‘It’s not like I can run away and escape you, Cruelty. Of course we can talk. What did you want to talk about?’

‘I... I think my head's cleared up since you purged that magic... I just kind of want to... Talk.’

‘Then lets talk, Cruelty.’ Toki says softly to him. She sniffs harder, and locates the first treat. She crouches down to begin uprooting a few stalks to replant near the tent, and collects the spearmint like it’s a trophy. ‘What did you want to talk about? You haven’t said a word since the barrier fell. Have you been okay?’

‘I suffered as much as you did when that happened... What's worse is... I think I’ve felt that pain before... I've been remembering more parts about my past since we played jailbreak.'

‘What do you mean felt that pain before?’ She paused, curious. ‘I’m glad you’re remembering more though, Cruelty. That’s surely a good sign.’

‘The pain of loss, feeling like you had a mission in life and you weren't able to keep to it... How many times I lost... My lovers, my friends, my own life... My children...’

That made her really pause, and she lowered onto her hands and knees. Her secondary arms worked at picking the mint sprigs as she listened. ‘I can only imagine what that much loss and that many lives had done to you.’ She murmured to him gently. ‘I… My children aren’t… hopefully aren’t dead. But they’re not here- and there’s no guarantee of us ever going home. I feel their loss just as keenly- and it’s nearly driven me crazy at times. I have to wonder how many you’ve gone through… And it sort of makes more sense as to why you… You sort of went crazy like you did.’

‘None of them are dead... You made sure of that. Everyone who lived was left alive when we plummeted into darkness...’ After a moment, there was a quiet chuckle. ‘The love of a mother... I weaponized it. I used it to strike fear where it would count... And lo and behold, it came back and bit me on the ass.’

‘With teeth like mine, what did you really expect to have happen, Cruelty?’ She sent him the feeling of arching a brow, and then chuckled quietly. ‘I know… I just… We don’t know what all happened when we left. For all we know… Well, more bad stuff could have happened. It’s nearing five months since we came here, I think… It feels like longer, sometimes.’ She sighs. ‘Five months is a long time to live with someone sharing the same headspace though. Hey… I have to ask, but… Does it… bother you that I still call you Cruelty?’

She hadn’t switched back to Simmons… because honestly, Simmons and Cruelty were not even the same people to her. The Simmons she knew… Well, thought she knew… He wasn’t capable of the mass genocide that Cruelty had attempted and been foiled. It was just easier to mentally keep them as separate entities. As far as she was concerned, her sweet Simmons had died the day Cruelty was reborn.

‘No… but you’ve had other names. Surely there’s another one that you would like to be called instead…?’

‘There was one name I liked more than the rest. Sequoia.’

‘Isn’t that a woman’s name?’ She asked curiously. ‘Sequoia is beautiful though. It sounds… Almost Native American?’ Though Simmons had been of some foreign descent- he hadn’t been native to where she lived, for all that he spoke her tongue like he had been born to it. ‘I can use that one if you would prefer it.'

'I always think about that name... I believe sometimes that I was happiest when I was Sequoia...'

'Then you can be Sequoia again. And... and maybe make new happy memories again.' She says softly. 'But... But taking a name means no more cruel thoughts, okay? You can't pop off with something cruel. Be saucy and salty with me if you must, but be kind to the monsters and the people. They haven't done anything wrong.'

There was a moment of silence, before there was a quiet chuckle. 'I wish it could be that easy, you know...'

'It's not going to be easy. But... Anyone can change. If you catch yourself thinking something, just... stop for a moment, and let the thought pass. Nothing is ever easy, Sequoia. Nothing ever is.' She pauses, and then nudges him with her thoughts. '... Would you prefer to be referred to as a her...?'

'That's not weird is it?' Cruelty, now going by Sequoia, then asked. 'Wanting to just change pronouns like that?'

'Not at all. Thousands of people do it.' Toki gathered the mint sprigs close, and then headed off after the scent of the thyme. 'You've probably been back and forth so many times... I probably have too, but this is the only body that I know. Well... only gender that I know.' She trundled through the brush, mouth open as she huffed the air like a bloodhound. 'It will take me some time to adjust- so if I accidentally misgender you, just please gently remind me. I will do my best though to make sure I don’t.'

'You're doing this much for me, do you think I'll have a problem if you goof it on accident?' Sequoia chuckled quietly, 'Though... I’m wondering... Do you think there's there a way we'll be able to separate to be our own once more? I... I know how you feel about mourning for your young, but Tenne... He's young, but he's also incredibly determined... Almost like your hell-and-back Father-in-law.'

'I don’t think you would, but still, a reminder is good.' She hums softly to her counterpart. ‘... I know he’s wonderful. I... care for him too. I’m just... I dunno. I love Papyrus still. I... I still mourn my husband. I only had him for a short time, but... I love easy. Sometimes I love too easy...’ She sighs softly. She cared deeply for Tenne too, as much as she was ashamed to admit it. ‘As for splitting us... Maybe if I had the power from those souls, I could have, but... I don’t know. I can’t form your body again, Sequoia. So... I honestly don’t know. Once my magic is in full form again, and our body is in top condition... We can try to split. What do you think of that?'

'I... I'd like to try, yes...' She agreed quietly.

'Then just give me until I've healed and recovered enough that we'll both survive it. It was easy to merge together. Something tells me that it's not going to be quite as easy to separate us again.' Toki sighed softly. Once she located the thyme, she began to pick that too, stuffing it into her arms as she glanced around at the trees.

A thought slid through her mind as she watched the trees, coming more from her beast than from herself. The trees would be very nice to stretch a comb between and form a hive around. They were tall and strong and away from others and surrounded by plenty of things that could become food to make honey.

The thought made her pause, and her wings flicked at the oddness of the thought process of her
'Did you feel that urge to make a hive too?' Sequoia then asked.

'Yes. That was... That was really, really weird.' She shivers. 'I'm not even sure what it meant. But, uh... Well, my beast, in a sense, is very pleased with this location.' She murmurs to her. 'I'm not even sure I want to know how I would go about making a hive.'

'Well... you're a wasp... hornet... thing. So I'd imagine perhaps it'd look like that round papery sort of nest.'

'I have never seen a wasp or a hornet with nearly as much fluff as I have. I'm more like... Shit, I don't know. A weird hybrid between a honey bee or a bumblebee and a hornet of some kind.' Her palms itched with the need to make a hive, and she hummed sharply, before glancing away from the trees. She focused on the Thyme, gathered a lot of it, and then scented for more herbs.

'It wont effect your honey production will it~?' Her mind-mate teased.

She couldn't stop a snort from escaping her, or amusement from tingling through her insides. 'I doubt it. I don't think I'm going to quite be the endless tap that I was before the barrier went down, but once I'm stronger I should be fine. As for affecting production, I doubt it. It's just a silly urge to make a hive. It'll go away in a little bit, I'm sure.'

'Do bees ever feel like they need to resist this urge?'

'... No, no they do not. But I'm not a bee. I'm a person inside of a bee monster's body.' She huffs and takes off briefly. She comes back down on the other side of some blackberry gnarls, and unearths a hidden ginger root.

'Mmhm. Ooh... These blackberries look plump. I bet Tenne would like them.'

The blackberries caught her eye when Sequoia mentioned them, and Toki nodded, even though she couldn't see her. 'They do. However, I can't pick fast enough on my own for me, him, and two hungry boys. So...' A quick twist of her already low magic, and there was a small battalion of bees at her side. They swarmed the brambles, and began to pluck the berries. 'I'm going to cheat.'

Toki used one hand to ready her shirt to be used for a basket, and let the bees begin to fill the front of it with berries.

'Oh you cheeky thing, heh heh heh~' Sequoia cackled.

'Cheeky and lazy. I am a Nara, after all.' Toki chuckled quietly. Once the bush was mostly devoid of berries, she dismissed her swarm and took to the skies, tiredly buzzing back towards the clearing that Tenne had taken them to. 'So when we get separated, you think you'll want to pursue Tenne? Does that count as cradle robbing since you're technically older than all of us?' She teased lightly.

'Your soul is just as old as mine, Toki.' She snorted at that, but didn’t answer.

'We're basically twins. But there is always one twin older than the other. So which of us is the older twin?' She poised the mildly mind bending question to her mental companion, but didn’t press for an answer to her previously poised question.

'Heh heh heh...' That had Sequoia chuckling quietly as Toki headed back towards the clearing.

Toki chuckled with her in faint humor, and then came in for a landing as her wings grew tired.
'Jeeze. Magic bolsters everything, even my stamina. I'm already tired. Ugh. Gonna walk the rest of the way back. Anyways... Did you ever think we would be teasing each other like this...?' Nearly five months of having her- formerly him- in her head was definitely a forcefully bonding experience.

'Back in the void, I would have called you out of your bloody goddamn monster mind.' Sequoia spoke with sharp tone, before chuckling. 'But lo and behold... looks like we're out of our minds together... and bickering pleasantly as if we were long-time friends.'

'Yeah. Funny how things work.' She chuckles gently. The clearing loomed ahead. She could smell the flowers and the fresh grass, and Tenne's lingering scent on the wind. 'Everyone deserves a second chance. Even you.' Toki nudges her gently. 'Everyone probably thought I was out of my mind when I rejoined us instead of just stuffing you into the genie lamp for eternity.'

'Yeah, I was going to ask about that... Why did you do it?'

'... Because two wrongs don't make a right.' She says softly. 'And imprisoning you to an eternity in isolation... Just isn’t right. At least this way, you had a way to see things. To experience things.' Toki swallowed. 'Maybe I'm just too kind, but I couldn't leave you there to rot, despite you being responsible for all of the deaths since the barrier fell.'

'You are very strange, Tokiko... But... I cannot find myself the will to go without thanking you.'

'You're welcome, Sequoia.' She responded gently as she arrived back at the clearing.

She was still alone, save for the voice in her head, Tenne not yet having returned from his last errand.

With the clearing still empty as Tenne ran to get both the boys and the tent and supplies, Toki brought her cache of items closer. A long strip of bark was rent from a tree, and did well to act as a serving platter for the blackberries. Bushels of spearmint and thyme were set next to them, along with the ginger root. The rest of the mint and thyme were taken to the edges of the clearing. And Toki set to the task of replanting both. She had all intentions of taking these with her when they finally got to move to their permanent home.

'Mint always smells so nice. I love the smell. It tastes good in water too. It's very good for calming stomachs. I had to use it when my morning sickness was really bad with my children.' She hummed to Sequoia.

'You too, huh? I always enjoyed boiling some mint and making tea of it. It was a lovely treat that's lasted through the ages.'

'Indeed. I vomited spaghetti. Well... Magic that had used to be spaghetti. It still tasted of spaghetti. Couldn't eat spaghetti or drink hot cocoa until I was nearly due. Speaking of... Damn. I really miss hot chocolate. That's basically my drug of choice.' She sighs softly. 'Add a little mint, and you've got minty hot chocolate. Mm...'

Sequoia quietly 'mmmm'ed as Toki did.

'Chocolate is the world's drug, honestly.' She chuckled. Once she got the last of the plants planted, Toki huffed and flicked her wings slightly. '... Think I should try hunting...?'

'Would you be able to with your wings? Not to mention your condition overall.'

'Spoilsport.' She pouts. 'I eventually need to learn. Tenne is no doubt going to want to take me hunting, and if I look like an utter buffoon, he's going to know something is fishy... Speaking of fishy. When we get you a body, how are we going to explain you...? A sibling? Or...?'
'A counterpart from another dimension?'

'I am pretty sure we'd confuse the fuck out of him, and he'd expect your name to be Toki too, and for you to come with several nuclear bombs worth of power inside of you. In reality, we're both going to be weaker.' She snorts. 'I think... Maybe a hive mate might be better. More neutral ground.'

'Have him believe not only was there another subspecies of blaster beast out there, but two of that same genus?'

'He already knows I'm not from this world. Who's to say that the void didn't spit you out after me for trying to find me?' She hummed lightly in response.

'Mmmh... True.' One could hear her nod in Toki's head, 'True enough... though we've already lied enough to the poor sap... which is ridiculous coming from me.'

'I never wanted to lie to him, but... It just sort of snowballed out of control. How exactly do you meet an unfamiliar monster, who is desperate for human souls, and tell him that you have not one, not two, but the equivalent of well over a thousand human souls smashed into two fused franken-souls? He'd have either institutionalized us, or killed is for our soul.' She sighs. 'It's better this way. He thinks we are just a mildly mutated blaster beast, like him, and it makes him happy... Also I never used to be able to lie before you. You're a bad influence on me sometimes. Though... Maybe I could actually win at poker now.'

'I've got a killer poker face, but on the other side of the coin I always lost.' She joked.

'I've got a shitty poker face, but my brothers were bad at reading it when they were shit-faced and we were playing strip poker.' She laughs gently. Her wings spread, and she stretches, lightly soaking up some of the sunshine across her membranes. 'Strip poker was always fun. Han always lost first. Kon came next. I... I miss my brothers.'

'I wish I could have gotten to know them better.' Sequoia admitted.

'You only knew them a little. You did more dealings with me and my parents.' She admits with a soft sigh. 'My brothers were great though. Kon was obnoxious. Do you know he boinked Tenebris? He walked funny for a while. That was... Interesting come the time I got married.'

'With his stature... His anatomical design is scary to try and imagine.' And the second voice responded with a nervous laugh

'I honestly don't even know what to expect, other than for anything it touches to be stained black. Asgore had to come to me once to get the stains out of his fur when he was in town. That was... Awkward. Given that his genitals, unlike mine, are hidden behind a slit, we have no idea what could be there. A rubber chicken could pop out for all we know.' She has the barest mental image of Tenne standing nude, his slit opening and a bright yellow rubber chicken popping out with a sad honking noise. It is very promptly sent to Sequoia.

'Oh good lord!' She wasn’t digging that mental image.

Toki bursts out into laughter, physical and mental. 'I had to share. Now we both need brain bleach.'

'Aaaarrggghhh...'

'I'm not even sorry.' Toki laughed. She shifted in the grass and sprawled out for a moment to relax her limbs.
'You are a very strange woman.'

'Not the weirdest I've heard.'

'Which explains why you never stop being strange and getting stranger.'

'That's true. Life is just too boring without a bit of weirdness.'

And the noise of despair echoed once more from the voice in Toki's head. 'Toki whyyyyy.'

'Because you need your feathers ruffled. It's good for you.' She laughed happily. She shifted in place, and rubbed her hands over her eyes. 'Oh god. Alright, alright, I'll stop teasing you, I promise. Heh.'

'Mmh. You think if I was born a monster I'd have feathers?' she asked.

'I dunno, Sequoia. I wouldn't want to be born with feathers. One word as to why.' Toki chuckled. 'Molting.'

'Ooooh ho ho ho... Point very much made.'

'Yep. Feathers are pretty in theory, but not so much in practice.'

'Fair enough.' Was murmured from Sequoia as she slowly went quiet once more.

'Getting tired?' Toki questioned gently. 'You've been very active. You can go rest some if you'd like.'

'Yes... little tired...' She replied, before she chuckled quietly. 'Toki... Thanks a lot...'

'It's no problem, Sequoia. Rest well.' She sighed, and settled down to wait for Tenne and the children. Perhaps napping would be good too while she waited, if she had the time.

It didn't take all that long for Toki to doze off either in all honesty. She was a Nara- she was practically asleep as soon as her mind decided it was naptime. Between one breath and the next, she was settling into a doze in the grass, surrounded by freshly replanted mint and thyme.

Toki was left alone- but not for long. Or seemingly for long.

As she stirred, the scent of mint and thyme was accompanied by warmth and the faintest scent of sweat, as well as the new weight on her chest. She took a moment to listen, and it brought a sound to a her ears, much to her bestial sides pleasure.

A deep resonating purr sounded right beside her ear, as well as two more coming from her chest. Her eyes slowly lulled open and she slowly looked around. Much to her pleasure was what she found.

On her chest was the pups, curled up together as if otters taking a nap on the warm, furry chest of their mother. Curled up around her, from his head on her shoulder to his tail around her where his legs could not reach, was the young but promising Blaster Beast that was Tenne, who's purring was like a steadily vibrating metronome to offer her a comforting white noise. It was unclear whether he was awake or not, though the pups were clearly lost in slumber at this time.
The faintest of smiles crossed her teeth, and she took a slightly deeper breath to indicate the change in her current status of awareness. Her arms lifted, and she stretched against Tenne and under the boys. Mouth opening in a faint yawn, Toki let off a tiny sleepy squeak without meaning to, and then rubbed her secondary palms against her eyes. “Mmm…”

The rumbling grew quiet, and a strong arm revealed to be tucked under her first set gently gave her a squeeze as he hugged her a little closer. "Mmm… Evening." Was the male's gentle purr.

The arm under her first set squished her boobs a little bit, but it wasn’t that bad. She yawned again, a soft stuttering purr coming from her in response, and tried to turn her head to look at him. All she managed to do was boop him in the cheek with one of her curling horns, which made her puff and pout some. “Mmm… It’s evening already?” A quick glance to the sky showed that sure enough, her quick nap had apparently turned into several hours of sleeping. It was already getting dark. “Why didn’t you wake me when you got here?” She scrubs her eyes again with a soft sound, and enjoys the warmth of being cuddled under so many monsters.

Well… One monster's grasp and two children, but it was still a cuddle pile. She’d grown fond of them from her world.

"Because I didn't want you doing any more work with everything you have done so far for us." He purred as he nuzzled her gently. "Did you enjoy your nap?"

"I like to keep busy, Tenne. I'm an independent woman- I don’t need to be babied." He gets the full force of her pout, which isn’t nearly as adorable as it would be if she had lips. "I enjoyed it a lot. I'm still tired, but more hungry than tired." Her wings were also super cramped and squished between her back and the dirt. Part of her was missing his couch already, but that was just the side of her that preferred nesting and sleeping in soft things. "What about you? Did you rest well?"

"Oh yes, I enjoyed napping with you greatly," He kissed her head a few times before letting her go and stretching, going over to a fire that was currently cooking their dinner, which was a lot more aromatic than the last time he had roasted kebabs.

"So you leave me trapped under sleeping pups. How cruel." She laughs gently. She manages to sit up with the boys against her chest, and then smiled to Tenne. Her wings stretched, and made unholy popping sounds as the joints cracked and crunched. She followed it up by cracking her neck, and giving a pleased buzz. "Oh yes... Mmm. Much better. I'm glad you enjoyed your nap too”

The pups whined quietly as they were moved before they both quieted again.

Tenne quietly was rotating the meat on the fire, purring happily as he smelled the meat, "Mmmhhh~" Though he heard the popping and he blinked once as he turned to look at her. "Huh?"

His questioning sound prompted her to turn, and she rolled onto all fours. Her secondary arms supported the boys, while her primary arms supported her upper torso. She stretched up her legs, and sort of like a cat getting the base of it's tail rubbed, stuck her butt right up in the air. She arched her back and was rewarded with a sickening series of popping crunches that rolled from the base of her spine up to her shoulder blades. "Ohhh yes~" She groaned. "Ahh... My back gets so sore when I lay flat on it on the ground sometimes. There we go. Mm... Anyways, the meat smells good, Tenne. What did you use on it?" She stretched a leg, rolling her ankle and popping it. Her toes splayed as she tried to pop those too.

Oh by the stars. "Uh... um..." He had focused on her as she stretched and he flushed a dark black. "Uhhhhhhmmmmmm..."
One of her toes popped. "Tenne?" She glanced up at him. Another toe popped- and then the rest followed. "What did you use on- are you alright?"

His mouth opened and closed a few times before he cleared his throat and smiled "Ye-Es!" His voice cracked as he replied and he flushed further before he turned away, "Hhhhhhhhhhhhh.

"Wha- oh! Oh gosh, I'm so sorry. I forgot for a moment that non Insectis don’t pop their joints like that." A small lie, but it was a good one. "I usually do it when you and the boys are off doing other things. I'm so sorry."

"Hhhhh- I'm okay." He managed words after a short while of sputtering and blushing. "That sounds just really... oh goodness." He let out another nervous chuckle, before he cleared his throat and proceeded to turn back to the fire, which proceeded to perfectly illuminate his flushed cheeks.

"... You're blushing." She grins slowly, as she prowls closer on all fours. Part of her feels a little predatory doing it, but she doesn't stop. "You're blushing a bright shade of black. Does the popping bother you...?" One of her elbows pops as she stalks closer, scooting playfully around the fire with the pups in her arms. She gently nestles them down in a soft patch of grass so the movements don’t wake them.

"Nnnnnot at all." He replied as he cleared his throat again. "I don’t have any problem." He gave her a soft smile, "It's just a little something I should adjust to. I mean... I’m already adjusted to the sound coming from my tail, but when it's your, uh... bones, mine don’t nearly pop as much as that." He chuckled hesitantly.

"Mine pop because I do it a lot. They hurt if I don't." She gives him a thoughtful look from across the fire, and then scoots around it, leaving boys to snooze in an adorable pile in the grass. She comes to sit next to him and huffs in a soft breath of air. "I'll try to be more courteous for you." She lightly bumps her head to his shoulder, and then leans out to sniff the meat in the flames. The flames lick harmlessly at the long hairs of her mane. "Mm... It smells good. You used the thyme and a hint of mint? Or is the mint coming from elsewhere?"

"Ah, that's coming from me." He admitted as he wrapped an arm around her in response to her butting her head against his shoulder. For an insect based creature, she carried a lot of odd habits. "I chewed a few leaves earlier while I set up the tent and fire. The pups helped, which is why they're so darned exhausted." He explained.

"It is, huh?" She leaned towards his face and took a sniff. "Yup, it is. Huh. Well, it smells good. Not sure why you would chew the leaves though. You don't exactly have the teeth for grazing." She eyes him curiously. "But... Thank you for all for getting everything set up. I moved some mint and thyme here, but there are plenty of herbs out in the forest for me to go collect. You and the pups did good with the tent and the fire though." She praises gently.

"I have molars." He chuckled. "They're just a little pointed, but I think that's a result of my evolution being so... off course." He explained. Letting her go for a moment, he turned and picked up a tin cup of water that had been sitting nearby, giving his mouth a swish before he spat the water into the nearby grass. "Forgive me for that," He then spoke to her, "I hadn't washed my mouth out yet and I would look awfully silly with plant matter stuck on my teeth." He settled back against her once more as he explained.

“No worse than I do when I get anything stuck in my teeth.” She gave him a lopsided smile, and settled into his side with a sigh. She opened her mouth, and flexed her teeth. “I’ve got my external teeth, and then I’ve got a set of molars in the back too. Mine are probably more flat than yours are.” Her teeth wiggled at him, and then she closed her mouth up once more. “I don’t really have lips like you do though. I’m not really sure how my mouth works, to be honest. It’s a weird process. I probably couldn’t chew leaves like you can though.”

“Well with your teeth as flexible as they are, I indeed wonder sometimes. Though I would not about to be so rude as to blatantly ask about it as if I were a common gawker.” He chuffed.

She pats his arm. “I know you wouldn’t. To be frank, I don’t know how my mouth works at all. It just sort of… does what it does. I know I have decent jaw strength though.” She recalls ripping out a man’s throat back when she was a skeleton. Part of her skin briefly goes paler, and she swallows thickly. She’d chipped off chunks of bone. “My teeth don’t have a problem going through human bone.”

“I wonder...” He murmured quietly. "Perhaps these outer teeth are simply for decoration, and you’ve more functional teeth behind them?”

“Maybe?” She sat up and opened her mouth again. Her teeth flexed open again, and she slid a finger into her mouth. Sliding it around her gums, Toki checked around and felt for teeth. “I don’t feel anything besides my gums. I think it’s just external teeth. I mean, they’re fully functional for what they need to do. They just suck for like… soup.”

"Perhaps, it lets you get away with straight pouring it into your mouth though." He joked lightheartedly.

“True.” She chuckles. “And I can do… This.” It doesn’t take much magic to churn fire up into her mouth. Her teeth part just a little into small cracks, and she exhales enough to make small flames come out, creating an effect similar to several very tiny much weaker blow-torches.

He watched with a curious ‘oooh’ sounds. "Fascinating." He rumbled as he looked over her teeth.

She grinned and cut off the flame. Smoke trailed from her mouth, and she opened her mouth fully to let it roll out. “I’m basically living flint and stone.” She says. Rubbing two teeth together does indeed still produce a spark after all. That said, she proceeds to stick her tongue out at him and blow a raspberry. “Insectis are weird.”

"I think you're wonderful." He rumbled sweetly. "It's a very interesting method of self defense, having such a capability at your disposal."

“It definitely means we’re not without fire and heat when it gets cold.” She says in a cheerful tone. That said, she glances to the meat, and reaches out to poke it with a claw. “I think it’s done enough. Any more and you’ll start to over-cook it.” She hums.

"Of course!" He reached out and carefully took the meat off the fire.

She inhaled gently and gave a soft hum. Sliding away from him, she went to go rouse the boys. “Kai,” She crooned, brushing her fingers gently over their skulls. “Quinn. It’s dinner time. C’mon-wake up. You can sleep again once you’ve gotten something in your belly.”

Quinn chattered and whined quietly before stretching and sitting up, yawning widely before he chirped excitedly and scooted over to his father.

While Quinn went to Tenne to get his dinner, Toki flopped down and put her chin lightly on Kai’s chest. She proceeded to lightly blow air in his face to stir the boy with playful mischief. “Kaiiiiii. Wakey-wakey~”

He whined at the air and swatted at the air, papping her cheek harmlessly.
“Kaiiii.” She crooned again, laughing at the smack. She wiggled down a little bit, and then puffed her cheeks, before blowing a raspberry right onto his belly, and tickling the smooth sides of her claws against his ribs. “Up and at ‘m, big guy~”

"Mamaaaa,” He whined as he rolled over and stretched. "Mmmhh... I'm up, I'm up!"

“Good,” She laughed gently. “Or you’d be missing out on dinner. C’mon, kiddo. Up you go.” She lets him up, and stretches herself, before scooping him up and languidly scooting back over to the fire.

She sits him down next to her, and beams at Tenne. “Pups have been fetched~” She chirps, neck fur ruffling chipperly.

"Well done, Toki." Tenne laughed gently, collecting the pups in his lap before carefully doling out the meat to them and Toki. "Enjoy, everyone." He rumbled.

Toki took her serving and gave him a lopsided smile, before setting in. The boys did as well, but with much sleepier finesse than Toki did. Kai was more aware than his little brother, but all the same, both were going to make an absolute mess of Tenne’s lap.

Toki was much less messy, and ate slowly. “Mm… It’s very good, Tenne. Thyme is good on venison. I wish I had some garlic. I bet it would go good with it, don’t you?”

Tenne nodded in agreement, helping Quinn eat before taking care of his own meal.

Once Quinn was finished, the boy nestled in Toki’s lap like it was his nest, and was right back to sleep again.

She didn’t mind one bit- she finished her meal slowly, taking time to savor it, and then sighed once she did finish it. “I did have that platter of berries I gathered, but we can eat those tomorrow. We just want to put them away, or the raccoons will get them.” She gives a soft, pleased thrum, feeling warmth curling inside of her as her meal settled in her belly. She looked at the trees, and again felt that itch to make a hive.

"I'd like to see them try." He chuffed stubbornly, before taking a bite of his meat.

“Fine then.” She gives him a slow smirk. “One word then. Bears. I might be a powerhouse, but I really don’t want to attract a bear near here, and have to deal with one causing problems with the pups.” They’d all been warned of the wildlife that could be an issue- and while black bears weren’t aggressive, they were still bears and still animals and she didn’t want to tangle with one. “I’m sure my defense could hold up to a swipe from one if I braced for it, but I’d rather not test it if it’s all the same.”

"Mmhm... I suppose you're right... perhaps we'll have them for desert?” He chuckled.

Toki glanced down at the sleeping pup in her lap and smiled. “I think someone’s already fallen asleep, and someone else is going to fall asleep with his food half finished.” She eyed Kai, who jolted awake to finish gnawing on his food. “I was thinking maybe using them with breakfast tomorrow.” She hums. “I think I’ll wake up early and catch some fish from the stream, and maybe do something with the fish and the berries for breakfast. Sound good?”

"Sounds perfect." He agreed, making sure Kai didn't fall asleep and accidentally choke on his mouthful, letting him call it good after swallowing and scooping him into the cradle of one arm.
"Poor pups are exhausted~" He chuckled.

“They had a busy day.” She smiles. “Followed you all the way down the mountain, and then helped us move out here. They’ve been busy- it’s good for them, but they’re going to sleep hard tonight.” She strokes her fingers through Quinn’s tiny fluffy mane, and finishes her meal. Relaxing back, Toki sighs and contemplates the sky. It was turning black rapidly, stars beginning to gleam brightly. Her wings and fur glowed faintly in the darkness. “You’ve had a busy day too.” She hums. “I’m sure you’ll be crashing here soon.”

"Nonsense... I've honed my ability of running on fumes since the lab." He spoke as if he was announcing something he was proud of, when that sort of activity isn't really healthy. "But if it's going to be right next to you, I don’t think I’d mind getting a few winks." Especially if he was next to her. The tired fool was trying to be charming.

His attempt at charming her brought a small and unwanted flush to her cheeks, just as compliments in general always did, and Toki chuckled softly. “Well, you’re going to get on a better sleeping schedule out here, so if I have to settle down with you to get you to sleep, then I’ll do it.” She gives him a lopsided smile. “It’s a bigger world out here. More to do, more to see- you’ll need your energy to keep up with everything. Fumes,” she pokes him in the arm, “Aren’t going to cut it, cutie.”

He gave her a small pout as he rubbed his arm before his sweet expression returned. "Cutie, you say?" He chittered happily as his tail wagged behind him. "As long as it's with you, I don’t care if I sleep on a cold hard floor every night.” His rattling tail then extended and wrapped around her form where it met the ground. "I would be your pillow if that's what it took.” He purred sweetly.

She chuckled. “That’s awfully sweet of you.” Toki smiled at him. “I may take you up on that.” The tent floor was as padded as it was going to get, but it wasn’t super comfortable to her. Particularly her head, with how her horns curled. She had a harder time sleeping on her side now.

Kai yawned, and then scrubbed his eyes. “I’m gonna do it too. M’ tired, Daddy.”

"If you say so, Kai." He purred to his son. He kicked a little dirt on the fire, and then got up, offering Toki a hand. "Come on, let's put the pups to bed and see about getting some sleep ourselves."

Silverwing Notes: indeed it's NSFW fam, please protect your minor eyes and we wont have any problemas <3 But yes! a NSFW Chapter after so long of the pure ^^

Enjoy the chapter!

Two weeks rolled by on the surface, and the urge to build a hive only grew stronger and stronger for Toki. Sequoia teased her a little bit about it, but it wasn’t something that either of them could get to go away. Toki’s beast was starting to lurk in the back of her mind, disturbing both of them with the closeness that she loomed.

Despite Toki’s inner turmoil, she did good to keep it out of her visible actions.

Two weeks did good for her health. She filled out a little bit with Tenne regularly feeding her high protein foods, and her magic was once more back at full.

With her magic back at full, however, there was a growing itch in the back of her skull. It had started just a day ago, around the time that Toki’s beast started to really become active in trying to direct Toki’s thoughts and actions through her bestial instincts. The itch was like a blanket of warmth that was nestled in her head, and it was growing more and more pesky- and the warmth of it was spreading.

She’d woken this morning feeling like she was running a fever- except that she was roasting, and not cold. The pups had even moved away from her in her sleep, thanks to her warmth and the heat of the summer.

Toki had crept from the tent while the pups and Tenne were sleeping, and proceeded to go down to the river to wash up and get the sweat off of her body. Her skin felt sensitive to the touch- she was wondering if she was coming down with something.

Washing was both fun and not fun- as cleaning up made her… well, she certainly was craving the touch of her husband. Once she was cleaned off, though not cooler, she had returned to the camp.

Toki still had breakfast to make, and get it done before the kids were up and running around and causing all sorts of mischief and mayhem. They’d likely want to go play in the river with as warm as it was outside, so she’d take the chance and do laundry as well.

'So.' It seemed Sequoia was awake. 'Is it just me, or do you have that feeling like it's summer out. Like... especially summer-hot today?'
'It’s not just you.’ Toki groaned to her. ‘It’s hot as fuckin’ hell out here. The water felt great until I had to get out. It’s like I can’t even cool down my body- the water was heating around me no matter what I did with my magic. Just like… Oh… Oh shit.’

'Uuuggghhhhh...' Sequoia let out a loud groan before there was a soft 'thunk' in the back of her ears, no doubt the voice in her head head-desking. ‘I feel like I need to fuck...’

‘That’s because… Shit, we do. We’re going into heat. I’m pretty sure. It’s not like… Like when I was a skeleton. But it’s not going to be pleasant, Sequoia.’ Toki grimaces and rubs her arms as she pushes aside the brush. ‘Shit. Shit, shit, shit, and Papyrus isn’t here.’

'Heat.' She repeated quietly, before groaning loudly. ‘TOKIII, I DIDNT SIGN UP FOR THIS SHIT.’

‘Well neither did I! I didn’t ask to get HTM genetics.’ She huffed to her. The beast rumbled through her mind, echoing her words. ‘But I ended up getting them regardless.’ She sighs. ‘It’s… We’ll just have to deal with it, Sequoia. They don’t come often like women’s bleeds.’

'Ugh... so... how do you plan on tackling this?'

‘Ignoring it for the most part. Monsters can bring other monsters into heat if they’re compatible for breeding though… So I think I’ll slip away from Tenne and the boys for a few days. I don’t want to risk finding out of he and I have compatible genetics.’ Toki chews her teeth, and then sighs. ‘Tenne’s been around me so far though. I’ll leave tonight and leave a note for him and the boys so they don’t worry. We can last a couple of days out in the woods by ourselves.’

'Remember last time you just bailed with only a note? He freaked.'

‘The last time I went into heat, I had half the compound going into heat with me.’ It was an exaggeration- but Sequoia didn’t need to know that. ‘I don’t need to risk sending him into heat too. Tenebris once warned me that I “couldn’t handle him” when he was in heat, to use his words. Tenne might be scrawnier, but I really don’t want to test him when my own beast is basically barking at my heels. A note is going to have to work.’

She made it back to camp, feeling the heat growing under her collar. Her mouth opened and she panted, tugging lightly at her clothing. God, her clothes were so freaking hot… Toki wanted nothing to do with them. She grimaced, and made her way over to the fire pit, settling down in front of it and fanning her wings to let off warmth. A quick spark, and she had a blaze going, and meat sizzling in carved stone bowl with some blackberries added in.

The smoke caught the attention of Tenne who was doing small hunting lessons with his boys. They never really had fires going unless it was for cooking a meal, and it was no where near lunch time, barely past breakfast.

Thankfully Quinn had just scored his mole and both were able to come back with their father to the camp, their heads held high with pride.

Tenne’s head was high as well, mostly to find out what was going on, but as he broke the tree line and took in air, he smelled it. Her attempt to disperse the heat ended up spreading its scent among their clearing.

And Tenne’s sense of smell was strong enough to detect it, as if a shark detecting a droplet of blood in millions of gallons of water. In but an instant his pupils widened a little, though barely perceptible unless one was looking directly at them, as he came closer. "Toki." He spoke to get her attention.
Tenne and the boy’s returning prompted her to wave at them. Her wings fanned again, glowing surfaces brighter than normal and seeming to pulse with patterns of light. She was nearly perspiring over the fire as she bathed the meat in the sweet sauces the berries gave off when cooked, and found her mouth falling open as she panted against the heat. Good god it was hot.

When she was spoken to, she swallowed, and glanced up at him. Her pupils were dilated in her irises, a sign of her heat, though she thankfully was retaining her lucid mind. Not that her beast really wished for that- she was raging against her mind, demanding her put this ‘male’ to the test, to find a ‘replacement for the one she lost’. Irritated at her inner beast, Toki forcefully caged her, and managed a smile for Tenne. “Welcome back. I thought you three would still be sleeping.”

"No, The pups wanted to go out and practice their skills." He chuckled as he came over, playing it cool as much as she tried to, though it wasn't easy. Not only does the air smell of her, but the area near her is even worse. It’s thick and rich, smoke and honey and hot like fire and enticing all the same, and he found himself nearly choking in it.

Both pups seemed blind to the smell, either that or none the wiser. Either way, it was a good thing. Toki was thankful that they seemed blind to it.

Her wings flapped, making a faint buzzing sound, and she continued to stir the meal in her little stone cook set. She really just needed to go back to Snowdin and get all of their dishes, but she was loathe to go back underground. “I see that.” Toki smiled to Kai, and nodded to Quinn. “You both did very good. Maybe next time you'll be able to catch those pesky squirrels that seem to keep dropping nuts on our tent in the wee hours of the morning.” She winks at them lightly.

Both brothers seemed to light up at the idea, before Quinn waddled forward and offered his mole to her. "Mama!" He giggled.

Toki… had no idea what to do with the mole. Though the lack of know-how on what she was supposed to do with such a tiny morsel of a critter flashed across her eyes, she accepted it all the same, and leaned down to nuzzle her face to his and press kisses to his cheeks. “You adorable little cutie you. You did a good job.”

Kai grinned. “He did. Daddy’s real’ proud of both of us, aren’t you?”

"You're already growing into fine young hunters, I couldn't be more proud." Tenne rumbled in agreement.

Quinn cooed, then chirped happily and held the mole to her face.

"We Blaster Beasts always found a full kill to be good for the body, bones, organs and all. He seems adamant that you get your fill." Tenne rumbled with amusement.

'Oh no. Wait, wait, wait a second he doesn't mean…!

‘Oh, but he does. And… And we’re going to do it. Hold on to your stomach, Sequoia. It’s going to get… mousy in here.’

Oh god, she was going to do it. She had to keep up her cover as a blaster beast- and not only that, but she wasn’t about to break little Quinn’s heart over a mole. She couldn’t exactly say he needed it more- not when she was still clearly under weight and the pups both knew it.
She could do it. She’d eaten worse things before. Hell, she’d eaten magic-cooked fungus off the cave walls in Waterfall before. She could handle a little mole.

Toki opened her mouth and accepted the mole, hiding the disgusted twisting her stomach did. Her beast purred from inside of her cage and she stoutly ignored the mole as she proceeded to eat it to please Quinn. “Well,” she said when she’d managed to swallow it, “Thank you, little one.” She nuzzles his face and then noses him against her. “I have breakfast almost done for you, Kai, and your Daddy, since you already provided mine.” She purred. Too hot to eat anything else, and too mentally nauseated by her body’s happiness at consuming it. Yuck. Yuck, yuck, yuck.

‘Dear god Sequoia, don’t remind me. I’m trying to keep the mole in, not back out again. Hghgh.’

Tenne smiled happily while Kai, Daddy's boy he was, offered his mouse to his father, who rumbled in appreciation but declined, "She needs it more than I do, my boy." He chuckled.

Kai looked at him for a moment, faintly pouting at being turned down, and then walked over to Toki and offered his mouse to her. "Here."

“Shame on you for hurting your son’s feelings, Tenne. I’m alright enough.” Toki tilted her head to look at him and cocked her head towards the mouse. Two rejections would probably be too hard on the boy.

Her stomach churned with the thought, but Toki leaned down and opened her mouth for him, her hands busy with breakfast and Quinn. “Thank you, Kai.” She praised gently.

He smiled warmly in reply and plopped the mouse into her mouth. "I don’t feel upset. It's okay. I saw Papa take down a rabbit earlier."

Toki ate the mouse just like she had the mole. It settled in her stomach nicely, her body thanking her, while her mind reeled in disgust. Her internal heat killed any parasites she might have gotten from it, she knew, but it was just… Ghhhh. Gross. All the same, Kai got a smile. “Oh did he now?” She glances to him slyly. “I guess he’s probably not hungry for my cooking then, is he.” Speaking of, it was done.

She served up plates for the boys first, and carefully set the berry-coated goodness into their hands.

That had Tenne hesitate before he whined. "I mean... It probably wasn't as good as your cooking..." One could see metaphorical ears on his head droop at the idea of not enjoying something of her creation.

Toki couldn’t help but laugh lightly. She scooped a third plate, heaping the last of breakfast onto it, and then held it out to him. She wasn’t very hungry with… well, the rodents in her belly, and the heat blazing through her. “I’m not going to deny you my cooking, Tenne. Here- go ahead and eat up.”

He took the offered bowl and purred happily, "Thank you~"

"Are you not gonna eat with us, Mama?" Kai asked.

Toki shook her head and kissed his brow gently. “Both you and Quinn already gave me my breakfast.” She purred softly. “I’m alright for now, little one. Besides, I’m a little too hot for a full meal right now.”
"Are you sick?" Kai piped up with worry.

"NYEH!" Was Quinn's following whines moments after.

“I’m not sick, I promise.” She laughed gently, and smoothed her hands over their skulls. “I’m alright. It’s just a little heat that’s getting to me, that’s all. It’s a very warm morning. I’ll go soak down at the river and cool off again in a little bit, I promise.” Even though she’d just come from there not too long ago.

Both boys had their worried faces on, but they were hungry too, so they both dug into their breakfast.

Tenne enjoyed his as well, but at a slower pace, watching Toki with a calm expression, though there was everything but calmness in his eyes. They were locked on her, and the taste of her hands on the berries further influenced the flare of co-responding instinct that came with her scent.

Her wings fanned again, blowing a cool breeze over Tenne and the boys while Toki used some water from a nearby bucket to quick rinse the makeshift pan. Once that was done, she straightened up, and fanned her shirt, groaning faintly. She wished she could just strip it off- but she wasn’t at home alone and covered with bones- she was a flesh creature now and she had boobs.

And she never knew where humans with cameras lurked, to be honest. They were everywhere.

She stretched, her mane ruffling, and then settled down onto all fours again. She glanced to Tenne and the boys. “Do you want to join me for a soak in the river?”

"Yeah!"

"Nyeh!" Well, the boys seemed excited.

Tenne shuttered as another wave of her scent washed over him and a low rumble resonated from him before he gave a simple nod, unable to muster up his voice to speak out loud to her.

The rumble drew her attention, and one of her wings cricked, making a soft, sweet buzz in instinctive reply. She harshly flapped her wings and gave them a rough shake, before tucking them tightly to her back. Misbehaving little things. “When you’ve all finished, we can go swimming. Maybe we can catch some fish while we’re down there, hm?”

"We can try fishing for Lunch!” Kai announced proudly, before he finished his breakfast and went to get his towel and a change of clothes, his brother soon following to do the same.

While the two rummaged around in the tent, Tenne slowly set down his empty bowl and rested his hands in his lap, his tail rattling behind him as he seemed to just watch her.

Simply being stared at was definitely creepy and Toki was not sure she was entirely fond of it. She found herself staring back however, and tilted her head. Her wings buzzed against her back as he rattled. Her beast chuffed in her head, and seemed to lose interest with him simply staring at her, and she hummed, before fluffing and glancing away from him, her attention diverting to the tent and the boys inside of it as she waited for them to come out.

His pupils thinned and he let out a quiet rumble, before he slowly rose and brushed off as if nothing happened, walking over to the tent to knock on it gently, "You two ready to go?” he chuckled, before the two bowled out with their armful of items.

"Got the soap!” Kai announced.
"That’s good. We can wash up you, Quinn, and your daddy before you become too stinky in this heat." She teases gently, her humor taking any sting out of the words that might have occurred. She was quick in stooping down to tickle Kai, and then offering her arms to whichever child wanted to hitch a ride. It wasn’t a long jaunt, but a five-minute walk could be done faster with longer legs.

Quinn took her arms eagerly while Kai hooked onto his father’s leg.

Tenne snorted at her words. She says before ‘they’ get too stinky and yet the smells of her pheromones were practically drowning him.

Toki scooped Quinn, and then grinned to Tenne. “Race you?” She chirps. Without waiting for an answer, she bolts off, her legs carrying her swiftly down the same path she’d taken before.

Kai crows from his father’s leg. “Don’t let her win, Daddy! You’re faster!”

Tenne rumbled loudly and chuckled. "Hold on tight, Kai.” He purred, before he lowered his form and bolted to catch up with her, an effortless feat as his legs were long indeed and it allowed him to easily catch up.

Toki laughed, her wings trailing behind her as she ran. She wasn’t going as fast as she could, but she didn’t want to roll her ankle on the uneven terrain. Toki remained upright, up until she reached the river, where in she crouched on all fours to let Quinn down.

She was panting, heat having gathered under her clothing. Tenne had made it there before her, but all the same, she’d had fun. Once Quinn was on his own two feet, Toki began the task of removing her clothing.

Tenne was already undressing as well, his shirt cast to the side and soon accompanied by his pants, "So... We won." He purred, looking to Toki.

Toki shrugged out of her shirt, her breasts falling free from their confines and bouncing with her heaving ribs. “You did,” She agreed, grunting as she had to work at detangling her shirt from her horn. This set of horns tangled with things going on and going off- and it was even peskier than when she had straight horns. Curling horns were… aggravating. “So,” She asks once she’s free, standing in just her pants and facing him. “What did you want for a prize?”

Her fingers hooked on her hips, and worked her pants and undergarments down her legs. Embarrassingly, her undergarments were damp with slick. It was easy to forget that she wasn’t a skeleton- her parts were always there. So that throbbing desire curled in her belly that fed arousal to her nether bits… Well, it wasn’t going to go away, and it was going to be messy.

Toki was swift in balling up her pants and flinging them onto a rock to be washed later, standing bare before him and the pups. The boys were working on getting out of their clothes, so they could dash into the cold water. Toki looked expectantly at Tenne though, tilting her head at him questioningly.

"Well... I can think of one thing." He growled happily in reply, his pants and boxers now discarded.

“Well, you can’t get it if you don’t tell me.” Toki quirked a faint smile at him. Her wings twitched. “But... you can tell me after we’re in the water.” She grinned at him, and then proceeded to splash into the river, naked body glistening as the water splashed up and dripped down her. Once she reached a certain point, she pretty much flopped in, fanning her wings to help keep her aloft. “Ahhh. It feels so good~” she practically moaned.

He rumbled and followed her into the water before he grinned and bent down, scooping her up.
Toki squeaked as he scooped her out of the water, not like a fish caught in a net. She squirmed, and her wings flapped faintly, before she buzzed at him in amusement. “Really Tenne? C’mon, it’s hot out here.” She whines a little bit.

He chuckled and gave her a little heft, before he waded into the deeper water, before turning and falling backwards into the bath with a splash.

She shrieked noisily, though it faded into gurgling as they ducked under water. She squirmed against him, and then tickled her fingers against his chest as her wings flailed on the surface of the water. Amusement bubbled in her all the same, and she drove her fingers for his ribs, aiming to tickle him to her freedom as she squirmed against his grasp.

He grinned and gently blew air bubbles into her face before surfacing with a gasp. Though he quickly nuzzled into her neck with a pleased purr, and kept her trapped right there in his arms.

Toki squeaked as she was allowed access to air. As he snuggled his face to her sopping mane, Toki huffed and blew air over his scalp with a playful laugh. “You butt.” She chuffs. “You’re lucky my stingers didn’t automatically deploy.” She drapes across him with a faint puff, and then pokes his chest. His skin is cooler than hers, and for that she’s thankful as she’s pressed to him. “You gonna let me go?”

"No." He replied simply.

Toki squirmed against him, her legs bumping between his as she wiggled briefly in his grasp. She pouts up at him. “But Tenne,” she flutters her eyes at him, glad she sort of has lashes to do this with now, “it’s too hot to be held captive.”

"Not in the water~" He purred, before nuzzling her. "You smell so good today, Toki..." He cooed softly, before his legs shifted and squeezed one of hers between his. "Mm... heh, heh... Frisky.”

She squeaked and squirmed harder as he captured one of her legs between his. “Oh, um, ah, hah, I do? Well, this does mark my second bath of the day, s-so I suppose I’m just extra clean. As for the ah, other thing," There were children about, she didn’t want Quinn knowing what Frisky meant, "I didn’t mean to bump you-"

Kai bobbed up not far from his dad’s shoulder. “What does frisky mean, Daddy?”

Toki’s face brightens with a blush, and she shoots Tenne a look that equates to ‘you said it, you get to explain it’.

He hesitated, and then he smiled at Kai. "I'll tell you when you're a little older, okay Kai?"

Toki buried her face against Tenne’s chest and made a flustered buzzing sound. The children were far too young to be corrupted.

"A few years, Kai."

“A few years?” Kai pouts at him. “But that suuuucks. Is it like when Grillby stuck his fire stick in Auntie Saph and made her make happy screams when he didn’t know i was up? Are you gonna make Mama do happy screams? Is it called ‘Frisky’?”

Toki turned the brightest shade of green that she had managed yet, and then went completely and unexpectedly boneless, before using Tenne’s surprise at the sudden shift in her posture to wiggle out of hid arms and into the water. Nope. Nope, nope, nope. The things that children would say and this was not one that she was going to humor while she was in heat.

Not while her beast was purring at the idea.

"... Oh my god." That had Tenne sinking as well. "Why, my son... Why do you know this...?" He spoke grimly as he sank into the water.

Kai watched him sink and leaned down to lick his head affectionately. "I wasn’t tired when Auntie Saph put us to bed before Mama came, and I got up to get a drink and heard funny noises. So is that called a frisky? Are you going to do a frisky with Mama and make more pups?"

The water, thankfully, muffled Toki from hearing anything Kai said. But watching Tenne sink… Well, she had to wonder just what the curious boy was saying. In the mean time, she put some distance between them and herself, and then just basked under the water and let it cool her off and wash her sweat down the stream.

One could practically see his soul leaving his body. "Kai... Kai why..."

“Daddy!” Kai huffs. “Because I wanna know, and you said a good scientist asks all the questions, even th’ awkward ones.”

"..." Well fuck, he was right. Tenne sat up and took a deep breath. "I’ll explain things to you when you are old enough, but you must promise me that you will not discuss this with your brother."

Kai nods and holds out his pinky. “I pinky promise, Daddy.”

He swam over and took his pinky, "Atta boy." He rumbled.

Kai beamed at him and shook his pinky to seal the deal. “So where did Mama go?”

"..." He then turned and dove under the water to collect the hornet.

Toki spotted him coming, her eyes popping wide under the water, and knew he was going to capture her again. She made to escape, swimming up stream with the help of her wings, using them like flippers.

He watched her retreat, but his gaze ran by her ass and he grinned a little. Fuckin’ nice. He surfaced after a little and sighed. "She's having some Toki time."

Toki popped up when he did, and blew a raspberry at him. “Hardly. I’m just enjoying the cold water. You, dear Tenne, are not conductive to dropping my body temperature.”

Kai laughed. “Daddy’s just hot like that.”

“Yes, yes he is...’ Sequoia agreed lightly.

‘Oh my god! Shush!’ Toki squeaked to her.

Tenne laughed at his son's words and swam over to him and Quinn, taking both boys into his arms before flopping backwards into the water again.

The boys laughed and squealed contently, and splashed water up at Tenne with excited noises.

Toki snorted, and went to lounge on the rocks. She stretched out with a soft groan, and rested her head on her primary set of arms. Her whole body throbbed.
'You know... He's starting to look pretty appetizing at this point, Toki...' Sequoia purred quietly.

'That's just hormones talking, Sequoia.' Toki groaned to her, finding her hips wanting to sway against the rock she was clutching to. But her eyes did stray, even if her mind wrangled tightly with guilt, and she ogled him from her position on the rocks. 'He, uh... Does have a nice posterior.' He was built a lot like Papyrus was, come to think of it. 'Ugh, I can't be thinking like that. That's just the heat and my beast and you and me and it's not... Right. His alternate self is like a father to me.' Even though she didn't see Tenne even in the same similar lighting.

'Look, if your beast is anything like he was, it's not going to give up until it gets what it wants. I understand things have been hard, but lingering in the past makes it so that you can't pave the way of your future...' After a moment though, the woman in her head heaved a massive sigh. 'Fucking hell, I am such a hypocrite.'

'A little bit of one, yeah.' She heaved a sigh, and glanced away from Tenne. She tucked her face into her arm to keep the others from noticing her expression. 'I'm just... I'm not ready to consciously make that step, Sequoia. I'm not. It's... it hasn't even been a year. I know... I know if I can't go back... if I never manage to do what the Void- what Magic- wants me to do... Papyrus wouldn't want me to be alone forever. But... I just... I don't know what to do. I've never... lost someone like that before. I know I care for Tenne, more than I feel like I should, but... I feel guilty about it. Because I still love Papyrus with all of my being too.' She sighs again and slips further under the water. It laps at her neck, and the cool liquid slides through her mane. 'I'm... I'm going to slip away for this heat. Before my beast makes me do something I don't feel like I'm ready for.'

'He's just going to come after you. He's infatuated and now riled up because he caught our scent...'

'He has his boys. He can't leave them on their own for five or more days- which is what my heats usually run. Or used to run.' Toki murmurs softly.

'Come night time though.' She mentioned next. 'I've been a sneaky teenager a thousand lifetimes over, i know what an infatuated young man is clever enough to come up with.'

'You've never experienced a heat though, Sequoia. Once you start, you don't want to stop. The urge to sate it is overpowering. Once Tenne and I... well... Y'know... We'd be stuck doing just that until my heat, and his when I inevitably bring him into it, both wear out.' She shifts on the rock, and rubs her hands lightly together. Her eyes close as she just enjoys the cool water. 'You know what... If Tenne tracks me down, we'll see what happens. But he wont- because he has his sons.'

'I suppose you're right.' Sequoia sighed. 'I don't know what it's like... But I guess I'll find out. Either way... I suppose we'll see what happens.'

'Indeed.' Toki agreed quietly.
Toki managed to get settled in the tent, but it was too hot, and the space too enclosed for her to be comfortable. Once the pups were asleep, and Tenne presumably out as well, Toki managed to clamor out. She scrawled a shaky note in the dirt for him, before the beast broke her chains- and Toki was whisked away into the night on a whirlwind of silent wings.

The beast knew where she was going- and she took Toki further down the mountain than Toki would have liked. She took her down, down, towards the government camp and then away because people were not a good thing to have around her and what she was trying to do.

The beast located a small closely woven grove of trees, and directed Toki’s actions roughly. Something began to leak from her wrists and down into her hands as she latched onto one of the trees. Toki realized in the dim lighting from the moon that it was a waxy substance, not unlike that which a bee would make her hive out of. It would appear that her wax glands were on her wrists, around the same location as her stingers.

And for the next four hours of darkness, Toki worked with a swiftness that surprised even her. The beast guided her actions, forcing her to work even through the waves of heat that damn near blinded her. She built a conical shape around the trees, building from the top to the bottom and leaving a hole in the base about eight feet off the ground. The branches that were in the way were broken off- and once the outside shell was formed, she began to make combs.

Many, many combs lined the inside of the hive, and each one Toki injected with her venom and then capped, before fanning her wings to rapidly cool. The beast was nesting, using her body to create the perfect hive for insectis children.

‘For eggs,’ Her beast supplies her gruffly, before ignoring her pleading for her to stop once more. ‘No. Need to mate. Must mate. Lost first. Must find another. Have grieved long enough.’

Another several hours went into fortifying the hive, putting layers upon layers on the papery and waxy outside so that it could support the weight that it needed to.

But once it was done… Once it was done, it was massive, and filled to the brim with honey. The beast hadn’t bothered to get rid of Toki’s clothes, and the clothing frustrated her some- but not enough to make her rip it. No- the beast had more important work to do.

She crawled down to the entrance of the hive, which had a special cover over it to keep things from falling out, and then opened the cover. Toki’s body didn’t leave the hive- but instead, she latched onto the side of it, and her body made a high pitched noise that echoed through the hive, and out the hole, amplifying the sound.

The piping sound echoed for miles, broadcasting through the forest for all to hear that the beast, and Toki, were more than ready to finally mate. Her pheromones had already spread for miles- now it was just a waiting game to see when the males would come running.

The piping was heard by nearly everyone who was still awake, And those closer to them when her scent was released were lured closer by the co-responding piping.

Many grew closer and their eyes could be seen through the forest, but before they could come close enough, there was a growl and a loud rattling that scattered many of them.

Through the trees, bright purple eyes glowed and Tenne stalked through. He was on all fours, yet held himself high as he walked to under the hive. He was undressed save for his tank top and a pair of boxers that was his normal sleepwear, but that was the only normal thing about him. His form was adorned with spiky bone-like plating that jutted out of his skin, framing his head like a pointed helmet. He looked more like a blaster beast now.

He held in his teeth a large dead raccoon, no doubt his offering of kill for her.

Tenne put his kill down and rattled loudly to her, before he turned and bared his fangs with a fierce snarl, scattering the rest of the monsters that had gathered. Once the two were alone, he turned and lifted his head, before he reared back and nudged the hive with a rattle.

The nudging of the hive definitely got her attention, and the piping cut off almost immediately. The beast lowered down to the entrance, and stuck her head out the bottom to peer at him. Her eyes glowed green, and she parted her jaw to huff in his scent. Ahh yes, the beast knew this creature.

Terror initially hit Toki’s consciousness hard- because she knew that form. That was similar to the form that had broken her leg and arm, and very nearly caused her to lose both of her children.

The beast, however, soothed her fear, and gave Tenne an appraising look. She hummed a soft buzzing sound and eying the raccoon that he had brought as an offering. It would do. The other scents she could smell did not smell as good as the male that the she-beast wanted.

So she gave a softer, quieter piping, just for Tenne to hear, and then retreated up into the hive again. One of the cooled combs of honey was extracted from the hive wall, and she crawled back down again to peer at him. She dropped down out of the hive, her clothing still in place if a little mussed and ruffled, and landed on all fours. The comb of honey was clutched in her secondary hands, and she remained crouched as she rolled it over to him- a return offering of his courting, and acceptance into the hive for mating.

Sharp green eyes watched him to see what he would do with the sweeter smelling honey.

He rumbled happily at her sounds, his tail wagging behind him slowly. As the honeycomb was offered, he slowly extended his neck and put down her gift, before he sat back and took her offering. Taking in the scent, Tenne gave a pleased chitter before he opened his mouth, jaw splitting wide to engulf the gift in one bite.

Him taking the entire gift was surprising to the beast, but she let out a very, very pleased rumble despite the shock on her face. He was going to be in for the long haul then. She took the raccoon in her secondary hands, flitting back up to the hive to store it up there for safe keeping, and then returned down to him while he finished his gift.

Her wings flexed and fluttered, showing off their dazzling green colors for him as the beast waited for the honey to take effect.

Toki and Sequoia were left puzzling over what sort of effect the honey was supposed to take- up until the beast supplied them with a swift answer. An aphrodisiac at it’s finest, her honey when she was in heat was designed to stir and arouse him so he would have the stamina to keep going. Males never lasted long enough, after all, and the beast wanted one thing- for the fire of heat in her belly to be sated.

As his mighty jaws reduced the comb to a messy pulp, he savored the taste of the honey, but as he swallowed his mind went blank and his body got hot. He slumped and let out a dominant, though needy growl, and his head lifted to look at her, before he advanced and started to nip her where he could, head butting her hips insistently.

The urgent nudging of her hips made the beast purr, and she fumbled to try and get her clothing off. When she couldn’t figure it out, she let out a flustered sound, and shoved Toki up long enough to make her counterpart help her strip bare.

Toki, now in control, had steadier hands for removing clothing, even with Tenne butting his head roughly against her hips. Her shirt was shunted off, her pants and undergarments following. There was no point in fighting it, as much as her conscious mind wanted to. Her body was too hot, he was too frantic… it was honestly easier to just go with the flow.

Besides… There was part of her that was ready to… Well, ‘mingle’, as it was. Nearly half a year without her husband… She didn’t feel like she should be ready, but… Toki did love too easy.

Soon she was bare before him, and she turned, of her accord and of her beasts’ accord, and tugged at his clothing. Her chest dropped low to the ground, giving him access to her posterior as she fanned her wings, wafting her scent over him like a fan.

He got out of his clothes rather quickly, and he gave her a few more nips before mounting her from behind. His arms wrapped around her waist and his face buried into her fur in his search for her scruff, a feature often found on his breed, though less likely to appear on hers.

This was a position that Toki was familiar with. It was one she and Papyrus were fond of- and it amused her a little bit inside to realize why he was fond of it. That amusement quickly faded as his hips, devoid of any parts that she could initially feel, pressed up against her bare backside. That’s right- he didn’t have any visible parts. So she wondered how that was going to exactly work…

His mouth searching through her fur located the insect equivalent of a scruff- which was mostly just where her mane was the thickest along the back of her neck. Toki and her beast grunted when his mouth found purchase there, and her primary set of arms sunk her claws into the soil as she growled at him. The beast pressed her hips back into him with a demanding piping sound.

He snarled and lifted his leg, hooking it on her hip as his slit came to be prodded open by his anatomy. A long black cock slid out, and it prodded against her lips for a short time before his hips shifted and pressed more firmly into her. It took him only a few rocks, before he shoved his girth into her, and gave a pleased rumble as he nearly hilted himself in her.

Toki hadn’t expected him to nearly freaking hilt himself inside of her without much warning- or for him to be that large. Papyrus had been large for her, and she hadn’t been constrained by actual flesh then. Tenne… Tenne was easily the size of Papyrus and then some. Like a Papyrus and a half. He speared her wide enough that a stab of pain slid through her walls, and they fluttered as they struggled to adjust to the sudden and not gentle intrusion. She cried out, wings fluttering under his body weight, and her secondary set of arms came down to cling to his arms as they wrapped around her waist.

Her beast purred inside of her, oddly pleased despite the uncomfortable pain stretching her wide-wider than even her children had, most certainly.

He growled as she reacted and put a little more weight on her to warn her that this behavior wasn't going to do her any good, and began to rut his hips against her, barely pulling out between his hilting thrusts as he moaned and growled quietly in her ear.

Each thrust forced his length deeper into her, and Toki yelped as he hit deeper and deeper, until he could go no further. He hit the end of her passage, stopped only by what she could guess was what connected to the end of her passage. The harder he pressed on her back, the more her torso sunk towards the ground, until she was just barely held up by hey primary arms. Her breasts rocked with every thrust, bountiful swells brushing the soil and stimulating her nipples.
Her mouth fell open with a pant, and the more he rutted, the less it began to hurt. Her body began to acclimate, adjusting to his girth and massive size as he not only blanketed her body with his, but filled her from the inside. As it started to hurt less and feel more pleasurable, the beast began to pipe again, soft and cloying and urging him ever onward as she moaned and panted, mouth falling open.

The beast that was the man that felt so strongly for her gave a pleased grumble like noise as he nibbled her shoulder in praise.

His tail made a bit of ruckus behind him with how loud it was rattling, but no doubt it was a sound of joy or great enjoyment in their current situation. His grip tightened a little more and his nips gave way to a few nuzzles as his strides seem to grow longer as he no longer made to dominate, no doubt the conscious mind of the young man turning this into what he hoped to have as a more passionate moment.

Toki could tell when it was Tenne who was taking control again. The motions took on a much gentler approach, his thrusts softer as his cock slid in and out of her. His hips and armored plating were no longer doing their best to bruise her backside. Likewise, her beast backed out further, leaving Toki in her stead- and Toki found herself simply closing her eyes and enjoying the feel of him within her.

He wasn’t… he wasn’t Papyrus. They weren’t the same man- not even the same sort of animal. This was two entirely different sorts of sex. She knew she’d feel guilty about it later- but each stroke of him within her… it helped to soothe the burning agony of the heat inside of her belly.

Her hips rolled back against him, a distinctly conscious move, and she threaded her smaller fingers through his as he clutched her. His hands were big enough that he could hold her securely with one- and spare the second one. She laced her fingers once she had it free, and enjoyed the intimacy with the man who had been trying to court her broken heart.

Toki could do passion. Passion and fire went hand in hand, after all- and she was a being of fire.

‘Some say the world will end in fire, some say in ice. From what I've tasted of desire, I hold with those who favor fire.’ She mused to herself. Her Papyrus… he had been like the sun to her. He was her fire… ‘But if it had to perish twice, I think I know enough of hate to say that for destruction, ice is also great.’ And Tenne… Tenne might just be her ice.

‘You’re seriously quoting poetry while taking the biggest dick that I’ve ever even considered to have ever existed? What even are you, Toki?’ Sequoia groaned.

‘What can I say? There’s no one else out there quite like me.’ Toki took a deep breath, and then bucked her hips gently into him, giving a full body buzz that vibrated down to where his cock joined her body.

As she seemed to give a conscious reply, he gave a happy sound and his hand clenched around her threaded fingers, not tightly, but tenderly, almost lovingly.

The buck and following buzz around his cock did give make him give a shudder and a loud gasp of pleasure, followed by a few thrusts that were stronger than the others. Though the new pace that followed was only a little slower than before, it definitely got him going.

He pressed his face into what he had been biting but a moment before and began to chatter and trill. Her beast side would eventually recognize it as a sister tongue of blaster beast kind, speaking of his praise of how wonderful she felt, how happy and honored he was to be in this with her, and how he prayed he was good to her like this.
The tender and loving embrace of his fingers felt nice, and her thumbs rubbed over the backs of his hand while he drove her nearly face down into the ground. Toki rolled her hips against him again, listening as he began to chatter and grill to her.

Neither she nor Sequoia knew what he was saying, but her beast did and jovially translated it for both of the women inside of Toki's head. The string of praise and compliments to her was flattering, and the green flush on her cheeks began to spread all along her face and down her neck.

Her beast chimed in again, and she returned the string of praises, telling him through Toki's throat just how good of a male he was, and how amazing everything was- fluffing his ego and his pride.

Her praise was heard but in this moment, it affected neither his pride nor his ego, rather it encouraged him that he was performing well for her. He moaned quietly into her neck and his hold on her tightened. "T-Tojiko."

The use of her full name was unexpected, and the beast wasn't sure how to process this. She hadn't prepared for this. However, Toki knew. She rocked forwards on her elbows, her back bowing under the weight of his body. Her mouth fell open in a ragged gasp, crocodilian teeth parting with a spray of sparks. "Ah... Tenebris~" His full name- pack name- slid from her maw before she could stop it. The heat made warmth pool in her pool in her belly faster, her slick covering his shaft and the front of his pelvis as he rocked into her roughly. "Tenebris~!"

He had known that she would no doubt return the favor, and hearing his name through the lips of the beautiful female he loved so dearly gave him a surge of excitement and happiness.

His grip tightened and he gave a mewling moan into her ear, "Oh T-Toki..." he whispered, "Y-you... you feel so good~" He moaned between thrusts as he began to pick back up on his rhythm of thrusts.

Toki mewled as his pace quickened, and she offered her shoulder to him to hold on to. Her wings trembled frantically beneath his chest, her breathing nearly at a rate of hyperventilating. She was already balls deep in this- or rather he was balls deep in her- so there was no point in trying to fight it. She continued to speak. "S-so big," she panted, her walls fluttering and squeezing around him in rapid waves timed with the beat of her conjoined soul. "So big and thick and hhhh, filling... Mmm... Ah~"

He took the offered shoulder, using one hand now to hold her against his form as he moved back onto his knees, now holding her by one of her legs and her chest, moving her a bit faster as his mouth fell open to release louder, more needy moans for the forest around them to hear.

With his hand now on her shoulder instead of the mouth she had intended, that left his very large forearm now fully pressing against both of her breasts. One of them slipped against the curve of his arm, and she shuddered pleasantly at the feel of his skin scraping over her sensitive nipples. The new position was nice in many ways. It offered her a way to go bounce deeper into his cock, forcing him deeper into her core. It was pleasant, almost with a painful edge. She loved it.

'I didn't know you were a masochist.'

'It's the normal ones you never suspect. And I'm only a tiny little bit of one. I don't mind some aches and pains, but not too much of it spoils the mood. I mostly like being bitten. There's something satisfying about being bitten and held- and I wonder if my inner beast has always liked it, and has always been there, if only dormant. But shush. You're interrupting.'

'My apologies.' Sequoia snorts sarcastically.
Toki groans and bounces against him, before piping again, urging him just a little faster, a little deeper. She was chasing that edge of heat, that end that she knew would bring a little bit of relief from the burning ache in her body.

The heat was creeping up on them both like pressure before an explosion, and as it built, Tenne keened and shifted before his lips pressed to her skin on the shoulder of the side not occupied by his hand.

Seems she was going to get her bite after all as he opened his mouth and sank his fangs into the exposed skin of her shoulder, his teeth digging deeply into tender hot flesh. His teeth sunk deep, threatening her life as his canines neared her jugular, and yet he knew exactly when to stop to preserve the life of his lover.

His bite slid through her defenses like hot butter, encountering resistance only for a second as her magic instinctively tried to brace for it. She panted against the sharp pain in her shoulder, the green of her blood flooding his mouth and tasting exactly as she smelled- smoke and honey. She bucked against his cock with a wild cry, body piping harder.

It wasn’t long before she came, magic washing over him like a flash fire. Toki’s eyes glowed brightly as she cried out, mind going blank as her walls clamped around him and milked him tightly.

As she lost herself to orgasm, he felt a surge of overwhelming energy as he picked up on his thrusts, which was encouraged by the blood that covered his tongue.

When her high of bliss reached it’s peak, he pushed her down to the ground once more, the hand previously wrapped around her now on her shoulders as he moaned and growled louder, his pace picked up to what it was when he began. Though this time it came accompanied with a bit more of a pressure with each push

It felt like there was more to him with each thrust, like he was growing thicker and thicker inside of her with every shove of his cock. Toki was in a helpless spiral as he stimulated her further, her fingers clawing helplessly at the dirt as he drove her into the ground again. Each shove inwards pulled a mewl from her, her wings twitching and body completely at his mercy.

His thrusts lasted not long, and he gave a final hard thrust before there was a sharp pop like sensation from her abused pussy and he screeched out, before she was filled up with hot fluids, "Hhhhhnnn....!" He held her tighter and his jaw clenched beside her wound as he filled her with his cum, resisting hard to bite once more, as he was remembering that she didn’t have the same protection as his kin would.

The second that his jaw flexed more around her wound, her defenses surged to life and the flesh under his teeth became nearly like stone. Stone that bled and trembled and gasped as she nearly thrashed because that was a knot and that was not something that she had expected to feel. Her claws raked furrows in the ground as he thoroughly ravished her, and she ended up going nearly limp in his grasp, panting as her trembling arms gave out.

Steadily, Tenne came off his high, his head leaned back as his mouth hung open, his fangs covered in her blood. "Hhhahhhh..." He stayed perfectly still, his cock left stuck inside of her for the time that his knot stayed swollen.

Toki slumped a little bit, up until it pulled on that knot wedged deep inside of her. When it did, she nearly yelped and bolted up onto all fours again. Her wings twitched, aching from being pinned so roughly initially, and she panted. With the rush of her orgasm and the knot still splitting her wide, her heat had temporarily abated like it always did. It would come back though- like it always did. But...
Wow. She was already exhausted and her shoulder hurt like hell. Blood rolled down her arm and chest in thick streams, and she had to guess that he had bitten hellishly deep with those massive chompers of his. "H-hah... Mmm... Tenn-"

There was a rustle in the brush that interrupted her, and a human poked his head over. The man was flushed a bit, and held a camera in one hand. He raised it, and snapped a photo of them with a nearly silent click.

He pulled her close and was about to reply, but he was not pleased to hear that sound. At first, he thought it was a mouse, but no, it was too mechanical.

Then he realized why he recognized it.

A camera shutter clicking.

Tenne turned before he growled loudly and screeched at where the sound originated.

The man in the brush startled at the screech, and snapped a photo of him with his mouth open and bloody. He fell out of the brush with a crash. And then scrambled to his fear, before racing away.

Toki buzzed in mortification and covered her face with her forearms.

Humans! They had no respect for the monsters and their right of privacy! Tenne snarled angrily and turned to pursue the fleeing human in the split second he had forgotten that he was tied to Toki.

And that tie tugged in the most horribly painful way that Toki had ever experienced. She cried out, making a distressed buzzing sound with her wings. With one hand she sent a small fleet of her bees after the man's camera with express orders not to hurt him- the rest of her arms tried to keep her from not being ripped off balance as she desperately buzzed to try and call Tenne off.

Her sounds quickly called him back and he began to chirp and whimper in apology, licking her wound gently as he pulled her close, carefully making sure he didn't pull again, "Forgive me." he murmured gently.

"It's okay, it's okay," she murmured in reply as he cuddled her to his frame. Her lower bits throbbed painfully. She just hoped she wasn't bleeding. That had... Hurt. A lot. She sucked in a soft breath and shuddered lightly. "It happens. Hah... Just don't tug again please?"

He chattered quietly and nodded slowly, "Yes, of course... I'm sorry..."

"It's okay, Tenne, really. You were going to go after that guy which is understandable. You just, ah... Forgot a not-so-little something." She nuzzled her head up against his chin, and shivered.

The bees returned moments later with the camera strung between them. The man was now screaming in the distance and growing farther away. Presumably he was being chased by angry glowing hornets. However could that have happened.

Tenne turned his head and he chuckled gently, reaching for the camera with one hand while the other kept Toki close, "Many thanks." He told the bees as it came to rest in his hand, "Mmh... Now I can return my attention to you, my mate." He purred as he nuzzled her no-longer-bleeding wound.

To Toki's credit, her mental freak out happened swiftly and she buried it even faster before Tenne could notice. Mate. He called her his mate. She... She already had a mate- a mate that she had been unfaithful too, even if she likely... Likely wouldn't ever get to see him again. What small shreds of hope she had in her soul were fading fast. She wouldn't get to go home.
This... This was her world now. It was just... It was easier to accept this than try to fight it.

He couldn’t see the wounded smile on her face, or the briefly dead look in her eyes, before she locked it all deep, deep inside of herself and threw away the key. "Mmm, I suppose you can." She said, voice never missing a beat. "Though... Lets ruin the film please. I don't want those photos getting out by accident."

He smiled as he did not hear a denial from her of being his own and he nuzzled her appreciatively with a few more happy purrs and chirps. But as she began to plea for the destruction of the film, he nodded slowly, "They will be eradicated... but I am going to spare the camera, at least this time." He rumbled. "Can you rest on your own arms, my dear? I will extract the film and leave the camera unharmed."

"Pretty sure I can." She took her weight on her arms. They trembled, particularly the shoulder that he had bitten, but she managed to make them hold when she added her secondary set of arms to help stabilize her. Her bees stayed summoned, leaving the area blanketed in a gentle glowing green light. "Just try and do it fast. I want to lay down a little bit before the heat surges again. Mine lasts... A long time normally. I hope you can keep up."

He nodded gently and once she was safe, opened the hatch of the film and grasped it, pulling it from the spool. He offered it to her, "Here you go. To burn to nothing more."

"Thank you, Tenne." She took the spool, and held it in her hand. A bit of fire magic had it melting into a lump of black goop, which she liberally smeared on a rock and then threw as far away from them as she could. That done, Toki gave a soft tired groan. "You're gonna want to get as much rest as you can, Tenne. If you're here, you're in for the long haul."

"I know... my cock hasn't softened since I came." He murmured with a small flush. "I do not think I will go flaccid any time soon."

"That's not all that I meant." She laughs faintly, and shifts under him. She eases down onto her chest, and urges him to move slowly with her so they can spoon in the leaf litter, instead of remaining standing on their hands and knees while waiting for his knot to deflate. "Though, ah... That is partially my fault. The honey you consumed... it was an aphrodisiac. It's... Different when I'm in heat. Which, uh... Usually lasts at least five days at the minimum."

Tenne settled down behind her and took her into his hold once more, nuzzling her, though he stopped when she admitted the... new facts... "O-Oh... Ah... I see." He murmured as his cheeks grew hot against her skin.

"I didn't... Count on you eating the whole thing. And uh... If you're not up for the whole time, just tell me, okay? It's no big deal." She said, fingers finding one of his hands and gently playing with it. She stroked her digits over the hole, and then finally voiced the question she had been dying to ask for ages. "How do you manage to hold stuff without things falling out of the holes...?"

He blinked at that, and then he rolled his eyes and chuckled, "Questions for another time, Toki." He tutted, giving her a few kisses before settling down behind her to let his knot deflate before their next go.

'He should have heard your mental conversations in the middle of sex.' Sequoia muttered dryly.

"You'll learn that I have plenty pf questions for plenty of awkward times." She chuckled faintly, and sighed, simply letting the wash of his kisses over her skin warm her body as they lay together.
He chuckled at that, and then he sighed and nuzzled her, "Toki... I've... felt like this for a while now... the yearning to be yours..." He started slowly, careful with his words, "You're beautiful, you're amazing... you're... you're a perfect mother to my sons... I'm sorry I did it like I did, but I wanted so badly to propose to you regardless..."

... Propose? Propose? With a dead critter and a dick as thick as her lower leg? That... How was that a proposition? Toki's mind whirled, utterly confused and bamboozled. She was... Engaged- or shit, probably married because he had called her his mate- because of a huge cultural misunderstanding apparently, and she wasn't sure how to handle this.

So Toki did what she did best. She rolled with it. "I know you have. Honestly... I wasn’t sure I was ready." She said gently. "For another mate. But... My beast is done mourning- and I am left to follow her path." She shifts to glance back at him. "I am... I am not a perfect creature, Tenne. I am not perfect by far. I am... I am broken and damaged by things that I'm not even sure how to tell you about. But... But if I can make you happy... Then that is what matters most. You and the boys."

He nuzzled and kissed her gently as he whined in apology, "I'm sorry, Toki... I hope I didn't force you into this... I would never forgive myself..." He whined, nuzzling her back gently before looking up at her. "I just wanted to make you happy... And..." He was trailing off into insecure mutters.

She sometimes forgot how relatively young he was. Toki twisted some, turning her upper torso so she could look at him. She lifted a hand to cup his jaw. "Tenne." She interrupted his insecure mumbling. "Honestly... It's me who should be sorry. You... You care for someone who is so... So very, very damaged." She brushes a hand to her chest. Her soul half had the deep wound in it still. And Sequoia's half, while some of the cracks were slowly healing, was still covered in a vast amount of old wounds and scar tissue. Toki's core was damaged- and he had seen that for himself when they had first met. "Though... I suppose you knew what you were getting into when you saw the cracks in my soul." She sighed softly.

Her eyes closed briefly, before opening again to look back at him once more. "It was not... Entirely willing on my part, at least at the start. But... Neither was my first one. We sort of had an... Accident while we flirted and fooled around. I ended up pregnant." Toki wasn’t sure if Tenne really understood the concept of boyfriends and girlfriends, so ‘flirted and fooled around’ best described her instance with Papyrus. "I didn't... Love him as deeply then as I did when I lost him. But our love grew day by day. And us... You and me, Tenne... We can be happy." She swallows quietly. "You already brighten my day every time I get to see you. Without you and both of the boys... I don't know if I would still be here by now." She admits gently to him.

She certainly had been to a point where just nothingness would have been better than the pain she felt.

He looked up at her with slightly widened eyes, before they closed and he nuzzled into her hand. "I'm sorry, Toki." He murmured, giving her a squeeze. "I couldn't leave you to suffer on your own... I... I was probably insistent... but I wanted to preserve the life of something I never thought I would witness again... I couldn't leave you behind...”

"The knowledge that someone cared for me kept me going a lot of the time. That there was someone I could turn to, that I wasn’t... I wasn’t alone here." She said softly to him. Her eyes closed slightly. "You were insistent, a little bit. But... It wasn't anything I hadn’t experienced before. You're hardly the first strapping young male I've had vying for my attention." Though she'd more had human suitors flooding her when she had been younger, but the point still stood. She sighed and rubbed his cheek gently, brushing her fingers down to the fur that was growing back slowly around the nape of his neck. She slid her hands past the armor plating he had sprouting from him, to brush over his skin instead. "You and the boys kept me going... You still keep me going. I don't... I don't know where I would be without you. Probably... Probably fallen, to be honest with you." She sighs gently. "But I'm not. I'm here... And I'm... I'm yours." Her beast was very firm in that fact. Tenne had claimed her - taken her for a mate. She had accepted him. She was his now.

The beast had finished mourning, and the beast had found them a mate again. Toki just... had to deal with the consequences.

He hugged her a little tighter, not wanting to ever think about her Falling, and began to chirp and whine happily to distract her and himself from the bad line of thoughts. "Thank you Toki... Thank you..." He repeated his thanks a few times into her fluff, a sound of pure joy as his words trailed off into chirps and whines.

The animalistic noises that came from him were adorable at best, and cute at worst. Toki simply smiled faintly and shifted, giving a soft, surprised "Oh!" As his knot shifted inside of her and slid loose just a little bit. Her abused bits warmed again, and she shivered against him, before twitching and moving her hips to try and adjust him a little bit. "Mm... I think your knot is going down a little bit."

He noticed as well and he slowly disconnected, rolling over to pull her to his chest as he pulled her hips to his lap once more. "This means I can do this now. At least until the beast takes over again and demand I breed my beautiful, wonderful, miraculous mate."

The new position left his erection pressed to her leg, which was definitely an interesting position. Toki shifted and instead turned to straddle his lap. "My heat will hold back for a little bit more," She purrs softly. "But you still have a not so little problem here. Don't you? Maybe I can play with it and try to help." Toki glances down then to see what his dick looked like.

His cock was impressive to match the rest of him. It was long, perhaps nine or ten inches if not bigger, with a bulbous inch and a half of it having swollen with his knot. Her primary hand could fit around his cock's shaft, but the same can't be said about his knot when it would finally come around to being swollen once again.

He squeaked quietly, though gave her a sheepish and flustered smile as his cheeks heated. "I-I suppose you could if you wanted to." He purred softly.

Toki could not honestly believe that was inside of her. Her Papyrus had been... Well, a lot smaller than that. She blinked at it for a time, and then rubbed a hand over her neck for half a second, before it descended down to his cock. Her smaller, secondary hands wrapped around it as it bobbed between them, and she stroked his slick mass from base to tip, while her primary fingers slid up and began to trace along the ribs of his shielding, wondering if they were sensitive.

That was the biggest, blackest dick she had ever seen. It looked like it was literally made from the void. No wonder Tenne blushed black and why black was staining the inside of her thighs. Goodness. She had been right in her teasing speculation with Tenebris, back in her world. All of his body fluid was black.

No wonder it had been so hard to get out of his damn white shirts.
Chapter 105

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Well. That happened. Toki regrets it a lot, but also does not. She has mixed feelings on the whole situation, just like I’m sure a lot of you do too.

The night of passion between Toki and Tenne ended with the latter being thoroughly exhausted, though it seemed Toki never tapped out. Not that her heat would let her.

Not that night.

Nor the five more nights that followed.

Each night, after the boys were put to bed, Tenne and Toki would meet in their place below her hive. He’d partake of her honey, and be lost in need and pleasure as his body was overwhelmed by the need of his mate.

That wasn’t to say that they didn’t steal away for quickies in the day. Well- at least once or twice at the start. After Quinn nearly found them, they stopped attempting quickies. If not for a quickly summoned Sugar, Toki and Tenne would have been found.

As dawn stretched on the sixth morning, Toki yawned, feeling the heat abate finally. She stretched her back against him, and flexed her wings, popping her toes with a sleepy murr.

Tenne had been sleeping deeper since their jaunts would leave him thoroughly exhausted. He continued to snore. Quinn, however, was the early riser, stretching as he yawned and gave a whining coo.

With the lack of heat pouring off of her, the tent was no less than twenty degrees cooler, and it was a sheer relief for her to get to relax and enjoy the coolness of it in the early morning. She was pleasantly sore- and she was certain to be walking funny for a while- but it was a pleasant feeling. As Quinn stirred, Toki roused, and gently tugged him to her chest so she could cuddle and groom him gently. “Hey there, Quinn.” She murmured softly. “How are you doing?”

He mewed in reply and stretched again before cuddling himself closer.

She laughed and nuzzled him again. “Oh baby boy, you’re really sleepy, aren’t you?” She shifts, looking back at Tenne. He’s still asleep, and so is Kai- so she carefully bundles Quinn to her chest, and eases out of the tent with a slightly tired yawn. “Think you can cling to me while I work on breakfast, kiddo?” She hums gently to him.

He mewed again but purred happily as she was very quickly clung to by the sleepy pup and he hid his face in her fur with a purr.

Toki smiled as she got settled, and snuggled the boy cuddling her fur. While he clung to her, she got started on breakfast, working in mostly silence while she mulled over some things.
She was... she was mated now, she supposed. She would own up to it. This wasn’t... her world, originally. It was now, though. One didn’t move to Russia from Madagascar, break one of their laws, and then tell the police that they couldn’t be punished because they weren’t from Russia, after all. She would own up to it- because this world was... it was hers now too. She had to assimilate to it, like they would have had to assimilate to hers.

Which meant that these boys were... well, they really were her boys now.

Toki smiled to herself and sighed. It was a bittersweet double-edged sword. She felt like she was betraying her family back home- but... but her family here made her hurt less. She wondered if it was so bad to let love heal some of her pain. “So...” She says softly as she sprinkles a little bit of dried thyme on some sliced fish as it sizzles over the fire. “Your daddy and I... we mated.” She says softly to Quinn. “So... that really does make me your Mama now- if you still want me to be.”

"Mama.” he replied simply as he nuzzled her. "Mah mama~" He purred again quietly.

“Yes.” She smiled softly. “Your Mama.” She smooshed his little cheeks, and then spooned up a seared piece of fish, before offering it to him to nibble on.

Tired or not, he was happy to take the offered fish, munching it with a happy sound.

Toki let off a soft thrum. “If you’re still sleepy, you can keep sleeping on me, Quinn.” She soothed softly as he munched the fish bits.

"Mmmhm..." He mumbled before nuzzling her gently.

“Rest well, little one.” She murmured softly to him, before focusing on cooking.

Once everything was done, she covered the pan and nestled it in the warm dirt next to the hot coals, before simply sighing and relaxing as she fluttered her wings. Her shoulder ached from where Tenne had bitten her- repeatedly, over and over in the same spot and only deepening his mark- and she lifted a hand to lightly finger over the healing scabs that flecked her skin under her shirt. Goodness, those were tender.

Quinn happily clung to his mother, his grip only loosening slightly when he began to knead into her mane. "Mmm.” He was mumbling in his sleep. It was absolutely adorable to hear him, especially since one could hear the rare 'momma' in the mess.

He was absolutely adorable. Toki wondered if Skylar would have been like Quinn... But she supposed she’d never get to know what her son would have been like.

Rather than dwell on that melancholy thought, she adjusted herself and quick checked over the camp. There wasn’t much that needed to be done- but they did have a small abundance of the aphrodisiac honey that they really needed to do something with. Toki wasn’t even sure what to do with it- she could take it up to Grillby’s tent- not his house tent, but the tent he’d set up outside as a sort of 'restaurant' for the community at large, where large game animals that had been hunted were usually caught and brought to him to be cooked. He did still serve alcohol, of course- so perhaps he could do something with the honey with that.

Speaking of honey... She supposed she could make her own jars now. So, while everyone slept, Toki sat down and began to figure out how to make her own little wax containers for her venom to cool in.

She had been left to her own devices for about an hour before Tenne crawled from his tent, a snoring Kai attached to his back like a baby koala.
"Mmmh..." He yawned widely, and then stretched and smiled towards Toki. "Good morning, my darling." He rumbled happily.

An hour was a long time for Toki to have to herself. By the time he came out, she was surrounded by blobs of half collapsed and failed containers of wax that had been discarded off to the left side of her to be disposed of later, with Quinn playing in some of the blobs. At her right side, however, was a small and growing pile of carefully crafted wax jars that resembled honeycombs, but that had a top that screwed off and on like an actual jar.

Her wings were fanning them and rapidly cooling the jars of honey as they sat at her side. She glanced up as Tenne came out, and gave him a wave as she worked on filling her next jar, milking one of her primary wrists into it. "Good morning, sleepy head." She chuckles. "You and Kai rest well?" She knew he would smell her lack of heat pheromones when he came out, and wondered if he’d be relieved. He was probably a little sore from last night’s session.

She’d gotten a little mouthy. He now sported a nasty bite along his bicep that needed to heal.

Well he was limping for a reason wasn’t he, weak and subtle but limping in the same.

Tenne wasn't as pleased as his anatomy was relieved at knowing his new mate's heat was passed. It gave him another reason to smile at her, "Like pups." He replied with a lighthearted chuckle, "And yourself, Early bee?"

"I didn’t sleep all that well until a couple hours before I got up. I could probably use more sleep, to be honest- but I’m not completely tired.” She’d gotten restful sleep when the heat had fully abated, that was. Toki gave him a smile, and finished filling the jar, before leaning over to grab the cap to screw onto the jar. It was set at the back of the pile of jars being fanned by her wings. She eyed his limp and gave him a faint smirk. “Want some honey to help with that limp?” She teased lightly.

"Only if it's not the same honey you've been feeding me over the last few days.” He replied with a soft laugh. "I don’t need another reason to limp."

Toki snorted, and pulled one of the cooled jars out. She tossed it up to him with a cheeky look, and then mimicked the sound of a chicken clucking. “Aww, Tenne, don’t you trust me? I wouldn’t do that to you,” She purrs. “Besides, all of the… Well, the special honey is still stacked in it’s combs over by the tree.” She answered lightly.

He caught it and shot her a look, before he knelt back on his hind legs and popped open the jar, before holding over his opened mouth. It took a moment, but a glob of bright green honey dropped into his mouth and he chewed around it as he screwed the lid back on, tossing it back to her.

Toki caught the jar, and topped it off, before snorting lightly as she set it back to re-cool once more. "You’re so silly. All of you guys love my honey.” She shakes her head with an amused sound. “... Speaking of the honey, what are we going to do with the aphrodisiac honey?"

"Hm... I suppose for now, simply preserve it.” He answered once his mouthful of honey was swallowed, which did take a lot of chewing to dilute the thickness of the honey with saliva. "I know not what we can do with it with our current situation. We may be out here for a while before we have our homes. Were we more better equipped, I could imagine perhaps utilizing them for a mead recipe..."

She blinks and looks up at him. "Honey itself keeps if its stored- it's one of the few foods on earth that never goes bad. Three thousand years from now, the honey would still be good. But these are biodegradable containers. I think. I'm not really sure." Toki tilts her head and sighs. "I have no idea how to make alcohol, or we could mix the honey into some and do like... 'Love Potion' shots or something at Grillby's temporary bar. I'm not exactly hopeful for the government getting us off this mountain any time soon. There might be murmurs, but humans take months to get anything done." She taps her fingers lightly. "If you know how to make it, I can probably figure out how to make the containers you'd need to make the mead or something. I never thought of using my wax for containers until now, really."

She'd never known she'd had wax until she'd gone into heat, period.

He rumbled in thought, and then heard a squeal and looked towards where Quinn had been sitting with a ball of his own wax, he then held it up, revealing he had shaped it into what looked like a bee. It became confirmed, however, when a familiar bee climbed over his shoulder and piped pleasantly.

"BWEEEE!" Quinn squealed happily.

Toki chuckled and smiled. "That's right, Quinn. A bee. Good job." She praised. She glanced up at Tenne and grinned. "My wax makes a good art project for eager little ones." Particularly when it was easy to warm and mold, and before she mixed in the curing agent. It left it soft and pliable, like a melted candle wax before it turned solid again.

"I can tell, and it looks like he had a perfect little model for the job" he chuckled warmly, pointing to Stripe who buzzed and piped happily as she crawled under his chin.

"Stripe is a good girl." Toki chirped. "She's sort of like a potato. If you'll let her stay still, she'll roll up like a loaf and not move unless she has to."

She got indignant buzzing for her words, even if they were true.

"Oh that's precious." Tenne laughed gently. "I wonder if there's a way we can make paint so Quinn could give his creations color."

“I can probably work something out. Berries make great dye, if I can get enough- and so do flowers that have color.” She taps her fingers on one of the pots of honey, and hums. “Problem is, they would possibly be toxic as there’s lots of toxic plants out here that give good dyes. If he ate them or got them in his mouth, there would be a problem. But, I can make a really pretty purple from blackberries, and a yellow from some marigolds. I could do green with grass and various leaf litter.”

He nodded in understanding. "I have an old book on botany, and his majesty is very wise in the same." He explained.

“I’m good with botany too, but I’m not all that familiar with the stuff here. Maybe conferring with the king and your book might not be bad though.” Her wings fluttered. “I end up watching the kids often enough that having an art project for them to do would not go amiss by far.”

"They'd love the chance to be creative, especially at this age." Tenne agrees.

Toki chuckles, and shifts, before carefully checking the jars of honey. “Anyways- I thought I’d make some honey for everyone. Y’know… now that I’m feeling a little better, a sort of a welcome to the surface sort of thing. I’ve got a couple more jars to fill before I need to make more of them.”

"Well as long as it doesn't send them into an uncontrollable heat like what I encountered, it should be quite alright."
Toki snorts. "Can you imagine slipping a little bit of the honey into the community supply of drinks, and just watching the mayhem happen?" Mischief made her mane fluff. "Best prank. Who's going to complain about getting laid? Well..." She eyes him. "You might, at this point. So... You gonna be ready for my heat next month now that I'm back on my cycles?"

He shot her a look before he choked up. "NEXT MONTH!?" He managed.

She managed a straight face for all of three seconds, before busting up into hearty guffaws. "Oh god no, I’d die if it happened every month. It’s every three or four months ish, so it’s not so bad.” She laughed heartily.

His shoulders dropped as he sighed in relief. "Hhh... Thank goodness..."

Toki swiped her eyes free of her laughter-induced tears. “Oh god. Heh. So I’m guessing you weren’t expecting a marathon to break your dry spell, huh? Hopefully I didn’t make you dislike it from that, ah, rough round. Heat makes me mouthy.” She glances at where she’d bitten him on his bicep.

He wheezed quietly before he leaned his head back. "Ah, no problem.” He waved it off gently with a nonchalant smile.

“Uuhh. Matches the one you gave me.” She quirked a grin to him. “Anyways... What’s on the agenda for today, Tenne? Aside from breakfast.”

"Probably more business with the humans, I think..." He chuffed as he leaned his head back.

“Oh don’t sound so excited.” She rolls her eyes. “If not for the fact that I don’t have much standing in the community,” She wasn’t a scientist or an authority figure, and other than being the ‘barrier breaker’, she wasn’t really all that important, “I’d help you with the humans. But, as it is the government officials won’t respect what I have to say.”

He bristled in the slightest at that. "You're more important than that, Toki."

“Not to the humans.” She says softly, and lightly plucks the grass. “Other than being an oddity and something to… photograph… They don’t necessarily take me seriously.”

That made him grumble. "I'll see about taking care of that too then." He growled quietly.

“Tenne,” She looked up at him with an exasperated sigh. “You can’t just get me a reputation. I’m not a scientist, or anyone important by the government officials standards- I’m a civilian. A barmaid- I’m pretty much low-class working class by their standards. You can’t just fix that. It’s okay. Someone has to be here to be a parent to the boys.” She tickles Quinn’s chin.

He chuffed stubbornly. "I'm not going to let them talk down to you.” He grumbled irritably.

“They’re human and they’re politicians- they’re not going to be nice to me.” She tells him gently. “And getting in a snit over it isn’t going to change it. What I’m going to do is ignore them, and prove that they’re not worth my attention. I have more important things to handle. While you, Asgore, Toriel, and the guards are off doing... Well, your things, I manage the children.” Sickly she might be, as her body was still healing, she had nominated herself as basically the babysitter for the children. So she would get a mob of them, and they would go play for hours on end- it was essentially what she did when the compound was first being put up in her world.

It was something familiar to her- something that reminded her of home.

He sighed and slowly rose, coming over and wrapping his arms around her. "You do more than that, Toki, never think yourself of any less.” He tutted.

“Where I came from, I did more.” She admits quietly, wings locking up as he looped his arms around her. She didn’t want to smack him, or pinch something with her wings. Toki hesitantly leaned into him. “Here… Here I just babysit. And for the most part, I’m okay with that. Where I came from, I had standing with the humans. These are not my humans- I have no standing or sway with them. So I do what I can- and if watching the kids is what I do best, then I don’t mind doing it.”

He nuzzled her with a quiet murmur and a purr before he sighed and let her go. "That is not all you are to us, we who know the truth, Tokiko..." He told her, before kissing her head. "You could be the greatest thing that happened to all of monsterkind... and honestly... you are."

“I know you think so.” She leaned up and slowly smooched his cheek. “Most folks know I broke it- but not everyone needs to know that I broke the barrier, Tenne. And it’s… It’s okay that I’m not renown for it.”

"Fine.” He chuffed, giving her a few tender kisses before letting her go.

“Just… consider it this way. If you keep pushing that I broke the barrier- something that humans erected on their own- and the government starts to take you seriously… they might try to take me away. To… figure out how I got such power and try to replicate it.” Toki nods hesitantly.

He hesitated, and then he growled quietly. "You're right... Of course... I will... keep that less mentioned then..." He murmured.

She nodded quietly, and sighed, before relaxing in the dirt. “Anyways… I made breakfast. You and the boys eat. I’m not really all that hungry.”

"Have you eaten already?" The doctor asked.

"... Nooo?" She gave a guilty shift of her wings and glanced up at Tenne.

His eyes narrowed slightly and his tail twitched behind him, "Tookiiii.... I'm not letting you go without eating." Tenne snorted, folding his arms as he peered at her. “I'll give you my own meal if that will ensure you've eaten.” He arched a brow.

"Tennnee," She huffed at him. Toki sighed before getting up. She crawled over to the pan of breakfast, and simply served up the plates. She gave Quinn his, and handed Tenne his, before carefully prying Kai off his dad's back so he could eat too.

The boy roused with a yawn, and took his food to eat it eagerly.

Toki pouted up at Tenne. "Fine, fine. I'll eat. Then I'm gonna take some honey to the center of the commune, and see if anyone wants some."

"You can come with me then. I will help you carry some jars.”

"That would be helpful." She nods. "I have a limited number of arms." She hums.

He nodded and smiled, "I can make us something to better carry a larger quantity.” he then offered, looking around, "Perhaps a bag out of spare fabric and string... perhaps i have some in my pack" he then got up and headed for the tent to rummage for what he spoke of.

"And my backpack is back in your house underground." And none of them were eager to go back underground. Though, Toki did miss her washes in the glowing Rivers of Waterfall. She watches him go, and huffs. "Don't forget to eat your breakfast!" She calls after him, and then sets into her own before he grumped at her again. She wasn't really hungry, but she devoured it all the same, and then set the plate aside and worked on cleaning her teeth.

He was in the tent for a few minutes before coming out again with a small armful of things, and he set them down before he plopped down to eat some of Toki's wonderful breakfast, purring happily in thanks as he ate.

Toki was already quite done by the time he returned, and had sprawled out to continue cooling the jars of honey once more. Her wings created a fan that made sure everything would be cold, and non-lethal for anyone who would consume it. "So you're going to try and make a pack out of all of that...?"

"Not just that, I know I will." He answered with a smile. He cleared things out, then set down and opened up what appeared to be an old shirt. He then looked at Toki, glancing over to her and then the jars that she was cooling. "You have some jars already cooled down, yes?"

"I do." She nods. She turned around and separated the cooled ones from the one's that still needed to cool off, and then carefully set them near him so he could see them or pack them up if he needed to.

He took them and set them all on the shirt. He carefully folded the shirt up around the jars and used thick looking thread to tie it into a supportive bundle that could be carried by one hand alone, "Tada!" He announced proudly.

Toki snorts lightly. "If the shirt slips out and the jars break, you're going to have a heck of a time getting the honey out of your shirt." She informs him lightly. "But good job. That will make carrying them a lot easier. It will hold, right?"

He gave a confident nod, "That's right, it's a good shirt so the threads are secure, and I know that the string will not give, it's secure."

"What about if the shirt slips out of the string?" She hums, tapping her claws lightly on her leg. She pauses and lifts them up, before chewing idly on them to shorten them to a more manageable length.

"Nope, the remaining fabric is tied in with the handle of the carry, you need to hold the shirt where the string ties it up here." he told her

"Alright then." She nods. "That will do perfectly then." She would still probably need to just make the trip back down to Snowdin and suck it up. There were things she need from down there. Well...
They needed. Her bag was down there. The one that Hitsu had made her, that was.

Tenne gave her a sweet smile and chirped softly as he came over, holding the makeshift pack out to her, "Here you are." He chirped gently. "I can carry the rest, and perhaps the pups can carry one each in their satchel pack."

Toki stood to collect it, and held it easily with her primary set of arms. The secondary set were just as strong, but not designed for long distance. "Thank you, Tenne." She smiled to him, giving him a grateful look. "And they probably can. Kai and Quinn were going to go play with Undyne today."

"Undyne!" Kai piped up happily.

"That's right." Toki smiles. "And you better not let her bully you into mischief this time, Kai. I had to get you both out of a tree last time."

"That wasn't my fault." He puffed as he pouted at her. "I had to protect my baby brother!" Great “Uhuh.” Toki rolls her eyes. “That makes no sense, Kai, and you know it. Undyne doesn’t pick on Quinn.” Quinn mostly liked to play with her hair when he had the chance. He seemed to have a thing for fur of any kind. The rowdy fish seemed to only settle when her hair was being played with, so it was amusing to watch her go from dialed up to one hundred, down to a mellow twenty or close to it as soon as Quinn’s little fingers sank into her hair. It was adorable as far as Toki was concerned.

He pouted, "Mama... Come on, I’m supposed to be the brave one...” He huffed.

Toki reached out and ruffled his little mane. “You are brave. But, there is a fine line between bravery and stupidity- and climbing one of these trees when you can’t fly crosses that line quite clearly. Just be careful, okay? I can’t heal you if you get hurt.”

He sighed and nuzzled her hand with a small nod. "Okay Mama.”

Kai smiled up at her happily while Quinn trilled happily wagged his tail.

Toki smiled, and then glanced to Tenne. “Alright, big daddy.” She quirks a grin to him, and wiggles a brow. “You good to go?”

Tenne sputtered at that, before he cleared his throat, "Yes I am. Come on, Pups!” he then called.

Both boys trilled and went over to their father, Kai climbed up to wiggle into his satchel to hang onto his Father's back, while Quinn was lifted and put into the satchel against Tenne's left shoulder.

"We can take a few jars now, Toki”. Tenne rumbled.

Toki nodded, and collected a few more. She carefully passed them up, and packed them in around Kai and Quinn. It still left quite a few jars left down below, and she paused and pursed her teeth. “I didn’t realize I had made so many… Hrm. Alright.” She stooped to load up her arms with jars of honey- which were slightly larger than the standard jar of honey.

Quinn gave two of the honey jars a bear hug, while Kai held a big one between him and his father's back. Tenne came over and took a few jars in his free arm. "Shall we?” He asked with a light grin.

“Of course.” She quirked a slow grin, tempted to tease him again. Ultimately, she resisted and then simply headed off and left him to follow. She used her wings to clear a path through the brush for him to follow, so he didn’t jostle the children while trying to work his way through brambles and thickets.

Tenn rumble with a smile as he walked behind her, humming a tune to his boys that had Quinn chirping along happily, holding the jar of honey in his charge protectively. They were all such reliable young men for the job.

Toki listened to their humming, and smiled slightly. She joined in after a moment, her voice not so much designed for musical harmonics as it was for singing. All the same, she did sound pretty decent, and it made the trip through the forest that much more tolerable.

The collection of tents was abuzz with life when they got there. Monsters were out and about, trading goods and supplies as they came and went from in the forest. There were a few humans there too, dressed in suits and ties as they talked with a few monsters here and there, stopping them occasionally in their tracks to have words with them.
Toki mostly ignored the humans, and headed for the ‘town center’, which was a big open space near the open area in front of the barrier. It was set up as sort of a meeting place and trading center for goods and supplies. “Well, everyone’s busy today.”

"Oh indeed so." Tenne agreed with a soft laugh. "It's so good to see everyone developing into their newfound freedom. Isn't it?" He chirped happily as he gave a wave to some folks who waved at them.

Toki waved as well. As best she could, anyway. “It is nice. Though… True freedom would be a little better.” She mused. She didn’t quite like being ‘caged’ up on the mountain. They weren’t being technically kept up there- but if they left the mountain and the preserve and went past the base, there was no guarantee of their safety. Not yet- not until there was a place for them to call home.

"Well we're almost there aren't we? We're making the best of what we have." He rumbled gently. "Do you have a place in mind to sell your honey?" He asked.

“I suppose so.” She sighs. “So long as no delays happen to keep stuff from moving on.” Toki glances back at him. “As for places… Not really. Anywhere will do. Monsters find me either way- I’m big and fluffy and mostly white. Very easy to spot.”

"And what's not fluffy and white is green and stands taller than his majesty." He chuckled, gently gesturing to her wings.

That made Toki laugh. She flexed her shoulders, wings briefly lifting sky high like large beacons. They towered over the King’s height by far. “So they do.” She laughs.

Her motion draws the attention of everyone in center ‘plaza’ area. Toki comes to a stop as she and Tenne are crowded around, and she glances to him again with a wry smile. “I suppose here works as well as any for selling my goods.” She hums. She shifts her hips tenderly, and gave a soft, slightly painful twitch as she stoops down to set down the pack. Her backside still hurt from the number of times they’d gone at it- and from the size of the shaft that had split her wide. Tenne was not a small monster- and he was a far cry larger than Papyrus. Plus the knot… That was something different entirely.

She still couldn’t believe she was… well, ‘mated’ now, apparently. But she was- and she would own up to it. This wasn’t her world, after all. It was theirs, and she had to adapt to it.

Toki gave a faint hum, and greeted her usual patrons with a smile.

Tenne smiled warmly to the crowd that began to gather, but a noise caught his attention, and after glancing down, he chuckled and reached down, touching Toki’s shoulder to get her attention. "If I may, my love. Allow me to be your first purchase of the day.” He announced, before he pulled out his coin bag and handed her a handful of coins. It totaled twenty gold.

Toki blinked down at the small handful of gold in her grasps. Really? He didn’t need to buy it from her- it wasn’t like her money didn’t end up tending to the children anyway, so there wasn’t much point in him paying for honey. He was welcome to it any time, really. Same with the boys- however… “Ah- Tenne, this is far more than my usual prices.” She plucks several coins from the pile, and makes an attempt to slip them into Quinn’s satchel and return the non-necessary gold that he hadn’t needed to spend- only to be distracted by Quinn himself inside.

Tenne had slightly flinched backwards to prevent her from tucking the coins into the satchel, but it failed to bother Quinn, who had a green-soaked fist in his mouth. The ring of his mouth was covered in the green honey that was Toki's recipe as he sucked his hand clean. The source of the honey was the jar that he had held in his other hand, clever pup that he was, he had used his claws to break the rim of the cap to get it out of the way from his feast.

Toki blinked at the adorable sight of Quinn essentially going to town on the pot of honey. She snorted gently, and then quirked a grin up at Tenne. She held the gold out stubbornly. “The boys don’t have to pay for their honey when it comes from me, Tenne. That’s now how being a Mom works.” She chuckles. “He’s adorable. I do so wonder just where he gets it from though.”

"I do not feign my innocence, my dear, but I will not pay so little for something that could be considered a fine delicacy. It’s worth this much to me." He told her gently, cupping her chin with a tender smile. "Please, Toki, will you accept this as a woman of business?"

“As a woman of business, I could.” She’d accepted more than this for honey in her world. She’d been a very lucrative business woman- hence being able to help the monsters like she had. Toki still puffs her cheeks and pouts at him. “You realize if you pay this much, then everyone else is going to want to do the same?” She was the one who tried to enforce lower prices- people had a tendency to pay up. It was a little more tiring to make the honey now- she did feel some tiredness from making these jars, but not as much. So… she supposed it might be a bit more fair- she was mostly up in arms last time because she had stamina for days and could probably have kept up an unlimited supply of venom. Not so much now though.

"You deserve it, Toki." Tenne's hand lifted to rest on her cheek as he spoke once more. "You go through so much effort, even to make a single jar. These people are not made of greed. They cherish your effort, and a small raise to the price no doubt means little to them." He then chuckled. "I just hope Kai had a little more restraint."

"Don’t let Quinn eat it all.” Was a whine from his back as the jars Kai carried were offered to his father.

Toki took the jars and settled them next to the rest of her wares. She gave him a faint smile. “I know none of these people are. But I’m not either- and I was perfectly okay undercharging for something back when I could produce it almost unlimitedly.” She was referring to before the barrier broke. Now she had an inkling that, while her pool was still deeper and more vast than most, it too had a limit. “Don’t worry, Kai. If Quinn eats it all, you can have a jar to yourself later.”

Kai gave a happy chirp at that.

Tenne rumbled at her words. "Indeed, but now that you've only so much to offer at one time, you do see the wisdom of my words, yes?"

“I do see them, yes.” Toki nods. Someone presses more gold into her hands, and she doesn’t really bother to stop and count the amount as she passes over the jar. A quick glance down shows twenty gold, and she heaves a sigh, before pocketing it into her gold pouch. Twenty gold was mostly pocket money for a lot of folks- but it added up over time. “Well… I suppose a more steady income wouldn’t be bad.” She rubs a hand over her mane, and hums as another monster waves a small pouch of gold at her to make a transaction.

“And what all is going on here?” It was one of the sharply dressed humans who had been heckling the monsters passing through the market place. She had finally made her way over to Toki’s side of the market, and was now giving the taller bee woman a shrewd look. Her gaze slid to Tenebris, and she seemed to recognize him more than she did Toki. She completely disregarded Toki once she spotted the doctor. “Ah, Doctor Gaster. I’m Dolores Doto. I’ve been meaning to speak with you or with King Asgore. Do your people not require a permit to sell their goods? Or can any common Joe come to hawk their goods on the ‘market’, such as this place is?”
Tenne didn't seem to like her tone and it was clear the way he lifted his head and squared his shoulders. "Miss Doto. We monsterkind are a secure community, and the trust of our kind is a natural strength that made us strong as a whole." He lifted up one of the jars of vibrant green honey.

"There is no such thing as a 'Common Joe' among our kind. Every face has a name, and every cart of offered goods holds a promise to those who are interested. It is worth its price, and it is worth the trust that is put on the line between seller and customer. Something that humans have not recognized as strongly as we." The jar is held out to a monster that requested it. The monster accepted it and traded it for the coins owed.

"And as you can see," He then stood straight and gestured to Quinn, who had already managed down almost half of the jar in his arms, "It is safe enough for me to trust to let my infant son consume. It's reassurance upon an already assured promise."

He then chuckled and gently coaxed his son to release it. "Though someone's going to get a stomach ache if he keeps eating it. It's his brother's turn." He purred to Quinn. "Catch, Kai." He then spoke, looking over his shoulder as two eager paws grabbed hold of the jar, which disappeared behind his back as Kai dug in.

"I see." The woman nods, satisfied with his answer. "All of you monsters are unique. No two of you look alike, save the less sentient ones. It makes it easier to identify you individually. Now, however… I do have one question for the little merchant here."

Toki lifts a brow as she makes another sale. “I’ll answer any question you have about me and my honey, Miss Doto.”

“Good answer.” Dolores hums. “How did you come across this… unusual colored honey? How do you know it is safe to consume?”

“Simple answers, actually. I produce it.” Toki displays her wrist, and flashes the stinger hidden along the bottom. “It starts out as a highly toxic, highly caustic venom that melts and burns the things it touches, and is generally something you really don’t want to touch. It comes out of my body at a temperature that is hot enough to burn most people, except for fire elementals, which it’s actually good for them. I can put my venom in a jar, and I can cool it, and it turns into honey. As for safe, yes. Our royal scientist,” she bumps her hip to Tenne’s, “ran extensive tests on it to make sure it was safe for consumption. It's perfectly safe- it’s actually very, very good for monsters.”

“I don’t know for either.” Toki replied lightly, “And I’m not eager to find out for the last one. I haven’t sold any to any humans, because there isn’t a conversion for gold to human currency in place yet. I’m sure it’s fine for human consumption. It’s just green magic honey.”

"Ah." Tenne then spoke up, "I actually just did that test just a little bit before we left the Underground." He told her. "I forgot to mention it sooner due to the most... recent events." The doctor cleared his throat. "I indeed reheated the honey and tested it for the enzymes and proteins found present in the venom that is fresh from your stingers." He started. "The moment the venom has cooled enough, everything deadly will break down and disappear into the sugars of the honey. It's completely harmless. Though now I could imagine a lukewarm half-honey we could offer to Grillby and his kin." He rumbled in thought. "It'd be sweet, but still retain the proteins that seem to give them good health." He suggested.

“It wouldn’t be a bad idea.” She agrees. “We’d need to be careful though, about letting it get on anything out here, or we’ll have a mess to clean up.” She didn’t want to know what her venom, even ‘diluted’ by being half cooled, would do to the environment.

That just spelled disaster.

Apparently to the human too. “I wouldn’t try that until you have access to a proper facility to be handling what could be considered toxic and poisonous material.” Dolores replied lightly.

Tenne’s colder demeanor returned and he growled lowly in his throat. "Contrary to what you think, I do have access to the proper facilities. I am the head scientist of the underground Laboratory. Once again, you show to underestimate our kind. And on this instant... You undermine my ability as the Royal Scientist. I don’t take kindly to that." He rumbled irritably. "I'm afraid with that, our conversation is over. Please be on your way, Miss Doto. We have business to attend to."

Quinn turned his head from where he was sucking on his fist, and he pulled it out of his mouth to hiss at the human, having sensed his father's distain through the close contact to his soul.

Dolores gave Quinn a disdainful look. "If that wasn't a child, I would say to muzzle it. As it is, teach your boy some manners. It's hard to underestimate things that act like savage animals." She huffs, and turns to walk away.

Toki hands Tenne the jars of honey. "Watch the shop please. Miss Doto." She caught the woman's attention. "That was very, very rude- and not acceptable within our community. Screw the repercussions, but I'm going to have to ask you to leave, before I escort you out."

"Excuse me?"

"You heard me. What you said was not acceptable within our society. We would be punished if we essentially told a human that muzzling their child might have been an option. So, leave. Go back down the mountain, and back to your city."

"I still have business to conduct here." She sniffs haughtily.

"I don't even know what your business is besides harassing us. So..." Toki flexes her fingers. "We're going to take a little flight it seems."

Tenne's eyes had glowed at the words she spoke, but the pushing of the jars of honey in his arms held him back as his mate took over the situation. In the same moment, as his arms tightened around the jars he had been asked to hold, he rumbled, assured that indeed his mate had this handled.

““I do.” Toki’s wings buzzed, and she lifted off swiftly. The woman tried to take off, but Toki was swift in snatching her by the arms. She was sick and tired of these people doing whatever they thought they just could, and irritably took off with the shrieking woman through the skies. She took her down the mountain, not to the base, but to the military waypoint that the government people used to mark the halfway point up and down the mountain. Dolores beat at Toki’s arms the whole way, even going so far as to sink her teeth into Toki’s forearm and bite down to make her let go.

She stopped just outside of it, and dropped her lightly on her feet. She looked at one of the bewildered guards. “Escort her off the mountain, and don’t allow her back up please. She was inappropriate towards one of our children.” The use of the word ‘inappropriate’ was very vague- and it was intentionally so. Toki didn’t elaborate as the bewildered guard’s eyes widened and then hardened.
Inappropriate could mean a whole world of things, even in this world.

“Yes Ma’am.” He nods. “We’ll make sure she doesn’t bother anyone up the mountain again.”

Toki gives him a grateful nod, and then returned up the mountain. It took maybe twenty minutes round trip, and she buzzed back in swiftly, drawing the attention of the non-flight oriented monsters as she circled the ‘market’ to relocate Tenne. When she did, she made a beeline for him.

It seemed that he had done well enough without her, and there were a large portion of the jars missing, as well as a large bag of coins that were their earnings from her effort.

Upon seeing her return, he smiled in greeting, and gave a wave. "Welcome back, Toki!" He greeted warmly.

"Mama!" Quinn squealed.

"Hey, sweetie." Toki greeted Quinn with a warm smile as she landed. She stretched her wings, and gave Tenne a soft smile as she rubbed her arm where the Dolores had bitten her angrily. “Looks like you were busy while I was gone.”

"These people weren't here for sightseeing my dear." He joked lightly, "But yes indeed, we've made a good portion of sales already, and we're just getting started." He then piped up happily.

Toki chuckled softly. “I’m wondering if I should work on making some more jars of honey and cooling them while you do sales. I still have a fair amount of magic that I could use for making honey.”

"The cooling process doesn't take too long, does it?"

"Roughly twenty minutes.” Toki shakes her head. “Not long at all. It'll take even less time since the air here is cooler than in our glade. I just need space to be able to fan my wings and cool it.”

"If you're sure, alright. But did we bring any spare jars?"

“Nope.” She hums. “But I got pretty good at making them earlier.” She grins. She lifts her hands, and activates her wax glands, and carefully begins to work on crafting up more jars while Tenne handles sales. “Everything is all natural, made from magic. I’m just going to sleep really good tonight.”

That got a rumble of laughter from Tenne, though Quinn squealed as he realized she was going to be making more wax.

Toki chuckled, and used her smaller hands to form a blob of soft wax. She didn’t add the hardening agent, and blew on it to cool it, before offering it up to Quinn while her larger hands continued to shape and form jars. “Here, baby boy. Make sure to get your Daddy covered in wax for me, yeah?” She smiled. “And make something pretty for me~”

Quinn squealed again and took the wax happily, already starting to pat it down into something that had yet to be distinguishable.

Toki chuckled and left him to it. In the mean time, she worked on whipping out jars. She started to fill them as she finished and sealed them, and then sat down to cool them. The monsters gave her space to cool them off while she worked.

Soon there was a snaggle toothed redheaded child peering at her, and then bouncing over to Tenne.
“Hiya Mister Gaster. How are you doing?”

"Well hello Undyne." He greeted with a smile. "I'm quite alright, and yourself?" He asked, reaching to ruffle her hair.

“I’m okay!” She nipped at his fingers when he ruffled her hair. “Whatcha doin’? Why are you selling honey?”

"Well it's because we have too much for ourselves, and so we want to share it with everyone else while earning money from it."

“Ohhhh.” She nods. “That’s smart. But why are you doing the selling? Don’t you do sciency stuff instead of selling stuff?”

"Because I already did all of my sciency stuff so it's just perfect to sell.” He laughed.

She giggles. “I suppose so. It’s really yummy too. Mom bought one from the market back when we were all underground. How do ya keep from just eating it all up though? It’s super yummy on everything. I even put it on my noodles and it was nummy.”

"Really? That’s interesting, honey on noodles." He chuckled gently. "It's okay, we eat plenty.” He told her as he patted her head. "We just have enough to share."

“Ohhh.” She tilts her head and grins up at him. “If I could, I’d eat it all the time. It’s super yummy. But, Mom says I can’t because just honey isn’t good for you.”

"Indeed, I just told Quinn the same thing, he'd get a stomachache." He laughed gently. "Oh but don’t worry, once in a while batches of honey is okay."

“I know that.” Undyne grins at him with her sharp little teeth. “I think that Mama just doesn’t like me eating all of that sugar. She says it makes me un-roooool-eee. Whatever that’s supposed to mean.” She guffaws.

"Hyper is another name for it.” He told her with a light chuckle, "And your Momma is too gentle. You know you must be good to her and take her lessons well."

“Ughhhh yeah I knowwww.” She groaned. “Mom’s really gentle and squishy and so soft, and I have to listen and be nice and just... Blegh. I wanna crush things and fight and do all the things!” She cackled.

“But she is also very wise, and only wants the best for her little girl.” He hummed.

"But it's always for their good, because to a mother, their child is their world."

“That’s very true.” Toki nods solemnly. “I know that very well.” She caps more jars, and sets them to cool, while also rotating a few around so they would cool faster.

He chuckled quietly and smiled to Undyne. "Where is Ariel by the way?" He asked her.

“Not far.” Another voice interrupts. Steps from the crowd, bedecked in full armor, and ruffles her daughter’s hair. “I caught wind of a disturbance in the market, and Asgore sent me over to patrol the area and make sure no more problems crop up. My guppy here followed me.”
Toki hummed. "Mhm. I handled the disturbance this time- but you might want to be wary of some of the humans heckling the monsters. The woman came to heckle me, and I don’t take kindly to being told a muzzle is an option for my boy."

"She was very professional in seeing to the woman's exit." Tenne agreed, stroking Quinn's head, before he smiled and held a hand out to Ariel. "You look good in your armor, Ariel..." He purred to her, "It's good to see you're doing well."

Sequoia’s attention sharpened, along with Toki’s beast, at the purr that Tenne gave to Ariel. Toki corralled them with a swift mental kick. Jealousy was not her thing- and they had better not force it onto her.

Ariel shook his hand and gave him a crooked grin, not unlike her daughter’s. “I’m sure she gave her the what for. Toki’s a bit of a force of nature, no?” She side-eyed the barrier-breaker, and then nodded to Tenne. “Thanks, Tenne. I’m doing better up top. The fresh air is amazing out here, and it feels so... awesome.” She sighs pleasantly.

"Oh indeed." He nodded proudly, giving her hand a firm hand shake before it was released. "Awesome, you say?" He laughed, "You're learning words from your daughter now, but you are right. This fresh air is doing good to us all, Ariel, and everyone definitely seems more full of life now that we've the sunlight above us."

“Sunlight does a lot of healthy things for people that get it. Monsters too.” Toki comments lightly.

Ariel gave him a smile and ruffled Undyne’s hair. She got a growl and her leg ‘attacked’ for her transgression. “Of course,” She chuckles. “Daughters rub off on their mothers just as much as mothers rub off on their daughters.”

"Does the same work with sons, I wonder?" Tenne joked as he knelt down to let Kai and Quinn loose.

“I don’t know.” Toki grunts, and lifts her arms as Quinn comes to settle in her lap with his ball of wax. “Might be more effective if the son in question isn’t a Mama’s boy.” She chuckles lightly.

Ariel snorts, and glances down at Toki. “So, you adopted the boys then?”

“I did.” Toki nods, and flashes a faint smile up at her. “Quinn called me Mama, and I’m not going to tell him no. It kind of stuck.”

"My boys are so very happy with their mother, and I’m just as happy with my beautiful, wonderful mate” The blaster beast was glowing as he praised his new mate.

Ariel blinked, startled. "Mate, huh? When did that happen? Did you have a ceremony?"

"Awww! Why wasn't I invited?" Undyne demanded, turning a snaggle toothed pout to Tenne.

Toki snickered, and said nothing, leaving that up to Tenne to answer. She instead focused on her Honey making.

"No, no. No ceremony... closest thing was a process of courtship that was known within the tradition of my pack, but it's not as extravagant as you might think." He explained.

"Oh..." Ariel blinked. "You might want to talk with Asgore and get it legally sanctioned and recognized then. He's working on getting our current marriages recognized by human laws- anything after he gets it passed will have to be cleared with a literal mountain of paperwork." Ariel groans.
"Makes me wish I found someone soon."

"You're very right, oh yes." He rumbled as he nodded in agreement, "The sooner the better I'd bet."

At the mention of her own search, he smiled and came over to give her a gentle pat on the shoulder, "You'll find someone, Ariel" he purred happily, "You're a beautiful woman, and very kind. You won't struggle at all to find someone I'd wager."

"It's finding someone that the guppy approves of." Ariel smiles faintly. "Besides, you shouldn't marry for ease of doing so. You should do it because you love someone."

"And when they tolerate bites!" Undyne gnashed her teeth threateningly.

Toki snickers. It made her wonder how the boys would ever react if someone other than Tenne flirted with her.

Tenne laughed at that, "Don't stick your toes where the piranhas swim."

Toki laughed. "That's a true sentence. You've never gone swimming with her. She bites toes."

Undyne grins at Toki. "Yeah, but you ruffle me when I bite you too hard."

"For a good reason." Toki snorts.

"I don't plan to go swimming with Undyne. I kick rather hard when I get spooked." He admitted.

"Or fall on your fanny in the snow when spooked, twinkle toes." Toki hums cheekily.

He pouted at her. "I really hoped you would have dropped that by now."

"I never forget." She quirks a soft smile, glancing down at the honey with a dark look. "Never, ever."

Only thousands and thousands of lifetimes. She forgot those. All of those. But this... She would remember everything from this one.

"Toki, I will have my revenge." He bristled a little.

She glanced up at him and wiggled her brows. She knew exactly what to say to throw him off track. "Could take it tonight after the pups are asleep." She purrs. "Oh wait... You're still walking funny after my heat." She teases.

Ariel grins slowly. "Oh? Is that why the doctor was so snappy with everyone for the last five days or so?"

"Not at all!" He replied a little too quickly to save himself. "And I am NOT walking funny!" It worked to distract him though.

"Ooooh." Ariel's grin grew reminiscent of Undyne's. That would be where the daughter got it from, it seemed. "Me thinks you're lying. I think I saw a little hitch in your gait a couple days back, Tenne. It went a little something like this." And Ariel proceeded to mimic it, flashing a grin back to her bathing buddy.

Toki broke out into guffaws, making everyone pause and look at her. "She's got you pegged, Tenne, oh my god. Not that I'm walking any better than that, but you walked just like that after the second day." She giggled, dark mood dissipating with the distraction.
Tenne opened his mouth, and then closed it. He bristled sharply before he folded his arms at the both of them. "Ariel you might be a gentle soul but you are a nightmare once you've gotten hold of blackmail. And Tokiko, you are no better!" He hissed.

Toki snickered as she sealed the last of her jars. "I tease everyone. Getting your feathers ruffled is good for you. It keeps you humble." She grins. "And reminds you to keep a sense of humor."

Ariel laughed. "Apologies, Doctor Tenne. I couldn't help but join in the fun. You are just too easy to tease. So... How was she?" She glances down at Toki. "I've heard that fire magic users are firecrackers in bed."

Toki fluffs and sputtered, flushing brightly. "Ariel!"

Sweet revenge. He leaned over to Ariel and began to murmur his answer to her, telling to her just a scant few absolutely filthy things he had to say about how Toki treated him those nights of love and lust while protecting the ears of the children.

Ariel nodded and grinned as she listened, winking at Toki.

Toki flushed a bright green and her mane ruffled. She really, really didn't want the world to know her sexual exploits. She gave a tiny grumble and turtled inside of her fluffy mane, focusing on cooling the jars of honey to sell. It would seem she got a taste of her own medicine finally.

He chuckled lowly, and scooted over to his mate with a casual smile, before he leaned down and pecked her head gently.

She huffed at him and spread her teeth at him. "Nope. You don’t get to be cute when you were just telling Ariel all the nasty things we did." She pouts at him.

"Not all of them, just a few~" he purred, leaning in and running his tongue over her teeth gently

Her teeth snare his tongue, sharp edges snapping shut like a bear trap around his tongue. There was a barrier of her magic covering her teeth though, not unlike the time she'd taken him into her mouth during their... Well, sexual excursions during heat. It kept her from hurting him, but was no less startling to see. "Still, I only told her I made you walk funny. It's not my fault you're not used to the heat of a woman like me." She pouts at him again, and then lets his tongue go after she discretely licks it with hers.

He purred loudly and after retracting his tongue, gave her a soft kiss. "Heh heh heh. I love you~" He purred. "And don't worry, I didn't tell her too much~"

"That’s good. Wouldn't want my secret techniques to get out." Toki chuckles.

"Oh ew, get a room you two." Ariel rolls her eyes and nudges Undyne.

The girl grins in a challenging manner, arching her brow mockingly, and then tags Kai before taking off with the boy hot in pursuit.

Quinn patted his ball of wax and giggled quietly, before holding it up. It kind of looked like a bowl... Perhaps he was trying to copy his mother's work

With the two children off and running, Toki could focus on Quinn while Ariel talked with Tenne. She lowers her gaze down to the boy in her lap, and hums gently. "Looks like you're working on a bowl." She crooned softly. "Good work, little one."
He lowered it into his lap, tilted his head, then whined quietly and held it up again, as if with more emphasis.

"I don’t think that's what he was aiming for." Tenne commented with a quiet laugh.

"Ohhh. A jar then?" She smiled faintly. Her smaller arms slid behind her back, and she began to craft a small jar just for him. "Its a lovely jar, Quinn. Unfortunately, it wont be able to hold anything though. In order to keep the wax soft, I have to keep a certain property from mixing with it, or you wouldn't be able to play with it and mould it like you do." She explains gently. "However... This one should hold anything you like." She presents the small jar to him with a soft smile. "Its not as nice as yours, I know, but hopefully it's a decent replacement?"

He took it and looked it over, before he chirped appreciatively and hugged the jar with a happy coo.

Nothing could stop the 'awww~' sound that slipped from Tenne at the sight of his son admiring his newest treasure.

Toki glanced up at Tenne at the sound while cuddling Quinn closer to her chest. Well then. That wasn’t a noise she expected to hear from him. She lifted a brow at him questioningly.

He was smiling at the sight, though he gave her a look. "He's my son. I should be allowed to react like that." He huffed.

"Says the one getting all huffy." She teases lightly. "You're adorable."

"And as are you," He cooed as he winked at her.

Toki flushed brightly and stuck her tongue out at him. "Mlehhh."
'So... Toki...' Sequoia spoke up from within the hornet's mind, which was a rare occasion nowadays. She'd been progressively quieter and quieter since Toki’s heat, more and more brooding within Toki’s mind, only commenting when she really felt the need.

'Hm?'

'So... I've been thinking... We're healthy again right?'

'Well... yes, healthy enough. Why do you ask?'

'... I want to think about the potential of... well... What's the possibility of me getting a body soon?' Sequoia asked quietly.

Toki paused a bit from where she was cuddled up in the tent. It was late at night- and it had been nearly a month since she'd had her heat. Nearly a month since she'd been 'mated' to Tenne- with no such progress from the human government on them getting a home, even as the seasons began to change and the weather began to warm up and cool back down towards the end of summer. Or possible end of summer. She had filled out considerably, and was very nearly back to the weight she had been before she'd decided to tangle with the barrier to unexpected results.

Physically, she was probably good enough to go. Magically, she was at the peak of her magical prowess, and still felt overfull like normal. Emotionally, she was still a mess. Toki was pretty sure she was forever ruined by everything that had happened. But... Tenne was sweet, and he did help as best he could. He wasn’t Papyrus- or even a replacement for him. But he was a balm for her soul. Her... New mate was dutiful and loving to her. She just wished she could be just as loving back.

She was getting there. Slowly. But secrets... Secrets like hers... They limited that. A lot.

Toki heaved a soft mental sigh, and then glanced around at her companions. The boys had settled in a sleepy pile for the night, and were between her and Tenne in the tent. They served their purpose in their location though.

'Very good.' She said. 'I can't sleep anyways.' She'd been having dreams of Sequoia's memories as Cruelty. Toki, by now, had seen everything. She knew everything. It didn’t make it any more pleasant to see it again for the second or third time. Toki hefted herself up quietly, and worked to extract herself from the tent, trying not to make too much noise and rouse Tenne. The children were dead to the world. There was no waking them.

Thankfully, she seemed to get away without waking the beast, who rumbled, as he lay curled up around his sons.

'I... I don’t really know what I can suggest for this... In all the time I lived, I never once thought about how a soul could separate...' Sequoia admitted. Though after all the dreams that Toki had endured, it was easy to understand the anti-heart had only sought the fusion to reunite with what had been lost.

'It would be helpful if we knew how Magic did it. But I suppose we'll try different methods of our own.' She murmured to her. That was one of the memories that wasn’t quite clear. Some stuff had degraded over time, or were corrupted by the ‘shade of Cruelty’ as Toki liked to call it. It felt like there was a film grain over some of the memories, like Cruelty only saw things a certain way, an angry and hurt way, and it skewed how the memories could be viewed.

The only thing that she could understand from the memory of the separation was confusion and fear. Balance had been afraid and confused- they hadn’t known what they had done was wrong, what they had done to deserve such a great bisecting of their power.

Toki knew, though, that it was for the best. Beings of her sort of power… They were not meant for worlds like this one.

Once out of the tent, Toki set off at a slow lope, going down the mountain a fair ways. She didn’t fly- her wings made too much noise. She didn’t have to go that far anyways. She only needed to go far enough that Tenne wouldn’t immediately hear anything from her.

She came to a stop just in a clearing, probably a minute or two's jog away from their campsite. Not far, but far enough to be out of immediate hearing range.

Toki stretched, and then pulled her soul out, letting it float between her hands. 'Maybe we can use our magic to separate it?'

'Do you think it'll work?' It almost seemed like her soul flickered when the other half of the heart spoke to her.

Toki cupped the soul gently. 'Maybe... Let me try.'

She closed her eyes and gathered her magic in her hands, letting the feel of it wrap around her soul. She visualized it pulling and tearing and sliding into two separate beings, with Sequoia forming once more into a body that was not completely different from her own body.

When she opened her eyes again... The soul was still there, untouched and floating harmlessly like before. 'Maybe we need to do a partial possession? I operate one side, you operate the other, and we both try to use the magic on each other's souls?' Toki suggested after a moment's hesitation.

'I can try... all right...' A moment to focus, and the darker shaded part of her soul began to thrum with Sequoia's presence as Sequoia took hold of Toki’s half of the soul.

Having half of her body being taken over was weird indeed. Toki embraced it though.

Together the two of them tried again, magic pooling and building and grasping at each half of the soul and willing it to split above their hands and form a second body for Sequoia to possess.
No luck, however. None at all for getting Sequoia the body that she desired.

'Darn it.' Toki mutters. 'Hmm... Maybe physical? But boy, that’s going to hurt....'

'... Is it a good idea? Because I don’t think it is...'

'It might be the only idea we have. Magic isn’t working. Can you think of a better idea instead?'

'No... But for our sake... I hope Tenne wakes up before you try something that could end up fatal...'

'Okay, okay hold on.' Toki rolls her eyes. 'I'm not stupid.'

She reaches for her power, and pulls up the save, load, and reset buttons. Toki hits save, and saves them right in that instant. 'There. Now if something goes wrong and we die, we load back here and we don’t try it again.' She hums. 'Sound good?'

'...' No reply. At least, not at first. It took Sequoia several moments before she eventually sighed and relented. 'Alright.'

'Alright, alright. So... How do you think we go about doing this?' She asked curiously.

'I suppose we’d want to find where our souls connection is the weakest, see about severing it... so it'd come unraveled?'

'So maybe along the center?' Toki suggests. 'Where the souls mingle together.'

'Sounds about right... But I still advise against this method...'

'Hm... I know you do. I saved though. If it ends bad, we'll be okay.'

'You say that, but I know... Just... Just do it.'

Toki sighed at her mental companion, and took full control again. She lifted her hands and physically grasped her soul. She stroked her fingers over it gently, and hummed a contemplative tune, before grasping it at the curves of the upper parts of the heart. The massive size filled both of her palms almost, and made it easy to grasp it. She slid her claws over to the seam along the center and prodded it faintly, giving it a curious sound. The prod was uncomfortable as the seam in their soul throbbed. Toki took it for a good sign though. It meant they were on the right path to where they needed to be. Toki took a firm hold on the soul, and then worried her claw against it until it began to hurt a little. She kept a careful eye on it though- and it looked like it was starting to ‘unravel’.

Once it looked like it was ready, Toki held it firmly- and then she began to pull.

The pain hit her like a freight train. She remained standing as the agony washed over her, and continued to try and pull on it.

She was unaware of the distressed noise coming from her throat. It wasn’t loud, or heartbreaking, but it was a noise that let the world know she wasn’t having fun. Her legs shook, wings bi-colored and trembling as she panted and stubbornly tried to hang on.

She focused on the soul- she was so, so sure she could see it start to pull apart, and was starting to turn into two souls again. Ultimately it wasn’t- but she was determined. She had to try. Toki pulled harder, and the pain dropped her down onto one of her knees. She bows her head, arms trembling with pain as she tried to hang on.
The pain was unfortunately much worse for Sequoia, who began screeching in pain not long after it began. Thankfully for them both, rescue seemed to hit them.

And it did. Quite literally.

Toki was tackled, her soul snatched from her hands before a clawed hand slammed into the ground by her head as the impact sent her falling backwards. She landed hard on her back, thankfully not crushing her wings.

"TOKIKO!" It was Tenne, short on breath, and still only wearing that which he slept in.

She shook under him like an addict without their drug of choice. Her arms trembled, all four of them shakily trying to find purchase in the ground as her eyes closed and she breathed, trying to let the pain pass from her soul.

Shit- shit, shit, shit, that hadn’t worked. That had hurt- that had hurt so, so much, and it hadn’t even gotten them anywhere.

She initially lay unresponsive under him, her soul shivering in his hands as it pulsed in the safety of his touch.

Tenne pulled her soul close to his and released magic that would provide a powerful emphasis to his soul beat, aiming to stabilize hers in the process.

The released magic helped to calm her. Eventually she cracked her eyes open, and blinked up at him slowly, blinking before speaking in a soft, ragged voice. “… What are you doing out of bed?” She croaks.

"What were you doing with your soul!?” He was quick to respond with his still-panicked tone. "Do you realize what you could have done!?”

“… I wasn’t doing what you think I was doing,” She murmurs softly. Her eyes blink against thick drops of moisture, around the same time that her chest hiccups, and she realizes that she’s starting to cry. She lifts one of her smaller secondary hands to her face and scrubs her eyes. “What I was doing didn’t work though. It didn’t work…”

"T-Toki... If you died..." He slowly pulled her close, revealing how roughly he was trembling around her. "If I lost you...

Toki looped her arms around him gently. Her soul thundered in his hand, pulsing sorely against his touch. “You would have felt what I felt when I lost my first mate.” She murmured. “But I wasn’t going to die, Tenne. That’s not what I was doing. I… I can’t explain it without telling you a story though.” She swallows. “Do you think you can listen?” The hornet asks as she trembles, holding him as tight as she can.

She can feel Sequoia in her mind, still trying to recover, and doesn’t press her for any help on any of this. This was all on her. This was her fault, her fuck up. She didn’t want to use the load unless she had to- she made her bed. She’d lay in it.

He hesitated before he answered her, choosing first to change their location instead. First he slowly picked her up, curling her tightly in his arms, and moved with her to a more condensed area of forestry that was closer to the camp. Once he found a secure location to stash her and himself, he tucked her in and proceeded with curling up around her.

Only once she was away from the horrible place from before, did he nod to her for her to continue
Toki nodded. She hadn’t taken back her soul while he had toted her off—instead, she’d let him hold it, sort of like a security net that she wasn’t going anywhere. Once he was comfortable, she remained boneless in his grasp, and settled in to tell him the story that she had gleaned from her dreams of the memories from her mental companion.

“Magic created everything. Every universe, every multiverse—every atom of matter, and everything that each atom would eventually create. Magic created monsters, Magic created man—and Magic created everything that fell between.” She begins softly, eyes drifting closed. “Back in the dawn of time, just as there were Boss monsters, there were also a type of human soul that was considered a boss type. However, there were only seven boss souls—one for each respective color, and never any more than that. Publicly, they went by colors as names. Green, Yellow, Blue, Purple, Red, and so on. Privately, they each had a name gifted to them by Magic itself, but that name was kept private between the Color and Magic. Green was known as Balance.”

Her fingers tapped anxiously on her arm, and she couldn’t believe she was finally doing this. Well… It was this, or load. And Toki didn’t want to make a habit of loading just for the convenience of things. “But the bosses were created too powerful, and Magic realized that too late. Each soul had the capacity for good and evil deeds at this point—and each one of them had gifts for their colors. Green had the ability to see beyond the universes—they could see the multiverse and beyond. Green could see the benefits of having Boss souls—and that not all of the universes had them. The mages there were lost and in disarray—the Boss souls guided and nurtured mages in their world, and ensured peace existed between Monsters and Man. The mages in other worlds did not have that—and war tore them asunder, leading to the deaths of millions.”

She shivered, recalling some of the memories she’d seen that Sequoia still had from her time as Balance. The things she’d seen…

“Green consulted the other Bosses—and they intended to pool their great wealth of power to bridge the gap between worlds, so they could bring peace to the other universes. But, that was not their intended purpose—this was not what Magic wanted for them. Magic had made them too strong—and Magic could not make them stop with words and warning alone.” She murmured. “So Magic tore them asunder—and halved their powers equally, while taking a small fraction of their power away, and creating yin and yang souls in their place. Balance was split into kindness and cruelty—or good and evil, essentially. All of the Boss souls were split into good and evil—and were respectively called Boss Hearts and Anti-Hearts from then on. When the souls were split, the gifts were split between the two souls. For Balance, who became kindness and cruelty, one half got the gift to see between the worlds, and to be an ultimate defense. However, if this ultimate defense were to ever be used to attack, the defense would be gone, and the soul would be vulnerable. The other half was given the ability to remember through the ages and to heal the wounds of others, and to fight most violently.”

Though the ability to heal was not something that Sequoia retained memory of using. Likely from going to long of never having used it—why would you want to heal someone when all you could feel was anger and hate for everything around you?

“Together,” She murmurs, “The pairs of souls leaptfrogged through time. They would live together, die together, and find each other again, drawn by the power of their souls. When they were together, they worked almost like they were Balance once more. This worked for a long, long time—until Monsters took notice of what the colors of the souls meant—and that, when they were separated, the souls acted so differently. Kindness was the epitome of kind—but often they were too kind. They would forgive even the worst crimes when alone, seeing that even the worst criminals could be given a second chance. Cruelty was… A very harsh and unforgiving person without Kindness there to act as a buffer- and often times, they were indeed cruel to others without their other half there. For this… Monsters informed the humans about the true meaning of the souls and their soul colors, and then turned away the mages that showed any signs of a color similar to any of the Anti-hearts, for fear of them hurting someone in their anger.”

Toki sighs. That was the simplest explanation for a whole convoluted kaboodle of events that lead to the whole war. It was too complex for even Toki to really understand all of it, but what she did understand she was currently relaying. “Humans ostracized the Anti-hearts. But… But perhaps the cruelest thing that happened… The Boss hearts, who couldn’t remember all of the lifetimes that had been spent together, all of the friendships that had been won, all of the love that had been gained… The Boss hearts supported Humanity with the monsters. The Anti-hearts were grief stricken…” She murmurs.

Toki sighs. “War broke out. It was bad- and ultimately the Boss hearts sided with the Monsters- but on their own, the boss hearts were more defensive than offensive with the exception of Kindness and Cruelty, who were inverted for their offensive capabilities- and they were slaughtered by their betrayed counterparts. The Anti-Hearts ended up winning, and sealed the monsters underground by pooling their power to seal Magic itself. But it backfired. Magic rested a curse upon them- for instead of striving to prove that they were better than their color dictated, they chose to embrace it and prove the monsters right. Magic was sucked from the world- and with each rebirth, they would lose more and more of their magical ability, until they were no longer bosses. But the memories would remain, until the barrier was broken and they chose to redeem themselves.”

Shifting, Toki continued. “Skip forwards a little ways… To the day the barrier broke. The Boss Heart for Determination used what I can only guess to be human souls to break it. The monsters returned to the surface… and found an extraordinarily kind human. She helped secure them a place to stay on the surface, and began working hard to get them a place to stay on the surface. However… However, she began to get very, very sick. With the return of the monsters, those who descended from them began to change. They were called HTM’s- Humans Turned Monster- and they would become very, very ill before the completion of their change. This human was no different.” Toki’s eyes watered a little bit, even being closed. “However… With the return of the monsters, Cruelty was not happy. Cruelty did not have magic- but Cruelty remembered.

“The woman’s house was set ablaze one night by some of Cruelty’s followers, while she was watching children. In the heat of the blaze that burned her alive, she saved every one of the children, and made her change from human, into Monster. It nearly killed her- but she survived. Under the careful care of a family of skeletons and their beastly father, she thrived and returned to normal as best she could- and continued to work and toil for them, securing them rights and making sure they got to stay above ground. Along the way… She fell in love with one of the skeletons. She and the youngest of the brothers learned something significant to human souls- they don’t require intent to create life. So she fell pregnant- and the silent war between her and Cruelty continued to grow and wage onwards, growing more and more violent even after she was informed of who she was- the Boss Heart of Kindness.”

Toki swallowed. “There were many confrontations between this woman and the forces of Cruelty’s people. She and her monsters met them time and time again while she carried life- and even after she had borne her children and helped to secured them, and all of the monsters, full legal rights as living beings in the world.” Her voice shudders. “… And then their home was destroyed. They had to flee back underground. Cruelty contacted Kindness- and they set a date for a final show down. The clash that followed… It was not pleasant.”

She sucks in a shaky breath, and has to take a moment to compose herself. “In the end, Kindness won. But, instead of going with the plan that the others had set out- to use one of the soul jars to hold Cruelty for all eternity- Kindness thought it a kinder option to merge Cruelty’s soul with hers. So… She did. And Cruelty took control- and claimed all of the power of the traits of every soul of all of his men. Cruelty took it all into himself- into Kindness’s body- and set it to turn them into a living bomb to destroy everything. Kindness did the only thing that she could think of. She reached out… and she dug deep. She found the void- she found Magic itself- and she fell, to save her mate and husband, and her two beautiful babies who hadn’t even seen their first year yet. She fell into magic that twisted and warped her into a form that suited it- and to a form that could handle the power that she had. And then Magic cast her out- into a world that was like hers- but not her own.”

Toki took a deep breath, and scrubbed her palms to her eyes. “So you see… I wasn’t trying to kill myself…” She wondered if he would connect the dots- and finally realize that she wasn’t who he thought she was.

He listened to her words, and then slowly looked down the soul he cradled in his hand. "You are two minds within a body of one...?" He slowly spoke, "And... You're... you're not of my kind..."

“Of body, I am.” She touches her arm quietly. “Of flesh and bone, I am, just like I was flesh and bone a human, and then a true skeleton when I was one. But... But everything else…” Toki sat up, and gave a bitter sounding laugh. Her claws itched at her skin, digging furrows as she scratched at herself.

Tenne hurried to stop her digging, and ushered her fingers away from herself, giving her a sharp look as he did so.

She was hit with a dysphonic feeling- one she hadn’t had in a long, long time. This wasn’t her body- but it was. This wasn’t the body she’d been born to, the body she was originally meant to have- hell, she hadn’t even had this body for as long as she’d had her skeleton one. She’d only just got used to being a being made of bone, when she’d had that torn from her. “I don’t know what I am anymore. Am I a human? Am I a skeleton? Am I a blaster beast? What am I? Who am I? I don’t know anymore, Tenne. Have you ever been one thing one day, and then woke up the next in a completely different body? And then, not even two years past that, been in yet again a third?” The laugh she gives is not a nice one.

Toki takes a moment to scrub her face and take a deep, calming breath. It doesn’t help one bit, but it helps her rein in the terror she feels in the face of his response to her story. He held her soul in his hands. He could literally crush her- and it would be over. It would all be over. She would have to load- and hoped nothing like this happened again. “I’m sorry. I’m sorry. I… at my core,” She motions to the soul in his hands, “I am, and will always be, Human, no matter what is done to me. When I die, my soul will reincarnate back into the Boss Heart for Kindness- and I will once again be Human. Though… I suppose calling me- Us- Balance would be the better term now.” She sighs. “But yes. Two minds in one body. I’m Toki. It’s nice to meet you. I’m the one who is always in control. Sequoia is Cruelty- she prefers to be called Sequoia though, just like I prefer Toki to Kindness. Sequoia always lurks. She made you and our boys breakfast one time though.”

"The morning when your pancakes were lighter and my coffee was a bit cooler than usual." He spoke quietly. Her soul, tucked in his hands, lowered to his lap and he smiled, despite tears starting to run down his cheeks... "I understand... And in the same... I’m so... so lost Toki..." He admitted quietly.

“Yeah… my wings were a lighter color. More the color of… of that side of my soul.” She pointed at the lighter side. Her hands lifted up, and she brushed his tears away gently. “The darker side… The darker side is me. And… And for what it’s worth, Tenne… I’m lost too. I’ve been lost for a long, long time. The only thing that gave me hope in this world was you and the children.”

‘I’m here, Sequoia. How are you doing?’ Toki watched as Sequoia’s side of the soul pulsed brighter when she spoke- and when Toki’s pulsed brighter with her response. She wondered if Tenne would notice.

'I... have never felt in so much pain... at least... not in this lifetime.' She murmured. 'I don’t feel good...'

He looked at her quietly, and then he sighed quietly, watching the soul only to twitch in surprise as it began to flicker as Sequoia replied. "... I... I guess that's them... right?” He asked quietly.

“Her.” She corrected gently. “Sequoia isn’t doing so well. I was... I was trying to separate our souls- so she could... could have a body of her own again.” She rubs her arm. “She’s not... She’s not doing so well after that. She just came back around. We’d tried magic before we went to physical, and... nothing worked.”

‘Not feeling good isn’t a good thing. What are you feeling?’ Her mind sharpened, trying to pick up on what her soul companion was feeling.

'I don’t feel good...’ Was all she could repeat quietly, before sighing. 'He's holding us... I can feel his magic... it feels so good... but it's in pain too... I... I guess you told him...'

As the second mind murmured to Toki, Tenne slowly lifted his hand and let it ghost over the darker half of the soul.

'I did. He's... Lost. I don’t think he knows what to do. Frankly... I'm not surprised either. That was hell of a bombshell I dropped on him.' She murmured softly.

Toki watched his hand ghost over her soul, and gave a phantom shiver at the sensation of touch that it provided her. It worked in ways that always mystified her. "If... If you would rather I leave... And not come back... I would understand." She starts hesitantly, wings shifting faintly. Her story explained why she was so adamant about some things that she knew could be done. Like the barrier breaking, for one.

But as she said that, his hand closed around her soul, now holding it with fear of letting it go. "No... Please... Don't leave..."

'Aah!' Sequoia was first to react to the sudden feeling of the hand closing around the soul.

“A-ah,” She gave a full body shudder after Sequoia. Toki twitched, and sat up slowly. She gave him a shaky look. “Gentle... please... We are... We feel fragile right now. Just... careful. Please. I wont go anywhere, I promise.” Toki shivered slightly. She took a deep breath in, and then rubbed her face quietly. “I’m sorry...” She says finally. “For... For not telling you. I’m not... really sure how I was supposed to tell you. If I’d have told you right off, any sane person would think I was crazy. Or... murdered me for my human soul.” Or thought her an imposter. There was a reason she had an ID after all. Her mane fluffed, and there was a tingle of nerves that trickled through her soul. She didn’t want to think of what would happen if Asgore found out.

His frightened grip fell loose again and after watching her, he slowly nuzzled up to her, offering her soul back as his tail wrapped around the two of them.

"I'm sorry..." He murmured.

“Whatever are you sorry for?” She hesitantly took her soul, and cradled it gently. She caressed the cracks, before tucking it inside. Toki nuzzled him gently back and swallowed. “You’re not the one that kept secrets. It’s… It’s me who should be sorry, Tenne. Really.”

"I didn't meant to be so rough on your soul..." He murmured.

“It… more surprised us.” She swallowed. Toki sighed and shook her head. She rubbed her arm with a soft sigh. “It didn’t… completely hurt. Our souls are sensitive. Sequoia hasn’t ever had hers touched like that. Anyways… Are… Are we... Okay? I mean… I know how you feel about humans.” And at her core, she always would be a human.

"You are only human in your origins... but you are not to blame for our suffering. You ended it sooner than the other humans no doubt intended, in fact. There is nothing about you that I can find myself hating." He murmured as he hugged her and gave a soft squeeze to her form. "I can't anyways... I love you too much to consider such an emotion. I’m… I’m upset, but I understand why you hid it. Had you told me that when we had just met… Things would have been different. I don't think you would have left my lab in one piece.” Definitely not dead, if only for the fact that she was tougher than he was. “But that's not what happened. Yes, this is a big secret… But I love you anyways. I’ve known you’ve kept things from me, and I loved you anyways. You’re not as sneaky as you might think. This isn’t enough to break us, Toki. I love you- and I’m not letting go.”

Toki smiled faintly, and there was clear, palpable relief visible on her face as she slouched into him with a relieved sounding buzz. She trembled softly. “I was… I was very certain you would have hated me.” She said softly. “For… For everything. Or at least severely disliked me for everything that I hid. But… But you didn’t. You have no idea how… How happy that makes me, Tenne. How really, truly happy this makes me…” She sniffles softly, fingers curling into his clothing. She didn’t want to let go.

He smiled gently, and slowly scooped her up, steadily rocking his way back to his feet. "Let's go back to the tent before our boys realize we're gone." He suggested with a soft rumble.

“That sounds good.” Toki agrees. She squirms some in his grasp to get comfortable, but doesn’t try to fight out of his hold. She glances away from him with a soft sigh. Toki wonders if things will change- she honestly expects them to change, given the nature of her soul. Even if he loves her, she’s not who he thought she was. Sure, he’d fallen for her- she hadn’t faked her personality or who she was, but still...

He nuzzled her appreciatively and gave her a few soft kisses along her head. "I love you." He purred gently as he started back for the tent.

Toki had yet to say those words back to him. He had said them time and time again, and she would find some way to agree nonchalantly, or work around it- but she hadn't come out to say them fully to Tenne. Part of Toki wasn’t sure she was ready, honestly. Part of her felt she would never be ready to say them.

There was no time like the present, she supposed. And... And a man who still cared for her even after this... This sort of man deserved to hear these words. Even if they were words she didn't want to admit to herself yet.

Toki waited until they had reached the clearing, before nuzzling her horn gently to his shoulder. "I... I love you too, Tenne." She murmurs softly for the first time to him.

As if someone had just started an old fashioned car, the volume of his purr skyrocketed and he gave her a squeeze, his tail wagging behind him.
It made her giggle softly, and she brushed her fingers gently over his face, trailing over his cheek with a tender touch. “You… liked that, huh?”

“Mama?” Kai poked his head sleepily out of the tent. Quinn was asleep behind him. He rubbed his eye socket tiredly. “Daddy? Where did you go?”

Tenne nodded happily, then turned, having heard his son. He set Toki down, and nuzzled her, then quickly made his way back to the tent. "I'm here, pup. Papa just had some business to take care of." He assured him gently.

“Just some business.” Toki assures as well as she accompanies Tenne. She waits for him to enter the tent first, so she could crawl in after him.

“Business?” Kai blinked at him sleepily, and then blinked over at Toki. “Oh. Did you and Mama go off to get ‘Frisky’?” He quirks his teeth into a sleepy but smug grin and wiggles a tiny brow at them. “If so, gross. It’s cold and it’s bed time.” He yawns.

"NO." He replied stiffly, tapping his son on the head as he crawled into the tent past him. "We just couldn't sleep, and needed to talk for a little.”

“Oh.” He huffs, and slips to the side to let both adults in. “Phooey. I was hoping you’d be givin’ me and Quinn some siblings soon.”

Toki choked on her tongue as she crawled in, and then just flopped face first into her sleeping bag. She groaned. “It’s your fault he has no filter.” She accuses Tenne with a huff.

"I did not teach him that." He growled in reply, pulling his son back into his spot in the nest. "Now shush your smart aleck mouth. It’s time to go back to sleep for all of us.”

“I didn’t either. If not me or you then… Undyne?” The girl had no filter to speak of- and she hung around with Kai a whole lot.

“Yup.” Kai grinned and flopped across Quinn, snuggling into his brother with a happy sigh.

Toki grumbled into the blanket and sighed with a soft sound. “Oh well. Nothing to be done about it.”

"I will need to inform Ariel that her daughter is influencing my son with that language.” He grumbled.

“Once his mane thickens.” He grumbled.

"It’s a new age, dear.” Toki propped her head up on her arm. “They’re going to know about it a lot sooner than we did. Times change. People change.”

At first, he only grumbled into his pillow as his tail rattled quietly behind him. "Well yes, but come on, I don’t need him talking like that in front of others.”

“Then tell him that.” She sighed. She sat up. “Kai?”

“Hm?”
“You’re old enough to know what to say and what not to say.” She says firmly. “So that kind of talk needs to be kept away from where others can hear it. If you have questions, ask privately. Okay?”

Kai blinked slowly, and turned to look at her. “… Okay, Mama.”

Toki then laid back down. “There. That’s settled. He’s a smart boy, Tenne. Be frank with him- he’s your son. Sometimes frankness works better than dancing with fancy words.” Tenne was a dad though- a first time dad who hadn’t ever gone through this before. Toki was a first time mom- but she’d helped raise eight younger brothers. She knew how to handle them.

"Mmh... I forget how easy some things are until you show me they're just that. Where would I be without you...?" He sighed quietly.

“Probably under much less stress.” Toki chirps softly. “You forget though- I helped raise eight brothers. I have experience with boys.”

“So I have eight uncles?” Kai asks eagerly.

“Ah… Seven Uncles now.” Toki answers softly. “But they’re… back where I came from. They would love you though- with all of their hearts.”

"I bet they are worth meeting, my dear." He purred.

“They would be, if we could get to them.” Toki smiled faintly and sighed, before rolling over and facing away from them. Her soul throbbed again, a pang of homesickness hitting her hard. She curled up on her side and tried to get comfortable to ride it out.

He wrapped his tail around her once more and pulled her close as he gave her a few kisses along the back of her neck and mane.

Toki sighed as she was tugged to his chest, and glanced back at him with a soft sigh. “I’m alright, Tenne. Just… Homesickness again. Don’t think I’m ever going to stop missing them. Anyways… Lets sleep again. Kai already is beating us to it.”

The boy had conked out again in the time that she had gone quiet.

"As you wish, my dear." He kissed her head one last time and gave a loving purr, before he nuzzled into their makeshift bed and closed his eyes as he cuddled her close to his frame.

Toki took some time to fall asleep, not quite comfortable. Her soul ached, and in the dim lighting of the tent, there wasn’t much she could do about it. She craved a gentle touch to soothe over it and make the hurts and pains wash away- unfortunately, a touch with her soul often came at great risk. It was a particularly high risk if another soul could possibly come into play.

But… Well, that wasn’t something that would happen. Not now- probably not ever. Well… Maybe. She’d see.

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: WELL. I WASN’T EXPECTING SEX. BUT THERE IS SEX IN THIS CHAPTER? SO 18 PLUS ONLY I GUESS. –SHRUGS-

On a side note, I’m sorry if this was delayed. I… had some irl shit happen, and I’ve also fallen sick again. Mom and I hit a dog- a great Pyrenees- and he managed to drag himself over mom in the drivers seat and into the back of our car when I hauled ass out of the car to see where he went, like he knew we would help him. There was a lot of blood, but we got him to the 24hr animal hospital, and hopefully he’ll be okay. He was such a good boy. I reached my hand in there, fully expecting and anticipating to take a bite and NOT going to be mad at the pained animal for biting me, to check his collar for information (which had none), and all he did was press his face into my hand and lick me. He was a good boy the entire ride, even over bumpy railroad tracks, and sharp corners. He just wanted me to touch him, and to give me comfort while I gave him comfort too. Casually updating this: we called the vets the morning after we hit him, and it turns out he made it and that he’s going to be okay.

Let this be a message to all pet owners to read TOTU. Please, for the love of all things holy, keep your dogs behind a fence and away from the road. If you can’t trust them outside while you’re gone, put them in the damn house. Listening to his pained cries as he went under the car and got dragged while we tried to stop… I was still crying, nearly 5 hours after the incident, while writing this. This could have been prevented if his owners would have kept him behind a fence, or kept a better eye on him.

Silverwing Notes: So I suppose you’ll notice something different about Tenne. All I gotta say is now that he's got a good place to call home sweet home, he's gonna start showing his age

It took them months to get homes. It wasn’t until early November that the government managed to get them housing. It was a little town hastily constructed between the hole in the wall that was Maupin, and the much larger city of The Dalles. There were a few sparse trees, but none of the dense forest that they had grown used to. It was open prairies, with deep valleys and ravines with jagged cliffs, and lots and lots of rolling farmland.

Honestly, the area reminded Toki of one of those old western American flicks- the only thing it was missing was the cactus and the tumbleweed.

A farmer who, in a fit of racism guided foolishness, decided that she didn’t want to live near monsters and had sold one massive piece of farmland. The government nabbed it up and proceeded to turn it into a town for the monsters. They worked on building an outdoor market place, as well as a town hall, a city square, a small clinic for Monsters, a laboratory of sorts for the scientists, and on the outskirts, a very, very large area with which to run cattle and a decent coop with a hen yard for grass and keep most of the animals safely locked up at night so that the coyotes and the cougars couldn’t get to them. There was even a bar for Grillby, nestled in the heart of the town.
Out in the open plains meant that the wind kicked up something awful. It whipped and whirled and rocked the small, shrub like trees, and created an endless volley of wind that battered everything in its path.

Toki and the boys were no different, as were any other folks moving in. They had a lot of boxes—everything from their house Underground— all of Tenne’s at the home lab. Basically anything and everything that could be important— they weren’t the only ones though, so there was that. Several moving companies had been hired to help haul items and monsters back and forth—and it only took a few jaunts to bring everything that they needed all the way from the mountain to their new home.

Tenne’s new home was on the outskirts of town. Well— their new home, rather. Months upon months— and Toki still hadn’t been kicked out for having a human soul. As far as she knew, only Tenne knew what she was. She had all plans of keeping it that way too. Who knew what would happen should Asgore find out— or should the nosy humans who still liked to try and photograph the ‘endangered monsters’ find out about her soul.

Regardless, Toki and Tenne had been given the home that had the barn and the coop built on the ‘property’ that had been sectioned off. They had ‘land’ so to speak. The other monsters had voted for them to have it so they’d have room to run and romp and stretch their legs as their beastly nature tended to make them frolic together in a pack from time to time.

There was also talk of possibly getting animals— but no one really knew for sure yet. Toki hoped not— she liked animals. She liked them a whole lot— but there was a large difference between caring for a swarm of bees and a herd of cattle, or a flock of chickens. Toki had never been a rancher, and while her grandparents on her father’s side had owned cattle, she’d never really learned much about caring for them or keeping them happy.

The house had come fully furnished— but not all of the furniture was sized for monsters. Like Toki’s bed— it wasn’t designed to accommodate someone of her height. They had heard ‘female bee monster’ and sent a bed sized for a child, thinking bee monster meant small monster.

Not quite so. So, they were hauling in all of their old furniture to fit in along with the old stuff.

The last haul for the moving van rolled up. Toki rolled her shoulders tiredly and made her way down the front porch, going to the back of the van to fetch out the next set of items out of it— and to open it up for Tenne to get out of.

She slid the back open and peered up at him. Neither he nor she could fit in the cars— so they’d had to ride in the backs of the moving trucks. It hadn’t been pleasant for her. One of her wing joints was swollen from taking a hard fall on it inside the back of the moving van— so she knew how bad it could be on one’s body. Which was why the boys both had been strapped in, and safely driven out. “So…” She says once the back door is open. “What’s the damage? Anything break?”

Where she seemed to have struggled, Tenne had it better off. His eyes were glowing as his magic kept the boxes upright, while he himself was lounging in a soft chair, sipping from a thermos of tea.

"Nothing. I might need to pop my back though." He replied calmly, before he smiled.

“Ohhh, is that so?” She tilts her head and cocks her hip at him. Both pairs of arms cross as she looks over the box of neatly stacked items, and makes a very nifty face at them. Toki rolls her eyes in good humor, and then sighs. “Well, mister gravity magic- you can just float those boxes right into the house and spare my poor back any more lifting.”

"As the lady wishes." He chuckled as he got up, stepping out of the truck and popping his back before his magic flared and he got to work with unloading.

Despite what she’d said, Toki took boxes that had to go upstairs, and buzzed them up to the second story window, where they were neatly inserted through the open window. Massive insect jaws would take them from her, and Sugar would set items down carefully so nothing broke, before waiting for the next box from Toki.

Tenne would be able to take a large group of boxes inside with him per trip, a soft hum coming from him as he worked to stack each box delicately where they belonged.

It didn’t take long between the two of them before the truck was empty. It was good timing too- as the snow started to really thicken into a dense flurry by the time the last box was being stuffed through the window, and Sugar was being dispelled.

Toki landed on the ground and bustled for the front door, ruffling her mane as she rubbed her arms. It was vastly colder up here than it was in Snowdin- and it made her glad that the government had rushed to get them housing, rather than make them try and endure the winter in tents.

“Can you imagine trying to survive out in that in a tent?” She hums to Tenne as she steps inside. The inside was lit with glowing bees, keeping the area warm as they clung to the walls and roof. It was a small drain on her magic, but not too bad. It kept the pipes from freezing.

"Nnnope! And glad we don’t have to! I don’t have my fur to keep me warm this time, unlike you and the pups.” Tenne laughed at the last part stirring his memory, how both pups of his were starting to show a magnificent mane in the making.

Toki snickered. “Well, if you’d stop shaving it off, you’d grow it back. But that’s besides the point- I can hardly keep warm when my mane covers my neck and head, and only some of my chest. And my wrists and ankles- let alone the boys. It would be miserably cold, even with my hoards of bees.”

She chuckled cheerily, and made her way to the kitchen to start putting away dishes and crockery.

"I have been! It's just still growing... and I need to groom it before it actually retains any heat." He huffed quietly as he pulled his turtleneck down to look at the growing mane on his neck. "Mmh... Is it really not growing as well as I thought?" He whined.

“Well, you are growing older,” She grins teasingly over her shoulder at him, “And older men sometimes do go bald…” She wiggles her brows mischievously. He wasn’t much ‘older’ than her, making her tease completely invalid.

"And yet you're a few years younger yet so very full." He huffed.

“I'm a lady- what can you expect?” She giggles at him lightly.

He huffed at that, and then he reached up and rubbed at a small patch of fur that he could have sworn was thinning. His voice pitched up into a higher pitched whine. "Tokiiii! I'm not balding am I!?”

Toki turned around from putting things away, and moved over to peer at him. “Hm… I dunno, you might be.” She winked. “Nah, not really. Your mane looks thick and full as usually. If you keep pulling it and worrying at it though, it’s going to thin out.”

He didn't reply at first. Rather he turned, looking at her with large pupils expanded wide in his purple eyes. It was a kicked puppy look if anything.

Toki spotted the look, and held out for approximately ten seconds, before giving in and reaching up to scratch her claws gently through the ruff of fur around his neck. “You are the neediest male I’ve ever met.” She informs him fondly as she gives him his rubs.

He leaned into the scratching and gave a soft chitter and a happy coo, his tail wagging behind him as his tongue stuck out in the cutest little subtle ‘blep’ one could imagine on a beast like him.

Toki snorted and rubbed his shortened mane, giving him the attention he needed. When she’d given him plenty, Toki drew her hand back and gave him a bemused smile. “Alright. We’ve got a house to unpack and fully move into. I can’t stand around rubbing your ruff all day, mister ‘am I balding’. If we want to be done in time for dinner tonight, we’ve got to work now. And hope the boys haven’t gotten into mischief with all of the items we need to unpack…”

"Fine, fine.” He fluffed up a little, and then smoothed it down and tucked his turtleneck back into place. "But once we're done, we're going to snuggle in our new bed, and you're gonna keep doing that." After a second though he gave a sweet, "Pleeeeaasse?” to Toki to garner her favor.

Toki cocked one of her secondary hands on her luscious hips, and arched a brow at him. Her primary arms worked at putting stuff away. Four arms meant multitasking- sassing the male in her life and putting things away was part of her routine now. “I dunno- I might be able to be persuaded if you might be able to be talked into rubbing my wings maybe?”

At that offer, he smiled happily and gave a nod. "I will treat them like nothing but the finest silk under my fingers." He vowed happily.

“Good.” She chuckles softly. “Because one of my joints is swollen from taking a hard knock, and if you were rough, you’re liable to get thwapped by my wings.” Toki gives him a lopsided smile, and then sighs softly. “Alright. We have a lot of house to unpack.”

"The sooner we get started, the sooner I will massage your wings and render you entombed in complete and utter bliss." He purred, before he turned and cracked his knuckles, stooping down to collect some boxes. "Let's get to work."

“You sound awfully sure you can ‘entomb me in complete and utter bliss’. You might be overstating your talents there.” She winks teasingly, and saunters off to return to her duties. “I suppose we’ll have to see if you can live up to it, won’t we?”

"Indeed.” He sighed in what sounded like defeat. "Oh well, I eagerly await when the pups sleep in their new beds and you and I have all night together~"

“No more sneaking off into the bush in the middle of the night for a quickie.” She quirks a faint smile. “Might actually get to see your face for the first time, hm?” She wiggles her brows at him, and starts stacking plates into their proper cabinets.

He chuckled at that. "But aren't the bush-bound quickies fun~?” He teased. "Mmm, not that I mind, I’d so love to see your face amongst the hot heat of pleasure~"

“You’re not the one that gets pine needles jabbed into your boobs when you get squished face down into forest floor,” She reminds him with an amused snicker. “You might actually enjoy them when you can see them.” She glances at her chest briefly, and then moves to putting things into the fridge. “But if you bite them,” Toki glances at him, and then his very much sharp teeth, “you’re going to get kicked.”

"Warning considered.” He chirped at that, giving a smile.

Her wings flick slightly behind her, rubbing together and making a noise not unlike a cricket chirping. "Good. Because you bite them, you lose boob privileges." Her hips sway slightly, and Toki hums a soft tune as she dances a little bit. She pauses though, and rubs her chest as her soul pangs, throbbing painfully. It had been doing that any time she got excited over something ever since she had tried to free Sequoia from herself. Toki had been a fool to think that she would get away scot-free. She just had to exhale and breathe through it, waiting for it to end before she could continue to put things away. It was like a breath catch- she had taken to calling it a soul catch. They varied in degrees of how painful they were. This one wasn't the worst, but it wasn't the best.

Sequoia had barely spoke after the trauma to their soul, not even a remark when opportunity was given when it came to talking to Tenne. Not even this conversation, and Tenne's new found friskiness, could rouse her.

It was worrying... But there wasn't much to be done for it. Sequoia was there, but... Toki knew her hopes had likely been dashed. She had wanted her own body badly- and when Toki hadn't been able to do it... Well... The shock of pain wasn’t... Quite what either of them had expected. Sequoia still needed to heal- from the pain of the soul being torn, and from the pain of her dreams being dashed.

Toki leaned on the counter, and put her forehead against the cabinets, her breathing deepening as she waited for the pain to pass. These fits always made Tenne concerned. But there wasn’t much to be done for it. She had done this to herself. She paid the price for it. Toki tried to keep the pain on her half, and away from her soul companion as best she could. This was, after all, all on her.

"Are you okay, Toki?" And as if on cue, Tenne was standing besides her, whining quietly as he set a hand on her back.

"Soul catch." She murmurs to him with a soft sigh. It fades off as his hand brushes against her back, and she takes a deep breath as the tight feeling in her chest fades. "I'm alright. They're certainly annoying, aren't they? Always when I get too excited in doing something." She turned her head to give him a lopsided smile.

"Mmh..." He still looked worried, "Hey, is Sequoia okay?" He asked next.

"I don't... Think so." She shakes her head. "She hasn’t been speaking much since the incident. And its been... Well, months. She's been very quiet, and doesn't come out... Even when we're up to shenanigans. She usually has commentary for me."

"... Can I talk to her?" He asked.

Toki rubbed her chest and shrugged. "Let me see if I can get her to the surface, Tenne." She turned around and leaned back against the counter. She braced herself quietly, and then went deep into the inner recesses of her mind.

She nudged at her companion. 'Hey. Hey. Lazy bones. Come on, up and at it. Tenne wants to talk to you.'

'...' There was no immediate reply to Toki, but there was a nudging in the sense of who wanted to control their shared body.

Toki pulled at the nudging, and she switched with Sequoia flawlessly. Well. Semi- flawlessly. They hadn't done it in forever, so it was disorienting.

Sequoia was left wobbling, bracing all four arms on the counter as she tried to gain her balance and control of her systems. Her wings lightened to a different color, signifying that Toki was no longer in control.
He noticed the change in color of her wings and as he saw how shaky she was, he reached, gently setting his arms on the underside of her primary pair, offering to her his support. "Sequoia." He spoke gently.

"Mnnhnng." She made a soft grumbling noise, and leaned into his support until she had her control in place. Once she was good to go, she took a deep breath, and opened her eyes to peer up at him. "Tenne." She says softly. "You wanted to talk to me...?" Her voice was quiet and tired, lacking the vim and vigor that Toki had.

"I did..." he smiled down at her gently, "I was worried about you... Are you doing alright?"

She tilted her head as she looked at him. There was a fondness in her eyes, but it was chased by a deep sadness and longing. She tilted her face away, and instead looked at the sink. "I'm fine, Tenne. No need to be worried. I'm just... Recovering. Those soul catches aren't pleasant, no matter how much Toki muffles me from them."

"So I have seen..." He sighed gently, "I wish I could ease your pain, take it from you both if that's what it took."

"We did this to ourselves. Well... Toki did it, mostly." She ground her teeth with a sigh. "I just wanted my own body. But... Whatever. It's fine. It's not like I haven't dealt with chronic pain before in another lifetime, Tenne. I'll survive."

"I do not take so kindly to the idea of just giving up... I will do what I can, no matter how long it takes."

She glances at him and this time it's a sharper glance. "Toki and I were fools to try, Tenne. The power that split us... If you thought the power that Toki used to destroy the barrier was strong, the power that split us from one being into two is so much more than that. It is everything, it is infinity, and it is nothing at all." Her teeth curl into a sharper frown, and she gently shakes off his touch. Sequoia turns to resume what Toki had been doing in preparing the kitchen. "You can't help me. She can't help me. No one can. So it's best to just... Accept it. I'll be her willing prisoner for what I've done, and take my small measures of freedom when I can get them."

Tenne looked a little hurt at her words as well as her loss of hope, but he took a breath and looked away, "Sequoia..." He started, "I might not know nor ever learn everything you two went through before we met... But do not lose faith... You and Toki have freed us. This allows us to start our own stories without the suffering for what could have been centuries without the warmth of the sun. There is significance to such a deed like that. Not unlike a life debt from monsterkind to you for what you've done."

Her face twisted where he couldn't see it, but her non-swollen wing joint tensed. Sequoia took a deep breath and sighed. "Toki told me she told you our story. So you know... What I did when I was Cruelty." Her fingers tighten over a plate, and she's very gentle in placing it away. "I don't deserve a life debt, Tenne. Not me. Toki... Toki deserves the kindness." She tsks faintly. "I have no hope or faith left, Tenne. I am old, Tenne. I've done a lot of things in my time. Not all of them were good. One good deed does not outweigh a life time of wrong doing."

"But it still counts for something." Tenne murmured firmly. "The power you two used could have destroyed the underground. It was power to match a nuclear bomb. You didn't detonate it. You used it to destroy the barrier instead of us, and you two almost died doing it. It means something; maybe not to you... But to me, to my sons, to everyone moving into this new town... it means so, so much more than you can possibly imagine, Sequoia."
"Heh... Try hundreds of nuclear bombs trapped inside of one body." She snorts. "I kept telling her to detonate us. When we first got here, I plagued Toki's thoughts like... What did she call me... A particularly malicious shoulder devil? No that's not quite right. But close enough. If you knew about me what Toki does... I'm sure you would condemn me just like the other monsters from our world did." She sighs. "But that's in the past. We're not getting home, and I'm a permanent fixture on Toki's soul." Finished with that chore, she turns to face him again. The kitchen was done- four hands were better than two in this case. "And please don't tell me not to give up. Trying to conduct experiments to find the correct way to separate Toki and me would just cause you to commit inhumane acts. Experimenting on us will result in our death. It's sometimes less heartbreaking to give up and accept your situation than it is to try and fight and fail to change it." Her words faded off towards the end, and she peers up at his face quietly. "Tenne... I'll manage sharing a body with Toki. She and I were one once, once upon a time after all.

Her words rendered him quiet and he hesitated, before he sighed and his shoulders slowly fell in defeat. "I wouldn't consider experimenting, Sequoia.... You are my mate, you both are. And whether you share a body or not, I love you both."

"You are a scientist, Tenne." Sequoia sighs. "I had to cover my bases." She slowly gives him a faint smile. "Look. You've got two mates for the price of one... Even if we share a body, it's not that bad... Right?"

"Not at all." He wrapped his arms around her to give her a soft squeeze of a hug.

She gave him a lopsided smile and sighed, hugging him back. "I am sorry I've been so absent. I can’t promise being as active as Toki. This is her body. It is... Tiring taking control of it from her, after all. Even willingly- this isn’t my body, and it takes a lot of willpower to make it do what I want it to."

"Well perhaps you can take some time to regain your strength, then perhaps you and I could spend some time together. Perhaps talk over a drink... I want to get to know you as much as I’ve come to know Toki..." He made his offer with a gentle rumble as he smiled down at her. "Something simple and not at all exhausting. It doesn’t sound like it would drain you so terribly, does it?"

"A talk and a drink... I think I could manage that." She nodded slowly, and gave him a faint smile. "I was not so easily tired once upon a time. Since Toki spent the power inside of us, I find myself exhausted much easier than before. But I think I could manage a drink and some talk to start. I will need rest between now and then though... So you think, perhaps... A week would suffice? Enough time to put your home together with Toki, and to let me rest and recover."

"I think that's perfect." Tenne rumbled in agreement, giving her a soft squeeze before letting her go. "I eagerly await the day you and I get the chance to bond, Miss Sequoia." He then gave a small bow to her while smiling sweetly.

Sequoia chuckled softly. "It'll be nice to get to talk to you, rather than spend time admiring you from afar." She murmurs softly. "Well... Inside of her, anyways. Toki is a good woman." She wobbled slightly, and rubbed her face with one of her secondary hands. "My energy is waning, Tenne. After Toki and I did our stunt with our soul... I am still recovering from that. I need to rest, if I am to be able to enjoy our talk and a drink together in a weeks time."

"Rest, Sequoia. I will be here to speak to you another day; a day I eagerly await at that."

She nods and smiles at him one last time. Her eyes close, before she slumps faintly.

Toki surges forth and keeps her from dropping completely. She scrubs her face again and makes a soft groaning noise. "God I hate that vertigo feeling that comes with switching places..."
"Welcome back, Toki." Tenne greeted her warmly. "It was nice to get to talk to Sequoia. Thank you."

"Thanks for the welcome back, Tenne." She glanced up at him with a soft him and rolled her shoulders. "Did you manage to talk to her about what's up?"

"She was very grim about her chances of a body of her own, but she mentioned her exhaustion, so I let her be to speak another time.” He said. “We hope to meet in a week when we are adjusted here in our new home, to speak again over drinks. I hope for it to be a low energy activity, if anything” He explained.

Toki nods. "That sounds good. Honestly… I can't say that I didn't expect her to have a grim outlook on getting her a body. It might not be something we can do. Before... Before I spent out power, maybe. I might have been able to. But she wasn't... Ready for it then.” Her mane ruffles and then lays flat. Sequoia had still been Cruelty- and there was no way she would give that man a body. "Just make sure you don’t get her too drunk, yeah?” She gives her a lopsided smile. "Back when I knew her in her old body, she was a light weight. My body is not so much, but I don’t know how well she’ll handle it. Four hands means the ability to be four times as clumsy." Toki wasn’t at all bothered that they’d arranged a date together either - she was sharing her body after all. “I’ll make sure to give you both your privacy when you have your date.”

He laughed at that, "Oh of course, my dear! And thank you kindly." He purred warmly.

Toki gave him a lopsided smile, and chuckled softly. "No problem, Tenne. Alright!” She clapped both sets of hands cheerily. "Lets finish getting the house in order, and tonight we can cuddle with the boys and relax in warmth that isn't completely produced by my bees."

"Mmm, sounds perfect, my darling~” Tenne then rumbled as he gave her a few kisses, running a hand over her form appreciatively as he did.

She smiled at his wandering hand, and then set to work on unpacking the house.

As time passed and darkness fell, the house came to be put in order. Everything had been unpacked and arranged where it needed to go, and the house was looking good. There were just a few things that still needed to be dealt with, but they could be handled on the next morning.

Toki made up a thick stew for dinner, and lit a fire in the fireplace so they could keep warm without running the electrical heating system. After they’d all eaten, and the boys were sent to bed, Toki curled up on the couch with Tenne and enjoyed a mug of hot cocoa whilst cuddling him.

Tenne had his tail and an arm wrapped around Toki as they cuddled, a purr resonating from him as his hands wandered, kneading and caressing her body with the utmost appreciation.

She adored when he simply let his hands wander over her skin with utmost reverence. He tended to damn near worship her if she let him.

Toki smiled and nuzzled his shoulder. "We got a lot done today.” She murmurs to him with a pleased buzz.

"It almost feels like I'm missing something though..." He rumbled thoughtfully. “Something that is yet to be completed.”
“Oh?” She looked up at him curiously. “What do you feel is missing, Tenne?” Toki blinks up at him and curls her chin into her palm as she peers at him.

"I'll give you a hint. It's something green, beautiful, and opportunity to see it bloom only arises when my sons are asleep." His voice was a silky purr into her ear, very suggestive in his hint.

Well, Toki flushed either way and gave him a soft giggle. “I still don’t know what you’re talking about, you big flirt. Care to spell it out for me~?”

"Want to go break in our new bedroom~?" There it was, spoke in a purr so deep one could mistake Tenne for his older counterpart as he spoke.

She blushed as bright as she ever had and gave him a giggle and a lopsided smile. "You insatiable fiend." She laughs. "How are you not tired by today's activities?" She props her chin onto one of her many palms, and half lids her eyes at him. Bedroom eyes were a specialty of hers. "I'd love to. Think you can hold out long enough while I finish my cocoa?" Her palm settled teasingly on his thigh and gave a bold rub.

"Do I gave your permission to get a head start while you do?" He cooed, his tail rattling nearby as his hands crawled lower on her body.

"I dunno," her palm flattened and slid higher on his leg, fingers threatening to brush where his pants hid his slit, "I think we may just end up right here on the couch if you do." She stole one more sip of cocoa, and then set it aside. Toki winked at him. "Well, what are you waiting for, good sir? Take me to bed~" She purrs.

He growled happily and with that, he scooped her up and kissed her as he started upstairs with his mate in his arms.

She giggled and tucked her wings close, keeping them out of the way as he tooted her upstairs. Toki felt a flash of familiarity- Papyrus had done this before too- but didn't let herself dwell too hard on it lest the sadness take her again. Instead, she worked her mouth gently against his, and then nipped along his neck. Her primary hands eased up under his sweater, stroking her claws up his stomach and up to his shield across his chest as she buzzed for him pleasantly. Her secondary hands groped for the door so she could get it for them when they reached it.

As soon as the door was pushed open, it lasted only long enough for Tenne to get to the other side and push it closed behind him, before he gave a chuckle as he fell onto the bed with Toki, giving her warm and loving kisses as soon as they landed.

Toki giggled softly as he flopped onto the bed with her. Her wings folded firmly to her back, and she shifted so she was laying on her back. Her primary set of hands stroked over his shield, and eased along his skin as she buzzed for him. "Clothes are in the way," She purred warmly, and tickled her claws over his skin. "Help me with mine and I’ll help you with yours?"

"Hn... If these weren't new clothes they'd already be gone." He purred, his hands not hesitating to run down to her hips and hook under her shirt. "Such a wonderful body- how did I ever get so lucky as to land a mate like you?" He breathed after her body was freed from its clothing.

Once she was divested of her clothes, Toki took time to help free him from his clothing. She gave him a lopsided smile, using the claws on her paws to ease his pants down after she undid the strap that kept them up over his tail. His shirt was yanked up and over his head, leaving him just as bare as she was once he stepped out of his pants.
Her chest bounced with her breath, perky green nipples facing him as she hooked her legs lightly over his hips. "I dunno," She purred, "I ask myself that all the time." Her secondary hands wandered to the slit that hid his genitals, and she stroked it, slipping a finger just slightly inside to tease him temptingly. "Hah~"

Her teasing of his slit earned a shutter followed by a squeal and a partial buck of his hips as she slipped inside the soft tissue. "Nh!" He retaliated in the same, reaching down and gently pressing a knuckle between her folds.

Toki gave a soft purr and rocked her hips against the knuckle he had pressed between her folds. Her finger uncurled, stroking gently along the soft inner tissue inside of his slit. She gave him a warm look, and tugged him down to kiss him with another hand. "Don't be afraid to touch me," She purred. He hadn’t had the chance to play with her breasts before. They'd always done this with her face down.

"I trimmed my claws to make sure I don’t hurt you." He purred as his hands wandered to do just that, cupping her breast and giving a tender knead as he took the other nipple into his mouth.

Her milk had long since dried up. It had been more than half a year since she'd held her children and nursed them- her body had gone back to normal. It still felt good as his mouth closed over her breast, and his hand encased the other one. Toki eased her finger further into his slit, until she could touch his hidden member. She stroked the tip of her filed down claw against him, before smoothing the flat of her finger teasingly against his length. "I trimmed mine too," she purred, "so I wouldn't hurt you, if I touched you." Her thumb stroked the outside of his slit, her remaining hands gently fondling his shield and stroking over his shoulders as she rocked her hips into the knuckle he had buried between her legs.

"Mmh~" He chuckled happily, before he leaned his head back and let out a low rumbling groan as his cock quickly responded to her touch and began to push outward to emerge. "G-Good..." He murmured.

“Do you want more?” She purred. As his member pushed against her finger, starting to rouse outwards, Toki eased her digits around it to stroke it as it firmed up, helping him rise to the occasion. “I think you do~” She pipes softly to him, so only he can hear and so it doesn’t rouse the children who are only a few rooms over.

He moaned again and rocked his hips into her hand as he nodded. "Y-Yes please." Came from his lips, as his cock grew harder for Toki to see and admire all she liked.

Admire she would. She couldn’t help but compare him and Papyrus- Papyrus had been orange, translucent and bright like the sun. Tenne was black, not unlike the sky at midnight, and was thick and long, much larger than Papyrus was. His base was thick and bulbous- which swelled into his knot when his orgasm came. His knot was fun- she definitely enjoyed it a lot.

Toki gave a pleased purr, and stroked him gently from base to tip. “Mmm, I like what I see.” It was different... Different was good. She couldn’t handle it if it was too similar, she knew. Trailing her fingers down from her ruff of fur around her neck, Toki lightly trailed over her nipples, and down her ribs and belly with one of her hands. “You like what you see~?” She questioned lightly. Her shoulder bore faint scars from when she’d been in heat, and he had marked her with his teeth. That was the only mark marring the pale white flesh of her body.

His tongue ran over his lip and he swallowed. "Oh stars yes... You're the most beautiful woman I have ever seen." He breathed.
His words both pleased and roused her beast, and Toki gave a pleased rumble as her eyes dilated and the beast stirred more in her. Her hand tightened a hair on his cock, stroking him firmly as her legs tensed. She got a tingling urge in her mind- she’d gone into this with the plan to let him top for the night but now… Now she had other ideas.

Her legs flexed, hand releasing his cock to grasp the bed. Her primary hands took hold of his wrists while her secondary hands flipped her- and him- over. Toki straddled his hips, her wings flexing and flaring out over top of him as her mane ruffled and flared out. Toki rumbled pleasantly, thick thighs keeping her upright as she pinned his arms above his head.

Toki opened her mouth, leaning down as she cradled his cock between her body and his- her mouth pressed kisses along his flesh, peppering sharp nibbling kisses along his shoulders and chest. “I’ll let your hands go.” She purrs, “Only if you keep them to yourself.” She decides. “If you want to touch me… Use your mouth~”

His mouth opened slightly, before he closed it and shuttered happily as his cock gave a hard throb between them. "Oooooohhhhh god..." He squeaked happily.

“I didn’t hear a ‘yes’ or a ‘no’ to that,” She nipped up along his neck, her breasts rubbing along the sensitive bones of his shield as she rumbled softly. “Answer me, Tenne. Can you keep your hands to yourself?” Toki questioned, nipping him again and then soothing it with a soft lick and a gentle suck as she folded her teeth up and out of the way. “Or do I need to hold them here until I decide you can use them~?” Her smaller hand slid down and grasped his cock, giving it a gentle but firm pump as she rocked her hips against his, just below where his member slid out of his slit. The warmth of her core brushed against his own teasingly.

"I-I can keep my hands... T-to myself." He replied quickly, his tail wagging fast as his toes curled in pleasure. He fought to keep his eyes from crossing, and took a deep breath so he could focus on her.
"I can.”

"Good boy," She purred. Her hands let his go slowly, and she trailed her fingers down his sides, touching sensitive skin as she slowly worked her way to sitting upright. "Now... Tell me, what do you want me to do to you?” Her fingers stroke his member gently, and her back paws touch his legs, remembering how enraptured he’d been with them so long ago. She kneads the softness of her toes against the dense muscles of his legs. "How do you want me to touch you~?” She purrs teasingly, pupils a narrow slit as she strokes him slowly.

"Hhn... Touch me as you wish, my darling... I love you so much.” He mewled.

Toki chuckled warmly. “I love you too.” She shifted slowly against him, and massaged her fingers against her core. She eased herself open, and then slid his tip against her. She wasn’t made of ectoflesh anymore- she unfortunately had to take time to stretch now. However, she could take her time going slowly with his cock. And slow she would, easing her way down his length inch by inch.
“Now be a good male,” She purred, “And put that mouth to use.” Her breasts bounced, ripe for him to play with.

"Yes, darling~” He leaned up and kissed her chest before he leaned to one breast and gently popped it into his mouth, suckling gently as he rocked his hips slowly up into her. "Mmh~"

She let out a soft breathy gasp, and spread her hands out on his chest as he put his mouth to work on her. She eased her way down his length, slowly working and bouncing so he didn’t hurt her with his girth. She hadn’t taken him nearly enough times to be stretched to fit him- not when he was so much larger than she was. But she didn’t have to take so long to adjust as she once had.
Soon she was hilting him, popping the rounded base where his knot would be past her entrance. She let out a soft groan, and her walls twitched and trembled as her hips gyrated on his, his member reaching her deepest recesses. “Good, Tenebris,” She purred his name as she eased off his length, and set a slow, torturous pace.

His fists clenched where they stayed above his head and he let out a pleased moan. "O-Oh god... Y-You're wonderful~" He mewled, looking up at her before he let go of her breast and leaned up, licking her neck gently.

She tilted her head to the side to let him have at her neck. Her hands slid up to his wrists again, and she claimed them once more as she sank down firmly over his member, walls clenching tightly around him like a vice. “I want you to touch me,” She guides his hands down again, and to her hips. “Anywhere. You did good in not touching me so far,” She gyrates her hips against his, wings flaring out above her and helping her keep her balance. “I think big daddy Tenne deserves a reward,” She purrs, “for being good. Don’t you?”

He let out a moan that took a lot more strength to hold back, but as soon as she voiced her permission he lunged and wrapped his arms around her upper torso as he gave a thrust into her body. His teeth nipped at her.

Toki gave a hiss at his thrust- it felt so good, too good, and she was tempted to let him take control and continue- but instead she shoved her hips down, using hers to pin his. “Ah, ah, ah,” She scolded with a soft pant, voice sounding very much like she would like him to continue despite her efforts against it, “I’ve set the pace here,” She rolled her hips slowly, legs clamping over his to keep him pinned in place. The female was dominating her male mate- and this was pleasing her beast exponentially. “You’ll have to roll with it.” She didn’t fight his arms around her, and slowly bounced and ground on his cock, surely driving him mad with the slow and scolding pace she’d taken on.

He hissed and gave a keen into her fluff. "T-Toookiiii...!" He mewled pathetically to her.

As if that would work on her.

Toki gave a hiss at his thrust- it felt so good, too good, and she was tempted to let him take control and continue- but instead she shoved her hips down, using hers to pin his. “Ah, ah, ah,” She scolded with a soft pant, voice sounding very much like she would like him to continue despite her efforts against it, “I’ve set the pace here,” She rolled her hips slowly, legs clamping over his to keep him pinned in place. The female was dominating her male mate- and this was pleasing her beast exponentially. “You’ll have to roll with it.” She didn’t fight his arms around her, and slowly bounced and ground on his cock, surely driving him mad with the slow and scolding pace she’d taken on.

His other hand rooted on her chest and he groaned again into the fluff on the top of her skull, before he leaned back and laid his head back. "Aaahhh... I-It's so warm~ I love you so much.” His groan wasn’t quiet.

Toki covered his sounds with a kiss as she released his neck. “Shhh… Can’t make too much noise, or we’ll wake the boys.” She bucked her hips into his, finally picking up the pace as she started to chase after an orgasm. “And if we w-wake the boys,” her voice trembled faintly despite her steady tone, “Then that means neither of us gets to finish~”

The kiss brought another fevered moan forth and he looked up at her, "Nnnh... I hate it but you're right..." He whispered. "Please... I... I need you.”

“And so you shall have me,” She murmured against his mouth. “You’re free to use your hand again-so long as you behave like a good boy, big Daddy.” She knows how much that last word gets him going, and rolls her hips in time with his as she bounces and rocks onto his shaft.

He shivered and moaned. His sounds faded into a sharp snarl as his pupils sharpened in his eyes. "To hell with this!” He tightened his grip on her hip before he reminded Toki just whom she was mated to.

In a sharp shove that seemed to actually take effort, he pushed Toki over onto her back, returning them to their previous position, only this time with his cock hilted inside her. "I can't stand it... Me? Submissive... No... Not even with you, my darling~" He purred gently, before he ground his hips into hers. "You'll have to get the drop on me next time~" He hissed into her ear.

Toki’s wings automatically folded, and she gave him some fight in being flipped- but she didn’t struggle once she was down. Toki gave him a sharp-toothed grin from down below, and hooked her legs over his hips. Grinding her pelvis right back into his, Toki rumbled at him challengingly. Her beast had gotten a taste of what being dominant was like- his would need to put her right back into place. “It’s about time you bucked up,” She purred to him, and bucked up into him. There was such a thing as a bottom dom- and unless Tenne took full dominance back, he was going to have a challenge on his claws.

He growled again and kissed her with the feverish lust they had felt before and this time accompanied it with rough thrusts that rocked them and the bed both.

Her mouth met his in a heated kiss, her arms latching onto him. Her primary arms dug harmless furrows in his back as her dulled claws raked down along his spine and ribs. Her secondary arms held onto his shield, stroking the bone and the flesh just hidden below it. Toki met each of his thrusts with a rocking motion, but the force of his hips kept hers down, making her body submit, even if her will fought on. Her paws stroked over the backs of his calves, and she rumbled encouragingly at him as the bed rocked and squeaked below them.

"I love you. I love you so much!” He hissed happily, pulling her hips closer to his own as he gave a rough roll of his pelvis against hers. His knot had swelled at this point and now pressed against her entrance, which would no doubt take a nice, hard thrust to get into.

A hard thrust indeed, forcing her to kiss him to smother a soft cry that tried to escape from her as his knot forced its way past her entrance and into her depths. Her walls fluttered tightly around him, and clamped ever tighter on his knot. She could feel the coil of heat pooling in her belly, letting her know just how close she was. Toki tilted her head instinctively, bearing the scarred side of her neck for him to bite down upon. Most of her markings were from the back- this would be the first marking from the front.

The invitation was accepted and he nuzzled his face into her neck, kissing along her shoulder a few times before he opened his mouth and bit down on her shoulder and throat, his teeth digging into her flesh and marking her now from the other side.

Her mane protected most of her throat from damage, but his mouth left an impressive bite mark as his teeth sank into her shoulder, popping through her skin without issue as she dropped her defense for him to chomp down. Pain and pleasure mingled in her shoulder, and Toki felt her body trying to come undone. Her hips bucked against his, walls fluttering and clenching erratically as her breaths heaved in her chest. Her breasts rubbed against his armored chest, nipples stimulating against the bone of his shield.

Toki was putty in his hands as she mewled under him, on the edge and about to fall over into bliss.
"I love you," He purred quietly around his mouthful of fur. His hips ground against her a little rougher this time, passionate and with the heat of his love behind the roughness.

The passionate grind was enough to send her over. She toppled over the edge with a not so quiet cry of his name, and clamped around his knot like a vice as her walls milked his shaft for all that he had to give. Her claws slid against his back, digging faint furrows, and she very nearly stung him. Her wings practically were vibrating under her as her mouth came to close around his shoulder, however, and Toki cried out again in bliss, but muffled it by marking him just as he had her. "L-luh-love yuh-" her words were garbled, but legible enough as to what she was trying to say to him through her grasp on his shoulder.

He bit a little harder as her tight clench brought him over too and he tightened himself around her in response, giving a deep moan before he sighed and settled down, freeing her neck from his teeth with heavy breath.

As he flooded her, her body relaxed, instinctively receiving the seed as her beast purred inside of her. The beast was pleased with this mate that she had chosen for them- and the beast very nearly urged Toki to present her soul so something could come of the coupling.

Toki very quickly slammed the door on that, just as the glow of green began to grace her skin where her soul was starting to peek through. She sucked it back in rapidly with almost a panicked tremor, and released Tenne’s shoulder as she panted. She drew a hand up to her chest, and held it there shakily, willing her soul to stay in place. No- just because she’d merged with Papyrus and proven that not every time results in pregnancy doesn’t mean that she wanted to tempt fate. Nor… Nor was she ready for that. Not… Not yet. Not to risk it.

She shifted her hips against his, feeling the tug of his knot within her depths. Well, they’d be stuck face to face for a while. She hadn’t considered this when she’d wanted to do face to face.

He seemed in a state of mental recuperation, not reacting for a while as they lay there as one. It was a while before his eyes opened and he rumbled gently as he smiled at her. "Toki~" Was the word that slipped from his lips, a purr that carried all his love on it in the sweetest of whispers.

The so named woman shivered under him, her fingers trailing over her chest with a soft shuddering sigh. "Tenebris,” She murmurs softly. “Mm… I think I like face to face. It makes it more… Intimate.” Though it brought it’s own hassles in the fact that her beast seemed to think that it was a good time to reproduce. Her beast didn’t have the same sense of morals that Toki did. She just… did what felt right, apparently.

He chuckled gently and kissed her a few times before he sighed contently. "Intimate indeed. I think I came harder then I had before." He admitted with a quiet chuckle.

“She chuckles softly in return, hands still on her chest. It wouldn’t do anything if her soul truly cast out on it’s own, but picturing it there as a barrier did more than she expected it to do. “Mm… Now we just have to wait for you to deflate, before we can really cuddle up and get comfortable.”

"Do i need to deflate, dear?" he asked with a whine, setting his head in her fluff as he looked up at her with them big ol’ eyes of his.

"Don't you look at me like that with them big ol' eyes of yours," she giggled, and snuggled him close. Her hand slid from her chest to curl around his neck and she held him tightly. "Have you ever tried to get comfortable with a knot of your size buried in you? I doubt it. There are advantages and disadvantages to being as small as I am." She smooches the side of his head with a soft laugh.
"Mmh.... never had I thought my girth would have a downside of the sort. But it ensures my mate takes and bears my young, so I look past it."

That made her give a nervous laugh. "Haha... Yeah. I don't mind most times. It feels really nice. You're... Actually the biggest I've been with." She admits. "Though... You... You know nothing's going to come from just sex, right?" This Tenne was young... He had kids though, and was a doctor, so she hoped he knew that not just sex was required to make children.

He chuffed gently, "Yes, yes, I know." He then buried his face into her fluff and gave an appreciative nuzzle as he sighed. "I wouldn't force you to bear, my darling..." He murmured.

"It would be... very easy. For us to... To conceive." She swallows and closes her eyes with a soft sigh. "Human souls... They don't require intent to conceive, Tenne. My first children... were an accident because of that."

He chirped quietly and tilted his head lightly. "Oh?" He rumbled, before he sighed and nuzzled her. "Do you want me to attempt to pull out?" He then asked.

"No, not at all." She shakes her head. "But... soul play that involves touching our souls together and the like is... well, not something we can do." She rubs her fingers through his mane, and sighs softly. "I'm not... I'm not ready to take on babies again. It's..." She swallows. "Too soon for me yet." Too soon for her, too close to losing the children she'd strained to bring into the world. "I just want that to be out there, y'know? I... I've harbored too many secrets from you. I don’t want to keep more.” She shakes her head vehemently.

He nodded slowly, and then kissed her head a few times. "Even if you never carry my young, you're still my mate, and the mother of my sons, who both love you very much. I don't care if you never change your mind about this, I'll always love you."

Toki smiled faintly, and closed her eyes as she leaned into his kisses. "I know you do," she murmurs, "And... honestly, I want more children. I... Had a big family growing up. I wasn't lying when I said I had eight brothers younger. I lost one in the conflict, but... I still want a lot of children. But not... Not right now. Monsters live a long time- I need more time for my heart to heal. It... it hasn’t even been a year.” She sighs. “Give me time, Tenne. Time... Time doesn’t heal these sorts of wounds, but it makes them less painful. In time, maybe I’ll be ready to give Quinn and Kai a small hoard of siblings.”

"Time will tell, my darling." He agreed, before he set his head down and sighed tiredly, "Let us rest until I deflate... It might be a while..." He purred.

“Knowing you, it will be.” She chuckles softly, and settles down under him. Because of how the bed cradled her back, her wings weren’t even complaining at his weight pinning her down. Toki simply sighed contently, summoned a few bees to drape blankets over them, and then settled down to rest- and possibly sleep a little bit. They would have a busy week soon, she knew.
Chapter 108

Strider Notes: We learn that Toki is not cow smart. ALSO, Silver’s dad had surgery, so once we’re out of chapters that are already pre-done… We may end up taking a small hiatus. Silver has lots of things to manage irl, and until she gets her family life sorted out, we can’t sort out Toki’s family life. But! That does not mean TOTU is being abandoned.

By the end of the week, they had animals. Not just a few of them either. People had pitched in and donated, one or two cows or chickens or sheep from this farm and that farm here and there- and there were a lot of farms that had donated. Toki and Tenne had been given the designated ranch house for a reason. Thanks to the number of animal donations, the chicken coop was filled with chickens, the shed full of chicken feed to last the winter, the pasture and paddock was full of cattle, with even more being unloaded. There was even a big pen with several pigs in it, and one with a flock of sheep. The barn had a selection of dairy cattle in it, which would need to be milked daily, much to Toki’s joy.

A good chunk of the guards had shown up, using their canine nature to their advantage as they barked and gave chase and rounded up the animals, and it was a big help as they got them all settled. The only problem that Toki had discovered, was that they’d sent two bulls by accident. Toki and the group had done really good to keep them separated, but they still had the issue of where to keep the second one, because they honestly didn’t have the fencing to run two separate herds.

Toki draped both sets of her arms over the thick steel panels that they’d been given to act as a sort of runway as the animals were unloaded from the massive trucks and stock trailers that had been driven in. They’d reworked them into a temporary holding pen for the second bull. They just had to get the bull into the pen- which was not necessarily as easy as they had planned. He wanted nothing to do with being moved so much, and was letting them know by being as stubborn as he could possibly be. Toki was in the pen to shut the gate from inside once they locked him in, since she was the only one besides Tenne and the King or Queen who could move the panels on her own without straining to do it. They were severely heavy-duty panels, after all.

“And get kicked in the tits? Hell no!” There was some small wonder where Undyne got her language skills from, as the redheaded fish woman instead used a blunted spear she summoned to nudge the irate bull forwards a bit. “Go on, you great big hairy son of a bitch!”

“If he was a son of a bitch, he’d be a dog,” Toki laughed teasingly, glad that Kai and Quinn were off having fun with the chickens instead of listening to the adults have their adult talk as they tried to get the stubborn bull into the pen where Toki was.

Tenne had taken a break to chew a few leaves of mint as he kept an eye on his boys, but once he caught wind of Toki and Ariel having trouble with the bull he chuckled and made his way over to give them a hand. ”Having trouble, are we?” He called to the ladies.
“This big bastard doesn’t want to move, and he keeps shaking his horns at us any time we try to get a rope around his neck to try and guide him along.” Ariel replies to the big white beast as he strolls over. She gives the animal a jab in the ass again, and has to dodge a flying hoof as he lashes out and tries to kick her. “NOT TO MENTION THE DAMN FLYING HOOVES.”

Toki just laughs.

“And she’s just in the damn pen laughing at us, because she’s the only one who can move the damn panels without hurting herself!” The fish monster looks flustered and frustrated, and damn near ready to say ‘fuck it’ and let the damn bull roam free. “Stop laughing, damn it!”

Toki just laughs harder. “I can’t! Your rage fit is too funny!”

He laughed gently as he came closer, "So much trouble, eh? Perhaps I should help, then?" He offered with a casual, though seriously smug, tone.

Toki’s laugh cut off at his smug tone, and she shared a look with Ariel, not unlike two housewives plotting even if Ariel was single. The women turned to regard him, and as one arched their brows. “If you think you can do so much better,” Ariel says, “Then please, mister macho muscle man, be my guest.” She steps back from the irate bull, the circle of monsters acting as a living fence around him not breaking but only expanding to include her into it.

Toki snickers. “Oh boy. This is going to be amusing to watch.” She stretches her sweaty and aching wings, and settles in for the show. “I wish I had some popcorn.”

He popped his knuckles and sighed as he walked around to examine the bull, "Alright... let's see here." He rumbled as he peeled off his turtleneck, tossing it to Toki before he shifted his feet and growled. "Does anyone have a rope?" He spoke up.

“Oooh, tough guy, peeling off your shirt like that.” It left him in his tank top that he wore below it, but it was a warm day despite the snow outside on the ground. Well… And they’d all been doing a lot of work. Everyone was sweating from wearing layers in the cold. Toki held his shirt without issue all the same, and watched him quietly.

One of the dog guards who had taken up post near Ariel tossed Tenne a rope, and grimaced when the bull gave him what amounted to a death glare.

The bull was smaller than Tenne in height, but probably outweighed him by more than three quarters of a ton. He blew steam out of his nose as he eyed the rope, and kicked up slush as he waited to see what Tenne would do.

"Laugh it up, Toki." He chuffed, adjusting the rope in his hand before he gave the lasso a testing whirl, "Alright." He sighed, before he grinned and lunged at the bull.

"I’m not the one who’s going to freeze his nonexistent nipples off once your testosterone buzz wears off and you cool down.” She watches him and the bull begin to dance with an amused look, and pulls the gate a little wider. This was going to be a fight for the ages.

The bull met his lunge by dancing away, keeping his horns out of range of the lasso, and kicking out at him with his hind legs as he circled the perimeter of the living fence he’d been caged in.

"You are a wise-ass." He huffed at his mate before he grinned and swung the lasso for his real target. As soon as the hoof went up, Tenne sent the lasso flying and snared the bull's leg.

The bull gave an angry noise, and began to kick like crazy to try and get the rope off his leg, or get Tenne’s hands.

Toki snickered. “Better a wise-ass than a dumb-ass. I wouldn’t call this a smart-ass move, by the way.” Tenne would need new gloves after this, with the sort of beating they were going to take from the bull kicking and bucking and trying to rip the rope right out of Tenne’s hands.

"Mmhm. Come on, now he has four legs and I’m only one beast!” He announced before he gave a hard pull of the leg.

“Just don’t yank his leg clean off,” Toki snorts. She knows that’s well within the strength parameters for a blaster beast- they’re insanely strong, really, and Tenne is only a fraction of her power. However, in pure muscle strength, without her enhancing hers with magic, he outclassed her by far. Even though he was still a string bean compared to the Tenebris she had first gotten to meet. “That’s a nearly one ton bull- that’s a lot of cow that you’re tugging on.”

She watches as the bull gives a startled sound mid buck as he’s yanked on, losing his balance and toppling over with a solid thump.

Tenne gave a laugh and holding the rope taut, he came and sat on the bull’s neck, holding a horn tight before he grinned at Toki. "Ta-da~"

“Congrats!” She clapped with both sets of hands, and gave him a cheeky look. “Now how are you going to get a downed bull the last forty feet into the pen?” She was absolutely no help, more enjoying watching than attempting to assist. She was, after all, assigned gate duty since she’d ‘overworked herself’ flying around so much in these blasted winds that liked to slam her against things.

On a particularly windy day out on the plains, Toki couldn’t fly without extremely straining to do so. Ariel might have witnessed her doing a spectacular impression of a bug on a windshield against the side of the barn while they’d been rounding the milking cattle into the barn, and had banned her from stressing her wings.

"Some fancy rope work and we’ll get him up right quick." He retorted, taking the chance to take the rope from the bull’s leg and quickly get it around his head and horns. "And of course once I stop weighing him down."

“Oh goodness.” Toki snickered. “You might not need to. It looks like he’s plenty mad. You could probably just run in front of him and he’d probably give chase now.”

The bulls eyes were wide and practically rolling as he squirmed and kicked, trying to buck Tenne off of him as his sides heaved. The bull was, indeed, beyond angry. He opened his mouth and let out an enraged bellow that got half muffled by the snow under him.

"Oh boy.” He gasped. "Alright, as soon as I get off, scatter!” He got the rope off the bull's neck and held it tight as he quickly got off the bull. He didn’t hesitate before running for the fence that Toki was at, slipping through the gate and leaving himself quite ready to vault the fence.

“Run, Tenne, run!” Toki laughed. Watching him race through slush was always funny. Just about as funny as his cold toes dance when he stepped on the hardwood floors without his shoes on before they’d been heated by her magic for the day.

The bull lurched onto his hooves, and gave chase as the monsters around him scattered like leaves in the wind. He charged after Tenne, horns down and hooves churning up mud and snow. He ran right into the pen, and aimed to shove his horns into Tenne’s rear end if he could.
“Climb, Tenne, climb!” When the bull slid into the pen, Toki hefted the fence in her arms and began to pull it shut. They didn’t have a ‘gate’ so much as the panels had to be held closed and latched with thick chains to keep them from falling over, but it worked. Once she got it closed, she began the process of winding the chains shut, making sure they were tight and hooked and properly latched so that the bull’s large frame couldn’t just push it open if he got too rough with the fence. She did have some experience with animals, after all—though not much. Her experience with cattle was limited to her experiences back when she’d been human and had been a young child. It had been a while since she’d handled them, and she’d never handled them unsupervised—and never an angry one.

Tenne whooped and laughed as he made it to the opposite side of the pen and vaulted himself over, landing with a splash in the snow and mud before he stood tall again. "And he sticks the landing!"

Toki couldn’t stop her giggle. “Alright, mister landing. Check those fence chains for me, will you? We don’t want this big bastard getting out. Who knows if we’d be able to get him back in before he-” Toki got shoved into the fence, making the unfinished chains strain to keep the panels closed. They held though, which was good and bad.

For a moment, Toki wasn’t really sure what happened, or what had shoved her into the fence. And then the burning feeling of agony slid through her left wing, and up into her ribs as the thing behind her gave a shove and something slid deeper into her. Nearly two thousand pounds of pressure shoving against her when she hadn’t expected it… She didn’t have time to brace her magic or defenses.

Bright green poured down her back from the massive hole shoved through the sensitive membrane of her left wing, and from where the large black horn had her wing pinned forcibly to her back via stabbing. The bull had turned, quick as lightning, and directed his rage at Tenne on the closest living thing that was around him. That specific living thing happened to be her.

She felt briefly like a bug on display with one of her wings pinned to herself, and she couldn’t stop the pained cry from leaving her as the bull shook his head, driving her deeper into the panels. Her hands fisted onto the fence, and she tried to pull herself up and off of his horn as he beat at her back and rattled his horn around inside of her body.

There was a rush of movement, and then there were monsters flooding up and over the metal panels to try and get at the bull and pull it off of Toki before it could do much more damage to her.

Tenne had turned to see Toki be pinned and he snarled before he lunged back into the pen, scrambling noisily over the top of the metal panels as the other monsters did the same. He was faster though. He didn’t exactly think about sparing the bull at this point, only protecting his mate from the threat that was hurting her so badly. Without hesitation on his part, the narrow eyed monster lunged and landed onto the bull’s back before sinking his teeth into the back of it’s neck. He bit down with every last ounce of strength he had to protect his mate, biting through fur and gristle and fat to get to what he needed done.

The bone of the bulls’ neck was easy to find, and for someone with Tenne’s jaw strength, very easy to break. It didn’t even break—it crushed under his bite, the animal giving a weak bellow as his legs dropped out from under him, unable to support his body or anything else. His horn slid out of Toki’s back, covered in green blood, and he slumped lifelessly to the ground.

Toki clung to the fence, too startled over what happened to even resume climbing out. Her wing had a massive hole in it, and her back as well. The one for her back was deep and curving upwards inside of her body. Her free hand slid to her back, and pressed into the wound there to try and staunch the bleeding.
His teeth retracted from the bull and without bothering to wipe the blood off his face. He moved to catch her and used his turtleneck to cover her wound. "I shouldn't have turned my back." He growled quietly as he nuzzled her. "I'm sorry, Toki."

“No, it’s… it’s okay.” She wasn’t sure that hurting her had warranted the animal’s death… but there was no taking it back now, not without loading a save. She didn’t want to muck with those unless she absolutely had to, and this wasn’t one of those times. “It wasn’t your fault. I wasn’t thinking. Of course he’d go after me. He was… he was angry.” She grimaced as he used his turtleneck to put pressure on the wound. It didn’t feel like it had punctured anything important, thankfully, but there was blood pouring out of it at a steady rate. Her wing dripped with it too, but not as badly. Toki reached up with shaky hands, and started to undo the chains on the fence so they could get out.

Ariel came to the fence, a firm look on her face. She’d settled into her guard mindset, apparently, to help keep order. She took the chains from Toki, got them undone, and several other monsters and herself proceeded to move the panel out of the way so Tenne could take Toki out and away from the dead bull. “I called the Queen.” She said. “She’ll be here as soon as she can to heal Toki.”

"Thank you, Ariel." He looked up at the aquatic woman, and then gently hoisted Toki up in his arms. "I'm sorry I killed him... but if I hadn't, I don’t know if you would have survived." He whined gently.

“It’s okay, Tenne.” She swallowed faintly. Being hoisted up made the turtleneck loosen some, and blood gushed out with the new position, soaking the front of Tenne’s tank top as her veins throbbed. “We still have the better tempered bull… All the same, if he was this aggressive, then there’s no telling who he could have hurt or when.” It was better if it was her. Toki was tough, and getting hooked with a horn wouldn’t kill her. Other monsters with less HP than she had? Not as tough. They probably would have been scooping up a pile of dust from the muck.

Ariel motions Tenne to the farmhouse. “Take her to the deck- Hey!” She calls to a small collection of monsters, “I need some jackets on the porch, stat! Make a surface to lay Miss Nara on, while we wait for Queen Toriel to arrive.”

The monsters scurried to obey, gathering jackets and blankets and other things to lay on the porch for Tenne to rest Toki on.

Tenne brought Toki over to the porch and gently laid Toki down facedown, before he pressed the turtleneck into the wound. "Tsk, nasty bastard... good riddance." He hissed quietly.

“He was just an animal, Tenne,” Toki murmurs softly, whining faintly as he pressed down on the wound. It hurt, and blood seeped between his fingers in a steady gush. It hadn’t been a small horn that had stabbed her, after all. “An animal with a foul temper. Hhh… Hah… Did you know that… cows kill more people than sharks do on average per year?” It was a random fact from her world- she didn’t know if it held true here or not, but she would assume so. Toki’s savaged wing twitched sorely, the weeping wound ripping faintly as the gossamer surface tried to instinctively flex away from the pain.

He sighed as he looked at the damage to her wing. "My darling hornet..." He murmured gently, wanting to touch but knowing better than to do so. Tenne stood up after giving her a gentle touch to her head. "Tori will be here soon, I have to go check on the boys, alright?"

“I would change your shirt first.” She grimaced slightly. “Maybe your pants too. You’ve got blood all over you. If Kai and Quinn see you, they’re going to freak out. They’re going to freak out if they see me… So maybe don’t let them see me, okay?”
"Mmh..." He then lifted his head, "Ariel, would you make sure the boys don’t eat any chickens?"

"The boys weren’t eating chickens last I saw them, but I’ll go check on them." The fish woman nodded and took off for the coops.

Toki gave a faint smile, but it faded as her back throbbed. She bent one of her arms behind her to put more pressure on the wound. She was starting to get light headed. “I feel kinda dizzy…” She mutters softly.

"Take it easy." He murmured, stooping down and kissing her head. "I love you, Toki. Toriel is almost here."

“Hope she gets here fast, before all of my blood is gone,” She mutters hazily. The kiss registers, but she simply closes her eyes so she doesn’t have to deal with the dizziness. “Go change, Tenne. I’m not going anywhere. Toriel will be here by the time you’re done, I’m sure. You take so long sometimes…” She teased just faintly so he didn’t fret so much.

He whined at that and gave her a gentle nuzzle, "I'd rather do that once Tori arrives."

"And arrived I have, Tenne dear." The beast lifted his head as the queen approached quickly, a gentle look on her face despite the worry in the air. "I heard that Toki had a run in with a nasty beast, so I did my best to hurry..."

“Not so much a nasty beast, as a big ass bull with a nasty ass temper.” Toki murmured into her makeshift bed. “… I realize I have bled all over these people’s coats. I’m so sorry to all who gave me coat pillows. But yeah. I have a big hole and it hurts a fair bit, and my wing hurts too and I’m a bit dizzy so I think I lost a little bit much blood.”

With Toriel here, Tenne slipped inside to change his clothes.

"You bleeding a little on our coats is the least of our problems." Tori assured her as she knelt at her side, calling up her magic so she could begin to heal her.

Toki couldn’t help the soft snickers that left her. “I suppose so. Hey… Heyyy this is the second time I’ve been healed by you. And in less than a year too… I really need to be more careful.” She knew the Queen had limited magic- no one in this realm came even close to the sheer quantity of magic that she had. Toki had an absurd amount of magic for as small as she was. But that was the nature of being Balance. Or rather, a Frankensteined version of Balance. “Hey… Queen Toriel? If it doesn’t all heal up, did you bring bandages?” She wasn’t all fried from the inside out like last time Toriel had healed her, so it was possible that Toriel could heal her. But there was a lot of skin and flesh that she had to re-knit together, as well as weaving her wing back into one solid piece so she could fly again.

"Tenne is a father, even if I hadn't brought my first aid kit, I assure you that there would have been one at our disposal not twenty feet inside." The queen laughed gently, before she shook her head gently. "You will not need worry about your recovery, I am still capable of fully healing even a nasty wound like this." She tutted.

“Mkaaay.” Toki drawled. “My wing too? I like to fly. It would suck to not be able to fly again. Then I’d be like my summons, Sugar. Sugar used to be able to fly, but she got her wings torn off in a battle. It was bad.” Blood loss made her lips loose, it seemed.

"Of course, my dear...” Toriel soothed, her hands moving over Toki’s back as she worked. The damage was deep and extensive, but not beyond her skill to heal. This was a wound she could manage. “It will be healed as if it was never hurt in the first place."
"Awesome," She drawled. Her four arms shifted and spread out slightly. The wound on her back was feeling better and better in small increments, as the flesh knit back together and her organs were healed.

"Such damage... it's a good thing indeed you have such kind people to help you when you're down for the count..." She sighed gently, before she smiled warmly. "Almost done."

"Wooo~" Toki cheered faintly, muffled by the jackets. "Then I can get back to tending to the animals."

“That might not be the best idea with as much blood as you’ve lost, boss lady.” One of the monsters laughed gently. “Why don’t you just sit down and relax while we finish rounding up the cows?”

“But I don’t like to just sit and do nothing.” Toki’s brow furrows, unseen.

"You're going to stay here and rest, Toki." Tenne stepped out of the house, now in a pair of pants with a dark print on them, and a new tank top. "I'll keep working with the herds, you're going to rest and let Tori take care of you."

"You wanna know something cool?" Toki gave him a faint grin as she tilted her head. "If I just sit here and rest and everyone goes off to work… Then there’s no one here to make sure I sit here and rest." She gives a cheeky grin to him, feeling quite proud of herself for her deduction.

"..." With that, he turned his head and gave a loud whistle that brought his sons running.

They looked up at him when they reached him, and he gave a small gesture to his mate. "Keep an eye on your mother, my pups. Make sure she doesn't get up."

And with that, both pups nearly tackled Toki over.

Toriel’s hands fluttered worriedly. “Gently boys, gently!” She fussed slightly. “Her wing membrane is healed, but it is still fragile until the healing fully sets!”

Toki merely grunted and lay there, hoping that the boys didn’t detect the scent of blood and pain probably coating her. “I’m okay, Toriel. I can reinforce my defenses- these little hooligans won’t hurt me any.”

Tenne chuckled gently, swelling in pride of his victory.

Kai sniffed quietly, and then sat up. His eye lights dilated, and then he turned upset eyes onto his dad. “Why does Mama smell like blood?” He demands tartly to his father, loathe to keep her pinned with her smelling like so much blood. It was like the floor incident- but so much more.

"She saved your dear father from the wrath of a bull." Tenne’s chest puffed up proudly as he peered at his son. “I’m letting her rest and recover from her amazing heroism.”

To say the least, that had Quinn's eyes gleaming as he nuzzled his face into Toki’s fluff. "Nyeh!"

“Remember your words, Quinn.” Toki reminds him gently as she shifts and sits up, regardless of Tenne possibly grumbling at her. She’d been working with the boy, trying to help him speak better beyond just ‘nyeh’ and ‘Mama’. “It was hardly heroism, Tenne. Don’t lie to them. I wasn’t paying attention and the bull got me, and you saved me from the bull.”

Kai puffed air at his father, and huffed slightly. “Daddy, don’t lie. Lies are bad.”
"Well I don't want your attention stolen away, my darling. I rather someone take care of you rather than praise me for my rather beastly efforts."

"We're blaster beasts." Toki rolls her eyes blearily at him. "Beastly efforts are what we do." She props Quinn in her secondary arms, before shakily reaching out to haul herself up with the railing. "I mean, I threatened the king for choking you out that one time. And kinda intimidated him."

Toriel blinked at her. "Is that why he looks away whenever he thinks you're giving him a firm look?" She inquires curiously.

"Yep." Toki owned up to it too. She and her beast had come to terms with establishing dominance over the King and they would not be swayed. Her legs however would, and she wobbled as she got to her feet, not unlike a calf just trying to walk. "Whoa hey, who turned the deck into Jell-O?" She jokes faintly.

Tenne was quickly at her side, urging her back down to continue resting. "No, no, go back down. You need to be resting."

Toki locked her fist on the railing to keep herself from being eased back down, and felt her pupils contracting as she peered up at Tenne, giving him an instinctual sharp eyed look. "If I'm going to rest, I'm not going to do it out in the freezing cold while covered in my own slowly freezing blood."

She says firmly, managing to keep her feet. Her beast didn’t necessarily want to be seen wounded- or weakened- around so many other monsters either. That was a beastly response though, one she knew she should ignore but found herself incapable of doing.

Kai took a step back. "Ooo. Daddy's getting the stink eye."

He opened his mouth, and then closed it as he nodded slowly. "Allow me to help you inside..."

"Please." Toki nods her head slowly, and leans into his grasp. Her wings fold behind her, the green covering the bloodstains, and she feels her head crash into his bicep as her balance makes her wobble. "I just need to eat something while my body regenerates. I'll be back and good as new before you know it."

He nuzzled her and whined quietly. "My mate, I love you..." He told her as he led her inside.

Toki kept a firm hold on Quinn, with Kai following at her heels. "I know you do. I love you too."

She butts his arm with her head in a gentle way, and steers him for the kitchen. "Tally ho, my handsome guide. I need cocoa, and then I shall rest."

"As you wish, my darling." He purred happily, carrying her with a light bounce in his step into the kitchen.

She grunted as he dragged her along, but let him tote her into the kitchen. She took one of the chairs and sat down once she was close enough, before slowly scooting it towards the counter. Quinn was giggling in her lap as she went, and she figured he thought she was silly, but she didn’t care. "Alright. Now I wont fall over with a chair. Just gotta get to the counter now." Boy, being a creature with blood wasn’t fun when it came to blood loss.

"Oh no, you stay put. This time you have no excuse." He tutted.

"But... I'm on a chair." Her teeth pucker at him in a pout. "And I make good cocoa..."

"Tell me what you need and I'll be sure to provide, my darling." He purred.
“Well… water and milk in a pot, and cocoa powder, sugar, vanilla, cinnamon… I can boil it myself. And a spoon for stirring?” She blinks. “Mugs for pouring. I’m sure you need to warm up too, mister tank top in the snow. I’m surprised your shield hasn’t frozen off.”

“Adrenaline will do that to you.” He rumbled as he collected everything into the pot as she named them off. “Ill probably get really cold later and need my perfect little heater to warm me up.”

“Adrenaline gives you the shakes,” She chirps cheerfully, and sets Quinn down to take the pot once everything had been added. “Mmmnnehhh gimme more Vanilla please.”

Kai fetched it for her willingly, and handed it over.

Toki added more splashes, and then started to warm it slowly as the pot rested on her lap. Her arms trembled faintly, and she crossed them over her chest. “I won’t have a problem warming you up. My magic is fine- it’s the blood in my body that’s all over the ground and the bull and your clothes and the deck. And all of those coats.”

“Well I’ll let it sink in and worry about it when it comes around... I’ve got more important things to worry about. Like how much blood is now outside of your body than inside.” He tutted.

“Ohhh, this is nothing.” She hums softly. She glances at the boys, and then hums. “Can you both go get me a blanket and a new shirt please?”

The younger boy nodded, and both raced off up the stairs.

Once they were alone, Toki’s eyes slid to Tenne. “Trust me- I’ve had worse.” She promises. “When I went from human to monster, I vomited blood. Lots of it. It wasn’t fun. Not to mention monthly visits from Lucifer’s Waterfall. Definitely one thing I don’t miss- though the five day heats every so many months is kind of hellish too. Well… for you, anyway.” She glances up at him with a smug smirk, and stirs the cocoa.

“You make it sound like I don’t enjoy when you have nothing more than a carnal craving for your alpha~” He teased, before he sighed and moved closer to nuzzle her, and wrap his arms around her once more. Okay wow, he was starting to feel cold now, pardon him while he nuzzled into her fur. "I love you, Toki.” He murmured softly.

Toki smiled, and patted his head gently. She could feel his skin chilling, and it didn’t take much to let her magic wash over him, like bathing in a hot spring. “You enjoy it just fine- but I don’t think you enjoyed it as much when it went for longer than… What was your longest heat again? Two days?”

The different worlds had different heats. “You were walking pretty funny after it, you know, and you weren’t even the one getting speared, mister alpha.” She rolls her eyes sassily. Her beast rumbled softly inside of her. She was dominant in her own right.

"I'm a defective product. Usually male heats last long enough to sate more than one female's heat.” He murmured into her fluff, before he mewedled happily. "Oh my goodness your warmth is absolutely wonderful~"

Toki snorts gently, and presses an affectionate nuzzle against the top of his head. “You’re hardly defective, Tenne. It might be because we’re from different worlds. Where I come from, heats vary. Here, short ones seem to be the norm, from what I’ve heard from the women gossiping.” She sighs gently. “I’m glad you enjoy my warmth though. I try to keep the house warm for you and the boys.”

"Mmh..." He lifted his head enough to look up at her with a relaxed look on his face, probably a result of the ever so enjoyable warm up from Toki. "I know I love it~ and no doubt the boys are with me when I say that snuggling heated fluff is the best possible thing."

Toki snorts, and taps a finger on the bridge of where his nose should be. “And just what would you and the boys do if I ever decided get a haircut?”

"Nooooooooooooo." Was the long, drawn out noise that he proceeded to make next, before he buried his face again. "Don’t take too much off?" He whined.

“What if I shave it all off?” She teases him cheekily. “Go for the silky smooth skin feel? Smooth and soft like a baby's skin," She grins. "Completely hairless. Could use my fur and weave it into a rug or a coat, like Hitsu does."

Tenne's caterwauling was joined by Kai as the elder picked up on the conversation of shaving Toki bald. He had a blanket in hand, and was dragging it towards her with a pout on his face.

Quinn, of course, had no idea what was going on, but made the same sounds as his brother and father as he made his way over to crawl into Toki's lap.

Toki took the shirt that Quinn brought her, and lifted the simmering cocoa pan up and out of the way as the whimpering pup shoved his way into her lap. She laughed, and slumped into the chair. “Alright, alright. I won’t shave all of my hair off. I wonder how long it’ll get. I might have to start braiding it soon, if it’s not going to stop growing.”

Tenne purred at that and lifted his head. "I can help with that~"

“Do you even know how to braid?” She inquires of him gently. “Also, cups please, before I spill cocoa on you all.”

"Yes, I know how to braid.” He rolled his eyes. “I wouldn't have offered otherwise.” He chuckled. Tenne slipped away from her and went to get a few mugs down for her.

“I would love to know where you learned how to braid, when you have such a short mane.” Toki took the mugs from him, and began to fill them shakily with her hands. She set them on the table, and then sent the empty pan with a couple bees over to the sink to be left there for later cleaning. “Alright kids, off of me for now and you can have your cocoa.”

Kai huffed, but grabbed his from the table. “Thanks Mama.”

"I might have a short mane, but His Fluffiness has all the mane one could ask for." Tenne laughed, "Tori taught me in case I ever grew mine out."

Toki snorts, and shoves a mug of cocoa into Tenne’s hands. “Can your mane even grow out longer than it is now?” She inquires curiously as she takes her own and sips at it. Her eyes drift closed, and she lets her body enjoy it.

He took the mug and chuffed at her. "I'm an alpha, Toki. I can grow a mane that would make Asgore jealous."

She wasn’t sure what being an alpha had anything to do with it, truly. She lifted a brow at him, and drank her cocoa with amusement at him. “I somehow doubt this. I’m the true alpha of fluffiness here, and you shant take that title from me.” She wiggles her brows at him above her mug.

"Challenge accepted.” He waggled his in return and took a long, appreciative drink of his cocoa.
“We’ll see.” She gave him a smug look, and simply enjoyed her cocoa as her body worked to replenish itself. “Mm… good cocoa. On a side note, you’re going to look a little ridiculous with just your neck covered in a rug of fur, if you can in fact manage to grow one.”

“I can. I remember my Father's mane was quite magnificent.”

“I’m going to call you the rug monster.” She informs him teasingly. “You’re literally going to grow yourself a shawl of hair. You’ll be putting old ladies and their knitting out of business all around the world.”

"How dare you accuse me of such a crime?" He snickered shamelessly. "Of course, I mean..." Though before he finished what he was planning to say, he set down his mug of cocoa and reached out to clasp his hands over the sides of Kai’s skull to muffle his hearing. "I'm already kind of a rug monster, just a different kind of rug monster~"

Toki couldn’t stop from inhaling a whole mouthful of cocoa instead of swallowing it, and she proceeded to choke and sputter all over herself as Quinn tossed himself from her lap to avoid getting splattered in the spray. Her eyes popped wide and her lungs rebelled. “Oh~” She hacked a cough again, lungs burning from the warm liquid that should very much not have been there. “Oh my god, you d-didn’t just say that.” Her voice carried laughter despite her sputtering.

He chuckled as he winked in a manner so smug that it was almost audible.

She flushed a bright green, and smacked him with one of her wings. “I can’t believe you said that around the children. Shame on you.”

"Kai didn't hear it, and I’m sure Quinn wont understand nor remember it even being said.” He chuckled, patting Kai's head before returning to his mug of cocoa.

“All the same, I can’t believe you, Tenne. What if Quinn does remember hearing it?” She shakes her head and sighs at herself. “Well, I’m covered in blood and cocoa. I need a shower, and this blanket and shirt need washed because I sputtered on them.” She was going to change behind the blanket, and slip into a new fresh shirt, but apparently that wasn’t going to happen.

“Hear what?” Kai blinked up at his dad. "What did you not want me to hear? Was it a secret? Am I gonna be a big brother maybe?” There was a hopeful ring to his voice.

It was Tenne's turn to slightly choke on his cocoa. He coughed several times before he managed to clear his throat. "No, Kai. And go shower, Toki, I'll wash the boys after and put them to bed later tonight, but there's something I have to do before I can shower.”

“I'll just wash them with me. Not supposed to be alone anyhow.” She shrugs. They would sneak in and keep an eye on her wobbly ass if she didn’t, and she’d rather they be productively cleaning their little bodies rather than trying to peep around the curtain to see if she had keeled over and died. “What have you got to do?” Her head felt less foggy with the chocolate working it’s wonders, but it would take a day before she was back up to snuff.

"Just a little last bit of business with one of our bulls." He answered simply. Easily it could be translated as he was going to do something about the bull they had killed.

Her mouth popped open into a small ‘o’ shape, and she nodded. “Ah, I see. Well, put on a shirt and a coat first. I can’t fix it if it freezes and falls off.” She wasn’t sure if the ground was too cold and frozen for him to dig a grave for the bull, but she wasn’t going to tell him that. He was a strong monster- and beasts were generally good at digging.
"Shirt I will do." He rumbled gently, kissing her head and finishing his cocoa before he proceeded to jog upstairs so he could grab a shirt from the hamper and pull it over his torso. He made his way back down stairs and waved to her and the boys as he stepped into his shoes and started outside.

Toki watched him go, and shook her head quietly, sighing softly. She and the boys all finished their cocoa, before they- Kai more so than Quinn- helped her upstairs to the bathroom.

She got them all undressed, and then settled everyone into the shower, where she did her best to keep from slipping while she scrubbed both boys down and made sure they were spotless from running around out in the chicken coop. They didn’t need to be tracking in chicken poop and getting it all over the new house just quite yet.

It was maybe an hour later that Tenne returned to their home, though he had made a beeline to the kitchen and then to the back yard, seeming to be doing something that was probably going to end up useful to Toki and the boys in the long run.

Toki had settled onto the couch, and was covered in blankets. The boys had settled in front of the couch, and were in an intense game of checkers, which the puzzle loving Quinn seemed to adore. Toki was watching them passively, but was for the most part simply resting. Watching Tenne bustle back and forth through the house prompted her to sit up a little bit though, and squint curiously at the back door. He’d forgotten to shut it, so cold wintry winds were blowing right into the house again.

After a few trips though, he seemed to notice the accidental 'leaving the door open' he would do, so he aimed his tail to hook the door and pull it closed behind him, much to her relief.

While he did his hustle and bustle, there was a soft hum in Toki's head.

'You know... This is really nice... I never could have imagined living with Monsters was so wonderful... You were right, Tokiko.' Sequoia sounded content. Her voice seemed much healthier than it had been the past long while as she seemed to be relaxing right alongside Toki on the couch, in that warm bundle of blankets. 'Not counting what... happened... with that bull... ow...'

‘Yeah, I know. Living with monsters is great. Honestly, I prefer it to living with humans. Humans are so... self absorbed and rude sometimes.’ She closes her eyes with a soft sigh, and stimulates her secondary hands on the material of the couch by rubbing her fingertips on them. ‘The bull was an accident. I tried to keep as much pain from you as I could though. How are you feeling? You feel like you’re feeling much better than you have been.’

'You did a good job, but I don’t care about taking pain for you, despite that... risk we took in the past. And yes, I am feeling better... I think I’ve finally reached that point in adjusting where it's finally starting to reach that steady feeling of peace. I'm starting to get maternal instincts back.' She admitted with a quiet laugh.

‘I’m glad you’re feeling better, Sequoia. Tenne and I have been worried about your radio silence.’ She peeks her eye open as she watches Tenne bustle through the house again, and sends a couple of her hornets to chase after him and latch onto him, to act like little body warmers for him. He got cold far too easy, and running around out in the ice doing who knows what would make him frostier than a snowman. ‘Back? You’ve had them for a while. I just think you’re starting to realize you have Toki sighs and snuggles into the couch. ‘Don’t worry about the horn I took. My body should be recovered in time for your date this weekend, no worries. You might not be able to get frisky with him yet on account of blood pressure shifting, but I’m sure you both can enjoy your evening all the same.’

That got a soft laugh from Sequoia. ‘Perhaps we’ll just talk over water if you think it would be wiser than drinking.’ she hummed.

‘I think alcohol is going to be hard to get unless you go to Grillby’s.’ Toki chuckles to her mental companion. ‘You know... You've changed a whole lot since the barrier broke. And I think it's a good change, you know that?’

‘I'm not Guano-Nutso anymore.’ Sequoia laughed, ‘But a very good change indeed.’

‘Not only that, I think that much power was just... corrupting.’ Toki gives a pleasant hum, and watches Tenne dart through the house again. ‘... What do you think he’s doing? He’s running through the house like a headless chicken.’

‘I don't know, but was it just me or did he smell smoky?’ Sequoia then asked with a hum. ‘I think he's doing something big with the bull.’

Toki opened her mouth and discretely huffed in a deep breath, inhaling his scent the next time he tore through like a bat out of hell. Huh. He did indeed smell smoky. ‘He smells like he’s been rolling in soot.’ She says. ‘What on earth could he be doing with the bull? Burning it?’

‘... Or better. Feel up to going outside again?’

‘I don’t really feel like moving, to be honest.’ She shivered and nestled better into the blankets she’d been packed in. Toki sighed and closed her eyes, before shifting one of her primary arms under her. She sits up, and eases the blanket off of her body.

Kai glances at her from where they were playing checkers. “Mama? What are you doing?”

“Just going to see what your Dad is up to.” She says lightly to him. She eases onto her feet, and gets herself upright.

“Okay.” He nods.

‘Might not want to move, but I’ll do it anyways.’ She padded closer to the door, and poked her head out to see what he was up to. She had no shoes on, and had no desire to put them or a coat on, so she stayed in the doorway, peeking out at Tenne.

Tenne was standing with a few of the other large-built males of the village- mostly some of the dog and wolf guards. They were all around a large fire with a spit roast set up, flames licking high into the air as monsters fanned air into the coals.

In the center of the fire pit, speared on the spit roast, was the bull. He was skinned, gutted, and without his head and legs. The body was speared on the spit, slowly being rotated over the hot fire as the males took turns rotating it, while others fanned the flames or fed wood into the coals.

Toki blinked, and huffed in a soft breath. Well, that explained what he was doing, and why he smelled like smoke. She glanced at the snow, and debated if she wanted to trek out into it barefoot or not, and if Tenne would absolutely have a fit if she did. She eventually huffed, and simply stepped out onto it. Without all of the magic from all of the souls to bolster her body, she felt the cold more intensely, and boosted her defense to keep it from dropping as she shuffled slowly out the door and into the snow.

Toki looked at the gutted bull as it twisted around, and shivered as she saw inside of it. Gross- but this was how they did it back in the olden days, she knew. “So this is what you’ve been up to,” She comments lightly as she pads out into the snow.

"Hello, Toki." Tenne greeted with a smile, coming over to her to give her loving nuzzles and kisses in greeting. "Oh yes, we’ve got plenty of time before it gets dark, and the heat from the fire has started to melt a nice ring around the set up."

Toki meets his kisses and nuzzles with a soft smile, returning them chastely, before flicking her gaze over to the fire. “So why did you all decide to… roast… That is the bull, I’m assuming?”

"He's huge, he could feed a lot of mouths." He rumbled in reply.

“That’s very true. I felt all of his hugeness when he shoved all of his mass into his horns in my back.” She rubbed her back lightly, and grimaced faintly. “Well, did you at least put some spices on the meat? Or are you just smoking it?”

"Of course we did!" He held up a few spices he brought out, as did the others. "We found a rather nice mix that would go well with the bull's meat."

“I see.” She blinked. “Well, testosterone makes the meat taste weird, so I hope you all used a lot.” She settled into his side with a quiet smile. She shivers, and ruffles her wings out behind her, before wiggling so she could stand on the top of Tenne’s shoes. Her toes were cold. She wasn’t technically supposed to be running amok outside after all, but she wanted to see what they were up to. “I’m tempted to flood the area with bees. It’s too cold.”

He noticed her lack of shoes after she made the comment about the cold and he puffed his cheeks at her. "Oh Toki." He nuzzled her as she came close and began to waddle her back towards the house, keeping her feet on his with delicate precision of each step. "Why don’t you have your shoes, my silly queen?" He tutted.

"I didn’t have the energy to put on a jacket or shoes. Coming out was sort of spur of the moment,” She huffs, and wiggles in his hold. “Noooo don’t penguin waddle to the house. I don’t need to go inside. You can stand on the bottoms, I’ll stand on the tops, yeah?” She gives him a sulky pout, and wiggles back against his turtleneck. The hard shape of his shield pressed against her back and was slightly unpleasant.

"Toki why do you do this to yourself?” He sighed. He turned his back to the group and carefully moved her around. He turned her around on his feet, and then promptly pushed his turtleneck over her so her body was flush to his, sharing his warmth, "Silly Bee." He purred sweetly.

"I," she declares, "am the silliest bee and I am proud to wear that crown." She grins up at him as she pops her head through his neck hole. Her mane spreads out and basically fills his shirt as she shares her warmth with him and they keep each other warm. "As for why I do this to myself... Because I have impulses and sometimes I lack the ability to control them?" She blinks up at him. "I'm also not used to being so... Vulnerable yet." She'd gotten used to being basically invincible from damage when she had all of that magic. Now that she was just a Balance soul... She had to adjust.

The heat made him coo happily and he wrapped his arms around her, snuggling her for a moment before he turned again to face the fire and everyone else. "So you need big Papa beast to protect you? Awww~" He teased as he returned to the fire where the bull was being rotated steadily.

Him calling himself Papa made her soul squeeze, and not in a good way. She missed Tenebris then. It had taken her so long to build up a relationship with the stoic and grumpy old man... She missed her Papa.

All the same, Toki managed a lopsided grin as he turned around, and shifted in his sweater. "I dunno about a protector, Big Daddy," she purred teasingly, knowing he would flush brightly, "but I sure don't mind using you for a living heating pad."

He chuckled and leaned down to nip her cheek, "Says the literal heating pad I've got pressed against my chest~" He purred, his arms wrapping around her and giving a squeeze.

She snorted as he nipped her cheek, and raised a brow at him. She snaked her slightly chilly fingers around his back and slid them along his lower back. "And just what would you ever do if I ran out of magic to heat you up with?" She had been familiar with magi-drain before.

He squeaked sharply and shuddered, before he squeezed her again. "I'd never force you to come close to running short of magic, my darling. If you came close to running out of heat, I'd simply have you stop, and I'd heat you up myself."

Toki chuckles softly. "I've dealt with Magi-drain before, believe it or not." She knew her magical stores here were damn near God like to these monsters- much to her displeasure- so it was likely he might not believe her. "It's definitely not a fun thing to experience." She chirps cheerfully, and gives him a lopsided grin. "You do know though that if there ever arose a situation where I had to use all of my magic, I would." She'd done it with the barrier- it wasn't hard to envision it happening other times. "Though, I'd love to see your attempts at warming me up~"

"Yes, well... we already had a preview of how far you're willing to go with that." He sighed, before chuckling and gently nipping her mane a few times. "I'm a clever beast, I'd make something work~" He purred into her ear.

She blushed, and dipped her head down to nip at his shield. Her fingers, unseen by anyone but definitely felt by Tenne, slid down and goosed his backside from inside of his pants. "You're a tease sometimes. There are guards with amazing hearing like... Not even ten feet from us."

"Mmmh~ you're no better, coming in here and commandeering my feet." He teased as he poked her sides, before he gave a pleased chuckle and gently rested his palms on her hips. "You're getting pudgy, it's adorable~"

"I'm allowed to commandeer your feet, given how often you like to play with mine. If I had to guess, I'd say you might have a little thing for them," She lifts a brow at him. His following words and hands on her hips make her blink, however. "I'm getting pudgy?" She glanced down at her middle. Well, she supposed she was pudging up a bit. Her middle was thickening again- which was good. She'd lost a lot of weight after the incident with the Barrier. You could no longer count her ribs, or stick your fingers between them, which was a good thing. "I guess I am. Huh. Weird. I've never been a pudgy person before." She had a small roll of pudge on her belly and along her hips now.

"Well I love pudgy, and you are especially adorable when you're pudgy, my plump little honeybee." He cooed as he gave her hips a wiggle.

Toki flushed a bright green. "Oh boy. Are you going to try and fatten me up, hm?" She wondered if this was another blaster beast thing. She figured a healthy female was probably on the plumper side- probably for nourishing young. Her beast rumbled in her head in agreement that yes, it was very much good for a female to be plump so she could nurse her litter.

"As long as you don’t mind it. Fat pups are healthy pups." He purred as he moved to rub her stomach. "And a plump Mama means that she can feed her young without issue~" He purred, "plus more for me to hold onto when I take you." He was such a shameless fucker.

Her blush brightened, and she chuckled softly. “Oh boy. Ahah… Well, I’m not really feeding any young right now.” She points out, “But I suppose more padding would help me keep warm in the winter. Besides, all the flying I do will help me burn it off in the summer.”

He cooed happily and nuzzled her cheek, "You would be warmer, yes~ young perhaps might come later on in life, but warmth is a plus right now."

“Young later;” She replied lightly, hiding a nervous twitch of her teeth against his chest. She shifted against him, and gently flicked her wings inside of his shirt. “Warmth is definitely a plus now though. I didn’t think it would be so… cold out here on the plains.”

"It's far more open. The winds are strong out here, and it brings the bite of the cold with it, my dear, so you're fortunate and well protected where you are now, aren't you?"

“Very.” She laughs, and nips his collarbone, before turning around in his shirt so she could actually see the fire pit behind her. “I would like to go flying in the winter winds once I’m recovered.”

"I bet that will be fun indeed. Perhaps on a low-breeze day so you don’t have to strain anything to keep yourself steady, yes?" The doctor hummed.

“I wouldn’t mind flying on a high breeze day either. I’d like to see what it’s like, and know what I can do. It’s not like I can hit anything except the broad side of the barn flying around out here.” She chuckles. She’d already done that- and only Ariel had seen it.

"I imagine that would be quite the impact though, ouch." He rumbled. "But I’m sure at least one boy would want to go flying with you when you did."

“Oh probably. The boys both like to fly with me- if they can’t fly with me, then they can fly with Clover.” She quirks a smile up at him, and wiggles her shoulders against him. “Clover’s got stronger wings than I do.”

"Oh yes, I remember her." A nervous chuckle escaped him, "Rather large girl wasn't she?"

“IT absolutely bamboozles me that she terrifies you so much.” She laughs softly. “She’s about fifteen feet tall. She’s actually really nice.” She says. “Well… nice in a grouchy grandma sort of sense.”

"Yes exactly, very grouchy..." He rumbled quietly, "And it's not that she terrifies me! It's just that... I mean... imagining what that stinger of hers is capable of...”

That makes Toki laugh harder. “The first time I met Clover was the night my brother was murdered.” She says. “Clover and Sugar fought for me when I was too distraught to do it myself- and I know what their stingers can do. I watched them melt a man from the inside out with their venom.” She glances up at him with a cheeky smirk on her crocodile teeth. “I suppose you shouldn’t make her angry then, hm Tenne?”

"You wouldn't let her hurt me, would you Toki?" He whined quietly, pouting at her as he put on a kicked puppy look.

“I dunno,” She gives him a cheeky look, “I might just let her teach you a lesson if you offend her too badly. You’re a tough monster- you can run fast.”

"Faster than she can fly? And dont you dare." He nipped her cheek. "I'd rather take a schooling from you than her."

"Maybe," she laughs as he nips her. "If you cant out run her, you're smaller. Hide from her." Big brave alpha that Tenne was, was apparently petrified of her much more controlled summons, rather than the one that acted like a puppy that had consumed too many treats and was running amok. "Oh boy. I'm a better fighter now than I used to be. I'd take Clover over a spar with me." She grins at him cheekily. Toki might not be as physically strong... But magically, she could decimate the monster population if she wanted to.

He rolled his eyes before he chuckled and nuzzled into her fluff. "Once things warm up, we should have a spar.”

"That depends. Strictly magic spar, or strictly physical spar?" Her mane ruffled up around her neck, and she hummed as his face got muffled in it. "Because I might have a small chance in a physical spar, but I could accidentally turn you into dust with a magic spar." He was not as tough as the monsters from her world. Not even close.

"Physical. I don’t think I have any magical capability." Tenne murmured into her fur. "Though I could go easy on you~" He then teased.

Toki laughed. “I have magical capability in the sense of someone tossing a bomb into a room and letting it explode. All power, not much refined control.” Not with the fact that her power level had literally doubled with Cruelty being added back into her body. “You do have magical capability though- just not enough.” She wiggles against him instead. “And please- you wouldn’t have to go easy on me. I think I’d have to go easy on you. I play dirty. Besides- you only have two arms. I’ve got four- that’s twice the fun.”

He snorted and nuzzled her, chuffing gently through his teeth. "Compared to you or the queen, I’ve scarcely any to count." He chuckled as he lifted his head a little. "Yes I suppose the extra arms could cause me a little struggle.”

“Though I will admit,” Toki lifts her secondary arms and wiggles them at him, “My secondary arms aren’t even close to the strength of my primary arms. But... They make great tickling arms.” She then demonstrated her skills in tickling by bending them back, tucking under his shirt again, and running them up and down his sides. She laughed softly. “I’m sure we’ll have fun.”

He squealed and made a very frantic wiggle behind her as his sides were assaulted, as his previous generosity of warmth now spelled his entrapment and at her mercy.

Toki laughed heartily as all the monsters turned to look at the royal Scientist making the most un-majestic squealing sound to ever hear. She ran her claws up and down his sides, and cackled. She might not be fully recovered, but she could still tease the trapped male and tickle him unmercifully. “See? I play dirty. No where to run, no where to hide~ there is no escaping the tickle fingers, Tenne.”

"TOKI LET ME GO!" He squealed as he continued to do his hilarious wiggle of despair. "I can’t get out of this!"

She laughed heavily, until she felt light headed from doing so. She wobbled on his feet, and drew her fingers back. “Alright, alright. I’ll tickle you later.” She teased, and closed her eyes.
“That’s a manly noise there, Tenne.” One of the guards across the fire teased.

He turned and bristled at the guard, hissing loudly, "You try getting trapped by your mate and getting tickled with no escape!" He hissed, his cheeks darkening as he spoke.

“Been there, done that, they didn’t have a shirt in my size,” The guard laughed heartily. “I don’t think I’ve ever heard you make such an adorable sound though.”

“Shhhh,” Toki reached a hand up and mushed it gently against his face. “You’re adorable, but you’re my adorable Tenne.”

He grumbled and nuzzled into her fluff, his own rising a little on his neck, which was now more of a sight as his fur had been growing much more lush since they came to the surface and he’d had time to heal from Asgore’s assault. "How dare you embarrass me like this, my love. I’m hurt." He rumbled grumpily.

"A little fluster won't kill you, Tenne." She smiles. "Lighten up. It reminds the guards that you, mister 'I'm a stoic scientist when I'm doing my work', are just as emotive as they are." Given how little he hung out with the other monsters, they often didn't get to see the sides of him that she did. She cuddled back into him. Toki gives a soft hum, and her beast releases relaxing pheromones while her fur fluffs up, tempting him in for cuddles instead of getting into a temper induced snit.

And damn did it work, he wrapped his arms around her and made a few more snuffles, before he sighed and nuzzled her, starting to rev into the soft texture of her mane, "You are really something, Toki... And I don’t think I could love it more~" He purred happily.

"There's not another creature like me out there." She smiled. There was a flash of a bittersweet scent that slid through her pheromones, but was gone before any of the guards who were too far away could notice. It was probably for the best that there was no one else. No one else could go bad...

He twitched lightly as he scented it, but didn't respond beyond tightening his grip and nuzzling her again, "And that just makes me consider just how lucky I am to have you, Toki." He purred.

"Yeah." She smiles quietly. "We're both lucky." Without him, she wouldn't be there, truly.

He smiled slowly. His head lifted from her mane, and he quirked a brow at the monsters across from him. "Let me know when it's my turn to turn the bull. I'm going to take Toki inside."

"See you then, Tenne! Don’t get into any trouble!" One of the guards responded, a teasing pitch to his tone that had Tenne rattling like an irked child as he started back inside.

Toki laughed as he waddled away with her on his feet. He was so easy to tease- something that didn’t change between universes. At least this Tenne had more of a sense of humor than her Tenebris did. Her Papa got very… grumpy after too much teasing.

She missed his grumping. It wasn’t the same as Tenne’s irked rattling.
The morning was cold and only growing colder. It didn't matter to him though. For Tenne, he spent his morning just as he had the night prior, with the only exception being when he had to get up and make breakfast for the boys. He spent it tangled up with his mate- perhaps mates would be the better term, given the fact two souls occupied the same body. Toki was taking the back burner, as she had the night prior to give Tenne and Sequoia time alone, which left him spending time with his other mate.

It was obvious to him now that he knew what to look for, as to who was in charge of the body at which time. Sequoia had lighter colored wings than Toki did, and Toki's wings refracted light in a different way. They also carried themselves differently. Toki walked with a sway to her hips- Sequoia wasn't quite as comfortable with their body yet, and had a slightly stiffer gait.

He could tell now when they were conversing too. Small patterns of light would swirl through their wings- it was truly a fascinating process.

Tenne shifted and scooted over on the couch, setting his mug of cocoa down. Eventually the duo had moved to the couch. They had to milk the cows later, when they got home from their trip to town, but that was later, and this was now. For now, Tenne could quietly rumble and enjoy the warmth that his mate put out, as he draped himself practically over her while they watched the boys wrestling on the floor.

Quinn was smaller than Kai, but like the good big brother that he was, the older boy was letting the younger boy dominate him in the long run.

It was cute to watch the boys wrestle, they were vocalizing much like puppies would, growling as they squared up to each other, though with Kai's sportsman ship, often their little 'clashes' would end up with him pinned by his younger brother.

Tenne's fur had continued to grow, especially with this colder weather, and after long enough, he began to have a mane to match Toki's, and at this time, while his face was nestled in her green fur, she rested her head near his, and could smell the scent coming from it, it was nice, but unlike Tenne and his habit to often praise how wonderful she smelled, Sequoia savored in secret, idly stroking the deep black fur as she watched the pups wrestle.

Tenne rumbled softly as she stroked her fingers through his mane, and half lidded his eyes at her. "You know," he says lightly as he watches the pups play, "it's mighty cold outside. Are you absolutely sure we have to go to town today? We could just stay here. Just like this." He wiggled up against her backside, his chest rumbling with a warm purr as he relaxed against her warmth. Tenne knew they had to go to town. That didn't mean he wouldn't try and get Sequoia to cuddle with him longer.

"Toki made it sound important that we had to go..." she sighed quietly, before she chuckled and reached up, patting his cheek lightly, "I can warm your clothes for you, but I think she wanted this done by today"

He sighed softly and stretched against her. His claws flexed, and he snuggled closer as she patted his cheek. The eye with the scar that met his mouth closed, and he peeked at her through the other one. "Toki sure is a house wife, isn't she?" He laughs softly. "Only minus the wife part." They never did get around to getting married before everything had gotten more complex by paperwork. Though, he mused to himself, it was probably for the best given the event with the soul split attempt that followed. "Warming my clothes would be fine, my dear. It would give us more time to spend together." He knows Sequoia isn't as good at milking cows as Toki is, so she would need to return for that.

"Calling her a house mate sounds more like you're just splitting the rent together" Sequoia joked, completely ignoring the jab at her psyche from the dormant Toki.

Though it also made her a little mischievous as she grinned and looked up at him, "I have one method." She purred. "Remember how you warmed Toki up at the spit fire?" she asked with a coo.

Almost immediately Tenne recoiled and gave her a look. "You're not going to ambush me like she did, are you?" He asked quickly.

That gave Sequoia a good reason to laugh. 'Oh look at that, Toki, You traumatized the poor puppy!' She laughed mentally.

Toki couldn't help snorting back. 'I call it mental payback for the times his alternate self traumatized me. I got my hand bit off, swallowed, and then pulled out of an abdominal cavity covered in goop. It was gross. A little tickle fest is nothing on that.'

Tenne gave her an even more suspicious look when all She did was laugh. "Ohhh, Sequoia..." He huffs.

"No, no, Tenne. No foul play, just warmth~" She held her hands up with a sweet smile, "I can keep my hands to myself beyond what is necessary to warm you up~" She winked at him sweetly, "Promise~"

The boys heard the new name and both ceased their wrestling to sit up and look up at the duo, tilting their head before Quinn chirped. "Ma...ma?" He asked.

He gave her an initially suspicious look, before glancing down to the boys when Quinn called out to Sequoia. "What's wrong, boys?" He asked, noticing they had stopped their play.

"Mama?" Kai tilted his head curiously. "Why did daddy call you 'Sequoia'? Isn't your name Toki?"

Sequoia realized, then she looked at Tenne, not entirely sure what to say.

Tenne shared a look with her, but he seemed also at a loss as to what to say. "Well... Have you ever heard of two souls sharing one body?" He asks his son gently.

Kai blinks and shakes his head. "No? It's not possible. Right?"
"It is." Tenne says gently. "Toki is the dominant soul- I didn’t find out until a while ago myself that Sequoia is also there. She’s been coming out more often- but it takes more effort for her to come out than it does for Toki to be the one in control. Sequoia spends a lot of time inside."

"So… you’re saying we’ve got two Mama’s for the price of one?” Kai says curiously.

"Two Mama?” Quinn blinks, seeming excited at the idea. One Mama was fantastic- two Mama’s must be even better!

They were taking it really well, and Sequoia smiled happily because of it. "Two Mamas~ and both think you're so sweet and absolutely lovable."

The boys grinned cheerfully at her. It was Kai though that asked the rougher question. “Have you always been like this?”

Sequoia hesitated, and then she smiled slowly. "Well, yes, but I haven't been strong enough to come out much before tonight.”

“Oh.” Kai blinked. “Have we seen you before and never known?” He asked curiously, and lightly gave his little brother an instigating noogie.

Quinn squealed before he gnawed on his brother's arm harmlessly.

"Well... I suppose you could say I made breakfast for you once on one of my especially better days” Kai laughed and tickled his side like the hellion he was. "Oh really? Were we still underground? 'Cause I only remember one morning where breakfast was a little weird. Was it because you were there? I thought maybe Mama had slept funny and ended up with stiff arms, but maybe not.

"You can tell I carry myself differently, yes." She nodded gently to confirm his belief. "That was me then."

"Ohh… Well yeah, you move differently than Mama T does." He tilts his head, and then flops on his brother, tickling him where he can squeal all he wants but can't escape. On the offensive Kai was going. "Mama T has had more time with four arms though I guess. All of her life is a long time.”

Sequoia laughed gently, "Very true, yes." she agreed, before chuckling, "I think your brother is gonna start crying, he's laughing quite hard under your merciless hands, Kai"

Kai grinned and ceased, lying across his brother like a limp rug. "Which means I win this round until he gets out and we go again. But yeah. So you've been in Mama T all her life? Weren't you bored?"

"Well... Not the way you might think... but I guess you could say I knew her since the moment she was born." Sequoia gave a lopsided smile.

‘Technically, we officially met when I was like… four? I think. You were a young man then-learning your father’s trade I think. You were going to take over our families holdings for us, and your dad thought you should learn who we were. I thought you were a weirdo when I was little.’ Toki chimed in, having tuned in long enough to listen to some of the conversation. ‘You’re the only one who officially remembers meeting me from before I was Toki and you were Simmons. I mean, I remember through your memories, but secondhand memories don’t really count.’

“Really?” Kai tilted his head curiously. “So how did that work? Were you like… another pup trapped in her head when she was a pup? Or were you an adult in her head when she was a pup? It sounds so neat, but I want to know more!”
Sequoia laughed at that gently. "Well... I wasn't always in her head... I suppose you could say it's a more recent event..." she explained, "But I knew Toki's parents, and I was a helper to them."

"Really?" He tilts his head. "What were my grandparents like? Where they nice?" He wiggles slightly, and grunts as Quinn squirms under him, excited at the prospect of grandparents.

At that question, Sequoia reached and gently scooped them up, cradling them in her lap where the warmth of Tenne and herself could spread to them.

"Your grandparents are the most wonderful people I've ever met. Their names are Yumei and Jiro. You have seven uncles, and one of them has flamboyant pink hair!"

Quinn's eye sockets got comically large, and his little mouth opened happily. He wiggled his fingers at her, and sunk his fingers into her mane, chirping softly. "Ink?" He questions curiously.

Kai blinks. "We have seven uncles... Mama T said we had eight. What happened to our eighth uncle? Did he die when he was a pup? I bet Grand... ma?" He wasn't sure. "Yumei," The name felt weird on his tongue, "and grandpa Jiro were very sad."

Tenne sat curiously, eager to learn more about his mate's family while her other half was interested in speaking about it. Toki was so close-lipped about things sometimes...

"Yes, Yumei was your grandmother..." She chuckled quietly, but the mention of Han made her stop. Shit... How did she explain that?

Sequoia took a slow breath. Now that her morals have straightened out, she felt the guilt that came with Han's death quite acutely. Adding it to Toki's mourning... She felt it quite deeply. 'I'm... I'm really sorry about that...'

"Well... There was an accident..." She murmured, "And your Uncle... Well... he didn't die as a child... he had a life... and it was left behind when he died..."

"O... Oh..." Kai murmured softly, frowning faintly.

Toki stirred within Sequoia, and nudged her mentally. 'My brother's death is not something I can forgive.' She says firmly. 'But, you're not Cruelty anymore. You're Sequoia. This is a new start for you- and a new start for me. So while I will never forgive Cruelty, I do forgive Sequoia for the things she did when she was not herself.' She says cryptically, before sliding away again to give her privacy.

Kai glanced up at Sequoia again and ground his teeth slightly. "What was he like? What was his name? I wanna know about the uncle I didn't get to meet. Would he have liked Quinn and I, even if we're not Mama's pups by blood?"

"His name was Han, and he would have absolutely adored you both, if not perhaps feel a little nervous around your father." She chuckled lightly. "Then again, who wouldn't be? Besides me and Toki of course." She joked next, providing her time to ask Toki a question. 'Toki... do you want to tell them about your brother?'

'I... I think I would like that. Can we switch? I know this was your day. But my brothers... No one knew them better than I did.' Toki answered softly.

Kai blinked and smiled. "Daddy is scary, but in a good way." He says proudly, grinning widely. "He scares all the silly humans. I don’t think he’d scare our uncle though."
"This is something they should hear from the one who spent her life loving the man they ask of... I want you to do this. It's not my place.'

And with that, Sequoia leaned slightly against Tenne and closed her eyes, wings drooping as she opened her mind to allow Toki to take control once more.

Tenne braced her gently, and stroked his hands up and down her arms. “Sequoia?” He murmurs softly, concerned. Had she grown tired so soon?

Toki surged into place with ease, arms twitching as her wings flooded a different color. “Hey… It’s Toki now.” She nudges him slightly, and stretches, as if she’s been asleep for a long time. “Mmm… So, I heard you had some questions about… your Uncle Han?”

"Yeah.” Kai now spoke quietly, knowing how it was a sensitive topic for his mother. "I wanna know more about him... What was he like?” the pup asked

"Unk...” Quinn agreed, as he got comfortable in the lap of his mother.

“Han was one of my younger brothers. I was the eldest of nine children, you see- my mother had one girl, and eight boys.” She smiles slightly. “I was four years older than my oldest little brother. Han was one of the older of the brood… He… He was part of the…” How did she put this... “He was part of my people’s royal guard. He had to do things that he wasn’t proud of doing, and it gave him bad dreams and scared him afterwards. But,” Toki heaved a soft breath, and tucked the boys closer to her as she cuddled into Tenne, “Han was a gentle soul, for all that he was built like something designed to rip holes through hardened steel. He was sweet- after he retired, do you know what he became? A music teacher. He couldn’t sing, not like me- but he could play any instrument there was. I…” She swallowed. “My first mate was gifted with my brother’s favorite violin once he died. I can’t play instruments, you see- and Han would never have wanted one of his violins to sit and go to waste.”

Toki sighed. “I’m getting ahead of myself. My brother lived with me on and off- he didn’t like the loud sounds of the city, but music… it soothed his soul. He was an amazing person, truly. He lived with me when I was pregnant- And he died in my arms just after I was… well, proposed to, officially. He found happiness with a fox monster named Todd, and his two children, Rosie and Felix. But it wasn’t to last. Todd brought him a lot of joy- Han struggled to find meaning in his life outside of music after the things he had to do when he was a part of the… ‘royal guard’. Pretty much adopting children and their father into his life gave him purpose.” Toki gave a reminiscent smile. “I don’t think I had ever seen him so happy in his life, as I did when I saw him with his new family.”

Like sister like brother- he’d adopted a dad and his two kids, and she had pretty much done the same.

Kai smiled sadly as he made the connection and he slowly snuggled up to her and Quinn followed rather quickly.

Tenne nuzzled Toki and gave her a loving squeeze. "Sounds like a spitting image of you, Toki... The love that powered you both must run within the Family's very DNA...”

“It’s the same love my mother and stepfather gave me and him both.” She smiled slightly, and simply cuddled all three of them as best she could. “I was the tallest of my siblings though. My family was very small. I got my size from my birth father, who was a very large man. Han was built large and muscled- proportionally, more muscled than Tenne here.” She tapped his thigh with her hand. “But he was very short. But size didn’t matter- what he lacked in height, he made up for in the size of his heart. He’d have loved you with everything in his being- it wouldn’t have mattered if you were born of my flesh and blood or not. He’d have adored you- just like he would have adored the niece and nephew he never got to meet.”

Kai smiled and his tail wagged slightly behind him. "Good, I'm glad he would have liked us, because if he was like you, I bet we would have loved him as much as we love you."

Quinn nodded fast at that, a bright look on his face.

Toki smiled, and kissed both boys' foreheads. “I'm glad.” She cuddled them both closer to him and sighed back against Tenne. “My other brothers would love you too. Kon… Maybe not let you around Kon yet. I wouldn’t want you too corrupted. He’s very… dirty minded.” She snorts.

"Kon?" Kai chirped.

"Something makes me want to guess he's the one with the pink hair." Tenne snorted quietly into Toki's mane.

“He is,” Toki laughs softly. “It was... Well, an awkward time when I first got married. You see, before that... he had initially bedded the monster who would become my future father in law- so there was a lot of awkwardness between the two of them.” She smiled and twitched her wings slightly. “Kon has no filter. He’s... sort of like Kai, but worse. Much worse.”

You could hear Tenne making an 'oohhh' noise as he chuckled into her fluff.

"Worse than me?" Kai took that as a challenge as he grinned. "Never."

“Very much worse.” Toki laughed softly. She settled some with a soft hum. “I had a niece, and two nephews. I... Well, I got my ribs blown apart to save my nephew when the start of the conflict happen- if he’d have taken the hit, Dominic wouldn’t be here today. Well... Wherever he is now.” She takes a breath and sighs. “Luna... My sweet little Luna was the light of my life- she adored everyone, you see. She was... well, of rare coloration among my kind. She was unique.” Her sweet little albino niece... She missed her so much. “Mirou was my youngest nephew. He was really shy, and very quiet- he was a lot like Quinn, in fact. Just not so reluctant to use words,” one of her hands lifted to boop Quinn’s nasal ridge. “Mirou’s father was Kohaku- and Kohaku was the builder in the family. He actually helped me build my first set of apiaries.”

"Koha." Quinn repeated, making a scrunched up face when his nasal ridge was booped.

At the mention of what happened to her ribcage Tenne gave a whine and reached up to run his hand over her ribcage, his hand going under her fur to check her sternum first off.

Toki had first gone to coo at the cute face that Quinn had made, but Tenne's fingers sliding up her shirt to run over her ribs and sternum made her break into a snort of laughter. She squirmed some, having not expected the ticklish feeling against her ribs. "O-Oh my. Tenne dear, I had a healer. He k-knit them back together and I healed fine, I promise. No marks left. I'm just as flawless under my skin as Quinn and Kai's bones are."

He whined again, looking up at her from her mane as he nuzzled her neck. "Who would do such a thing to such a beautiful creature..."

“Someone who was very hurt and very corrupt inside, and it made him do a lot of bad things, and get a lot of other people to do bad things for him.” Toki says cryptically. “I'm alright now. Despite being a civilian, I've been caught in the crossfire and gotten hurt plenty of times. That's why I've said I've had worse after the barrier incident. All in all... I've had worse.” She sighs. “But I survived. I'm tough, you know. Lots of HP to tank things.”
He whined again and gave a slump of surrender as he hid his face again. "Yes, I know..."

Toki sighs and nudges him gently with her wing joint. “Tenne,” She says softly, “No need to sulk over things you couldn’t prevent.” With that said, she turns her gaze to the boys. “Lets see... I should probably list all of my brothers in order... Ryushi was the oldest of the boys. Han was second oldest, followed by Roshi, Utaka, Kohaku, Konpaku- which was Kon’s full name, though he hated it- and Souta and Shiro.” Toki pauses, and then smiles slightly. “My brother in law... He had a daughter with a fire Elemental. Solstice wasn’t much younger than my kids- only a few months, actually. She was... the sweetest little thing you’d have ever seen. Had little horns,” She pantomimed them on the top of her head, “all wreathed in blue flames, and I got to help deliver her. That's why I did well helping Sapphire with Fuku, you see. I helped my brother in law with Solstice.” Toki chuckled. “Experience helps.”

"What was your brother? Was he a hornet too?" Kai asked.

“Which brother?” Toki queries gently to Kai. “Do you mean my blood brothers or my brother in law? My brother in law was a skeleton monster, just like my mate and husband was.” Still is, her mind whispered to her softly. Toki would never stop loving Papyrus. But Toki had to adapt... If she didn’t, the grief would swallow her whole and she... she would never recover.

"Were your babies Skeletons with big hornet butts?" Kai then asked, ever curious.

Tenne couldn't stop the snort of laughter that he quickly covered up in Toki's fluff. "Oh good heavens, Kai..."

Toki echoed his snort. “No, no, not at all.” She laughed. “My son had my teeth- and my daughter had my horns, but other than that, they came out entirely skeleton and completely healthy despite all of the crap that I went through when I was pregnant. They were perfect though, and I loved them with all of my soul.”

"Horns? Like yours I'm guessing." Kai hummed.

“Not quite.” Toki rubbed his skull gently. “More straight back, like dragon horns. More like the swept back horns on my hell hornets.” She explained.

"Soooo..." The chatty pup then grinned, "They looked like Papa's!"

“Yes, I suppose so.” Toki chuckled softly, and pinched his cheek. She gave it a playful tug, wiggling his skull gently. “My little girl summoned a bearded vulture blaster beast hatchling, while my son summoned some type of sub species of grub, like my summons. You know... Quinn and Skylar are a lot alike. They were both Mama’s boys.”

He whined loudly and puffed sharply, pulling his cheek as he pouted up at her.

"Skylar... was that the name of your son?" Tenne asked gently, not sure if it had been her son or daughter with that name. "It's a lovely name..."

“Skylar was my son, and first born.” She nodded, and shifted to tickling Kai’s cheek. “Honey was my second born, and my daughter. She was a lot like her father. Very out going, very energetic, always getting into mischief, and not afraid to try new things. Skylar was very timid in comparison.” Her soul throbbed, longing for her children, and she tucked the boys closer to her chest in response to the sensation.

And both boys were quick to respond to her moment of distress, nuzzling into her fluff while Quinn began to chatter and whine.
Toki took a breath, and exhaled softly. "It's okay, boys. I'm okay. Sometimes I just get sad feelings. The sad feelings last a long time sometimes, but they always go away. In okay now. Thank you for helping." She kissed their heads softly. "Is there any more questions you had?"

"No... no more questions." Kai murmured quietly.

"Nm..." Was a half of a reply from Quinn.

"I do have a question though..." Tenne then spoke up, shifting his form as to carefully pull Toki into his lap comfortably as Toki had done for the pups.

Toki grunts as she was pulled more solidly into his lap than she was before, taking with her both of the boys who were still cuddled in her lap. "Well, ask away then Tenne. I'll do my best to answer."

"Your past mate..." He started slowly, as if worried to tread this water.

"Yeah...?" She glanced back at him thoughtfully. "What's your question about him?" She didn't talk about him much because men didn't tend to like their women talking about other men. Particularly ones they had relations with. The last thing she wanted to do was cause drama between Tenne and her just because she still would and likely always would love Papyrus too. If he had questions though, Toki would answer them.

"What was he like? Is there something he did that you enjoyed?" He asked quietly.

"He was... A lot younger than me. He wasn't expecting or ready to be a father yet- in fact, when we learned I was pregnant, he fainted. He fainted again when we learned it was twins. Papyrus- that was his name- didn't back out though. He stayed with me. He actually proposed to me just before Han died. He was a good man. Very brave. Worked as a royal guard, so he was gone working often, but I would see him every night and on the days he had no work. We would spend time cooking together, reading, watching movies, or playing puzzle games. He was...better at those than I was. He was a good father, an attentive mate, and I grew to love him a lot." Toki sighed softly and closed her eyes. Her soul throbbed, longing for her first mate, though her beast rumbled in her mind and informed her that their mate was behind her now.

"Something that I enjoyed..." She murmured to distract herself from that train of thought. "Yes, yes there was. He would come with me out to my Apiary, and tend the bees with me. The bees liked him- though they couldn't sting him anyways because he was a skeleton. But it was special. I'd never had someone join me like that before. Everyone always thought my passion for my Apiary was strange."

"He sounds wonderful. I'm glad you had someone like that to take care of you... Would you like an Apiary here? I can ask around and we could see about making one up for you..." Tenne offered sweetly, a small smile on his face as he did so.

"He was. You and he would have got along well, I think." She wears a secret smile that means there's something only she knows, and that she'll never tell. It fades to shock for a moment, and her gaze slides rapidly to him. "I..." It would cement her place in this world further, and her beast purred at the thought. Toki swallowed. "I would love one... An Apiary is a lot of work though. So maybe just... A couple hives, since I do have to take care of the boys too. Though... Wouldn't it be a waste of our resources since I can just produce my own honey from my magic?"

"Not at all... it would encourage genetic diversity in our new home's flora... And we would be able to sell more to humans. There's nothing we could do that wouldn't be akin to what humans do to harvest their own... Your honey is special, and it's a grueling task to empty your venom and cool it, and making sure it's safe. We will save that for luxury, but our kind need more ties to their world so they will accept us easier." He explained.

"'Genetic diversity' makes it sound like I'm going to mate with the bees. Ew no." She jokes lightly as she watches his responses, even if he had meant the flowers. "I would really like to have an Apiary again. Maybe come the spring we can work on getting one? They need to be set up so we can move them, or at least reinforce them. The bees won't survive this kind of cold on their own." Toki sighs softly. "Without all of the pent up magic inside of me, that literal bomb of magic that is, I no longer make seemingly infinite honey. It is a task to make my honey though, but it's worth it... Once we can get some honey going, perhaps I can hit up some of the markets in the cities?"

He nodded in agreement, "Now you're getting it. That's a wonderful idea, Toki"

"I think I heard wind of a thing called a Saturday market up in Portland? Once I can get some honey flowing, maybe I can sell it there. I think they're interested in selling monster goods." Toki hums thoughtfully. "It would let the humans interact and see us better. We're secluded out here."

He nodded in agreement, "That's an idea. Sell it every once in a while so you have enough for a day's sale."

"I'll sell my honey too, so that we can see what humans think of magic based honey.” She taps her fingers against her sides and the boys backs with a soft sigh. “If I have enough hives, one harvest will be enough for one day of sale at the market. If I want to do other sales, it’ll have to be strictly my honey though, or split up sales. Hives only make honey so fast, and that’ll take months to harvest. I used to harvest mine every month or two, based upon how my production was going.” But... then and again, she had an uncanny knack with the bees. Toki swallowed and sighed gently. “We would need other things to sell during the times when honey isn’t available. I can’t imagine getting places in the market is easy… Maybe we can talk with the Vestimoves and see about them selling some of their wares? Maybe some of Grillby’s ale… We’re going to need permits and all other stuff.” She grimaces. “It's going to be a lot of work, but we can do it."

"I know we can do it... because we have our guardian light to show us the way." Tenne was a complete and utter sap. His words were followed by his nuzzling her happily, a smile on his face as he began to purr loudly. "Don’t you think so~?"

Toki chuckles as his purr vibrates through her back, tickling over her spine and wing joints. Her skin tingles pleasantly with the sensation of it, and her body hums with a low, subsonic buzz in reply. “Guardian light?” She queries lightly, not sure what he meant by that. She’d been called the Guardian Angel in her world… She hoped this wasn’t a name for this world.

"You were the one to bring our light, without you we could not step outside and feel the sun on our faces, or the wind in our fur." He told her.

Yep, it was another moniker. Toki sighed softly, and fluffed her mane up. "It's ironic." She tells him softly. "In my world, I was the Guardian Angel, because my kindness was unparalleled and I helped as many monsters as I could without asking for anything in return." She chuckles softly. "I'm neither an angel or a light. I'm just... Me."

"Then it looks like what you think is just 'you' is a lot more special than is let on. I speak highly probably because I’m your mate, but if you asked anyone they would agree with what I had to say." He spoke through her fluff as it ruffled up and partially swallowed his face. His mate had a lot of hair, and he loved it so. "If you have two names like this, from two entirely different crowds, than it's not just something so simple. It's complex, and it's beautiful."
"I think, my dear, your opinion is biased." She rolled her eyes heavily. "The crowds were not so different as you might think. But... I suppose you might be somewhat right." It made her a bit happy, though, that she had made so many monsters happy even with her soul not being purely kindness any more. "Still, try not to spread it around too much. I still get awed looks from monsters who never used to spare me a second glance, and it's not something I'm used to. I liked being able to skate by without being seen, you know. Now all the monsters notice when I'm in town, and they stare, Tenne. Its... Mind boggling." They stared more down here, now that they were settled into their homes and not tents. Or perhaps Toki just noticed the stares more. All the same, she noticed when she headed into the town proper that everyone stared. It was... Awkward.

"... I may be a little biased." He agreed quietly as he listened to her words, "They will notice you, Toki, you're as large as I am. Your wings are longer than Asgore is tall, and you unloaded a massive amount of power that completely destroyed the barrier that may well have kept us trapped underground for the rest of our lives... You're a hero and a lot of people know this, my dear."

"I'm two feet shorter than you, you dork. That's why I make you grab all the stuff from the top shelf." She rolls her eyes in good humor, and sighs as she listens to him. "I never wanted to be a hero. I just wanted to help people. But Asgore wouldn't take the credit for me breaking the barrier, so I guess a hero I shall be." She only wanted to be a simple woman- a writer, a beekeeper, a wife, a mother... Not a hero. But to these monsters, she was one.

He gave another nuzzle and purred quietly before he spoke up once more. "Tell you what... I'll spread the word that perhaps you wish for the energy of your praise to ebb, so people remember what your did, but praise you in silence." He offered.

“That would work.” She smiled quietly, and glanced down at the boys. Kai had dozed off on her chest- trapping Quinn under his weight, though the boy also seemed to be napping, cuddled to her ample bosom. “I’m a humble person by nature, you know.” She hums lightly.

"Yes, yes, you're right." He rumbled as he leaned up and kissed her cheek. "I love you~"

“I love you too.” She chuckled softly. Toki shifted, and hummed. “Now, I think I’ve interrupted your date long enough. I think you and Sequoia have some shopping to do, if she’s feeling up to it?” She gave her mental companion a nudge, to get her reaction to her words.

Sequoia did stir at the mental nudge and gave a soft hum in reply. ‘You made it sound like a leisure trip.’ She teased.

Tenne smiled and sat up, stretching. "A small trip to the market wouldn't hurt."

"A small trip? Tenne, dear, we're out of things. That's why I made you both a list." She lifts her brows at him as he sits up, which partially forces her upright too. She just goes up all the way, and cradles both boys easily as she moves out of his lap. "Be a dear, will you? Go get the slings for the boys and their snow clothes. Its too cold for them to go without them."

'Well, it's leisure in the sense you get to spend time with the doctor you so lust after.' Toki teases her counterpart. 'But house chores need to be done, and either you're doing them, or I am. If you need me at any time on the trip, just switch places.' Social situations could make Sequoia uncomfortable sometimes, because Sequoia Did not act like Toki did, and could only fake it for so long.

"Yes, dear.” Tenne chirped after her, moving to get up and go get what she asked.

'Appreciate that, Toki. I'll go ahead and take first shift with helping that bumbling goof get out the door.' Sequoia chuckled, before giving a mental nudge for the control of their body.
"I'll see you later, dear." She called out to Tenne, before slipping out of her own skin and into the inner recesses of her being.
Chapter 110

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This is the one that starts us down a path. What path this is… I think you’ll like, my friends. I know I’m liking writing it.

Sequoia took control once more, maintaining her grip on the boys as she flexed and made sure everything had feeling where it should. She smiled at the sleeping kids on her chest, and waited for the doctor to return.

Tenne came back with his satchel on his torso, a smile on his face as he handed over the boys’ winter gear. "They still asleep?" He asked quietly, before rumbling happily. "Little darlings~" He purred.

“They are.” Sequoia nods gently. She adjusts the boys, and glances at him. She stands, and carefully gets the boys into their winter gear once Tenne hands it over. They don’t stir, lolling gently in her grasp and snoring contently. Once Kai is fully dressed, she slips him into Tenne’s satchel, and gets him tucked in. “Did you grab mine too? Quinn rests better in my fluff, and I don’t mind toting him around today.”

"Of course I did." He replied, holding hers up. It was newly made by their local friendly seamstress, and had a perfect strap to go between and around the underside of her wings rather than having to be pulled on like Tenne's was.

Tenne pulled his coat on over Kai and adjusted it comfortably over his form, before helping Sequoia get Quinn comfortable too. "These pups are so lucky." he chortled.

Sequoia lifted a brow and tilted her head as soon as Quinn snuggled to her breast- or rather Toki's breast- and took a fist full of her mane. Pups slept often, she remembered that from when she’d watched monster kids grow up before the war. They played hard and slept often and grew like weeds. "How so?" She shrugged on the best coat she had, since Toki still hadn't let Tenne shell out for an expensive magnetic one for her wings, and pulled on her shoes. Her secondary arms cradled Quinn in his sling while her primary arms laced her shoes. "Guh. Toki really needs to let you just get her that damn jacket. She doesn't admit it, but it’s colder than a witches tit on our back, and our wings feel so stiff in the cold.”

"They only started with a silly, inexperienced father... then I had the most beautiful creature become my mate.... As for that coat topic, with you in control of your shared body, I was starting to think that perhaps you could assist me with such a task as getting her the coat. She can complain all she likes... But if you will, I still want that coat for your mind-mate." The doctor hums.

"We might be beautiful, but we're also a walking drama magnet." Sequoia rolled her eyes. "It's the fate of us boss hearts. We're always surrounded in drama." She hummed. She slid her arm through his, and then padded for the door. Outside was bitterly chilly, the snow deep enough to bury most of their legs. She huddled into him and flared her magic to try and create a buffer, though Sequoia was not as good at it as Toki was. She lacked experience. "We could probably get it today. She's not paying attention. Better to ask forgiveness than permission, anyways." The shorter female hornet shrugged. "I would not mind a warmer coat. Toki wont mind either once she gets over her initial grumpiness."
He chuckled at that, before he shuddered, "Next thing to save up for, or hell, build myself, a proper motor vehicle with heating... I cannot stand the cold without my mane at it's fullest..." He hissed quietly, pulling his coat a little tighter over himself and Kai. "Sequoia, perhaps I'd think about also looking into a heater while we're out..."

"Unfortunately, you'll have to wait for a vehicle until you can get your license, which also goes hand in hand with full rights." She hums. "We couldn't even drive the moving trucks here. Humans did it for us." His shivering prompted her to pump her magic directly into his skin. Toki slid into awareness long enough to help direct it, so she warmed him instead of fried him and the boys. "A heater? We've got a wood stove. It puts out lots of heat along with Toki's hornets. All she has to do is rest a bit and she renews her magic for those." Sequoia hums. "You know... It's nice without all of that magic inside of us. It was so much that our core could never get warm. Now we sort of can get warm. It's really nice."

"I'm supposed to be a genius... yet I haven't got a way to harness your heat in a way that I don't need to cling to you on all hours of the cold-biting day. I hate to ask that of you so often... it would feel like I'm a whining, needy child." He grumbled, giving a disgruntled look as he started for the local markets.

"I don't have access to the sort of human magic that I used to practice when I taught classes of young mages. However, I distinctly remember that there is a way to imbibe fabric and material with fire magic, to provide heat during the cold months, if it's done properly." Sequoia hummed. Toki also had memories of getting a couple deliveries of monster versions of blankets like that from someone called Muffet, during the monsters first winter on the surface. "Toki and I can possibly work on enchanting your coat. She's better with her magic, but I have the theoretical knowledge. So maybe she and I can get something worked out for you and the boys." She shifted faintly as they walked towards the town proper. "Nmn... Maybe even for some of the towns’ folk if we can manage it for you. It would be easier than letting you carry a bee all the time."

"If you managed it and gave me a warmth-emanating winter coat, I would be unfathomably thankful." He purred happily at the idea, before he sighed out in relief as the snow began to thin under their feet, a result from the all the townsfolk who walked the same road again and again.

"Do you have Toki's grocery list?" He asked a moment later.

"We'll work on it. We might want to get some fabric scraps from the Vestimoves, in case it goes wrong. I remember some bad attempts burning. Might as well do our attempts on cloth and not your coat." She was thankful that the snow thinned. Her legs had been chilling steadily. "And yes I do. It's in my pocket. We might as well stop at the Vestimoves first though before we weight ourselves down with groceries."

"Get you that little something before it's realized." He chortled. "Keep you warm while we walk... Potentially some shoes as well."

"Definitely only going for fabric." She winks, her thoughts guarded by layers and layers of raunchy sex bombs which would turn Toki away rapidly. "Only fabric. What shape the fabric comes in, I won't ever know." She paused, and then fidgeted. "Though... I don't... Know if I can pull off the Toki act for Mrs. Vestimoves and her husband." A thread of anxiety pulsed through her scent and wafted up to him.

"Hey... Hey..." He tutted gently, slowing her down and turning to face her. "Honey... Do you know the language Toki was speaking when she spoke to Mrs. Vestimoves?" He asked gently.

"Well, yes. Along with seven or eight bits and pieces of other ones. I'm fluent in Japanese. I spent a great many years speaking it." She blinked, flushing faintly as he called her honey. "But Toki and I don’t have the same mannerisms."

"Indeed, there is that." He hummed quietly as he considered their options. He then sighed and kissed her forehead. "I need you to do your best, Sequoia..." He murmured. "I want to do this for both of you... call my wording awful, but I know Toki will spoil it if she gets the chance to do so. She's too kindhearted, too humble..." He huffed quietly.

"Toki will spoil it if she gets the chance. She doesn't think she deserves things unless she can afford most of it herself. It's... I dunno. It's just Toki. She worries about money in the most ridiculous way." She agreed quietly. She hesitated, and her fingers trembled against his arm. "I'll do my best. Just... I know most of what Toki knows, but if she senses something off, we're going to need to come up with a fib or something to explain my odd behavior."

He opened his mouth, and then closed it, his cheeks darkening a deep ashy color as his thoughts betrayed him. "I ah... I have no ideas..." From his tone of voice, that was obviously a lie.

"I... Okay." Sequoia blinked slowly. "Well... We'll come up with something on the fly then. Come on, Tenne. Let's get in before your tail freezes off."

He nodded in agreement, walking with her to the Vestimoves first.

Sequoia opened the door to the Vestimoves, and brought them inside easily. The bell above the door chimed, announcing them to the world, and she put on Toki’s usual smile for the woman behind the counter.

Hitsu smiled at them, the fluffy sheep sheered of her usual plush wool for once. She was weaving her wool into a thin, thin thread, which her magic was then threading onto a loom and compressing into a fabric. "Konnbaaaaaantwa!" She greets cheerfully. "Ah! My darling Toki, and her sweet mate Tenne. What can I do for you and your children today?"

Tenne stomped the snow off his feet and shivered, before he smiled warmly at the seamstress. "Hello my darling Hitsu." He greeted with a smile. "I've come with hopes that you can perform your magic once again and give my dear mate a coat that she can put on that will manage around her wings." He requested.

"Aaaaahh," The sheep looked at Toki contemplatively, before bouncing away from her task. Her magic kept working, spinning her wool into a fine thread, while she flounced off for designs and fabrics. "I think we talked about designs once or twice when you were in getting seams mended, Tenne dear." She hummed. Her fingers thumbed through a stack of papers, and she drew out several sheets of paper. "I think you wanted to work some magnets into the design for her wings?"

Sequoia blinked and looked blankly at the sheets that Hitsu offered out. "Uh... I’m not sure. Maybe ask Tenne? He has a better idea of what would work with my wings and what wouldn’t. As it is, the space between my wings gets awfully cold." And it kind of sucked, she added quietly.

Hitsu nodded and offered the papers to Tenne to look over. She eyed Sequoia out of the corner of her eyes, and made a low bleating noise in the back of her throat. "Tenne dear? Which do you think would work best with your darling mate's wings?"

"Well, let's have a peek." He came over to the papers and found the one they had agreed on amongst the rest. "This one. The magnets are small and many along the seam, which allows a secure connection as well as play room for adjustments." He explained.
"That would work. It would also leave her room for her wings to move, so she could fly without having to take her coat off." Hitsu agreed. "The magnets should also just simply fall together, eliminating the need for help in putting her coat on."

"That would be nice." Sequoia smiled faintly. "Being able to do things on my own is nice. Having to get help with my coat every time would be pesky."

"I agree." He rumbled. "We had some errands to do today and hoped you had the time to make such a jacket while we were out."

Toki stirred curiously in the back of Sequoia's head, and she did her best to deploy her sex bombs and keep her tucked away. It worked well, but it prompted her to lift one of her primary hands up and rub the space between her eyes so she could ease the odd sensation it brought.

Hitsu caught the motion and tilted her head. "Of course, Tenne dear. I don't mind doing that at all. It's not a problem at all. What color do you want, Toki?"

Shit, Shit... "Uh..." What would Toki want... Something dark and earthy toned most likely. Sequoia was fond of reds and other bright hues, but Toki didn't like to stand out. Plus it would look gross with the color of her mane, or make her look like a bad Christmas ornament. "Maybe something in black or dark brown?" She suggests awkwardly, not all that sure on the usual color schemes that Toki went with.

"I can do black. I just ran out of brown yesterday, and need to get more bolts made up." Hitsu nods. She hums softly. "Are you okay? You seem a little... Off today, Toki. You're not sick, are you darling? I know your kind don't handle the cold well." She frowns softly.

Double Shit. What did she say...? What should she say?

"I can explain... You see, we had caught a little something with the bad weather." Tenne spoke up. "We're doing better now, healthy enough to make our way around and get things done."

“A little something…?” Hitsu blinked curiously. Her eyes gleamed brightly, and then she gave an excited bounce. "Oh my god! Are you pregnant? Are we going to see little lambs from you finally?"

Sequoia choked on her tongue.

Tenne's breath hitched and he cleared his throat rather roughly. "U-Uhm...!"

Hitsu took Tenne’s hesitation for affirmation. “Oh my! YOU ARE! This is joyous news! Oh!” She opened her mouth, hands clasped to her cheeks. “Forgive me! It’s tradition not to tell until you’ve felt the first quickening. I wont tell a soul! Or too many souls.” She gave Sequoia a joyful smile. “Do you know how many you'll be having?”

Sequoia flushed, but simply rolled with the lie. She latched onto Tenne’s arm with two of hers, the move seemingly tender and romantic, but her hands clutched at him anxiously. “T-three.” The first number that came to mind was three- why did she say three. Why, why, why?

“Three! How exciting!” She beamed. “Are you excited, Tenne?"

"Ecstatic..." He laughed quietly, reaching up and giving Sequoia a squeeze. "As well as... overwhelmed."

“I bet!” Hitsu let out a soft ‘baaa’ as she laughed, and gave him a wide smile. “No wonder you managed to convince her to get a coat!”
“Yeah,” Sequoia smiled, “got to keep the little ones safe, y’know?”

"Safe and warm." He purred quietly, nodding gently before he sighed softly with a smile. "I'm hoping you work your magic and make a robe very much worth it's weight."

“I’ll make one that can be expanded to make room for her growing belly.” Hitsu smiles widely, and then bounces back into the back to gather her fabrics.

Once she’s out of range of hearing her words, Sequoia looks up at Tenne and her face blanches. “Shit. I’m not actually pregnant though.” She whispers.

"We will talk about this later." His voice was lowered, not just in volume but in pitch, he didn't sound... happy.

That tone of voice made her eyes flash, and she leered up at him sharply for a moment. “Fine.” She tsks. “You’ll probably want to talk to Toki about it.” She keeps her voice quiet. “She’s going to need to know-” She cuts off as Hitsu comes back, and slaps on her previous smile, before stepping away to let the sheep measure her.

Dutifully, Hitsu begins to measure her and get her fitted, as she needs to, whistling happily all the while.

Tenne took to the side, watching with a calm and neutral gaze as he seemed to observe every time the threading needle dove into the fabric.

Sequoia hadn’t ever really paid much mind to the way the clothing had been made before, but watching it be made on top of her body, and how it settled and insulated her... it was magnificent. Truly magnificent. She smiled to Hitsu as the hardworking sheep worked her coat over, the black material looking lovely against her pale skin.

Once it was gone, and the magnets secured on her back, Hitsu did a quick check over of it, before pulling back and smiling. “I declare this a success!”

"Indeed so, it looks perfect Hitsu, absolutely miraculous" Tenne purred happily, "Perfect performance as per the usual," he praised as he came and examined the coat for himself, his fingertips tracing the fabric gently as he then gently tugged the fabric apart, only to have them click back together with the magnets when he released it. Tenne chirped happily, "Oh I could enjoy that for hours."

"You do find entertainment from the simplest things sometimes." Sequoia teased lightly, her wings swishing against her back. She glanced over at Hitsu and smiled warmly as she snuggled into the plush fur of her coat lining. It wit with space to spare, and she could zip it up in the front around the sling holding Quinn against her front. With it zipped up like that, she really did look pregnant. "How much do we owe you, Hitsu dear?"

"Nothing you need to worry about," the sheep tuts predictably, and flounces to her register. "Just do your best to stay warm and stay un stressed. And try not to get gored again! That's not conductive to proper baby growth."

"I'll owe you a favor, then." Tenne smiled at Hitsu then looked to Sequoia. "Shall we go, then?"

"We shall." Sequoia looped her arms through Tenne's, even though she knew he was still upset, and guided him gingerly for the door.

"A favor indeed! Maybe more of Toki's special honey when its next made? My husband and I enjoyed it greatly." She giggled.

Sequoia blushed brightly and waved back at her in affirmative, before stepping outside. The coat helped keep her warm and that was heaven.

Tenne chuckled at that, and once they were outside, he folded his arms behind him. "Come, we have much left to do." His tone returned to the pitch he had uttered at, and quietly began down the path once more, his tail trailing low behind him.

Sequoia sighed and let go of his arm, so he could walk on his own. "I think you and I need to talk first." She says lightly, and instead heads for a semi-sheltered overhang between two buildings. It was too cold for other people to really be out, so they had their privacy besides the boys huddling sleepily into their middles for warmth. "Its not fair to either of us if you're in a foul mood for the rest of our date day, Tenne."

"Sequoia... I do not know how much Toki filled you in... But she told me everything of the past, and the truth of her origins..." He spoke quietly. His pupils thinned a little, and no longer did he have his usual, sweet look. Instead, Tenne carried a very upset look upon his face.

"I didn't hear all of it. I wasn't conscious for all of it, anyways. But I know she told you everything as she and I understand it." The woman crossed her arms and propped her shoulder up on the wall. She didn't like seeing him upset, but she wasn't Toki. Offering comfort wasn't... Something she was good at. "But what does this have to do with what happened at Hitsu's shop? You seemed to get pissy the moment that she thought Toki was pregnant." She inquired bluntly.

"Toki's trauma with losing her first litter constantly stayed in my head after what I witnessed when Quinn first called her 'Mama'. I promised her that I would never propose the idea to children to her... I... What will she think when she has to live a lie that she's pregnant with my pups? There is no way to fake it after a certain period of time... And everyone will want to be informed."

Oh. Well... That was what bothered him. Sequoia sighed and scrubbed her face. "You can't walk on eggshells with her forever." She remarks lightly. "I sure don't, and she knows it. She can buck the fuck up and deal with it. She's an adult, and she's dealt with lies before. As far as the general public can be concerned, she can have 'lost' the pups in a week or so. Lies are easy, Tenne. We lied to you for a long time. I'm the better liar of the two of us. Its the truth that is hard to give." Sequoia provides an easy flat answer. Then the bee woman clicks her claws slightly. "I'd love to have a litter of pups with you, to be frank. Toki probably is ready, but she grows guilt complexes like a garden does weeds. I can work on her. Its not like we're ever going to fucking get to go home. Not that I want to, really." There was nothing for her there. But she didn't tell Toki that.

Toki had people waiting for her. Sequoia had imprisonment and scorn waiting for her.

He didn't answer at first, watching her with intently glittering amethyst eyes. Soon his shoulders slouched as if he was admitting a defeat, and he gave a slight nod. "I never thought to resort to dishonesty... But perhaps when she returns, I will speak with her about it."

"Monsters are not dishonest by nature, Tenne." Sequoia soothed. "But humans... Humans are." Her face twisted a little, and she glanced away from him sharply, shoulders tucking up defensively. "And me? It's easy to forget that I was the worst one of them. I might not be that man now, but that knack for lies never leaves. You don't forget how to breathe, after all." She remarks tartly. Sequoia takes a deep, bitter breath, and lets it out in a sigh. She was too jaded sometimes. Very jaded. "Talk it out with Toki. It's her body. It'll be her babies when we convince her to stop with the guilt complexes, and it'll be her life... Her everything." While Sequoia would just be tagging along for the ride.
He nodded slowly as he listened to her and he sighed, "When it comes, I suppose… She must realize we are not yet home. Let us take the chance since she’s not trying to rouse, and finish our errands, yes Sequoia?"

"Sure." She pushes away from the wall, and heads out of the alley, not bothering to offer her arm to Tenne. Their day out definitely wasn't as enjoyable and he'd need his space. Besides, she could just blame it on 'mood swings' or other bullshit. If he wanted her arm, he could grab it and cuddle her close. For now, Sequoia did her best impression of a turtle, and became one with her new coat.

Tenne checked Kai, and then caught up to Sequoia, his mind was wandering and it was clear in his eyes. Thankfully it faded away as they made it to the marketplace. "Ahh. The market looks so nice blanketed in snow." He chuckled quietly, making to relax once more.

The cold did little to soothe the bitter ache inside of her. She steeled herself, slipping a better practiced 'Toki' smile onto her face, before taking his arm and striding inside the market proper, her shoes crunching in the snow. "Snow makes anything more beautiful. Why do you think I came to live in Snowdin first? The snow is beautiful no matter what the location." She chimed, her farce in place better here than at Hitsu's shop. Sequoia nodded when several people called out to 'Toki', and made her way over to get a handcart to carry their spoils.

"I suppose we best get started on that list," he chuckled, though he did examine the occasional stall, a small smile on his face to serve as a neutral expression.

"Indeed." She fished it out, and gave him a smile, before striding off just like Toki would, recalling from her memories how she would act and what she would do. For her anxieties, Sequoia did what she did best. She wove a lie. She wanted them to believe she was Toki now, where she hadn't really wanted them to before. And to anyone who didn't know better, it simply looked like Toki had come to market, flirting here and there and talking like a natural. Only the glow of her wings told her tale.

While she set to work on the list, Kai reached up and tugged on his father's beard. "Daddy? Are you and Mama okay?" He whispers sleepily from inside the sling and his dad's coat. It looked like he wasn’t nearly as deeply asleep as they thought he was.

"Well, Good afternoon pup," Tenne greeted with a quiet rumble, not going to let Kai think for a moment that there was something wrong. "Yes, all is well here. Are you alright?" He asked.

"I don't think it is." He hums softly into his dad's chest, but chooses his words wisely, knowing they're in a public space. Toki's words to him had resonated. He was old enough know when and when not to ask certain questions. "Are you two arguing over who ate the last of the spider donuts again?" He asks cryptically, blue eye peeking up at his father though the sling. Kai was a smart boy.

Such a smart boy, so functional already, he had such potential...

Tenne chuckled and reached up to pat Kai's back through the coat and sling, "We both know it was me" He chuckled lightly.

So his Dad was upset over something then. "If we both know if was you, how come you insist it was Mama who ate the donuts?" He hums back softly, stretching sleepily in the sling. He was getting too big for it, but he didn’t care. It was comfortable and it meant he could be mobile without having to walk. The best of many worlds.

"It's a long story, pup... we'll talk about it later... okay?"

Kai gave him a contemplative hum. "Okay. I suppose i can live with that... iiiif you buy me and Quinn some of Grillby's fries!" He grins cheekily.

"Jokes on you, I was going to buy you guys fries anyways." He blew a raspberry at his son.

Kai blew a raspberry back at him and laughed slightly, before reaching up and poking his cheek. "It’ll be okay, Daddy. Whatever you and Mama are upset about, you can work through it."

"Of course we can." he chuckled, "Do you want down?" He then asked.

“And use my own legs to walk?” The boy gave him a sassy grin that was entirely Toki in it’s being. “No way.” He rolled over in the sling, stretched, and curled up like a big blue potato. His tail wagged in his pants, and he made a tiny content sound. “Hey Daddy? Can we do some science experiments in the house sometimes? I like to play with Quinn, but puzzles get boring.”

He laughed at that, "Lazy pup! But yes, of course we can!" He chuckled. "Who could have raised such a lazy little thing like you, Kai?" He teased.

"Woop!" He punched a fist lazily into the air, and then curled it up again because it was too cold to venture outside his father’s provided body heat. “And I dunno, Daddy. I like to think I made the choice myself to be lazy.”

He chuckled at that and shook his head, "Lazy... and sassy." He tutted, looking around at a few of the market stalls.

“I get that from my Mama.” He grins up at his daddy. “I am the sassiest. Mama teaches me well when she sassies you, though. She calls me a sponge sometimes.”

Another soft laugh leaves him. "So you are, you've proven to be a very smart little boy."

“Sometimes too smart though.” Sequoia hums as she pads back over, her basket full from her purchases. She reaches in and boops Kai’s nose, much to the boy’s surprise, before looking up at Tenne. “Just like his father.” She arches a brow.

"Who me? No, no, I’m innocent~" He chortled shamelessly.

“Uuhh,” Sequoia rolls her eyes in good humor, and hands over the list. “Can you double check this for me please, dear? I’ve put a hole next to everything I grabbed, but I want to make sure I got everything.” Heaven forbid if she forgot something off the damn list. Toki would never let her hear the end of it. ‘It’s a damn list,’ Sequoia knew she would say, ‘how hard is it to find the items on the list and get them? I even marked where to get them!’

Toki was such a housewife. A housewife with a backbone of steel and no fear of filling your ass with hot bees.

And damn did Tenne love her and Sequoia both.

He took the list and gave it a look over while looking at everything she had collected. "Looks right... except you're missing just one thing." He hummed, before he lowered himself down and gave her a swift kiss. "Okay! Now we're good~"

Sequoia couldn’t stop the flush that swarmed up her face as one of the monsters shopping around them whistled at seeing the kiss. “Well then, I guess we’re good to go to Grillby’s for those fries that I heard you promise Kai.” Sharp teeth edged up into a lopsided smile, and Sequoia hesitantly offered out her primary arm for him to take. She’d already paid for their groceries and other goods, so now all that was left was to take them home and return the shopping basket on the next trip. That was the neat thing with the monsters—there was community trust among them. You could bring the shopping basket home, and bring it back next time you were in town.

Almost like reusable bags, only bigger and made of metal and hard plastic to be much more durable to higher levels of weight.

Tenne gently took her arm and smiled gently, seeming to feel a little better from before. Either talking to Kai or stealing that kiss did the trick. "To Grillby's it is!" he chuckled.

"Woo!" Kai whooped from inside the sling. "I want fries and oodles of ketchup."

"Or we could just use the ketchup at home." Sequoia snorts softly. "I bought a couple extra bottles. But, you have to wash your own plate if you don’t rinse it when you’re done. Dried ketchup is a pain to get off.” And responsibility was something that Toki was working on teaching Kai.

Quinn, who had stirred while Sequoia was doing her shopping, gave a thrilled coo and leaned up to nuzzle Sequoia's head happily.

Sequoia laughed and kissed the top of his head gently. “Well, hello to you too. Looks like your nap is over. It’s a little cold out, little one, but if you want to walk around, you can.” If not, she didn’t mind him remaining practically glued in her mane.

He trilled quietly and nuzzled her mane to give her his answer to the idea of walking.

"Seems we both have a lazy pup to carry today." Tenne laughed gently.

"I think mine is more because he has a thing for my fluffy mane," Sequoia chortled, “while yours is laziness.”

"Yep.” Kai agrees. “Mama is fluffy, and Quinn likes fluffy. I’m just lazy and don’t want to do the thing."

"Lazy pup… did you know he’s getting too big for his satchel? I might just make him walk home."

"Noooooo." Kai whined.

Sequoia smirked as they walked along, heading towards Grillby’s bar and grill. “Well, I knew he was getting bigger, but I didn’t know he was that big.” She laughed. “It sounds like he disagrees though.”

"I know he does. Big whoop, I’m the one with the old back carrying him, I say I get precedence over him.” He chuffed.

The queen bee snorts. “Well, everyone has to grow up sometime. If Quinn keeps growing like a weed, soon I won’t be able to carry him like this anymore.” Give or take a year or two, and he’d overtake Kai in size if he kept up his current rate of growth.

And just like that, it was Quinn’s turn to whine.

Sequoia gently patted his backside through her coat, and hummed softly. “Oh, little one, it’s alright. You’ve got a while yet before I can’t carry you like this. Even if I can’t carry you, it doesn’t mean you can’t cuddle in my mane, right?”

"Cuddles..." He murmured quietly as he kneaded her mane.

“That’s right.” She murmurs and rubs his head softly. “You can be as old as I am, and I’ll still cuddle you close to my mane.” She promises, knowing it’s something Toki would agree to as well.

"Mweh..." He purred at that, smiling into her fluff as he continued his kneading.

"He's gonna make me a bleeding heart. That's so cute." Tenne snickered.

“He’s adorable.” Sequoia grinned as her fluffed continued to get kneaded and knotted up. “He knows it too. Ah- thank goodness, Grillby’s. You want to go in and place orders? If I go in, I might get roped into working.”

"Oh yeah, I’ll go take care of that.” He laughed, going inside to make the order to go.

Sequoia settled down to wait for him to come outside. It wouldn’t take Grillby all that long to make their order, she knew.

And lo and behold, Tenne wasn't out ten minutes later with a paper bag that had to-go containers within it. "Ta-da~"

“Smells good.” Sequoia smiles, rubbing her chest slightly from where she’s standing not far from the door. She looks like she’s starting to tire out- and she is. She also looks like she’s just had another soul catch. Sequoia isn’t used to running Toki’s body for this long. Her soul needs to rest soon, sadly. “Shall we head home?”

"Oh yes... You're starting to look a little tired out." He agreed as he offered his arm once more, his tail coming to his son as to let him have something to hold onto.

Kai grasped his tail contently and hummed.

“I am tiring.” She admits softly. “Being in control for so long is not... something I’ve done. I’m going to need to rest for a long time to recover from this.” She sighs softly, leans into his arm, and then leads him off into the thickening snow.

"That's fine, a whole day with you... I'm content to wait until next time, my dear~"

“You’re sweet.” She manages a smile for him, and bumps the lower curl of her horn against his arm. “I’m sorry the day ended up a bit muddled though.”

"Not at all." He gave her a soft squeeze as he purred happily, "I love you, my dear~"

“Love you too, Tenne.” She bumped her hip to his, and leaned on him contently.

The walk to the house was kept in comfortable silence. Sequoia carried their shopping, but she started to flag by the time they got home. She struggled to carry their things in through the door, trying to keep a hold of the items and Quinn and coordinate Toki’s body properly.

At this point Tenne had taken notice of her fatigue, and he wrapped an arm around her back to support her. "I've got you... Take it easy now, okay?" He murmured, "I'll get you to the couch, and you two can trade off once we're there."

"Thanks Tenne," She murmured tiredly. She focused on holding her arms firm, and making her feet walk. Sequoia barely noticed the change from the front room and kitchen, where her arms were relieved of their burden, before the living room registered to her. She spotted the couch, and her fingers twitched eagerly. "I'll see you all when I can," she murmurs, knowing she soon won't have the energy for goodbyes. She was going straight to sleep, she decided. Toki could sort out this pregnancy business on her own.
He nodded as he set her down, gently unlatching Quinn and letting him go play with his brother to give Toki what room she might need when she woke.

Sequoia watched the boys go off to play, and felt like she was made of molasses as she sunk down into darkness.

It was several long, worrying minutes where her wings were devoid of color, like she was an empty husk, before Toki took control again. Her wings lit up, and she took a deep breath. Her eyes slid open, and she rubbed them. "Mmm, wow... That wasn't fun..."

"Good morning, Toki..." Yes Tenne worried in the time she was unmoving, but he knew she'd wake up. He would make sure she always did.

"Hi... Did you have to wait long?" She blinked up at him. "I'm sorry. Sequoia wasn't all the way out before she was gone, so I had to extract her control carefully or risk fracturing her. What did I miss- why am I in a coat."

"Perhaps next time we'll skip the walk... if she really wasn't strong enough..." he sighed quietly, before he smiled at her innocently, "Surprise~?"

"She's strong enough for most things, but she's got to work up to it." She paused and stated at the coat. "You two planned this, didn't you?" She lifts a brow and sighs. "Its a nice coat though. Very warm."

"Heh heh~" He smiled at her innocently, "I knew you'd like it~"

"I do." She smiles. "So... Besides the coat, which I know cost a fortune, what all did I miss? How did the trip to town go? No problems right?"

"Well...There is one thing..."

"Oh?" She arched a brow.

"Well... you see... it's a bit of a long story." He started slowly.

"A long story?" She tilts her head. "Just be frank with me, Tenne. What happened?"

"Sequoia didn't know how to play you to the letter... Hitsu asked if something was up... Sequoia spouted out... aaand now probably half of town thinks you're pregnant..."

"WHAT."
Chapter 111

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Big skip here. 8) Silver and I want to get close to Toki going home… and it’s drawing near. But things need to happen first. Things you may or may not like. 8) One of them draws a sort of closure for Toki. Not in this one though- THIS IS NSFW. IF YOU ARE A MINOR, PLEASE WAIT FOR THE NEXT CHAPTER, AND READ THAT ONE. IT SHOULDN’T BE NSFW. Alright, public announcement over. This chapter contains soul sex, some very beastly encounters, and smut. Yup. Tenne and Toki do the FUCKS. Also Sequoia is there too, so technically a threesome. Anyway. Enjoy or don’t- it’s all plot related :)

It turned out that half the town did, in fact, think she was pregnant, so Hitsu told more than just a few people, and half the town mourned with her when she ‘lost’ the baby. Or apparently the triplets, because Sequoia just had to spout a high number. Toki felt bad about the lie, but she handled it like a champ, and so did Tenne.

They walked on eggshells for a few months though. It did make things awkward between them. She knew that Tenne did want children, and Tenne knew that she wanted children- but Tenne knew that she was, but also wasn’t, ready for children. Any time that Kai quietly poked for siblings, Toki would flinch, and Tenne would flinch, because they both wanted, but knew she wasn’t mentally prepared yet to accept it.

They worked things out though. Like Tenne had said when she’d first told him about Sequoia and being human, it wasn’t enough to break them. They were back to normal before Christmas came, and spent the holiday together happily. Well, happily enough. Toki missed her family. They helped to soothe the emptiness in her heart, but it didn’t stop the ache in her soul for missing her children’s second Christmas. The one that they would be able to really enjoy and remember, anyways.

And so the year passed on into the next, and Toki’s first year in that world came to pass in a rain of sparks and fireworks as winter turned to spring and then spring turned into summer. It turns out she had landed there in the middle of their Fourth of July celebration, despite her having left her world in late August. How time worked in this world, she would never understand. For her actual birthday, several months prior, Tenne had gifted her with a couple beehives, so they had celebrated her ‘birthday’ into their world with her traditional honey tarts dyed in a festive red, white, and blue to match the colors of just about everything else, and a layered cheesecake done in strawberry, vanilla, and blueberry for the fourth of July, while they watched the fireworks from the loft of their barn.

The monsters put on a beautiful display, for their first Fourth of July on the surface in god only knows how long. It was a day of liberation, a day of freedom- and they celebrated it with much zeal and a lot of alcohol. Toki and Tenne had sipped a few ‘adult’ beverages of their own, while the boys had chugged down oodles of fruit punch and played with sparklers and Toki’s bees. They’d made a small trip to one of the closer towns, making use of Clover to cross the airspace faster than any could cross land, and had gotten some human made fireworks for the monsters to enjoy, on top of the ones they made themselves.

It turned out that on top of being a hell of a bartender, Grillby and Sapphire were also very, very talented at making beautiful explosives. Toki and Tenne got to watch all sorts of shapes- shapes humans hadn’t even achieved yet- get shot into the sky. Monster fireworks were made with magic instead of gunpowder and small strategically placed bits of explosives and colored flash paper, and were much less of a risk for starting grass fires than the human made ones.

The sparklers were fun though. It also melted her heart when Quinn and Kai wrote ‘Love you’ with them when the dark fell.

As a family, they spent their time taking care of the animals and making sure that product was being shipped out to the town proper. Eggs, milk and meat- though Toki only handled the eggs and milk.
Tenne did anything that had to do with sending meat to town. She didn’t have it in her to kill the animals, despite how good they tasted.

Surprisingly, they adapted to being ranchers quite well. When summer rolled around and their milk cattle were let out into the small pasture for them, Quinn and Kai had a ball rounding them up for their morning and evening time milking. It gave them time to work off excess energy, and kept them fit and healthy. Quinn was also the chicken king. They followed him around like ducklings followed their mother, so Toki could send him out to distract the chickens, and she could go collect eggs unmolested. The rooster was not fond of her, and she didn’t like getting holes pecked into her pants legs when the rooster took offense to her presence.

Summer also brought up the production of honey, and Toki started stockpiling her own, and her bee’s honey. She hadn’t made trips to market yet, but she had plans to start come fall. A year here in this world had been rough on her soul, but she was… healing. It didn’t hurt so much now. It still hurt to think of her children, but she could talk about them, and about Papyrus.

The months since their attempted separation also stopped the soul catches, leading her to believe that whatever damage she’d done to her soul had been repaired finally. She and Sequoia would switch out from time to time, but Sequoia was still not the predominant soul in charge. It was too tiring, and if she was out for more than a couple hours at a time, she had to sleep for several days to recover the energy that was lost.

It was obvious that the Void hadn’t designed their body to work like they were making it work.

As the season neared the end of fall again, and the cold weather settled in quick, Toki had taken time to spend the last day out with the bees. She had to tarp up the hives to keep them extra insulated, but had to leave a way to keep them fed through the seasons. Taking care of the hives that Tenne got her was very soothing for her, and she spent as much time out here as she could. It was usually her private alone time, where she could relax and decompress.

“You know,” She spoke softly to the small honeybee cleaning its face on her finger, “That I’ve been here for… Goodness, a year and a half almost? That’s probably longer than you’ve been alive, little one, but… a year and a half feels like a life time.” She sighs. The bee buzzes up and lands on her face, and she chuckles. “You know, a year and a half ago, you’d have been able to walk all over inside of me? I was just made of bones, then. Now I’m flesh and meat and everything else.
Sometimes I miss being a skeleton. My bees used to love hiding in my shirt. You guys can’t do that with me though. I’m not hollow inside.” She gave a low buzz that sent the hive into a flurry, before they settled down, clinging to her clothes. It was amusing, how these bees reacted to her sounds.
They weren’t used to her yet, but they were all getting used to each other slowly. “Sometimes I feel hollow though.” She muses.

Tenne had been watching Toki talk with her bees and waited until there seemed to be an opening before he approached, clearing his throat to garner her attention without startling her and the potentially stinging insects. "Toki... Can we talk?"
Toki lifted her head when he approached. The bees spooked, clouding around her with an aggressive buzzing sound until Toki calmed them with a melodic piping sound. “Sure, dear.” She gave him a smile. She brushed off her hands, and gave a light puff of her magic to dislodge any bees that clung to her, before carefully scooting over to edge of the ‘apiary’, if it could be called that. She crossed her legs, enjoying the grass, and patted her legs for him to join her. It was still chilly, but just warm enough to still enjoy the grass. “What’s up, Tenne?”

"I was just... thinking..." He murmured as he sat down beside her. "I've never lost thought of the whole... pregnancy scare event that happened a few months back..." He started slowly, "And honestly... I have been hoping to talk to you about the potential idea that perhaps..." He was trailing off...

Her teeth pursed, and she sighed. Of course. He might have said he wouldn’t press about it, but Sequoia had been pressing too- the two of them wanted to have children, and her body was the only option for them to have them in. “I see… You and Sequoia have been talking when she’s out, haven’t you? She’s been talking to me more and more about children too.”

"I know you've wanted time to mourn...” He hedged. “But... Yes. We had talked..."

“And you both are ready.” She says softly. Toki takes a deep breath, and sighs. Both sets of arms cross over her chest, and she looks up at the sky, before flopping gently back into the grass on her back. She stares skyward, letting the fronds of green tickle her curling horns and her cheeks through the similar green of her mane. “It’s not just my body anymore, is it.” She muses. “I... You’re ready... to expand our family, aren’t you?”

"..." He moved to lie beside her. "Yes... I want to... Are you ready?" He asked.

“Yes and no.” She answered quietly, both set of arms folding over her stomach. Her chest rose and fell with a deep breath. “Is it... weird? That I both am and am not ready? I’m just... afraid.”

He rolled over and wrapped one arm around her. "I understand how you're afraid... But I love you, and I wouldn't suggest it unless I wanted to trust myself with thinking that you were ready. Sequoia and I would be here with you through everything."

Toki sighed and snuggled into his side. “I’m... just afraid that by having more children, I’m... betraying the memories of my first.” She admits quietly. “It’s... different with my first mate.” Her mother used to tell her that men could come and go from her life- that she should never hold too tightly to just on. Love them- mourn them- and then move on when her heart was ready. But children... Children were something you loved forever, no matter what happened. She takes a deep breath, and sighs. “I'm sorry. I know I'm ready. I'm just... a big jumbled mess of nerves inside. My soul hasn’t been touched that way since... Since Papyrus.”

Tenne took her words in, and he sighed, before he sat up to lean over her, shading her from the sun while simply watching her with a calm gaze. "I understand... Blaster beasts mate for life, so I understand how you would feel with the conflict..."

She sighs. She wasn’t so sure on that- because her beast had accepted two mates. She had accepted that Papyrus, accepted that they had lost Papyrus, and mourned him- and then chosen Tenne. Toki simply smiled though, and nuzzled him with a soft sound. “I...” She sighed against his shoulder. “I suppose we could start trying. I can’t... I can’t cling to the past forever and prolong my future, can I...? My heart will heal when I can begin to let go more.”

He held her close and he smiled a little, "If you're sure... will you want to try tonight?"
"I... Suppose we can." She nodded quietly. "After the boys are in bed... Unless we want to try and get Sapphire and Grillby to watch them for the night? Soul stuff is still new to me. Papyrus and I didn't... Do it a lot because of the nature of my soul." She'd done it a whopping record of two whole times and didn't know what would happen if they got disturbed or anything by an outside source.

"We will wait until they are asleep, we need not send them away... Besides, Kai already knows what we'd be doing, the intelligent little shit." He chuckled.

Toki snorts. "That he does. He takes after you. He knows what we're up to and keeps Quinn occupied." She settles down with a soft sigh, staring at the cloudless sky. "... When I do inevitably get pregnant, how many do you think we'll have?" She asks lightly.

"I don't know... We may have just one, or we might have a couple... it depends on how our souls match up in compatibility..."

"Well considering I only have two boobs... Hopefully no more than two." She gives a nervous chuckle. She wasn't made from ectoplasm. She wouldn't just be able to make a third boob out of thin air. "But I see what you mean. I think we'll be okay... We might have some struggles to start. I don't know how stable Sequoia and I are, technically. Our souls are kind of... Squished together. Not sure how stable that makes us."

"Yes I considered that too... Your souls might cause an odd creation to be born, a hybrid at best..."

"I... Don't know really. I know a child born from a human soul and a monster soul comes out monster." She murmurs. "Did... You want to check my soul and make sure its healthy first?"

"Yes... I'd feel much better after knowing your soul was healthy enough to offer what would be needed for a child."

She sighed and nodded. Their property was private enough that she didn’t mind offering over her soul. Toki drew it forth from her chest, and cradled it in her hands before holding it out to him. "Here, Tenne." It was still bi-colored, and still scarred. But the scars seemed to be healing over, and the center join in point was stable. Her stats were fine too, last she checked.

He took it gently and smiled, "It looks better than it did last time, looks healthier..." He purred, "Hello Sequoia." He purred to the lighter half, watching it flicker slightly at his greeting.

Toki chuckled softly. "She's watching. Letting you handle talking to me, but she's watching you." She says. "I'm glad we look better though."

"Indeed so." He smiled and gently lifted her soul to his lips, giving a gentle peck to either side.

That brought a shiver to her body, and she let out a soft, shaky sound. "Ah..." She blushed a bright green, and gave him an amused look. "You realize that's the equivalent of oral soul sex, right? Right out here in the open, where the birds and the bees could see." She teases.

"So it is. I'm such a filthy mate aren't I~?" He teased back.

“Yes, you are.” She laughed. She flushes some more, and arches a brow at him. “You’re a tease and not being fair. I can’t exactly kiss your soul.”

"Why don’t you ask for it then~" He purred.

“But... do you want to out here?" She glanced around. The kids weren’t far, after all. And touching souls... well, that lead to more than just that.
"Mh... no, it really is a risky idea isn’t it?" He chuckled, before he held her soul out to her. "Here you go... for now."

Toki gave him a smile and tucked her soul into her chest. “For now indeed. Come, dear. We can continue this inside if you’d like, but… I’d rather not do this outside. Souls are private matters, and… Well, we still somehow get photographed by the damned press.” She flushes. “How our lie hit the news I don’t know, but people got ridiculously excited over the thought of me being pregnant… if they knew we were ‘trying’ again, they’d go bonkers.”

"Try not to look too excited on your way in." Said the pot as he called the kettle black.

She rolled her eyes, and got to her feet. Her wings gave a flick, shaking off grass, and then Toki sashayed for the house. Those hips of hers, nice and wide and lovely? Oh yes, they swayed, like bells in the wind, alluring and tempting all the same. “Too excited? Tenne dear, I’m equal parts excited and nervous.” She chuckles. She was more nervous and dreading it than excited, but they were right.

She was ready, even if she didn’t want to admit it.

His tail was wagging fast behind him, belaying his ‘innocence’ to show just how excited he was about this.

Toki made her way into the house, but paused in the doorway. “Kai,” she says sweetly, “Why don’t you and Quinn go find Undyne and get a game of tag going? Your father and I need to do some… talking.”

Kai grinned a little, but with Quinn right behind him he held back on what he was about to say and instead just nodded. "Yeah, no problem."

"Of course, Momma~" Kai replied with a sweet smile.

“I know that smile.” She pinched his cheek and wiggled it. “I mean it, mister. If I get another phone call about you and Undyne and Quinn wrecking shrubbery with your magic again, I’m gonna take away your science kit for a whole week this time. Seven whole days with no science with your dad.”

He giggled but groaned at the threat. "Noo! Not my science kit!" He whined.

“Then see to it that I don’t get another phone call.” She wiggled his cheek again, and let him go. “If I do, then you’ll have to find something else to entertain that brilliant mind of yours. Alright. Gimme a kiss,” she taps her cheek with a finger, “and go off and play.”

"Mwah!" He kissed her cheek, then ran after his brother as he took off.

Toki smiled and straightened, glancing back to Tenne. "I'm serious. If he gets in trouble, no sneaking him his science equipment just because you feel sorry for his puppy eyes and pout."

"You really do cover all bases, huh?" Tenne sighed.

“I’m a Mom.” Toki sniffs. “I have to cover all my bases, or my kids and my man will find the loopholes.” She bumps her hip to his, closes the door, and then saunters for the stairs. “You coming, Romeo? Or did the thought of no science kill the mood~?”
"Rrr~" He purred, and then followed her. "Right behind you."

Toki grinned, and sashayed up the stairs. She took lithe and quick steps, knowing she looked like prey before his eyes. “I’m sure you are,” She purred. “I hope you’re enjoying the view.”

"It doesn't get any better unless I start getting handsy and in there like some nasty beast~" He purred, "And yes. That was a promise~"

She rolled her eyes in good humor, and coyly stripped off her shirt. Topless, she walked down the hall, and worked on shedding her bottoms, like the tease she was. “Riiight.” Maybe if she didn’t remind him, he’d forget about their initial purpose in this romp.

He chuckled coyly and followed her as he started to strip his own clothes, his purring picking up louder as they stripped.

Soon, Toki was naked, and she splayed her wings a bit so he could enjoy her pale backside as she ducked into the bedroom. She crawled onto the bed, and flopped there, settling on her front like she was taking a nap. Let him try and ‘rouse’ her. It was funny to see him get all antsy. Or if she was unlucky, he’d nip her ass.

"You are absolutely divine." He purred as he joined her in the bedroom, the door was clicked closed before he stalked closer.

Hilariously enough, she ended up 'unlucky' as his form slid between her legs, his mouth going right to her folds to press his tongue between them.

She squeaked, and shifted on the bed. "That's playing dirty." She pouts at him, shifting to roll onto her back and look at him. Her legs part, and her toes splay, claws kneading the bed just faintly. He was good with his tongue, no doubt about that.

He chuckled and purred as he continued to lick her with a delicate gentleness that completely disguised just how eager he was.

"Mmhmm~" He chuckled, before he leaned in and put more weight into his tongue, pushing it into her body to taste of her essence so sweetly.

Her legs splayed as his tongue slid into her depths. Mouth popping open with a soft gasp, Toki kneaded the bed with gentle hands. "Ah~" her soft moan was gentle and blissful as his tongue sent tinges of pleasure up her hips and into her belly.

Such beautiful sounds- it made Tenne tremble with excitement as he licked and began to suckle on her folds ever so delicately as his tongue slid smoothly in her.

His hand began to wander and cupped her rear tenderly, digging his digits into her rear tenderly. Her breath hitched, and she let out a soft keen, legs parting to let him have as much of her as he could take. Her walls trembled and pulsed around his tongue, sucking at him as he drank in her nectar. She sucked in a soft gasping breath, and reached a secondary hand down to stroke it over his scalp.

That was more like it~ Tenne purred louder and it began to make his tongue vibrate, his tail starting to wag behind him as his other hand joined the first in kneading her rear.

'Holy shit. You better be willing to share this sensation, Toki.'
Instead of answering Sequoia initially, she removed any walls she had up, and let the sensations flow evenly between the two. ‘Don’t I always share?’ She chuckles through their link.

And her reply was a pleased moan from Sequoia as the pleasure was shared to her as well. ‘Oooohh yess~’

Her hips rock into his mouth as best she can with him holding her ass captive, and Toki’s legs slip over his shoulders. Her soft toe pads knead his shoulder blades. Her tongue lolls out of her mouth, draping over her teeth as her walls tremble around his tongue. She can’t stop the soft groans that slide from her. “Ah~ Tenne~”

"Good~" Tenne purred loudly as he slowly withdrew his tongue, running it over his gums to savor the flavor as he came to sit up between her legs. 'I suppose I’ve done well enough with foreplay~” He chuckled.

"Heh heh heh, why don’t you ask me sweetly~?” He purred, lifting a dark brow at her as his eyes gleamed.

He gave her a frown and folded his arms.

Toki rolled her eyes and pulled her hand back. “Alright fine.” She turned big doe eyes onto him, and cranked the pouty face on high. “Wont you please, please, give me more~?”

"Why don’t you give me your pretty soul while you're at it~" He purred, brow arching higher.

She hesitated, and sighed softly. “Okay. Only if you do too.” She drew it from her chest all the same, cradling her soul in her hands. She looked up at him, and for all of her strength, all of the power that made her so astronomically stronger than any of the monsters in this world… there was a vulnerability in her eyes that was not usually there. She held her soul out to him in the knowledge of what she was about to do- of the ultimate betrayal to Papyrus that she was about to do. Her body was one thing… her soul was another. But… she loved Tenne too. It was a bunch of conflicting emotions that bubbled inside of her, and she often didn’t know what to do about them. “H… here. This is all that I am- and all that I ever will be.”

He took her soul gently and smiled at the sight, then summoned his own.

His soul resembled the Tenebris' that she knew. His soul was a gentle lavender color, and was adorned with two scar-like divots on the arches of the upside-down heart. Though they looked far better than his elder-counterpart's, they had actually gotten to heal.

"Ah... What do you think~?” He purred, holding his soul out to her.

Her own soul was littered in scars, so she wasn't one to judge. There was a flash of familiarity in her eyes and face when she saw his soul- she'd seen the same soul what felt like a lifetime ago, back when she had been human.

Toki gently traded souls, and cupped his gently. Her fingers stroked around his scars, not touching them directly but edging around them. "You're perfect.” She smiled.
He purred quietly at her words and his tail wagged behind him, before he gently kissed her soul, purring louder as he did. "And you're the most beautiful thing I have ever seen~"

The kiss made her shiver, and her soul pulsed brighter. She brought his soul to her mouth, and her eyes slid into a half lidded position, giving him bedroom eyes. Her teeth, so sharp and jagged, pursed to press the gentlest of kisses against the core of his being. His soul was so much smaller than her own, and so much more fragile than hers. His HP didn’t even reach a fraction of her own. She could break him without even trying- and she would break for doing so.

Toki’s mouth opened, and her tongue slid out, lathing gently over the surface of his soul. She had more experience than he did in soul play, as far as she knew, though her experience itself was fairly limited. She touched him gently, lavishing him in care and tender adoration.

The sensation was unbelievable and Tenne was quick to react, trembling as he leaned his head back, "A-aaahhh..." That noise was beautiful.

Very beautiful indeed. She indulged in it a bit more, lathing his soul with her tongue as her own soul reached out tendrils of light to stroke over his fingers. “You like this, I think.”

"I-It... Ahh... It's enjoyable because of how much I trust you~" He cooed.

Toki smiled. She glanced up at him, and motioned to his hand. “I trust you too, Tenne. Are you… ready to see what a soul merge is like…?”

"I... ah... I’m a little nervous, but... yes. I'm ready." He nodded gently.

Toki nodded, and very gently motioned to his hand which held her soul. “Alright, Tenne. Clasp your hand with mine. Our souls will know what to do from there. You, ah, might want to get comfortable first. It’s overwhelming the first time you do it.”

He nodded gently. He slowly got comfortable, draping across her lightly, and reached to her hand with his own cradling her soul.

"A-Alright..." he took a breath, before he allowed their hands to touch, his fingers linking with hers, before he slowly closed the space.

Her soul reached out to his, and coaxed tendrils from his, before linking them.

The beginning link had her soul and chest jumping, a shaky gasp leaving her mouth. The beginning of the link was always strange feeling… But as the souls pulled closer, and the surfaces brushed and melded together, deeper emotions were felt, and she could feel everything that he could. He would feel the arousal curling in her belly- the anxiety, the fear, pulsing in her chest. He would feel Sequoia in her soul too… There was much to feel, much to experience.

For both of them.

And touch? Touch would be amplified.

Tenne was trembling, his eyes shut tightly as he clung to her with his other hand. "O-Oh god..."

Toki shivered and panted gently. Her belly quivered with need, and her hips twitched into his with want. Her soul thundered against his, shared feelings overwhelming her faintly. “Hhaahhhh… Ah~”

Tenne was lost in the sensations that came with the soul-merging. It had been his first time, so to say it was overwhelming was an understatement. "Oh god... h-haahhh... Toki..."
‘Tenne...’ There was more than just Toki in the merge too- and Sequoia could talk to Tenne this way- without having to take control of Toki, or have Toki reiterate what she wanted to say. ‘Oh... oh Tenne... This is what a soul merge feels like...?’

He wasn’t the only one who had his first soul merge- Sequoia was having her first as well.

Toki took control after a moment, and took a shaky breath. She slid her fingers down to the apex of her legs, and opened her soul to Tenne, letting him feel as her smaller set of fingers slid down her belly, tracing a path of heat as she went. Toki was showing him what to do- and as her fingers brushed her button, she trembled, biting her tongue with her gums as the back feed from the merge was nearly overwhelming. She touched herself for a moment- and then she reached up, and cupped her hand against his slit, sliding her finger gently along the inside of the pale slit hiding his member.

‘Sequoia...’ Her name was on a mental whisper, a sound that was of thrill, excitement, and his own share of amazement and fear.

His slit was loose and her rubbing hand easily coaxed it open, warranting a soft moan from Tenne.

"O-Ooohh~" His cock was practically hard already as it emerged from his slit. The soul merge was offering so many new thrills to add to his usual stimulation at this point, that he couldn’t help but not be hard. "Toki~" He cooed to her.

Toki’s hand circled around his cock as it emerged, and she stroked him, from base to tip, her fingers massaging over him languidly. She panted softly, eyes unfocused as she got tingling sensations of a hand running over a dick she didn’t have. The back feed from a soul merge was absolutely fantastic- and Toki made sure to feed the loop back to him, creating a never-ending cycle of sensation. It was massively overwhelming- but only in the best of ways.

Her legs parted, and she teased the tip of his member across her folds, tempting him with body language as she continued to stroke and massage him.

Tenne, the poor thing, had practically bucked into Toki as soon as his mind put together that his cock was lined up with her body under him. His mind was static, and what wasn’t static enough was growls and snarls of his inner workings telling him what to do as if it was his own mental Sequoia.

Toki wasn’t nearly so lost as he was, but his growls and gutteral inner language was rousing her beast. Pupils dilating as she rolled her hips into his thrusts, Toki’s mind space made space for her beast to rumble up and brush against Tenne’s beast. She purred to him while Toki’s hips rolled and gyrated against his.

It was a good thing their mental beasts could not face off physically in this moment, if there was one thing about Blaster Beasts, it was when they got hot and in the heat of it.

Tenne growled before he pulled Toki close and bit into her shoulder, moaning as he ground his hips against hers.

She snarled right back at him, and her teeth sank into his opposing shoulder, deepening the marks she’d been remaking time and time again since the first time she’d given in to her instincts to bite him. Toki bucked her hips into his, grinding into him as her walls fluttered and flexed hungrily around his member.

It was thrilling to the beast and his grip tightened as his form twitched inside of her.
A few hisses and snarls resonated from his form to reach Toki's ears, but after a short time, it faded and was replaced by blissful moans and pants as Tenne snapped out of his episode to instead do as he always did with Toki.

And that was love her. And treat her body as if it was the most priceless treasure he could ever own. All the while giving her spirit the burning passion that was his love.

Under his passionate love and attentive care, it wasn't long before her soul, dragging his smaller one with it, thundered towards release. Her head lolled back, teeth stained black, and she let out a languid moan of his name as she came around him, walls clamping tight over his cock and the knot she knew he would give her.

Tenne wasn't long after her, trembling before he mewled out and promptly howled out as his form arched deeply over her, his cock twitched before he grabbed her hip with his free hand and pulled her close to push her onto his cock as his knot pushed into her, the ball of muscle and blood swelling inside of her before he gave a few more thrusts and came to release, filling her body with his heat.

She shuddered as he expanded inside of her. Locking them together. Toki trembled, her mind whirling, soul twisting with her thoughts as she came down slowly, so slowly, from her orgasm. Her belly was puffy from his load, as it seemed to be as of late, and she hummed a soft considering sound. This was... Nice... So my h different than it had been with Papyrus, but it was nice. Their souls felt different. Papyrus was the sun, her fire and her flame. Tenne was the moon- her cold winter and ice. She loved them both, truly she did.

And for all her initial anxiety about the soul merge, she found herself with little to no regret for it.

Tenne was blacked out as he hung over her. He wasn't unconscious, but for a moment was unresponsive. His body made sounds all the same, however. "Hhhahhh~"

Toki couldn't disengage her soul from his without his help, so she was stuck as he draped over her. Her fingers flexed against his, stained in the goopy secretions from their souls. Lavender and two shades of green was... Weird.

"Tenne..." She murmured. "You... Okay?"

"Rrrrrrr~"

She snorted. "Oh my god."

'We fucked him senseless.' Sequoia made sure he heard that, sounding pleased and smug all at once as she practically oozed in a mental puddle in Toki's mind.

'Laugh while you can... will recover... Will go for round two.' Was a sudden deep resonance from Tenne's soul.

'I doubt you can go for a round two.' Sequoia snorted lightly. 'I doubt I could go for round two."

'She might be right. The only reason I managed multiple rounds the first time I merged was because my husband had gone into a rut and brought me into heat with him.' Toki murmured, and flicked her tongue out to gently groom along his neck and shoulders.

'Tamed mind will not interfere.'

Oh shit. That wasn't, Tenne now was it?
That was Tenne's beast. Shit. Heck. Alright.

'If you think you can,' Toki goads, because she has no sense of self preservation, 'I won't hold my breath, Big Daddy.'

The inner beast snarled in a way that seemed to make even the soft lavender soul tremble and Tenne's lip curled back slightly as his grip on her hip tightened.

Toki remembered baiting Papyrus in a similar manner, only his beast was less controlled. Or visibly controlled, anyway. Toki grunts, and lets her teeth scrape over his neck and shoulder, her chest rumbling under his. Her soul trembled, and the tendrils shifted, curling around Tenne's soul and stroking it in a dominant way. Toki was good at goading beasts- and taking what would come when she did. 'Didn't like that, Big Daddy? Too bad. You're stuck in place until the knot softens,' She teases him again. Oh she was going to get it.

Tenne twitched slightly and growled at the challenge, before he began to pull against the knot, his lips curling further into a snarl of both aggression and growing pain.

'Ooh shit, he trying to pull out...! Oh FUCK. That's starting to hurt!' Sequoia bleated.

Toki wasn't about to let that fly. Her legs clenched around him, muscles pulling tight, and she kept him right in place. 'Ah, ah, ah, Big Daddy. No pulling out now, you could hurt all three of us if you did it too soon. A knot is a knot.' She nips his neck in a scolding manner, and drags blunted nails down her mates back.

He growled at her and snapped at her in turn. His eyes were open again, wide purple disks glaring down at Toki with needle-thin pupils leering down at her. It was fortunate that they were not clothed, otherwise the bone-plates that began to rise off Tenne's form would have torn through them.

His crown was growing into sight, and over her body came the plating and spines that came to his shoulders, his back, his haunches and tail. His hands curled slightly, claws digging less mercifully into her hip. He was looking more and more like his magnificent beast with every passing second.

Toki hummed. Despite the ache it brought her, she rocked her hips up into the alpha beast above her, wondering what he would think about a female desiring to give him pleasure too. His snap and growl didn't make her flinch like it would have once upon a time. This time, she soothed her nip with a soft lick, and raked her claws over the new armor plates, nibbling her mouth against his neck as she began to play a dangerous game. They still had one hand joined, holding their souls together. It wouldn't be hard for him to lose his temper and hurt them both if he wasn't careful. Still... It was fun flirting with danger, with a smidge of pain as his knot pulled inside of her while she rocked around him and teased him more.

His reaction barely wavered as he simply watched her, but it seemed to do the trick as his claws withdrew from where they were just starting to tear into her hip and his hand went instead to position on the bed for the sake of staying up.

She rumbled up at him, green eyes peering up at his own as her mane ruffled and fluffed. She used it to waft pheromones over him, wondering how he might respond to them. "Big Daddy," she purrs teasingly, choosing that as a name for his beast quite easily, "are you going to be gentle with me?" Her hips rock into him again.

The pheromones were a good move. There was silence from the soul, no doubt Tenne was unreachable, but Big Daddy gave a low rumble as he took in the scent that he recognized as his mate. His pupils widened a little and he leaned down, licking her lips as his hips rocked in return.
As he promised, there would be a round two, but it looks like she managed to talk him down from his pride-dented threat.

Shame on that, but Toki figured it would be better for her body if he didn't completely wreck her. She slid her tongue from her mouth, letting it brush against his and then tangle with it. It was coated with her pheromones, making it taste like honey and the best aphrodisiac that could be gotten. Her hips rocked into his, her soul rubbing gently along his, and her claws shifted where they were locked together. He was a good mate- a difficult one, sometimes, but a good mate.

The beast purred and rattled in a pleased manner before he shifted on his legs. He hoisted her hip up with his legs movement and from there he began to rock his hips once more, defying his knot's purpose and instead rousing his body in time with Toki's offering of her aphrodisiac.

Toki hadn't ever thought of a knot to be used like that. That... Ohhh, she liked that. She's very certain he could feel just how much she liked it through the pulses of her soul, and how her breathing hitched needily under him. "Ah~"

Beasts were clever like that weren't they? Lucky Toki has one such as Tenne.

Her noises excited him and though he brought a gradual increase, he made sure she knew he was thrilled by her sounds as he began to nip her neck like she had done to him, licking and delicately biting her soft neck

She tilted her head to the side for him, the sensitive skin of her neck trembling and tingling as his teeth teased her flesh. Her thumb found his soul inside of their hands, and she stroked it, from base to tip. Toki gave a full body purr, before her body began to pipe for him, her walls fluttering as much as they could around his hardened knot. The sounds she made were definitely alluring, and it made her glad that she'd sent the boys off to play for a while, because she was not quiet at all.

Such was the perfection of their beastly bond, though her sweet teasing made Big Daddy more eager than what would have been best, as he began to grow more aggressive with his nips, before attempting to even roll Toki over for what he recognized as proper mating positioning.

The rolling was... Not pleasant. Toki shifted, and kept her legs locked. Her hand pulsed gently around his, and she tried to draw his attention to their souls. 'Wait please, Big Daddy.' She pleads. 'We can't roll yet. Not until our souls are separated... And they need to be together to make pups.' She says to him. She doesn't mind his sharper bites. All Toki does is up her defense against them, and then they feel less painful and more pleasant.

He growled and rattled in defiance at her resisting his attempts to roll her, and he thumped his tail a few times, what looked to be bony ears pinning to his head as he rattled at her sourly.

'But pups,' she croons. 'Tell you what. If you can manage to flip us without breaking our souls apart, then go ahead.' A challenge of sorts, to see if he could think of a way to do it.

He tilted his head at the challenge, and for a while seemed to look over his options. A few times his clenched grip around the souls would loosen but tighten up again after a moment.

After a few moments of thinking, he had enough. He gave a loud warble and snorted sharply, giving a sour look to her. 'Cannot maintain grasp if going to roll mate over...'

Toki hummed softly. 'So it seems... I guess we'll have to let go then. Hope it's enough for pups.' She nipped at his neck, and released her grip on his hand. Her hand was stained by both of their souls, covered in a thick, sweet smelling goo.
As Big Daddy's paw retracted, the creature shuttered and rasped quietly as the sensation nulled him for a moment, though it did not last long as he released the soul in his hand, moving instead to gently roll Toki over, more insistently, but sweetly this time around.

She went willingly, settling onto her chest as her soul parted from his. It drifted lazily away from his, slowly heading back for her body, and drifting past his face before sinking into her back to return to her. Toki rocked her backside against him, and let her horned head settle down against the sheets as she submitted gently.

Eventually his own purple Soul returned to his chest, and Big Daddy begin to respond Toki's submission.

Thankfully at this point his knot had just begun to deflate so it allowed him a little more room to get around, making it so he was able to begin a steady thrusting into his mate.

The steady thrusts were nearly enough to leave her mewling brainlessly. Each one brought that knot of his shoving back inside of her, and it stroked along all of her sensitive places while his member proper shoved deeper, pounding against her womb. Her wings flared, offering him access to whatever part of her back he would like as she moaned helplessly. God, she loved to bring out to beast sometimes.

Now that they had actual motion and pleasure intake between them, big daddy started to enjoy himself. His arms wrapped around her stomach and he rested his cheek on her back, nuzzling the tender flesh before he give it a soft bite.

Her spine jolted, all four arms skittering briefly as he bit down on the soft skin over her spine. Toki choked out a pleased purr and rocked against him again. The actual motion felt like heaven, and she was helpless under him.

Such sweet submission. much more appealing to the beast~ He rewarded her with a soft lick of where he had just bit before lifting himself. His hands pushed her shoulders down and his hips withdrew before they snapped back to meet her hips, repeating this a few times as his pace came to meet this, striking her deepest with the head of his cock as his softened knot gave her such pleasing pressure on her entrance.

Each stroke of his member tore a tiny moan from her, particularly as his knot popped free and then shoved in again. He was like the world's wildest sex toy, but in a form that didn't come in cold hard silicon. She rocked into him, her piping continuing to draw him into giving her what she needed. Her skin broke out in soft pebbles of gooseflesh under his hands, and her magic pulsed strongly under her skin as her chest squashed into the bed. Toki was his, and so was Sequoia and her beast- they were all quiet and in tune with the forefront personality as Toki took the lead on dealing with the beast in the best way she knew how.

By sassing the beast until he's annoyed, and then magically soothing him again with pheromones and sweet words. What a gal.

Toki did know best how to deal with beasts.

Big Daddy's reply to her piping was deep rumbling and growls as her other noises egged on his behavior, he began to go faster, thankfully not harder yet but faster indeed, her body was so good to him it would be very hard for him to want this bestial breeding to end.

Her back bowed under his touch, and a series of soft, submissive sounds came from her throat. She had no idea she could make those noises- but those were noises she could make. She made them again, more tinged with pleasure, as he thrust faster into her. Her mouth fell open, tongue lolling over her teeth. They really were a bunch of beasts rutting on the bed, but Goddamn if she didn't love it completely.

Good mate, good mate, great mate, mating good.

Big Daddy's mind was racing at her sounds and his tail wagged behind him as he rattled to her sounds. So exciting this was, his toes were curling.

The thrusts continued to pick up until he was practically abusing Toki's sweet body under the mercy of his thrusts. His tongue was hanging from his mouth, lips curled back as he took in the air that had quickly heated up around them.

Her pulsing magic had made sure the room was definitely more than warm. It felt more like a dragons den, hot and dry, and her body put off heat like an open oven. Her walls were starting to flutter tighter and tighter around him, her four hands clawing at the bed as she keened in need. She panted, her mind whirling as his hips abused her backside with each thrust. She'd feel it later but oh boy, she was enjoying it now. Her defense shifted to help her take the brunt of it, and it wasn't all that rough thanks to it. But Toki was definitely was enjoying the sensation.

Big Daddy huffed and growled in her ear as he put more weight on her, but it was accompanied by pleased squeezes as he filled her again and again.

Such a pleasured moment had gone on forever but thankfully after the not so few bliss-filled hours passed, Big Daddy rested himself and allowed Tenne to wake again, this time, he wasn't so blacked out, holding Toki as if he had been the one with her for those hours.

Hours. They had gone on for hours. Round two? More like round five. Toki was sore and exhausted, and swollen about the middle from how much he had filled her. Laying on her front was uncomfortable with the small potbelly she had, and she exhaled tiredly as she waited for the next round to begin. She wasn't aware that Tenne had returned.

"Mmmhhhh..." A sound soon roused from the creature, as if cutting the silence with a knife.

"Hn~ You okay~?"

"Mnnnnm... Tenne?" Toki murmured sluggishly. "Ah... S' good t' hear ya again... I'm okay... Just a little worn out."

He cooed and kissed her a few times. "You're so wonderful~ Beast shared with me how wonderful you were."

She gave a languid purr, her back covered in slowly healing bite marks. Her wings had been left alone- one straying fang had prompted her to crack him hard with one of her wings, and he hadn't tried to bite them again. Those were for Tenne's sound mind- the beast was not gentle enough to get to play with such delicate limbs. "I know best how t' rile up Big Daddy n' then calm him down again. It's like a game of cat and mouse."

"Mmh, that's what you're calling him, huh? I thought I heard that get mentioned." He teased.

Toki snorts, and elbows him faintly. "Shush," she grumbles, "It's not like you ever told me if he has a name or not. Mine doesn't, but you never know." It was just like dicks- some people named theirs, and some people didn't.

‘PFFT.’ Someone was tapped into Toki’s thought process and couldn’t contain her snicker.
"Well he and I never really got acquainted, y’know?"

Toki hummed, and shifted on the bed. She was still face down, so she dragged one of the pillows over and secured it to her front with all four arms, cuddling her face sleepily into it. He was still stuffed inside of her, but he wasn’t going anywhere for a while. “Am I the only one who regularly has conversations of sorts with the things rattling around in my head?”

"Sounds about right at this point." He sighed as he nuzzled her. "I love you~"

“Mmm, love you too.” She thrummed softly. She shifted on her side a little bit, and her abdomen stung. “You filled me so full… Like ridiculously full. Look at how stuffed I am. Big Daddy didn’t want any to run out, it seems.” Her body would process his magic and convert it into her own, so it wasn’t an issue. Just uncomfortable until it went away.

"It seems he’s really eager for pups."

“Half.” She wobbles a hand. “The soul part is important- or we’d have conceived by now, for sure, with how often we go at it. He wasn’t much interested in that part.”

"Mmm, human conception is odd."

She snorts. “You say that, but how you’re thinking of is how humans actually conceive. This… this is how monsters conceived in my world. This is the only way I can- because I’m neither human nor monster anymore.”

"That’s amazing in itself." He murmured.

“Mrrr?” She made a noise, asking him to clarify.

"Your mutation from human, to skeletal creature, to one with the potential compatibility to bear my young..."

“Technically,” Toki stretches and hums lightly as she corrects him, “A skeleton is actually one of the few monsters out there that’s compatible with all types. We adjust to what our mate’s needs are. Er… They adjust. Sorry. It’s kinda dysphoric still sometimes.” She waves a hand and then continues. “In fact, my first mate looked mostly skeleton, but he was half skeleton, half beast type, like us. So, theoretically, a skeleton would have worked too. Just… not to what you would have wanted.” Pure blooded blaster beast pups and all.

"Interesting..." He chuffed at that, and then nuzzled her. "Well... that's true... But even if they were half-breeds, I’d still love them, you know~"

She chuckles softly and hums against his nuzzles. “I don’t doubt it. Kai and Quinn aren’t full bloods, and you love them without question.” Her eyes close and she sighs softly. “But if I had come to you as a skeleton… I have to wonder, would you have loved me for me?” He had lusted for her because of what she was- what it meant for him- and love had come later when she’d proven to be… well, basically the ‘girl of his dreams’, plus some baggage. A lot of baggage. Okay, a metric fuckton of baggage.

He opened his mouth, then closed it again, then sighed as he nuzzled her. He gave a soft contemplative noise of agreement. "Maybe... Though... I’ll admit it'd be a tad bit slower progressed..." He murmured.

“I think you could have accepted me as a caretaker for the boys- perhaps as something to study, to observe, and perhaps as kin. I haven’t seen any other skeletons underground- I would have been the only one of my kind too.” She murmurs. “Maybe something would have blossomed in time…
Maybe not.” She sighs. “I was given this form to cage the power I held inside of me. Now that I don’t have it… I have to wonder why I haven’t reverted back.”

"Could it be Sequoia's soul within yours?" He asked as he tilted his head slowly.

“It might be.” She nods. She sighs. “Or it might just be that I’m meant to be like this.”

"If that's the case, then I’m glad you're like this. You're very beautiful and I could stare at your body forever~”

She snorts. “I’m glad you approve of my appearance.”

"Well that's not all I appreciate of you." He chirped.

“Hm… Well, I suppose I could believe you.” She smiles teasingly, though he can’t see it with how she’s laying. He can hear it in her tone. “What about me to you appreciate?”

"Your personality for one.” He replies with a bad pickup quality for the sheer giggles, "You're wonderful with my boys, you're kind to me, and you're not a filthy slob with your living space.”

Toki chuckles softly and nods. “That I’m not. I am a very, very clean woman. It kills me a little inside every time I see Kai’s desk.” Considering their home was constantly being cleaned when she was home and out and about in it… Well, she kept their home immaculate. She reaches back, and snags his hand, dragging it around her swollen middle so she could cuddle his arm. To him, it probably felt like she was pregnant- he’d probably enjoy that, until she processed it.

He cooed with glee at the feeling under his hand and his tail rattled soundly as he nuzzled her cheerfully. "You're swollen~" He cooed happily.

She couldn’t help but laugh. “I told you I was!” She exclaimed in great amusement. She guided his fingers over the soft lump. “You and your beast filled me with so much magic that it’s a little absurd.” Toki sighed softly, and settled down. “Mm… Rest, Tenne. Maybe something will come of it? Who knows. Maybe there'll be babies in there soon.”

He chirped happily at the thought of pups, and nuzzled her back with a trill. Though once he had made the two of them comfy, he settled down to sleep.

Toki was as comfortable as she could get, and for once… she didn’t really sleep. She just rested her head down, and let her body relax. Her mind whirled with a dozen small, idle thoughts- nothing too hard though. Toki was at peace- and perhaps, there would be more children in her future to keep her busy. Who knew…?
Chapter 112

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This is something we had planned later, but it fits in now with how the plotline is being shifted. Hopefully you like this little bit of fun before we go places. We’ve had to adjust the plot some, so we’re progressing FINALLY TO THE FUN STUFF. OWO I am excited to see ya’lls reactions.

It didn’t work. They tried and tried- for weeks and weeks. Toki wasn’t sure what was going on- if there was just some subconscious part of her that didn’t want it that was keeping it from happening, or if perhaps it was because her soul wasn’t just hers anymore, that she shared it with Sequoia and it wasn’t a perfectly balanced Balance soul- but it just… it wasn’t working. She couldn’t get pregnant.

It was a bit disheartening.

All the same, they didn’t give up, and kept trying, even when his heat rolled through, and hers a month or so later.

Still, there were no results by the time the snow fell thick and heavy, blanketing the land in icy white and keeping them contained in icy bliss. With no children blossoming inside of her, Toki and Tenne were tasked with heading to Portland Oregon for the Saturday bazaar- which they’d be helping to sell oodles upon oodles of monster supplies at. Toki had honey- hers and from her small apiary- to sell. She had been planning on doing it anyways, going to the bazaar, so she’d volunteered to simply have one massive booth instead of twenty small ones here and there.

She’d be keeping track of what was sold to who, and she’d give the money over. She had no intentions to jip them any either.

The drive to Portland from their location was two hours and then some- they’d had to hire another U-haul to haul all of their things and themselves there- but it was a beautiful drive along the Columbia gorge. The river was probably a mile wide, and lined with waterfalls here and there… It was beautiful, truly. Toki spent her early morning watching them as they went past, and leaning against Tenne’s arm as her wings were squished in the cab of the truck.

Kai and Quinn were being watched by Ariel, and alternatively Sapphire and Grillby, so Toki didn’t worry too much about them. They’d be alright, spending time playing with Undyne, Lana, and the other little kids.

The driver brought them to the bazaar, and got them unloaded, but it was up to Toki and Tenne to get themselves set up- with all of the other stall owners staring at them while they did so. They were the first monster stall in town, of course- so people were going to gawk.

It didn’t make Toki any less self-conscious.

“They’re staring…” She murmurs as she hefts a box up in her arms and walks quickly towards their designated stall spot, her head ducked down shyly. Toki wasn’t necessarily the prettiest monster- or the friendliest looking with her teeth and the fact she looked like a giant bee- but at least Tenne was dashing. He had many people gawking after him as they walked.
With the word of his mate that they had an audience of simple gawkers, Tenne couldn't help but feel a little bit proud, even with how she worded it. He had grown in his magnificent mane while the winter months began to roll around, and it was now quite full around his head and neck. "Am I not finally a sight to behold?" He cooed proudly.

“You are.” She agreed eagerly, glancing to him and his luscious dark mane. It was full and fluffy—and if she had a hair straightener, or ran her fire magic heated hands over it long enough, she could straighten it out and make him into a walking carpet. Toki’s mane fluffed as a pacific breeze blew through the bazaar, whipping her coat around her back as she hauled the boxes to their tent. Once she got there, she began carefully unpacking and setting up tables, working on getting everything set out on display.

She summoned a couple of her bees to keep watch—thieves were a thing and she had no intentions of tolerating them—and then started organizing. Grillby’s wares went into a twenty one and over section. They didn’t have to have a license for it because it wasn’t human alcohol, and they weren’t sure how to classify monster alcohol yet, so Toki at Sequoia’s behest was taking advantage of it while she could.

While she was setting up, a couple of mothers herded their kids closer to themselves as they watched her and her bees, the mothers looking horrified. Toki sighed. Her magic wasn’t… Humans associated bees as bad, so she was always going to appear as a bad monster at first. And, perhaps she was. “I’m not,” She mutters lowly between her interlocking crocodilian teeth. She sighs, rolls her shoulders, and prepares to put on her ‘I’m a businesswoman’ face.

His moment of preening had passed and his main flattened against his jaw as he noticed the children coming closer. Having tucked away his tail in at a previous time, his long tail blade was out of sight, posing no threats to the children. He offered a sweet smile to the children, and a calming one to the worried mothers.

"Hello there dear children and Madams. Do not be shy! Come closer if you wish to have a look at the strangers from underneath the mountain. Perhaps you might partake of what sweets we have brought with us on this fine day?" He was using one of those voices; whether it was the father voice, or the kind-hearted doctor voice, it was not clear. Regardless, he spoke soft, sweet, and kindly to the group, to welcome them closer.

One of the mothers gave him an awkward smile, but ushered her child away, heading in the opposite direction.

The other one slowly edged forwards, uncertain as she watched the wares being slowly stocked. She took note of the two different kinds of honey, and kept her hand tightly on her sons. “Ah… Good morning.” She murmurs awkwardly. “I don’t… Uh… I don’t really see much sweets out yet.”

“I haven’t gotten them unboxed yet.” Toki gave her an awkward smile, but let it fade as the woman’s gaze locked on her teeth. Toki sighed softly, and turned her gaze away. She ruffled her mane up enough that she could duck her mouth behind it, and then continued to lay out goodies. She’d pre-made honey tarts, and hardened honey candies made from both normal honey, and monster honey. She’d even worked in a few flavorings to some, but not many. Once she got the sweets up, she worked on the Vestimoves stock, and left Tenne to handle the customers. Toki was probably better suited to working in the back.

"I'll give you a little hint, some of these candies were made with a very special ingredient. Completely of the Earth, and only accessible so many times in a year.” Tenne knelt and gave the boys accompanying their mother a nice smile. "Would either of you boys like to make a guess at what that ingredient is? I'll even give you a hint if you want one.”
The boys looked at each other and seemed to contemplate the monster in front of them. The taller of the two raised a hand. “Can we have a hint please?”

He smiled, then he stood tall. He reached and collected from a nearby window-cover a handful of the white powder that blanketed the land. He then knelt once more, and showed it to the boys.

“What- snow?” They blinked incredulously, eyes going wide. “No way- you can’t use snow to make candy, can you?”

Toki listened and hummed. They did use the colder temperatures of the snow outside to help harden the candies faster, but did that count for cooking the snow into the candies?

"You best believe it, dear boys. Snow as you might already know, is simply cold water, but it's just that. Cold, clean, filtered by Nature itself. We have utilized it, and another of Nature's gifts, and made this delectable treat to offer to you today." He purred, tilting his hand to let the snow sprinkle to the ground. "Honey-Snow Drops."

The mother didn’t look too sure if she believed him or not.

The kids eyes glinted excitedly at the thought though.

Toki smiled faintly, and pressed two of the mint flavored honey drops into Tenne’s hand as she passed by. She wasn’t above giving out a couple samples if people asked to try them- and the mint flavored ones would be ‘cold like snow’, and help solidify his story.

"Thank you, my darling." He cooed to her, before holding the disks to the boys. "Want to try?"

The smaller of the two shrank back and away as Toki passed near, but the taller nodded to the bigger monster. “Yes please.” He held out his hand eagerly.

“I… guess, yes.” The smaller nodded too, and peeked out from behind his mother’s leg. “The lady with wings has scary teeth, mister candy man.”

"She might have scary teeth, but she is the most sweetest woman I've ever had the fortune of meeting in this life of mine. She's the sweetest, most gentle mother to my boys, younger than you two are." He told the younger boy as he held the disk to him with one hand, the other going to the elder brother.

The two boys took their candies. The eldest worked on unwrapping his, his eyes wide and curious.

The younger one fiddled with the wrapper, slowly opening it as he nodded quietly. “But… isn’t she a bee? Bees are mean. They sting me and then my arm swells up and I can’t breathe.”

“Bees don’t try to be mean,” Toki says softly from behind Tenne. She keeps her teeth hidden, and her stingers on her wrists well out of sight. “They’re just afraid. You’re so much bigger than them, that they get scared very easy and act out. It’s okay if you’re afraid of me, little one. I’m not going to hurt you though, and neither will my bees.”

The boy hesitated and nodded slowly. Together, the brothers popped the candies in their mouths, and then started to bounce. The younger one’s eyes lit up. “It tastes like honey and cold!” He exclaims.

“Oh… I don’t know…” The woman hesitates. She looks at Tenne and fiddles with her purse strap. “How much for a little baggie of them?”
"Mm... We have barely opened our store. I never once thought about what might be the requested price for such treats." He extended a hand to the closest bee, and he smiled wider, subtle and still calm, but now revealing his own sharp teeth, "Toki... My dear, darling love, just how much do you think would be fair to ask for?"

The woman blanched just a little at seeing his sharp, sharp teeth, but she kept her composure and straightened her back.

Toki blinked slowly, and pondered the economics of the time. For a bazaar, prices were supposed to skyrocket. She didn’t want to inflate too much- but she knew other monsters were depending on her to bring them back an improved amount of funds. She exhaled softly. “We have four different sized bags,” She says softly, and holds up a sample bag of each, using each of her arms. “The smallest holds ten candies- medium holding fifteen, large twenty, and the jumbo topping out at twenty eight candies. Their prices... are two dollars, four dollars, six dollars, and eight dollars, respectively.” She dips her head, and waits for the woman to decide. Her profits were hers and hers alone- and she had to help bring them income somehow. She couldn’t undercut this- though she paid nothing out of pocket for these candies in particular. He’d given them the magic ones. “It’s three, five, seven, and nine for the candies made out of bee honey instead of monster honey, Ma’am. What would you like to purchase?”

“My sons tried... monster honey?” Her mouth popped open.

Toki nods, and points to the clearly marked sign on the front of the table. “Green candies are monster candies, Ma’am, no matter the flavor.”

The woman sputters a moment, but recovers. “I... suppose a medium of your monster candies, I suppose. In the... mint flavor?”

"A medium monster mint it is, my lady." He purred. He turned, and gently took the medium sized bag of green candies off the stand. He then held it out to the mother. "Here you are."

The woman gave him a faint smile, and dug out four dollars from her wallet. She traded it over for the bag of thick, quarter sized candies, and tucked them away from her kids prying hands into her purse. “One at a time, children, or you’ll choke.” She admonishes gently. “Thank you. Have a good day.” She nods to Tenne and wanders off.

Toki tucks the bags down and turtles her neck into her fluff as the mother and her sons wander off. “I wonder if Hitsu would be upset if I borrowed one of the scarves.” She murmurs idly, and stoops to fetch a box of cinnabunnies from the general store. Toki pulsed some magic into them, and they warmed right up, spreading that hot, steamy fresh baked smell into the air as she settled them on the end of the table, summoning a few bees to keep the box warm for her.

"Let us go sit down, and you can snuggle into my coat instead.” He offered gently as he moved to behind the stall to get comfy.

Toki paused, and glanced at him. Oh... Oh that just made it more awkward. “I’m not... cold.” She says awkwardly, and turtles further into her fluff. “But my teeth are going to make people uncomfortable, on top of me looking like a bee. I figure maybe scarf can cover it and mask them instead?” She glances at him and the number of boxes they have to stack and put up. “We can’t just... Sit around either. We’ve got tables to stock and... a lot to do.” She finishes lamely. She never usually handled face to face sales back in her world- she did it with companies, and they picked up shipments and then sold it elsewhere.

"Ah." He nodded slowly in understanding, before he gave her a smile. "I'm sure she wouldn't care a “Yeah.” She nods softly, and then fishes out a box of scarves. “Find one that’ll fit me, mister color-coordinated?” Toki was decent at it, but it would make him feel useful and helpful if he could find one that would make her look nice.

He chirped happily at that and came to her side to start rummaging. "If we're lucky there's a green one in here that matches your luscious fluff~" He purred.

Lo and behold, in the middle of the box was a beautiful green scarf with several different hues of green. There were multiple copies of it, in adult and child size, but the color seemed like it would fit well with Toki’s mane. She blinked and motioned to it. “What about that one?”

"It's perfect." He took it out of the box and gently wrapped it around her neck, covering her mouth and hiding away her teeth. "You look perfect~" He purred, "Well... if you would, if you weren’t already perfect, that is.”

Toki blushed over the edge of the scarf and laughs. It helps to keep her cheeks warm, so she doesn’t complain too much, even when she has to adjust it under her horns so it doesn’t stick. “You’re too sweet, Tenne.” She laughs softly. “So… I can finish setting up here. Do you want to go explore the bazaar and see what they have for sale? Maybe start looking for Christmas presents for the boys?”

"I suppose it wouldn't hurt, however I haven't much of their currency so I might not actually make a purchase."

"You can come back here. We have some to use for trading money back and forth and making change, so if there's something you really want, I'm sure we can manage it." Toki nods lightly to him. She takes a deep breath, and then exhales, before clearing a space. Its cold, but they have a fairly large space to set up. There had been a few cancellations with her taking up a spot here, so... There was plenty of space for her to summon Clover, and for Clover to curl up behind the back of the tent and radiate warmth. She just needed to make space for her better behaved summons.

He pecked her head lightly, and then went over to Clover, of who he wasn’t entirely afraid of anymore, and gently massaged her cheeks. “Such a good girl.” He purred before starting out. "Alright, I'll be back later. I love you!" He chirped.

Clover rolled her eyes at him and rolled onto her side, stretching her long legs out and sighing as she got comfortable with her large head on a box.

Toki smiled and waved him off, before focusing on setting up.

It didn’t take her long without him underfoot, and soon she had everything on display, and their stand lit up by the green glow of her bees as they sat tightly onto the tent and didn’t move, looking inanimate as they provided light and warmth and helped keep the area around them warmer than the rest of the bazaar.

In the long run, Toki had probably… four or five customers in the time that Tenne was gone. As the bazaar started to pick up with more and more people coming, lots of people came to gawk at her as she fiddled around in her stand. She had a book to read during her down time, and Toki honestly wasn’t sure what to do with herself. It was slow- but at least she’d sold some of the more expensive things. Someone had bought several bottles of the alcohol- and several people bought the clothes that Hitsu had sent, after Toki had warmed them with her magic.

Tenne hadn't bought as much as Toki sold, but he was excited to see all the different wares that the humans offered. There were candles with different colors and scents, knitted wears, jewelry, there was food in some of the stalls, food that smelled heavenly, and even some produce. There was also a section where they were selling some glass... but that area smelled horrendous and Tenne quickly sought to avoid that section of the market.

He had returned after not too long to Toki's stall, a warm smile on his face as he gazed upon his mate. Of course he was gone for only maybe 20 minutes but he loved her so dearly, so could he be blamed?

Toki spotted Tenne heading her way long before he reached her. He was several feet taller than almost everyone, and the stark white of his skin stood out in the bright colors of the tents. She waved a hand at Tenne, and then looked down at her next customer, which was a young couple that were mostly keeping to themselves as they talked over which scarf would look the best, and if they should get a matching set.

Ah, young love. It was very sweet. Toki was especially fond of one of the red scarves that Hitsu had for sale, but she kept that to herself. Red didn't look good on her. She just liked it because Papyrus had one just like it, and it reminded her of her first home.

"I would suggest the blue." She says softly to the couple. "It will compliment her eyes, and help frame the shape of your jawline and make it stronger, sir."

"See? The gray bee lady says blue." The girl grins.

The guy sighs and kisses her forehead. "She's green, Heaven. She's green. But the blue would look good on us both." He nods slowly, and then they both set out to picking their preferred sizes.

Toki chuckles softly. Partial colorblind people definitely did see the world differently. She glanced over at Tenne and waved him over while they figured out what they wanted. "You weren't gone long. Did you have fun, sweetheart?"

"Indeed so, my love." He purred happily as he came to her side. "I can only hope you had a good time in my absence." He purred, pecking her head gently.

"Well enough," She says lightly, and leans into his kiss, "I'm not very good at the whole sales thing, but I manage." She blinks up at him. "Did you find anything that you'd like to buy?"

"There were a few things that I liked, but nothing caught my eye enough to consider purchasing," He answered.

She nodded lightly and hummed. "Did you scout out any good places for lunch?" She inquired lightly. "Or dinner, perhaps. We're gonna be home late."

"Yes, I think I found a place that would suit for a dinner out on the town." He replied with a smile. "I think you'll like it. And we'll be able to get our food to go if we have to leave sooner than later."

She nodded and smiled at him, even if he couldn’t see it. Her attention was drawn back to the man and woman as they waved to catch her attention again. "Have you made your decision?" She inquired gently.

"We have." The man nodded. He held up two blue medium scarves- the ones sized more for monster teens than adults, and then tucked them under his arm. "How much?"

"Ten each." She gives him an eye smile, and collects his money as he pays. She watches them go, and then carefully marks down what was sold, before tucking the money away into the pouch. She’d divvy up the funds at the end. Once they were gone, she looked up at Tenne. “I don’t know how you do it,” She says. “I don’t like being stared at. I didn’t mind it before,” before she’d been a beast, before she’d been a skeleton, before, before, before, “but it gets my beast’s hackles all up and she gets grumpy. It’s so…” She fluffs around her borrowed scarf and seems to pout.

"It's not easy at first... but don’t worry, it'll get better in time, especially once everyone learns you're not a scary monster, but a sweet Momma bee."

Toki nodded and chuckled softly. "Well, here's to hoping so." She bumps her hip to his, and then sidles out of the way to replace the scarves that had been claimed. She hummed and spread them out on the table, listening to the voices of the people passing by. "You're doing better around lots of humans than I figured you'd be." She comments, knowing he wasn't fond of large crowds or of humans.

"Beast is probably a bit more anxious than I am, but my tail is tucked away and I keep my voice sweet, and the humans do not grow scared or hesitant around me... It works to remind me that I aim to behave the same, as well as the opposite. Besides, I have you.” He chuckles. “Why the hell would I be nervous?"

She laughs softly and lets her head bump into his arm. Considering he was very aware that her power trumped his, and she could very easily keep him safe if she needed to, it very well explained why he wasn’t too nervous. "I wish you could tell that to my beast. My beast is not fond of the humans. Which makes no sense considering..." She'd been human. All the same, Toki exhaled and glanced up at him. "The humans can get past the bee look, but my teeth can’t be hidden, and that's the main problem. Hence the scarf. The calmer they are, the better, though."

"I suppose there's no true winning for this, but at least we've met a point of compromise." He purred, kissing her head.

She chuckled. “I guess. Compromise is part of all relationships, right?’

There was a light knock on the table, and a voice started out in soft stuttering English. “Ah… you sale demon items?” The man cleared his throat awkwardly and flushed. “English not good.”

It wasn’t the lack of English, or the particularly thick Japanese accent that caught her attention. No, what caused her body to tense like she’d been stuck with a cattle prod was the voice itself. That voice- she hadn’t heard it in years. Not since before her children - not since just shortly after she’d gotten engaged.

She turned, and there he was.

Dark hair, dark and slanted eyes with small worry lines in the corners, darker skin… He was still shorter than her, and bundled up in thick coats, but he was still built just like she remembered. He still carried himself like she remembered, like he’d seen too much and done too much.

Han.

Her throat bobbed- she’d last seen him slathered on his own blood, begging her not to make him leave, pleading with her not to let him die. He’d died in her arms, cradled to her chest, and his soul had shattered, crumbled into beautiful blue dust in her hand.

A quick and sharp mental pulse from her beast had her snapping to her senses, and she managed a soft, strangled sound, before clearing her throat. “I speak Japanese.” She said, switching to her native born tongue very swiftly, her voice shaking just slightly. She’d been teaching Tenne the language too, in her spare time. The only good thing about her scarf, was that it helped hide most of her expression. Only her eyes were blown wide, but there wasn’t much she could do about that.

Han looked relieved. “Oh thank god. I’ve been wandering around here trying to find gifts for my family back home. I’m here on a business trip, and my kids asked me to get them gifts from the monsters. I didn’t even know where to look- but here you are.” Han gave a soft laugh, and rubbed the back of his head. “So… What would you suggest for a gaggle of young men, a lover, and a son and a daughter?”

Tenne had grown worried when she made the face she had, but as she began to converse pleasantries with the man he seemed to settle. As the man spoke, he took in what words he understood, and then he rumbled quietly. "What do you think would do for what he needs, my dear? I would think our honey-discs would survive his trip home.”

Toki was still reeling. Children. A son and a daughter. Young men. She noticed he made no mention of a sister. She dry swallowed and it took her a moment to answer.

It was a moment that Han noticed. “Are you okay?” He asks slowly. “You look… well, like you’ve seen a ghost, frankly.”

She sucked in a soft breath and nodded slowly. “I’m sorry. You just… sound exactly like someone that I once knew.”

“Once knew?” He lifted a brow curiously.

“My little brother.” Toki answers softly. “I’m sorry. It just… threw me. I haven’t heard his voice since he died so long ago.”

“I’m sorry for your loss. To be fair, it sounds just like my big sister. She died almost two years ago, so it threw me for a moment too. I understand.” He nodded gently, and gave her a smile. “She was really sweet. Her name was Tokiko- but she preferred to be called Toki. You… well, you remind me of her. Toki kept an apiary, you see.”

Toki simply smiled. Well, Tenne was going to have questions after that. That also answered questions for her. Apparently only one could exist at a time. She’d replaced this world’s Toki. “I see. I’m sorry for your loss as well.” She dipped her head to him, and then glanced over her wares. Her insides hurt. Her heart hurt- and her scent displayed this nicely. This was her brother- this was her baby brother from another world but he’d never know it was her. She couldn’t- she couldn’t do that to him. Because she wasn’t his Toki- and he wasn’t her Han, despite what she would like to think. “Well, what do your son and daughter like? Our honey drops are good treats, but we’ve also got plain honey, scarves, alcohol for your ‘gaggle of young men’ or your lover… Lots of choices.”

He hesitated and nodded slowly. “Well, I wouldn’t mind some honey- maybe some of the drops too. But definitely the scarves. My Rosie loves scarves, just like Todd does. Felix would like… a green one. Rosie would like pink- she loves pink. Todd… Red. Definitely red for Todd.”

“Blue.” Toki blurts. “For you.” Like his soul. Like the one she had gotten to see once- so damaged and hurt and wounded, but so strong and beautiful and gentle of a blue- before it had cracked and shattered into dust in her hands.

“Blue for me?” He blinks. “Blue is good. I like blue.” He glanced to Tenne, hesitant about asking his opinion on the matter since he wasn’t sure if he understood what he was saying.

Tenne was still a little confused, but he was letting Toki talk, as she seemed to know something about this man that he didn’t.

“Blue is good.” She agrees, voice wanting to choke up. Blue was his soul color, she knew. A soul that would be filled with LOVE- and with love too- but be so kind and so gentle. She missed him. Oh how she ached to reach across the table and hug him- to call him brother and hear him call her sister. But he wasn’t- and like with Tenne, Quinn, and Kai, Toki had to accept that.

It didn’t make it hurt any less, or make her soul sing any quieter with her pain. Homesickness hit her hard, and there was nothing the soft comforts of Sequoia could do to help her, or even the soothing hand of her beast. She was faced with her blood family, blood family she had lost, and it was family she could never have again.

Han nodded, and collected multiple items from the table, piling them into his arms. He grabbed a couple copies of things, things he deemed fitting for people she may have known, and people she may not have known- people she may never know again- and once he had a sufficient pile in his arms, he smiled up at her. “How much do I owe you, Mrs…?”

Toki didn’t answer immediately with her name, or her last name, because she knew what sort of attention that would draw. Instead, she made a small show of tallying up what he was buying, and how much it would cost him in American dollars.

Tenne at this point stepped in, and he gently gripped her shoulders as he leaned in and kissed her cheek, before rumbling to her quietly. "Are you alright?” He asked her in a hushed whisper.

“No,” she answered, “I’m not. I’m not okay at all.” But, when she straightened, she had a smile back on her face, and held out the tablet with his total written in his native language.

Han’s eyes sparkled, and he fished out the amount for her, handing it over eagerly. “Thank you, Mrs.-.” His eyes caught on the label on one of the jars of honey, and then flashed back up to her, “Nara. Huh. That’s a familiar name. Same as mine.”

“Small world.” She smiled back politely, and dipped her head, giving him a half bow as she did so. “We’ll be here every Saturday, from here on out, so please, if you’re ever in the city again, Mr. Nara, feel free to visit.”

“I will.” Han gave her a brilliant smile. “I may make a trip back to the states just for these candies if my students like them too. Buy enough in bulk maybe to last me all year. All natural is better than processed goods for children anyways.”

He was a teacher- at an actual school. He’d gone to school to be a teacher. Toki’s heart throbbed more, and her scent thickened with it. Still, she kept up her facade, and smiled until Han wandered off to another stall to seek out more goods. When he got distracted by something off down the way, Toki’s shoulders slumped. She put up her ‘gone to lunch’ sign she’d made, her wings practically dragging the ground, and she turned away from the table to step mechanically into the back.

The worst possible thing happened. Toki hiccupsd. The hiccup lead up to tears- which steadily began to roll right down her cheeks, right into the scarf she had covering her mouth. She yanked it down as she kept her back turned to the crowd outside, covering her crying with one of her hands as best she could.

“That was... That was Han.” She knew he knew the name. And he’d be even more confused- because he knew her brother was dead in her world.
He knew indeed but he knew not how to answer as he immediately made to comfort her, pulling her form to his as he ran his hand over her head

"Han... your brother?"

“Yes,” She turned and hid her face into his chest and mane, all four of her arms looping around his middle as her word was choked on a sob. Her fragile barrier around her soul chipped and shattered a little bit more, her walls crumbling down. Of all the people she had to meet, it had to be him. “It’s him, Tenne, it’s him but it’s not him. It’s Han, but it’s not my Han, and it’s not fair. Why did the universe have to show me this? Why did it have to be him? He died in my arms Tenne, and there he was, not three feet from me but he doesn’t know me! I’m not his Toki! His Toki is dead and my Han is dead and it’s not right!”

"Why didn't you say anything?" He asked quietly, "I would have thought this was your chance to say something... especially if there was something to be said."

“Because he’s not mine, Tenne, he’s not mine, and I’m not his.” She stresses. “His sister died, and he’s made peace with it. I know what I’m feeling because what I know, and I wouldn’t wish that on him. I wouldn’t wish that on any of the multiples that I know.” She sniffled. “Imagine he knew that… That his sister died because I came here. Because two of the same person- the same soul- can’t be in one world at once without repercussions. Imagine… Imagine you went to my world. And… and you met your sons there. Your sons who have children of their own- families of their own- and they found out their father died so you could be there. Imagine how you would feel. Imagine how they would feel. And… And you’d know why I can’t. I can’t, Tenne, and I want to tell him so bad. I want to hold my baby brother again, to laugh and sing songs while he plays his violin… But I can’t. Because he’s not mine.”

He listened to her before he sighed and rested his head on hers, "Alright... I'm sorry..." he murmured gently, "I will drop this. I'm sorry I put you in distress with my naivety." Though after some time of letting her sniffle against him and calm down, he smiled and lifted her head so she’d look at him. "You make it sound like I was a cranky old man in the other-verse. I suppose that would mean my darling Kai and Quinn would be dashing grown men there as well..."

She sniffs quietly. "You're not naive, Tenne. You're not. You meant well and I'm sorry I got upset." Toki closes her eyes and just hiccups against him. It wasn't fair. It wasn't fair, and whoever was pulling the strings for this world was an asshole. His following words made her give a soft bitter laugh into his chest, right up until he tilts her head up and makes her look at him. "You're not wrong. In another world, in another life, you grew old and bitter and sour in a world where everything was terrible, and you and the king were alone except for each other. Your sons had different names, but grew up well all the same. I knew them... Well. I see this world and I see how much I've changed it, and I wonder if it will be the same again."

He smiled gently and he kissed her head tenderly. "It will never be the same as it would have been before you came... and you know why." He chuckled gently. "I love you." He then purred sweetly as he kissed her gently.

Toki met his kiss gently and lifts a hand to stroke over his bearded cheek. She peers up at him tenderly, and offers a faint smile. "The Tenebris I first met never grew a beard. Sometimes he melted into a blob of particularly cantankerous goo, but he never grew a beard or a mane. He was also... Built different. But he was older." She sighs and nuzzles him, "I love you too, Tenne. I love you a lot. I couldn’t have made it in this world if not for you and the boys, I really couldn’t have.”

Her heart still hurt, but the pain was lessening a bit with his comfort. Some of that was her beast pressing in and trying to soothe it, and the wordless comfort that Sequoia was offering. Sometimes words weren’t needed - sometimes it was just comfort and companionship that helped. Toki already had words from Tenne - but comfort was never turned away.

She leaned back a bit and scrubbed a hand against her green stained cheeks, sniffing softly through her teeth. “Thank you. I’m sorry I fell apart. It just… was sudden.” She hadn’t been able to brace for, or even expect to brace for seeing Han again.

Tenne chirped happily and his tail wrapped around her for a moment. "No matter what happens I’ll be right beside you." He purred happily, "Got it?"

“Yes.” She nuzzled his shoulder. “I’m glad you’ll be here with me - I’m not going anywhere either.” Especially since she had no idea what the Void had even wanted her to do. And… Well, Sequoia didn’t want to leave. Toki was conflicted. She honestly didn’t want to think about it, frankly. Just… no.

It was understandable that she didn’t want to think about it, and Tenne wasn’t in any mindset to question the topic further. He rather simply savored that Toki was so happy with him. He was sweet and innocent in the mate mindset, simply happy enough that she was happy with him. It made the maned beast fluff up in the middle of the market.

She laughed as his blanket like mane fluffed up, and gently tangled her fingers in it. “You look like a melanistic dandelion.” She tells him fondly, and kisses him again. “Okay… we still have work we have to do.”

"Indeed so. We best get back to it then, we have more children looking at the honey discs." He chortled as he reached up and gently re-wrapped her scarf. "As beautiful as your teeth may be, you wish to hide them away for now... so let us do just that."

Toki gave him a faint nod, and stoke his fingers to kiss them through her scarf mask. “Alright… Tonight, when you and I get home and the boys are both in bed and asleep,” She murmurs softly, “May we…?” She brushes her fingers to her chest, motioning to where her soul lay hidden. After today, seeking comfort in a merge would be a familiar, welcoming habit.

He gave a nod to her request, his expression a mix of eagerness and excitement, though his vocal energy cleverly hid it as he kissed her again. "As you wish~"

Toki laughs softly into his kiss, and leans into him. “As I wish,” She teases, “I think it’s more than just me wishing for it, dear.”

He was insatiable, really. Once he’d gotten a taste for merging, he loved it. He touched her soul, and let her touch his, as often as they could. It still baffled her that they hadn’t conceived… But it was probably because of the instability. Toki and Sequoia were a mishmash - a frankensoul - and that instability would probably never result in a healthy pregnancy. Part of Toki mourned - part of her did not.

Most of her just wanted to take solace in Tenne’s soul, and spend the night wrapped up in him to ease away the painful scar that had been scraped raw once more by Han. Logically she knew it wasn’t her fault Han had died- but there was a small part of Toki that blamed herself for her little brother’s death. If she hadn’t kicked the metaphorical hornets nest… But there was nothing to be done. Going back wouldn’t fix it, even if she’d been back in her world.

As much as it hurt, Han’s death wasn’t her fault. She blamed herself, but she couldn’t have prevented it, she couldn’t have stopped him from dying. Toki needed to forgive herself for it - and she would, in time.
“But,” She continues a moment later, “We have work to do first, and kids to put to entertain when we get home tonight. Once we’re alone… you’re all mine.”

"I'm all yours~ and you're both all mine to love~" He purred happily.

“You’re ours to love too.” Toki smiled to him, and leaned up to kiss him again. Then, Toki straightened, blocked up everything to deal with later, and headed back out to deal with business, as she needed to once more.
Chapter 113

They ended up making decent money for themselves, and for everyone else by the end of that day. When they got home, they divided up the funds to their rightful owners, and then got the kids and went home.

And, well… Later that night, Toki and Tenne spent their hours simply laying together with their souls merged. They ended up falling asleep like that, and it was what Toki needed.

She felt lighter a week or so later. She’d taken time and just… let her mind settle, coming to terms with everything that had been stirred up. Toki still hurt—seeing Han had ripped her scars wide open—but she was… not better, but more at peace with it.

It left her in a good mood, as she bumped her hip to Tenne’s and danced around the kitchen while she did dishes. Her pheromones were high with her glee as she hummed a silly song and balanced doing dishes in her hands. She was just finishing them up, washing and rinsing the dishes with one set of hands, and drying and putting them away with the other set.

People joked about having four hands, until they actually did. But, when you got four hands and learned to use them, they were actually very, very useful.

"Tenne dear?" Toki chirps, glancing out at the snow falling, "We need t’ go milk the cows after I finish dishes and you finish breakfast. We’re almost out o’ milk, and town needs another shipment."

"'Tenne Dear'?" Tenne laughed a little as he ran the ridges of his tail over her back, his hands unable to prod her in teasing as he was on breakfast duty. Four hands made washing dishes so much faster, it was amazing, but unfortunately she lacked a third set to also do breakfast. It gave him something to do. "It sounds to me like someone's in one heck of a good mood." He commented as he flipped a pancake in its pan, hearing the soft sound of sizzling and growing, pleased by it,

"Of course, we could see about having the boys aid us in milking the cows. Kai does very well by it, and Quinn is learning quickly under his brother's teachings." He rumbled, "By the way, I've been thinking about designing a milking machine to help us with all our cows."

“I am in a good mood,” She laughs and smiles at him. “Is it so strange? I know I’ve been a bit melancholy since last week’s Saturday Market, but I feel better.” She finishes dishes with a flurry of her hands and magic, drying the fluffy fur around her wrists that hid her stingers, and then she tucked the dishes away and turned off the sink.

She slid over to him and looped her arms around his middle, nuzzling her face into his shoulders. “I would absolutely love that. As much as I don’t mind milking, it’s slowly killing my wrists. I don’t mind if the boys want to help though. It’ll give them something to do, until they get bored and it’s just us again.” She laughs gently. Toki was the fastest milker. Four hands, again made for the best way to get milk out of a cow. “Mmm, breakfast smells amazing.”

He squared his shoulders a little as he gave a grin and he rumbled softly in reply. "I'm glad you think so."

She felt him square his shoulders and laughed into his back. "You puff up like the world's most adorable dandelion when you're proud of something." She laughs. "Or strut like a peacock. Are you sure you're not part bird beast?" She teases him, and peeks around his arm to look at breakfast. One of her smaller hands snakes around to try and steal a blueberry out of the pancake batter without him noticing.

"I wouldn't think it impossible." He chortled, before he swatted her hand. "Get outta there." He tutted, before poking his butt out to push her back some from the stove.

“Tennnnnneee," She pouts, and there might have been a tiny playful whine there as she’s denied a blueberry. As his butt pushes her out, her eyes glint, and she leans back, before goosing him right in the ass. “Fine. If I can’t have a piece of sweet blueberry, I’ll have a piece of this sweet ass~” She jokes.

He gasped sharply and jumped slightly, before he chuffed and chuckled. "You little stinker. Get outta my space and get back to your dishes."

She laughed and scooted away. “But I’m done with the dishes, Tenne, until you’ve finished cooking. I’m bored. And bored bees are feisty bees.”

"I wonder if their mommy is feeling feisty too~" He purred as he gave her a look. "And I dunno, pups and mothers eat a lot of pancakes."

She pouts at him. “Well, I could help make more pancakes, but you told me you had it down.” She crosses both sets of arms, and cocks a plush hip at him. One of her wings quirks up with her brows. “I suppose I could go wake the boys to give you time to finish cooking. Sound about good~?”

"Sounds good, sweetie." He pulled her close and gave her a kiss, grinning at her once he pulled back. "Love you~"

“I love you too.” She smiled up at him, nudged him with the curling part of her horn, and then made her way to the stairs. She sauntered up, and went to the boy’s rooms, carefully knocking on Kai’s door so he’d have time to get up and get dressed, before she stepped into Quinn’s room. “Quinn? Sweetie, it’s time to get up.” She slips inside, and pads for his bed, reaching down to gently touch his shoulder as he slept, sprawled out in an adorable pile.

"Mnhhh~" The pup whined and waved a flimsy hand at Toki. "Noooo Momma..."

"Yeeees, Quinnny," Toki laughed. She crouched down, and ran the fuzzy fluff of her fur along his neck, tickling him gently. “C’mon, sweetie. Your Daddy is making breakfast- he makes the nummiest breakfast, doesn’t he?”

"Pancakes?" He asked as he squirmed at the tickling.

"Pancakes," she nods and smiles. She'd been doing so much work with him on his speaking, and it was finally paying off. "Pancakes... Maybe with some honey on them?" She tickles him again, rousing him more as she wonders if he wants her honey or honey from her apiary.

He trilled happily then rolled over and clamped onto her form to be picked up. "Honey!" He trilled.
Toki scooped him up with a soft chuckle, and tickled his little pajama clad sides, before propping him on her hip. “C’mom, sweet cheeks.” She smooched his cheeks with a dramatic kissy sound, and then headed out the door, to knock on Kai’s door again. “Let’s go see if your brother is up.”

"Mkay." He yawned widely. Quinn lifted his head and blinked, spooked. "M-Momma!” He whined, patting her shoulder before pointing at the mirror.

Toki turned around and spotted the mirror. She froze, and her eyes stretched wide, her arms clamping protectively around Quinn.

There in the mirror was a black void, yawning open like the gates to the abyss. She remembered that hole- the Void, the Magic, was unforgettable. No, what was truly terrifying, was the hands stretching out from it towards her.

She bolted, instinctively panicking as she shoved into Kai’s room. The void yawned wider behind her, taking up the wall with wispy black tendrils crawling across the floor.

Kai startled awake with a loud cry, a pups frightened cry, as Toki yanked him out of the bed and barreled out of the window. The glass shattered, and she used her magic to brush it off her skin as she powered through, taking to the sky and circling around the house with her wings buzzing as she tried to get Tenne's attention. He couldn't, couldn't, go upstairs.

Tenne had stepped out of the kitchen as the door was slammed to Kai’s room but he hadn’t made it to calling out her name when he heard the noise. Unfortunately, he knew not the danger, and went upstairs quickly. "Toki?"

He opened the door to Kai’s room and he looked at the broken glass. "Toki!?"

The void was not there as he rushed back upstairs. The only thing that remained was an inky smudge, darker than the darkest black, smelling faintly of the deepest depths of nighttime and cold.

Toki however, heard him going back up. She panicked, and headed for the barn. Both boys were gently dislodged and nestled inside of the hay, where she shushed their whimpering, and covered them up to hide them. “Stay quiet, stay down, don’t move,” She whispers, “Until I or your Daddy come to get you.”

She left once they nodded, and buzzed back to the house. She hovered outside the broken window to Kai’s room, and buzzed to call his attention. “Tenne!”

"Toki, what happened?!” He came to the window. "Where's the boys?"

“Get out!” She came closer to the window, her eyes frightened. “Out! There’s something in the house! It’s not- it’s, it’s what brought me here!” Her tone spoke it all. If it was here again… what was it doing? She hadn’t done anything for the Void to take her- so what was it doing here?”

His eyes narrowed before he turned and growled. He then looked around, "What is it?" he asked, before hearing as the kitchen's smoke alarm going off, "Oh Damn it!” he snarled, "Toki... Just hang on!” He told her, before disappearing to the hallway and downstairs. He turned off the stove and moved the pan to the sink, coughing at the smoke before he turned and opened the window in front of the sink, coughing still as he waved his hand to coax the smoke out. "Toki!” he called again.

Toki appeared down at the kitchen window, planting her hands on the windowsill as she gave him a concerned look. “Get out of the house! It’s... It’s the void! It’s nothingness but it’s everything. It can’t be explained!” The smoke looked dark, and it smelled foul.
"Toki..." He coughed again, "Once this smoke clears, I want you to come back in. We'll have a cuppa tea and we'll talk this through... Okay?"

He gave her a smile, unaware of the form stepping through the darkening smoke, empty eyes looking over him before turning to stare right at Toki.

Toki’s eyes blew wide, her pupils rapidly expanding into black disks that reflected the form of a medieval doctors mask back at her. She bolted, not away, but for the door, aiming to get Tenne out of there. If Tenne couldn’t see it, she needed to get him, get the boys, and run. Fuck everything else—they needed to leave, now.

And yet, in those fearful black disks, Tenne could see the form behind him and he turned to see the being as it turned back to face him again. Without another thought, Tenne roared and lunged at the stranger, who simply disappeared into the darkness.

Already out of breath, Tenne's breathing was rough and deep as he navigated out of the darkness and into the front room, where the form was waiting.

Tenne snarled as he made to lunge at the intruder before the form lifted a hand connected to his body only by a few wisps of smoky essence.

‘Kneel’

Tenne's legs buckled and he barely made a few more feet before falling to his knees at the foot of the strange monster invading their home, his eyes lifting in what appeared to be a increasingly drugged state from the vapor he was breathing in...

Breathing? Was he even breathing? He couldn't...

"L-Leave..." He started breathlessly, before the hand that forced his knee lowered to in front of his face. His eyes followed it before a wave of black washed over them, darkening his already black Sclera and hiding his purple irises as he fell silent.

And as the beast was sedated, the hand lifted to his forehead and began to look within.

Trudging his way through the snow, he makes it to the cave and shakes off before approaching the form collapsed against the wall "Oh my goodness..."

His newfound kin was laying on a slab now under a warming blanket, her breathing was deeper... Good... She would survive.
“Speaking of pack... what caused you to be separated from yours? Such terrible damage... Do Insectis not aid their kin as Drake or Avari would?”

“I'm Tokiko... Nara.”

“She's missing... where in the underground could she have gone if she was still recovering? If she died and I wasn't there to try and save her...” Tenne was pacing back and forth in his office, her note of farewell laying on his desk where he had put it once he had found it.

She was cradling them, singing to them... He could feel his heart leap in his chest at the sight of how happy they were in her arms.

Toki burst through the front door, her eyes wild and wide. She opened her mouth and snarled at him. “You get away from him! You get away from him right now!” Her mouth lit with a green beam of energy, and despite her fears, she stalked forwards, her mane bristling upwards with a surprisingly intimidating amount of force.

The reading of Tenne's memories cut short when Toki appeared and the form slowly allowed his hand to fall. The darkness drained from Tenne's form and came out his mouth, allowing him to cough and regain his breath. It didn’t last long before the form gave a small wave of his hand, and sent Tenne falling to his side with a crash onto the floor, his eyes now closed.

‘There you are, Tokiko Nara.’
Toki’s breathing picked up and she swallowed hastily. She edged around him, and came to Tenne, crouching down to check on him as quickly and as gently as she could. “Who are you and what did you do to Tenne? How do you know my name?” She demands. “I don’t know your face or your voice.”

‘I am Phase, and I know everything about you.’ The form allowed her to go to Tenne. ‘He is merely unconscious. And irrelevant to my presence... I have come for you.’ The hand lifted once more, and this time snared her soul, pulling her away from Tenne, and closer to himself.

‘TOKI!’ The first thing to hit Toki about the soul being in this stranger’s grasp was Sequoia’s panicked shriek from within.

Sequoia’s panicked shriek from within was soon echoed by Toki’s as their soul was grasped by the stranger. She was pulled closer to him by the power in his hand, and as his grasp curled around the source of their life, she felt the power in her throat die off. She sucked in a shaky breath, claws curling into her chest. This wasn’t what her soul being touched should feel like. “What… What are you doing to me?” She gasps. It wasn’t pleasant- not in the slightest. “What do you want with me?”

‘You were brought to this world with a task given to you...’ He twitched the hand and her soul was pulled from her chest... The shadowy smoke then pulled her body back as a weapon began to form in the creature's hands. It was a large scythe, much like a reaper's weapon. ‘And now,’ The form continued, ‘your duty is complete.’

‘Toki... Toki is he gonna kill us!? ’

‘I… I don’t know!’ She cried out to Sequoia, and lunged against the bonds holding her. She looked to Tenne, to his unconscious form, and called upon her magic, willing him to wake up, to get away so he didn’t have to be near what would come. She would die- a reaper's blade was not a peaceful weapon. No, it was for many things- many unpleasant things.

“I don’t know what my duty was, so how would I know I completed it!?” She shouted at him. “Let me go! Don’t touch me!”

‘It was not for you to know. It was the will of the darkness.’

‘Toki do something!’ Sequoia was scared, and a final scream of Toki’s name was the last thing the monster heard as the scythe was swung with deadly precision, slicing the two boss hearts apart from each other. Coming with their separation immediately was followed by a powerful tearing at their body, as if it attempted to split like the souls had.

“I… I can’t do anything!” Toki squirmed and struggled, right up until the split happened.

Toki’s body bisected itself down the center, Toki splitting off on the left side, following the scarred side of her skull. She cried out, and the fog split and folded in, reforming what was taken from her body with a swift action. Toki was left whole, half naked, and in agony as newly formed nerve endings fired and went off as they experienced everything for the first time.

The other half of her body went under a greater change. The bee wing was swallowed up by shadows, twisting and morphing into some unknown shape. When the shadows dispersed, in it’s place stood a fluffy looking moth monster, with glittering wings and glistening skin, complete with soft looking antenna sticking up from the mane on her head. She had the same teeth as Toki, and had six arms instead of four- she was an entirely different breed of beast.

The scythe disappeared as the monster that identified himself as Phase focused on the split souls in his hands. It took both some time, but with the aid of the shadow magic, they formed their own souls once more. Toki's had the power that made her a boss heart, While Sequoia's had been drained of all her boss magic, leaving her a perfect little ordinary soul. He delicately put both souls with their respective owners, and laid them down to rest. Toki was laid on the sofa, and the moth on Tenne's chair.

Tenne on the other hand was fine where he was. He wasn't laying on anything that would cut off blood flow, so he was just fine there on the floor.

'And the will of the void has been done...'

"Mo..... wa.... mma! Momma!" A soft hiccup interrupted his words. "W-Wake up Momma!" Toki's face was being pushed against with desperate paws, "Momma!" Quinn was sobbing as he stood beside her, shaking her as best his tiny paws could.

Kai was over on Tenne, shaking him with the same frantic as his little brother. Kai wasn't sobbing as hard as his little brother, but they were both terrified that something had happened to their parents.

Part of her face felt like fire had lanced over it as Quinn patted her cheeks almost desperately. She sucked in a soft breath, her lungs shakily expanding. One was entirely new, had never been consciously used, and the older one was distressed from the loss of her initial organ. So were the rest of her insides.

Toki's eyes slid open just a crack, and she groaned softly. Her chest felt heavy, but also feather light, like she was missing something that weighed her down.

"Quinn...?" She whispered softly. They hadn't listened to her orders to stay put... But it made her happy to know he was okay. She shakily tried to stir. "Quinn..."

"Momma!" He shrieked her title as she woke and he immediately dropped to hug her neck, wailing into her fluff in pure relief.

His wails were loud, and he made her head ring. Still, she hugged him when he latched onto her, and held him close as she groaned softly. “Hah… I’m here, baby. I’m here…”

Kai shook Tenne’s shoulder, harder than Quinn had dared. “Dad... C’mon, Dad, wake up. C’mon… Wake up…”

"M-Momma...” Quinn sobbed into her fur. “Momma..."

Tenne's form was shaking with the desperate rattling that Kai was inflicting, and soon he groaned. "Kai..." He grumbled, before his eyes slowly opened. "Ugh... What... what happened?" He growled quietly.

Kai latched onto Tenne as soon as he was awake, letting out a desperate sound of relief.

“Darkness came,” Toki answered softly. “Darkness came... and Darkness took... Took Sequoia.” Her soul was quiet- empty. Toki’s hand touched her chest, and it hurt. She glanced to the chair where a moth monster was sprawled. She swallowed. “I think… I think…”

The moth stirred slowly, blinking open green eyes. She moved awkwardly, jerkily, like it was a body that she wasn’t used to having. She sucked in a sharp breath, mouth gaping open as she filled her lungs and kick started her body functions into hyper drive. Her eyes slid over to everyone else, and blinked owlishly.

“Toki…?” It was Sequoia’s voice, coming from the moth’s body, sounding frightened, panicked, and in pain. She reached for her, trying to go to her, and tumbled right off the chair in a jumble of multiple limbs.

“Sequoia got her own body.” Her soul felt empty. She hadn’t been that empty in… In so long. Toki scrambled up with a wobbly position, her muscles not responding on her right side like they should. They felt false, temporary, like they were just there so she didn’t keel over right there. She ended up crawling to her, and reached out to touch her. Sequoia flinched, and Toki flinched back too. “I’m so sorry… It’s sensitive, I know.”

Tenne slowly got up and winced in pain, slowly coming over as well, "Sequoia... you look amazing." He purred to her gently.

'She repented for her sins, and learned to love again. Her task is complete, and I was ordered to give to her what she yearned the most…’ Came a voice from the form standing nearby, unnoticed until he wanted to be seen and heard.

Sequoia startled at the voice, and she half flopped onto Tenne as she tried to get away, her wings getting in the way as she tried to flap them and move them. “What I yearned for most?” She asks shakily.

Toki bristled, her mane fluffing out, and she turned Quinn away from him. “You’ve finished what you’ve come here to do.” She leers at him. “As grateful as I am for you giving her a body… Why are you still here?” Toki was wary to trust anything from the void.

Tenne looked up at Phase and hissed loudly at him, but the form approached without fear.

'My work is not yet done...' He answered simply. 'I have given her what she yearned for most. For her tale to finally conclude.'

That had Sequoia pause as she tried to translate that into something that made sense... But once it did… "D-Do you mean I…?"

'Yes. When your body is old, and you are ready to bid this world farewell. You will close your eyes, and you will never open them again. The Anti-Heart of Cruelty will be dead... Forever. Though with its death, the soul of Balance shall forever live on.'

Sequoia brought a hand to her mouth, shaky but with the most control she could muster at the time, and she took in his words, before she began to tremble, tears welling in her eyes. "I... I'm going to die..." She whispered.

Toki stared in shock, her wings trembling. She exhaled softly. “So… You’ve got one life left to live.” She gives Sequoia a soft smile. “This is what you wanted, Sequoia. You were so tired of living again, and again, and again…” She wasn’t sure what he meant by balance living on though. “Does… that mean that I’m not Kindness anymore?” She asks hesitantly. “And that… I’m going to reincarnate and remember?”

'Yes. Her burden has been lifted from her and is now to become yours. Whether or not it is a boon is up to you.' He answered. 'However, she is not the only one who I have come for...' His empty gaze turned to Toki.
“Nothing that you and the Void have ever done for me has been a boon.” She tells him sharply. “I’ll handle it just like I did being brought here. But…” She hesitates, and she feels a chill run down her spine.

Sequoia seemed to feel it too. “What do you mean? You already did something to her. What more are you going to do to Toki?”

“Leave my Mom alone!” Kai snarls from Tenne’s arms.

'It is time to go home.' Phase spoke simply.

"Momma is home." Quinn hissed at Phase, who did not react to the children’s’ aggression.

“Home…?” Her eyes slid wide, and there was a torn expression that crossed her face. Did he mean… Home to Papyrus? Home to her kids? But… What would happen to her family here? What would happen to her boys, her sweet Quinn and her stubborn and silly Kai?

“I… I…” She stuttered, throat bobbing. But what if he didn’t mean her home? What if he meant to keep her in the void, to make her like he was? To keep him company? What if he meant his home, not her home? “I can’t trust you. I’m sorry. I… I don’t know where you would take me, and I don’t trust that. I don’t… I don’t want to end up displaced again, as some misguided attempt just to amuse your asshole of a boss- the Void. Unless you’re the Void. Or… I don’t know.”

This wasn’t right. She was… She was finally starting to be happy here. Why did they have to do it now?

'You are not a fool, Tokiko Nara. You know very well where you would go.' He turned, and lifted a hand, before seeming to tear a hole in reality. He then took a step back, and turned to her, 'Look upon the world you left behind.'

What was within the hole was a sight that had Sequoia and Tenne staring in the same

It was two small skeletal-beastly looking child monsters curled up together. They rested in the cradling arm of a massive male who was nestled into a turtleneck, his old eyes closed as he rested. His other arm held close a tired looking skeleton, who looked to be distressed in his slumber, stains of tear streaks on his face to nearly match the downward scar on the larger males face...

Though Tenne would not recognize them, Sequoia, and most certainly Toki, would.

Toki’s heart squeezed. Her fingers reached out for the visage that she could see, and there was the same forlorn heartbreak visible on her face as when she has first admitted to Tenne that she had children that she’d ‘lost’. “My babies…” She whispered, voice rough. Her heart felt like it was being torn in two.

Sequoia swallowed. “That’s Toki’s family.” She supplies for Tenne, and for the children that were no doubt confused about Toki’s response. “Those are her children, her mate, and her father in law. That’s…” That was cruel to hit her with.

Toki wilted, unable to look away or do anything. She wanted to go home. She wanted her twins. She missed them - she missed Papyrus too. She missed him so much, so, so much… But how could she abandon Tenne? How could she abandon the boys, one of whom was so tightly clinging to her mane that he might never let her go?

How could she choose? How did you choose one family over another? Birth children or adopted, it didn’t matter, they were her children. She couldn’t… How could she?

Tenne looked upon the older form within the tear, and slowly leaned up to look him over. At that moment the beast twitched and his tired purple eyes opened, if just momentarily to glance down upon his armful of pups, before his eyes closed again and he settled back to sleep.

"Toki..." He started, looking at her with a small frown. He wasn’t upset about this, but he looked worried as to what she was going to do.

Sequoia looked at them both, and then turned to look at Quinn, who still clung to Toki...

“I can’t…” Toki chokes, and tears flood her eyes. “I can’t choose. Please. Please, please anything but making me choose. I can’t. I can’t do that. They’re… They’re all my children. I love both men. I can’t… I can’t choose who to abandon.”

Quinn looks up at her, and he swallows. He glances down, and nuzzles his face against her chest. “Momma…” He whispers, eyes flicking over to Sequoia. “Momma too?”

Sequoia smiled at Quinn sweetly, ”That’s right, little one..." She cooed to him, before looking at Toki, "I have no place in that world... not anymore... but you can go back... You can return to your husband... your children." She told her gently, reaching to touch Toki’s shoulder. "Toki... You won't abandon anyone if you go back, you know that."

Quinn held tighter to Toki at Sequoia’s words. “No!” He cried. “Momma can’t leave! We can go too.” He says. “Right? Both Momma’s and Daddy to go with Momma’s other family?” His fingers laced with her mane. “Momma is mine.” He keened softly.

Toki couldn’t even look at Sequoia. She was a trembling mess, staring at the moving vision in the void. She couldn’t even… She couldn’t even process everything. It was too much, too much to choose, to even consider. Sequoia said she wouldn’t be abandoning them, or anyone, but she would. Quinn’s words confirmed it. He was her boy, her boy who was such a Momma’s boy that he didn’t even deny it when teased about it.

He would feel abandoned if she chose.

Sequoia then knew as Phase stepped forward... She shouldn't have to...

With gentle coos and coaxes Sequoia, gently took Quinn and hugged him softly, stroking his head before she slowly moved to her knees and moved to Tenne's side.

'I do not do this lightly... Say goodbye.'

Phase stepped forward and reached out, gripping Toki by the arm as a wave of his other hand split open a rift to the Void.

"T-Toki!" Tenne tensed up before he made to get up.

Phase turned quickly to face him, staring him down.

"..." Tenne was unnerved by the empty eye sockets, and sat down again.

Toki choked again as the man gripped her, and she felt the presence of the Void pulling her in. “W-what?” She squeaked, her arms empty. Her hands clenched, and she made a motion to grab for the boys, and for Tenne, her eyes tearing up. “G-Goodbye…?” It was said airily, like she wasn’t sure she was supposed to be saying it.
She was leaving?

She was leaving. He had made her choice for her. She had no choice now. None…

She didn’t have the will to fight his grasp.

Phase looked back and used a blast of magic to send Tenne back to his rear from where he was attempting to stand.

Sequoia was simply holding Quinn close, and had taken Kai from Tenne before he’d made another attempt to stand.

"Toki!" Tenne cried out as he got up once more, saying damn the strange feeling the eerie-eyed man gave him, before he reached for her. "I love you!" He called to her desperately, before Phase and Toki both disappeared into the rift before it closed.

Toki heard Quinn’s echoed cry after her along with Tenne’s and her heart broke for him. The brokenhearted “MOMMY!” Echoed after her as the dark swallowed her up, and sucked her away into it’s depths.

Like before, it was overpowering, bearing down on her like the ocean itself. She was left unable to fight, rendered helpless, as she floated along. Unlike before, she could still see Phase, and she was torn between staring at him tearfully and glaring at him. She didn’t know how to feel- her peace was broken and her heart hurt.

Her everything hurt. Her skin tingled and though she could no longer see her body, she felt like it was being… shorn away. It wasn’t a pleasant feeling. “So what now?” She asks, voice sounding broken. “You send me home, a broken, shattered version of myself… No one is going to recognize me.”

‘That is not true. You will indeed be recognized.’ Phase tutted as he set her down on what seemed to be a solid ground within the void. ‘You underestimate your family’s... love for you.’

“I am not the same woman that I was. I’m not sure I can ever be again.” She whispers and closes her eyes. “I know they love me. And I love them. I love Tenne too- and Quinn, and Kai and Sequoia too… Will… Will they and Sequoia be okay? Can you tell me that at least?” She asks softly.

“They will be happy in enough time. They will mourn you, but they are not left alone. They have another to fill the void. It will suffice. It’s good to see you again, Kindness. Or should I call you Balance? I think that is a more accurate term.” The voice from oh so long ago echoed around her like a plague. “You’ve changed- and you’ve completed what I wished for you to do.”

“You never told me what it was.” Toki rasped softly, brokenly. “If you’d have told me, I’d have done it before… Before…”

“Before you could fall in love with Tenne? Before you could betray your dear Papyrus, your dear mate, by falling in love with another man so quickly? Don’t worry. You’ve been loyal to Papyrus this whole time. It wasn’t your fault you fell in love.” The darkness hummed alongside its queried words.

“What… What do you mean? What do you mean it’s not my fault I fell in love?” Her eyes popped open, blind in the dark except for the starkly creepy doctors mask looming overhead of her. “What do you mean? What did you do?”

“I made it happen. It was never real. Well, not at the start anyways. You were so torn, so heartbroken, that you would not do what I needed, not with the man who so resembled your beloved ‘Papa’. So… I made it happen. Not all of it was my doing, of course, but I greased the wheels, kept it going any time you wished to hesitate and to back out. I made sure the cogs of fate kept turning as they aught.” It hummed. “After all, in another world, in another time, you could have fallen for Tenebris instead of Aliquam, and you’d have been just as equally happy.”

Toki gaped, unsure what to say. Her love… her love had been fabricated? But it… it felt so real…
She loved Tenne- she did- and her betrayal burned deep in her soul for what she’d done as sacrilege to her marriage to Aliquam. It wasn’t her fault though. The void had made her- had wanted her to.
“This is… Because Sequoia needed to love Tenne.” She whispers. “Because she needed my love to learn how to love. Can you answer me this… If you hadn’t meddled… Would I have ended up with Tenne anyways?”

“No. If I hadn’t meddled, you’d have stayed lost in your pain, and you’d have never remarried, or taken another lover. You’d have kept to yourself, taking comfort only in the friendly company of others, but never passion. You’d never have betrayed your mate without me. Which is good for your morals, but very bad for what I needed from you.” A solid answer from the void was all the black essence thought she needed. “As for Sequoia, the answer is partially. There are other reasons for what I did that will eventually become apparent to you both in time, once you’re ready to see them.” The darkness mused. “Phase, dear friend, make sure she is comfortable. She has been through much. Make sure she’s healthy. We don’t want this for naught. I hate to have to redo things, you know this.”

‘As you command.’ The being that pulled her away from Tenne stepped forward, and instead of taking her by the arm, this time offered to her a hand. ‘If you will accompany me, Tokiko.’

Toki stared at his hand, not really comprehensive of what she was seeing. Slowly, she took it all the same, and very gently let him haul her to her feet off of the strange surface she had been laying on.
Her center of balance felt off again, and she felt lighter, like she had lost weight again. Her mane was still there though, tickling her face and the top of her skull as she breathed quietly. "... Are you really sending me home?” She asks softly. "I... I can't handle another world. Another heartbreak. Please...
Just, if you want to do that to me, to use me for some toy to amuse yourselves, just... Hollow me out.
Leave me a shell, take the me in me away, so I don't... I don't have to love and lose them all over again.” She pleads quietly. "I can't take it. I can't. I'm not strong enough." But she was. She was Balance now. She'd have to get used to reincarnating over and over again, dying and losing her family over and over again, finding them again if she could...

And mourning them when she finally couldn’t.

He nodded slowly, and once she was up, he slowly released her hand to cradle her cheeks in his hold, before they moved to gently smooth down the fluff around her head. 'Indeed you will go home... you will return to your lover, your son and your daughter, your fathers, mother and brothers. You might not be exactly as you had been when you left it, but your family indeed loves and misses you. They cannot hope to make the mistake of not recognizing you.' Phase spoke softly, now with a trace of more warmth that was not there when he was in front of Tenne and Sequoia.
“I hope you’re right.” She whispered. The tender touch was lost on her- it just made her feel sick, coming from a being that had ripped her away so swiftly from her second family and tore another great big hole in the warm green soul in her chest. “I hope you’re right.” She sniffs softly. Tears stain her cheeks, and she sucks in a soft, shaky breath, before glancing up at him. “When do I go home…?”

'As soon as the master is sated with your condition, you will be released to your home realm once more.' He answered gently. The once-empty sockets now had small white eye lights in them as he looked down at her.

“And… what exactly is my condition? Besides heartbroken, homesick, and pretty much burnt out inside.” Toki asked blandly.

'I know not what my master demands precisely of your health...' He spoke gently, before reaching down and examining her magic of her soul. 'Your soul has stabilized, it will not waver from instability like it had in the past.'

“Good.” She sighs softly. “It hurt when it would become unstable. So… Am I good to leave then?”

'Yes.' Phase then looked up into the darkness. 'My Master... Miss Tokiko is prepared to be returned.'

Toki glanced up too, hoping to see what he saw. Darkness, only darkness.

“Good.” The voice purred. “Then you’re ready. Good bye, Balance. I'll see you again at the next life. Or before, if you get into mischief again.”

A void opened up behind her, and then something pushed Toki- and she fell backwards out of the darkness with a cry that was swallowed by the early afternoon light. The darkness in the sky was unnatural, as was the hole opened in the middle of it, and Toki was, once more, freefalling through familiar rough winded skies, smelling air she never thought she’d smell again.

High above, she could see inside of the hole, the masked doctor peering out at her.

To say the least, his shocked look, as well as he could even pull such a face through a mask, was a relief to her that he wasn’t aware of, or perhaps he was and just wasn’t looking forward to, the Master's plan to push her out so abruptly. It wasn’t long after she was shoved out that the rift sealed, and she was left to fall in her lonesome.

She turned around mid air, and started to work her wings. Her balance felt off, her body disproportionate to her wings, and she had to work in different ways than expected to slow herself down. She came in to land on the ground in front of some big, silver statue. She blinked slowly, and stared at the ground, and at the very skeletal set of four arms bracing her up. They were ringed in the same green fur, and her mane was still fluffy and windblown, but… Well, there were no clothes and no skin covering her bones, save for a span of green skin covering from her neck to her pelvis, forming an ectoplasmic body in the place of where her skin had been. She was a strange mix of bone and an odd skin like structure, just like Tenne and Tenebris were.

She sunk her fingers into the soil, feeling the ashy loam mixed mixed with pot soil. There were flowers planted here. She might have squished some, but… She took a deep breath, glancing at the green glow of her ecto body, before exhaling softly.

She was home.

Once she had taken in the sights long enough to believe them, Toki slowly looked back to the statue.
It wasn't anything much, but she definitely realized the theme.

It was her. She was sitting, her gaze downward, so if one to look up into her eyes, it would imitate eye contact. Her smile was gentle, and carved as if taken right from a picture. She was dressed in what looked like her wedding dress. There were bees around her, all fluffy and large-eyed and cute as ever, nestled in a bed of flowers.

Below the statue sat a plaque.

'Tokiko Nara, The Heart of Nara Village. Rest in Peace.'

Well now wasn't that awkward...

She hadn’t expected to land on her metaphorical tombstone. Or perhaps memorial? Epitaph? She wasn’t sure what to call it, really. Her gaze lingered on it, and on the flowers resting in vases below it, though, and for a moment she felt disconnected from her body. She reached up, tracing a skeletal hand gently over the plaque, and noting the reflection of her fur in its surface. She was so different… She wasn’t the same woman as before. She probably never would be again.

From the statue, Toki’s gaze wandered, drinking in everything around her. The ground had been churned some, but it was mostly an ashy loam now thanks to the firebombing. They seemed to have managed to fix it with some careful applications of potting soil to various places- such as the grass slowly growing around the statue and surrounding paths- but the soil was, like her, forever changed by the experiences it had gone through.

The village was not the same. Most of it was gone- she could see all the way to the river, and far beyond it. The trees were gone, and the ones on the edge were burnt black, crisped to the point that there was nothing but a standing pile of charcoal. Further off, though, Toki could see green- hopeful, amazing green.

Around the statue, though, the village was not abandoned. The statue was in it’s own little courtyard, a small little area of private solitude and solace, where people could likely come to pay their respects. There was an eight foot high wall, and it seemed to be maintained well. When she looked closely, they’d planted a small tree in the corner, and it appeared to be the same type of tree as the clan tree that had been lost in the fire.

Her soul warmed. Whoever did it was very thoughtful and kind.

Outside of the courtyard, which had four entrances lined with flowers of all kinds, buildings were being raised. She couldn’t see any completed ones from her position yet, but the sounds of construction were all around her, and it made sense that no one had noticed her. Builders didn’t look to the sky- they focused on their work.

It was good though. They were rebuilding- they weren’t… They weren’t giving up and hiding away. They’d come back to start anew.

Thankfully all the bustle was not simply work, there was talk between the villagers, there's activity of play. It told Toki how despite everything, the people kept on keeping on. And a monster accompanying their children was growing closer to her with each passing moment. This monster was perhaps one who Toki would be either happy or very conflicted to see.

Toki didn’t notice the approaching monsters at first. She was still entranced with the fact that she was at home in the world she’d been born to. Her hands stroked over the plaque, her bare back and skeletal backside turned to the direction of the approaching monsters. Her wings shielded most of her from view, but she wasn’t too worried at the moment. “I’m home,” She whispers softly. “I’m home.”

With her back to the entrance, Toki hadn't seen the child that had run ahead of his parent... Not until he couldn't stop fast enough, and grunted as he ran into her legs, before falling back onto his rear. "Oof! Sorry ma'am!" He whined, rubbing his face.

Toki grunted at the smack, and straightened, turning around. She froze as she spotted the child. That was... “Skylar?” She spoke softly, her voice hesitant and shaky. She crouched down slowly, aware she was very nude, and gave him a once over. He’d grown so much... They still shared teeth, but he looked so much like his father. Her eyes misted just looking at him, and she choked up, trying to say more.

"Yeah..." He looked up at her, taking in the sight of her before he blinked, looking up at her as she stood in the very shadow of her statue. "You look like Momma..."

“That’s... That’s because I am your Momma, baby boy.” She crouched down, and let the scar emblazoned on her skull be seen. It, and her teeth, were her most identifiable features visible. She blinked at him slowly, and offered out her smaller hands. “I know I look different, but it’s still me. It’s still Toki- I’m still... I’m still Momma.”

He tilted his head, and then turned as he heard a call of his name.

"Skylar!" It was a little girls voice.

Another adorable child appeared at the archway that was the entrance, this one bedecked with a set of straight, smooth horns, just like Toki used to have. "Poppa says no running ahead!" She puffed with broken words. Sweet Honey was still learning to talk it was adorable.

"Aw Sorry Sis... But... This lady says she's Momma!"

Honey pauses at that before looking up at Toki. She looked to the statue, and then looked back to her. "M-Momma?"

Toki took a knee, and held out her other hand to her daughter. “My beautiful Honey... You’ve got my horns,” she says softly, “But you look so much like your Daddy. It’s me.” Toki’s eyes watered harder, and she had to refrain from just taking them into her arms and holding them tightly. “It’s Momma. I’m back. I’m... I’m home.”

Honey was hesitant, before she turned. "Daddy!" She called.

"I'm here, Honeybee. Is Skylar okay?" There was then his voice.

Aliquam appeared in the archway, reaching out and running a hand over Honey's head before looking within. He stopped dead at the sight of Toki standing before her statue.

Toki froze too, her green eye lights staring up and meeting his. Her mouth twitched, teeth parting in a soft exhale. Her mane ruffled, before smoothing down along her bones. “Papyrus...” She breathed, her voice carrying to him on a breathy exhale across the courtyard. “Oh... my Papyrus...”

"Toki...?” He hesitated with his very words as he turned into the courtyard. But immediately something was obviously off about him that hadn’t been there before. Cradled in his left hand was a cane.

Toki’s gaze flicked over the cane, but she disregarded it. It wasn’t important at the moment. She straightened more as he stepped closer, and she took a soft breath. Her eye lights fogged with thick tears, clogging her sights. “I… I kept my promise, Papy. I finally kept it. I came home to you.”
Chapter 114

Strider Notes: Well… What do you think? We’re home. But… The excitement isn’t going to end. Did you think just coming home was the end? No, no. There is much more to this than meets the eye.

Strider Notes: Well… What do you think? We’re home. But… The excitement isn’t going to end. Did you think just coming home was the end? No, no. There is much more to this than meets the eye.

Aliquam slowly stepped closer, the cane silent in the grass as he looked down at her. "Tokiko... Is it really you?" He murmured, reaching up to cup her cheek, but hesitating right before his bones made contact.

“It is.” She nods softly. She hesitates too, before tilting her face tight into his touch. Damn the consequences- damn them all. Her bones were warm and his… His magic still felt like the sun. Her soul practically sang at the familiarity of it, and her body did give off a familiar happy buzzing sound that he likely hadn’t heard in forever. She didn’t look like she used to, save her scar, teeth, and her magic color, but she hoped the scar was at least distinctive enough to him for him to realize it was her. “It’s me, Aliquam. It’s me… Your Toki.”

Tears had grown in his eyes as his hand closed to cradle her cheek, "Oh my god... T-Toki..." He whispered, before pulling her close into his one-armed embrace. "Tokiko... My beautiful wife…”

She gave a soft sob, and curled her arms- all four of them- around his chest, locking him to her as she nuzzled her face to his chest. She gave a watery laugh, and, in typical Toki fashion, replied with, “I’m not so beautiful anymore. But I’m back. Hopefully that makes up for it.”

Honey hesitantly hovered by her Daddy’s pants leg, and then tugged on it. “Poppa…? Is this really Momma?”

"That’s not true, Toki... You're still as beautiful as I remember.” He scolded with a weak laugh, before he looked to Honey with a shaky nod. "Yes, Honeybee... It's her.”

Honey stared up at her with wide, hopeful eyes, until she got the confirmation. The confirmation was enough to send both children into hysterical sobs, and Toki had to step away from Papyrus to stoop down and take them into her arms. Once she had them secured and latched onto her front, she slid right back into her husband’s arms. One of her hands swiped her eyes and she gave a watery laugh. “You and I remember me very differently then.” She sniffs. “But it’s been two years since I’ve been home.” She nuzzles him. “It’s good to be home… I’ve wanted to go home so bad, so, so, bad… But I just couldn’t come home. I tried.” She sucks in a breath. “But I kept my promise. Do you remember my promise? I said I’d come home to you.”

"I know you did. I never forgot...” He told her with a watery smile. "I waited for you the best that I could...” Though he tilted his head as her words registered in his skull. “But what do you mean, two years?” He then asked.

Toki shifted awkwardly, her bare bones rattling as they clacked together. She’d need to get used to being made of bones- or something like bone- again. He had waited for her. Toki… had not. That hurt, and she struggled to keep it off her face. It hadn’t been entirely her fault, but the point still stood. She sucked in a soft breath, and glanced at him. “I’ve... I’ve been stuck in a different universe for roundabouts two years.” She says. Her brows furrow. “Has it not been two years...? I thought... I thought I missed the twins first birthday.” There was a faint glimmer of hope on her face. Maybe... maybe it’d only been a month or two. Maybe she would still be in time to make it- though her logical side shone through and informed her that her children wouldn’t be so advanced with only a few short months or weeks difference.

"You did..." He winced at watching her face fall. “But it's been six months... Not two years.”

“O... Oh.” Her crestfallen look at missing her children’s birthday’s didn’t dissipate, but she simply shook her head. “So much has happened... We need to let everyone know I’m home. I just... I want to see everyone.” Her voice is thick, despite a lack of physical throat with which to speak. She realizes she’s been moving her teeth, and there’s been sparks, and resolves to adopt her old habit of speaking with her mouth closed. “Please... I want to see everyone. The world I was in... It wasn’t like this one.”

He slowly shed his coat and wrapped it around her to clothe her

"Toki... You know it's not going to be easily done... a lot of people accepted your disappearance as your death... They're mourning..."

Toki swallowed and closed her eyes. “I mourned you too.” She says softly, having only slid the coat on over her primary arms. Her secondary arms remained inside, holding her children to the soft green ecto flesh of her body. “I was under the impression that I may never get to see you again. Never get to see my children again. So I mourned. I understand fully. But... having me back might make it better. Maybe.” She heaves a soft breath, and then slides an arm around his chest. “And... maybe later, you can tell me what’s up with the cane? If you want, that is.”

"We'll tell them together... It might make it easier..." He assured her, before giving her a squeeze as if to reassure her, and himself, that they were indeed there together. Though his expression fell at the mention of his cane. "I will explain, yes... but you may want to be sitting down when I tell you." He murmured.

She didn’t squeeze him back too hard, wary of hurting him, and instead motioned for him to guide her. “It will.” She says softly. “We can do it at your house. Or... wherever you’re staying.” She corrects her statement as she looks at the progress of the homes being built. She could see some were complete, but she didn’t know if he’d have taken one. She glances at him as his expression falls. “…Papyrus?” She nudges him gently. “I’m not going to judge. Cane or no cane, you’re my Papyrus. I love you. I came back different to you- why should it be a surprise that you would be different when I returned...?”

"I love you too, Toki... Come on.” Letting Toki go, he turned to the entrance of the courtyard and took a breath to steady himself. "I know there will be someone very happy to see you."

“Happier than you?” Toki hesitated, and followed. “Is it... Stag?” She guesses lightly, keeping the twins cuddled flush to her chest. They had no intentions of leaving, and she had no intentions of making them go.

"Heh... Stag will be happy to see you, yes. But no. Someone a lot closer to home.”

“My Gracie-gray?” The nickname for her cat rolled off her tongue like it had never left. Toki glanced at him, and ground her teeth. “Don’t tease me.” She very nearly said ‘Don’t tease me, Tenne’ and had to stop herself. “C’mon, tell me.” She said instead. "I know Papa and Cae will have missed me, and my family too. I’m going to get an ear full from everyone…”

"Heh... well I’ll give you a hint, you did just say who," He teased.

“Uuuuugh, I forgot you can be worse than- uhhh one of my friends in the other world.” She nearly messed it up, and groaned and let her horn gently bump into his shoulder as they hobbled along at his pace. “I can’t believe you’re not telling me who. I guess I’ll just see for myself.”

He smiled at her before he wrapped his free arm around her. "It's... amazing... that I’m getting to hold you again... it's... I can't believe it." He chuckled weakly.

She leaned into him as much as she dared, her wings remaining folded under his borrowed jacket. "I never thought I'd see you or our babies again. I was... Alone, with nothing but Cruelty in my head..." She shakes her head. "He got better, but..." She didn’t need to tell him she’d nearly fallen. He didn’t need to know that. "It doesn't matter. I'm here now... Speaking of, how far until we're at your home? I could... Summon Sugar if it's very far."

"We're almost there... I'm so sorry, It must have been torture having that demon with you..." He sighed. He gave her a squeeze, then let her go again as he slowed, looking up.

"It was at first. But... He got better." She says, and her gaze follows his as they both go quiet.

Before them was Toki’s old home. Though now it looked to be in a state of repair, maybe the end of said state of repair, it was still standing, if a little bit more singed than before. The brick and cement home had several new places, where it had to be repaired, but... It seemed to have been the first one fixed.

"I've been working on fixing the house... It's not that easy, but I have Cae and Father to help me.” He sighed quietly, before he smiled. "Come on..." He started to the door, and after he unlocked it, he pushed it open, "Well... I don’t need to say it, it's your house after all.” He chuckled gently, "But welcome home... Come on in.”

She stared at their house and smiled faintly, walking up the front steps with him. She reached out a hand to touch the bricks, which had been charred and some replaced, and only drew it away when her children pulled away and squirmed out of her arms to stand on their own. "I guess it's a good thing I made it to withstand accidentally burning something back when I was still afraid of my fire.”

The inside of the house hadn't all been furnished yet, but there were some things she distinctly recognized as something they had owned. She shuffled on her toes, bare bones clicking on the cement below the floor, which needed to be retiled. "I'm home." Her primary hand came to touch the banister of the railing to the second floor, and she drank in everything she could with her eyes as they watered again. Her breath hitched in her chest. Toki probably looked like a little lost wraith, standing there with his coat pinning her wings and her secondary arms. "I had dreamt of getting to see our home again..." She whispers. "I'm home..."

Papyrus let her go in and let the pups go in first before himself, and then closed the door once he stepped inside.

He sat down and helped Honey and Skylar take off their coats and boots before letting them go to the front room, where immediately they both begin chattering, both seeming to try and wake someone up.

"Why don’t you go and have a seat in the front room, we have some of our furniture already set up in there." Aliquam spoke as he got up again. "I'm gonna make up some tea."
Toki hesitated and nodded slowly, mane ruffling awkwardly. "I... Could help with the tea. But okay." She turned to head for the front room, trying to see who the children were trying to rouse as she went to steal a familiar shaped couch. She had to pause though, and strip off the coat. She couldn't sit on the couch with her wings bound. Once she was naked except her fluff, she say down, and crossed her arms over her bare chest. The void had given her an odd body this time, surely.

The Pups whined and bothered the form in the large familiar chair until there was a low growl and a swatting hand that had both scrambling hand that had both scrambling hand with mischievous giggles as the old male stirred

"Tsk..." The form sat up and rubbed his face, before he lifted his head and his lips curled back to take in the air. Though this is when he stopped... "Toki?" The name slipped from his lips before his still stirring mind could stop it, before he scowled. "No, no, of course not, Tenebris, we've gone over this." He scrubbed his head with one hand. "She’s gone." His hand then went for his pipe, which sat on the table beside his chair

She had frozen at seeing Tenebris- because that could have been her future. If she'd have been made to stay with Tenne, they'd have grown old together, she'd have belonged to the grumpy old man... His grumbles brought a soft, fond chuckle past her teeth.

It didn’t take her long to unfreeze, forcing herself to calm. She was going to have to get used to this. She didn’t have... She didn’t have anyone to help her keep steady. "Actually, Papa, I'm here. I know I don't look like me, but your nose isn't lying. You're not that old, old man, for your nose to be playing tricks on you yet." She remains seated on the couch, and waits.

His hand stopped before it could scoop up his pipe, and it slowly lowered to the arm of his chair as he turned to look at her. His pupils were thin at first, and then they widened and he gave a quiet laugh, before he got up and came over, kneeling before her, "Toki..." He then reached up and cupped her cheeks, "Oh my god... It really is you!" he then laughed and scooped her up into an embrace, "You're alive!"

Her mane ruffled as the familiar scent- the scent of Tenne, of mate, her beast purrs in her mind-swirled over her face. She curled all four arms around him and hugged him back, her wings splaying out so his massive arms didn’t crush them. She was smaller now, so much smaller than she had been when she was a beast, and he was larger than even Tenne had been. She huffed in his scent in a soft instinctive motion, breathing through her mouth like she had when she hadn’t had a nose, and her beast purred at the semi-familiar scent she took in. "It's good to see you, Papa. I've missed you so much." Her fur is soft as it fluffs up, and she nuzzles him. "I've missed everyone so much…"

Tenebris sounded as if he was an engine purring as he snuggled into Toki's fur. "My beautiful little Toki. I've missed you too..." He cooed, his tail wagging behind him with its trademark rattle. "I almost fear that I’m dreaming." He chuckled quietly.

Aliquam laughed, "You're making me feel like I under-reacted, Dad."

Tenebris turned and smiled at Aliquam. "Don’t let me steal all the attention. Come on, come give your wife the love she deserves."

"Father, I'm making tea."

"So then I’ll take over, and you take care of Toki." He chirped, getting up and patting Toki's head before he walked towards the kitchen.

Aliquam smiled and came over to Toki, sitting beside her and pulling her into an embrace now with both arms available to hold her close.
Toki laughs gently as she's pretty much swapped between the two men. She doesn't even fight it. She does hesitate though, before her instinctive desire to sit in her husband's lap kicks in. His leg... She doesn't want to hurt it. So she cuddles into his side, and lets her luscious mane ruffle over the both of them. "You know," she calls to Tenebris, "if you bring the teapot here, I can make it without using the stove. Then you both can enjoy my company and we can all have tea." She says, right before she finds her lap full of squirming toddlers, demanding their mother's cuddles too. She tucks them close, and her ribs rumble with a soft beastly noise of comfort. "Aww, Skylar, baby, please don't cry... Momma is here now, I promise. I'm not going anywhere again."

In fact... Toki pulled up the save and load screen. This world still gave her power over it, it seemed, and the reset button was still shattered, but she didn't need it. Toki touched the save button with a primary hand, knowing Aliquam and both her children were watching. "Now I'm never going to be made to leave again."

Aliquam smiled at the sight of the save screen and he hugged her tighter. "I'm glad." He whispered happily, "I love you so much, Toki... I was so worried about you."

Her soul thundered behind her ribs, and she turned her head to nuzzle him. Her curved horn accidentally hooked on his shirt, and tore a neat hole in the shoulder of it. "Aww heck, I'm so sorry. I love you too, Pap. I was worried about you too. I didn't... I didn't know how you were doing. Every night, I tried to see through the worlds to see you, but... It wasn't until I came here that the Void allowed me a glimpse of you and Papa and our babies. I was mostly stuck with all of Cruelty's memories." She closed her eyes and sighed. "It got better though. I can say that. I had... People who helped."

"Don't worry about the shirt, it's nothing anyways..." He purred, before kissing her head gently. "I'm glad you weren't alone... I couldn't imagine enduring it..."

She shuddered a soft sound and made a soft keening noise. "I'll tell you more about it," She says, "When everyone is here. I don’t want to say it twice. Speaking of everyone... Did Sans and Grillby ever get married? Or are they still engaged?"

"Oh yes. Of course... and yes, Caeruleus and Grillby married, right after your memorial was put up and the flowers were planted."

She nodded. "Good. I wanted some happiness to come even if I wasn't here. Where did he have his wedding at? Are there photos?"

"Right in front of the statue." He answered with a quiet laugh, "You bet there's pictures, everyone wanted one of them."

“Uncle Sans wanted you to be there too, even if it was just your statue.” Skylar sniffled into Toki’s chest. “He even put a little flower crown on the horns, so you could be apart of it in s-spirit.” That was enough, apparently, to bring him right back to tears again.

That just made her soul hurt, and she cuddled her son, who was so much a Momma's boy, closer to her. She pressed a soft kiss to his skull, and made a soothing sound in her chest again. His response to her return made her hope that her little Quinn- her sweet little Quinn- was doing okay with Sequoia to take Toki’s place. “Shh...” She said softly. “It’s okay, Skylar. I know I was gone for a long time... I’m here now. I’ve missed a lot, but I’m not going to miss anymore.” She vows gently. “I’m not.” Toki sucks in a breath and looks up at Aliquam. “You should call your brother and let him know I’m back. Grillby too- he can spread the news. I’ll... tell my family tomorrow, I suppose.” She grinds her teeth a bit. “I don’t remember their numbers. Are... they still in your phone?” She hoped he and her family hadn’t had a falling out. She couldn’t see it happening, but... Well, she didn’t think her husband would be walking with a cane either.

Aliquam watched Toki soothe Skylar before smiling and hoisting Honey into his lap, giving her a soft peck on the head before he looked to Toki once more. "Of course, here." He pulled his phone from his pocket and handed it to her.

"... I didn't mean call them now, are you serious?" She blinked at him owlishly. "You want hundreds of my relatives to descend upon this compound like worrying flies? Because I don't. It's my first day back, and I'm still naked and I'd rather not be when I have thirty cousins getting underfoot. And you know Mom would call everyone and tell them to rush here." She nudged his phone back to him. "Call Cae. Let me get my monster family done today. The human clan can be tomorrow. When I can... I don't know, fashion a cloak or something to wear. My dad will have a heart attack seeing me alive and naked all at the same time. Besides... I need to go slow. My beast does not handle being overwhelmed so well." She explains gently. "Humans make her nervous."

"Of course, I was wondering if that's what you meant." He laughed quietly. "We can call Caeruleus, of course."

'Beast'. That caught his interest though, and he tilted his head, regarding her curiously. "Toki, what do you mean about a beast?" He asked.

Toki canted her head to look at him and hummed. She contemplated waiting, but simply went ahead with telling him. "I spent my time in the other world in a body that could handle the power that was inside of me. My skeletal body couldn't handle it and was falling apart at the seams. The void made me a blaster beast to compensate... And some of the features stuck when I came back." She motioned to her wings, horns, the different shape of her ribs, and her four arms. "With the shape came the actual inner beast. She's... Nervous in a new world. She hasn't ever known this one before."

His gaze flickered as his brows rose in surprise. "You've become the same species as Father?" He asked, before he chuckled. "I'm wondering if he'll be jealous now that you're my wife..."

She chuckled weakly. If only he knew... "I'm not full beast anymore. I was fully flesh before I came back through the Void. I... I can't even show you what I looked like." She pauses, and then shifts. "I can show you with my ecto body, but... Not now. Anyways, I'm... Probably a hybrid of sorts." She shrugs. "My beast is... A different sort of animal than your Dad's is. Anyways..." She rolls her primary wrist over, and pulls the fur back, showing a stinger emerging from between her radius and ulna. "I've got some new tricks up my metaphorical sleeves thanks to my new limbs. My venom is very good for fire elementals."

"Whoa..." He looked at the stinger, before he smiled up at her, "Whatever the case, I bet you looked amazing... I... honestly I still can't believe it, I never imagined I'd reunite with you" he laughed weakly.

"I'll show you tonight." She smiles softly. "And... Honestly, I lost hope." She looked away. "It was... Rough. I broke down. I broke, deep inside. I... I fell. The only reason I didn't die was because the power inside of me wouldn't let me. For the first several months, I didn't look good. But a family stepped up and helped me. They... Became my rock of sorts, and kept me from sinking deeper into despair." She sighed. "Anyways. Call Cae. What I'm saying isn't making any sense to you I imagine, until I can tell the gist of the whole story."

He nodded gently and turned away long enough to call his brother, though his free hand stayed on her, never once letting go of hers as he told him to get Solstice and Grillby and get over to their home quickly.
At this time Tenebris had finished with the tea and brought out the tray, putting it on the coffee table before retiring back to his chair with his pipe.

Toki watched Tenebris and his pipe while Papyrus made his phone call, and then, in a moment of mischief, made a gurgling chittering sound of an Insectis, which translated as a greeting from her beast to his just to see what he would do.

That definitely gave him a start and he shot up with a snort, sliding out the start of a rattle in his tail before he looked at Toki. The older male’s expression was one of extreme shock. "Toki... Did you say that?"

Toki made the noise again, this time adding a soft twisting rumble to the sound she made, signifying that she had indeed made that noise. The good thing about being a skeleton was that the lack of proper sound making organs meant didn't limit her. Mimicry was a wonderful thing. "I learned a new language from my new room mate," she tapped a finger on her skull, "during my time away. I'm fairly fluent now. There's only a few differing words between Insectis and Draconis."

"This is wonderful~" Tenebris whined and chirped happily. "I've never had anyone who shared, none the less understood my kin-tongue. Toki, I could kiss you!"

And Aliquam chuckled quietly as he hung up his phone. "I told you so." He told her teasingly.

Toki laughed softly, slouching as Skylar tried to mimic her noises softly into her mane. She ruffled it, fluffing it out like a proper alpha female would. "I spent two years living as a blaster beast, Papa. I had a good teacher helping me along the way. I had to learn a lot on my own though." She makes a chittering clicking sound deep in her throat and chuckles. "My beast is... interesting. She's an alpha.” She informs him lightly. “It’s only that coming back here made me into something of a hybrid. I’m sure I probably smell something between a beast and a skeleton.”

And the face he made was familiar to Tenne's when he would fluff up, though instead of the luscious mane that Tenne had, Tenebris had what began to look to be bristle on his jaw and neck. "An Alpha~ you indeed smell like a partial beast, my dear daughter, and it makes me so happy to smell another of my kind... It makes me wonder what you and I could have been in another life.” He purred.

That very nearly made her blanch, because he was hitting far too close to home. “I suppose we’ll never know. The other you that I got to meet told me he wasn’t interested in anything less than a full blood.” Toki arched a brow, and her mane remained fluffed. Her beast rumbled in her mind, refusing to submit. “I didn’t know you could grow a mane,” She said to smooth over any ruffles her lack of submission might bring. “You must have kept yourself clean shaven.” She mused. “When did you start growing it back?”

"I'd been running a few tests back in the labs... I had been since a little after you disappeared..."

"Against our better judgment." Aliquam jabbed at him.

"Regardless," Tenebris chuffed, "I had been trying some processes I wouldn't have been able to see through while we were dealing with the threat, and I had made progress in a fair number of them.”

She read between the lines- he was finally working on stabilizing his body enough that it could finally start to grow hair again, now that there wasn’t a threat to distract him from his work. She nodded slowly, and hummed, her mane smoothing down and mildly smothering Skylar with all of its mass. “That’s good.” She said lightly. “… I figure you’ll actually want to give me a look over eventually.” She hums. “My soul isn’t... the same any more. You’ve got data on boss hearts, and on anti-hearts, as much as you can anyway. But… do you have data on a complete Balance soul, I wonder?” She asked, teasing the curious scientist side of her father in law that would be dieing to study the pulsing green light hidden behind her ribs.

"I do not. As a result, I am looking forward to when I may analyze your soul." Tenebris nodded happily.

“We can do it soon.” Toki nods. “Perhaps in a couple days, when everyone knows I’m back. Unless you want to do a preliminary exam now, before Sans and Grillby get here?” She shifts, and then grunts uncomfortably. Her wings splay, and shift behind her back, stretching out so they weren’t stiff in the joints.

"It would ebb my curiosity a little bit." He chuckled.

Toki snorts. “That’s something I missed.” She smiled. “Your curiosity. Alright.” She drew her soul from her chest. She hadn’t even seen it yet, so she took a moment to look, as did her children while she held it. It wasn’t the dark emerald it used to be- no, it was a forest green now, like someone had watered down the dark emerald color and brightened it, evening out the shade and making it more whole. It was larger than before too. Her soul was missing the scars of old, but there was still the gash in it from being torn from them, along with a new one missing from along the bottom. She touched it, and felt a pang in her center for Tenne and Quinn and Kai. Ah… So that’s what that was.

Toki held it out to him, pushing it towards him with a gust of magic and then settling back on the couch as her soul drifted further from her body, leaving her feeling cold and… weird. "There. Go ahead and look- might as well take notes, yeah? I’m sure you carry around a note book for such sciency things, huh Papa?”

"Wow…" Aliquam had spoken quietly, while Tenebris gently took the soul, looking it over gently.

"This is very impressive, albeit a bit sad, looking at this damage." He murmured.

Toki fidgeted on the couch. “I didn’t… have anything that could help me at first. And Cruelty in my head didn’t help.” She says softly. “It didn’t… help. The first crack there is from leaving here. The second… is from leaving the friends I made behind.” She gave a sad smile. “It’s a curse, having an open heart.” Truly it was.

She fidgeted some, feeling very weird with her soul outside of her body. Her bones buzzed, and her breathing felt… off. She leaned onto Papyrus, and slumped some, sighing quietly. “But this… This is what a true Balance soul looks like. I’m no longer Kindness. I’m not Cruelty. I’m what our souls should have been, before Magic completely ruined it.”

Skylar stared at his Momma, and touched her ribs with his little fingers. They gave under his fingers, and bruised a dark green color from their pearly white color, and he gave an alarmed sound, realizing he was sinking into his mother, and that she was sticking to him. “Momma!?”

Aliquam lifted his hand slightly and tensed up as he realized the same thing as his eldest child. "T-Toki...! What's happening?"

Tenebris noticed the same, and he tensed up, already knowing what was happening.

"I... I don't know..." Her mouth was growing stiff, her teeth refusing to move as she shifted. Her arms tried to pick up Skylar, but the bones proceeded to collapse into a thick green goo, not unlike the time she’d seen Tenebris start to melt. She looked to him with a panicked look in her eye as Skylar scrambled off and away from her.
He was stained green where he had been touching her. "No, no, NO! You can't go away again! No! You can't!" He cried out, frightened by his mother literally starting to deform and melt into the couch cushions. "Papa!" He looked to his grandfather, "Papa make it stop! Make Mommy stay! Please!"

Tenebris got up as well and came over. "Toki... No, no, no..." He set her soul at her side before he tried to check her magic. "This couldn't be happening to you..."

Caeruleus had just come in when he heard the ruckus, and he was shocked as he stood in the entrance to the front room. "Wha..."

Toki noticed Caeruleus, along with Grillby looming behind him. Her eye lights flicked over them briefly, before she took note that her goopi-fying was stopping now that her soul was near. The near rapid-pace process at which she was turning into oobleck halted nearly immediately, and began reversing rapidly, her body solidifying slowly into a solid shape. Toki's hand slid towards her soul, and she drew it into the mass of her chest, drawing a breath once it was inside of her.

Human souls naturally produced their own Determination - hers provided what she needed to remain stable. Without it close enough, that stability fled.

"What the..." Tenebris tilted his head, before he realized what was going on. "Ooh..." He murmured, "Now that's an interesting update..."

"Toki, are you okay?!" Aliquam asked worriedly.

"I'm okay," Toki said softly, aware what effect her voice and name would have on Caeruleus and Grillby across the way, "My soul just can't go far from my body apparently. All tests will have to be done in close quarters, or I turn into a puddle of green snot, apparently."

Skylar didn’t touch her, but wanted to, so he clung to his Dad’s leg instead and stared at her with great upset in his eyes as her body formed again.

Grillby’s flames flickered higher, and his soft voice rumbled forth. “Toki?” He said softly, and adjusted the blue flaming toddler on his shoulder. “Is that…? Tenebris, is that really Toki?”

Once the panic eased, Tenebris sighed and nuzzled his head against Toki’s, before he turned to Grillby and Cae. He gave them a smile. “Yes. Come in you three...” He chuckled happily.

Grillby nudged in Sans, who had frozen, and guided him towards the couch. He moved his husband closer, and then gently bopped his head to snap him out of it. “How?” He asked Tenebris, and eyed Toki gently.

She was firming up more and more, and it didn’t take but a few minutes for her to regain her shape, compared to Tenebris’ hours that it took him on the norm. Once her shape was back to normal, she stood from the couch, caressing Aliquam’s skull with one hand, and took a step towards Caeruleus. Toki couldn’t help the laugh as Grillby averted his gaze from her nudity, but she held open all four arms for her taller brother in law. “Sans.” She says softly. “It’s good to see you. I’m home.”

Cae's eye flickered before he laughed gently and came over, hugging her tight, almost as tight as Tenebris had. "Hey..." All his emotions were in the one word. It was not much, but it was enough.

Toki laughed, and closed all four arms around him. She cuddled his face to her shoulder, and let him breathe her in. “Hey... I heard you went and got married where my memorial was. You great big sap...” She strokes her fingers over his skull. “I’m home now. I’m not going anywhere ever again.”

“You had better,” Grillby nods, “or I’ll have to track you down myself. We all missed you, Toki.
Your human family, and your monster one- we all mourned your loss. The way Tenebris spoke of it... Well, you wouldn’t be coming back from the darkness.”

“And I wouldn’t have,” Toki said softly, “If the Void hadn’t intended for me to come back once I’d accomplished my purpose in the other world. But I did... and I’m home. That’s what matters now.”

“What kinda task was that?” Cae asked, going ahead and asking what everyone wanted to ask.

Toki glanced away, and her arms loosened around him slightly. To tell the truth... Or weave a lie. In the words of Sequoia, the truth was harder than a lie. And getting caught in one... Well, if Toki kept up the lie, they’d never know, right? “I never knew what the Void wanted, until they ripped me away from everything there.” She’d never tell them about her relationship to Tenne. She could tell them she babysat Quinn and Kai and helped to raise them... but never more than that. “The Void wanted Sequoia to learn and to heal. To... Well, to use me as a base foundation for what a person could be.” She sighed. “Cruelty healed and changed. Cruelty became Sequoia, once I broke the barrier and got us topside again, and then... Sequoia was actually someone I could consider a friend. It’s... strange. It’s like they were two different people. Cruelty died when all the power was gone, and Sequoia was born from his death... Other than that, the Void said there were other reasons I was kept there, but I would only see when I was ready.”

“That's... very strange,” Tenebris muttered quietly. "Never once did the void speak to me directly.” He rumbled.

Aliquam spoke up, "I have my doubts about Cruelty truly reforming themselves after what happened... But if you can vouch for them..." He sighed, and then nuzzled her, "I'm glad you made it home."

"The void is... Different." Toki murmurs. "The void treated us like old friends. It was... Definitely an odd experience." She exhaled softly, and looks over everyone. Her gaze settles on her husband. "I did too. But... Our souls were one. Even when we hid things from one another, we couldn't hide everything. Sequoia... She fell in love. She learned how to love, and she got a second chance at life from being a part of my soul. I helped to heal the damage that... countless lifetimes did. I relived each of those lifetimes in my dreams, Papyrus. It doesn't... Excuse what she did when she was Simmons. But I understand why she did it. If I'd have been in that position... I don't know if I would have handled it any better.” She nuzzled him. "It doesn't matter. I'm home though... But, now that you're all here, I should begin recounting what happened, shouldn't I?"

"Yes!” The entirety of the Gaster family managed a synchronized exclamation of as they settled down to listen to her.

"Alright.” She laughed softly, and leaned back down onto the couch so she could sit and explain. "After I fell into darkness, it was all I could see or feel for some time. You see... The Void is more than just darkness. It is everything and it is nothing all at once. It's overpowering. Even with all of the souls that my body had trapped inside, we were nothing but an ant under the metaphorical boot.” She shakes her head. "The Void gave me a task, and then sent me on my way. I thought it sent me home... But no. It dropped me into a world very like this one, but also so... Different.” Her mane ruffles in an instinctive shiver. "I got hit with Deaths Rebound- you know, that sickness you get after dying in a load and coming back, and it hit hard as I was falling from the sky. Only it wasn't the sky. I landed in Snowdin, completely buck-ass naked, with four arms, wings, and legs like Papa has. I had no idea how to walk or move or do anything. It was... Hard, but I managed to get into a cave.”

She glances away. "Cruelty and I suffered there for only a little bit. Someone had seen me fall. That someone, as luck would have it, was... Well, you.” She looked at Tenebris. "A different you. Younger. He'd never gone through the Void, and preferred for me to call him Tenne, not Tenebris, which was his pack name. He was... Nervous of why I knew his pack name." Toki fidgets. "I lied and told him I had visions."

Tenebris tilted his head as he listened, nodding slowly to show her he understood. "Did he have pups?" He asked quietly.

“He did.” She nods. “Very young. Everyone there spoke English as their primary language, so their names were different, but... Well, it was basically small versions of Sans and Papyrus. Their names were Kai and Quinn. Quinn… well, Quinn got attached to me quite quickly. Kai was a daddy’s boy, through and through, and was quite the little scientist himself when I babysat him.” She shakes her head. “Getting ahead of myself. Tenne took me to his laboratory up in Hotland- which they didn’t even call Hotland until I started namedropping things- and helped me recover. By the time I was fully healed from both my Rebound and Cruelty’s Rebound, I had learned to walk, and I made my escape from the lab without telling Tenne what I was up to.”

Toki gives a soft, sad laugh. “I tried to contact the Void about going home- I managed to get the Void open, and it basically told me to fuck off. I spent… I don’t know, several weeks just… giving up. I fell- or my body tried to fall. The magic in my body didn’t let me die, no matter how long I just laid there in the dark and did nothing. So eventually I just… wandered. I mapped out all of Waterfall, learned all of the ins and outs of the unoccupied parts of the Underground… I saw the castle, which was being constructed, and I saw the lab, and the CORE, which were also under construction. By the time I made my way to Snowdin, I was… well, in a sorry state. I ended up making a den in Snowdin.”

A universe that was further back in their time than this world had... it was interesting and yet Tenebris and his sons were glued to every word while listening with marvel

Toki glanced at Grillby. “Well… After that, I wandered into your alternate’s bar. That was… Weird. You were pretty much the same. Though… Younger. Less burly. Kinda scrawny, actually.”

Grillby blushed. “Good gracious. I haven’t been scrawny in a long time, since I got out of shape after the war.”

“Indeed.” Toki nods. “That’s where I met Quinn and Kai though. They wandered over to my booth as I was warming up in the corner. I didn’t have gold to buy food, you see, but I hadn’t eaten a full meal since I had left the lab,” which for creatures made of flesh, like Tenebris, was a bad, bad thing, “so I wasn’t all that hungry anyways. I was just leeching warmth when I got company. Eventually, a very pretty, very pregnant fire elemental wandered over. She was having some health problems, and that’s where I ended up learning that my venom is good for elemental health. I got her to sit down and rest, and took over the rest of her shift. Sapphire was a lovely woman, and I considered her a good friend- and she’s also how I ended up working as a barmaid at the bar.”

Grillby froze, and his flames paled. “Sapphire.” He breathed, his voice a ragged whisper. His soul throbbed in his chest. You didn’t forget your first lost mate, even if you found a second that you gave your soul to. He still loved her, even if he loved Caeruleus. “You… met my Sapphire?”

“I did.” She nods. “I helped her through her labor and deliver of Fuku. She wasn’t healthy through a lot of her late pregnancy, and regular shots of my venom helped improve it. She had a long labor, but between me and your alternate self, both she and Fuku were just fine in the end. Fuku was born just shortly after Tenne invited me to stay with him rather than sleeping out in the snow.”

“My Sapphire…” Grillby seemed to be stuck on that. “I didn’t think… I’d ever hear anyone besides Fuku mention her name again…”
Tenebris got up and reached out, resting a hand on Grillby's shoulder.

Cae looked up at Grillby, a small frown on his face as he reached up with a hand to cup Grillby's cheek.

Grillby rumbled a soft sigh, closing his eyes. “I’m alright. It’s just been… A long time. After the human got her, and people stopped talking about her… She just was sort of forgotten. It hurt.” He glanced away.

“She won’t die there.” Toki says softly. “Just like… Han didn’t there.”

That made his gaze jerk up to meet hers again.

She gave a shaky smile. “Yeah. I broke down a little bit when I met my brother there. He didn’t know it was me, and probably thought I was some weirdo, but… Damn. It hurt. All the same, I left Sapphire on the surface. There’ll be no human souls needed,” She says that part flatly, aware that she’d never expressly been told how they’d gotten out, “for them to break the barrier. It wasn’t long after Fuku was born that Cruelty and I broke the barrier.”

"So they were freed earlier than we were." Aliquam spoke quietly.

“Yes.” Toki answered. “Chara and Asriel were still alive, and I was quite vested in not waiting to see what could happen to cause them to not be.” She rubbed her arm. “The straw that broke the camels back was this… This little asshole of a monster. I’ve never met a monster this bitter and cruel. He bruised my arms taking venom from me just because I was a beast type monster, like Tenne, and he thought somehow I was a dumber subspecies.” She shook her head with a rough sigh. “He’d been sending threatening messages to Asgore under the guise of Tenne, and it caused problems. Asgore lost his temper, and he would have ended up dusting Tenne if… Well, I hadn’t have stepped in.”

Toki’s mane ruffled. “My beast and I… Kinda dominated the King.” Bashful embarrassment is rich in her voice. “He couldn’t look me in the eye for long after that day, and any time I bristled, he’d shrink. So, uh… yeah. I was very angry, and demanded that he take me to the barrier. Once Tenne was up, we went, and Toriel healed him before I broke the barrier.” She shrugged. “It had some nasty side effects, but it was worth it. We weren’t under Mount Ebott though. We were under Mount Hood, in Oregon.” She knew Papyrus and Tenne remembered seeing the mountain from afar from their trip to Portland for business.

"Oregon... In the United States?” Tenebris questioned, before he perked up. "Do you think there might be another region of monsters there?” He asked.

“Maybe,” She hedged and glanced away, “But if there is, I don’t have the power to free them anymore. It almost killed me on my own, even with all of those souls. There was a sort of… death switch on the barrier. It was supposed to drain the life from those trying to break it and use their life to repair itself. I don’t know if there are more monsters in our world, but I know there are in other worlds and in other locations.” She taps her skull. “I’ve seen them.”

“Can we open a portal and let them here, perhaps?” Grillby murmured idly. “Give them freedom without having to break-”

“No.” Toki said shortly, and sharply. “No. The worlds are meant to be separate for a reason. Reaching across them is within my capabilities, but I will not do it. The Void is not one to be trifled with, and I’m very certain it will not bring me back to you all if I were to meddle with it again.”

Grillby fell silent and he swallowed shortly. “I… I see.”
Tenebris frowned, then he deflated a little. "A pity..." He murmured.

Toki looked at Tenebris and sighed. "That's why we were split." She says abruptly. "Because us Colors- which us what we were called before we were Boss hearts and Anti-Hearts- decided that we needed to reach to the worlds abroad and help guide them too and we didn't heed the Voids warning. So we were split so we might never be able to do what we were never made to do."

Grillby frowned. "That's from a time beyond even when we monsters kept record."

"I know. I have Cruelty's memories. All of them." She looked to Tenebris, and gave the doctor a meaningful look. "All of them. Now, where was I with my recounting?"

Tenebris tensed at that look, and swallowed slightly, wondering what she knew.

"You had just found yourself on Mount Hood." Cae answered.

"I found myself at Mount Hood." She nods. "Thank you. Anyways, humans saw the blast of light that I let off, and came to investigate. This world was... Weird. I know you've all studied human culture, so you know what I'm talking about when I say this world was similar to the nineties, but... With music and things that wouldn't have come out until more recent times. It was... I don't even know how to describe it." She shakes her head again. "Anyways, all of us monsters got to spend months living in tents until we managed to get housing. In that time, I was... Well, photographed by several reporters during bathing, and it was inquired about many, many times if Tenne and I were going to reproduce because we were the 'last of our species' and I spent a lot of time mothering his children." Now came a lie. "To clarify, I spent a lot of time babysitting all the children. Undyne was a nightmare, and Ariel- that was her mother in that world- couldn't watch her and help keep up the kings guard during negotiations. Lana's mother and father- who spoke Japanese instead of Russian- had to run their shop, so I spent a lot of time watching a gaggle of children in my spare time, between making my own honey and selling it until we got our own homes down on these plains between a place called Maupin and The Dalles."

"Heh... Remember Ariel, Grillby? She acted so calm and gentle until she put her armor on. She was as much a spitfire as her daughter." Tenebris reminisced as he laughed lightly.

Grillby chuckled quietly as he nodded in return, before they returned to Toki's storytelling.

"Whoa, whoa, hang on." Sans then spoke up. "You can make your own honey now?" he asked

"Uh... Yes." She nods. She raises a hand, and then looks at Tenebris. "If you've got a vial or a beaker in that endless coat of yours, Papa, something that's fairly heat proof, I can show you. It has to cool a bit first."

"Not even two hours back and you're sassing me again." He kissed her forehead with a rumble, "It's good to have you back."

He then backed up went to find his coat where he left it hung up.

"I am the sass master. My sass never stops flowing." She informs him cheekily, and watches him wander off to get his coat. She glances at Grillby. "On another note, would you like to see what my venom does for fire elementals?"

He hesitated. "... Do I want to?"

"It's better than coffee." She nods.
He offers up his wrist without a fuss. Grillby flinched at the initial pinch of her stinger sticking into his arm, but his flames visibly brightened as his body processed the venom she gave him. "Oh. Oh wow. That is better than coffee." Coming from the monster who would work himself to the point he was burning lowly if he didn't have his coffee to help recharge his magic, that was saying something. Toki looked pleased and relaxed back, crossing her legs as they waited for Tenebris. "It feels so weird to have normal legs again."

Cae smiled at how Grillby lit up. "You think that’s healthy for Solstice?" He asked, taking his daughter from Grillby and giving her a soft hug as he looked to Toki.

Toki hesitated and looked at her niece. "I don't know." She admits. "She's half fire elemental, half skeleton... We could try it, but not without saving first, just in case. I won't gamble with her health. I don't think it will hurt her, but my venom is very... Dangerous." She glances at her stinger. "It burnt the floor of Tenne's house when I gave him samples to study. I haven't seen what it will do to people I mean ill will too, but... Yeah." She wiggles her fingers at Solstice and smiles. "Hi baby girl... I don't know if she remembers me."

Solstice gave a shy giggle and hid her face in her mothers neck.

She did not apparently remember her Auntie Toki.

"Aww~" Cae cooed gently, patting her back before seeing Tenebris return with the vial she asked for.

Toki smiled and thanked him, before taking the vial and carefully slipping her stinger into it. Her venom flowed out, bright green and hot and practically glowing. She hummed, and capped the vial when it was full, before carefully setting it on the coffee table. "It needs to cool first." She didn't know if they had electricity running again or not, so she wasn't sure if a fridge was an option.

"Anyways. Once we had our homes, I sort of moved in with Tenne and his boys as a live in Nanny. I helped keep an eye on them while I also handled the animals we'd been given. I also got to experience being gored by a bull. That was fun. And... Well, life went on. Sequoia got better and better, and I started to help rehabilitate her into the world, and, ironically, she fell in love. Can you guess whom with?" She half lidded her eye sockets at them all and grinned slowly.

"No way-
"You don’t mean-"

Both brothers looked at their father, who tinged black in the face. "Really?" He asked quietly.

"Yup." She laughed softly, continuing her half woven lie. "She and your alternate self fell in love. I would give up control of our body from time to time so they could go on little dates. It was kind of cute. She wasn't designed for full control though so she couldn't ever stay out long. They made it work and enjoyed themselves though. And yes. He did know about us. He, ah, caught us trying to separate our souls and thought I was trying to commit suicide. I had to explain everything."

"I would have worried in the same if I had seen such a thing." Tenebris admitted, before he chuckled. "Would’ve tackled you if age allowed.”

Toki snorted. “That’s actually about what Tenne did. He slammed into us, and stole our soul from us. Wouldn’t let us have it back until he was quite sure we weren’t about to dust ourselves in front of him.” She taps her fingers on the green ectoflesh of her belly, and hummed. “He was a lot younger than you- and I think, even as ‘old’ as you are, you’d still have tackled us if you saw it. You’re a lot more spry than you let on.” She says wryly. “Or am I remembering wrong all of my memories of you and your silly shenanigans with Thumper’s laser light? Where is he, by the way?”

“He’s with Toriel.” Grillby answered. “Spending the night up with Frisk. They became fast friends after… everything… So from time to time, Thumper will still stay with Toriel and Frisk up at the castle for a night or two and then come back down to us.”

"He’ll be happy to see you again, Toki... He took losing you as we all did..." Tenebris murmured, brows only twitching at her tease.

Toki sighed gently. “I know.” She said. “I’ll be expecting a proper glomp of a hug when he learns I’m back. Anyways… I think that about sums it up. Life continued on as it would, and I ended up meeting that world’s Han, and… I dunno. That might have been part of my trigger- accepting that it wasn’t my fault that my Han died.” She scrubs her face and shakes her head. “It was… Maybe a week later, if that, when the Void’s little minion, Phase, opened up a rift in time space and scared the bajeezus out of me, Tenne, and his kids,” She’d very nearly blurted, ‘our kids’, “and then ripped my body and soul in half to make Sequoia her own form. I barely got to say goodbye before I was sucked into the Void again, and then… well, I was dropped from the sky again. Nearly landed on my statue.”

"And the rest is history." Aliquam spoke quietly, before he looked to Tenebris.

The elder looked thoughtful at the mention of 'Phase', before he shook his head, no doubt engaging in a mental conversation with himself before he looked to her. "At least you're okay... And you're home."

“I am.” Toki nods slowly. “I’m home, and I’m not going anywhere.” She shifts slightly. “It’s going to take some time to get used to me being back, I’m sure. I know… I’m going to need to adjust to being home. But… We can do it.” She glances around her, at all of her monster family, and curls her finger gently over Aliquam’s leg. “I… well, I know none of my clothes are going to fit me now,” she motions with all four arms and a twitch of her wings, “But maybe we can just rip some holes so I’m not sitting around all of you in the nude.”

"Nonsense!" Tenebris then got up. "I'm going to call Lana. Clothes are a must now that you're home. We must save your unclothed state for your husband's eyes alone." He heckled, before he walked to where they kept the house phone.

Toki watched him go with an owlish blink, and hummed. “Well, it will be good to see Lana again. The last time I saw her, she was shorter than my knee and kept begging goodies from me, alongside little miniature Sans.”

"Did you meet her mother?" Grillby asked quietly.

“Hitsu.” Toki nods. “Hitsu Vestimoves. She and I were close friends. She helped design a coat with magnets that I could wear so the cold wouldn’t bother me. Papa’s weakness to cold is not just a Papa thing- it’s a blaster beast thing. I was always cold, no matter how warm my magic made me.”

"Lana will no doubt carry such cleverness to her work when she's called upon.” Aliquam chortled.

“I have little doubt.” She smiles. “Did… Lana and Kon ever get anywhere further?” She asks curiously.

Grillby nods. “He proposed to her. They might not be able to legally marry yet, but they can live together as fiancé’s for a while until we get full inter-species marriage sorted out.”
Toki’s brows shot to the sky. “No way. She actually settled my gallivanting little brother?”

"She adores him." Cae laughed. "He’s seriously settled down. He's not the same guy he was when we first met."

She laughs gently. “I’m glad. He’s finally found something worth staying for. Who’d have thought that a taste in monsters runs in the family?” She jokes.

Both brothers chuckled with the same joke but neither dared speak it.

Tenebris entered the room with a hum and sat down again, "Alright, I gave her a call."

“Alright.” Toki smiles. “When will she be here?” She inquired curiously.

"Very. Quickly." He warned. "She moved fast hearing you were her customer."

Toki blinks. “Oh dear. She probably missed me. I should… probably stand up so she doesn’t tackle me on the couch and hurt Papyrus.” She glanced at her husband, and gently touched his leg. He still had a grip on her, and she didn’t want to pull away. “Papy? Will you let me up?” She asks him gently.

"Yes, of course." He let her up, before he folded his hands in his lap. "It's good to have you back, Toki."

Toki gave him a half smile. “It’s good to be back, Papyrus.” And… as much as it hurt, it was good to be back. She mourned for Tenne- but she had… She had missed her first love- her first mate. Papyrus was… Papyrus was unique to her. He was hers, and she was his, despite what her best thought- and Toki had wanted him back a while ago.

She glanced at the door as it burst open, and found her face full of wool as her neck was nearly snapped clean in two by a pair of deceptively strong arms. “Toki!” Lana cried, and hugged her tightly. “Toki! So this is not a cruel trick! You've come back!”

Toki could only manage a squeak, and to hug her back too. Lana had missed her- everyone had missed her. Toki could only imagine how her blood family would feel later about this.

“Yeah.” She squeaked, “I’m home. Please, lets not squish me before I get to be home for long, okay?”

Later that night, it was… Well, almost weird settling down in her old home. She’d gotten used to the sounds of Tenne sleeping, of the boys in their own rooms… To be taken up familiar stairs, and brought to a bedroom she’d never thought to see again- well frankly it was like a dream.

Toki got away from Lana’s grasp with an entirely new and well fitted wardrobe. She had shirts for her arms with designs to make room for her wings, and she even had turtlenecks designed to accommodate her new style of horns, and hopefully resist her from tearing them all the time.

She even had a new night gown- which she was wearing to bed.

The children had already beat them to bed, and slept in the room across the hall with the door open. They’d started falling asleep earlier in the evening, so they’d opted to put them to bed while Toki spent time with everyone. Once everyone else started to nod off, she ushered everyone else to bed.
too. Tenebris was alternating staying with Aliquam and staying with Caeruleus while his house was being fixed, and it appeared that Aliquam had his father for the week, so the older male had crashed in another room.

Stag was asleep in the hallway- the deer monster had shoved into the house as soon as they had smelled her, and had rebound themselves to her effective immediately, and then had lazed about on the carpet and basked in her presence. Where Toki went, Stag was not far behind, a hovering, silent guardian. Apparently they had bound to her children, but it was not a proper bond, and their health had suffered. With Toki back, they could recover.

Toki sat on the bed, and was quietly grooming her wings while she simply processed the day. Everything was… So much. It happened so fast… She wasn’t sure how to feel, other than relieved, and then feel bad about being relieved for being home… She was a mess inside. At least she was in a place where she could heal and recover.

Aliquam had made it to bed and set the cane somewhere easy to reach before he sighed and lay back on the bed. "So many nights I thought I'd never feel this again... That I was stuck in a waking hell, where nothing was right and everything was wrong. Now it's like a dream come true." He chuckled, reaching up and making grabby hands at his wife. "I get to hold you again."

Her wings flipped back over on her back, and she peered over her shoulder at him. Toki clamored onto all fours, her primary arms taking her weight while her secondary arms curled at her chest. She slunk over to his side, and got settled down, a soft trill leaving her. The bed felt foreign and strange after so long being out of it. All the same, Toki draped two arms over him, her other pair folding under her to help with position if she needed.

"It's no dream, my dear." She says, her wings flicking as she cuddles into his side. Her bones clanked gently against his as she settled. "Hey... Pap? I wanted to ask earlier, but not in front of everyone. What... Happened to your leg? If you don’t mind me asking."

He gave her a squeeze, relieved to have her in his arms, and then sighed. "Do you remember at the final battle against Cruelty? I took the first strike for you... It had severely damaged my hip and my femur, and they were cracked through the fight... after you tore open the void H had made to stop you but my left femur..." He trailed off, before he sighed again, "shattered... and part of my hip went with it."

She frowned and nuzzled her face to his chest. "It's hard not to forget." She says. "I remember... But shouldn't they have grown back? My ribs grew back after Papa and you patched me up. Or... Was it something in the weapon?" Toki was guessing to be sure. Her arms stroked his back gently.

"I think it was the stress... I lost you as it happened, I never had any time to begin healing... eventually it turned to dust, and we had to make prosthetic replacements for what was lost." He answered.

Toki frowns, and clicks her teeth. She exhaled softly. "That might make sense... Sort of why Undyne's eye never grew back from whatever made her lose it." She stared at his leg, before sitting up and drawing out of his arms. She didn't go far. She just slid down to his hip, where she could see the prosthetic bone meeting the real bone, and then pressed a gentle, loving kiss to it. "This doesn't change anything about how I feel. I want you to know this. Whether or not you’ve got a whole leg, a prosthetic one, half of one, twenty legs- I love all of you, and all of you is enough for me." She peers up at him firmly, and then scoots right back up into his arms. Her four make short work of securing him to her chest, as she partially suffocates him in her mane. "I'm sorry you had to handle this all on your own. It... It must have been rough." It also explained why she didn't see his armor... Anywhere.
The kiss had him shudder, but he suffocated with pride as he wrapped his arms around her and savored her scent. "It was horrible, but now that you're home, it's as if none of it happened." He spoke in a softer, hushed tone. "I love you. I love you so, so much."

"I love you too." She nuzzled the top of his head, and cradled him as she fluffed. She didn’t have pheromone glands in her usual places, but the ones in her mane seemed to have remained, so she released relaxing ones into the air, ruffling her mane to help them spread. She wanted him to sleep—he didn’t look like he had slept deeply since… Since she had left, frankly. “I’m so, so sorry for everything. It’s… my fault. If I had just… followed the plan, not acted on my own, stupid thoughts of what was the kinder option… Your leg might not have been like this, and I would have been here.” She murmured. But, if she hadn’t have acted, hadn’t merged her soul with Cruelty’s… She wouldn’t have been Kindness. She wouldn’t have been herself.

"You did the right thing... the difference between then and now, is that you're absolutely sure you reformed Cruelty..."

“I did.” She nods. “And even if I didn’t… Sequoia- that’s the name she chose when she chose to give up being Cruelty and being Simmons- doesn’t have the power of an anti-heart. The monsters in that world… they’re not even a fraction of the power of the ones here. She’s just a normal, human soul, in a monster’s body. She’s never going to be able to hurt people again. Not with this life being her last life.” Toki swallows. “I’m Balance now, Papyrus. Do you know what that means?”

"It means that you've done something a lot more important in the six months you've been gone." He chuckled.

“No.” She shakes her head. “Well... partly. But... No. It means... It means, when I die- and I will die, eventually, be it in forty years, or four thousand years- I'll reincarnate. And I'll remember.” She rubs her fingers gently over his spine, stroking his bare bones lightly as she watches him. “I'm going to remember everything. This- me, Toki- is going to be the baseline personality for the rest of my eternity. I'm not going to rest- ever. I won't move on, I won't ever really die.” Her green gaze is muted and dull, serious as she watches him. “I'm going to remember every laugh, every smile, every bit of love we shared, and I'm going to remember losing it, for this life, the next, and every life after.”

Cruelty’s curse had become hers.

He took in her words quietly before he nuzzled her. "Oh Toki..."

“It’s okay.” She nuzzled him back, her teeth clicking against his as her scar brushed his forehead. Her horns framed his face. “It really is... Because I’ll be able to remember you, and Papa, and Cae, and all of my family, and I’ll be able to keep watch over our children, and our children’s children, and their children after them.” She rubs her nasal ridge gently to his. “I’ll really live up to the name Guardian Angel.”

He chuckled quietly, rubbing his nasal ridge against hers in reply before kissing her forehead. "It's so good to have you home, Toki..." He purred. "It's like the fire was brought back to my life."

“It’s good to be home.” She says softly, and closes her eyes. She gives a soft sound, and then gives a soft flex of her magic. Her magic pulled open little portals in the room, and a soft green light filled it. Her bees settled along the walls and the posts of the bed, before they began to buzz softly. “You’re the sun in my skies, the light of my heart.” She says to him. “And it’s a cold, cold world without my sun in my life.” Toki kisses him softly, passionately, and then sighs. “Sleep, Papy. I’ll be here when you wake up- I promise.”

He sighed happily as her bees came to fill the space that had been left cold since she was lost, and he nuzzled into her, squeezing her again tightly. "I love you..." He murmured quietly.

“I love you too.” She says. “Sleep. You haven’t been sleeping well.” She drags one hand up and strokes her fingers across his cheek, where the dark marks under his eyes were visible. “Sleep…” She says softly. “You need it.”

Aliquam stared up at Toki for a long while, his eyes half lidded, before they lulled closed and he sighed quietly, finally falling asleep.

Toki pressed a kiss to his skull, and then just lay there in bed. She didn’t sleep until much later, while she mulled over everything. She was no longer in that other world- which had become a second home to her. She’d left her home to make a second one, and then been torn away from it… Toki was not sure how she was supposed to feel about everything. Any time she thought she should feel sad, she felt worse because she should be happy at being home… But she missed Quinn and Kai and Tenne too, even if she’d spent the entire day with her babies in her arms and her husband as close at her side as he could be without stepping on her feet or tripping her with his cane.

She didn’t know how to feel… So she just settled on relieved to be with her husband again, and settled to sleep with that thought in her mind.

Toki’s family spent a week with her. The entire family. Not just her blood related family, but the entire extended clan- relatives she hadn’t seen in years. She hadn’t realized how highly they thought of her until she was welcomed back with open arms, and they flooded the compound to help with repairs to the house, and repairs to all of the monster’s houses. She spent her first week back in the world with her family helping to reestablish her place in the world, calling their various contacts to reestablish her identity and the fact that she was no longer considered deceased, but alive.

By the end of her first week there, Toki had all of her accounts back in her name, she was considered living once more by the world, and she had a meeting to eventually be scheduled with the world’s leaders to debate with them on where she had been, and to explain the disappearance of the leader of the terrorist organization and why he couldn’t be prosecuted.

Toki was ultimately glad when her family went home, as sad as it was. Her beast was agitated around so many people, and her mane spent a lot of the time being bristled and tense. Her beast was tense and afraid and wanted to hide and shore up in a protected den, and Toki wasn’t sure why. It was on par with the anxiety that her beast had felt when she’d been at the Saturday Market, if not more.

So she breathed a sigh of relief when they’d gone home, and the compound had been left brighter, in better shape. They had flooded homes, filled houses, camped outside- and monsters had welcomed her massive family with open arms as they welcomed their clan leader back into the fold. Her brother had given up the title with no fuss, so she was, once again, leader of the Nara, even if she was still a Gaster.

She’d been home for two weeks when things were finally settling down. The villagers stopped giving her awed looks, and stopped treating her like she was some sort of mystical being for returning from the ‘beyond’.

The two weeks she was home made her miss her boys from the other world, even if she spent time with her children. It never stopped hurting- just like when she’d lost Skylar and Honey- and she was aware that for all the relief that she felt in being home… Some part of her longed to be back there, where life was simpler.

It was confusing, and Toki did her best to shove those feelings aside.

One thing Toki did definitely miss from the other world, was a house designed around her wings. The shower they had was fit very well for a skeleton without wings, but Toki ran into everything in this one. They had finally gotten the water running again- everyone had been abstaining from more washing with than just a sponge bath unless someone got seriously disgusting, simply because the river water was so cold. But now, they all had running water, and heated running water at that.
It was heaven—Toki hadn’t missed not washing, or sponge bathing with cold river water. She hadn’t done that since she’d broke the barrier in Tenne’s world, and since they’d gotten their own home in that world. Once they’d moved out of a tent, she’d had a shower with hot, running water, and she’d loved it. Baths too.

She sighed, tilting her head back under the spray. She scrubbed her hands down her body, brushing her soapy hands over her ribs, and down to the flesh of her sides. She wasn’t sure why she had flesh from under her ribs down to her hips, but guessed it had to be because of what she had been before. After all, wings required muscle to flap, and skeletons had none. She was still semi-fleshy in some spots, where the bone wasn’t quite all solid bone. It was more the mix of what Tenebris was made of, that weird bone-flesh mix. All the same, it worked.

Her fingers scrubbed, cleaning away any filth she had gathered, when she paused. Her soapy hand roved back over her belly, and traced there.

Yes. Yes, that was an undeniable curve. What. What.

Toki glanced down, and had to peer through the murky flesh of her body. This body wasn’t crystal clear like the other one. She couldn’t see her bones all the way, or see all the way through it. It was thicker, kind of murky, more like someone had added a few drops of milk to the Jell-O mix rather than just pure water. She squinted a bit all the same, and paused. She pressed a little on her abdomen to make it shift.

Something rolled into view. It was about the size of a large, closed fist, and several shades darker than her actual flesh and seemed to be very swollen.

Panic hit her, because she knew exactly what that was.

No—no, no, no. No—please—she couldn’t… She couldn’t be…

Toki could hear the kids on the stairs, and washed off in a rush. She scrambled out, drying herself in a flash of magic, and rushed into her clothes, before standing in their room to just try and calm down. She couldn’t… She had to be sure. Maybe it was a growth. A byproduct. A… A tumor. Or… Or something from being in the void.

Anything but that.

Toki swallowed, and tugged her turtleneck down. She was glad it was loose— it covered the swell of her belly that she could no longer deny was there. She managed a smile for Honey and Skylar despite the panic fluttering in her soul. She needed to tell someone— but not Papyrus. Not him. Not now. Maybe… Maybe Tenebris. Or Todd. Tenebris was a doctor. Maybe he could… Tell her if it was a tumor. Or something. And not… Not what she feared. He’d been at his house for a week and a half, and she hadn’t seen much of him since Thumper came home, so… She’d need to find him.

“I think I’m going to go see your Papa,” She smiles for her children, “so lets go tell your daddy, shall we?”

"Okay Momma." Skylar chirped up to her, before taking off to go inform Papyrus.

Honey squeaked quietly before she smiled up at her mother, coming over and giving her a tight hug.

Toki smiled and scooped up Honey, propping her up instinctively on her hip. She headed down the stairs with her and smooched her little face, hoping her daughter didn’t notice the pudge to her belly.
“Papyrus? Love, I’m going to go visit your father for a bit. I haven’t seen him in several days, and I think he did want to actually record the data from my soul, so we might kill two birds with one stone.”

"Of course.” He calls from the kitchen. “Would you like to go with a thermos of tea to share with him? I just made a fresh pot of Orange Blossom.”

“I’d love to.” Toki nods. The smell wasn’t all that pleasant to her, but she was figuring out why very rapidly. She made her way to the kitchen, and gently plopped Honey down onto the kitchen counter, where there was free space for her small posterior. “Alright, Honeybun. Why don’t you help Daddy until I get back, and then you can help me jar some honey, yeah?”

Like in the other world, Toki was working on making a business with her own honey, until she could get hold of a proper apiary to work with. Pretty much everyone liked her honey, so she didn’t mind, and it expended magic she didn’t need.

Honey chirped happily. "Okay Momma! Say hi to Papa for me!” She squeaked happily.

Filling a thermos with Tea, Aliquam set it on the counter for Toki before he gave her a hug. "I love you~" He purred gently. "Say hello to Father for me.”

Toki was entirely too self conscious of the hug she gave to her husband, wondering if he could feel the changing bump to her front like she could. It was small yet, could just be mistaken for a fat roll if one was looking, but… No. No, no, it wasn’t. It couldn’t be. Not after being split in half- no, no, no. “I love you too, Papy.” She kissed him gently as she hugged him back, and then wiggled her fingers to Honey. “I’ll say hello for you, sweetie. See you all soon, okay?” She snagged the thermos, cradling it in her hand, before letting herself out the repaired back door.

Her wings tensed, and she had to push more magic towards them. Flight was not as effortless now as it had been when she had been a beast- probably an effect of what she was- but she did her best to fly. She was relearning, just as she had to learn then. A few strong flaps, and her wings sent her buzzing off into the sky, the droning hum of her flying a message to all that she was in the sky. She headed for Tenebris’ house, wondering if he’d hear her coming before she’d even get there, and wondering how she’d broach this with him. Or… if he’d smell it.

It seemed she was downwind so it was less likely that he would smell her coming. The sound of her hum however did make up for it and once she was close enough, he had been lifted from his distraction and set out to greet her at the door.

Toki didn’t take long to land outside of his house, and she adjusted her wings, taking a moment to straighten her shirt and make sure her pants hadn’t slid down, before approaching the front door. She knocked on the door with one hand, the other three clutching the strong smelling thermos at her front. “Hi, Papa.” She says softly, hesitantly. “I brought some tea, and was hoping we could enjoy it together.”

The door had opened not long after she knocked upon it and Tenebris' elder face had a warm smile as he then stepped to the side. "Come on in, my dear Toki." He purred happily. "My home is your home, after all."

“You’re too kind.” She smiled and brushed past him, her mane ruffling faintly with the nerves bubbling in her chest. She sucked in a calming breath, and made her way towards the kitchen, scenting the location of food rather than going by memory. She carried with her the smell of tea, her scent, and her conditioner. She did so like her conditioner. “Big mug or a small mug for you, Papa?” She inquired as she peers up at his tall cabinets, summoning a few bees rather than trying to hover to "Get some tea for yourself and I'll drink out of the thermos itself." He joked with a soft laugh. "Whatever has been washed already, I suppose." As he turned to watch her go into the kitchen, he noticed she was a little off in both behavior and scent, but so far said nothing.

Toki exhaled softly, and simply fetched herself a small mug. She didn’t want much, so she poured herself a little bit, and then steeled herself. She turned to Tenebris with a grin and a quirked brow. “Well, you did say just give you the thermos.” She jokes, and offers it out to him, before letting her bees fade off while she slid towards the couch. She curled up on the end, making herself instinctively small as she let her wings drape over the back of the armrest.

He watched her take position on the couch and tilted his head slightly as he now held the thermos in his hand. "Toki... Is everything alright?" He asked as he came over, setting the thermos down before he sat down.

“No.” She shakes her head. “It’s not. I…” She exhales sharply, and takes a sip of her tea. It tastes sour in her mouth, so she chokes it down and sets the cup on a side table, before curling her arms around her knees, careful not to squish her belly. “I don’t even know how to explain it, Papa. I…” Her throat bobs. “I’ve… done things. In the other world. That I’m… I’m not proud of. I came to find out just before I came home that, if not for the Void essentially making sure I would do them, I’d never have done them, but… It had lasting effects.”

There was no denying what the swelling lump in her belly was. Wishing it was a tumor or a void growth was not something that would just make it so. It wasn’t… that.

"Toki... You can be straight with me... what happened to you before you made it home?"

“Many things, Papa, many things. So many things that I can’t even tell you, and most of that is because half of them are full of so many lies that even I don’t know the truth anymore.” Toki laughs, and it is a bitter, unhealthy laugh. “I was made to fall in love.” She says shortly, “Because Sequoia needed my love to learn how to love on her own. Did you know you can love two people equally, even when one of those loves was brought on falsely because of some dark god’s meddling shenanigans?” Her eye lights peer up at him. To her dismay, they dampen with tears. She fights them back, so her eye lights just gleam extra bright at him. “And what happens when two beasts love one another, Tenebris?”

One hand wanders down to her middle, and tightens over her shirt, where the swell was burgeoning into life. Her hand was in clear view of her father in law’s eyes.

He took in her words and was going to answer her no doubt rhetorical question before he stopped as he realized exactly what her hand was doing, and what that meant.

His gaze slid back to her face, unreadable for a moment. "You're pregnant... And... If I had to guess... My counterpart is the father."

"And I shouldn't be pregnant! Let alone this big!" Toki laughs shakily, confirming his assumption easily. "When the Void made Sequoia, Phase split me in half, Papa. He split me from the tip of my skull down to my pelvis, like he grabbed me by one leg in each hand and just yanked me in half, organs and all. If there was anything, anything that could have taken root... That should have killed it. But it didn't, which means the Void means for me to do this.” Her other secondary hand comes to her face. "It means for me to carry Tenne's pup, and... And I'm not sure what to do. Or... Or how I even tell Papyrus. What kind of excuse is 'the Void made me do it'?” Sure, she wouldn't have ever gotten with Tenne if the Void hadn't meddled and made her, but... Would Papyrus even accept that?
Sans? Grillby? Would anyone even accept that?

Tenebris had a look of unreadable emotions on his face as he let it sink in that she was carrying in this... interesting situation.

His eyes closed and he took a calming breath, before he reached out towards her with one hand. "If it's alright..." Tenebris kept his voice gentle so she didn’t spook. “May I?"

Toki sighed and nodded. She slowly unfurled from her defensive ball, stretching her legs out. She slid the edge of her pants down just a bit, and slid her shirt up, showing the swollen, fist sized balloon distending the inside of her belly. "Yeah, go ahead. Might as well make sure it's healthy... Its not the baby's fault I was made to fuck up." She murmurs softly. Toki looks at the glowing swell, and peers at him quietly to see what he would do with what she’d offered him.

She wasn’t very big yet- her belly was definitely curved up though, and she shouldn’t have… Toki would have known if she was carrying in the other world- she was too far along for that. Unless… beasts carried faster than skeletons and half-beasts did.

His gaze opened once more and he gave her a soft look to reassure her that he did not plan to antagonize her about it. Rather than torment the obviously stressing female, he slowly moved close enough to reach her and press his large, warm hands on the bump that was her stomach. "I love you, Toki..." He murmured, "And I wish only the best for you and my Son. I will do whatever I can to help you in this time."

Toki sucks in a soft breath as his hands slide over her belly. Her beast purrs in her mind that this was just right, and she works very hard to pinch her for it, because no, this was her Papa, those were two different people, two different worlds, two different timelines. Her beast subsides, and Toki glances up at him. “I love you too, Papa.” She says softly. “I… I just don’t know what to do right now. I’m… thinking maybe just keeping this quiet until I can figure out what to tell Papyrus.” She glances away and sighs, her belly shifting under his hands with her breath. “… I wonder if it’ll come out full beast.” She murmurs. “Tenne was one, and I was one at the time it was, uh… yeah. Is there any way to tell…?”

"I do not know yet... But with the genetics of what you were and my counterpart is... Then perhaps they will come out full beast." He didn't want to admit it, but his heart was leaping in his chest at the idea of beast-pups. If they survive, he'd have a few more pups to hunt with.

She could see the gleam of hope in his eyes, and she gave him a faint smile. “You’re excited for more beast types, aren’t you?” She asks softly as she watches him. “It would mean…” He wouldn’t be the only one. Her eyes lit up. Oh. Oh. That’s… That’s what she was supposed to do. “Oh… Oh my god. I know why I’m pregnant.” She gives a faint laugh, and cups one of her many hands to her face. “I’m supposed to make sure there are more beasts here. The Void never tells me what I’m supposed to do, only says that I’ll know when I’m ready. This… This took marginally less time than trying to figure out how to get to come home.”

He had to wonder, was he that readable? Tenebris chuckled quietly in embarrassment before he looked to her as she made a realization. "Toki?" He questioned.

"I'm... I'm supposed to bring little blaster beasts here." She says. "The Void doesn't do anything for no reason. Everything has its purpose... And I think this was mine." She stares at her middle and sighs, one of her hands coming to cradle her skull. "I just... I don't know what to do, Papa. I'm going to carry to term, I know that, but after... Not... Not a lot of men can look past their wives having another man's baby." Her eye lights burn unpleasantly at the thought of losing Papyrus because of the actions she had been informed weren't all her own. This was a giant middle finger from the void, and Toki was very lost.

"I'm not sure what to say myself... this is... strange... I never thought the void would consider something like this as an option... I certainly hope this is not my doing either..." He sighed, "Centuries in the void, I had a lot to think about..." He then shook his head. "Toki, Papyrus knows exactly what the void is capable of. If you explain the circumstances to him, he'll understand. I know he will."

Toki trembled where she sat. "I am afraid." She says softly, and looks up at her father in law. "I am afraid. There was... There was a saying that Cruelty and I used to live by in the other world, until we couldn't anymore. The truth is much harder than a lie. I was... I wasn't ever going to tell anyone about how I... How I still feel for Tenne or what transpired between him and I. And now... Now I have no choice. There is no way to lie, no way to... To keep from hurting him with this." She exhales. "I might not have ever loved him on my own, Papa, but... But the love I feel now is very real. I love two men at once, as does my beast, and it is... It is very hard." She sighs. Toki watches him quietly. "Papa? If you were in his place, how would you react? Your wife just told you that she's pregnant. The baby isn't yours. It's from another man, in another world, another man that she still loves, almost as much as she loves you. Except this man isn't just a man- this man is basically your father from another world. Even when she tells you that the only reason it happened is because some godly black mist creature partially controlled her actions to make sure it did happen, how would you react? Please. Tell me."

Tenebris took only a moment to ponder his words as he peered at her, before he began to speak. "When you were within the realm that was not your own, you were a puppet. You came to love after you lost... and you thought it was two years... you had mourned until you could mourn no more. The one you fell upon for comfort loved you, and no doubt wanted the best for you, and just when you were fated to accept it, you were torn away again... The child was conceived of love, and though it may not be of Papyrus' being, it's still your child, and being your husband, he will still love you as much as he did the day you married him."

Toki’s breath hitched, and then she exhaled softly. "You’re... You’re right." At least she hoped so. Toki glanced away from him, her secondary hands coming to fold over her belly. Her thumbs rubbed it gently. "... Will you help me tell him?" She says softly. "I... I don’t know if I’m ready yet. Or if I’ll ever be ready. But... But I’m pretty sure it’s only been two weeks, and I’m already showing, so... So I don’t have much of a choice."

"Don’t hurt yourself worrying about it, Toki. When you are ready to tell him, I will be right beside you to help you tell him."

She managed a fond smile for him, and reached out to pat the top of his head. "Thank you, Papa. I'm just a bit... Lost." She sighs. Her eye lights focus on the green flesh peeking between her finger bones, and she grinds her teeth. "I'll tell him. I need to tell him now. Just... I don't know if I should yet. Or if I can hide it for long. My body is changing and... Well... He's bound to notice since we share a bed. He's very clingy in his sleep now."

"If he finds out through you, it will do you a lot more good than if he found out himself..." Tenebris told her. "Clingy indeed, he'll notice it very quickly."

She heaves a sigh and nods. "I'll... tell him when we finish tea." She decides anxiously. "Though... Go ahead and finish it. It... kinda tastes disgusting to me." She glances away awkwardly. Probably a pregnancy symptom- Toki was sensitive to foods last time.

"Mnh, the stage of the cocoa once again." He sighed quietly. "A pity that it had to be tea. Though perhaps cocoa is spared this time around."
“I hope so.” She sighed. Toki rubbed her belly gently. “Spaghetti too… Now that we’ve got running water again, I was going to ask Papyrus if he’d like my help making it. I haven’t had his dinner in… years.” She glances at Tenebris and taps her fingers on his head. “Thank you for not… freaking out. Considering… Well, these are kinda…” His kids from a different world, if she let herself think like that. It was… kinda creepy if she thought about it. His alternate kids? She’s not all that sure what to classify them, but she’s sure he gets the picture.

He got it well enough, but didn’t make drama of it as he pats her shoulder while offering her a smile. "Whatever entity in that void isn't stupid, I’d bet. He wont let you off the hook until he knows you played right into his hands with the task that you had been assigned."

She tensed at that, and then flicked his forehead, giving him a dirty look. “Thanks. Like I really wanted to see them again, Papa. The creepy doctors mask was hell enough.” She rolls her eye lights, her wings flicking over the back of the couch. “Finish your tea, Papa. I think I’ll head home when you’re done. And… Tell Papyrus about… this.”

"Alright." He nodded gently, before he sat back to continue sipping his tea. "I'll come with you if you'd like." He offered.

“Please. If… If you think that’d be a good idea.” Toki continues to gently rub the tiny swell of her belly, and sighs softly. “Hey, Papa? Can you… See if it’s healthy yet? Or is it too soon? I just want to make sure that the void travel hasn’t had any lasting effects.” Like… Was it going to come out of her in a puddle of goo? That was her first growing concern.

“I can do that much.” He chuckled gently. He shifted from his seat to sit before her and he reached out, setting both hands on her slight swell. “They're very healthy... though it's a bit of a flurry of soul beats to read.” He chuckled gently. "But they are all strong indeed.”

“Wha-” Her eye lights disappeared in her sockets, and she stared at him blankly. ‘Flurry of soul beats’. “What do you mean by flurry of soul beats? Is… Is there twins again?” Twins twice in a row- she’s pretty sure she’d have lost a bet twice in a row in that case, though from whom she’s not sure. “God I hope not… I was huge with Papyrus’s twins. I can’t imagine more than one from a monster your size.” Toki was no longer the seven-foot tall monster. She was just… her little six foot self, surrounded by monsters that made her feel dwarfed. It was nice to be normal sized again.

He opened his mouth, and then slowly closed it, his gaze averting. "Ah... You are aware of... how many pups a blaster beast could have in a litter... did my counterpart not tell you?"

Oh man of all the things his counterpart didn't explain to her- then again, he didn’t really have the chance most likely. He’d give it his best attempt. "A healthy mother with a complete litter… Three to potentially eight pups."

“Three… Three to eight?” She squeaked. “Oh… Oh dear.” She rubbed her skull and glanced away. Her soul glowed under her shirt in a faint panic, but her beast soothed her rapidly, because to the beast, this was a normal and good thing. Eight was small for a hornet. “According to my beast, eight is apparently… small for a hornet.” She informs him, feeling faint. “Fuck… Just… fuck. That’s… That’s a lot.” She murmurs softly. “And… How many souls can you feel?”

"I immediately counted four... Might end up being six as they get stronger.” He murmured, investigating her closer. "Insect beasts have the potential for hundreds of children. Would you rather have that instead?”
Toki physically blanched at that. "Please no. Not hundreds. Just... Four is fine. I can... Fuck I can try to handle four. I'm going to explode, dear gods." She looked at her belly again and the panicked flutter in her soul was real. Four. That was double last time. She... She had been so tired after last time. "Hhh..." She sucked in a soft breath and let it shudder out. "Is that why I'm so big? Because there's so many? Or are they growing faster than the twins did?" She had gone overdue with the twins by two weeks.

"I don’t think blaster beasts gestate for nine whole months, so luckily you might not have to suffer for long."

“… That’s both good and bad.” She blinks. “Because you obviously don’t know how long I’ll be pregnant, so… it’s going to be another case to study.” She sighs and deflates. “I really didn’t want another birth filmed. But I guess this is what happens.” She looks at him, and then shifts in her seat. “I guess you should start keeping records. These will probably be the only full blaster beast pups born. We’ll be flying by the seats of our asses again…”

Toki glances to his tea, and motions for him to finish it. It was really bothering her nose.

He chuckled quietly, "I wont record it this time... It makes me sound like a dirty old man instead of a scientist." He put the lid on the thermos and stood up to take it to the kitchen.

“I don’t mind if you film this. It’s… Well, science, frankly. Just… Keep it out of sight, out of mind, like last time. No fuss from me then.” She got up and straightened her clothes, following after him like a lost lamb. “Well, I mean, you do go have dirty old man sex with the king up in the castle.” She teases. “Speaking of… Papa? Remember how, during my first heat, you told me that I couldn’t handle your heat? Well… I can now speak from experience that yes. I could.” Toki leans on the door frame to the kitchen. “I left him walking bowlegged.”

It wasn't clear just which part he choked at, but he had definitely hitched his breath enough to choke on air. After a small coughing fit, he looked at Toki with a flush to his cheeks. "Tokiko, dear lord!"

She laughs, bracing her hands on her hips. “Oh Papa, I’ve been holding that in for a while. I’ve missed teasing you. I kept instinctively cracking jokes at Tenne, but he’d just look like a confused puppy. It’s no fun unless I can get a rise out of you.” She snickers gently, and feels a bit lighter. “Alright- once you’re done clearing your lungs, I’ll go talk with Papyrus before I lose my nerve.”

He took a moment to clear his breathing tubes and with a sour look at her. He started out towards the door. "Come on then, my dear." He rumbled, the sour look fading as fast as it had come and being replaced by a smile.

Toki smiled faintly, and followed him. She headed out the door, and then flexed her wings, before glancing at him. “Well, since you can’t fly back, lets do the mundane task of walking,” She gives him a faint grin, before starting for home.

He rolled his eyes and chuckled as he walked at her side, his hands folding behind him as he took in a breath of air. "It's so good to have you home, Toki."

“IT’s good to be home, Papa.” She looked up and inhaled softly. “It smells different than before, but... I never thought I’d see it again, frankly. Home is... Home is nice.” She pokes him with one of her arms. “I bet you didn’t expect to see me come home with four arms, wings, and different horns.”

"Not at all did I expect it, Toki... but even then, I’ll admit that regardless of how you look, we're all very happy you're home."
“I’m happy I am too, even if I miss the friends I made in the other world.” She nods in agreement, and simply falls into step with him. She’d gotten better with walking in the two weeks she’d been back- relearning how to walk on human shaped legs was fun. “Four arms are surprisingly useful.” She tells him. “Once you get past them getting in the way of everything, and never being able to buy normal clothes again, it’s actually really nice. I can make pancakes and stir more batter at the same time. It’s like magic, but better.”

He chuckled at that. "Don’t you mean it's like magic but batter?" He nudged her with his hip as he walked, chuckling proudly as if he’d made the best pun.

It took Toki a moment, but she sputtered. “Papa!” She cried indignantly. “That was a terrible pun. But well played.” She bumped him back, and her indignant sputtering faded off into soft laughter. “I suppose I know where Caeruleus gets his punderful skills from.”

"I'm a dad. I have bad puns in my genes, or rather, my sweatpants." He gave his leg, bedecked in his beloved sweat pants, a wiggle as he chortled smugly.

Toki groaned and rolled her eye lights. “Ugh, dad jokes. I’m so glad Aliquam doesn’t crack so many of those. Only when he’s feeling particularly sassy. I recall being the one usually ruffling his feathers with puns and jokes.”

"That's one thing that Aliquam didn't get from me. I think Cae got his brother's share." He cackled.

“Oh yeah, I’m pretty sure he did. He’s a hundred percent sass.” Toki watched the houses passing them by, and waved her hands at monsters and workers when they waved at her. Toki sighed through her nasal cavity, and glanced at her father in law. “Papa…? What are the other monsters going to think about… this?” People talked. And talk was never, ever nice.

"I don’t know yet, but I don’t think anyone here has the consideration to talk poorly of you, regardless of your suffering...”

She glances at him and hums. “Monsters probably not. There will be talk though,” She says softly, “Some of it, even from monsters, might not be kind. Some won’t understand like you do- like I hope Papyrus will. They may say… unkind things.” Her reputation would take a blow- she would probably be known as the monster who cheated on her mate. “Just… if you hear such things, Papa, don’t get upset. People talk- humans especially, and the builders will be talking I’m sure.”

"Me? Believe such scornful words? Never." She bumps his hip and snorts. “I didn’t think you’d believe them, Papa. But you’ve got a temper on you, even if you hide it behind your calm demeanor. I know, because my beast has a short temper. And she’s not a forgiving creature. The Asgore of the other world learned that the hard way. I just don’t want you to take it to heart and get angry in my stead, okay? Sticks and stones can break our bones, but words can hurt a lot too.”

He nodded gently. "I see... alright..." He murmured.

“I’m surprised you didn’t ask what happened with the other Asgore.” She hummed conversationally, trying to get him distracted from the moderately upsetting topic of badmouthing her reputation.

"Well I was wondering, but I wasn't sure I wanted to get my hands on any juicy blackmail.” He chuckled.

“Well, you remember how I said we dominated the King, right…? Well… We uh, kinda did something that verged on treason. We threatened him.” Her mane ruffled. “He left bruises around Tenne’s neck. He was, uh, effectively choking him to death. The otter Galloway had been framing Tenne and using his name to try and sway the king to use Chara’s soul to break the barrier. You understand that killing one’s child is just not possible, even if they’re not yours by blood.” She sniffs slightly and hums.

Tenebris nodded as he listened, but had slowed down when she mentioned the otter monster. "Ohhh no..." He grumbled, before he pressed his face into his hand. "Galloway was there?" He groaned.

One could hear how hard the beast was cringing behind his hand.

“Oh yeah. He was there.” Toki nods. “He spent… Oh, I don’t know, the entire time I was giving venom samples telling me about how dumb and stupid beasts were and how entitled Tenne was because he didn’t have to go to some whatever the fuck school for monsters and mischief to learn how to be a smarty pants scientice-mc-guru.” The sarcasm in her voice is nearly tangible. “I didn’t like him and neither did my beast. It probably didn’t help when I got there to see Asgore and Tenne either. My beast was just starting to show herself then, and I wasn’t sure where all the aggression had come from until later, but… You know how when we use magic, it puts a sort of pressure into the air, right?” She waves a hand around them. Maybe she was just sensitive to it, and no one else felt it, but she was trying to explain. “I sort of used that, and the threat of filling him- Asgore that is- with my venom, to make him let go and back off. I had his guards nearly on their knees with the pressure of my magic. He said I could be imprisoned for my treasonous actions.”

"Mmh..." He took a moment to groan in anguish, clearly he and Galloway had history... Though once it passed he lowered his hand and looked at her. "I'd bet it was a hell of an effect on the guards. Having your soul been fused with the Anti-heart, It was very powerful magic. I'm not surprised they buckled. Hell, I'm not even surprised Asgore backed off." He chuffed, "He might have Boss magic, but you had human magic. I simply wish I could have seen your stats when you were one with Crue- I mean, Sequoia."

An amused snort left her. “Papa? You remember all the souls that Cruelty sucked in before I took control again? Those were still inside of me. All of that power- all of the power of those souls, those traits.” She tapped her chest. “My body had too much power to contain. The Void put it behind a wall. A leaky wall, mind you, but a wall all the same. It wasn’t just me and Cruelty- he hadn’t become my friend yet, so it’s fine to reference that name then. Sequoia was post barrier breaking- Cruelty was pre. What you saw in my stats now is what my stats looked like with just me and my Anti-heart.” She hums. “Other than my HP, my stats displayed as question marks, Papa. I had so much power that it broke my stats. No one but myself and the environment could hurt me, up until I threw everything into my damage to break through the barrier.” Her eyes flick away again and she sighs. “No chain will ever hold me anymore. No chain, no prison, no barrier- I will only stay where I want to stay, Papa. And I didn’t want to stay underground anymore. So we didn’t.”

Her eyes do darken though, and she sighs. She knows how her monsters got out- the dots had finally connected, and she felt stupid for having taken so long to realize it. Toki falls quiet, not sure how to broach that subject with Tenebris. She needed to talk to Asgore about it. She really did.

"Impressive..." He murmured, before he rumbled, patting her shoulder gently in assurance, "No one in their right mind will think about stopping you, Toki, don’t worry." He assured her, "And no one, absolutely no one will force us underground again, thanks to you.” He told her, noticing her gaze darkening but not questioning it.

“Not now, and not in a hundred lifetimes from now.” She says firmly. “I will protect the monsters as best I can… Anyway,” she looks at him, “I think we’re nearly there.” She glanced up, and spotted the familiar roof looming around the corner. She smiled faintly. “You moved further away,” She noticed faintly. “Though... It looks like the most damage was closer to my house.”

"Not that far. Just far enough to give you privacy." He chuckled. "Your home did take substantial damage, but it was one of the first to be fixed... We couldn't leave it to break down in your absence."

She nods quietly, and reaches out to rub his arm. “It was one of the few things Papyrus had left of me,” She says gently. “That you all had left of me. I understand.” Toki exhales softly and gives him a warm look. “At least you all had each other to help each other through it.” As they reach the stairs, she feels a coil of nervous nausea bubble in her belly, and wonders if he can smell it. She sucks in a breath, and starts up the stairs, her footsteps making noise so her husband would know she was home.

Tenebris chuckled gently before he rumbled softly, his own sound of announcement as he padded up the steps.

Aliquam came to the door with a smile on his face. "Welcome home, Toki." He purred happily.

That was a new thing- any time she came home, he came to the door to greet her. She hoped it was a temporary anxiety thing- because he would stop whatever he was doing to see if it was her, and the relief on his face when it was her coming in the door broke her metaphorical heart.

Toki gave him a lopsided smile, and waved a hand. “Hey, Pap. Thanks. It’s nice to be home.” Her mane ruffled and settled, and she slid up to press a kiss to his cheek, before meandering towards the living room. She pauses. “Ah... Are the kids upstairs? I need to talk with you about something that your dad and I... went over today.”

He gave her a tight squeeze when she stopped to peck his cheek and nodded gently. "Yes, I just put them in their room to play." He explained. "Is everything okay?" He asked.

“Good. I’d rather sort this out before they know.” She fiddles with her shirt, and then hums. “Well... That depends on your definition of okay. Let’s go to the living room first. I’d rather you sit down for this than stand.” Especially with his leg and his tendency to faint with surprise announcements.

He nodded slowly and walked to the front room, sitting down before he looked up at Toki.

Tenebris sat down, before he sighed and folded his fingers in front of his chest. A small frown graced his face as he intended to let Toki do the talking for now.

Toki watched them both and sighed. She fidgeted, and was tempted to just call it off, but ultimately just said screw it. She sucked in a breath, and gave him a shaky smile. “Okay, so... Alright. Fucking hell.” Toki rubbed her forehead. “So... I didn’t tell you everything about the other world. I didn’t... I didn’t want to tell you everything. I had hoped what I’d done in the other world had... Well, had stayed there, especially after what the Void told me.”

Toki was beating around the bush she knew. She could only beat it so long, but she needed to gather herself against the nerves that made her stomach rise into the back of her throat.

"Go on..." Aliquam was paying attention to nothing but her. She wasn't going to get out of it now.

Toki sighs, and she sits down suddenly on the coffee table. All four hands come to clutch her skull as she leans forward to rest her arms on her knees. She feels dizzy, but she perseveres. “Sequoia... Sequoia wasn’t the only one who fell in love.” She says softly. “Unfortunately, she... She needed my love to learn how to love for herself. So... So the Void pulled some strings when I proved too stubborn, too obstinate on my own, and too unwilling to... Too...” To betray her mate. Toki swallows, and her mouth feels dryer than the bones that make up her limbs. “To take a second mate after losing my first. The void had plans for me though, and plans for Sequoia too, and that involved love. Though… Truthfully, it wasn’t an honest love at first. It wasn’t a real love- the Void informed me of such. But… It became love.” This is where she cringes. “I still love him Papyrus. Not as much as I love you- but he’s got a small place in my soul for the kindness he showed me, and for making sure I didn’t give up and die in a hole somewhere. He was… He was my kindness in that world- a kindness I needed. But… Our love had consequences. These consequences are why I’m telling you all of this- I can’t run from them for very long.”

His face was still of concern, but there was a knowing worry in his eyes.

"I cannot thank him enough for keeping you from falling into a grave you could not climb out of...
But if there’s something left..." He murmured, before he tilted his head slightly, gaze wandering lower as if he already had a guess.

“There is.” Toki straightened, and pulled up her shirt just a bit. “I didn’t think, if there was anything that might have came from it, that it would have survived the process of Sequoia’s body being made.
I got… literally split in half, from the fun bits to my skull.” She says awkwardly as she displays the growing, faintly glowing bump that was her belly. “But… Yeah. This is it. I’m pregnant. Papa confirmed it when I noticed in the shower. He, uh… said there could be from between four to six in there. Kind of hoping it’s just four,” She gives an awkward attempt at a laugh. “It’s… It’s not skeletons. It’s blaster beast pups.” She was, effectively, carrying the children of another Tenebris from another world.

He wished he were wrong. He wished he had the willpower to be ready for this sort of news, but he was so very, very wrong. Aliquam looked at the glowing bump that was his wife’s stomach before he closed his eyes, folding his hands over his mouth.

"I... just need a moment..."

Toki lowered her shirt and nodded. She stood up quietly, and looked down at Tenebris and her husband, before awkwardly tucking her hands in her pockets. “I’ll step into the kitchen to give you a moment, okay?” She kept her voice quiet, and her tone even, though her heart broke a little. She knew what was coming- and Tenebris had been wrong.

Toki headed for the kitchen, her wings tucking tight to her back as she slipped inside. It wasn’t far, and she’d hear what they said, but it was a modicum of privacy for him to… to process what she told him.

Toki heard Tenebris start up first, his voice quiet and hesitant as he prodded his son verbally.
"Aliquam..."

"This is a sick joke...” Aliquam sounded hurt, but his tone was venomous. "First the Void takes my father in my childhood, and then it steals away my wife for months- months for me, years for her...
And she comes back... thinking that I'll think she betrayed me by coming back pregnant as a result of being manipulated into love..."

"... You're not upset with her?"

"Hardly... I’m a little upset that she thought she had to lie to me, but from what I’m understanding, she had to do a lot of it in this other world. Lying is a hard habit to break… Honestly, Father, I barely want to let her out of arms reach after so long of thinking I had lost her. I’m not mad at her, but with this being of the Void on the other hand… I'll have some very unpleasant words to have with it, should we ever meet...” Aliquam growled.
That did make Toki feel a little better, but not much. She still felt like she had betrayed him, but… There wasn’t really much that she could do at this point. She was pregnant, and she had to live with it. He might have been hardly upset with her, but he sure didn’t sound happy. And… Well, children born into an unhappy marriage usually didn’t grow up happy. She wasn’t sure what to do, frankly.

She quietly busied herself in the kitchen, turning on the sink just long enough to wet the dishes laying in it, and beginning to do dishes on autopilot because that’s all she could do currently. She didn’t remember the password to her computer, so getting back on it to read and work on her books from what felt like forever back would have to wait until she could get it unlocked somehow. Housework was relaxing in it’s own way anyways, and she didn’t mind doing it, and just letting her mind wander as her expression sank into something that was both tired and sad. She was so tired of things happening that just kept ruining what little bits of peace she’d find. She was so, so tired of it.

Toki just hoped that he’d still be okay with… well, her in general when he called her back to the living room. She wasn’t sure that she could handle losing that one little bit that she had gotten back. Not permanently anyway.

The father and son talked for a while, before Aliquam came into the kitchen. He hobbled slowly on his cane, the telling sound of it on the tile echoing before his steps did. He wasted no time in coming to Toki and wrapping his arm around her. "I love you, Toki… I love you so much. And nothing can change that. Not even this, as you might have feared."

Toki’s wings remained tucked flush to her back to allow him as close as possible, and she hummed softly. “I love you too,” She says softly, sockets squinting shut. “I love you so much, Pap… I didn’t want to upset you with any of this. I know how much it bothered me. I’m sorry I kept it from you.” She leaned back into him slightly, and glanced back up at him. The one good thing about not having her horns spearing back from the top of her skull anymore meant she wasn’t likely to stab him in the eye anymore. “Things are still going to change though.” Her voice fades quietly, and she sighs. ‘I don’t… I don’t know how we’re going to handle this. I don’t know how you’re handling this right now. Handling it so… so calmly.” Toki was upset and disquieted and it was upsetting her insides.

"You were brave enough to tell me. That's all that matters." He sighed, before he turned his head to rest it on her skull. "It will not be easy, I understand this... but it's okay. We can still make this work out... somehow."

Her crocodile teeth settled into a wobbly crooked smile. She sighed gently. Her hands itched to wander to her belly, but she didn’t let them. This wasn’t their twins- he wasn’t their father, and she didn’t want to upset him or bother him with anything too soon after he’d found out. “We’ll figure it out.” She nods quietly. “It’s going to be hard. People… People are going to talk, Pap. Humans, monsters… Not all of the talk is going to be good. Particularly about me.” She watches him through the window, and nuzzles her skull up into his. “You talk about me being brave… I’m really not. I just got backed into a corner where I couldn’t run- didn’t want to run.” She corrected. “Running would mean leaving and that’s not something I could ever do.” Her shoulders trembled at the thought. “I… I would rather take your scorn a thousand times over, or sleep in a room in an entirely different building if I have to, than run from you.”

He chuckled quietly and he nuzzled her. "And leave me to hobble after you?" He asked, before pressing a soft, tender kiss to her skull again. "I only just got you back from this despicable creature who manipulated you..." He spoke more somberly now, traced with anger towards the Void and the entity within. "Not even this can tear me away from what I believe..."

“You don’t hobble,” Is her automatic response, “You gracefully waddle. But… yeah.” She sighs quietly. She relishes the fact that she doesn’t have a lot of skin limiting her movements anymore, and cranes her neck around so she can kiss his jaw line gently. “Thankfully, the Void said I won’t see it again unless I do something incredibly stupid… Presumably ripping open another hole to the Void would be said stupid thing, of which I’ve got no intentions of doing.” Her wing joints press awkwardly into his chest, and Toki sighs. “… I’m not going anywhere. But… I know this is probably hard for you. Knowing that I… What I did…” How she felt… “I wouldn’t blame you, if you decided that this wasn’t your problem. I just want you to know that.”

"It wouldn't be that easy to simply overlook it, Toki... It's complicated to explain, but don’t you worry. I've dealt with a whole lot worse, and I've come through that well enough. We'll get through this just fine.”

Toki rolls her eye lights. “I didn’t think it would be, Pap. It, uh, is kinda gonna grow big and grow fast. Hard to ignore something like that.” Her fingers give in, and one of her hands strays to her growing swell. “I hope so… Because Pap…? We're not gonna have nine months to get used to the idea of this. I don’t think we’re going to have anywhere close to that. Papa doesn't know how long for sure, but… I’m probably between two and three weeks. Maybe more, maybe less.” And she was already showing, with her womb visible in her belly.

"It's okay." He pecked her head some more. "I'll be ready by the time they come out..."

“I hope so, Pap.” She nuzzled his skull with a quiet sigh. “I really do.” She looked up at him quietly. “I just hope I am by the time they’re here.” They were going to be a constant reminder for her of what she lost in the other world- and a constant reminder that she’d been essentially forced to betray her marriage to Papyrus, even if it hadn’t felt forced.

Aliquam set his head on hers and sighed, giving her another soft hug.

She leaned back into him with a soft sound, before glancing away and rubbing his knuckles. “We should go tell your dad that we’re okay for now.” She wasn’t sure how truly okay they were- she knew Papyrus was forgiving, but there had to be some limit, right?- but she wasn’t going to push it. “Besides, we need to figure out what to tell the kids. They’re… going to ask questions. They’re both smart as a whip.”

He nodded in agreement, "Come on" he purred, leading her out of the kitchen.

She didn't echo his purr, but followed him quietly. She went at his pace, slowly hobbling out with him to the living room. She managed a smile for Tenebris, and then took a seat on the couch with the two of them. Her hands folded over her lap, and she sighed.

Tenebris looked up at them both.

Aliquam sighed. "Things will be okay. We're going to get through this together."

“Yeah.” Toki nods. She glances at Tenebris and gives an awkward shuffle. “I’m not sure what to tell the children though. They’re smart- they got that from the both of you- but I’m not… entirely sure what to tell them concerning…” She gestured to her belly. “They’re going to come out looking different than they did.”

"It's going to be quite an explanation..." Tenebris agreed.

Toki leaned back and rubbed her middle with a soft sigh. The flesh was soft and warm- almost overly warm, but given the concentration of magic there, she didn’t doubt why. “If we don’t tell them, they’re going to ask why they look different.” She glanced up and closed her sockets. “I... don’t know what to tell them.” She confesses quietly. “How do I tell them… about Tenne?”

"It's going to be a hard tale to tell... But I wonder if for once they are simply children, and don't question it."

Toki lifted a brow. “Honestly, can you see Honey not questioning anything? She questions why we put milk in cereal.”

Neither male replied, but they both made a face that screamed 'truuuuuueee'.

Toki sighed and rocked her head back on her neck. “I’m just going to have to think of what to tell them. We’ll… Tell them in a couple days.” She decides. “When Pap and I are used to the idea ourselves.”

"That’s a wise idea." Tenebris murmured as he gave a nod.

She sighs and rubs her face. “I’m just going to need to wear long shirts.” She murmurs. Not that she wouldn’t anyways. These weren’t the twins- these… well, these were proof of her betrayal of her mating bond to Papyrus, and her matrimonial one. Oh the talk the people would have. “So… Lets just keep the news between us three for now. I’ll tell Cae soon, but… Not yet.”

She needed time to get used to the idea of being pregnant before she told anyone else. She told Tenebris because she had panicked and needed confirmation- Papyrus because he was her husband and it was his right to know… No one else for now.

Not until she could get used to the idea herself.

Chapter 116

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Here we have some morning sickness showing up, and the after effects of last chapter. They’re trying to make it work, but there is that underlying tension there. I wonder what can be done for it…? Also warning- this is a two part chapter, but it’s split awkwardly because the chapter got waaaay too long.

The next week was… rough. Toki and Papyrus were normally cuddly- even more so since she’d returned. But he wasn’t sure what to feel about her belly yet, and any time he touched it by accident, his fingers would flinch away, and he’d draw back to more casual touches around her shoulders and back. She didn’t blame him, and she wouldn’t get upset- Toki just hurt a little bit inside every time it happened.

She missed the ease of which they could be together. There was an unsung tension as he slowly worked out how he felt about everything, while she was left dealing with her body rapidly changing to fit the growing litter in her belly. Despite her offers, he didn’t want to sleep apart, and she’d wake with him wrapped around her, as if he could make sure she’d never leave his side. His hands would even be over the ever growing swell of her belly- which was bigger by the day, unfortunately- in a protective embrace. In his sleep, his mind seemed to have made up what it accepted. Awake was when the thoughts brought the disturbances.

Unfortunately, from time to time, she had to do the thing he feared most. She had to pry herself away multiple times during the night when she felt sick, and she’d slip downstairs and turn on the sink in the bathroom so she could be sick as quietly as she could.

Morning sickness wasn’t just morning sickness- Toki found that as it hit, it hit all the time, and she began to be unable to eat anything. If it wasn’t water with a tiny drop of honey in it to soothe her agitated summoned organs, she was hurling it back up in an hours time, if not less than that.

She dealt with it in silence though, keeping it from Papyrus and her children as best she could. She still hadn’t told them- or anyone yet- because she wasn’t sure what to say. The stress was eating at her, making her sicker and sicker inside, but there wasn’t much to do besides deal with it.

Speaking of her children… They were trying to kill her, she’s very sure. Inadvertently, of course, but they were. While Aliquam was out getting his leg looked at by Tenebris, Toki had volunteered to play with her kids. They wanted to do a tea party, so that involved Toki making tea, and lots of little treats for the kids.

And Honey was very vested in making sure Toki ate every single treat that the little girl had put onto her plate.

Of course, Toki couldn’t refuse her. Any time Toki wanted to say no, her daughter would crank those blue eyes onto her, and they would brighten and quiver, and Toki just couldn’t deny her after everything. So she’d eat another treat, feel her swollen stomach clench and wobble around it and the other collection of treats settled inside while Skylar munched his goodies and watched the Disney movie she’d put on for them.
“Honey,” Toki says once she’d choked down the next cookie her daughter shoved in her face, “Why don’t you let Sobek have my treats, and the two of you watch your show with Skylar and Snuggle? I can go get you some apple slices or some yummy pomegranate seeds. You need something healthy besides sweet and sugary things, you know.”

Honey looked up at her mother with the intention to pout again, but it would appear that Toki got lucky. Sobek had jumped up onto the table and promptly snatched the treats from Toki’s plate, before scrambling off to eat them. Honey gave an upset rattle of her bones and went after her bird, shouting ‘Bad Sobek!’ as she did.

The damn bird was enough of a troublemaker for even Honey to memorize how to scold him.

Toki couldn't hide her snort, even if she felt terrible. Sobek had gone from looking like a plucked chicken, to looking like something between a half shaved canary and a fully feathered vulture. Well, baby feathers. He was fluffy from the chest up, but bald from the ass down, which left him looking half naked. It was amusing.

Toki glanced to Skylar and to the massive, sleeping grub at his side. Snuggle had grown too, nearly four feet in length, but seemed content to laze about like a fat sausage. He was a laid-back creature, to which counteracted Sobeks’ nearly hyperactive antagonistic shenanigans.

"Hey, Sky?" Toki brushed his skull gently. "I'll be right back, okay? I'm going to run upstairs for a moment. Mommy needs to do something, so if your sister asks, tell her I'll be back in a minute or two."

"Okay Momma." Skylar had Snuggle wrapped around his waist, petting his head with one hand as he munched the snacks provided in the other. They were both mostly focused on their movie, and content to enjoy each other’s company as they watched the movie.

Toki smiled and patted Snuggle, before carefully standing. Her stomach squeezed, and she knew she needed to hurry, but if she hauled ass, she’d be suspicious.

She took her time carefully going up the stairs, focusing on one foot in front of the other as she made her way up. She was tired- throwing up most of what she was eating wasn’t letting her replenish enough magic. Her massive amount of magic was dwindling down between infusing food for her family, and feeding the growing brood in her belly, and hurling up lots of it with her meals.

She just had to wait it out though. It wouldn’t last forever.

Toki made her way to the bathroom and closed the door, not fully shutting it so that the doorjamb didn’t click and get her kids attention. She made sure she was care in turning on the sink before her middle gave a lurch. She made her way to the toilet, kneeling down and bracing her arms on it. Sweat gathered on her brow, as she breathed shakily.

It wasn’t long before she began heaving up mouthfuls of what she’d eaten, the contents of her stomach coming up as a thick, green sludge. Her mane bristled each time her stomachched heaved, and her wings lifted slightly as she retched. Toki was going to be stuck here until she’d emptied out everything she’d consumed since she’d woke up.

But with leaving the door open, the noise would travel, even a little bit.

Skylar lifted his head as he heard the sounds from upstairs and a frown came onto his face. Scooting Snuggle to a nearby pillow, he got up and made his way to where they kept one of the house phones. He took it, and after a little while of staring at the phone while thinking, he pressed one of the buttons that would allow him to speed-dial someone. He then lifted the phone to his ear, waiting until he heard it click.

"Yo."

"Uncle Cae?"

"Skylar? Why are you calling me?"

"Momma's really sick." He winced at hearing another retch, which was partially muffled. “I meant to call Daddy and Papa, but I guess I called you instead... Can you come help Momma?"

"Yeah... I'll be there soon. Thanks kid."

"Mmhmm." He heard as Cae hung up before he put the phone back on the base, going back to Snuggle and picking up the front half of large worm, which rag-dolled in his grasp while chittering his mandibles quietly.

Honey soon came back to the main room with Sobek awkwardly held in her arms. The bird was big, but not nearly as heavy as Snuggle, so she could lift all of him. It didn’t mean he made it easy for her, and he squirmed and wiggled and kicked up a fuss. Honey blinked as she noticed someone very key to their tea party missing, and frowned. “Brother,” Her mouth tilts into a pout, “Where’s Momma? She’s missing tea and… Well, Sobek ate all her cookies. You butthead.”

He squawked at her, and then gave her the sort of coo he knew she couldn’t resist, before running his beak over her horn and grooming it tenderly.

Snuggle watched them, and wiggled his legs in Skylar’s arms. His lower half was still draped on the floor- he was too long for all of Skylar to hold, but he still enjoyed being held as much as he could by the toddler. Or anyone who would hold him, really.

"Momma had to go to the bathroom." He answered, before hefting Snuggle higher into his arms, over his shoulders. "But Uncle Cae is coming over."

Snuggle let out a pleased sound, and draped over his shoulder like a particularly pudgy featherless feather boa.

Honey cocked her head like a confused puppy. “But… I thought only Uncle Kon had to poop.” She makes a face. “It always stinks when our uncles go to the bathroom.” She had learned the joys of human bodily function when her family had swarmed. Stinky bathrooms were gross, and Honey did not like them. Not at all. Her eye lights brightened though, and she bounced Sobek in her arms. “Uncle Cae!” She squeaked happily. “That means he’ll bring Solly and maybe Uncle Grilly!” Her eye lights gleamed eagerly with the prospect of more people to add to the tea party.

"Maybe... but Uncle Cae's going to help Momma. I don’t think she feels very good..."

Honey’s gleeful look fell and she frowned. Even Sobek stilled as he took in Skylar’s words. “But… She’s Momma. Momma never feels bad.” She says softly, looking owlish. She frowns more, and sits down with Sobek at the table again. The bird sits in her lap without a fuss, and she looks towards the front door, waiting for her uncle to come. “Why is Uncle Cae coming and not Daddy or Papa?”

"I accidentally called Uncle..." Skylar admitted, before hearing a knock on the door

Honey gently shooshed Sobek off her lap, and ran to get the front door. "Uncle Cae?" She asked, swinging it open.
"Not quite. He got a head start." Grillby was smiling at Honey on the either side, Solstice in his arms. "Hello dear."

Honey blinked at him and managed a smile. "Uncle Grilly!" She smiles. "Little Solly! Come in! Momma doesn’t feel good, but that means you can take her spot at the table for tea while Uncle Cae makes her better. Come, come!" She motions them in and skips back for the table, her skirt swishing around her legs as she does. "Can Solly have cookies? I have lots of cookies."

"One or two wouldn't hurt. What kind are they?" Grillby asked, bringing Solstice over and sitting at Toki's chair with his daughter in his lap.

"I ‘unno.” Honey shrugs. “Cookies are cookies. They’re all yummy, and they all go in my tummy. It doesn’t matter what they are.” She hadn’t eaten one that was yucky yet. She held out two- one for Grillby and one for Solstice. The cookies were chocolate chip cookies, but made with M&M’s instead of chocolate chips.

Sobek made to nip at them, but Honey clamped a hand over his beak and then squished him into her lap so she could keep him under control.

He took them gently and held one to Solstice, who quietly munched on hers, crackling happily as she seemed to enjoy the taste of the treat.

Honey beamed up at him, but seemed to wince as she listened to her Momma get sick again. "Is Momma gonna be okay?" She asks around her cookie.

"Perhaps... If something's not right with her, we'll take her to Tenebris. She'll be fine in the end."

"Okay. I just don't want her to turn to goop again. She could slip down the drain and we'd lose her forever to the scary drain creature." Honey nods seriously around her treat.

"I don’t think she'll do that again... It was only when Tenebris moved her soul."

“Still.” Honey puffed air through her nose. “Momma looks better when she’s not soup. It’s hard to hug and cuddle soup.”

Around the time that Grillby had arrived, there was a knock on Toki's door. "Hey, Toki." It was Sans- his voice deep and gentle on the other side of the door. His knock made it swing open a little bit, and he kept his hand on the knob to give her privacy.

The knock at her door had Toki startling, and she coughed and gagged. There was a wet retch as she sent another spurt of magic into the toilet.

Toki gave a tiny groan, and spat to clear her mouth as best she could. "Hey Cae," she says shakily, "I'm not in a good place right now... If you g-guhh... Give me a few, I can be out."

"You don’t need to worry about it, I went through this crap too, remember?" He chuckled. "Eat something bad? Or did you and Pap have a celebratory session as soon as you got settled again?" he asked

Toki tensed, and choked. She sputtered, her hands tightening their grip on the porcelain bowel. From how he’d first spoken, it almost sounded like he already knew. “S-some of one, some of the other. Not quite the other.” She manages to speak with semi-forced nonchalance as she side-eyes the door.
“Y-ugh- you can come in. Better than talking through the door if it’s not going to bother you.” Her head swam with nausea, and she breathed through it as she had been practicing. He’d know when he walked in- he knew what pregnancy looked like. The twins were still little enough to be blind to what it was.

"Sure thing." He came in and closed the door behind him, leaning against the door. It seemed he knew by the time he made it to the door exactly what was wrong with her. "What's going on, Toki?"

“It’s… A mess.” She says, and has to lean forwards as she retches again. Another mouthful is spat up, and she groans. One of her hands cradles her belly, and she rubs it to try and soothe it. “Hah… Let’s just say, until I can explain it… without my face in the toilet bowl,” she swallows shakily, “That there’s going to be a boom in the blaster beast population.”

"Well I know that. If either of us get pregnant, it's an addition to the population, even if it's half-blooded."

He hadn't understood her meaning. Her mane ruffled, and she had to push it out of the way with her hand as she dry heaved. There was nothing left to hurl- now she was just left to be miserable until her stomach calmed.

"They're full blood." She chokes out as she spits to clear her mouth. Toki doesn't look at him- she doesn't want to see the look that's going to cross his face at knowing she'd... Well, betrayed Papyrus. She couldn't explain now- not while she felt like she wanted to toss her organs out her mouth next. Once the nausea faded some, she could focus to tell him properly.

It was a look that did indeed show surprise, but instead of disgust or scorn, it conveyed confusion. "There's something missing out of this explanation, huh?"

She leaned back and flushed the toilet, before closing the lid and just bracing her arms on it. She was so tired and she just did not feel good. "Yeah," She rasps as she cradles her skull, "lots." Slowly, she pulls herself up to rinse her mouth out in the sink. "Long story made short, the void did some bullshit, made me into an unknowing puppet because I wouldn't have done what it wanted, and made me fall in love with Tenne. And what comes when two beasts love each other? Pups, apparently." She exhales and swishes water around her teeth, cleaning out her mouth. "They're technically your siblings from another world. Which really sounds like some fucked up Game of Thrones shit." She hadn't even told Papy that yet. But Sans had a bit darker humor sometimes.

"Oh... shit..." He seemed to think about which face to make really. "That's... that's something..."

“Yeah.” Toki took deep breaths, and then looked at him. “Papyrus and I... are trying to be okay with this. I don’t think we really are.” She rubbed one of her arms, and couldn’t keep her gaze on him for long. She’s ashamed of many things. “He… can’t touch further than my chest when we’re cuddled up anywhere, unless he’s asleep. I still haven’t told the kids. I don’t know what to tell the kids. Only he and Papa knew at first... and now you.”

"I understand how this would be hard to share with the kids..." Cae spoke quieter. "It's... a bit of a predicament, to say the least."

“Yeah.” She sighed. “It’s... It’s just- yeah...” Her hand wanders to her belly, and she rubs it for a moment. “Papa I think is the only one who is really excited about it... It’ll bring back more of his kind, you know?” She sighs softly. “But... I can’t get a read on Papyrus. And I’m a mix of... well, excited to be a mom, but also other things. Less pleasant things. Also mostly nauseated.” She waves a hand at him. “Join me in the kitchen? The only thing I’ve been able to keep down in days is water with a bit of honey in it.”
"Bastard better not be THAT excited about this, I can smell how distressed you are..." He growled quietly, before he nodded and followed her down.

Toki took her time going down, being quiet so she didn’t draw attention. The kids were occupied with Grillby, so Toki didn’t worry all that much. They didn’t notice her when she crept into the kitchen, and began preparing herself a glass of water. She glanced back at her brother in law, and mixed in a few drops of honey, before sipping it. “He is excited. But I don’t blame him.” She sighs. “I am distressed, but… Sans, it’s… I understand why he’s excited. It’s more of his kind- I understand his excitement. He’s trying to be very supportive. It’s a future for his species- I think that’s why the Void made sure I… was before it sent me home.”

"The void has a sick sense of humor after everything that's happened. First him, then you, and now this... Since when did it matter to the Void if he was the only one or not?"

“I don’t know.” Toki says. “The Void has it’s own agenda- and I don’t even think that its assistant, Phase, knows what it is.” She shakes her head and sighs. She looks down at her growing belly and cups it with a soft sound. “Papa said there could be between four and six in here. That’s... That’s a lot of blaster beast pups.”

"Compared to starting from one." He agreed. "Find anything that your body doesn't reject yet?"

“Not yet. Just water and honey. Anything else comes up in an hour or less.” She sighs. “I’ve managed to keep it hidden from Pap and the kids for now. Dunno how I’ve managed with Papyrus-I’ve been up all hours of the night being sick. Well… I obviously kept it secret up until now, anyway, if you’re here. Which of the kids called?"

"Yeah, Skylar apparently meant to call Pap."

"So my sixth sense wasn't doing me wrong." Cae turned to see Aliquam entering the kitchen with a subtle smile. "How are you doing, Toki?" He asked as he waddled up to her, pecking her head in greeting as he gave her a gentle hug.

“I’m, uh… Alright. Alright enough I guess.” She nuzzled into his shoulder, one hand quietly hugging him back while she rubbed her belly and sipped her drink. She was thankful that his scent didn’t upset her stomach too badly, or she’d have been tossing this little bit of water up too. “Your sixth sense?” She queried lightly, fingers twitching around her glass of the only thing she could ingest. “Also, how is your leg? A little better after Papa took a peek at it?”

"My leg will be fine, yes." He nodded gently. "You, on the other hand..." He then spoke with more concern.

“I have my honey water.” She held up the glass to show him as such. “I shall be just fine. It’s a delicious treat. Mmmm.” She’s not sure who she was trying to fool- him or herself- but she made the noise as she took a pointed sip from the glass. Her eyes darted to Caeruleus, and she wondered if he’d call her bluff.

Both brothers were giving her the same look.

"Toki."

"You're not fooling anyone." She sighed. “Well, there’s not much we can do.” She says softly. “Unfortunately, my, uh... litter, has decided that nothing is suitable for me to consume.” Her finger bones click on the glass. She takes note that she still has the slightly sharp tips, like small claws. “This is about all I can eat, or I’m hurling it up later. I mean, I still end up getting sick if I don’t eat, so it’s a double edged blade, but…” She shrugs with a sigh. “I’m dealing, Pap. I’ll be fine.”

"I mentioned this to Father, that you hadn’t been eating as much... he said he'd have something made up for dinner tonight... I think he knows something that will help you feel better." He assured her.

Toki hesitated at that, and her mane ruffled slightly. "I hadn't realized you'd noticed." She admitted quietly. "I was doing my best to keep this as much as just my problem as I could. Anyways, Papa making something got dinner tonight? That... Could mean a large number of things." Tenebris wasn't well known for his cooking. Tea yes, cooking no. Usually his sons cooked. Perhaps it would be an herbal tea of some kind.

"Indeed so." Her husband nodded. “He went out as soon as I left.”

"Went out?" Her eyes blinked wider. "Huh... Alright. Well, whatever he can get at the store, I hope it helps. I'm very tired of throwing up. Also very tired." She sighs, and her mane deflates and slicks down. Her wings droop, and she leans into her husband just a bit so she doesn't bother his leg.

He didn't seem to care as a gentle arm pulled her closer, encouraging her to get comfy against him.

Toki made a low rumbling beastly noise at him, and then glanced up. She read that body language just fine. "Standing in the kitchen is not comfortable cuddling," she laughs just faintly. Her gaze slides to Sans as she leans into her husband all the same. "I'm sorry if the call scared you. I'm not sick, I promise. Well... not too sick. It'll go away eventually."

"You were sick enough to need some company through it, Toki. You can call me anytime." Cae winked at her as he gave a grin, "As long as Grillbz and I aren't in the middle of something~"

She rolled her eyes in good humor. "I don't think I'll call, but if I need you, I will." She nods. "I mostly don’t like to bother people. Company is nice, but this is kinda my issue. So..." She flails a hand awkwardly. She wasn't even bothering Papyrus with it. She was trying to keep it as far on the down low as possible. "Besides, my luck, I'd call and you'd be doing your Jack-o-lantern impression." She teases.

He laughed at that, "Yeah she'll be just fine, Pap!" He cackled to his brother, who rolled his eyes in response. "Alright, I'll go see about prying Grillby from the snacks I saw on the kid's table and we'll get out of your fur."

"It's a mane, not fur. Fur is everywhere. I'm only a little fuzzy." Toki pauses, and her face twists a bit at the reminder. "Oh... Yeah... The tea party." She looks down at her water and swallows. "Honey is going to want me to come back to it." The thought of the sugary cookies was making her nauseated, and it was plain to see on her face.

"No, no, you settle down and relax, I'll take one for the team. Aliquam smooched her head before he too started out for the living room.

Toki snagged his wrist before he could go. "They're going to want to know why I was sick, Pap. We have to tell them now. It's... Probably going to happen again. I can't hide anything here for very long, it seems. So... Do we tell them together?" Or did he want to swing it on his own?

"Yes, we'll tell them together, but once you're better."

"Papyrus." Her fingers didn't tighten on his arms, but they did gently tug so he would look at her. "Pap, you remember with the twins. It comes and goes. I'm okay right now, honest. So long as I don’t have to eat cookies, I'll be okay."
"Alright... alright... Do you want to tell them now?" he asked, "before you have to go again?"

"Uh..." Now that was the question, wasn't it? Toki hesitated, and anxiety flashed through her scent. Slowly she nodded. "Sure... Yeah. Better now than later." She glances to Sans, and then moves to lace her fingers with her husbands hand, so they can walk together to the living room.

Immediately upon coming into sight, Honey very nearly shrieks happily, and waves a cookie. "Yay! You're not goop! Uncle Sans fixed it."

Skylar rubs his ear slightly before smiling up at Toki, "Feel better, Momma?" he asked.

Toki slaps a smile on her face for her children and hums. "Well... I do right now, sweetie. But, this did something your Daddy and I need to talk to you about." She waved at Grillby and Sans as they made their escape with Solstice, and Toki made her way to the couch. She helped Papyrus sit, and then sat with him. "Can you both come here for a moment? It's very serious what we have to tell you." Her fingers might have been trembling around Papyrus' own as she clutched them tightly.

Honey nodded and got up, nibbling a goodie as she made her way over to her parents. She peered up at them and leaned against her daddy's knees.

Smiling at Honey, Aliquam gently bounced his leg to occupy her while Skylab got comfy beside his mother.

Toki patted his head, and then glanced up at Aliquam. "Alright... Well, I'm going to be sick for a little while longer. It might be a few weeks but it's nothing bad, I promise. There are... There are babies growing in my tummy," she pats her belly, highlighting the swell as she does so, "and sometimes they don't like what I eat, so they make me get sick so I'll get rid of it." that was the easiest beginning to an explanation that she could manage. Toki's fingers rubbed her belly quietly. It felt good over her skin, which was having to stretch rapidly with little time to adjust.

Honey's eyes blinked wider. "I thought you were just fat!" Her mouth popped open too. "So there is babies in there? Daddy, did you know?"

Children were often the bluntest of things, even if not meant in ill will.

Oh god. Aliquam bit back a snicker. "I knew."

"Huh." Honey blinked. "How did they get there? Did daddy put them there?" She blinks up at him innocently.

Toki ground her teeth. This was the question she had been dreading. She nudged Papyrus. He got to help with this too.

And like that he didn't need to hold anything back anymore. "It's... a bit of a long story." He started slowly. "But this time, I didn't put them there."

Skylar's face wrinkled faintly and he gave them a weird look. "But... All the television shows say that the daddy puts the baby in the Momma. But... If you didn't... Who did?" He looks perplexed by this idea.

"It happened while I was gone." Toki hedged softly. "The babies are going to come out a lot like Grand Papa Tenny."

Honey hummed. "So they're Papas' babies?" She asks, her voice thick with utter confusion as she made the wrong intuitive leap.
Toki gave Papyrus a look that screamed 'help me please'.

"No, no, no." Aliquam spoke up quickly. "You know how momma was gone for a while?" He asked.

"Yeah." Both twins nodded in synchronicity.

"Well... in the time we thought was a long while, it was a lot longer for her... She met someone who... just looks like papa. He helped her recover from thinking she lost us..."

"He sounds nice." Honey nods.

Skylar frowns though. "Is he the babies daddy?" He asks immediately, wanting this question solved.

"Yes. He's their daddy... But it's okay, because they're still Toki's babies too, and even though they'll be your half-siblings, I'll still love them very much."

Skylar grinds his teeth, and it's a very Toki like action. He takes a lot from his mother. "I guess... But Daddy? You don't seem happy. Or... Feel happy." He touches his chest. "I don't 'member much, but I remember you being happy and Mommy being happy. You don't feel as happy right now. Neither does Mommy." His fingers slide away from his chest, where he had referenced the soul bonds, and the bright boy sighs.

Honey hums slightly and blinks at her parents, adding her own question to the troubling slew of words that her twin had given to Papyrus. "Who's going to teach them to be baby-not-papas? You're a skeleton, and Papa is a Papa, and Papa acts weird sometimes. Are the babies going to be weird too?"

"Momma feared that I wouldn't love her the same after she told me about this. She was wrong." He wrapped his arm around Toki as if to reassure her of the same and he pressed a gentle, loving kiss to her head. "I still love her as much as I did the day she disappeared." He purred, before looking to Honey.

"Not weird, Honey... Papa is a great beast, and the pups will be just the same as Papa..."

Toki leaned into him with a soft sound and nuzzled him warmly. "And I still love your Daddy and all of you. I never stopped loving you." She murmurs softly.

Skylar nods, and is echoed by Honey. Their son is the one that speaks next though. "So the babies will really be more like if Momma had Papas babies than when she had us." He tilts his head and fiddles with his fingers. "How many babies is 'babies'? Like... Two? Two is a good number."

"It could be between four to six." Toki answered, and watched her son make a face at that fact.

"Beasts have lots of babies, remember when we saw that possum with her babies?" Aliquam asked.

"Well, yeah, but Momma isn't a beast now. She's a skelly, like you and me and Sissy." He didn't seem upset by this fact, but Skylar just didn't understand. He was a little young for everything to be fully clicking like it should.

Toki sighed softly. "The babies were made before I was a skeleton. That's how they'll grow because of that." She explains softly. "I don't know how it works or why, but that might be so. We wont know until they're big enough for us to take a look at with a flashlight."

That apparently disquieted them both. "You can look at them?" They asked, looking aghast at the
"It's your Uncle's idea, if I remember correctly. He pulled it off either with you two or with himself when he was carrying your cousin."

Toki snorts. "Actually... Actually, it was an accident at first. Remember? We were setting up the nursery, and the sun shone on my belly, and you got to see Skylar and Honey. You got the flashlight so we could see them better."

"So... Technically it was the sun's idea?" Honey chirped.

"Yes. It was the sun's idea." Aliquam chuckled quietly. "Your Uncle just decided to act upon it further in a very silly manner."

"Uncle is silly." Skylar nods. He glanced at Toki, and then scooted into her lap. He leaned down and nuzzled her belly, and his sharp teeth pursed as he kissed the growing swell. "I'll be a good big brother." He promises.

Honey smacks her daddy's knee lightly and waves an arm. "Daddy up! I wanna give kisses too! Kisses make babies grow good. Gotta give lots of kisses cause there's lots of babies."

It was warming Toki's soul watching Skylar, and she may have been fighting off the need to get teary eyed.

Aliquam smiled proudly as he gently hefted Honey onto the couch beside her mother, before he scooted close as well, "And kisses for Mommy because Daddy will always love her and her babies" he cooed, kissing Toki's cheek until the time she would turn her head for a proper, loving kiss.

Her secondary hands cradled her twins skulls as they nuzzled her belly and gave attention to their half siblings inside. Toki turned her skull, intending to nuzzle Papyrus. She got a kiss instead, and she didn't mind at all giving him an actual kiss in return. She could feel some of her stress easing off as her children accepted the litter readily and with easy affection once their questions had been answered.

"Daddy?" Skylar glanced up from his snuggling with his Mommas swollen belly. "Since the babies don't have their daddy, you'll be a good daddy for them too, right? Like you are for us?"

"Of course. The only way I would say no was if Papa were to instead, but I don't know if that old codger could take the challenge of pups." He teased with a light laugh.

"Don't let Papa hear you say that." Toki snorts. "He likes to say he's old, but you'll ruffle his fragile feathers."

Skylar nods. "He naps a lot. Babies need lots of care, like those human ones we got to see. You can't nap all the time and have babies. Daddy will be good."

Toki shifted on the couch and sighed as the twins got comfortable, and began to quietly speak to her belly. While they took some time to talk to the little ones within her, distracting themselves from grilling Papyrus and herself about details, she looked to Papyrus. Toki hummed softly. "Well... That went well."

"Very well." He purred in agreement.

"So... How are you feeling about this? I don't want to hear 'we'll make it through' either. I want to know how you feel about... Well... Them. Being a stepfather. I think that term is... Accurate." She's
"It's not easy to wrap my head around, but you're still my wife and they're still your pups. Whether I raise them, or father takes the 'old' comment to heart and offers to raise them himself and I assume a role as their older brother, I'll love them all the same."

She pauses at that last bit and blinks. "... Would he?" She wonders. Tenebris and Asgore had wanted children, she knew. Children so Thumper could grow up with little siblings, and their little hodgepodge family would be bigger. She shook her head briefly. An idea for another moment. "I'm glad. I... Don't like the strained distance that's been between us." She says gently. "I love you. I don't want you afraid to touch me anywhere."

"As long as you're comfortable with me touching you." He purred, a hand slowly making its way to rest on her stomach.

"I never minded. I just didn't want you to do something you were uncomfortable doing." The twins made space as their father's hand wandered to her belly, and Toki smiled slightly. Her middle was overly warm and very soft. It wouldn't be moving for a long time, as far as she knew, but they'd be enjoying her swell for a while.

"Mm~" He rested his head on her shoulder as he stroked her stomach gently. "I wonder sometimes... Father missed out on raising Caeruleus and me, but now that there's the option to raise pups of his same species... I feel like he won't hesitate to take the chance."

His hand was a lot larger than her own, and it felt nice. Her skin was stretching so far and so fast that it was itchy and achy almost, but the gentle rubbing touch felt very nice. "I can see that too. It... Well, honestly I don't think it would bother me if he wanted to take the litter." Her wings shift awkwardly. "They are my children, and they're innocent of any fault in this, and I'm going to love them regardless, but they're going to be reminders for me of the time I was taken from you, and the time I was... Well, made to do things I thought were on my own." No one really understood just how much it fucked with her head for her to think she'd willingly betrayed Papyrus by mating and falling in love with Tenne, only to learn that oops, nope, the Void had been pulling her strings to make her do it all along. "It's... Going to be difficult to ignore that." She admits softly. "I know I can raise them. But I know Papa could too. He and Asgore wanted more children, did you know...? But Papa can't carry, and neither can Asgore, and they don't have a third in their relationship who can."

And she couldn't see them getting one any time soon, honestly. All of the older monsters were taken.

"I didn't want to suggest it if you were wanting to keep them regardless of their conception, but you telling me this is very reassuring. The children will be in very good hands if my father were to take them for his own." Papyrus spoke every word with caution, not wanting to say something wrong and give her the wrong idea.

"Boss Monsters age when they have children." Aliquam told her. "If the prince had not died, his majesty would be a bit more aged by now. This would give him a second chance of being a father as well. And even then, I don't think they'd be their parents alone." He chuckled. "This entire community would be their family, they would grow up knowing our love regardless."

One of her brows twitched slightly as she considered his words, and she gave a soft hum in response. "I both do and don't." She didn't want to say fully, because the kids were there, still sharing in the experience with their dad in giving attention to her belly. She didn't want to ruin it for them. "But... You're right. They'd still grow up with our love, and everyone's love. Maybe... We can talk to Papa about it. See if he and Asgore are up to the task." Her fingers rubbed the side of her belly, and she sighed through her nasal ridge. Her middle ached- there was so much growth going on inside of her, that her skin ached.

He nodded, before leaning his head up to kiss her gently. "I love you." He purred.

She kissed him gently and gave a soft buzz to him. "I love you too, Pap." She smiled at him. She sighs, and pokes his middle gently. "So… what do you want for dinner tonight?"

"I'm looking forward to whatever father brings. He sounded like he was sure what the trick would be for your stomach to settle down."

She makes a face and sighs. "I'm not sure about that." She says. "And I didn’t think he was bringing dinner. I was thinking it was probably something like a tea or something. But… if it's a dinner, then that's fine. If I don't have to cook, I'm not going to complain." She gives him an awkward smile. "Cooking is nearly as hard as eating is some nights, I will admit."

"Then this will be a night for you to take it easy, my dear." He chuckled.

She rolls her eye lights fondly. "And what about tomorrow night?" She questions him lightly as she nudges him gently in the ribs. She did most of the cooking recently because he had missed her cooking- and because she didn’t want him over-stressing his leg. "And the night after that?"

"Leftovers, and I’ll cook when we run out." He purred. "Don’t worry… I’m not gonna leave you to do all the work." He chuckled, "Just a little bit of it once you stop feeling so sick~" He teased.

She laughed gently and nuzzled him. “I can cook. I just don’t feel good while I cook.” Toki slumped into him with a soft sound, and shifted one of her wings up to stretch the join where it had gotten cramped. “I don’t want you to over work yourself, Pap.” She rubs his knee with one hand. His leg was still fairly new- and she’d been told some mornings were worse than others. She hadn’t seen the bad days yet, but she knew they would come eventually.

"I cooked and cleaned for six months, Toki... I’ll have my rough days but I’m still able." He chuckled.

“’m not saying you’re not.” Her horn nudged his shoulder. “But, just like you worry about me, I worry about you. It’s not a light switch I can turn off, love. It’s really not.” She smooched his cheek next, and then flapped a hand at her kids as Honey blew a raspberry on her belly. Her queasiness did not like that at all. “Alright, kids, off for now. Go play- you can cuddle my belly later. Momma might take a nap, so that means…”

“We stay inside, and tell you if we want to go outside.” Skylar nods and slips from her lap, pulling a pouting Honey with him. He eyes her, and then tickles her, before racing off, knowing she’d give chase.

Predictably, she did.

"We have such smart children. I can't believe it sometimes." He chuckled. "They're gonna be the ones to graduate high school when they're 15, I’ll tell you that."

“It wouldn’t surprise me.” She hummed. “They’re growing faster than the average human. They’re not even two, and speak full sentences and are mentally at a level that is several years older. That’s the effect of the beast blood though. They grow faster than the average monster does.” She glances to him.

"Makes me wonder if we have to worry about boyfriends and girlfriends sooner than humans would..."
That made her snort. “Alright, come on mister overprotective dad. You can worry at me about your babies first dates upstairs. I was serious about that nap. I’m still all sorts of nauseated, and a couch isn’t going to fit us comfortably like it used to.” Her wings twitch for emphasis.

"All right, a nap it is~" He chuckled, pushing himself up before offering her a hand.
Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Alright. So, this chapter is a direct continuation of the last- and damn, does it cover a lot of stuff. Depending on what you think of it, it might be something you like, or don’t like. All the same… it’s definitely something that makes us happy, and makes two of our characters very, very happy. Also yeah, there was no good splitting point for this chapter that left both chapters at a decent amount of words, so I had to make due with an awkward one right here. I’m very sorry. Hopefully the content makes up for the awkward chapter break?

Also, Merry Christmas to all- and I hope this counts as an early Christmas present from us. XD the timing was just right.

She took his hand, but mostly hauled her own weight up off the couch. She held his hand as she guided him towards the stairs, bypassing the closet where his armor had been stored. She’d found it when she’d been looking to see if they had any of her shoes left over. Toki didn’t ask why he had it stored away. Toki rubbed his knuckles and hummed. “I’m going to get back in to writing my novels when I can get into my laptop.” She tells her husband conversationally as they go up. “I need to refresh myself on my plotlines though. My editor is happy to have me back… I guess movies are in production still, as far as she’s told me.”

"It will be exciting to see your work blossom into something that everyone will be able to see."

“Yeah.” She fiddles with some of her fingers, and then slips into their bedroom. Toki shifts onto all fours as she gets onto the bed, her secondary arms curling at her chest. Her wings arch up, stretching as she gives them a flap, and she looks over at Papyrus. Her beastly habits lingered, even in her semi-skeleton form. She stretches, like a cat, and then hums at him with her rump in the air. “I might start working on a new book series once I round off this one.” She shrugs lightly, and stretches one of her legs. She was still getting used to having human shaped legs again, and her toes were instinctively splaying like she had paws. She had claws still- longer than before- so she short of did.

He chuckled quietly and sat on the bedside, "You're so cute~ Like a cat now~" He purred sweetly, laying on his back and inviting her to lay at his side.

Toki couldn't resist giving him a playful little "Nya~" as she slunk across the bed towards him. She couldn't lay on her belly with the swell, but her side worked just fine. "I'm not a cat though." She chuckles. "I'm a bee. Some sort of bee skeleton thing. Kinda a mix."

"I am, however, a cat magnet." Toki grins.

The cats knew you were gone too, though... they were wailing when you didn't come to bed. Gale would scream at the bathroom door when it was closed for nearly a month, like it would make you appear.” Aliquam sighed before he chuckled and reached up, running his fingers through her fluffy mane.

Toki sighed and kissed the demanding cat. Once she’d given Gale his required space, he demanded her face be in his so he could love on it. With his tongue. Cat tongue on bone never got any less strange feeling. Nor did the drool from Gracie staining her shirt. "I missed them too. There were days when I just wanted to curl up and hold something soft and cuddly and all I had to hold was Sugar or Clover. Sugar is too active, and Clover is a grump.” Her body began to relax as his fingers carded through her mane, coming through tangles that had gotten into it from it fluffing and smoothing out over the course of the day. It ruffled under his hand, seeming to lean into his touch.

"They need some nice male hornets to calm them down, hm?” He teased.

Toki snorted on a soft laugh. "I think Sugar is like a youngling. She's probably not old enough for that. Clover... Yeah. Clover needs to get laid. She's so tightly wound." Toki can't stop her soft snorts into his chest. The idea of her hornets getting laid is amusing. Though on a more morbid note, Sugar probably never would find a mate since she had no wings. Toki's wings twitched and lifted up, flexing and making their gossamer surfaces gleam for her husband.

"So pretty~" He cooed happily, looking up at her wings. "I have such a pretty wife~"

She flexed them and flared them, letting their colors dazzle him as it soothed something inside of her. She let out a pleased rumble, and her eye lights went slitted as she melted against him, boneless and content. Her fingers splayed on his ribs, and she felt the thrum of his magic and soul beating under her digits. "I'm glad you like them. It would be hard to fix it you didn't. The extra arms pop on and off, but the wings don't do the same."

"Oh god, do they really?"

"Uhuh." She'd learned that in the shower a little while ago when her joints had gotten too soapy and she’d gotten too vigorous in her scrubbing. "I could take them off and look semi normal, but I've still got these little joints here that make weird bulges under my clothes. All the same, I'd rather keep my arms here." All four of them snake around him tightly. "Means I can hold you better, even if the second pair are really fragile."

"Mmh~" He chuckled happily. "I wouldn't have it any other way~" He cooed.

She smiled and nodded, settling against him with a soft sigh. “… Pap?” She questions softly. “I need to ask you something. Something serious. Do we… Do we want to ask your dad and Asgore if they want to take the babies?” Her fingers fiddle with his shirt anxiously.

“Do you?” He questions gently.

“No.” She murmurs softly. “But also… Yes. They’re my children, Papyrus, I love them even if they’re not yours. But… I want them somewhere that they’re not ever going to feel unloved, or unwanted, or like they’re… a burden, or causing problems.” She says quietly. “I’m not… Entirely certain that we can give them that, Pap. As much as you don’t want to admit it, it bothers you, and I know it. It’s going to eat at you and eat at you, and eventually it will cause problems between us- and they’re going to think they caused those problems, and that’s not fair to them.” Because Toki would have caused all of those problems.

“Toki, you know I will do my best~"

Think about how you would feel, knowing that your children have the chance of ever, ever, feeling like they don’t belong there, like they’re not wanted by their stepfather and that they’re causing problems. It’s…”

“Shhh….” He soothes gently. Papyrus closes his eyes for a moment, and sucks in a soft breath. Exhaling softly, his fingers continue to stroke through her mane. “I understand. If I were in your shoes, I’d be torn too. I don’t think it’s a choice I’d find easy to make. They’d be my children, born of my magic and my soul- but to know they’d have a chance of feeling… something like that…”

He tilted his head down to kiss the scar on her skull. “No. No it’s not something any child should feel.” He said softly. “How about we ask? If they want to take the pups after they’re born, then they can. If not… Then I will get over it, and I will be the best damn father I can be, and if… if there comes a time where things do become problematic, we’ll handle them together.”

“Okay…” She nods slowly. Toki sighs, and presses her face against his chest. “Do you think… they’ll hate us for this?”

“Not them.” She says softly. “The pups, if Papa and Asgore take them. When they get older, they’re bound to ask, bound to inquire about things… You know they will- you see how Honey and Skylar are, and they came out of me. These will be part of me too- they’re going to ask questions.”

“They may.” He sighs. “But I don’t think they will. If Father and Asgore take them, they’re going to grow up with love surrounding them. If they start to ask questions, we will be as honest as we can be.”

“I’d… I’d rather tell them that I agreed to surrogate for Tenebris and Asgore if they ever ask.” Toki murmurs softly. “The truth… Papy, you and I both know the truth can hurt. A white lie… A white lie can save so much pain and hurt so few people if everyone agrees to keep it up.”

“We’ll cross that bridge when we come to it.” He nuzzled her. “I don’t like to lie, but perhaps… you might be right.”

Her eyes drifted closed as she listened to the children playing downstairs, and she quietly summoned a couple of her smaller summons just outside the door to keep an eye on them just in case. Toki gave a small, sleepy sound against his chest, appearing to settle down to nap some with him by her side.

"Rest... And I’ll be here with you until you wake~" He purred, not telling her the part about how he’ll get up if something goes crash downstairs.

The croon that left her is sweet, sleepy, and appreciative. She settles to sleep with no issue, drifting off to his scent, and finds herself peaceful rest as she relaxes.

She wakes some hours later with their bed filled fuller and her empty stomach something between nauseated and hungry. She had sleeping toddlers in a pile across her legs, and somehow the bees she’d summoned had joined them too with the cats, making for an incredibly full bed.

Her sockets didn’t open, nor did her eye lights blink on. Instead she quietly groaned, and nuzzled her face into her cuddling pillow, and sought out more of the feeling of whatever was toying with her "You awake now? Right when I’m about to finish." Aliquam's gentle chuckle resonated near her ear.

"Mhm." She makes a small confirmation noise and nuzzles his chest. It turns out, upon peeking open one eye, her pillow was actually his chest. Toki's chest stuttered up into a rumbling purr. "Whatever you're doin' feels really nice..."

"Well, why don’t you reach up and feel for yourself what I’ve been up to while you slept?" He teased.

Toki snorts, and reaches a hand up to feel what he was doing. Her fingers touched her mane- which wasn’t in the loose tangles that it always fell in. It was in straight braids, thin and orderly, and there were a lot of them. She hummed softly. “You braided my mane,” She blinks, and sounds happily pleased. “…you haven’t gotten to braid anything for me since I was human.”

"So you could imagine how excited I was that you fell asleep with your mane exposed to my wandering hands." He hummed, his fingers continuing their gentle pace down her mane.

She chuckles. "I suppose so. You know, you don't need me to be asleep to put in braids. I loved when you would play with my hair and braid it for me." It seemed that a love of hair was something universal to all Papyrus types. Or at least all ones similar to hers. "It's very relaxing and soothing. My mane gets so tangled, and I can't do much with it on my own. Does it look okay with braids in it?"

"It looks amazing~" He replied happily, kissing her gently as he hummed happily.

Toki gave a soft, pleased buzz, and gently rubbed her nasal ridge against his chest. “Good. Maybe I’ll have you braid it more often.” She gives another pleased noise, and peeks up at him. “Mm… what time is it?” Tenebris would probably be over soon with whatever he’d got at town, depending on if he had to go to the big city or not.

"Seven in the evening." Toki stirs and grunts as her stomach complains. “Ah. It’s time to feed you and the kids, if Papa hasn’t procured dinner yet.” She yawns and rubs her eyes. "And some water and honey for me, or I’m gonna feel horrible here soon.” Pregnancy was a delicate balance at the start. Too hungry and you were sick, too full and you were sick- sometimes you were just sick because your body said ‘no’. “Wonder if Asgore will be joining us for dinner.”

"I don’t know." He shrugged, before there was a knock on the door downstairs. "Well. Speak of the devil.

“Speak of the devil, and he shall arrive bearing goodies.” Toki murmurs idly into his chest. She looks down at her legs, intent on waking her kids, but it seemed between the knock and the word ‘goodies’, the twins had practically startled awake, and were scrambling off her legs in a discombobulated jumble, and were making their way down the stairs.

She watched them run off to greet their grandfather and shook her head with a sigh. Gracie, sensing she was getting up, spring boarded off of her abdomen and waddled off to flop across her house slippers, giving a content sigh so she could sleep some more. All that did was jar Toki, and she groaned into her husband's chest as it made her nausea worse. “Damn it cat… Why do cats feel the need to jump for everything?” She asked as she eased herself up into a sitting position. She felt a little green, though there wasn’t anything in her middle for her to be really feeling sick on. She got up from the bed, and made her way around to fetch his cane for him and help him up in case she’d made him stiff from laying against him for so long.

"Thank you." He purred to her as he took his cane and got up off the bed. He stretched a little before he sighed and hummed, walking to the staircase. "Father, that's you, yes?"

"No, I'm the Krampus here to steal your children and your cookies!" Tenebris called from downstairs.

Toki snorts, and follows Papyrus down. “Please take all the cookies,” and her plea is partially serious, “Before Honey makes me eat more of them.”

“Cookies are good for you and little ones, Momma!” Honey calls indignantly.

“Not when they make Momma sick,” Toki mutters to herself, but figures Papyrus, and maybe Tenebris, might hear her. “Are you here alone?”

“No,” Asgore chortles, “I thought I might join you all tonight, since Thumper has been invited to spend the night at Twitch’s house. Something about a school project.” He waves a hand lightly, swinging the little skeleton monster that had latched onto him so giddily. The king was a giant jungle gym, truly.

Tenebris laughed gently and came closer to Toki, giving a greeting smile. "Hello, dear. I brought something that will help you feel better.” He hummed happily.

Toki paused as her mouth opened, and she scented him. He smelled of mint, and unlike before, mint was not helpful. "Ah... I sure hope so.” She managed an awkward smile as she reached the bottom of the steps, eye lights flicking to Asgore. "Does he...?” Had Tenebris told Asgore that Toki was pregnant? She was keeping it on the low for now. She'd understand him telling his lover- the King- but she didn't want to blurt something if he didn't know.

"Know? Yes. Just not the circumstances entirely." He answered quietly.

She nods slowly. “Alright. That’s fine. I’d rather... not tell him everything, honestly. Not beyond what he needs to know.” Her hand drifts to her belly, and she soothes it as it gives a warning squeeze. “Alright- I need to go get some water, or I’m going to be back in the bathroom again.” She wiggles her fingers at her family, and makes her way to the kitchen to make herself a glass of the only drink her body will let her ingest.

Asgore watches her go, and glances to Tenebris and his son. “My love,” The King murmurs softly as he swings the laughing children- who were basically his grand children- gently on his arms, “Are you sure this... remedy of yours will work for Toki? She seems quite sensitive to everything, frankly.”

"Indeed so.” he rumbled as he gave his mate a reassuring nuzzle. "I have complete faith that despite all, this will work. It's the only thing left to try, I bet.” He laughed next.

“Didn't mint help her last time?” Asgore hummed softly.

“I can hear you, you know.” Toki called from the kitchen. “And it’s not helping this time. Sorry to say, Papa, but you stink.”

Asgore snorted, and hid an amused smile.

"How dare.” Tenebris snorted, before he chuckled lightheartedly. "I don’t smell nearly as bad as some things." He came into the kitchen and set down what he had packed for dinner.
Toki eyed the non-clear Tupperware boxes on the counter tops, and sipped her glass of water as she regarded him and his display of… Tenny-surprise. “No, but you’re no spring flower today either. Though… Those make me gag too, so there’s no winning there either.” Toki gives a shrug of one of her wings and shoulders, and buzzes as she nurses her drink slowly. It doesn’t really settle her stomach with all the smells assaulting her, but it soothes it a little bit. “It’s the mint.” She confesses. “It smells really bad. The smell of you isn’t bad, but the mint itself is bothering me. Most food related things, or strong smelling things, are making me nauseated.”

"I’ll step out if I want to have a pipe then." He chuckled gently. "I hope you like Manicotti, kids." He purred, pulling the lid off one of the Tupperware containers to reveal hot pasta in a deep red tomato sauce. He carefully put it on the table. "Aliquam, will you please serve up the pups and yourself? I’m going to step out for a moment with Toki." He rumbled, before he set a hand on her shoulder. "You're looking a little greener." He chuckled.

“And not the good kind of green.” She manages a weak joke. The Manicotti looked delicious, and from afar, it made her want to make a plate for herself and eat it too. However, smelling it? Far from it. The water she’d been drinking was souring in her stomach, and she set her glass down on the counter before stepping towards the back door.

Asgore nodded to them both, and swung both kids into their chairs with a soft laugh. He got them seated, and went to help who he hoped would eventually be his stepson get plates down and get them filled for the eager children wiggling and making grabby hands for the hot, stuffed pasta noodles. “Take your time.”

Tenebris led Toki outside and reached into his coat. "As soon as I heard you weren't able to keep anything down, I realized just what the problem was." He started to explain.

She tilted her head at him, and leaned against the porch railing. It was a newer installation, she’d noticed, but it made their back patio into something they could use even when it was pouring buckets, since it was now covered. “Oh?” She prompts, and sucks in a breath of soothing outside air.

He nodded and pulled out a large item wrapped in paper. He unwrapped it to reveal a large rabbit, freshly killed. "Ta-da~"

Toki stared at it and blinked slowly. “Uh… That’s… That’s a dead rabbit.” She waited for her stomach to twist, but it didn’t. Her beast purred inside, pleased at the sight of a fresh kill. “That’s… supposed to cure my morning sickness?” Toki sounds a little incredulous, but it’s not hard to understand why.

"And your inability to keep anything down." He answered, almost glowing with pride for offering the rabbit to her in her time of need.

“Well, you’re not wrong there. I miss being able to eat food…” She pauses. “You, uh… realize I have no idea how to deal with a dead rabbit, right?” Tenne had handled all the skinning after she’d confessed to being human, and she’d never had to really touch anything dead after that. Well- he brought her gifts, and she accepted them, but he did all the skinning and the handling, until it was just meat for her to prepare for them. “But… If you think it’ll work…” She rubs her arms lightly. Toki couldn’t hurt his feelings with how proud he looked to have come up with a solution. “It’s worth trying at least.”

"Well..." He looked at the rabbit. "I thought back to what I remember you sharing, and you mentioned that you had a beast within. I thought perhaps if you were to consume prey like beasts had, that it would soothe your body enough to accommodate for the more human-oriented meals... I could skin it if you'd rather eat it bare."
She peered at the rabbit again and swallowed. “… Yeah, I’m not eating fur. I did that with a mouse once so I didn’t hurt a pup’s feelings, and that’s…” She shivered. “Fur is not for me. I think I can handle skinned,” She’d long since gotten over the whole eating stuff mostly raw or even completely raw, having spent years with Tennen and his boys and their eating habits, “but fur is definitely a no.”

"Alright.” It only took a few moments, but with skill that had taken years and years of practice to refine, Tenebris was able to practically pull the rabbit to be inside out from its skin after a few easy snips from his claws in a few precise locations. He pulled the hide free and smiled. "Ta-da~”

Toki was utterly revolted by the process of skinning it, but she dealt with it by glancing away. Once he was done, she glanced back over and nodded. “Thank you. Uh… Papyrus and I wanted to talk to you about something later. Um… I can hold the rabbit if you’ll get me a plate. I think I’ll eat out here. I’m very sure I’ll revolt everyone inside if I try to eat inside. And, uh…” She flushed and glanced away. It was different eating around another beast-based monster. Non-beast based monsters didn’t operate the same.

They didn’t judge, but… They got easily grossed out, which lead to some judgmental looks.

"I suppose it would require a few bites since I don’t know if you can unhinge your jaw... I’m sorry, dear…” He murmured.

“I could before.” She blinked at him. “It could sort of… split down the center if I wanted it to. But I never used it like that.” Toki gently took the warm rabbit from him, holding it awkwardly. She wasn’t revolted by it though, so that was a bonus. “I’m also a lot smaller than I was, Papa. I was a foot and some odd inches taller as a beast- I retained the features, but I shrank.” She blinks at him. “So... plate please. You can enjoy your manicotti, unless you want to share this with me?” She’s pretty certain she can’t eat all of it, but she’d try.

"I’ll eat whatever you don’t I suppose. I do have a good knife on hand, after all." He chuckled, stepping in to get that plate that she asked for.

Toki stepped out of the light of the doorway so no one could see her, and went to sit down at the table that had been put on the patio. She rumbled, eying the rabbit hungrily, and hummed softly. “I suppose you do. I don’t, but I don’t really need one.”

He came back and put the plate on the table. "Here you are, my dear.” He purred quietly.

Toki gave him a smile, and carefully got the rabbit settled on the plate. No point in staining the table after all. “Thanks, Papa.” She gave him a pleased buzz. Her braided mane ruffled as she eyed the rabbit, and her eye lights narrowed to slits as she huffed in a soft breath. Toki gave a tiny rumble, and it might not have just been Toki who set in to the rabbit once the older male took a seat across from them. Her crocodile like teeth made short work of the meat on the legs, and she stripped it bare quickly.

Toki had long since equated raw meat- some raw meat, mind you, she wouldn’t be caught dead eating pork or chicken raw- as the beastly version of sushi. After all, humans ate raw fish and often times didn’t get sick. She didn’t have a problem setting into the rabbit at a pace that would have horrified Papyrus or anyone really, to see her eating a raw critter.

It soothed something inside of her though, and bite by bite, her stomach settled, and her body was at peace.

Tenebris watched her. Rather than growing shocked or horrified by how she was consuming the rabbit he’d procured, he simply smiled. "You know, this is the first time I’ve seen you eat with actual use of your teeth." He chuckled. Once she came to finish the rabbit, he tilted his head. "Did you enjoy that?" He asked.

Once she was finished- and she’d stripped it completely bare, down to most of the organs, which she had no intentions of eating- Toki leaned back and thrummed a low content noise. Her face was a bit of a mess. Her teeth were not conductive to a clean eating experience, and there were little strings of flesh stuck between them. She parted her jaws, and her teeth splayed, also giving him a first look at just how she cleaned them, and she summoned her tongue to do what she’d been doing for the past two years of her life.

“Yes.” Toki answered while she cleaned her teeth. Her hands were a mess, as was her face, and there was no way she could go inside looking like she’d killed something, but her belly was fuller than it had been in days, and she was content. “For the most part, I don’t use my teeth because it’s a messy affair. Forks are much less messy. More civilized. More Human.” But it wasn’t skeleton shaped eye lights that peered up at him out of her sockets. No, no, they were slit and narrow, and very beastly. “We’ll have to wait an hour and see, but I think that’s exactly what I needed.”

Her beast was agreeing and supplying her with some instinctual information. Fresh, raw meat was what the pups in her belly needed. Cooked meats and those pastas and sauces and other things the beast considered tasty were essentially non-nutritional when it came to growing pups properly.

He chuckled. "There a chance you will want another? I caught two."

The look she gave him was seriously contemplative. Rabbits didn’t have a lot of meat on them, nor were they very large creatures, and she was hungry and feeding not only her magic, but also four- or more- growing beings inside of her belly. But gorging herself was probably not a good idea. She hesitated, and tapped her fingers on the table, before slowly nodding. “A little bit of a second.” She says. Pregnancy was about balance. She’d rather eat what she could than go eat pasta and have that make her sick.

"I'll cut it for you so you can eat the limbs and head now and the body later." He rumbled, pulling another wrapped rabbit from his coat.

“Alright.” Her wings give a lazy twitch, not unlike his tail often did, and the pregnant skeleton dropped her clean hands to her belly. She caressed it quietly, and hummed softly. She could probably ask him now while it was just them, but that was a conversation to be had with her husband here too. Probably Asgore too, now that she thought on it.

He skinned the bunny with an effortless pull as he had the first, and with a great accuracy cut the legs, forelegs, and head from the rabbit, keeping the internals all safely contained within the body as he placed the rest on the plate. He used the skin of the rabbit to wrap the body.

Toki gave him a thankful hum, and carefully set in again, cleaning the bones of meat just as effortlessly as she had the last time. The extra helped top her off, and she felt better for it. “Ah… much better. Did you want to keep the bones? Or should we just toss them in the garbage can outside before we go in?” She inquired lightly once she finished rapidly stripping the bones of meat. She cleaned her teeth and her fingers with her tongue, the motion idle because she didn’t have a wet cloth out here with her to help clean up the mess. “Also, Papa… I need to talk with you and Asgore soon.”

"I'll keep them, no problem." He chuckled gently, wrapping the bones up in the skins. "I'll snack on the marrow later." He then looked up at her quietly. "What's going on? Are you alright?"

“Not fond of marrow.” She admits. “Meat is better. Anyway, I’m okay, I promise.” She pats a hand on her belly for emphasis, and gives him a thumbs up. She hasn’t felt this great in days. She could run a marathon, or fly to the highest heights. All she wants to do is sleep though. A full belly and no nausea is a dream come true. "I just… wanted to go over something Papyrus and I discussed before we napped, if that's okay with you."

"Why don't you run it by me now and we'll see how it goes?" The pale beast murmured softly.

Toki hesitated. "This sort of thing is really something that's run by a couple, not just... One person in a relationship." She hedged, knowing it sounded all kinds of shady how she phrased it.

He raised a brow at that, before he nodded slowly that he understood as much as he could. "I see... Alright..."

"Yeah..." She nodded slowly. "Anyway. Why don't you go in and enjoy dinner with Pap and the kids. I'm going to relax out here a little bit. When you and Asgore are done, you can join me...?"

"Of course." He gave her a gentle kiss on the head, then started for inside.

Toki watched him go, taking with him the mess from before, and then got up from her chair. She made her way down and out to the now functioning garden hose, and set to cleaning up the evidence as best she could.

Asgore looked up once Tenebris came back inside. "You were gone for a while. Is she alright?"

"Oh yes, she's peachy." Tenebris purred in reply as he walked around the table, nuzzling his mate. "The rabbits worked like a charm. I knew first-thing that the poor dear was suffering from a case of domesticity." He chuckled, "How are they enjoying the Manicotti?" He asked as he looked at the children and his son. Tenebris blinked. Almost all of the Manicotti was gone. "Well... I told you that's a great recipe." His amused snort slid forth without his permission.

Asgore laughed. "I doubt morning sickness equates to being too domestic, my love. But, the rabbits were probably what her body needed." He nodded. He glanced at his own plate, half eaten, and nudged it towards Tenebris. "It is a very good recipe. Good thing we still have some at home, no? Here, dear. Eat, or you'll get grumpy."

The King then glanced to Aliquam. "So, it appears your wife might need a more raw diet for a while."

While Tenebris ate what was left on the king's plate, Aliquam looked up at him, a look of realization hitting him. "Of all the things, I never considered raw meat would do the trick..." He exclaimed, before he slumped and laughed at the thought for a moment. "Of course... Thank you, Father. You're a miracle worker." He beamed up at Tenebris.

The older male gave a garbled purr as he inhaled the still warm noodles. He was too busy eating to reply with words, but that was fine- he had to make use of the lingering taste of Asgore's magic, which had kept the plate tasting hot and fresh.

"The Toki that I remember may be a little bit sensitive to the idea of eating raw meats at dinner with you and your young," Asgore continued, patting Honey's head as she snarfed down another stuffed noodle, "but talk with her and see if perhaps you can take your dinners later in the evening if you don't mind eating after your children sleep. I'm sure she would like to not be isolated during meals. Perhaps even have proper utensils." He rolled his eyes at Tenebris. "More than a plate at any rate."

That got a stink eye right back from Tenebris, before he swallowed and ran his tongue over his teeth to clean them. "Trust me, she didn't need them." He chuffed. "Though when she feels better she may want them."
"Well, we'll wait and see." Asgore laughs lightly. "Will she be joining us soon?"

"Actually... She had something she wanted to discuss with us. Will you step out with me for a moment?" He asked.

Aliquam realized what that meant and he hummed quietly.

"Oh?" He blinked. "Of course, yes." One of his long ears twitched as he picked up the low humming, and he quirked it at Aliquam, before standing quietly. "Excuse me a moment." He smiled at the kids, and makes his way towards the back door.

Tenebris followed him out, before Aliquam sighed and got up. "Kids, stay here, finish your dinners and then go get ready for bed, okay?" He murmured, kissing Honey's head and giving Sky a ruffle before he walked behind the older males.

"Toki." Tenebris spoke as he stepped out.

Toki had returned to the deck, but her bones were damp and part of her shirt had been dampened by accident. All the same, she was there, and she looked up as all three men came out the door. "Oh. Well, hello there." She offers them a smile, and motions for them to join her as she quietly relaxed. Instead of taking a narrow chair, she'd stretched out on one of the padded benches, and was quietly rubbing her belly. "Come, sit. There are things we need to talk about."

"Things?" Asgore asks. He grabs one of the chairs for himself and another for Tenebris, and goes to plop them in front of the bench, leaving Papyrus to join his wife on her seat.

"Mhm. Important things."

Tenebris sat down and looked at Toki inquisitively, while Aliquam sat down beside Toki, wrapping his arm around her.

Toki gave him a nuzzle, and leaned into her husband as she hummed. "I'm going to just jump right into this because I don't really know how else to broach this subject." She says lightly. "I know you two want more children. You love Thumper, but you wish you could have more."

"We do." Asgore nods. "Neither of us can carry however, or I'm quite sure we'd have a brood despite our age."

"I'm aware that it's kept you from having more. I'm saying that... Well... Papyrus and I have been talking, and... You can." She brushed a hand to her belly, hoping they'd get the picture. Toki, despite having a beast, wasn't a born beast. She wasn't really fit to be raising true born pure blooded beasts like Tenebris was.

Tenebris grew a shocked expression at her proposal and looked to Asgore for his reaction.

Asgore looked equally shocked. He also looked contemplative though. "Are... You sure? That's a big thing, Toki, giving your children to someone else to raise."

"Yeah, I know." She looks away and swallows. "But I wouldn't be able to look at them and raise them without remembering everything, the good and the bad, and... It wouldn't be right to them. But, I could love them as family." She runs her fingers over her belly lightly. "I do love them, don't get me wrong. That's why I want the best for them. I want them with someone who can give them the sort of upbringing that a pure blood beast need, and the unconditional love that I know you two can provide- the love that they deserve. I would effectively be their blood mother- I'd be a surrogate for you in essence- but I'd take on the role of sister in law for all intents and purposes once nursing was done, if that's what you'd prefer. For Papyrus and I... Let's face the truth here. They would put strain on our marriage, no matter how we say we could make it work. There would be times when they would feel like the problems were their fault, no matter what we did, and that's not acceptable for any child. No child should ever feel like the problems are their fault." Toki exhaled gently. "That said, if neither of you is up to the task, then I'll raise them regardless. They'll have as much love as I can give, and as good of a home as I can provide. I will do my darndest to make sure they grow up as they should."

Asgore nods, and looks to Tenebris to see what he thought. There was hope in the kings eyes, and willingness to take on this task. He wanted children- and if Toki wanted to effectively be a surrogate for them... Well, he wasn't going to look a gift horse in the mouth, as the saying went.

Tenebris' hands were folded in front of his mouth, his jaw tight and his eyes closed tightly as his eyebrows pressed against his knuckles "I... I'm not sure what to say, Toki... This is... This is big... It's... Oh good lord..." he lowered his head a little, hands parting to cradle it between them. "J-Just give me a second..."

"Take your time, Papa." She soothed gently. "It's big news I just gave you. Very big. But... I know you are older. If you're not up to raising pups... Don’t feel pressured, okay?" She peered at him gently, and snuggled into Papyrus.

Asgore set a hand on Tenebris' shoulder and rubbed it gently. "Easy, my love, easy... Take your time."

Tenebris' tail was swaying slowly behind him as he let it get through his mind that she just gave him the chance to have pups- true blaster beast pups. Have them, and love them, and raise them with his chosen mate... His hand went up to grip Asgore's, and he took a weak breath, before lifting his head to peer at her. "Toki... Of course I’ll take them." He told her, a look of sheer happiness on his face. "Nursing... yes. I want them to be nursed... Their mother's nurturing and love is very important, at least until they’re old enough to wean. And then you can love them as the greatest older sister-in-law they could ever have."

Toki smiled and shared a quick look with Papyrus. "That sounds good to me. And since we've got the approval of the King for such matters to happen," she winked at Asgore, making the King let out a weak chuckle as he cuddled Tenebris close to his side and nuzzled his head, "I want to be the first to congratulate you. Tenebris, Asgore..." Toki patted her middle lightly, an offer for them to come close. "You're going to be parents. Come, meet your babies. All... Four? Are we still at four? Between four and six of them according to the last time I was examined."

Asgore hesitated, and then motioned Tenebris forward first. They were the first of his kind to be born- pure blooded of his kind. And now they were his- theirs- to raise as their very own children. Asgore wanted him to have the first touch as parents before the King took a turn on the much smaller skeleton's middle. His eyes danced with happy tears all the same, and the rumble in his chest couldn't be anything but a purr. He was going to be a dad again. He would have Frisk, and Thumper, and now four to six more. This was the family that he and Toriel wanted but hadn't gotten to have because of what they were. Boss monsters didn’t often get big families.

Tenebris steadily got up, coming over to Toki as if he still couldn't believe it. He slowly knelt, and his large hands extended, resting on Toki's stomach. After a moment, he broke down, lowering his head and resting it on her stomach as he finally cracked under the pure emotion of this wonderful news, shoulders trembling as he began to sob, "Bless you, Tokiko... Bless your soul..." He whispered, "You're the most wonderful daughter a beast could have, bless you..."

This was the second time she had made him break down. The first had been after his return from his torture, and she had forgiven him for things that hadn't been his fault. This time... This time, it was because she had made him so happy he simply couldn't take it. And for a non-religious monster to start blessing her...

Toki settled one of her many hands on his head and rubbed as he sobbed against the warm swell of her belly. She hummed a soft sound for him, and found her soul finally at peace with the situation. There was someone who could find total joy in this— who saw no darkness in this gift of life, who had no bad memories associated with it... Only good. This is what she could only hope for. This is who could give the proper care to her pups in her belly— and she could love them from afar. "And you're the best father a daughter could ask for." She murmured gently to him, and then smiled over at Asgore. She motioned him to join too. Her lap was big enough for two. "And I know... You'll be an amazing father for them too."

The king made his way over, and settled in next to Tenebris. He didn’t push him over. More or less, he draped over him, and began to soothingly nuzzle his shoulders and the back of his neck to help ground him and steady him.

Toki smiled at the duo, and glanced up at Papyrus. Her eyes looked lighter, less burdened. She nuzzles his jaw gently.

Aliquam nuzzled her and gave her a gentle kiss, "I love you." He purred in reply, simply watching as his father savored his first time with his future children. His first time with Aliquam's future brothers and sisters...

Papyrus couldn't wait to meet them.
Chapter 118

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Well, this is a cuter one. Cuter ish. You get to see just how many Blaster Beasts are going to be brought back, so there’s that.

Silverwing Notes: So, i have some unfortunate news for you guys... but we wont be posting any more chapters for the rest of the year.

HA! Had you for a second didn't i! dont worry, we arent done YET.

Eating a diet of raw meat helped, as gross as it was. Even raw vegetables seemed to be okay enough, but almost anything cooked seemed to come right back up. Though, not all of the raw stayed down either. Some parts of the day, she could enjoy a rare mug of cocoa, but most of the time she couldn’t touch more than water. Some days were worse than others, and Toki suspected that it was just her body telling her that it needed specific nutrition, and that it didn’t approve of the number of things growing in her belly, nor how fast and how large they seemed to be growing so quickly.

Toki was already outgrowing her shirts, which hadn’t been made nearly loose enough to accommodate this sort of rapid growth. She needed to talk with Lana about expanding them.

The rapid growth was also hell on her magic stores. She could literally feel the litter draining at her magic as they grew and expanded her waistline, making her pants obsolete and her shirts a hassle to slide over her middle. Toki was napping more and more between increasingly frequent bouts of sickness as the days wore on. She was four weeks pregnant by her count now, and she shouldn’t have been this drained of magic.

Toki spent her days in perpetual exhaustion, dealing with family asking questions about her growing middle, and the general population starting to step up and take notice too. She couldn’t hide it for much longer.

But, she could hide herself. And she may have been hiding from the world a little bit- the world and her family. Her kids were exceptionally loud and rowdy today, running all over the house like someone had given them liquid caffeine, and Toki just didn’t have it in her to keep up.

She’d made a little hidey-hole in one of the closets for the spare bedrooms at the behest of her beast, who sometimes just needed a space Toki could step into to let her decompress. This world was different and scary for her inner beast, and the beast stressed a lot. They both needed a little space to call their own- and thus far, no one knew where Toki disappeared to for a couple hours when she’d nap frequently. Toki had taken a couple pillows that had been in storage, and lined the floor of the empty closet, before deeming that a decent enough little nest to stretch out on. The beds were more comfortable, granted, but they were too open, and if the kids saw her, they usually came to wake her up to play.

Normally she didn’t mind, but sometimes… Sometimes you just needed to sleep. She was getting what she called ‘growly’ with how tired and utterly terrible she felt, and after she’d wanted to growl
Toki stretched out in her little hidden closet nest, her wings making the faintest of noises, and tried to rest as best she could. Her clothes were uncomfortable, she was uncomfortable, and she was so tired that she just couldn’t settle to sleep immediately. Her belly was heavy, the skin was stretching and itching, and she couldn’t lay on her front or on her back comfortably...

All the same, it was better than trying to nap on the couch. Napping on the couch with kids was asking to wake up to getting her wings tugged on for attention, or her mane pulled on. She loved her children, but they were rough and tumble little hooligans. That, she knew, was the beast side of their lineage coming out.

She sighed and flexed her fingers over one of the pillows there, closing her eyes as she tiredly stretched and resettled, rubbing her fingers into the sore ectoplasmic muscles that were already knotting up.

Aliquam had come to understand she retreated for 'Toki time’, and while it was understandable she needed time for herself, he would still worry when she'd be gone for too long. He searched until he found where he could hear her humming, and he was at least assured enough in her location to leave her there. He let his father know and allowed him to be the one to bother her when the older man needed her.

It was one such moment. "Toki?" The beast rumbled gently on the other side of her door.

Toki exhaled slowly. Well, she knew she couldn’t keep her secret hidey-hole hidden forever. And there was no use in the whole ‘holding your breath and hoping the monster went away’ thing. He could scent her and feel her magic besides. Toki shifted up, pushing herself up slowly with her primary arms. The narrow small state of the closet made it so the doorknob was within reach of her grabbing when she sat upright. She opened it, and peered up at the big beast outside the closet door. “Mmm…?” She queried from within her dark haven, her darkened eye lights peering at him.

"Hey~" He smiled at her. "Aliquam mentioned you might want some beastly company to bother you rather than anything that might make your beast grow concerned." He rumbled.

"Mm…” She snuffled faintly, and then scooted over a bit in her little sparsely padded nest. “Sure.” She yawns, and settles down. There’s not a lot of space in the closet, but if he leaves the door open, he should fit just fine. “The kids are just kinda… loud. Everything has got my beast on edge today.” She says, voice a little slurred with exhaustion. “… Can you fit okay?” She’s suddenly not sure if he can fit- the closet is designed for humans, and her wings take up a lot of space. “’Spose we can move if we need to. Just want somewhere quiet and dark.”

"Oh I don’t need to." He chuckled as he then laid down just outside the closet, relaxing there. "I'll admit... I still tear up, I'm so excited..." Tenebris smiled. "I've been wanting to plume, but my mane is still too short and my quills would get bent wrong under my clothes." The doctor laughed.

"Imagine how uncomfortable that would be.”

She wiggles her wings at him. “I know how it is.” Pinched wings were a plague and she got them often. She yawns, and rolls half onto her side, before stretching her arms. Her shirt tugs up, showing dull, gravid flesh. She doesn’t bother to fix it as she shifts so she can see him better. She hums and peers at him. “Mmmn... You know, if you want to run around with your quills and armor plates out,” she yawns, “you can. I honestly don’t mind. Tenne used to have a shirt with all sorts of holes in it from his quills and stuff whenever he’d sprout them.” Her smaller hands curl up and idly groom through her mane. She didn’t have any braids in, so her mane is loose and everywhere. “I know you and Asgore are excited. I heard he’s already getting a nursery of sorts set up for when they’re weaned and you can take them home?"

"He had dragged me around all day looking at cribs." He laughed, though he had noticed the dull flesh and he gave a small frown. "Toki, are you in need of a magic donation?"

“That’s adorable.” She laughs gently. “At least his nesting urges kicked in faster than mine did, and he’s not trying to get a nursery in weeks- or perhaps days- before I pop.” Her hands go still and curl to her chest, and she yawns again. “Mmm... I think so. They’re sucking me dry faster than the twins. I’ve got double the magic, but there’s so many of them and they’re growing so fast... It’s upsetting my body more.” She rubs her belly and then nuzzles her face into her ‘nest’ with a sigh. “I’ll manage.”

He pulled himself a little closer and tutted. "Toki, you'll get Magi-drain..." He told her, "May I?" He asked as he then extended a hand.

“I know,” she groans softly. As he scoots closer, her eye lights slit again, and her bones rattle in a soft instinctual reaction. She hums softly, and then nods. “If you want.” Toki takes a moment to wriggle closer, turning her belly to give him better access. She knows what he’s going to do, and what her body needs.

He gave a soft croon, and he rested his head on her stomach beside his hand. A gentle rumble rose from him as he released his magic, letting the powerful concentrated magic seep from his claws into her body, deepening the hue of Toki’s stomach but making it more transparent in the same.

Her middle took in his magic, and it darkened to a darker green. She felt the drain ease off some, but it wasn’t nearly enough for what she needed. It was a start though. Her belly was warm under his head though, and soft with a slightly hard part in her belly. “Mm, gentle with your claws please. The skin is really tight. Feel like I’m an over ripe fruit going to pop once I get big enough. But... damn, that feels nice... Did I ever tell you that your magic feels cool? Kinda cool and deep, like an ocean?”

"Mmh... That’s the first time I’ve been told 'deep' is a good thing.” He winked at her with a shameless chuckle, though he curled his claws to knead with his knuckles instead. "Just tell me when." He thrummed, "I want to make sure they all get enough to last them a while so you can recharge.”

He got a soft laugh out of Toki, and she patted his face in fond amusement. “When the color looks better and brighter, you’ll know when it’s good. Just don’t worry about going too far, okay?” She wiggled a little bit, and risked turning onto her back so that he had a pillow made out of her belly. “I don’t think you’re going to be enough honestly. I’m very... drained.” She says gently. Her color was improving, but not at the rate it had with the twins. He had put what felt like drops in with the twins, and this was what amounted to gallons. That should say something about what this litter was demanding of her. “Speaking of ‘all’... are we still at four?"

"That’s a good idea... giving a magic donation is like pouring dye into water, I can see it a lot better." He purred as he took a moment to focus, his magic momentarily shifting to utilize what had been given to examine everything that the magical essence wrapped around. "There they are, my beautiful pups-to-be... Mmh... Oh goodness~" He chuckled quietly. "Well would you look at that... It certainly explains the high magic demand."

“… Lemme guess. Five?” Toki sighed and chuckled in soft amusement. “Dye to water is one way to put it. It feels more like to me you’re trying to fill a pool with a gallon of water at a time. By hand.” Toki watches him slowly, and exhales gently, making her belly move.
"At least I’ve spent long enough building up my magic... it feels good to be able to let it out." He purred, before he lifted his head, smiling at her. "Six." He beamed.

Toki let her skull thump onto the pillows with a soft groan. "Six. I am going to be huge. That explains the drain though. I was so tired with two, and four would have made me super tired with what I have now... Six is triple the twins. Even if they end up smaller- and I’m hoping so, if only to save my poor pelvis- then that’s still a lot of magic to expend. Of which... If you’re getting close to low, you should probably stop. I don’t want you too tired- you need to be able to function, Papa.” Toki exhaled gently, and peered at him. “So. Now you know. You’re going to have six pups. Think you’re up to it, old man?”

"I won’t get low for a while. Besides, I’m an old man, all I do is sleep all day." He chuckled. "And yes, I am very sure I’m ready for pups. I went my whole life wishing to have my very own pups... My sons were a blessing, but I missed out on so much... I wanted a second chance to be a father, and lo and behold..."

Toki gives him a tired smile. “You do more than sleep all day and you know it.” She says lightly. “Much more active now that you’re going to be a new daddy again.” She stretches her legs a bit, her toes splaying, and the skeleton gives a soft sigh. “You’ve got a second chance, Papa. You’ll get to see it all, the good and the bad. That includes the good and the bad of the pre-pup stages.” She exhales slightly and gives him a crooked grin. “I get to call you if I get weird cravings in the middle of the night.”

"If Aliquam cannot provide, then I shall do so with honor." He purred happily.

Toki snorts. "I love my husband. But if I get a sudden craving to eat Bambi in the middle of the night,” She wiggled a brow at him, “he isn’t going to go chase a deer in the dark. But... yeah. I don’t really want to trouble him too much with everything.” She shuffles awkwardly where she lays. “It’s... I dunno. There is more peace than there was before. But I don’t want to ask too much of him.” Since they weren’t his. “Six pups though. Oi. That’s going to be fun. No wonder my body is hating me so much. You’re going to owe me so much hot cocoa by the end of this, Papa. So much. Like... A bath tub full of hot cocoa.”

"I will make a cauldron of it and let you soak as if I am making a witches brew. How does that sound?” Tenebris chuckled. "I'll even give you marshmallows shaped like a duck."

She snorts and laughs faintly. “So long as you don’t actually make me into a stew.” She gives him a bemused laugh, making his head and palm bounce on her belly. Toki sighed softly, and rubbed her sides. “So... Six. That’s... definitely a lot. You going to be alright to do the delivery, mister dad? Or am I going to need to ask Todd to do it, while you pace and fret in the living room?” She gave him a teasing wiggle of her brow, knowing the stereotype of the fretting father in the waiting room would bemuse him.

"I'll admit, I’d most likely be the one pacing, but I’m professional you silly girl." He puffed. "Of course I'll handle the doctoring." He then chuckled, running his thumb over her swell delicately. "Maybe with Todd standing as my nurse."

"Riiight. You were nearly in a panic when I was in labor in your car." She pats his head fondly. "But you did good during it. You were calm when I needed you to be, and that's what's important. I get the gut feeling this one is going to be very different from the last one, so... We'll see how it goes." Toki relaxes quietly, and simply enjoys the feel of magic flowing into her. "I don't know about that. My beast is... Kind of unpredictable. I personally wouldn't mind, at least right now anyway, extra hands to help hold babies while the others are born, but I'm not too sure how my beast is going to respond to so many people in the room at once. Her mood varies."
He rattled and chirped quietly in understanding. "Perhaps Aliquam then. He would be appealing to you in assurance, while I appeal to your bestial side."

"Like last time. That might be good." She nods. "We'll see. But, uh... Sans teleportation is probably going to get him stung if he startles her. She's capable of taking control when she's determined enough. She's only done it once so far, but that was... Interesting." Shaking her head, Toki peers at him quietly. His magic was starting to dwindle, though he was still trying to give her what she needed. "Maybe train Papyrus a bit more in midwifery. He's... Well, since he's not on guard duty anymore, I think he gets a little stir crazy. Classes would give him something to occupy his mind with, and maybe keep him calmer when it comes time for him and I to have children of our own again."

"I'm sure he'll want to avoid one of the midwifery habits, but I'm positive he's gonna do the best he can at least."

Toki tilted her head. "One of the habits?" She inquired curiously, but doesn't expect an answer. He does that sometimes, and leaves her with more questions than not. "He did well last time, but he spent his time behind me acting as support. If he has to do much else, I'm pretty sure he'd faint again." Such faith she didn't have in her husband, truly. Toki shifted and sighed, before nudging his face. "Papa. You're starting to drop on your output. Stop before you run low on magic."

"Mmmh... By the time I was my current age, I should have been a father to many a litters. It would have been nothing to share enough magic for six pups." He murmured, before he sighed and yawned widely, his form stiffening up as he made a stationary stretch and cut off his magic supply.

"You've had other events in your life that changed the tides of fate." She says gently. "It's not your fault. I'll... See if I can ask Papyrus for some magic later if I really need it." She looked better, but not the bright color she was when he discovered she was pregnant. "Also keep in mind, they're based probably on my power levels thanks to the severely unequal difference between Tenne and myself. They are probably going to take a lot to keep them healthy. Good thing it's not just me and Papyrus trying to do this." That amount of magic Tenebris had given her probably would have sent Papyrus into coma.

Tenebris slowly pushed himself to a sitting position, his eyes now dimly lit as he looked at her. "Indeed so... I would suppose Asgore would offer his own magic if needed." He rumbled, before he sighed. "This 'Tenne'... I wonder if his story was truly to be of the hunter..." The doctor murmured, his tail tucking in over his feet as his head tucked slightly into his turtleneck. "What was he like?" He then asked quietly.

She frowned at how dimly lit his eyes were, and shifted up. Her magic funneled into her hand as she reached out to touch him, and Toki topped him up just a bit. "You silly, overzealous old man." She scolds. "You gave a bit too much." She doesn't give much back, but human magic is much more potent than monster magic. She doesn't need to give much. Toki draws her hand back and sighs. "We can call Asgore later. He'd probably like to donate too, since they're his too. They should get to know his magic."

His eyes did indeed light up a little brighter after her donation, but they continued their relaxed gaze as he listened to wait for what she had to say about his counterpart.

Relaxing as best she can while she sits and is generally tired, Toki processes the questions she'd been asked since he was waiting so expectantly. "His full name was Tenebris. He called it a pack name, and asked that I not call him that in public. Everyone, even Asgore, knew him as Tenne. He was... A lot like you. But much less grouchy. I didn't have to work as hard to get him to pull the stick out of his ass and get him to tease me back. He worked a lot at first, but it started to dwindle as he spent more time with me and his sons. His sons adored having him around. He was a good man."

He hummed quietly, and then he chuckled gently. "Sounds like he was a very proud pup growing up, and carried this vanity through his youth until he reached fatherhood... At that point, he no doubt yearned for children as badly as I did. I would have loved to watch my dear sons grow up, and I envy that of this Tenne, that he got to see his grow up.” He sighed.

"I'm pretty sure I'm what kept that timeline from going the same as this one." She says lightly. "Everyone was pushing for the core to be done, and shit just happened, and, well... I kinda lost my temper and broke the barrier." Settling back down on her side, not unlike a pregnant cat lounging in the shade, Toki's mane ruffled up. She nuzzled her face into it and was tempted to groom it. It was a bit messy. "All the same... I ended up earning an ironic moniker there. The Guardian Light."

"I wouldn't be surprised. It was a very wise move, using the power of the souls to destroy the barrier... if it were the same as it was here, it no doubt would have taken quite the effort to eliminate." He purred, "You have continued to carry your kind and incomparable love through the realms."

She reaches out with her smaller hand in a motion that is very cat like and just mooshes it against his face. "Nope. No. Nope. Tenne said the same thing almost. Don’t give me flashbacks to that, Papa."

She blows a raspberry at him, and then huffs. "I was a ticking time bomb back then. It felt good to get rid of that power. No living being should have that much power."

True, very true indeed...

Tenebris chortled as her hand pressed against his face before his eyes gleamed a little brighter. He snapped his head to one side before it was brought back, quickly closing around her fingers as he loosely nibbled on her, just like old times. And like that, he gave a quiet rumble, chuckling gently as he gave her a sweet purr.

She squeaked, but at least he hadn't taken her whole hand that time. Or taken it off. She laughed and wiggled her fingers against his tongue. "Oh noooo. I have been nommed." She feigns being faint, and grins at him as she flops over. "You have slain me, oh great and mighty finger nibbler."

He chuckled lightly, grinning around her fingers as he then provided to thoroughly drool around her fingers, covering them before he let them go. "Bleeeeehh~" he drawled out, pushing them out with his tongue before he grinned and laughed gently while reaching into his pocket to pull out a black handkerchief as he held it up to her, "Here. No more smearing my drool on my sweater~ I invested in a handkerchief for just the occasion."

That was utterly revolting, in so many ways. His revenge was most amusing. "Oh, so you planned to drool on me?" She laughed quietly and took it so she could clean her fingers. The drool-dampened cloth was then tossed right back at him as her eye lights twinkled in mischief. It smacked him in the face, damp side down, and stuck to his cheek. "Or is it because you drool when you sleep now, old man?" Oh there was a teasing jibe there, and Toki wondered what he might do about that.

He made a sound of disdain and wiped his cheek, before he tucked it way. "How dare you." He snorted. "If you want me to be honest, I wasn't positive if I would be strong enough to resist tearing up a little bit while I was here." He admitted. "You have made me very happy, you know. My mate and I are both indebted to you."

"I'm the only one that dares to ruffle those feathers of yours." She smiled. Her eyes gentled at the tone of his voice, and she shook her head, momentarily growling as her horn hooked on loose threads on a pillow. She disentangled it from the new hole, and peered at him. "You don't owe me anything, Papa. Jokes of hot cocoa baths aside, just the both of you being here and helping Papyrus and I through this is enough, I promise. I just want them to be somewhere that they'll be loved and grow up in a household without any underlying tension."

He hummed gently and gave a nod. "I will do nothing to make them feel any less than at home."

Toki chuffed, and reached up to bump her face to his, before drawing back. "Just give them the father they deserve, Papa. I'll nurse them and love them until it's time to pass them into Asgore's arms, and then I'll be their sister by law, and love them all the same." She runs her fingers along her lower belly and massages the muscles lightly. They ached from the fast growth.

Tenebris hummed, and then lifted his head as the door opened.

Aliquam entered, holding a tray of steaming mugs of cocoa. "Hello Toki, Father. Hope I'm not interrupting bonding time between you and the pups." He gave a gentle laugh.

"Come on in, Aliquam, don't feel like a stranger." Tenebris greeted happily. "I had just given Toki a magic-donation and I'm pretty sure she was close to sassing me yet again."

"Typical Toki, eh?" Aliquam chuckled as he came and knelt near the closet as well. "Hello, my love." He smiled at Toki, "I brought you some cocoa~"

Having two large monsters settled right outside her only exit was making her beast feel caged and trapped, and their little safe haven wasn't so safe anymore. Toki would need to find a new one, her beast decided.

Toki ignored her beast musing at her, and gave them both smiles despite the line of tension that crawled up her spine and settled at the nape of her neck. She knew they meant no harm, but feeling caged was not a nice feeling. "Hello, my love." She greets Papyrus fondly, and straightens in her little cubby, angling her body away from them instinctively to face them head on. She scooted closer to the end of the door, and peered at the cocoa. Her stomach gave a twist as it decided if she could partake or not today and ultimately settled on 'yes for now'. She leaned forward on her primary arms, secondary arms taking her cup of cocoa. "Thank you, love. I see you found my little cubby." She sipped her cocoa. It was rich and tasty, but she took it slow so she didn't get sick on it. "Papa and I did a donation, and discussed that this litter are taking much more than the twins did. And our usual teasing, of course."

"I did find it after discovering where you were hiding all the pillows." He teased with a gentle laugh. "The litter definitely would be quite the drain, so I'm willing to offer my magic to contribute as well."

Toki blushed as he called out her hoarding. "I didn't take them all. Or the soft ones. Or the ones I really wanted." Her instincts had wanted pillows that smelled like her ‘pack mates’ to surround herself with, but she hadn’t gone stealing all the pillows from everyone’s houses. She wasn’t that out of control. "I just took a couple ones from the spare rooms." Which would have smelled heavily of her and led him straight here. Well, she could understand how he found her. The pregnant queen bee enjoyed her sugary treat as she watched her husband. "I drained Papa, but Papa knows when to stop. Sort of. I had to give some back. Anyways, love... I don't want to see you fall into Magi-drain again. Literally. Can you promise not to go too far?" She knew he could see how dark her belly was- still was, even if it was mountains upon mountains of improvements from what it had been- and wondered what he thought of it. It wasn't the neon 'I ate glowsticks' that he tended to make her back with the twins.

"Of course, dear. I promise." He assured her, his hand going to rest on her stomach. His eyes slowly closed as his magic began to pool into Toki's body.
“If I have to scrape you off the floor, I’m gonna summon Sugar and let her do it.” Was that a threat? Yep. Toki sighed though, and she straightened to let him touch her belly better. It brightened some, though not as fast as it had with Tenebris’ potent magic, but she enjoyed it all the same. “Mm… It’s like the sun.” She inhales contently. “It feels so nice.”

Tenebris watched with a smile.

Aliquam hummed, smiling at her reaction. "I love how much you enjoy the heat I have to offer~" He cooed gently.

Toki smiled at him gently, and gave him a gentle sounding purring noise. “I always love it. I’ve missed it.” Her hand settled down onto her belly, and she rubbed her hand gently over his knuckles. “I love the warmth and I love the feel of it… It lets me know I’m home.” Her smile widens, and she hums softly. Toki glances at the pillows she’s seated on, before sighing. “I should probably stop hiding away.”

"Only if you are comfortable with coming out." He assured her gently.

Toki twiddles her fingers and fidgets her wings. She doesn’t tell him that she’s going to find another hidey-hole. Her beast demands that she keeps it quiet. She’s pretty sure her body language tells all though to the two men who are so intensely focused on her. “I’ll manage. I’m not as tired now, so I think I can handle some rowdy kids for a little bit… Speaking of, what did you send them to do while you came up here…?” Or should she suspect something to be broken?

"Surprisingly enough, this time it was the aid of their summons that distracted them." He chuckled gently. "Sobek stole Honey's graham crackers."

"Oh dear. There will be hell to pay for that." Toki laughs gently. "Those two have the most interesting relationship I've ever seen concerning summons. At least Snuggle lives up to his name." Sobek was hell on wheels.

"At least Snuggle is more than merciful with behaving with Skylar; or perhaps it's that with his physique, he doesn't have much of a choice." He snorted.

"I have seen that grub move before when I dropped a cookie. He can haul ass when he wants to. He just doesn't because he doesn't want to." Toki can feel her womb sitting heavier in her belly with all the extra magic settling in it, and her fingers massage the sore muscles near the base. Hell, round ligaments were a bitch. "Mmnn."

And noting he was short on magic, Papyrus allowed himself to stop giving magic before it knocked him on his ass.

She checked him over all the same, and paranoia made her take a look at his eye lights next. "How do you feel?" She asks gently. Her lights are brighter and healthier looking. Two donations was closer to enough. She could function off two- she didn’t need to be full to function.

His eye lights were dimmer than they were before, but not nearly as they were for Tenebris. "Just fine. A bit lighter in the same."

She nods, and let's the breath ease out from her chest. "Good. I'm better. Not quite a glowstick, but that's just fine." She gives them a lopsided smile, and takes another gulp of cocoa. "Now all I've got to deal with are muscle pains. At least until the magic runs out again."

"You hungry?" Aliquam asked as Tenebris stood to go.
“Mmm…” She gave a contemplative sound, watching Tenebris stand. She was pretty sure they were down to just chicken in the freezer- in a house full of carnivores, and with her being only able to eat raw meat mostly, they went through a lot of meat. “I am yeah. Hungry and crampy.” She shifts and stands slowly, balancing her cocoa with one hand, and offering a hand out to Aliquam. “Going home, Papa?” She asks. “You’re welcome to nap here if you need to.” He did look like he’d curl up in the nearest flowerbed and just sleep.

"I'll have a nap before I go, but I best leave you to your own devices.” Tenebris answered as he rubbed his eyes lightly, "I'll bring over Venison when I come again tomorrow, give you some nice quality meat to munch on when you get peckish." He purred.

“That would be nice. Go get some rest, Papa. You need it.” Toki smiles faintly, and leans into Papyrus to nuzzle her mate. “Hey, Pap? What do we have in the freezer to last until then anyways?”
She’d eat anything but chicken and pork raw… If she had to wait until tomorrow, it wouldn’t kill her. They had a bag of raw carrots stuffed somewhere that she could nibble on.

"We have chicken. I think we had some pork strips left.” He answered. "Maybe some veggies."

Toki makes a face and sighs. “Veggies it is then.” She gently nudges his hip with her- so very gentle because his leg can’t take the bumps that he used to- and then takes his arm in two of hers.
“Unless… Hm…” She wasn’t sure if Grillby did steak burgers, or if he’d even sell her one uncooked. She’d buy one if he did though. “Mmmn… Think Grillby has a steak or two we could buy from him?” She asks him gently, and guides him towards the stairs. She keeps a careful eye on him, because she doesn’t want him to wobble from magic exhaustion or while carting the tray of mostly empty mugs of cocoa.

"I'm sure he would be willing to send us a few. As the owner of a public restaurant, I have faith he gets nothing but the best quality meat."

Toki hummed. “Maybe.” She knew a lot of restaurants bought lower quality meat and made it taste better, but she doubted Grillby did. “We could take a walk with the kids, if you’re up to it.” She hummed as they reached the bottom of the stairs.

"If you're up for it." Aliquam gave her a smile, "Come on, then." He laughed gently.

Tenebris chuckled and made his way downstairs, humming to himself as he went for his coat.

She chuckled. “Alright. Go get your shoes, and I’ll get the kids.”

She didn’t have to actually look for them- Honey came speeding around the corner, and crashed into her grandfather’s leg at full force. Full force meaning hard enough to pop both of her little arms right off, and send them clattering down at her sides as she reeled backwards and clattered onto the tile.
She gave him a grumpy look as Skylar zoomed around behind her, and proceeded to trip over her.

He landed on his hands and knees. “You’re it!”

“Tagging with feet doesn’t count, you butthead!” Honey puffs unhappily, and flails as she tries to sit up with no arms.

“Oh dear,” Toki takes a step over to help her.

Tenebris grunted quietly as the pup had ran into his legs and he lifted his foot gently. "What are you two doing?” He asked, before he used his foot to gently push Honey upright.

Honey flailed a bit where she sat, until Toki knelt down to help pop her arms back on. She peered up at her Grandpa. “Sobek stole my crackers, so we chased him, but he ate them before I could get them back, so we decided to chase each other instead.”

Skylar skitters upright and rubs his head fondly against Tenebris’ knee. Or as much of it as his diminutive height can reach against the massive monster’s own great height, as it were. “We just need to run.”

“They’ve been like this all day.” Toki sighs wearily. She might have the magical energy to deal with them, but that didn’t mean she had the physical energy. “Pretty sure they’ve got built up energy they need to spend. Come on, little ones. Go get your shoes and coats. It’s still cold outside, and we’re going to Grillby’s.”

They both stood and raced off, scrambling up the stairs and to their rooms in a competition to get their shoes and coats. Toki watched them go and shook her head. Her son wasn’t usually so active, but whatever was up, he was wired. He’d crash hard come night time, though he would sleep very, very good.

"They’ll enjoy the walk, I wager." Tenebris chortled. "Such energetic pups. I should start babysitting and be ready for when my own are born."

“Well, they wouldn’t turn down getting to spend time with their Grandpapa.” She peers up at him, and makes her way over to get her shoes. She eases into them, and then fetches her coat. Toki comes to a small problem, when it refuses to button in the front. Lana hadn’t made it with much room to spare. “Well then…” She just leaves it open. “Asgore might appreciate getting to brush up on his skills handling little children. If ours are this active, I can’t imagine how six full bloods are going to act.”

"At least you don’t fear them chewing shoes.” Tenebris chuckles.

“No, they just chew my bones.” She laughs.

"Wait, wait... SIX?!" Aliquam asked with surprise.

“Uh…” Toki glanced at him. “Yes. That’s, uh the number we found out today.” She pats her belly through her coat. “So you’re going to have six brothers and sisters, Pap.” She gives him a grin. “What do you think of that?”

"I... Don’t envy you, Father...” Aliquam laughed quietly, rubbing his head. "Six... wow... I'm excited to meet them."

“An interesting fact, my love,” Toki gives him a cheeky smile, “Insectis- which is partly what I am- can have a hundred or more children all in one go. So we’re lucky they take after the sire, and not after me.” Her wings flick as she gets herself ready, fetching her newly set up wallet and tucking it into her pocket, before going to stand near her husband. She bends down to help him with his shoes so he doesn’t have to stress his leg. "Just something to think about whenever we have kids again ourselves.”

"Thank you dear." He purred gently as he let her tie his shoes for him, and he gave her a soft peck in appreciation once she finished and straightened. "Very lucky indeed, huh?" He then teased. "Well I think I’m thankful all the same. I’d rather have six younger siblings, rather than hundreds." He laughed.

She smiled at him, amused, but didn’t bother to reply as she had to guide him out of the way as their kids barreled down the stairs again. She didn’t let them run off though, and leaned down to scoop them into her arms. She settled one on either side of her hips, and grunted as their weight settled in her arms. They were heavier than she was expecting—she was still getting used to her arms lacking the muscles that she’d had as an Insectis blaster beast. “Alright. Let’s head out. Snuggle? You’re in charge of the house while we’re gone.”

The grub gave a noise from the living room, along with Sobek giving an indignant squawk.

Toki snorted, and hefted the twins onto her hips. Their knees pressed awkwardly to her belly, but she made it work as she headed for the door.

Once everyone left, Snuggle’s mandibles clattered in a pleased manner that he was left in charge as he made his way to the large recliner that Tenebris claimed when he’d visit. The grub curled up comfortably and gurgled to himself in a proud manner.

Sobek, pride damaged, stormed closer before attempting to climb into the chair and steal Snuggle’s spot. He flinched back as the grub snapped and hissed an ugly sound at him, long mandibles and massive maw rapidly clapping shut with an audible sound.

A moment passed as Snuggle set his head down again before Sobek carefully climbed into the rolls and coils of pudgy grub. The grub let out a more content sound as Sobek then nestled down and the two proceeded to doze off there.
Chapter 119

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: A continuation of the last chapter. It got a little long, so we trimmed it.

Also first chapter of the new year! Hope everyone has had a good one so far-

It was towards the last weeks of February- she’d arrived home a week or so after she was supposed to have turned thirty four in this world, though she was actually thirty five now thanks to her time in the other world- so the ground was slushy and something of a mix between snow and frost. She’d learned that the flowers around her memorial were maintained by magic, so they’d be kept blooming all year round, to honor her memory. It was a sweet idea.

Once they’d gotten some distance from the house, Toki had plopped the twins down and let them rush off and play in the last bits of the snow and ice, while she walked at a leisurely pace with Papyrus and Tenebris, until the older male branched off, having decided to go home instead of napping at the house.

She looped her arms quietly with her husband, and enjoyed the leisurely stroll. She was at the point where hiding her belly didn’t work, so people stared. She tried not to let it bother her, or let it raise her beast’s hackles. “So… Papa and I were talking about how the delivery would go.” She says lightly to her husband. “And we were thinking maybe you could train up a bit in midwifery, to help him? With how… finicky my beast is, I’m not too sure how friendly she’s going to be with too many people in there.”

"Oh?" He laughed gently. "Oh of course, I'll be willing to help in anyway I can." He promised.

“Thank you.” She smiles. “I’d ask Sans, but I’m pretty sure he’d be a nervous wreck. I’m pretty sure Papa is going to be one too, so… You’re going to need to be calm.” She peers up at him. “My beast might be closer to the surface, so you’ll definitely want to read our body language. She’s not the friendly sort all the time. I’ll have to introduce you sometime though, so she knows you’re safe.”

"I am eager to meet her." He rumbled, "I want to learn everything about her; whatever it takes to be ready for when the day comes.”

Her beast purred in her head, and Toki’s eye lights narrowed to slits as she watched him. She wondered if he ever noticed when her eye lights did the narrowing thing. “Mmm, well, that definitely made her happy to hear.” She informs him cheerfully. “Perhaps later I can let her out some to meet you. I need a space that is quiet and calm though. This world frightens her. She only knows it from my memories, and memories aren’t enough.”

"Understandable." He nodded gently, "I'll make sure to find a perfect little spot for meeting her.”

She hums and nods. “Maybe not on a night with the twins this… Active.” She eyes them as they run through slush and dirty up their pants. They’d need to be changed when they got home- not too big of a problem. “They make her more alert and agitated in an effort to keep the kids safe.” Toki’s wings twitched and lifted some as she spotted Grillby’s ahead. It would appear that the lunch rush was there, because there were people- monsters and human builders from the contracting companies-gathered inside and partially lingering outside as they gobbled down food.

He nodded lightly as he gave her a soft squeeze, before smiling at the sight of Grillby. "It's good to see that Grillby's doing so well..."

“It’s the closest thing the workers have to a fast food joint this far out in the middle of nowhere.” Toki chuckled. She gathered the twins close, and kept two hands on them tightly. “Besides, would you eat a bag lunch, or a hot meal every day? It doesn’t surprise me at all that the building was one of the first ones finished. Muffet’s too.”

"Grillby's food is a lot more healthy for human consumption." He laughed gently. "And Muffet's pastries are unbelievable.”

“Very true.” She chuckles.

Toki guides them in to the mass of people who are jousting for space, and tucks her wings in tight so she doesn’t accidentally knock someone’s food out of their hands. She puts the kids between her and Papyrus, giving the smaller ones a protective barrier as they make their way inside to get in the long line. Over top everyone, she can see both Sans and Grillby working in the back, and Fuku too.

“So… Do you want anything?” She blinks up at him gingerly. “I kinda wish I could eat some fries. God, I want fries. Mm… But I’m pretty sure I’d spend a couple hours in the bathroom if I indulged.” She gave a sad sound. She managed a bit of cocoa- she didn’t want to push her body too far and pay for it.

"Perhaps something light, or quick to take with us." He answered, before he laughed gently. "I've heard Caeruleus is trying to introduce more recipes to Grillby's menu."

Toki smiled faintly. “I heard both Grillby’s and Muffets started selling Honey Tarts.” She elbows him gently. “So I’m sure it’s not just him that’s introducing more recipes, hm?” She laughs, not at all bothered by her recipe for her homemade treat having been given to both monsters. She knew why- it would be another way for her to have lived on if she hadn’t come home.

"-ou see that? Look how big she is. She wouldn’t be that big this soon if it was his. Kinou was right. It looks like Mrs. Gaster couldn’t keep her legs closed during the time she was gone.”

Toki couldn’t identify who said it in the middle of the thick crowd. She just tucked her head down into her fluff, and tried to ignore the shame that burned through her soul. “Anyways,” She continued, “What are you thinking with ‘light and quick’? A milkshake maybe? Or some of those cinnamon bun things I can smell somewhere in here?”

"Now you're thinking." He chuckled with a smile. Having heard the man speak, however, made him give of a low growl and give her a soft squeeze. "I love you." He assured her as he then led her to where they could wait in a different line, away from whoever had spoke.

As luck would have it, Caeruleus saw them and waved them over. "Heeeyyy!"

Toki tucks her head and guides her husband and kids out of the line and off to the side, heading away from the line and towards where Sans had stepped off to the side of the lunch rush. Her mane is ruffled, and she’s doing her best to hide in it, and pull her coat subtly around her belly to hide it.

"Hey…” She murmurs quietly to her brother in law. “Where’s Solstice?” She asks, curious as to where her niece was if both her bearer and her father were working.

Sans came over and pressed a soft smooch between her horns. "Sol is out with Tori today. Don’t you worry, soon as they hear this is for surrogacy for the king, they’ll all shut their traps." He murmured.

“Yeah I know.” She murmurs. The surrogacy was more or less a backup plan, or she’d have been mothering six pups. Toki sighs and glanced up at him. “I’ll be fine. I might not look like it, but I’ve got some pretty tough skin.” She lied as she winked at him, her joke carrying and making Honey giggle at her side.

“Momma, you don’t have skin.” She pokes at her finger bones. “You’re all bony, like Daddy and Sky and Me. Well, ‘cept your tummy that is.”

“That’s right.” Toki nods. “Of which…” She glances up to Sans, and then hesitates. How could she ask for a bunch of raw meat to eat here in a crowded restaurant? “Congratulations, by the way.” She says instead of asking. “You’re going to be a big brother to six more little ones. We found out this morning- there’s more than four in there.”

"Holy crap, six." He laughed quietly. "I’m excited. That’s a lot. No wonder you look so tired, Toki. How about you tell me what you want and I’ll get your food to go. I’m half tempted to spit in the food of anyone I hear talking sh-... Stuff about you..."

Toki gave him a smile, and reached across the counter to pat his shoulder. “Don’t get into trouble with your husband now,” She gave him a chuckle. “Besides. We’re skeletons. We can’t spit. It’s just words anyway. Just let it go.” She tries to take that to heart as she hears more murmuring rising up behind them. It’s hard to pinpoint where, because there are just so many people and monsters inside of the bar and grill. “I, uh…” She flushes and glances down. She’s still not sure how to ask for a bunch of raw meat.

"Watch me." He huffed, before he smiled at her cheekily. "Don’t worry, you're a Gaster now. I know already." He winked at her then went to the back, humming a tune to himself.

Toki gave him a smile, and reached across the counter to pat his shoulder. “Don’t get into trouble with your husband now,” She gave him a chuckle. “Besides. We’re skeletons. We can’t spit. Toki watched him go, and looked baffled. She glanced up at Papyrus. “… What does he already know?” She whispered to her husband.

"What you came for." He chuckled quietly. "He said it himself. You're a Gaster now. He knew exactly what you wanted.”

“Ohhhhh, is that so?” She crosses one set of arms, the other still holding the twins, and peers up at him lightly. Toki arches a brow. “Does that mean you eat an all raw diet sometimes since you’re a Gaster?” She wiggles a brow, showing that she doesn’t mean him any ill-will with her gentle gibe.

"I have my times." He winked at her. "I'm just exceptionally good at hiding those times."

She stares at him, her mouth opening just a smidge. It shuts rapidly, and she exhales. “… Huh. Honestly, I never knew. You know, I wouldn’t have judged you.” Found it a little gross, yes, but she wouldn’t have judged. She still found what she ate to be a little gross, but she valued being able to eat something and fueling her body over her own instinctive squeamish responses. “I suppose I don’t have to hide outside to eat then, do I…?"”

"Not at all. It'll be as easy as eating at the dinner table with the rest of us." He chuckled. "I simply hid it because you might not have appreciated the way I eat when I get in such a mood." He rubbed his chin at the thought.

Caeruleus returned swiftly. "Don’t you worry, Tokes. It’s normal for all of us. We'll all get a time in our life when we just wanna unhinge our jaws and taste the fresh meat of Mother Nature." Cae clacked her head as he handed her a takeout container in a paper bag. "Love you both, enjoy!"

Toki peered at the paper bag, and could smell fresh meats in it. Her stomach rumbled thoughtfully, and she nodded. She glanced up at him. "I figured the same about you, you know. I'm not a pretty eater." She warns. Her eye lights drift to Caeruleus and she smiles to him. "Thanks. Love you too, little brother. I'll see you later, and pay you back for this," She wiggles the paper bag, "after I convince Papyrus to take me to the store."

"Fair enough~" He winked at her, and then went back to work. He sidled up seamlessly next to Grillby and began to work one of the grills, sending his lover back to the front to take another order.

Toki waved at him, and then worked on dragging her family outside.

"You know, I heard~"

And she shut the door behind them before she, or her family, could hear what the man had to say. Her mane ruffled and settled, and her wings buzzed in a soft bit of aggression, before she chuffed. She glanced to Papyrus, before hauling him off with their children in tow. "Do the kids eat like we do?" She asked lightly. They were even less beast than he was, since she had been full Skeleton at the time of their birth. She had to wonder if they did, or if she was going to have two grossed out children.

"Maybe."

"We'll see when they get older then." She muses. She relinquished her hold on the twins, and watched them race off again to head towards home. "Mm... It smells good and fresh. We do need to pay them back though. Think we can make a run to town tomorrow if you’re up for driving? I really need to get a car, but my wings don't make driving comfortable." She couldn't shift to readjust how she needed to. Passenger was hard enough. Her wings weren't small things.

"Yes, yes of course. A run to town would be healthy for the children as well." He agreed.

Toki nodded slowly and continued on, falling quiet as they walked towards the house. Her gaze wandered over the ice and slush, and she idly pondered how everyone had fared during the winter she'd been gone. She said not a word though and simply made for home. She'd need to make up a grocery list so they could get everything they needed while at the store.

Aliquam hummed as he kept an eye on the kids while they walked. "Will you want a steak once we’re home?" He asked as he kept his sweet, air-headed Toki on the beaten path, and away from potholes that could make her roll her ankle and trip if she wasn’t paying attention.

Pregnancy brain was a thing, and she suffered from it when she wasn’t given something strictly to focus on.

"Uh. Yes. That was partly the purpose in coming out." She chuckles softly, letting him direct her wandering path back in the right direction. "There's probably more than a couple in here, so we should be good to go regarding having some for lunch and some for dinner."

"I'll make the pups something else to eat. You can enjoy your meat and not worry about need in to get more yet."

"I'm pretty sure your brother sent some for you too." She points out. "So we can share a couple steaks if you're in the mood for them. It would do good for you to eat something and replenish your magic after you donated today."

"If you’re offering, who am I to refuse, eh?" He laughed lightly.

She chuckled gently as they reached the house. The kids bounced up the stairs and waited for Papyrus or their mother to let them in. Toki opened the door and the motioned him in once the duo had burst past and made their way inside. "I certainly don't mind sharing. Also, maybe I can convince you to lend me your legendary knot slaying fingers later tonight to remove some of the knots forming in my muscles?"

"Consider them slain and gone." He announced with a grin as he slid into the house and took his shoes and coat off.

Toki chuckled, shutting the door behind her. Her coat was discarded onto the coat rack, and she eased out of her shoes, before glancing to the twins. “Ah- before you race off, you need to strip. You’re covered in mud. Clothes into the laundry, and into a fresh set, both of you.” She wiggled her fingers at the laundry room, and was rewarded with eager kids racing to do as she asked. Goodness, she loved when her kids behaved. With them off changing clothes, Toki made her way towards the kitchen to put most of the meat away and get her and Papyrus a steak apiece set on a plate.

Having multiple hands meant she could massage at her knots while she toiled, and she didn’t waste time in not doing so. “Thank you though, Pap. With how fast the litter is growing, it’s stressing the muscles in my ecto flesh. My round ligaments here,” she rubbed along her lower belly, “feel like they’re being shredded. It so sucks.” She wondered if they had a lotion that would help with the cramps, but figured probably not.

"Dinner and a massage- goodness it's like I'm married to a pampered queen." Aliquam teased as he sidled up behind her and cradled her stomach in his palms. The bones of his hands were warm, and his thumbs stroked over the swell gently.

That made her snort. “Well, I am a queen bee, so I suppose you are married to a queen in some ways.” Her mane ruffled at him playfully. She set them both up plates of food, and then washed her hands, content to let him cradle her belly. His hands felt nice with as warm as they were. His words, teasing though they were, made her think, and she hummed as she started to get to work on lunch for the twins. She really hoped she wasn’t putting too much on him by asking him for things during this… They weren’t keeping the pups, so really, he didn’t have to help her, or even indulge her. “You know… you don’t have to rub my muscles for me, or… anything like that if you don’t want to.” She felt like she needed to put that out there, so he knew he wasn’t required. He could tell her no- she wouldn’t be upset.

"Why do you make it sound like I don’t want to?" He asked with a soft hum as he nuzzled her neck.

“Mm, I don’t mean to.” She says by way of apology, and tilts her skull down with a soft purr as he nuzzles into the ruff of her neck. Her mane smooths out, laying flat instead of fluffing up, to give him better access to the back of her neck. Toki puts together a healthy selection of vegetables and fruits for the kids, along with a small sweet treat on the side for them to enjoy once they’d eaten the main part of their lunch. “I just don’t want you to feel obligated to do something if it’s not something you want to do. But, if you want to have your hands all over me, I’m certainly not going to complain now am I?” She gently wiggles her rump back against him and gives him a cheeky buzz.

"Definitely not~" He laughed heartily and gave her a few appreciative kisses to the back of her neck and skull as his hands continued their work slowly rubbing her belly. His fingers didn’t knead like Tenebris tended to do, but he massaged and rubbed, his thumbs working soothing circles on the muscles he could feel under his digits. He could feel the knots, and had to wonder what those actually felt like.

“Indeed.” She chortles. She enjoys his rubs and his touch, and gets the twins lunch together by the time they’re bounding down the stairs in fresh clothes.

Honey and Skylar come to stand by their legs, and Skylar looks up at Papyrus curiously. “Daddy? Why are you rubbing Momma’s tummy like that?” To Skylar, the massage looked weird and foreign.

"Because Mommy is sore and I’m rubbing her stomach to make her feel better.” Aliquam explained easily.

“Oh.” He blinks, and tilts his head like a little sharp-toothed owl. “Why is Momma sore?”

“Well, we found out this morning that there are six babies inside of me instead of four.” She says. “So, they’re taking up more space than normal. And while they’re growing, they’re making my muscles stretch faster than they’re used to stretching, so it hurts.”

“Oh.” Honey answers in her brothers stead, and then leans up to poke between her Daddy’s fingers. “Silly uncles and aunties, grow slower so you don’t hurt Momma.” She chirps.

They’d explained as best they could to the twins that the babies, instead of being siblings, would be their younger aunts and uncles since they were going to be raised by their Grandpa and the King. They hadn’t understood, but, much like their mother, they had rolled with it.

“I don’t think it works like that, baby girl.” Toki laughs, and gently hands down a plate of food. “Here, sweetie. Why don’t you go turn on your learning cartoons and watch them while you eat?”

“But the movies are better,” Honey pouts, taking the food all the same.

Skylar makes a face and accepts his plate. “I like the learning cartoons, Honey. I wanna watch those. We can watch movies tomorrow.”

“Okaaaay.” She huffs. Both kids make their way to the living room, disappearing out of sight.

Toki watches them go, and leans into Papyrus with a soft sigh. “They’re growing so fast.” She frowns. “I’ve missed so much. Well… I’ve got the rest of their lives to see everything else. I’m not gonna miss anything else.” She vows.

"They'll have you all the while, don’t you worry." He assured her with a soft clacking to her head.

Toki hums and nods. She shifts, and pets his fingers gently. "Alright. Lets go eat while the kids are distracted for a little bit. We can cuddle and relax on the couch when we’re done. Speaking of, I wonder if we should get another couch." One, she muses silently to herself as she offers him his plate, that they could cuddle on with her wings without her getting crushed.

"Maybe... though perhaps once we have settled down after everything that’s soon to come, yes?” He agreed, giving a small nod as he took the plate of steak.

She nods, and moves away from him to take her plate of steak to the table. She seats herself after collecting some napkins to share with her husband. “That sounds just fine. I’m not up to really furniture looking anyways. Though, it would be good to know if we’d fit cuddling while I’m pregnant. You know, for future times.” She gives him a teasing smile, and flicks her wings as she regards her steak lightly, wondering if it really wouldn’t bother him how she ate her raw meats.

"Oh yeah, of course.” He nodded as he settled down as well, tucking his cane at his hip before he looked to Toki, giving her a gentle 'go ahead' nod.

She hummed, and leaned down a bit. Her fingers took the edge of the steak, and she held it up to her mouth, her teeth splaying open like the legs on a crab. Toki’s pupils slid to slits as she watched him, and she set into the steak with a subsonic rumble in her chest.

He noticed her eyes turn to slits but as she delved into her meat, Aliquam simply smiled, happy she felt that this wasn't something to hide from him.

Once she was into hers a fair amount, he enjoyed his own simply enough.

He had started with small bites, but once the soft meat's size was reduced to a much smaller amount in his hand, he brought his head back a little and allowed himself to finish it in a final, large bite.

Toki took a little longer with hers, since she didn’t have teeth like his. She had molars yes, in the very back of her mouth for chewing, but her teeth mostly consisted of the crocodile like front set, and they weren’t built for ripping and tearing. As a result, Toki’s teeth and a good portion of her face were a mess by the time she was done, and she took a long moment to clean her fingers with a napkin. Then, Toki splayed her teeth and summoned her tongue to clean between each fang.

Her slit eye lights watched him the whole while, and seemed to be regarding him thoughtfully.

He had cleaned up a lot faster but once he was done, he simply smiled and offered her a toothpick, setting it on the table for when she wanted it.

Her gaze settled on the toothpick. Beast was puzzled by it. She knew what it was used for, having seen it used in memories, but she didn't know why it was given to them. Toki did know, however, and as her eye lights widened a bit more, she scooped it up and made use of it as best she could without biting through it by accident.

Her face still needed a scrub with a wet cloth, but it wasn't as bad without the mess between her teeth.

As she took the toothpick, Aliquam gave a soft 'Nyeh heh heh heh' and got up to go to the kitchen sink and dampen a cloth for her. "Well my love, don’t you feel better now?"

"I do, very much." She agrees. Her stomach was fuller- not too full because that was bad, but just full enough to be good enough- and she'd eaten a meal with her husband. "I hope you do too. Er... What are you doing?" She asks curiously.

"You have much to learn for your post meal cleaning habits; I can tell mostly by the way you attempted grooming afterwards.” He gives a fond chuckle and motions to her messy face, verses his cleaner one. “As you might have seen, I've gotten in a bit more practice with utilizing the best of both worlds, so I can help you reach a middle ground for the next time we eat.”

She hummed and tilted her head as she watched him. Her sockets half lidded as she regarded him and got up to take the wet cloth from him so she could begin cleaning her teeth. "I'm usually better at it, but I've been spending my time hiding how I eat and what I've been eating from everyone I know.” She lifted a brow at him lightly and wiggled it playfully.

He chuckled at the wiggle of her brow and he waggled his in return. "So long hiding it, you got rusty~" He teased.

She snorts lightly. “Roundabouts that, yes. I’m also a bit messier of an eater than you are, my love.” She hums. “My teeth aren’t designed for clean eating, so it’s a bit of a chore any time I eat anything without silverware. And raw food… is not really silverware stuff.” Not only was it nearly impossible to cut raw meat with a butter knife, but it just felt… weird. She’d embraced this habit for so long with Tenne that eating raw things any different felt strange.

It doesn’t take her long to clean her teeth with the cloth though, and floss between them to make sure she has everything out. Once she’s got her fangs pearly white again, Toki flared a couple of her teeth and wiggled them at Papyrus. “Did you know that Tenne found the flexibility in my teeth fascinating? He couldn’t figure out how I could drink with them. I still don’t know how I drink with them, but I manage.”

"I suggest cutting it up a little next time so the bites are smaller and easier to tear apart." He suggested. "You don’t have teeth meant to tear, so it would assist rather well simply to take bites of food that are already small enough to swallow." He gave her a soft peck on the cheek. "Your teeth are very interesting. I’m not sure what I could imagine comparing it to, if I’m honest.”

“That’s what I usually do, but, well… I’ve been eating outside, and toting out silverware every night is harder.” She blinks and smooches him back. “They might not be meant to tear, but they can lock in place and tear. I have done it before. It’s just… hard.” She could tear out someone’s throat just fine. What they lacked in tearing power, they made up for in cutting power, and she could shred through simple meat quite easily. “But yeah- I don’t even know what to compare them to. They’re just weird teeth.” She settles them in their normal positions again, and hums at him. “Well, would you like to go join the kids and relax a bit?”

"Only if I’ll have my beautiful wife at my side~" He hummed happily, wrapping an arm around her and giving her a soft squeeze. "I can't imagine savoring anything less.” He gave her a few more sweet kisses before he let her go, making sure all was where it should be before he started towards the sound of the pups. He wondered if they were pulling all sorts of mischief.

Toki smiled and joined him in the living room. Her instinctual response however, escaped her. “At your side? But what if I want to be in your lap?” She gives him a playful pout. She hadn’t actually done anything like that since she’d gotten home, for fear of hurting his leg. Toki guided them to the couch, and settled down contently with him on one side, watching as their kids ate and watched the cartoon intently.

"See, now that's even better~" He hummed happily, sitting down and getting comfy before pulling her into his lap.

Toki hummed and draped across her husband’s lap. She was a little hesitant, but she held still so she didn’t hurt him, and let her wings drape over his arm as she cuddled sideways into his lap. She couldn’t sit with her chest flush to his easily anymore, so sideways had to work. She hummed, and fluffed her mane as she nuzzled her skull onto his chest. “Much better. If I’m too heavy though, lemme know.”

"You? Heavy? Hardly.”

“I don’t know,” She gives him a bemused look, “I recall you asking if I had gained weight once, before nearly dropping me when you fainted.” It had been from Magi-Drain, of course, but that didn’t mean she wasn’t going to tease him for the rest of forever.

"I was weaker back then. I put a lot of work to up my strength after everything that happened.”

Which was sad in a way, the way he put it made it sound like he didn't think he was strong enough after she disappeared into the void, so he had to train himself to improve so he didn’t lose anyone else.
It was very sad, considering he wasn't even on active duty anymore and his armor was discarded in the closet. Toki hesitated, and then rubbed her hand over his knee. "You were never weak." She tells him gently. "You were strong. Stronger than me most days. Maybe not in magic, but there's something called a strength of heart... And Papyrus, you were the source of my strength when I needed it." She nuzzles him and peers up at him. "Love...? Why did you stop being a Guard? I know patrols would be hard for you, but there are other duties you could have done. Training, administrative duties... Your organizational skills outclass anyone I've ever met. The dispatch office is always a madhouse of papers everywhere, and it used to drive you nuts."

Her words of strength had him smiling lightly, but upon the questions of his reason for leaving the royal guard, his expression slowly fell. "I was retired. After... After losing you, I had to recover from my injuries and go through rehabilitation to get used to my prosthetic. That took at least two months. After that, I don't think I have had the will to continue; I simply wanted to protect your greatest gift to me... I felt like that was all I was capable of doing, if even that..."

Toki sighed softly through her nasal cavity as she listened to his words, and then leaned gently up to nuzzle his face. "I understand." She says softly. "I... I'm sorry I brought it up. Thank you for telling me though." Her hand rubs his knee again, and she hums softly. "I love you. Together, the both of us will keep getting better, okay? Neither of us is okay after what's happened." She might have had more time to cope, but it left it’s lasting scars on her. Literally, in her soul’s case. "But, we can get better together. As better as we can get."

"As long as I have you right by my side, I'm willing to endure it all, thick and thin, no matter how long it takes." He gave her a nuzzle in return, and then kissed her head. "We will recover together."

"Together." She promises warmly, and rubs her fingers over his. Her bare fingers ghost over his ring, and her face slides towards a frown. "I need to get a new ring." She says softly. "Between the Void and what it did to me, it was lost. But I want the world to know I'm still yours." Even after everything, she had never stopped loving him. She was still his, even if she did have affections for another male. They didn't run as deep as they did for Papyrus.

He quietly hummed in thought, and then he smiled lightly, having gotten an idea. "Does it have to be a ring?"

"Well no." She blinks. "So long as it's not going to tangle in my joints, or my mane won't eat it, anything would work so long as it shows I'm yours, really."

That stirred a chuckle from him, before he gave her an assuring nod. "Then what I have in mind is going to be perfect."

"Oh?" She leaned against his chest and propped her chin on one of her many palms. "What do you have in mind?" She inquired curiously.

"It's long, it's soft, and it's very warm. And better yet it, won't get swallowed up in your mane."

"If you’d said it’s long and hard and very warm, I’d have been very amused given where I’m sitting." She waggled her brows at him, unable to resist the dirty joke while their kids were distracted. "Hm... I don’t know what it could be."

He chuckled lightly and gave her a squeeze. "You can keep guessing I suppose~"

“But I hate to be kept guessing.” She pouts, and gives him her best puppy eyes, complete with fluffing her mane and sinking her neck into it like a fluffy turtle. Her eye lights rounded out, and she gives him the exact sort of puppy face she used to give Tenne, wondering if it would work on Papyrus too. "Wont you please tell me?"

"Honey definitely got that from you..." He heckled her teasingly, before he shook his head. "Nope~"

“So stingy!” She draped against him with a soft sigh. “Fine. I’ll wait and see then.”

Sobek, about that time, hopped over the couch and glared at the both of them, before sharply biting at Papyrus to tell him to move. He wanted that spot, and the two legs were lower on the pecking order. They might be bigger, but they need to move because he said so.

Toki frowned and swatted at him gently. “Sobek, no. Biting is bad.” She scolds, sitting up slightly to shoo him off.

He hissed at her and fluffed his tiny ruff of feathers.

Toki’s mane ruffled up instinctively, and she gave a warning buzz. “Sobek.” She says, voice dropping from its happy-neutral tone to a sharper tone.

"I’ll put you back in the birdcage, Sobek.” He warned. "Do not test me.”

Sobek hissed, and flared his feathers higher. The bird snarled at them both.

Toki’s beast rumbled a subsonic sound through her chest, vibrating the noise through her husband’s chest from her shoulder. Her eyes narrowed to a slit, and her teeth parted. Toki snarled right back at him, making her children pause in what they were doing.

The bird paused at the noise, and his feathers flattened. He cocked his head, and then scuttled away with a spooked squawk when she snarled again.

Toki huffed, and ruffled her mane, satisfied at her dominance.

Aliquam watched with surprise, before he chuckled. "Well done, way to send him running.” He praised lightly.

“IT’s about dominance with beast types.” She chuffs, and nuzzles up into Aliquam as the twins return to their television show. “I’m not going to submit to him, and neither is my beast. She’s an alpha.”

"I hope she and Father get along then..." He mentioned with light concern.

Toki glanced at him with a soft hum. “It’s not him that my beast has issues with.” She gives an amused snort. “She intimidated the Asgore of the other world. It… confuses her that the one here doesn’t act like the one from there. She wants to fix it, which I’m avoiding.” Toki blinks slowly. “She’s also not sure where you stand in the pecking order.” She tells him honestly. “You keep your inner beast so tightly chained that it’s hard for her to get a read on him.”

"That’s definitely concerning. If she shows too rough a front towards Asgore, it may upset Father..." He sighed, before he chuckled gently. "You know, any other time I would have thought that is a good thing.” He laughed.

“He’s going to need to establish that he’s not going to be intimidated.” Toki nods. “She doesn’t handle logic like we do very well, sadly. But… yeah, any other time it would be a good thing, but not with her.” She nuzzles him and laughs gently. “Perhaps sometime we can let them meet and they can hash things out. She’s not an aggressive creature, but she gets defensive when she’s uncertain.” It also didn’t help that Toki figured out why she was so anxious- the beast knew they were pregnant...
the whole time.

He sighed quietly and gave a nod as well. "Once things have settled down, I suppose." He spoke as he gave her a squeeze. "I bet she is just as beautiful as you are." He purred softer as he nuzzled her again.

She began to make a soft sound, between a buzz and a purr, and nuzzled into him with a happy noise. “Good. And I don’t really know- she’s… interesting.”

"I bet she is." He chuckled, nuzzling her cheek before he gave a soft coo. "You're an interesting woman, of course your beast would be interesting in the same."

She snorts and goes limp against him. “I never used to be interesting. I just farmed my bees, and wrote my books, and lived a simple, homely life out in the middle of nowhere.” She smiled up at him. “But becoming interesting got me you and our twins, so I think I can live with it.”

"Good. I wouldn’t have it any other way.” He gave her a grin to challenge his brother's as he gave her another squeeze.

She squeaked at the next squeeze, and laughed. “You’re going to squeeze the litter out of me at this rate.” She nudges his ribs gently, and then turns to lace all four arms around his neck and hug him close. “Mmm… It feels nice to just get to hold you, you know that?”

"It feels wonderful being held, especially by you, of all the souls I'd let get away with it.” He purred. Toki chuckled. “You’d have enjoyed my beast frame. I was around seven-foot tall- I could have really, legitimately held you then. I carried Tenne several times to prove that flying was faster than running.” She nuzzles her nasal ridge to his. “I love you.”

"I love you too, Toki, and I would have loved to see that.” He nuzzled his head to hers, a smile on his face. "You were that much closer into my kissing range~”

"Very true. But, I wouldn't have fit in your lap half as well." She kissed him gently, and hummed softly. "I like being smaller. It means I can cuddle even closer. If I were bigger, I couldn't sit like I am."

"I suppose that's true." He hummed in agreement. "It would indeed be a bit of an inconvenience when it came to cuddling..."

"A bit." She nods. It had worked there with Tenne because he was still much larger, but... Not with Papyrus. She was the right height for Papyrus cuddles. "But I'm just me size, so we're good.""And that there is the best size you can be." Pap's hands smoothed over Toki's stomach and he smiled into her shoulder. "I'll be honest... I can never get over how perfect you look when you're pregnant~” He purred as he looked up at her.

That had not been what she'd been expecting to hear. Toki flushed a bright green, and smiled at him as her breath hitched and her soul thundered with excitement in her chest. "Well, I suppose I do have that pregnancy glow about me." She purrs, meaning the green glow of her middle peeking out from under her shirt. She wasn't full where she should be, but she was at a functioning point. She felt better than earlier, surely, with the magic working it's way through her.

"Glowing indeed~ A sight to behold if naught else." He purred while sneaking some kisses to her neck.
Her mane settled flat to let him have access to her neck, and she couldn't stop the soft purr that rolled from her. Her sockets half lidded, and Toki hummed softly. "Makes you wish you could see more of the sights, doesn't it?" She purrs to him gently, her gaze sliding to their oblivious children. Too bad they weren't alone- but such was the life of a parent.

"Once it is a more appropriate time, I will see about resolving it." He purred in a deeper tone, his eye lights flashing orange as he rumbled softly to her.

"I'd like that." She chuckled, though her soul thrumped eagerly at the idea. Her mind paused though, and her expression grew thoughtful and then a little hesitant and severely self-conscious as Toki was prone to being. "Are you sure you want to though?" She asked. "I mean..." They hadn't since she had returned, especially with everything going on. She wasn't sure if her being pregnant with another male's children would put him off of exploring her new body or not. It was one thing to cuddle and touch her like this- but that kind of touch, exploring their bodies once more, was a whole different sort of thing.

While in truth it would put Aliquam off a little, Toki was still his wife and he wasn't going to stop loving her for this. She was his queen bee, and as a soldier bee, it was his duty to remind her that she's worth far too much to him simply to stop loving her because of what happened. "I'm positive." He reaffirmed gently.
Chapter 120

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: What do you know, another continuation chapter. Sometimes our writing just flows so good that it just keeps going. And going and going and going. XD more than it should. Also over 900k words on TOTU as a whole :) Makes me very happy.

It was only 6pm, but being it was February, it was understandable that it would be dark early in the day. One couldn’t tell the time if they were to glance outside, but one look at the clock could tell the difference.

The children couldn’t tell the difference between tuckering out at six at night, or in a few more hours when it was actually bedtime for them. Not that Aliquam was going to complain. Pups needed their sleep after all, with how hard they had been running and playing all day.

With Toki’s help, Honey and Skylar had been put to bed with both of their summons by their side. That gave them the night.

And utilize it they did.

Toki started their evening by guiding him to the bedroom, and then stripping bare once she’d closed up the bedroom. She didn’t bother with clothes of any kind- she wanted him to see her for all she was in all of her glory. Or lack there of.

She was a little shy, but strove to not be. He’d seen it all before, it just looked different. Her ribs were thicker, and there were less of them now. They had fused, into a strange sort of rib cage. It was sturdier looking, all the same, but it would be foreign to him. Toki crawled onto the bed, and got herself situated on her side to wait for Papyrus to undress.

“Here is all of me.” She says gently to him. “I offer all of me… for all of you.”

Foreign yes, but familiar in the same, it was almost like the shields that his family wore upon their chest.

Shedding to wear only his boxers, Aliquam came to the bed and set his cane aside, before he brought his hands up to caress her cheeks. "You're so beautiful... I bet that old ghost got jealous that I had such a perfect, beautiful wife." He chuckled, before he slowly let her go long enough to move to his end of the bed.

He sat down and sighed, before he smiled and turned to her. "Get comfy... I'm going to be here for a while. I want nothing tonight but all the time I can to have a look at my wife." He cooed to her.

Toki blushed, and got comfortable as she was asked. “I want to look at you too.” She says shyly, and brushes her fingers against his hip. She cuddles closer, and smiles to him. “But… I’m all yours, from now until the kids wake up tomorrow.” As she breathes, her belly shifts, and she exhales gently so she can cuddle up to him.

"Lucky me." He cooed happily as he rested his hands on her body. "So beautiful, I'm so lucky to have you."
Toki purred, and slid her fingers over his ribs. “I think, my love, I’m lucky to have you. I’ve missed you.” She was bare, but he was not, and she respected his boundaries as much as she was able. Her hands still touched along his boxers, nothing sexual however. They simply pressed and prodded, and gently explored around his prosthetic with a gentle touch. “Hey, Pap…? Can I see you?” She rubs her fingers over the hem of his boxers, on the side that hid his prosthetic from her.

He looked to her hand, and then he nodded slowly, slowly moving off the bed again to remove his boxers. Not like there was much to see, though it was obvious where the prosthetic began on his hip. It was also clear he was uneasy as he had kept a hand on it as he sat down again.

Once he sat back down, Toki very gently ran her fingers over his, and coaxed them away from the prosthetic bone. It was very obvious indeed. The fake bone was an off white color, like most true bones were. Papyrus’ bones, now that she saw it side by side with another type of bone, was tinted the same orange hue as his magic. Toki scooted down in the bed, aware of him probably watching her, and leaned down to press tender kisses from where the prosthetic began along his femur, and up into his actual pelvis. He’d never healed from where the gun had blown it out- and they’d just had to replace it. “It’s still you.” She says softly. “Even if it looks different and feels different. I still love each and every inch of you. You’re so brave, Pap, so brave, to have dealt with this while being a single dad… I’m proud of you.”

He smiled a little and stroked her head where it rested at his hip. "I would do anything for my family... I would survive the worst to protect them." He spoke quietly.

“You and I have survived a lot of horrible things.” She says quietly, and gently touches the prosthetic. It’s warm under her fingers, but it’s a sort of off warm that feels slightly abnormal to her. She still gives him a lot of gentle affection, while he strokes her skull. Her skull was different too. He was used to horns that went straight back, like a dragon. Now she had curling horns, much like the lower horns on her Hell Hornets. “But, we always make it through no matter how it changes us.”

"That's right..." He nodded slowly, smiling at her words as she spoke them. "We are survivors..."

“We survived.” She says, and slowly crawls right back up to him. Her hand strokes his hip again, before Toki gets comfortable and offers her body to him to explore, while she simply touched him and soaked in his essence and the feel of him.

Her warmth soothed his soul and it was not long before Aliquam returned to his caressing of Toki’s body, cooing words of loving praise as he did. He could do this for hours...

There was a lot for him to explore. From the differences in her ribs, to the mane of hair that stretched from the top of her skull, down her neck and around it in a thick, fluffy green mane. Even her legs were different. The bones were thicker, made of a denser material than they were before. Her bones were stronger now, more like his, instead of the fragile bone that broke so easily. Her dual arms were the subject of interest too. The primary set were tough and strong, built to handle much more than her secondary. They were strong yet dainty looking. Her secondary set looked fragile, like they could be snapped and broken between his larger hands. Of course, Toki’s wings were of interest too, but she couldn’t lay on her front to let him look at those, so she’d have to settle on her side when he was done with her front.

Toki hummed softly, and returned his loving praise as she basked in his touch and let him explore, touching over her bones and exploring new places. She just simply touched and hooked her fingers gently into his ribs, holding onto him with a need to never let him go. Her secondary hands folded over the swell of her belly, fragile fingers stroking the warm swell as she stared up at Papyrus with nothing but love in her eye lights.
She was home—she was home and with him and though it hurt in so many ways to be taken from her second home… She was so glad to be home. She’d wanted to go home for so long. Sometimes she felt like she’d blink, and she’d be torn away again and cast adrift once more.

Toki blinked slowly, feeling moisture gathering in the corners of her sockets. Emotions made her nonexistent throat thick, and she simply hummed as she held him a little more firmly.

He held her as he felt her grip tighten and he cooed sweetly before giving her a gentler squeeze. "I love you, Toki... I always will... You're my darling wife. I would do anything to ensure you thrived..."

"And I would for you too, Pap." Toki nuzzled him gently, and sighed into his touch. "Pap... Sometimes, I'm afraid I'm going to close my eyes, and when I open them again, I'll be taken away again." Her fingers tightened more, and she forced them to relax, to gently stroke his ribs again. "I don't want to be taken away again Pap."

"And you won't be... I won't let anyone steal you from your home. Not again." He murmured.

"You'd fight the Void for me?" She asks, her eye lights flicking up to his face. Her sockets water more again, and she sucks in a heavy breath. "Tell it no?"

"It would not know mercy if it dared threaten to take you away again." He growled, before he tilted her chin up and gently kissed her tears away. "No would be the first of many things I would have to say."

"You're such a brave fool." She presses her face to his and just gently breathes him in. "The void humors me and my sass, but I don't know how well it would take to a lecture from you." She pictured it a lot like ‘ant meet boot’ and she vowed to never let them meet. "I love you. You're my brave fool, and I love you so, so much... I just... need your touch. I want to hold you, and be held and just..." She half glomped him and wrapped around him. "Mine." She makes a soft sound deep in her chest. "I'm yours, you're mine, and nothing is going to tear us apart again."

He rumbled loudly as he pulled her so her body was flush to his and he gave her a loving kiss.

She met his kiss deeply, almost desperately, and she tucked as close to him as she could. She was thankful that he had no flesh, and that he was made of bones. The swell of her belly fit snug in the gap between his boxers and the bottom of his rib cage. Toki let out a soft sound, a queen bee’s song for her beloved, and held him close as her soul shone bright in her ribs.

He smiled at the combined sensory of her song and her soul, and he hummed quietly as his soul was summoned in the same. It a light to offer to her, if naught an offer to give her what she might have missed in her time in the other world.

Toki spotted the orange glow of his soul coming through for her, and she sucked in a soft breath. She hesitated, her fingers twitching. She longed to touch him, to hold him, to feel him against her soul… Toki wasn’t sure if he would, so she did the only thing she could do. She offered her soul, letting it slide from her chest. She didn’t send it far- for fear of turning to goop in his arms- but she let it brush his chest in an offering as she gently slid a hand between them to brush her fingers to his soul. “It’s been so long since I’ve gotten to feel my sun… You’re so warm,” She whispers.

He shivered and sighed quietly at the feeling of her hand against his soul. "You feel wonderful... your touch is kind and I’d trust nothing less than you, my love.” He purred happily.

She smiles at him, and cuddles her head against his shoulder. “I trust you too, Pap.” She whispers softly. “You can touch me too, if you want.” She swiped her thumb gently against his soul, stroking over the flat of it. She saw some marred marks, like he’d almost cracked in some places, but he’d managed to hold together. He was so strong - so very, very strong. She stroked those spots so gently, and cuddled his being to her chest, her magic enveloping his soul in warmth. It would awash his body in the feel of her magic, making him feel like he was bathed in her. It was her favorite thing she’d learned about soul merges in her time with Tenne.

She said he was her sun, and yet the heat that spread through his body had him feeling like he was covered in liquid sunshine. He trembled in excitement as he brought a hand to carefully cup her soul, examining it with the utmost delicacy as he remembered to keep it close to her body. "So beautiful... So full of life..." He purred quietly.

Her magic was fire and could bring catastrophic destruction in its wake. But for her husband, her soul's true life mate, it was a gentle heat, like a campfire, soothing and warm and reassuring. It was warmth and life and light, and it brought with it a sensation to soothe any aches his hip might have. Toki cradled his soul, and shivered as he held hers. Her wings moved behind her, their gossamer surfaces shining and catching the light. Her soul bore scars, mostly 'new' to him. The scar from her being torn from her home world had sealed over, and was a lighter green on the massive soul. Hans' scar was healing visibly, finally progressing. Her original scars from the fire were gone, sealed away and covered over by a new one - being forcibly torn from her second family. She was worn and scarred and she shone bright. She knew in the many lifetimes to come she would carry scar after scar as she suffered loss after loss. She would wear them with pride.

"So beautiful.” He repeated for the sake of emphasis as he kissed her again.

Toki met his kiss, and let it linger as just rested against his kiss. "I love you." She tells him firmly. "I love you so, so much. I'm going to love you now, and I'm going to love you in my next life too... I never have and never will stop loving you, my brave, brave Papyrus."

"Sounds good to me." He nuzzled his face to hers and hummed happily. "I feel like I could lay like this forever... nothing would be able to make me let you go."

Almost as if fate punishing him for jinxing it, there was then a savage roar from outside that had him jolting as he shot upright, holding Toki tight to his chest as his soul gave an anxious pulse.

Her hand nearly reflexively squeezed his soul when the roar sounded out and she was forced upright by Papyrus jerking upright. She grunted, her belly pinching against his hip. That roar was familiar though, and it had her scrambling to gently give his soul back, and take her own back in turn. Once she is in no danger of melting, Toki scuttles off the bed and grabs her robe for the sake of decency.

"That's Papa." She says. She knew Tenne's roar, and while younger, he roared just like Tenebris. Grabbing his pants, Aliquam pulled them on fast and grabbed his cane, making his way to the window. He tried to see what was going on outside, though with it being dark, it wasn't immediately obvious what was happening. "Come on." He growled, starting for the stairs.

Toki was ahead of him, her body not hindered by a limp in her gait. The swell in her belly didn’t slow her, but she did stop to gently close the twins door and tell them to stay inside when one of them peeked it open to come out and see what was going on. Once she’d secured the children inside, Toki bypassed the stairs, and used her wings to slow her fall as she jumped the banister.

Landing like a feather, Toki slid to her shoes, and kicked her husband’s over to him as he reached the bottom over the stairs. That done, Toki headed for the stairs, her robe being cinched shut with a rope that left the swell of her belly very visible. It kept her modesty hidden as she opened the front door though, and went to the porch while Papyrus caught up.
Tenebris was standing now on the porch with a young man hanging from his grip like a terrified dog, trying so hard to shrink into the jacket that Tenebris had a firm grasp on. "Good evening, Tokiko." Tenebris would greet with a deep, growling tone, a tell tale sign he was pissed.

Toki paused, noting his tone as she stepped outside. She glanced at the young man- the son of one of the workers, she thought- and then behind him. On the wall… Well, she hadn’t had to see such colorful language since before Cruelty had gone from slander, to outright attacks. “Papa.” She greets gently. “How about you set the boy down before he pees himself, and we both call it a night, hm? I’m sure he’s learned his lesson about tagging peoples houses with…”

Well, she wasn’t going to say that out loud. She didn’t really want to call herself a whoring ‘c’ word, or blatantly blurt that she was carrying a bastard baby. Well, she was, but… All the same, Toki didn’t want to verbally repeat the colorful words painting the brick siding of her house.

"I don’t think so." He hissed. "Maybe we can make agreement with this boy..." He growled, before lifting the boy a little higher. "He's going to come back tomorrow morning, and he's going to clean every inch of his 'work' off your home." His snarl reverberated through his chest. "How does that sound?" He then spoke to the boy, leering to the boy as his pupils thinned.

Toki padded closer as the older teen let out a whimper. She reached up, and put her hands on Tenebris' arm. "Papa." She says softly. "He's just a boy. He's probably dealing with shit at home and venting it on the easiest target he has access to. Let him go." Her fingers gently pet his arm, trying to relax his muscles. Her mane ruffles, and Toki focuses her pheromones, aiming to soothe the irked beast before her. "I told you people would say and do things, Papa. You just have to let them go, okay? It's not worth getting angry over."

"Can't make me do shit anyway." The boy sniffed. "You or the slut." He glared at her with frightened, watery eyes.

The scent hit Tenebris quickly and he chuffed, before he slowly lowered the boy to his feet. "I'm tired of hearing this slander... I was coming over to tell you that he's going to make it clear to the public just what's going on." He murmured before he slumped down and rested his head on hers. "I'm tired of hearing so many people say such poor things about you, my dear..."

The boy skittered off, and Toki let him dash into the dark to escape back to where he and his family were staying. As Tenebris draped on her, Toki sighed and patted his head. "Asgore... He knows of how severe the words are. He's going to address everyone here, and clear the rumors."

Her gaze slid over to Papyrus, looming in the doorway with only his eye lights visible, and her green eye lights held a tired weight to them. It appeared the mockery had caught up to someone. "Isn't that right, Papyrus?"

Aliquam didn’t answer, simply came over and wrapped his arms around her with a small breath of air.

Tenebris had leaned back when his son came forward. "Asgore... He knows of how severe the words are. He's going to address everyone here, and clear the rumors."

Toki sighed and leaned back into Papyrus, her night robe pulling tighter around her swell. “I see.” She glances away and gently sighs. “He might as well wait until the interviews next week, or he’s just going to have to say it twice.” Her hands slide down to her middle, and her wings wilt down a little against her back. She looks up at some of the derogatory things being said, and sighs through her nasal cavity. “Though… Some part of me feels that some of these things… are right. About me.”
"They’re not.” Aliquam spoke sternly. "Don’t you dare think that you deserve this." He growled. "You're nothing like they claim. You're the most wonderful woman that any of us could hope to meet."

“How can I not?” She says quietly. “Contrary to belief, sometimes I can have a very, very poor self image of myself despite how wonderful you think I am… And this is just voicing what I’ve been thinking about myself for a while now.” Toki sighed. “All the same… it’s over. I’ll clean it off tomorrow when the sun is up and I can see what I’m doing, okay?”

"The boy is going to return to do it. He wouldn't want to test a beast's patience like that..." Tenebris growled quietly.

Tenebris snuffed quietly at the boop, before he sighed and sagged slightly at the sweet smell of her pheromones.

Aliquam was less visibly effected even though he was at a closer range, but he loosened his grip on her as he began to purr quietly.

As both men began to drape against her, Toki sighed. At least she had something she could do to calm them. “Come on, boys.” She said slowly, soothingly, her voice low and steady. “Let’s go inside. Papa? Did you need some tea to calm down, or do you want to go home and cuddle with Asgore?” She knew he might need some time with pack since there was a metaphorical ‘threat’ to the pack, and she was willing to accommodate him if he needed to spend some time with Aliquam and her.

"Mmm... Perhaps a few moments would be alright..." The older beast chuffed slowly, eyes looking a little glazed. "I'd love to see the pups again. Are you doing well in magic levels?” He asked.

“I’m not full.” She says, “But I wasn’t full when you and Pap gave your donation earlier today. You give any more, and you’ll probably drop.” The only one who probably had enough magic to give a donation was Asgore- maybe Grillby- and she wasn’t going to ask either of them for magic. That was just... awkward. Yeah, these were Asgore’s kids too, but you didn’t just ask the king of all monsters for magic. “I’ll survive without looking like a glowstick, I promise.” She paused though, and hummed. “I have exactly zero clothes on under my robe, Papa. I need some pants on at least before I open this robe and let you see the pups. I mean, yeah, you’ve seen everything there is to see, but that doesn’t mean I need to strut around in the buff. What would people think?” She jokes dryly.

"Let’s go inside then." Aliquam laughed quietly.

“Only Papy gets to see me in the buff.” Toki hums, and then turns to walk back inside. She waves them in, her pheromones beckoning them to follow her, and she heads for the kitchen and lets out a soft sigh. So much for her night simply cuddling up to her husband. She just wanted to spend a nice evening loving on him, and… Well, now she had company again. Toki sends one of her bees upstairs to fetch one of Aliquam’s pair of boxer’s for her to wear, and then sets to making a pot of soothing tea for the men who’d had their feathers ruffled.

Tenebris sat down in the living room while Aliquam accompanied Toki to the kitchen.
"Hey..." He spoke gently once they were alone. "Are you alright?" He asked.

"I’m okay,” Toki responds quietly, holding one of the tea pots in her hands. She cradles it to her belly, and begins to heat the water she’d put inside. “Well… That depends on what you mean by ‘alright’. Do you mean in general, or with everything that’s happened so far?”

"Everything... I was worried about you." He spoke as he came and put his hands on her shoulder, pressing gently.

Toki sighed softly, and leaned her shoulder into her husband’s hand. “In general, I’m tired and I’ve got usual pregnancy aches. With what happened tonight… The words hurt, I don’t deny it. They… They’re what I’ve been thinking about myself since I found out I was pregnant. I was working on getting past my thoughts until I found out there was something growing inside of me, but… Well, here’s living proof that I did, in fact, betray our marriage, even if it wasn’t fully by my choice.” It had felt like it was her choice at the time, at least mostly, and that’s what mattered. Toki hums a soft sound. “I know you say not to listen to the words, Pap, but it’s hard, because they were echoed inside my skull by my own thoughts. Just… not as vulgarly as the words painted on our house.”

He grit his teeth as he reached up and gently cradled her head in his palm. "Toki..." He whispered, before he shook his head. "You didn't betray our marriage; and I am the one to say this. I was not betrayed. Our marriage will still be as strong as it was in the beginning." He growled. "Nothing's going to change that, do you hear me?" He sounded like his father at that moment with how sure and passionate he spoke.

Toki blinked slowly, and then gave him a slow smile. He was just so… earnest. It was refreshing, and his warmth and honesty warmed her soul. He sounded so much like his father too- the apple sure didn’t fall far from the proverbial tree. “If you’re sure…” She says softly. “I hear you, Pap. I hear you. I love you.” She honestly was surprised that she’d needed to hear him say he wasn’t betrayed- she felt another small thing inside of her easing, and some part of her shoulders slumped. “…honestly didn’t know I needed to hear that from you.” She said softly. “But I did. Thank you.”

He reached up and cupped her cheek and he gave her cheek a long kiss, before he chuckled. "Never hesitate to ask me to tell you again. Alright, darling?” He hummed to her sweetly.

“Okay.” She nuzzled her cheek into his, and makes a soft purring sound. “Mmmrrr… Can you get me the bags of tea?” She spies a pair of boxers coming over their shoulders, and the bee carrying them looks bemused. “I need to put on some pants while the tea steeps.” The pot was hot, but not too hot.

He chuckled sweetly at that and he nodded. "I love you so much. You raid my boxers when you need pants” He laughed gently as he stepped away from her and collected the tea bags from the cabinet.

Toki set the kettle on the stove, letting it steam as she turned to the bee. She collected the pair of boxers- not recognizing the pair with their snowflake patterns on it. “Hey now, I didn’t raid it. My bees did. But… Boxers are unfairly more comfortable than panties are. Panties can pinch all the fun places.” She got them up, and got them adjusted around her as best she could. These ones had drawstrings, so she pulled them tighter, and tied it in a nice little bow. That done, she let her robe fall open. She didn’t have boobs, so it was just bones. But her pelvis was still kinda… private, even without parts down there. “Well, how do I look?” She inquired, giving him a warm smile as she struck a pose. She probably looked weird, four arms in her four-armed robe, pregnant belly sticking out over his boxers. Either weird or adorable.

"Like a fluffy, bony, pregnant, four-armed beast monster wearing a bathrobe and her husband's boxers. I’ll tell you what, it's the most beautiful sight I could ever lay my damn eyes upon.” He brought the tea over and proceeded to assault Toki's head and face with more kisses.

That made her giggle quietly, and she fluffed her mane up under his onslaught of kisses. "You're too sweet, Pap. Anyone else would tell me I look weird." She smooches him gently all the same, and preps the tea with two hands while the other two gently twine around his ribs and pull him close for a cuddle. "I love you so much, Pap. I hope you don't mind if I steal your boxers from time to time. You're a bit large on me yet still, but I can enjoy them all the same. At least the ones with drawstrings."

"How about I get some special pairs just for you to nab at your leisure?" He offered.

"Yeahhh, but then they'd be my boxers, and not your boxers, and it's not the same." She gives him a pouty face. For one, his boxers smelled like his magic, and it was a soothing smell to her. Once the tea is done, Toki takes the three steaming mugs in hand and motions him back towards the living room.

"I'll keep that in mind." He chuckled gently. "I may not need that tea, my love... reminding you that my heart has and always will belong to you... I think that's all I needed to settle down..."

"Mmm, well, if you don't drink it, you know Papa will. Seriously, tea doesn't go to waste with him. He's like the tea version of a garbage disposal." She chuckles, and drags him gently with her to the main room all the same.

"He and Asgore BOTH, you know that." He laughed lightly, following her to the front room where Tenebris was waiting.

"Very true... That’s about all I needed too, by the way- just reaffirmation. Well... Cuddles would be nice too. We got interrupted earlier and I wasn't done being held, or holding you yet." She hums, and spots Tenebris on the couch. "I've got tea and pants, Papa. You wanted to see the babies before you went home for the night?" She wouldn't begrudge him the chance to see them since they would be his, even when she wanted to go upstairs and cuddle up instead.

The old man rose from the couch, and his eyes gleamed as he looked up at her. "But for a moment to say hello while I was here. You two look a little tired, so I'll be quick, out of your fur before you realize it."

Toki quirked a brow. "I can't drink a lot of tea. I was counting on you both to mostly drink my cups. So... At least take the tea with you when you go then." She snorts softly. The cups are set to the side, and she quirks a brow higher at him, before offering her middle for him to touch. "Well, we were cuddling before your roar startled us. Go ahead and take your time, Papa. I don't mind. They're yours- they need to learn their Daddy. Asgore too, whenever we can get his fluffy butt around." It didn't matter as much with human babies if the surrogates were there often for them, but based on what she'd felt carrying the twins, it was best if a bond was established early. Monster kids worked differently.

"I do apologize... I sort of saw red when I realized such profanity had been put on your home..." He murmured, moving to settle where he could be comfortable before he set his head on her stomach, his throat pressed against the soft skin of her belly as he began to purr loud and deeply against the flesh of her skin.

And, just like with her dearly beloved kittens cats, that tickled to high hell. Toki withstood it though, and just patted his head. She sighed. "I know. I tried to warn you what would happen, but apparently you've got a bit more of a temper than your age lets on. The paint can be removed, Papa. It's no different than the graffiti I had to deal with that was aimed towards monsters when I was still human."

"It's personal now..." He growled lightly where he sat, his hands in his lap as he looked up at her. "You're my daughter, Toki... A Papa must keep his little girl safe... Even with a husband a Papa will worry."

She stood before him, looking down at him as he peered up at her from over the pudge of her pregnancy. "Really? So me being slandered and being called a whore among other things is more personal than being racially slurred against?" She chuffs, and pokes the space between his eyes, where his nose should be. "Good to know what your priorities are, Papa. I'm okay though, really. Please don't go hunt down that boy and scare him into cleaning the house." She knew beasts and beasts could be vindictive when one of the pack was perceived to have been hurt. She didn't even want to think about what 'hurting' a pregnant female in the pack would make them do.

"I don't even need to go back to do it." He smirked sharply, before he nuzzled her stomach, a hand coming to caress it. "The racism we supported each other as a whole, all of us Monsters. You only have so much... Their skepticism... it's destroying your reputation."

"Papa... My reputation with everyone else doesn't matter to me." She says gently, and makes a small sound as she feels the weight inside her shift just faintly at his touch. Probably a trick of the mind, but it was an odd sensation. "What matters most to me is how you think, and how Papy and Sans and Grillby, Asgore, Fuku, and everyone who truly knows me thinks. So long as none of you think badly of me, I'll be okay. Really. Their words hurt, but I've dealt with pain. I can handle it."

He shifted his head and he gave a sigh, his mouth opening a little as a gentle 'creeeuu' slipped from his lips, before he blinked soberly and he sat up. "I'm slipping..." He murmured, rubbing his face. "This might just end up reverting me if they are born quadruped..." He sighed.

"Reverting you?" She inquired, arching a brow curiously and wondering what he meant. "Do you mean your more beastly form?"

"Oh yes... A wolf, even after five hundred years as a man, is still a wolf. I have a beastly mate, and soon I will have children of my very nature. I cannot lie when I say you may see me with my crown grown out as an alpha would and rightfully should."

Toki blinks, and realizes he only knows that she would still be afraid of that form after the incident. "Oh. Well, that's fine. If you feel the need to take on that form, I frankly don't care. Tenne wore his 'crown' a lot, so I got used to it. Had to, crash course, so I didn't blow my cover." She hums. "I don't think Pap will care if you run around in that form either. Just don't bite, because I bite back now." She gives him a teasing wiggle of her teeth. "And it would be a shame for you to have to wear dentures again if you broke your teeth off, old man." She teased.

He looked up at her and gave a smile. "Oh Toki, I'm so lucky to call you my daughter." He purred, before he deadpanned as her words caught up with him. "Dentures? Me? Please. I grow my teeth back too fast to need those damn things." He snorted as he stood up and stretched a little. "Alright, I'm off. I hate to keep you two any longer than I already have." He pecked Toki's head, then patted Aliquan's shoulder, taking a moment to enjoy the tea that had been made for him before he took his leave. "Good night, you two~" He smiled at them, and then left their home.

Was he in a hurry because he left the stove on? Because Asgore would ask?

The world may never know.
Aliquam watched Tenebris go, and then he laughed gently and scooted closer to his wife. "Toki, let's go back to bed. I think Father realized I wanted to get back to what I was doing with my dear wife." He chuckled softly.

Toki snorted and nodded, gently leaning into Papyrus once Tenebris had left. "I think you're right." She leaned up to kiss his cheek, and then flexed her wings as she shed the robe and made for the stairs. She peeked back at him over her shoulder, now only sauntering up the stairs in his boxers, with her robe clutched in her hands. "Well, are you coming? We can leave the dishes for tomorrow."

"Oh you know I am." He laughed gently as he followed her. "Dishes indeed will wait, you on the other hand are overdue for more pampering." He cooed.

"I just want cuddles and to possibly wrap around you like a skeletal leech." She laughed gently. She beat him to the bedroom after peeking into the kids' room and making sure they had indeed fallen back asleep. Once she was in her room, Toki stripped fully, and then climbed onto the bed, stretching out with a languid purr. "Though, I'm definitely not going to turn down rubs and touches from you." Never, ever.

"Rubs, touches, and anything carnal you might want, my darling~" He dropped his pants, and more confidently, his boxers this time. Just as bare as she was, Papyrus climbed into bed with her, laying his form beside her before he pulled her into a gentle kiss, a smile making it a little tricky to maintain.

"Anything carnal hm?" Her sockets half lidded at him as she spoke, her teeth gently moving against him as she kissed him back. She hadn't expected to get to lay with him in his bare bones, since he had been so why about showing her what was under them... But she was glad he was comfortable enough to lay with her. Toki hummed gently, rolling over to face him. Her belly brushed his pelvis before she scooted up, and the soft flesh was replaced with gentle bone. "Mmm... I could think of some things we could do..."

"Just say the words... and I will do anything you ask of me." He wrapped his arms around her before nuzzling her neck.

"Anything I want, huh? That's awfully tempting..." She welcomed him close, and rumbled warmly, happily. "But... What if I want to know what you'd rather do?" Her mane ruffles, covering his face in silky green fur.

"Then I'll answer you." He purred, reaching up to cup her cheeks. "I... I'd like to meet her... Your beast."

That surprised her greatly. She blinked her sockets open wide and stared at him for a moment, before beaming. "I could do that. She's been very eager to meet you. Is there anything you want to know before I bring her out?"

"Mmh... How slow should I start?" He asked. "I do not want to overwhelm her."

"Just be you." She says. "Avoid loud noises, and abrupt movements, and you should be okay. And... I suppose don't try and intimidate her? If she flares her mane at you, just glance away and down if you don't feel up to dealing with challenging her."

"Submission huh? Alright... I will do my best to behave." He chuckled quietly, "No fighting for dominance until you've had the pups safe and sound." he gave a nod, "Alright, dear. I'm ready." He then spoke as he leaned back and sat on his knees, watching her carefully to know when she switched over.
"She's not likely to actually fight you, but... To be frank, she's definitely not one to mess with." She chuckles. "Alright."

Toki sat up, and scooted away just a little to give her beast some personal space. Then, she drew her up to the surface, impressing upon her that she would be meeting Toki's husband, and that she wanted her to be familiar and comfortable with him.

The switch over was less smooth than the one with Sequoia was. Toki initially dropped boneless onto the mattress, curled on her side facing him. Her sockets were empty of light, and she was utterly motionless, like a puppet with its strings cut.
Chapter 121

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So here we get to meet not one, but two beasties. This should be fun!

Beast took control gingerly, and beastial eye lights ignited in Toki's sockets as her body tensed. Her bones didn't shift or change form, but her wings raised, and her mane bristled and mantled warily as her Beast sat up and took in huffing breaths through her teeth. Examining the room, she determined that it was safe for her, and for the litter. She balanced on her primary arms, her secondary curled to her chest as her gaze slid towards Papyrus. She cocked her head, and made a soft, curious warble at him. Her eyes, when it was strictly beast in control, were very different than when the Beast was showing her face through Toki's own at the same time.

Aliquam stayed out of the way as she took in the necessary sensory for self-reassurance, but once he became her center of attention, he gave a gentle purr. "Hello there, my dear," Were the words he spoke, soft and sweet, to his wife's inner beast, "do you know who I am?"

"Pah-pai-roos?" Beast let out a soft noise at his purr, pleased at his friendly response. She warbled a gentle greeting, her pupils expanding in a soothed manor. The room was quiet and not very stressful which was good. Her voice was different than Toki's was. She sounded out his name, having never said it for herself. Her mane smoothed out some, and the Beast let out a small noise.

That was about the cutest sound to ever come from his wife and Aliquam cooed in response. "Oh my god~" His eye lights brightened. "That's so cute~" He laughed gently, and then smiled up at her. "That's right, my dear. My goodness, you sound so cute~"

"My Dear?" She trilled at him questioningly, her mane fluffing just slightly at his happy sounds. She liked his happy noises- they made Toki happy, and that made Beast happy. "My Dear?" She questioned again. Was that her name now? He had called her that twice- his dear- so maybe her name was Dear, like Toki was Toki, and Papyrus was Papyrus? The beast made a soft whuffling sound through her teeth, and leaned out to scent him. It was nice- he had nothing covering him, no weapons to hide. It was just smooth bone. Safe bones.

He smiled and gently brought a hand up to see if she was comfortable with him touching her. "You're so beautiful, did you know that?"

She decided she would be Dear until someone else gave her a better name, or she found a nicer one. Dear’s eye lights slid to his hand, and she warbled again, her teeth pushing out to enunciate her sounds. She leaned her skull out to sniff his hand, before she rubbed the smooth part of her skull against his palm. His hand was larger than her skull, but his bones felt good on hers. It took her a moment to register that he'd asked her a question, and she felt silly for not having answered. Dear hoped he wasn't upset by it. "Beautiful? Did not... Know." She didn’t know she was beautiful. Toki gave the impression that they looked strange, so Dear had come to expect some degree of strange reception for their appearance.

He caressed her head gently and slowly cupped her other cheek. "You, and your mindmate Toki, are the most beautiful woman, and creature, I could ever ask to be married, and mated to... You're beautiful, you're perfect..." He purred.
His compliments pleased her, and Dear practically preened at his words and praise. She leaned her cheek into his palm, her secondary hands fidgeting on her chest, and gave him a warm coo. His words were kind- he was a kind mate. “You are... first mate?” She asks. Tenne had been their second mate- they had lost their first mate, and now they had lost their second mate and gained their first mate back. Dear was still not sure how to feel about losing Tenne. She mourned him still- though she didn’t understand fully how Tenne and Tenebris were not the same. Toki was working on explaining it to her. She was understanding- but it took time. “Never got to know first mate. Toki loves first mate though.”

"That's right... I'm the first mate." He purred, stroking her cheeks with his thumbs. "I'm so overjoyed to meet you... And to know that Toki still loves me so..." He laughed gently, before he smiled at her happily. "It's so reassuring... it means I’m doing my job right."

“Mmm, yes. Mate supposed to love, and be loved. Though... Do not understand why Toki only has one.” Confusion does light up in the beast’s eyes, though she nuzzles his hand affectionately. “Queen bees- what... What you.” She huffs in his scent quick, and processes it even quicker, “… Mmm... You are mostly Felis, but you have bits of Canis and Draconis. And bone man. Skeleton. Mmm... They take only one mate. Queen bees... We have many, to form a big hive and help with magic needs. Usually one female, sometimes two or three if there are Sister Queens, but many males. Eggs- Pups.” She corrects, recounting the times she’d heard Toki correct herself, "need more magic. They are not pure Insectis, like we were, but even half breeds need much magic. They grow fast and strong. Many mates eases strain. Sometimes not even mates- hive drones donate to help make hive bigger, stronger. Hive is... pack to you. She has... small pack, but why does pack not help with strain? I do not understand."

From how the Queen bee was explaining it, there was one or more females, and basically a reverse harem of males that the female was mated to, and if there weren’t males, then the drones stepped up and the drones would donate the magic to meet the Queen’s needs. And it seemed, now that she had the chance to ask someone other than Toki, she was determined to get answers.

He tilted her head as he took in her words before he rumbled gently, "ah... Well, it's a bit hard for her to ask for this... My father and I are both willing to share magic as much as we can without damaging ourselves, Father perhaps past such. My brother and his husband both adore Toki. We all will offer magic if it meant the pups are happy." He explained gently. "It's simply the oddity of the circumstances, and Toki generally hesitates to ask for help."

“Noticed that.” She huffed, blowing warm air over his bones. “Need to just do, not wait for her to ask. She does not like to bother people. Does not matter what people say about not being bothered. She is a strange Queen.” Dear’s wings gave an irked flick at that. “Pups health is most important. Magic is needed for big, healthy litter. Need to look like... Like ‘stick of glow’, as Toki say. Not this. Will be small, feeble, easy prey if not given enough.” That makes her pause though, and then her head tucks back into her mane. She sucks in a breath and sighs. “Not keeping pups though. Toki told me. Giving to someone else in pack to raise. Don’t understand why we giving and not just share raising, but is not my choice.” Her gaze slides back to him, and sharpens. She warbles at him. “Want more pups later. Family pack is too small. Needs to be bigger. Can make pups, yes?” She couldn’t tell if he was fertile or not, with how tight of a chain he kept on his beast. She could smell what he was, but she couldn’t tell if he was an alpha, a beta, or, gods above, if her primary personality had mated to a submissive or a drone.

"It's complicated to explain... but the sire of the pups within you is... more or less the same man as I call my father. He's much older now, and neither he nor his mate can bear children of their own, and he so dearly wanted children of his bloodline after my brother and I... Tokiko and I want him to have this litter to raise as his ow, so he can be happy with his mate, and his own pups, to have the life he could have had if it weren’t for the darkness..." He explained gently, before he smiled and spoke again. "You and I? Yes, of course we can have more children. Of course we can have more children. As soon as we are all ready, we can begin as soon as the last litter are weaned."

"I am... Understanding this. Slowly, but I am understanding. This is not our second mate. This one is pack father, mate's sire." Dear warbles a soft noise, and slowly settles closer to him. She doesn’t touch, not yet, but she is relaxing in his presence. which is good. "His mate. Yes, different-king. Toki says I'm not allowed to intimidate him. This one is pack, but I do not know where he sits in the structure. By rights he would be alpha female, mate to the alpha, but he cannot bear, so I do not know where he sits." She tilts her head. "He reminds me of a beta. What are you? I cannot tell. You are a hidden-mate, and it is not right to hide so much. Beasts need freedom or we go crazy." Mouth opening, she quietly huffs at him. "Two moons for the litter to be weaned, and two moons hence that for our body to recover enough for another litter. It would be sooner, but she has gone so long unseeded that it will take time to get things moving again."

"I did my best to control myself from a young age. I would not let my beast get the best of me..." He admitted, before he chuckled. "Indeed. Please be nice to Asgore. I’d hate for my Father to think poorly of you, my dear mate." He laughed gently. "Two and Two would be perhaps four months?" He asked. “Correct me if I’m wrong.”

The queen bee beast chuffed at him. “Is not healthy. He is probably insane by now.” She gives him a severely disapproving look. “We need freedom to be healthy. You would not be healthy if you spent years inside of a cage, looking out from inside but unable to touch or interact. He will need to be taught manners when he is let out.”

It was very safe to say that Dear did not approve of how he handled his beast, not at all.

Her mane ruffles, and she chuffs again. “I want to meet him. Without you or mate’s sire stepping in. If he is to be taking my pups, it is in my right to meet him. I wish to meet with mate’s sire too. I want to meet the pack.” She knew she didn’t have a choice in the matter either way- Toki held the main control. The primal instincts were never meant to hold control for too long. Things got messy when they did. “I do not know this month thing. Two moons and two moons. When the moon is gone from the sky for nights on end, to when the moon is full and swollen with stars to birth into the sky.” She blinks at him and flicks her wings. “Two and two of those.” She pauses for a moment, and recollects with Toki, before slowly nodding. “Toki says that two moons is... A little less than two months. So a little less than four of your months?”

He didn’t reply to the comment about his beast, but he nodded. "Four months will do perfect. As for meeting the pack, I can set up meetings. I'll let Asgore know you wish to meet him."

She let out a slow warble and nodded. “Good. I want to meet them.” She snuffles softly, and eyes him slowly as she scoots closer, quietly sniffing and taking in his scent. He had something on him that didn’t smell natural, and she wasn’t sure what it was, but she knew it was there. “Do you have... questions? Toki said you might.”

"You look like you have one starting... Go on then...?"

“There is a funny smell.” She says. “It’s not a natural scent. It’s on you. But you don’t have that cloth stuff covering you. What is it?” Her mane fluffs at him, but there’s no animosity in her question. Just honest curiosity. She doesn’t know what she’s smelling, and she feels she should know what is on her mate.

He reached out and gently took her hand, pulling it over to his hipbone. "This. This is what you smell."
"Oh." She moved down on the bed, her gait differently than Toki’s, and took a breath of air near his hip. She peered at it, analyzing it, and then flicked her tongue out and licked his hip gently. “It is different.” Toki was trying to explain what a replacement was, but she couldn’t quite grasp the concept of it. She could understand fake bone though. “Is fake bone.” She blinks up at him, and then settles down at his side. Their first mate had been crippled- which would mean she would need to protect him when they had pups, not the other way around. It wasn’t very wise, but life bonds were life bonds. You didn’t just leave your mate because his leg didn’t work right anymore. You adapted to what he needed.

One could see the gears turning in her mind as she processed what she was seeing and understanding.

"I was hurt..." He admitted, before he smiled, and wrapped his arms around her gently, stroking her head gently. "I'm still your mate... and I plan to do whatever I can to protect you, regardless of what has happened to me." He promised. "I will not lose any of you, not again."

Dear tensed as his arms came around her, and her eyes slid wide. She made a soft uncertain noise, not quite sure what he was doing. The stroke to her head felt nice though, and she murred softly, though her confused trill echoed after it. “Mates protect each other.” She says. “Toki remembers when you were hurt. It was before the darkness created me to teach her. What... are you doing? This... Touch. What is it?” She was unfamiliar with this type of cuddling. Beasts usually just piled together- they didn’t usually hold each other. Not like this.

"I’m sorry... should I let you go?" He asked gently. "It's called a hug. I don’t know how beasts show their affection, but humans and monsters... we hug. This is a hug, and it's supposed to be warm, and give a feeling of protection."

Dear quietly inhaled and contemplated how she felt about this ‘hug’. It was warm and it did make her feel safe, though she hadn’t been expecting it. Slowly, she shook her head. “I like this... Hug, Beasts show affection by grooming and laying against each other. Hugs are... not things we do.” She snuffled closer, and nosed her teeth against his sternum, before licking along his collarbone and sternum. She groomed his bones gently, using her teeth to nibble gently along any place she felt might be dirty so she could show him how they groomed.

He jumped at first, but the grooming tongue was soft and he smiled gently. "Ah... Heh, this is nice. I like this." He purred, giving her another hug to pull her closer as he kissed her head. "I love you."

She buzzed a soft sound to him and gave him a happy chirp. Dear nuzzled close, and made a quiet pleased noise. “Love you.” She parroted warmly. She didn’t, however, want her abdomen squished, and she made a soft sound of discontent and adjusted so her belly didn’t have pressure on it. She didn’t have any armor on her belly, and even the ectoplasmic skin wasn’t as tough as her beast skin. She didn’t want harm to come to the litter.

He noticed and cooed gently as he helped her readjust so her stomach was more comfortable. "There, is that better?" He asked gently.

“Mrrrr.” She says by way of agreement. She peers up at him, almost shying away from his hands near her belly. He didn’t have claws though- only smooth bone, and his touch had never been rough. Not with her, anyway. “This flesh is so... squishy. Fragile. Easily broken.” She doesn’t sound happy with this. “Have to keep the litter safe.”

"It's okay... it's soft, but no one's going to try and hurt the pups. Nothing will hurt them here, well, as long as you're careful. But U should think you're better than that, eh?" He chuckled gently.
She blew warm air in his face. "Threats can be everywhere. There are those that dislike the pups now. Dislike is one step away from aggression." She tilts her head at him. "Why does everyone let them talk like that about her?"

She was referring to the people that thought bad things about Toki.

"They don’t understand the circumstances... It's... a bit farfetched. They think she cheated on me and is pregnant with another man's young on purpose." He murmured in explanation to the beast. "They speak cruelly, but they will not harm her physically... especially now that Asgore is going to do something about it"

"Is he?" She questions doubtfully. "He does not seem as driven as the one I know. He seems... Softer. Can he prevent such things from happening? Because I want a safe place to birth this litter and rear our litters. The forest is vast. We could find better territory." Her understanding of human laws was slim, and she frankly just didn't care on the best of days.

"You have much to learn, my darling... I'm afraid it's not that easy. This is the safest place for us to be, for the pups to be."

She made a soft noise, like she wasn’t so sure, but she slowly nodded. “Then here is where we will build our nest when it is time. We’ll find the right spot, and gather things, since…” Her gaze flitted down towards his hip, and then back up. Usually the male- males often times- would help, but she wouldn’t send him scouring the grounds for soft cloth and blankets. “We will nest here.” She ends finally, and her four arms hesitantly curl around him. “… If you are gentle,” Dear says slowly, “You can touch my belly. Mates are gentle, and you are gentle.”

"Thank you..." He purred gently as he cupped her stomach and slowly stroked it with a delicate hand. "I'm glad I got to meet you..." He brought up next.

“I liked meeting my mate too.” She thrummed, and her sockets half lidded as his hand gently stroked her belly. That felt… nicer than she imagined it would. She might not mind belly touches if they were all like his- gentle and delicate. “But... You want Toki back now, yes?”

"She and I have much to plan and prepare, so you and I can speak again later on, perhaps once you've met some of the others. But if you'd like to enjoy some gentle petting first, you need not leave immediately~"

She nods slowly and sighs. Dear looks around them, at the room in which she’d gotten to see, and then she sighs again. She cuddles closer to him, and ruffles her mane. She lingers a little bit, only for a few minutes to enjoy some of his touches. The beast doesn’t bother saying goodbye- between one breath and the next, without saying a word to him about her going, she’s gone limp, like someone has cut the strings out from under her.

Toki stirs several minutes later, and makes a soft groan. One of her smaller hands comes to her head. “Ow… She and I need to practice the switch over.” She mutters. “She’s a bit rough dragging me up.”

"Take your time, Toki." He murmured. "No doubt it's disorienting..."

“I’m okay, Pap. She’s just not experienced.” Toki sighs. She nuzzles him. “So… Since I’m this close, and didn’t have to come to the surface earlier, it went okay. What did you think of her?”

"She has much to learn of our ways, and she wants to meet the pack. Starting with Asgore. She understands that my father and the Tenebris you knew in the other realm are not the same. But she wants the pups to go to a place she knows with utmost certainty will be safe for them."

Toki grimaces. "Oh boy. That’s… Going to be fun.” She sighs. Toki notes his hand on her belly, and gently wiggles so he has easier access, before wiggling closer. “She does have a lot to learn, but she thinks differently than we do. I’ve been trying to teach her as best I can. The best we can do is let her meet everyone that she could eventually come into contact with.” Toki exhales, and nuzzles him. “Mm… Did you like her?”

"She's a queen bee if I ever met one, but in the same... I don’t think she likes the way I restrain my beast within." He answered with a quiet chuckle. "I adore her in the same, though... I see how she matched up with you, my dear."

“We’re quite the pair, she and I.” She agrees lightly. “And I don’t agree with your method either, Pap.” She kisses him gently. “You need to let him loose. You can only learn how to control him if you let him out.” The one time she’d gotten to play with him, he’d been very rough, but it was likely he didn’t know how to behave or be gentle.

"I imagine he's at least learned a little from me... He behaves most of the time..." He murmured, rubbing his neck lightly. "I just don’t like letting him out... unless I have to..."

"Why don’t you like letting him out?” She asks him gently. “Just out of curiosity. He’s... not the most gentle thing, by the way. At least he wasn’t with me that one time on the couch. A lot of that is probably being locked away."

"I was a bit too obsessed with humanity in my younger years... I wanted to make sure I assembled better to human society rather that of a beast for once we were free..."

He then sighed quietly. "Perhaps.. I'll go for a run tonight, let him out, perhaps talk with him if he's willing..."

Her brows furrow, and she lets out a soft sound. "Do you want me to go with you?" She asks gently. She could understand wanting to assimilate better to human society, but to completely turn away his beast... Well, he had done a hell of a job. She hadn't known until recently, really.

"Are you in the mood for a walk? I mean... we could head out as soon as we're actually dressed..." He offered.

"I could walk, yeah." She nods softly. Her uterus was sitting weird in her pelvis, and a walk would probably fix it. "I've got muscles that need to stretch. So long as I can just wear a night shirt and some shorts, I think we'll be okay." Toki kissed his cheek, and then made to let him go and roll away so she could get into clothes.

"Alright."

The two parted ways long enough to be dressed, reuniting downstairs as he made for where they kept the shoes. "Do you want some help with your shoes?” He asked gently.

She peered down at her feet. She could still see them, but in a week, Maybe two, she might not be able to. Toki shakes her head, and balances with the railing so she can get her shoes on. "Not quite yet. Do you want some help, Pap? When I can no longer see my toes, then I'll start really needing the help. Until then, I can help you."

"I'll be alright." He answered. He carefully tied his boots then collected his coat, looking to Toki for confirmation that she was ready.
Toki didn't bother with a coat. Instead, she just settled for her shirt, which framed her front, and her shorts, over top her sneakers. Toki threaded his scarf around her neck, and then gave him. Thumbs up. She was good to go. "You lead, I'll follow?" She hums and offers her arm to him.

He put on his coat then smiled and gently gave her his arm to loop around, opening the door and taking in the crisp air before he sighed and started out. "Allow me a moment to lock up." He rumbled quietly.

"Please do." Their kids were sleeping and she didn't want to disturb them. Likewise, she didn't want to leave them alone in an unlocked house. Toki let him lock up the house, and took a few steps into the darkness, rubbing her belly quietly. This was bringing back memories from back when she'd had the twins and her nightmares.

He locked up the house, and then pocketed his keys and he smiled to her, offering her an arm. "Alright, here we go." He purred gently. "All locked up, nice and tight."

She took it without hesitation, and gave him a loving smile. "Good." She sent a couple bees to keep an eye on the house just in case, and then walked with him off towards the woods. Well... The un-burnt woods. She looked at the dead trees they hadn't cleared yet and gave a soft, sad sigh. "It's going to take so long for the forest to recover... I kinda hoped that little pool of water that we spent our first Valentine's in was still secluded, but it's not, sadly." She murmurs.

"It's sad, yes... but do not worry, in due time the forest will heal, and who knows we may have an even better pond than we did the first time." He assured her. "And just imagine all the lush life once we clear the earth and spread the ash."

"True." She smiles lightly. "Ashy loam is supposed to be very good for growing certain kinds of plants." She hums. "And who knows? Maybe we'll find a better pond across the river. Though... Are you okay to cross?" She eyes his cane, which is not river worthy, and then flicks her wings. "I could try to carry you."

"What's a little water to one who's fought in the rain and snow?" Aliquam countered with a gentle laugh. "Don't you even consider for a second about carrying me, I'm too heavy for you." He dismissed the idea lightly.

That just made her puff up a little bit, and she leered at him, moderately offended that he thought she couldn't lift him. Before she had been changed, certainly. Now she thought she maybe had a chance, pregnant or no. "You're too heavy? Pfft. You're all bone. I carried Tenne on a couple occasions." Of course she'd been a being of flesh and muscle then. "Alright, well, we're going to see if I can do it." As they reached the river, she wiggled her arm out of his, and then flexed her wings. "Get a good grip on anything loose, Pap, and a good stance. I don't want to knock you over by accident."

"Oh boy..." He chuckled quietly. "Alright, alright, let's see how this goes." He replied as he took a step to the side.

She stretched her wings, and then took to the sky. Toki took a moment to get herself oriented, and then she came behind Papyrus, and hooked all four arms under his armpits, and heaved.

Her back strained, and her wings strained, and she found herself missing the strength she had as a beast. Toki sunk magic into her bones, pulsing it into her wings and making the beats stronger and heartier. Slowly, carefully, she lifted him off the ground, and began to drift him over to the other side of the river. As her body adjusted, the strain eased. She just wasn't used to it, but it wasn't so bad. Tenne outweighed him by several times his weight, so Papyrus was refreshingly light.
She took care with setting him down on the other side, and then touching down. She rubbed her wing joint. "Ugh, I'm out of shape. Round might be a shape, but its not a shape for good flying."

"Toki holy crap." He commented, before he huffed and reached up with a hand, gently knocking on her forehead with his knuckle, "I told you it wasn't a good idea but did you listen?" He gave her a hard time before pulling her in for a soft kiss

She puffed air at him when he knocked on her forehead with a knuckle. "There comes a point in every wife's life that she has to prove her husband wrong. Lo and behold, I can carry you. Not far, not yet, but you're lighter than you think. Plus I'm something between a wasp, a hornet, and a bee, and hornets and wasps can carry other bugs while flying." She smooches him back, and beams at him. "So we can cross the river any time we want now."

"I feel like there is a video game reference somewhere in that statement." He teased, giving a quiet laugh before he turned and took a breath. "I think this will do well for meeting my beast." He announced as he looked around.

"We crossed a river, and any guards who walk by can see us. If this is where you want to do it, then we can. If not, we can go to the green shrubbery." Toki wiggled a brow at him. "And maybe there was, maybe there wasn't."

"I mean... of course we can go somewhere we won’t be seen... this is just a good area..." He murmured, patting her rear before he started into the forestry. "Come on, then."

"I'm just thinking beastly, my dear. Mine doesn't like a lot of people." She gets him right back on his rear, goosing it as she speed walks to catch up. She's glad she has no waddle yet, because waddling sucked.

"True indeed." He agreed.

"So... Do you know anything about your beast?" She asks lightly. She was going to probably be going in blind with this.

"Yes, one of the only reasons he's not completely suppressed. He possesses a sense of justice like I do..." He explained. "He doesn't like dogs as much as he does our cats."

Toki paused in her words as she listened to the murmurs of her beast inside of her head. She listened to her more now, since she missed the companionship that Sequoia had given. "My beast- pardon, apparently she... Named herself Dear? Dear says he's mostly Felis, which explains it. They're cat beasts. Probably why you don't like dogs either." How he could dislike dogs but be completely fine with dog monsters was beyond her, but she supposed there was a huge difference. Wolfen wasn't going to steal his femur and chew on it.

It was the only one he had left of course he wouldn't appreciate it.

"She named herself, huh? That’s so cute~ and I suppose that makes sense. Bastet and Neko are both cat-skull blasters."

"And mine is an Insectis, and I summon giant hornets from hell." She hums. Toki peers up at him and hooks her arms tightly into his. "My beast knows a lot despite not being born or raised a beast. I think she was... Pre-programmed with knowledge maybe, since the Void did make me into one, and it probably made her."

"It explains the same as to why Father knows as much as he does of his race." He rumbled in reply.
“Maybe? I know mine wasn’t naturally there though. He’s had his for his whole life.” Toki hummed softly up at him.

He nodded gently, before he sighed. "Right. Topic at hand... I can do this... I don’t want to hurt you..."

Toki pauses, and looks at him. They’re a fair ways into the brush by now, and it’s green and lush and smells fresh and new. She tugs on his shirt to get his attention, and then pulls up the save and load screen. She presses the save button, and then smiles at him. “If anything happens and it goes bad, I’ll load back, okay?” She reaches up to kiss him. There was a reason she hadn’t given it back to Frisk yet- mostly in part because she didn’t know how, and partly in part because this kind of power was not pressure that a child should have on them. Frisk seemed happier without it anyway, as did Sans. “Your beast can’t hurt me too badly. My beast is an Alpha, remember? I’m also Balance. I’m tougher than I look.” She wiggles her wings. “Plus you can’t fly, so it would be like watching Gracie try to catch the sky raisins in the summer.”

Gracie liked to hunt flies and eat them- Toki called them sky raisins because of a silly meme she’d seen online, and it stuck for her.

He chuckled quietly, before he nodded gently. "Alright... I'm going to sit down so he doesn’t have to deal with one leg." He murmured, slowly moving to sit down before he took a breath, and closed his eyes.

“Alright.” Toki took a couple steps away from him, making sure she was upwind from him. Toki smoothed a hand over her belly, and carefully crouched down so that she was on fairly even height with him. Toki watched him, and waited to see any physical signs.

He thrummed quietly, and then he shivered and rattled quietly, giving a soft growl as his eyes opened. They were now a much deeper, bold orange color, his pupils thin as he looked around. He sniffed quietly as soon as his eye lights locked on her.

"Mate." Was the first word to come from his mouth.

"Yes.” Toki says softly, and nods gently to him. “You know who I am then. That’s good. Do you know my name?” She asks gently, and gives him a warm smile. She stays in her crouched position, hiding the curve of her belly with her position. Well, somewhat hiding it.

"To... toes.... Take. Took..." He looked back and forth before growling quietly, "Toes... Toe... Key..." He murmured softly.

"Toe-Key." He then glanced up at her. "Toe-Key...?"

“Yes. I’m Toki.” She smiles softly. “And you’re Papyrus’s beast. Do you have a name?” She inquires gently.

He turned and sniffled quietly, before he shook his head. "Only pup name..."

“Well, if you find a name you’d like, you can choose it.” She smiles to him. “My beast has chosen the name ‘Dear’ for now.” She watched him, how he seemed to be watching everything. He reminded her of a sentinel, or some sort of guard. “You’re quite the handsome little sentinel, aren’t you?” She hums. “How are you feeling? Would you like me to come closer, or stay over here?”

"Sen... Sentinel." He spoke quietly, before looking up at her. "Mate." He then spoke, reaching to her.

She took that as a sign to come closer, and moved down carefully onto her hands and knees. Toki made her way over to him, keeping her eyes on him gently. “Sentinel?” She inquired gently as she came into his reach, and carefully sat down again. She crossed her smaller arms over her belly as she smiled at him. “Did you want me closer?” She asks him lightly.

He rumbled in reply as he inched closer, dragging his leg behind him. It was a tragic sight as he didn't understand the prosthetic yet. He pressed close and rumbled as he set his head on hers, purring quietly as he pressed loosely curled fists into the ground below him. "Smell like mother~" He purred.

“Well, I am a mother.” She smiles at him, and leans her skull up to gently nuzzle his. She wasn’t sure if he was aware she was pregnant or not, but she wasn’t sure she wanted to try and explain to him the entire situation. He probably wouldn’t take it well that his mate was carrying another’s children. “Maybe you smell our children on me? Honey and Skylar?”

"Hon and Sky, yes... Kits... Adore Kits." He purred, before a hand went to her swell. "You carry..." He purred. "More Kits?"

Well shit, how did she tell him they weren’t his. Toki sucked in a soft sigh, and covered his fingers with hers. “Not quite Kits, but something close. Something that is partially kits. What all has Papyrus told you about… the long time that I was missing from you?” She asks, her eye lights searching his.

"Missing mate... thought lost... not lost..." He replied. "Carrying... something for sire."

“Yes.” She nods, her face brightening some. So he wasn’t entirely shut away from everything. Thank goodness. “These are pure blooded blaster beasts in my belly,” She tells him gently. “They’re going to come out just like your Sire, and like I was before I returned home to you.”

His gaze twitched upward. "Why like sire? Why not like me?" He questioned, before growling quietly as he tucked his head in, no doubt Aliquam answering his question from within.

As his head tucked down, Toki gave a soft sound. “Is Papyrus explaining it to you?” She asks him gently. “I can try to clear up what he can’t."

"Queen bee... mates with many... mated to one?"

Toki thought back, and prodded at her beast. Slowly she nodded. “Insectis work differently.” She says slowly. “My beast is… Not accustomed to having one mate. To her, you are her First mate—there is a special place for that. Tenne was her second mate, after she thought… She thought we lost you.” Toki deflates a little, and glances away. She’s aware body posture counts for much with beasts, and she knows looking upset at having thought she’d lost him would count for something. “We thought we would never find you again. But… we did. We carry our second mate’s young, though we’re not keeping them. Your sire is going to adopt them and raise them.”

He tilted his head, then sighed and nuzzled her. "I... I see." He murmured.

He didn't really, but he trusted his mate, such came from Aliquam, and he no doubt would be able to understand later on if someone explained it well enough a second time.

She nuzzles him back, and then lifts her fingers up. She rubs under his chin, wondering if he was like their cats. “Hey, big guy,” She calls to get his attention. “After this litter is here, the next litter will be ours. I promise.” She leans up and chitters a soft sound for him before smooching his cheek. “Any every litter after that, if we want more kids.”

He chirped, before leaning up into her hand, purring at the rubbing before he nuzzled her again. "More litters... soldier wants more children."
“You’ll get more.” She promises gently. “We have many, many years together, my dear.” Toki nuzzles him in return, and continues to gently rub his jaw. “We can have many children in those years- a big family is definitely in our future.” It would take them a while though, going one at a time, but they could do it. It wasn’t impossible.

"Big family." He agreed happily, resting his head on her shoulder as he purred gently.

“Maybe we’ll get your brother to have more nieces and nephews for us too,” She gives him a lopsided smile as she listens to his purr. She’s glad he’s relaxing instead of tense and angry or startled.

"Canis make many pups." He chuffed. "They nibble tails and pull on ears." It seems Aliquam had helped him get a hang of talking at this moment. "Why only one pup?" He asked in wonder.

“Well,” She says softly, “He’s mated to a fire elemental. You know Grillby, yes? The fire man?” Simple words seemed to be best with beasts. “They only have one or two at a time. So, Sans only had one because that’s what Grillby’s kind has at a time.” She wasn’t sure if it was true, but it sounded good for an answer on the fly.

"Mmh..." He purred quietly. His sockets closed as he settled down beside Toki, a purr coming from him.

She listens to him purr, and smiles softly. She hums to him and drops her hand down to the leg he’d dragged through the grass. Carefully she touched it so she could gage if he would let her adjust it for him into a more comfortable position, so Papyrus wouldn’t hurt as bad when he came back.

He jerked a little in reply then growled at it. "What is that?"

"Easy..." She says gently. "That's your leg. Your body got hurt a while ago, and it didn't heal right. Papa- your Sire- made a prosthetic to fix it. It's... A kind of fake bone. It helps you walk and move around. Is it okay if I help you move it so your leg is sitting a little more comfortably?"

"Mmh..." He growled quietly, but slowly nodded.

Toki was quick and gentle in straightening his leg. She smoothed down his pants, and then rubbed his knee gently and peered up at him. "Papyrus walks with a cane now to help him balance. Maybe in time he won't need it, but it's too soon yet for him to be running around without it." She's not sure if Pap had told his beast about their leg yet, but she figured he should know.

"Wounded..." He nodded in understanding, though he looked displeased as he looked at the prosthetic.

“Wounded,” She agreed. She took his fingers, and then moved them up to the scar on her skull. “But, not broken.” Toki’s voice went firm. Hers hadn’t been a physical disability- but hers had come with a severe fear of fire. She’d worked at it. And, if he worked with his leg, he could get some improvement. Never what it was, but then and again, she never would be what she was before she’d burned alive either. There would always be that small anxiety whenever she was near a flame that wasn’t hers.

He looked up at her, and then tilted his head. "Mate does not seek another?" He asked quietly. "Even when mate is lame?"

“No.” She shakes her head. “I don’t seek another. My beast and I have differing views on how mating should go, but we both agree that you don’t abandon your mate, even if they have trouble with their leg.” She rubs his gently. “We work together, and adapt to each other’s needs.”
He chirped happily at that and nuzzled her. "That is relief..."

"Would you, if I had a bad leg?" She asks him gently, honestly curious to the beast’s answer. She nuzzled him gently, and peered up at him quietly. They thought so differently than she and Papyrus did, that it was interesting to see their answers to questions.

"Leave you? No..." He shook his head. "Soldier is loyal. Sentinel will be the same."

"Good." She smiles softly. Her brows furrow thoughtfully. "So... I’m understanding that... Soldier is Papyrus? So that makes you... Sentinel?"

"You... called me Sentinel. I like it."

She thought back. Yep. She’d called him a handsome sentinel. “Alright.” She smiles. “Then Sentinel can be your name if that’s what you want.” She rubs his cheek gently and hums. “So... What do you think of the outside world?” She wondered if he knew what their house looked like or not.

"Free. I miss the hunt..."

“I don’t know if you’ll ever get to hunt again, Sentinel.” Toki glances at his leg, and then back up to his face. “But, maybe you and Papyrus can work something out so you can come out more often instead of being locked inside?”

"Would like that..." He nodded gently.

“I’m sure you would.” She nods. “I’ll talk with Papyrus, and tell him how polite and how gentle you are.”

"Did he fear otherwise?"

Toki shrugs. “I think he might have. He wasn’t sure how you would respond to everything outside, or respond to me.” She blinks up at him. “But neither I nor my beast approved of him keeping you locked up like so.”

"Mh..." He sighed, and then reached up and rubbed his face against hers, purring. "I like being with you..."

“I like being with you too.” She nuzzles him in return. “I like being with both of you. I love you both very much.”

He smiled at that before he hummed happily, and nuzzled his head under her chin.

Toki enjoyed his soft affection, and fluffed her mane for him to snuggle into. She knew her mane was full of pheromones, so it would be full of her scent, and it would, hopefully, keep him relaxed as they sat in the grass in the dark.

The cat-like beast was quite contented, though after a short while, he had gone silent and limp beside her.

As he went limp against her, Toki grunted and braced his weight. “Hell- Sentinel? Did you just fall asleep on me?”

There was no reply at first, but soon there was a soft hum. "Mh... Toki?" Aliquam was back.

“Ah, Papyrus.” She smiled and nuzzled the top of his skull. “It’s good to see you again. How are you feeling? How did it go inside? Did you talk some while he and I talked?”
"He was a lot more calm than I worried he would be." He answered.

“He was. He was upset about your leg though. He didn’t know what was wrong.” Toki blinks at him slowly and sighs. “I’m not too sure he fully understands my situation either,” She touches her belly to emphasize which one, “but I promised more children after and he seemed happy with that.”

"That’s better than what I feared. Cats are a breeding race, aren’t they? Perhaps he understands the difference between damaging mate-ship and simple breeding differentials."

Toki shrugged. “Maybe? I know cats- the animals- have many, many litters in their lifetime, and go into heat often so… Maybe he does?” She’s not sure. “His name is Sentinel, by the way. He calls you the Soldier, I think.”

"I've heard worse." He laughed gently. "Glad he thinks so highly of me."

“Indeed. I’m just mate. Or ‘toe-key’,” She laughs gently, and bumps the curve of her horn to his skull. “I love you. Now… would you like to go back home? Er… How does your leg feel, by the way? He was sitting funny on it.”

"Probably numb... I'll be fine." He chuckled gently as he reached for his cane. "Let's get home... I want to cuddle you again."

“Sounds good to me.” Toki shifted and it took her a while to get up. Her center of balance was set for more or less walking on all fours, with how her middle was, but she forced her way up onto two legs and gave a soft grunt. “Alright.” Once Toki was upright, she offered Papyrus a hand, and helped him up and making sure he was balanced and braced upright so he could test his leg before trying to walk. She didn’t want him to fall.

He did seem to put more weight on his cane, but he gave her a small smile. "I'm okay."

"If you're sure." She looks dubious, but simply casually supports more of his weight as they start to walk towards the river to go home. "If you're not up to it, Clover can give us a ride." He hadn't gotten to ride her in... Well, ages.

"We might need her to in order to cross the river again."

Toki purses her teeth and sighs. "I could carry you. But... Probably. Here. We might as well just fly back. Then I can cuddle you faster." She draws on her magic, and summons Clover. It takes more than usual, with so much going to the babies in her belly, and Toki momentarily wavers on her feet from summoning something so big.

Clover settles down in front of them, and gives them both an unimpressed look, before laying flat so they could mount up.

"Hello clover. It's good to see you again." Aliquam smiled up at the large hornet.

She buzzed at him and clicked her mandibles. If he expected her to jump for joy at seeing him again, he was sorely mistaken. She wasn't Sugar. Her knees ached and she had no desire to bounce around like a puppy. Still, she made a fairly warm sound, and that was the best he would get.

"Want to know something amusing? Clover scared Tenne." Toki hummed conversationally as she helped him hobble closer. Clovers legs came together and made a sort of walk way up to her saddle, thankfully, so he wouldn't have to try and climb.

"I'm not surprised. She is very large and very intimidating." He chuckled lightly as he climbed onto Toki made sure he was strapped in once he was seated, and then paused. She leaned in and lightly sniffed the saddle. It smelled like Kai and Quinn, and faintly of Tenne too, amidst the usual brimstone smell. Toki swallowed thickly. She missed her adopted sons. She missed them a lot. "His sons adored her." She tells him, and motions for her to stand once she'd made sure that he was secure.

Clover stood up with a chuff, and lifted her wings to stretch them, before taking off towards the house with Toki on her tail.

He smiled as he gently pet Clover's body. "It's been a while... pretty girl."

Clover buzzed her thanks, and twitched her mane at him. She huffed and made to land outside the house, touching down with a heavy thump. She let her legs drop out from under her, and thumped down onto the ground with a hard crash. Wheezing out a sigh, Clover lifted her legs and offered him some steps down.

Toki landed, and rubbed her back. She let out a soft groan. Agh, flying while pregnant was harder than it should be. Her center of weight was off, and everything was just... unpleasant while in the sky.

He slowly stepped down and went to Toki's side, wrapping an arm around her before he smiled at the hornet. "Thank you, Clover. I appreciate the lift."

Clover let out a buzz at him, and then gave Toki an expectant look.

Toki heaved a sigh, and opened another door. She staggered a bit into him as the magic drained on her. When Clover disappeared, she shut the door, and slumped a little into Papyrus. "I'm tired," She tells him softly. "I think my big summons are going to have to be limited with this litter. I've never felt the drain like this."

"I agree." He smiled softly to her. "Come on, let's get you in bed, shall we?"

"Please." Toki made a soft sound and sighed. She'd probably just wasted all that magic they'd given her, damn it. She wobbled with him towards the house, and pulsed magic up and down her legs to fortify them. "Mmm... I want cuddles and sleep. Lots of both."

"And you'll get just that, nyeh heh heh!" He laughed.

Toki snorts and pinches his rib gently. "Shush, or you'll wake the twins." She laughs quietly, before going inside with him. "Megh... If I didn't have a belly or wings to cause issues, I'd say to hell with it and just flop on the couch." Stairs. She didn't want to go up them. But the bed was calling.

"But we have a bed big enough for the both of us to snuggle on, would you really deny that, darling?"

Toki gave him a flat sounding buzz, and slowly started for the stairs. "I think you underestimate how much magic it sucked to open the big gates for Clover. Besides that, I slept on a couch for like, four months I think, after sleeping outside for half that in the other world. I'm no stranger to discomfort." Toki used the banister to support her weight and hauled him upstairs with both arms around his ribs to keep him steady.

"You don't need to carry me, you know." He assured her as he reached up to pat her cheek gently.

"Half is to keep you from falling, half is to keep me from going down." She makes a grumbling sound at him. "Because if you go splat, I'm just gonna get the pillow and the blankets and we're sleeping where you fell." She informs him lightly. Not really. She'd have called Tenebris if he couldn't get up, but it didn't mean she couldn't bluff at him.

"And the last thing we need is me with a stiff back." He murmured, helping her get him upstairs as best he could.

"Exactly." The top of the stairs came sooner than she expected, and she was thankful. Toki gave a soft sigh, and made it to their room with him, before she let him go. Then she carefully began to strip again, intending to sleep in the buff.

And as if someone sprayed them both with a bottle of clothes-b-gone, the loving couple reunited on the bed sheets, quickly returning to each others embrace like a pair of magnets.

"I adore you," Aliquam purred.

Toki draped against him like a cloth, and made a soft purring sound. Her eyes drooped tiredly, and she made a faint sound of exhaustion. “I love you lots. Lets get some sleep, okay? The kids will be up early, and tomorrow will be long. I've got cleaning to do.”

"Sounds perfect. Except you aren't gonna do as much cleaning as you think. I'll help you."

“Well, I'm not gonna turn down you helping me. But it's still gonna be a lot of cleaning. Paint doesn’t come off brick easier. We’d have an easier time painting over the house, but I don’t want to do it.” She grumbles sleepily. “At least four arms makes cleaning easier.”

"That is very true..." He agreed. "Well, perhaps Father will come and help as well."

She hummed a noncommittal noise, and pressed her face into his ribs. “Maybe. Might send him the kids so he can watch them while we clean.”

"It would keep him from hunting down the boy who did the spray painting." He agreed.

“Very true.” She yawns sleepily and lazily grooms his chest. “Mm… Yep. He gets grandpa duty for a day.”

"Watch him carry them around in his cavity and come to help anyways." He then giggled in quiet sleepiness.

Toki snorts into his bones. “It wouldn’t surprise me. But to carry them he has to catch them, and Honey is much more energetic than Skylar is on the norm.”

"Okay so you think Skylar would nestle happily but he'd have to get clever for Honey" Aliquam gave another gentle giggle, and then sighed contentedly where he laid.

"Yep. Skylar would probably nap unless his sister gets him in on the game of keeping away from their grandpa. Honey? He'd have to catch her." Toki snickers. "And she's crafty."

"Could you imagine if they were born with proper scruffs? I couldn't imagine Father passing the opportunity to carry her around in his mouth all day."

That makes her sigh. “Oh yeah, I could see it.” She gives him a soft purr and sighs. “I’m excited to see how he handles being a dad to newborns again.” Her fingers thread through his ribs, and she sighs, melting.
"You know this is gonna be the best thing to happen to him since myself and Caeruleus." He chuckled.

"I know." She murmurs. "I just hope he’s prepared. Six is a lot. Two was a lot for us- I can’t imagine any more than that at one time." She gives a soft exhale.

"He and Asgore are both previous fathers, I’m sure they've got this." He assured her.

"Asgore had one, and presumably adopted the other at an older age. Unless someone dropped Chara underground as a newborn baby, in which such case they were scum. He’s gonna get six weaned babies." She lifts her brows. "But I suppose. It'll be good for them either way."

He rolled his eyes and chuckled quietly as he gave her a squeeze. "They’ll be fine."

"When one of them comes to you for advice while pulling out their manes, I’m going to laugh and tell you I told you so." She leans up, licks his cheek, and then goes limp. "Sleeeeeeep now Pap. I’m tired, you’re tired, the pups are tired, and we’re parents so we’re not allowed to be uber tired.” Her hidey times non-withstanding.

"And yet we're just simple monsters, let's sleep and we will wake come the morn" he purred, kissing her one last time before he rested his head on his pillows with the intention to keep it there.

Toki draped against him with the intention of not moving until morning, so long as her body let her. She sighed contently, making sleepy sounds as she drifted off in the following silence.
The day had come for Asgore to make his announcement. They’d decided to hang on, to deal with all of the words slung at her, and do the announcement on the day that Toki was scheduled to do her debriefing of sorts and explain on where she had been.

Happily enough, Toki’s morning sickness seemed to have abated as well. She wondered if five weeks marked the end of her first trimester- but she wasn’t sure. All the same, she wasn’t nauseated anymore, so she considered that good enough.

Five weeks, however, should not have meant she was showing. But she was, and had been for a while. So, Toki made the best of it, and she had one of her nice light gray blouses to put on, with Pap’s help. It tied between her wings, so help was needed.

But before she could get dressed, Toki had full intentions on helping Papyrus get dressed. She gave him a hum and a smile, and helped him get his dress shirt buttoned, while he pulled his pants up and made sure his boxers didn’t cause any undue bulges in awkward spots.

Lord knows he didn’t need that.

Aliquam adjusted his pants comfortably before slipping his belt into its loops, before he secured it tightly to make sure he wouldn’t have his pants slipping down. It wouldn’t do to flash his boxers at politicians. Once that was done, he looked to Toki and smiled gently. "Thank you for your help, my love."

She flicked her wings and smiles at him. “You’re welcome, my love.” She smooches his cheek, and finishes his buttons, before grabbing his tie and working to secure it around his neck. “I’ll need your help with my shirt. Do you think your scarf will look okay with it? Or do you think it will be too much?”

"It will look just fine." He purred as he paused her hand to lean in and kiss her head gently. "I assure you, you'll be just fine." He purred.

She smiles at him, and sighs. “I worry all the same, Pap. I’ll manage all the same- and I’ll have you, and Sans, and Papa there to help me. Asgore too, though he’s going to be apart of the meeting.” She chuckled gently, and then gently wiggles her fingers free so she could attend to his tie.

"That’s right... We'll be here to make sure nothing goes wrong." He nodded gently, allowing her to finish on his tie.
“I know.” She made sure he was good to go, and then got his overcoat. It was still a bit nippy when it got breezy, and the coat would look nice on him. “Here you are, dear.” Then she worked on getting her shirt on, turning her back to him so he could do up the lacing on the back and tie it shut between her wings. It framed her belly, enhancing her look of pregnancy, but she honestly didn’t care. She had on a pair of maternity slacks, so the slacks, her blouse, and the scarf would make her look very nice.

He pulled on his coat, and then helped her by threading the lacing delicately, knowing just how tight to make it so it didn’t hurt her. "How does this feel?" He asked.

“Mmm, that’s good. We don’t want to go too tight, or we could make me pop.” She laughs softly. Her wings flex, moving to make sure she had full mobility, and once she was good to go, Toki let out a soft buzz. “Alright. Where did we leave my scarf?”

"By the door, though knowing our children, it might have gotten stolen." He chuckled. "Let's see if they know where it is."

“Indeed.” She snorts. She straightens, and hands him his cane, before dusting herself off. Her hands momentarily pet her swell, before she heads for the bedroom door. “We need to make sure they’re still in their clothes and haven’t stripped out anyways.”

"I hope they haven’t, because it means they won't get Grillby’s afterwards!” He called aloud into the house.

Lo and behold, there was a naked skeleton child running down the hall away from them.

Toki heaved a sigh and went to get Honey.

Skylar had his clothes on still, and he waddled to his daddy and made a face. He was in a tiny suit, just like his dad. "Do we have to wear these? I don't like them."

"Yes, Skylar. This is a very important event, and we must look professional for it." He answered as he adjusted his son's coat.

"But why? If we all came in pajamas then it wouldn't be weird at all." He sighs but lets his dad fix his coat. "We'd all be matching and much more comfortable."

Honey was swiftly wrangled, and carefully wiggled back into her dress and leggings. Toki sighed, and fixed the bow her daughter had wanted tied around her horn, before planting a hand in her lower back and straightening. "Alright. If you go streaking during this event, I'm revoking cartoons for two weeks, Honey. Two whole weeks." She warns her.

Honey's sockets get huge. "Two whole weeks?"

"Two whole weeks." She nods seriously. "Keep the clothes on until we're home again, and you can keep your cartoons."

Honey pouts. "Daddy, tell Momma she can't do that! My cartoons are important!"

"So is this event, Honey. Your mother is right. This is detrimental to our situation." Aliquam spoke sternly to his daughter, "I don't want to see you lose as much as your shoes or Mother will know about it."

Honey pouts at him and sulks. "I'm gonna tell Grandpapa on you."
"You go ahead and tattle to him, baby girl, it's not gonna change a thing because you're our daughter and not his." She ruffles her skull gently, and then ushers her down the stairs. "Go put your shoes on, both of you."

Both kids slunk off with pouts to do just that.

"If anything, I think he would raise the bar to a month anyhow." Aliquam chuckled once they were out of earshot.

"He does seem the type." She snorts, and makes to look for her scarf. "But he is putty in her hands when played the right way. I was a little girl once too, and I was a grandpa's girl. I could play mine like a fiddle. Well better, actually, since I have the musical talent of a flipperless walrus."

He laughed heartily at that, before he pulls her to a stop so he can press a kiss to her head. "I love you, Toki, you're so graceful."

"I love you too. I'd love you even more, mister tall, if you could help me find my scarf. It's big and red and you'd think you could find it anywhere. Apparently not." She makes a soft, frazzled buzzing sound as she nearly trips over Gracie. "Gracie! I love you dearly, but shoo, shoo! Upstairs with you. Go sleep on Papyrus' pillow."

Seeing the cat made Papyrus think, and it didn’t take long for him to put two and two together. He went over to where Gael was snoozing lazily and gently pushed him off his 'bed'.

"Found your scarf, darling." He sighed, holding it up before he began to laugh quietly.

"And it’s covered in cat hair." She sighs. "Thank you, Papy." She padded closer and took it from him. Giving him a quick kiss on the cheek, Toki turned to work on shaking the hair off the red scarf. Gray blended in, but Gael's white did not.

"I'll get some tape and we'll get that fur off." He told her as he started for the garage.

"Alright." She waved a hand at him, and worked on getting as much off by hand as she could. "Silly cats..."

When he came back with tape, Toki cleaned up her scarf, and then got it wrapped around her neck. She hummed, and fluffed her mane over the top, and then gave a little twirl. The gray of her frilly maternity shirt made her look bigger than she was, but she didn’t care. Her shoulders would be a bit nippy, but she’d deal. “How do I look?”

"Darling." He replied happily, fluffing her gently before he hugged her. "You look wonderful."

"Good. I look okay enough to appear before a bunch of stiff politicians?" She blinks big eyes at him, nervous and hopeful.

"Of course." He answered. "You will remind them just who you are; you've got this."

“Good.” She sighs. “Let’s just hope I don’t get nervous and faint in front of everyone, eh?”

"You won’t collapse, you'll do great." He assured her.

“You have more faith in me than I have in myself.” She bumps her skull into his shoulder and sighs. “It’s been a while since I’ve attended one of these. It’s been over two years since I’ve been active in politics. I didn’t... get into them in the other world.” She says. “I’m going to do my best. It’s been a while since you’ve accompanied me to one of these too.” She says. “Just keep your head. They’ll probably touch on rumors and other things.”

"I know... I spent time steeling myself while you were in the shower."

“You’re going to be okay.” She smooches his cheeks. “You know the truth, and what they say will be addressed later, okay?” Toki leans back, and smiles at him, before glancing to the clock. “Alright, let’s go. We’ll be late otherwise, my love.”

"Of course. Come along, pups.” He spoke to the children lightly.

Honey huffed and puffed, but fell in line with her brother as they went to stand with their daddy.

Toki took Skylar’s hand while Honey took Aliquam’s, and together the family set out from the house.

After five hours of repeating what felt like the exact same story over and over again, Toki finally felt she was getting somewhere. Somewhere in the sense that the conversation was finally rounding to a close, and she felt like she wanted to go curl up somewhere and cry, because she was so, so tired of so many eyes staring at her, and so many whispers glinting off her audio range.

She wanted to go curl up in the tub and spend some time with Papyrus, or hell, even retreating into the woods where it was quiet and there was no construction sounds. She and her beast were both agitated, and her beast was too close to the surface for it to be good. She wondered if she could get Papyrus to take her to the lake for a day or two, just so she could unwind away from people.

“So let me get this straight.” One of the politicians rubbed his brows, leaning forward on his elbows as he sighed. “You spent the last six months in an alternate dimension- which was, according to you, running on a different flow of time than here, so you actually spent two years away from here rather than six months. During such time, you… reformed the terrorist known as Cruelty, who became known as Sequoia, and let him- pardon me, her- take control of your body on countless occasions to… do various activities with the family you spent time with there.” The man leaned up and peered at her. “And when you returned, you said some shadowy figure split you in half, and gave Sequoia her own body and left her in this other world- away from the prosecution she would face here. Am I correct?”

Toki grinds her teeth, and nods slowly. "You are correct. However," She tilts her head, "I would like to point out that she paid for her sins. Not in ways you can understand- but she did pay. She got a fresh start. And beyond that, there is nothing that can be done.” She taps her bones on the table she’s seated at out in the grass, and watches the men in front of her. They were up on a ‘pedestal’ of sorts, with hundreds of monsters and humans around them, watching them and what they were saying.

"Are we so sure?” One of the women murmured. "If you opened the portal once, you could do it again so she could face our proper.”

“No.” She shakes her head. “No, I will not.” She says. “That is off the table, and I will not even consider it. Move to something else.”

The woman looked displeased.

The man from before coughed and continued. “Perhaps not to prosecute her then.” He says. “But to extend… a friendship of sorts. Nothing bad could come from sharing our technology with another world like our own- and getting technology in return. From what I understand, they were not nearly as advanced as us. Perhaps our medical technology could help heal their sick, cure their diseases. Nothing bad could come from it.”

“Everything bad could come from it.” Toki frowns. “I don’t think you understood from my explanation. The entire situation- the entire crisis with Cruelty- happened because the colors decided they wanted to help the other worlds too. Darkness, the Void, Magic- they don’t want that. And what they don’t want, they prevent.” Toki sets her teeth in a firm line. “I’m not going to go down the same road as my ancestor souls did.”

“If you were ordered by your government, as a citizen of your nation, you’d have to do as we ordered.” The woman says flatly.

“No.” Toki says, in an equally flat tone. “I would not. As a citizen, I would be required to obey, but as Balance, I am going to tell you no.” Her eye lights glint, and she lets out a soft tsking sound. “And Ma’am? There is not a damn thing you can do to make me. Chain me? I’ll break them. Put me in prison? Good luck trying. I will die before I open the door to the Void. And anyone who threatens my family will die before they can touch them. I am through with threats, Ma’am, even as weak and paltry as the ones you might give.”

“And there’s no need for threats.” The man soothes. “We’ve got no need for it. If you say there’s no need to try and cross the world boarders, then we won’t have you try and cross them.”

“No one will try and cross them- me, you, or the other Hearts.” Toki says. “Because the Void is even less forgiving than I am on the subject, and I pity the fool who tries.”

“I see.” He nods. “We’ll take that into perspective then.”

Toki nods and gave them both a faint sigh. “I pray that you do, or you’ll live to regret it. Or probably won’t.” She would await the day when they broke the barrier to the Void by some fluke, and gave the Void some toys.

“Another matter to note would be your pregnancy.” The woman hummed. “From the… rumors… we’ve heard, we can gather that it’s from the man in the other world. This… Tenne, that you spent your time with.”

“And that,” Toki coughs into her fist, “Means it’s time for Asgore to take a stand. He’s got something to say to you, and to all of the people. And this will be rounding off our debriefing, sirs, ma’am.”

“Alright.” They both leaned back to wait.

With her mentioning of his name, the king stood up and gently cleared his throat, before he stepped forward to speak. "I'd like to thank you, first of all, for gathering for this event, ladies, and gentlemen. I would like to start this off by answering the questions last asked. Yes, during the time that Tokiko was in this alternate realm, she had ended up impregnated by the one known as 'Tenne' before her return.” He spoke.

‘Impregnated.’ You say it like means she wasn’t a willing participant.” The woman arched her brows at him. “So the rumors are true then. She did have an affair outside of her marriage with another man.”

"Not entirely.” He spoke to the woman, his eyes resting on her heavily. ”During her time in the alternate realm, she was made more of a puppet in the control of the entity that was the Void. Her mind was shared, and the puppeteer had alternative plans for her than what she wanted for herself. In the end, regardless, she returned to her husband and they both agree that their marriage is going strong, and that they will not break their bond anytime soon no matter what happened in her time in the other world."

"I see. That's good for them then, that he can overlook such... Transgressions, willing or not." The man nods slowly. "It takes a strong man to raise another man's children as his own. I will give her husband kudos for that."

"Well... there's another thing to that, which might shock many of you. You see, there is a bit of a quirk with our recent miracles." Asgore took a deep breath, and exhaled softly so it didn't echo out to the people. This was it- this was big. "The father of these pups was a young man by the name of 'Tenne'. This, however, was only a nickname he used in the public's eye. It was a shortened version of his full name, Tenebris. By some divine roll of fate, Toki, in her altered state of mind, had fallen for a younger version of the same man I call my own mate."

The man's face twisted curiously, and the crowd around them tittered with growing gossip.

The woman looked disgusted however. "So you're saying she had relations with not only another man, but a man who was her father in law, save in another universe? That is... Reprehensible, and truly ghastly. Is she going to abort the... Problem? Or... Keep it?"

"Councilor," The man protested, "that is out of line."

"I can ask, and he can answer."

The first sound to answer the reporter was a vicious snarl from Tenebris, his lips curled back as he bristled at what the woman had dared to call the pups- his pups.

"Please." Asgore then spoke sternly, a curt tone to his voice. "Allow me to finish without anyone resorting to such inappropriate words or questions."

"Our apologies, King Dreemur." The older man dipped his head. "We'll keep quiet. Please, continue."

Toki sunk a bit in her chair and held in a sigh. She wanted to go home. She wanted to go to the lake top and just be away from people and places and the noise of building... With no whispers of rumors or people around her.

Aliquam wrapped an arm around her and gave her a gentle hug, "You're doing great." He whispered.

"The only thing my mate shared with this male was his name and his place in his universe. He was his own young man. He had no relation to her whatsoever- it was no different than a man or woman having relationships with two separate people who shared the same name and similar hobbies." Asgore spoke flatly. "While it would be strange to imagine, simply think of it this way. This young man had taken her under his roof. He gave her sanctuary and came to love her in his own way, and in the same, she came to return the feelings, albeit these feelings were not entirely her own, but also the affections of Sequoia, and of the Void’s making. She thought they were real- to her, they felt very real and the grief she must have felt at losing him to come here must have been very real as well." Asgore explained.

The duo nodded, but the man elbowed the woman so she didn't say anything rude.

Toki leaned into Papyrus quietly while Asgore spoke. "I want to go to the lake when this is done. Away from people and noise and sound..." She whispers quietly as the speaker crackled under Asgore's voice.

"I agree. It will be healthy for all of us." Aliquam whispered in reply under Asgore's voice.

"Furthermore, bringing home with her these children had brought us a great gift. You see, my mate and I are both males. While some males of monsterkind are able to carry young, for instance Caeruleus here, neither of us are capable of bearing. So we can father, but never could we hope to raise our own. We could not seek others of our species to surrogate.” Asgore hummed. “Boss monsters work a bit differently than regular monsters, so asking my ex-wife to be a surrogate for me and Tenebris was not something that either of us could necessarily do. Likewise, Tenebris as a Blaster Beast tragically hasn't any of his kind to seek. Even with our freedom to the surface."

He looked back to Tenebris, and then turned back to the crowd. "During her time in the other world, Toki was a creature unlike she is here. In fact, she was a sub-species of Tenebris' race. In that same line of thought, she was a sub-species of Tenne's kind. The pups she carries now are pure-blooded Blaster Beast. In other words, the pups of a race of which there is a single survivor known to monsterkind. Toki is carrying these pups to term, but once they are born and at a healthy age to be weaned, they will be adopted by Tenebris and myself, so that my mate may finally have the chance to raise a pack as his species were meant to."

The murmers of the crowd got very quiet after that. The humans went almost completely silent. It was one thing to whore around after all, but to be a surrogate and revive an almost extinct species was an entirely different scenario. Most of them were at a loss as to what to say.

"I see... Well, I suppose we should congratulate you on your impending fatherhood, shouldn't we?" The man gave him a lopsided smile. "The both of you."

"So you're saying that Mrs. Gaster is... basically helping to revive an almost extinct species of monster?" The woman asked afterwards, her brow twitching upwards curiously.

"Thank you." Asgore smiled. "And to answer your question, yes. Toki is the salvation for the Blaster Beast race, as well as what Tenebris hopes for his future with his kind after his own tragic tale... And in the same, allows this old man the chance to have children to call my own." He rumbled, before he smiled as the reserved doctor began to quietly purr, his tail twitching behind him. "And we would have it no better way... " He then stepped back and sat down. He turned to Toki with a smile.

Toki offered a faint smile to Asgore in turn, and then returned to the metaphorical spotlight. “And that’s the gist of it.” She says. “I don’t think any more needs to be said on the subject.” She sighed, and rubbed a hand along the back of her neck. “We’ve all been here for hours, and I for one am tired. I think we can call this good enough?”

“But-"

“That’s fine enough.” The man nods, interrupting his partner. “I’m sure you need your rest, and I’m old enough that cutting the day off early wouldn’t be bad for my health either. I’m sure we can call this adjourned, and put to rest any and all rumors that have been going around.”

“Thank you.” She nods. She shifts, and sits down again, with an almost boneless sigh. Her fingers twitched tiredly, and she finds herself wanting to leave immediately.

Aliquam quickly made to help her up to take her leave, praising her gently as he hugged her close.

Toki leaned into him, but nudged him before he could haul her off. “Gotta get the twins from Papa.” She murmurs softly. She kisses his cheek. “Wait here for me please? I’ll be right back.”
The crowd was starting to move and disperse, so there were people everywhere. She stepped away from him and made her way through them over to Tenebris, and wiggled her fingers at him and the kids.

“Hey Papa.” Toki murmurs softly. “I’m here to get my kids. Papy and I… I think we’re gonna take a drive.”

"A drive?" He asked as he released the children’s hands to pass them back to their mother. "Where are you doing?" He asked.

“Anywhere but here.” Toki sighs and gathers her children to her sides. “But realistically, I think we’re going to the lake. Just… I need some peace and quiet. I know it’s not summer time, but I need somewhere that there’s no whispers, no talk, just… quiet.”

"What if we made it a family vacation?" Aliquam then suggested from behind her. "It would do everyone some good wouldn't it?"

He proceeded to scare the bajeesus out of her with how tightly wound she was, and Toki spooked, her mane fluffing out as her pupils narrowed. She leered at him with a huff, and cuddled the twins to her hips. “It would.” She nods, tilting her chin down slightly.

Papyrus chuckled. "Sorry." He murmured as he gave her a gentle kiss.

Tenebris nodded gently, vaguely amused at her spook. "I agree, a vacation is called for, for us all. " He rumbled, "Where else but the lake? I say it's perfect."

"Okay." She nods, and leans into her husband with a soft sigh. She's anxious and so is her beast and it is a bad combo. "Then we'll meet up in... An hour? That will give you time to spread the word to Caeruleus and Grillby, and to get packed? We'll need tents. It's too cold to go without."

Tenebris nodded in agreement and turned, quietly making his way to his mate and son to share word.

Aliquam smiled to Toki and gently wrapped an arm around her. "You did well today."

"I sure hope I did. I know I didn't win any points by telling that woman she couldn't control me." Toki leaned into him with a sigh, and then guided her husband and children through the crowd and towards home. "The government isn't fond of things they have no control over."

"It's just a message they're going to have to get used to. We are our own people, and though we abide their laws, we are not pawns for their manipulation." Aliquam spoke firmly.

“In their eyes, I’m something in-between. That’s why HTM’s can marry monsters- we’re considered citizens of both worlds, not just monsters and not just humans.” Toki exhaled gently and then sighs. “Whatever. I’ll handle it if it becomes a problem.” She nuzzles her head against his shoulder, and then swings both children into her arms. She grunts as Honey’s knees nail her in the belly. “Oh, my Honey, you’re getting big.”

“I’m gonna be as big as Grandpapa.” She beams.

“Not as big as Daddy?”

“Nooo.” She shakes her head. “I wanna be tall, so I can see all the things.”

“So she can see all the things, Papy.” Toki’s teeth twitch into a smile, and she looked at him with faint amusement.
"Every last thing there is to be seen, she will see it, especially if she grows up to be as big as my father." He replied with a gentle laugh.

"Indeed." She laughed quietly. Toki perked up a bit as she spotted the house. "So… divide and conquer? Do you want to pack the bags, and I'll… Oh. Uh… Never mind. All the tents burnt up." Toki frowns. "Well shoot. It's not warm enough to rough it." Particularly not for the kids- Solstice especially.

"How about we pack pillows and blankets and sleep in the car?" He asked.

"I suppose…" She pursed her teeth and hummed. "We might have to leave a window open though. My wings won’t fit correctly." She’s not sure how they’d all fit and sleep in his car though- it wasn’t designed to fold down all the seats to make a bed. Not that she knew, anyway. Older cars yeah, but fancy new ones, not so much.

"We'll make it work, don't worry." He assured her as he gently gave her a kiss.

"Telling me not to worry doesn’t work." She says softly and sighs. "It would be easier if I could just take my wings off." But they didn’t rip off easily. She wished they did. She wanted to lay comfortably on her back. They didn’t have a mattress designed for that- they’d need a memory foam mattress, which they didn’t have. "But I can’t. So I’m going to worry." She was probably going to slip out of the car and make a nest in a tree. "Riding in the car was doable, but she couldn’t imagine sleeping in it with her wings, her husband, and her kids. Not in her husband’s car. A truck maybe, with a canopy, but…"

Toki shook her head with a soft frustrated buzz, and then headed up the steps and into their house. She set the kids down, ushering them into the living room to play while she stalked off her frustrations to the second floor where she could take care packing them a couple spare pairs of clothes, and herself a set or two, in case she decided to take a dip, or carve out a pool in the sand. She was agitated and frustrated and part of that was her beast, part of that was herself.

It took her most of the hour to make sure she had everything packed that they would need. This wasn't the frightened rush of the last time she had packed to leave her home. This was a family outing, and she was taking her sweet time in collecting clothes and trying to let her body and mind calm down before she was stuck in the car with her husband for an hour or so.

When she had a bag for her and Papyrus finished, and one for the twins done too, Toki clumped back down stairs with every intent of getting some camping food packed away next if Papyrus hadn't gotten to it.

She didn't look as irritated and twitchy when she came down stairs. Though Toki being good at masking things was a lifesaver in that regard.

Aliquam had packed them a few meals in a cooler and packed some snacks, before he collected some bedding. Though as Toki came down the stairs, there was a knock at the door.

The knock at the door had her mane warily tensing, but she made her way over regardless. She opened it without preemptive, and put a smile on her face. "Hello?"

Tenebris was standing there, carrying a massive duffle bag. "Hello, Toki dear." He purred happily.

"Asgore and I got a little something you can use… well-" He then looked at the item he was carrying and laughed gently, "Weeeell… not so little. It’s our tent."

Toki looked bewildered at the massive duffle bag in his arms. She took a closer look at the picture on it, and saw that it was a tent. It was something she could use indeed, though she wasn’t sure how they’d get an utterly massive duffle bag inside of Papyrus’s car. “Not so little indeed, Papa, good lord.” She wanted to know when he’d gotten it, and when he’d found the time. Maybe he’d stayed in a tent a while before she’d gotten back though. “I’m… not sure how we’ll bring that with us. That should fit… Hel- Heck,” she corrected, knowing her kids were somewhere within hearing range, “that should fit all of us for a night or two, if we all bunk closely together.”

"I'll teach Papyrus how to strap this to the roof of your car. I remember we got this after we lost our last one and it could use a good breaking in." He chuckled, "It should fit your wings perfectly."

“That's going to be a big relief.” Toki smiles. “Papyrus was thinking we’d camp in the car, and I wasn’t sure I could… manage that.” She flicks her wings. “But, all of us- the whole family- could probably fit in the tent. A big cuddle pile.” It was still cold enough for one of those. She huffed gently and reached up to try and take part of the tent’s weight for him. “Well, don’t stand in the door way all day, Papa. Come in, come in. I think Papyrus is finishing getting ready.”

He nodded and stepped inside, closing the door behind him before he set down the duffel. "Cuddle piles, mmh, how long has it been since I’ve enjoyed one of those...?" He chuckled quietly.

"With me? Before I fell into the Void." Toki gave him a sad smile. "I'm sure you had others after, but they probably weren't the same." She'd seen one in the vision Phase had given her, and they had been... Sad. Crying. There had been a lot of tears. Shaking her head, because that wasn't something they would have to deal with again, Toki hummed. "Did you and Asgore get some clothes packed up, Papa? Its about time for us to meet up and head out, isn’t it?"

"We won't be staying at the lake past dinner. This is your night with your husband, you deserve it."

"You're not?" She blinks slowly. "Huh... I thought we all were staying to get away for a little bit."

"Maybe, but you deserve it more right now. Asgore and I can have some other time together, and it's too cold for Grillby and Solstice to stay in such conditions as a lakeside."

Toki shook her head. "I don't deserve anything. But you're right... Even if we stayed far from the water, lakes get colder than forested areas do. Even in a cuddle pile, I wouldn't risk them getting sick." She sighs a bit. Part of her had wanted the whole pack there, but another was simply pleased that she'd have time with Papyrus and her children.

He leaned down to press his head to hers and he gave a gentle rumble. "Well tell you what. When you get back tomorrow, I’ll see about opening up the space in my living room and we’ll all gather in there like a pack."

“Tomorrow… Or the next day.” She tilts her head and gives him a faint smile as she bumped her noggin against his. “This isn’t just for me. My beast is… on edge. If I don’t get her away from all of this talk for a little while, she’s going to snap, and it’s not going to be pretty.” She exhaled softly, and made a soft warbling sound to him. “But that does sound nice, Papa. Gathering together would be nice. The pack that cuddles together is the pack that stays together. Those not as in touch with their beasts, or those lacking them, don’t quite understand. I didn’t before, but I do now.” She blinks up at him slowly. She now knew what Tenne and his boys had been talking about when they’d pulled her into their little nest and welcomed her into their little pack, despite her hesitance and constantly pulling away.

Beasts needed other beasts.

"It will be healthy for all of us.” He rumbled in agreement, before he looked up at Aliquam as he came back.

The younger man was chuckling as he reached up and pressed his palm to Tenebris' face. "Father, you're hovering over her again." He laughed gently.

"Blaster beasts are a social race and she understands!" The beast keened as his tail dropped behind him once more before he chirped and ratted in irritation as he leaned back in surrender.

“I do understand,” Toki laughs, and made a soft chirping sound to soothe Tenebris. She chittered a soft beastly sound at him, a promise for cuddles later when they weren’t busy, and then leaned up to smooch Papyrus’ cheek. “He’s not wrong. Blaster beasts are a social race, at least within their pack. When you’re not considered pack, they can treat you kindly, but keep you at arms reach, until you earn your place. But when you are pack, they’re very social. Physical contact, vocal sounds, it’s all part of being in a pack.” She smiled up at him. “Papa hasn’t had contact with many who understand, since, well…” Papyrus had locked up Sentinel, and Toki had no idea the status of Sans’ beast. “So he’s… touch starved to be with his own kind, I guess? Or someone who understands, at least. It will ease in time. When you and Sentinel learn more, you’ll understand too.” She taps his nasal ridge gently, and then hums. “Is everything ready? It looks like we’ll have a tent to rest in, instead of the car.”

"Yes, I just need to finish loading things in and get the pups in as well, then we will be ready." He rumbled. He pressed a kiss to Toki’s head, gave his father a patient yet un-amused smile, and turned to do as he said he would, calling the children to prepare them to go.

Toki watched him and hummed, wondering what the strange look on his face was for. Was he... Jealous? Or possessive? She's not sure. Either way, she'd talk to him about it later if it became an issue. "Well, I need to go get our bags down to the car. The garage is a nice touch up to the house rebuild, by the way." She smiles wryly. "Go get your ride of choice and Asgore, Papa. We'll meet you in... Fifteen minutes? Maybe less, if the kids are cooperative.

"I thought you'd like the garage." Tenebris chortled, before he gave a nod. "Alright, see you soon then." With that, the older male started out.

Once he was gone, Aliquam folded his arms and closed his eyes for a moment. His fingers curled, before he made a face, though after seconds he opened his eyes again, whatever just happened having passed quickly.

Toki didn't see his face, but she saw his clenched fists. She frowned, and made her way over to him. The kids were still occupied in the living room, 'getting ready' so they claimed, so she took a moment to gently slide her fingers along his shoulders, and then nuzzle her face into his back. One of her smaller hands slid down to where his fist was tightly clenched around his cane, and she rubbed his knuckles softly. "Are you okay? We don't have to go camping if you're hurting today." She had completely forgotten his leg for a moment. Camping was going to be rough on it. Well... Shit, she felt terrible. She'd bring extra pillows to help pad his leg.

"Mmh." A purr-like exhale was released when she nuzzled his back and he looked at her with a smile. "I'm just fine, my darling. Sentinel is simply voicing his opinions to me, it's nothing too important." The hand clenched around his cane loosened and he lifted two fingers to gently hook onto hers, giving them a loving squeeze as he slowly turned to wrap an arm around her. "I want you to have a nice getaway night. It matters more to me that you get a chance to relax and be happy."

“I'm happy with you wherever I am.” She tells him, and leans up to nuzzle him. “And Sentinel’s opinions matter, dear. But, if it was something I needed to know, I’m sure you’d tell me.” She gives him a warm smile, and then hums softly. Her fingers rub his, and she’s content to cuddle up to him for a moment. “Alright, my love. Let’s get the kids wrangled up, and I’ll pack some extra pillows. I plan to make a nest in the tent, and no nest is complete without being extra soft.”

“I’ll go get mine!” Honey chirped, and hoofed it up the stairs to fetch the pillows from her room.

Toki laughed. “Now I’ve done it. Well, let’s get stuff to the car.” She lifted a hand up and stroked over his cheekbones, rubbing the prominent edge gently. “If something’s bothering you, you can talk to me, Pap. Even when I’m upset about something, I’ll listen, okay? I love you and Sentinel both.”

"Of course, I best go get my pillows too once everything’s loaded. Think you can handle latching the pups into their seats?” He asked.

"Of course!” She beams. "Getting the kids wrangled is easier with four hands, dear." She does a four-handed jazz hand at him, and then scoops up their kids as Honey gallops down the stairs. Smooching both of their cheeks, Toki grins and makes her way down to the car to open the trunk and then get the kids in their seats. "Did you two bring toys?” She figured they were stuffed in their pillows, or elsewhere.

She got bumped a bit on the stairs as Stag came behind her in their bipedal form. They had Snuggle in one arm, and Sobek wrangled in the other. The deer beast gave her a soft bleat, and then made their way to the back seat, stuffing the baby summons into the floorboard of the car, before changing shape and climbing in to nest with the little ones.

Stag was coming along too.

Stag coming along wouldn’t bother Aliquam in the least.

Collecting Pillows and a few thick blankets, Aliquam went out to the car and loaded them up. A gaze into the distance could see Cae and Grillby packing a cooler into their truck. Looks like dinner would be covered easily enough.

Toki got the twins buttoned into their carseats, and fetched toys out of their pillows, before leaving them to occupy themselves while she headed back inside and upstairs. She fetched their clothing bags and extra pillows and blankets from her hidden nest, and then trundled down the stairs with her many arms fully loaded.

The spacious trunk was going to be overly stuffed.

“We still need to tie the tent duffle to the top of the car.” She hums to Papyrus as she gently bumps him with his hip so she can wedge in with him and pack the trunk.

"Right." And with that he padded back into the living room, snagged the duffle, and rejoined her. He grabbed some straps and hefted the tent duffle up higher onto his shoulder, before hobbling to the side of the car. "This won’t take long at all if you’d like to start warming up the car.”

“Sure.” Toki nods. She shifts, and slips her hand into his front pocket, groping around for the keys. Once she finds them, she pads around to the drivers door, and slips inside, trying to get her wings situated some. Eventually she gave up, and simply started the car, making sure the parking break was on so it didn’t roll off. Once the engine was purring nicely, she stroked the wheel and hummed softly. “I haven’t drove a car in… years.” She murmurs lightly, and then carefully climbs out of the car. Bracing her hand on her lower back, Toki grunted and made her way around the car. “Alright—anything I can do to help with the duffle?”
"You could brace the hook, make sure Ht doesn't come undone when I tighten it." He told her, and grabs the hook that would secure one end of the duffle bag.

She nods, and leans up to grab the end of it. She holds the ends of the hooks still as he ties it down, and then gives an experimental tug when he's done.

It moves only a little, but it should stay just fine going down the road. "Looks good to me." She says.

He nodded gently then gave her a smile. "Get comfy, I'll go make sure everyone else is ready."

"Alright." She gave him a cheeky salute, and did a quick check of the house to make sure it was locked up and that they had everything, before crawling into the front seat. She settled with her back against the seat and dealt with any cramps her wings had. They were flexible after all, so bending them wasn't an issue, just uncomfortable somewhat. She relaxed back, fluffed her mane, and then settled in to quietly stroke her belly as she listened to the kids playing with their toys in their car seats.

Papyrus returned as Cae's truck began pulling out into the road that would lead out of the village.

"Alrightie, we're off." He announced as he climbed into the car.

"Sounds good." She smiles. She could hear the telltale roar of Tenebris' car making its way through the houses too, and she gave a soft bemused sound, before leaning over to cuddle her head to his shoulder. Getting away was going to be so nice for everyone- even if they were the only ones staying the night.

"This will be healthy for the both of us. I'm looking forward to this." He purred as he replied to her cuddle with a soft kiss to her head as he started the car out of the garage. "Everyone could use the evening off, but I think it will help your beast as much as you to have a night out." He rumbled.

"It's kind of sad that no one else is staying the night with us, but at the same time I understand." If she hadn't been pregnant, keeping the tent heated all night wouldn't be an issue. As it was, small summons for long periods of time was exhausting. Toki nuzzled into his shoulder, hooking her horn around his arm so she could be a bit more comfortable without jabbing him, and then settled contently for the long drive up. "My beast might stretch her legs some today. She's anxious and cooped up, and some fresh forest air would be good for her, instead of the smell of machinery and construction."

"Knowing Father, he'll make it up for not staying tonight. He seemed excited earlier... I wonder just what's going on in that ancient mind of his." He chuckled quietly.

"With old men, you never know." She snorts. "Same to be said with young one's too. Never know what mischievous things could be cooking up in your noggin."

"And according to his Majesty, Father always had something growing in his mind, whether a scheme or simple mischief..."

"The mischief would probably be the Felis in him." She laughs into his shoulder. "Considering the mischief our cats get into... And the fact that the same cat toys work on Gracie and on Papa when he's in one of his moods, I'd say it says something."

"Just keep me from grabbing the laser pointer when I feel like spitting him. I'd hate to have him punish me for that."

"All you have to do is bring it out again and wiggle it just right, and he can't resist pouncing it." She snorts. "I'll protect you from the big bad alpha, don't worry."
He laughed at that, and a Papyrus laugh was always healthy to hear. "I do not fear my father." He then spoke.

"That’s good. You shouldn't fear your dad. I don't either." She answers softly. "Not anymore, at least."

His smile faded at hearing that and he reached to take her hand, "You still remember the incident, huh?"

She laced her fingers with his. Even her primary hands were much more delicate than his own, not to mention her much smaller secondary ones. "I do." Toki murrs. "But I've worked past it. When I told your father that I was fine with him walking around in his beast form, I wasn't lying. I had time to heal and get used to it." Of course, getting speared deep by Tenne in his beast form was definitely one method of exposure therapy that she wouldn't recommend to everyone.

"I'm glad." His hand squeezed hers, and then slowly let her go to continue steering.

She peeked open one eye socket and watched him curiously. "Out of curiosity, do you have another form you can choose to take for when your beastly side is in control?"

"I believe I might. When we last let Sentinel out, he did urge me to try to do something, perhaps it was just that."

"Maybe we can give it a go sometime. I wonder what it looks like, given that you're all bone." She gently pokes a finger into his knee. "Try as you might to hide extra bones, but I can see right through you."

He chuckled, "Maybe tonight. It'll be just us after all."

"Us and the kids. But, they sleep early. We'll put them in the nest with Snuggle and Sobek, and then the night is ours." She smiles at him.

"Precisely." He chuckled softly.

“Indeed.” She nuzzled his shoulder, and settled down for the drive.
Chapter 123

Strider Notes: Chapter 123 is an amusing name. I like it. XD Lots of fuckin’ chapter’s we’ve done. Also… Honestly, I feel like we owe it to you guys to have something soft and not so… yeah. So have a cute, soft chapter~

Unlike the village, which had melted off most of the snow, just an hours drive up towards the lake proved that there was a lot more snow yet to melt off. The lake was frozen over, several inches thick with ice, and it seemed like the coming spring hadn’t even touched it yet.

The snow was untouched, no animals or people having disturbed it all winter. It was pure and thick, nearly as deep as their children were tall.

It was perfect.

When everyone was parked, Toki slid from the car, and let her legs sink into the snow. She inhaled the crisp, cool air, and smiled. It was different than the last time they had been here. But… it was good. She turned to help get the kids out of the back, and let them run off into the snow to frolic, while the adults unloaded.

“It is very different than the last time I was here.” Asgore blinked as he stepped from the car. “I was thinking it would be thawed, and that we might swim.”

“Me too, don’t worry.” She laughs. “But it’s just fine. I like it.” She inhales softly and smiles wider. “It just means we need to melt the snow to make the campsite. But that’s fine. We can build up a windbreak and enjoy ourselves in the snow. Maybe ice skate a little bit, if the ice is thick enough.”

Tenebris got out of his car and rumbled as he looked around. "It's beautiful." He purred.

"I agree." Aliquam spoke as he carefully got out as well, making sure he wasn't at risk of slipping.

The snow was remarkably not slick, much ice not having formed over the fluffy snow. There was no risk of slipping, except on the snow already trampled down.

Toki hefted out a bag, and then grunted as she felt something slam into her leg and try to skitter up.

Snuggle looked utterly beside himself, distressed as he tried to climb up her leg and away from the chill.

“Oh goodness, Snuggle.” Toki sighed. She set the bag back down, and stooped down, picking up the oversized grub. His cold feet pulled at her clothes, and he wrapped around her body like a massive, shivering scarf, chittering at her unhappily. She patted his back and sighed. “Alright, I’ll hold you until we get the tent up.” She rubs his head gently, and then loads her arms.

Stag gets out in their deer form, with Sobek cradled in their golden antlers, and the deer proceeds to prance through the snow. The deer didn’t seem to mind the cold and chill, and showed as much by bounding around and keeping the kids corralled.
Grillby’s pant legs steamed a little as he got out, but he didn’t seem too bothered by the snow. He had lived in Snowdin after all- snow was different than rain. He had Solstice strapped to his chest to keep her warm, and it left him with his hands free as he went to grab the cooler for Caeruleus.

Asgore watched, and then approached Toki with a soft hum. He tittered, and took the bags from her, before shooing her along. “I know you’re not as far along as you were with the twins last time we were here, but still, I’d rather you relax. Leave the luggage to us, yes? Why don’t you and Papyrus go find a suitable spot to set up your tent?”

Toki puffed up a little bit, but sighed. “You know, I have not one, not two, but four perfectly good arms, right?”

"He does know how to set up the tent and his height would make it easy for everyone.” Papyrus came and wrapped an arm around her as he pulled her away slowly, "Come on, let's go find a nice place for our tent.”

She deflated at his touch and made a soft chittering noise at him. Toki leaned into her mate with a soft sound and nodded. “Okay.” Her wings twitched, and she relented, letting the other men in her life unload everything as her husband dragged her away.

The snow was thick and cold, even to her bones, but it wasn’t slick. She walked with him slowly, going at his pace as she knew he’d be struggling with his prosthetic in snow that came to his knee. "You know... This sort of snow is perfect for a den," she muses to her husband, and then blinks slowly. That was a bit odd to say. Alright then. "Anyway... What about that flat area by the trees? I can melt the snow, and we’ll have flat ground to do whatever we want." It would take a good chunk of magic, but it wasn’t out of the question.

"Not a bad idea, but I don’t want you using up the magic. You’ve got a better use for it. I think we can use the snow as a bit of extra cushion, you know?"

She sighed softly. “But Papy, honestly, I’d be okay using some magic to melt the snow. But if you’re sure, we’ll still need to flatten it, or we’ll sink in as soon as we climb into the tent. Either flatten it, or dig it down some.”

"We’ll set the tent up over it and let the pups weigh it down with their weight." He chuckled.

She snorts. “They’re skeletons. If they were flesh and bone, I’d say it’s a legitimate method, but heck, Snuggle weighs more than the twins do.” The grub chitters at her, and she pats his rump, before nudging Papyrus. She eyes a small curve of trees that’s fairly sheltered, and where there’s not much foliage. There is, after all, poison ivy and nettles and the like in the undergrowth that she has no desire to deal with. “There.” It’s close to where they had camped prior, but further up towards the trees and away from the lake.

"I like it." Papyrus praised, making his way over to examine it before he nodded in approval. "This will do very nicely, good eye, Toki."

She made a soft chittering sound at him again, a very much Insectis noise, and then unwrapped Snuggle from her person. She looped the grub over Papyrus, letting all four feet of him drape like the world’s clingiest scarf, and then she stooped down, settling onto all fours to begin digging in the snow and clearing off at least half of the surface snow by hand. If he said no magic, then she’d just do it manually, stubborn as she is. Besides, being on all fours stretched her back, and she had three arms to dig with while one braced.

He voiced a brief sound of complaint as she began to dig manually before he huffed in defeat and came over, doing his best to help kick some out of the way.

Though soon they were aided as Tenebris came over and chuckled. "Digging old fashion way hm? It's wise to save your magic, and four arms I’d wager make it easier." He rumbled as he then knelt down to help her, digging into the snow and part of the ground to break up the hard surface.

Toki hummed. “I was going to use my magic to melt off some of the snow, but Papy said not to. So,” She grins, “I have a workaround. I’m pregnant, not useless. And Papa, really? I would think your massive shovel hands dig better than my tiny skeleton hands. The snow falls between my bones most of the time.”

"Do you want my help or not, you little wiseass?" He stuck his tongue out at her. "I retain enough nesting knowledge to make this as comfortable as it can get for you and Aliquam."

Toki formed her tongue specifically to blow a spectacularly immature raspberry at him, and then chucked a puff of snow at him. It wasn’t firm enough to form a good handful, so at most he got a fluff of snowflakes over his shoulders. “Help would be good.” Her wings shift, and she flutters them, blowing away loose and powdery snow. “Do you know I lived in a den made of snow for a while in the other world? It was very cold.”

"Cold at first, I would have bet. But properly packed dens can retain a substantial amount of heat.” He shook his form to get the snow off before he huffed. "How long did you stay in it?" He asked.

“Not all that long, actually. I spent a bit of time taking care of Tenne’s kids while working for Grillby.”

“I had forgotten that you’d worked for the other me,” Grillby hummed as he approached, arms heavy with baggage and coolers. “I should offer you a job.”

“I’d rather not.” She laughs. “Your bar here is hell compared to down there. Anyway, I spent time caring for them while working there, since Tenne was busy working. They adopted me into their home the night that Tenne came home, and I lived on the couch again.”

Asgore dropped the tent duffle, and then slid in next to Tenebris and Toki, laughing softly as he used his large, fluffy hands to scoop snow. He winked up at Papyrus, hoping to keep the young skeleton from getting irked that he couldn’t help his mate dig a nest. If it was a community thing, then it was less of a ‘mates digging together’ thing. “Toki,” He hummed softly, “please be careful, alright? I know you’re strong, but don’t strain yourself.”

“I won’t.” She sighs. “My back hurts, but it’s been hurting for a while. Nothing is going to change it. There’s six little ones in my belly, and six is going to put a bit of strain on my back.”

Aliquam puffed up a little as he was going to tell her again to be careful, but Cae thumped his shoulder before he could start up and pulled him away to start setting up the tent for placement. "Come on, bro, you were always better at setting these things up anyhow."

Point to Caeruleus for the clever ruse to distract the worrywart.

"Poor lad." Tenebris sighed quietly once the brothers were out of earshot.

“Eh?” Toki glanced to Tenebris, arching her brow. “Why ‘poor lad’?” She inquired, and moved over, beginning to build up the walls of the ‘nest’ that would hold the tent, and cradle their bedding under it.

"I can tell his beast is influencing him. He’s growing more and more protective as your pregnancy progresses...” He explained. "I'm wondering if this has to do with his retirement...

Toki grunts before she can reply, and huffs as her palms slip in the snow, making her momentarily face-plant and ‘eat snow’.

“Bones in snow doesn’t quite work, my dear.” Asgore laughs softly, and reaches out a gentle hand to help straighten her up and make sure she hadn’t hurt herself. “Let your pack members prepare your nest for you, alright? Then, perhaps I might donate some magic tonight, if that would be alright. My sweet, eager mate over here has been hogging our children.” He teasingly bumps Tenebris’ shoulder, and gives him a warm smile.

Tenebris gave Asgore a look but it was lighthearted and teasing.

“Ah...” She nodded slowly and sat down at Asgore’s urging. “I wouldn’t mind if you wanted to donate magic, Asgore. They’re as much yours as they are Papa’s. Anyways, Papa, I see what you mean. It... might be the cause? His beast and I had a talk, and I think he’s fairly insecure about... his leg.” She says quietly. “I’m honestly not sure how things are going to go as it continues. He... may get grumpy with you, Papa.” She says honestly. “He was very firm in the fact that he doesn’t fear you in the car...” She was also fairly certain that his beast was an alpha, even if Papyrus himself was not an alpha personality.

The older man took in what she had to say, and gave a soft hum as he considered her words.

"I wonder if a night of freedom is what he needs." He rumbled. "I think in a few nights we should all gather in my home and have a night of beasts." He offered, "I'll prepare raw meat, a proper nest, and leave the doors closed so that we may have a night simply to let our inner instincts run rampant. Aliquam is resilient. It would do him some good to let his beast blow off some steam."

“It would do everyone some good, I think.” Toki says softly, nodding as she exhales quietly. “I wonder how my beast will react to everyone... She’s only ever been around Tenne’s beast, and around Papyrus. She hasn’t even met Sentinel yet.” She muses lightly. “It should be interesting.”

“Mmm, I could take the twins and help Grillby watch the children.” Asgore nods. He didn’t have a beast of his own, thusly was counting himself out. “I never mind spending time with the kids. Thumper can help me keep the twins rounded up.” He chortles.

"Now that I think about it." Tenebris then looked at Grillby. "Has Caeruleus let his beast out any time since he moved in with you?" He asked.

“No.” The fire elemental shook his head. He was busy unpacking things, and digging out a space in the snow to put a fire pit so they could cook. His hands were steaming, but it didn’t seem to bother the old general too much. “He’s acted strange, sometimes, but I don’t believe I’ve met his beast. Or at least, I might not have realized it. Either way, I do not mind. I love him regardless of if he wants to introduce me or not.”

Toki nods. “I’ve never seen an inkling of it either. I did have a brief meeting with Pap’s beast before I was taken into the void though. We, uh...” She flushes. “Anyway,” She coughs, “It’s going to be a lot of first meetings. I’m probably going to keep partial control, mind you. My beast... if she feels threatened at all, I can’t guarantee she won’t lash out.”

And with Toki’s power, she could dust any one of them. Toki would never forgive herself for that.

Noticing what he was doing, Tenebris let Asgore dig the last of the nest while he went to help Grillby dig. "I am rather surprised, Aliquam showed more feature of a Felis, while Caeruleus is more of a Canis, and yet they behave like the complete opposite than what might be the norm behavior of each.”

“I don’t necessarily act like a bug, yet I’m fully Insectis.” Toki arches her brows at her Papa, and then shifts back down to help Asgore dig once more since Tenebris had went to help Grillby. She rounded it out, and once it seemed good, she straightened and gave a pleased buzz. “You act like a cat though, Papa. Papyrus might have even packed the laser light.” Was she flicking him shit? Oh yes. Yes she was.

Grillby snorted a plume of smoke, and laughed quietly into the top of his daughter’s head as she giggled a high, twinkling sound at his laughter.

"I don’t see the relevance to him packing the light." Tenebris murmured, pressing his lips together. He totally did see the relevance.

"Oh we all know you need your exercise." She grins, looking completely unrepentant. "What better way to get you into shape to be a dad to little ones again than to get you to spin in circles until you trip over your hands and roll through the grass, hm?"

Even Asgore laughed at that one as he straightened and dusted off his hands. "That was a most memorable crash."

He bristled at Asgore. "Do not encourage them, fluffybuns." He hissed quietly. "I might need to work off a little retirement but it does not mean I am so willing to embarrass myself for a simple light."

"A little retirement?" Toki gives him a playful look. "I dunno. Might be more than just a little. Too much tea, too many naps..." She pats her middle. "Going to be as big as me."

Asgore guffaws, and patted his lover on the back. "I can assure you, he’s in perfect shape. Round is a shape. One that I love very much." His hand, hidden from view of their companions, wandered down to goose Tenebris on the ass. "Yes, nice and round and perfect for my hands."

Toki squinted slowly. "Why do I feel like I just witnessed something dirty?"

Tenebris did gasp and proceed to leap over the fire pit and swipe snow at Asgore, bristling as his cheeks darkened.

Asgore took the improvised snowball to the face with grace, and wiped it from his beard as he laughed. "I'm sorry, dear, I couldn't resist getting in on the fun and feeling young again."

Toki laughs and stretches, planting her hand on her lower back with a soft groan. "I'm too old to be carrying six. They're not even big and they're already heavy on my spine." She had an inkling six was designed to be carried on all fours. She refused to walk on all fours constantly. Just... No. She wouldn't be able to reach anything in the house if she did. "So... Did we pack chairs this time or do we need to go fetch some logs to sit on?" She didn't recall packing chairs, but maybe one of the others had lawn chairs they'd gotten after the firebombs.

"Of course we packed chairs." Tenebris rumbled, before he chuffed and shook himself slightly, tail rattling as he sulked at his mate. The larger, pale beast got up to go collect the chairs.

"I wasn't sure if you even had chairs, to be honest." She had brought all of her camping equipment last time. This time, she had none. She didn't know what they had and what they didn't have. Toki hummed, and then summoned a few small bees to go collect tinder for a fire. It took a little dip of magic, but Stripe and her companions didn't pull much from her.

Asgore sighed and looked put over the snow. "Thumper is missing out." He decides. "But he wanted to stay over at Twitch's house again, or he'd be here, helping us corral the twins."

"I haven't gotten to see nearly enough of that boy." Toki blinks. "He's sure busy with Twitch... Think he likes her?"

"Undoubtedly." The king nods. "A child's crush is sweet and innocent. Who am I to deny him time with her?"

"His father." Grillby hums. "He is missed here, but he can come next time, when its thawed and he can swim with the twins."

"Indeed." Toki beams.

At around this time, Cae and Aliquam came back. "Is the den ready?" Aliquam asked, his tone a lot more settled than it was before he was snatched by his brother.

"It is." Toki nods lightly, and motions to the mostly smooth swath of snow at her feet. Padding to her husband, she takes Snuggle from him, and then leans up to kiss his cheek. "Thank you for getting the tent unrolled and ready to be set up."

"Happy to help." He kissed hers in return then gave her a soft squeeze. "Looks like you guys started on the fire pit."

"Grillby did." She nods. "I suppose he does want to warm up. I sent a couple bees into the woods for some tinder." Toki bites down on her metaphorical tongue and waits for the stink eye she's going to get for using her magic.

"Only a few? Good." He nuzzled her lightly. "Just make sure not to keep them out too long."

"Just long enough to get some kindling for the fire." She nods, relieved he wasn't grumbling at her.

Asgore hummed, and set to work putting up the tent for them.

Toki smiled, and leaned into Papyrus with a soft sigh. "It's going to be very nice to camp together tonight. I'm very good at soft nests." This would be his first time-sharing a nest with her. A bed was one thing. A nest was another.

"It will be wonderful indeed." Aliquam agreed, Tenebris chuckled quietly as he returned, having heard the last of that statement. "I'm starting to get jealous that we decided not to stay the night as well." He laughed.

Toki laughed. "Well you made your choice. You could always stay, I'm not going to tell you no. But you didn't pack any more clothes for sleeping, only swimming. Which... For you, Papa, is gloves. You would be quite cold in the buff." She cuddles into Papyrus, content to be near him while she chatters to his father. "Besides, I'm sure you'll see my superior nesting skills on our 'beast' night."

"You thought I packed with the intention to swim?!" Tenebris boomed with laughter at that. "I wasn't going to go anywhere NEAR the water!" he shook his head, "I suppose I might have brought a spare set of clothes in case it got chilly" he then chortled a little quieter, rubbing his head

Aliquam stared at his father, before he chuckled and shook his head. "Do you want to stay for the nesting, father?"
"I wouldn't want to impose, we don't have a second tent..."

Toki noticed the stare out if the corner of her socket, and her case shifted so she watched Papyrus thoughtfully, wondering what his stare had been about. "I figured you'd dig a little pool in the sand for us all to lounge in, and we could fill it with water for me to heat. Sort of a self made hot tub. But certainly not in this chill." She snorts. "It would be tight quarters with all of us, but it could be done." She wants to know if her husband is alright with it, or if he simply wants the night with her instead, so she bumps him discretely in the ribs with her secondary elbow, and makes a tiny noise at him.

He grunted at the elbow, before he rubbed his side and chuckled, "It's quite a massive tent... I suppose it wouldn't hurt to have Father and his Majesty tonight."

"You two are stayin' the night?" Cae piped up.

Aliquam peered over then he chuckled, "If Grillby and Caeruleus stuck around we'd have a heater in the nest, wouldn't we?"

"You forget that I put off heat too, Papy. Though, I asked Papa if we all were going to stay. He seemed convinced it was too cold for Grillby and Solstice to stay the night." Toki wagged a brow at them all. It seemed the old man was going to be out voted and Toki was going to have a full nest.

Grillby rolled his shoulders and straightened with a grunt. "Out in the open it would be too cold for Solstice. I am old, my flames more established. In a shelter with others that have flame magic, she would be just fine. If you want us to stay, then I don't mind staying. If you'd rather have a night in the wild with your wife, I don't mind going home. I can drive out tomorrow or whenever you wish to help dismantle the tent." Since it did require someone of substantial height to put it up.

"Seems everyone's staying tonight then." Aliquam laughed gently, before he hugged Toki softly. "We might need to make a food run in that case."

"That depends on what Grillby and Sans brought." She cuddled under his arm, and looked to her brother in law. "So, what's in the cooler~?"

"Steaks, brought some salad. Stuff we don’t need plates and fancy forks for, that kinda stuff." Cae answered as he sat down and made grabby hands at Grillby for his daughter.

Grillby hummed and pulled Solstice from her carrier, before handing her over to her mother.

Solstice beamed up at Sans, and stuffed a fist into her mouth with an adorable coo. “Ubbahh!”

“Steaks and salad, huh?” She smiles. “That should work fine enough for tonight’s dinner.” Toki glances to Tenebris and chuckles quietly. “Of course, if we find ourselves short of food, the mighty hunter could always go hunting.”

"Damn right." Tenebris seemed to fluff up with pride at that suggestion from Toki.

"I packed seasoning too so if Dad did go hunting, we could still eat like kings and Queens." Cae laughed, giving Solstice a soft hug before lowering his gaze to press kisses to her a few times in dear appreciation for his daughter.

Solstice squeaked happily, and clung to his face, nuzzling her warm blue flaming cheeks against his.

Toki laughed at her niece’s adorable antics, and smiled softly. “I definitely wouldn’t turn down flavored meat. I spent enough time eating unflavored things during my stint in the other world to last a life time.” She shifts, and grins at Tenebris, before going to help him set up chairs. Her bees returned with kindling, and piled it into the middle of the cleared fire pit. It wasn’t enough for a full fire, but would do to get them started. Toki returned them to their realm, and then huffed softly. “I miss having full access to my magic.”

“Well with three sources of magic I wonder if it would be safe for some extra magical output, right pops?” Cae piped up.

Tenebris hummed quietly then nodded slowly. "If Asgore, as a boss monster, shared his magic, I would suppose it would mean you have enough for safe output.”

Toki waved a hand in the air and snorted as she set up chairs for everyone. Once they were set up, she stretched her arms, and then straightened. “Then I’d basically be using you all as extra batteries, just because I’m impatient. I’ll manage. I don’t want to leave everyone drained dry like some sort of magic vampire.”

“I still do plan to donate, but perhaps later tonight, after we’ve frolicked in the snow some.” Asgore smiles, as he finishes the tent.

Scooting back over to Papyrus, Toki leans up to kiss him, and then smiles quietly. “I kind of want to see if the ice is thick enough to ice skate on. Or at least slide around on it. But first… Now that the tent is up,” She glances to the finished product, “I have a nest to make.”

It seemed to get all the Gasters’ attention when she said nest, but Aliquam had immediately snapped out of staring at her to instead prompt her with a gentle question. “Shall I assist you with preparing the nest, love?” He asked.

Though she would admit, as soon as she said nest, it was almost creepy how fast three sets of eyes locked onto her and seemed to stare. She was relieved by his question, though her brother in law interrupted her before she could speak.

"Grillby and I will get started on preparing what we have.” Cae announced, putting Sol over one shoulder and patting her back as he got up.

Tenebris noticed both boys attempting to make themselves useful and he leaned back, rumbling quietly as he took his seat and leaned back, purring quietly Solstice squealed, and giggled happily. Up on her Mother's shoulder though gave her access to seeing her Grandpa better, and she cooed, making grabby hands at him.

"I would love your help, Pap.” She wasn't going to tell him no. Toki fluffed up, and then padded off to fetch blankets and pillows for the first load into the tent.

When she got back with her armload from the car, she clamored in, and started lining the tent bottom with pillows to give it a solid base for them to work with.

With an armful of blankets, Aliquam was right behind Toki, though he stopped at the entrance of the tent, simply passing her pillows and blankets as she called for them.

Tenebris and Asgore had taken the chance to go for a walk, leaving the brothers and their mates.

Toki clicked softly as the older couple wandered off, hearing their footsteps leaving, and she set to work building the nest. Papyrus was a big help fetching and passing her things once she was actually in the tent, and even the children started to tote pillows too, though only one at a time.

With swiftness born of practice on a scale only slightly smaller than the nest she was building now, Toki had crafted a soft, warm nest that lined wall to wall of the tent, with small cubbies of sorts where couples could curl together while still being close as a family without invading too much bubble space.

Once it was finished, she carefully settled in to lay on her side. She never used to be a side layer, but wings made things different- and this pregnancy too. Something about being on her side felt right. “The nest is done.” She chirps to Papyrus. She’d used almost all of the blankets, leaving enough to cover everyone as a spare, in case they got too cold. The nest was soft and plush, and she couldn’t feel the cold or the hardness of the snow under the tent. “Would you like to come in?”

She trusted Stag to watch her children as they romped off to play more in the snow again. Besides… There was no more lake monster anymore, with Stag having been healed.

"It looks perfect." He praised, stepping into the tent before he carefully kicked off his shoes, coming to sit down in the heart of the nest. "Mm... This is nice." He hummed contentedly once he was nestled into the blankets and pillows he brought from home.

Snuggle slipped off of Papyrus, and disappeared into the mountain of blankets to make a little warm spot for someone to find and cuddle up to.

Toki buzzed lightly at him and nodded, her mane fluffing up as she snuggled in contently. “It is nice.” She agrees. “It’s warm and soft and sheltered… It’s a good nest.” She’s pleased with it, even if the walls of the tent aren’t thick enough for her taste. It soothes enough of her instincts to make her beast happy, and that’s good enough for her. Toki hums a tiny sound, and wiggles her wings at him. “You’re very far away.” She notes his location for stretching out, before wiggling a little bit closer to him.

"Hm?” He lifted his head at her comment about the distance between them and he chuckled, slowly lifting and turning himself to be close to her. Once he settled, his arms looped around her to give her a squeeze.

She cuddled in and smooched along his jaw line. "Much better." A couple pleased chirps rattled up through her ribs. Toki peered up at him lightly. "Is the nest soft enough for you?"

"I adore any bed that I have you to cuddle with while I’m in it.” He answered as he gave her love-nuzzles, a smile on his face as he peered up at her.

She cooed at him, and gave him tender sounding chirps. "I meant comfort wise, you goober. Think you can lay in this well enough without too much pain?" Her hands slid down and she rubbed his hip gently. Fire magic bubbled at her fingers, and she pulsed warmth through his bones. "I want you to be as comfortable as you can be tonight."

"I can slip a pillow under my hip if it gets too uncomfortable, but I like this, yes."

"Alright.” She gave a soft warble and wiggled closer to him. Toki chirped again, making soft content noises. "I miss being able to lay on my stomach." She admits lightly. "I'm not a side sleeper.” Not with four arms. She made due because she had to, but she was not a side sleeper.

"Oh?” He looked at her, and then he chuckled and grabbed a pillow, putting it on his chest before he wrapped his arms around her. "Roll with me." He urged her, gently tugging her in the direction that would put him on his back.

Toki grunts lightly, and uses one of her primary arms to help them roll. The sturdier limb doesn’t have a problem getting them up and over, and she spreads her legs so she’s astride his hips without putting too much pressure on them. She was on her stomach though, her belly pressing into the empty space hidden by his shirt and coat while her chest was propped up by the pillow. "Ooo... I like this." Her eye lights expand in delight, and she makes an adorable purr-chirp noise, before all four arms go limp around him and she drapes, fully relaxed and 'boneless'.

He looked up at her with a gleam in his eyes to match the smile growing on his face. Papyrus reached up to gently scratch his claws through the soft green fur of her mane. "So beautiful. I'm so glad you're comfortable now~" He cooed.

"Mmm..." Her eyes close as his fingers carded through her mane again. It was nice. The peace and quiet- or relative quiet, because the sound of the children shrieking and the bleating of Stag as they chased and were chased by the twins was definitely not absolute silence- was doing wonders for her stress levels. "Are you comfortable too?" She questions softly, wanting to know if she needed to adjust her hips any for him, or take more weight off of his pelvis.

Grillby poked his head in. "Food is all set up for whenever anyone wants any. If you need something cooked, let me know." He hums softly. "Room for two and a half more in there? Solstice needs to warm up some before Sans helps her make her first snowman." The first snowman was a right of passage in Snowdin.

"Come on in! Just don’t mind the position, this is beneficial to Toki's comfort while accommodating her pregnancy." Aliquam called to them.

Grillby nodded, and slipped in. He accepted Solstice from Sans once he’d kicked off his shoes, and then crawled forth a few steps into the nest to let his husband in. His gaze slid over to Papyrus, and he chuckled lowly. “That’s a familiar position if I’ve ever saw one.”

Toki flushed, and her face rolled down into her husband’s chest. Her mane fluffed with her slight embarrassment- because she could read between the lines, and if neither of them had clothes, this would look marginally less innocent- and with her position the fluffing of her mane let it cover almost her entire skull. It also partially fluffed into her mate’s face. “It’s comfortable. I’m pretty sure I’ve hit the end of my equivalent ‘first trimester’,” Since she hadn’t hurled up food that wasn’t raw in a couple days, thankfully, “with not two, but six little ones in my belly, so I’m entitled to my odd positions for comfort.”

Caeruleus climbed into the tent and happily took position on some of the pillows once he kicked off his shoes, reaching up for Grillby and Solstice with a widening grin. "C'mere you~"

Grillby laughed softly at Toki’s grumping, and said nothing more on it. Instead, he made his way over to Sans, settling Solstice down carefully on the usual crook she slept in. Instead of his usual side sleeping position, Grillby shifts over so he’s got his back against the arm cradling Solstice, putting his back against the chill of the tent wall. He opens his coat, and then drapes over them both so he can warm them.

Solstice squeals, completely and utterly happy to have her daddy’s face in her reach. Her hands come up, and his face is hers to play with.

All the giant fire monster does is close his eyes and coo at her as she tugs on his fangs and pats his cheeks.

Toki’s mane smoothes out, and she watches Grillby with a quiet smile. She nuzzles her face into Papyrus’ chest, and sighs contently. “It feels like a lifetime ago that Honey and Skylar were that small.”
Caeruleus cooed at the heat but a hand came to rest on Solstice's back, the other's wrapping around Grillby's back as the pillow-worthy monster hugged his husband close.

"Indeed... and yet soon enough Solstice might end up being as big as the pups, if not bigger."

"Mmm, maybe." Toki hums. "Remember now, Solstice’s mother is Cae. Cae’s my height, roughly. He’s a short stack… and I’ve seen how you two grew as kids." Sort of. "Ours started out ‘big’ for me, but small compared to you, but they’re growing fast. Sans was big for him, and she’s probably gonna grow slow and stop short. Though… if she gets somewhere between the heights, she might be as tall as you. Genetics can be weird like that."

"He’s my short stack.” Grillby purrs, content to cuddle up to his plush husband. Despite being made of bone, Sans was the best pillow.

"I'm not short." Cae huffed, though with Grillby's nuzzling he was sedated as he gave him a squeeze. "I'm stout. There's a difference." He grumbled.

That had Aliquam laughing gently. "On the other hand, our children will grow to be towers over little Solly."

Cae calling himself stout instead of short had Toki laughing into her husbands chest. She began to sing a soft teasing tone. "I'm a little teapot, short and stout. Here is my handle, and here is my spout~" Two of her limp arms came up to be the handle and spout respectively, and she giggled into the pillow.

Grillby couldn’t stop the guffaw of laughter, but he was quick to bury it into his husband’s shoulder so only the trembles of his back could be seen.

"And yes, Pap. Our kids will be very tall.” Toki grins.

Cae grumbled as he pinched Grillby's butt. "You're gonna pay for that." he grumbled, before half-lifting his head, shooting Toki a look. "Toki, I will get revenge on you." He threatened. "You wont see it coming."

Oh yes, Sans was so scary with a cuddly husband and a child on his large form.

“When I get all steamed up, hear me shout, ‘Tip me over and pour me out!’” Toki teased again at her grumbling brother in law, before breaking out into snorts of laughter.

Grillby wheezed into Sans’ shoulder, the pinch to his rear only making him twitch and laugh harder.

Cae gave a flailing gesture with his arms and he grumbled sourly. He didn't even sound angry, just embarrassed as he pinched Grillby again up and down his side.

Grillby’s laughter faded into tiny crackling squeaks, not unlike that which Solstice made as he tried not to squirm away from the tiny hands holding fast to his face.

Toki’s giggles faded off slowly too, and her fingers slid to Papyrus’ ribs, before exploring them slowly. She was relaxed and content- up until her sixth sense went off, and she tensed. Her four arms braced on the padded part of the nest, and she lifted up off of Papyrus just in time for Honey to barrel into her back. Her knees jabbed into Toki’s spine, and Toki’s face visibly flinched in a brief flash of pain. Tiny bony knees to one’s spine did not feel good. But, Toki had been fast enough to not let herself get crushed down onto Papyrus.

“Momma!” Her tiny hands grabbed Toki’s wings and pull slightly. “Momma! I wanna build a "Welp! Kids are back!" Papyrus brought his arms up to support her before he slowly wriggled out from under her, scooping up Honey and gently coaxing her into releasing her mother.

"You don’t need your Momma’s help to make one, do you?" He then asked, giving Toki a light wink as he pulled on his shoes. "Come on, pup. Let's go build us a snowman."

Honey glanced between them both, and then her big blue eye lights swelled larger as Toki shifted to sit upright. “But… But Momma didn’t get to help us make our first snowman during Christmas.” She tucks her chin. “I want us all to make a snowman.”

Toki’s soul sank a little bit, and she nodded. “Okay, little one. Let me get my shoes, and I’ll come make a snowman with you.” Her back hurt, but she’d be alright enough. Her kids came first.

"Oh Honey..." Aliquam pecked Honey's head and then glanced to his brother. "You two going to stay and nap?" He asked Caeruleus and Grillby.

Grillby nods. "Once Solstice's temperature rises to a higher state, we may join you in making snowmen. For now, we're going to relax and spend our day off lazing about."

Toki nods and fetches her shoes. She slips them on, and then slips from the tent. It's cold outside, and she fluffs up a bit to accommodate, before she turns and scoops Honey into her arms. She steps out of the way and holds a hand out to Papyrus.

He took it and got up, before he turned back and zipped the tent closed. It wouldn’t do to let all the heat out. "Shall we get started then?"
After a day of frolicking in the snow, the children were tuckered out come evening. Toki relaxed in her chair, the twins half dozing on her chest while dinner was prepared. She had her niece stretched out on her too- she was officially on babysitting duty, though it was more like they were sitting on her.

It was dark out, and the fire was roaring. It sent glimmers of light twinkling over the snow- no longer pristine, but filled with several snowmen from the snowmen army that they had built, and waged a ‘snow war’ with. Toki had lost the war, for the record. Papyrus and his masterful skills as a Guard had planned it out so she had lost spectacularly- but that was perfectly fine. His reward had been a kiss, so she completely understood his reasoning.

Skylar nuzzled into her mane and made a sleepy sounding coo, echoed by his sister.

Toki hummed in return, and let her magic waft over them, pumping some of it up into Solstice so she would stay warm. The almost-toddler was fully asleep on Toki’s chest, drooling with part of Toki’s shirt in her mouth while her mother was given a break from holding her, and her father was on cooking duty. Toki’s feet were also almost occupied.

Stag was making sleepy grunts at her feet. They had been tuckered out by the kids, and was soundly out of it, curled up at her side with their head at her feet.

“You know…” Toki murmurs slowly, glancing across the fire to the older couple lounging in their chairs and enjoying each other’s company. Toki rubbed her husband’s knuckles lightly with one hand, and sighed softly. “We all needed this.” It really was a shame Thumper decided to flirt instead of spend time with family- but, children would be children. “Today was ended up being a much better day than it started out being.”

"I thought if it was just you and me, it'd be nice... and yet I don’t think at this point things could get any better... our family really does have a tight bond don’t we?” Aliquam spoke up quietly, giving a quiet chuckle as he followed her gaze to his father, who was currently napping against his mate's golden mane.

“Another time you and I can come up here with the kids- or just us, if we need some adult time- and take some time for just us.” Toki smiles. “But… we really do. I honestly am not sure how I’ve fit in so well with your family. With our family. Not a lot of in-laws are so close, or get along so well.” Her eyes close softly, and she exhales lightly. “I want to come to the lake more this summer.” She murmurs softly. “I want… I want to do a lot of things, now that there isn’t a threat looming over us. I’m home… and there’s no Humans Against Monsters to threaten us anymore. We can finally live, Pap.”

"We’ll come here every summer. We’ll bring the children, and if things are as they are now, we’ll end up bringing the rest of our family anyhow." He chuckled.

“True that.” She laughs quietly. She glances across the snow and hums. “If it wasn’t so damn cold in the winter, I wouldn’t mind coming here. It’s… nice. It’s peaceful, with just us, the lake, and the snow. I bet this is how people who go to ski retreats feel.”

"Perhaps with a few more layers of clothing between them and the snow." Aliquam then joked, nuzzling Toki.

Toki laughed and nuzzled him back. "Love, most ski resorts don't get as cold as they do here. It's deadly here in the heart of a winter snowstorm. I don't think a few more layers here would help."

"Good thing we're so darn immune to the elements, huh?"

"You are." She glances up at him. "I don't know if you've noticed, but I get cold now."

"That is the beast in you. Its very thick in your makeup for it to be so visible." Grillby chimes in lightly.

"Even with your fire?" Cae asked incredulously.

"Even then." Toki nods. "I get cold very easy. I just don't complain about it."

"Then I should keep you warm." He chuckled, setting his head on hers.

Toki smiled warmly. "You do." She says. "You're good at keeping me warm. And tonight, we're all going to be very warm."

"Warm and happy. Like a pack should, as father would say." He joked, before hearing a grunt from Tenebris.

The grunt had her glancing over to Tenebris. "Sleeping beauty finally waking up?" Toki teases lightly.

"Perhaps." Asgore chuckles softly, his voice sounding tired by content.

Where Tenebris sat, a tired hand crawled up to Asgore's face and gently combed his mane, cooing tiredly before he give a wide yawn right into Asgore's neck, his tail stretching it's full length as his limbs did the same. He was like a goddamn cat.

"Hm." There was then a noise from Cae. "Totally just realized, we've never measured how long Pop's tail is." He chuckled quietly.

"It's nine feet long." Toki chirps easily.

Asgore withstood the sleepy gropes of his hands and simply patted his head fondly. "He's been tuckered out by the days activities. I wonder if he'll even wake up to eat." He pauses though and looks at Toki. "How do you know how long it is?"

"Reeaaaasons." She'd measured Tenne's tail once for one of Kai's science projects, and figured they were the same length.

And as if on some hilarious cue, Tenebris leaned up and began to gnaw on Asgore's throat under his great mane, a muffled "Feeed mee," crooning from him as his tail coming to wrap around Asgore's arm.
Asgore snorts fondly, and flaps his hand at him to discourage him from nibbling on him. He didn’t need to get ‘excited’ in front of all of these youngsters. "I'm not food, you great dork. There are steaks in the cooler."

"Foooooooood," Toki groans. "If only I had hands to eat with." She had three babies and no spare hands.

"Food is just about ready." Cae spoke up, gesturing to where the table was almost set up with dinner. "Cooked to perfection to suit everyone's likes."

"So ketchup with a side of actual food for you?" Toki teases.

"Maybe before I got pregnant and started taking care of myself." He snorted, sticking his tongue out at her. "I got disgusted by ketchup for three solid months, I have a little on my hot-dog but that's it."

"More like I aided in your proper diet." Grillby murmurs very, very quietly.

Toki almost didn't hear him, and she snorted, before guffawing into laughter. "Oh Sans, I couldn't drink cocoa or eat spaghetti until near the end of my pregnancy, and yet I still can't get enough of either. Well, when the litter lets me."

"It's almost like I have pregnancy aftertaste." He huffed, scratching his stomach as he leaned his head back. "I can’t enjoy Ketchup as passionately anymore."

Toki snorts. "Well, sometimes tastes permanently change. Lemme guess… You've got a thing for mustard now." She wiggled a brow at him.

“If I recall,” Toki grins, “You had a craving for it when you were pregnant. So… There was a time when you didn’t hate it.”

"A figment of your imagination!"

“I didn’t have that bad of pregnancy brain,” She laughs. “I remember it. Your denial is adorable though.”

Solstice stirred on her chest, and made a tiny fussy noise. “Mehh…”

“Ah, it sounds like someone wants her mother.” Toki wiggled her brows at him. “I bet she’s going to grow up to love mustard.”

"You shall not curse my daughter." He grumbled as he reached over and gently scooped up Solstice, cooing to her as he laid back and held her close to his chest. "I've got you, my little sunshine."

Solstice sniffled and quietly nestled her face into his chest, content to settle down again and sleep some more.

Toki hummed, and adjusted her own children. She wiggled her fingers at Sans. “And here’s a curse for you,” She grins playfully, using her ‘halloween witchy voice’ in his direction, “May your daughter and her children here after love mustard like you used to love ketchup.”

Grillby laughed softly in good humor, before giving a soft groan. “I sure hope not, or I’m going to be spending a fortune on condiments. Speaking of, dinner is done.”
"Food." Tenebris was the first to rock onto his feet before his jaw opened wide in a yawn.

Sans stretched following his dad, laughing quietly as he did. "Damn, he's practically asleep on his feet." He joked.

“It doesn’t surprise me. He is an older monster, after all.” Toki hums lightly. It did make her worry that having young ones around was going to run him down a bit much, but she kept that quiet to herself. He had time to adjust. Plus, coffee was a godsend, and he wasn’t a nursing mother, so it wasn’t like he would be limited on it. Toki shifts in her chair, and carefully rouses her children. “Come on, my sweets. It’s time to wake up.”

Skylar stirred quietly but little Honey gave a reluctant whine as her eyes came to open.

Tenebris and his eldest son made it to the table first, Cae sitting down with Solstice in his arms while Tenebris came to settle on the edge of the table bench. "Are we fully awake, Dad?" Cae asked.

Tenebris nodded, "Yes, yes, I’m up." He chuckled, rubbing his eyes before he folded his arms, looking back as Asgore, smiling, "C’mon, then."

Asgore hummed and joined him moments after.

Toki adjusted both children in her arms, and kissed their heads until they were up. Once they were awake, she stood and then moved them over to the chairs set up at the camping table they’d brought, and then settled them in gently.

She took a seat in her own chair with one of the spaces open for Papyrus to join her.

Grillby straightened, and began to serve dinner, humming all the while. “I’ve gotten everything cooked to what everyone’s usual tastes are.”

“Thank you.” Toki nods lightly. She started in on her salad once it was served, nibbling the lettuce quietly.

"A magnificent job, as per usual, Grillby." Aliquam praised as he sat down.

"Agreed, what would we have done without our magnificent bartender?" Cae laughed.

“Cooked upon an open flame like most normal people without access to a walking, talking, portable barbeque.” Grillby answers with utter nonchalance.

It’s with such nonchalance that it makes Toki inhale her leaf of lettuce, and she coughs on it, making it puff out her nasal cavity. “Oh my god, Grillby. You’re not anymore a portable barbeque than I am.” She laughs.

Tenebris laughed at that. "Grillby come on you're a lot more than that. You're my son's husband and the father of one of my grandbabies, you're better than a walking, talking, port-a-que."

“Right. You’re more than a port-a-que, you’re the best Grillbeque a girl could have for a brother in law.” How Toki straight faced that, she will never know.

But she was rewarded by her son softly snickering into his food, and pressing his face into his arm to hide his laugh as it started to grow.

Her smirk grew. Someone thought she was funny.

Honey however groaned, and smacked her thigh. “Momma noooo, no dumb puns.”
Aliquam groaned, but it got a chuckle from Tenebris and a loud 'HA!' From Caeruleus.

Toki beamed, completely pleased with herself. "My job is done." She leans over to smooch her husband's cheek. "Oh don't fuss. Puns ruffle your feathers. It's good for you."

"It's good to have you and your bad humor back, Toki." Asgore smiles at her sincerely. "Grillbeque. That's a first."

"Indeed." He chuckles.

"Not far off from the full name either. Grillbert." Toki hums.

Grillby pauses. "How do you know that?"

Toki wiggles her fingers at them all. "Shenanigans." Her other world boss had sworn to grump at her if she ever used it once she learned it.

"Your full name is 'Grillbert'?” Aliquam piped up curiously.

Grillby groaned. "Yes. Grillbert Fyrus the Third. I prefer Grillby though. My name is not a nice name."

Toki hums softly. "It is odd, but it's not a bad one. All the same, if you want to be called Grillby, that's what I'll call you."

"Thank you." Grillby nods.

Toki glances to her brother in law. "So... Does that make you a Fyrus by law? Or did you keep Gaster for a last name?"

"Marrying does not require you to take on the name of your groom." Cae shrugged. "At least I don’t think so... I'm technically 'Sans Caeruleus Gaster Fyrus' but I rarely use my last name anyways so it doesn’t bother me either way."

Toki shrugs. "When have we ever done anything traditionally? Anyways, I understand. I've been called a Nara-Gaster, given that I still lead the Nara clan." Since her return, it had been passed back into her hands.

"To bullocks with traditionalism, eh?" Tenebris laughed quietly. "We are all guilty of it somehow, I think."

"My very leading of the clan was my grandparents saying to heck with tradition." Toki chirped between bites of dinner. "I'm only half blooded, and a girl. By rights it should have gone to my mother's first son. My family is full of rebels it seems." They had so many people in her family who broke the mold, as the saying went. Toki adored them all, where her stepfather embraced more traditional values to some extent.

"That sounds like something worthy of a toast" Aliquam pulled a few bottles of water from the cooler and passed them around. "To rebellion and making good out of it!"

"One doesn't usually toast with water, but... Oh well." Grillby gave his water to his husband for lack of desire to actually want to have to process the water into something drinkable. But he held up his fork with a piece of slightly scorched lettuce on it. "To rebellion and making good out of it."

Toki laughed, and the sound of many plastic bottles clunking together in 'toast' was amusing. "Not only to rebellion though. A toast to surviving, and rebuilding from the ashes like a Phoenix that rises once more." Their home had died in flames and smoke, and now had been rebuilt from the ashy loam. Nara Village was much like a Phoenix- it wouldn't ever die so long as there were people who would rebuild it.

"I'll drink to that." Tenebris laughed. "Generations to come will learn our ways for years to come." He rumbled.

“Indeed.” Toki laughed warmly, and sipped her water. “We'll pave the way for a new way of life- and we’ll be flexible to learning even newer ways if they're better than ours.”

"Monsterkind will never fall into the wrong hands with faith like this." Tenebris rumbled happily.

That slightly sobered Toki from her mirthful laughter, and it died off rather rapidly. She tapped her finger on the table, and stared quietly at her meal, appetite temporarily lost. “… You know,” she says softly, “I’m never going to die permanently. When I became Balance, the curse of remembering reincarnations became mine to bear, so… I’m going to be around a long, long time. I’m going to make sure that Monsters never face the sort of injustice again- and that history doesn’t repeat itself.”

Toki’s voice is firm and absolute- she’s sure of herself. She’s never going to let history repeat itself- she’s not going to let the incident with the anti-hearts happen again, and she’s not going to let another hate group like HAM ever rise to power again. Toki will maintain balance in the world- through this life, and the next.

Tenebris looked at her quietly before he smiled. "At least it means our generations are in good hands when we finally join the dust of our ancestors." He purred gently, reaching over to pat her shoulder. "You don’t really have to worry about the job for a few more centuries, but when the time does come, I know indeed we'll be in good hands.”

That wasn’t really what Toki was worried about, honestly. She was… she was going to miss them. She was going to miss them a lot. More than just a lot- she was going to miss them with everything that she was when they were gone and she was left to persist.

But rather than let emotions swell over her like they wanted to, and rather than letting them ruin the good mood she was so determined to keep from the day, she took a deep breath and then quietly nodded. “Yeah…” She agreed quietly. “You’ll all be in good hands.” That said, Toki returned to her meal, quickly devouring it despite her lack of appetite.

Grillby watched her quietly, but didn’t comment more. Instead, he turned and directed the conversation away from that. He was a man who had mated to a female before- he knew what hormones could do when they were pregnant. “So, Winter is finally ending. Spring is coming in. With the village still under reconstruction, what are everyone’s plans?”

Toki pauses and hums quietly. “Well, my hives are all gone… So I think I’m going to focus on just writing, mainly, and trying to sell my own honey.”

"I speak for Tenebris and I both when I say we are very excited to prepare for our future litter, but while we do that… Call me unoriginal if you wish, but I am quite excited for the mud to dry up just enough so that I can start planting flowers everywhere.” Asgore answered next, with a smile on his face that was simply excited for the prospect to plant flowers and spread joy.

"Asgore spoke my plans for the most part, but I'm also tempted to start an apiary myself to go with Asgore's flora, if Toki doesn't change her mind about it later on." Tenebris rumbled. "I don’t think it'll beat Toki’s honey though." He then laughed quietly.
Everyone shared his laugh- Toki’s honey had been hard to beat before the hives had been wiped out. Happy bees made good honey, and her bees had been happy and well cared for.

Sans continued next once everyone had quieted down. "I don’t know what I’m gonna do yet. Probably just focus on raising Sol and help out with the Bar N’ Grill... by."

And once more, groans rose from everyone as Caeruleus cackled shamelessly, smacking his knee as Sol was bounced on his chuckling belly. Excited crackles came in spades from the baby skelemental at the ride that came with her mother's laughter.

"What about you, bro?" Cae then asked his brother as he slowly came off his laughter a few moments later.

"Mnh…." Aliquam took a moment to contemplate, before he smiled slightly. "I think I can finally settle down a little. Raise the kids, prepare for any more we might have. Perhaps I'll see about getting a job driving. It would allow me a bit more usefulness to my community, no?"

"It would." Grillby nods. "Though driving jobs will take you far from your family, and you may find yourself spending more time away from home than you'd like. When you worked as a guard, you could pop in and see them whenever you liked. Driving, you'd be in a vehicle for hours upon hours, most likely from dawn until dusk. But, the pay is decent, and all you need to drive large vehicles is a different type of license." Operating machinery would require schooling on Papyrus' part, Grillby knew. The skeleton could do it, no doubt about that.

Asgore hummed. "Did you not like to cook when you were underground?" He inquires curiously. "Perhaps you could work on starting a business involving food."

Toki hated to see him feel so limited. She ground her teeth quietly and hummed thoughtfully. "I could call my editor and see if she has any openings for jobs there. It's mostly at home work, but the pay is good because it's mind numbing work, looking over someone's book, marking down corrections and making suggestions, and keeping in contact with them if they need it. Or, going off of Asgore's idea, there's my brother's restaurant in town if you want to try chef work. You do have options, Papy." She wasn't in any rush for him to run out and work anyways.

The royalties from the movie rights had her bank account sitting quite prettily, so they weren't in any financial danger at the moment. Their children were benefiting from having them both around, and it made it easier for her to work, and her to spend time with her family at the same time. Multitasking for the win.

"Oh goodness, I’m having flashbacks to all the Tupperware containers full of spaghetti." Aliquam covered his face with his hands as he laughed, before he lowered them to his lap once more, a smile on his face. "So many potential jobs, so few centuries to do everything. I wonder just where I should start?" It was typical behavior of Aliquam to look at the silver lining of a potentially dark cloud.

"Well, you can try and decide whatever you like," Toki chuckles. "Feel free to experiment with jobs. I'm stable with my writing career, so we're okay, and I'm going to work on getting my contracts going for selling my honey. I may get an Apiary again if I have time to care for it." It was busy work tending to bees, and if they were going to be expanding their family... Well. It was wrong to have something you couldn't take care of.

"I am not sure if I’ll graduate past caretaker of the children with us being so well off. There's easily other people who could use the money more than we would," Aliquam shrugged, before he gave Toki a sweet look. "Maybe I’ll stand aside to let the wife be the successful one."
Toki chuckles softly. "That's sweet of you to say, but you know you'll go stir crazy if you don't have something to do." She paused, and then smiled. "What about... When the school reopens, why don't you apply to be the music teacher?" He wasn't as musically diverse as Han, but Papyrus was good with his string instruments, and the school needed another music teacher.

Plus, if any of their future kids wanted to go to college, Toki would at least like to be able to help pay for a little bit of their college. Not the whole thing, mind, they’d need to get scholarships, but Toki would be willing to ford some of it for her children. She wanted to save up again for such a time- or if they ever wanted to travel, or vacation.

There were things to do, and only so much that could be achieved on one paycheck.

"Me? Are you sure?" He looked surprised to hear her offer that. All the same, he looked clearly pleased as a smile with the brightness of a thousand suns lit up his face. "I might not be as good as Han was. I'm a little out of practice, but that's definitely one idea, now isn't it..."

"It is indeed." She smiles. "It makes me sad that almost all of Han's instruments burnt up, but... We'll replace them." The one she valued most had survived, thanks to Aliquam. "He'd be happy you were teaching children how to play. Eventually," she pets Skylar's head gently, "you may teach our children too."

"Perhaps you could aid him sometimes and offer singing lessons." Grillby suggests.

Toki snorts. "I can't sing good enough to teach children."

"Count me out too." Aliquam laughed. "I can't sing either. My only voice is when I play."

"Lies!" Toki snorts. "You can sing. We've sung together." She smiles at him. "It's just been a long time since I've gotten to sing with you."

He chuckled quietly. "It's not the same thing, Toki. Singing for you isn't the same as singing in public."

"True, but you wouldn't be singing in public. You'd be singing with a bunch of children, who have most of the time have a tendency to hit dog whistle like tones when they hit the squeaker stage." She points out lightly, and smiled at him.

Something seemed to click in Asgore’s brain, and the goat king lit up. “You both could do Christmas shows with the children! Little choirs and music groups… Oh, I would love to see such a thing.”

"Now that's an idea." Cae agreed, before he chuckled and pecked Sol's head. "I feel like little Solly here would make a beautiful high soprano.” He purred.

"With how shrilly she squeaks…” Toki grins playfully. “I could see it though. Once she gets past her squeaky toy phase, she'll make a lovely high soprano.”

“Honey can’t sing.” Skylar hums around a mouthful of food. “It's like a bag of cats in cold water.”

“And you’re like a sad walrus!” Honey huffs. “It’s like a half a bag of cats in warm water.”

"Children,” Toki chides gently, “You both sing just fine, and you’ll make lovely musicians if that’s what you want to do. If you don’t want to sing or make music, you don’t have to.”

"Ouch." Tenebris snorted quietly. "Don't worry, children. There’s plenty of options... I bet our children will sing just beautifully. We're a very vocal race after all." and Tenebris was puffing in pride. All of the bristles of his growing mane were standing too.

"Are you really that vocal of a race? I recall you being a very quiet and generally uptight person when you worked at the labs, Tenebris." Grillby hummed.

Toki demonstrated this by vocalizing at Tenebris, teasingly calling him a mangy dandelion. She chittered again, a more guttural sound. "Yes. Beasts are a very vocal race. They speak a lot through sounds, and through body language. There is more than one way to communicate what you desire."

That remark earned Toki a quiet hiss. "Look whose talking." He growled at Toki, "I'm still growing, you're the mangy dandelion." He huffed.

Asgore hugged him close and chortled. "No no, you two. Don’t you see that clearly I am the dandelion among us?"

His growl just made her burst out into laughter. His growl didn’t scare her anymore, and how he melted with Asgore was adorable. “Dandelion? Don’t you mean dandegoat?” She teases lightly.

Grillby chokes on an olive. “She’s got you there.”

Toki grins. “Yes I do.” She finishes her meal, and then stretches quietly with a soft sigh. Her hands wandered to her belly and rubbed it quietly, where the litter were sitting heavily. She paused, wondering if she was imagining feeling the faintest of shifts inside of her. She wasn’t sure when blaster beast pups started quickening- they weren’t behaving like skeleton monsters, that’s for sure.

"Oh no they got you too." Aliquam hid his face in his hands as he groaned.

Caeruleus barked out laughing again, giving Solstice yet another ride on the bouncing gut.

Toki quirked a smile and laughed with them, but her focus faded from the conversation as she quietly rubbed her belly. Yeah, she was pretty sure they were moving. Not... Hardcore moving, not like how she’d felt with the twins when she’d been further along, or even quite like the quickening of the twins. Though she remembered them quickening what felt like only a few weeks after her morning sickness had abated, so maybe that was a beast thing. Though instead of goldfish in a plastic bag feeling, this felt like more like she could vaguely feel the litter squirming against each other as they josted for space, for sheer lack of space inside of her while growing.

It really was fascinating, feeling something alive inside of you, knowing you were helping to make it, shape it into the being it would become. She wondered what sort of people these children would be like.

"Toki?" Asgore prompted lightly.

"Hm?" She blinked up at him slowly.

"We lost you there for a moment. What were you thinking about?" The king inquired curiously.

"Not much, really." She wanted to blow it off as something non important, but realized this was probably very important to Tenebris and Asgore. "I just... Was sort of noticing them quickening, that’s all. The rate of growth is so quick..."

Tenebris rumbled curiously and his tail rattled quietly behind him, "Ohh, they're already getting active?" He asked with obvious interest.
"Yeah. You can't feel them outside yet." She says, lest she get hands reaching for her only to be disappointed. She could already see Honey reaching, only to withdraw with a pout because she couldn't feel them yet. "But, probably a couple more weeks and the movements will be getting stronger. Pretty sure I'm at the 'second' trimester measurement, so lots of movement starts happening here."

"A few more weeks for a waiting father could be months. I'll practically be in my grave!" Tenebris grasped his chest dramatically.

"You've survived so far, Papa. You'll manage a couple more weeks, and then the months and months after that until they're born... Though, I'm going to laugh if Papy gets to feel them move before you." Toki can't help the jibe. She really can't. It would be poetic justice, truly.

"It would be fair, wouldn't it?" The elder hummed in thought, before he groaned and draped into Asgore's lap. "Oh darling, I see a light at the end of the tunnel. I need 60ccs of baby tummy." He whined.

Asgore laughs helplessly, and scoots his chair back to make space for the large monster barging into his lap. Thankfully he was done enough with his dinner that it didn't get all over him. "Oh, my sweet overly dramatic licorice snap, you simply must hold on! I'm sure if you sweet talk her and her mate, they may let you cuddle her tummy in the tent tonight after she receives some magic."

"I dunno," Toki says airily, and grins to Papyrus. "Has Papa Tenny been a good enough boy today to warrant tummy time?" She asks her husband. She's teasing of course, and her tone of obvious. She doesn't care if Tenebris cuddles her for a little bit. Bonding time went both ways for parents and children.

"I don't knooow." Aliquam hummed before looking at his father. He immediately wished he didn't. "Oh god."

The puppy look. Tenebris was using the puppy eyes.

Toki giggles. "I think that's a yes from him. Pap and I will settle in the nest near you and Asgore tonight, Papa, and you'll get your tummy time."

"Me too?" There is a hopeful look in the king's gaze. He's not a beast, but he still shares the same excitement as his mate.

"Of course," Aliquam chuckles quietly.

And immediately Tenebris smiled as he leaned his head back to look up at Asgore with a grin. "Now there's another reason to be excited for bedtime, isn't it darling~"

"It is!" Asgore beams cheekily.

Toki chuckles and gives Papyrus a lopsided grin. "Looks like you have to share me a little tonight." She wondered if he would be alright with that. He seemed agitated at times when touch seemed to linger too long anymore.

"Father and his Majesty look so excited to spend tonight with their future children, would I be so heartless as to grow jealous of that?" Aliquam countered with a quiet laugh, "I get you any other day of the year don't I?"

The quiet laugh made her wonder though. "And you'll have me from every day until my last." She smiles to him all the same, wanting to soothe anything that might have been ruffled in him. She was not going to deal with growling men in the tent, or she was taking a blanket, and a pillow and making a den in the snow.

"That's right, so why the heck would i fuss over a few nights if it means that my father spends time with his pups?" Aliquam didn't seem irked in the slightest, simply smiling as Tenebris had a small victory wiggle in Asgore's lap

"Very true. Plus, they only need my belly, and we're going to be in one big cuddle pile anyway. You'll be there and the kids will be there, and so will Grillby and Sans and Sobek and Snuggle." Toki grins slightly. "We'll all be cuddled up. No jealousy here."

Asgore seemed to make a small face, and his hands came down to still the white monster. "Be still, my love, or you'll wake the lion," he teases him slightly. "And there are children here."

Cae grinned as there was a soft wheeze of laughter from Tenebris who did indeed quickly stop his victory wiggle.

"Sorry, dear~" He cooed softly, reaching up to bat Asgore's face instead. "It's almost unbelievable seeing you act like this Tenebris, when imagine what you were like two hundred years ago." Grillby jibed with a warm thrum to his tone, a underlying chuckle accompanying the tease.

Tenebris sat up and gave Grillby a lazy grin. "I got old, and just like my poor old pads, there were some cracks that allowed a more fun old man to come out." He countered.

"It took some work to get the fun old man out. You were such a tight-ass sometimes when I first met you... I still can’t believe you ate my hand." Toki snorted. "You did loosen up though, which is good. A sense of humor is good for you." She informs him cheekily.

"Mm, feels a lot better too, you will not believe how much it hurt to be just that. It didn't help that I was a workaholic. I cant tell you how many times James deactivated my console remotely just to get me to take a break, that clever brat." He sighed and fell back against Asgore once more. "As for the eating of your hand... I will do it again if I find it in the vicinity of my teeth again while I’m moody. You have been warned."

Toki fluffs her mane at him and grins, a tad bit of a wicked tilt to her teeth. “Oh Papa dear, don’t you know? I’ve found my claws. Eat my hand, and I might just eat yours. Or worse. I do know how to steal and hide your mint. I’ve had years of practice.” She’d had years of dealing with a moody Tenebris who was much younger. He’d rarely gotten snippy with her, but sometimes he did for the strangest reasons... and her semi-petty revenge was to hide all the mint for miles, and miles, and put it far out of his reach.

Honey guffaws. “Stealing Grandpapa’s mint is so funny. He’s gets all huffy and puffy and then he gets all sulky.”

And he was bristling again. "I will ground you.

Honey blew a raspberry at him. “You can’t ground me! Only Mommy and Daddy can ground me.”

“Don’t sass your grandpa,” Toki chuckles, and ruffles her horns lightly. “He gets even, you silly girl. He’ll hide all your toys.”

“No!” She looked aghast at the very idea.
“And all of the cookies. You’ll never find the cookies.” Toki hides a smirk, trying to look very serious.

“Noo! Not my cookies!”

The others watched on in amusement, before Aliquam spoke up. "He might just hoard all the cookies and eat them without sharing."

“Not sharing is so mean!” Honey gasps. “I always share!”

“Except with Sobek.” Skylar hums.

“Sobek steals them all. Cookie stealers don’t get shared cookies.” She puffed. She looked quite done with the teasing and the sassing, telltale by the look of a growing tantrum on her face.

Toki laughed, and tucked her daughter into her side. “No one is going to steal your cookies, Honey. But, if you keep sassing your grandpa, I’m not responsible for if he decides to tickle you until you fall to pieces.” She scoops her up into her lap, and kisses her little cheeks.

Honey sniffs and tucks her face into Toki’s shoulder. “I don’t wanna be tickled.”

“All right, all right.” Toki hummed. Someone was starting to get grumpy it seemed. Monster children weren’t exempt from the usual rules of children- if they were tired, they were grumpy, and her children had played hard all day. Toki hummed, and carefully scooped up Skylar too, before clamoring to her feet. “I think it’s bedtime for the little ones since they’re done eating. Someone is getting grumpy.”

"Aww." Aliquam stood from his chair as well, and hobbled over to his wife and children. He leaned down and snuggled his head against Honey’s. He pressed a few kisses against her skull as he cooed to her. "There, there, darling. No need to fuss~"

Honey growled the tiniest growl at her Daddy, and swatted her little hand at him.

Toki snorted, and snagged it before she could smack him. “No hitting,” she scolds her gently, and gets a grumble in return. “I think she’s had enough teasing and attention tonight.” Toki smooches Papyrus instead, and then carefully unzips the tent and crawls in. “I think I’m going to join them and stretch out for a bit.”

"Alright, we’ll clean up and join you soon." Aliquam hummed, giving her a small wave.

"Not me!" Cae got up and held Solstice close as he started for the tent as well.

Grillby gave his husband a mock dirty look, and rolled his eyes. “Oh well. I think four of us is probably too much for doing dishes, but we’ll get it all done faster.” He stood up, and got ready to clean up.

Toki smiled at Cae as he joined her in the tent. She settled her children down in a pile next to their sleeping summons, and then smiled as they settled in. Honey gave a grumpy sound, but cuddled up under Sobek’s wing.

Toki let them get comfortable, and gave them space as she draped a blanket over them, before curling up in her own little respective spot. They’d come sleep with her if they wanted- but they did enjoy sleeping alone, when they knew she was near enough for them to get to if they wanted. She wiggled her fingers at Cae and her niece, and then rubbed her belly quietly. “So… are you going to give me any more nieces or nephews?” She asks him quietly, wiggling a brow at him.
"Oh definitely. Once Solstice is older." Cae answered as he got on his back, getting comfy where he was before looking up at the roof of the tent. "We're definitely going to try again once Solly is out of her toddler stage and able to maintain her energy better. I'm doing a lot better too. I've been steadily gaining HP since she was born so I don’t think I’ll worry about a repeat of last time."

"The problem last time, we didn’t know she had horns." Toki wiggled her fingers at the top of her skull. "Next time, we’ll be aware that’s possible. Also, you know, not have Papa out of town. I really don’t want to have to deliver another one." She hadn’t enjoyed having her hand up there, or seeing that part of her brother in law. "So… How high is your HP now?" She asks curiously.

"Twelve."

"Two points higher!" She beams. "That’s good." It means he had more hope. Toki shifts and hums. "Mine is… Ridiculously high." She sighs. "Everyone seems so… fragile in comparison." She’s quiet for a bit, until her children start to snore softly. Then, Toki sighs, and glances to him. "Can I admit something to you?"

"What's up?" He looked up at her.

"When I was in the other world, everyone there was so much… I don’t want to say weaker, because that’s mean, but… If there was a power scale, this world is a ten, and the other world is maybe a three. I was so careful not to hurt anyone there. I thought… maybe coming home, I’d feel less like I’m a bull in a china shop.” Toki glances to the ceiling of the tent. "But I admit… I still feel like one sometimes. Like I could hug someone too hard and turn them to dust- though I know it’s all about intent, and I’d never intend to hurt someone like that."

"You don’t have it in you to hurt someone who doesn't deserve it, Toki." He told her. "Your heart is too strong for any of that garbage."

"I’m weaker than you think, brother mine." She closes her sockets and sighs. The future- a future without them, all of her future lives ahead of her- terrified her. She wondered if this was how Sequoia had felt, and if that’s what had driven her to insanity. "But, there are some things about me that don’t require intent to hurt. My venom for instance."

"Well yeah…” He rubbed his head.

"And on that note… My beast isn’t always nice. I mean… If she ever had a fit of temper…” She could dust one of them so easily.

That had Cae making a face as his hand returned to his belly.

"I want to ask Papa to work on an antivenin for my venom. Somehow anyway…” She closes her eyes and sighs. “Dear- that’s my beast, by the way- isn’t too bad with pack, but around non-pack… I wouldn’t trust her not to panic and hurt someone.”

"I count as pack right? Just making sure."

“Yeah. She’s not sure where you sit in the pack structure, but she counts you as pack. She sees herself as an alpha female.” Toki hums. “Pups are pups- she’ll never harm them, so there is no danger there. Her first instinct during a fight would be to take them to a safe place.”

"Sounds like her only beef is with pops..." He sighed, before he smiled. "At least she and I got that much in common."

aware of the fact I had… relations with Tenne in the other world, right? Well, Tenne and Papa are pretty much the same. So she’s… come to terms with the fact that Papa isn’t her mate, but another alpha. So… Yeah. It’s… kind of a mess, frankly. You’re an alpha too?” She was guessing so anyway, based on his response. Toki wondered if her beast and Sans’ beast would have ‘beef’.

"Nah, Beta.” He quickly shrugged off that worry. "I'm harmless to her other than a bored gnawing." He chuckled.

Toki snickered quietly. “I don’t think that’ll be a problem. Pack dynamics wise, I’m technically the only female. Though… She’s confused about there being multiple ‘breeding’ pairs in here. That’s the insectis in her though- in a hive, only the Queen breeds, and then the hive all collectively raise hundreds and hundreds of children.”

"That makes sense." He laughed softly. "We're anything but insects so we're a pack to get used too, huh?"

“Indeed.” She laughs softly. “It’s something she’s having to rapidly get used to. She’s… slowly working on it.”

"I'd love to talk to her if she has a chance." Cae hummed. "She 'n' I should get along fair enough, yeah?"

“I think so. Papa plans to do a beast night, so we’ll see,” Toki hums softly. “I don’t want to switch over tonight. Tonight is… Well, our relaxing night. Beast night will be theirs.”

"Fair enough, Until then…" He hummed, before he sighed happily and ran his hand through Solstice's fire as she got comfy in her favorite spot. "How’s it like, raising two kids?" He asked to introduce a new topic.

“It’s… Different.” Toki murmurs softly. “Well… Not different. I went from raising two kids here, to raising two kids there, but… I’ve missed a lot here.” Her sockets close for a moment and she sighs. Opening them once more, she gives him a lopsided smile. “The twins tend to entertain each other, but when they want to play with me or Papyrus, it becomes a bit more challenging balancing giving both of them equal amounts of attention. It can be very tiring. Honestly, I’m glad they’re twins- they’re the same age, so they’ve got someone to play with when they just want to sit and build a city in the living room out of all of their toys. Bath time is usually easy- they bathe together, and four hands makes it easy to scrub two kids at once.”

"I see." He sighed, before smiling up at Toki. "Thanks... I was right when I thought the best advice would come from you. You're good at that kinda stuff."

“I’ve got a lot of experience.” She says lightly. “Remember, before I had twin children, I had eight younger brothers.”

"Yeah exactly. I had Pap but that's it. I got one kid down, but if I ever wanted eight…” He laughed.

Toki arches her brows. “If Papa wasn’t taking the beast pups, I’d have eight.” She points out. “I do plan to have a lot of kids, but I want them spaced out. I was initially planning on, y’know, one at a time. But now…” She sighs. “Knowing my luck, the next time Pap and I try to have kids, I’ll end up with twins again, and we’ll be doing it by sets of two. I’m learning rather quick that beasts don’t usually have litters of one- you’re an outlier, since you’re with an elemental.”

It was pretty common knowledge that the birth rate for elementals was pretty low. It was easy to see why. They were fragile.
"Were we a regular Joe’n’John, I would have had at least two that time.” He laughed.

The sounds of cleaning outside faded, and Toki prepared to be invaded.

“Very true,” Grillby replied in her stead as he crawled in first. His flames seemed a little dim, likely from the chill, but he was content enough to go crawl over to Sans and drape against him like a living heated blanket. One arm cupped Solstice to provide her warmth. “But, fire elementals rarely have twins. We usually die when we do. It strains the mother too much to have a birth of such stress.” He kisses his cheek gently.

“Given how fast they go, I can imagine.” She snorts, and looks up eagerly for Papyrus.

It’s Asgore who comes in next, claiming a spot near her but leaving space for Tenebris and Papyrus. Tenebris was owed tummy time, after all. Asgore gives her a smile, and wiggles his fingers. “May I?”

“Of course.” She nods.

His hand settles on her belly, and pulses magic in, content to top her off while his mate and son in law get settled into the tent with them.

Cae gave a happy noise as he snuggled close to his husband, nuzzling Grillby after the kiss was given.

Papyrus came in next, carefully laying down beside Toki and nuzzling her with a loving purr in greeting as he kissed her head. He then he chuckled as Tenebris entered, purring like his own vehicle would as he zipped the tent closed before laying at Toki’s other side, nuzzling her fluff with a greeting.

He only gave her a short but warm greeting before he scooted lower to curl up around her belly, stroking the swell softly. "Hello puppies~" He cooed quietly in greeting.

Asgore had finished topping her off by the time that Tenebris squirmed in between him and Toki, and he simply laughed and curled an arm around his mate.

Toki was surrounded by monsters- her family- and she couldn’t have been happier. She laughed softly as Tenebris stroked her belly and cooed to it. It was warm to the touch, and she gave a soft, pleasant hum in response. She could feel the tiny stirrings of the little souls and their bonds- she wondered if he felt it too, give the quantity of magic he kept giving her. “They’re happy, I think.” She smiles, and pats the older male’s head lightly, before glancing up to her own mate. She fluffs her mane and settles into him with a pleased buzz. This was the life- being surrounded by family, pack, by the ones you loved.

Tenebris didn't stop the king's hand, only purred louder as he nuzzled her stomach again. "My darlings~" He purred happily.

The purring against her skin sent goosebumps over her belly. “That tickles,” Toki laughs softly. “So… have you and Asgore been thinking about names?” She asks him curiously.

"We have. Though I’ve been doing most of the work." Tenebris rumbled in respond, before he grinned at his mate. "Given I’m the only one good at that." He teased.

Asgore’s mane ruffled and the goat king ruffled at his mate. “Hey now. Tenegore and Asbris are perfectly acceptable names!” He huffs, not all that upset. He knows he’s terrible at naming things, but he tries!
Toki winces. Oh yeah. Those were bad. "Those are… lovely names, Asgore. What names have you come up with, Papa?"

"Aebris, perhaps for a boy. It is a mighty name." He answered. "I thought about it when Asgore threw one of his names out." He then laughed quietly.

“Aebris is a good one.” She smiles. “Hm… What about… Emiko or Harumi?" She suggests lightly, drawing on names from baby books her mother had when she’d been little. “Hikaru is unisex. It could be used for either physical gender.” Then, she gave a slow and wide grin. “What about Hachi?”

"Hachi... The translation for 'bee’?” Tenebris chucked, "Yes, it's a perfect idea, naming it after you."

“Oh my god, no.” She snorts. “I was sassing you. I mean, some of them might look a little bee like, but… Noooo don’t name them after me.” She smooshes a hand against his face. “Behave, you silly old man.”

He giggled against her hand and licked her palm with a wide tongued lick. "You never learn!"

“Neither do you!” She snorts, and uses his saliva to make his sparse mane stick straight up. “Now you have a cowlick for licking me, you butt.” She rolls her eyes, and sighs, shifting slightly as the weight in her belly shifts to an uncomfortable spot on one of her summoned nerves.

He gasped at the revenge and he reached up, smoothing down the fluff. "How dare you." He hissed quietly. He sounded so bitter, but she could see the laughter in his eyes as he looked up at her, at least before it faded for worry. "Are you alright?" He asked.

“I’m alright.” She hums softly and sighs. “Just a pinched nerve. The litter isn’t exactly light weight. They shift inside me and sit on things they shouldn’t.” She pokes the bridge between his eyes. “Don’t worry too much, Papa. I’m alright. Aches and pains are part of pregnancy- I know this all too well.”

He chattered quietly and nuzzled her stomach as he huffed, "Let me worry, damn it." He grumbled as he gave her a skyward stinkeye.

“Fine, fine. Worry all you like and get gray hairs.” She rolls her eye lights at him with an amused chuff. She shifts, partially onto her back against Papyrus. “… Rub? It helps a bit, and makes them move off of painful spots. My round ligaments are stretching fast as hell~” A quick glance to the twins makes sure they hadn’t heard her swear, as they were asleep, “and they ache like a son of a bitch.”

He nodded slowly and closed his eyes as he slowly began to knead in loose circles on her stomach.

Papyrus was good at massaging, when he put his mind to it. He was slow and methodical, and his thumbs worked magic most of the time. But, there was something to be said for the feline like nature of how Tenebris kneaded when he worked at her flesh. Tenne had done it too- it was familiar and soothing, and she found herself relaxing quite a bit.

A soothed sigh slid past her teeth, and her sockets slid closed as she leaned back into her husband. Her wings flexed, and then draped over him like warm, gossamer sheets. “Mmm…”

Aliquam's eyes opened a slight bit before he smiled and nuzzled her gently, giving a low hum. "I love you~" He purred gently.

“I love you too.” She says lightly, and buzzes quietly. As the chill outside presses into the tent, she lets her magic drift into the air to keep it pleasantly warm for everyone inside.

And everyone seemed to sigh together in bliss.

Toki chuckles quietly and feels when Grillby joins her in keeping everyone warm. "Much better... Heh... Hey, Papa? Do you think my pregnancy will make it to summer?" She hadn't enjoyed summer heat waves while pregnant. She'd gotten heat sick that once and they had coddled her.

"No. You should birth them before Summer." The older man answered,

"I was figuring so based on growth. I think five weeks was roughly one trimester, so... Ten more weeks, if we follow that rout." She murmurs lightly.

He lifted his head a little, giving a sleepy, not quite coherent huff. "Sounds about right then, love." He purred quietly, "Now let this old man go senile for the night." He murmured, nuzzling her stomach.

Toki wasn't sure what she thought of that, and could feel the twitch of Papyrus' against her back to let her know that he hadn't appreciated his father's little affectionate quip for her. She reached a hand back and rubbed his hip to try and soothe him. "You're really going senile if you're calling me that." She rolls her eyes and makes light of it. "Get some sleep, Papa. Who knows when I'll move in the night for a more comfortable spot~" She teases.

He grumbled quietly and nuzzled his face into her stomach, settling comfortably while his tail looped around his feet. It was almost cute.

She watched him settle, and then quietly glanced back to check Papyrus and make sure he wasn’t too ruffled by his father’s words. Tenebris hadn’t meant anything by it, they both knew it, but it didn’t mean it wouldn’t ruffle feathers when it came to beasts and men.

Aliquam's hands didn't stray low enough to touch the older male, but they were steadily kneading her all the same. "I'm okay, Toki." He purred.

"Mmm..." She doesn’t quite believe it. She wiggles and gets comfortable against him, before quietly wiggling a hand into his shirt to twine about his rib cage. "You tensed when he said that," She says quietly, once she’s sure Tenebris is snoring against her belly. Which… tickles in one of the weirdest ways ever. “You might be okay, but Sentinel might not be.”

"Mh, it was nothing important, just a twitch." He assured her. "I'll be okay."

She sighs. “Papy. Aliquam. My Quinn.” She hadn’t called him that since she’d come back-especially since that had been his alternate’s literal name. “Don’t fib to me, please. If it upsets you-either of you- talk to me please.”

He looked down at her, and then sighed. "I'm not bothered. I'm really not... but Sentinel did react a little to the name... but I know damn well that it's nothing more than a name of adoration. My father is affectionate, and thankful indeed, but I know nothing is meant of it." He purred quietly.

“Indeed.” She kisses him gently. “Sentinel and your Dad seem like they would clash a lot.” She comments lightly. Two Alpha’s didn’t usually get along well.

"Mmm, I agree... I'd have to exercise caution, letting him out around Father." Aliquam nodded slowly as he spoke.

“Well… He’s going to be out around him on Papa’s planned beast night.” She hums. “But so is my beast, and I’m pretty sure she’s going to keep you all busy.”

"You and your queen bee pheromones~" He purred as he kissed her neck tenderly. "We’ll be just fine, huh?"

“Yep.” She laughs. “You’ll all probably be under our spell.” She wiggles her fingers at him teasingly.

"A spell I’d happily fall under.” He cooed, before he assaulted her neck with a few more sweet kisses.

Him being in her neck meant she could literally assault him with pheromones. So she did- she released some from the back of her neck, designed to soothe and relax him in many ways. “I put a spell on you, because you’re mine~” She singsongs very, very quietly as she picks up on others starting to snore as well.

He came to stop as the scent was released and he hummed quietly before he sagged, purring as his senses became dull in her scent. "Hhhh you little witch~" He chuckled quietly.

“It is a bit of a dirty trick, isn’t it?” Toki chuckles softly and settles her head down.

"The worst." And yet he stayed in her mane, a drunk smile on his face as he settled down contently behind her. "I love you, Toki." He purred. "Good night~"

“Good night, Papy.” She stole his hand, kissed his knuckles, and then cuddled it while Tenebris spent the night with his face pressed to her belly.

It was a good night- a night they all needed.
Chapter 125

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: One hundred and twenty five chapters. This marks fifty chapters into book two. Heh. We’ve come a long way. So this one is Beast night. It doesn’t really end in the way you might think. In fact, it didn’t end in the way we thought it would either.

Part of that, as much as I don’t want to admit it, is our muses are struggling. I think for both Silver and I, we need to take a short break from TOTU. Between IRL beating the fuck out of us, and trying to find the muse for writing, these last chapters of TOTU are looking very daunting. So… We’re gonna take a month, maybe two, and rest. I know it’s a bad time to stop the story, but we should be able to resume with much more vigor when we return! TOTU is not being stopped forever, but a short hiatus is needed for both of us to recuperate. Book 1 was 75 chapters, but book 1 was not as heavy of material as book 2. Book 2 was a lot more stressful, I think, on both of our writing muses.

So. With that said… We’ll see you all on the flipside. I’ll still be responding to comments on AO3, so if you feel like chatting us up, go for it.

Silver notes; Don’t worry guys! We won’t be gone for good, just long enough to let ourselves recharge ^^

Enjoy the chapter, and see you next time!

And what a night it was.

Asgore cuddling Tenebris, who was cuddling Toki, and who was also getting cuddled by Aliquam as well, made for a warm pile of cuddles. Eventually they were joined by Caeruleus and Grillby, making the pile that much warmer. For the older males, it was a beautiful taste of their past brought with the blessing of the present. For the younger lovers, it was almost a reassurance of their bond, what they were as lovers and who they belonged with.

Everyone had woken the next morning feeling a little more alive. With the hearty breakfast of campfire eggs, coffee, bacon and roasted potatoes, even the little Solstice was glowing brighter that morning as they prepared to return home.

Asgore and Tenebris had gone for a walk, and while Grillby worked to tear down and pack up the tent. Caeruleus and Aliquam worked to clean the pans used for making breakfast. Thankfully Solstice had spent the time asleep upon her father's chest so Toki had been left with the task of watching her children alone.

They went home the following afternoon once everything had been packed up, the children sufficiently exhausted, and any and all trash having been picked up and tossed away. Upon their return, the village had cleared out and gone back to normal.

The week that came after was simpler and more relaxing. A few people were poking around here and there, wanting to see the site where Toki had gone through the void, and come back through, but they were easily chased off and brushed off as silly tourists.

Apparently her statue had been insanely popular when it had first gone up, and people had come and gone to pay their respects. Some of them still did, believing that the woman that had returned to their world was not the same one that had gone away.

In some ways, they were right. In many ways, the old Toki had died the day that she went into that void, and the new one had been reborn in the same instant, born of the pain and strife that her predecessor, Kindness, had gone through.

Toki didn’t mind though. She survived- and that’s what mattered. She was a survivor. She could survive anything.

Even her daughter dragging her heels about going to stay the night with them at their grandfather’s while everyone got connected with their inner beast. It would be good for them to learn, while Thumper and Asgore came to spend the night at the house and babysit the summons for them.

Strangely, Sobek seemed to like Thumper. The surly bird listened to him sometimes, which was a fair few more times than he listened to other people.

“But I want to bring toys,” Honey whines.

“We don’t need toys!” Skylar huffs at his sister. “We can play with Grandpa and cuddle Solly if Uncle Cae brings her.”

"Solly might not come. She was feeling a little moody." Cae spoke up from nearby, where he was helping Toki pack up blankets for the trip to Tenebris’ home. "Usually means there's a chance she'd need more time with her father. It’s an elemental thing." He chuckled quietly. "It's okay, I've been hogging her lately." He joked.

Besides that, he’d left Grillby with plenty to feed her.

When everyone made it to Tenebris' home- which took a fair bit of effort to get Honey to leave behind her army of stuffed toys and other silly things- it seemed Asgore had already vacated. Tenebris and Aliquam were already in the front room, moving around furniture to accommodate for the pickiness the beasts will have. The couch was overturned, the cushions of it in a small pile, Tenebris' chair was pushed back, and turned over with it's back facing up and now covered for it's own protection.

Thumper was there for the moment, but he would be leaving soon to go stay with Grillby. He loved his family, he did, but if they growled and snarled, he would run, and they would chase. For now though, he was packing up anything and everything of his that the beasts could cause mayhem with, and securing it in his room, which was being padlocked so none of them got inside.

Toki smiled to Thumper as she arrived, and ushered her children in the door. She was in loose, easily removable clothes, knowing her beast didn't like clothing. "Hey, Thumper. Helping get stuff set up?"

"Nope. Just making sure Dad can't eat my headphone cords again." He gives the older man a dirty look, and then bounces over to Toki. His fuzzy nose cuddles to her swollen belly, which was growing larger and larger practically by the day, and he peppers his siblings with kisses.

"Well, Papa is a silly old man and sometimes he has to eat silly things." She pats his ears and lets him smooch her, smiling warmly. He was excited, as always. "You and Asgore take good care of Sobek and Snuggle, alright?"
"Okay!" He grins at her. He gives her belly another soft rub, before bouncing for Tenebris, and launching for his shoulders. "DaaaaaaAAAAAAAD! I'm gonna go now. Where's my goodbye hug?"

"Ready and waiting, son." Tenebris replied with a laugh, catching Thumper before purring as he gave him a squeeze. "I love you, Thumper. You be polite for your hosts, you hear?"

“My hosts?” The boy laughs. “I’m watching Sobek and Snuggle with Pops! I’ve got to worry about Sobek being rude to Pops, not me being rude.” He tickles his whiskers against the older man’s face. “I love you too, Dad. I’ll see you tomorrow, yeah?”

"Right on time, my little cottontail~" He laughed at the tickling whiskers, nuzzling him firmly before letting him go.

Thumper gave him a grin and thumped his foot. “I’ll know if you’re late!” He teases, and then hops for the front door. He gives his family a wave, and then bids them farewell.

Toki watches him go with a fond smile. “He’s getting so big so fast.” She sighs. Her hand slides down to her belly, and she rubs it quietly. Her green gaze slides to her children, who were currently attempting to see what their father was up to. “They all are."

"It’s an irreplaceable experience." Tenebris rumbled happily, following her gaze to see Aliquam pausing in his work to scoop up his pups and squeeze them appreciatively. He was clacking kisses to both their heads.

“You’ll get to experience more of it yourself in time, Papa.” She smiles. He hadn’t gotten to see Papyrus and Sans grow up- and he got Thumper when he was later in life. He would get the good and the bad with these little ones. “So. What is the plan for tonight, Papa?”

"We start slow, make sure we are all comfortable. I asked Asgore to come by with a late night meal to keep us from getting peckish." He answered.

“That’s good.” She nods. She stretches her back for a moment, and then descends onto all fours. Or all sixes, rather. Her secondary arms curled around belly as she stretched, not unlike a cat and yawning. “Mmm… So, we brought pillows and soft things.” Sans had carried them for her while she wrangled the twins. “Not sure if we’ll need them or not. What are you and Papyrus doing with the furniture?”

"Clawproofing it. We’re mostly protecting the softest sides of it, and making a small cave for Rufus.” He gestured to the triangular cave that was made of the overturned couch.

“’Cause Uncle is a lazy hermit?” Skylar chirps innocently from his father’s arms.

"Oh come on, be nice." Aliquam scolded quietly.

"Yes. At least that’s what he called himself last... I’ve kept the cushions with the couch for a little, but they’ll be moved by the time he's ready to den." Tenebris hummed, glancing over as his son walked into the room.

Sans looked at the den. He sucked in his gut a little before he huffed. "Yeah I’ll fit fine."

“I dunno about that.” Toki chittered in amusement. She lurked in his eventual den, taking up space and fluffing herself out. "How you gonna fit when I’m taking up all the space~?" She teases. Was that an invitation to play? Perhaps.

"Easy. I'll politely ask you to vamoose. If that doesn’t work, I'll push you right outta there." He huffed. "I’m like a bulldozer."

“A bulldozer, huh?” She grins, and half wiggles down like she’s getting comfortable. She can’t, not with her belly and the lack of padding, but she can fake it. “Well, mister bulldozer, I might just be a roadblock that you can’t move.”

“Ooooooo!” Honey grinned. “You gonna let Momma talk to you like that, Uncle Cae?” Was she egging him on, just like her mother did to pretty much everyone else did? Yep. Someone was just like her mother.

He folded his arms and looked hurt. "Didn't Dad just say he made that cave for me? It's like putting that roadblock in the bulldozers garage."

“Well...” She wiggled her brows at him. “Buck up and make me move~” She gave a playful buzz. Toki wouldn’t be hard to move, honestly. A nudge to the rump, maybe a small shove, and she’d move.

“Get Momma!” Honey squirmed in her Daddy’s arms. “Get herr!”

“Silly! He can’t play as rough as we do.” Skylar bumps her lightly. “Mama has babies. Daddy’s cuffed us for getting too rough with Momma.”

Cae huffed and looked at Aliquam. The younger brother gave him a calm look but it was accompanied by a small nod, and the older brother grumbled before he went around the back of the couch.

His pupils thinned as he knelt down and he huffed. "Out ya get.” He growled, lowering his head and pressing a small, ridged crown of bone against Toki’s thigh.

Toki grunted at the head pressing to the back of her thigh, and the deeper voice rumbling behind her. She couldn't do anything about it. It made her beast stir, on edge with having a foreign beast behind her, and she gave a chitter as she gave some ground, before effectively blocking up the other side of his den.

Dear gave a chittering hiss out of Toki's throat, asserting more control. It was her night, after all. The beast had been practically chomping at the bit since she learned she was going to get an entire night free. However, she couldn't turn around, and outside was the male who was not mate but looked like mate, and then first mate and pups. She was alright with first mate, but unsure about smelling so many unfamiliar beasts.

It made her hesitate in leaving.

Rufus, unaware of her inner conflict, growled firmly before he gave her a sharp nip. "Git!" He growled louder.

He dared to bite her backside. He, whom she did not know, dared to nip her and demand her to move when she had been here first? Where Toki might have been playful, Dear was not. She didn’t give him any verbal warning other than a vicious snarl. She rocked forward on her four arms, and donkey kicked him in the face with the bare bone of her heel.

It put her outside of his den, which let her turn her pregnant self around. She bristled right in his face, still outside his den in a lack of desire to get stuck in close quarters. Her mouth opened and her teeth flared, and she was very much apparent as the alpha that she was.

Dear made it clear that being pissy with her would result in a non-pleasant experience. Playful was fine, pissy and impatient was not.

Rufus barked in pain as he got kicked and didn’t move while she did, but he promptly took the open space as she vacated the ‘cave’. He curled his lip at her before warbling quietly in what almost seemed like an apology. He set his head down on his arms, his gaze lowering as the warbling picked up again.

Rufus, and correlating Caeruleus, were most definitely Beta.

She puffed up as he submitted, and she made him hold that pose for several seconds. Dear was Queen bee, and they did not take well to insult or challenge. Eventually she dropped her head and closed her teeth over the nape of his neck, giving him a half reprimanding and half forgiving shake. It was a light reminded that she wouldn't be so kind next time he got out of line, now that he knew where he sat in the pecking order.

Straightening, she chuffed and stalked off, keeping to the edge of the room as she eyed her mate and not-mate. Her pupils were thin, her movements entirely Insectis. Toki wasn’t home.

Skylar seemed frozen in his Daddy's arms. The display alarmed him more than anything. He’d seen his grandpa like this before, but not his Momma, Daddy, or Uncle. It was new and alarming.

Honey was giving tiny baby growls at her Momma for having gotten in her uncles space, but her tiny growls shifted pitch when her Uncle bit her Momma on the butt. How rude! She'd been taught that biting was bad.

Rufus took the shake with dignity and settled down, watching the others now that he was comfortable

Aliquam slowly set the children down and carefully shed his work pants. He then carefully disconnected his leg and set it aside before he lowered and relaxed his mind, coaxing Sentinel to come out.

A moment passed as his body changed to accommodate the shift in perspective to his beast, before he gently chuffed to Dear, and he sat behind the pups.

Dear did not approach. Her green gaze flicked between Tenebris and her known mate. She opened her mouth, quietly huffing in his scent, no matter the fact she had a nose to scent with now.

Her gaze slid over his frame, eyeing his discarded leg briefly before she resumed staring at him. Slowly, very slowly, she sat down and the bristling of her mane settled some. Her head cocked, and she made a faint noise in the back of her throat.

Honey was the first to go to her mother, scrambling over on all fours with ease. She bumped into her arm and bounced until she was rewarded with a burbling coo.

Skylar for once was too much like his father. He hesitated, crouched, and was unsure about staying where he sat, or joining his twin.

There was a telltale rumble from Tenebris to announce that the eldest beast was now out, though he watched on silently.
The rumble of the elder beast made Dear tense, and her slitted gaze slid to him. Her mane ruffled and her wings lifted, quietly staking claim to this side of the room for the moment.

Sentinel leaned down to nuzzle Skylar, purring warmly as he gave him a gentle nip.

Skylar grunted at the nip and ended up hopping forwards a couple steps. He wasn't sure about this acting like a beast thing. Some part of him was eager to do it, but another part of him was hesitant. He gave a soft squeak. He'd rather be close to both parents while he was feeling unsure.

And while Skylar steadily made his way closer, Sentinel followed, steadily hopping at Skylar's side as he continued to coax him on.

Dear watched them get closer, and grunted as Honey started to tug on her shirt. It reminded her that clothing was irritating, and she took a moment to shred her way out of it. There. A proper beast wasn't covered in such... Rubbish.

Honey didn't complain, playing with the scraps of cloth that had been her mother's shirt. When her brother finally hopped into range, she batted one at him, and stuck her butt into the air, wiggling it like she had a tail to lash.

Skylar seemed perplexed with the scrap of fabric, and not at all bothered by his now naked mother. Slowly he batted it back to his sister. The older twin then yelped as his younger twin gave a gleeful shriek and pounced him to play. Hesitance or no, he couldn't ignore that. Together they tumbled through the scraps of cloth.

Dear watched them, pleased with their progress. She kept her attention partially on them, and partially on the other males in the room.

Sentinel was calm and giving Dear an admiring look.

Rufus couldn't care less what was happening, choosing to remain under the overturned couch.

Papa found himself a place to get comfortable on top of the couch, his crown, ridges, and quills growing out of his hard hide as instinct allowed him to release his alpha features

Dear mostly watched Papa. He was the biggest alpha, the oldest alpha, and by rights, the biggest threat to her pups even if she could smell his relation to them. She was understandably wary. Neither body had been big enough to take a male his size in a fight. She had venom though, and she could bite like a son of a bitch.

Dear cocked her head at Sentinel, and slowly stretched her face out to sniff his, offering him the same courtesy. They were mates, but they hadn't met before. Not face to face like this.

Sentinel rumbled softly as he watched her. He could smell that she was also an Alpha, and unlike Rufus, he knew better than to be rude. So he rumbled quieter as he bowed his head, hoping she would recognize the sign of respect and respond in the same.

At least that’s what he learned from his Sire.

It took her a moment to recognize the foreign sign of respect. Slowly she reciprocated, dipping her skull to him as she buzzed lowly at him. He had manners, which was good. He smelled of Alpha too, which was also good. She wasn't sure how she would handle being mated to a submissive or a Beta. Toki was already an Omega, while her beast was an Alpha... It would have been a mess. Less mess made Dear happy. She slowly crooned at Sentinel.
And he crooned right back, slowly closing the distance to rub his head against hers. All the while, Papa watched on and the elder beast rumbled proudly to watch them introduce themselves to each other, much better than he worried.

Dear was pleased as his head touched hers. The vertebrae in her neck rattled happily, and she chirped contently, up until the rumbles from the other alpha in the room disquieted her. Her gaze flicked sidelong to him, and to the jumble of pups wrestling towards him.

Sentinel peered over as well, tilting his head as he watched the children near the elder male. He rumbled quietly as he watched Papa shift, though was calmed only slightly as the larger beast leaned down to gently greet the children.

Dear was not so much calmed, and she tensed, rising up onto all fours as she watched him greet the children. She wanted to make sure he wouldn’t be snappish with the twins, or she’d be all up in his business.

Skylar got pinned on his back by his little sister, and let out a tiny grunt as he was stuck peering up at his grandfather. The massive beast was leaning down off the back of the overturned couch and staring at them, and he felt himself wanting to turtle and submit before him. His arms curled to his chest, and he tucked his legs up as well, eyes going wide. He’d never felt like this before around his grandfather. He didn’t like it.

Honey paused over top of her older twin, and her blue eye lights thinned as she peered up at her grandpa. She gave a tiny, squeaky growl, and then playfully leaned up to swat his nose. She wasn’t afraid to entice the older male to play. All the adults were being dumb- they could be playing, but no, they had to be all bristly and growly and be big buttheads.

He took the swat and he jerked back before he gave an irked snort. Though as he lowered his snout again, he nosed past her and groomed Skylar gently, purring softly to him as he recognized the behavior as fear.

Skylar made a soft whining sound behind his sharp, sharp teeth. He submitted quietly to let himself be groomed.

Honey however took offense to being brushed off. She puffed up, and she growled again, before head-butting him with her pointy little horns. She wasn’t supposed to bite, but her Momma never said nothing about poking them with her pointy head spears.

Papa jerked in place this time, and his muzzle smacked her backwards a few centimeters as he gave a louder growl, almost a snarl, which was a clear warning to the pup.

Sentinel bristled as the pup was bumped by the elder's reaction, but he expected it to happen. Letting the elder have that one, he got up and came over, scooping Honey into his teeth as he pulled her away.

Skylar was well under his grandfather's shadow, and he was pretty much safe there as the elder lowered his head to resume grooming the pup while taking in his scent to recognize the blood between them.

The older twin didn’t like being separated from his twin during such an odd experience however, and he began slowly, so slowly, seal crawling away with his elbows.

Dear didn’t like the growl, or how Honey seemed to wilt in her father’s teeth. She bristled, and she gathered her wilted daughter from her mate once he had returned to her side. She tuck her, and began to groom her gently, reassuring her warmly. She then chittered softly- a clear demand for the return of her other pup as well. If Papa was going to play favorites, then he could have none of them. They were pups- they were going to play. If he couldn’t play, then he just needed to stay atop the couch of grouches and ignore them.

Papa gave her an annoyed look and his lip curled slightly before he huffed and lowered his snout to gently encourage Skylar to go to his parents.

Skylar scooted up and hesitantly scrambled for his mother.

Dear tucked him into her chest, and began to groom him quietly. She settled carefully onto her side, not at all bothered by Papa’s lip curl. Her wings lifted slightly, showing just how unbothered by it she was.

The twins relaxed as she groomed them, settled on her side like a great lioness, and her swollen belly bared and on display.

Lounging like the queen she knew she was while swollen with young appealed the beast, who then gave a deep rumble to inform the other he liked what he saw.

Sentinel thwarted his charms. Sentinel quickly moved in front of Dear and flared his shoulders, baring his fangs to remind the other that she who he was trying to flirt with was already taken.

Of course, this just made Papa grumble in annoyance, though he seemed to not care enough to get up and counter Sentinels aggressive stance.

Dear cocked her head as Papa attempted to charm her. It wasn't unlike the times that Big Daddy had charmed her, before rolling her over and taking what was his. With, of course, some minor struggle from her just because that was the nature of an alpha. He had to earn the right to dominate her. Dear remembered though that this one was not their mate, and that she should not encourage his flirts with pheromones.

Her gaze instead settled on her first mate, who blocked the path. The three limbed alpha was not necessarily a match for his sire, not in physical fighting. Dear rumbled, a soft command for both males to cease their nonsense. She chittered softly, informing Papa that she would take his words as a compliment to her appearance, but nothing more. He hadn't won her like Tenne anyways. Tenne had nursed Toki back to health, and had proven that he had wanted her despite her damage. Tenebris had been a hard won friendship on Toki's part.

Dear returned to grooming her children, content that her command for them to behave would be heeded.

Papa didn’t drag on after Dear made it clear that she would not reciprocate his message. He lifted his head only for a moment before he yawned and set it down again.

Sentinel snorted sharply, before he slowly turned and nuzzled dear, laying himself around her and the pups.

Dear was pleased as Sentinel settled down. She shifted, and partially lifted up so she could reach over and groom his bones. Her teeth snagged on his clothing and she pulled at them, having no time for such nonsense.

Slowly, the twins got back to their playing now that everything was calmer and their mother was grooming their father. Honey slowly started to explore towards the couch, playfully wiggling her rump in the air towards her Uncle in a universal sign for play since her grandfather was a butthead and wouldn't play with her.

Rufus slowly opened one eye to look towards Honey. Recognizing the gesture, he gave a soft snort, and extended one hand to gently paw at her.

One hand was all she needed. Honey pounced and tackled it, making tiny baby growls as she chomped on him with her flat teeth and did her best to imitate her Uncle's super fluffy dog the time he stole her daddy's hand.

Skylar sat back to watch his sister play fight their uncle's hand, and then crawled off to see what he could find to make into some sort of toy. Anything could be a toy when it was done properly.

Papa's long tail was draped along the bottom of his 'throne rock', swaying slowly with the occasional rattle from the bones that formed his tail.

Skylar crept around quietly. He seemed to have better luck with his grandpa than his sister did, so maybe he'd try there.

While the playful snarls of his sister echoed in his ears, Skylar got nice and close for pouncing. He wiggled, lowering his chest and lifting his rump with his legs into a pose just like his kitties did.

When Papa's tail swung towards him, he pounced. He fell short of it, landing ungracefully. He rolled with it, and just patted the tail blade when it was in range, making sure not to cut himself on it as he did. Orange eyes darted up to the bulky backside he could see, and he darted away out of range so he could make his second strike.

Papa flinched a little as the pup struck and he slumped onto his side as he opened his mouth, releasing a loud groan like noise as his tail rattled. His tail blade lifted enough to then be laid on, keeping it safe under his weight as the rest of his tail wiggled and rattled for Skylar.

Well, Skylar could make use of a rattling link of plated bone. He pounced again, and patted it, before hesitantly chewing on the armored part. He knew his teeth were sharp, like his Momma's teeth, so biting would have to be done gently, unlike Honey who could bite all she wanted but get nowhere.

He then proceeded to throw himself down and gave another moan of mock pain as his tail stopped moving.

Skylar sprang away like someone had jabbed him with a fork. He looked up at his grandpa, bewildered, and then reached out to pat his tail. Surely he hadn't bitten him that hard, had he?

Papa sat up and looked at Skylar. He tilted his head, and then gently wiggled his tail.

Sentinel snorted at the sight, realizing just what the Elder was doing.

Dear was still a little confused as to what was happening. She couldn't really see, but her son wasn’t making distressed sounds, and the older male wasn’t making aggressive moves.

Skylar however was befuddled. His grandpa was okay apparently, and trying to entice him again. Okay… He wiggled a little bit, unable to resist the urge to pounce his tail again. He clamped on, and chewed it again, harder than before but still lighter than his twin would have.

Once more the great Beast gave a groan as he flopped onto his side, his tail wriggling in mock distress before falling limp once more.

Rather than springing back, Skylar chewed on him again, and gave a playful kick with his feet, before scrambling away to see what he would do with that. He could imagine his tail was like a snake- one had to ‘fight’ it very carefully.

And as he started his play, Papa rumbled soundly in content.

Meanwhile, Rufus and Honey had graduated to gentle rough housing and he was getting tired again. So, he pulled a trick he knew would freak her out.

He opened his mouth, dislocated his jaw, and proceeded to gently nom around Honey's face.

Honey did, indeed, freak out. She squeaked, a frightened panicked sound as his much larger mouth closed around her skull. Her bones rattled at him and she yanked away, before scuttling quickly back to her father and mother.

Dear lifted a head and squinted at Rufus, before huffing. She bundled her daughter close, and comforted her gently, as she settled down as best she could on the pillow mound. It wasn't soft enough or big enough for her, and she found herself wanting softer things to add to it to make it a more suitable spot to lay.

Having made sure not even a molar ground against Honey's head, the round beast rumbled as his jaw closed, and he set his head down with a chuff.

Sentinel looked at Dear before he rumbled and got up, making his way to the pile of cushions near Papa.

There was a mutual rumble of respect from one to another that kept the older of the beasts where he was as Sentinel collected a few pillows, bringing them over to where Dear was laying.

Dear shifted as her mate returned with pillows, and she lifted up so they could expand their little resting bed a bit more for laying on.

The extra pillows gave some added softness, but her poor pregnant joints ached for the softness of her primary personality's bed. Dear made due, and invited Sentinel back to her side with a soft, pleased rumble. She would settle and she would doze for a while. She hadn't gotten to sleep in a long time. She didn't really sleep inside of Toki so much as go into a stasis. She didn't need to sleep inside Toki.

With Sentinel nestling up to his mate, and both Papa and Rufus happy where they were, the house reached a peaceful silence for what lasted to be a few hours.

The only time it was disturbed was when it was 'dinner time', at which point there was a gentle knock at the door that caught Papa's attention. He quickly moved from his spot to go investigate.

The door gently creaked opened and Asgore stuck his face in, giving a few gentle chuffs of greeting that Papa quickly answered with his own.

The strange chuffs woke Dear almost immediately. She had Skylar with her at that point, as he had retired from play not long after his sister. With both twins sleeping pillowed on her belly, she couldn't stand, but she could make a small growl of alarm for her mate and pack mate to hear. She could smell food and outside, and outside didn't smell nice. It covered the smell of who was at the door, making her anxious, as she couldn't see them.
Asgore gave Papa a smile, and stepped in with a warm rumble. He was no beast, but he was semi decent at communicating with his mate when he was deep in his beast form. "I've got food," Asgore announces to everyone.

Papa did a small circle and rattled happily as he could smell the food.

It roused Rufus who poked his head out and gave a low sound in his own excitement.

Sentinel had lifted his head and growled quietly, before hearing Asgore at which point the growling stopped and he rumbled as he watched Papa escort the large fluffy male into the room.

Dear's growl cut off, but so did any relaxed pheromones she would be giving off. There was the male who was technically alpha female, and who would be taking her pups. Not just sharing them as packs did for raising usually, but taking them. Dear wouldn't ever fully understand that. She didn't expect she would. She just had to deal with it, and give him sour looks as he entered her field of vision.

The smell of food roused the twins too, though they were slow in stirring.

Asgore smiled and patted Papa with one hand, before going to set the large platter on the table. "I figured a platter would be better, so we don't have you all losing the forks or breaking the plates. Now you can just take a piece of meat and eat at your leisure."

Dear lifted up as she nosed her children onto their feet. They yawned but followed her. She paused and watched Papa and the platter. Who would eat first, she wondered?

For Papa, there was no doubt that he would be the first to select a piece of meat off of the platter. Rufus didn't even move from his spot, knowing he would eat later. Such was the order of the pack- Alphas ate first, and then the beta got to eat.

Sentinel was getting up. He was slow as he watched the older male, but he planned on getting meat for Dear and the pups before the best of it was gone. He approached Papa and the platter of meat and gave a rattle, informing the other of his presence and his intent.

Having not been immediately used to children and needing to share with others, Papa gave a small resilient growl. Though a simple glance to Dear and the two children reminded him of his manners. Approaching Sentinel, Papa slowly set down the chunk of meat that he had taken for himself, a deep rumble in his chest assuring Sentinel that it was safe to take it for them.

Grateful, Sentinel collected the meat and brought it back to his mate, setting it down for her to take before giving her a gentle nuzzle

Dear gave him a nuzzle in return and a grateful warble. She didn't immediately eat though. Instead, she gave Papa a meaningful glance, as well as Asgore. She had seen the older Alpha forgetting about the pups, and she would remind him of the first rule regarding them. She barked softly to get the goat monsters attention, and then the mother began to teach them how they would care for the pups they would be 'adopting' from her, or she would be giving them different lessons. Rule number one, Pups always ate first. It didn't matter if alphas hadn't eaten in weeks, but the pups ate first.

Dear swiftly split the large chunk evenly down the center with her teeth. For Skylar, she gave him his chunk as was. He had teeth like her, and he was fully capable of biting off hunks. Honey had flatter teeth though, so Dear took a little extra care in ripping up hers into smaller, more manageable chunks for her to consume, before shoving the small pile over to her daughter.
The two hesitated, but after some encouragement, seemed to have no problem eating.

Asgore seemed to be thinking as he watched. "Did... We just get a lesson in raising pups?" He wonders out loud, voice low. He didn't mind. It was helpful.

Papa, once again with a chunk of meat hanging from his mouth, gave a rumble and a chuff as he then went to where he had been laying before, getting comfortable before he began to chew on the meat he took for himself.

Dear hummed, pupils slitting thoughtfully with words she intended to share with Toki later if she remembered, and then nosed her mate to go get himself meat. She would eat once the pups had finished, as was proper. After all, who knew if they would want more? She would need to fetch the next best cut for them. They were growing after all.

Asgore settled down into the covered form of Tenebris' chair, and relaxed there with a sigh. He was intending to wait for them all to eat so he could take the platter home and prepare another to leave all night for them to munch on. Snacks and the like, as he knew they would be peckish through out the night. He'd rather they have meals here they could eat, than decide to go ‘hunting’. That wouldn’t end well. May the gods give him strength if Papa ran into Stag instead of an actual deer.

Once Papa and Asgore were clear from the platter, Sentinel ventured forth and collected himself some meat. Only when he stepped away did Rufus cautiously approach to get himself some meat to eat.

Dear regarded Rufus lightly, but didn’t kick up a fuss. No sense in him waiting since no one else was. She hummed, and remained where she lay, quietly guarding her pups.

Once the twins finished eating, and seemed full and content to lounge on the ‘nest’ of sorts, Dear hauled herself up and approached the platter to get her share of meat.

Papa had gotten up to collect another piece of his own, rumbling as he greeted Dear as he stopped by her side, waiting for her to collect her piece as he looked to decide his next piece.

She rumbled a greeting as well, and took a few moments to decide what she wanted. The choice bits had been chosen- the choicest of them given to the children, which is what she wanted- so she settled on something with little marbling. Fat wasn’t appealing to her. Her secondary set of hands collected it, and she fluffed faintly, before giving him a nod. She’d made her choice- of what she thought was the next best cut, anyway- and she was going to return to her nest now.

He watched her go before he collected his own meat, rumbling quietly as he returned to Asgore's side, rumbling contentedly.

Asgore patted him as he came to sit near him instead of on the back of the couch. The goat monster hummed tiredly and let his eyes slide to half lidded before simply closing them as he relaxed in his chair. He wasn't sleeping- no, his ears twitched and flicked every which way so he could pick up the sounds of the beasts in the room.

Dear got comfortable, and began to devour her portion. It settled well, and the nourishment was good for the litter in her belly. She didn’t immediately go for more though, knowing she needed to both wait for the cycle of turns to go again, and for that chunk to digest lest she feel ill. She wasn't sure how a skeleton body worked, but she imagined that since it was solid, it worked much the same as when they had been a beast. So, the litter was rapidly squishing their organs. Big meals needed to come in smaller forms more often.
Papa seemed to be happy as his head was pet by his mate, and he leaned into it while slowly chewing on the meat he had collected.

Sentinel watched him for a moment, then rumbled and got up, pacing for a moment before he went for the platter again.

A soft sound rose from Papa as he eyed the younger alpha, and for a moment he stopped, staring back at the older male before he rattled and continued to the platter. Yes Papa didn't move, but his gaze was watching warily, as if the younger male was about to get tackled.

Asgore paused in his patting and eyed Papa warily. “… What are you doing?” He inquired lightly.

Dear tilts her head as well and watches the exchange curiously.

Sentinel rattled quietly in warning and turned to face Papa, his hackles raising, as did the short quills on his neck and shoulders.

Dropping the meat he was chewing into Asgore's lap, Papa rose to his feet and turned, rattling again in warning as his own quills, longer and thicker, rose to inflate his silhouette. He hadn't seen the pups get up to get a second serving. As Alpha, he was fine with having a second piece, but seeing the sub-alpha try to go for another piece before the pups had Papa unhappy.

Asgore muffled a disgusted noise at the half masticated meat chunk dropped in his lap, and proceeded to set it on a side table instead. He loved Tenebris, he really did, but he was not holding his meat while the beasts had a scuffle over something he didn't understand. No- just no.

Dear’s brow furrowed as she watched them. The twins stirred at her sides, and made small, unhappy noises as they pressed against her shoulders.

“… Is Daddy and Grandpa gonna fight?” Skylar asked.

Dear rumbled, but didn’t answer. She didn’t know.

There was shuffling as Rufus turned around in his den to watch as Papa stalked closer, and Sentinel rattled louder in warning as he arched his back. He shifted on his one hind leg and his fingers curled before he swiped at Papa, at that point the other flinched back before he lunged forward and the beasts impacted against one another with a clash of bone hitting shield and teeth snapping at each other as claws went for the other's snout for sharp, strong smacks.

The two swiped a few times before a hard head butt knocked Sentinel at his unsupported side, sending him onto his back, at which point Sentinel brought his remaining leg up and swiped at Papa's chest as the other snapped at his face, both of them snarling and Papa roaring a few bellows. Sentinel rolled over and quickly moved away, still bristling and baring his teeth at Papa, but now on one side of the older beast while the plate of meat was on the other. He hissed quietly, before his quills flattened.

That was when Papa was content and he gave a sharp snort before he turned and returned to Asgore's side, watching Sentinel. The younger was only wounded in terms of his pride, but he didn't go for the meat again, instead slowly slunk over to where Dear was, his metaphorical ears flat to his head.

The children shied away from the violence, too young to understand and clearly frightened by it, and Dear protected them as best she could from it. Part of her, and a lingering part of Toki, was thinking they might have been too young for this such thing. Honestly, there was no need for it, not with the twins being full. They had eaten a good chunk- the biggest chunk, which Papa had no doubt meant to eat himself, had gone to them both- and they didn’t seem interested in more, so until they were, there was no need for Sentinel to be warded off like so.

But perhaps Insectis worked differently, or she shared too many views with Toki. She leaned over to groom Sentinel, and then nudged him into the bundle of bedding as she stood up. She wasn’t going to let him be bullied. She tucked the children into his side, and she approached this time, her mane bristling up as she locked her gaze onto Papa.

Let him try that with her.

His gaze came over to her as he heard her approach and he gazed at her before he snorted, a clear sign of disinterest that he wasn't going to fight her.

She gave him a look over, and then the noise she gave made it clear that she thought he clearly wasn’t a match or worth a spat anyways. She then collected two chunks, and padded back to the nest. She dropped one in front of Sentinel, and to see if the twins had wanted more.

Neither did, and instead clung to her as she returned to them. So, she shoved it to her mate, and settled to make sure he ate. She was intending to find a better location to settle down for the night-away from the males and their spatting.

He ate the meat quietly but was more than happy to express he was thankful to her, nuzzling and grooming her quietly.

Papa noticed and snorted quietly before he chuffed and turned his head, making soft snapping at where his meat was on the other side of Asgore.

Asgore picked it up between his thumb and forefinger, before passing it hesitantly over to Papa. “That is gross.” He informs him. “Next time you toss your meat in my lap, I’m going to toss it on the floor.”

Dear snorts, and lets him groom her. She sighs, her body relaxing just a bit. She took some time to enjoy the attention, but eventually got up and gathered the children with the intent of finding a more permanent spot to nest for the night. This location was too open, too close to... well, several aggressive males. Two alpha males who were very apt to get into arguments did not make for a relaxing environment. So, Dear had intentions of finding elsewhere in the house for her and the pups to nest.

Asgore glanced up at her. “And where are you going, little miss?”

Dear squinted at him, and made a nasty hiss. Like she’d tell him.

Papa took the meat and chewed a little off to eat, before he lifted his head and rumbled the same question to Dear. Just where was she off to?

Dear lifted her head and fluffed her mane. She clicked at him in sharp tones. She didn’t need to let them know every move she made- if she wanted them to know where she was going, she would tell them. She was taking the children to a less aggressive environment where they would feel safer- and they should feel terrible for making the twins feel scared during their first experience with this.

She lifted her wings and gathered the twins to her chest. She chuffs, and then ventures off to go try and find a nest.

He blinked once as she walked out, but he lowered his head slowly and continued to chew his meal.
After maybe five minutes of passively chewing up the meat, he swallowed it and went to find Dear and the pups.

Sentinel got up as well, going to make sure he didn't change his mind from her previous challenge.

Dear was nowhere to be found in the house. The upstairs was cleared, most of the doors locked to keep them inside the main house. The bathroom was left open, in case they wanted water. The tub had been partially filled, to give the beasts a ‘pond’ to drink from if they so deemed.

But the pregnant queen bee had taken the pups and disappeared within those five minutes, gone from the main part of the house. Her scent was hard to track over top the scents of Thumper and Asgore, who made use of the house much more often than Toki’s body did anymore.

The only door left unlocked was, in fact, the door to the garage, and that was entirely by accident.

And the garage is where he had gone, sniffing the air.

He knew this smell, this beautiful smell of raw, cold and metal mixed with oil, varnish, and pride.

Her name was Eclipse, he knew that much. He came closer to the old vehicle and rumbled as he smelled the car, before he slowly lifted to his hind legs, poking his snout inside the vehicle.

Sharp teeth closed over the end of his snout, and venomous green eyelights peered at him. Dear growled a clear, concise warning for him to back off and out of her chosen nesting area. She chomped harder, in a motion that was definitely not gentle like Skylar's play biting had been, and then let him go, drawing her head back to bare her teeth at him for invading her space.

Papa did quickly back up as soon as he was released and he reached up, slowly rubbing his snout as he hissed quietly.

Sentinel watched him bristle in pain, before he looked to Dear and he thrummed softly as he peered in, not leaning in as much but still making sure he investigated.

Dear didn’t bite her mate, but he still received a hiss. She wanted none of the male aggression in this little haven. She was curled around the twins, who were pillowed on her belly. It shifted every time she breathed, but it didn’t seem to disturb them. She eyed her mate lightly, and rumbled softly. Her wings were a little cramped, but they filled up the space inside the car and provided light and warmth.

He whined and cooed quietly to her, but slowly did back up out of the window, before he rumbled at Papa, a small invitation to return to the main room.

Dear listened to them start to leave, and lowered her head with the intent to sleep. It would be a long night spent with the rest of the beasts- and she knew the children were looking forward to the morning. As much as Dear was enjoying her freedom, being cooped up inside a house wasn’t true freedom. She’d rather see the outside world through Toki’s eyes than be caged up and ‘free’, in a small area with two aggressive alphas.
Chapter 126

Strider Notes: So… That last chapter ended on a slightly sour one. Papa was aggressive to Honey, but seemed to favor Skylar, and neither children liked the fighting… I wonder how this one is going to go.

Also it’s good to be back. It feels like coming home finally. Hopefully it feels nice for ya’ll too! Anyways, we didn’t get as much written as we’d have liked to, so we’ve got about 6 weeks of chapters stocked up. We’ll be resuming the 1 per week schedule, since Silverwing now has a job too. Gotta write around work schedules and the like.

When morning dawned, the house was dark and quiet. Asgore had gone and come once more during the night, bringing a fresh plate of food that only the boys partook in- the King didn’t see Toki’s beast for the rest of the night, nor hide nor hair of the twins.

They still were nowhere to be found come morning, when the beasts roused and shifted to give control over to their main personalities as was agreed.

Tenebris was the first to wake, groaning quietly before he sighed and his eyes opened. He took in his surroundings before he yawned and stretched, his claws flexing before he sat up. "Mmmh... Aliquam... Caeruleus... Wake up." He barked out quietly, waking the boys who slowly slunk out of their resting places.

Aliquam took a moment to stretch before quietly reattaching his leg.

Caeruleus stuck a hand out and waved slowly, the one sign that he was awake. Though it wasn’t much good, as it did little to keep him that way. It quickly disappeared again.

While the boys stirred, there was an echoing silence in the house. There was no Toki, no toddling children grumbling at being made to wake up at such an early hour. There wasn’t even a rumbling purr of Toki sleeping somewhere.

Just silence- unnerving silence. And evidence of several pillows having been taken during the night while they all slept.

Aliquam was the first to notice and with his cane in hand, he slowly pushed himself to his feet. "Toki?" He called gently, starting down the hallway towards a leaking cold draft.

The cold draft that the tall skeleton was feeling came from the garage, where the door had been shoved open. The garage door was still closed, so it was sealed, but the room itself was chilly, and seemed to be empty.

All save the soft snores coming from inside the car.

Aliquam perked up as he zeroed in on the source of the snoring and he slowly came over, leaning down to look into the room with a sweet smile. "Aww. My babies~" He cooed softly.

The twins were spooned to Toki’s belly, snoring into the naked skeleton’s flesh as she breathed. They didn't seem disturbed by the rapid pace breathing of their mother as she lay curled on her side. She had pillows piled around her and in the floorboards to keep her from sliding off, as she had put the twins between her and the back of the seat.

She looked asleep, save for one, acid green eye cracked open. It was glaring at him, not quite fully awake yet. It was also quite clearly not Toki glaring at him, but the beast which had gotten quite sick of males the night prior.

Her teeth splayed, a ghastly display, but she didn't utter a peep as her sharp fingers curled into the seat she was laying on. The buttery leather creaked, threatening to pop small holes open under the sharp tips.

"Oh. Good morning Dear." He purred gently, a soft smile on her face. "Sorry to wake you."

Her single eye blinked slowly and blearily at him for a time, before it expanded slightly. Ah. This was not beast mate. This was sensible mate who didn't fight with sire over petty things. Good. Her display calmed, and though she left faint marks on Tenebris' leather seats, she didn't pop holes clean through. She rumbled quietly, a soft questioning sound since she didn't feel like being verbal. Why was he up and moving? Was it morning? It didn't feel like morning. It didn't feel like she had slept at all.

"Come on. If you want to keep resting, I can take the pups and give them some breakfast."

That made her metaphorically bare her teeth at him again. Metaphorically only because her teeth were always bared.

Take them out there? Where his sire was? "No." She rasps very, very softly at him, stubbornly adjusting so she could get more comfortable with the twins. The creak of the leather seats was loud in the car.

"Alright... Father and Caeruleus are awake and no doubt we'll have some cocoa going soon." He murmured, before he realized just what the sharp tips of her fingers were doing to the leather seats of his Father’s car. "Ah... Hon, you're poking Father's seats, he'll be upset if the leather gets damaged." He told her gently.

"So?" Cocoa was good, and something Dear knew Toki enjoyed a lot of. Dear herself couldn't see the desire to drink it. To each their own. Her gaze narrowed as he mentioned his sire being upset. She flexed her claws and ran them along the leather, not puncturing but making a point. "Good. He asshole." As far as she was concerned, a little damaged animal skin's would be worth it if it upset him for hurting her daughter's feelings the night prior.

Dear was a vengeful mother. No one upset her babies unjustly and got away with it.

"Darling please..." He whined quietly.

"He apologize." She demands and flexes her claws pointedly. Dear was not Toki- she was not so easily handled or negotiated with.

Toki was right- when she wasn’t in a good mood, Dear was not a pleasant person to be around.

"I'll talk to him, but you're mad at Papa, not Tenebris."

"Will apologize or skins get holes." Her eyes glint. "Not apologize to me. To her." She twitches her horn towards their daughter. As her father, surely he wouldn't be pleased with their Honey having been treated as such.
He looked to Honey and his pupils thinned a little as Sentinel explained to him what had transpired the night prior. "Mmh..." He sighed, and then reached inside and gently caressed Honey's head. "I'll go talk to him. Meanwhile, come out, it's freezing out here..."

She gave him a flat look to tell him just what she thought of his attempts at being smooth, and at his hand entering her little 'den' of sorts. Honey stirred under his touch, and Dear gave him an even flatter look. "Talk fast." Is all she advised, and then settled down further. "Don't want out. Want to go home. Bed is soft there." She grumbles tiredly. Dear aches. She doesn’t like pregnancy aches. The saying ‘woke up on the wrong side of the bed’ applied heavily here. She hurt, and she ached, and she wanted none of it.

"We’ll clear this up, and then we’ll go home and I’ll wrap you up in a nice hot blanket. How does that sound, Dear?" He purred softly.

"Mrrrr..." She made a grumbling sound. “Hot bath. Long soak. Everything aches.” A hot blanket was not enough. Dear wanted to soak in hot liquids until the pain went away. She chuffed. “Talk to sire first. Then home.”

"Nice hot water, and I’ll order one of Grillby's finest steaks for you." He soothed. "Raw, just the way you like it." He purred, before he rested his arms on the windowsill of the car. "Can I get a kiss from my pretty mate~?" He cooed sweetly. "A little bit of honey from my sweet honeybee~?"

Her first mate was really testing her patience. She didn’t want a steak, she didn’t want a kiss- she just wanted the apology for her daughter, perhaps to say words at this Tenebris too about his beast’s conduct, and then to go home. But Dear would humor him instead of snapping her teeth at him like she wanted to. She shifted carefully in the car and lifted up to give him a gentle kiss, as requested for a little 'honey' from his honeybee.

Papyrus was smiling happily when the kiss ended. "Thank you sweetheart. I'll be right back~" He hummed, making his way back inside with a soft sound, and the faint clicking of his cane against the ground.

Dear chuffed a soft sound for him to hurry, and then settled down once more. Her eyes closed, and she breathed out a quiet sigh.

“… Momma?” Honey it appeared, was awake. “Is Grandpa gonna be mean again?”

“No,” Dear replied, “He’s going to apologize.” She rolled a little bit, her back bracing against the front seats, and she cuddled Honey up between her arms as her youngest wiggled up against her. Skylar was still asleep, but her eldest was a harder sleeper when he was truly tired.

“Okay.” Honey nuzzled her cheek against the soft fluff of her mother’s mane, and blinked blue eye lights at her quietly. “I don’t understand how beasts work, and why Papa’s beast was mean.”

“It was not called for.” Dear agreed, and nuzzled her face to Honey’s horns. “All will be better.”

“Okay, Momma.”

Not long after Aliquam went back in, Tenebris came out. The older man was rumbling quietly. "Toki... Pups." He called gently.

Dear shifted inside his car, and the shocks of the vehicle creaked just slightly. “Here.” The beast grunts. She hadn’t yet met this Tenebris, but she certainly hoped he was easier to deal with than his beast.
Tenebris approached the car and leaned down. He gave her a sweet smile. "Hello there, Dear... I heard from Aliquam that Papa was cranky last night and was mean to my darling little Honey, so I came to apologize for that mean ol' beastly." He rumbled sweetly. "Now, have you seen my beautiful and most mischievous granddaughter?" He then asked.

He seemed more agreeable than his counterpart. Dear simply cocked a brow at his borderline babytalking to her, and unfurled her arms. "Was an asshole." She agrees bluntly, and tracks over the faint marks on his face from where she'd bitten him. Good. He wore his marks from his scolding. There was no need to play favorites with pups, and certainly no need to treat Honey like that.

"Bad word." Honey mutters, and peeks one eye out to the side of her mother's fluff. She looks at her grandpa and her little teeth turn down into a frowning pout. "You were mean." She says, her voice sad and unsure. "I don't know what I did wrong. I just wanted to play." They had told her to go by her 'instincts', whatever those were, and he had been mean to her for it. She didn't want to come again if it was going to be so contradicting like that.

"I know, and I'm sorry sweet baby..." Tenebris cooed gently to Honey before he made a small grabby hands motion, palms facing her as he gave a warm smile to her. "I was a grumpy old putty-tat. Would a nice big Grandpa hug make it up to you?" He asked.

Grabby hands in Dear's bubble space got her teeth parting in warning. She would bite him again if he got too close.

Honey stared at him, and her brows furrowed. She went to go to him, but paused. "You weren't grumpy with Skylar." She says sullenly. Her Papa had played with her big brother, but had brushed her aside with growls and grumpiness. Her uncle had played with her until he got tired and tried to eat her face, but it was only her Momma and her Daddy who hadn’t been grumpy with her at all.

Honey was well and truly upset by what happened, and she wasn’t sure a big Grandpa hug would make it better. She wasn’t sure she wanted to give him a big hug when he’d been the meanie. Yeah, he said sorry, but it didn’t make her feel any better.

"Oh Honey..." His hands lowered and he knelt to be level with the window, a small frown on his face. "I'm sorry, sweetie... I cannot speak for my beast so I'm afraid I do not know his reasoning for his behavior. But I'm not gonna be grumpy now that it's me. Why don’t you come out with your brother and Momma and we have some breakfast?"

"So it’s just you saying sorry for him being mean, but not him actually being sorry.” Honey surmises with surprising bluntness and intuition, proving that she was indeed a Gaster. She turns her face back into her mother’s mane. “That’s not an apology. I don’t know what it is, but it’s not him being sorry for being mean.” She mutters. The little girl gives a deep sigh. “Breakfast sounds nice… Papa? I don’t wanna come to beast nights anymore if everyone but Momma and Daddy are gonna be grumpy and not nice.” Yeah, her uncle had played for a little bit, but even he and her mother had gotten into a bit of a tiff at the start, and all he had wanted to do was sleep and sit under the couch.

Skylar lifted his head, proving that he’d woken sometime during them talking. “I’d rather stay home.” He mutters shyly. “I didn’t… like it. All the growling and the snarling and the mean-ness… It wasn’t okay that your beast was mean to my sister. He wasn’t mean to me, but…” He hadn’t felt safe there. He didn’t like not feeling safe around his family. The only ones who had felt safe were his Daddy and his Momma, and his Grandpa had beat up on his Daddy.

Skylar didn’t like it.

Dear’s gaze settled on Tenebris and she sighed heavily through her teeth, weary and tired. Beasts weren’t meant to be caged. She didn’t think she’d be joining them again so long as it was locked away in this small little house. Three alphas did not fit well in such a cramped space.

Their actions had resulted in making one of the children uncertain about attending, and had made her eldest son quite sure he would not like to join them again. Perhaps, Dear mused, the beast blood ran too thin in them. She loved them all the same though- and perhaps it would be safer if they were not among beasts.

While Tenebris was worried that this was all Papa's doing, he knew as well that perhaps the blood in them was too diluted to fully embrace their beast nature. "I'm sorry, puppies... maybe next time you'll go with grandpapa Asgore and Thumper instead, and that's okay... you tried it and it wasn't your fancy. It's okay."

The twins nodded into their mother’s side, but neither of them seemed to think it was quite okay. Skylar wondered if there was something wrong with him- even his sister had gotten into it a little bit, and seemed to have fun until she’d been turned away. Honey likewise was having similar thoughts- but was wondering what she’d done to make her Grandpa’s beast seemingly not like her. She didn’t understand- neither of them did.

Dear looked up at him and cocked her head as she scented the upset emotions on the twins. Apparently sleeping it off hadn’t helped... They needed some time with Toki, she thought, or at least time at home with their father where they could unwind and feel safe. She made a chittering sound at him so he would look at her. “Tell your beast that playing favorites does not make for a good father.” She gives him a flat look. The scent of upset from her pups was not putting her in a better mood. Toki had warned them that Dear was not always a pleasant person. “He does not have practice, and he will not get the chance to practice again. You will soon have six. If you cannot promise me they get equal share in love regardless of gender, from your beast as well as you, perhaps you should rethink taking them. If I were you, I would have a long talk with my beast. And make no mistake- you can talk with him. Toki and I talk much.”

Tenebris listened to Dear speak, and as it came to be his turn to speak, he found himself unable.

He just couldn't.

However, neither could Papa. He had nosed in when he heard it was about Dear and the pups, and hearing the mother scolding his capability... It almost reminded him how out of place he was even with his own kind.

A soft sound escaped Tenebris, and he gave a slow, somber nod. He straightened and turned from the vehicle. "Thank you for coming.” He murmured. "I am sorry that Last night didn't go as I had hoped..."

"I don't think it could have. Three alphas in a small space do not mix well. Perhaps if we had not been caged in a house it might have gone better." Dear shifted and gathered her children. She moved to exit the vehicle, clamoring on top of it. "Tell first mate that I will meet him at home. I will do no good here." Toki might, but her? She would only make things worse.

Honey watched him go, and then smacked her mother's arm. "Momma! That's not nice!” She says softly. "You made Papa really sad..." She might have been upset at him, but she didn’t want her family to be sad.

"Beasts are not always nice beings.” Dear grunts. She can feel Toki wanting to rise, to go comfort Tenebris and try to soothe away the words the beast had stung him verbally with, and she squashed her down. Not now. He needed to think, to process what she had said, and decide if he could make the change in his life and how he handled children. He didn't need soft, words from her. He needed his pack and his mate. And Dear would send him the latter shortly.

The Queen Bee left his car stuffed with pillows and left through the back door to his garage. She was more stubborn than Toki was, and she forced her body into flight, and began to track her way home like a bee to its hive.

Dear did her best to make Toki understand as she took her children home. It was early enough that no one really noticed the massive bee monster buzzing through the air.

Asgore hurried over as fast as he could with Thumper once he'd been practically chased out of the house by Toki's very non-friendly beast. All he'd gotten was that Tenebris needed him and Thumper. So he hurried, the rabbit keeping pace easily enough.

Asgore threw open the front door to their house, his mane unbrushed and riddled with tangles as he shoved inside. He was a bit out of breath from how fast he had hurried. "Tenebris?" He calls.

"Dad?" Thumper echoes him.

"In the living room, you two." Was a soft call from the very room where Tenebris slumped in his plush recliner, gently puffing at his pipe as his gaze rested half-lidded and directed to the floor between his outstretched feet.

Aliquam and Caeruleus had helped to clean up and left quietly, both having sensed that their father wasn't right after the talk with Dear. With Aliquam having seen Toki leave, he knew it'd be not long before Tenebris' mate showed up.

Asgore took in his tone of voice, and very gently touched Thumper's shoulder. "Will you make us all some tea, Son? I think we're going to need it."

"Yeah, Pops of course." The rabbit nodded, and hopped for the kitchen.

Asgore went for the living room instead, and headed straight for his mate. He took in his slumped form and nearly despondent gaze, and knelt quietly in the floor between his legs. He didn't say anything. Asgore simply rubbed his thighs quietly and waited to see if he would speak first about what was wrong, or if he just needed company.

At first, the beast didn't do anything but puff at his pipe, small clouds of minty smoke rising from his pipe and past his lips. His dull gaze lifted to Asgore after a few puffs. "Oh Asgore... The one night I invite my grandchildren and daughter to embrace their bloodline... and I screwed it up." He whispered, before his gaze fell back to the floor. "What if I'm not ready for this?" He asked, "Six pups... I couldn't even do it right with two."

Asgore sighed out his nose, and rubbed his thighs gently. Tenebris had a confidence that was hard to shatter, but once it did... Well, the pieces were hard to pick back up. "I didn't get to hear what happened before I was chased out by Toki's beast. She wasn't lying about her being unpleasant... Can you tell me what happened?" He asks him gently. "We'll work this out together, my love."

"Papa took kinder to Skylar and butted away Honey when she tried to play with him. She was upset this morning. I had Aliquam come and ask me to talk to Dear about it. I went out to apologize for his behavior and to check that Honey was alright... only for her mother to remind me just how..." He trailed off, and he slowly lowered his pipe to rest it on the arm of his chair.
Asgore watched him quietly. "What did she say to you, Tenebris?" He murmurs his question gently. While waiting for an answer, he also gives him something else to think on. "It's not hard to see why your beast would take kinder to Skylar. He's smaller in presence than his sister, she tends to bowl him over, and when they rough house she rarely lets him win." He tilts his head, aged eyes watching his mate. "He's an awful lot like a runt, isn't he?" He prompts him gently, hoping he would see what he could see.

"To reconsider adopting the pups if he could not learn to love the pups equally..." He spoke quieter, though as Asgore then described Skylar and compared his passive behavior to that of a runt. "Oh Asgore..." he murmured, pressing his face into his hands, "I'm an old fool... Do you think that is what the problem was?" He asked quietly.

The reconsidering adopting made Asgore flinch, and he felt his soul sink like a rock elemental in a pool of water. It took his breath away to even reconsider that. They had the nursery up and everything.

Still, Asgore fought past the instinctive hurt and need to curl away from such thoughts. Instead, he slowly exhaled. "I think it might have been the problem." He says softly, making sure he makes eye contact with his 'old fool'. "As much as I don't want to reconsider adopting... We might have to if he can't love them equally. There is a chance that we might have a runt, but that would be one runt, and five other children. Tenebris, our five other children wouldn't understand why he was favoring the runt and why he wouldn't play with them if he treats them like he did Honey. I'm not saying don’t give the little one more care and some attention to ensure it grows correctly, but... Blatant favoritism and shunning the rest... They would all be our children, big or small." Asgore gives him a serious look, and his eyes may have been watering. He didn't want to give them up. But they had promised that this would be the best place for them, over their home with their birth mother. Asgore did not like to fail children. Not innocent babies. "Is... Is he understanding what I'm saying?" He asks quietly.

He grit his teeth and tears welled in his own eyes as he slowly brought his form to sit properly in the chair if only to allow him a moment to lean into Asgore's chest. His arms took a moment to wrap tight around his mate. "I don't want to lose this, Asgore... This is my last chance to finally do something right..." He hissed through his teeth, eyes opening a little against Asgore's shoulder to show thin slits. "I failed them so many times... I have to make this right." He hissed as a growl rose from his throat. It was not a sound of aggression, but desperate defiance against what Dear had put into his head.

Well… Half of it was, with the other half being what fueled his beast's spirit.

She was right. He had favored the weaker of the two and not even completely realized it. He had dismissed the stronger pup to play with the other just so he could make the weaker feel like he was doing something right.

He had done everything wrong.

Asgore closed his arms around him and rubbed his fingers up through his sparse mane as his mate shed tears into his shoulder. "You know what you did wrong with the twins." He says softly. "And now... You can work to correct it. You're aware. You can train yourself out of the habit. We'll be good parents, my love. Parenting is forever a learning curve... We've still got some time for you to practice, if that's what you want to do."

Tenebris nodded slowly into Asgore's shoulder, before he sighed quietly, "can... can you say that again?" He murmured softly.
"You can train yourself." He says softly, repeating a shorter version of what he'd said. "We still have time for you to practice and get better at it. We can do this, Tenebris. We’ll be good parents.”

"We’ll be good parents..." He echoed him quietly, having wanted to hear that most of all.

There was a soft thump of a bunny foot on hard flooring, as Thumper returned with the tea. He had his ears tilted down. "... For what it's worth, Dad, I think you're a pretty good Dad. Same with Pops." The boy murmurs as he sets the tray down.

Tenebris brought an arm around Thumper and squeezed him happily.

Asgore hums, and tugs his son into his grasps. "Thank you, Thumper. That means a lot." He tells him sincerely. "We are good parents. But there is always room for improvement. Like with your science grade, mister."

"Ugh Pops no, science is boring."

Tenebris’ grasp on his son changed to an icy hold as Tenebris leaned his head back, deadpanning Thumper. "Did you just insult the great name of Science?" He murmured.

Dear had gotten Asgore and Thumper out of her den, and then gathered the pups up in the room that she recognized as their sleeping den after scrounging around in the kitchen for an easy breakfast for them. Once they had eaten some hastily made cereal, she’d made haste for the bathroom inside the bedroom, hoping to get a good soak in.

She couldn’t figure out the dials and the knobs for the bathroom, and Toki was still nagging in the back of her mind about Tenebris, so she wasn’t getting anywhere as far as a bath went.

So, she let the twins gather their summons and their toys, and she let them play. They were in the middle of constructing a very elaborate city made of blocks and strange plush toy animals, and Dear didn’t wish to disturb it.

Honey and Skylar were quiet, murmuring softly to each other and to their summons. Their summons seemed to realize that neither of them had the best of nights, and were being clingy. Snuggle was wrapped around Skylar, while Sobek was grooming Honey tenderly to try and soothe her.

There was a general air of disquiet in the house, but it was better here than at home. Dear sighed, and reached out to straighten one of the towers before it could topple and likely ruin one of her children’s days. She was tired. Sleep would not come though, and she didn’t want it to. Not yet.

There was noise from the kitchen that drew her attention, and she stirred, moving to peek out the doorway so she could see down the stairs.

Aliquam emerged from the kitchen with a tray that held mugs of cocoa and a bag of mini marshmallows. "Hey everyone, I’ve got cocoa." He called gently, putting the tray down on the coffee table.

The twins perked up as they heard their dad downstairs. Neither had realized he was home, and it made them happy to realize he had come home. Skylar and Honey abandoned their toys, and slipped past their mother’s legs to go down the stairs. They didn’t rush, because they had their summons settled in their arms.
“Daddy!” Honey latched onto his leg when she got downstairs. She nuzzled her face into his leg quietly, and then let go of Sobek so the bird could go claim Tenebris’ usual chair. When her bird scrambled off to beat the insect to the chair, she held her arms up. “Up? Please?”

Dear followed them down shortly, creeping down the stairs on all fours. She hadn’t bothered with clothes, letting Papyrus know that it was still the beast in control.

"Uppy for my baby girl." He purred as he gently scooped her up, before he kissed her head. "Hi sweetie~" He cooed to her with a loving tone.

Honey nuzzled her face into her Daddy’s shoulder and made a tiny happy sound. “I’m glad your home.” She mumbles into his shoulder. “Everything feels weird. Daddy can make it better.” She didn’t like the tense atmosphere- so she was gonna let her daddy fix it with copious amounts of cocoa and cuddles.

Skylar makes a small grunting sound, and lets go of Snuggle as he tries to grab for his cocoa. His arms are just too short. “Mnnn…”

Dear watches his plight, and pads closer so she can scoot the mug into his range. She makes a soft sound as he grabs it on his own, and then backs up to give Papyrus his space. She figures he’s not going to be happy with her for what she said to his sire.

Papyrus sat down on the couch and nuzzled her gently. "Oh Honey, my sweet baby girl... Tell Daddy what's the matter and he'll hear you out."

Honey ground her teeth and simply cuddled him for a bit while she thought upon her words. “I don’t like that everyone is upset.” She says softly. “Momma said mean things to Papa. I don’t really know what all she said meant, but she made him sad. Papa hurt my feelings, and uncle… nommed my face, which was weird but didn’t hurt, and you and Papa fighting scared Sky n’ me both last night.” She murmured softly. “It just… I don’t like it. It makes the air feel funny and I don’t like it. Can you make that feeling go away?”

Skylar glanced up at his father and cupped his cocoa close. He looked at his mother, and wasn’t sure who he wanted to sit by. “I think sissy is looking for the word ‘tense’.” He says softly. “Momma is tense and Papa is tense and it was tense last night and… Neither of us likes it.”

Dear dipped her head with a sigh, and then quietly shifted to get onto the other end of the couch. She curled up there, her aching body taking comfort in the soft plush comforts of the couch. It wasn’t their bed, but it was better than the car.

Taking in her words, Aliquam sighed before he nuzzled her gently. "Oh Honey..." He murmured. "I'm sorry for scaring you and Skylar last night... I can barely remember what happened, but Sentinel told me that Papa got territorial over the food that had been brought for us... Is that what happened?" He asked.

Honey snifflles softly and nods into his shoulder. “I guess… There was roaring and I looked away when you started to swat at each other.”

Dear makes a soft rumbling sound. “Three alphas in a small space was not a good idea. It was, as Toki might say, a ‘recipe for disaster’. Whatever a recipe is.” She says quietly. “If I join one of these ‘beast nights’ again, it will need to be out in the open where we will not be at each other’s throats.”

Skylar comes to sit between them on the couch, and looks up at his mother. “… When is Momma coming back?” He asks her beast quietly.
“When she will not rush off to soothe the feathers I have ruffled.” Dear answers him honestly. “She has seen and she knows, but it is in her nature to try and fix conflict between family.”

"Father was too excited. I agree that he could have planned it better... next time, perhaps, this will not be a problem..." Aliquam sighed, before he kissed Honey's head gently. "Don’t worry, sweetie. I’m okay, and my bond with my father is still very strong. He won't have any negative feelings after the fight." He assured her. "He's still our fluffy old grandpapa."

“Yeah…” Honey nuzzled her head against his kiss with a soft sound. “He’s still Grandpapa. But... Is he gonna be angry at Momma for what Momma’s beast said?” She wasn’t sure what to refer to Dear as. Dear was also Momma, but she couldn’t call them both Momma without confusing everyone. Or confusing herself.

“He looked upset.” Skylar comments softly. “But... I’m sure they’ll work it out, Sissy. Momma and Papa are family- family forgives each other and makes up, remember?”

“Well, yeah.” Honey pouts, her bottom jaw jutting outwards. “When we argue, we always make up. I guess you’re right Sky. I’m sure it’ll get better. Momma just needs to apologize and it’ll be better.”

Dear rolled her eye lights and sighed through her teeth. She didn’t correct her daughter though- she wanted Honey to be happy, so if believing what she did was what it took, then that’s what she would let her believe.

Aliquam let the children talk before he sighed and gently squeezed Honey once more. "It'll be okay, Honey."

“It will.” Honey agrees lightly. “We just need Momma, not beast Momma, to talk to Papa. She’ll make it better."

Dear hummed nonchalantly, and tucked her head down into her fluff. Heaving a soft sigh, the beast decided to go back upstairs and let Papyrus spend time with the twins instead of the kids subtly trying to encourage her to go back inside and let Toki out. She eased off the couch, and began to towards the stairs.

Aliquam noticed but didn't speak up to stop her, knowing she needed to have her space to cool down. Instead, he just quietly munched on a few marshmallows he pulled from the bag, before dropping a few into his cocoa and taking a drink of it.

Honey made a soft noise as she watched her Momma go up the stairs and retreat into her parent’s room. She then looked up at her Daddy and reached up to rub his cheek. “Daddy? Can me n’ Sky watch you play your puzzle game with the silly robot man?"

Skylar nodded too, and sipped his drink. “I like when Daddy does silly things with the blue and orange portals.” He chirps softly.

He blinked, and then he laughed quietly. "Yes, of course... I don’t see why not. Why don’t you go find the game in the shelf while I set up the TV?" He asked sweetly.

“Okay!” Skylar wiggled off the couch, followed by his sister as she shimmied out of their father’s lap. He set his cocoa down, and then scuttled for the game shelf.
Skylar and Honey thumbed through the games, and each one picked up a box. The younger twin pursed her teeth. “Which one do we choose?” She asks lightly.

“I ‘unno,” Skylar shrugs. “Two has the funny robot man.”

“Yeah, but he becomes a not-funny meany-butt.” Honey pouts. “One just has the robot lady and the cake song.”

“Trueeee.” Her brother agrees. “But two has the robot lady become a potato.”

“That’s right!” Honey exclaimed. “She’s a funny potato. I know! Let’s ask Daddy. Daddy!” Honey looked back at Papyrus. “Daddy! You want potato-lady or cake song?”

He laughed quietly and cupped his chin. ”Well, gee, that’s a question isn't it... How about we play them in order? Huh?”

“Ohay!” Honey waved the first game at him, before scampering over to give it to him. “That means cake song first!”

Skylar giggled softly. “This is the only time that cake comes before the potato.” Or ‘dessert before dinner’, as his mind connected. He brought the second game over and set it down on the table. Reclaiming his cocoa, Skylar scampered up onto the couch and got comfortable.

Once Aliquam sat back down, he had Honey take his lap and he began to play. “Into the heart of Aperture Science with my best two little assistants!” He lightly chimed.

The twins let out soft giggles, and settled into his side to watch him breeze through the puzzles and, to them, engaging storyline. It would entertain them for hours upon hours, until Aliquam was no longer interested in playing anymore.

It was several hours later when Toki finally fought to the surface again, and stuffed Dear into what she called the ‘naughty box’ in her mind. It didn’t do anything, but it reminded Dear that hurting family was not okay, no matter what her justifications.

Once Toki had scrambled to the surface, the tired woman had crawled into the bathroom and started up a bath, since Dear didn’t know how to do that. The bath starting was probably the first sign to everyone else that Toki had clawed her way back to the surface. Once the tub was full, with the sound of Portal echoing from downstairs, Toki slumped into the tub to let her sore body soak.

Pregnant skeletons were not meant to sleep in the backs of cars, or curled up on the floor without properly constructed padding. Just… No.

But that was just one small problem. When Toki’s body no longer felt like it would fall apart from the tightness, she would handle Tenebris and Asgore somehow. She just… hoped Dear hadn’t ruined everything for them. What she’d said and what she’d implied… Well, Toki imagined that it was a hard hit for any parent who was adopting. It was also not okay for Dear to have said.

Toki sighed, and let her body sink into the hot water, submerging up until her eye sockets to just let it all soak in.

The story would keep Honey and Skylar well happy, and after he had reached a good point in the game, Aliquam changed it over to the co-op of Portal 2 so that the children could play together.
Meanwhile, he prepared another mug of hot cocoa, complete with marshmallows, and took it upstairs to the bathroom where he had heard Toki draw a bath.

Holding the mug with his free hand, he used the end of his cane to knock, "Toki?" He called gently.

The cane on the hard wood was a strange noise, but one she was getting used to rapidly. She lifted her chin above the water and hummed softly before speaking, "Come on in." Her voice was as tired as she felt. All four arms were limply draped over her swollen belly as she reclined on her back in the tub. Her wings were curled up under her, soaking away their aches as well.

He slowly entered and gave a smile. "Hey, it’s good to see you... You doing alright?" he asked, bringing over the cocoa to offer to her.

"I feel like someone beat me with a rather large flyswatter." She informs him dryly. It takes some effort for her to lift out of the tub enough to accept the cocoa, but she does so with slow grace. Savoring it, she sighs quietly. "It's good to be back... Dear made a mess of things. Thank you for the cocoa, love."

"Of course..." He slowly sat down on the toilet, and sighed, "Atlas and Peabody have the attention of the twins for a while... we can talk if you're in the mood."

"I'm not sure what to take about." She admits softly. "But I know we need to talk. Dear was... Not nice, to put it in polite terms." The green eyed skeleton beast looks at him and makes a soft sound. "Last night was a bit of a disaster."

"Indeed..." Aliquam nodded gently as he sighed. "Father was looking forward to it so dearly."

"I was too." Toki admits. "But... Maybe having that many beasts in a small area is a bad idea... It was a really aggressive atmosphere, not even including how your Dad's beast reacted to the pups, and what Dear said to him this morning."

"There was something about him that was off... I could sense it when Sentinel allowed a moment of clarity... I wonder why he had been picking favorites." He murmured, before he looked at Toki. "I'm afraid that it was enough to shake him. He didn't look good when Caeruleus and I left."

"I don't know why he was picking favorites." She says softly. "But whatever his reason, Dear didn't like it, and she... Well... She basically hinted for him to reconsider adopting the pups if he couldn't guarantee it wouldn't happen with the litter." She says softly. "That's probably why he was so shaken..." Her hand rubs quietly over her belly and she sighs into her cocoa.

That had Aliquam straightening where he sat. "She didn't..." He didn’t look like he believed it, but when she didn’t deny it, his mouth slid open. "She couldn't possibly consider stopping this adoption from being done..." He spoke with a tone of shock. "This is something that Father would have to slowly be brought into, yes, but no one is perfect the first time..."

"According to her," She says quietly, "he already had a 'first time'. This isn't his first time being a father, or you and your brother wouldn't be here." She points out gently. "Dear... Wants them in the best possible home, like we do. Where there won't be any growling and shoving of one pup to play with another instead. Just like Honey, they won't understand why he would be doing that. So I can... Understand why she'd be upset about it." Toki murmurs. "Even if I don't like it."

He sighed, and reached up to rub the space between his eyes, before he looked at her. "Toki... He doesn't have the experience..." He told her... "He barely had enough time to learn before he was taken by the void."
"There is an age difference between you and Sans." She points out. Several years, actually. "Unless your brother spent all his time with a babysitter... Which, actually I could see that happening with how much of a workaholic your dad is." She frowns and sighs. She didn't know what to do. It was a bundle of stress she didn't need or want to have to handle, but here she was.

"He had the time to learn with one child." He spoke. "I was barely crawling before he was taken." It seemed to be a sore topic, based on the unsettled tone in his voice that had underlying emotion to it.

Toki could read the tone of his voice quite well. He seemed... Almost bitter about it. "One child means he has some experience." She says softly, but doesn't press further than that. Dear had hurt even people for the day. Toki wasn't going to add to that list. "Honestly, Pap, I don't know what to do. Maybe just... Wait and see what happens, I guess. I've still got time before I pop, but..." She wondered if Dear would let Tenebris in the room during delivery if they were still at odds with each other.

"Papa has a lot to learn. Tenebris can learn, but like teaching a dog a trick, they learn through experience." He cupped his chin thoughtfully. He took a moment to think as he watched her drink her cocoa. "I want Papa, not Father, but Papa, to watch the pups when we have to run to town.
Perhaps we can have Asgore and Thumper with him, if the boy can handle it.

Toki nods slowly. "That's a good idea." She agrees. "It's going to be difficult for him, but he needs to learn. Even an old dog can learn new- nnnng..." She paused in cocoa drinking, and lifted a hand to her temple. Dear was raising a fuss over that- she didn't want the pups anywhere near Papa until he proved he could behave better- and Toki had to take a minute to squash her down. Toki had control now, and she wasn't going to give it up. "Dear doesn't approve, but frankly, her opinion in this moment doesn't matter." Toki's voice tinged with a harsh tone, and she tried to bury it with cocoa and marshmallows. Her sockets squinted partly closed as her beast worked on giving her a migraine.
“When we go grocery shopping... perhaps tomorrow or this weekend, we’ll leave the twins with him. I think Sobek and Snuggle can behave well enough here. I don’t really want to come home to find out that Papa ate Sobek because Sobek mouthed off to him."

He moved to sit beside the tub and without caring about getting his clothes wet, he gently wrapped his arms around Toki and gave her head a few gentle nuzzles. "Wouldn’t be the first time he threatened to eat him." He joked.

“Yeah,” Toki leaned into him, no doubt soaking his shirt, and chuckled quietly. Her head came to rest on his shoulder, and she nuzzled her skull against his. “It wouldn’t be the first threat.” But she didn’t want to see either of them hurt, and she’s not sure Honey could forgive her grandpa for eating Sobek if he actually did it. Toki had forgiven him for hurting Sugar, but neither he nor his beast had been in control of themselves at the time. Toki finished her cocoa, and then set it outside the tub with a soft sound. “Well... you’re already half wet. Did you want to just climb in and join me?”

"Mmh...I have faith in Atlas and Peabody to keep them entertained for a while. Why not... I’ll take a nice hot soak and in the same, get the chance to massage my wife's beautiful tummy~" He gave another kiss to the top of her head, and then leaned back and undressed. Looking at his leg for a moment, Aliquam snorted quietly before he rolled his eye and chuckled. He reached up and disconnected the prosthetic, setting it by his cane before he hopped back to the edge of the tub. "So, how silly did Sentinel look hopping around on three legs?" He asked.

Toki smiled at his enthusiasm for giving her tummy rubs, and sat up. “I’d have to be crazy to turn down tummy rubs.” She scooted down in the tub, so he could slip in behind her. Their tub was thankfully large- likely designed so the children could play there, or in the hopes that they’d get to do this again if she had returned from the void- so she wouldn’t have a problem with pinched wings.
“Sentinel looked… a little silly.” She admits. “But he handled it with grace. About the only time it seemed to bother him was when he had his spat with Papa, and Papa knocked him off balance.”

"That’s cheating." He chuckled, slowly wiggling down into the tub behind her before he pecked her head, his hands going to caress her stomach and knead the tense skin.

She wiggled right back against him once he was in the tub. Her wet wings felt like damp silk against his leg and his hip. She admittedly had more space since he only had one leg, but she was missing being able to brace on both of them. His hands kneading her sore, stretched flesh felt nice though. “Mmm, very true.” She watched his hands cupping her middle, and she hummed slightly. She was now big enough that there was enough to fill his hands- and she was starting to be unable to see her feet. “Y’know… I’m gonna need t’ start wearing slip on shoes.”

"Yep. That was on the shopping list." He laughed into her neck, kissing it gently while his hand gently tapped a tune to the litter inside. "How are they doing?" He asked.

“Good to know you were noticing my lack of ability to see my feet.” She laughs in good humor. “Maybe we can get some with good arch support. Thankfully we don’t have to deal with swelling feet- we just have to deal with sore feet.” She sighed happily at the kisses to the back of her neck. “Mmm… They’re wiggling around a lot. Lots of quickening. They’ll all get bigger here soon, so everyone else will feel them move. Right now it’s just kinda like… lots of guppies in a plastic bag. It kind of tickles.”

He hummed softly and smiled. "Tickle, huh? That’s cute~" He chuckled. "I bet Father will be excited to feel them wiggle next time he uses you as a pillow."

“I’m sure he will. Considering how he reacted to the twins moving, his own children moving will probably be even more exciting.” She smiled slightly. “I don’t think they’ll be moving by then though. He uses me for a pillow quite often.” She just hoped he would continue to want to use her for a pillow- and that Dear hadn’t completely discouraged him and Asgore. “It took several months for you to feel the twins after I could feel them quickening, so it’ll probably be several weeks until anyone can feel them outside my belly.”

"I bet it'll be the best thing to happen to him, that his pillow moves under his head." He laughed.

“Toki snorts. “What’s hilarious, is I’m actually even older than you now, at least by human years, anyways. Since I spent time in the other world, I’m now… heck, what… thirty five, I think?” She peered up at him and sighed, her belly shifting under his palms with her breath. “One of us has to get some sleep. We have two generally excitable children who don’t quite understand the concept of a “Watch us make this work anyways, eh?” He laughed quietly. "Our kids are energetic, but they are also incredibly smart. They’ll learn the concept pretty fast if we introduce it to them."

“Maybe.” She chuckles softly. “There’s not really a lazy day for a parent though. Not a complete one. Always dinner to make, or messes to clean, fights to soothe over… We’ll manage though.” Toki give him a quiet but loving look, and quietly strokes her hand over his cheekbones. Her bones are gentle on him as she simply touches him and strokes his skull. “Hey… I love you. I love you a whole lot.”

He smiled as her hands traveled over his cheeks and he nuzzled her after a few seconds. "I love you too, Toki. I don’t think I would have been this happy if I hadn’t met you."

"Your life would have been much simpler if you hadn’t settled on me.” Toki gives her husband a silly smile, recalling a similar conversation they’d had before. “But I’m glad you’re happy. I’m happy too.”

"Where’s the fun in simplicity when all the experience is in the variables of life, eh?” He laughed gently, giving her a happy squeeze.

Toki squeaked at the squeeze. “I suppose so. Also careful, Papy. Everything aches, and your arms are very strong.” His squeeze hadn’t been meant with ill intent, but her ribs were tender—everything ached. Her smaller, secondary arms hadn’t liked the squeeze either—they were very fragile compared to the rest of her bones.

"Sorry~" He let her go and gave her a few soft kisses. "How about I make it up to you and rub your tummy some more?” He asked.

She laughs softly. “I’m not going to turn down tummy rubs, love. But y’know, you don’t have to have an excuse to touch my belly.” They might not have been his, but her body was his to enjoy. And he did seem to enjoy seeing her in her ‘pregnancy glow’ as he called it.

"You’re so beautiful." He purred happily, "I love making excuses to caress your beauty." He then cooed as he kissed her neck.

Toki smiled softly and tilted her head so he could kiss her neck better. Her soaking mane was probably giving him a mouthful of wet hair, but she didn’t even care at this point. “Mmm I suppose you do. Honestly, it surprises me that you think I’m this beautiful, Pap. But… it makes me happy.” She didn’t think she was, but so long as he was happy with how she looked, that’s what was important.

"I put a ring on it didn’t I?” He snorted in good humor, and rubbed his palms over her belly. His ring tickled against her bellybutton in the hopes of getting a laugh out of her. "Of course you're beautiful enough to talk about on a daily basis~"

"You did.” She laughs warmly. Her left ring finger is idly touched again and she makes a soft sound. "As much as I love the scarf you gave me, I miss my ring.” She confesses gently, and settles back into him with a soft sound. Toki was a little afraid of burning his scarf by accident, honestly. It was not fireproof.

"If you'd like, I can save up and get you a new one~” He offered, as if forgetting just how well off she was financially, or just simply not caring.

Toki smiled softly and stole one of his hands so she could nuzzle them. A flash of her magic reheated the water again. “You know, I can pay for rings. We could go get a new set re-forged together.” She says softly, and rubs his fingers with hers. She leaves his other hand free to massage her belly, while she cuddles his other one to her face.

He sighed and gently caressed her face. "I suppose we could. It would be fun to do it again..."

“People renew their vows all the time.” She leaned her face into his touch with a soft sigh, sockets fluttering shut. “I don’t really know why, but it’s a cute concept. We could, if you want. I’m even pregnant again, just like last time.” Too bad her wedding dress had gone up in flames- she probably could have fit in it, save the arms and the wings. And the mane.

"I think it sounds like a great idea... the perfect way to reassure the world that I still love you~"

“And that I still love you.” She smiled softly. “Do you still remember our vows?” She asks him gently.

"If not, I’ll have much more to replenish the bond with you~" He purred gently.

"With this hand, I will lift your sorrows." The green-eyed beast skeleton purrs softly. "Your cup will never be empty, for I will be your wine." On a whim, she rolls his hand over in hers, and guides his wet hand into a cupping position. Creating a flame from scratch is easier than one might think, and soon there is a harmless green flame hovering above his palm. "With this candle, I light your way into the darkness." It was coincidental that the hand she had of his happened to be his left one, but she made use of it by gently twisting his ring around his finger. "With this ring, I ask you to be mine."

"See, now I feel bad for playing coy." He laughed.

She laughed. "Honestly, I'm not even sure if I quoted them right. Kinda hoping I did."

"You did them perfectly, my love." He kissed her head, and then nuzzled her. "Absolutely perfect, like the rest of you."

She smiles and shifts in his arms, so she can curl up on her side against his chest. This lets her kiss him back easier, and lets the little green fire extinguish. "If anyone is perfect, it has to be you. You're... More than anyone could ever hope for or dream of in a husband." He still loved her despite everything- despite her coming back pregnant, despite her new looks, how long she had been gone, the knowledge that she had, willingly or unwillingly, fallen for an alternate version of his father... Papyrus was the best, no bones about it.

He gave another sweet laugh as he kissed her a few times before a sound came to his ears. He lifted his head slightly, on alert, before he realized just what it was, and he sighed before he chuckled. "Oh god... they finished already! Those children are frighteningly smart."

“They’re yours,” she laughs, “so of course they’re smart. Come on, lets get out before they come looking for us. As much as a family bath might be nice, Honey has bony knees and likes to dig them into where my kidneys would be, if I had kidneys.”
Strider Notes: So yep, Beast night was a flop, and what do you know, it doesn’t look like Toki got to make up with Tenebris immediately. Don’t you love when life does that to you?

She hadn't had this feeling in a long time. She was floating... Like she was drifting on an open ocean. Her mind was everywhere and nowhere all at once- and through the darkness, so deep, dark and black, she could see light.

It didn't take her long to reach it. Soon she could see and hear and feel, and smell the smells around her- but she couldn't move. Toki couldn't speak. Toki couldn't react visibly.

Through her eyes, she watched six pairs of hands stroking a massively swollen belly, hidden under a moss green top. The belly was much further along than her own- indeed, this one looked nearly ready to pop. They were somewhere outside, under the shade of possibly a porch. She could hear cattle mooing and the furious clucking of chickens as they chased down insects, and smell freshly cut grass which colored the lawn in front of them. The hands paused for a moment, like they knew she was watching, before a soft sigh rang through the air.

Something shifted on her back, and Toki was familiar enough with her own insect based wings to recognize the feel against her skin. However, these felt different- and Toki didn't have six hands. She had four.

"Tenne." her voice- not her voice, her mind lurched to a halt rather abruptly, but Sequoia's voice-called gently. "Tenne, can you help me up? I want to visit Toki's statue today."

"You got it, hon." Was a near-immediate call in reply by the painfully familiar voice that matched the name.

However, there was a voice that sank Toki's metaphorical heart further into her stomach.

"Momma!"

Quinn... The darling pup whom had cherished Toki with all his little heart.

Sequoia's head had turned to see the child as he came scooting out of the house. He immediately tried to clamber into her lap, failing until he was gently boosted up to lay over her swollen stomach. "Hi Momma. We're gonna go see Momma too, right?"

Her little Quinn... He had come so far in speaking since she had been gone. That was the most she'd heard him speak since she had begun working with him.

Sequoia laughed softly and rubbed his head as she scooped him higher into her arms. "You're a might bit heavy to be laying on my belly like that, you little rascal." She kisses his head gently. "Yeah, you can come see your other Momma too. Do you wanna go grab your big brother for me while your Daddy helps me get ready?"
"Okay Momma!" He chirped happily, nuzzling her gently before slowly climbing down and running into the house, while Tenne stepped outside. and Toki had to do a mental double-take.

Because she had totally forgotten how fluffy the younger male was compared to his older self.

Tenne was now sporting a full fluffy mane, a smile on his face as he gently pulled her to her feet. "How are you feeling, dear?" He asked as he nuzzled her.

"Pregnant. I suppose I can't be blamed. You on the other hand..." Sequoia reached up and caressed Tenne’s cheek, before leaning in for a kiss that he happily returned.

They seemed so happy now

It... Hurt. Toki almost was apart of this. There were a lot of conflicting feelings- feelings that she had hoped, perhaps in vain, that she was long past- that were making her feel a large variety of things that were unpleasant and painful.

"They're kicking again." Sequoia chuckles, and she guides one of his massive hands to her swollen midsection. There is movement under his palm, sharp jabbing as a strong baby leg kicks out from inside of her. Toki feels it all, and she wilts. Her beast had mentioned sister queens once before... She was sure Sequoia would have been her sister queen. "They've got your feet. I wonder if they'll have my wings or... Wings more like Toki?"

"So you're wondering if they'll be extra fluffy, or if they'll hum when they fly?" He asked with a soft laugh, his thumb gently running over the moth's stomach before he gently pressed to knead against the tense flesh with his soft pads. "Whichever, they'll be beautiful and I'll love them with all my heart. Just like you, just like Toki~" He purred. "And all the while, I'm going to be the happiest Papa, now aren't I~" He was fluffing up again, and Sequoia gave a soft laugh as she reached up with another hand to smooth down his fluff.

"Tenne, it's getting hard to see you under all that fluff!" She told him through her laughter.

It was soon accompanied with a happy laugh from Tenne, who proceeded to fluff again, before flattening his mane. "I live to spite you~"

"You're gonna suffocate me with this one night, tell you what." She sighed, before she nuzzled him. "Mmh, too bad it's such a good lure, it's so soft~ you've been using my conditioner again, haven't you?"

"Guilty as charged."

Toki's heart was simultaneously warming and breaking. She wasn't the only one who had lost them... But they were getting along. They had recovered- they had babies coming. If she could have cried, she would have.

Sequoia laughed. "Still, I think you're due for a trim, or we're never going to see your face. I used to think Toki was bad, but yeeesh, you take the cake on fluffiness when you let it get away from you. Kai is starting to look like you too. He's gonna need a trim, if I can wrangle him down for one."

"I learned from the best didn't I~" He chuckled, before he reached up to smooth down his fur. "I suppose a cleaning up is in order. Maybe I’ll shave something nerdy into it, as you so affectionately put it." He teased, before peering around Sequoia to see Quinn and Kai coming back out the front door. "How would you like to learn how to shave with a tail blade, Kai?"

"AWESOME!"
"No using your tail blade!" Sequoia reached up and pulled on Tenne's cheeks. "That's too much blade for his little face!"

"Noooooooooo!" Came the wail-like groan from the taller of the two children. As Sequoia turned to see Kai and Quinn, she could see that while time had passed there... It wasn’t much faster than here. They weren't much taller or larger than she remembered, but... They had matured. Losing their first mother would do that to children though.

Sequoia planted a fist in her lower back and smiled at the boys. "Don't even grumble at me you little ruffian. I could just clip it with scissors and ixnay the whole tail blade business all together." She threatens idly. "But c'mon. You know I can only stand for so long before I've got to rest, thanks to your dad being an absolute giant. I want to make the walk before I'm too tuckered out."

"He'll carry you when you get too exhausted and you know he'll be overjoyed to do it." Kai laughed quietly, though he took his brother's hand and stepped down the stairs.

As they did, Tenne slowly pulled away from Sequoia and closed the door behind the duo as they had forgotten to do it. He took a moment in locking the door with his house key before he turned with a light smile.

"Let's go then. It'll be good to say hello to Toki once more." He rumbled.

Though as they stepped down onto the grass, there was an aching pull and suddenly Toki was left behind as Sequoia walked on ahead, more of a sharp waddle than an actual walk. Everything partially dulled, sound, sight, smell, touch- even the feel of the sun shining through her wasn’t as palpable.

Toki was physically sucked out of her first person view of Sequoia's life, and left standing as a ghostly apparition on the deck that they had just left. She had only felt this particular sensation twice- and neither time had been pleasant and neither time meant good things. It left her bones crawling, her soul aching, and her body feeling like it was being pulled apart and put together again.

"Hello, Tokiko."

She tensed at the voice, her mind whirling.

"No. No, no, no, no, you're not here. You can't be here." She whispers sharply.

"It all depends on what your definition of 'here' is." The voice spoke again. "For me, 'here' can mean physically, or simply in the presence of your own mind. In which case, I am the latter."

Like a plume of shadows rising from the once life-filled floor, the servant of the void rose to stare at her with the white pinpricks hidden deep within his doctors mask. His sleeves met, his hands folded and hidden away underneath.

"I was dreaming." She whispers as she turns to stare at Phase as her chest constricts with emotions. His doctors’ mask irks her, because he’s no doctor and he’s creepy enough without it, but she says nothing. She drifts away from him instinctively. "I was seeing... I was seeing Tenne for the first time since I left. And... And as much as it hurt, I wanted to see- I want to know that he's happy. That they're all happy. Him, Sequoia, my boys... Why are you here? Why now?"

"Consider this like a follow-up visit from the doctor... I came to make sure all was... as it was meant to be." His gaze wandered lower to where her pregnancy was most clear. "As well as..."
another thing... though I suppose you will learn that soon enough." After a moment of observing her, Phase turned and looked to where the group had disappeared into the distance. "Oh yes... they are very happy... That is your doing after all."

Toki crosses her arms across her middle, like that will block his sight. She's not sure what her dream form is wearing. "A doctor's visit is usually scheduled and consensual. This is neither." She informs him tiredly. "Another thing? What other thing?" She demands. What more could he expect her to learn?

Her gaze followed his however as they disappeared. Part of her yearned to follow them. Part of her knew it was better to stay. "I... I hope they are. I miss them. I wish... I wish we all could be together in one world, but that's not how life works. I learned that when I met the Han there."

"Indeed, you learned... And don't worry, they miss you too. Greatly... But they cannot bend the world to their yearnings, so they simply accept and are happy with what they have... A home on the surface, a healthy partner... It is the little things, I suppose..."

For a wraith in apparent subservience to a conscious dimensional being in itself... He almost sounded a little wistful.

"It's the little things that make life worth it. When Papy rolls over to kiss me in the morning. When Honey cuddles up to me during movie time, Papa and the laser light, Sans and Serif wrestling while Grillby and Solstice watch, or when Skylar falls asleep in Snuggles' coils. You take the little things for granted... And you don't know you miss them until they're gone." Her gaze slid back to where Tenne, Sequoia, and the boys had gone. Tenne's laugh when Kai and Quinn were playing came to mind. Quinn's fascination with her mane and his love for the chickens. Kai having been so set on getting them together, and then hinting for siblings. It was the little things... They meant the most.

They also hurt the most to lose.

Phase watched her for a moment before he nodded and slowly stepped closer, "Very right you are..." He murmured, before he lifted up a hand, offering something to her. "By some sick sense of humor, this was lost during your first Fall... I thought it right to have it returned to you." He told her.

It took her a moment to look at his hand. Her gaze focused in on it, and she blinked slowly, before reaching out to take it. It was a ring- and a closer look showed it to be the identical match to the one that Papyrus wore. It was her wedding ring- the one that the Void had taken from her- it had her birthstone to prove it.

"I... I thought I'd never see it again." She murmured, finger bones rolling over the enchanted metal. She slid it home into place on her hand- or rather, her primary left hand rather than her secondary. It felt right. "But... This is a dream. A dream ring doesn't mean much." She says quietly. "It won't be here when I wake."

He tilted his head, seemingly bemused at her wistful sadness, before he chuckled quietly. "Perhaps... but perhaps not. I suppose you will have to wake up first to find out, yes?"

"I... Guess." She murmurs. "Pretty sure I'm not done dreaming though." She glanced ahead and sighed. "Can you tell me how much time has passed? She looks... So pregnant. But... Was she at the same time I was? Or after? I heard her mention them maybe looking like me."

"Once you returned to your home, the rift caused by your presence began to seal, so time began to flow more smoothly when you returned home. I believe it has slowed down... Using the common denominator of your gestation... Sequoia is a month or so ahead of you."

"A month." She mused. "So she's... Wow. She's right up there. She looks ready to pop." Toki sighed softly. "I wish I could talk to them. Let them know I'm here. All I can do is watch and see... And I can't even do that now." Though, she muses to herself, perhaps it was for the best. It was only breaking her heart to watch it.

He thrummed in thought, before he chuckled, and offered her his hand. "I suppose I can let you get away with this one little trick." He seemed bemused that he was even offering it to her in the first place, but made no moves to take back his offer. "Lend me your magic, Tokiko."

"One little trick?" She asks softly, and hesitates in reaching for him. Slowly her hand does grasp for his offered one. "What do you mean? And I can't offer much. Everyone is struggling to keep up with my magic needs as it is."

"Think of what they would best recognize from you. It doesn't have to be much, but think... and imagine what you would want them to see to know that it was you." Phase murmured to her, shadows extending from his robes to slowly reconstruct the world around her. This allowed them to catch up to the four they had been left behind by.

Toki pauses, and she just... She knows. "Can... Can I give them something instead?" She asks him quietly. "One of my summons- you could rebind her to one of them. My small bees. Quinn... Quinn was very partial to them. It would let them know I'm okay, and that I'm watching." Her gaze slides over to them.

Statue was a light term. It was a small stone statue, but it looked more like a gravestone than anything. There weren't any words on there, but there didn't need to be. Her Beast visage had been captured perfectly, and everyone was gathered around it.

The boys seemed to be telling the statue about their day and how it had been going so far. Quinn was animated as he babbled about the chickens and made his soft 'Nyeh's.

That seemed to surprise Phase, but after a moment of thought, he chuckled quietly. It was a ghostly noise. He gave her a nod. "Yes... I believe I can do that."

Toki nodded and smiled. "Thank you." She drew on enough magic to summon one of her bees- not Stripe because Stripe was pretty much her direct link to the hive- and prepared to bring one of the queens into the... Dream for him to take.

He gently brought up his other hand and held it over her chest, and his pinprick eyes disappeared as magic began to collect in his palm to coax the bond away from her soul. A lesser queen made it a lot easier than if she had decided to go with Stripe. It also meant she wouldn't have to say goodbye to anyone else.

As the bond was coaxed from her soul, Toki did her best to impart to the Queen to please, please give them all her love. They needed it. And... To land on the statue, so they would know she was from Toki. Toki pressed those thoughts to her up until the bond was severed and gone.

The bee hummed with energy, its form shifting and crackling as Phase then turned away from Toki. He gave a soft exhaled sound, as if pursing non-existent lips to blow onto the hornet. It drifted from his hand and flew, before hitting a wall that rippled, and crackled, before pulling apart.

The air was now sweet, and there was a gentle breeze that accompanied the warm sun. The sounds coming from around them were now more full and true to their ears- more like what Toki should have been hearing in her dream.

The Queen bee continued to drift, not even slowing as gasps from everyone around her rang out loud. As directed by Toki, she landed atop the statue and began to pipe sweetly to everyone there. Each little note was unique to each person it was meant for.

Everyone shared a surprised look, and seemed to stare for a moment.

Tenne was the first to smile. "I'll be..." He laughed quietly, "Hello to you too, Toki." He greeted warmly to the bee. She buzzed at him, and seemed to glance to the one-sided mirror where Phase and Toki stood, watching them.

Tenne followed, and like a cat, his pupils thinned as he realized what the hornet was likely looking at. His pupils widened and he smiled warmly again. "One last miracle, eh Toki?" He chuckled almost somberly, before he turned his attention back to the Queen and reached out to help her down.

She climbed onto his hand and piped a soft thanks, before flying to Quinn, and landing on his shoulder.

It both warmed and hurt her heart to watch them react to the bee she had gifted them. Toki wondered for a moment if Tenne had seen her through the tiny ripple in space... Bur probably not. She was a ghost in her own mind, left to wander and watch and see, but not to interact.

But... Now they had a part of her forever. The green hornet would live a long, long time, and keep them company so long as they took care of her.

Sequoia smiled slowly. "That's one of her summons." She says softly. "I wonder how she got here... And why she's alone." She waddled a few steps closer to the bee and Quinn, and then reached out to gently touch the hornet. "Hi there... Heh... Her magic feels like Toki's." Her voice wavered, like she might have started to cry and was struggling to stop it.

Noticing Sequoia reaching for her, the bee quickly responded and turned to nuzzle her hand, piping happily in greeting to her. Her wings fluttered a little and she piped again, a sound that made Quinn giggle again.

Sequoia made a soft sound. Moths didn't buzz or anything like that, but she did make a unique little humming sound with her wings. Sequoia smiled softly, and stroked the bee gently. "Do you think she'll stay...?"

"I don't know." Tenne answered.

At that question, the Queen bee's eyes then glowed and Quinn's soul appeared, drawn out by the insect sitting on him like a parrot. The drawing of his soul made him to squeak in surprise before his eyes widened as the Queen pressed her head to it from his shoulder.

"Y... You're gonna stay?" He asked, carefully moving the Queen to his hands to look at her.

The bee piped again, before humming her wings as a small shard slipped from her chest. The hexagonal shape marked it as her soul.

Quinn looked at it, and then followed her gaze to his soul. Gently lifting it closer to the shard, he let the hornet gently nuzzle the shard into his soul. She piped again once she was done, before his eyes widened and began to tear up. "Nyeh! Promise?" He managed weakly.
The Queen fluffed up and made a soft humming sound with her wings, and he began to sob happily. "Daddy! Daddy! She says she's staying!" He exclaimed joyfully.

Kai was rubbing his eyes, sniffling but happy.

Tenne's smile grew as he knelt and pecked his son's head, stroking it gently as he then brought a hand up to pet the bee. "Another miracle..." He repeated softly.

"We'll take good care of her." Sequoia runs her hand over Quinn's skull and smiles softly. "What are you going to name her?"

What indeed, Toki mused to herself as she watched, feeling tears gathering in her eye sockets.

"Toki!" His answer was almost instantaneous. "Her name is Toki!" He giggled, before he hugged Sequoia's legs, nuzzling her with weak, happy 'Nyehs'.

Sequoia smiled softly and let him cling to her. "Of course she is." She murmurs. "That way we always have our Toki with us, right?"

Toki couldn't handle more of it as she watched Sequoia start to cry again. She could feel it in her own eyes- her tears gathering- and turned to Phase. "I can't watch anymore... They have something from me now. Can... Can you send me home now? Or make me wake up or something?"

Phase nodded slowly, and lifted his hand to wave over the air in front of her face. He let out a pulse of magic, and the world went black, as if it were a fading television screen. He slowly released her, and stepped back. "Farewell, Tokiko." He purred, her name echoing in the now silent space.

…Until it grew louder, and came in the voice of her beloved husband.

"TOKI!"

Toki took a sharp breath in, her body feeling like she hadn't been breathing at all despite the fact that she no longer needed to breathe. Her mouth popped open and she panted, eyes sliding wide as Papyrus scared her. Her mane fluffed and she sat up from where she had slumped over at her computer, working on her next book.

"Papy?" She queries gently, shooting him a confused look as she takes a moment to focus. "What's wrong?"

"Y-You were..." He reached up and rubbed his eyes. "You were... starting to disappear... like... like you were gonna be gone into the Void again..."

"I was what?" She asks, befuddled. Toki turns in her chair to face him, her belly bumping the table. She frowns. "That... Doesn't make sense. I've never disappeared before when I dreamed of other worlds." She murmured. Her fingers tapped on the table, and she took a moment to run her hands over herself to make sure nothing had been changed. "But... Then and again, the Void's assistant hasn't even been in my dreams before either." Toki looks up at Papyrus and then opens her arms. "Papy, I'm not going nowhere, I promise. I'm gonna stay right here. No... No matter what... What I see..." Her soul throbbed, feeling torn in two directions once again, and her gaze slid down some.

He hugged her tightly and slowly regained his composure with a few deep breaths. "I love you..." He whispered. "Please don't scare me like that again."
Toki let him envelop her in his arms, and put up with how he squished her secondary pair and her wings. She simply cuddled close to him and made a few gentle sounds to comfort him. "I can't promise anything if Phase is going to be interrupting my dreams." She says gently. "The Void does what it wants, when it wants. As does its little lapdog. It... Also makes me see what it wants, I'm guessing." She whispers almost brokenly.

Skylar wheeled around the corner into the dining room so fast that his socks slipped on the floor, and he skated for a moment. When his balance was caught, he sent a panicked look to his Mother and Father, and wiggled the phone. "Daddy, I called Grandpapa what happened." He said. "But he just suddenly hung up when I said Momma kept disappearing and reappearing like a ghost. I think he's coming over but I don't know. Daddy? Is Momma... Okay now?"

Their grandpa hadn't been to the house since the failed beast night the week prior- and he hadn't wanted to immediately see Toki. They agreed it was best to give them time to think it over and cool down before talking again.

Aliquam nuzzled Toki gently and nodded. "Yes... She's okay." He murmured, before hearing the front door open. It was echoed by a bestial call, a nearly panicked one.

"Toki!?" Tenebris called out, voice frantic.

Toki was still slightly squished in her husbands arms, so she couldn't really call out to Tenebris when he opened the door. All she could do was make soft soothing sounds for Papyrus and hoped it calmed him enough so he could explain to his father what exactly had happened.

Skylar however could speak. "Grandpapa! Momma is in the dining room!" He called to him.

Tenebris was quick to come to the dining room. "Toki, are you alright? Are you seeing any signs of any other environments around you?" He asked.

Toki wiggled her face away from Papyrus, and managed to look at Tenebris. There was an uneasy twist in her stomach, brought on by her recent dream and the fact that this was the first time she'd seen him in a week, but she fought it down and tucked it away. "I'm okay, honestly." She says, curling her left primary hand around Papyrus' arm so she could slightly pry it off. Not fully, but just enough that she could actually see things and not be absorbed into his frame. "I was just dreaming of other world's. I didn't even know that I was disappearing until I started to come back to this world and I heard Papy panicking... Honestly, the only thing different was... Well, Phase came to me in my dream."

He bristled at that, before he sighed and rested a hand against the table, the other going up to rest on his chest. "At least you're alright, Toki." He sighed. "We couldn't afford to lose you again..."

Toki's finger clicked against her husband's arm in a strange way, and she tensed before glancing down. What she saw made her light headed. Toki felt faint for the first time in her life. "He... He gave me my wedding ring back in my dream." She mutters. Her hand twitches, and shows the very real, very there, once very lost wedding ring, clinging to her finger and only vaguely marred by thick black ooze.

It meant though, that Phase didn't need to come into their world to reach her. And that... Well, that was a scary prospect.

He looked at the ring and his eyes narrowed as he saw the essence. A low growl bubbled from the depths of his throat for a few seconds, filling the dining room with a rattling thunder, before it faded as he sighed and looked at her. "At least you're safe... Recovering your wedding ring was a good fortune though." His gaze lifted to his youngest son.

Aliquam was starting to settle and release Toki. The orange eyed former-guard seemed to be quite surprised, and quite pleased, to see the wedding ring adorning her left hand, like it had never left in the first place.

"Yeah..." The more she stared at the essence on the ring though, the more it made her light headed. "I'm just... worried about what that means. If Phase ever decides to do something more to me in a dream... I'm helpless there. I can't fight back- I could summon magic, but it didn't really take form until he made it." She whispers. "I... think I need some fresh air. Or to lay down." She closed her laptop with one hand, and tried to wobble to her feet.

Aliquam's loosening grip immediately tightened and he made to support her to the nearest safe seat to settle her on.

Tenebris stayed nearby, but with the elephant in the room, he kept his distance.

Toki was settled carefully into a loveseat by the front window after Papyrus helped her hobble there. She tried not to be too heavy for him, knowing that his leg couldn't take the weight without extreme pain. Once she was settled and in no more danger of fainting while walking or standing, Toki let her head come to rest in one of her upturned palms as she closed her sockets to let the world stop spinning. It was beyond upsetting to think that her dreams of other worlds were no longer technically safe for her to wander into and explore in, especially since if the Void took interest, there was the very real chance that she would end up trapped there- or worse. "I... I'm glad I got my ring back." Is all she manages to mumble. "I just hope this goop doesn't stain my ring like Papa did my sheets when he gooped that one time..." The time he'd gotten hit by the delivery van- that had been so long ago, but sometimes it still felt like yesterday.

"I have a method of getting it out, after all my times when I destabilized... If I may borrow it, I'll have it clean and returned in a few days." Tenebris offered.

Toki nodded slightly and began working it off her finger. The goop didn’t make it easy, moving and sliding and... well, not reacting like an inert blob of goop. As soon as it was off of her finger, it was trying to reach out and slide back on. Toki made a soft disturbed sound, and held out her palm for Tenebris. "It's like the goop doesn't want it to get lost again. Just... Don't provoke the goop, okay Papa? Also... it's really nice to see you again." She peers at him from between her fingers, and then grunts as her children scurry to try and climb into her lap and make sure she’s alright.

He took the ring and his hand glowed black as he growled at the goop. His growl cut off as he chuffed. Tenebris looked at her with a gentle smile. "Likewise, darling... It's good to see you."

The goop didn’t seem to care that he’d coated his hand in black magic, and seemed content to try and wrap around his fingers like a leech.

Toki watched the goop warily, but kept a faint smile on her face all the same. “I’ve missed having you around.” She says softly. “Are... are you okay?”

He scowled slightly at the feeling of the goop trying to get cozy, but at her question, he gave a small nod. "Yes, I'm fine... I've just been thinking about you more recently..." He sighed quietly. "I want to apologize for what happened the other night. I was too eager to bond with my own kind, and I underestimated the reactions of my pack."

“Honestly, it’s me that should apologize for what happened.” Toki made a soft sound and straightened in her chair. “Dear wasn’t pleasant and what she said wasn’t... right to say. She hurt you- and she’s not going to apologize, but I will. She shouldn’t have said that, no matter what happened.”

"It’s alright, my dear.” He soothed. “It did have me worrying, but I talked to Asgore and took some time to consider everything, but he and I are still very eager to adopt.”

Her shoulders slumped in relief. “That’s… That’s very good.” She sighed softly. “I’m glad she didn’t dissuade you from adopting. You’ll be a good dad, Tenebris. You can both learn more. In fact… Papyrus and I were going to ask if Papa would babysit the twins for us while we went to town one of these days.”

"I’d love to." He rumbled happily. "No matter what happened, they’re still my grandbabies. They’ll be in good hands." He rumbled happily.

“I’m gonna bring a newspaper.” Honey mumbles from her mother’s lap. “That way if Papa’s beast is a butthead, I can scold him.”

Skylar muffles a laugh by burying his face into Toki’s belly.

Toki has to muffle one too. “I’m sure swatting him with a newspaper will get your point across very well, Honey.” She rubs her little horn gently, and then glances to Papyrus. Toki was feeling better less light headed- so she didn’t look so much like she’d be fainting any minute. However, she was still petrified of what it meant by Phase being able to come into her dreams. For all they knew, it didn’t mean anything- but it could mean something, and that was the terrifying thing.

“Momma, Daddy,” Skylar hums into her belly once his laughter had calmed, “You two should go on a date like in the movies. Daddy should take Momma out to dinner somewhere nice.”

"I agree, just a man and his wife hitting the town, making life worth it while dear old dad watches the kids." Tenebris chortled. "I could even let you use old Eclipse to stroll the town in style.”

Toki snorts. “Pap’s car is just fine for style.” She gives him a wry smile. “Besides, I’m just getting used to fitting my wings in there. Your car is a bit… squished, as weird as it is to say for someone as small as me.” Her gaze slides to her husband. “But I wouldn’t mind dinner, if that sly husband of mine wants to ask me.”

He rumbled and chuffed softly before looking at Aliquam, giving him alight grin. "Well, when you get around to it, you know where to find me.” The old man was teasing as he stuck his tongue out at Aliquam.

His youngest blood son huffed and shooed Tenebris away. "Go on you mischievous old man!” He huffed, "If anything else comes up I’ll call you. Now shoo, quit pestering us with your old man banter!"

"Heh heh heh heh, bye~”

It was good to see Tenebris back to his usual quirky self.

Toki watched Tenebris leave, and then sighed softly in bemusement. She slumped in the loveseat, and relaxed quietly. “So… Now that my… nightmare nap ruined the day… What are we going to do with the rest of our time?” She couldn’t foresee Papyrus wanting to leave her alone after seeing her apparently disappear. Sometimes, she thought maybe he had PTSD, and sometimes he could go into a panic when he thought she was gone.

"Well... I think I’m gonna take that old man's advice- as well as my son’s advice.” Aliquam chuckled. "Let me steal you away for a fine dinner~"

"Oh?" Toki smiles. "Okay. When did you want to go, so we can arrange for the twins to go to your Dad's?"

"Tonight. I'm getting back at him." He cackled.

Toki snorts. "How exactly is that getting back at him?" She inquires. "But alright. It's... Heck, it's already almost three. It's a two-hour drive to town, so if we leave by four, we can get to the city by six. Speaking of... Where did you have in mind for our date? I need to know how to dress." She needed to know if it was fancy, casual, or 'grab a burger and go' grubbies sort of dressing.

Who was he? Caeruleus? "For being his usual sassy self, dear. Regardless, I'm taking you somewhere good, so dress comfy but dress like you're a queen out on the town, you got it?" He purred, pecking her head. "I'm going to go drop off the kids with Father~"

"Okay." Toki smiled warmly. "Take the summons too! I think Sobek is trying to molt, and I'd rather he molt there than here. They don't have problems getting back up from being on the floor." She turned to look at her kids. "Behave you two," She says lightly, and kisses their heads before ushering them out of her lap.

"Wisdom of a mother; I hadn't been able to tell. Thank you dear." Aliquam gently went and picked Sobek up with a towel before offering his arm to Snuggle. "Come on, big boy, up we get to go visit grandpapa."

The bird was making grumpy sounds in Papyrus' arms. Snuggle however was content to crawl up into his arms and curl around him further. The grub was gaining weight, and his chitinous body was starting to lose color. He may have also been preparing to molt his skin.

Toki hefted herself up from her seat and hummed. "... See if Papa can get my ring clean before we go? I wanna wear it." She mumbles bashfully.

"Handsome boy." He cooed to the grub, before he gave Toki a nod. "Sure thing. I've got a feeling that odd essence will like him more anyhow, wouldn't you agree?"

"Pretty sure it's basically a Void booger." Toki rolls her eye lights. "It's going to drive him crazy no doubt. But yes, it's probably going to like him more."

"Nyeh! He's gonna hate it." He cackled, before he looked at his sweet children. He gave them a dashing grin. "Come on you two, let's go visit grandpapa."

The twins scurried for their shoes, and then Honey ran to fetch the days paper. She tucked it resolutely under her arm and then nodded up at her Daddy. "Okay. Lets go!"

"Awww, getting the paper for dear old dad?" He laughed gently, before leading the two pups out with a whistle, as if all was casual and pleasant, which it seem very much to be at this point.

Toki watched him go with bemused laugh, and then went to go upstairs. She opened the door to her room and paused.

Stag was stretched on their bed, legs akimbo, and seemed to be soundly snoozing in their deer form.

Toki crept in, and carefully changed clothes. Comfortable but queen like... She settled on a long maternity dress. It was white with black lace, and made her pregnant belly much more pronounced thanks to the ruffles and the frills. But she looked like a queen... And with a pair of low heels, she walked like one too.

The look on Aliquam's face was a dead giveaway that he was falling in love with her all over again, what a beautiful woman, "Wow..." He chuckled. “Now I’m underdressed.” He laughed softly.

Toki hadn’t expected to see him back by the time that she was heading downstairs again- but then and again, he was fast despite how he walked with his cane. Toki gave him a lopsided smile, and motioned for him to come up the stairs. “I wasn’t expecting you home so soon. Must have got the kids settled quick.” Which was good. “Why don’t you come upstairs and lets see what we can do about you feeling underdressed? I know you’ve got lots of nice shirts, and you’ll look very nice in your slacks if that’s what you want to wear.” Given that he was currently in what she considered his ‘dad grubbies’, his sweat pants and a slightly stained turtleneck, it was little wonder he felt underdressed.

He nodded in agreement. "I may do a once over with the shower though. I don’t want to drag any grime into the outfit."

“Sounds about good. I don’t mind waiting while you wash up. I showered this morning.” Toki smiled. “It would probably do you good to wash up. You’re picking up your dad’s bad habits, you know.” Tenebris could forget to shower for a couple of days, and could sometimes pick up the… weirdest smell. Not like body odor- but something akin to it. It was strange to describe. “Go get those bones squeaky clean, mister, or I’m gonna have to start tossing you in the tub with the twins.” She gives him a cheeky grin.

"Oh no, I really hope I’m not getting old man smell." He laughed, "I'm going, darling, I'm going!" He then laughed as he made to get upstairs and get into the shower.

“Not old man smell, but maybe dirty bones.” She laughs. She watches him scoot off to the shower, and then quietly makes her way back to the dining room.

Toki sits down at her laptop again, and carefully pulls up a document containing all of her dreams. She’d started recording them a while ago… And while Papyrus showered, she would be adding a new one.

In the time it took her to type her dream out. He prepared his outfit, and once into it, he made his way downstairs, with phone and wallet in his pockets and his cane in hand. "Ready to go, darling?" He called out gently.

“Yes dear!” Toki chimed gently. She shoved back from her computer, typing a few last, hurried sentences, before closing her laptop. She padded back towards the stairs, and met him as he reached the bottom. Toki had her purse slung over one shoulder, and her wings fluttered gently. Her mane ruffled atop her dress, and she gave Papyrus a warm grin. “You look handsome.”

"Not nearly as lovely as you do, my darling." He came over to her and offered his arm, giving her a smile. "Let's be off~" He purred.

Toki smiled at him and chuckled. "You're too sweet." She tells him, and snags the keys to the car as she walks with him to the garage. "So... Did you get my wedding band back from Papa while you were there?" She asks hopefully.

"Yes, indeed." He purred quietly, patting her arm they walked. "I've got something special planned for it."

"Oh?" She blinked curiously, and made a soft buzzing sound as they stepped down level with the car. She moved to the passenger door, secondary arm going to pull the latch to open it.

"Mmmhm!" He smiled at her and held the door for her to get in. "Let me get your door, love."

Her husband was such a gentleman when he wanted to be. She gave him a thankful smile, and carefully settled into her seat. The fun thing with this dress was because it was so fluffy, she had to carefully gather the ruffles around her legs and make sure they were away from the door. Once she was sure no fabric would get pinched or left hanging outside, Toki nodded to Papyrus to close the door.

He made sure he tucked the fabric carefully under her rear, since she had missed a few ruffles, and once that was done he shut the door and then went around to his side and got in, starting the car. He let it warm up for only a moment, before carefully backing out of the garage and driving them out of town. "You look so beautiful; I cant believe you aren't an angel~"

"Well, I've got the wings for it. But if you asked most people, they'd probably tell you I looked like a demon that crawled from hell." She laughed in good humor, and settled her wings over the seat. She shifted to cuddle into his shoulder. "So... You going to tell me where you're taking us for dinner?"

"Nyeh heh heh heh! Probably not~" He teased, "You'll have to wait and see." He hummed, though mentally he was hoping there was somewhere nice that didn’t require a reservation.

Ah the joys of spontaneously going to a nice restaurant.

Toki watched him for a moment and chuckled quietly. "You have no idea where to go, do you?" She fondly propped her chin on one of her secondary palms, her elbow resting on the swell of her pregnancy. Belly shelves were great. Toki knew her husband far too well.

"Heh... heh heh..." He giggled nervously. "Not a clue."

Toki laughed. "Well, do you want traditional Japanese food? Italian? We could go for Chinese, but we're a bit overdressed. Could do Italian though."

"Something traditional sounds perfect. I think I remember seeing this one place."

“Oh?” She gives him a curious look. “What type of traditional place?” Toki only knew of a couple in town, but wasn’t familiar with any new ones that might have opened during the time she’d been away.

“I think it was just a little sushi place, but it's kind of fancy. I can’t remember the name, but I remember the street it was on."

“Well, that’s good. If all else fails and we get lost, we can go somewhere that we know and have been before.” Toki hummed. She reached out and fiddled with the radio, and got a good station going for them to listen to on the long drive over.

While the music played, Aliquam hummed and tapped gently to the music as he drove.
Once they made it into town, Aliquam began to look around as he drove until he successfully found the sushi place.

"Ta-da! Told you I’d recognize the place! It’s called the...” He looked out the window, and immediately his face fell. "You've... you've got to be kidding me..."

Toki paused as they parked outside of it. She blinked slowly. “The... Guardian Angelfish?” She couldn’t help the soft snort that escaped her, and muffled her giggles in her four hands. “That... That sounds like a name your brother would have come up with for a restaurant. How have I not heard of this place before now?”

Toki spared one of her hands to reach over and rub his shoulder. “Awww Papy, it’s okay. It’s just... The name is ironic, and a pun. Are you okay? Please don’t bruise your face.” Or break the wheel.

"It's everywhere now, isn't it... I go hermit for a few months and the puns take over...” He leaned back in his seat and let his skull drop back before going ‘boneless’ in the drivers seat. "This is how I die, darling... remember me as a man who loved my people."

Toki snorted again at his dramatics and delved her primary hand down against his side to tickle his ribs. "Oh you silly skeleton you. You're not going to die. We've got a dinner date, and plans to eventually have another small hoard of children."

He squeaked at the tickles and flinched away from her hands, though she seemed to get what she wanted as he sobered up from his dramatics. "Yes dear. Lot's of babies." He chuckled, before he smiled at her. "Let's go inside then, there's a feast to be had."

“Lets indeed!” She beams. So long as she was careful about what she ate, she wouldn’t have a problem here. Toki carefully got out of the car, since she was on the side where the street was, and made her way around once she wouldn’t get run over by passing traffic. “You know, I was pretty familiar with most of the sushi restaurant’s around here... I’m pretty sure this one is new.” She hums conversationally as she reaches his side of the car. “When did it get put up?”

"Mmmh... I want to say it was put up maybe two... no, maybe three months ago...” He answered as he slowly climbed out of the car, putting some weight on his cane as he got it under him. He leaned onto it more, his weight pressing onto it as he then locked the car and pocketed the keys. "Ready, love?" He purred as he offered her an arm.

Toki linked two of hers with his offered arm, and hummed softly. “So it was put up when I was gone.” She surmised gently. “And of course! I’m very ready.” She beamed at him, and strolled forwards to the door with him. Given that she had his arm, and he had his cane in the other one, Toki used her spare arms- since she had two extra arms to put to good use- to pull open the surprisingly heavy door for them both to go through. Having multiple arms had its benefits and its drawbacks.

"Now, I haven’t been here myself, but I’ve got a fellow who recommended something, so I’m looking forward to see what their 'dragon roll' tastes like." He hummed.

"Dragon rolls are okay. Traditionally, they're made with shrimp, cucumber, and avocado. I don’t actually enjoy the taste of shrimp with avocado." Toki murmurs to him conversationally. She blinks as they step inside- the entire building is staffed by monsters it looked like. "... The name makes sense now." She chimes in surprise.

And indeed it did, though it didn't stop Aliquam from groaning quietly into his hand before sobering up as a greeter approached them.

The greeter seemed to be an Utsuri Koi fish, her body covered with beautiful orange and black scales, her eyes large and a surprising shade of blue. "Welcome to the Guardian Angelfish. Would you like a table for two?" She asked.

Toki hid a bemused smirk, since it would technically be a table for eight, and nodded to the pretty Koi fish monster. Ironic, a fish monster working at a sushi restaurant. "Yes please." She smiles. “Ah-may I inquire if your sushi is frozen or not?” If it was frozen, it usually killed the bacteria that made it harmful to pregnant women. Some places didn’t freeze though, and Toki needed to know if it was safe or not. She knew that it was a society thing that women didn’t eat sushi or fish while pregnant.

One of her arms quietly dropped down to cradle her middle as her mane fluffed. She wondered if the woman knew who she was.

At the question, she gave Toki a sweet smile. "You will not need to fear the safety of your children while you are served by us, Ma'am. Worry is always warranted, but we want to make sure that everyone is welcome here, so we put as much effort as possible to precaution." She spoke, leading them to where they could sit down and get comfortable. "All our fish, even the local species caught, are frozen for at least forty eight hours before slowly being defrosted in a sterile environment, ensuring the most minimal contamination of any bacteria that could risk the health of our customers, young, old, and in the works."

Toki gave a relieved smile as she settled into her seat across from Papyrus. They’d been seated at a booth- which wasn’t necessarily a traditional Sushi bar, but Toki wasn’t complaining. The seats were soft and comfortable, and the back was low enough to accommodate her wings. They’d also been given an end seat, so her wings could drape over the back without hitting anyone or intruding upon anyone’s bubble space. “Well, that’s a relief. I’ve got a small immunity to most raw meat bacteria, but I’ve been careful with what raw meat I’ve been consuming.” She knew several types of fish were off the table, but salmon should be fine. “Do you have salmon nigiri available?”

"Absolutely. We have four pieces for 440 yen, or eight pieces for 900 yen." She offered.

Sushi in itself was not very filling, Toki found. Whenever she went there, she always spent a large amount of money on sushi in order to get full. Well, it wasn’t like her bank account couldn’t afford it. “I’ll take the eight piece to start.” Toki smiles to her. “And… Mnnn a ginseng tea if you have it?”
Her eye lights slid to Papyrus. “What do you want, love?”

“How much is your spicy shrimp roll?”

“Eight pieces for 650 yen.” She answered,

“I'll take that, and a dragon roll. I'll also have a green tea please.”

“Sounds good. I'll be right back.” The waitress hummed warmly, heading for the kitchen.

Toki chuckles softly. “I'll probably order another nigiri later. I really enjoy them.” She made a soft sound, and rubbed her foot against his under the booth.

“Sounds like a plan, I might not order much more than what I have, but you're free to enjoy yourself~” He purred, his feet slowly returning the favor as his orange gaze grew peaceful as his eye lights met hers.

“You might change your mind.” She laughs gently. “Sushi isn’t very filling. At least, I never found it filling. Delicious yes, but not very filling.” Her high-heeled shoe gently rubbed against his foot, and she returned his peaceful look. It was nice, being out with him and just… existing. There was peace and love and it was quiet and simply… good. “This is nice, Pap. We should do this more often- take an adults night out at least once a month or so.”

"Absolutely.” He agreed. "Just you and me, living life as we can.” He then reached and gently took one of her larger hands, pulling it for a kiss. "And have the time of our lives doing it."

“Yeah.” She smiles at him warmly, and blushes at the kiss. “When the kids are older, we can bring them with us. At this age though, Honey and Skylar are going to be more bored at a restaurant than they would at… say a park.” Toki gives him a warm grin. “So…. What are you planning with my wedding band?” She asks him curiously.

“Oh... something~ you'll have it back soon though, don’t worry.” He purred, kissing her hand again before giving a soft ‘nyeh heh heh heh’. Even now that he was much older and matured by his life experiences, he always used that adorable, childish laugh when he was happy.

Toki adored his childish laugh. She'd never grow tired of it- it was endearing to her, and it made her happy. She gave him a soft laugh. "You've got me curious. So long as you don't try to hide it in my sushi or something, I'm sure it'll be fun!"

"No, no, I know your teeth very well. One bite and that ring is history." He laughed quietly. "Not to worry my darling, I have much better ideas than that~"

“You’ve got me curious~” She cooed at him. “Won’t you give me a hint?” Toki would have fluttered her lashes at him if she had them.

"Nope." He grinned at her. "You're gonna have to wait, honey~"

Toki pouted at him and sighed. “Okay. I suppose I can wait.” She rubbed her foot against his again, and then wriggled in her seat. “So… I heard the movie is going to finish filming this summer and release by the end of summer. The one based on my book series, that is.” She props her chin onto her secondary palm. “It’s… not exactly going to be for little ones to see, but the both of us could go see it if you want. My editor can get me tickets to the premiere.”

"That sounds like fun. You and me, going to see the product of your hard work." He purred happily.
“Good.” She beams at him. Toki makes a soft sound, and idly taps her fingers on the table. “It’ll be interesting to see how they adapted it. Movies are always different than the books.”

“Well if they know what’s best, they’ll have kept it close to the story you wrote.” He laughed quietly.

“Oh,” She waves a hand, “But you know how movies are. I don’t think I’ve seen many movies that stick close to the plot. Like… Like the Inheritance Cycle. Those books- those were fantastic. But the movie… As a standalone, it was fine, but if you read the books, you just cringed. Not even Jeremy Irons could fix it.”

"Mmh... You know what did well to keep to the book? 'To Kill a Mockingbird'. Absolutely miraculous work there." Aliquam hummed. "I wound up reading the book while I recovered from the battle and ended up finding out about the movie. I watched it with Caeruleus while the pups were all asleep, and I was impressed with how few deviations from the book there was."

Toki made a soft sound. “As weird as it is to say, I didn’t actually like the book or the movie.” She admits. “I mean, it matches fairly well, but I disliked it. It bamboozles my brothers. They loved the book.” She taps her fingers idly on the table while they wait for their tea, and eventually their sushi. “Hey, Pap…?” She looks at him. “I know you don’t like to talk about it, but… What happened after I disappeared?” She asks softly.

He hesitated at the question, then reached up and slowly rubbed his neck, "Well... After the void closed, it was as if the world just died around us... Cae was staring where you disappeared, Father was sobbing, I couldn't feel anything but the pain from my hip and my soul... it felt like it was on fire." He spoke softer. "I blacked out. I woke up from what I was told was almost a week later in the New Home Hospital. Honey and Skylar were both laying next to me. For a moment, I was horrified, terrified, that they had fallen when I took so long to wake up..."

Her soul sank as she listened to him talk. Her fingers clenched, and she reached out to take his hands. “I’m so sorry.” She says softly. “I… I worried too. That… that all three of you would fall. That I’d never see you again.” She exhales softly. “But you’re here, and they’re here. We’re all changed by the things we’ve seen and we’ve had done to us, but we’re still here.” Toki’s fingers held his, and she rubbed his larger knuckles tenderly. Her hands were so much smaller than his- the fur decorating her wrists could tickle his fingers if she touched the back of his palms. “What happened next?” She asks softly.

"I had to recover from my trauma, but not before we all endured rebound. It was horrible..." He shuddered. "Everyone suffered... we almost lost Caeruleus, and I barely managed to hang on... all I had were the children to hold onto..."

Toki grimaced and held his hands tighter. "I'm sorry." She says softly. Things would have been very different if she'd have just... Not been her usual self and had instead listened to them and followed the plan. "I suffered it too. I got mine and Cruelty's. It wasn't... Fun. Deaths Rebound is horrible. Thankfully, we don't have to endure it again." She kissed his knuckles. "At least you had the children, my love, and they had you. You made it through together, until I made it back home to you like I promised."

He smiled at her quietly. "And I'm ever so relieved that you kept that promise... as willing as I was to accept the responsibility, I couldn't accept the fate of raising my children without their mother.”

Toki rubbed his knuckles for a time, quietly soaking in his words. "I know. I'm glad I got to come back... If I couldn't, I don't know what I would have done." She sighs warmly. "But I'm back, and you don't need to worry. I'm not going anywhere, no matter what happens in my dreams."
He smiled at her tenderly, and then looked up as their food was delivered. "Ah... Indeed so. And with that, it's time to eat." He hummed excitedly, straightening up and gently tugging his hands from hers.

Toki smiled at the lovely Koi fish woman who brought with her two platters of food. One had their meals, and the other had their drinks.

Two cups were placed on the table, along with two separate pots that were steaming. One was set on either side of the table, and the Koi fish used the one on Toki's side to fill her husband's with green tea, while Papyrus's side was used to fill hers with ginseng.

One platter of salmon nigiri was placed in front of Toki, while two platters, one spicy shrimp and one dragon roll, were set in front if papyrus. They were topped off with a pair of disposable chopsticks and table sauces.

"Thank you." Toki chirps, and expertly cracks her chopsticks in half so she can make use of them.

"Enjoy your food, let me know if you need anything else."

Aliquam does the same with his chopsticks and gives the Koi a sweet smile as she takes her leave, before he looked down at his food. "This looks great." He commented happily, starting with a spicy shrimp piece. "I'll save that dragon for last~"

Toki chuckles, and very gently applies a bit of wasabi to her nigiri, before dipping it into the small saucer of soy sauce that had been provided. She didn’t bother letting it drip- she stuffed it in her mouth, savoring the taste as the chef’s magic tingled across her senses. “Good idea. If you’ve never had them, you don’t know if you’ll like them. Mmm…” The wasabi was hot, and it burned a little bit, but she enjoyed it. She just wouldn’t eat too much. She didn’t want to risk upsetting her body’s systems while she was pregnant.

"My excuse is it looks so filling." He laughed gently, before popping the sushi into his mouth, humming happily as he started to chew. Which was something to see, as it was amazingly done out of sight rather than end up being chewed for all to see by the skeletal face of the man.

Likewise, Toki’s meal wasn’t chewed up in plain view. She did have her molars, hidden in the back behind bony ‘cheeks’ after all. “Honestly, sushi isn’t all that filling. It is delicious though- but what makes it so expensive is you need so much of it to get full. I still don’t mind though.” It wasn’t like they couldn’t afford one night out to the sushi bar.

"Well as long as we don’t do this all the time, I couldn't imagine we’d get in trouble for gorging ourselves on fine cuisine like this." He laughed. "Get a pleasant taste of the wife's heritage."

“Sushi is just the most commonly thought of part of it,” She laughs in good humor. “Remember, that’s only one part of my heritage.” She nudges his foot gently under the table, mindful of his bad leg. “I really need to take you and the kids out to meet my grandparents in the states. They’re up there in age, but I’m sure they’d love you. Well… Hopefully.” They hadn’t ever really reached out to her since she’d become a monster, and honestly Toki had been too busy with… everything to try and go out to visit them.

"One of many parts, and when everything's all said and done, I’m gonna learn every last bit of it."

Toki smiles at him around another bite of sushi. “What are you going to do once you’ve learned everything?” She teases. “There’s going to be no mystery left.” She comments, with a wiggled brow.

Swallowing his mouthful, he gave her a smile. "Tell you what, how about I tell you when we're all done with our food." He suggested with a sweet tone. "Tonight... I think I want to make this more special... I don’t know if I can better it meal-wise, but I think I have something... something super special I want to do..."

She swallowed her bite, and gave him a warm look. “Okay. I can wait until we’re done.” She beams. “I look forward to this super special thing. If it’s got you this excited, I’m sure it’s going to be perfect.”

He gave a weak laugh as he looked away and he pressed his face into his hand. "Heh... Excited... it's starting to become an understatement, I’m not going to lie." He spoke through his fingers, before he sighed and lowered his hand, looking back at her with a smile. "I love you, Toki~"

“I love you too, Papy.” She smiles at him soothingly, and takes another bite of her meal. “You know,” she comments gently, “the sooner we finish, the sooner you can soothe your excitement... or nerves. Those might be nerves.” She rubs her ankle against his and hums.

"I feel like I’m going to pass out.” He laughed again nervously, reaching up to run his hand over his face, before he sighed and picked up his chopsticks. "Yeah..." He picked up a piece of the dragon roll and popped it into his mouth with a soft crunch of the tempura within.

Toki watched him switch from his shrimp rolls to his dragon rolls, and wondered how he liked the avocado with the shrimp. “Deep breaths, dear. I’m not going to eat your soul, I promise.” She jokes. Toki could feel his soul- bonded with hers, though faint from their time apart- racing in his chest. She used to know when it was racing clearly- now it was very faint. “No need to be nervous. I’m only hungry for tasty nigiri.” She winks, trying to help him relax as she pops another into her mouth. Goodness, she loved salmon nigiri. It was honestly delicious. The salmon was always buttery and savory tasting, and almost melted in her mouth.

He didn't seem to dislike it, swallowing the sushi after a little time to chew, and he hummed as he gave a small smile. "Not bad." He chuckled.

Piece by piece the sushi disappeared off Aliquam's plate, and eventually his cup ended up empty. Though now this meant he could focus more on the woman before him.

Toki had ordered and received another four pieces of nigiri, and eaten them by the time her beloved husband finished eating both of his orders. She was just finishing up her tea as she spotted him staring at her, and she nearly choked on her drink as she flushed a bit. It could be unsettling to find someone staring at you adoringly, no matter how many times you’d caught them doing it. Toki finished her tea, leaving her pot for refills untouched. “Dinner was good.” Toki smiled. They’d probably be hungry again when they got home, but they could raid the kitchen if that was the case. “Did you enjoy your geen tea?”

"I did. It was very good. Did you enjoy your nigiri? Will you be wanting any more?” He asked in reply, shifting slightly in his seat as if preparing to get up to order another round of the simple sushi.

She made a soft sound and shook her head. “I had twelve pieces- I think I’m okay for now. We could stop for desert on the way home if you wanted though. I wouldn’t mind maybe an ice cream.” She was enjoying spending the evening with him. “Did you want to get a dragon roll to take home though? You seemed to enjoy it. We could take an order of dragon rolls and a nigiri home.”

"I suppose we could, it'll tide you over for the drive home." He gave a soft chuckle. "Sure, I'll go ahead and get one more round to go home and pay the bill... Go ahead and wait here." He told her, slowly getting up to go do just that as he started for the till.
“Papy!” Toki calls to get him to look at her, and then fishes around in her purse for her wallet. She tosses him her wallet. He knew how to use her card, and it would be easier if he used his… ‘retirement’ pay, as he called it, to cover bills and left her to cover anything elaborate.

Hey, it worked.

Aliquam caught her wallet and smiled at her. "Thank you." And with that, he went to the front and did as he said he would, ordering another batch of nigiri and a dragon roll to go. He paid the bill, a price he probably wouldn't disclose to his beautiful wife as he didn't want her to worry about it in the slight case she had it on her mind. As he returned, he tucked her wallet away and kissed her cheek. "I'm going to step out for a moment... would you mind joining me in a few minutes?" He questioned gently.

Though his voice was calm, his soul betrayed him. It was starting to race again.

Toki watched him slowly, feeling the faint race of his soul through their lingering bond. “Sure,” She says gently. “I’ll wait for everything to be brought out, and then I’ll join you, okay?” She gives him a big smile, and kisses one of his knuckles. “Be careful, okay? The city can be a little rough after dark.”

"No one in their right mind would hit a seven foot tall monster with a cane." He chuckled, pecking her cheek gently before he stepped outside, out of view.

She watched him go with a fond smile. She didn’t tell him that they didn’t need to be in their right mind- some people got drunk and stupid, and there were a lot of bars in the city. Alcohol was liquid courage- or as she preferred to call it, liquid stupidity.

Toki hummed to herself as she waited, and quietly rubbed her belly. She could feel the litter shifting inside of her, twitching and stretching. It wouldn’t be too long, she thought, before they’d be able to feel them kicking through the thick skin of her belly.

It didn’t take the waitress long to bring out their order. Toki stood up with a smile, thanking her as she took the to-go boxes of sushi. She braced them carefully against her belly as she finished gathering her things and straightening her dress. Toki gave Papyrus a few more moments to calm down, before heading out the door to see what he was up to.

Aliquam almost jumped when she stepped out, before he turned to look at her. "That was quick..." He chuckled weakly, before he cleared his nonexistent throat. "So... we're good?"

"A question?" She blinked slowly as she straightened and closed up the back of the car again. She thought back for a moment. “Ah... The only one I can think of besides the ring one is the one I asked not too long ago.” She hums and walks- Toki refuses to believe she waddles at this stage- over to him and stops in front of him. She smooths her secondary hands down her belly and makes a soft sound. “So... what happens when you learn everything about me?” She asks again, giving him a warm smile.
"I'll tell you what I’m gonna do..." He reached out and took her primary hands into his, giving them a firm squeeze. "I'll learn everything, and then we'll take our children, and we'll do everything. We'll visit every landmark, every mountain. I'll break my back before I give up on this... I'm not gonna die until I've witnessed everything that made you, you." He told her, before he slowly knelt down in front of her, taking care with his hip. He still got down on one knee before her, and that's what mattered most to him.

"I'm gonna tell the world 'You did this. You put on this earth a young woman, you shaped her to love and not hate, and you gave me the most wonderful wife I could have ever hoped to ask for' and we're gonna take everything we learned and show the world what we think of it... what I think of you. But there's one thing I need to do first... it's not proposing, I already did that a few years ago... but now it's left to formalities... Tokiko Nara-Gaster..." He then fished the box out of his pocket, opening it to display her ring, cleaned and shiny for her to see. "Will you renew your vows with me?"

His words made her soul throb with warmth. Toki sucked in a soft breath, and lowered her primary left hand for him to slide the ring onto her finger for her. “Yes.” She tells him warmly, no hesitation this time. She had hesitated before, too shocked at the initial proposal. This time… This time, her eyes might have been stinging, but Toki was prepared and wouldn’t make him wait. “Yes, Papyrus Aлиquam Gaster, I will renew my vows with you. You silly man- this is what you were nervous about?” She leans down, while he’s still knelt before her, and kisses him soundly while ignoring the monsters staring at them out the restaurant windows. “I said yes once, Papy- what could have ever made you think I wouldn’t say it again? I love you with everything that I am, and you and I are going to have many, many years of exploring the world together.”

He kissed her gently in return, and then he smiled weakly as he slid the ring gently onto her finger. "I was worried it was gonna sound cheesy and you'd laugh."

As he slid the ring home onto her finger, she made a soft, pleased sound. It felt… right. “Not at all,” She murmurs gently as she remains stooped over to nuzzle his face. “I wouldn’t ever think that, and I’d never laugh at you for saying something with so much heart behind it.” She wished he could feel her soul- and that she could feel his clearly. The time away hadn’t done them any good, and they hadn’t merged souls to renew their connection.

He smiled up at her. Putting his weight onto his cane, Papyrus slowly got up and gave her a squeezing hug. "Let's go home~"

“Home sounds good.” Toki smiles. “I can wait on ice cream. I’ve got sushi to nibble on when we get home…” She rubs her hand gently along his arm, and then kisses him gently. She sucks in a soft breath, before exhaling and heading around to her door. She has to dash to get in as a car comes zipping around a corner, and she crams in, before taking the time to get herself comfortable. Ugh, she hated being on the street side.

He carefully got in and he checked her for a moment. "You okay?" He asked as he helped adjust her wings in the seat.

“Thank you, sweetie.” His help was needed, as she’d ended up sitting on her left wing in her haste to get inside. “I’m okay. Just had to hustle so I didn’t become a bony bug on a windshield.” She jokes. Once Toki is settled, her mane ruffles and releases pleased pheromones. His touch on her wings had felt nice, and part of her hadn’t wanted his hands to leave her.

Her pheromones seemed to make him happy as well, as his shoulders slouched a little and he gave a soft, happy sigh. He pulled out and started out of town, but only after an hour of driving he stopped on the side of the road. Putting the car in park, Papyrus sighed and leaned back a little in his seat.
Toki was admittedly surprised by his sudden stop in the middle of the forest. They had an hour left still to get home. Once he had pulled over and parked well off the road, Toki reached out and set her primary hand on his thigh. "Quinn?" She prompts gently, using the nickname she didn't use as often anymore since it was attached to his other self more firmly. She rubbed his thigh gently. "You okay?"

It takes her a moment to notice something hard and warm under her hand, jammed awkwardly down the leg of his pants. Was that...?

He made a muffled sound and pressed his face into his hand. "Heh... my soul's still racing." He murmured, his cheeks darkening as he peered over at her. "I guess I was looking forward to this more than I let on..." He spoke softly, his eye lighting up a little as his pants gave a strained creak of fabric against the magic anatomy that had formed there.

By golly, he'd gotten a nervous boner. Toki didn’t think it was possible for monsters who didn’t have constantly summoned genitals… But apparently so.

Toki gave him a surprised look, and then it settled into a low grin. She shifted in her seat and carefully unbuckled. “It’s called a nervous boner.” She chuckles softly. “It can happen to men who’re excited and nervous. It apparently applies to monster men too.” Toki shifts in her seat, her wings bunching up behind her as she turns to face him. “All the same… I bet that’s uncomfortable to drive with.” Her eye lights flared a warm green. “How about… I take care of that for you~?” Voice dropping several octaves into the sweet, sultry tone she knew he used to love, Toki slides her hand from his thigh up to his fly, and begins to undo his button and his zipper on his nice pants. If they got them messy, it wasn’t like Toki couldn’t get them clean. She was a laundry master.

His soul leapt in his chest and the color rushed to his cheeks. "Holy..." He didn't make to stop her, but turned his head as his hand came to rest on her head. "M-mind your stomach, darling." He spoke quietly.

Toki paused to look up at him. She fully adjusted her body, so the swell of her belly wasn’t squished. It was, unfortunately, tight quarters between her wings and the swell of her pregnancy, so she was still a little pinched, but she made do with what she had. “Don’t you worry about my stomach, love. I did say I wanted dessert, didn’t I?” She winked at him.

Toki gently freed his member from his pants. It was glowing and orange, just like she remembered from so many years ago. She was used to larger after dealing with Tenne for so long, but… Her husband was just the right size for her. Pulling on her magic, Toki blunted her teeth, and then lowered her head. Her fluffy mane filled his lap as she took him into her mouth, her tongue forming around him so she could give him a firm lick as he lit up the inside of her skull.

"Aah..." He shivered and moaned as his hand clenched a little around a handful of her fluff, his eyes quickly gazing upon the sight that was her skull glowing a mixed orange-green color with the presence of his magic. "Oh Toki... hhnn~"

Toki let out a soft thrum, letting it vibrate up through the summoned insides of her mouth. She gave a soft sound, enjoying his fingers fistedin her mane. She bobbed slowly, her teeth coming down to massage at him gently as she manipulates the blunted objects. Her hand slips past his pants, and she palms his pelvis, gently stroking him and where his magic had formed.

He gave another moan and rocked his hips into her hand. "Oh god... Ahh..." His noises were quiet, breathy, and just the cutest, sweetest things to hear. "Oh Toki, I've missed this.” His words were exhaled on a breathy groan.
Toki chuckled around his cock, and closed her eyes. She focused on bobbing on his member, taking him deep and swirling her tongue around him as she tastes him. He tastes good- like heat and warmth and sunshine, just like how his magic feels. Magic always tastes different. Thankfully, given that she could speak with her mouth stuffed full, Toki was able to speak back to him. “I’ve missed this too.” She cooed. “I’ve missed your touch, and touching you… Tasting you too. You taste just like I remember.”

"Hhhnnnn~" Holy shit... holy shit... "Oh Toki~" He keened happily as his grip tightened once more before loosening to knead her head. He pushed it down to egg her on, to take more of his cock into her beautiful mouth.

Toki gave him a bemused but indulgent sound, and eased her had down lower to suck him deeper into the depths of her mouth. She pantomimed a swallow around him, feeling her own body warm in response to his magic’s arousal. Toki basted the inside of the car with pheromones designed to arouse him simply on instinct, and was left to see how he’d react to a direct dose of that basically in his face.

The queen bee skeleton woman was swiftly rewarded with another pull to her fur as he bucked into her and gave a weak snarl as his cock gave a throb on her tongue. He hadn’t been ready for that, and was no doubt seeming rather close at this point.

It amused her to no end that her pheromones could have such an effect on monsters and people. It was… Lots of fun, honestly. Toki needed to have more fun with this particular pheromone. She let out a soft sound, and then buzzed her bones and magic around him, letting the tingles travel up his cock as she bobbed up and down on his length.

With the buzz, he was bucking and practically drooling as he whimpered and moaned against her attentions. "Oh fuck, oh fuck, T-TOKI~!" He gripped her head and pushed it down a little, a pleased tremble rushing through him as his magic gushed free from his cock, giving her a rather large mouthful of the fluid like energy as all that had been pent up was finally released.

Toki swallowed it down greedily as he came, her summoned tongue helping her catch all he had to offer as she savored her ‘dessert’. She drank all he had to give, her body processing it into a concentrated magic donation, before she gently drew up and let him pop free of her mouth once he was spent. Toki peeked up at him and drew her hand from her pants so he could take a moment to calm down.

He was shivering as he lay against his seat, his breathing steadily slowing with the occasional breathy moan. "H-holy fuck~" He managed to stutter, before he shivered and sighed, smiling over at her. "So... did you enjoy that, love?” He asked with a weak laugh.

She chuckled gently and smiled up at him. Toki leaned back towards her own seat, taking some of the pressure off her belly, and crossed her arms so she could lean on all four of them. “I did very much.” She purrs. “I do so love the taste of my husband in the evening.” She licks her teeth. “Mmm… Do you feel better?” His cock hadn’t disappeared yet, but she supposed it would take a while. She… actually didn’t really remember how long it took to make it go away. Tenne’s just sucked back into his body when he was done with it.

At this point the universe hoped she was staring, because the half-hard form of his cock twitched at hearing her statement and almost immediately began to grow hard again as a burst of pheromones surged from Aliquam, who proceeded to hide behind his hands. "Oh stars..."
Chapter 129

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: So this is sex. Sex, sex, and more sex. This is the sex that they’ve needed, that they’ve wanted- and it first starts off on the side of the road in the woods. It’s unconventional, awkward, but full of love- just like their relationship. If that isn’t enough to tell you, THIS IS AN 18 PLUS CHAPTER YOU ADORABLE FOOLS, IF YOU ARE NOT OLD ENOUGH YOU’LL HAVE TO WAIT UNTIL THE NEXT CHAPTER.

The pheromones wafted from him in a musky, heated smell, and it was one Toki would recognize anywhere. Her beloved husband was going into heat- no wonder he’d gotten an awkward boner driving home. “Oh- oh Quinn,” She laughed gently and reached her hands up to make it so he couldn’t hide behind his hands. “Come now, love. Heats are natural. I just… didn’t think you’d get one while I was pregnant. But, maybe since circumstances are different…” He hadn’t when she’d carried the twins, but the twins had been his. The litter wasn’t.

Come to think of it, his musk was rolling off of her like rain on a well oiled feather. She supposed she couldn’t go into heat when she was already pregnant… Well, this just made things interesting.

"I got so hot-headed rehearsing my proposal.. And then I just didn't cool down, but you're pregnant and I couldn't ask you to help me with this because you're already pregnant and I wouldn't want to do anything that could complicate anything... but it's just so hot, and it's been six months since I’ve had my beautiful wife do anything to me...” He went on as he wriggled his hands away from her and hid behind his hands again, his smell growing stronger as his body began to heat up with embarrassment.

Toki hummed, and grasped his hands more firmly so he couldn’t pull away this time. “Hey,” She says soothingly to interrupt his babbling, “Papy? It’s been six months for you. But it’s been two years and some change for me since I’ve had you touch me.” She tilts her head at him, and gently wafts the air with pheromones. “You can’t bring me into heat,” She says lightly, “not with me already pregnant. But, just because I’m pregnant doesn’t mean my libido isn’t up for making love. I miss your touch- feeling you inside of me. It’s been so long for me… I don’t remember what it feels like. But… we do have children at home.”

His heats lasted for two to three days on the norm. How she and Tenne had managed in the other world with kids, Toki didn’t know, but their toddlers wouldn’t give them enough time to sate his burn. Papyrus would be… well, stuck with a raging boner all day unless they made a call to Tenebris to watch the kids for more than a bit.

He pressed his teeth together and gave a heavy sound of frustration, before he looked at her. "D-Do you think we could do... something?” He asked quietly, "W-while we're here?”

Toki sucked in a soft breath and then exhaled. She gave him a slow nod. “I think so, yeah.” She looked at his lap. “I can’t fit in your lap, not with my wings, so anything we do will have to be outside… where any car passing by can see.” She blushed a bright green. “Or the back seat, but that’s cramped too.”
He took a breath, and then looked at her with a gleam in his eye lights. "You wanna... turn off the car and go rut on the grass behind it~?"

"Rut is such a non-romantic word." She rolls her eye lights at him. "We're a bug and a cat, not a stag and a doe you silly man." Still, she returned that gleaming look. "Sure." She purred. "... You still carry the emergency blanket in the trunk? We can pull the car off further and use the blanket to keep the tree grits from getting in our joints." Toki had enough of that from the pine needles Tenne had pounded her into for five days straight- she didn't want more foliage in her bits.

".... Wait really?!! for a man with a bad leg, it was amazing how fast he was up and out, using the car as a crutch as he hobbled along it's length after popping the trunk. He scurried back and grabbed the blanket out, before coming over to her side of the car with a shaky, eager smile. "I... I probably sound like a teenager. Hell, I'm acting like one right now... But... fuck... this is kinda exciting!" He gave her an elated grin.

Toki honestly had never needed the image of her husband scrambling out of the car, every limp making his glowing erection practically flap in the breeze. Now she'd seen it, and now he was standing before her, still erect and holding a blanket like it was his lifeline.

She shook her head fondly, and turned off the car for him before she got out of the car to join him. "It is exciting. But, we need to go a little into the trees or we can be seen from the road and get in trouble. Come on, captain happy, before you put someone's eye out with that thing." She gave him a cheeky grin, before kicking off her heels. They were tossed into the car, and she scooted with bare toes into the grass, padding for the thickest part of the trees and grass for them to settle down at.

He laughed quietly and with one hand carrying the blanket, he hobbled his way to catch up with Toki, before he draped the blanket down on the thick grass. "Heh~"

Toki gave a happy chirp and carefully got onto her hands and knees so she could spread out the blanket. Her dress rode up a little in the back, but she didn’t mind. She let out a soft whistling sound. “Alright~ looks like it’s good to go.” She wiggled her backside thoughtfully, her wings flicking as she pondered if her dress was going to get ruined by this or not.

Her bent over form sent a shiver up his spine and he gave a keen before he knelt and slowly pulled her dress up, his hard-on pressing against her thighs as he nuzzled her, wrapping his arms around her to squeeze her in a loving hug. "Mmh~"

This was a position she was all too familiar with. Toki laughed as he nuzzled his face between her wings, and took his weight as he leaned onto her. Her primary arms supported them both, and she gave a soft rock. “Well, going right for your favorite position, hm?” She winks. “Would have thought you’d want face to face for our first time in such a long while~” She teases and rocks her pelvis back against him. She could twist her magic, and summon her parts, but… Well, where’s the fun in making it easy?

He whined and murmured into her back, nuzzling her before pulling her back so she was on her knees and sitting in his lap instead of what it was before. "Look at me." He spoke with a soft huff.

Straddling him, Toki took a slow moment to peek up at him. She gave him a slow grin too. “So demanding,” She coos, and loops her primary arms around his neck. Her secondary arms slip up his shirt, and she strokes his ribs firmly. “What are you going to do if I don’t?” She asks, and summons her nether parts so she can gently grind against him. So much for her being a tease- she’d manage though.

He didn't reply. He only made a keening whimper as his eyes glazed. "Please?" He mewled out, while his cock found its way to grind between her legs, lovingly against her newly summoned nether parts.

Toki gave a soft pleased sound, leaning forward to press her teeth against his. “Alright,” She purrs, “how can I deny such a gentle request?” Toki rocked her hips against him and gave him a soft sounding buzz. His member was hot and throbbing against her core, and she couldn’t resist nuzzling him as deep into her depths as she could, without actually burying him inside her. Toki’s hands slid up along the insides of his ribs- and she called upon her magic so she could stroke his enflamed soul.

His body trembled as a soft gasp escaped him and he moaned as her magic came to find his soul. His cock gave an excited twitch as a few small bucks were made between her thighs. "Haaahh~"

Toki leaned down and ran her teeth gently over his neck. His shoulders were covered, so she couldn’t really nibble the strong bones hidden below. Her middle pressed into the empty space of his abdomen as she kissed and teased him, her fingers stroking his soul inside of his rib cage. Wings fanning out, Toki eased up and gave him a teasing smile. “I know you’re ready,” She purrs, “But I’m not quite there yet…” She wasn’t wet- thanks to the fact she wasn’t in heat- so he’d have a little work to do otherwise he’d be going in dry. “Touch me? I’ve missed your touch.”

Gladly, he nuzzled her neck and pressed loving kisses and nips to her available bones, hands wandering to caress her chest with one hand, the other reaching down to run over her swell before seeking what rested above his cock's current place. "I love you~ I love you so much." He breathed out as his fingers pressed down, while his hips moving, making it so that her clit was put against his cock, to feel it drag along the smooth magic-summoned flesh.

Toki let out a soft sound and rocked against him. She enjoyed the feeling of his smooth cock rolling against her clit. Her body felt weird to have back, but it felt good and right- she rolled her hips into him with a soft groan. “I love you too,” She purred to him. “I love you so much… Mmm~”

He huffed quietly and whined into her shoulder. "Fuck... hahh~" His fingers pressed a little rougher as his hips picked up, rutting against her a little faster now. It'd be surprising to say that he was already getting close, especially after his previous climax having come so soon.

Toki chuffed softly, and nuzzled her face against his neck. He was so close- his magic was practically thrumming under her touch with the desire, the need to come, that it was nearly overwhelming. Between that and the firm touch of his hand and his shaft, she felt herself becoming slick. She gave a soft purr to him, and then gently rolled her core against his shaft. “Careful, sweetheart. A little eager- don’t want to spill too early and waste good magic for the pups, do you?” Her eye lights smolder at him lustily, and Toki shifts slowly, before lifting her hips invitingly.

He looked up at her with a shaky smile and he slowly shook his head. However, as she lifted her hips, his hips lowered as best his pelvis could against the grass, and his hand came to help his cock line up. He pressed another kiss to her shoulder through her shirt, and hummed into it before he rolled his hips upward, allowing his cock to slowly push inside of her folds. It felt right after so long since the last time he felt the sensation of having her wrapped around him.

Having him slide into her depths felt… right. Like a puzzle piece that fit just perfectly- he was neither too big nor too small. He stretched her and filled her just right, in ways Tenne hadn’t even been able to do. As Toki sank down onto his depths, their motions faster and more hurried than she might have ideally liked for their first time together after so long since she’d gotten to feel him like this. Nothing was ever perfect though- and perhaps that was what made it perfect. They took what life gave them, and made it work.

Her mouth slid open, and she gave a soft, open gasp, her tongue forming and lolling out between her teeth as she pants. Her magic was so much more sensitive than her flesh had been—she’d missed this. She could feel every part of him inside of her, pressing against every magically created and hyper-charged nerve inside of her walls. For a moment, all Toki could do was close her eyes and gasp against him, trembling as the feeling nearly overwhelmed her.

Her soul thundered in her chest, and she drew hers out, not caring that anyone driving by would see the glow. If the orange glow from his cock bouncing in and out of her didn’t draw attention, the green from her soul wouldn’t either. She offered it to him as she let go of his own, in the hopes that perhaps, he might like to merge and make their reconnection that much deeper.

As his body became ones with hers, his form began to tremble and as he pulled her to take more of him. He squeezed her and pressed his face into her neck. "M-My wife..." He whispered. "My beautiful Toki... I missed you so much.” He whispered again, his voice rough with emotion as he slowly brought around his own soul. The weathering of heartbreak was evident, faint scars visibly lined out as markers in the soul's energy where he’d lost his connection to her. It was a heavy showing his toils from the months of mourning.

"Tokiko... hah... you feel... just like you did before... if not... better.”

Toki mouthed over his neck, her blunted teeth focusing in on the sensitive bones on his neck as she licked and ‘sucked’ on them as best she could. The swell of her belly bumped into his ribs while her secondary hands stroked over the outer shell of his ribs, seeking to stimulate him as much as she could.

With his soul offered, her own was pressed gently to his, and she shuddered against him as the merge initiated. It felt strange after being alone in her own soul, to feel someone settled deep inside of it. It was a good sort of strange though—the kind of strange that Toki most definitely missed. She could feel him, and he could feel her, and their soul connection began to reaffirm itself and reestablish into a more stable bond.

“Oh, Papy…” Toki had seen his scars before she pressed her soul to his though. “I’m so sorry I hurt you like that. I love you. I love you so, so much.”

He was shivering as he smiled at her. "Oh honey... That didn't hurt a bit~" He whispered, his soul thrumming happily in her hand. "I love you, I love you so fucking much..." He whimpered.

"I love you too.” She whispered. Toki pressed her face to his as her soul beat against his, taking in everything he had to offer and giving him everything she could in return too. "But I know it hurt. It hurt me too when I left. It felt like my soul was breaking..." She kisses him in one swift motion as she lifts up with her legs, rising up on his cock before dropping back down. Toki shudders, her wings flying high. "Ah~"

He cried out softly and gave a breathy moan, sending it skyward as he gave her legs a gentle squeeze. "Oh god yes~"

Toki's back protested a bit after she set the pace of which she began to rise and fall on his cock. As her back protested, her chest leaned against his more, and gave him a soft, panting plea for assistance. She cocooned their souls in her magic so she could keep them merged together without having to press his hand to hers. That would leave his arms free to help her. "Mmm... Ah~ Papy. Hah, help? Lift?” She rocks her hips into his on the downward slide, almost thrusting her pelvis into his.

He nodded gently, and brought his hands up to hook onto her hips, he gave a moan and pressed his face into her back as he began to move her hips quickly, moaning louder and more breathily into her mane as he did.

His arms could move her faster than she could lift her own weight. With the girth of her pregnant belly hampering her movement, Toki could only let her breath hitch in her chest and hang on for her life as he pounded her down onto his member. What Papyrus apparently lacked in ability to thrust now, with his false leg on, he more than made up for in his ability to use his arms.

Briefly, she wondered how long he was on crutches. Then the thought was out of her head as his cock struck a cluster of nerves deep inside of her, and sent her skull reeling back, her mouth opening with a cry that thanked the heavens for all that her mate gave her, and all that she could share to him through the linked souls clutched in her palm. She panted, her sounds a silent plea for more, ever more.

Her cry brought a shout of his own as his grip tightened and he pressed his face further into her neck. "O-Oh god!" He gasped.

Toki shuddered and panted, her soul thundering against his- no, with his, in time with the rapid-fire pace of his beats- and she found herself rolling into him with every eager downward stroke. As much as she wished he could roll over and pound her into the blanket, they both knew that wasn’t going to happen. But that didn’t mean his cock wouldn’t be thoroughly plundering her with each and every motion downward. His member thumped against the entrance of her womb, and she felt herself shaking and making the neediest whines and buzzes for him to continue, to please fill her, pound her, give her everything that he had.

Every sound she made had him sighing and moaning into her, his smile never fading from his face as he eventually shifted his handles, one gently cupping her swell while the other reached up to grab and knead a breast like there was no tomorrow, "Fuck... hahh... fuck~ I love you~ I love you so much~ You're so wonderful and I'm so happy to have you back..." He’d never tire of telling her that- not ever. Ten months, yen years, a hundred years- it’d never be enough.

The sudden touch of a hand to her chest, let alone a hand to her breast, makes her startle, and then moan. Toki hadn't summoned them, which meant they had decided to appear on their own, and were now filling out her dress even more. She didn’t have much thought process to spare to put towards wondering why they had appeared now, as she panted and moaned, rocking into his member as she took over handling the bobbing on his manhood. "I love you too. I'm so happy to be back, to be home, to- ahhh~!" Words faded as the coil of heat warmed hotter in her belly. She shared it with him in the hopes it would speed up his orgasm and bring him closer to being over his heat.

"To me... to your children, to your family... ahh~" he whined into her again, "I love you~ Welcome home my beautiful, wonderful wife~"

"Yes," she panted, "yes ah, mmm~" Toki tilted her neck in offering to him, and then cried out as she came.

The surge of energy that came from her soul brought his own release, and in that moment he reached up and pulled her down to hilt himself, his teeth finding her neck to bite down as his form was wracked with a blissful tremor, as well as a few sharp twitches of his hips as his magical release filled her insides to be absorbed as a donation for the litter inside.

His teeth sunk past the thick mane around her neck and held her firm as she trembled above him. Toki panted, eyes unseeing as she rode it out.

By the time she had control of her senses again, her hand was covered in goop from their souls, and she was putting off enough warmth that she could hardly smell his heat pheromones. She slumped into him, pregnant body exhausted and surprisingly sated. Idly she wondered how she was going to keep up with his heat. Another part of her pondered the fact that her breasts were painfully tender as they pressed to his chest, and she wanted to move but couldn’t find the urge to do it. "Mmmnn..."

He slowly rocked his hips into her as he came off his blissful high and he released her neck to sigh out a hot breath, smiling as he hugged her. "Mmh~"

Toki felt sore and almost raw as he rocked into her. She mad a soft sound, an almost whimper, and shifted in his lap. “Mmm...” With the ache between her legs, and the ache in her swollen breasts, Toki was forced to sit up. Her breasts were nearly spilling out of her top, as it wasn’t designed for... well, someone with a chest, let alone a chest swollen with pregnancy. “Look what you made appear.”

"Ahh... oh yeah?” He laughed quietly, almost breathlessly, before reaching up to knead her breasts. "Oh look at that, Nyeh heh heh~" He cooed, before kissing her mane softly. "My beautiful wife and her perfect breasts."

Toki let out a slightly more pained sound. He was a little lost in his haze of heat, and not paying attention to how hard h was kneading her breasts through her dress. A small shock of pain splintered through her soul and into his. “Ah- ow, Papy. Easy, please. They’re tender- pregnancy makes them bigger and more tender.” She gives him a pout. “They won’t go away. Also... for a skeleton, you seem to have a surprising fascination with them.”

He flinched at the sting and he let go, before he sighed and hugged her, nuzzling her. "I'm sorry..." He sighed quietly.

“It’s okay.” She nuzzled him back and let off a soft, soothing buzz. “Just be gentle and you can touch. You wouldn’t want me kneading your dick like that, would you?” She quirks a teasing brow at him and wriggles it. “… More seriously though…” She shifts her hips in his lap and winces some. Wow. He was still rock hard inside of her. “How come you like boobs?” She asks curiously, mostly talking to buy herself some time to rest before he attempted to initiate another round before they went home.

"It's... It's silly. You'll laugh." He murmured as he looked up at her.

“Hm… I’m not gonna laugh, I promise.” She wriggled some on his lap, and felt her walls twitch around him. It was a pleasant twitch, even if she felt a little raw. It had been a while.

"Hn~" He sighed and kissed her shoulder. "I've always loved boobs..." He admitted quietly. "They're soft, and plush~ I like how they feel in my hands."

“Mmm, boobs were always fun.” She cuddled up to him and sighed. “I could... keep them if you wanted. Keeping them formed ain’t all that hard post pregnancy, I just need bras that work with wings.” She sighed softly and flicked her eye lights up to his face. “I suppose that’s part of why you liked me as a human, hm? I was all soft and squishy...” She could form her full body if she wanted.

He peered up at her, and then he giggled quietly and hid his face again. "It's so silly..." He murmured.

“It’s not all that silly,” She laughs. “Admiring soft things isn’t bad. I could wear my ectobody if you’d like. Not all the time though. Muscles ache.”

"How about just when we cuddle?” He cooed as he looked up at her, pupils widening a little as he smiled innocently.
“Hmm… Could do that.” She smiled slightly. “I don’t trust that innocent smile though… What are you thinking?” She twitches her hips against his where he’s buried in her.

"Mm~ nothing. I do think we’ve got to get back home." He sighed softly.

“Very true.” She nuzzled her forehead to his with a soft hum. “Question is… Can you drive with this stick shift in the way?” She teased, and rocked against him again. She was sore and tender, but she was forever a tease until the day she ceased to exist.

He mewedled quietly but he sighed into her neck as he gave a rock before he shook his head. "Definitely not..." He murmured.

“I think I can handle one more round if you want to just let some stress out… How about you pop off your prosthetic, and roll me over.” She shifts a bit. “I can keep you balanced, and you can burn off some of the heat, just long enough for us to get home.” Her mouth finds his neck, and she runs her tongue along his vertebrae before nibbling it.

He moaned quietly and leaned his head back to accept her sweet treatment before he nodded, and gently hoisted her up long enough to disconnect the prosthetic. With the leg set aside, he settled her back in his lap and then rolled them over on the blanket. He hovered over her, her belly settling in the space between his pelvis and ribs as her legs shifted to bracket him and keep him braced upright even without his leg to help him balance.

He peered down at her for only a moment, before he dropped down and nuzzled his face into her breasts. Papyrus was clearly pleased about it as his cock gave a hard twitch inside her.

Toki’s wings splayed on the blankets, her mane rolling out and pillowing her skull as her husband loomed overhead. She blinked, however, as his face plopped down and slipped into her breasts. She laughed softly as he twitched inside of her, and let go of their souls, letting them return to their bodies as she relaxed under him. Her legs would keep him upright, and she’d be able to rock up into him as best she could. As Aliquam exhaled, it vibrated over her breasts through her dress, and very nearly gave the ‘motorboat’ effect.

After the shaky exhale was to pass, he peered up at her, making sure she was doing okay on her back and that she wasn't crushing anything important.

She peered down at him, but seemed pleased with the position. Her wings weren't too squished. If he were heavy like Tenne had been, she couldn't have done this. As it was, he wasn't heavy like Tenne had been. She gave a soft wiggle of her hips and chirped. "If you're gentle, you can play with my breasts all you like." She just couldn't guarantee he wouldn't get anything out of them. Pregnant women could lactate before they gave birth after all, and her body was under the magical version of intense and sped up hormones.

He hummed happily and began to knead her breasts as his hips began to move, his cock withdrawing before pushing back into Toki, hilting into her body to give a long grind as he moaned into her chest.

Toki couldn't stop the soft moan as his hands and face made use of her breasts, while his hips began their slow thrusting against hers. Her hole felt sore and abused, and it was only going to get better from there. Not that she minded. Her soft noises and her hands on his shoulders were encouragement enough while her legs kept him balanced above her.

And better it got. As he got comfortable, he got confident.

And faster.
He began to nuzzle, kiss, and nip on the soft magic skin that Toki summoned. His hips clacked against hers as his thrusts began growing slightly rougher. He moaned louder, a tinge of a possessive growl on the echo of his voice.

The thrusts verged on painful, but it was a good kind of pain. Toki had never minded a little bit of pain interspersed with pleasure. Toki let him use her body, and only made soft sounds of pleasure and delight to let him know he was doing a good job.

Her breasts tingled as he nipped and nuzzled them, but seemed to behave as he made use of them for his personal toys.

Her noises egged him on and his cock twitched inside her as his noises grew louder and more longing, he was close, and the fact that his hips were now faster, losing any sort of gentleness as he pounded his wife. His eyes were almost closed, pupils not able to be seen as he pressed his face into the soft plush ectoflesh of his wife's body. "T-Toki..." He moaned.

Her mind was riding the highs and lows of his thrusts, and she was lost as they sped up. Eventually Toki was nothing more than a gravid sheathe for him to bury himself in, and she enjoyed every second of it. Her mind was fogging as her orgasm drew close simply brought on by over stimulation.

If there was a way to lovingly pound your wife into a mindless state, then Aliquam had certainly gotten there. He was nearly to a state of mindlessness himself as his body didn't relent. His youth made up for the loss of his leg. Not even that could stop him. Six months without his wife, and with his heat to back him, he was going to make sure she was soundly loved and driven into the ground while he gave her what best he could.

What best he could was the ride of her life. He was lost to his heat, and he drove her through one, then two, and into a third orgasm rather rapidly. Toki's body, not in a state of heat, couldn't really handle much more than that, so she was left passing out under him as he used her for a living fleshlight.

It wasn't until long after she passed out that he came, and it was a decidedly good thing she wasn't awake to see how full she was of his cum. Ectoflesh was truly a marvelous thing to behold.

Thankfully it seemed that once the climax and afterglow passed, he was able to get her cleaned up and carefully returned her to the vehicle, leaving barely any trace of their stop before continuing home.

Without disturbing the children, which it appeared his father had brought home and gotten settled when they hadn’t returned within the specified time frame, Aliquam carefully made his way inside with his wife in his arms, getting her up the stairs, out of her clothes, and into her bed. He joined her after he stripped himself of his own clothes. He had a feeling they’d end up quickly discarded regardless when his heat was to flare up again.

Toki was exhausted- she didn’t even recall getting tooted into the house, or when Papyrus left her to get out of his clothes. She vaguely recalled when he slipped into bed alongside her, and had settled deeper down into sleep.

When she woke again, it was some hours later, sometime in the early AM’s, and she positively ached between her legs. Everything was sore, and now she understood why mated pairs usually went into heat together. There was no way they could handle each other if they both weren’t in heat.

Toki shifted under the sheets, feeling the warmth and pheromones rolling off of Aliquam. She ached. She was also naked, and there were blankets that were tickling her private parts. Her breasts were also still here- proving they were apparently here to stay. She wondered if it was a beast thing, since animals usually brought in milk before their litters were born.

Tired green eyes flicked open, squinting in the darkness to try and spy where her husband was.

He was laying with his back to her, his form slightly curled up as he panted and moaned into his pillow.

It seemed the poor man had another flare up but couldn't bring himself to bother her deep slumber.

Toki watched him panting and moaning, and carefully rolled over. Her back was sore from laying on it so long, and the space betwixt her legs was tender and sensitive. She hummed softly, and reached out to grasp his spine, stroking it firmly. Spines were very, very sensitive, and with how keyed up he was… Well, maybe she could surprise an orgasm out of him and give him some relief?

And surprise she did. He squealed out in surprise before he cried out and curled up tighter as his body jolted. "F-Fuck! Fuck!" He cried into the pillow, having reached a messy release that lasted a few strong jolts before it finally stopped and he moaned weakly as he settled down.

Toki smirked into her pillow and peeked at his back. “Mmm. Well, that was quite the show to wake up to. Feel a little better?” She asks gently.

"Hhhh~" He gave a weak sound before he rolled over, a shaky smile on his face... As well as a few droplets of orange magic that ran down his burning face. "That was unbelievable~" He giggled.

He sounded almost delirious. She reached out with her smaller secondary hands to stroke his cheeks. “You look utterly exhausted,” She hums. “Have you tried cooling down in a cold bath?” For him, it might help. For her, she just boiled the water away.

"N-No, not yet." He sighed. "I'll need to anyways... I hit myself in the eye..."

“You...” She couldn’t stop the giggle. “You jizzed in your own eye?” She snickered, and covered her mouth, though that did little to muffle her laughter. “Oh my god, Pap. That’s... That takes skill.”

"Shush." He stuck his tongue out at her before he got up and hobbled to the bathroom.

Toki watched him hobble without his cane to the bathroom, and made a soft sound. She went to sit up, and made a soft, pained noise. Holy shit her pelvis hurt. She eased out of bed, aware of the weight of her chest as it dropped against her belly, and padded after him in the nude. “… Pap? Please tell me you didn’t forget your cane out in the trees.” He surely couldn’t have carried her without his cane. She couldn’t be tossed over his shoulder with the bulge of her pregnancy swelling out her belly. Maybe he had help from Tenebris.

"No." He replied, and hesitated a moment. "I left it in the car."

Her teeth pursed, and she hobbled after him. She was bowlegged after their… stint in the woods. “You left it in the car. Okay.” She wasn’t going to get upset at him over it. “Er… How did you get me to the car and... up the stairs, for that matter?” He surely couldn’t have carried her without his cane. She couldn’t be tossed over his shoulder with the bulge of her pregnancy swelling out her belly. Maybe he had help from Tenebris.

Oh it took him a while to answer that, sitting in the shower before he turned on the cold water, just letting it rain on him. "I took the energy I wanted to use to fuck you and instead got you upstairs and put you to bed." He admitted quietly.

Toki blinked slowly and just… accepted that answer for what it was. Never question a man powered by determined horniness. They could do amazing things when fighting a boner throbbing between their legs. “That’s… productive.” She chimes idly. “So… How are you doing?” Toki sits down on the toilet- which was only useful really for when one of them was sick and needed to hurl- and watches him shower as she tries to hide her uncomfortable wincing. Her ass hurt. “Leg okay? How’s your, uh… heat feeling?”

"This water is icy compared to my thermal radiation..." He answered, leaning his head back to let the water clean his face.

She snorts. “So what you’re saying is… We need to let you soak in an ice bath to cool you down?” She quirks a grin at him, and scoots over enough so she can reach into the shower and tweak his tailbone. It’s hot to the touch. “Heh- maybe let you sleep in the tub. I can tote up some ice cubes. Too bad all the snow is gone outside.” She jokes.

He jumped at the touch and shivered, pressing his hands into his lap to hide what poked up at her touch. "Hhh..."

“How’s this water feeling compared to my thermal radiation?” She laughs gently. “You know, I’m usually in heat when my partner is,” She’d only gone through a couple heats with Papy, but she’d gone through quite a few with Tenne since she hadn’t gotten knocked up there, “So I don’t think I’ve ever gotten to enjoy how easily their body reacts.” She strokes his tailbone gently. “Do you want me to let you shower in peace?” She questions lightly. “I could go find an ice pack to sit on. You really gave me a good and thorough pounding earlier.”

He keened as his rear pressed slightly into her hand and he shivered at the touch. "Hhnn~" He moaned, and then he looked up at her with a shaky smile. "Do you wanna share the water~?" He asked quietly.

“As much as I’d love to, standing in a shower doesn’t appeal to me.” She laughs. “I want to sit in something cold and hope it soothes my well used bits.” Her nipples would be harder than diamonds. She glanced at the tub instead of the shower, and then cocked a brow ridge at him. “Want to cuddle in the tub and see if some true soaking in some ice water can help cool you down?”

He nodded. "Better idea." He agreed, turning off the shower faucet.

Toki chuckled, and hefted herself off the toilet. She hobbled to the tub, and got it going, not bothering with hot water. She glanced at him as cold, cold well water flooded the tub, and gave him a smile. “It’s going to be very cold.” She chirps to him. “Do you want a snack while the tub fills? I think we’ve still got that sushi… So long as you brought it in from the car.”

"It's still in the car." He admitted. "I could get my robe and make my way down." He offered.

“It’s still cold enough outside that it should be fine, I think.” She mused, peering at the water in the tub. She shook her head. “I can bring it up.” She shifts and straightens, and her wings flex slowly on her back. They make a stiff cracking noise, and she winces some. The joints are stiff and sore. “I’ll be right back. I’ll also fetch your cane. Come the morning, you’re going to be sore.” She chuckles. He would have enjoyed his evening though.

Toki shifted, and pads for the door to the bedroom so she can get her slippers on and go downstairs. She wasn’t going to bother with clothes beyond tossing a robe over her shoulders to cover her breasts since they weren’t going to go away. Since the car was inside the garage, which was… well, mostly closed, she could slip out and back in with no problem.

It didn’t take her all that long to go down and come back up with the sushi and some disposable utensils, along with his cane. His cane was draped over her smaller set of arms, and she seemed tired and sore as she meandered up the stairs. Toki wasn’t much of an ‘up all night’ sort of person, but heats made things different and difficult, and she didn’t want to just abandon him. He’d do the same for her, she reasoned.

“I’m back with goodies!” She proclaims quietly after she makes sure the twin’s room is shut, to keep them from hearing things. She enters their room, and makes for the bathroom. “Sushi still smells good, and it’s still cold, so I think we’ll be alright.”

There were sounds coming from the bathroom before she spoke up. ”C’come on in, Toki.” Was Quinn's call from inside.

Toki made a suspicious sound, and hobbled inside the bathroom to see just what he was doing. “… Are you okay, Pap?”

He was laying in a half-filled bathtub, his face flushed once more as his cock twitched between his legs. "I've never been so self-conscious about my heats until now." He hid his face in his hands.

Toki laughs. “Well, I guess this is what happens when I’m carrying pups for someone else.” She pads closer to him, and offers up his sushi platter. “I suppose we’ll have to be aware if we ever offer to surrogate for someone, eh?” She quirks a smile at him, and drops her robe off her shoulders. “It’s okay, Papy. We might need to get creative in how we help you release some tension though. I can’t keep up without the heat to fuel me.” And frankly, she was afraid if they fucked too hard, he could knock her into labor.

"I'm sorry, darling..." He whined quietly, slowly taking the sushi from her and taking a piece into hand to nibble on.

She snorted as he ignored the utensils she’d offered, and quietly balanced on the edge of the tub. She balanced her sushi on her belly and hummed to him. “My love, it’s quite alright.” She says gently. “At least your heats are only what… three days? Mine are five, and… Much more aggressive. At least you’re not as aggressive as I am.” She leans out to tap a finger against his nasal ridge. “It’s alright, my love. I promise.” That said, she used her disposable chopsticks to nibble on her nigiri, letting her body process it rapidly into magic.

He smiled up at her with a quiet laugh and once he finished his piece of sushi, he reached up to wiggle his fingers at her. "Come cuddle with me~?" He cooed.

"Of course, my love.” She set the sushi to the side, within reach with them being in the tub, and then carefully clamored in. Her belly bumped the side as she got settled, and she gave a grunt as one of the litter squirmed inside. Toki peered at him, before plopping into his lap. It was their usual position, and she adored it, even if his member was riding up against the nearly bruised bones of her pelvis. “Mmm… This good?” This way, he could rut against her lower back if he needed to.

"Hhoooh god yes." He nuzzled her happily while he ground against her back. "So good~"

Toki grunts as he grinds into her, and chuckles softly. “You’re such a dork.” She wriggled into him gently, and lightly summoned her full ecto body, so she had some padding against his vigorous grinding. Her lower pelvis was tender after all. Butt cheeks made fantastic padding. “There. Look at that~ now I’m all soft for you. Well, mostly.” She glanced at her chest. She had diamond nipples, but nothing wrong with that. Toki reached over to fish out sushi to munch on while Papyrus ground against her back. She could eat- he could rut.

Married life was full of strange and fantastic things like that.

"Soft..." His hips continued their rut while his icy hands came up to her chest, of course taking claim to his favorite part of her. Only it didn't help that his hands were still icy from soaking in the cold tub, so she was gonna get a nice cold pair of hands on her nips.

Toki squeaked, her formed muscles tensing. “Holy shit, Papyrus!” She squirmed against him. “Your hands are cold!” She pouts. Her breasts were warm though, and she glanced back at him to give him the full force of her pout. “You could have warned me, you butt. Well... just be gentle. If you aren’t careful, you could make a mess in the water.”

He whined quietly as he continued to rut, kissing her shoulder and neck gently. "Aah, hhahh... I love you... I love you~"

“I love you too, Papy.” She sighed contently and relaxed into his kisses. It didn’t hurt her as he rutted against her. Like the true Nara she was, Toki may end up dozing against his attentions. But for the moment, her hands found his femurs, and she stroked them gently, mindful of his prosthetic.

Her hands brought mewls from his mouth as his rutting continued, his legs lifting slightly to put a little more oomph into his thrusts while she caressed his legs. "Your touch is so addicting." He hissed weakly. "I love you so much, oh- Oh god~"

“I love you too.” She smiled softly, and rubbed his legs. She hummed softly, and increased the pressure of her touch while she nuzzled back into him. The slide of his cock against her backside was almost calming, and she soft, content sounds to spur him on.

He whined quietly and moaned steadily louder as he began to hump faster, his tongue poking out of his mouth. "A-aaahh~" One could wonder if it was going to be possible to over stimulate the poor thing while he was like this.

His hands were starting to squeeze her a little too tightly, and Toki grimaced as her breasts began to leak by proxy. It wasn’t much, but damn it, she had been hoping that wasn’t going to happen. She rubbed his femurs more vigorously, before one of her flesh covered arms twisted, and reached behind her to begin stroking his spine like one did a cock.

He cried out weakly and humped against her back as his toes curled, fingers squeezing her nipples as his fists attempted to clench before he lowered his hands to grip her hips. "F-fuck! G-gonna, hhahhh!"

"Come for me, Papy," She purrs, "come for me and let it all out." She wondered idly, if he could dump his magic into a donation and if it would leave him tired enough for the heat not to bother him.

He keened loudly in reply, pressing his teeth into her shoulder as he ground against her, moaning out as his cock twitched roughly and he coated her back and wings with his fluids, though a lot less than he had filled her with, he needed a proper sleep and refuel before he could cum with the same gusto as before.

Toki’s magic reinforced her skin by proxy, and she let him ride out the waves of his next heat wave. When his fluids had been mixed into the water, Toki hummed softly to him and drew her hands back to herself to let him recover. "There we go." She purrs.

"Uuuuhn..." He leaned his head back weakly with a weak sigh. "'Tl-time f' bed?"
He sounded exhausted. Toki hummed softly and nodded. “Mhmm. It’s time for bed, my love.” She leaned back to nuzzle the back of her skull against his chin. “If you let me up, I can get you to bed.” Then she’d finish the sushi, and... maybe get him off one more time, and see if he could pass out. Then she could sleep, until he roused in the morning, and he could put his energy towards dealing with the kids.

He nodded slowly, his hands releasing her slowly to let her go. "G-go ahead." He purred.

Toki gave him a lopsided smile, and eased out of the tub. She had to heft herself up some given the change in her center of gravity, but... Well, she managed. She didn’t think he was going to be particularly useful, given that he was shaking like a newborn faun. Toki stepped out of the tub, and dried herself off with a flash of fire magic, her mane fluffing up like it had been blown dry. She kept her ecto-body summoned, recalling his request at one point for her to keep it summoned for cuddling in bed since she was soft and warm.

She was learning new things about her husband every day it seemed.

The bee monster hummed and collected the sushi. She gave it a ponderous look, and then decided against it. It had warmed up inside the house, and she didn’t trust it. So, she tossed it into the garbage, giving it a rueful glance at such a waste of good sushi. Then, clad in only her skin, Toki turned to Papyrus. Toki was mostly a luminous green, with plush hips and legs, and strong arms. Her smaller set of arms were smaller in muscle mass, making them more fragile. “Alright, big guy. C’mon, cutie. Lets get you up.”

He keened quietly before he slowly got up, smiling at her. "God you're so beautiful, like my emerald queen." He cooed.

His words were slurred.

Toki snorted gently and propped her arm under his shoulder after popping the drain on the tub, drying him with a burst of her magic as well. “And you’re sex-drunk.” She informs him cheerfully. “Come on, my love. Lets get you to bed before you do something silly.” She sashayed slowly with him towards the bedroom.

He rattled quietly in reply and followed her lead with a smile. "Does that mean you're 'something silly'?”

That made her pause, and she broke out in muffled guffaws. “Oh my god. I’m gonna tell you that joke in the morning, and listen to you groan at me about it. Yes, dear, I’m something silly.” She snickered as she made her way to the bed. She helped him to his side, and then got the covers pulled back and got him seated.

He grumbled quietly and laid down with a thankful sigh as he reached up and took a breath, nuzzling into his pillow. "Mmmh~” Though he then looked up at her. "Could I use your pillow?” He asked quietly.

She blinked at him slowly. “Then can I use your pillow?” She gives him a wry smile. “I love you, but I can’t sleep without something to pillow me.” She shuffles around to her side of the bed, and then climbs in. She doesn’t bother with clothes, her bare breasts and belly dangling briefly as she gets settled on her side. Her hand slides out, and she rubs it slowly, teasingly, up and down his spine.

He was going to offer his pillow to her but as her hand run over his spine he shuttered and moaned breathily.
The smile on her mouth bordered on mischievous. “What was that, my love?” She purred sleepily, and stroked his spine again. She slid her hand down, and stroked the inside of his pelvis, tracing over the cradle of his iliac crests. “You were saying?”

"A-ahh..." He moaned again, before he whined. "I’m tired..." He whined quietly.

“Do you want me to stop?” Her hand stilled. If he could sleep without one more to knock him out, she’d leave him be. She wasn’t going to force that on him- not ever.

"Mmh... No...” He decided with a soft, breathy sound. “Please don’t stop..."

Toki gave a lopsided smile, and continued to stroke his bones. She slipped her hand up into his rib cage next, one of her secondary hands joining her primary. Her primary hand stroked his spine, firm strokes from the base of his ribs to the top of his pelvis. Her secondary hand roved over the inside of his ribs. “Alright. One more then.” She scooted close to him, her belly pressing close as she purred softly against the side of his skull.

His body was practically hers at this point and he whined as he clung to his pillow, mouth slightly ajar.

Toki stroked his bones gently, and slipped her head down to nip and kiss at his neck. He was hers to play with and to tease, as his bones warmed under her touch. She brushed a small touch of fire magic over his bones, and gave him a soft thrum. Her hand slid up against his soul, and she stroked it firmly. “Are you going to come for me?” She queried gently.

He moaned out as his body trembled. "F-fuck!” He keened.

“Good Papy,” She purred, “Good Papy.” She continued to stroke him, simply touching him along his ribs, his spine, and his pelvis. The touches would drive him over eventually.

And drive him over it did. His voice pitched and he whimpered, before he cried out weakly, his hips jolting a few times as his body arched into her ouch.

She watched the bright flash happen behind his ribs, and grinned slowly as his last orgasm rolled over him. She kissed his cheeks and temples, and murmured softly to him. “Good boy, Papy. Good boy. Get some sleep.”

"Hhhnn..." He pressed his face into the pillow, his request to trade having gone forgotten.

Toki smiled and pulled his blankets up over him. It had been a dry orgasm for him- he had nothing left to put out, no magic to summon- he’d came, and now he’d sleep. She settled down as well, and let out a soft, sleepy noise. “I love you, my love.”

"Mmh~” He murmured quietly before he sighed and nuzzled his pillow.

Toki watched him fall asleep, and settled down next to him with a soft sigh of her own. She let out a sleepy sound, and decided that yes, date nights needed to happen more… And maybe with some sex on the way home too. That had been fun and risky and delightful.

Fluffing her mane, Toki cuddled up and drifted to sleep. Maybe, she mused as she wafted off, they’d time it so he wasn’t in heat during their next date night. Just normal sex was extreme enough for her.
Chapter 130

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Shenanigans, drama, and silliness, oh mai. What more could you expect from a glorious chapter of TOTU? Also, guys, heads up. I done goofed somehow, so now I'm in a fully immobilized wrist brace, that also holds my thumb immobile. It is unfortunately affecting my ability to type, so if I'm not out by the time all of our reserve chapters are up, it may be some time until we can post again. I'll be keeping you all up to date with my wrist and hand problems each week as something new does or doesn't come up. Thanks for being understanding like ya'll usually are. Seriously, we have one of the best and most understanding fanbases I've ever seen. We love and appreciate you all a whole fucking lot. Hope you enjoy today's chapter before stuff gets fun!

Papyrus suffered his heat only another day and a half before his body finally had enough of their nighttime activities and considered it over. By then, Toki was walking funny, and everything ached.

She ached even after it. In fact, her backache lingered up into her eighth week of pregnancy, and Toki could find no reprieve. She found herself irate, despite her trying to keep her patience. Papyrus offered her sympathy’s as best as he could, but she got small levels of salt and sass from Tenebris, who had surely smelled their late night activities on them.

She found herself in no mood to do friendly teasing with anyone- and one too many cracked jokes about her back being sore from Papyrus was wearing on her. She was not in the mood, not with the rapidly growing weight in her belly, and the constant shifting inside of her that was not letting her sleep. Still, no one could feel them yet- but she was sleeping less and less. It leads to a shorter and shorter temper, and, perhaps, a bit if heightened emotions.

They didn’t understand her aches, her pains- the only one who did was Caeruleus. None of the others understood their aches and pains, their struggles with day to day life during pregnancy- and they didn’t understand when she tried to explain with words.

Toki was, however, given a… gift of sorts from Alphys. Apparently, the lizard woman had been watching videos online, and had… well, adapted some of the human methods for monster use.

So, Toki gathered her family members and brought them into the dining room while Alphys and Undyne practiced parenting and babysat the twins and the summons, along with Solstice. It wasn’t fair to them to deal with Toki being waspish. Her family, however, was going to get a non-verbal lesson in sympathy for pregnant people.

She stood at the table, and carefully prepared boxes, and stared at her family while waiting for them to ask the obvious question she knew they wanted to ask.

Grillby was the first. He cleared his throat gently. “So… I understand we’ve been gathered here as a sort of… sympathy experience. I gathered as much when Undyne tossed me over her shoulder and carried me and Sans here. So… What is the point of all of this- by point, I mean, what does each of these do?”

Toki glanced at him and gave him a bemused look. “You have a choice.” She chirps. “One of these is meant to simulate a belly and the accompanying weight. You get to wear this until tonight. The other is a box of electrodes that Alphys invented. They simulate contractions by... some sort of science shit that uses the magic of your body.” She gives a warm smile to them. “You’ll go through a few normal actions of the day while having these ‘contractions’, and then you’ll get to go to what active labor is. You can pick and choose one or the other, or, if you’ve got the balls, you can do both.”

Expressions were shared between all of the men present before Tenebris spoke up. "I’ll take the belly." He rumbled.

“I suppose I’ll take the... electrodes.” Asgore mumbles awkwardly. He steps forward and takes the box for it, before grabbing the box with the belly. He grunts at the weight, surprised. “You didn’t carry this, did you?” He glances to Toki.

“No. Undyne did.” She says lightly. She glances to Tenebris. “I’m surprised, Papa. Not going for the electrodes?” She arches a brow. “It might be easier on your back.” Salt. Yep. Pure salt she was.

Asgore bites his lip and says not a word. He slides the belly down to Tenebris and then works on hooking up the electrodes to his belly, figuring out how they’re set up. “It looks like this is on an automatic sensor,” He mutters, “So it’ll go through the process of labor on its own. It’s more advanced than the ones in the human videos.” But, what could one expect of Alphys?

Tenebris took the belly and smirked, lifting his shirt before he opened the slit in his stomach, "What's another few pounds in my torso anyhow? I've been living pretty light since I lost my internals to the void." He chuckled.

Toki rolled her eyes. "Papa," she sighs in exasperation, "it doesn't go in your slit. It wraps around you, like-

Grillby stepped up and chose the belly as well, leaving the electrodes for Papyrus. With expert practice after a quick glance at the instructions, he loosened his shirt and pulled it up before strapping it to his lower back. The upper threads were threaded over his shoulders, giving him the upper back strain that he had heard his mate complain about a lot. When it was successfully done, Grillby slid his shirt back down into place, making him look late term in a pregnancy. He sighed and rubbed his lower back.

"Like that." Toki chimed cheerfully.

He looked at Grillby as he attached his own belly and he hummed in thought, before he took off his turtleneck and carefully attached the belly, "ah... okay..."

Once done, he put his turtleneck back on before looking down at his midsection, which now stood out like a late pregnancy...

"Hrm..." Was he blushing a little? Oh yes, he was, he just hoped Asgore wouldn't say anything to make him blush any harder.

Asgore was staring at him, with longing on his face. Oh yes, Tenebris looked good like that. The goat king shifted, and then clicked the electrodes on. It would take them a bit to cycle up. While they did, he padded closer so he could kiss Tenebris gently on the temple. "You look lovely," he murmurs softly to him.

Toki glanced at the last box, and then to her husband. "The last one is yours. Looks like you get to summon up that ecto body of yours. Unless you don't want to do it." She glanced at his brother.
"You and I are exempt for obvious reasons."

"Asgore please." Tenebris' cheeks darkened as he turned to hide his face, "I look silly."

At Toki's mention of his exemption, Cae raised a lazy fist. "Represent."

Aliquam smiled gently and nodded, "I will do the best I can to hold out, but will I be allowed to quit early on if I cannot make it?" He asked gently as he took the device and summoned his skin to set up the electrodes.

Toki pondered that. "Well. Neither Caeruleus and I got to quit. But," she rolled her eye lights, "I don't expect either of you to make the full cycle. So sure. If it gets too painful for you, the safe word will be 'epidural'." She claps her hands and takes a moment to ogle the muscle on her husbands ectobody while he sets up the electrodes. Golly, she might be irritable and sore, but he looked nice.

"Epidural, huh? Okay, I can remember that." Asgore nods. He smooches Tenebris again and then stiffens. He exhales roughly. "I... Think I'm having my first contraction. It's not so bad right now. A little uncomfortable and tight, and I can't really focus, but it doesn't hurt too bad." His hand rests on his belly, which had tightened up as his muscles contracted.

Immediately Tenebris began to chuckle. "Oh my god that sounds so weird to hear you say that." He leaned back and grinned up at Asgore. "But at the same time, vengeance is sweet."

"Hey now. You might be carrying the baby, but I have to labor with it." Asgore jokes and nudges him teasingly. "No vengeance here."

Aliquam took a slow breath as he turned his on before he smiled at Toki. "I do this because of my undying love for you." He laughed weakly.

Toki claps her hands once she gives her husband an adoring smile. "Alright! So, as Papyrus can contest, you're not going to be stationary during these tasks. I'm sure you all remember the week with the twins where I had several false starts, but kept on toiling on, yes? Well, that's what we're going to do. Until your contractions are too painful for you to function, we're going to do house chores! The twins oh so kindly trashed the house this morning, so all of us- myself included- are going to do normal chores. For those of us with bellies, this is quite a task. For those of you with contractions, better time it right or you could be in a very uncomfortable position when it hits."

Grillby glanced to Sans and made a faint crackling sound. "She sounds way too excited about this..."

Cae just sort of grinned at Grillby. "Just let her have this. The least we can do is give her this one..." He chuckled, straightening up to help with chores.

Tenebris laughed quietly, before he pulled away from Asgore, stretching his back before he sighed and set a hand on the swell. "Alright, let's get started."

Toki waddles off to the living room and begins the process of carefully stopping over and picking up toys. She can only get a couple before she has to struggle to her feet again and bring them to the designated toy box to drop them in.

Asgore goes to pick up toys along the wall, as well as work on detangling the first of many knots of blankets that the twins had made. He breathes heavily through his nose as the contraction ends, and looks a little anxious about the next one.

Grillby watches for a moment and then goes to bend over to grab a sock. However, he finds he can't quite get up again. "... Sans?" He questions quietly, so he doesn't draw Toki's ire or her husband's humor. "How do I get up again? I'm stuck." How had his mate done this? Picking things up and straightening again had never seemed so daunting before.

"..." Cae wasn't going to enjoy this as sadistically as Toki, he wasn't... wasn't... wasn't... "Heh. Heh heh. Heh heh heh heh~!" He pressed a hand to his face as he started to laugh.

Grillby flushed a bright hue of embarrassment. "Sans!" He half huffed. "I'm serious. How do I get up? Do I need to move a certain way, or...?" He may need help to get upright again.

"One arm under your belly, the other using the base of your spine as a push point." He muffled his snickers and came over and showed him where to place his hands. "Take a breath, and as you exhale, lift yourself."

Grillby nodded and did as told. Holy hell the strain on his back. He grimaced. He was already hurting, and there were no magma baths for miles around. "Damn." He breathed quietly. "I don't know how you managed with Solstice. This... Sucks." He says plainly.

"I'm stout. So my weight was more centered, but yeah, it sucked." Cae patted Grillby's back. "I'll handle picking stuff up." He told him. "I don't have to bend so dramatically." He chuckled softly.

Grillby waved him off. "No, no. I can do it. This is supposed to be an exercise in us learning your struggles you had while pregnant- or in her case, are having." He watched Toki use the exact same motion he had used to straighten up, and felt a little better. She was even more top heavy than he was, honestly. Wings and many arms made her off balanced.

Toki watches appreciatively out of the corner of her socket. She had figured Grillby would be the first, so it was little surprise there. She let out a small grunt and paused to dig her knuckles into her lower back. Her bra was irritating too, but since she couldn't make her boobs go away now... She was stuck.

Toki glanced to Papyrus to see how he was doing.

Aliquam was carefully making his way around to pick up toys, but he would occasionally stop and his eyes would press closed in pain as a 'contraction' bloomed from his midsection, often accompanied by a quiet curse.

Toki watched Papyrus pause and curse and gave a soft giggle. He wasn't even at the worst ones yet. "Doing alright, love?" She questions him cheerfully.

"I hate contractions." He growled quietly. "It hurts, but I'm doing okay..."

Toki couldn't stop the soft snicker from leaving her. “I’m sorry that it hurts; but welcome to my world, Pap. It’s only just beginning for you too.” She lightly tosses a toy snake at him. “Take deep breaths and let your body do what it needs to do, love. Deep breaths will let it pass faster.”

He nodded and took a few deep breaths to relax, rubbing his stomach before he got back to work.

Toki watched him and chuckled softly, before moving over to help him. She quietly picked up things and straightened up the house until she spotted his next one. When it rolled over him, she lightly pressed her hands to his lower back. She was grumpy with them all, not cruel. Toki kneaded gently. "If you rub here, it helps a little bit in the earlier stages."

"I love you darling" he keened, putting a bit more weight on his cane, "Oh this hurts like hell..." he hissed next, before he nuzzled her gently, "Thank you for the wise hint." He made to sound sweet past his less pleasant sounds of pain.
"Just breathe through it, love. It gets better." She encouraged. "Try not to hunch over either, or it won't feel better."

Asgore made a soft grunt when one came over him, but seemed to be faring the contractions a fair bit better than the ex-guard was.

"You alright?" Tenebris checked on his mate, carrying a few dishes from the TV area towards the kitchen.

"Yeah, yeah. It's just a contraction." Asgore waved him off and stretched slowly. He took a couple short breaths, and then stooped down to pick up another thing the kids had tossed. "Wow, the twins really trashed the living room this morning." He comments.

"Never leave children unattended." He chuckled quietly, patting his back before heading off

"Apparently not." Tenebris was watched for only a moment before Asgore crept off after him to the kitchen.

"Running from responsibility, darling?" Tenebris cooed to Asgore as he noticed him.

"Nope. We seem to be working in pairs, so I'm stalking you." Asgore gave him a delighted look. "Besides, I wasn’t lying. You look lovely, darling. I wish we could bear our own pups... Pregnancy suits you."

"Mmmh... I know..." He reached up and sighed as he rubbed his 'stomach'. "If only the void had not changed me so... I wonder it would have been possible." He sighed, before looking back at him, "You deserve the chance to enjoy it... come on~"

"You could ask Toki about that, you know. She did know a counterpart that never went into the void." Asgore murmurs and approaches. He lifts a hand out and touches the belly. It’s cold but soft. He sighs and nuzzles Tenebris. "Toki and he might have talked about pups. Perhaps she knows if you could have carried before..."

Tenebris chuckled quietly and nuzzles his mate in return, pressing close and sighing gently. "Oh indeed... I don’t know personally if my slit is or was connected to the proper reproduction anatomy... but I’m an old beast." He sighed, nuzzling him again. "I don't know if I would have been properly suited for Motherhood, I mean I know I’m not now, any proper mammary glands are long gone. I could carry without complication now that I’m hollow. Give me a full litter of twelve and give them all horns and I’d still have enough room to accommodate... but as soon as they were born..." Tenebris sounded upset by this, and pressed his face into Asgore's mane, "Damn it, I’m not supposed to be getting moody; I’m not actually pregnant!" He hissed at himself.

“No, you’re not.” Asgore agreed softly. “But,” he murmurs, “you’re around a pregnant female, and sympathy mood swings are a thing. You might not be her mate, but you beast types are more interconnected and close-knit than us monsters. You all... seem to feed off each other’s emotions. Toki seems to be a center point for you all- you all gather to her. You’ve gathered to her, since before she became a beast. I think, maybe perhaps you all sensed her inner beast before she was brought to the surface.” He presses soft kisses to his temple.

The king closes his eyes and exhales softly against Tenebris’ temples. “When... When Toriel was pregnant with Asriel, I shared many of her symptoms. She dealt with... well, frankly the weirdest cravings I have ever seen. Worse than Toki’s, I think. I shared those with her. I never thought I would enjoy eel stew with pickled radishes and tomatoes, but I did. If you recall, that was also the time that I was most volatile. I do believe you said something that irritated me, and I threw you through the castle window and cried about it afterward because I felt bad for doing it, even if you could teleport right back up. So don’t feel bad, my dear. Please don’t. We’re a tight family, all of us-and sometimes we share our emotions and other things as well. That’s what a pack does, even if I’m not beast enough to be apart of it.”

"I am thankful you’ve such good observation skills. This behavior went unnoticed and I wouldn’t have realized if you didn’t mention this. You might not be as concentrated a beast like I, but that means you see instinct that goes right over my head." Tenebris reached up to comb his fingers through his king's soft fur, a smile growing on his face.

"Eel stew with tomatoes sounds interesting, though the pickled radishes make me wonder." He chuckled. "And between you and me, I pitted the window more than I did myself, and to your credit, my hide’s a lot tougher now afterward." He then grinned up at him. "I wonder if you'd do it again if I told you your wife was low on calcium and iron like I did before." He teased, smiling up at him.

"And don't worry, you might not be a pure wild beast like myself, but you're still the second most handsome beast of a man I’ve ever seen~" He purred as he then pulled him into a kiss.

Asgore kissed him soundly, leaning into it with a soft-sounding rumble. He only pulled from it when his entire body tensed, and the king dropped his face into Tenebris’ shoulder with a sucked in breath.
His back bowed a little bit as the electrodes took him by surprise, and a contraction stole his breath away. “Hahh…” He exhaled. “Mmnnn yeah… Yes… A good king noooootices all the things,” he hisses between his teeth, “I look and I listen and I watch and… Mmnn… Noooo, wouldn’t toss you again. Never. No matter how angry.”

Tenebris cooed gently as he reached and gently pressed his hands to where Asgore's muscles were unhappily convulsing with the contraction, nuzzling him and letting him lean against him as he kneaded and massaged to help him through it.

"I'm glad you promise this~" He purred gently before he smirked. "Because if we go to the lake again during the summer and you throw me into the lake I will shave your fur off and see how you like the shock." He vowed into his ear, voice deepening with the promise of trouble.

Asgore didn’t give him a response until his muscles stopped seizing, and he could think again. When he could breathe, he gave Tenebris a bemused rumble, voice deep and amused. “I meant out a window, my dearest. In the lake? Well, there’s not a window in sight.” He laughs. "I'll toss you in one hand, and all of our pups with the other when they're big enough.” To prove his point, Asgore scoops Tenebris up in one arm, boosting him up against his chest with one arm. “I’ll toss Toki, Papyrus, Sans… I’d toss Grillby, but he’d need to be in a water-proof bubble.” He laughed. “But never out of anger. Only in good humor.”

"ASGORE!" He yelped initially, more or less shifting to hang from Asgore's neck with a bristle of his sparse mane, though he was calm rather quickly and smirking up at him. "You troublesome oaf." He laughed, kissing his chin.

The king laughed warmly and kissed his brow. ‘I’m your troublesome oaf, and you’re stuck with me for as long as you’ll have me.” ‘Until death do them part’ was meaningless to him- it would have been until death with Toriel, but… She proved him wrong. Now, Asgore would only stay for as long as he was wanted, and no longer. “Do you think I’ll drop you, dearest? Surely not. At least not while I’m not afflicted by this machine.”

He cooed happily at the reminder of the vows and he shook his head. "Not while I’m wearing this you wouldn't~" He purred, kissing him gently as his soft toes wiggled.

Asgore lifted his free hand and pinched one of Tenebris’ toes between his fingers, wiggling it playfully. “Well, Mister Tenebris Gaster,” He purred, “I don’t know about that.” Asgore strode from the kitchen, and back into the living room. As everyone turned to look at them, Asgore winked at them, and then leaned over the back of the couch, before dropping his lover down onto the plush, soft structure. “Look at that! I dropped you.”

“And good luck getting back up again,” Toki laughs, “you’re on your back now.”

A squeak escaped him when his toe was pinched followed by a gasp when he was dropped on the couch and for a moment he just laid there, his eyes wide before his brows furrowed. "Asgore!” He grumbled up at his mate.

Asgore grinned and leaned over the back of the couch to blow a raspberry into the soft skin of his neck. “Oh, you know you love me.”

"It's healthy to see him so lively." Aliquam agreed, wincing as a contraction hit him. "Ow, ow, ow..."

Asgore got away with the raspberry but didn't get away entirely as Tenebris wrapped his arms around his neck and pulled him into another kiss, this time biting his lip in spite as it passed.

Toki faked a gag. "Oh gross, and now they’re kissing. Don’t you have your own couch to kiss on at home?" She teases. She rubbed her husband’s back gently and smooched his shoulder. “Starting to intensify, hm?”

Asgore gave him a fond sound and let him bite his lip, rewarding him with a soft groan instead. Yep. Asgore liked to be nibbled. “Ah… Lemme up, love. Another one is coming.” His muscles were starting to be stimulated into tensing, and he needed to straighten up, or it was going to hurt terribly.

He nodded and gave him a small push to help him go upright faster before he slowly rolled off the couch. He landed on his hands and feet and hummed before he rubbed the stomach gently, adjusting a little before he started continued to move around on all fours. “To hell with this upright nonsense. If I am going to simulate carrying, I’m doing it like my own mother did.” He grumbled.

"You say that now," Toki chuckles, "but it doesn't feel good when you have to straighten up. I'd run around on all fours if I could, but I'd get slapped in the face every couple steps if I did." She gestures to her chest and then itches her belly. Toki grimaces and rubs where she itched.

Grillby noticed the grimace immediately. "Are you alright?"

"Yeah. I've got some spots that appeared on my stomach this morning, and they're sensitive and itchy, but it hurts when I scratch them." Toki sighs. "I've chalked it up to the series of weird and whacky things these babies are doing to my body."

"You might be deficient in calcium," Tenebris replied.

Asgore paused and put his hand to his muzzle to muffle his laugh. It mingled with his groan as he handled his cramping muscles.

Toki squinted at them both. She had the distinct feeling that she was the butt of an inside joke between the two of them. She decided to roll with it though and gave him a flat answer to his jibing remark. “I get plenty of calcium, thank you very much. Besides, I’m gestating magical babies, not human babies. They’re building their bones out of my magic and what magic I get from all of you— not from the minerals I ingest.” She sighs. Toki shifts, and then tugs up the front of her shirt just a bit. She points at one of the dark dots. It’s a slightly lopsided circle, not quite perfect— but Toki doesn’t think anything on skin so stretched would be a perfect circle. “See? Can skeletons get rashes?”

Idly, she wonders if their time romping out in the grass had… well, given her some sort of rash or something obscene.

"Sounds like we’re due to for magic donations," Tenebris piped up.

Toki rolled her eyes. “Not by the schedule. The schedule isn’t for another day or two.” She’d set a schedule, so they didn’t run themselves ragged trying to keep her up on magic. “You didn’t answer my question though. Can a skeleton get a rash? I know you can run into poison oak. Or at least, your alternate can. Could.”

"Yes it's possible. The oils of the ferns could irritate our bones, though it's a bit easier to get off; a proper oil or a lotion and a scrub to dilute and remove the oils from your bones would do the trick." Tenebris answers as he took a second to sit and rub his back.

“Well, I took a bath when we got back… But it wasn’t really a ‘scrubbing’ sort of bath.” She glances away. Hearing his back creak and pop as he rubbed it made her feel bad. For all her grump and her spite, he was an older monster, and hauling around that weight was probably hard on him. Grillby as well, in all honesty. “Maybe it’s just a beast thing. I dunno.” She shrugs.

Toki takes a minute to look around the house. Between all of them, they had picked up her house—now most of them were just idling about, straightening things and just passing time. Asgore was straightening photos and flinching every so often with a contraction- Grillby was burning away dust without harming the dusty items.

Toki exhales softly and lifts a hand to press it between her eyes. She massages the bridge of her nasal ridge, tiredly humming. She aches and she hurts and she’s tired, and it’s not fair to them that she’s bitchy. “Look… I’m sorry I’ve been passive aggressive with all of you.”

"You deserved this at least, let the guys share the feelings." Tenebris chirped to her first, smiling warmly.

"I agree, Toki... this is the least we could do to show our support for you," Aliquam then spoke up.

"Not the least but you get it." Grillby chuckled quietly,

"Still, you guys don't deserve me being grumpy." She tells them gently. Toki's hands slide to her sockets next, and she scrubs them. "You've all been great and I've been a colossal grump just because everything aches and I can't sleep. It's not fair to you. I mean, you all just went along with this! I wouldn't wish this on anyone normally and here you are doing it anyways and…"

Toki sniffled behind her hand.

Uh oh. Mood swings. From almost sadistically grumpy, to apologetically teary, this was how her moods seemed to be shifting.

"Oh... Toki..." Aliquam started coming closer when suddenly he yelled out a sharp 'FUCK!' as his prosthetic fell out of his pant leg, making him hop and waddle a little before crashing onto the floor

"Holy shit! What just happened?" Cae peered over at his facedown brother.
"Papy!" Toki squeaked with a sniffle and struggled down onto the floor next to him. Her mane ruffled and her wings flexed, and she gave a watery, uncertain noise, before grabbing his prosthetic and scooting it back into his grabbing range. "Did the electrodes do this?" She asks. Great- this was her fault. She'd made him fall all because she was being stupid and giving in to her stupid emotions again.

He rolled over and smiled up at her, seemingly not bothered by the tumble he’d taken. Likely, he’d taken many such tumbles in the time he’d been adjusting to his leg. "That was a wallop." He laughed gently, slowly sitting up to pull her into a kiss. "Come here, darling." He cooed gently and moved to collect her into his arms to comfort her, which had been his initial goal before his leg gave out on him. "It didn't hurt. I just wasn’t expecting it, and it weakened my control of my link with my leg. I’ll be fine, my love, though I think I’m gonna throw in the towel."

It didn’t take much to gather her into his lap and to let her hide her face in his shoulder. Two of her arms coiled around his neck, the other two curling around his summoned ectoplasmic chest as she sniffled into his shoulder, thoroughly upset despite what he was saying.

Asgore, seeing Papyrus had his hands full, scooted over to lean down and click his machine off for him. "There. You've had your epidural." The king chortled. "I think I'm going to turn mine off too. I'm a little too old to be doing this for too long."

"Oh, thank you so much Asgore." He sighed, smiling as he nuzzled Toki.

The pregnant skeleton beast lets off soft distressed buzzes, and... Yep, those were tears in his shirt.

Sometimes a pregnant lady just needed a good cry, and it didn't matter who was there to see.

Grillby glanced at Caeruleus. "Satisfied with what I've learned?" He queried to him gently while listening to Papyrus trying to calm his emotional wife.

"Mmh... You look good like that, but feel free to take it off, hot stuff" Cae winked at him

Grillby chuckled and started to ease it off his frame. "I suppose next time, you'll simply have to put the baby in me and not in you if you want to see more of this." He chimes almost innocently.

Asgore smiled at his lovers’ sons, one comforting his wife while the other flirted with his husband, and moved back over to Tenebris. "Maybe you can check her over later, my love. Pregnancy aches are normal, but hers might be a bit extreme? She is very small and carrying a very large litter. Perhaps she needs bed rest?" That was common practice when he had been young. He didn't really know what was acceptable nowadays for women carrying large litters. "Sounds good." Tenebris sighed, before he looked at Toki. "I suppose she's satisfied with our involvement." He chuckled as he removed the weight from his front, closely followed by a 'thank god' under his breath. Asgore arched a brow at him. "A little too heavy for you?" He chuckled. "You could have taken the electrodes." "I'd rather not. I've been electrified enough for more than one lifetime." Tenebris murmured quietly to his husband, shaking off the ghostly remnants of the weight before he stretched his back

Asgore only took a second to connect the dots before he flinched a bit at the reminder of Tenebris torture. "Ah..."

Toki sniffled loudly against her husband's shoulder. "That's not all they did." She warbles. "I saw, Papa. I saw many things, and I saw that too."

Cae was oblivious to what had been uttered as he went to his mate's side, grinning up at him with a look that screamed 'I just might', at least for a few seconds before he looked at the couple on the floor.

Aliquam tensed up as he looked down at Toki before he reached up and hugged her more securely.

Tenebris didn't say anything at this point. He simply brought a hand up to rub his shield as his gaze lowered, tail curling tightly around his body in a motion that made him feel more safe and secure.

Toki glanced over at him as her husband tightened his arms around her. Her teeth ground slightly, making a few flinty sparks. “For what it’s worth… She regretted what she did before I was taken from them.” She says softly. “It can’t ever change the things Cruelty did, or the pains Cruelty caused… but Sequoia regretted a lot of things. Her regrets, I think, will haunt her for the rest of her final lifetime.”

Tenebris’ lips curled. "I hope it does..." He growled.

The look Toki gave him wasn’t one of understanding, or of pity. No- she wasn’t even sure how to describe her look. Disappointment? Something along the lines of that.

Toki shifted, and she shrugged out of Papyrus’ hold. She slid his leg closer to him with a sniffle so he could reconnect it and get up when he wanted to, and then she struggled upright on her own, her wings giving a buzz to help her sit upright. She tucked her smaller hands into the small of her lower back.

“I understand that Cruelty hurt you. I saw through Simmons’ eyes what he did to you- what he did with the press on your shield, among so many almost countless other things. However, to sit there and wish torment upon someone for their final lifetime is not right- I’m disappointed in you. There are a lot of things you don’t understand, Papa.” Toki says softly with a sniffle. “A lot of things. I’ve seen all of the memories Cruelty had, from the time before Balance was split, to the time that Cruelty truly began to descend into madness, and the final snap- which was, inevitably, caused by monsters and by my prior incarnation of Kindness. I’ve witnessed it all- and maybe I’m the only one who will ever understand the way I do, because I’ve seen it, and because I’m different. I understand even more now though. Do you know why I understand?”

Tenebris looked at her with thin pupils. "You know what they did, Toki! Redemption for it would take a lot more than simple regret! They broke my shield, and my ribs... and when I coughed up blood, they laughed!” He hissed.

“I think…” Asgore says softly, hesitantly looking between the two of them as his ears tilted downward. So much for a fun day- Tenebris needed to talk though. He wouldn’t talk to Asgore, he wouldn’t talk to a therapist- if he would talk to Toki, then Asgore was fine with that. “That this is something that the two of you need to talk about privately. So… I’m just going to…” Asgore quietly scooped up Papyrus, disconnected leg and all, and then ushered Grillby and Sans upstairs so the two of them were out of the mess.

Toki said not a word until it was just Tenebris and herself alone in the living room. Toki went to sit on the couch. It made her less threatening to look at, she supposed. “I know what they did.” She says softly. “I know exactly what they did. In my dreams, I watched through Simmons' eyes, I participated with his hands- I was him. But Papa… Look at me. I’m not telling you that your feelings are invalid- because they’re not. It’s alright to hate Cruelty- I still hate Cruelty. I hate Cruelty with all of my being for taking so many good people from this world, and for twisting so many people into doing his bidding- I hate him for using my body to kill all of his troops, to suck the power of their souls into my body. I hate him for a lot of things.”
She exhales softly. “But you have to realize that Sequoia is not Cruelty. Cruelty is not Sequoia. And someday… Someday, I may be just like them too. Someday,” She glances away, and it’s a surprisingly submissive move from her, “I’m not going to remember being Toki. Cruelty didn’t remember his first life. We’re only able to keep so many memories with us when we pass over- and as each lifetime goes on, the bad ones seem to stick the easiest. Someday, I may be just as twisted and broken as Cruelty is because all I’ll have are the bad memories to fall back on, with very few good ones to override them.”

Trauma, as Tenebris knew, came easy and lingered the most. Good memories were harder to keep.

"..." He puts his hands on his face and sighs as he takes a seat next to her on the couch. "I still remember it… Like it happened yesterday..." He spoke quietly. "I... I don’t wish poorly on Sequoia..." He mended his previous statement slowly. "I will never forgive Cruelty... Simmons... that bastard." He hissed lowly... "He killed so many of us... and... We never got to know Sequoia like you did. To me, they are still the same person..."

“You see parts of Sequoia every day,” Toki says gently. “I’m not the same person I was when I went into the void, Papa. I came home different- surely you can see that. Surely you’ve felt it- I react to things differently than I used to. That’s the parts of me that will always house Sequoia inside of me.”

Toki sighs quietly and puts her chin into one of her palms. Her elbow rests on her belly for only a moment, before she scoots closer to him, and reaches out to gently turn his face to look at her. One of her smaller hands rubs his shoulder, offering him quiet comforts. She knows quite well what memories must be rolling through his head. “Papa? The Cruelty we knew wasn’t the same one from my memories. I just… I want you to know that. What he did to you, he did because he was broken and bitter, and there was no end in sight for him. The only thing Sequoia shared with Cruelty was that same, despairing bitterness. She saw no end in sight- she would reincarnate, over and over again, and she would no longer be Sequoia. Eventually, she would no longer remember being Sequoia, and we would probably have separated- our souls, that is- so I wouldn’t remember her either. The Cruelty from before all of the countless upon countless lifetimes of memories and loss and corruption… Do you want to know what he was? It’s one of the few memories intact.”

Toki didn’t wish a lifetime of regrets to haunt anyone- because eventually, Toki knew she would be in Sequoia’s shoes, though the void wasn’t ever going to let her stop remembering or reincarnating. Toki would be haunted by regrets and memories for the rest of eternity until they corrupted her into something that no one would recognize from the person she once was.

He watched her quietly as she spoke, and after a moment, he sighed, and nodded, slowly shifting to turn his form to face her. "What was he, Toki?" He murmured softly.

“He was a teacher.” She says softly and shifts her hands to simply take his into her own. Her small fingers rub his massive knuckles soothingly. “He taught children, human and monster alike, how to cast protective shields and barriers to keep them safe. He wasn’t always a bad man, Tenebris. But time… Time made him into the man we came to know here. He lost hope. Boss hearts can’t fall like monsters can when they lose hope. What happens, I think… Is they become like Cruelty.”

"..." He looked up at her, his mouth opening for a moment before closing it and his gaze lowered. "I had never felt so helpless, Toki..." He whispered. "I couldn't move, I couldn't fight back... I felt like I couldn't breathe... I was so hungry..." He then grit his teeth. "They threw my son to me as if they wanted me to eat him if I really wanted to survive..."

“It’s likely that they did.” She murmured, not having the heart to tell him that they had wanted him to gain LOVE from killing an innocent child. Toki rubbed his knuckles gently, and her green gaze searched him quietly. Her sockets were still stained with her earlier tears. “But you made it out. You and Thumper both did.” She says softly. “Papa? Why haven’t you talked to anyone about it? A therapist could really, really help. You sent Thumper to one.”

"He had a chance to put it behind him... It mattered more that he was helped..." He answered. "I don’t know if I’d be able to just... explain what I endured."

“You won’t know if you never try,” Toki says gently. “If you want to get help with it, a therapist can help, Papa. But it’s something you have to do and to be willing to do. They’ll work with you, talk with you, and it... It might help. It might help make it so you can talk to someone else about it too. Holding it inside isn’t good for you, Papa. Repressing only works for so long...” Eventually, something would happen and he could get triggered by something- and she didn’t want to know what would happen. Particularly since he’d be having small children in his house soon.

"... Do you have anyone you would recommend?” He asked.

Toki ground her teeth quietly. “There’s the therapist that... Han saw. It’s... It’s been so long for me that I don’t remember his name, but my Mom would know.” She says quietly. “She helped Han with... a lot of things. Things he couldn’t tell us about.” She looks up at him quietly. “I think she could help you too.” She’d have suggested the one Thumper went to, but child therapists were specialized in providing therapy to children usually. Children’s minds worked differently than adults. “If you want, I can get the number from Mom. I think Mom went to her to... help her handle Han’s loss, and the stress of everything happening with me.”

He nodded slowly, and then he slowly let his tail slip from his form as he relaxed. "I... I suppose I could see her..."

“It wouldn’t hurt.” She says softly. “She’s not going to dive right into it anyway, Papa. She’ll ease into it better than I would.” Toki gives him a lopsided smile. “For all that I’m good at talking to people, I’m not a therapist or a replacement for one.”

“You’re at least the one who helps people who need a therapist get to one.” He smiled, and slowly cupped her cheeks as he leaned to peck her forehead. "The best damn daughter I could ask for.”

“I don’t think you asked for me.” She offered a soft laugh and leaned into the kiss. “Pretty sure I stumbled into your life like the dork I am, and it went from there.”

"I don’t care, you still met my son and married him. And then you had his children, and they’re the most beautiful pair of twins~" He purred happily.

Toki snorts. “If you recall, I nearly had the twins, and then married him.” She chuckles quietly. Toki shifts, and then wraps her four arms around him in a hug. She went quiet, as her mind quietly simmered on what they’d discussed. “Maybe I’ll write something down somewhere.” She murmurs. “Something about everything that I experienced- so that as my lifetimes go on, I don’t forget everyone. I don’t... I don’t want to forget you all.” Cruelty had even forgotten his children- and he’d had many. She had memories of him holding newborns- ones he’d pushed out himself, and ones his wife at the time had borne for him. He hadn’t remembered their names or their faces- just the feeling of something soft and fragile, something he’d helped create.

"As long as you keep happiness and your beliefs in your heart, you will never disappear from this world, if you are to remember your past from here on."

"It’s a nice thought, Papa. One that I would love to believe in like you and Papyrus do..." Toki gives him a bittersweet smile. "But realistically, I know better and so do you, even if you won’t admit it."
She gives him a soft, sad smile. "I'll enjoy them while I have them and treasure them while I can, but... I'm very sure they won't last forever no matter how much I keep them in my heart."

"Not if you find more people to love and call your own, my daughter... When we are long since dusted, you will find others to love and continue the future, and if we are forgotten to make way for more happy memories, so it will be."

Toki leaned back and she heaved a long and heavy sigh at him. "You're not fully understanding." She mutters, brows furrowing. She'd explained it already and he hadn't understood. She'd try again. "The good memories fade easiest. The bad ones stick longest. What happens when someone is born with lifetimes of trauma and bad memories to serve as a guide for their new life? There's no guarantee that I'll be born to a loving family each time, Papa. There's no guarantee that I'll be in a good home or a good place. What I am saying, is somewhere down the road, I'm not going to remember kindness first. I'm not going to be me. I'm probably going to end up bitter and angry and broken. Why make friends you're only going to lose? Why love someone who is going to die forever while you live on as one of most recycled souls of all time? Why have children when you're going to technically outlive them?" Toki exhales quietly. "It's okay if you don't understand. Papyrus doesn't either, not really. I'm going to treat this lifetime like it's my one life... And then the rest... I don't know. I'll protect you all as long as I remember, but beyond that..."

Toki was looking forward to a miserable eternity.

He reached out and put his hand on her shoulder, giving it a soft squeeze.

Toki heaves the heaviest sigh. They didn't understand. She was repeating it and repeating it, and they were simply repeating back to her the same things they kept on saying. She's not going to fight it. If that's what they want to believe, then that's what they're going to believe.

He smiled at her gently, before he stood up, sighing. "Right... we best let the others know the air has been cleared. We are ready to return to work."

"Work." She snorts. "The house is cleaner than it has been in like... a week or more." Toki chimes lightly. She leans back against the couch with a tired sound. "I'm tired, Papa. After we tell everyone and get the kids back, I might see if I can settle them down for a nap and sleep too. I haven't been sleeping well."

"A nap sounds nice. I even brought my favorite pillow." He joked lightly.

Toki snorts. "I'm not being everyone's pillow today." She chuckles kindly, though firmly. "I'm struggling to sleep with the litter moving so much, and with everything hurting so much."

"I was talking about Asgore, dear." He chuckled before he lifted his head and rumbled. "Come, let's go see what they're up to."

Toki groaned. "I don't wanna get up. The couch has eaten me. It is hungry. Save yourself, Papa. Go on without meeeee." She moans dramatically, flailing her four hands and flopping back against the arm of the couch.

He laughed and stood up. He stepped over to her and grasped her arms, pulling her up and out of the couch so she wasn't stuck. "Come on you."

"Hhhhhgggg." Toki made a fussy sound at him. "But stairs, Papa. Stairs. You didn't do stairs with your fake belly. The pain is real." She pouts at him. She was mostly sassing him at this point as he hefted her from the couch and towards the stairs. "Then I gotta go back down when you non-pregnant folk decide you're ready." She pouts deeper.

He sighed at her whining then smiled and let her hands go. "Then do you want to wait down here while I go get them?"

"Mmm... Noo... Carry me?" Papyrus couldn't tote her anymore. With the exception of the time he'd gotten her inside with his heat- a feat of horniness she wasn't sure he could accomplish without a raging erection to spur him on- he hadn't been able to walk while holding her. Likely he never would under normal circumstances again.

He hesitated before he sighed in a resigned sort of way. Tenebris stepped behind her, scooping her up by the underarms before he carried her upstairs. "Up we go then, my dear." He sighed quietly through his chuckle.

"... When I said carry me, I didn't mean carry me like a child with an extremely dirty diaper, Papa." Toki gave him a dirty buzz as she dangled from his grasp. It felt nice on her lower back, but her upper back screamed angrily at her the whole way up.

"You wanted me to pick you up. Next time you specify how you want to be picked up, and I'll carry you properly." He stuck his tongue out at her and set her down on top of the stairs.

Papyrus stepped out of one of the bedrooms, a smile on his face. "Hey, everything sorted out?" He asked.

"I assumed you knew how to carry someone who's pregnant." She rolled her eyes. "No tummy cuddles for you, Tenebris." She sniffs. Once she was on her feet, she made her way over to meet Aliquam. "Yeah. That's been something that's been boiling over for a long time, I think. But it's sorted."

"But things are at peace for now, yes?" Papyrus pressed a few kisses to the top of her skull, nuzzling the deep crack that had scarred her so, and then hugged her. "We were thinking about a nap. Asgore wants to visit the children, and no doubt father wanted to as well." He chuckled quietly.

"For now, yeah." She nods. "A fun coincidence. I was going to suggest getting the kids and trying to get them down for a nap. If Asgore and Papa want to try their hand at parenting for an hour or two instead of Undyne, though, I don't mind that option either." Toki pauses and frowns. "I feel kind of bad. I haven't had the energy to be a proper mom..."

"Growing a litter of six takes a lot of energy." Asagore chimes from the other room. "Let us handle some of the parenting while you handle the growing."

"We'll get our cuddles in later, you two go on ahead and get some rest." Tenebris rumbled to the two of them. "Let us take care of everything else."

"Well, alright… If you need anything, you can always give us a call and ask." Toki chimes gently.

"Or they can call us." Grillby hums. "And you can get your rest. I didn't know a skeleton could get eye-bags that deep." He taps his face under where eye-bags would be if he had them. "Get some rest, Toki. It's not bad parenting- you're only one person. You have to take care of yourself as well. The old saying 'It takes a village to raise a child' is very true. One person can do it, but it's easier and more fulfilling if more than the mother and father are apart of it. Let us help."

She puffs hot air at Grillby and deflates like a balloon with a hole in it. "Alright, alright… Papyrus and I will get some rest- or try to- and you guys can babysit for a couple hours."
"Consider the babies sat, Toki." Sans chuckled as he shooed her towards her bedroom. Toki snorted gently and gave him a tired smile. “Alright, alright.” She waddled for the bedroom as Asgore, Grillby, and Tenebris went downstairs. Her brother in law, of course, simply teleported down, and she shook her head with a bemused sigh before going to stretch out on her side on the bed.

She was joined momentarily by Gracie and Gael. Gracie sprawled across her belly, while Gael took her hips. “Well, Pap, you were too slow. I’ve been claimed by the cats.”

"I don’t even mind. I get to cuddle almost all my favorite beings at once.” He laughed as he lay down on his side, pulling her into his arms before he nuzzled into her warmth, humming happily. "My darling~” He purred quietly.

Being pulled into his arms dislodged the cats, and there was much-disquieted grumbling from them both. Gael came up to sit on Papyrus’ shoulders, his tail swishing down against his teeth as he stared at Toki unhappily.

Gracie resettled on Toki’s belly again once she had been rolled over, and stretched her feet up to knead at Toki’s breasts.

Toki winced. “We need to trim claws again, my love.” She says, and gently puts her secondary arm between Gracie’s fast kneading paws and her sensitive breast. “She’s trying to poke holes in my boobs again.”

"Oh, fun." He gave a weak chuckle, gently reaching up and pinching the base of Gracie's tail between his knuckles while giving a soft push, she mewed in disdain but quickly retreated to curl up at Toki's side and knead the blanket instead.

"Aww, you didn't have to move her." Toki chuckles. Toki couldn't pet her with her laying behind her. Toki shifts and lets out a tiny grunt. She couldn't get comfortable laying facing Papy anyways. She'd try to move after he fell asleep.

Gael leaned around and pawed at Papyrus' nasal ridge, booping it softly with plush paws. He let off a soft 'mrrrf' at him.

He chuckled quietly and chuffed back at him, leaning up and attacking his paw with kisses.

Gael looked offended at the kisses. He stood up, and then promptly sat back down, putting his fluffy little butt on the side of Papyrus' skull.

Toki snorted, and then made to roll to face away from him, so she could lay on her left side in the hopes of maybe getting some sleep.

"Catbutt." He chuckled, blowing a sharp gust of air right into the cat's rear in hopes to shoo him off as he extended his arms and got comfy with Toki.

Gael grunted at Papyrus and walked down his shoulder so he could hop off. He was offended and they had lost their cuddle privileges.

"And now you shall smell like catbutt until you wash your face." Toki decrees with faint amusement as she flops over like a whale on land. "Mnnng..." She makes a soft grumbling sound as the litter started to shift and move inside of her. The quickening was so… Weird feeling with that many moving around. She just couldn't get comfortable.
"So it shall be." He grumbled before he sighed and nuzzled into her back, his hands going up to gently stroke her stomach to soothe them, though he then realized, "... Toki..." He started slowly, "they're kicking..."

She shifted against him with an uncomfortable sigh. "Yeah, I know, they're wiggling around something fierce. They do this all night, and any time I try to sleep. It's like they don't like any position I lay down in."

He nuzzled her at hearing her complaints, cooing gently to comfort her. "Have you tried a pillow between your legs?" He asked quietly.

"Yeah." She sighs. "I've tried that. I've tried a leg tossed over you; I've tried on my back, my opposite side... All the things." She blinks slowly for a moment as his words register. "Wait, did you say they were kicking? Like... You could feel them moving?"

He laughed quietly into Toki’s mane and nodded. "Yes! I feel them and they're so strong. It's amazing, Toki!"

Toki laughs softly, and her hands drift down to her belly. Finally, she can feel the soft shifting from inside of her on the outside- and it’s less weird to feel outside than it is inside. “Their kicks will only get stronger. I’m glad you got to feel them, Pap. That makes you the first, you know?” She tilts her head to look over her shoulder and through her mane so she can grin at him. “Papa will be jealous.”

"He got to feel the twins, this makes us even." He grinned back before he nuzzled her neck happily. "It's amazing~"

“It does make you even.” She can’t help the soft laugh that leaves her. “It’s been a while since you’ve gotten to feel babies move. I just wish they didn’t move so often… I’m really tired, and they’re very fussy. They’ve been very fussy all week.” She hums.

"I wonder if today is a day where they need their Papa.” He rumbled softly.

Toki loved the sound of his rumbling. He didn’t do it all the time, after all- not like Tenebris, who rumbled every chance he got. She shifted with a soft grumble. “Mmmhh, yeah, but they were gonna watch the kids while we tried to take a short nap. If Papa leaves, the kids will come too.” And Honey hated nap time. Skylar would nap with Toki sometimes, but when Toki tried to put them down for a nap, Honey protested loudly. She had to nap when she wanted to nap, or she just laid there and was a pest for all trying to sleep.

He nodded in understanding. "And Honey will come with her resilience to the entire theory of nap time..." He sighed. "Caeruleus and Grillby should still be down there. If Father can pull away long enough, he may not be noticed enough to be missed."

“Mnn…” Toki makes a soft grumbling sound. “… Alright. You got your phone up here? ‘Cause I love you, and I love Papa, but you’re not getting me back down those damned stairs unless there is an emergency, or it’s past nap time.” And Toki’s phone was very much downstairs. “You’re going to have to call him if you want to get him up here. Or go fetch him.” The house was quiet- everyone had already left, but they wouldn’t be far. “… You know Asgore is going to want to come as soon as he hears the litter is kicking and can be felt.” Toki didn’t want to be swarmed by people during her nap- she couldn’t sleep as it was, and two people gushing over her belly was going to be counterproductive to naptime.

He laughed quietly and shook his head. "Tell you what, we'll tell him later. You sound so dead set on getting some proper rest, I'll shut up and just snuggle you while you rest." He laughed and kissed her mane.

Toki let out a theatrical moan. “I am dead set on getting rest- I’m a skeleton, Pap. I’m dead set on everything.” Ah, her pun levels were weak. She was too tired. “My problem is, I can’t sleep. They won’t stop moving and shit hurts.” Her secondary hands began to massage her belly in an effort to get the litter to stop moving. If they could just… Not move for maybe… ten minutes, Toki could fall asleep and try to stay asleep.

He reached around and set his hands on hers, gently stroking her stomach as he began to hum and sing gently into her neck.

Toki’s wings shifted against his chest as his hands took over for hers. She exhaled softly as he began to hum and sing, and closed her eyes to listen. He didn’t sing like she did, no, but he still had a very, very nice voice when it came to singing. She hadn’t heard him sing in a long time either. She’d probably get to stay up and hear the whole thing.

The litter in her belly squirmed a bit harder at first but began to settle as the massaging kicked in. The squirms went still, and they seemed to doze off as his singing reached them- as did their mother.

Her breathing shifted, and she went limp against Papyrus. For all her lack of ability to sleep, a little bit of singing and some rubbing sent her straight to sleep.

He continued to sing gently and knead her sore body until he was damn sure that no force could disturb his wife.

With that, he smiled to himself, pressing his lips to her neck one last time.

He was the best damn husband.
Chapter 131

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: It's been a while since we've had one like this, eh?

Also hand update. X-rays had no results, so I get to wait a month, see if the pain stops, and if it doesn't, I get to go back in and hopefully we can see if there's more to be done to fix it. Also a fun-tid-bit. I'm having problems with my word documents, so TOTU is giving me problems. RIP.

By the time her next checkup came, Toki was pretty sure everyone was hoping they'd finally get the chance to feel the pups move. Of course, Asgore and Tenebris had been delighted to find out they were moving - everyone had.

But… The litter had refused to move. They didn’t budge an inch for anyone to feel, no matter how much Toki gently prodded them or shifted them to try and stir them awake. Once everyone was gone though, and it was just her and Papyrus, they were up and active and squirming where they could be felt.

It was quite vexing for everyone, truthfully.

Even poor Thumper was a bit put out over not getting to feel his little siblings kicking.

Toki didn’t really know what to tell them besides be patient - and Asgore seemed to support her on that, thankfully.

Toki shifted on the couch, where she was sprawled with her two children as they watched Thumper play a game. Thumper was supposed to be keeping them occupied upstairs so Tenebris and Asgore could come over and do the usual checkup on the litter, but the little rabbit boy didn’t seem to be doing very well with keeping them occupied upstairs.

Toki was supposed to be getting a magic donation today too, of which partly accounted for her fatigue. The never-ending exhaustion she felt came from the amount of magic that six growing babies were draining. She had no idea how they were going to keep up with the needs towards the end of the pregnancy - the litter was demanding more and more magic, and her body was trying to produce what it could to keep them healthy.

Between donations from Papyrus, Asgore, and Tenebris, it still didn’t feel like enough magic.

A pointy elbow in her lower belly makes her grunt. She drops one of her many hands down to soothe the ache away. “Honey,” Toki says gently, “if you want to lay with Momma while you watch Thumper, you can’t be squirming.”

“Sorry, Momma.” She chimes gently, and semi-settles once more in her spot where she’s draped over Toki’s hip like a limpet. “Didn’t mean to elbow the babies or you.”

Tenebris was sitting nearby, having a cup of tea while he waited for a little magic to regenerate. He had just given her an offering for the pups and needed to recharge a little before he could properly scan the pups. He had almost dozed off as well, but with the sounds of Toki and Honey talking, he stirred again and rumbled as he looked over at the two. "Everything alright?" He asked.

"Yeah." Honey answers. "I just squirmed too much and elbowed Momma a little hard."

Toki gave him a thumbs up, before muffling a yelp. One of the pups kicked sharply, and nailed her right in the cervix, sending spikes of pain up and down her pelvis. "Mhm." She made a high-pitched hum of agreement. Was this what it felt like to get kicked in the balls? If so, she had to apologize to her brothers. That hurt super, super bad. "Just getting elbowed on the outside and kicked on the inside. The abuse for Momma Toki never ends."

He laughed quietly. "I suppose I should see what ails them, little activity followed by such aggression, I wonder if something's wrong..." He sounded worried, which of course he would. He always worried.

"Just because you can't ever catch them moving doesn't mean they don't move." Toki rolls her eye lights in good humor. "When you have enough magic to check, you're welcome to. But right now, you look like you're falling asleep. This was just an unlucky foot nailing me in the cervix."

"Mhm..." He sighed, accepting her words. "Where's my Grandbaby? I wanna cuddle my Grandbaby-girl." He chuckled as he reached toward Honey.

"Grandpapa!" Honey pouts at him, but wiggles over on the couch. "I'm here. Sky and I are watching Thumper play."

Skylar made a soft grunt. "Ouch, Honey. You're stepping on my foot."

"There may be one too many skeletons on the couch." Toki chimes. "And I'm stuck until someone digs me out."

"Heh... maybe they'd like to sit in Grandpapa's burrow instead? Let their Momma breathe a little?"

Skylar gives him an unimpressed look, and threads his small hands around Toki's fibula. "Nope. I wanna know how to beat this level."

"Good luck, Dad." Thumper snorts. "I was trying to keep them upstairs and you can see how well that went."

"Maybe on Grandpapa's shoulders instead if in his tummy hole? Then we can still watch Thumper play." Honey hums thoughtfully.

"Shoulders it is. Get up here." He laughed, extending his arms to them. "Let your dear mother breathe."

Honey leaned over to kiss her mothers tummy, and then scuttled off the couch to go hop into her grandpa's arms.

Her brother grumbled, but followed shortly.

Toki snorted. "Their dear mother is stuck on her back, with her boobs squishing her face. At least I don't actually need air." She rubbed her hands down her belly and sighed, grimacing as she itched at the spots on her stomach again.

She wasn't sure what the oblong rings on her belly were, or why they were in a straight line up and down her belly. She did know, however, that there were tiny little lumps forming on them. She wondered if she should tell Tenebris.

"At least you're not swarmed by excited pups now, eh Toki?" Tenebris laughed gently.

“Very true. Now I’m just a stuck lump with an itchy tummy.” She chuckles contently. She stops itching the bumps on her belly, because they’ll grow more irritated if she keeps bothering them, and stretches her toes. Her wings were cramped from how she was laying on her back, but it was the best she had at this point.

"Itchy tummy?" That got his attention. "Is everything alright? Are they irritation or lumps? Have you been washing properly?"

Skylar glanced at his grandpa and bumped him with his skull. “You’re really dopey sometimes, Papa. Momma has been complaining about the spots on her tummy for a couple days now.”

“Papa has baby fever.” Toki admonishes lightly. “Even daddies to be get baby brain and forget important things often, like the manners in asking a very obviously clean mother if she’s been washing properly.” She turns her admonishing glance onto her father in law, letting him stew in it for a moment, before it softened. “It started out as those dark circles I showed you from last week, Tenebris. Now there are these little… bumps in the circles. They itch, but it hurts to itch them too much.”

"That is a little concerning... and... My apologies." Tenebris sounded a bit bashful as he slowly got up out of his seat and set the pups down in his chair before he came over to the couch. "May I have a look?" He asked.

“Sure.” Toki nods. She shifts, and looks a bit silly as she wiggles and squirms to work her shirt up. Her belly is still darker than it should be, but Asgore and Papyrus hadn’t dumped magic into her yet, so that explained it. On top of the darkened flesh of her gravid middle, there sat a two rows of oval markings, with a darker, raised bump in the middle.

Toki had to resist itching one.

He knelt and looked at the bumps, his brows furrowing slightly. "This is new..." He murmured, before he blinked and he ran his thumb over the darker bump. "Are these..." He started quietly.

Toki twitched a bit as his thumb ran over the bump. It was soft, but there was a distinct texture to the bump. “Careful please. Whatever they are, they’re sensitive, and they keep alternating between hurting whenever my shirt touches them, and itching like a bad case of poison ivy.”

"..." He hesitated, before he looked up at her chest. "I... I think you’re growing… Toki, I think you’re growing teats." He managed to get out as his gaze then lifted to her face.

Toki froze, her eye lights having tracked the progression of his gaze. “… Pardon?” She squeaked, clearly alarmed. “Teats? Like… Like a cow?”

"Like a dog or a cat." He corrected gently. "You're getting ready to nurse a litter, naturally.”

Toki slumped back into the couch, and she covered her face in her hands. She moaned a little. “This is one of those skeleton things that comes back to bite me in the ass.” Skeletons changed their body to suit their mate, after all.

“Momma!” Honey huffs. “That’s a bad word. Use butt instead.”
“This is one of those skeleton things that comes back to bite me in the butt.” She humors her daughter automatically, and then huffs a soft sigh into her hands. “I’m going to have rows of boobs. Of teats. I’m going to have to wear so many bras.”

The thought of that made her want to burst out into tears.

He chuckled gently and lifted his form to gently pull her into a hug, pecking her head lightly with soft kisses. “There, there. I’m sure that the teats will be temporary.” He chuckled again. “They’ll come when the pups are ready, and go once they need them no more.”

“You’re not the one that’s going to have to use…” She counted the rows. “Four bras! Four, Papa! That’s three bras too many!” She puffed at him. Then she crossed her arms and made an irate buzzing sound. “Nope. Nope. Screw it. Everyone can deal with me being saggy and everywhere. Fuu-aaarrggg that crap,” she curbed her swears roughly, “I’m not wearing them.” And good luck to the person who tried to make her wear them.

"My point was you wont need them." He patted her head with a chuckle. "They wont stand out enough to be noticed.”

“I guess… And if they do,” she sniffs, “then I’ll just hide in the house until the pups come.” She was turning into a homebody anyways. Everything ached most of the time, and long walks outside wasn’t her idea of fun when she felt like a whale.

"Poor dear. Well, rest assured, you're in good hands. Good hands being mine, my dearest son’s, and Asgore's." He smiled at her, and then he got comfortable once more on his knees and set his head on her tummy as a purr started up in his throat. "Did you hear that, puppies? Don’t worry, all your Papas will take good care of you and your Momma." He cooed into her stomach, his hand coming up to rest on the warm and plump flesh as he began to soul-scan her stomach, a mellow smile on his face.

Toki watched the mellow smile on his face only for a moment as he scanned her stomach, and quietly snorted as she glanced away to look at Thumper, which made her miss any change in face he might have made. He was a silly old man- she loved him. “I’m in protective hands. But, having this many folks around the house helps me and Papyrus out a lot. He tries to help out, but you know how it is.” He could only do so much before he was laid up in bed with his leg.

“We don’t mind helping!” Thumper chimes.

There was no retort from Tenebris, only the sound of his breathing slowing as he moved his hands to new spots on her stomach, scanning again.

Toki glanced down at Tenebris when he didn’t chime in. Usually he did about now. “… Everything okay?”

He swallowed, and then slowly got up onto his feet. "Yes.” He replied gently but curtly. “I just need to step out for a moment.” He murmured.

“That doesn’t sound like-”

He didn’t wait for her full response, slowly going for the kitchen while reaching into the coat pocket that he kept his pipe in. Though as he passed Aliquam, he tapped his shoulder. "We need to talk.” He spoke quietly as he passed.

The younger man heard and he slowly set his current project aside to follow his father outside.
Asgore had been in the kitchen cooking with Papyrus- and when the elder Gaster had come in and nudged his son for his attention, Asgore quickly secured the food items, and then followed them out with a worried flick of his tail. His ears pricked upwards with worry. Tenebris was supposed to do a checkup on the litter- he wouldn’t sound so upset if something wasn’t wrong.

“What’s wrong?” Is the first words out of Asgore’s mouth once the three of them are outside on the back patio and the door is firmly shut where Toki and the children can’t hear them. He can hear the loud sound of Toki struggling to get off the couch, and failing, and the children giggling noisily at her.

Tenebris rubbed his face, before he sighed and kept his face hidden behind his hand. "I... I only felt five souls." He spoke carefully. "There were six before when I had previously checked."

Papyrus didn't say anything, but his face showed that he immediately understood just what his father was implying, and he lowered his gaze to the ground. "Oh Father..."

Asgore’s soul dropped. It took him a moment to collect himself- oh no please, not another one, not another of his children gone, gone, gone, this time before he’d even gotten to know them- before he slid on his visage of a King. He drew in a deep breath, and steadied the shake of his hands. “Are you sure?” He asks softly, voice deceptively calm. “… You wouldn’t have said anything if you hadn’t run multiple tests. Alright. Alright.” Asgore’s hands came to his muzzle, and he took a deep breath in. If he broke now, then everyone would be crying, and Toki would be left confused. “Perhaps it’s because we haven’t been able to meet her magic needs.” He says quietly. He knew he wasn’t the only one who had noticed how dim her belly glow was almost constantly. The three of them couldn’t keep up with her needs- they weren’t enough. “More pressing than why we lost one... How will we tell her without putting her at risk of losing the rest of the litter?”

Monsters were not immune to stress based inductions of labor.

Tenebris lowered his hand and took a shaky breath, "I... I don’t know... She doesn’t seem to be unhealthy... but the lack of activity from the pups makes me worry. I would need to do a long-term connection to see if I can learn what was going on... but Toki... she’s anything but stupid. She’ll know something’s wrong if I asked her while this... distressed.”

Asgore grimaced. It wasn’t a nice look on him. “They’re not inactive, Tenebris. As much as you think they are, they aren’t. If you recall, Toki fusses frequently about the lack of sleep from them moving. It’s possible, that the... The smallest soul,” The king sighed, “simply couldn’t get enough magic to sustain itself or it’s body and simply reabsorbed. It happens in multiples if... not enough magic is supplied.” He scrubbed his face tiredly. “We need to tell her. And she needs support. She isn’t going to take this well- we all know her well enough to know she’s going to blame herself for this. We can’t let her focus on it- we can’t let her fall into that despair.”

Tenebris slowly gave a nod of his head, before he gave a quiet sigh and ran his hands over his face.

"I'm sorry, Father... if I was stronger..." Aliquam started, before Tenebris growled, cutting him off before he could continue.

"Papyrus Aliquam Gaster, don’t you dare talk like that. It wasn't your fault." He scolded him, before he stepped over to Asgore, resting against him for a moment. "It's just the universe doing as it will." He murmured quietly.

Asgore supported him quietly, and tipped his head down to press a kiss to his forehead. “We still have five.” He says gently. “But it’s no one’s fault that... That one has been lost.” The king inhaled gently, and then looked at Papyrus. “Son,” he says softly, “It’s not your fault. But... your wife will need you. She’s… Toki is kind. For all of her talk about being Balance, she is still Kindness at her core. The loss of a child will hurt her badly. Toki will need support. So… My question still stands. How do we tell her?"

"As a doctor would, I would suggest that we…” Tenebris sighed. "Tell her straight… and be ready to support her if she buckles."

Asgore nods. “I agree.” He inhales gently, and nudges Tenebris gently. “Old friend, love of my life, light of my stars… you and I have seen many horrible things in our many years alive. Papyrus and Toki are still young yet- they’re going to need us to be strong. Can… Can you be strong for them?"

Tenebris looked up at Asgore, and he was quiet for a long time as he pondered his words. It took him a while, but he soon sighed before he smiled and leaned up, nuzzling Asgore gently. "Yes, I can."

Aliquam smiled gently at the sight before he took a breath and nodded. "I'll go in and... get comfy with her so she's ready."

Asgore nods. "Send Thumper upstairs." He commands gently. "Tenebris and I will explain what happened to him later. Tell him to take the kids too. Your father and I will... Finish making their lunch while you get her comfortable, alright?"

"I will, thank you sir." Aliquam bowed his head and started inside.

By the time he got back to the living room, Toki had just managed to pry herself into a half sitting position. Her bones were flushed with exertion, and her brow was puckered with irritation at having just been left there. She was still trying to get up, apparently.

"Do you need some help there, sweetheart?" Aliquam laughed quietly as he came over to the couch, hobbling carefully. "How about some nice husband cuddles?" He offered.

"If you can help me sit up, you can have all the cuddles you want." Toki grunts. "Laying down is cramping my wings."

"She's been fussing since Dad ran out, big bro." Thumper hummed.

"I see." He sat down comfortably before he reached and gently pulled her into his arms, nuzzling her gently as he cuddled with her on the couch. "Thumper, will you please take the twins upstairs?" He spoke gently.

Toki puffed at him, but melted like ice cream in the sun. She slumped into him with a soft grumbling sound.

Thumper pouted. "But I was just getting to the good part in the level!"

"Daddy!" Honey pouts. "I don't wanna go upstairs. I wanna stay here and watch Thumper."

"Children…" His voice shifted as he then wrapped his arms around Toki, holding her closer to himself. "Please… This won't take long."

"But Daddy!" Honey whined.

Thumper's ears twitched, and he seemed to read the mood. He sighed. "Okay, okay. But we're not going upstairs. We're gonna go outside and play and run off energy before lunch time.” He shuts down the game after saving, and then turns to scoop his technical niece and nephew into his arms.
They're almost comically big in his grasp. He hefts them towards the kitchen, the twins squirming the whole way.

Toki watches them go, and then fixes her husband with a serious look. "You wouldn't send them off unless something was wrong, or you needed to talk privately. What's up?"

"There's something important that Father wanted to tell you... I was asked to come in ahead of them... Get you comfortable."

"Get me comfortable." She repeats, eye lights lifting up to search his face. Toki wasn't stupid most of the time. She could connect the dots. "... Is something wrong with the pups?"

"It's... better you hear it from Father." He told her gently, his gaze lifting towards the kitchen as he waited for the older males to appear.

"Is it?" She asks, and can feel anxiety creeping up on her. What was wrong with the litter? Was it something she did? Did the vigorous sex hurt them? Were they even alright?

Tenebris rattled quietly as he stepped from the kitchen and came over. He knelt down in front of Toki. "I can smell the anxiety already, so... I suppose I should make this quick." He spoke, before he swallowed the lump in his throat; the sheer dread that he had to be the one to say it was making his voice nearly choke up. "I... I felt only five souls this time. I scanned twice to be sure that I was wrong, but... I think one of the pups was... too weak to continue development. I'm sorry."

"What?" Her eye lights disappeared as she stared at him, finding herself at a loss for words at first. It took her a moment of resting a hand on her belly, for a small foot to kick her palm, before her eye sockets watered. "No, no, no. We can't have... Have lost one. Check again." She demands suddenly, tugging up the front of her shirt with a vicious yank. It nearly rips a hole in the material. "Check again. I can't have... I can't... It's got to be there. It... It has to." She visibly wilts, despite her demands.

Was this her fault? If it was truly gone, then... Then it was. She had lost one of the pups because she... She probably couldn't give it enough magic. She had lost a pup. She lost her baby. She lost one of the babies that would become Tenebris and Asgore's future.

"Please... Please tell me you misread it. That it isn't true." She begs.

Toki had never begged them legitimately for anything.

It hurt Asgore's soul to hear the kind woman trying not to break.

Tenebris’ hands didn't immediately touch her stomach. Instead, they reached out and rested on her own hands, while Aliquam pulled her into a gentle embrace and nuzzled her temple gently.

"We all did our best, Toki. No one is at fault here. Especially not you... you've done everything right." Tenebris told her firmly, giving her fingers a gentle squeeze. "It's... It's nothing we could have avoided." He lowered his head a little, pressing his eyes closed to resist the pain of tears welling in his eyes. "Six souls... you're only a skeleton; your body wasn't made for a litter... The demand would be draining on you..." His hands slowly did release her own, letting her do as she would with them as his hands lowered to her stomach, pressing against it before stroking with his thumbs. "It's not your fault."

“I could have... I could have done more.” She’s sure of that. She doesn’t know how she could have done more, but she could have done more. Toki sniffs softly, and the tears come without her permission. As Tenebris’ hands settle on her swollen belly, Toki lets off a pained keen, and she not-so-quietly breaks. Her beast echoed her sentiments, and the sounds that came from her were not entirely hers.

Dear mourned- She’d have begged magic from whoever if it meant they hadn’t lost an innocent soul-if they hadn’t lost one of their babies.

Asgore stepped closer and set a hand on her shoulder. His thumb gently rubbed her wing joint to try and soothe her.

The litter shifted in her belly, and a foot kicked out against Tenebris’ hand- the first movement he got to feel.

Indeed he felt it, but this time, the sound he made was a mixture between an anguished howl and a sob of joy as Tenebris and Papa both celebrated the touch of their children as well as the overwhelming pain of the delicate loss.

Asgore closed his eyes and exhaled, closing himself off visibly as he supported them. They didn’t need him to break- he could take his time and mourn on his own later. Right now, Toki needed to mourn, and Tenebris needed to mourn- after all what was one more dead child to him after so many he had come to care for- and likely Papyrus too. Thumper would as well, and so would Sans and Grillby and the twins… They needed their king to be strong. It was easier to close off and handle it as a king would, rather than a father who lost a child. They didn’t react rationally.

Toki sobbed, a wailing buzz rising out of her from the depths of her core. Her secondary hands lowered to her belly, and she cradled it, and Tenebris’ hands. Toki’s primary hands covered her face and clutched to her husband, using him like a rock to keep her grounded as her magic rippled and pulsed, filling the air in her emotional distress.

Stag appeared, the front door banging open, as they reacted to their mistress’ upset. They took one look at the scene, and shifted from their quadruped form into their bipedal form so they could make their way over gently. They paused to offer comforting touches to everyone- even the brokenhearted king- before going to the kitchen to make a soothing tea for them. They would need it when the tears were over.

Aliquam smiled up at the guardian as he came by, and as he disappeared into the kitchen. Quinn quickly took to wrapping his arms tight around Toki, curling around her as he nuzzled her. He was upset as well, but like Asgore, he knew he had to be strong, so even though not even he could hold back the tears that grew in his eyes, he didn’t sob. He simply breathed a little deeper as he nuzzled her, letting her get out her anguish.

Toki sobbed for a long time. She mourned a baby, a sweet, innocent child that could have been hers but instead would have been her sibling in law by her own choice, and those sorts of tears were tears that weren’t quick to shed.

She was still crying even when Stag brought in the tea and settled it in front of everyone on the table. She didn’t stop crying, up until she was literally too tired to cry anymore. Then, Toki simply shook and clung to whoever was closest- which happened to be her husband- as she made soft heartbreaking keens and tried to put herself back together

Aliquam pulled her closer as Tenebris eventually retreated to hide in the fluff of his mate, his own sounds quieter than Toki’s but just as pain-filled.

Toki’s stuttering breaths were hard to hear, as were his mates. Asgore took in a soft breath as he held the doctor closer, and then he began to sing softly to try and soothe them.
It didn't really help, but it gave Toki something to focus on. She couldn't really differentiate the different souls or count them because it wasn't as clear as the twins had been. More than two made it hard to keep track. She hadn't even noticed that one of them was gone. How long had it been gone? How long had they been down to five and she hadn’t noticed?

Dear spoke softly to Toki once Asgore's song ended. Toki's voice cracked as she relayed the message. "Dear... Dear says pups can... Can die without enough magic to sustain them. The... The weaker ones will... Will be absorbed by the stronger. Small mate flocks produce small but strong clutches this way."

"It's true..." Tenebris agreed quietly as Papa began to speak to him the same, telling him what his base instinct knew. "It sustains a stronger gene pool for future offspring." he sighed, "It is not uncommon... So says my beast..."

Toki rubbed her arm and looked away. "The rest of what Dear says isn't nice though." It was making her sockets well with tears again. Dear was firm in the belief that they had more than enough adult monsters in their family to have sustained the litter, if Grillby and Sans would have helped. Even others, if they had been willing, would have been beneficial.

Toki's beast could be very unkind when she wanted to be. Losing a pup made her that way it seemed.

Fat tears dropped into her shirt, and Toki couldn't muster the will to wipe them away.

Aliquam bit back a retort at Dear's rudeness and simply reached up to wipe his wife's tears, comforting her softly as he gave her kisses.

Toki sniffled quietly and turned to press her face against her husband's shoulder. "I'm not gonna be okay for a while." She whispers softly. "But..."

"It will get better." Asgore finishes for her. "It will. Why don't you drink some tea that Stag brought us, and then... Just rest. I'll handle cleaning the house and watching the children. I can hold it together for that."

Toki sniffed and nodded softly. They'd have to tell the children, but... Later. She leaned forward to grab her cup of tea and took a sip of it.

Stag made a pleased bleat, and danced their hooves on the carpet when Toki made a pleased sound.

"You are a miracle, Stag. Thank you." Aliquam smiled up at them warmly as he reached out as well and took his cup as well, blowing on it gently before taking a small sip.

Tenebris rumbled quietly. "The family guardian does his job and does it well, thank you." He praised the stag as well.

Stag made another happy noise towards their masters' mate, and then flicked an ear at the doctor. "Guard more than family. Guard people in town." They replied lightly, voice not often used and not as befitting their body as one might think. "Fire man Grillby help teach us make tea. Is good?"

"Its very good, Stag." Toki gave them a warm smile despite it all. "Thank you. Do you want to change form and curl up with us?"

"Can keep form for half clock turn more if need." The deer monster answered gingerly. Their gold laced albino coat glimmered in the light. "If two legs not need, can go to four. Four is better for cuddle says little masters."
"I think Toki needs cuddles more than anything else, and you'll be seconded only by myself."
Aliquam chuckled quietly. "Come here, Stag."

Stag made a soft bleat, and shifted forms in a gleam of light. Their golden hooves clicked on the hard floors as they shook their fur out, golden antlers gleaming in the light. It didn’t take but a moment for Stag to hop on the couch, making a high pitched “Meh!” as they bumped their nose against Toki’s belly and got a tiny kick in return. More little masters on the way made them happy.

Toki settled her hand on his head between the proud golden spikes of his horns, and she rubbed his soft fur quietly. Two of her hands cradled her tea, while her last hand clung to her husband. Toki settled down, eyes dimming as she settled into a shocked sort of mental limbo.

Aliquam kept one arm wrapped around her tightly as the other held his cup, though it was often set down to allow him to hold her with both arms.

Tenebris stood with Asgore silently, his tail wrapping around his mate's back to help anchor him a little more securely.

It was only a short time before there was a soft knocking at the front door. The knock was only a courtesy, as Sans opened the door without being invited in. "Hey?" He spoke up gently, Solstice poking her head in as well under her mother’s grasp.

Toki lifted her head as her brother in law poked into the somber silence that had filled the bottom part of the house. The children hadn’t come inside- or perhaps they had tried, but a quick look from Asgore had sent them back outside again.

The King, seeing the eldest Gaster child there, gently disengaged from his mate and ushered him to his son so he could go finish and bring lunch out to the children outside before they came charging inside. He would also do his best to explain to them the situation, so that Toki wouldn’t have to try. Asgore was good at explaining loss to family members by now.

“Sans…” Toki croaks softly. “Hey… It’s, uh… It’s not the best atmosphere right now for little ones.” She glances to her niece, her sweet little niece who was so sensitive to the emotions around her. “Maybe take her outside with Thumper, and… And we can catch you up…?”

He looked at her and then he sighed and pecked Solstice's head, before taking her outside to the children. When he returned indoors, he went to squish onto the couch.

Tenebris slowly moved to sit beside the couch, looking up at Cae as he sat down on the couch. "Did something happen to the pups?" The eldest son asked quietly once sure his daughter wasn’t going to try toddling back through the back door. "Are they okay? Are you okay, Toki?"

“I’m not okay. Not in my heart, anyway.” Toki sniffed softly. She rubbed Stag’s brow gently, and then shifted her hand to her belly. “Something happened to the pups. For… For whatever reason- not enough magic, or not enough space, or… Or something… We’re… We’re down to five now.” She says quietly. “We lost one.”

Stag shifted their head in her lap, and as Sans sat down, they stretched their back legs out over him, drawing him into the cuddle pile too. Stag made a soft, mournful “Mehhh.” As their mistress informed the shorter skeleton master of the loss of one of the little masters.

That news had Cae hesitate, before he sighed. "Ah... jeez... I'm sorry, Toki..." He spoke quietly, reaching up and rubbing his head. "I... I don’t know what to say. Can I even say anything that can help?” His voice softened as he looked up at her.
“No.” She says quietly. “Words won’t help. Just… Come here? Please?” Her tea is abandoned to the table, and she extends a hand to him, a silent request for him to scoot closer.

Stag even lifted their body for the bigger skeleton to scoot closer under them.

He smiled lightly and came closer to her, pressing his hips to hers before he wrapped his arms around her and he gave her a firm hug. "Only the best hugs for my little sister." He murmured.

“For you too.” She mumbles, and two of her arms lace around him like frail vices. “I’m not… I’m not the only one who lost them. They’re… They’re your family too, brother.”

"Yeah… I know. I know...” He sighed and looked up at Aliquam, whose eyes stayed half lidded as he looked up at his brother. "I might be mellow, but that's more for your sake so I don’t mourn harder than you. It's my job to comfort you damn it... Doesn't mean I’m not upset about it." He sighed gently.

Toki glanced down to Tenebris, who sat pressed against her knees with black tears still staining his face. “I think we’re all mourning in our own ways. Holding back and hiding it isn’t… Isn’t going to help anyone really.” She whispers. “Because I’m going to worry about all of you and worry about the litter and worry about the kids, and… And worrying is probably not… good for the litter.”

Tenebris looked up at her, and then he sighed and wiped his face as he got up. "Yes, you're right." He murmured, before he sighed again. "I... best go check on the children..." He mumbled, and padded outside.

Aliquam nodded gently before he nuzzled Toki again. "I'm staying here. I think we both are.”

Toki watched him go, and furrowed her brow softly. She closed her eyes, feeling her head starting to throb. "I've got a headache from crying." She mumbles, head drooping on her shoulders. Her mane was limp, and she seemed almost lifeless as she laid there. "I think Asgore is upstairs, so Papa and the kids will be okay... Speaking of Asgore... I still need to get his magic donation later. With the... The pup being lost, I don’t..." She didn’t want to risk losing more. She only had a few more weeks to go.

"I'll give you whatever I can..." Aliquam promised as he leaned up to kiss her head gently.

"Grillby and I have been hoping for another kid, but I think you need this more than I do." Cae then spoke as he reached out and set his hands on her stomach.

Toki stirred slightly as she was kissed and touched. "I couldn't... If you're trying for your own child, Sans, you should save your magic for that." She encourages gently, leaning her skull into her husband's touch. The litter inside shifts, and her brother in law's hand is kicked oh so gently.

The older brother smiled gently and shook his head. "It's okay, Toki. Best keep the pups already growing alive, yeah?" He chuckled quietly.

Toki's primary hand dropped down to his, and she grabbed it firmly. She lifted it from her belly, and simply cradled it. "I'd feel better if you talked with Grillby first before you made a decision like that.” She says softly. "As... As much as I would love for you to give magic to help keep the litter alive, if you're trying to make a child yourselves, I'm not going to... To... To rob you of that. I know how hard it is for you both." With Sans health and Grillby's fertility issues with him being a fire elemental, they would always struggle.

"Tokes. I don’t want you to worry about losing another pup. Even if it's just a surplus to make it through the night, I want to do whatever I can to help." He turned his hand to gently hold hers, a smile on his face.

"I know..." She rubbed his knuckles gently. "Still..." She didn't want to make it harder for them. As desperate as she was to keep the rest of the litter alive, she didn't want to rob them of their chance to conceive. "It's... It's ultimately your choice though."

"I know." He smiled at her warmly and lifted her hands to his teeth to press kisses to her knuckles. "A big bro's gotta help his sister out."

Toki sighed softly and gave him a smile. The fur on her wrists ruffled slightly, and she nodded before releasing his fingers from her grasps. "Okay. Okay. Just... Not too much, okay? I'm already going to have to deal with Papa and Papyrus trying to give themselves Magi-Drain trying to help me. I don't need to stress over you too." Toki wondered if her stress levels had helped attribute to it. She had spent the majority of her early pregnancy very stressed, after all.

He simply smiled at her and lowered his hands to her stomach, giving what energy he could spare to her. His magic allowed a cool feeling, like Aloe on a sunburn.

"You always feel like mint." Toki comments softly. "I remember when you gave magic after we lost Han... Your magic still feels the same. You're minty and cool, and it feels very nice." She brightened considerably, the glow of her belly intensifying and turning more translucent, and she would brighten more when she got the final donations from Papyrus and Asgore.

He gave a soft laugh and slowly re-positioned to press his forehead to hers, giving her a bright grin. "I'll be your cool glass of water anytime." He purred happily. "Just give me a call if you need me."

Toki shifted to give him a faint smile. She was tired and fragile emotionally, but she wasn't entirely broken. She was strong- and piecing herself back together was second nature by now. "I'll do that. Talk to Grillby though. Make sure its okay between the both of you that you help me. It'll only be for probably another month or so given the growth rate, so..."

He nodded gently and he gave her a soft couple of kisses. "Happy to help, Toki." He chuckled lightly, "I'm sure when I tell Grillbz I'm gonna reserve as backup, he'll understand."

"Maybe fire man Grillby help. Stag's voice sounded weird coming from their deer form. "Fire man Grillby has much magic. He pack too."

Toki hummed. "He is, but he's not obligated either, Stag. I'll be content with what I can get... Hopefully it's enough. It should be enough." They hadn't managed to keep her belly bright at all during the entire early part of her pregnancy, but Sans help would improve that a whole lot now.

"I bet if he gave you magic, you'd light right up." He laughed as he leaned back again.

"Probably. Fire is conductive to fire." She manages a weak laugh. "But that is neither here nor there. Thank you for your donation, Sans." She tilted her head and bumped his shoulder in gratitude.

"Happy to help, doll." He chuckled, tapping his head to hers appreciatively.

At this moment, Tenebris came back inside with a mellow smile, looking to his sons and daughter on the couch. "Hey." He rumbled.

"Hey." Toki glanced up to Tenebris tiredly. She was beginning to go slack into the couch. "How are Asgore and the kids?" She asks quietly.

"Asgore's keeping them accompanied, heh." He chuckled. "They're braiding his mane." He came and hugged her over the couch. "How do you feel?"

“I’m tired.” She says quietly and closes her eyes. “I’m really tired. My soul is tired… I’d like to just… sleep. But I know that’s not a healthy response.” She opens her sockets again and inhales softly. “Maybe we can… turn on a movie or something?”

"Want me to go get the pups so they can cuddle with you?” He offered. "If I don’t get them, I’d wager the sound of popcorn will get them inside fairly quickly." He chuckled softly to her.

Her first instinctive response was no, because her children didn’t need to see her in such a mess- but then Toki rethought it. Slowly she nodded. “I want a floor nest.” She mumbles, and shifts under the pile of skeletons and deer covering her. “So we can all cuddle. I don’t want to be alone right now, and none of us really need to be alone with our thoughts.”

"A floor nest it is." He chuckled. "Caeruleus, will you assist?"

"On it, pops." Immediately the older brother was up and following his father upstairs.

"A nice big nest with fluffy pillows and soft kings." Aliquam rumbled happily.

"Yeah." Toki nuzzles her husband softly now that they’re alone. Or mostly alone, minus Stag. She can hear the sound of them raiding the bedrooms upstairs and gives a muffled chuckle. "Thank you... For being my rock. I don't say that to you enough, but thank you."

"I'll be the very earth below your feet if it meant you smiled every day." He purred as he kissed her delicately.

She met his kiss tenderly, and then lifted her primary hand to cradle his face. She stroked his cheekbones, admiring the strength in the high structure. "I know you would. I’d rather you walk the earth by my side though. That will make me smile more." She gives him a soft one to emphasize this.

"A King is only as good as the Queen at his side" Aliquam leaned into her hand as his eyes closed, a soft purr rising from him as Sentinel seemed to share his love for her as well.

"Then you and I make a very good set." She smiles softly, and rubs his cheek more gently at his purr. "Now, my sweet king... Shall we make some popcorn while the nesting materials are gathered? The kids will want some... I think I want some comfort food too."

"Sure." He slowly got up and held a hand to her to help her up as well. "Will you want anything special on yours?" He offered.

"Mmm... Yeah." She let him haul her up, and cradled her belly gently in her lower hands. "I want chocolate and caramel. And maybe some ketchup."

"You want butter and salt too?" He offered, his hand looping around her back to give her a soft, supported squeeze before he grabbed his cane and started for the kitchen.

"Yep." She agrees. "I want all the things." She liked to joke that her cravings got weirder with the higher number of babies she was having. She wondered, if a bit bitterly, if her cravings were more tame now thanks to there being one less pup in her belly.

It was a cruel thought to pass her mind, but Aliquam was able to comfort her with a soft laugh as he walked with her into the kitchen, grabbing the popcorn popper and setting it on the counter before going for the kernels.
Toki watched him work, and went to fetch the condiments from the fridge. She also got down lots of separate bowls- no one really liked to share, and no one really wanted to share her strange cravings.

"We’re gonna need to make a few batches for everyone, so we’ll need a bit of butter too. When you’re done there, could you melt some please?" Aliquam laughed lightly at the list of condiments she chose for her popcorn.

Toki stuck her tongue out at him from between her teeth when he laughed at her, blushing slightly. Yes, she ate weird things, but pregnancy did strange things to her. She’d once had the desire to eat the grass growing outside, but she’d told no one. “Of course I can melt the butter.” She fetches a few cubes, and brings it closer to him. Her magic warms it so he can put it into the kernels so it can pop with the buttery flavor on them.

"You're a talented goddess of fire, that's what you are." Her husband praised as he loaded and started up the popcorn popper.

"I wouldn't call me a goddess." A goddess wouldn't have lost a child. "A fire minion maybe. Or a sorceress. I've gotten good with my fire magic in the four years or so that I've had it."

"Oooh a sorceress sounds so mystical. I like that." He laughed gently, standing by the popcorn machine to be ready for the constant switching of bowls.

Toki chuckles softly. "I like it too. It sounds like a Dungeons and Dragons character type."

He laughed at that, and gave her a warm look.

She gave him a smile in return.

While the popcorn started popping, he hobbled over and gave her a loving kiss. "I adore you, my love." He purred happily.

Toki smiled at him. "I don’t think look like a door," She manages a weak but terrible joke as she kisses him softly, "But I am pretty cute. And you're very handsome."

Aliquam cooed and enjoyed the kiss before giving her more affectionate kisses on her face. "That's for damn sure~ I've got the best lookin’ wife, no doubt about it!" He laughed warmly.

Toki gave a faint smile and nuzzled him. “I don’t think I’m the best, but I’m hopefully not the worst. I’m definitely more exciting now than when I was a skeleton, and then when I was a human.”

"You've always been exciting!" He tutted as he then gave her a warm hug, thankful that the larger bowl was being filled up at this moment.

She glanced to the larger popcorn bowl being filled up, and nuzzled him gently. “Nope. I was boring until monsters made my life much more fun.”

"Well then let's leave it at that, a good middle ground... life used to be boring... then we came along!" He decreed, looking at the bowls for a second before he went 'oh crap' and quickly went back to switch to the next bowl before it got too full.

Toki watched him popping popcorn, and chuckled. She pulled one bowl to the side, deciding the children could share the big bowl of popcorn, and then waited for him to finish popping the rest. She tilted her skull. She could hear noises in the living room. “I'd rather have you all in my life than not, so I’ll take excitement over boring any day.” She muses. “Also... I think your dad and your brother are back downstairs. Stag might be helping them make the nest- I can hear your dad grumbling about Stag’s nesting skills.”

"I would have thought that they got along by now..." Aliquam chuckled. "They ended up spending a bit more time together, at least in meetings during the time they both patrolled the forest."

"Stag is Stag, and Stag enjoys toying with predators. Partly, I think, because Stag is not wholly a prey monster." Toki comments lightly. "They'll likely have a love hate relationship forever."

"I agree, something ever happens to make them get along, I'll be shocked." Aliquam laughed softly. Soon enough the last batch of popcorn had been popped and transferred into the bowls. Leaving his wife to her own devices, Aliquam began to distribute salt to the majority of the bowls, as they had already been popped in the butter. They smelled heavenly.

Toki did the same to her bowl and then went the extra mile. Hers was laden with many things-chocolate, mayonnaise, ketchup, caramel- and perfectly ready to eat. "Me too." She chuckles.

He looked at her popcorn bowl with slight surprise before he chuckled and picked up a few of the other bowls. "Heh... Ready?"

"Yep." She nods. She gathers her bowl and then makes use of her other hands, stealing the rest of the bowls and balancing them expertly in her arms and against her belly. She leaves Papyrus with only one, so he can hobble safely along. "Lets go see what sort of nest your dad and brother got made with Stag helping."

Aliquam nodded and walked back to the front room, but was surprised to see a rather impressive nest built with a place for everyone

Cae saw her first before he grinned widely, "Heh heh... Ta-da!"

Toki's brows rose. "I'm admittedly surprised. The amount of grumbling I heard told me I should have expected a jumble of pillow and blankets instead of this." She waddled closer, eying it with a faint and emotionally tired smile. She couldn't sit down with her arms full, but the others could get settled. She had to do it carefully- getting on all fours took time when one was this pregnant. "It looks really good though. Good work, you three."

Stag gave a proud bleat, and tugged on Tenebris' pants.

"Stag and I seemed to see more eye to eye towards the end of the construction. I’m pleased we were able to work together so well on this." Tenebris brought a hand up and warmly pat Stag on their head. "We have a place for everyone and a monster for every place, with largest in the back to serve as the pillows. Stag, if you will..."

Stag glanced up at him and gave him a sassy "Meh!" before shifting forms. Then, they went to lay at the back as instructed, and stretched out where their antlers wouldn't poke anyone.

Toki nods. "Very good. I wonder though... Do I qualify as a large one?" She asks, glancing down at her massive, in her opinion, pregnancy swell.

"Not at all. I would say you’re the VIPMM instead." Tenebris grinned.

"Very Important Pregnant Monster Momma." The older brother translated with laugh.

"Very accurate." She chuckles softly. "Well... I can’t get settled with all this popcorn in my arms. So go ahead and nestle down and I'll pass it around, and then get Asgore and the kids down here before I settle in."
Once Stag was comfortable, Tenebris cupped his chin. "Seems all that we need is Asgore and the pups and we can start." He chuckled, before he looked towards the kitchen and back door, "Asgore! Children! Movie Night with a fort nest!" He called.

There wasn’t a stampede of feet from outside. It was a subdued sound as the door opened and the children filed in, followed by Asgore. The looks on their faces were somber and sad.

It would appear that Asgore had told the children about the loss of one of the pups.

Asgore had Solstice in his arms, and was keeping the emotionally sensitive skelemental baby happy. She was giggling gently and tugging on his beard as he shut the door and padded through the kitchen, his nose twitching as he picked up the smells of cooked popcorn.

The twins made a beeline over to their mother and latched onto her legs.

Toki didn’t have the spare hands to comfort them, at least not until Thumper hijacked a couple popcorn bowls from her. Once she had a hand to spare, she comforted the children gently with a tired croon.

"Sans," Asgore approached his son in law, and gently offered up Solstice, "Someone could use some cuddles. She doesn’t understand what’s wrong, but she’s trying to make it better. I explained it to Thumper and the twins."

"Thank you, Asgore." Cae took his daughter and cooed to her gently as he rubbed her back.

Tenebris took Thumper into his arms and nuzzled him gently as he began to gently purr to comfort him.

Thumper nuzzled him with a soft sniff, and then offered his bowl of popcorn up to him. "Here, Dad."

Asgore gave a soft grunt, and then settled down into the nest. As a horned member of the family, he had to sit at the back. The only horned one who sat at the front was Toki, since she was small, and her horns weren’t as in the way. “Alright- into the nest, before the sad strikes again. Everyone, get your popcorn so Toki can have arms to sit down with."

Once Asgore settled into place, followed by Tenebris at his side, Cae then climbed in before he grinned and pointed to two spots. "That’s your spot, Aliquam, and Toki sits between us. Then we let the kids take front row."

"Sounds easy enough." Aliquam chuckled softly as he made his way into the nest carefully, distributing some popcorn to free his wife’s arms before he got comfy. Once he was comfortable, he shifted and smiled up at Toki. "Come on Toki~"

Since everyone had their popcorn, she was left clutching just her bowl. She gave her husband a faint smile, and then carefully got down on all fours. She wriggled in with him and got comfortable. Well, as comfortable as she could- it only took her a few seconds before she had the twins on either side of her belly, snuggled up as they nibbled their popcorn. Honey’s horns poked at her, but she didn’t try to move her when they were super concerned.

“… Now who’s going to put on the movie?” Toki quirks a brow at them and chuckles softly.

At that, Cae chuckled, and like that, the brothers' pairs of eyes lit up.

Aliquam, with his precision and delicacy, was able to pick up the dvd they set beside the machine.
Caeruleus used his magic to find the remotes and bring them over, turning on both the TV and the DVD player as the disk went into the slot.

Toki watched the display of magic and gave a bemused laugh. "You both are adorable. So what movie did we decide on?" She asks, nestling back and nibbling a piece of her delicious mess.

"We went with this new movie that came out. Moana." Aliquam answered.

Cae leaned over and whispered in her ear. "We both know dad likes to hum along."

"Moana?" Toki blinks, and hides an instinctive snicker at the thought of Tenebris humming to Disney songs. "I think I remember commercials for it from before I was... Taken. It came out then?"

"Yeah, and its one heck of a movie." Cae laughed.

"Its very impressive and its ability to sway emotion is powerful."

She hummed and stuffed a handful of popcorn into her mouth. “Well, I suppose we’ll see.” She savored the flavors, and munched slowly. Toki wasn’t sure how much emotion she could handle, so she wasn’t sure what effects it would have on her- but she was willing to try. She mused softly to herself that it was... Well, frankly, very sweet of them to be pushing aside their own pains to try and help keep her from collapsing into her own. It was sweet and amazing- and it embodied everything that simply was monsterkind.

Honey glanced up at her mother’s popcorn, perhaps contemplating mooching some off her to save her own for later, and then did a double take. Her face scrunched up, and she looked positively disgusted. No mooching off Momma. “Momma, you’re eating gross again.”

“It’s only gross to you, my sweet honey.” Her secondary arms cuddled her daughter and son close to her sides as they nibbled their popcorn. “Mmm… Delicious.” She licked her teeth, and then munched another handful.

Tenebris on the other hand peered over and gave a soft ‘ooohhh’. "What do you have in that, Toki dear~?"

Toki glanced at him, and then at his gloved palms. There was no chance of him eating this slurry without staining those. Her fingers that were in the bowel were already a mess. “Oh, y’know. A bit of this, and a bit of that.” She shrugged lightly and settled back into her husband’s side. “Mayonnaise, ketchup, chocolate sauce, caramel… A few other things. It’s good.”

"It sounds tasty. Would you mind if I have a sample?" He leaned over with a sweet smile.

She eyed him. “… If you retch, aim elsewhere.” Papyrus did not enjoy getting a sudden surprise bite from what she was eating, and she’d gagged him more than once. She offered her bowl out to him all the same. “Also watch your gloves. You’ll stain them.”

He noted that and delicately reached into her bowl, taking a few pieces in his claws and making sure he had pinched the sides of the kernels that had nothing on them before he withdrew and popped them into his mouth, giving a low hum.

Honey made a dramatic sounding gag.

Skylar hid his face into Toki’s side, making a face. “Icky.”

Toki watched him, and munched another mouthful herself.
He chuckled and gave her a grin, "Not bad at all." He rumbled, though he didn’t seem to go for another bite.

“Riiight.” She rolled her eyes in good humor. She settled down, watching the sweet little human girl lusting for the ocean. Toki’s sockets half lidded and she let her skull loll down to rest on Aliquam’s shoulder. She lazily munched her popcorn, letting the bowl rest on her belly.

Every so often it would bounce, as one of the pups kicked and made the kernels inside bounce.

Aliquam brought a hand up to cradle her head as he gave a content sigh. "I love you~" He purred softly, "You're so perfect to me~"

“I love you too.” Toki mumbles gently. Her eyes end up closing as she finishes her popcorn faster than she thought she might. She licks her fingers clean, and then gets comfortable. “I’m not perfect, Pap. Not anything close. But I’m glad you think so.” She nuzzles him softly.

He smiled and gave her a few kisses as he hugged her to his side. "My beautiful wife~"

"Shhh!” Honey reached over her mother to pinch her daddy’s knee. "You're interrupting the songs!"

Toki smiled slightly and hummed, falling silent at her daughter’s demand. She mostly tuned out the movie, her sockets drifting closed. She felt Asgore's hand brush her back, and his magic flow into her as she listened to the music and the silly but earnest songs. The only one she didn't like was 'You're Welcome'.

Aliquam's hand that rested on her shoulder stayed comfortably planted, his magic flowing into her as well. Tenebris’ hand was not yet present, but surely enough it would show up eventually as he came to finish his popcorn.

Toki shifted as Tenebris touched her. She peeked open an eye, and lightly pinched one of his knuckles. "No more magic.” She tells him gently. "You already gave almost too much today.” He'd donated before they'd... Learned she'd lost one.

"Ouch. Is it wrong to at least make some sort of connection with the carrier of my children?” He murmured.

"Not at all. But I know you." She smoothed her fingers over his knuckle that she had pinched, her way of apologizing for the pain, and then guided his hand to her belly. One of the litter had the hiccups, and she was determined to let him feel before they stopped. "You go overboard. Its a trait you gave to your son." Her horn was affectionately bumped against Aliquam.

Tenebris decided that hiccups in the womb was absolutely the most precious thing. Tenebris cooed happily while Aliquam leaned and pecked the base of her horn

The twitching of her belly had him enraptured well enough. She closed her eyes again as she was kissed, and let her ecto flesh brighten. With the added magic from Caeruleus, alongside what Papyrus and Asgore were giving her, her belly was almost back to normal. It hadn't been this color, or even remotely close to this color, since they found out she was pregnant. A dark, sour part of her whispered that it was her negligence in getting magic from her pack that led the loss of one of the pups. She tucked her head into her husband's neck, and tried not to listen to it.

The day had been long and sour enough already. She didn't need to let her thoughts undermine the work that her family was doing to try not to let her fall into her dark thoughts.
Chapter 132

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Sometimes you just need someone to help you lift yourself up when things seem the darkest- sometimes immediate family works, sometimes it doesn’t. Sometimes you have to make that first step for yourself, before you can let others help you take the rest of them on the road to recovery. It’s okay to take however long you need to in order to recover from something traumatic- you can take a week to take your first step, you can take a month, a year, ten years- all that matters is that you make the steps to recover, and don’t let it consume you and drown out the person you were.

The first step is the hardest- the rest come easy.

Also, Silver is having some RL issues rn, so our writing has ground to a halt for the time being (on top of my hand being sore and messed up). We’ve got… Oh, I want to say 4-5 more weeks of chapters, so hopefully it can be resolved by then. If not, life situations come first, and we’ll have to wait for them to end. Thankfully, you’re all super patient with us, so thank you for that!

Also yes- this is a 'leave off' sort of chapter. It'll continue next chapter <:

A week passed in relative peace. Though it was peaceful, the atmosphere of the town itself seemed to settle into solemnity. Word had gotten out that a pup had been lost, because in a close knit community like theirs, nothing of great interest went untold for very long. As all monsters did, they mourned as one. Oddly enough, the one that let the news slip had been Thumper. Twitch had asked him why he was so upset, and he’d told her- and then it had spread across the grapevine. By the end of the school day, the whole school knew- and by the time school was out, all of their families knew.

The loss of a child was always something to be mourned, no matter how the child came to be.

In fact, near Toki’s… strangely fitting memorial- for she was not the same as she once was, and it was as if the old her had died, and the new Toki had been born from the husk of the old one- now housed a second gravestone. It was smaller by far, just a simple stone that had been planted in front. There was no name on it, but they all knew whom it was for.

It was to honor the lost child that she had carried.

Families brought over meals so that Toki and Papyrus wouldn’t have to cook, and offered to watch the children so they all had time to rest and heal. Grillby, Sans, Tenebris, and Asgore were also subject to gifts given, which left the four of them time to help Toki and Papyrus.

Toki would admit that she spent the majority of the week in… Well, depression would be the best apt word. She slept a lot, ate only really when prompted, and did her absolute best to care for her children when she could- or rather, when they weren’t being stolen away to give her time to ‘heal’- but she knew she wasn’t doing what she felt she really should be doing as a mother. She and Dear were trying to work through losing one, but it was hard. They weren’t even keeping them, but it was hard- the litter were still going to be family, and Toki felt like she had failed them. Between her haywire emotions and constantly changing body, Toki was struggling, and there wasn’t much she, or anyone else, could do about it.

She knew during the week she was worrying everyone. Everyone who stopped by made sure to top her up on magic. They were doing rotations with donations. Even Grillby was donating magic, opting with his mate to wait for conceiving until Toki had delivered the litter. It would likely be better for her brother in law’s stress levels at any rate. Among the rotations for donations, Toki was also having checkups every other day to make sure they were only seeing improvements on the remaining five, and not a significant loss in their growth or health.

So far, it was only positive. The positive didn’t stop the feeling of loss though, and the loss only drove her down.

She was even worrying the townsfolk. When they would pass by the window in the living room, often left open by Papyrus in the hopes that the fresh air would perk her up, they would see her laying on the couch, which was more of a central hub where everyone could check on her and less of a reclusive spot than her bedroom was.

She heard whispers of their fears- they feared she was falling. The humans didn’t understand, but her human and monster family knew what that was, and she was pretty sure they feared it too.

So, on the morning of the end of her ‘second trimester’, Toki hauled herself out of bed, deciding she needed to try and be better today than yesterday. She got up before Papyrus did, and she made breakfast and left it to keep warm with a single bee to keep it toasty and as a note that she had done it for them. She did the laundry, and got the house in order- which she hadn’t done in some time- and then she went outside of her own accord with a cup of piping hot tea, leaving her husband and children still sleeping.

Toki didn’t go far out into the dark chill of the early morning. She simply went out back to where her hives had used to be. She brought a chair with her, and simply sat, looking at the burned landscape and babbling river far behind. She leaned her head back, and quietly breathed in the noise of the village starting to rouse.

She would try today, she decided. Maybe go to Muffet’s bakery, buy something sweet for the children, and one of those adorable dinosaur bread-rolls she knew Papyrus secretly adored. Maybe she’d stop by at Grillby’s, get a burger and see how everyone was doing. Toki had been becoming more and more of a recluse even from her own people- and it wasn’t healthy. She knew it wasn’t. It was time, she mused, that she got back out there. Sitting in the house with her own thoughts and sympathetic or pitying glances wasn’t good for her. The worried looks would only do to stress her more.

Quietly, Toki rocked a little in the chair and hummed to the litter of beast children growing in her belly. She ruffled her scraggly mane, which had gone uncared for during her week in which she struggled, and rubbed her middle with one set of hands, letting her mind quietly go blank as she savored the sweet taste of her raspberry leaf tea.

A few faces had come and passed while she was in her little zone, but the first face to stop was the first face to greet her as she came out of her mind.

It was Caeruleus, a small grin on his face as he seemed to simply wait for her to come back into reality.

Toki was not unaware of the people coming and going. Any time they passed the threshold of her awareness, her beast would let her know, and all of her fur would ruffle up instinctively. It was when one of them didn’t leave her threshold that she finally decided to turn her attention away from her mind.

She glanced up, sipping her tea again as she spotted her brother in law. She gave a slow, languid blink, idly wondering how long she’d been outside. “Caeruleus.” She greets warmly as she lowers the rim of the mug from her teeth. She balances it on her belly, and tilts her head at him. “Good morning.” She smiles softly.

"Hey, saw you in Wake-Man's Dreamland... thought I’d come say hi after seeing how long it took you to realize I was here... three minutes by the way. Heh heh heh.” He gave a quiet chuckle, and then grinned at her. "Nice to see you up and about before Al."

“Yeah, I’ve been daydreaming for a while.” She chuckles softly. Her gaze slides up and down his frame and she makes a quiet hum. “It’s been a while since I’ve been up this early. I’ve been sleeping for a long time.” In more than one way. She hums softly. “I just hope he won’t be too upset. I left him a note of sorts along with breakfast.” He didn’t do well when she disappeared without a word, but if she’d have woken him, he’d have wanted to come with. Toki had just needed a few moments to herself.

"He'll be fine, he's a big boy." He chuckled. "Besides, it's good to get out on your own sometimes." He sighed and stretched. "I'm doing just that myself..."

“He’s got his traumas.” She admits softly. “When I’m not there when he wakes up, it makes him upset. It reminds him of when I was gone. When I’m up before him, I try to leave him notes. Sometimes it works, sometimes he comes looking for me in a panic. We’ll see what dice we roll this morning.” Toki shifts, and then motions him closer. She sips her tea again, and then exhales softly. The area that she’s seated in feels heavy and somber, almost like it misses the garden of flowers she used to have blooming for her apiary. She missed her bees. They’d died in the fire that had wiped out the village. It felt like so, so long ago... But to everyone else, it hadn’t even been a year. “It’s good to get out and get some time to yourself. Grillby’s a competent dad- he can handle one little skelemental all on his own.”

He was standing relaxed for the most part, his arms resting on his hips in a casual pose as he heard what she had to say. He chose not to comment about his brother- there was not much he could do about it. "Damn right he is. Man, am I lucky to have him..." He laughed. "Not only is he good at what he does, but he's so understanding when I tell him that things should wait for the pups. He's a valuable addition to the family." With this he stepped over and set a hand on her shoulder, giving a soft laugh as he spoke.

"He's an amazing man.” She surmises easily with a warm laugh. "Its easy to see why you fell for him. I got to know him quite well in the other world, and they were very much alike." Toki smiles softly into her tea. "Most monster men are everything a person could want in a man, honestly. The women probably are too, but... Well, I don't really look at them that way." She chuckles gently. Kon had found it to be true though. He and Lana were happy.

"To each their own." He rumbled lightly, before he nodded in agreement. "Tell you what, I’ve seen so many videos online about how human males can be. I can say this firmly. Once you go monster you never go back." He snickered.

She snorts the most bemused snort she's done in a long time and nearly inhaled her tea. "Well, you're not wrong. That’s not to say that humans aren’t bad either. They have their good parts, and I’m sure that a lot of people find sex wit them to be very, very pleasing. However, I don't think I could find sex with a human as satisfying as I do with a monster. Skeletons are versatile creatures. Our magic can make anything.” She idly wondered if she could get her husband to make a knot. She'd grown to enjoy Tenne's knot over time, though smaller scale would feel much nicer.
Cae chuckled at that. "And you sure have the first-hand experience of that, don’t you~" He teased.

She chuckles again. “Surprisingly no.” She gives him a lopsided grin. “Your brother is very tame in the sack compared to…” She coughed. “Ah, yeah. Anyways, about the most exciting thing I’ve discovered is that he enjoys boobs.” Was this going to traumatize Caeruleus a bit? Probably- no one wanted to know their little brother’s kinks. “I certainly don’t mind letting him play with mine.”

Contrary to her belief, Caeruleus grinned widely at hearing his brothers’ interests. "He never really did kick that little interest with boobs, did he?" He knew something and he totally wasn’t telling her. "Does he still have that avid fascination with braiding hair too?"

She squinted up at him. What did he know? “How long did you know he liked boobs?” She asks curiously. “And yes, yes he does. I wake up in the morning with braids, and sometimes he’ll just sit there and braid and unbraid my mane while we’re cuddling and watching television. It’s very relaxing. Why?"

"Since always. And I thought so. He had some interesting experimental times when we were a bit younger. It seems the most of them had stuck... I think he associates the braiding like doing a puzzle. It keeps his hands busy, and often his mind if there's something bothering him.”

She furrows her brow thoughtfully and nods. “Well, that explains a lot of it.” She exhales softly. “He’s usually got a lot on his mind. Particularly as of late.” He’d done a lot of braiding, and perhaps, she mused, it had been a comfort thing too. Toki made a soft noise and finished her tea. “Do you... Happen to know what else he likes?” She knew he thought her pregnancy was lovely.

"I think he got Pop's fatherly pride. He adores the idea of siring a litter. I've heard him go on tangents about pregnant bellies, how as long a woman is willing to bear it, how it makes her look ethereal with beauty... at first I thought he just had a preference for males and was trying to hide it." Sans hummed slightly.

Toki gives a soft nod. “He does give that vibe sometimes. I think he’s just more in touch with his feminine side.” She paused, and then flushed. “Good gracious. I suspected he had a kink for pregnancy, but... not that much. Do I want to know what he says to you about me?”

"A lot of its really high praise and about how much he adores you.”

“Oh yeah?" She tilts her head and flushes. “Jeeze, I can’t believe he gushes about me.”

"You're his wife and he spent six months thinking he was never gonna see you again. Getting you back more or less gave him back that energy he needed to be happy despite what's happened; of course he's going to gush.” Cae gave a laugh. "I'd let him go on tangents just to see him smile at the mere thought of you.”

She gives a soft smile. “Yeah... It’s good to see him happy.” She sighed and looked up at the sky. “You know... He and I made a promise to each other. We promised that we’d always come back to each other. It took me two years... Well, two years on my end,” she murmurs, “but I did it. I came home. I honored my promise to him. It... it makes me happy to know that he’s happy with me as I am.”

"And that makes you the most important being to him. You fought the void itself to keep your promise.”

Toki smiled at him. “I fought...” Ultimately it broke her, and they all knew it. “I’m glad he’s happy. I’m just happy to be home with all of you. I... I missed you all so much.”
"We missed you too, Toki." He smiled and leaned down to pull her into a firm hug. "We all did, and we ain't lettin' ya go now that we got you back."

Toki hugged him back with two of her arms, moving to make sure the empty mug didn't get squished between her and him. "Good. I'm sorry I scared you all there this last week." She murmurs. "I'm gonna try and not... Wallow as much. It doesn't help anyone, really." So long as she was careful while she was out and about, she and the pups would be fine.

"Sounds good. Hey, if you want, Grillby and I can make sure to bring you out more. Have you considered pup-school for the children?" He suggested. "We could see about helping you find something to do in town. It'll be easy on you but it'll get you out of the house."

"So long as it's not sitting at the bar, that would work." She murmurs. "I was considering just taking a book and the kids to... Well, the new park, so they could enjoy themselves while I kept my mind busy." Toki made a soft confused sound. "Pup-school? You mean pre-school? I didn't know one was up in the town." It was still massively under construction, so she honestly had no idea what was available and what wasn't. "Who runs it? Toriel?"

"Yep. And Fuku helps. They host it in the park when the weather's nice." He answered. "It would help the twins meet the other children in the town more often, and it gets you and Aliquam a solid four hours of time for yourselves."

Toki considered it. She felt a little bit like it was cheating. She hadn’t exactly been the most stellar of mother during this pregnancy. Exhaustion and her beast had made her grumpy and reclusive, and her recent bout of depression had made it hard to get up to care for anything… Still, this wasn’t about her feelings though. This was about what her children needed. Pre-school would help them get adjusted to more social contact than just family, and the occasional kids they ran into at the park. They’d form lasting friendships within the community, and hopefully pave their way for the future.

Toki nodded. “I think I’d like to send them to the pre-school. It’s not so much for me and Pap to have free time either, though it would let me clean the house without little ones getting underfoot. They need the experience in social interaction, learning and playing with other kids. They’re already pretty mature for their age. At least Skylar is.” Honey still laughed every time the cats would fart and scare themselves. Her daughter was… Something special, sometimes. “What did you have in mind for us to do in town? There’s not much to do yet.”

She hadn’t even been back all that long. It still wasn’t finished being constructed. There was talk of things being added though. A bowling alley, an arcade… a bunch of other things too. The village was really on it’s way to becoming a small city with every monster now on the surface.

"Have you had any coffee yet?" Cae asked. He gestured for her to follow him as he took a few steps away from her. "If not, we could go see about having some while we talk."

Toki gave a soft grunt, and hefted herself out of her chair. She glanced at it, and at the emptiness around it. Well, she supposed she could come back and get it later. “I haven’t… really been participating in drinking coffee this week.” She says softly. She’d drank coffee a good portion of the pregnancy- not a lot, but still some. She’d avoided it completely during her first, and nothing bad had happened, but the time she indulged is the time something bad happened. Who knew the true cause, but she didn’t want to bring about any more possible issues. “I wouldn’t mind some more tea though. Home-brewed? Or should be stop by the house to get my wallet so we can go to Muffet’s and see what she’s got for sale drink-wise?”

"Sure, Muffet's sounds good." He gave her a light grin and rested his hands on his hips. "But I'm payin. Get your shoes and let's go, yeah?"
Toki glanced down, unable to see her feet. She wiggled her toes, and realized she could feel the sparse bits of grass trying to make a come-back. “Oh.” She blinks, bamboozled. “I… I forgot my shoes. I was so lost in my thoughts that I forgot my shoes. Oh goodness.” She chuckles. “Alright. Wait for me on the deck- I’ll be right back.” Toki cradles her empty mug, and waddles back towards the house. She makes her way into the house, slipping into the kitchen so she could go rinse her cup and put it into the sink for later. She needed to go get her sneakers… and she’d need help tying them too, but she could sweet talk her brother in law to do that.

As if she didn't need another thing to worry about, there was a soft hum from the doorway before slow footsteps approached behind her. "You going out?" It was a sleepy Aliquam.

Was he even awake? His eyes were barely opened as he lumped on her and wrapped his arms around her.

Toki grunted with a bemused sound as he practically slumped on her, his cane clacking against the counter next to her. “Mm… I was already out.” She says softly. “But yes. Your brother is taking me out for tea at Muffet’s.” She nuzzles him gently. “Did I wake you coming back in?”

"No..." He answered, his warm arms daring to try and lure her back to bed, though his head seemed to think otherwise as he lowered them to rest his hands on her stomach. "Had to get up." He then smiled. "Have fun, darling~" He then cooed.

No doubt her word of his brother put his sleepy mind at ease, rather than jumpstarting himself to worry over her like he normally would.

She smiled softly. “I’ll try.” She turned her skull, momentarily thankful for having no skin along her neck, and then gave him a soft kiss along his jaw. Her mane ruffled softly. The litter inside her shifted, and his hands were blessed with multitudes of kicks. “I made breakfast for you and the kids- I can bring you back a coffee if you’d like?” She lifts a hand to cradle his jaw. “You look like you need more sleep, sweetheart.”

"Could... kinda wish I had you by me... but y'know... Go have fun~" He cooed gently. "Don’t worry bout bringing back nothin’..." He grumbled, before he sighed and nuzzled his face into her mane, taking in her scent shamelessly as his hands caressed her abdomen with adoration. "I love you." He cooed softly, "Every last one of you..."

Toki sometimes wondered if her husband regretted offering the pups to his father and Asgore. But, she knew it was ultimately for the best. Toki gave him a soft hum, and nuzzled him. She twisted her magic in her bones, and called forth Stripe. Toki felt a small twinge on her magic in doing so, and felt a little light headed given she hadn’t eaten anything that morning, but ultimately could keep up two small bees. “I know Stripe isn’t as good of a snuggler as I am, but surely she can keep you company.” She cradled the bee in her hands, and offered her over her shoulder to him. "We love you too, Pap. We love you a lot. Me, and all of your… siblings.” It was weird sometimes to think that she was carrying his siblings- both in blood, and by adoption.

And immediately he gave a tired but thrilled squeal and gently took the queen bee into his hand, nuzzling her with a sweet hum. "Good~ Go have your fun with my brother. I’ll be out later after I get a few more hours of rest." He purred, pecking her one last time before he slowly made his way back upstairs with Stripe.

Toki watched him go and shook her head. She gave him a tired but loving smile, and then waddled for her shoes. She toed them on, and then carefully hobbled outside with her laces still loose. She had no idea where her slip-on shoes were. She waved to Caeruleus. “I got your brother back to bed.” She says. “I gave him Stripe to cuddle. I’m going to need something to eat though. Using magic to summon more than one bee makes me really dizzy. Also... could I ask you to help me tie my shoes? I can't see my feet."

"Consider them tied." He chuckled, kneeling down as his hands went out of view under her stomach. There was a bit of ruffling around her feet before her shoes tightened and he gave a 'ah' of satisfaction. "Ta-da." He hummed softly.

Toki gave him a beam and a pat to the head. "Thank you. As much as I like slip on shoes, they don’t have the support I need with this belly." She pats her middle, and is kicked for her efforts. "So… To Muffet's?"

"To Muffet's." He agreed, stepping down the stairs before offering her a hand, grinning sweetly.

She took his hand, letting him help her down. She let him go, and then gave him a lopsided grin, before waddling around the house towards the road.

Cae was right behind her, wearing his usual grin. "You're peppy this morning. It's a good look for you."

"I'm trying." Toki says lightly. "I'm trying not to wallow and feel like I'm drowning anymore. I'm sure you know what it feels like. I was there once before- in the other world- where I wanted to give up. I'm pretty sure that was the closest to falling that a human soul can come." She muses. "I was thinner than Papa was after he'd been taken by Simmons and his organization. I had just... laid down and just stopped. My magic wouldn't let me die, though I didn't want to eat, I wasn't hungry, and all I really did was sleep and explore- until Tenne found me working part time for Grillby and worked to get me healthy again. I don't want to be there again- so I'm not going to let myself fall there. I'm going to try to be better. If I have to fake it until I make it, then that's what I'll do." A fake smile could go a long ways. Eventually, she'd start to feel what she was faking.

"Hardships are always a nightmare... But at least they give you a goal of self-improvement over anything else. After everything we went through, I can't imagine having to let it sink in, and then everything else you were dealing with."

"To be honest, when my attempts to come home failed, I was done." She admits. "I lay in a dark hole for weeks upon weeks with no sustenance and let myself waste away as... Perhaps punishment for my failure to keep my promise to Pap. When it didn't work, I picked myself back up and trudged onwards." She trips over a loose cobble, and her wings buzz to keep her steady. She might be too heavy to fly, but she can keep herself upright most times. "But, enough sad talk. Dwelling doesn't help." She couldn't change what happened, or the lost pup. So she would just have to deal. "So, you were thinking activities? With the town under construction, I wasn't aware there was much going on besides the occasional back-alley poker game."

He reached out to catch her before she fell but as she caught herself he backed up once more. "Nothing wrong with a little back alley poker." He laughed lightly. "Well, I think Lana would like the idea of a few more hands, word around the grapevine she's preparing something for the kids that go to the nearby schools"

"... You do know I'm not artistically inclined, right?" She glances at him with a frown. "I can't sew. Well, I can sew stitches in flesh, but not fabric. Any idea what she's preparing?"

"Gloves and scarves, hats, I think it's less sewing and more knitting." He laughed softly. "I saw her get this large delivery of wool not too long ago."

"A sheep monster getting a large delivery of wool is kind of funny." Toki snickers. She looks contemplative as she waddles along, her pace slowing down so she can walk beside him. She’s a little winded from her almost-speed-waddling earlier. “I don’t know how to knit or crochet. Well, I don’t know how to crochet very well. I used to know how to do basic stuff, but the best I could do was knit really, really lopsided hats. I think your dad and your brother still have one.” She muses. “I could learn though, I suppose. It sounds like it’s a relaxing habit.”

He slowed his pace as to help her keep up easier while chuckling at the mental image of how the delivery would have looked if he stuck around. "I’m pretty sure she'd teach anyone who was willing to help." He mentioned.

“I suppose it wouldn’t be bad.” She mused softly. “It would give me something to do to keep my hands busy. Maybe I could get Papyrus in on it too. He likes tricky things- he’ll probably be better at it than me.” She could see her much beloved husband becoming one of those crafty people who sold handmade things on Etsy. He was good with his hands, and more creative than he thought. Toki was only good with words and writing them.

"He has so much downtime now so I could imagine him doing that, heh!"

Toki hums. “I try to keep him busy,” She says, “and encourage him to try new things and not limit himself. Just because his leg is like it is doesn’t mean that he can’t do things. If he wants to go run a marathon, he can do it- he just has to take his time and do it carefully. He’s not defined by his disability. Sometimes, though, I think it gets to him that he can’t do the things he used to. Like tote me up the stairs for the hell of it.”

"He never accepted defeat quietly. He loves you too much to kick that habit." Cae chuckled lightly.

"He did it once when he was in heat. Carried me, that is. Pretty sure it was a feat of horniness to impress even me." She chuckles quietly.

"Well pops always did way we were born with breeding champion bloodlines, in his words, 'the best damn mating instincts to offer'... But I bet he didn't expect me to end up the carrier rather than the sire like he and Pap." He laughed.

She snorts. "Well, some things do differ and each child is different. But yes. Beasts are... Champion breeders, I suppose." It was, she mused, only their primitive mindsets that likely wiped out the species. Dear still didn’t really understand what a car was, other than a comfortable nest. "Personally, I hope next time Papyrus and I have a baby, it's just a single. I mean, I love the idea of hoards of children, but when you've got to push them out and they can have horns..." She grimaced a bit. "At least I've got birthing hips though."

"That is very true, but I'm not sure if there's any genetics left in you to offer the chance of a single child..." Cae cringed a little himself. “The whole change from human to monster, and then two entire trips through the void... I can only wonder if your DNA has even maintained its double helix form.”

"Honestly I don't know. Papa hasn't wanted to do any tests after the soul goop incident and my subsequent pregnancy." Which she understood. The litter of... Five... was much more fragile than a set of twins was. "Maybe after, when the litter is grown and they're all settled in. If not, I'll ask Alphys." Tenebris usually did all of Toki's testing, but Toki could go to other monsters if she wanted. "I prefer to know what I'm made from than not made from, you know?"

"I'm sure he's just doing everything in order to make sure nothing goes wrong, but yeah, worst case scenario, Alphys knows her stuff.” Cae nodded in agreement. "I'll be able to help out too. I worked in the lab for a while so I know enough to make myself useful, so you might have to deal with my ugly mug a little but at least it'll be a familiar face." He teased.
"You're hardly ugly." She elbowed him lightly with two of her arms. "If anything, I'm the one in the family who looks the worst." Her face was enough to scare little children. Well, human ones. Monsters were more or less used to each other looking strange, outlandish, and a little scary sometimes. "You worked in a lab?" She blinked. "Somehow that doesn't surprise me from what I got to learn of Kai." She mumbles tightly. "Heh. Minus the tail, I got to see you as a kid. Well, sort of. If you were anything in personality to the one I got to know, you were an adorable, chubby cheeked little sass master." She informs him cheekily.

"I still have a tail." He chuckled. "It's just not as long as his came out to be. I've got a stumpy tail."

"I did not notice a tail when I was down there trying to deliver Solstice." She arches her brows. "And I saw everything. Everything. Which is way more than I wanted to see of my brother in law." She snorts. "So it must be a tiny stumpy tail indeed. Unless you're talking about your dick... In which case, shame on you."

"..." That had him stop as he gave her a deadpan look. "How dare. I've got a great dick!"

"Whatever you have to say to help you sleep at night." She laughs heartily. "I've seen the dick of a you in another world," She taps a clawed finger against her skull to emphasize she'd seen it in one of her world traveling dreams, "and I was not impressed. But, I can say for sure that dick size changes world to world. Pap here is smaller than in one of the other worlds. Like... a lot smaller. But, big dicks aren't everything. Too big hurts." She informs him matter of fact tone. Tenne had bordered on too big. His knot had been too big- particularly since she'd been of a flesh and bone body, not of an ecto-flesh body, which had much more give and play to it than legitimate blood-pumping muscle did. Speaking of things in general... Toki was surprised to find herself settling back into the ease of teasing her brother in law. How long had it been since they'd just sat around and teased the hell out of each other? Too long. She gave him a wicked grin. "I'm sure your stumpy little tail is enough for Grillby."

He bristled at her. "I'm not too big either. I like to think I'm perfect where I am, thank you." He grumbled as he followed, sulking behind her as he walked.

“I’m glad you’re confident in yourself.” She chuckles softly. She shifts, and itches lightly at her belly. The nipples under her shirt were growing- and despite what Tenebris said, they were starting to puff up with little mounds. It reminded her of a cat getting ready to nurse. “Confidence is everything.”

"And don’t you forget that either!" He huffed as he walked.

Toki giggled at his huffiness, and elbowed him gently. “Don’t get too huffy, or you’ll have people thinking you’ve got tail envy.” She teased.

He ‘oof’ed at her, and rubbed where he got elbowed.

“I didn’t elbow you that hard, you big ham.” She rolls her eye lights in her sockets. Toki sighs softly, and deflates some. She could see Muffet’s coming up.

He pouted at her, and then he looked up at Muffet's. "Ah, here we are." He rumbled with a smile.

“Mhm.” She hums softly. “I’m eager for something to eat, and maybe some different tea. Or a chocolate drink, if she’s got good ones. I don’t really eat a lot of Muffet’s, to be honest.” Toki mostly did her own home-cooked meals.

"Her stuff is pretty rich so small doses are called for."
“I remember that. Except for her bread rolls. Her bread is pretty good in normal bread doses.” She chuckles.

"I could eat her bread rolls forever..." he agreed with a blissful sound.

She waddles to the door, and grunts as it swings open, and the wolf monster barging out nearly flattens her. She covers her belly instinctively, and keeps the litter from being jostled.

Wolfen blinks at her. “Ah- pardon me, Miss Toki. I didn’t see you there.” He gives her a friendly smile, and then steps aside, holding the door open for her and Caeruleus to go inside. “It’s good to see you out and about getting sweets.”

“I figured it was time to claw out of my den.” She gives him a wry smile. “My sweet brother here decided to help urge me out and about.”

Caeruleus grinned up at Wolfen. "Good to see you out of yours, 'Fen. How's the missus?"

“Bo’s doing good. So is little Howl.” Wolfen gave him a lopsided smile. “Bo’s been getting on him about his grades. He’s riding the low C’s, and doesn’t seem interested in picking up on them.”

“It takes time.” Toki chuckles. “Children will have their times that they struggle, and their times that they don’t. Just keep supporting and encouraging him.”

"He’ll get there soon enough. Howl's the pup of two geniuses after all." Cae laughed.

Wolfen barked a booming laugh. “Hardly!” He cackled. “Bo, maybe, but my grades were hardly better than his. I only pulled through at the end of school because you needed at least a B’ average to become a guard.”

"I'm kinda thankful for that. While Pap was still young, I worried if I’d be able to help get him through school. His passion to be a royal guard got him out with low A’s." Cae reminisced with a soft laugh. "I just hope it's that easy again with Solstice."

“And you guys are making me feel bad. I was scattered across the board as far as grades go.” Toki blinked. “I mean… I had A’s in some classes, but in others a lot lower. I failed a couple too. Steady grades weren’t my thing. I aced writing, as you can guess, and biology.”

"Still something at least, yeah?” Cae chuckled.

“I guess.” She chuckles. “I mean… I didn’t do much with them. I went on to become a writer and a beekeeper, and a semi-sort of part time politician. Not really anything to brag about.” She glances to Wolfen, smiles, and then waddles inside. “Anyways, it was good to see you, Wolfen. I’m going to go find a seat- there’s a line, and my back is sore.”

“You too, Miss Toki. Take care.” He nods to her, and then looks to Caeruleus once he’s sure she’s hopefully out of hearing range. “She looks better today. Many were afraid she would fall. It would not be the first time a mother that lost a child in the womb would have fallen. It is a terrible feeling.”

"It takes a lot more than that to take Tokiko Nara Gaster down." Cae pat Wolfen's shoulder with a laugh. "She's one tough Mama."

"That she is." Wolfen gave him a smile. "From the time she saved our children from the fire whilst dying from the sickness, I knew she was a tough woman. But tough mother's need help too. Try to perk her up some, yeah?"
"'S why I asked her out. She was lost in space when I walked up to her." He chuckled. "Alright, I'm gonna go get in line, I'll catch you later."

Wolfen gave him a nod and a wave and let him in.

Toki had found a seat, and was, oddly enough, being attended to at her seat. Muffet was known for good service, but still usually required monsters to go to the counter for their orders and services. Given that none of the customers were pitching a fit, it was likely that it was because she was out and about, and it was Muffet's way of showing her concern and happiness that Toki was out and about.

Toki had a rather antsy and excited group of spiders skittering around her heels as she looked over a menu. There was a second menu across from her. Muffin was pressed against her side, getting soft pets and rubs with two of her hands. The odd looking spider-pastry beast was making happy chirring sounds.

Toki looked up as Sans entered and waved at him. She was keeping very still so she didn't hurt any of the spiders. "Over here!" She calls.

He carefully shuffle-stepped his way over, gently nudging through the spiders rather than risk stepping on them. Once he made it to his seat, he made sure it was clear before he sat down and smiled at them all. "Hey there guys. Is business good?" He greeted the table spiders gently.

Muffin gave Sans a greeting bark, and rolled over for belly rubs.

The spiders skittered, and there was a soft hissing sound from the collective, not unlike a specific dialect of insectis.

Toki tilted her head. "I understood that." She blinks, perplexed. Weird. Bug lingo must have been universal. "Business has been good." She supplies her brother in law. "They are constantly selling to the workers. Well, the construction workers brave enough to come in."

Sans carefully reached over and gave the spider-muffin a soft pet, before he grinned. "You realize how cool that is that you can understand them?" He mentioned with a laugh, before he looked down at the spiders again. "Well it's good to hear you've made progress to some extent. Muffet come up with anything else for her menu that we should know about~?" He gave the spiders an eyebrow waggle.

The spiders gave an excited sounding concentrated burst of noise. Several of them skittered off to go share the news to Muffet that Toki could speak spider.

Toki watched them go and hummed. "Well, I think it's just magic spiders. I certainly can't talk to the house spiders when I'm trying to gently shoo them out of the corners of places they could get hurt. It would make it much easier if I could." She muses. She listens to the chatter, and tries to discern what they're all excitedly babbling. "Something about new kinds of spider cider? Apple and many other fruits, sparkling, adult-cider, and pumpkin-spider-cider?" She casts him a questioning look, and briefly startles when a spider crawls onto her hand.

It moves onto the menu, and motions for her to flip the page.

She does, and then it dances along a page of new things.

"There is also a new page of spider-inspired French cuisine." She adds, having apparently not caught onto the part about pastries. "The crepes look good."

"Ooooh, cider and crepes, that sounds like a fun mix." Cae grinned. "Do they have lists of flavors?"
He asked.

"Yep." She nods. She motions to his menu in front of him, but reads them off anyways. Well, the crepes anyway. She'd already listed the cider. "Lets see... You've got original crepes. Strawberry, chocolate, raspberry, Bavarian cream, banana cream, and what looks like a chocolate dipped one?"

"Good stuff." He opened his menu and took a look at the list. "You could always rely on Muffet to come up with the good stuff." He laughed.

"Very true." She laughs heartily "She's one hell of a baker. Though..." She blinked and peered at the menu. "Huh. I had heard that she'd adapted a version of my honey tarts after I'd disappeared, but I never really looked for them. I guess it's true. Think they're good?"

"Not as good as yours, I'm guessing." He joked. "Wanna try it?"

"Hmm... Sure. How could sweet honey over a simple bite sized cake be bad?" She queried lightly. "There's no way, really. I think I'll get the four cakes, and... Maybe the Apple cider."

"Ill take two, and a chocolate strawberry crepe, and sparkling black cherry cider please." Cae requested as well.

The spider on Toki's menu waved its legs at them both, and then sprang from the menu, bouncing to the table and skittering rapidly from it down to the floor.

The mass of spiders along the floor moved up, and collected their menus from them. They moved more like ants, sharing the burden of the weight between them so they could carry it.

Toki watched them go and arched her brows. "Wow. They're talented little things."

"These spiders are amazing, no other way to look at it." Cae agreed.

"Indeed. It's like a less sassy and much smaller version of my bee swarm." Toki hums.

"These guys have been in the business for years now, a regular song and dance for them now. Your bees are an independent swarm, they do whatever they want and only you could stop them"

"Very true." She rolls her eye lights. "They're not completely slave to my will either. Stripe gives me plenty of sass when I summon her to do something, or if she thinks I'm being stubborn and stupid. I get a lot of sass. The only one who doesn't sass me is my wingless hyperactive puppy-hornet. She just pesters for cuddles or to play with her."

"Well someone had to be the voice of buzzing reason." He joked. "Sugar on the other hand is the sweetest thing, but a bit gullible." He cackled quietly.

"Very true." Toki nods. "She's a bundle of energy. Sweet energy, but energy all the same. She's still learning and growing though."

"Yeah, speaking of..." He rubbed his head. "Do you think she has a chance of her wings growing back?" He asked.

She shakes her head. "I don't know how time works for them there, since I spent two years in the other world but it was only six months here. But, I think it's safe to say that they won't be growing back. At least not any time soon. She gets along with her disability though."

"Please tell me she's figured out the six-legged gallop, I need to see that." He immediately put his hands together like he was begging.

She snorts softly. “She can, but it generally isn’t as fast as when she puts all six legs into motion. When she’s bouncing around, she looks like a moderately murderous jackrabbit, to be honest. You’ll have to challenge her to a race someday and watch her chase you.” Toki quirked a brow at him challengingly. “It can be a little intimidating. She’s very fast.”

"That’s mildly terrifying." Cae snorted, before he gave another laugh. "Just don’t let her make the same faces that Clover makes while she's doing that high-speed thing, otherwise she's gonna give someone a heart attack."

"Clover is a grouch." Toki agrees, affection for her summons plain in her voice. "Do you know that Clover terrified your dad's other self?"

"I'm not surprised, you said that this took place like... Pre-Core? That’s hundreds of years ago, Tokes. He must not have been much older than me."

"He was like, three hundred and... Seventy or something." She shrugs. "He was young. Your alternate and brother were young." She says softly, keeping her voice low so she didn't bother the other patrons. Or alarm them. "He couldn't manifest more than a skull for summoning. But, no one could do full body summons beside myself. The power level in the underground was... Staggeringly low compared to the world here."

"Sounds about right. The strongest of the warriors had all died out, the genetics got thinned something awful. Pops and Asgore were kinda the odd ones out." Cae sighed as he scratched his jaw in thought.

"No." She shakes her head. "I mean even them. They were... Frighteningly fragile." She stresses.

"Yikes..." Cae made a face.

"Yeah. His health wasn't even close to what Papa has here.” She winced. "I think that world as a whole was simply... Less powerful. It gave me a new perspective on life though, and let me do a few good things with the power I had."

"How hard was it for you with... you know..." He trailed off as he looked away for a moment. "That... little voice in your head..."

"... Hard at first." She admits. "Cruelty got better. I'd like to say that we were... Some what influenced by each other. You'll find that I'm actually a challenge to play in a poker game now." Toki could lie with the best of them, and her bluffing was just as good. "Cruelty started off has horrible, but began to get easier to deal with. When Cruelty made the conscious choice to become Sequoia and change, that's when the biggest shift came. She was making strides on her own to be a better person. She was very, very broken. Her soul was so cracked and scarred that I dont know how she was functioning even as she was. She was healing... And eventually, it became a comfort to have someone else who remembered home." By home, she meant here.

"I bet you being a good heart helped her out a bit huh? Like counter-corruption." He chuckled. "If anyone could have helped the soul of cruelty, it was you."

Toki nods. She went quiet for a moment; simply watching the spiders scuttle too and fro as they worked. “I miss her.” She admits. “I got used to having three presences in my head. Dear and I talk, but Dear is not… as good of a conversationalist as Sequoia was. I’m glad she got her body, but… sometimes I miss having someone who could take the reins for a bit while I got some rest.”
He nodded slowly in understanding, before he sighed. "Yeah... Little voices in your head are no good... But sometimes they have good shit to say."

She snorts. "Not necessarily good." She chuckles. "Sequoia was... She was sarcastic and snarky. And very, very salty. A lot of what she had to say was full of sass." She supplies lightly. She pauses, and grunts as she’s kicked sharply, rubbing her belly to soothe away the sharp jab that came from a leg inherited from the pup’s father.

Muffet approached, giving them both a smile as she balanced their orders on two trays. "Four honey cakes and an apple spider cider for Toki. Here you are dearie!" She set the tray gingerly in front of the pregnant hornet, and then moved to set Sans’ down in front of him as well. "Two honey cakes, one chocolate covered strawberry crepe, and a black cherry spider cider. Will that be all for you both today?"

Toki gave the spider woman a warm look. "I think so, yes. At least for now. Thank you." She nods. "It looks delicious."

"Looks fantastic, Muffet. Thanks a lot." Cae grinned at the spider monster. "I'll let you know if I want seconds."

"Of course." Muffet nods. "If you need anything, simply speak with my spiders, and they’ll relay your orders to me. When you’re ready to leave, they’ll bring your bill."

Toki nods and gives her a smile. "Of course. Thank you." She picks up her first cake when Muffet returns to the kitchen, and then takes a bite. "Mm... It’s very good."

"Yeah because you can actually do that, Toki." Cae laughed, before he took one of his cakes in hand as well. He took a bite and made an appreciative sound. "Mmh. Not bad at all."

"Indeed!" Toki hums. She nibbles her cake for a bit, before sipping some cider. The apple cider is fantastic, and she decides she might get one to go. She’s big and generally uncomfortable, so she is entitled to enjoying a treat every once in a while. If she wants two ciders, then she’s going to have two ciders in one day.

She sips her cider again as she and her brother in law eat their treats, and then looks across to him. Her brows furrow in thought. "Sans... Thank you." She says softly. "For taking me out for a breakfast treat. And just... getting me out. It’s more of a step than I would have taken on my own. So... thank you. I needed it after last week... I’m sure you all needed it too, after... dealing with me ‘looking like I was falling’, to use the other people’s words."

"Hey, no little sister of mine is gonna wallow if I got something to say about it." He wiped his mouth, and then gave her a smile. "We’re Gasters. We’re a pack; you’re stuck with us now. And if you ever feel like that again, you come get me, and I’ll take you for a carrier’s day out."

"Carrier’s day out?" It was a much more gender neutral term than mothers day out. But who’s to say that mother and father had to be gender specific? "I like that idea." Toki smiles softly. "I can’t say that I won’t feel like that again, brother. I’m struggling right now not to feel like that." She admits. "But keeping busy, and keeping my mind busy is helping. So... thank you." She gets comfortable in her chair with a soft sigh. "Speaking of carrier’s days... The one thing I do miss about having flesh... She wondered if he’d notice she didn’t say ‘being human’, "is that spa days are much less effective. You can’t get a pedicure if all you’ve got are bones to file and massage. I wonder if ectoflesh would work though... If it does, it’s a pity there’s not a spa being built in the village. That would be fabulous."
"Pedicure and Manicure are old news. Ever had a nice boiling soak? Little bit of the right mix and your bones just feel so clean afterwards~" He sighed happily.

“I have, actually!” Toki snorts into her goodies. “You forget, I’ve got fire magic, and I tend to leak magic out gradually as I just kinda… exist. Sort of like a helium balloon, I guess. Anyway, on my heat, I fell asleep in an ice cold tub, woke up to Papy panicking ‘cause I’d boiled away most of the water.”

“What? No! You didn’t tell me that before!” He laughed.

“It’s true!” She grins. “I’m sure he must have thought I’d turn myself into skeleton soup or something. It was actually during my first heat, when I made your Dad-”
Toki and her brother in law spent the majority of the early morning together, relaxing in Muffet’s café and bakery while they talked and just spent time reminiscing over things long past. Toki didn’t have her phone on her, and neither did Sans. They ended up having to leave closer to noon when Toki got wind of Papyrus wondering where she was, and likewise Solstice wanting the attention of her mother.

Sometimes, it paid to live in a town where everyone knew everyone. Everyone always knew everyone’s business, and that meant that news spread from one end to the other before you knew it. So, Toki knew she was being looked for without needing a phone, and her brother in all but blood and marrow knew that his baby girl needed his motherly love. Likewise, it had it’s drawbacks- everyone in town also knew she was out and about today, and either walked on eggshells around her, or called to her with happy tidings that they were glad to see she wasn’t falling. There was no in-between, minus the warm business like manner that Muffet treated them with when she brought them items in person.

Closer to noon, Toki got her last apple cider- she’d said fuck it, and this was her fourth one instead of her second one- and then stood with the help of her brother in law. Then, the two of them began the slow walk back through town, with Toki cradling her massive to-go mug of apple cider.

“You don’t have to walk me home if you don’t want to, Sans.” Toki says gently to him as they walk arm in arm. Well, he walks with his usual slouch and grace, while she waddles. “I know Solstice wants you- our little ones should come first, yours included. She probably just needs some mommy snuggles- she’s at that age where it’s important to get them.” Toki had missed a lot of them. She could only hope that the love that she gave to them prior had been enough and hadn’t stunted anything that could show up as they got older.

“She’s already fussy.” He chuckles. “A few more minutes won’t kill her. Besides, it’s good for her to get space from me too, and learn to socialize and be more dependant on her dad.” He makes a soft hum. “Mmm… this morning was fantastic, though. I was happy to get to try her newer stuff, and it was healthy for you to get your outing too”

“It’s good that she’s used getting more socialization.” Toki hummed. “It’s good for her.” The pregnant skeleton wondered how hard it had been on her children when she had just suddenly up and disappeared from their lives and the soul bonds. ”Breakfast was indeed good." She nods. "I enjoyed it a lot too. It was good food, and good company... And it was good for my health. Mentally, at least. Probably not so good physically to drink so many servings of hot apple cider." She chortles in good humor.

"At least you don’t have a fleshy bladder anymore, so that's not gonna end up being an issue, eh?” He chuckled.
"True." She snorts. "More than one reason to be glad for that though. One baby is bad with bladders. Two is worse. Si- five would be even worse. I can't imagine that. It would suck so, so bad."

"Agreed." He gave a weak laugh at catching her near slip up. Moments later, he sighed and reached up to rub his chest. "Okay, little miss must be hungry or something. She's really sparking at Grillby now- very fussy-fussy." He murmured. As his gaze moved up, he made a soft noise. "Ah... Ahead of them was Tenebris. "Hey, you wouldn't mind the baton pass if he's not doing anything, would ya?"

"Well, we were told that she was fussing for you." Toki says pointedly. "She probably wants cuddles and her liquid rations." Toki hooks two of her hands into her lower back as she nods, following his gaze to Tenebris. "I can walk home alone if he's busy. I am an adult." She chimes gently.

Sans chuckled lightly. "Alright, alright." He then gave her a soft hug. "I'll talk to you later then. Don't go running back for more ciders either, you hear me~?" He teased.

Toki hugged him back, making sure not to spill her last cider as she did so. "But what if I want more?" She pouts at him lightly. "Its super yummy and makes me and the pups happy." She teases gently. "Speaking of... Go tend to your little one." She let him go and stepped away, giving him a lopsided smile. Turning, she waddled towards home, not intending to go bother Tenebris on her waddle home.

"Muffet will take all your money if you're not careful." He managed to press a kiss to her forehead before she wandered off. "See ya~ oh, heya pops."

"Sans." Tenebris greeted him with a rumble before he padded up to Toki and rumbled in greeting, walking around her to move to her side, a small smile on his face. "Good morning, Toki."

Toki stopped her waddle mid step, silently sighing behind her teeth. She gave him a smile as he circled around her to the same side his son had occupied prior, and gave him a warm twitch of her wings. "Good afternoon, Papa." Toki greets warmly. "I'm just heading home. I heard Papyrus was looking for me." Probably just to make sure she was alright since he couldn't text her without her phone. He did worry, understandably so- she was only just starting to recover, and she physically still looked like a mess. At least her mane did.

"I see... if you will have me, I indeed would like to walk you home." He offered. "Not as an escort, but simply as your Papa."

"Sure, Papa." Toki offered him one of her primary arms. "I don't mind if you want to walk me home- so long as I'm not interrupting anything, of course."

"On the contrary... I was just looking for you." He answered gently. "I woke up this morning and felt compelled to seek the company of the mother who carries my pups for me."

“Oh?” She blinks at him, perplexed. She leans into his arm, and continues waddling home with him at hand. “Huh... Is... your beast influencing it, maybe? It might be a beast thing.”

He nodded. "I agree." He murmured gently, before he rumbled. "I hope you do not mind."

“Mm…” She hums. “Not really. I’m... trying to recover. So being alone isn’t helping. If you want to spend time, then you’re welcome to.”

"I'm thankful you think so." He smiled lightly and took a deep breath, as if it had been the first deep one all day. "How are you feeling? Better? If Sans had you out and about I’d wager you're at least a “I’m… trying.” She says, considering her words. “I’m not… better. But wallowing in pity isn’t going to bring the… the baby back, and isn’t going to do any good for my health, or any good for the remaining five.” She leans her head against his shoulder, and takes a sip of her apple cider. “Being out helped.” She admits. “It helped a lot. It took my mind off of things, and I think it took his mind off of them too. Keeping busy is… going to help me more than just sitting at home and dwelling.”

“I’m going to re-learn to knit or crochet from Lana, I think.” She muses. “Something to occupy my hands and my thoughts. I used to know how to crochet, but I wasn’t very good at it.” She recalls when he’d popped in on her attempting to crochet, and the utter fail that had been. Of course, that’s when she’d been on crutches after he’d broken her leg…

Heavens above.

That felt like a lifetime ago.

He wrapped his arm around her shoulders and started a gentle rumble deep in his chest to comfort and soothe her. "What happened isn’t your fault." He murmured. "However, I do agree. The lessons from Lana will do you some good. You will have plenty of models for what you make." He joked.

"Whether or not the loss is my fault, it still feels like it. You can't just turn off your feelings." Toki says. The rumble is soothing though, and she listens to it with a soft, content sigh. She loved when either he or Papyrus rumbled. Sans too. It was like a bunch of big cats purring. "Yeah- though I don't think I can use your feet to model baby socks." She jokes lightly. "They're a bit big."

He nodded in understanding, before he grinned as he gently squeezed her shoulders. "Not my feet; I know they're too big. I meant the pups.” He laughed lightly.

Toki grunts as he squeezes her gently, and flicks her wings to remind him to keep being gentle. He's a big man, with strong arms, and she squishes easy when she's not hardening her defenses. All the same, she snorts. "I don't think I can use the twins to measure for the pups, Papa." She cocks a brow. "Their feet are entirely different. Like... I've seen the shapes of the feet that have kicked out on my belly, and they're definitely paws. They're also your legs." Papyrus had once joked to her about her being glad that the twins hadn't inherited Tenebris' legs recessively... And, well, she's definitely glad the twins hadn’t been like these ones. The kicks can sometimes be downright uncomfortable.

"It means they will become great runners." He rumbled happily, tail flicking with his delight at the thought. "We will easily trek to the ends of our territory like the swift pack we are." He sounded really proud about that.

"Great runners when they're bigger, yes. For now, they're just kicking my insides into mush." She snorts at his fatherly pride. Her snort stirs up the litter, and she sighs as they batter her. She's glad she doesn't have traditional organs. "I wonder if any of them will fly." She muses. They were hers too, after all.

"If they do, then we will rule the skies as well." He saw her stomach shifting in the wake of the wriggling and writhing of the litter, and he cooed as he stepped in front of her to kneel down and press his face on her bump. "Hello babies~"

Toki can't help grunting as he stops the both of them right in the middle of the sidewalk so he can kneel down and press his face to her belly. "Papa," Toki huffs in good humor, "I've got to get home and see what my husband needed and reassured him I haven't disappeared again. You can cuddle the litter there once I’ve checked in, you silly old man. As for ruling the skies, well, yes. I suppose I'll need to teach them to fly, won't I?"

He looked up at her with a slightly sulky look, but quickly returned to her side instead of blocking her path, rumbling as he walked with her down the sidewalk. "Oh, indeed. If they inherit my father's wings, they will be able to fly like the great avian packs of the mountain."

"I don’t think they’ll be able to fly like birds, but they’ll be able to fly like bugs. You haven’t really gotten to see me seriously fly, Tenebris. I’m actually quite nimble." She glances at him and cocks a brow at his pout. "I’m honestly not sure how I’m supposed to deliver wings anyway. I had trouble with the horns Honey has." There was the good chance they could run into complications during labor- she’d probably be delivering horns and wings. Ugh. That wasn’t fun to think about.

"They’re going to be my children, so honestly I am going to be happy regardless of how they come out. They’re the best thing I could have ever asked for, and I find myself thinking of ways that I hope to repay you, but you’re giving me something that... It's truly without compare." He murmured honestly.

"Children often are.” She replies lightly. “I know there’s going to be a massive age gap between the pups and your older sons, but... well, family is family, and they’re going to be loved regardless. They’ll also grow up with their nieces and nephews.” She chimes. “Also, Papa? I don’t need to be repaid. I never need to be repaid. Children are priceless, you silly old man.” She nudges him with her horn, and hopes she didn’t just tear his coat. Her horns are sharp.

Her home looms just around the corner. The fireplace was pluming out smoke, making her wonder if Papyrus had started up a fire, or if Stripe had gotten sleepy and decided to sleep in the remnants of the logs from the previous night.

"Your heart is so generous. I really am the luckiest Papa in the universe.” He rumbled happily, though he had stopped fast as he saw the smoke, his eyes widening as his tail rattled behind him. It rattled only for a moment as she waddled a few paces ahead. He shook his head and growled to himself before he returned to Toki’s side, rattling quietly. "They've lit the fireplace..."

Toki had been a bit befuddled by his sudden stop. Tenebris didn’t usually act like that around smoke and fire- that was a reaction Toki would have had before they had worked her through her trauma over the fire. “Papyrus usually says he’s lucky too, but Honestly, I think I’m the lucky one. You guys are the ones who put up with all the danger I brought into the family.” She hummed. “And yeah- I’m figuring either he got cold, the kids got cold, or Stripe decided it was nap time. The bees can sometimes light stuff on fire when they’re sleeping on a flammable surface, so it’s easier just to let them nest in the fireplace. Though... it’s not really a cold day.” She sighs. “The house is going to be sweltering when we get inside. Well, I’m going to have to find the fans.”

"Mmhm..." He took a slow breath as he walked. "Perhaps I will wait outside until it's aired out a little.”

“It’s probably not going to be too hot to you,” She rolled her eye lights, “but I have a literal oven growing from my breasts to my hips, on top of fire magic. I get a little over warm. But if you want to linger outside, you can.”

He blinked, and then cleared his throat. "I'll... I'll be fine." He murmured.

“If you’re sure.” She glances at him again, a curious glint to her eye lights. He was acting a bit odd today- more than odd, honestly.

As they made their way up to the house, Toki huffed and hauled herself up the stairs. Stairs sucked, and would always suck once one got to the point where they had a large belly in their pregnancy.

At the top, Toki didn’t bother knocking. She opened the door, and stepped inside, leaving Tenebris to follow. Toeing off her shoes, Toki waddled for the living room to see about opening some windows. It was, to her, stifling. To anyone else, it was at most, comfortably warm in the house.

“Papyrus?” She calls. “I’m home. I’ve got a guest as well.” She hums, leaning down to slide the windows in the living room open. The fresh air felt like heaven, and it helped to keep her mind clear and light. Getting out had done her a lot of good.

"In the kitchen." Was Papyrus's reply, "Watch out! Wet floor!"

"Wet floor?" Toki queried. She opened more windows, and then waddled for the kitchen. She didn't step inside of the kitchen, instead poking her head in and peering at the glimmering, wet tiles. "Did you mop?" She asks.

"Yes I did." He answered as he gave a proud smile. "I noticed you were out so I thought I’d clean up a little while you were out.”

Toki gave him a lopsided and warm smile. “You must have been out of it this morning if you ‘noticed I was out’.” She teased gently. Definitely out of it, since she’d sent him back to bed with Stripe after he’d cuddled her in the kitchen. “The kitchen looks lovely, sweetheart. Thank you.” She looked at the wet floor, however, and pondered that she couldn’t safely cross it to do anything productive in the kitchen. So, Toki turned around and fanned out her wings, before buzzing them to work to dry the floor. Bees dried their wings by doing this, and she was large enough to act as a living fan for drying the floor.

Once the floor wasn’t completely slick, she carefully tip-toed across it, and gingerly set her cider on the counter. “Are the kids in the back yard?” She couldn’t hear them in the house, so they were either outside, or Undyne had stolen them for ‘practice’.

She and Alphys wanted kids, but were both a bit… terrified of actually having kids. So far they were adjusting by babysitting.

"I remember getting up this morning but I can’t remember much else.” He admitted with a quiet laugh, before he came closer, nodding gently at her question. "Undyne wanted to borrow them for the day. She said something about Alphys having something she wanted to try.” He wrapped his arms around her with a hum, before looking up at Tenebris. At first he thought all was normal, but then he took a look at the taller monster’s eyes. "Sire."

"Hello, Papyrus."

Toki wasn’t sure what to make of the terse greeting Tenebris and her husband exchanged. She glanced at them, brows furrowed for a moment. “Well, you were quite tired this morning.” She chimes gently. “Very out of it. Anyways, it’s good that Undyne and Alphys are practicing. They keep saying they want their own kids, but they keep him-hawing…” She shakes her head in good humor.

Her eye lights flit back and forth between them as she leans into Papyrus, fluffing up her mane and nuzzling him gently. She rubs her belly with one hand as she scoops up her cider to have another sip, before setting it back down. “So… Are you two alright?”

The beast rumbled quietly. Then, he chuckled and his form shook lightly. When it stopped, his eyes were sharper, and his crown was now growing out of his head a bit, his quills poking out behind his "Indeed so." Papyrus nuzzled her, and then looked up at Tenebris, or rather, at Papa. "It just seems you didn't pick up Father like you thought you did."

Toki startled as Tenebris- or perhaps, Papa- began to sprout his crown and his features began to sharpen and turn more beastly. “A-ah.” She blinked. “I didn’t notice. But, my mind hasn’t been… as sharp as it usually is.” She explains. Pregnancy brain on top of depression meant she missed things she didn’t usually miss. He also hadn’t… Well, spoken in any different voice. Papa spoke through Tenebris’ voice, and she hadn’t been able to tell the difference. It was… alarming. She wondered if Dear and Sentinel could to that too. “Well… hello, Papa. Erm… I suppose it’s you who wanted to spend time around me today then, hm?” He’d felt compelled to seek the ‘mother who carried his pups’, so she figured she’d have him in her mane all day.

"Tenebris and I both were looking forward to it, however he was a little exhausted this morning so I went ahead and took over." He rumbled, scratching the turtleneck lightly over his neck. "I am pleased that I fooled you... I have been learning." He admitted proudly.

“So you have.” She nods. “Though… you’re not quite perfect yet. There was something off about you. I couldn’t put my finger on it, but there was something off.” Toki watches him itch at the turtleneck, and feels her mane fluff up lightly in response. Toki didn’t often wear them anymore for that exact reason. Speaking of her mane… Her mane was a mess. A week of not taking care of it had left the luscious green mass with knots beyond belief. She wasn’t sure if she could get them out, to be frank.

Her mane may need to be cut- sadly so. She hadn’t cut it since she had started to grow one. She loved her long mane, but it was probably too long. “You did good though, all the same.” She nods. “Anyways… What did you want to do today? I’m… sure you’re aware that I haven’t exactly been up to par as of late, so I’m not all that sure what I’ll be up to doing, but… Anything to keep my mind occupied, I suppose.”

"I suppose I’ve ideas for either scenario. Will you be staying in today like you’ve been, or will you go out again?" He asked, resting his hands on his hips as he tilted his head.

Toki ground her teeth lightly in thought. “Honestly… If I go outside again, I need to do something with my mane first. I didn’t really pay attention earlier this morning before I went out, but… my mane is a mess.” She says. “It’s… It’s not gross, because I have been washing it, but it’s tangled and knotted. I haven’t brushed it since… we found out. I kinda lost myself for a while.” She admits sheepishly. The pregnant skeleton beast shrugs uncomfortably. “I may need help detangling the knots, or I’m going to have to cut my mane to get them out.”

She’s not sure who that sentence would devastate more- her husband, with his absolute love of her hair, or Papa, and the beastly belief that a full and healthy mane is the sign of a good alpha. Or… something like that. She’s not exactly sure.

Both had their reactions, but Papyrus acted first and tutted at her. "Now, now, let's not jump to last resorts. I'm sure we can get those knots out easily, and then I'll braid them again so they don't tangle up." He chuckled.

"Normally... A fully preened mane is more impressive than braids... But if it is easier for you, Tokiko..." Papa rumbled quietly, scratching his neck again before he scowled. "Mine cannot grow quickly enough." He huffed.

"If you think you can detangle it, then go ahead. If I don't have to cut it, I don't want to, but the snaiggles and snares I have are appalling." Toki hums. She glances to Papa and lifts a brow. "For the most part, I wear my mane loose. I enjoy it being messed with though, so it's quite relaxing when Papyrus braids it for me. I never mind. Though… Papa, your mane might never grow to be what it could have been if you hadn't gone diddling in the void. You may have to learn to be happy with what you have. What you have now does look very nice on you, if a little scraggly. A bit of grooming up, and you'd be good to go. Anyways… I can go out again once I get my mane fixed, but there’s not much to do besides visit Muffet’s again, or go spend time at the bar. And… really, I don’t want to go hang out at Grillby’s.” The smell of alcohol bothered her a bit. The grease was fine, but the alcohol stung her nose and made her queasy. “Unless there’s something you’d rather do inside…?”

Papa rumbled quietly and reached up to scratch his scruffy mane again while Papyrus went to get her hairbrush.

"Meet me in the front room and I’ll get started on your hair, Toki.” Her husband purred.

“Of course.” Toki nods to him and smiles. She collects her cider, and waddles for the living room, carefully picking her way through carefully set up cities formed from her children’s toys. She slips into a spot on the couch, leaving Papa to make himself at home, and then sets her drink on the table as she gets comfortable and makes space for Papyrus to come get seated.

Expectantly enough, Papa followed her and sat down on the other side of the couch, watching her quietly. Though his stare was unnervingly unrelenting.

Toki could feel her tangled mane starting to bristle a bit as he just… stared at her. He wasn’t even blinking. She wasn’t sure what he was doing, or why he was staring at her, and Dear was leaving dealing with him up to her at the moment, so she couldn’t even ask her opinion. “Er… you know, you don’t have to sit that far away.” She says awkwardly. They were a fairly cuddly family. Tenebris usually sat close- they were all pretty used to it by now.

He tilted his head, and then rumbled quietly as he inched closer, stopping after a few scooches.

"Alright.” Was then the voice of Papyrus as he made his way to the couch, smiling as he held the brush up, though he stopped as he noticed the un-breaking gaze between Papa and Toki and he slowly cleared his throat. "Am I… interrupting something?” He asked softly.

“An… impromptu staring contest, I think. Or perhaps a dominancy contest.” Toki chimes, lifting a hand to wave it at Papyrus. She doesn’t feel the need to back down, and shrugs, visibly dismissing her gaze from the unnerving stare of Papa. “I’m not sure. I’d say it was maybe a contest to see who could hold out from blinking, but I think I’d win. I don’t have eyelids or eyeballs that need moistening. Come, sit- there’s plenty of space for all three of us on the couch.”

Papyrus took a spot behind her and started brushing out her mangled fur.

At that point was when Papa suddenly shifted from sitting up like they were, to laying like a lion sprawling among his pride, his form now close to hers. "How did you mean... for my mane...?” He asked.

“What?” Toki glanced down at him as he pressed closer. Her fingers twitched, and she rubbed her belly lightly as she leaned back into Papyrus’ grasp, her eyes fluttering a bit. She winced as some of the knots were yanked out. “You mean, for styling it? Well… I mean, if you trimmed off the dead ends, it’s likely to encourage more growth. It’s possible that it won’t ever fully grow back again though, so you might just need to pick a style that you like, and grow it that way, instead of going for the full dandelion look.”
He rumbled quietly as he looked up at her, before he huffed and set his head down as he thought about it with Tenebris.

Toki rolled her eyes at his huffiness, and reached a hand out to ruffle his little scraggly tufts of mane. “Tell Tenebris to look up different hairstyles. Like… Sideburns and other shit.” She says lightly. “Mmm… Ouch. Try grasping the hair above the knot, Pap. It’ll make it less tender when you’re working it out.”

As she extended her hand and scratched through the fur, Papa gave a pleased groan and reared back to encourage her continuance, his head craning back as a deep purr came from him.

Papyrus gave a soft laugh at the sight of the old beast getting scratches, but he had followed Toki’s advice and gently gripped the hair above the knotted fur and brushed it out against his palm, a happy hum leaving him as he did.

It was very nostalgic for her. Toki shifted, and her hand slid through his mane to all the little nooks and crannies that she knew he loved. She wondered if Asgore even knew about these locations. In response to both her husband's hands in her hair, and the purring beast slowly wriggling towards her already full lap, Toki found a soft purring noise buzzing out from her chest.

Papa was in a blissful state as he half kneaded the couch under him, his eyes barely open as her claws went to work on his neck

Toki was bemused. The beast pressed against her lap was warm and fairly adorable. She gave his mane more scritches, her claws being gentle so she didn't puncture his skin.

The knots in her mane came out quickly under her husband's guiding hands. Soon, layers upon layers of silky mane were laying flat, and a pile of broken, knotted hairs had been gently pulled out and set on the arm of the couch.

Free and soft, Toki's mane bristled up reflexively at the new freedom, and buried her husband in soft green dandelion fluff.

Papyrus gave a 'ah!' at the sudden overwhelming of emerald fluff but laughed and gently ran his fingers through them for a moment to admire before he shifted gears and started braiding her hair with impressive stride.

"What style of braids are we doing today?" Toki asks, as had become her usual fashion when he was braiding with gusto. Most of the time it was dread braids, but sometimes he experimented. She'd worn it in a fishbone braid once, and that had been pretty.

"I've got a running braid I want to try." Papyrus answered, starting on one section of her fluff.

"Oh?" She hums. "M'kay. I'm sure it will look beautiful." She chirps to him. Her fingers idly start to play with Papa's mane, and she starts to work small braids into it. Having four hands is fabulous. She can braid and give him pets all at once.

Papa hadn't a care in the world, purring as her pets continued. He didn't even notice her second pair of hands going to work in his thinner mane. Papyrus on the other hand was amused to watch her when he didn't have to peek at his own work.

Toki was a sassy little lady, but she didn’t do Papa wrong. She Braided his mane just right, so that he’d look at least somewhat decent. She hummed softly, and leaned back into Papyrus once she finished braiding what sparse hairs there were for her to braid. Since she didn’t want to disturb her braiding, she stopped her scritching, and instead settled for simply petting the top of his head.
Papa sighed happily as he looked up at her, smiling gently. Papa was a happy beast as he looked up at her, "Thank you~" He cooed softly.

Toki quirked her teeth into a lopsided grin at him. "I’m glad you’ve relaxed, Papa. You were awfully tense when you met me outside." She boops the space where his nose would be, and then hums as she lets him pillow his head on her thigh. The litter in her belly shifts, and kicks against the head invading her lap.

He rattled quietly, but smiled as he rested his head in her lap. He gave a happy coo as the pups acted up and he leaned his head up, grooming her ecto-swell with a louder purr.

Toki blinked as his tongue lathed against her shirt, making it ride up and no doubt staining it with his black ichor-like saliva. "… You’re staining my shirt." She tells him lightly as he grooms her belly and motors at her.

Clothes are for the domesticated, Papa grumbled to himself. He gave another grumble amongst his motoring but continued his grooming, his hands kneading against her thighs as he groomed.

Toki couldn’t stop the soft squeak that left her as his grooming slid her shirt the rest of the way up, making it rest under her breasts. She slid her hands to it, and tried to tug it down so he didn’t end up… well, grooming her growing teats. Dry and itchy they may be, she didn’t want them groomed by her father in law’s beast. Nope. Just… No. “Papa,” She huffs, “you’re a menace.” She tells him, no venom in her voice.

He grinned up at her before he rattled sweetly, nuzzling her before he settled down with his head against her stomach, his crown resting against the swell to take in all the baby kicks.

Toki exhaled and relaxed once he stopped licking her swollen stomach. She was too sensitive for him to be doing that- she’d be letting off all sorts of scents and that would make things waaaaay awkward. The litter were kicking and shifting though, woken and stirred by the rumbling purr of their technical sire pressing against their home. “Look at that.” She muses, looking at her writhing belly. It was so… weird to watch- like a bunch of aliens under her flesh. “You woke them up.”

He purred happily in reply and softly nosed her stomach, chirping and cooing as he rested his head on her stomach.

She grunted as he shifted closer now to rest his head on her stomach, semi-sort of pinning her in place as he nosed at her, chirping and cooing all the while. She leaned back while he was occupied, and glanced back at her husband. “… My stomach is being vigorously loved on.”

"Indeed it is, look at how happy he is. What a silly old man." Papyrus chuckled quietly,

"Indeed. Glad he stopped licking though. My… teats…” She flushed a bit, feeling incredibly awkward about voicing them like that, “are very sensitive and I don’t really want them groomed. That’s just… No.”

"That’s my job~" Papyrus felt proud of himself for that.

Toki paused, mouth open and about to say something. Then, she found she had no words at all. "... What?" She blinks finally and turns as best she can without disturbing his braiding so she can give him an owlish look. Had he just said what she thought he said?

"Nyeh heh heh heh!" Papyrus laughed as she found herself speechless.

"Did you just..." Toki stared. Then she pouted at him. "Teasing isn’t nice, love. Don't tease about things you won't do." She puffs smoky air at him, and then gently rolls her skull back down to look at Papa. She bet Tenebris would be mortified about Papa nearly grooming her teats. Though...

Given that the old man had tasted her breast milk not even an hour after it came in, part of her doubted it. Beasts had absolutely no body shame, and part of that stemmed from just who they were at their core. She didn't either, really, not after everything that she had been through, but she had to draw some boundary lines.

"I’m not teasing you." Papyrus leaned around her mane and pressed a loving kiss gently to her cheek. "I love you. And once Papa takes his leave…" He purred as he slid a hand around her and rubbed it over her stomach.

Toki blushed at the insinuation, and giggled very quietly. Her teeth parted again as she inhaled, going to purr something no-doubt salacious right back to him, when she was interrupted by a throaty purr turning into a hissing growl.

Papa leered at the hand on Toki’s belly, and cast a glance at his son. He rattled a growl again, crown lifting on his head as his mane bristled. Unbeknownst to him, his mane was a silly string of well placed braids, so all that stiffened was a bunch of little braids. He looked quite silly, until one saw the sharp teeth that would very easily nip his son’s hand. It was his time with his unborn pups- he didn’t get time with them nearly enough. His older son could wait his turn.

Toki tensed, instinctively wary of such sharp teeth being bared against her soft, gravid belly.

Rather than growl back, Papyrus hugged Toki and rattled quietly. "Papa, quit your growling... You're scaring Toki."

Papa’s gaze sharpened and flicked up to Toki’s face, and how tense the mother wedged between them was. He cut his growling rapidly, but managed one terse sounding word for his son. “Mine.” He says flatly.

Toki’s not sure what to make of it, and her fingers tighten a bit over Papyrus’s femur. Not the bad one, thankfully.

"Your puppies. My Mate. And you're frightening her. She wont let you see the puppies if you scare her too much." He told him stiffly, his bones stiffening and quills starting to appear and rise a little bit to bristle at Papa. "Be nice to my mate." He growled quietly.

“My pups.” Papa rumbled. He closed his eyes and seemed to huff. “Mine. Don’t… get to see them often.” His main personality didn’t like to share them with him either. He glanced at the hands now hugging Toki’s chest, where they had been on Toki’s belly earlier. “Don’t want to share. Sorry I scared you.”

“It’s alright.” Toki grimaced gently. This was between them though- if it got out of hand, she’d tell them both to kindly shove it, and go elsewhere.

Her husband settled down, and then rattled before he nuzzled Toki. "I love you." He murmured.

Toki gave him an appreciative nuzzle. "I love you too." She says gently. Her arms all fold up around her ribs. "Is my mane finished?” She asks, to chase away the last of the lingering tension in the air.

"Yes. Tell me what you think?” Papyrus admired his work as he settled his hands around her chest.

Toki’s smaller set of hands slid up. Her secondary arms were dainty enough not to mess up his work. Her fingers roved over it gingerly, but ultimately... Toki was pretty sure she looked better in something that wasn't the utility braid for horses. She wasn't going to tell him that though. "Its great, love." She tells him with false earnestness, thankful for once for her new skill at lying that she had gotten from Sequoia. White lies wouldn't hurt his feelings, and she didn't want to hurt them.
"Where'd you get the idea from?"

"I... Saw it on this one TV show for working horses... I don't think it works for circular manes..." He murmured, taking a moment to eye her critically.

Papa glanced up and grunted against her belly. "No. It does not look good."

She flicked his forehead, making Papa snort at her in displeasure. "Don't be an ass." She huffs. "I'm sure it looks fine. Circular manes are just hard to braid and style."

"Ill fix it later; its fine for now..." He murmured, nuzzling her quietly.

"Not fitting an alpha..." The alpha cuddling her belly huffed slightly. "It would be more distinguished at full length."

"You can leave it be until tonight when I take it out to sleep." Toki hums, and nuzzles him back warmly. She contemplates flicking Papa again, but it doesn't really do much good.

Papyrus was at least happy he could snuggle his wife without Papa getting huffy, and he gave her a small nuzzle as he gave another soft apology for the mane.

“It’s fine, Papy, really.” She nuzzles him gently. “If it bothers you, you can fix it whenever you like. You know I don’t mind you styling my mane. People know you’re the one who does it for me when I go out and about.” They’d also know he was the one who put this style on her- but she’d wear it with pride if it made him smile.

He donned a surprised look, then smiled and hugged her again. "That's good to know~ I best start learning more patterns then. Who knows, maybe Honey will grow some fluff too." He laughed quietly.

Toki gave him a bemused smile, and laced her primary hands with his. “I’d definitely love more patterns. As for Honey… I don’t think so. Remember, she was born before I was a beast- her and Skylar both. Any children we have now will be more beast than our oldest ones will be.” She says gently. “I’m not even sure what ratio of beast and skeleton I even am, to be honest… Papa- Er, Tenebris technically, hasn’t wanted to do testing while I’m pregnant. Maybe after… I don’t like not knowing what I am.”

"There's been a lot of that on TV more recently. Send in a vial of your saliva and they'll dissect your DNA down to the very country you had an ancestor in." He chuckled. "It's interesting that it's become so popular more recently. You think Father will do that for you once you've had the pups?"

"Well, I know my ancestors. Somewhere down the line, a skeleton got jiggy with my ancestor, and that's how I became an HTM." She snorts. "I just want to know what the make up of my body is. I don't look half skeleton, half beast." She didn't look like Papyrus, for all the similarities they shared. She looked more beast than they did, and with her crocodilian teeth and horns and claws, she mused that she always had looked more beastly.

Papyrus laughed at that. "'Get Jiggy'. That's hilarious." He chuckled quietly, before he looked down at her. "The void probably caused some changes to your DNA when no one was looking." He suggested.

“Either that, or when I was half-possessed by Cruelty.” Toki hummed. “If you remember, my bones were reforming almost as fast as they were breaking down. But I’m willing to bet you’re right. The void did some hinky things to me.” She sighs. “Why else would I melt into goo when my soul is too far away?” She considered if maybe that incident had destabilized one of the little souls in her belly, but didn’t press too far. They were distracting her, after all. “I was a full beast before, so I know it did do a lot of things to me. It just reversed a few of them. Left the arms, the wings, the fluff, and the different horns. I miss my old horns. I don’t like these ones.” Toki wasn’t fond of the ram-like horns.
She just… She didn’t like them.

“They’re big enough to counter mate’s horns.” Papa rumbled quietly.

Toki hummed. “They are big enough to take on Asgore.” She does agree with that. “But, they’re very close to my skull, even if they do curl outwards some. It’s not nearly as much as Asgore’s do.”
She pats his head gently. “Though why you’d compare them to your mates horns, I don’t really know, Papa.”

He snorted softly in defiance before he stretched and yawned widely.

She taps the space between his eyes where his nose should be. “I’m not going to challenge him, if that’s what you’re thinking. I know where I sit in the pack. I think.” She’s actually not sure. “…
Actually, where do I sit in the pack structure?” Was she alpha female? Beta? How could she be alpha female if she wasn’t mated to the alpha male? She wasn’t sure.

"Your mind-mate is a vicious female..." Papa answered, before he slunk off of Toki's lap to curl up on the end of the couch, yawning widely. "She holds high in respect, but not higher than Alpha Beast and mate." He snorted.

Toki opened her mouth to reply- it didn’t bother her not to be alpha, truly- when Dear practically lurched to a halt in her mind. The beast fought to have her words heard, and Toki hissed gently, lifting a hand to clutch her skull. “While I don’t have an issue not being an Alpha, Dear… Dear has an issue with that.” Toki replies, grimacing a bit. “She says she is the only mature alpha female in the hive- er, Pack, that’s currently reproducing, therefore she’s the Alpha. She’s… Quite adamant about that.”

Papa sneered and rattled at that. "She would have to fight for the title. I am Alpha, I have been Alpha for a long time. She would also need to fight Mate." He sneered.

Toki grimaced as her braided mane bristled up under Dear’s direction. She tried to smooth it down with her hands. Toki knew who would win if it came down to a fight, and she didn’t want to bring it to that. “Perhaps,” Toki says gently, “It might be… safer for your health and for Asgore’s health if I were to split off from the pack? I don’t want to hurt you. Dear will. You know the power I wield, Papa- you’ve seen it in Tenebris’ memories, have you not? I don’t want to hurt you or Asgore, and that’s what would happen if a dominance battle happened.” She glanced back at Papyrus with a concerned look. She didn’t want to make him split from his birth pack, but perhaps she may have to formally split from the pack in order for Asgore and Tenebris to… well, be safe.

Dear was not nice, as they had all come to learn. Toki’s beast was vicious and unrelenting.

"Do not be foolish." Papa growled. "You are a valuable member of the pack."

“And any good member of a pack would know that the safety and health of its members is paramount.” She counters. “Particularly with those of an alpha like mindset, but no actual urges to be an alpha.” Toki could maybe consider herself… something outside the pack structure. A beta is not fitting. Dear was an alpha, but Toki didn’t know what she was. “And I know that a dominancy spat between Dear and you, or Dear and Asgore is going to end up with someone either dusted or in the hospital. She’s not a nice beast, Papa. I know you remember the things she’s said- she’s twice as sharp with her claws as she is with her tongue. I don’t want either of you hurt- and I don’t want to hurt my mate by making him watch my body fight his sire and his father in law.”

Papa rattled quietly in thought, and then he rumbled. "An Alpha mind paired with an Omega. As the doctor would say, it's quite a marvel." He chuckled as he looked at her. "It certainly sings why you care so much."

"Omega?" Toki questioned curiously. "Is that what I'm classified as?" She blinks. "And I care... Just because I do. I love you all and I don't want you hurt, and I know I can hurt you. I could hurt you all so easily that it's not even funny. I don't want to though." Her brow furrows. "How does one leave a pack? Do I just say I'm leaving? Or is there a ceremony we need to do? I can live on my own pack wise." It just meant she couldn't participate in pack things with them- cuddling, nesting, or the like.

Papa rattled sourly before he leaned and plopped onto her lap again, "You don't" he growled softly, nuzzling her again with gentle consideration for the remaining pups growing in her belly. He was not daft- he knew she had lost one, and he would be extra gentle with them. "You are family. You are Clan."

"And family does what is best for family." Toki insists gently, grunting as he flops on her. Her skin hardens briefly, her magic rushing to reinforce her pregnant belly in worry for the fragile young within her. Once he settles, her skin softens again. "Papyrus." She looks back at her husband, exasperated. "You can tell me how to leave a pack, right? It's not like I'm not going to still let them adopt the pups when they're born, but I'd be separate, and there would be no reason for Dear and Papa to fight. Or Dear and Asgore."

Papyrus whined quietly, and wrapped his arms around her, giving her a squeeze. "No... Don't want you to..." Was spoken into her neck.

"Papy..." She sighed. "I would be leaving the pack. But I wouldn't be leaving you." She lifted a hand to smooth it over his skull. "I'd still be living here, I'd still be your Toki, your mate, your wife... I just wouldn't be pack. I couldn't ask you to leave with me, my love." Though Dear was rationalizing that all young alphas eventually started their own packs anyway, Toki wasn't having it. He was close with his family. She had been surprised when he'd moved out to live with her, honestly. She couldn't ask him to do this too.

"My queen..." Papyrus's tone shifted as he hissed quietly. "My mate...

Papa's eyes opened for a moment before they closed again, "Hello, Sentinel."

Toki stirred for just a moment as she realized she now had two beasts to contend with. "Sentinel." She soothes her hand gently over his skull as he hisses into her braided mane. "It's good to see you out, my love." She greets him warmly. "Are you aware of what conversation we were having?" She queries, wondering if he might answer her question for her.

He nodded solemnly. "Speak of leaving... Breaking the clan..."

"Only me." She says gently, adapting rapidly to his terminology. "You were a clan before me, and you would be a clan without me. But, I wouldn't be gone, gone. I would still be mated to you, I would still be here, be living with you, be married to you... But I would just be a little solo queen bee." She reasons gently. "I don't want to fight your sire. The way things are going, Dear and him will fight, or Dear and Asgore will, and it will be bad either way. I don't want to see them hurt. Do you?" She asks him gently.
Papyrus looked at her, then sighed and nuzzled her again. "Queen cannot be alone... no guardians..." He murmured.

"I don't need a guardian. I'll have a husband who loves me, and that's enough for me." She shifts and rotates her skull around so she can kiss him. "I love you. I'm not going to make you leave your birth-pack just because you married a woman with a very aggressively dominant beast."

The aggression did make sense though. For all that Toki was fluffy like a honey bee, she had looked frighteningly similar to her hell hornets. Hornets were not known for being friendly insects. Toki had been chased by them before. Unpleasant little creatures. Sugar was an exception in her friendliness.

He tilted his head, and then huffed and he nuzzled her, his lips pressing against her as the beast immediately took what he knew of kisses to give her one. "Birth-pack will be fine without me."

Toki blinked, and even Dear seemed taken aback. "... Are you sure?" She asks against his teeth, glancing down to the alpha still curled around her belly. "I mean... You were raised there. It was difficult for you both to move out with me at first. Are... Are you and Papyrus sure?"

"I am ready. Is time to grow." Sentinel nodded, smiling into his mate's shoulder. "Is time to grow new pack."

"You want to split with me then." Toki murmurs. Something warm bloomed in her chest, coming from not just her, but from Dear as well. Their husband would leave his pack to follow her- to create their own pack- when it was usually safer for one who had a disability to stay safe within their birth pack where they would always be treasured and supported. Toki shifts, disturbing Papa with only a small apologetic sound, and turns to press her forehead to his chin. “Thank you.”

Toki wondered what Papa thought, as he lay against her listening.

He cooed happily, and gave her a squeeze.

Papa listened with his eyes closed, but he smiled up at them. "She will make a fine Alpha."

“And so will your son.” Toki chimed gently. “And just because we’re leaving the pack doesn’t mean that we’re not family. But, it does mean that if you attempt to dominate Dear once she’s sure and firm in her own little pack, and she ends up kicking your ass, I’ve done my best to prevent it and you’ll have gotten what’s coming to you.” She couldn’t prevent everything- Toki wasn’t perfect.

That had Papa chuckling. "As if I was that foolish. I know the capability of an Insectis... No less the power of a queen."

Dear was preening in the back of her skull. “Really?” She hums softly. “From what I gathered from Tenne, Insectis were reclusive, and most people didn’t know much about them. How would you know the capability of one?” She teases lightheartedly.

He didn't reply. Papa simply stared up at her with a flat look.

Toki quirked a brow at him and then wriggled it just because she could. “Well... I guess that settles it.” She sighs softly. “We’re two packs then. How do we go about doing it? Do we just... say we’re splitting, and then bam, we’re split?”

Meanwhile his own brows furrowed, before they closed and he chuffed. "I suppose tradition can be broken... Just this once." He murmured, before he yawned. "Once I’m done using your lap for a pillow..." He chuffed.
Toki huffed. “And what if I feel the need to get up and stretch? Or want to reach for my cider?” She makes grabby hands at her drink. Yes, she could use Stripe who was lingering over in the fire, but that didn’t mean she wasn’t going to sass Papa.

Toki was full of sass. She wondered if she got away with it because she was an ‘omega’.

He gave a low whine and gave her legs a squeeze.

Toki gave a grunt as he squeezed her legs. “Ouch. Gentle. I don’t have much magic for reinforcing my body all the time, and you’ve got a lot of brute strength behind those big ham-hawk arms of yours.”

"My Pillow..." He whined quietly.

Toki hummed. "Your pillow is physically fragile." She chimes gently. If she made a sound of pain, Sentinel would get huffy, and no one wanted that.

He whined quietly and nuzzled her gently. "Sorry." He rattled.

The pregnant skeleton bee hummed, and then grunted as one of the pups kicked, distorting the skin under her shirt. “It’s alright. Though I do need to move- I’m cramping up from sitting in one spot for too long. Pregnancy has its downsides. I miss being stationary for long periods of time.”

Rumbling quietly, Papa sat up again from her lap and stretched as Sentinel gently moved away as well as to allow her the stretch room.

She rolled to her feet, and then rubbed her back. Several of her joints and bones cracked and popped as she stretched, and she made sharp buzz of discomfort. The cuddle piles were gradually becoming more and more uncomfortable, as she couldn’t completely prop herself in pillows to help cushion and support as she needed. “Mmm, ow. I could use a good soak in a hot tub or hot spring.”

"Hot springs." Both father and son seemed to love the idea.

At that moment, there was a soft knocking at the door and both men jolted to attention as they looked towards the door.
Chapter 134

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So- some of you who might have been re-reading may have noticed that I am slowly- so slowly- going back through and doing edits for TOTU. Because there is... a LOT of words to edit, and that’s putting it lightly, it’s going to probably take me a long time. I cranked out 5 chapters in one day, and sort of burnt myself out since Silver and I are also still writing current things, and IRL stuff has me worn down to hell.

That said- I’m going to put it out there that I would absolutely love if some of you, our loyal readers, would like to help me go back through TOTU and edit it. It’s a tremendously huge task- but it would improve everyone’s reading experience- yours, frequent re-readers, and those new readers that we get popping in.

I would be handling the fixing of names- Silver and I decided to finally just... give up the goat and give in to complaints of it being too confusing for some people, so I’m going back through and fixing all of the Aliquam’s to Papyrus, and the same for the Caeruleus. That’s what I would be handling. Which… In and of itself is a task, because my word Document doesn’t always work right.

What I would be asking of those helping me, and it's going to be a lot, I know, would be to go through, and find all of the punctuation errors, spelling errors, and capitalization errors. Lord knows, as much as I love Silverwing, she makes an assload of them and it’s a lot for me to keep up with. However, it wouldn't be all at once- we’d be going chapter by chapter, one at a time- or two or three, whatever you’re most comfortable with.

THAT BEING SAID. I would require those helping us to be AT LEAST 18 years of age, because of the nature of TOTU and the NSFW content that it has in some chapters, along with the themes in the story itself. I can’t stop underage people from reading, but I won’t hand it out to you directly.

If you’re interested, and meet the criteria of being at least 18 years of age, leave me a comment, and I'll supply you my discord info so we can discuss more over Discord.

Toki blinked, and then sighed and waddled for it. “Well, I’m already up. I’ll get it.” She was a bit bashful of someone seeing her mane, but… Well, it was too late to back out now. Toki opened the door. “Hello?”

"Hello Toki... Ho hum..." It was hooded River, holding a paper in their gloved hand. "I opened my hot springs, and was told that you would greatly benefit from a visit there. I can see to agree. Tra la la..."

Her mane fluffed a little in surprise. She had not expected to see river there. “Er… How… exactly did you know I would benefit from a visit there?” She asks, understandably a little unnerved. She’d just mentioned it to her husband and father in law like… literally minutes ago. After spending time around River in the other world, River was bound to give her heebie-jeebies.

River tilted their head, "Are you not pregnant? Or have you simply gained weight that rather worryingly distends rather than weigh down?"

That had both Papa and Sentinel huffing and rattling soundly from the living room.

"The former, then?"

She’d… just got called fat. “Well…” She murmurs, her brows furrowing. “I am pregnant, yes. I’m sorry- you just had… interesting timing to a conversation I was just having.” Her mane ruffles some, and she nods slightly. She could put aside moderately hurt feelings for a dip in a hot spring. “I didn’t know there were hot springs around here. I’d enjoy going. Do you have an address to the location?”

"It was not easy to find, I looked very hard, ho hum." They lifted the paper out to her. "My apologies, I suppose that was rather harsh..."

She accepted the paper and gave them an awkward nod. “Thank you. And… kind of harsh. But it’s fine. I’ve heard worse earlier in my pregnancy.” She shrugged. “Thank you again. I’m going to go see about getting Papyrus and everyone roused up to going with me.”

"How exciting. I hope to see you there, Miss Toki." They gave a nod. "I best be off then, tra la la, I have to spread the word to the rest of the townspeople, though if you call, I will reserve you the family suite."

Toki nods. “Thank you.” She says. She waves to them goodbye, and then closes the door and waddles back inside towards Sentinel and Papa. “So… We have to call and reserve the family suite, but apparently there is now a hot spring we can go to.” She says lightly, cocking her hip just slightly to the side. Her wings flicked and she hummed as she looked at the paper in her hand. “It’s a bit of a drive. Apparently there’s… a log bridge over the river now, and it’s waaaay out in the woods.”

"Guardian will drive, I will rest until we arrive." Sentinel agreed.

“… Guardian?” Toki’s brows furrowed in confusion. “Is Guardian Papyrus, or me?” She didn’t mind driving, but she wasn’t sure she could fit or see over the steering wheel. She wouldn’t mind trying though.

He reached up and patted his chest. "He was a Guard." Sentinel murmured.

“Oh.” She blinks softly. “Okay. That makes sense. Well… I’ll go make the arrangement, if… you want to let Papyrus out so he can go get Honey and Skylar from Undyne.” She glances to Papa. “Same to you. You may want to get Tenebris out, so he can go fetch Thumper, and perhaps Sans. Though… A hot-spring is likely not a good idea for Solstice and Grillby to be at.”

Sentinel nodded and once Sentinel stepped aside in the controls, Papyrus sighed and stood up, while Tenebris came out and stretched one last time before he stood.

"I'm sure there will be alternative options for him." He rumbled, patting himself off before he gave a small bow to his daughter in law. "Toki.” He rumbled, before he turned to leave.

The bow was… different. Toki nodded to him. “I’ll see you soon, Papa.” She gives him a warm smile. Pack they might not be, but they would always be family.

She waddles off to make a call to set up a reservation. Hopefully for today- or she’d have to call Papyrus and Tenebris to tell them to leave the kids where they are. She also needed to make plans for someone to babysit the baby summons, and her cats- thankfully, Undyne was usually in town.
“So, are you sure you know where you’re going?” Toki inquired lightly to her husband, who seemed to be leading the train of cars that was threading their way through the re-building town. She relaxed in the front seat as best she could, awkwardly adjusting her seat belt as it rubbed uncomfortably over her many… teats. They were sensitive, and the belt going up her chest kept rubbing on them. Toki wasn’t sure what to do about it though.

“Daddy knows.” Honey chimes from her car seat. She waved to her mother through the rear view mirror, and then went back to playing with Skylar, making noises with her mouth to mimic the sound of a jet zooming around.

“Daddy always knows.” Skylar nods in agreement. “Oh no!” He exclaims. “The evil jet has been spotted. What ever will the innocent moon cows do?”

“Become my pets!” She cackles amidst her jet noises. “I’ll dress you in tutus and make you eat kale!”

Toki glanced to her husband. “Kale?” She questions to him lightly, her claws coming up to run through her mane. The braids had been undone shortly before they’d left, since soaking in a hot spring wasn’t good with a braid. She’d have so many knots. “I’m guessing you tried to get the kids to eat something healthy while I was missing.”

"Yes, I know where I’m going, dear." Papyrus answered with a soft laugh. "And yes. But to my defense, it half worked. They like spinach now."

Toki snorts. “And yet they still won’t eat green peppers.” She gives their children a fond look. “It’s just going to take time to expand their diets. But anyways- I’m glad you know where you’re going. I didn’t know there was a ‘bridge over the river’.”

"I think it’s newer than some of the other constructs around here. It certainly looked clean enough to be new." He agreed, checking behind him for a moment to make sure Sans' truck was still behind them.

The truck was still puttering along behind them. When his brother spotted him waving, he cheerfully stuck his thumb against the bridge of his nasal canal, and stuck his tongue out, wiggling his fingers and making a silly face at his little brother through the windshield.

Toki hummed. “Well, it would make sense it’s new. I’ve never had a bridge there before, besides the mossy rocks we used to cross when we went to that pond for valentines day.”

He made a face with a lighthearted ‘how dare’ sort of look at the sass his brother was giving him, before he focused once more on the road ahead. "Mmh, that was fun." He purred quietly. "Good times... You and I will have to do that again soon~"

“Mhm. Though... I think we need to put up a walking bridge.” She chuckles. “If only a temporary one, given the river’s flooding tendencies. With kids who are bound to want to go sometime too, and your leg too, it’s safer if we have a walking path.” She rubs her belly quietly.

"I agree. Perhaps if you suggest this to River, they would consider it.”

Toki blinked. “What? No, no, no. Not necessary.” She waves a hand. “I can call my brother about it. Kohaku is good at construction- so long as he’s not on a job, I can probably hire him to do some work here. He’d need our help holding boards, but I don’t mind doing it. Well... It’ll need to wait until after I’ve delivered and weaned the litter.”
Papyrus nodded in agreement, eye lights briefly being dragged from the road to follow the curve of her hand as it massaged along her swollen belly. He chuckled a bit to himself for letting his eyes wander and looked ahead to continue driving. "I think we're almost there, my love." He announced happily.

"We are?" She hummed. Toki paused, and perked up. "Oh! I see the bridge. According to the paper, it's a couple miles out of the town down the… 'road'," She copies the quotation marks on the paper using her secondary hands to make air-quotes, "but it's a fairly straight stretch with no side roads. I guess no one lives 'in the country' yet." She jokes. "If it wasn't for the fact that our house is in a pretty good location, and it's... well, been rebuilt twice already, I'd be tempted to move further out where it's more private and I can walk naked in the house without having to have the blinds down."

"I wonder if father is considering something of the sort. If he wants to raise the pups with the gifts of their Birthright, I imagine he would want a home a little ways out of town." Papyrus mentioned.

Toki hummed softly. "It does help being farther out. But, socializing is important for beast pups too." She hums. "In the other world, when we made it to the surface and were given homes, Tenne and I were given a home farthest from everyone else. We were also put in charge of the animals- cattle, horses, goats, chickens... It was nice." She lets out a soft wistful sigh. "Since I've come home, I find myself missing being so far out. We're away from the big city, yes, but small town life is... noisier than I remember it being." Toki didn’t often like to talk about what she missed from the other world, honestly- but sometimes biting your tongue wasn’t healthy. She didn’t want him to feel like she regretted coming home, but... maybe it was time he knew there were things she missed.

"Do you want to see about setting up a chicken coop in our back yard?" He asked. "Chicken dung is a great fertilizer, which would benefit an apiary."

Toki considered that with a soft hum. "Chickens would fit better than cows." She chuckles. "We don't really have the pasture space for them." She’d been good with the cattle. "... Did you know your alternate self was basically master of the chickens?" Toki chimes lightly. "It's... just ironic that you suggested them." She laughs softly. "Quinn adored them, and they adored him. Anyway... Chickens wouldn’t be bad. Getting another apiary set up though is going to be a lot of work."

He chuckled at that. "I might just end up being so lucky as to possess my counterpart's ability then..."

"Perhaps." Toki laughs softly. "I wasn't very good with them. I did better with the cattle. Four hands made milking easier, and I knew how to be gentle with their teats. After all, I had experience milking myself. Ecto-boobs are sensitive as heck."

"Mmh~" There was a low groan from him when she said that and his fingers flexed on the steering wheel.

Toki watched his knuckles flex, and her brows lifted. Oh boy. Did that make him a little hot and bothered? Toki couldn’t stop the grin from creeping up her face. She leaned over and nuzzled his shoulder. She was forever a dork with some things, and teasing was one of them. "Maybe," She purrs, "you could help me with that sometime soon? I feel so full, Papy... It's been some time since you've gotten to practice," She nuzzles his shoulder, "But of course, I don't want you to do something you don't want to do. I can always handle it myself if I have to."

"OhmygodToki." His knuckles seemed to pale a little bit as his grip tightened. "Please, I'm trying to drive. I don't need mental images of your goddess body distracting me."

"Are you sure?" She glanced back at the kids to make sure they were still busy. Yep, they had no idea what she was up too, too invested in their game of make-believe to hear what was going on around them. Their innocent childishness helped to enable her mischief. “It’s not like there’s anything around to run into.” She purred again, her voice quiet and just for him to hear. Truthfully, after he’d made the turn across the bridge, it was just open forest. Nothing but trees as far as the eye could see. “Though… if you’d rather not think about my warm, plush breasts being cupped in your hands, I suppose that’s alright. To each their own~”

"Oh god Toki-~" His hips squirmed a little in his seats. "You have no idea how wonderful that sounds." He whined quietly.

“Well…” She grinned softly. “If you’re quiet, and can keep your voice down, maybe we might be able to do some naughty thing together in the onsen, if it’s mixed bathing.” She couldn’t lean up to press a kiss to his cheek, but she could giggle very softly into his shoulder. “We’d have to be very quiet though. We’re not going to be the only ones there, after all.” She cooed at him.

"You and I are not getting out of this car until I have at least fifteen minutes with your boobs." He demanded quietly.

Toki pushed her arms a little bit together, making her arms press her breasts together and plump them up some. Was it juvenile? Yes. Was she subtly flirting with her husband with body language? Yes. Was she allowed to do it after the week she’d had? Yes. It all kept her mind busy, and what kept her mind busy was better than letting her wallow in self-pity. “Mmm, that might be hard to do.” Toki pouts at him. “We’re not alone here, after all.” She grins. One hand slides over to rub his thigh apologetically. “You might just have to deal with a stiff one until the children are playing drown the bunny with Thumper in the bath.”

If he had lips, they would have curled back over his teeth. As it was, they ground slightly and his thigh tensed up under her hand. "Tokiko Nara Gaster, I will pull to the side of the road and tell my brother to take the children." He grumbled.

Toki blinked slowly at first, and then giggled softly. That made her warm inside and tingly in the best ways. “Oh? Is that a threat, or a promise?” She teases, fingers teasingly sliding up his thigh. “Can’t take your sweet wife’s teasing, my sweet husband? Or are you simply eager… for a taste…?” She coos in a low and sweet voice.

That seemed to do it. He almost hit the brakes and his teeth ground sharply as he gave a low cat-like snarl.

Sans stuck an arm out the window, seeming to be waving and wondering why the hell he was swerving.

Toki’s eyes got wide as he nearly hit the breaks, and both children in the back went quiet. “So much for keeping quiet so they didn’t hear, Papy.” She admonishes teasingly in a very, very quietly murmured tone of voice.

Skylar was the first to speak. “… Daddy? Are you angry at Momma?” He asks softly.

A moment passed before he lifted his head to smile at the children through the rear view mirror. "No. I just almost hit a rabbit. It was a daring little thing."

“You almost hit a bunny?” Honey gasps. “Good job not hitting it, Daddy! I know Grandpapa probably would have ran it over so he could eat it for dinner, but you didn’t. I’d have been very sad.”

Toki hid a soft snicker, and rubbed her hand up his thigh again. They couldn’t see her hand thanks to the center console, so she was fine with her small bit of mischief. Oh yes, she was a little shit. She was also purposefully staying away from his pelvis, all of the promise there, but no of the action. His mind could do the work for her. “Grandpapa wouldn’t run over a bunny for dinner.” She corrects the children gently. After all, a car wasn’t much sport. Beasts were about being fair and sport— that’s why you’d never catch any of them doing trophy hunting like the human big game hunters.

Skylar was giving them both a suspicious look. “But you growled, Daddy.” He comments slightly.

“Well I’m sure you’d growl too if the bunny couldn’t make up his mind about which way to dive off the road.” He gave a soft laugh.

“I suppose so.” Skylar nods lightly, and turns back to his toys.

Once the twins are busy again, Toki grins at him. Her fingers tap on his thigh pointedly, before stroking the fabric pulled taut by his tenseness. “Indeed, what a silly indecisive bunny, not sure if he should run off the road, or keep going. So glad you’re the good driver that you are, my love.”

"Mh... you know what I would have done to the bunny if she kept doing what she was doing?” He murmured quietly.

Toki leaned a little towards him, her hand slipping up higher to just very gently nudge where his bulge would be. “Oh? And just what would you have done to that poor, sweet, innocent bunny?” She purred softly to him, some part of her deep inside trembling and almost eager to see his response.

"I would make sure there was nothing to interrupt us, and then I would have grabbed it by the neck and punished it accordingly.” He hissed under his breath.

Toki couldn’t stop the green flush that spread over her cheekbones. “Oh my. That… sounds like fun.” She purred. “So… if the bunny were to keep misbehaving… would she get punished?”

"Oh indeed." His claws were tapping the steering wheel.

Her hand on his thigh proceeded to brush her knuckles against the front of his pelvis. “Well then, I guess that bunny better behave.” She turned her face back to the front, drawing her hand from his leg and crossed her primary arms atop her gravid belly, making her breasts plump up. They bounced and jigged in the confines of her bra with each bump of the car over the uneven road. It was a little uncomfortable, but it would definitely have him half watching her. “Wouldn’t want to face the kitty’s claws, would we?” She purrs. Except that’s exactly what she wanted.

He gave another sharp sound, but this one was quieted so as not to draw their children’s attention. He was successful. "I feel like you want to." He responded, eyeing her with a sharp side-glance.

"Well... Your instincts are usually always right." She replied back just as lightly, rubbing her hands against her belly. She was going to drive him bonkers. She was already being driven a little bonkers herself. There was definitely an uncomfortable tingling in her lower belly. It was uncomfortable only because she couldn't soothe the ache and need permeating her being. "Though maybe not claws, but some nice teeth..." She purred.

At that, the half-beast grinned. "Well, then that settles it."

"Settles it?” She questions lightly, eyeing him with a half wary, half curious gaze that burned with well-hidden arousal.

"You and I will have some nice time to ourselves once everyone's gotten settled down." He hummed in innocence.
“Oooo. Well, I look forward to it.” She grins. “We may have to be sneaky, if there’s no nice little dark corners to sink into. Think you can do that?” She purrs slyly.

"Felidae are the masters of stealth and silence." He boasted.

“Oh? Are you?” She grins. “Mister ‘couldn’t even keep our little verbal word-play hidden from the kids’. I guess my ‘goddess body’ is too much for a felidae.” She purrs. “The desire to worship at my temple was too much for your mortal mind~” Toki teases jovially.

"I’ll do more than worship it.” He rattled.

“Oh? Are you going to plunder my temple, you fiendish fellow?” She purrs. “Not that I’d mind… plunder away~”

"I'm going to desecrate it~"

Toki couldn’t stop the blush that took over her skull, heating practically from her cheekbones to her horns. “Well then!” She squeaked, feeling a little like he’d turned the tables on her.

And with that, nothing more was said, leaving a smug grin on Papyrus's face as he continued to drive down the bumpy road.

Toki thought he looked like a cat that got the cream, ate the canary, and got away with blaming it on the dog. She didn't really have much else to say go that, so she just leaned in her seat, and relaxed for the rest of the drive with her face burning.

The drive was pretty, but it began to slope uphill rather quick. As it began to go uphill, the ground went from muddy and slightly wet to cold and crunchy. There was still snow at higher elevation, and Toki hadn't ever been out this far at this season. The further out they went, the more she started to see trees that had their limbs bowed under the weight of ice and snow. Soon the ground was covered in snow.

Toki blinked. "This is a longer ways out than I thought it would be. But I suppose a retreat from an already remote place must be even more remote."

"Look at the snow, kids." He chuckled. "Isn't it pretty?"

Skylar nodded. "I like the snow. I like to sit by the window and color while it snows."

Honey blew a raspberry. "We just had snow." She grumps. "And we just visited snow at the lake. Why do we have to see snow here?"

"Because Mother Nature does what Mother Nature wants." Toki chuckles gently. "If we're meant to have snow, we have snow. If we're meant to freeze, we freeze. Same with rain, sun, winds, flooding... All of it."

"Albeit that last one is rather rude when it's not the proper season for it." Papyrus piped up with a puff of bemused air.

"You haven't even seen the flooding we can have here." Toki rolled her eyes. "Why do you think Grillby's bar has reinforced doors and water stoppers to keep out a lot of it?" Toki hums. She'd noticed the same things in the new bar as the ones she'd implemented into the old one.

"Waterfall got flooded once." He answered lightly. "It partially backed up Snowdin as well."
"Most of the floods here are mild. Only three or four feet of water. But, every few years we get a flood that just keeps rising, and it'll cover the bottom floor of most homes." Hence houses being two stories tall. It was more than just for packing lots of homes in- it was also a defense mechanisms against the harsh weather wrought by all the magic surrounding Mount Ebott.

"Hopefully we'll all be ready for that... Sans might stress out a fair bit over his husband and daughter's safety." Papyrus's mind thought to his older brother's husband, and for a moment grew worried. "Do you think Grillby might think this is unfair?" He asked.

"Honestly, I don't know." She admits quietly. "It's... Hard, when you've got such a large difference in the family. The only onsen he could likely dip in is true liquid magma, and none of us could get even close to that." Well, perhaps she could, but she didn't want to test it. If she died by magma, she wasn't sure how she'd go about fixing that trauma upon the load. "Perhaps before we go in the water I could give him and Solstice some of my venom so they could relax? It's not a bath, but it's refreshing for fire elementals." She would try to make it fair for them as best she could.

"That would help a bit I'm sure." Papyrus gave a nod of agreement before he looked out his drivers side window. "Whoah... You see that plume of steam?"

Toki couldn't lean forward very far, but she did her best. Vaguely, and rapidly nearing as they approached it, was several plumes and columns of billowing steam rising into the sky. "So there is! We must be getting close now." She smiled. "I can't wait to relax. I haven’t been to a traditional onsen since I was a lot younger. Toki-made ones don't count."

"Even though that's the best kind there is?" He laughed, "then again, we don’t have the raw minerals like onsen do."

"True that- mine might feel nice and be portable, but a natural made one is just as nice. Any idea what kind of onsen this one is? Given the… magma deposit down in Hotland, I’m betting that’s how they got their heat.” Toki hummed softly, watching as they twisted and turned around the trees, slowly but surely bringing them around towards the spires of steam. “Maybe sulfur? I bet it’s on the paper…” Toki pulled out the paper again, and rifled through the information to see what kinds of minerals they’d be expecting in the onsen.

"Your guess is as good as mine, darling. Take a look at that paper while I park." He answered. Toki hummed. She scrolled over it as he found the place, and then started to get parked. “It looks like it’s a sulfur based one.” She replies lightly as he parks. “Which isn’t bad. Sulfur makes fur very soft, so my mane should come out even softer if we give it time to soak."

"Soft Momma fluff!" Papyrus celebrated with a laugh, before he saw Sans park beside him. "Alright pups. Go give your uncle advice on driving; we'll catch up."

Honey squirmed out of her car seat with ease, undoing the buckles like no human toddler would be able to. She reached over to undo her brother’s belt while he held their toys for them. “Why are Momma and Daddy gonna catch up?” He asks curiously.

Toki dry-swallowed. She had an inkling as to what was coming. “Mommy and Daddy are going to discuss some things about the bath, sweetheart.”

“Okay.” Skylar nods, accepting her words easily. He scrambles out of the seat with their toys, and then hops out the door. He waddled around to his sister’s side, helping her out, and then they both scooted towards their uncles car.
Toki watched them go, and then arched her brows at her husband. “You know they can see us through the windows, right? And they’re going to know something’s going on when the car rocks on its axels.” She grins.

"Who said we're doing any of that right now?" He pulled her close and pressed his face into her neck, giving a sharp bite to her collarbone with a low growl.

Toki let out a soft squeak, and groaned gently as his teeth sunk into the flesh partially covering her collarbone. “Mmm… Not going to do any of it, hm?” She plumped up her breasts again, and toyed lightly with the buttons on the front. “I do believe you demanded just a few moments with my breasts~” She purred.

"Not yet at least." He promised, letting up with his bite before he sank his face to her boobs, pressing into the fabric with a grumble revolving around ‘remove this before I do.’

Toki snickered softly. “If you rip my shirt, then I’m going to be stuck shirtless, and everyone will be able to ogle my breasts.” She says lightly. Toki wriggled one of her hands under him, and then gently undid her buttons. “Be gentle, or you’ll lose privileges,” she teases. “Don’t want to pop holes in them, do we?” She’s not entirely certain that she wouldn’t leak if he pressed too hard on them.

He gave a low grumble and pressed his face to her skin. "You temptress... You know how much I treasure your body and yet you tease me with it." He huffed in a deep breath, inhaling her scent.

"Well, what else would I do with a body like this besides tease you with it?” She stroked her fingers up over his skull, and then down to his vertebrae. She stroked them gently. “Besides… me thinks, mister Gaster, that you enjoy when I tease you and get you excited.” She purrs. “Are you enjoying what’s rightfully yours?” Her body was his to enjoy- and enjoy she knew he did. Particularly since she’d learned of his delight with breasts. She was surprised he married a skeleton, since they didn’t naturally have them- but she supposed that people loved and married people who didn’t meet all of their kinks all the time.

He gave a soft croon in reply and kissed her ecto-skin softly. "You are wonderful~" He cooed happily.

"Are they just as soft and full as you imagined them to be?" She inquired of him warmly, her eye lights glittering in bemusement as his words sent a ripple of vibration through the soft flesh.

"So very soft indeed, my love~" He answered. "Let us join the others, so that I might claim you sooner..." He looked up at her with a soft grin.

Toki snorts. "Well, I need to do up my buttons again, to do that I need to have your face out of there first." She gives him a wily grin, and gently pulls him up to kiss him. While she kisses him, her fingers fix her shirt. "You're in charge of finding a comfortable spot that's also fairly secluded in the onsen.” She purrs at him.

"And you just keep doing what you do, being absolutely beautiful~" He purred, kissing her longingly before he backed away to let her redress as he grabbed his cane from the backseat and got out of the car.

"I'm hardly beautiful, but alright. I'll try." She chuckles and fixes her clothing before getting out.

Papyrus came face to face with his brother. Well, face to face in the sense that he was at the end of the car, waiting for them with Solstice in his arms, and a toddler on his shoulder. The other was visible behind them, riding on Thumper's shoulders and babbling animatedly to her technical uncle.
"Well, looks like that 'talk' took a bit, eh bro?” He wriggled his brows. "Helping her find some info on the brochure?"

His big brother knew about their shenanigans, and was keeping it PG for their sons’ sake.

Almost immediately Sans got the stinkiest stink eye from Papyrus. The younger brother huffed out a sharp breath and settled down and came closer, pecking his son on the head. "Indeed. Though we are done now, so let's help the older men out and see about going inside." He suggested.

"Who are you calling old!?" Tenebris heard that.

“It’s not calling you old if it’s stating the facts, Papa.” Toki laughs heartily as shuts her door. She waddles around the car, two hands on her lower back, and gives him a teasing two-handed salute. “Now come on. Lets go inside before Thumper freezes his feet off.”

“Shoes suck,” The boy sticks his tongue out and blows a raspberry, “too constricting.”

“Only for you, mister big, fluffy rabbit paws.” Toki blew one right back at him, and then opened her arms as he hopped over to give her a hug. She kissed Honey too, since honey was right in range atop his shoulders.

“I’m glad you’re feeling better, Toki.” He mumbles into her belly. “I was worried we were gonna lose you too.”

“Not gonna happen, sweetheart.” She ruffles his ears gently. “I’m gonna keep getting better, kiddo. Now… Lets go inside. I for one want to see what sort of onsen this is- just a hot spring, or hot spring and hotel. Not that we really need hotel rooms, mind you. We live like… what, was that an hours drive almost?”

“Yes.” Grillby crackled gently. “A little over, I believe. It was enjoyable though. Regardless… lets go inside.”

“Oh!” Toki paused, mouth opening for a moment as she recalled what she wanted to do. “Grillby! I wanted to offer you some of my venom to help you relax, since you can’t get in the water with us. Same for Solstice.” She smiles at him.

"I want to compare this to something humans do." Sans snorted quietly, "But I got nothing."

Toki quirked a grin. “Enough venom with a specific pheromone attached to it can induce a… relaxing effect, sort of like a big… hit of a specific herb, or perhaps a light bit of an added adult drink to some hot cocoa.” Toki choicely edited her words for the children surrounding them. “However, it’s entirely non-addictive, at least that I’ve seen, and it’s harmless for fire folk.”

Grillby nodded, and held out his arm. “We’ll hold off for Solstice. I’m not sure the effects it would have on her.”

"Of course.” She nods. Toki took his arm, and lined up her primary stinger to where his vein would be. She slid it home, and let some venom ease from her, watching Grillby flinch at the initial sting, but relax at the effects afterward. His flames spiked up a bit from the added energy, but he seemed more sedated, eyes gazing up to watch the steam curl.

Toki drew her arm away before he had too much; just enough to relax him, but not too much to make him a danger to his daughter. “Alright. Shall we go inside now?”

"Yes, before you inspire Sans to make more bad jokes.” Papyrus groaned quietly.
He could see the grin on Sans' face as he collected his husband. "You're runnin' warmer, babe. How you feel?"

"Mm... It's all good." Grillby hummed, and leaned over to scoop up Solstice from his husband’s arms. "...Wow. Her flames are so... blue." He mumbles.

"My god, he's zonked." Sans quietly pulled out his phone to record him.

Toki’s mouth twists and pinches, and she giggles. “Okay, I might have given him a bit much, but he’ll burn through it quick. It’s designed to be metabolized quickly.” Toki gave her brother in law a smile, and then waddled for the front door. “He’s probably going to be entranced with her flames for a while.”

“No harm in it.” Asgore chuckles softly. “Well, let's go inside. We have to get dressed down, and read the rules of the onsen.”

Tenebris rolled his eyes at his eldest boy, before he chuckled deeply. "At least Solstice is not in danger of a secondhand effect.” He rumbled as he passed by the crowd, tugging his mate along by the hand as he did. "Come on, Thumper, let's be out of this blasted cold."

“Yes Dad!” Thumper hustled after him.

Toki led the swarm inside, and found it warm and dimly lit.

Lo and behold, behind the front desk was her younger brother. Kon’s neon green hair was limp like sad seaweed from being in and out of the steamy air, and he seemed to be avidly texting- or perhaps sexting knowing him- someone on his phone. He looked up when they came in, and blinked. “Oh. It’s you guys. Oh shit fuck- ah, hello!” He greeted cheerfully. “Welcome to River’s Retreat and Onsen, powered by the geothermal power of Hotland in the ground far below!” He chirped. “My name is Kon Nara, have you made an appointment today?”

Toki smirked, and then snickered. “You got a job here, Kon?"

“Shut up, Toki.” He gave her a tight smile. “You had an appointment?” He turned to his much more professional brother in law.

"More like a reservation, dear brother-in-law." He answered. "This location is an onsen and an overnight hotel, yes?" He asked.

“Indeed.” Kon rubbed his hands together lightly. “It’s an onsen and overnight hotel. Let me look up your reservation.” He didn’t recall making it, which meant his lovely coworker had to have made it. He looked it up in the computer, and made a pleased sound. “It looks like you’ve registered to reserve the royal wing- wait, the entire royal wing? Holy fuck- for... the next three days? Is that right?”

"We did kind of bring the whole family." He gave a soft laugh.

Meanwhile Tenebris was grumbling and was pulling his arms out of his sweater sleeves, the humidity already getting to him.

“Indeed you did. Ah, well, the royal wing comes with six fully furnished rooms, an outdoor garden maintained with magic all year round for your pleasure, two outdoor royal sized hot springs for you to use should you decide to segregate by gender. Tea and food is available from five in the morning until midnight, but you’ll have free range of the kitchen after that.” Kon glanced at Toki and coughed gently. “Particularly with your, ah, cravings, sis. Anyways... You can pay once your stay is over.”
He motions to the left. “Please bathe yourselves thoroughly before you enter the onsen. We’ve got magical measures to help keep them cleaner than ones humans would have, but still, please don’t dirty them extra. Go ahead and go get comfortable. Robes will be provided for you to choose from inside of your suite.”

Toki nods. “We’ll wash thoroughly before we enter. Thank you.” She glances to her family. “Shall we go before Papa strips too much further?”

"Indeed. Come along everyone." Papyrus agreed, leading the small family of beasts along to the deemed 'Royal wing'.
Chapter 135

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Everyone loves a hot spring. Including skeletons who don't even technically need to use a hot spring.

Also fun fact- I broke my toes the other day. It's just not my week. Anyway- we're slowly running out of chapters (as in, two left as a surplus for posting) so it may come down to post as we finish them. With Silver and I both working (increased hours for me, WOOO!), and her being easily distracted by her family and girlfriend during the times that we both do have off, it makes writing difficult. Not impossible, but difficult.

NSFW warning? Ish? It's at the end, so most of the chapter is safe, I promise.

Toki waddled along, sighing softly as she explored the place with her eyes. The group made it to the Royal Wing, and stepped through the doors to the suite, where Toki hummed softly in surprise. "Ah. Shoes off, everyone. We've got slippers to wear, and robes to dress in. Well... We've got to find our sizes."

The rooms were large and well spaced, with tatami mats covering most of the 'halls' between them as well as the common room between all of the rooms where the inhabitants might relax. There was no step up like there might have been in other places, but there was spacing between the hardwood floor, and the softer tatami mats that made up the rest of the floor. There were also lockers for shoes, and plush and fluffy slippers in a variety of sizes to keep their feet warm.

The walls weren't made from rice paper, but a thick and hardy wood designed to survive the harsh winters of the area. The walls were carved with intricate designs however, and seemed to have been painted with a metallic paint to make them shine, or perhaps inlaid with a type of metal.

Inside the rooms were large and plush futons, the flat mat like beds thicker than the average one a human might have used. It was likely to compensate for the fact that most of the monsters were large and weighed a fair bit, and wouldn't have found comfort in ones a human might have traditionally used. Considering that most of the patrons were likely to be monsters, it made sense for River to have catered to it being a mostly monster based society. There was also a full sized table in the room, with tall, standing chairs likely to account for the many tall monsters whom would surely visit.

Toki wasn’t going to complain. She wasn’t sure she could sit in a traditional seiza, or even get up if she had to sit on a zabuton.

Not far from the futons were the closets, tastefully hidden behind a folding screen so that one may change in relative privacy without the risk of someone walking in.

Toki hummed, and slipped her shoes off. She toed them up into her hand, and carefully put them into the provided lockers, before shuffling into a fluffy pair of slippers that looked to be her size. Oddly enough, they were. Now that she looked, all of the slippers seemed to be sized specifically for everyone. “Huh…” She wondered how they knew their sizes.
Once in her slippers, Toki waddled ahead of the two packs, and peeped into the rooms. She hummed, and quietly chose the one across the hall and common room from the one with three beds. No doubt the children would nest there, so it would be easy for the twins to find them if they needed them. She waddled in to check it out, and made a surprised noise. "Oh! Yukata- I was expecting robes. River really did go all out." She made a pleased sound, and selected one of the... Well, rather large woman's yukata. The large sleeves meant both arms could fit in them, and she could secure it properly around her pregnant swell. She examined the light pink fabric covered in beautiful floral patterns, with silky bees and butterflies, and made a pleased sound. She didn't like to wear kimono, but yukata were lightweight and much more comfortable, even if they weren't even half as pretty as a traditional kimono.

Papyrus hummed contentedly as he entered the room, and began to change his clothes as well. He smiled at her. "You look so cute in that yukata~" He laughed gently, changing into his own to take a look at it. It was almost gunmetal gray, but the markings made it very clear. He was wearing a suit of armor, albeit one made of soft, exposable fabric. "Heh... this is cute~" He chuckled quietly. "Do you think they're all made custom like this?" He asked.

"I have no idea." Toki chuckled softly. The tightened the obi lightly, and tied it in the front before sliding it around behind her in a traditional bow. She used to be able to tie it behind her, but she'd since given up on that skill. Besides, why do that, when she could make sure it looked nice in front of her before sliding it around behind her? "We're going to need to help the kids with theirs though. Come on, handsome." She gave him a warm smile. He looked good in his- it reminded her of the armor he no longer wore.

They hadn't even left the room when Skylar started calling to them. "Momma! Daddy! How do you wear these things?"

And then there were two naked little skeletons bursting into their room, holding two yukata. Both were flamboyant colors- obviously two little girl’s yukata based on the obi.

Toki gave them a resigned but endearing sigh. "How do you manage to get naked so fast?" She asks no one in particular. "Alright, come here, children. Get on the chair, and I can help. Thumper?" She calls. "Do you need help too?"

"No, I've got it!" He called back.

Papyrus came over to help the child that his wife didn't, Skylar in this case, his hands moving quickly to upright the yukata in his pup's hands before putting it on him, he secured the wrap around him before he smiled. "Ta-da"

Toki watched Papyrus and hummed, before smiling at Honey. Toki wasn't going to comment on her son wearing a little girl's yukata- he could wear what he wanted to wear. "Alright, sweetie. So, I know you like to be a big girl and get dressed on your own. I'm going to show you the first time though so you can do it on your own next time, okay?"

"Okay." Honey nods, eager to learn.

"Alright. So, first thing. When you wear a yukata, it's folded left over right." She explains gently, and folds the left side over the right side, securing it loosely with her secondary hand as she grabbed the obi. "And then-"

"Well," Toki began, "left over right is used for living people. Humans sometimes bury their dead, and if they're buried in yukata or kimono, they're folded right over left to signify that it's a corpse. I don't know why it's like that, but it just is.

"Ohhh." Honey blinks. "Okay. That's really cool to know. What do we do with the string thing?"

"The obi," Toki holds up the aforementioned 'string thing', "is tied like so." She ties it in a lovely bow in front of Honey, and then twists it around to her back. "You don't want to leave the bow in front." She says gently, knowing her daughter would ask, "It's not something I can explain to you now at this age, but it's very inappropriate."

Honey nods, and once she's straightened out, she hops off the chair to twirl. "I feel so pretty!"

Toki giggled gently and straightened up, glancing to her husband. "Someone likes yukata." She laughs.

Skylar was soon finished as well and Papyrus got up to let his son get a feel for his outfit. "Indeed so. It suits her... How does it feel, Skylar?" He asked gently as he set a hand on his son's head.

Skylar flapped his arms for a moment, and then made a pleased noise. "I like it. It's so loose! It's like being naked without being naked. Why don't we have these at home?"

"Mostly because your Momma is silly and never bothered to get any made." She laughed softly and patted his head. "Alright, go make sure Thumper knows what he's doing, kids. We'll be in the common room." She had every intention of going into the hot spring from here, but they had to wash first. She wondered if the showers were segregated or not.

"I wonder if Father and His Majesty received their own Yukatas as well... Oh goodness, imagine a toddler sized one for Solstice!" Papyrus got a soft giggle at that mental image.

Toki giggled gently. "I'm trying to imagine your brother wrangling his slightly stoned husband into a yukata. It's definitely an image. Solstice is going to be adorable though." She linked her arm gently with her husband's once she had put their clothes away, and then walked with him out towards the commons. "It's most likely that everyone has yukata. They're fairly common at onsen." She explains.

"I certainly plan to shake the hand of whoever had made these in the short time before we arrived, this is so comfortable it is as if it was made with my very measurements." He hummed happily.

"Well, considering that they were likely commissioned by Lana, and knowing how Monsters think that there is probably exactly one fitted for every monster in existence, its safe to say that yes, she would know your exact measurements. Though that's not exactly hard." She teasingly pokes his hip. "Other than your very broad chest and shoulders, you've a pretty slender set of hips, my love." She giggled.

"They aren't child-bearing like yours but at least they can take the likes of your lovely form." He teased.

"You enjoy my childbearing hips," Toki teases him lightly, her voice low so she didn't disturb everyone else. Her eye lights flicked around the room. There were couches and a big table surrounded by chairs for everyone to enjoy meals at. From the commons was the door out to the showers that lead to the hot spring, as well as the door that lead to the outdoor gardens. The gardens had a glass wall so that everyone inside could look outside. "It's... Lovely here. Wow." She mused gently.

Papyrus looked around the room. Sans and Solstice were already in their robes, the small skeelemental twinkling cheerfully in her mother's lap.
Tenebris and Asgore were just stepping into the main room as well, Asgore combing his fluff out to over his yukata while Tenebris was chirping happily at how his even had the accommodation for his tail in the form of a matching wrap for around his tail blade.

Toki shuffled her wings uncomfortably under the yukata. That was the only thing she didn’t like, was her wings were pinned to her back, and her yukata only had two arm holes. They were perhaps custom in pattern, but they were traditional in design. Except for Tenebris, but he did have a foot long butt knife attached to his backside.

"Sans? Where's- never mind." She spotted him within minutes.

The fire elemental was staring out the window making soft mystified noises. He didn't seem as out of it as he had a few minutes prior, which meant it was wearing off, but he was still not nearly as stoic as he usually was.

She'd dosed him way too much. Apparently this Grillby was a lightweight compared to the one in the other world.

Thumper came out with the twins laughing behind him. He was flustered, and his ears were pinned. Toki arched a brow. "Everything okay?"

"Yes." He huffed. "I just had my yukata on wrong. It's embarrassing to realize you put it on wrong and get called out by a bunch of kids."

She ruffled his ears as he wandered past, her brood trailing after him like ducklings. "That it is, that it is. At least you’re sorted out now. So! Are we ready to go bathe while Grillby relaxes with Solstice?"

"It was your first time, you'll get it right next time." Papyrus assured Thumper, before looking to Sans as he got up. Papyrus smiled as his brother walked over to his husband to pass off their precious daughter.

Tenebris and Asgore approached with smiles on their faces, "I am indeed quite ready~" the beastly scientist rumbled happily.

"As am I." Asgore nods. "It has been too long since I have soaked in a hot spring."

Toki nodded, and waddled her way to the shower door.

To her mild dismay, it was a mixed bathing bathroom. She pursed her teeth and sighed. Well, no privacy. Just open stalls upon open stalls, and the room was hot and steamy for whatever reason. "Well, it looks like it's a mixed bathing showering room. So, we'll all be nude and cleaning together."

"Oh good heavens." Asgore blinked. "Well... This is going to be interesting. I've never done mixed bathing before. Well, not publicly at least."

Toki snorts, and waddles over to the baskets of clothes. She pauses however, as she spots someone else in the room with them. Her mane fluffs up in surprise, and she realizes exactly why her brother worked here.

"Not like I have anything to hide." Tenebris snorted, though Papyrus saw his wife staring and he followed her gaze, before doing the exact same, gawking.

On the other end of the room was a light pink sheep monster; at least, that's what everyone would guess from the cloven hooves and the wool on them. But rather than the curly mess that usually adorned the familiar monster, her wool was weighed down by humidity, hugging her frame and bringing her true shape to light.

Her form turned as she heard the group come in and her light green eyes gleamed before she smiled and gave a soft bow. "Welcome!"

"Certainly explains the perfection with these yukata." Tenebris was the first to break the silence.

"Mostly perfection." Toki muttered mostly to herself, her wings again twitching against the silky surface. She stared a moment longer, because wow, one would not expect those curves to be on Lana under all that wool- and then she had to stare for even a moment more when she realized the sheep was in a bikini, and likely had been cleaning or doing maintenance. When she could blink and look away, she coughed and elbowed her husband. "It's good to see you, Lana. I wasn't expecting to see you working here though." She hums, and continues for the clothing baskets, taking both her husband and her brother in law with her.

There was a soft ‘oof’ from Papyrus, before he trailed along after her.

Her children were already stripping so they could shove their yukata and obi into the baskets.

Asgore elbowed his mate, and took him towards the other side, Thumper joining them.

Lana gave a soft giggle. "It is good to see you as well, Miss Toki! I hope you have been enjoying the onsen in the time you've been here. How does your yukaaaataaaa fit?" She asked.

"Well, so far everything is beautiful." She smiles to the seamstress. "It was a pleasant surprise to see that Kon got a job here. As for my yukata, it's lovely. I chose the biggest size that was in my closet, so it fits nice and loose around my belly. It also has enough room to fit both pairs of arms in the sleeve, so that's nice. Only thing cramped is my wings, but what can you expect from a traditional yukata?" Toki wondered idly if she'd grabbed the wrong one, but honestly she didn't know. There had been dozens in the dresser to choose from.

Lana tilted her head before she nodded in understanding. "A simple fix. I have finished my duties so I can easily maaaaake some openings to aaaaaaccommodaaaate your wings." She offered.

Toki blinked as she reached behind her to work on undoing the knot holding it together. "What? Oh no, I couldn't possibly ask you to edit one of the communal yukata for me. I'll be fine, I promise."

At that, the sheep shook her head "Communal? I made these ones myself." She announced. "I knew you would be coming, and so I preppaaaared aaaaaccordingly."

Toki blinked. "But... Once we go home, won't these be staying?" She asks, hesitating to shrug off the yukata itself while Lana was still there. Her beast family had all seen her belly nipples, but she didn't really want to flaunt them outside of that. "I mean, if you want to edit slits in the back, I can't change your mind, and my wings would certainly thank you."

She gave a smile. "Only if you waaaaant. They are your yukaaaataaaa's..." With that, she gave a small bow. "I will go and collect my sewing set."

Toki nodded back gently. "Thank you, Lana." She gave her a smile. "Take care... And go flaunt it, girl. Make my brother drool." She grins at her.

"Would it be expected for aaaaanything less~?" She winked at her with a soft giggle and strode out of the room like she was on the runway.
Toki wasn't ashamed to say she watched her go. Damn, his brother had landed a looker. Shaking her head, Toki shrugged out of her yukata and undergarments, leaving herself naked. She lightly rubbed her belly, noting that her teats were swollen along her belly. She waddled for the shower after kicking off her slippers and stuffing those away too. "Alright kids, let's wash up. Papy, careful with your cane. The floor is a little slick."

"Noted, thank you."

The children undressed and followed her to the showers, with Papyrus trailing behind at a slightly slower pace to make up for his cane, thankfully his had a rubber base so it wasn't sliding around too much, as long as he didn't put too much weight on it he seemed to be fine.

Toki kept a watchful eye on him as they went, and tried to keep her back away from. Her father in law and Asgore. Unfortunately, in turning around to help her children wash, she got a very unfortunate view of Asgore's hairy sheathe as he helped make sure Thumper was as thorough as he needed to be, and she got to learn more about her monster family than she ever wanted to.

Toki carefully cleaned her kids bones until they were spotless, and then had them wait for her as she rinsed and washed and made sure she scrubbed every crevice in her ectoflesh and bones. She read the rules sign while she did so. "So it doesn't look like cloths and towels are allowed in the water, but we can take towels out to let us dry off to walk back in."

"Sounds about right." Papyrus nodded in agreement.

"Does that mean I should remove the tail-wrap?" Tenebris would then ask, "I think that's a safety measure to keep it covered, Pops." Sans then piped up.

"I'd keep it covered." Toki hums, and works to get the areas under her breasts clean. Everything had to be cleaned to go in to prevent bacteria from growing in the pools. "The twins are going to play, and we'd all panic if they run into it when it's un-blunted." She says, turning and lifting and rotating her wings so they could be rinsed and rotated.

Skylar grabbed a wash cloth, and began to wordlessly help her scrub the bottom tips of her wings and her ankle furs.

"Aww, thank you, my boy." Toki gave him a warm buzz. "You're such a sweet child. Thank you."

"You're welcome, Momma!" He hums. "I know you can't bend down to get them."

"Meanwhile, I'll get up here." Papyrus announced, putting some soap on Toki's mane before he started to lather it up, a smug look on his face as he happily laid claim to her fluff.

Sans immediately caught on and laughed from his spot where he was scrubbing up. "Wish you were here, babe; your fire is like fluff so I wouldn't feel so left out." He joked to the absent Grillby.

Tenebris rolled his eyes, but smirked shamelessly as he did the same with the back of Asgore's fluffy mane. "Aren't they being silly, Asgore?"

"Extremely." Asgore chuckles gently, and turns to lather up Tenebris as well. "Such are young ones though. Ah- Thumper, come here." His attention slips from his mate to their furry son. "You're missing the soap on top of your head. Let me help."

"Okay!" The rabbit shook his head, soaked ears flopping and slapping at their arms as he got the water out of them, and he offered the top of his head for him to scrub.
Toki watched her brother in law mostly talking to himself, and laughed. She reached over, and gently tugged him under the spray with herself and her husband. “C’mere, brother. Just because Grillby isn’t here for you to enjoy his fluffy fire, doesn’t mean you can’t enjoy some fluff. Papy’s got claim to my mane, but you can work on my wrists while I help you. A mutual cleaning, if you will.” She wriggles her wrists at him playfully, and then reaches up to assist him in cleaning his shoulders where he couldn’t get by himself. They may not be pack anymore, but he was family- and familial grooming was pleasing her beast. “Just don’t poke yourself on the stingers. They’re retracted, but if you poke your fingers too far into the housing you’ll probably get pricked. I don’t think you’ll enjoy it half as much as Grillby does.”

Toki pauses, and glances back at Papyrus. “I’ll scrub your back after you’re done with my mane, love. Gotta get all the hard to reach places, so there’s no bacteria in the hot spring. That’s how people can get sick.”

"Ayyyy, Sister's lookin' out for me!" Sans laughed, carefully cleaning her fur as she returned the favor with his bones. "You're good to me, Tokes~" He hummed happily.

“You’re family, Sans.” She gives him a warm smile. “I always try to look out for my family.” Her fingers are smaller than his, and she slips them under his shoulder blades and into other crevices, cleaning them out swiftly and effectively between switching hands as he massages her fur. “Speaking of- you’re aware of the split in packs, right?” She questions gently.

"Whoooooo." He gave a loud sigh as her fingers delved into his bones. Her words made him twitch, before he looked back at her. "A split in th' packs?"

"Yeah." Toki nods softly. Her first digits worked his spine next, hoping to keep him relaxed. Well, sort of. She was half bumping into his tailbone with the swell of her belly, so she couldn't imagine that was comfortable. "Papyrus and I are branching off to make our own pack. The way things were going, it was going to come to blows with Dear and Papa, or Dear and Asgore if Papa pressed the alpha female issue." She hummed. "Its safer this way, because... Well, Dear will hurt them. I'm not mean by nature- you saw that when Grillby was trying to teach me to fight. You saw how much he had to push to get me to snap. Dear doesn’t need that push to do so much worse. Considering she has access to all the power that I have..." It would be one lone beast monster basically getting a beat down by a beast wielding the power of Kindness and Cruelty- of Balance itself.

There was a sort of noise of surprise from Asgore as he overheard it. "I hadn't considered that point." He mumbled. He nudged his mate gently as he finished helping Thumper rinse. "Had you considered that?" A dominancy spat with Toki would probably be fatal. No wonder she had wanted to split so bad to keep them safe.

"Huh..." Sans looked at her, before glancing up at Asgore and Tenebris as they came to discuss it as well.

Tenebris rumbled at his mate, before he gave a nod. "I remember my beast telling me what I had ended up missing in my rest... and indeed it makes sense." He answered. "Rather than who runs the pack as a whole, as we run different clans, we simply lay claim to this land as neutral territory. There is no tension if peace is kept, which should be very easy to do."

“Exactly.” Toki chirps, adding to Tenebris’ words. “That being said, I know it’s not fair to you to be torn between both, so... you’re welcome to pop back and forth, at least on our end.” She smiles at her brother in law. “To me, you’re all my family first before my pack. To me, family will always come first- the safety, the care, the health, everything. That’s why we split the pack- because the safety of my family was threatened by pack politics.” She leans her head down and bumps it to his shoulder. “Anyways... The only thing this is really going to change is pack cuddling.” She explains gently. “Perhaps pack grooming too. Nesting and grooming together is going to be different.”

“How so?” Asgore asked, looking to his mate for answers on that.

"Cool, soft boundaries." Sans grinned at that. "Least you aren’t making me choose. That’s awesome."

"Being that we will be of different packs, normally they would keep to their own, though I think with us being family, we are sibling-clans, which might allow some leeway on that rule." Tenebris explained to his mate. "At least... I’m sure it can work like that."

“IT just means we have to respectfully share the lead in any activities,” Toki hums, “instead of just assuming one or the other leads. Or concede to let one of us do one thing while the other does another. We’ll make it work.” She finishes scrubbing down Sans, and then gives him a playful splash of water over the top of his head. He’s short enough for her to actually do that. “And I would never make you choose.” She huffs. “That’s wrong. Anyway... you’re clean. Papy? Your turn. I think my mane can be rinsed now, and I need to get your back clean so we can go sit. Speaking of, will your leg be able to soak okay?"

“Sharing activities does sound like a good way to do it.” Asgore hums lightly. “You’ll make it work, I’m sure.”

“It’ll be okay!” Thumper giggled. “We’ll make sure of it.”

"IT'll be fine. Keeping the connection with my prosthetic while I soak might just help me with the connection link." He hummed.

Toki nodded, and then turn him around so she could quickly and thoroughly scrub his back clean. “Good. I’ve noticed you’ve been struggling with it a little less.” She hummed. Progress, however slow, was still progress.

“Daddy hasn’t fallen in a long time.” Honey chirps, and latches onto his good leg like a limpet. She rubs her horn against his knee affectionately. “Which is good. Daddy gets pouty.”

Hilariously enough, Papyrus reacted immediately. “I do not.” He huffed, though his sulk was slowly soothed away as he began to purr and hum under Toki's scrubbing.

Honey grinned, and chomped her flat teeth on his kneecap. “Daddy gets very pouty. Daddy gets pouty when you point it out too.” She giggles.

Skylar giggled too. “Maybe you shouldn’t mention it, Sissy.”

Toki chuckled, and spared one hand to pat her son’s skull. “You do get kind of pouty when you go splat, sweetheart.” She smooches his shoulder, and kneads her fingers up under his shoulder blades. “But that’s okay. I love you anyway.”

"Mmh, I have a right to be pouty. I look silly when I fall over. It's embarrassing." Papyrus grumbled, before grunting as Sans pat his back.

"Don’t even sweat it, bro.” The older brother hums. “We all have a fall at some point in our lives.”

“Embarrassing moments too.” Toki chimes. “How many times this past week have you seen me stuck like a turtle?” She inquires, lightly nudging the back of his hips with her belly. Toki hummed and got him clean, before making sure she was fully rinsed off. The downside, she mused, to all this mane was it took a while to rinse the soap out. “Alright. I think we’re all good to go for the hot spring. Papa? Asgore? You and Thumper clean?”

“Squeaky clean.” Asgore nods, and ruffles Thumper’s ears. “We’re ready to go when you are.”

“Good.” She smiles, and then goes to fetch a towel. She wraps it around her body, securing it under her arms, before waddling for the door out to the private hot springs. “We’ve got two separate pools of water to soak in, so we can split up and relax. I don’t want the kids alone in a pool by themselves though. The twins might not need to breathe, but that doesn’t mean other accidents can’t happen.” Thumper needed to breathe, and she didn’t want anyone having any accidents while they were on ‘vacation’.

"We’ll take the children off your hands. You take some time to relax." Tenebris assured Toki as he got up, grabbing a towel but draping it over his shoulder rather than hide his slit with it.

Sans snorted quietly as he saw the older beast do that, amused by how shameless their father was. He knew all too well where he got his own sense of pride from, and tossed his towel around his neck. His genitals weren’t on display though, so it’s not like it was as big of a deal.

Papyrus on the other hand gave a small face palm, the bone of his palm making a noisy clacking sound as it thumped against his face. He sighed. "Yes, that will do nicely, thank you, Father."

Toki eyed his shameless self and rolled her eyes. "Somehow I married into a family where my father in law is a yoga crazed nudist. At least it's all hidden behind your slit."

Asgore bashfully tucked a towel around his waist. Thumper chose to mimic Tenebris, and tossed his over his shoulder.

Toki held towels for the twins, since they didn't even bother. She rolled her eyes at the frolicking naked babies, and followed their excitable selves out to the dual hot springs.

They were both shaded, the edges free of the snow that covered the paths leading to the edges. The waters were murky and steaming, and there were several large boulders that gave the appearance of 'sections' to each particular bubbling pond. The cold air made Toki's nipples harden almost immediately, and she shivered.

She made a beeline for the farthest back pool, covered by the shadows of trees. It was also the most ‘tight’ pool, with less open spaces for the children to play. If she laid claim to it, it would be better suited for… Well, her and Papyrus to do shenanigans. Toki hummed, and paused, realizing she’d have some trouble trying to get into the water on her own. The water was murky, and she couldn’t see her feet to make the step down. “I might need some help into the water.” She admits awkwardly. “I can’t see my feet or the steps to go down.”

"Alright." Papyrus carefully got into the water, setting his cane on the snowy side of the hot spring along with his towel before he reached up to her with a warm smile pulling his teeth upwards. "I'll get you down, my dear."

Tenebris dipped his toes into the water, and made a pleased sound at the heat. Bemused at Thumper copying him, he scooped up the rabbit, and strode forth into the opposite pool from Toki, the rabbit laughing loudly over his shoulder.

Toki gave Papyrus a sheepish smile, and took his hand. Her wings lifted up so they didn’t drag on the snow, and she let him help her down the steps. They were fairly slick, and she ended up slipping a little on the last one, crashing into him with a startled buzz. “Ah!”

Sans stepped in behind her to assist his brother in getting her back on her feet. “Careful now. Water looks deep enough that you should be fine, but better safe than sorry.”

Asgore had settled into the other pool, and had the twins in his arms as he toted them to the shallower end of the pool. “Everything okay over there?” He called, worried about the litter in her belly.

"Oh yes, your majesty!” Was Papyrus's reply. "Toki just slipped a little on the last step, but Sans and I have her, safe and sound!"

"Yep! Toki's in good hands!” Was Sans' following response.

“Alright.” Asgore nodded to them. He turned to focus on the children, and getting them to a spot they could play where he could keep track of them.

Toki straightened, and gave them both a sheepish smile. “Thank you both. I’m alright now.” She gently wriggled from her husbands arms, where his rib had been pinching her nipple, and then waddled through the deep water towards the back corner of the hot spring. It was deeper there, and the hot water was warm and almost heavy feeling. Toki found it to be lovely.

While Sans strayed off to nap, finding a nice cubby where he could soak and not be bothered, Papyrus followed his wife and sat down beside her, a gentle smile on his face. "How do you feel?" He asked. "Does this help you take off stress and the weight of the pups on your bones?"

"I'm better. The hot water feels great." She gave a low groan, and sank down under the surface, leaving only her head out. Her soaked mane disappeared under the calm water. She relaxed on the stony bench, and made a soft hum that vibrated the water. "It does make me feel lighter. The weight is coming off practically and the knots are going away.” She sighs in relief. "How about you? How do you feel?"

"Do you want the long version or the short version?" He gave her a teasing smile before he sighed and scooted around to face her.

"I'm content... I'm happy, I'm so warm that it like I'm wrapped in your magic from head to tow, and with you in my arms there's no happier for me to be." Papyrus looked up at Toki, a smile on his face. "I have the most important woman in my life standing before me in her grace and elegance. You're more than I could have ever asked for in a wife, and as the mother of my children I know that it will forever be my duty to keep you safe, comfortable..." He slowly reached up and rested his hands on her sides, a smile on his face as he leaned down and rested his head on her stomach

"You don't need my help to stay warm, however~" The skeletal monster then joked lightly, a soft laugh rising from the barrel of his ribs as he grinned up at Toki.

She had to rise from the water so he wasn't gurgling his words at her from under the murky surface. She giggled gently, and brushed her hands over his skull as he nuzzled her belly. "It's my duty to keep you safe and comfortable too, my love. And, while you might not be able to keep me warm, I can keep you warm." Her eye lights glimmered with sudden mischief. "You forget though, Papy." She purrs lowly to him. A warm shiver skids over her belly, making her teats tingle. "You always light my fires in the best way, so in a way you do keep me warm."

Her shudder passes through to him and he gave a shaky sigh as he pulled her close, trailing a line of kisses up her form until he was able to give her a loving kiss. "Mmh~ speaking of…” He then started, glancing at her mischievously.

The line of kisses prompted something warm to bud in her chest, and she met his kiss almost feverishly. "Oh? You're still frisky from the car ride, I see." She grins. Well, it was her fault. She probably should help him. Her fingers dance down his ribs, along his spine, and then stroke along his pelvis. "You didn't get enough time with my breasts, did you? Well, lookie here. They're out on display, and ripe for the taking."

"Hhh~ don't sound like that's not your fault, my love~" Her husband hissed quietly, his hand trailing up her body to gently cup one of her breasts, his thumb rubbing over the soft magic-summoned tissue carefully. "You're so beautiful, and such a tease. What's a poor man to do when you go cooing in his ear?"

"Hmm, I really don't know." She let out a soft gasp as his hand cupped her breast, his thumb rubbing over her swollen mammary. It was heavy in his palm, full and ripe like she had said it was when he was teasing him to frustration in the car. "Mmm... I suppose, a poor man just has to wait until he has his lovely wife all alone... And then have his way with her, won't he?" She purrs. "I'm soft, and full, and swollen with young... And I'm all \textit{yours} for the taking." And she launched an arrow right at his kinks.
Almost immediately Papyrus shivered as a predatory gleam grew in his eye lights. "Oh the things I want to do to you would make even my father gasp." He replied sharply, giving her breast a soft squeeze as he pressed his face to her neck, giving her vertebrae a long kiss before he opened his teeth and gently nipped the bone.

Toki couldn't stop the tiny mewl that escaped her as he squeezed her breast and nipped her neck. Her flattened mane gave him the ultimate access to it, and she found herself making a tiny eager sound as her legs parted to let him scoot closer to her, even if her belly would be slightly in the way. "Mmm~ and what's stopping you f-from doing those things to me?" She tempts with a purr, her words stuttering only once.

There was a warm tingly feeling in her nipple, and then his hand was damp. He'd made her leak the first milk of her pregnancy.

"My sense of respect for you as a woman? Worry for hurting the pups? Who knows... But I’m finding myself losing the ability to care anymore." He purred happily. As Toki began to leak as a result of his groping, Papyrus withdrew his hand in surprise as he came to find the new warmth upon it. Finding the warm, green fluid that was his lover’s way of nourishing young, Papyrus purred and leaned up to clump his mouth around her nipple, summoning magic where needed to create a suction to draw it’s sweetness into his mouth.

He was a sly bastard to take advantage of that situation.

One however that Toki didn't mind. Her mouth fell open, and she lifted a hand to rapidly cover her mouth. There was a distinct difference in a child suckling her breast verses her mate. A child brought no arousal, only motherly feelings of love. Her mate, on the other hand, sent a curl of arousal down to her loins that no doubt he could scent as the hot water carried it into the air in the form of steam.
"Oh god- ah... Mmm... I'll let you know if you go too far. But please, feel free to take me." Her hand fisted on his spine, and she stroked him like she would a weeping cock. "I'm yours, my love."

He gave a loud groan and his grip on her love handles clenched in sweet appreciation for them as he moaned, his mouth moving gently around her nipple while his tongue swept over it. His gaze for a moment lifted and moved wayward as he examined their surroundings, searching to see if his brother was still around. He was, but he was immobile, a tired smile on his face while his eyes were closed.

Yeah, he was asleep. Good~

Toki kept a hand clamped over her teeth to try and muffle her sounds as he teased her nipple with his tongue and gripped her love handles. She felt tingly and warm, and Toki stroked his ribs with her secondary hands as he remaining primary rubbed the back of his skull. She was at least making some effort to keep quiet. They weren’t far enough away to be as loud as they usually were, and the adults in the other pool had keen ears. “Mmm… Shhh, can’t be too loud, or your dad will hear us.”
She groans gently behind her muffling hand. “Hah- your mouth feels so good, Papy~”

He hummed in reply, looking up at her occasionally as he continued his steady pace of taking in what her beautiful body gave to him. His hands would continue to knead though one began to travel between her legs to help egg her body on.

The hand that delved down into the warm water would find her core even warmer. Toki’s magic bubbled and churned with desire for him, desire that hadn’t gone away in the time that had passed between the car ride and the hot spring. Fire was all consuming, but fire was also passion- and now, her fires burned with a fervor befitting any roaring blaze, and it burned for him. The hand that slid betwixt her legs drew a soft muffled sound from her, her eye lights expanding and flashing with love for him. Between his hand stroking teasingly up her thighs and to her core, brushing his thumb against her button, and his mouth ravishing her breast, Toki was feeling quite thoroughly pleased and relaxed.

He knew it was good for her. He barely needed to ask- the look on her face told him all he needed to know, and it's with that confidence that he continued his treatment on her body, moaning and humming into her flesh.

She shifted in her seat, her legs sliding up to gently hook over his hips and tug him closer. Well, as close as her belly permitted. She wanted, in that instance, for there to be nothing between them, so she could press him flush to her and feel his bones against hers, feel his life mingle with hers. Toki gave a soft huff and dropped her hand from her mouth, letting herself pant as quietly as she could.
This freed all four of her hands to assault his bones, stroking them with a tender touch and just a faint tingle of magic to stir and arouse him. Her instincts urged her to release pheromones to help courage him, but she resisted. No pheromones would be needed for her to arouse him- she hadn’t had them before when she had been just a simple skeleton, and she didn’t need them now. This was her husband, her mate, the other half of her being and soul- she could bring him pleasure with words
In fact… “You’re so good,” She purred, her voice trembling with each pulse of pleasure his dexterous digits brought to her, “god, Papy, please- you feel so good touching me.”

As she mewled and pleaded, his mind further numbed and he gave a low moan into her breast as he gave a slightly rougher suckle, his hand coming to give her other breast a soft squeeze.

She nearly whined as his fingers abandoned her button. Instead, she nearly squeaked as his fingers glided up her belly, stimulating all of teats running up the front of it. Their areolas tightened, and she wondered if they might be leaking- her thoughts stopped as his hand found her other breast, and she sighed pleasantly as he gave her a soft squeeze. Her nipple was pinched between his knuckles, but it wasn’t entirely unpleasant as he rolled the malleable flesh in the palm of his hand, stimulating the entire globe of magical sensitive flesh.

It did not feel the same as when she was human- as a human, her breasts had never felt like this. But these, as an extension of her magic, felt everything. She adored it, and let him know with every soft, subtle sound, and every clench of her fingers over his bones.

"You’re so beautiful." He spoke around his mouthful, caring little of how it sounded garbled by his next drink of sweet sublime milk. "You're wonderful and beautiful and I feel like I'm high off what you do to me~" He moaned happily, caressing his handfuls of her body with utmost care, cherishing her for all that she was.

She sighed blissfully as he practically worshiped her, and let out the softest little groans and moans. “You feel high off of what I do to you?” She asks. “God… I feel like I could combust into flames with what you do to me. I need so much more, but yet this feels like enough…” She hissed softly, and her toes sliding over the backs of his legs as she tugs him closer. The pressure in her breast was abating, but she knew it would be back. “Mnnn…”

"Mmh~ shall I move to another teat, my love~?" He cooed, running his tongue up her nipple again.

The movement of his tongue against her nipple made her squirm, and she wriggled under him with a soft mewling sound. “Please?” She pleaded. “It’s so full, Papy, so full and tight and ready just for you…”

"Guide me then~" He teased, withdrawing his tongue into his mouth.

Toki huffed at him, and lifted a hand to her breast. The full one was cradled gently, taking it from his hand, and she stroked her nipple teasingly with a damp finger. “Over here, my love.” She purred in offering. “All yours to enjoy~”

He popped her nipple into his mouth and gave a loving suck, moaning as he pressed his tongue against it to give a tickling vibration.

Toki nearly squealed at the sensation, her legs twitching as her core gave a needy pulse. “You’re evil.” She groans dramatically, hands clutching at him with need.

"And you're addicting." He purred in reply, slowly closing his teeth to loosely hold the nipple in his teeth before he pulled back to stimulate a flow.

Toki gave a soft needy keen to him. “And you’re not?” She gave a needy squirm to him. “I need more.” She pouts at him. “I need you. I just don’t know how we go about doing that while you get to play with my breasts. I mean, there are my teats, but they’re not the same…” She makes a soft wriggle, and his leg bumps against her core. She rubs against him teasingly, letting him feel her warmth—how heated he’d made her.

He cooed happily until there was a shot of pain right up his leg where his artificial bone was, and he gave a low sound that was muffled by the breast in his mouth. Rather than reaction outwardly, he slowly withdrew and kissed her again as he wrapped his arms around her. At this point, he then slowly shifted to roll them off the bench and into the water.

Toki let out an alarmed noise as he clutched her to him, keeping her from squirming as he held her firm and rolled them right off the bench.

If not for the fact that the massive blob of flesh in her belly acted like a buoyancy device, she’d have sunk like a rock. As it was, she floated down almost gracefully in the murky water, almost unable to see him. She was thankful that they didn’t need to breathe, as she chuckled against his kiss. Her wings settled on the bottom of the hot spring, leaving her resting below him in the water as he loomed over her. Most of her ecto flesh floated somewhat.

Her eye lights glimmered at him contently, pleased with this development despite her initial alarm.

His own orange glow illuminated in the water and he smiled adoringly as he shifted to a comfortable position, pulling her along with him as he went. He settled so he was leaning against one of the sloped edges that they could rest against without emerging from the water, his beloved wife in his lap, straddling it as his cock added to the glow in the water, he was indeed hard, his wife having done wonders to him.

She couldn’t see his cock, but boy, she could feel it. It was pressing against her belly, hard and warm and casting a glow against her flesh that she couldn’t deny seeing, even in the murky gloom. Her hands settled around his shoulders, and Toki settled more firmly on her knees, knowing she’d need to ride him if his leg was bothering him. She shifted, and slid forward some to tease his shaft against his core. He’d need to help her—she couldn’t exactly reach down to guide him in, not with the massive lump growing from her belly.

A plus side to being upright underwater though—her breasts floated, and were practically right in his face.

That made him happy and he gave a pleased sound, muted by the water, as he pressed his face into her chest while his cock twitched between their bodies. A small bout of bubbles rose from him, no doubt him releasing a needy moan for no one to hear.

Toki most certainly couldn’t hear his sounds, nor could he hear hers as he nuzzled her chest and his member twitched against her. Her wings shifted in the water, spreading out and helping her maintain balance as she carefully lowered down on top of him. She was going to have to get used to this position, she knew— the cowboy position was what she’d have to do often on account of his hip. But, that was fine—she could do the work for them. It was good exercise and—ohhh. Her train of thoughts stopped as she slid down, the throbbing heat of his cock sliding into the depths of her core. Her walls fluttered around him, pulsing with each throb of her soul, and she took him slowly, so slowly, so that she may enjoy the first sensation for that much longer.

Bubbles trailed from her teeth as she exhaled a needy sigh of relief.

Her sigh of relief was his near howl of satisfaction, and though he took great consideration for her pregnancy, there was little to stop Papyrus from wrapping his arms around her and pulling her down as he rolled his hips up, the water muting his moans as his body trembled with excitement.

She pressed to him as fully as she was able to, her belly slipping into the space between his ribs and his pelvis. His bones rubbed against the sensitive teats that had grown there, and Toki couldn’t stop her buzzes from vibrating through the water and making the liquid almost hum. As soon as she hilted him, she took a moment and simply rocked her hips on his, enjoying the way he felt inside of her and how he pressed into everything that felt fantastic.

His void was the space she needed and it made him happy, so, so happy, that she fit in his lap so perfectly. "I love you." He mouthed into her flesh as he gripped her hips and lifted her up to lower her down once more, every time feeling better than the last.

“I love you too,” She mouthed back to him, her soul singing as she translated his words with almost ease. As he lifted her up on his shaft, Toki opened her mouth, soft groans vibrating out of her mouth and into the water. Every stroke of his shaft against her walls tingled in the best ways, and the sulfur in the water was aiding in it too.

Her soft moans, she thought, would be passable as the sounds of water. Or whale songs, if someone was trying to listen for them from above the water. They’d be fine, unheard by anyone above them.

Oh the buoyancy did more than just help her, it caused her breasts to bounce at an odd pace right in his face.

It was with that, that Papyrus gave her a squeeze and locked his lips onto one of her nipples again, suckling as he brought her down quickly on his cock, the sensations no doubt driving his beloved insane.

Toki was glad that her lungs didn’t exist anymore, because she sucked in a big breath as he took her nipple into his mouth and sucked down a mouthful of the tightness plaguing her breasts. She exhaled it again, the water rushing right back out like she had been created with gills instead of artificial magical lungs. She moaned, and let him have his way with her, her legs trying to help him as much as she could. Toki was at his mercy though, her walls fluttering around him as she nearly whined and pleaded to him for more.

Her hands were not idle, stroking and clenching at his bones. She stimulated him, stroking the bones and teasing him with great need. Her soul pulsed in her chest, tugging longingly at her magic for the release an orgasm would bring.

At this rate he would cum and only hope that she was going to reach her release with him. Papyrus sucked and nipped and moaned into her flesh as he rolled his hips. He was so close he wanted to beg, though of course his words would be left unheard by his love's ears.

Toki was close, telltale by the pulsing green light of her soul hidden behind the flesh of her breasts. It pulsed faster and faster with each and every suckle and bounce, and her walls mimicked each pulse around them.

In truth, Toki fell over before he did. Between his suckles and his nips, and his member stroking against the deepest most recesses of her core, Toki had little else to do but to fall over the edge. Her magic spiked under the water, and she clamped down over him as he hilted her, her eyes flashing and blazing with heat as she latched onto him. Her cry was just audible to him in the close distance in the water, and it sounded vaguely like his name.

Her hiltion on him had him jolting under her and he cried out as he wrapped his arms around her, rooting her in place to thrust his hips into her as deep as he could get. He wanted to fill his wife- he so dearly wanted to- he just needed that last bit to send him toppling over into the abyss of bliss.

Toki's hands slid down against him, and one of her hands brushed her fingertips over his spine. The others stroked his ribs like one might stroke a cock- she never stopped, even as she rode out her orgasm, seeking to drive him to his edge and over, so he might fill her.

He jolted and his cries of ecstasy were lost to the water as he pulled her into a final grind before he tucked in his good leg up to pin Toki as he filled her body with his magic, completing the blissful release that they both needed.

Toki trembled against him, her hands slipping as she went nearly limp against him. Her body sucked in his magic, absorbing it for a donation that she sorely needed with her body producing external nutrition for the litter that would be arriving eventually. It colored the lower part of her belly an interesting hue, and would make an interesting tale for them to try and hide, since everyone was naked.

What a greedy little thing~ Papyrus moaned quietly as he held her close, his form shivering as he settled down with his beloved wife.

Toki settled her head on his chest, her mane free floating in the water around them. Her furry wrists came to loop around his neck, and she exhaled water against his neck with a soft sigh. She nudged him gently, wondering if they should go topside again. The bottom of the hot spring wasn’t exactly comfortable on her knees, and couldn’t be nice on his bare backside.

His grip loosened slowly and he looked up to her as she gestured towards the surface, and he gurgled a sigh, before he nodded and smiled as he let her go to let her float up first.

Toki gave him a wide smile, and gently pushed herself up with her arms and legs. She drifted up a bit, and got her balance, before bending over to help pull him up to his feet. Once she was upright and her upper body was past the surface, she went to speak, and found her ‘lungs’ bubbling out a fountain of water that she had inhaled. She found the experience very uncomfortable, and gave him a bemused look all the same. “Bleghgh. Sulfur water tastes gross.”

He did the same and coughed a little before he smiled at her. "Thankfully I had a mouthful of something that tasted better." He teased, before pulling her into a kiss.

Toki blushed, knowing exactly what he meant. She met his kiss, and gave him a languid purr. "I would certainly say you did." She grinned. "More than just a mouthful though. More like several mouthfuls." She teased against his kiss, her arms curling around his ribs so she could cuddle him close. "I feel very empty now~"

"A pity I couldn't give you more, my love~" He purred. "But at least now I can offer you my body as your bed to rest and relax in this lovely onsen~" He cooed to her as he shifted to sit with her on the stone bench, before laying back, stretching his legs out before he sighed contentedly.

She giggled gently, and settled next to him instead of on top of him. She wriggled right up there and hugged him close, looping both sets of arms around him as she let out a soft, pleased rumble. "I don't need a bed, my love. I simply need you in my arms to be happy." She smiles. Toki shifts, and one hand wanders down to her writhing middle, where they had woken the pups with their shenanigans and basically a magic bath. "Jeeze, between the warmth of the spring and the romp we had, I think we woke the litter. They feel displeased." She gives a hearty laugh.

"Sounds good to me~" He settled happily in her arms but gave a soft laugh as he began to rub her stomach. "Hello puppies~" He cooed to them.

They squirmed and kicked against his fingers. Tiny feet pressed outwards, and made tiny lumps under his fingers. “They’re saying hello, and thank you for the magic donation.” She giggles softly.
He laughed quietly at that and massaged her belly gently. "Hello my sweet little siblings~ look at how healthy you are!"

Toki smiled faintly, though it was a tighter smile than before. "I hope they’re healthy.” She says, her hand coming to rest on top of her belly, out of the way of his hand as he massaged her swollen girth gently. The litter rolled, pleased by his motions. “We lost one already… I don’t think I could handle losing another one.” She exhales a soft sigh, and nuzzles her face against his neck. “Mmn… No more pessimistic thoughts. They are healthy- they will be healthy.” She huffs softly.

"They are definitely healthy. They're all moving quite a bit, whether to say hello or to fight for space." He laughed as he nuzzled her warmly.

“It’s a bit of both.” Toki laughed softly. “I’m not sure how I can keep getting bigger, and yet every day I find that I do keep getting bigger and bigger. But, they’re still quite thoroughly squished, so they’re fussing for more space.” She smooches his cheeks gently. “As much as you enjoy how big I am,” and boy, thanks to her conversation with his brother, a lot of things had been clarified and brought to light for her, “I look forward to the next time you and I can have kids, and I can be smaller. As much as I’d love to carry a single in a normal pregnancy, I’ve little doubt I’ll probably pop out another set of twins, but I’d still be vastly smaller than I am now.”

"I'm going to enjoy getting to fuss over them even more than I do now. I can only do so much as their big brother, you know~" He teased. "I can only praise their existence in my life so much before it would set off Father." He then snickered.

Toki snickered right along with him. “Indeed. Which is ironic, considering it’s my body, and I can encourage whoever I want to fuss over my belly.” She bumps her forehead against his cheek, and hums softly. “He does get possessive though, doesn’t he?”

"You've not only made yourself a place in the family he created, but you're bearing him children that are closer to his base genetics than even Sans and I am... and we're grown from his very DNA... That's special.”

“Well, yes.” She hums. “It is.” She sighs softly. “It’s still... awkward. You know Tenne and I were... Intimate.” She says softly. “Your dad’s possessiveness sometimes makes Dear long for things from the other world- for things that could have been, had we been stuck there. She’s explained that Queen bees have multiple mates, and she respects my wish to remain monogamous, but... Sometimes her instincts get the best of her. I think that’s part of why she’s not fond of Asgore, and maybe... partly why she’s so aggressive with both him and your dad.” She hoped Papyrus could see what she meant by that- she didn’t want to outright say that her beast saw his dad as a second mate that she wasn’t allowed to have.

"Yes... I know." He took in her words and considered his carefully before he nodded slowly and nuzzled her. "I'm sure once the pups are born and no longer dependent on you to survive, they will both settle down when he comes to have custody. When he has his new generation of beasts, and when she sees that he's already made a life for himself here..." He rumbled gently. "Perhaps then Asgore and Darling will have the chance to properly grow to be friends.”

“Darling?” Toki queried of him, bemused at his new pet name for her beast. She was anything but ‘darling’. “Maybe. You’ve seen what she’s like, my love. Dear is not forgiving nor is she friendly. She’s nice to you because you’re her mate, and she loves you by proxy.” Toki exhales softly, and nuzzled him gently. “She is spiteful, she is mean, she is... She is a beast. She can be protective and loving, but I think the term ‘Queen Bitch’ applies to her better than Queen Bee.”

He winced a bit at her words. "At least I know to save all my truest of affection for you if she really feels so indifferent by the likes of me.” He chuckled quietly as he kissed her head. "She might like Sentinel more if at all, I suppose.” He sighed lightly.

“She’s not indifferent to you, my love.” She nudges him gently. “She does love you- but it’s a love she inherited from me. She hasn’t gotten to be around you long enough to form a love for herself. She knows you from our memories, but she grieved your loss- she never got to love you, not until we returned home. And when we returned, it was bittersweet for her- for she lost one mate to gain back another.” She lifts a hand to stroke his cheek gently. “She loves you and Sentinel, just like I do. But she’s more… bitter, I suppose. She’s everything I am, and everything I don’t let myself be. I try not to wallow in the bad emotions. This last week… was rough. But I’m trying to get better. Dear… I really don’t know what Dear is trying to do, but it’s not productive.”

He hummed quietly as he nodded in agreement. "It’s sad… but it’s true. I suppose it can’t be helped for one so adamant as her. But, I still love you, and in the same I love her, so even if she doesn’t love me in the same as we love each other, it’s okay, because I will love you anyways.” He purred.

“And I love you.” Toki nuzzled her forehead to his, her scar grating gently against his bones. “I love you, and Sentinel- and I love you unconditionally. Maybe in time, I’ll be able to soothe Dear like I did with Cruelty. Maybe in time, she’ll change, and the bitterness will heal. She mourns Tenne still, I think.” She mourned Tenne in ways that Toki couldn’t let herself- to Toki, it felt like she would be betraying her husband, who was right here, in her arms, if she mourned the man she had fallen for in the other world. “Time turns all wounds to scars, and all scars fade with time. Well, most of them.” She snorts, and rubs her scar against him again. “I can’t seem to shake this one, no matter what form I take.”

"How interesting indeed. Then again, it was a key role in your existence so perhaps it's supposed to be there.” He suggested as he brought a hand up to rub her skull, his fingers ghosting over her scar.

“Perhaps. I mean, it came from the fire that changed me. Well, the beam that fell on me, anyway.” She giggled gently, and nuzzled into his hand. “At least it doesn’t hurt so much anymore.”

"I'm thankful to see that it healed properly. It would have been quite worrisome had it not...” His thumb stroked her skull gently before he came in for a kiss.

“Well, a big gaping hole in my skull would have been very alarming.” Toki hummed gently, and blinked up at him. “But, it did heal up, so that’s one good thing.” She lets off a content buzzing sound, and meets his kiss happily. She cups his jaw, buzzing gently as she relaxes into him with a content and happy noise.

As she grew comfortable in place, he did as well and gave a sigh to commemorate such a relieving position between the two. "I love you so much~" He cooed to her gently.

“I love you too.” She smiled adoringly up at him, and then settled her head on his shoulder. “You- all of you, the kids, your brother, your dad, my family, everyone- you're all my world.” She sighs softly. “But I’m a giant sap.”

"Well then this crazy life of ours is the tap and we're the bucket.” He giggled, seeming proud of himself for being so clever.

He was clever enough to make her laugh, and she gave a wholesome laugh, making the water ripple. “My love, some of the things you say are positively the best things to hear.”

There was a childish shriek from the other side, and then a maniacal cackle of equal impish quality.
Toki cocked a brow, her laughter fading off. “… Do you think we need to go check up on them?” She questions. “The twins and Thumper can be a handful- I wouldn’t put it past them to have probably flooded your father’s chest cavity.”

"I have faith in father, they'll be fine." He answered as he shook his head. "Only if something sounds off do I vote we supervise.” He then mentioned. "Deal?"

“Sounds fair. If we hear your dad shriek, I’m sure we’ll need to help him.” She nods softly. “Speaking of shriek- I thought the beasts were going to come back out once we were here? Or are they waiting until we’re settled in our rooms?” She shifts, stretching her legs out as they start to tingle from her belly compressing down on phantom nerves that no longer technically exist. Toki glances to him, and then quirks a soft grin. With a soft hum and just a small tug of her magic, she’s covered from the neck down in full ectoflesh. Her soft thighs bump against his bones, and she cuddles against him, green and glowing and plush, and very cuddly. “I think I did promise you that you’d get full body cuddles sometimes. I’m sorry I haven’t kept that promise until now.” She hums to him gently.

"I cannot speak for Sans or Father, but Sentinel is excitedly waiting for when he might be free to enjoy his mate at her finest." He answered, before he gave an excited thrum, pulling close her fully summoned body with a thrilled coo. "Oh god look at you! You're so perfect~"

“He can have me whenever you feel like sharing.” Toki giggles, and leans into him. “I doubt I’m perfect, Papy. But I’m glad you enjoy it. I’m certainly soft enough for you, I think.” She pinches one of her thighs. She’d retained most of her form from when she’d been a beast, meaning her thighs were toned, and her body padded to a healthy level.

And when she pinched, his wandering hands did the same and he cooed as he squeezed her thighs. "Oh wow, feel these muscled beauties. I bet you could effortlessly pin someone between these~"

Toki laughs. “When I was a beast, I could squash a watermelon between them. A small one, mind, but all the same.” She shifts and drapes a leg over his lap with a cheeky grin. “If you enjoy my thighs, you should feel my calves. I was very active in the other world, and it looks like my ectoflesh preserved my muscles from there. Or at least the equivalent. My legs looked like your dad’s legs over there.”

He liked the sound of that and began to pat her calves as the leg came to rest in his lap, a long ‘oooh’ coming from him as he took in the sights.

Toki gave him a wide grin. “I know, right? I’ve never been this fit ever. Or plush. Being a female beast gives you equal parts layers of fatty tissues and muscle- Tenne said something about the fatty tissue being a thing to make females soft for cuddling, and more protected when they fight since most of them don’t sprout the same armor that a male can.” She explains cheerfully. “Y’know, you and I could go— never mind.” That idea died in its cradle, and she mentally thumped herself for even pondering it. She couldn’t just suggest jogging to him now- not with his leg. That was a sad thought- she would be able to do things that she didn’t enjoy, but he did. And he’d never be able to really do them properly again.

Unbeknownst to her, her scent had soured with the sad thought, despite the smile she kept on her face so he wasn’t aware of it.

He picked up quickly on her scent and he cupped her cheek gently, resting his head on hers. "Hey... hey... Are you okay?"

“Yeah.” She sighed. “I just… I was gonna suggest something stupid, and then I realized and remembered that it was super insensitive and it made me sad that you won’t get to do it anymore.”
Papyrus was a very active person. She could see him lifting weights and doing more arm related things, but he used to love 'cardio', but his bone graft, unless it became less painful and more stable against sudden jarring motions, wasn’t going to let him do that.

He tilted his head slightly, as if pondering her words. His sockets widened as he realized what he meant and he sighed, giving her a gentle hug. "Oh Toki... You thought about us going running, didn't you...?" Damn he was good.

He purred gently, before he smiled into her shoulder, "Would it make you feel better if i told you that father and I are considering looking into a weight-lifting set? I might not be able to run anymore, but who needs speed when you can be an unbending force for your loved ones instead?"

Toki nodded finally. "I did yeah. I remember how much you loved running with the wolves, and it just... Breaks my heart that you can't any more. That you had to retire from your dream job. That you can't do a lot of the things you used to do." Her teeth grind, and it's only because they're wet that they don't send sparks across the water top. "I'm glad you've found something exercise like that can help keep you fit. Arm strength would be good for you to work on." She gives him a hesitant smile, still smelling of sadness. There went her dreams of them running together. Or flying while he jogged. It wouldn't be fair to him. Maybe she could put him on Clover with one of the kids though and stretch her wings?

"Hey... hey..." He smiled and withdrew as he cupped her cheek. "It's okay, Toki... I'm a Gaster, and we adapt to survive. This leg of mine is just a minor setback, ya' hear?" he chuckled, "Trust me, I'll find a way to run with you, my love~ Even if I have to break myself to do it, I will find a way~"

Her teeth pursed, and she reached up to flick the space between his eyes, eying him with a bit of a grumpy look. "No breaking yourself." She huffs firmly. "That’s against the rules. If it happens, it happens, well, I guess I wont be running and we'll need to keep these legs in shape some other way." She puffs. "Running on my own is boring. I guess I could run with your dad, but I don't have legs designed to run like a beast anymore, so I can't keep up." She rolls her shoulders slightly, and then deflates like a popped balloon. "Though, I don't mind having my normal legs back." She hums. "I only had three toes, and then a dewclaw. Balancing was awkward."

"Father makes it look so easy." He agreed with that last statement before he sighed and nuzzled her, "I'll try to be careful, I promise~"

"Good." She huffs and nuzzles him. "For him it is easy, though. The tail helps with balance. All I had was wings. Teaching myself to walk had been a task in itself when I was supposed to be pretending to be a blaster beast." She comments idly, and stretches out her leg. She wriggles one of her fleshy toes above the water, the glowing limb winking at them with an emerald light. "I may have to test movement on all fours once the litter has been born and I'm no longer limited in what I can do."

"A task indeed it sounds like, I'm proud of you for holding out" He praised, before nodding to hear her explain her future plans. It's a wise plan, and i will be there to support you all the way, we'll find a way" he assured her with a 'we-can-do-it' tone.

She hums and nods. "Running on all fours was significantly easier. Part of me misses my beast body for that- it made flying easier too. I just had muscles, I didn’t have to use magic to help me fly. My wings are a lot smaller now than they were before- I'm sort of like a bumblebee in the sense of 'how the heck does it fly?'" She chuckles lightheartedly.

"No, but when they're fluffy and round and you adore seeing them flutter by, you end up not caring as much as to how they do it." He assured her. "And you, being the lovely, fluffy bumblebee you are, I dare not question for even a moment~"

She snorts a bemused plume of smoke. “My love, I might be fluffy like a bumblebee, but I’m hardly as cute as one.” She gives him a crocodile grin, pointedly wriggling her more than eerie teeth at him. “But I suppose you’re right. Besides… if I want to go flying, I can toss you and the kids onto Clover, and take you with me. Her saddle is fully functional.

"I might not be fully capable of running, but I am still your valiant knight."

“You are.” She reassures him very quickly, and leans up to kiss him. Toki takes a moment to simply nuzzle her face to his. “You’re my knight in shining armor no matter what you’re wearing- or not wearing, for that matter.” She gives his naked bones a pointed look, and wiggles the bony ridges that make up her eyebrows. “Nothing will change that.”

He nuzzled her back, and gave her a loving look, his fingers sliding up to card through her mane in the way he knew she loved. "And that would make Clover my eccentric steed, wouldn't it-?"

“Indeed!” She laughed, leaning her head into his attentions as his fingers massaged into her mane. She loved when he did that- it relaxed her like no other, and always felt fantastic. “She makes quite the grumpy steed though, doesn’t she?”

"I'm sure if it brought you happiness she would endure the likes of me." He chuckled.

Toki snickers softly. “Despite what you think, Clover likes you.” She nudges him gently. “There’s a small list of things she doesn’t like- rain, mud, snow, pretty much anything cold and uncomfortable for her. A lot of her grumbling is her putting on a show, I think. She doesn’t genuinely dislike any of you, or you’d know it. Summons aren’t afraid to show what they feel.” Such as Sugar, who took so long to get over her fear of Tenebris and whom had used to cower and run until she got used to the fact that the beast was not who he was all the time.

"Speaking of the girls... what do you say to letting them out to join us for a little? They’re part of you, after all, and I want to love every last inch of you by the time this trip is over~"

Toki gives him an adoring look, but shakes her head. “I would, but it’s too wet of an environment.” She says. “The air is very moist with the steam- just like it’s not good for Solstice and Grillby, it wouldn’t be good for them either.” She gives him a gentle reminding nudge. “Besides: summoning them takes too much magic at this point.” She teases. “I can barely manage to summon a couple small bees without feeling exhausted. The litter are taking a lot of my magic, alongside the magic I get donated from all of you.”

She didn’t blame him for forgetting- she often forgot she was supposed to be limiting herself. If she pushed too far, she’d hurt herself and the children- but she was used to what felt like a limitless wellspring of power- but not anymore. She had si- FIVE. She had five little souls sucking her dry to make themselves grow big and strong.

"Ah..." He nuzzled her gently as he took her words to heart, though it wasn't long before he changed the topic. "How do you feel when it comes to your magic reserves?"

“I’m a little short, but it’s about how I am on a daily basis. Maintaining my body isn’t any more draining than normal- it’s just making corporeal what usually fills out my clothes anyways.” Toki gave him a lopsided smile, and then stretched out fully. She let herself float in the water, her flesh buoyant in ways bones weren’t.

He gave a soft hum, and then hugged her with his hands on her stomach.
Was he about to? Oh yes he was~

“… What are you doing?” She squinted at him, and wriggled some in his lap.

"Just giving you a little leg up, my darling~" He purred in reply, his magic seeping into her gently.

“Leg up?” She queried, lightly lifting her leg out of the water and wiggling it. When the air proved too chilly for too long, she tucked it back under. “Really, my love, you all gave enough earlier.” She let him give just a bit more, and then drew his hand up to her teeth and kissed it, disrupting part of his flow. “I don’t want you to get too low.”

"I will be careful, my darling." He purred. "I know when to stop, and so I will." He assured her.

“I know you do,” She smooches his fingers resolutely, “But I don’t want you being empty. After all… If you’re empty,” Her voice dropped low, and she gave him her best impression of bedroom eyes, “then how will you have the energy for us to fool around tonight? I can hardly suck you off if you’re falling asleep on me, now can I?”

Oh fuck me, his train of thought ground to a halt. His magic flow stopped as if she had literally grabbed it by the throat.

She grinned at him, and formed her tongue to lick one of his fingers, sucking it into her mouth playfully. Men were easy to play with- human men, and skeleton men. “That’s what I thought.” She purred softly, eye lights glowing warmly at him.

He hesitated before he hid his face in her fluff, his hands going to her chest as he murmured into her back.

Her mane was still soaking wet, so there wasn’t much fluff to hide in. She simply grinned and nuzzled him. “You’re adorable when you’re flushed.” She let his hands hide under her breasts, and she giggled softly at him.

"You make my soul flutter when you talk like that.” He blushes.

She giggles. “I know I do. And I love how you respond when I get you so flustered.”

He grumbled quietly and kissed her on the back of her head. "I love you~"

“I love you too.” She laughs heartily. “Doesn’t mean I’ll ever stop teasing you though.” She beams. “It’s too much fun.”

He chuckled quietly before startling as there was suddenly panicked yelping from the other pool, closely followed by evil cackles from the children.

Toki blinked, and exhaled softly. "I’d bet money that they’re trying to drown your dad.” She sighs. "We should probably go help him."

"I agree. Sans will be fine- it’s not like a skeleton can drown." Papyrus agreed as he began to get up.

Him getting up dumped her right out of his lap. She squeaked, and disappeared under the surface for a moment until her ectoflesh brought her back up. "Ruuuude." She rolls her eyes, and de-summons what flesh she can.

"Sorry.” He gave her a small smile, reaching out to help her up.

Toki let him haul her up, and gave him a lopsided smile. “It’s fine- it’s not like ectoflesh didn’t let me float.” She waddled with him to the entrance stairs, sloshing through the warm water. She fetched his towel for him, and his cane, and held them up to him so he could climb out and put them on to travel to the other hot spring. The towel would help keep the heat in, since the air was chilly.

Towel around his waist, Papyrus took up his cane and followed his wife to the other pool. Tenebris was sitting on the stairs, his nose hidden in a rag as he gave coughs that were the telltale sign of water up the nose. Held in his magic were the skeletal children and Thumper. Skylar and Thumper were lightly worried, though Honey looked shameless.

"Told you he has nostrils!" Their daughter crowed.

Toki sighed. “Looks like they tried to drown you, Papa. You alright?” She gave Honey a sharp look, and made her way to the stairs. She fiddled at the edge, waiting for Papyrus to go in so she could get assistance in. She had diamond nipples from the cold air. “You may have went a little far, Honey.”

"I have never felt so outsmarted by a child." He growled quietly, leering at Honey, who continued to look proud of herself even as Papyrus plucked her form out of the air, using his own magic to shoo away Tenebris’ grip on the child’s soul.

"I tried to stop her!" Thumper defended himself.

“And what exactly did she do that got water up your usually hidden nostrils?” She asked curiously, and glanced at Honey again. The severity of her daughter’s punishment would depend upon what she did to her grandfather that had him coughing.

"They tried to drown me and failed. Then, Honey came and kissed right over my nostrils... she had water in her mouth.” He admitted bashfully.

Toki furrowed her brows at her daughter. “Honey,” She says, her tone already shifting towards scolding as she got settled into the water with Asgore’s help, since her husband was wrangling their daughter. Once her towel was on the side of the tub, and she was in the water, she crossed her secondary arms over her breasts, and put her primary arms on her hips. She was the epitome of pregnant, disappointed mom. “When we get home, you’ve got four days with none of your shows, and no video games. Same for you, Skylar- you didn’t stop your sister, so you’re in it as well. Thumper, your scolding isn’t up to me, so that’s on your parents.” She eyed the bunny, but mostly fixated her stare upon her children. “We’ve talked about this, children- and you’re smart enough to understand. Creatures with lungs and flesh can’t get water up their noses, or it’s bad and they can drown.”

“But-” Skylar protested, his orange eye lights flashing with upset.

“No buts.” Toki quipped. “No shows, no video games. If you have to do something you can play with your toys, read a book, or go outside.” Toki sighed and deflated, before moving over to take a seat on one of the benches. “Really though, Papa. Shame on you for being fooled by a toddler.”

Granted, they were scary smart toddlers who were more akin to a kindergartener or first-grader in intelligence, but a toddler none the less.

"How was i supposed to know she'd pull a trick like that!?” he grumbled softly in reply. "Your children are frighteningly clever."

"They get it from my husband." She replied flatly, and arches her brows. "Should tell you what to expect from your own litter, no? My mischief and your smarts.”

He rubbed his nasal holes, and then sniffled quietly and grumbled. "I'm tired, hush."
"You're tired, huh?" She arched her brows. "Poor old man, so tired. Do you need a nappy?" She coos at him, amused and teasing sarcasm thick in her voice.

"Shush up, you." He stuck his tongue out at her.

"Stick it out for too long, and someone might decide they can keep it." She replied almost automatically, before flushing and realizing just how sexual it sounded. "By keeping it, I mean grabbing it with some pliers and giving it to Asgore." She clarifies, so she hopefully doesn't set off sentinel and make him possessive.

His tongue slithered back into his mouth and he simply stared at her with a pout, before he grinned widely, "I mean I give it to him anyways in all manners." He spoke softer as he grinned at her.

"And that is inappropriate to have around the children." She splashes water at him, despite the fact that splashing was frowned upon in an onsen, save by young children. It wasn't like there was anyone but family members in there after all.

He chuckled and slipped into the water once more as Papyrus settled down with Honey and Skylar in his arms. Thumper was deposited with Asgore, and the beast sighed, dipping the rag he held in the hot water before he draped it over his eyes. "Mhhh~"

Toki watched her family settle down and relax, and snorted softly. They’d just need her brother in law to wake up, and then he’d probably pop over. For now, she settled down with a soft sigh, and was content to semi-doze in the hot water as her body set to absorbing the heat, and perhaps, converting it to energy.
Chapter 137

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: True to word, two months and a day (which is the closest Sunday to the first) after the start of our hiatus, we’re back. While I might have liked to prolong it given my family situation, it’s not fair to you guys who aren’t up to date. That said...

It’s good to be back- and I’m happy to be back, honestly. We’ve both missed you guys a whole lot, and we’ve missed posting. It’s been… Hectic since we took a break. Mentally, I’m in a better place than I was before, but things have had their ups and downs as they always do.

Right now, for instance, my grandmother is in the hospital, having broken her hip and having to have had a partial hip replacement, and she’s caught pneumonia, so she’s in a bit of a mess and my family is a bit of stress and chaos right now.

One of the good things about this break, was it actually gave us time to just… write or rp at our leisure. We actually had days where we didn’t write at all, and we simply enjoyed each other’s company and played games together or Rp’d other stuff that was TOTU AU related.

Tbh, not worrying about meeting a deadline was loads off of my stress levels, and when I wasn’t stressed, I wasn’t frothing at the mouth and stressing out Silver.

Not stressing also let us finish book 2 for TOTU, so there’s that. Y’all have quite a few chapters to look forward to. The next arc is a long one.

Thank you guys for being patient with us and for having stayed with us for so long. We appreciate all of you who have loyally stayed, those of you who have come and gone, and those of you who are just joining this crazy bandwagon that is this fucktrain.

Silverwing Notes: -KICKS IN THE DOOR- WHATS UP FUCKERS WE'RE BACK.
It's good to be back too! Like Strider said, our lack of a deadline totally kicked us ahead, we've got chapters into next year, WHOO!
I'm real glad ya'll waited for us, because MAN are we getting to the coup de' grace of this fuckfest of a story, and here you guys sit reading the entrance into the next chapter, I'm so honored~ So THERE YOU GO.

fuckin ENJOY Chapter 137 and WELCOME BACK TO TALE OF THE UNDERGROUND!

Enjoy the chapter~!

With the lack of owning a new and untrained puppy, they all thought they were free from such a disaster, but what they did not count for was a very huffy and puffy, and very irate bird, who did what ever he damn well pleased.

And so when Tenebris came to discover his shoes chewed and torn to pieces with a familiar beak mark, there was a bellow of anguish and rage that made it well into the home of Toki.

As if to escape the punishment he knew was coming, Sobek squawked and proceeded to high-tail it upstairs to hide under the bed in Honey's room.

After a relaxing weekend at the onsen, Toki had come home to her house in order. Surprisingly, Undyne had even cleaned it when she’d agreed to look after their pets and the summons for them.

However, all good things weren’t meant to be. The roar that echoed over the village made her cringe, and it only took her seeing Sobek scampering upstairs to know just what he’d done. The little asshole had no doubt gotten himself into some sort of trouble over at Tenebris’ house, and had escaped Undyne to do it.

“He’s such a shitlord,” Toki hissed quietly to herself, as she prepared for the inevitable teleportation in that her father in law would be doing. She wondered just what got chewed up, and how expensive it was. She rubbed her belly, and braced for the incoming.

Oh Tenebris was pissed, definitely. His wonderful new shoes hadn't seen the dawning of a full year before Sobek got into them. Indeed he teleported, but not into her home.

The front door was knocked upon, nearly rattling on its frame.

Toki grimaced as he rattled the front door. She ushered the children into the living room with her husband, and approached the front door and opened it with a nearly innocent smile. “Hello! What’s up?” She asks, casually leaning on the frame so he doesn’t just barge in and murder the hiding bird beast.

Sobek was going to get a scolding. Oh, the bird was going to get a scolding. Toki was going to have words with him.

"Hello, Toki darling.” Her father-in-law had a deathly calm tone and a unwavering smile on his face that was almost sugar sweet. "Tell me, have you seen Sobek? I do believe I have plans to use him tonight as dinner, as he seems to have taken kindly to do that to my rather expensive pair of shoes."

Toki gave him a sunny smile in return to his false sweet smile. "Now father, I'm sure eating Sobek wouldn't be good for your insides. You'd also make Honey cry. He ate your nice shoes?" She queries. "Why don't I pay for a new pair?"

"I adore the child but the bird has to pay for this." He growled quietly as he held up the ruined shoes. Toki gave him a saccharine smile. "He'll pay." She promises with a nod. "He'll definitely pay. But, how about we let him sweat it out, worry about when he’s going to pay, and while he's worrying and fretting, we take a trip to town and go get you another pair- or in fact, how about two pairs of shoes? Maybe even some baby booties for when your new little ones get to running around?” She could guess and estimate the size needed- and it wasn’t like they couldn't strap them on early for baby pictures.

Toki could butter someone up like a piece of toast when she wanted.

At her offer, he cleared his throat quietly. "I... suppose we can reach an agreement." He was a lying bastard- and obviously trying not to say yes immediately, but his tail was wagging behind him.
“Well alright then.” She gives him a smile. “How about you go get your car, and I'll get Papy and the kids ready? I wanted to take him to the game store anyways.” Honey was still grounded, but she could still pick out a game to play once she wasn’t grounded from them. "He's played Portal and Portal 2 to the point that I can quote them verbatim in some parts. We can take one car, so it’s more gas efficient. Though… How many can your car seat?” She questions. It would need to seat the driver, and four passengers.

"Five. Six if I’m not driving." He answered, before he gave her a wry and bemused grin. "No going into labor away from home this time, okay?" He laughed quietly.

“Looks like us and the twins will fit.” She hums. "Thumper’s got school, so he’s busy- Asgore will be fine with the house to himself, yeah?” She blinks at him slowly and then giggles. Her hands drop down to her belly, and she strokes it as she leans away from the door. “Despite the fact I look like a planet, I get the feeling it’s too early. I think your seats are safe from my waters breaking on them this time.” She gives him a mischievous grin. "However, I know who to call if your litter decides they want to be late to their own due dates, don’t I?” She teases.

"Don’t jinx it." He stuck his tongue out at her.

She reached up and gripped his tongue between her fingers, giving it a gentle tug. “I'm not going to jinx it, you silly old man.” She grins at him. “But, if we're off to town, be prepared to make some stops. You recall Lana took some time on our vacation to teach me how to properly crochet while you and the boys were having your… I don't know what you want to call it. Your yukata verses skins wrestling match out in the garden? Anyways, she was at least reminding me how to properly crochet, so I could be on par with her class. Well, anyway, all my yarn and needles were burnt up when the original house and shed were firebombed, so I need new yarn.” She let his tongue go, and wiped her fingers on her dark pants.

“So we will be stopping by the crafts store as well. That's fine, I was hoping to pick up some things there as well, I needed an excuse." He laughed.

Toki nods. "That's fair." She gives him a cheeky grin. "Your children," She pats her belly, "have also been making me crave a milkshake. A banana and Oreo milkshake- and I haven’t been able to satisfy it here. Grillby, for once, can't match the flavor I'm craving. So, I may heckle you into stopping at the Dairy Royals for milkshakes for everyone."

"Consider it done." He chuckled, "I could use one myself."

"Alright. You get the car, I'll get my kids and husband, and meet you outside." She gives him a lopsided smile. "Might be a few minutes, but I'll go as quick as I safely can."

"Can do." He answered, taking his shoes with him as he left.

Toki watched him go, and then closed the front door, padding back to the living room. She exhaled with a soft sigh, and glanced at her husband. "Well, the good news is, I managed to keep Sobek from being turned into a turkey-dinner.” She says lightly. “Bad news is, he ate your dad’s shoes, so now we’re off on a family trip to town."

"Don’t let Honey catch you saying that first part." Papyrus chuckled quietly. "Though indeed, he seemed too well behaved today... I was expecting some sort of disaster.”

“Chewed shoes is disaster in itself.” She snorts. “Though, we'll make a trip of it. We're going to stop at the,,” She paused, and whispered, so the kids didn’t hear, “the game store, so we can pick up some more games for you, and some games for the kids to play too. Also going to stop at the craft store, so I can get yarn and crochet hooks. And... Milkshakes.

Well didn’t he look excited to hear that. "Ooooooh!" He cooed. "What a trip this is going to be."

“Mhm! We're taking his car. So... You go get yourself ready, and I’ll wrangle the kids. Meet here in ten?” She hums up to him.

"You got it." He kissed her head and went to get ready.

She went to get the kids and herself ready as well.

Lo and behold, ten minutes from the time they parted, Toki had both kids downstairs and ready to go with their travel bags of toys, and an extra set of clothes in a diaper bag for her. Children were messy, after all. She’d also wrangled Sobek into one of the bedrooms, as a ‘timeout’ of sorts, and left Snuggle with free reign of the house. Both kids clung to her secondary hands, while her primary hands held her purse and the diaper bag of kids clothes. Toki also had her husband’s wallet and keys ready for him. He’d need to carry the car seats and get them set up in the back of Tenebris’ car.

She could hear his car outside. “Your dad is outside, Pap!” She calls to him. “I’ve got your wallet and keys, if you don’t mind getting the car-seats for the kids.” She wasn’t supposed to carry them anyway. They’re heavy.

"Thank you Toki!” Papyrus piped up as appeared at the top of the stairs, making his way slowly but carefully in his usual town attire.

Toki watched him come down the stairs, and then head for their garage. She hit the button on his keys to open the garage door for him so he didn't have to walk back through the house. While he got the car seats, she tugged the kids outside.

Honey waved at her grandpa. "Papa!" She shrieked happily, nearly deafening her mother. "We're gonna go to town! Isn't that exciting?"

"Hello, Honey." He laughed gently. "Oh yes it's very exciting." He laughed.

Honey wriggled away from her mother, and half popped through his open passenger window to beam at him. Her horns clacked against the car briefly, before she ducked inside partially. "Momma said we're gonna get milkshakes." She grins at him. "Can you get a brain freeze? If you can, do your little nose holes open?" She asks.

His granddaughter was ever the questioning individual.

"I am still bitter about what you did, my dear Honey.” Tenebris rumbled quietly. "Therefore, I am not going to answer your question." He leaned across the passenger seat to pat her head gently before he turned his gaze upward and looked up at his granddaughter’s mother. "Are you ready, my dear?”

Honey pouted at him. "I said I was sorry." She wilted a bit. "I didn't mean to make your nose hurt." Her mother had explained to her the risks of what she'd done- and yeah, there was no guarantee she wouldn’t probably do shenanigans again, but they wouldn't be maliciously intended shenanigans. She didn’t want to drown anyone- she’d just heard rumors her grandpa had a nose, and everyone she knew had a nose except him, so she wanted to see if it was true. Even she had a nose- well, a nose hole. Undyne had a nose too- well, her gills were a nose. Sort of. Honey wasn’t sure how it worked, but she was sure it was a nose!

"We just have to wait on Papy with the car seats. These two are a little too small to be sitting in their own seats." Toki rubbed her son's head, and was pleased at the soft purr he gave in response. Months away, and he was still a big Momma’s boy.

And as Tenebris momentarily felt guilty, Papyrus loaded the car seats into the vehicle and got them set up.

When he was done, the tall skeleton smiled at his wife and mate. "Alright, I’ll sit in the back seat so we can go ahead and start loading them in..."

"I can sit in back, sweetheart." She gave him a smile. "I don't mind- i know your leg does better when you can stretch out. Now... Skylar, you're up first." She gives him a soft purr, and helped her son up into his seat. "You've got your buckles?"

"Yes, Momma!" He chirps softly.

"If you’re sure you’ll be comfortable back here. Though if you change your mind let me know and we will switch." Papyrus pressed a kiss to one of Toki’s horns, before helping Honey up into her seat as well, and then scooting around to the front seat.

"My love, I'm almost as big as I am tall." She jokes. She wasn't, really. But she was exactly as big as one might imagine some one pregnant with five babies would be. "There is no seat that is comfortable for more than ten minutes. I'll deal." She promised. She helped get her son settled, and then moved to waddle to the empty passenger door behind Tenebris. "Looks like I get to sit behind you, Papa. Mmm..." She wondered, idly, if she should keep calling him that since that was his beasts’ name. She could call him Dad. It wouldn't be that different. Maybe he wouldn't notice? "So, have you told the twins the story of how your car had to get the front seat and floor board completely redone yet?" She teases lightly as she gents in and works to get settled and buckled.

"I have not. And I do not plan to, lest I make them think they can get away with it again, daughter of mine." He answered with a bitter look on his face, before he sighed. "Let me know if I need to move my seat forward for you, okay?" He then told her with a warm tone.

“What happened?” Honey naturally chimed, and waved her hands at her grandfather. “How come you had to get the car fixed? Did you drop a whole lotta food on it?”

Skylar hummed. “I dunno- maybe not him. Thumper maybe?”

Toki gave him an unapologetic smile through his rear-view mirror, and then giggled. “I’m alright on leg room, Tenebris. It’s not my legs that need space.” And her lap was mostly full of her belly. She looped her arms over her belly and stroked it gently. Really, the only things squished were her wings, but it wasn’t the end of the world. “So long as you don’t slide your seat back or lean it back, we won’t have an issue.”

"Duly noted." Ignoring the banter of the children, Tenebris started out of the town and onto the long road to the city.

"Would you like us to stop partway to let you stretch?" Papyrus then asked.

"That'd be nice." Toki chirps to her husband as the kids huff and begin digging out their toys to play during the car ride. Twins were the best thing ever- at least highly intelligent monster ones- for entertaining themselves. "Instead of umpteen dozen pee breaks, you get stretch breaks for the pregnant skele-beast.” Toki paused, and decided she liked that term. She wasn't a skeleton- not a true and pure one any more- but she wasn't a visibly pure beast.

"Mmh, that's a nice name for you." Tenebris piped up. "A skele-beast. It's simple, and yet it speaks all that must be heard."

"I’m a breed all unto myself.” Toki jokes awkwardly. “To be honest, I’m still trying to adjust. Every time I get used to a body, something happens, and suddenly it’s not my body anymore. It’s a very disorienting feeling sometimes. Hopefully, this will be my last body."

"Indeed... Your soul is quite strong though to last through them." The older monster hummed.

“I just have important people to give me the strength to hold myself together.” She admits sheepishly.

Tenebris rumbled happily at that, while Papyrus smiled at her through the rear view mirror. "We love you too much to let you fall apart, darling Toki." He laughed softly.

She glanced at the twins, who were quite lost in their own world. Something about an evil owl man trying to eat a dragon man or something- her children had the most active imaginations she'd ever seen. Seeing as they were occupied, she shot a hesitant smile back at her husband. “Well, this last couple weeks have been proof enough that sometimes you guys aren’t strong enough to hold me together- that sometimes I have to hold myself together, or pull myself back together. There’s probably going to be more than just a couple days like that in the future."

"Even if you’re the one doing the pulling, we'll still be there to help along the way." He laughed. "Knowing father, he would even make some sort of bio-friendly adhesive to ensure you're kept in one piece."

Toki snorts, and leans back in her seat. “Before he makes a bio-friendly adhesive, I’m still waiting for him to make soul-condoms.” She says lightly, trying to lighten the mood before it could drag her down. She was going to fight with that for a long time- the dark emotions that was- before they stopped being a problem.

Tenebris laughed at that. "Have you not tried a rubber glove over your soul-?" He teased.

“Given the fact that you can only grasp a soul with magic, or touch it with something infused with magic...” She cocked a brow at the scientist. Then she puffed air at him. “Alright, yes I tried it.” In the other world, mind, but she had. At least once. “Not a glove though, but an actual condom. And no, it didn’t work.”

“I’ll tell you when you’re older.” She pats her son’s head gently. “Play with your sister, sweetheart. You don’t wanna listen to the adults talk, do you?"

“I dunno, do I?"

“We might talk about kissing and making babies.”

He made a face. “Blech. Nope.” He went right back to his toys.

Toki grinned successfully, and then turned her gaze back to her father in law.

Tenebris rumbled softly as the child was quickly persuaded away from their conversation and once Skylar had returned to playing with his sister, he looked up at her. "Perhaps there is something I have yet to try, I will revise my notes." He announced.
"I will offer what help I can, Father." Papyrus spoke up, glancing back to Toki before he gave her a loving smile, "If it means progress brings Toki that much more happiness..."

"Well... Not just me." Toki says lightly, and leans forward and lowers her voice so only Tenebris and Papyrus can really hear her. The kids would be none the wiser. "Remember, there are hundreds of thousands of Human Turned Monsters out there in the world, and more making the change every day. Eventually, they're going to run amok of soul play, and it's going to be beneficial for there to be a contraceptive out there in the world. People enjoy soul play, and humans don't have a choice in getting pregnant or not. Consider it the next great scientific leap. Though I guess I could go to Alphys about it. You're going to be busy on baby duty... And after all, you haven't figured it out in all this time, there's no way you could figure it out before the litter is born." Was that a dare in her voice? Perhaps it was.

Tenebris stiffened as he shot her a look through the rear-view mirror. "Now listen here, missy." He started with a grumble, making Papyrus laugh.

“What?” Toki gives him a big grin over his shoulder. “I'm just saying you probably can’t do it in time. That’s what, a couple weeks? A month from now? You're smart, Papa, and I know you've been thinking about it idly for a while now, but you're not thaaaaaat smart.” She grins. She was baiting him, definitely baiting him.

"I will fight you on this, darling daughter of mine." He growled quietly.

"Fight me?” She gave him an innocent look. "How ever do you plan to fight me? I think your fighting competition lies in the brilliant Alphys. She's quiet the scientist, you know- after all, I'm sure with you being mostly retired," she grins with pure innocence to her tone, "that you're out of practice."

"I am not out of practice!” He huffed. "I am still very capable of performing my duties as a scientist!”

Toki grinned. “I dunno, Tenebris, you could have fooled me. Have you even been re-reading childbirth and the like? Of course, I understand you’d rather nap at your age.” She wriggles her brows at him, enjoying sassing him. "I don’t blame you for being out of practice at all for both science and doctoring. Naps are irresistible."

His tail rattled quietly, muffled by his backside, before he huffed and turned his focus more on driving. "My chair is too alluring when it comes to napping..." He grumbled.

"Riiight.” She grins. “Still- the subtle dare is there, Papa. If not... I'll chat up Alphys. Maybe she’ll schedule a consultation with you for help on small matters.” She chirps cheekily, and then leans back to enjoy the ride, her eye lights idly tracking the line of dark SUV’s that were driving down the other side of the road. Black, dark green, dark blue- so many people drove them, she mused.

“You know, Dad,” She hums, “you’re going to need a bigger car. Than what you've got. Car seats take a lot of space.”

"I like my little blast of the past, but you are right. Perhaps today we might also be able to stop by where I can purchase a vehicle to accommodate our growing family.” He gave a soft chuff, before he smiled at her through the mirror. "You are right though. This can be for when I want to go out as an old man having his retirement joy rides, but when I need to take all the pups somewhere, it would be quite a problem.” He chuckled gently.

Toki gave him a bemused smile. “It'd definitely be a problem if you tried to fit... five car seats back here, alongside Thumper.” She hums. "Though, maybe not car-shopping today, Dad. That’s something you, Asgore, and Thumper need to do- cars are big purchases, and you all need to agree on something you all like, and can handle being seen in together.”

"I would not make a final decision today. I’d rather simply take a look around and see what is available so that I might have a place to start once Asgore and Thumper are both available to look with me.” He explained his train of thought to go with his previous statement. “Indeed I would want to make sure that there would be enough room for my children, as well as space for my dear mate's horns.”

"Still, it's best to go all at once- because if you see something you really like, you’ll be tempted to get it. Temptation is a terrible thing, and becoming biased is even worse." She hums. "But if you want to look today, we can. It's our trip out to town, after all." She stretches her legs a bit, and then shoves her feet up between the center console like a rebellious teen. She might not have fleshy ankles to turn into cankles unless it was summoned, but her bones hurt and elevation helped. She did her best not to bump her father in law or her husband with her shoes.

Neither beast seem to consider her feet where they were as a problem. Instead of kicking up a fuss, Tenebris tucked in his elbow, and Papyrus reached out to gently rub the feet that were now beside his hands.

"Would you rather we simply listen to the sounds around us, or would you like to see what might be on the radio?" The older male questioned.

Toki couldn't stop the soft, sinful moan that slid from her teeth as Papyrus' fingers sunk into her bones and began to massage them. She wriggled out of her shoes, and gave him a soft coo. "Hm?" She glanced to her father in law. "Music would be good, Dad."

With a nod, Tenebris lifted a hand from the wheel to start flipping through the radio channels, watching Toki's face in the rear-view mirror with hopes to recognize the potential of a song or a channel she might like. "Just let me know if something catches your fancy.”

Toki nodded. Her face lit up several channels in, as something happy and cheerful sounding popped up. "Ah- this works!" She chirps. "I like this well enough." Her loose mane fluffed up, and her shoulders gently bounced to the beat. It didn't take long for her to start singing along with the song-something she hadn't done much of since she'd been back home. "Nah, nah, honey I'm good. I could have another buy I probably should not. I've got somebody at home. It's been a long night here, and a long night there, and these long, long legs are darn near everywhere." She nudged her husband with a playful wink through the mirror. "Hold up now- you look good, I will not lie, but if you ask where I'm staying tonight, I gotta be like oh baby, no baby, you got me all wrong baby. My baby's already got all of my love~"

Papy lit up as she grew much more energized with the music and he laughed softly, while Tenebris rumbled in amusement, his thumb tapping softly against the wheel as he hummed to the tune. Skylar and Honey didn't know the lyrics, but both seemed to hum along to their mother's singing once they too caught wind of her energy.

Toki ended up singing along to most of the songs all the way into town, breaking only for commercial or when the children had questions that they needed answered. As they delved into the city and traffic made their travels slow, Toki rolled down her window to try and get some cool air into the car, since the city itself was fairly warm, though with a breeze.

“You remember the way to the shoe store?” She glances up to Tenebris as the radio went to commercial again.
"Oh of course. They're a wonderful business and I would consider it an insult to forget where to find them." He responded with a soft chuckle.

"How are you feeling?" Papyrus asked finally, glancing back at her. "Any urge to stop for a moment?"

"I'm fine." Toki hums. "I've already lost feeling in my legs, like almost an hour ago, so it's no big deal. I can make it to the outlet, and then I can stretch there." In all reality, she'd simply forgotten to ask for breaks- singing was very distracting, and did well to occupy her time.

"The pins and needles are going to make you keel over." Tenebris mentioned with a soft chortle. "Don't say I didn't warn you."

"Thankfully, the only flesh I have on me is my torso, so I think I'll be alright to escape the pins and needles in my legs. If not, well," She cocks a brow at him, "I've got two strong men to keep me from falling over. I mean, I know I must weigh as much as a brick house by now, but if you each take an arm-"

"And we hold her legs!" Honey chirps helpfully.

"-and the kids keep my legs steady," Toki continues seamlessly, rolling with her daughter's addition, "then I'm sure you all can keep me from keeling over."

"I suppose that's not beyond reason." Papyrus nodded in agreement with his father's words, before he smiled at Toki. He then kissed his fingers and reached over to tap her teeth, passing on his kiss. "I love you~"

"I love you too." She gave him a dazzling grin as his fingers tapped against her teeth, and then blew him a kiss, since she couldn't really lean forward enough to press a finger-kiss to his teeth. Her gaze is distracted though as they drive past one of the many down-town milkshake places. Her stomach twangs with a heavy need. Cravings were painfully annoying. "Looks like we're getting close now- the traffic is thinning out too. Downtown is good for that though." She sighs and leans back, looking out the window again. She licks her teeth to try and distract herself. "Excited?" She glances to her husband, obviously meaning the video game store instead of the shoe store.

"A little bit. Though moreover, I am more looking forward to resolving what our pet had done to our dear father's shoes."

"Sobek does sometimes make it hard to remember that he's a summons and not actually a particularly wily pet, huh?" Toki giggles. "I'm actually excited for when the kids can open their gates to let the summons visit their realms." She knew the summons needed to be there for trust to develop, and for the children to grow up knowing their summons, but Toki was ready for a time when her wood furniture wouldn't be eaten by the god damned bird.

"I wonder if one day we're going to send in the little larvae and have Snuggle come out fully grown. Imagine the most terrifying hell hornet you've ever seen, and it spends ALL DAY snuggling with a small child." Papy brought up the insect summon and laughed at the mental image.

"Meanwhile we're going to have a beautiful bearded Vultarian bird, sleek and elegant, and it's going to be the spawn of demons." Tenebris snorted.

“Well… maybe Sobek will mature by the time he grows up?” Toki suggested.

“Nope.” Honey chimes in from playing with her brother. “My little birdy is a dumb birdy, and he’ll be a big dumb birdy instead of a little dumb birdy when he grows up. I love him even though he’s "The dumb and eats grandpapa’s shoes.”

“So, looks like Snuggle will be the smart one… though.” She glanced at Tenebris, “I pity you. Two blaster beasts were bad enough. You’re going to have five in your house once our summons bring the new summons through.”

"Blaster Beasts don't have summons." The older monster mumbled, shaking his head. Tenebris explained his statement when he caught several confused looks in his rear view mirror, and opened mouths ready to correct him- because they’d seen his summons. "Usually we are more like the summons ourselves. Our race is very powerful in the ways of magic. However, unlike humans and monsters, we utilize it in ways that do not require incantation or summoning gestures. We simply will it, and it becomes." As he spoke his mind had wandered to that which he spoke of, and his throat had began to glow slightly as magic vapor leaked from the corners of his mouth.

"Father... You're fuming." Papyrus spoke quickly.

"Do I sound upset, Papyrus?"

"No... You're..." The skeletal monster gestured to the corners of his father's mouth.

It took the older man but a moment to realize just what he was doing before the glow faded. "Ah, my bad. That's one of the downsides of our magic... sometimes if our emotions will it, it could happen at rather... inopportune times."

Toki tilts her head and hums. “Well… I do recall most monsters needing gestures to do a good portion of their magic, or at least touch depending on what it is, so I see what you mean. The vapors are… interesting. I don’t recall having that problem as a beast. The only problem I had was keeping warm while constantly putting off heat.” Toki pondered magic for a moment. “Though I don’t think anyone uses incantations. Well... I don't, and technically I have a human soul. I do usually use gestures… but I think that's mostly out of habit.” Sometimes she didn’t, but most of the time the gestures were out of habit from when she’d been learning her magic.

"Mm... To each their own. I don't usually utilize more movement than I need to." Tenebris snorted quietly, shaking his head lightly. "Gestures are simply a way to warn your enemies of what your next move is going to be, especially if you are unoriginal with said movements."

"Considering most of my magic is either summoning fire itself, or ripping open the fabric of space and time to unleash a swarm of hell bees or hell hornets upon the world, I don't think there's really much my enemies could do even if they understood what my movements meant anyways." Toki snorts, and then grunts as she's kicked in the ribs. "I'm going to laugh at you though, if you expect not to get a houseful of baby summons, and you end up with them anyway. Remember, they're half of me too, at least genetically. That's at least bound to do some super wonky things to them.” Plus they had technically traveled with her through the void. Who knew what sort of weird shenanigans went on inside her womb? She just hoped she didn't deliver a large quantity of living slime-balls once they stopped drawing from her magic.

"You make me worry, my dear, if the spirits choose to follow your words” Tenebris looked at Toki with a light grin. "I'm gonna be jinxed and I'm going to be left with a gaggle of children and I'm going to be dancing on the gamble of whether I get a bunch of snuggles or a mess of Sobek-look-alikes!” He laughed.

"Well, that's what happens when two beasts bump uglies, and one comes from another world.” She snorts a bemused laugh. "Believe me, Dad, I wouldn't be surprised if you end up with a gaggle of them. But, it wouldn't surprise me if you got a mix of creatures. Perhaps some dogs, cats, maybe the odd lizard or two- we'll have to see if anything is summoned forth, no?" She quirks a grin at him through the rear view mirror. "Though... I'm not going to replace your shoes if your kids summons- or your kids- eat them. They'll be on you and Asgore for leaving them out."

"You're cursing me for disaster." He shook his head and laughed softly, before he realized there was something off about her speech. "Hang on..." Slowly, he pulled the car to a parking spot, and looked back at Toki, "You've been calling me 'Dad'..."

She glanced up, and hummed. He'd pulled in to park at the shopping outlet, and hadn't even realized it. She shifted her hand to undo her buckles. "I have." She nods. "It's just... I dunno. Papa is what your beast goes by." She tilts her head to look at him as he turns around in his seat, and then leans over to work on undoing the buckles for the children. "Now that I'm more in tune with my own beast, it's... I dunno. Strange, I suppose- I figured it would be better if I called you dad instead of Papa, since that's what your beast goes by. If you'd rather I stick with Papa, I can." She'd call him by whatever he preferred- and technically, since they weren't pack, she could just call him by his name if he preferred. She'd leave it up to him, ultimately.

He gave a sweet smile as his pupils widened. "I... I wouldn't care one bit if you called me 'Dad'... If anything... heh... I love to hear such a name coming from you~" He chirped happily.

Toki gave him a lopsided smile, warmth filling every toothy bit of it. "Alright then, dad. Lets get you some shoes. Well... Gotta get the kids out first."

"And make sure Momma doesn't fall." Skylar adds and gives her a pointed look. He sets his toys aside and helps his sister with her belt buckles while his mother gets his undone, and then he's climbing out of his seat, opening the passenger door to scamper out. Just like his mother taught him, he sticks right up flush to the car, and he walks around it until he's at her door. He opens it for her. "Ready, Momma?"

"In just a moment, Sky." She pets his head lovingly, and is rewarded with a warm grin that is nearly identical to her own. The only thing that changes it is the orange tinge to his bones, like his father had. "I want your daddy here to make sure I don't turn you into a pancake. Then we'd have to scrape you up and serve you up on a plate!" She jokes.

Honey made her way around as well, and gave her mother a petulant grin. "Cannibalism is frowned upon in most societies." She quotes cheerfully. "What does cannibalism mean?"

"Ask your grandfather." Toki chimes cheerfully, shuffling it off onto him. "It's good practice for him for the upcoming events in his life."

"Grandpapa!" Honey turns beseeching blue eye-lights to him through the back door. "Grandpapa! What is cannibalism?"

Hearing the children bicker as he himself got out had Papyrus laughing, while Tenebris paled a little, before he cleared his throat, "It's... something a child should not learn about... So... Ask me perhaps in a few years."

"Really?" Honey tilts her head at him. "I heard it in a movie with kids in it though. Kids and a scary rainbow boat ride." Her bones clack as she shudders.

Toki snorts. She knew which movie she'd heard it off of- Undyne had watched Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory with the children while babysitting them. Honey had nightmares about the chocolate river and the scary boat ride. "When you're older, your scientist grandpa will tell you all the things." Toki hums. "Not now though. We don't want you having more bad dreams."
The pregnant woman swung carefully around and hissed softly. Her legs tingled unpleasantly. Not quite pins and needles, but close. "I am numb from the hips down. So. Who's ready to steady the living boulder with legs?"

"Called it!" Tenebris got out as Papyrus came around and they both moved into position to catch her when she came out of the vehicle.

"No need to worry, we've got you" Her loving husband assured her with a warm smile.

Toki formed her tongue just to blow a raspberry at Tenebris. "You know what, just for that, I am cursing you to a house full of blaster beast summons." She wiggles her fingers at him and lets out a witchy cackle, before carefully getting to her feet. Her knees wobble, and she latches onto both men. "Pins and needles, holy heck."

"Tooood yooouuu." Tenebris teased, pecking her head as he supported his side of her. Her 'curses' went beyond him in this one moment of enjoyment to rub in his dadly-decreed 'he was right' bragging rights.

Papyrus boosted up his own side and pressed a kiss to her hand, "I've got you, my darling." he assured her, the charming knight as ever, he was~ How lucky she was to have such valiant males at her beck and call

How lucky indeed. Toki made sure not to lean on Papyrus too much, or she'd upset his balance with the cane. Perhaps she babied him a bit much, but... Well, he was her husband, and she was allowed to be concerned. Toki was a worried. "Thank you, my love." She smooches his cheekbone valiantly while the twins latched onto her legs like limpets.

When she could feel her toes again, She made a couple shuffling steps. "Alright, my sweet kids. I can't see you to move. If you want to ride on someone's feet, you'll have to ask your daddy or grandpa." Disability or not, only Papyrus could decide if he wanted to try and handle the kids clinging to him.

Skylar hopped off without complaint, and was content to walk on his own. When he gave his twin a look, she too moved to join him. "We can walk." Skylar chirped softly. "When do we get to have milkshakes?"

"After shoes and games and yarn." Toki laughs. "Otherwise I don't doubt there will be a mess in a store."

"Once I get my new shoes ordered, I will see about potentially giving foot rides if you two behave." Tenebris spoke up with a light grin as he looked down at the children, "Though only before milkshakes, if you earn them. That, my dear children, is up to your mother and father."

"And thankfully we've already granted you one easy step by leaving Sobek home. Lord knows what would happen if we took him into the shoe store..." Papyrus shuttered at the thought.

Honey pouted at him, and gave him puppy eyes just because. "We always behave!"

"No we don't." Skylar snickers, and reaches up to take his daddy's fingers in his own.

Toki let's her son take over her husband's free hand, and instead takes Honey's hand. "Alright, little ones, let's go get your Grandpapa's shoes ordered."

As Tenebris was freed of responsibility, he got ahead of them to get the door, a mellow smile on his relaxed face as he looked back at them. "After you."
"Thank you." Toki gave him a friendly smile, and waddled through first, guiding Honey after her.
Chapter 138

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And thus returns the nice shop keepers from chapter 74! It’s been a long time since we’ve seen them! Also- Silverwing and I gave up on editing the names. Ya'll are gonna have to deal with Cae and Aliquam. We like the names, so they're gonna stick. Though, I'm too lazy to go fix all the editing I've already done for all of the chapters, old and new, so... Yeah. Not a stress I necessarily want to handle. Anyway! Hope ya'll enjoy the chapter!

The sound of shoes being shined was loud in the quiet building. Shimada’s was much the same as it had been the last time Tenebris had been there- walls upon walls of shoes, the occasional display of socks, and several places where work was done out front. There were shoes in the process of being made, leather being dried and lacquered, and fabric based shoes that were in the process of being carefully sewn together.

Held in vice clamps to keep them steady and stable were shoes that were having soles of varying types molded and glued on. Shimada’s did more than just the basic shoes after all- they did custom creations, among other things. On the rack of things that were being resoled, several pairs of stilettos were visible, combat boots, even a pair of obviously dearly beloved flip-flops that someone wanted to keep.

Along one wall was a row of shoes that were sent in to be repaired- most of them had rips in them, or there was a spot where a seam wore out. One was a set of steel-toed boots that had been entirely squished in on the front of one shoe. A few of the shoes had been chewed on by pets, but none to the extent of the shoes that were being carried in by Tenebris.

Those had been mauled completely from front to back- and there was a good chance they couldn’t be saved. None of the shoes on the repair rack had nearly that much damage done to them.

There was a cough from behind the shoe-covered counter, and then an elderly woman's voice chimed clearly to them from behind the stacks. "Welcome to Shimada’s. I’m Yuri Shimada, how may I help you find the perfect pair of shoes today?"

"Good afternoon, Ma'am..." Tenebris greeted, "I was hoping you could make a pair of shoes like this pair. These ones were unfortunately left where my granddaughter's... Pet... Could chew them up..."

He explained, placing the ruined shoes on the counter.

Honey puffed her cheeks indignantly. "Grandpapa!" She complains, "Sobek isn't a pet. He's my birdy."

Tenebris gave Honey a small and doting smile. "Don’t make me think about if that would make things worse, my dear grandchild..."

Yuri leaned back and squinted up at him for a moment, before she blinked. "Ah, Mister Gaster! Yes, yes, we still have your measurements. Hanzo and Genji will need to double check and make sure they are correct, but if all is good, you'll have new shoes inside of a week.” She took a glance at his boots, and sighed softly. “That is a bit beyond saving, I’m afraid, or I would offer to fix it instead of making a new pair. It’s cheaper- but that is... beyond saving now. You must have one heck of a... bird... to chew up a pair of shoes like these.”

“She does have an... interesting bird.” The larger monster gave a tight smile. “He’s unique.” He then shifted to face Yuri, giving her a gentle bow. “Much appreciated, my lady. What shall I do with these... old shoes?” He asked, grasping and holding up what remained of the first pair in his possession.

Yuri toddled around the counter, and gave a rough cough, before clearing her throat. “Keep them if you wish- use them to distract your granddaughter’s bird from eating your new set. There’s not much we can do with leather and steel that is that... torn.” She tsks, and then whistles for her grandsons.

Again, it was Hanzo who came out. However, this time he appeared to be different than the last time they had seen him. Hanzo had completed his change. Where the man, before, had been covered in skin with bright eyes and a slowly forming tail, he was now covered in hard, dark scales, and seems to have a long, scaly tail hanging behind him. His legs were shaped a bit differently as well, looking similar to Tenebris’ in structure.

He even had similar shoes on- it was likely that he had borrowed the design he had made for Tenebris, and simply shrunk the size down to fit his much smaller human turned Monster foot.

Hanzo’s tail flicked and coiled as he cleaned his clawed hands on a cloth, and dried sweat from his brow. “Genji is on his lunch break again, Grandma. He’ll be done in just a minute or two though, and be back to work on working the leather for Mrs. Izuna. What is- Oh!” His bright blue eyes went wide at the gaggle of monsters in his shop. “Mister Gaster! Hello again!” He padded closer with a wide grin. “Here for more shoes?”

“He is. I know you still have his model, but I want to make sure his measurement is the same, and his bones haven’t shifted. Will you check them for me?” Yuri motioned to his feet with a hum. She glanced at their other patrons, and then did a double-take at seeing the heavily pregnant skelebeast. “Oh my word- can I get you a chair, miss?”

“No thank you,” Toki laughed softly, “I sat enough on the drive up. Thank you for the offer, however. That was very kind.” She gave her a warm smile, and wrangled Honey away from the counter covered in sticky shoes as the curious child tried to get grabby with some of the items along the top.

Hanzo blinked, watching her for a moment before going to grab his measuring tape and the stool. He brought it over, set it down, and motioned for Tenebris to put his foot on top. “Are those your grandkids?” He asks owlishly. He didn’t think it had been long enough for them to be that big. Or for her to be working on another batch, frankly- this was hardly the era where women were expected to keep pumping out children. But maybe monsters worked differently. He wouldn’t really know- other than his brother, he wasn’t really around other monsters. He hadn’t even been up to Nara Village before.

"Indeed, young man." Was the elder beast’s answer as he lifted his foot and took his temporary shoe off so his foot could be measured. He pressed it onto the stool, his pads pressing and his claws momentarily flexing as he made to adjust his footing. He wanted to be sure that he was comfortable when he was fitted as to ensure the best fit for his future footwear. After all, if he had to wear it, it was damn well going to be comfortable. "They grow quickly don’t they?"

“A little over, since we last saw you?” He glanced back to him, and then set to measuring his foot. “They certainly grow faster than human children. Though… I’m surprised you’ve got another round of grandchildren going already.” He’d seen pictures of his daughter in law when Tenebris had come in to pick up his shoes- pictures of her with her newborns. Yeah, she looked a lot different now, but he’d recognize that crocodile grin anywhere. “Twins again? And, uh… Hopefully not due again, right?” Hanzo remembered the story of her ruining Tenebris’ car.

The old man had complained about it, despite being utterly thrilled about his new grandchildren being here. According to what Hanzo had been told, Tenebris’ front seat and floor board had been entirely ruined, and the ‘stink’ hadn’t worn off for weeks, even after Toki had paid to have the entire front part of the car redone.

He supposed, though, that for a monster with a sensitive… Nose? A sensitive nose even without having a nose, a lingering smell in a car could be horribly, horribly unpleasant. Hanzo frankly wasn’t sure how Tenebris smelled things, but he wasn’t about to ask. That was rude.

Toki went to answer, but decided that nope, this was not her conversation to have. She moved over to Aliquam and cuddled up to his shoulder.

Papyrus wrapped his arm around her and gave his wife a gentle squeeze as he listened to his father have a moment of mourning for the original leather seating.

It didn’t take too long though before he picked up again and continued to speak. "I suppose there isn’t really stopping my son from doing as he wishes with his wife, it just gives me more grandchildren to dote over.”

"Except these," Toki felt the need to interject and correct, because these weren’t grandchildren and it would be awkward if he had to assume they were up until they were introduced as little baby Gasters, instead of Gaster-Naras, "aren't his grandchildren. Not yet, anyway."

"No?" Hanzo gives her a confused look and pauses in his measurements.

"Mhm. Dad here," She motions to him, "wanted more kids of his own, so Papy and I decided to surrogate for him since neither he nor his mate can carry their own. When these are born and weaned, they'll be his- and Papyrus’ little siblings."

Hanzo supposed that adopting explained how none of his children looked like him- he had been wondering how a beast like Tenebris could produce a skeleton. Initially, Hanzo had chalked it up to monsters being weird, but apparently they were normal just like people. Hanzo gave her a warm grin. "That's really kind of you. I bet you're really proud to be a Dad again, huh Mister Gaster? Do you know how many you're having?"

"Oh indeed... Five healthy young newborn pups. It makes my soul swell with joy to know my son married such a wonderful woman~" He responded joyfully. "And even better, Toki's starting to call me 'Dad'. It's just the best feeling!" He flushed a bit with a gleeful grin.

Toki snorts as his face darkens with a happy blush. "Dad stop, you're embarrassing." She covers her face and giggles.

Hanzo laughs, his dark scales crinkling along his cheeks as he smiles, showing his teeth had sharpened alongside his fingernails. "Five, huh? No wonder you look fit to burst. I don't even wanna know your due date- that'll probably jinx it and ruin another pair of his seats. Will you be bringing them in for shoes here?" He inquires, peering up as he marked off a few changes in the size of the shoes that he would need to make for his feet to be comfortable. His claws had grown, and keeping Tenebris happy would make for a continually happy customer who would return.

"I wonder about that, I really do. I will be raising them as I would a pack, and yet I have certainly wound up domesticated, haven't I?" Tenebris cupped his chin in thought, before he groaned and pressed his face into his palm. "Oh, I'm sure my dear daughter in law would love to ruin my seats a second time." He chuckled weakly.

Toki gave a bubbly snicker at his complaining. "I would never intentionally ruin it, Dad." She rolls her eye lights. "And there's nothing wrong with domestication. Maybe you could raise them like you were raised? After all, if they're simply raised like a pack, then they wouldn't know the pleasures of tea, or honey tarts, or anything like that." She hums. He did have non-wild family after all- and if he raised his children to be completely beast, well... Frankly, she wasn't sure how they would fit in with the world. But, mingling the beast with 'domesticated' habits wouldn't be bad. Tenebris would miss his tea if he didn't get to have it anymore. "Speaking of... I need to confirm an order. I kind of caved and was... going to get a single bee hive for leisure reasons after the litter was born, but I need to confirm the order once it comes in through my e-mail." She shuffled her hands into her purse, and then frowned. "Darn it. Dad? Keys please- it looks like I left my phone in the car."

"Ah, sure... Papyrus, would you go with her?" He asked. Though he turned to find his son had not heard his words.

Papyrus had stepped away from Toki and was currently trying to wrangle his mischievous daughter from trying to steal the shoes off the counter again.

Toki let him take over managing their mischievous daughter, and gave Tenebris a big smile. "I'm a big girl." She held out her hands for the keys. "I'll be right back, I promise."

Hanzo laughed softly, and took a moment to measure the new growth of the claws on his feet to accommodate for them and estimate for any further growth within the next year or so. "Best just let her do what she's gonna do, big boss man. Pregnant women get feisty when men try to limit them because of their 'delicate condition'."

"I do not think I could stop her even if I tried... Toki is not a woman to take orders..." He procured his keys slowly, holding them in his fingers as he contemplated going with her.

"Well..." Toki managed to grin at him and snagged the keys from his fingers once he procured them. "Not all the time anyway. Sometimes I'll take orders, but only in special locations and usually only for Papyrus." She wiggles her brows at him, before waddling out of the store.

Hanzo paused, and flushed a bright hue under his dark scales. They changed to a lighter color, reflecting his blush. "... Did she... just mean what I think she meant?" Dear lord, he wasn't used to such forward women.

Papyrus pressed his face into his hand with a quiet groan. That was his wife, good gracious. Of course she would pop off with something like that- she had become so much bolder since she had come back from the other world. It was refreshing, but it had it's moments where it was embarrassing as all get out.

Tenebris cleared his throat quietly. "I... have.... no comment on this." He murmured.

"Momma says funny things and it makes people turn fun colors in the face. Usually it's only Daddy though. Sometimes she says them to Uncle Sans, and he says them back, and then they both turn fun colors and laugh." Skylar observes cheerfully. "She told me they're 'dirty adult jokes' and I shouldn't repeat them." He nods firmly. "So I don't." He was a good boy- he listened to his mother. Mooooost of the time.

Hanzo snorted. "That... Is very good. Listening to your mother about such things is very important." He straightened, and tapped Tenebris' knee. "Alright, Mister Gaster. You can put your shoe back on- I've gotten the measurements I need. I can assume you want it made from the same leather, same color, and same sort of sole along the bottom? Or do you want a more durable sole, so you can do more outdoor running in them? I'll be sticking with the steel-toe at the end either way, so it will keep any further growth from your claws from wearing through the leather and poking holes too fast."

Tenebris nodded slower to the smaller Human Turned Monster, before he smiled at him crookedly. "Oh the second one please! A running sole sounds perfect." He answered. He had started putting on his shoe when his phone rang. "Oh is that me?" He wasn't expecting it to be him, and it took him a few moments to abandon putting on his shoe so he could pull his phone from his pocket. He awkwardly thumbed at it for a moment, before he got it to answer. He held it up to the crook of his neck, and rumbled softly. "Hello?"

Toki's voice was audible, which in itself was enough to be alarming. Toki was usually very quiet over the phone- one had to be very close to the speaker in order to listen in on her side of the conversation. She was loud enough with her initial exclamation that the children even turned to look at their grandfather, giving him a perplexed look.

"Dad?" Toki's voice was tight and uncomfortable, borderline pained. She panted a bit on the phone. "Dad. Dad. Tenebris." She pressed, obviously gathering her thoughts. "I need help. Please. I just- I'm having a contraction- or a Braxton Hicks- I don't know what it is, but it hurts and I can't get back up and I don't remember the twins feeling like this. Dad- what if there's something wrong?"

She was babbling- panic spurred on by the prior loss of one of the pups- and wasn't giving him much room to get a word in edge wise.

He couldn't even reply. He just let out a half-panicked bellow as he turned and hauled ass outside of the shoe shop, one shoe on while the other dangled in his grip.

"Father?!" Papyrus managed a startled gasp as he gathered his children close.

Tenebris didn't even stop to answer him, and had made it outside with a few long-legged steps before he ran for the car. "TOKI!?" He bellowed.

Toki was hunched over at the passenger door where she'd had to fish the phone out from under his seat where it had slid sometime during the process of driving. Her wings were flared up behind her and trembling as she breathed deeply. Her mane was ruffled and raised, terrified of the pain plaguing her middle and lingering in ways she felt it shouldn't. "I'm here." She squeaked in a panicked voice. Her primary hands had her weight supported, while her secondary held her phone and her belly. "Tenebris- check them, please."

"I'm here, Toki. I'm here." He quickly went to her side and knelt beside her, his hands coming up to caress her stomach as he quickly pulsed his magic into the tissue, taking in what he could with his senses. He roved over the litter as best he could, and breathed a soft sigh of relief. "It's okay Toki. It's okay... They're okay..." He told her gently.

She exhaled roughly through her teeth, and let out the tiniest of pained whines. The tight, cramping sensation that had her and Dear alight with panic began to fade off. As it faded off, the litter stirred up and kicked to life again, and with the motion, she felt less inclined to hyperventilate into a deep grave. "What... What was that?" She asks, wary of straightening and triggering another one.
Her legs were starting to ache though, and he needed better access to her belly. She straightened slowly, hands gripping the dark painted metal of his car probably hard enough to leave marks, and then turned around so she could face him and he could get a clearer scan of her ectobelly. "I don't remember Braxton Hicks being like that. Is... Am I in labor?" He had smelled it last time- she couldn't smell her own scent, but he would know if she was in labor.

"No... No... Not labor..." He answered quickly. "Your scent hasn't changed... you're still... You still smell... pregnant." He didn't know how to word that without it sounding... odd. He rubbed her stomach with both palms, healing magic pulsing up into his hands to try and soothe some of her pain while he gave another pulse of magic to assure himself that they were okay. Once he was completely certain, he closed his eyes and sighed. "They're okay. They're a little squished given the circumstances, but they're okay. All five of them are fine."

Toki took a shuddering breath, and sighed. "Well obviously I'm still pregnant." She says, with no venom or bite to her words. Just worry and anxiety, which makes her usual sweet honey and smoke scent more acrid and bitter. "If I'm not in labor, I must have just stressed a Braxton Hicks out of me." She grimaced. "They're rapidly running out of space, so when their limited space tightens... I guess that's why it hurt. Maybe also because of the position and it being too soon." There was a lingering ache, soon soothed away by the healing pulses of his palms, but nothing felt world endingly wrong. "Nothing ruptured, right? I didn't pop an ecto-spleen or whatever organs I've got in there?"

"No. No rupture." He assured her. He pulled her into a hug, and crooned to her warmly. "It was just a Braxton Hicks contraction. They're okay. You're okay too." He whispered, reassuring both him and herself.

Toki tried not to give in. She really did. She tried, and she was doing fine- up until he looped his arms around her and hugged her tight.

She burst into relieved tears. "Oh thank the gods." She gasped into his shirt, her mane ruffling with her emotions. She was trying to get herself back under control again. Her husband and children were inside, and Tenebris had one shoe on for some reason and the other was by her foot, and she needed to not be crying. Nothing was wrong- it had just been a scare, but there was no need to cry. "I'm so sorry I called like that. I just panicked. It hurt and I thought we were gonna lose another one..."

"It's okay... I want you to always call me if you feel like you want me to check, my dear girl..." He told her gently. "Never hold back from calling me if you feel like you need me to check on them... please don't hesitate. You're in a delicate condition right now, my dear- your body is stretched beyond the capacity it should probably be capable of at your size, and there are certain activities that will cause you more strain. Bending over should probably be avoided now- please, keep your phone on you and call me or my son if you need anything. Please."

She nodded into his chest again, and then leaned back to fish around in her purse. She pulled out a dark green handkerchief, and used it to dry her sockets. "I won't hesitate. Thank you." She nods softly.

Once she's certain she's under control again, she passes her phone into her purse and massages her secondary hands into her belly. Her gaze slides down. "Dad, you have one shoe on and people are staring. Lets lock up the car and go back inside. Do you... Mind explaining that I just had a small scare over a Braxton Hicks?" Toki wasn't sure she could verbally explain why she had been so freaked out- and people were naturally curious and would want to know.

He nodded slowly. "Yes. Go ahead and get a head start. I'll lock up and put my other shoe back on." He told her, getting started on the latter of the two jobs he mentioned.
Toki nodded and waddled back towards the shoe store. There were people in other cars staring, and she fluffed up her mane and let it devour her face to hide her embarrassment at drawing so much attention.

She made her way back to the shop, and slipped back inside.

The twins, which had stayed with their father so they didn't get underfoot of their grandfather, perked up once she entered and returned. "Momma?" They chimed together. "Are you okay? What happened?"

"I'm okay." Toki said. To only those who knew what she sounded like after crying, it would be telltale what she had been doing. "Your Grandpapa will tell you what happened in a little bit, okay?" Toki simply wanted to make her way over to her husband and become apart of his side.

Papyrus met her half way and reached up, stroking her cheek as he tucked her against him. Cane or no cane, pregnancy swell or no pregnancy swell, he was large enough and balanced enough to envelop her and tuck her into his side like he could hide her from the world. "You've been crying." He spoke quietly, his voice a mix of concern, and the desire to know if there was someone he needed to give a stern thumping with his cane.

Tenebris came inside shortly after, it not having taken very long to put his shoes on. "Forgive us for that sudden... scare." He rumbled gently. "Toki was scared after an especially nasty Braxton Hicks contraction. She's alright, as are the pups."

"Ah... I see." Papyrus rested his head on Toki's with a frown. "Are you doing better now?" He asked, his hand wandering down to her belly to cup it. Healing magic pulsed over his palms, and he soothed her formed muscles in long strokes.

Toki leaned into her husband, letting his fingers stroke over her cheeks and then her belly. His magic felt nice- warm and soothing against her muscles as he tried to ease some of the ache. It helped a lot. "Yeah." She says quietly. "I'm better now. It was just a painful one, and it scared me. The twins weren't like that. They were much more... Subtle."

The children latched onto her legs and gave her hugs. Hugs made everything better after long enough, so they believed, so they would hug their mother for as long as they needed to.

"Every pregnancy is different, and each one comes with it’s unique pains and struggles." The kindly old woman behind the counter coughs roughly, and turns warm eyes on her. "Being scared happens. So long as you and yours are alright, that’s all that matters."

Hanzo nodded. "Well... We're mostly done anyways. If you want to head out and rest, I'm sure Mister Gaster and I can finish things up while you get off your feet."

Toki gives a tiny noncommittal hum to see what the others thought "We could go to the game store while Dad finishes up his order."

Tenebris gave her a soft touch to her shoulder before he smiled. "Go on then~ Don’t let me slow you down, my dear... Just don't check out before I get to see what's new in stock~" He chortled lightly.

Papyrus gave a soft laugh at that. "I wouldn't dream of it, Father. don’t you worry." He chuckled lightly in assurance, waving off his father's worry. "We'll see you there." With that, he looped an arm around his wife's back, and gently led her out.

Once they were gone, Tenebris turned to Yuri and Hanzo and bowed respectfully. "Thank you so much for your patience and understanding."
Hanzo bowed back, and gave him a smile. "It's no trouble at all, really. I'm just glad everything is all right."

"Though really, may we inquire as to why she was so spooked? Poor woman looked like someone rattled her pretty hard." Yuri gave a rough cough behind the desk, and had to take a moment to cough into a handkerchief and then dispose of it. "I know each pregnancy is different, but surely she would know the difference between a stress based Braxton Hicks, or an actual contraction."

"Haaaaa I don't know much about pregnancy, so..." Hanzo gave an awkward smile, and worked with his paperwork to get the new price for Tenebris.

He nodded slowly as he came closer to Yuri. "She has a much larger litter growing inside of her than she did the first time, and sadly... we discovered that one did not make it past a certain point in growth. A miscarriage, if you will. Toki feared the potential loss of more of them. After such an event, we all fear such a loss. She was just trying to get over it as well- I am hoping it doesn’t set back her personal recovery."

Yuri tilts her face up to look at him, and then sighs softly. "You poor dears. That does explain her worry." She shakes her head gently. "I'm sorry for your loss."

Hanzo wasn't even sure what to say. How did you say something to that? "I'm very sorry. Hopefully the rest of her pregnancy is safe and stress free, for her and the... litter's sake." He says softly. "When is she due this time?"

"Well, she's eleven weeks along and we suspect she's in, if not nearing, her third trimester. I hope that I am right when I guess that she is going to be due in about a month, if not less."

Hanzo nodded. "A month leaves a lot of time for flexibility. Just try and keep her relaxed- a month isn't very long to go. You guys can do it. You've made it this far- what's four more weeks?" He gives him a grin. "I'm sure you can."

"Indeed. Thank you, Hanzo... If you so wish to, I've got a feeling you'll become a fine father in your later years." He rumbled softly in praise.

Hanzo snickered softly. "I probably would- but I don't really want kids right now." He waves a hand. "Maybe in another ten years. Anyway, I've got the price calculated. Want to finish and pay, so you can get back to your family, and I can go rouse my brother into getting started on the shoes?"

"I am surprised he did not come out with the ruckus that happened out here." Yuri mused. "Though he probably has those little music buds in his ears again."

"Of course. Thank you very much for all your help." He rumbled gently to them. A soft laugh followed it. "He missed out on quite a bit, didn't he... Oh well, I suppose."

"It's alright," Hanzo laughs. "My brother is not much of a people person. Everyone is unique though." He sets up a square on his phone, and holds it out for Tenebris to run his card through.

He did just that as Hanzo offered the phone, swiping the card before signing for the transaction with his claw.

Once it was done, Hanzo gave him a smile. "We'll stick with the same deal as last time. We'll give you a call once the shoes are done."

"Perfect. I'll see you when such time comes around."

He rumbled, smiling at them before he turned to leave.
They both waved to him as he left.

Yuri's rough coughing followed him out as he went to seek out his family.
Strider Notes: So some slightly serious talk, with some slightly adorable chatter. And of course... Pickles on the side.

The rest of Tenebris’ family had invaded the game store just down the sidewalk on the outlet.

Toki was visible inside, playing a Nintendo switch that was being sampled, while Papyrus and the children browsed the store. Toki was sunken into the plush couch that the shop had, and was taking the advice to heart- to rest.

Very faintly, music for Stardew Valley was audible as she seemed to be enjoying herself on the demo game.

Skylar and Honey were debating what games to get, and figuring out if they wanted to play older games too, which would involve trying to sweet talk their parents into buying older consoles.

Tenebris had stepped inside and made a gradual beeline for where Toki was checking out the demo game. "Ooh, Stardew." He rumbled as he realized just what she was playing.

"You know video games?" She inquires, glancing up from the machine that was propped up on her great gravid swell. "I didn't know you were up to date on video games. You don't seem the type to do much more with computers than use them for science and reports, dad."

"I have two grandchildren, one son in school, and am about to have five children more who will all grow up in the age of video games and electronics. If I didn't learn, I would be left in the dust." He countered with a chortle. "So... what are you doing there?" He then asked, peering at the screen.

"Planting turnips." Toki chirps. "I'm working towards getting my first barn. I want to buy a cow." She shuffles her feet over, and then scoots down. "Sit with me? If I lean on you, you can watch. I'm tempted to get one of these for myself. Papyrus took a peek at me with his magic- since he does know healing magic- and mentioned that I just strained my body trying to get my phone." She murmured. "I'm a lot bigger than I was with the twins- like, if I was the size of the Earth with the twins, I'm the size of Saturn with this litter. That puts a strain on my body- which is decidedly not big enough to house a litter of this size without being 'babied'. Your son was suggesting maybe I should take the next few weeks- until the pups are born- and go on bed rest of sorts."

The busybody woman heaves a huge sigh- the idea thrilled her about as much as a sandpaper dildo and a cactus butt plug. "Like... Just do nothing, basically. No sitting and writing for hours on end, because the kitchen chairs are not conducive to supporting a pregnant woman and straining my neck over my laptop and fretting about my plotline would be stressful. Like... Absolutely nothing stressful like chores or mopping or 'nesting', and no 'adulting' basically. So I don't trigger more cramps and Braxton Hicks. I mentioned that I would get bored- and the nice lady behind the counter said a Nintendo Switch is good for boredom." She hums. "They even have a Zelda game on it! One that's open world! I want to try playing it, even if the puzzles are hard."

Without a word, he agreed to her conditions and settled down behind her for her to get comfy. He nodded at her words before he rumbled gently and he smiled as he rested his head on her shoulder. "An open world Zelda hm? How fascinating." He purred, before he gave her a sweet grin. "Perhaps I'll buy one of these 'switch' consoles myself."

"It probably wouldn't be a bad idea. I heard they're going to do an online mode for the switch, so people can play certain games together." She hums. As she continued with her game of Stardew, Toki sighs. "You know... One of the things I didn't think I'd miss from the other world was... This." She motions to the switch. "We became farmers there. I miss my dairy cows. We don't have room for a farm where we live, and most of the monsters would probably complain about the stink. Not to mention the winter snow storms and flooding." She sighs softly. "Anyway. What do you think about what Papyrus said?" Her husband knew healing magic, but he wasn't a doctor. Tenebris was a scientist and a doctor, so truthfully, Toki would like a second opinion on the whole... Bed rest thing.

"When it comes to keeping you off your feet, you're much like a cat in the way that you utterly refuse to." He started, before he tilted his head to the side, looking at her with a soft gleam in his calm look. "But if you were to take it easy, invest in something to occupy your time until you were able to go back to being up and about, it might end up being more beneficial for your health in the long run. So, in that I agree with my son. Take a break."

Toki made a face and then glanced up at him over her shoulder. Her mane fluffed a bit and she huffed softly. It took her only a moment to deflate however, her mane going lax once more. "I know I need to rest. But... I just... I feel like I already don't do anything as it is." She sighs. "I feel like I'm hardly a mother to my children because I simply can't do what I need to do, and that I'm not being a helpful wife because Papyrus has to do all of the stuff that I normally do. Playing video games all day isn't going to make those feelings go away." She sighs through her teeth. "But I guess if that's what the litter needs... I was going to get a Switch anyways..."

He reached up to gently stroke down her mane once it settled. "Dear Toki, you do what you can when you can do it. Just because you have to take it easy for the welfare of your growing young does not mean that you love those who grow outside of your body any less. You are a wonderful mother."

"I know." The air she exhales smells vaguely of smoke. "I know. Logically I know. But emotionally, I can't really stop feeling what I feel, you know?" She leans her head back into the fingers carding through her mane. "God, this pregnancy has me emotionally up and down. I feel like I'm constantly at a high or a low, and it's driving me nuts. Ergh." She grumbles. "I'll do the bed rest thing. Without the actual bed resting though. If I'm stuck in a bedroom for the next however many weeks, I will flip my tits. All..." She did a quick count. "All eight of them. I'll probably spend my time outside, inside, wherever, but I'll take it easy."

"We'll work everything out, my dear. Perhaps you can spend some time outside, and then return inside and go play Zelda to your hearts content, and repeat that cycle until you no longer are on bed rest." He spoke as if it was a plan.

"Jeeze, if only all women had such doting people caring for them when they need the help." Toki gave him a teasing nudge, and hummed at her game. "It sounds like a plan though." She made a pleased noise as she got a barn ordered. "I'm going to name my first cow Tenebris." She decides. "Because its black and white and absolutely adorable. Just like you when you get flustered over something, Dad."

He chuckled at that, and hid his face in her fluff. "You're adorable too, Toki. I just don't have much to compare you to in retaliation." He laughed, a sweet and jolly sound rising from him as he gave her a sugary smile.
"I suppose you could compare me to a cotton ball?" She suggests and fluffs her mane pointedly with a giggle.

"If somehow you gave a cotton ball grass stains or soaked it in some green vegetable juice." He joked warmly.

She laughed. "A cotton ball in green food coloring." She grins. "The good kind of green though. Not the kind that makes the ooblek look sad."

Tenebris, she knew, had a fun incident involving his own living ooblek, which was the void booger that had come back with her ring. Which was, as she understood, locked up in a jar to keep it from molesting his fingers. "Speaking of ooblek. How is blobby?"

"Oh good lord you actually mean to call it that." He chortled, before he pulled out his phone from his coat pocket. "He absolutely hates me." He answered, showing her a picture of him that he took earlier. It was of Tenebris with the jar, the blob of void matter completely pressed up against the side nearest his face.

"Awww no." She points to it. "See there? He loves you. That blobby part there looks like a heart. And yes, I mean to call him that. It's either that, or we call him Ooblek, and then he gets called Ooby for short." She grins. "I mean, if you don't want him or need him for more study, my house is already a mishmash of chaos. I could take him back. The kids would love play-doh that actually plays back."

"Nah... He kinda glows at night. I use him as my nightlight." He chuckled quietly.

"Really." She gives him a deadpan look. "Do you even take him out to play? Does he get to stretch his little blobby lumps and get proper exercise? Of course you don't. You don't own a pet- you're a silly scientist who keeps blobby in a jar. Blobby is going to be sad. I may have to steal him for playtime."

"He... it... Is not even sentient, Toki." He lowered his phone, fixing her with a firm stare. "Nothing was alive in the void. No doubt it's simply a parasite seeking those of similar magic. It would be exceedingly unwise to let him loose."

She glanced at him and then went back to her game. "There is life there." She says, voice falling flat and serious despite the lighthearted nature of her game. "All joking aside, I'm not entirely unconvinced that the blob is not some part of the Void itself, which is very sentient and sort of an asshole, or apart of the Void's little scrub worker. I got to be uncomfortably familiar with the Void talking to me."

He sighed and shook his head. "I have my doubts. Though, perhaps you might be right. I suppose we could test it once we get home and simply see to it before it gets put aside for the rest of our lives."

"I wouldn't let you just put it aside anyway, Dad." She rolls her eye lights, and then wheezes as a foot knocks the switch unstable in her hands. She pauses it, and takes a moment to just rub her belly. She was sore still from earlier. "You know how I am, Tenebris. I can't let something go without kindness. It came into the world on my hand, so if all else fails, I can keep an eye on it." She says lightly.

"Momma!" Honey bounced to her side, the little horned girl practically vibrating with excitement. "Daddy said to ask you if Sky and I can get the game cube they have. They have a game called Harvest Moon, Momma! Its got cows in it! I want a cow. They look so cute!"

"I dunno..." Toki hums with a grin. "What do you think, Daddy?" She calls to Papyrus. "Have our "Kids been good enough to warrant a couple game systems and games?" They didn't come to town often, mind, and her kids were asking for older systems. Which honestly was for the best. She wasn't going to let her kids play high graphics war games until they were teens.

"That's a great question. What I want to know is if they just going to play it all day until bed time, or are they going to remember that there is an outside world for them to go romp around and play in?" Papyrus replied with a laugh.

Honey stuck her tongue out at him. "Well yeah, but why do we wanna go outside, when Momma's gonna be stuck inside all the time?" She chirps. "Unless Thumper comes over."

"Thumper is fun to play with outside." Skylar agrees. "He's really fast, and it's really fun trying to catch him."

Toki quirks a lopsided grin. "He's also fun to play video games with, isn't he?" She giggles.

"Well, yeah!" Skylar exclaims in surprise. His orange eye lights practically sparkle. "He's so cool! He knows all the tricks and short cuts in the games we play."

"Uh-oh. It sounds like someone idolizes their uncle." Toki grins, and winks at Papyrus. "I think they'll manage some outside time. If all else fails, they can weed the flowers you planted for me, since I can't get down and do it myself."

Honey made a face. "Uck. Chores."

"Chores are good for you." Toki reaches out and gently boops her nasal ridge with a finger. "It builds character and makes you strong, like your Daddy."

"Who does all the chores now that Mommy dearest is pregnant, after all?" Papyrus hobbled close to Toki, and Tenebris moved out from under her and vacated the couch as the younger male slipped behind her and hugged the fluff around Toki's neck, "I am not beyond confiscating your games to keep you from getting pudgy like your dear Uncle Sans did." He teased as he looked at the children.

Toki sat up with a grunt to make space for her husband as he traded spots with his father. She settled back against him on the game-store couch with a soft pleased noise, and let him loop his arm around her fluffy neck. "Your Daddy does do most of the chores now that I can't see my feet." She chimes softly.

Honey puffs softly. "Well... I guess we could clean up our toys more."

Skylar cocks his head at his dad and makes a soft buzzing noise, not unlike his mother made. His crocodile teeth cocked in a crooked smile. "You know, Daddy, all you need to do is ask and we can help. I know we get distracted by stuff, but I can wrangle my sister into helping with chores too. We won't get pudgy- even if being pudgy is soft and cuddly and good for napping on." He eyes his Momma. "Momma is good for cuddles when she's round and soft."

Toki simply smiles. Their children were young, yes- very young- but their maturity was visible from time to time in how they reacted to things and acted. Their son was also very much like his father in liking her being 'round and soft'.

Papyrus laughed lightly at that, and gave Toki another nuzzle. "If you're so sure about that, my children, then maybe we'll see how fast you can clean up your rooms." He announced. "And if you really mean what you say, my little ones, we shall invest in the games that you want. And if your rooms are clean by this time tomorrow, then we'll help you set up your gaming systems." He then smiled down at them. "Deal?"
"But," Toki warns, "if we buy them and you don't clean, we'll have to take them away." They were young- and her human instincts cried that her babies weren't even three years old, so responsibility shouldn't be a thing yet. But here they were, advanced children giving them puppy eyes as they laid out the rules.

Honey nods. "Uhuh! We'll clean and put all our toys away."

"And make sure all the blankets and pillows are picked up and put in the cuddle corner." Skylar adds.

"It's a deal then." She nods. "Go pick out your games. No more than four apiece. That's for both systems." Which theoretically, would let them get two for each game system that they personally wanted to play, if they did it right. Besides... Toki could afford it. Old games, at least the ones they were looking at, weren't as much as new games. "When you've made your choice, we'll go get the systems."

The twins ran back along to choose their games.

As they did, Toki exhaled and relaxed into Papyrus. "Do you think we spoil them?" She questions, knowing they did but honestly not caring. Her kids were learning morals- and she didn't care if she got them goodies to play with. Toys could only be so stimulating to rapidly advancing minds, after all.

"We do, but we do not spoil them rotten without teaching them morals and that earning their rewards is what keeps their spoiling done in pure intentions." He explained to her quietly. "Now you, on the other hand; you don't get any preset limitations. You pick out any games you want and you get to play them on the way home because mommy dearest deserves some relief in this trying time."

"Oh-ho, do I now?" She gives him a lopsided and crooked crocodile smirk, pleased at what he said about their kids. Spoiled, but with morals. Yes, good. "You and your Dad both are determined to have me on bed rest. But, I suppose I don't mind if I get to cuddle you and play games." She smiles. "I'll get a couple that can go multiplayer so you and I can play while the kids overtake the television."

"Sounds like a plan... Shall we let you up to go select your games then? I think Father is eyeing the collectibles." Papyrus gave a soft snicker as he saw Tenebris' purple gaze wander to the merchandise section of the store.

"I wouldn't mind if you want to come with me. You found a couple more puzzle games for your X-box, right?" She asks him curiously, and shifts to try and sit up on her own. She needed to return the demo-switch to the counter.

"Not a lot, but a few." He agreed as he carefully helped her up. "I didn't pick out that many, though I heard that a few games would end up cross-compatible with a console model coming out later this year so I was going to do a little research as to which ones were just that, lest we want to upgrade."

Tenebris gave a soft coo of interest as he pulled out his phone, tapping at it before he grinned a little and reached up, pulling from the shelf a box with a bright pink lion within it. "Asgore's going to love this~" He chortled softly.

"Well, I know the upgraded version of your console should be allowing cross-platform play with a switch." Toki smiled as he helped her up. She kept her grip on the demo-console, and once she was upright, she waddled to the counter. She set it down, and then carefully took a peek at what was behind it. "So, I think I want Zelda, Stardew, and... Mario Kart?" She glances at him. Minecraft would be fun too, but she wasn't sure how well split screen would work on a tiny, tiny console screen. Her eyes were good, but not that good. "What do you think, Papy?" Her eyes drifted back a bit to watch her father in law, and she hummed curiously. She wondered what he was after.

He nodded in agreement, "Sounds like a good collection of games, yes?" he piped warmly.

"Sounds good." She laughs gently, and gave him a lopsided smile. She flicked her eyes up to the sales clerk and gave him a smile. "So... I definitely want the Switch alongside the gear for carrying it safely so pregnancy butterfingers don't let me drop it, and there's three games I'd like to get. Two have the little disks, and one is a download- do I have to buy the download through the shop, or can I buy a card through your shop?"

"You can buy one from us. You'll simply need to enter the code into your switch manually. Do you have a rewards card with us?" The clerk asked.

"I do." Toki nods, and fetches her wallet from her purse. "Though, we need to wait to finish the transaction until the children pick their games, and we pick up the systems they decide on." She smiles. "I'm glad I can buy a card through here though. You've got fairly excellent services.” Except shipping to her home.

"I'm glad to hear this!" The clerk smiled at her. "We are working on extending our delivery services to the new monster residential districts now that they are growing, so soon enough we might just be able to start delivering to your doorstep rather than you needing to worry about coming into town every time you want something from us." He explained.

Toki let out an ironic laugh. "The last time I picked up an order from you guys that was supposed to ship to my house but didn't, I was pregnant with those two-" she motions to her eager children, who seemed to almost have what they wanted, "and I went into labor on the way home. It'd definitely be good to open up the venue for delivery to monsters. It's a long drive from Nara Village to the city."

"I apologize for your inconvenience, but I am relieved that your children were born without complication."

She gave him four thumbs up. "Thankfully I had my doctor with me that day, so all was well." She grins.

"Momma!" Skylar reaches her first. "I have my games."

"I have mine too!" Honey chirps.

"Good." She praises warmly. She glances to her husband and emotes for him to go grab his chosen games. "We'll take these, as well as what my husband grabs, and... One of your Gamecubes, and a Playstation 2."

"Appreciating the older model consoles eh? You got it." The clerk stepped away to collect the consoles she asked for.

While he did so, Papyrus collected the games he wanted and returned to Toki's side. He knew he didn't have to wait for his father; he would no doubt be paying for himself.

"I'd rather start my kids gaming on older things before sticking them in the newer games." Older systems had a lot of games based for children. A lot of them. Some of them were games even Toki enjoyed though.
She glanced to Papyrus as he returned, and gave him a smile as she leaned on his shoulder. "I know I wanted to hit the yarn store today," she says quietly, "but I think after that Braxton hicks earlier, that I just want to get us all our milkshakes and go home."

"That sounds like a good plan to me, my love." Papyrus wrapped his arm around her and gave her a gentle squeeze. "We'll have you take it easy and enjoy your shake on the way home."

"Mmm, yes." She gave a soft pleased noise. "I may trade with you on the way up and sit up front so I make less of a mess with the milkshake."

"Deal." He enthused warmly.

“Great!” She beamed back.

He gave her a smile and nuzzled her as the clerk set down the collected consoles, taking her rewards card and starting on adding the prices together for her

"Alright, if everything looks right on the screen, the total at the top will be your cost for today." The clerk announced.

"That's fine by me." She beamed. With everything gathered, it was a hefty sum, but still not as much as buying a used car from someone. She slid her card out and ran it through, signing her name with the supplied pen when it flashed for her to do so. Then, she waited for her receipt. "We're going to need help carrying this. I doubt you're going to let me tote most of this after earlier, even if I have the most arms." Toki gave her husband a teasing look.

"Nope." Skylar chirps and nudges her leg. "You don't get to carry it."

"Grandpapa can carry it!" Honey volunteered loudly, eyeing her grandpa with a cheeky grin. "He has the biggest muscles!"

"I'll carry the consoles." Her husband answered as he gave her a smile and a hearty laugh. "The games should be light enough for you to carry as long as the children mind you." Papyrus then peered over at Tenebris. "It looks like Father's going to have his own things to carry."

She glanced back at him and arched her brows. "What... Exactly is he buying?" She inquires curiously.

Her father-in-law was holding the figurine from before that he had been ogling, as well as a few games in one hand. He had a goofy smile on his face, though at her looking at him, he gave a small wave.

"Uh-huh~" He answered warmly. "I wagered that it would do some good to invest in a common console so that the children might be able to play together." It was clear by his tone that he was lying- Tenebris was also investing for himself. It seemed that watching her play had caught his attention, and the massive monster intended to buy one of the monster model Switches.

Papyrus chuckled lightly, before he pressed a kiss to his wife's head. "Well, that's that then... We better invest in the protection plan, yes?"
"Good idea, Dad. Though... You can play too." Toki teased. She paused, and nodded thoughtfully to her husband's kiss and words. "I suppose... Though," she eyed the twins, "they shouldn't be handling the switch outside of its console form. Handheld is for Momma."

Skylar made a face. "I don't wanna play that." He says, eyeing her oddly. "Our games are much cooler."

Ah the innocence of youth. She was glad her children were easily mystified by the older games rather than the newer ones— it would surely be easier on her wallet.

"Even cooler than Splatoon 1 and 2?" Tenebris asked coyly as he held up the disc cases. "Complete with DLC's?"

Honey peered at him and then nodded seriously. "That game is laaaame." She motions to the bag that visibly holds a copy of an older Spyro game. "Now this is cooler! You get to be a purple dragon!"

"..." He had to squint a bit and crouch down before he could see exactly what she was talking about. When he saw the Spyro game, Tenebris laughed proudly. "Now that is a good game!" He praised, "That's my grandgirl!"

She grinned cheerfully. "See? Our games are cooler. We don't need your big kid games."

Skylar nods. "We have plenty of games to play alone or together. We like to watch each other just as much as we like to play together."

"That much is true." Toki ruffled his smooth skull gently.

"I'm proud of you kids for having such great taste." Tenebris rumbled as he reached out and pat the children on the head. "To your credit, they are fantastic story-mode games. I eagerly await to watch you play them."

They beamed at him.

Skylar shuffled his feet some. "I also got Harvest Moon... Two of them." He grins slyly. "I like them."

"The music for those will make you nap, Dad." Toki laughed. "Come, my sweets. You can tell him about your games in the car. Let him pay, so we can go get milkshakes, hm?"

"MILKSHAKES!" Honey's volume went a little high in her obvious excitement, until her brother elbowed her sharply. "Sorry. Milkshakes! I can't wait!"

Papyrus chuckled quietly. "We'll get these out to the car and wait for you there. Does that sound alright, Father?"

"Oh yes, of course." He pulled his keys from his pocket and tossed them to his son, who caught them and gave him a thankful look before turning back to his wife "And with that, let's get a head start so that we can leave as soon as we can." Papy announced.

"That's fine with me. Heaven's knows it takes me several minutes to get in and out of a car now." She agreed cheerfully. Toki shifted all the bags to her primary arms, and offered her secondary arms to her children as they stuck their hands up to her.
Since Papyrus had his arms full with his cane and the game consoles, it fell to her to escort their kids. She didn't mind.

The three of them made it to the door easily enough, and held it open for him to go out first.

He gave her a kiss on the head to thank her and looked behind to see Tenebris starting on checking out as well. He had an excited look on his face. Oh the rare treats in his life to give him excitement. It was so precious to watch his father get excited like a child over things.

Toki saw him distracted by Tenebris, and rolled her eyes gently. She lifted one of her wings, and used the glowing gossamer surface to gently usher her husband out. She followed after the children went, and gave a soft pleased hum. "You know... I'm kind of excited to get past this next month, or however long I'm still pregnant for." She comments, and gives her wings an experimental stretch as she waddles across the parking lot.

After she got his attention once more, Papyrus followed her quietly. Though as she made her comment, he tilted his head curiously. "Is that so?" He asked. "And why is that? Is it because you've now got your hands on a new console and get to spend all the time you like playing your games?"

"Not at all. Well, only a little- but that's something that will entertain me over the month, not all the time past it. At least, not until we try for more kids later." She laughs heartily, and bumps her wing gently to his shoulder so she doesn't disturb his odd hobble-step walking he was doing with his one free arm full of consoles. "I'm excited to get past this month or so, because it should probably put me past having the litter- and then I should be able to fly again. I miss it." Despite taking a bit more effort to fly, Toki found it freeing and enjoyable.

"Ah, flying." He chuckled. "Indeed that will be a sight to behold- my darling wife taking upon the skies like a free bird... for as long as your stamina lasts, of course." He teased at the end.

She grinned cheekily at his tease, knowing what he meant. In all of his time knowing her, Toki had never been a very athletic woman. Coming back from the other world, she was definitely a different sort of beast. "I'll have to get back into shape." She chuckles. "I didn't get much of a chance to exercise here before I was too heavy to fly." Seriously- she'd ballooned up like this in... a little less than three months. Eleven weeks sounded like a long time, but in reality, it was one week shy of three months. Toki had grown horribly large, horribly fast. "But, even you should be able to fly with me. Clover still has her saddle." She gives him a soft nudge again.

"Can we fly too?" Honey inquires.

"Of course, sweetie. Either with me, or with your father- it wouldn't be your first time flying, but you might not remember flying before." She replies warmly.

Skylar however frowns and makes a considering noise. "... You mentioned more babies." He hums. "Will they be our babies?" He asks, and snaggs the keys from his daddy so he can open the door for him, because he's a good boy and he prides himself on being a good boy. "We'll get to keep them?" Their eldest glances at Toki's belly, and then between his parents with keen, intelligent eyes. "More babies would make me happy, Daddy. Would it make you happy?"

"Come the day that father receives his litter from their beloved surrogate, I will indeed seek to father my own litter once more so that I might give you guys some younger siblings." He answered with a soft laugh.

"Well... Maybe not the same day." Toki gives him a side-long look, and moves to carefully put games in the back of the car once the whole thing was unlocked. "I remember how sore I was with the twins- it took weeks upon weeks before my pelvis stopped hurting enough for you to even touch my hips at night."

"Really?" Honey cocked her head at them curiously and peered at them over the back seat from where she had crawled.

"Mhm. Having babies is hard work. Plus," Toki finished putting away the games, and helped Papyrus load up the consoles as well, before reaching through the back of the car to tweak one of her daughter's ever-growing horns, "your horns gave me a fair bit of trouble. I was very, very tender.
But, it was worth it because I got to see the both of you, and the both of you are my world." She chirps. "So, long story short- it might be a couple months before your Daddy and me try to make you guys a sibling or two."

"It doesn't mean we wont try, though. Isn't that right, Darling?" Papyrus was smug as he leaned in and whispered this to his beloved wife, grinning at her in the one moment he knew he would barely have to enjoy her reaction before she would undoubtedly smack his arm.

She gaped for a moment, and then smacked his arm firmly, just as he expected. "You insatiable letch!" She laughs. "No! Absolutely not! Not at least for a month, if not two months. Not until the litter is weaned."

"Alright, alright!" He laughed gently as he kissed her head gently. "I tease~" He assured her with a soft chuckle.

She rolled her eye lights. As she closed the back of the car, sealing them off from the kids prying ears, she leaned up to whisper to him. "Riiight. You tease." She purrs, belly brushing his hip. "For someone who practically worships my body when it's heavy with life, so soft and supple and plush, I'm going to have to doubt your tease for being just a tease. Just a little bit." She gives him a saucy wink, and then waddles away for the front seat.

Let that fluster him. Toki was a tease.

"Doubting me when I eagerly await when the young you carry is my own, my darling?" He was ready for his body's reaction to her words, and managed to keep her from seeing it. Papyrus watched her go before he started for his own seat.

He didn’t even have his buckle on before his Father had caught up, and soon everyone was in their

"I doubt you were teasing, my love." She laughs, and gives Tenebris a lopsided smile as he reaches the car. "Daaadaaad. She fake whines, making her kids give her the strangest of looks to hear a tone that they often used when they were getting on each other's nerves, "Papy's teasing me about not giving me a break between litters."

"... That's so weird." Honey whispers quietly from the back seat. "Is that what we sound like when we argue?" She asks her brother as she gets into her car seat.

"I think so." His crocodile teeth twist into a frown. "I don't like it. Even if Momma's faking it, it's weird to hear adults do it. Let's try not to do it anymore- Momma doesn't need to learn bad habits from us." He concludes with squeaky seriousness.

The whine had Tenebris laughing quietly. "Oh Toki, you sound so childish. Papyrus, my son, don't tease your wife. You know you would break the poor thing if you tried to mate so soon after she weans her litter."

"He was talking about not even letting me rest." She pouts at him playfully. "Like, daaaaays after they were born." She teases. "That's way too soon."

"Really?" Tenebris looked at him with a raised brow.

Papyrus flinched a little bit, and a guilty flush covered his cheeks to contradict his words. "Uh... Not days after, no."

"Okay, maybe not days, but like... weeks." Toki snickers. "He's insatiable, I swear. Like father like son though, I guess." She hums knowingly, and gets herself comfortable in her seat. "Oh shoot. I was going to play my switch- I forgot to grab it out of the bag. Oh well- it's probably best if I wait until we're home."

"We're still stopping for milkshakes, so I can grab it once we stop to order." Papyrus brought up before he reached up to the front seat and pinched her cheek gently between two knuckles for all the sass she'd been giving him. "Which game would you like?" He asked, giving her cheek a playful wiggle.

She opened her mouth to make it easier on his knuckles, because soft and flexible bone was still bone, and grinned at him crookedly. "We'll get there whenever Dad gets the car going." She chirps cheekily. "And I think I'd like... Mario. It doesn't have much plot, so it doesn't matter if I'm distracted or not." She beams.

"Mario it is." He answered with a warm smile.

Toki nods, and then gave Tenebris a grin. "Mario and milkshakes, and a day out with a good portion of my loving monster family. What more could a pregnant skelebeast ask for?"

"Pickles on the side of your milkshake?" Skylar chimes helpfully.

Toki can't stop herself from breaking into great wheezes of laughter. "Yes. Pickles on the side."

"Pickles on the side!" Tenebris announced with a laugh, starting the car before they pulled out of the lot, onward bound for milkshakes before they would be returning to the comfort of their home village
With bounty of games and milkshakes in hand— with a few pickles on the side for the pregnant mother and her odd needs— the vehicle carrying Toki and her family had left the urban city, starting out into the peaceful countryside between city and beloved Nara Village.

With her new console in hand, Toki had enjoyed the trip in her own little world, lost to the tuneless humming of Tenebris, as well as the bickering of the children and her beloved husband in the back seat.

For a time, everything was perfect.

Toki's attention was summoned to reality when she felt the car lurch and she looked up at her father-in-law as he growled quietly.

"What in the world?" He muttered.

His gaze remaining locked forward had her following his line of sight. It didn’t take her long before she saw what had his attention.

Roadblocks. Roadblocks, with Nara Village over the horizon.

What happened?

There was nobody guarding the roadblocks, which were big and made of eye-searing colored steel bars. They were spaced tightly to keep cars from going between them. The roadblocks were, however, just that— on the road.

Toki frowned, worry blooming in her chest. She had family in there— human and monster. She had saved that morning, so there was no reason to not go ahead and see just what they were doing.

"Drive around, Dad. The shoulder and the dirt on the side of the road should have enough space."

"What is this mess?" He grumbled as he slowly pulled around the roadblocks. "I hope everyone is alright." Tenebris then sighed as he pulled back onto the road. "Alright, back on track."

Toki turned off the switch, and tucked it into its case. It was carefully set down on the floorboards by her purse, and she leaned forward in her seat. Her mane ruffled as she scoured the town with her eyes.

The cranes and construction equipment, which were mostly visible above the houses, weren't moving. This was the time that it would be the height of construction.
Something was very, very wrong.

Something that was made apparent as they pulled into the start of the complex, and the front two tires of Tenebris' car were blown out, dropping the front end roughly onto its rims and making the slow moving rig screech to a halt.

Tenebris gasped out sharply as the front of the vehicle suddenly sunk, and he quickly had hit the brake before any further damaged could be caused to the vehicle or risk the passengers. At first he was stunned, and checked everyone else to see that they were okay. Once he saw the humans appear next to the car, his pupils thinned to slits and he bared his fangs at the closest human, growling ferociously as his tail rattled loudly.

Four people had appeared on each side of their doors. Four humans; each had a large gun trained on them.

The one at Toki's door spoke first. "Step out of the vehicle, and put your hands up."

"Momma?" Honey's voice was frightened. "Momma, he has a gun."

"There are children in the car," Toki calls, alarm and fear for her children piercing her. "Don't shoot-please don't shoot. We need to get them out."

Papyrus quickly moved himself over the children, "I am a member of his majesty's royal guard, let me move my children and pregnant wife safely and we can settle this without the need for violence!" He spoke over his sire's aggressive snarling.

The man nearest Papyrus glanced inside and nodded. "Exit the vehicle, slowly. Make no moves, use no magic. Magic may be fast, but a bullet is faster at short distance, and there's no need to traumatize those kids of yours."

"This one's baring teeth- he's got a knife." One stated, raising his weapon warily as he eyed Tenebris.

"Tenebris stop." Toki's smaller secondary hand clenched on his thigh, before releasing him. "Please. We don’t need to get shot." Once was enough for her. "It's not a knife. It's his tail- please, he won't hurt you, just... Give him space to get out."

The gunner took a step back and gave the beast space, but the gun remained trained on him.

Toki slowly, very slowly, opened her door. She made to turn towards the side, and eased her way out, moving carefully and slowly so she could stand and not... Well, aggravate the gunman. "Papyrus." She whispers in a hushed but harried tone as she 'adjusts' her weight to get up, letting her whisper back to him. "Worry about the children. Please. I can't protect them like this."

The one watching her seemed to squint behind his helmet and think, his face twisting into a scowl as he looked over her body.

"We're not going to resist... Just... Lower the weapons... You don’t need to threaten my children." He told them, nodding subtly to Toki before he spoke quietly to the twins. "Come on, children. Come out my side with me... Stay close..."

Tenebris watched the guns warily but helped Toki as best he could before he unbuckled and opened his door, leg extending to anchor himself and pull his form out of the vehicle. He was posturing aggressively, his eyes glowing as he considered vaulting the car to protect Tokiko. But unless it came to be necessary, he would behave.
His tail rattled and moved between himself and the gunman as he looked back to where Papyrus was climbing out of the vehicle.

His son was putting more weight on his leg to act as if the cane in the vehicle was not his. He knew he wouldn't be able to hold that facade for long, but as long as he maintained his professionalism, he and the children were safe.

Papyrus’ gunman spotted the cane, but didn't say anything. After all, who wasn't to say it wasn't for aesthetic? Once the kids were out of the vehicle, the man tilted the gun so it was mostly on Papyrus. "There we go. Be good for your dad, okay kids? Move around the other side of the vehicle, sirs." He instructed both adults. "Go slow, keep your hands where we can see them. Tail too, big guy."

Toki eased to standing, and wobbled until she found her balance. She didn't put her hands behind her head, which was nearly consumed by her ruffled and fluffed mane. But she did keep them splayed so he could see she had no weapons. No visible ones, anyway.

The man in front of her was murmuring very, very quietly into his collar, and listening to the earpiece tucked in his ear. He talked with his supervisor for some time as the other monsters made their way around.

Skylar clutched onto his Dads leg, trying to help keep him steady as they made it around to his Momma. His free hand held tight to his twin, seeking comfort. He wanted nothing more than to rush to his mother, but it would probably be bad and he'd be shot, or worse, his Momma or Daddy or Sister or Grandpapa could be shot.

Toki was relieved when her family was able to join her, and though her mane didn't relax, her wings did give a soft flick to express her emotions. Strength in numbers. "What do you think they want?" She asks in a soft, nervous whisper, her belly tightening with anxiety and stress.

Papyrus kept his hands on either of his children's backs as he made his way around the car, and once he made it to Toki, he quickly pulled her protectively into his arms, his children pulled to between their parents' legs. They made a cage around them, keeping them safe.

Then, and only when Papyrus had made it to hide his children and wife, did Tenebris relax. He growled quietly at the humans, but slowly lifted his tail blade to his hand as they ordered to keep it visible. He gently grasped it and held it up with his other hand, though that did not stop the vertebrae of the tail from rattling furiously as he stepped around his vehicle to join the others.

As Papyrus had done, he was slow and patient until the time that he made it to the others, and at that point he moved to join Papyrus to dedicate his broad form to protecting the smaller, younger forms. His arms wrapped around the others as his tail, now freed, came around their front to continue rattling protectively.

Papyrus felt reassured when Tenebris joined them and took on his protective stance. The tallest skeleton reached up to rest a hand on his shoulder to put him more at peace- though as Toki spoke to him, his other arm tightened around her. "I don't know... but as long as they don't aggravate Father further we should be safe..." He answered quietly.

Toki swallowed nervously and nodded. With how they were currently standing, she was caged by her husband and father-in-law, and under her was her children. They’d have to come through all three of them to get the children, or go through the heavy metal plating of Tenebris’ car. “Just… stay calm.” She says anxiously, keeping her voice hushed. “Humans get trigger happy when there’s a threat around. Dad is… frankly, frightening when he wants to be.”
“Momma?” Honey tugged gently on the bottom of her shirt. “Did we do something bad? Are they going to take us away? I don’t wanna be taken away from you and Daddy and Grandpapa and Sobek!”

“No, sweetie, no.” She reassured her gently. “None of us did anything bad. I’m sure this is just a huge misunderstanding. We’ll find out what’s going on, okay? Just… stay here, and no matter what happens, don’t leave your father’s side, okay?” Come hell or high water, Papyrus would protect their children, no matter the cost. “No one’s going to take you away.”

“Okay.” Skylar murmurs softly, and his fingers reach out to cling tighter to his father’s leg.

“Tokiko Nara.” The man who had been mumbling into his collar spoke up once more. “Or Gaster-whatever your last name is, I need you to step forth please.”

“Either is fine.” She doesn’t feel like correcting him that it’s Nara-Gaster, and tightens her hold on her family. “Why?”

“Mrs. Nara then. I need you to step forward so we can explain the situation to you.” He lowers his gun, and opens his hands in a motion of peace. “Please- we mean you and your family no harm so long as you cooperate. You can go right back to your family in just a moment- I promise.”

Her magic reacts, pulsing with sluggish wariness along her bones. She swallows, and nods. “Okay…” She didn’t really have a choice- things would get violent if she didn’t comply, and they weren’t in a position to fight. She was pregnant, vulnerable, and her children were easy targets. Her husband would try to protect her, as would Tenebris, and it would result in them getting dusted, she was sure.

She was backed into a corner, with the only way out being going into the lions den.

“Dad… you need to let me out,” She touches his shoulder gently, “And keep the children safe, please. I’ll be right back- he promised I would.”

He gave a low growl in reply, glaring at the soldier as he quickly read over his posture, before his arms slowly lowered. "One step.” He relented. “Stay right here beside us…” He growled quietly. "Do not let them reach for you, do not let them touch you... Show that you are staying with your family because if they are honest, they will not demand further.”

“Alright.” Toki nodded softly. Once she was let out, she took a couple small steps- which equaled one of Tenebris ‘large ones’, to meet the man on equal ground.

Thankfully, he seemed see what she meant, and he moved to step closer to meet her half way. He kept his hands up at his shoulders as he approached, his gun hanging around his shoulder and out of his reach. “Thank you for meeting me half way, Mrs. Nara.” He said softly, and gave her an eye smile.

She shakily returned it, and kept a respectable distance between them. There were still a few feet between them, just as there was between her and her family- equal ground, equal risk. She could ‘kill’ him before he could shoot her, and so on. “Right. You said you would explain what’s going on, right? My family and I- none of Monsterkind in Nara Village in fact- have done anything wrong to warrant the action of the united governments.”

She recognized the uniform- it was the same sort as when the governments had unified to deal with Humans Against Monsters- when they had tried to help against Cruelty, until it was proven that they couldn’t because they had men inside that were working as agents of HAM.
The man didn’t seem surprised that she recognized the uniform. He offered her a kindly smile that contradicted his words. “I understand your confusion, Mrs. Nara- but in fact, you and all of the Monsters have been committing a crime. You’ve been committing a crime for a long time- and you even denied us access and aid in pursuing fixing the issue.”

Her brows shot up, and her hands dropped lower. Shock slid through her, alongside confusion. “What? What did we do wrong?”

“Refused to offer aid to the other worlds across space of darkness.” He answered, and his smile dropped.

Toki had only ever seen a man moved that fast once or twice in her life, and it had been back when Han had been freshly retired from the service. He had been dicking around with her and her brothers, and it was a speed, a fluid sort of motions in his limbs, that she would never forget, not even long after he had been dead and gone.

Toki didn’t have time to react before the non-civilian man had grasped her by the shoulders and spun her, nearly throwing her already precarious balance off. He didn’t grab her by the arms, or by the ‘hair’ as many villains often did.

His hands found the joints of her wings in one hand, and he grabbed a firm hold of them, using them to yank her back and away from her family. He crushed the gossamer surfaces together, igniting her back in pain as he yanked and strained the joints where they connected.

Unlike her arms, her wings did not pop on and off.

His free hand drew a knife, and the sharp point rested on her belly as she was left reeling. Her hands tried to bat it away, but when he pricked her through her shirt, drawing up the green that was her ‘blood’ to the surface, she stopped struggling.

“You’re coming with me, Kindness,” He says firmly, “and you’re going to help us make contact. And you,” He addressed her family, “Are going to behave, or you’re going to watch her belly split open like a ripe melon, and watch her insides hit the ground. We need her, we don’t need the fetus. We also don’t need her pretty, pretty wings. I wonder if they’ll reattach once I rip them off.” He commented dryly, as if talking about the weather. This was just a job for him- these were just targets, not people, not living things.

"No!" Papyrus shouted in horror.

Tenebris flared in rage and roared viciously, his tail lashing fast behind him, but with the knife by her belly... by his beloved children.

His tail swung before it flew and sank hard into the ground by his tensed up feet, lashing and curling to leave a mark into the paved ground.

"Please! We're cooperating! You don't need to do this!" Papyrus spoke quickly, a hand extending to his father's chest to keep him where he was. "Let my wife go; we're not going to try anything... just please... Don't hurt any of them." He pleaded. "I'm begging you.”

“Don’t hurt my Momma!” Skylar cried, trying to reach out for her between his Daddy’s legs.

“Don’t hurt her!” Honey shouted. “Let her go you meanies!”

“And if you all comply,” The man continued smoothly, voice calm and even like he wasn’t threatening infanticide, “then there won’t be any blood shed. Well, any more blood.” He glanced at the green sliding down his knife. He flicked it off, splattering it on the ground.

“We won’t.” Toki gasps softly. She keeps her hands still; she could sting him, could end him right there, but the knife was too close to her belly. She didn’t care about her wings—fuck her wings, she could live without flying—but while they were in her belly, they were her babies, and he was threatening them. “We won’t be any trouble.”

“Good.” His grip tightened on her wings, pulling a whimper from her, and he gave her a rough shove forwards. “You four—you’re coming too. Walk in front of us, real slow.” He didn’t worry about the kids—what could a bunch of children do to them after all?—but the big one that was basically growing rabid worried him a lot. The man refused to turn his back on him.

Which was very, very wise—that tail had a long reach, and he didn’t doubt he’d find it buried in the back of his skull.

“Come. We’re headed into the inner sanctum—or as you know it to be, your… memorial, Mrs. Nara. Walk.” He gave her another poke with the knife to urge her family to move, and drew another bit of blood. “Oops. I may have sharpened this just a little bit too much. Best not make me wait, hm?” Cool eyes leveled onto the monsters by the car.

Tenebris snarled again but a soft ‘father’ from Papyrus quieted him for just a little longer.

With a disgusted sneer at the human, Tenebris pulled his tail from the ground and hooked it on his hip before he gently scooped up the children, allowing Papyrus to focus on himself and his wife.

“We're going... just move the knife away from her. You don’t need to hurt her anymore...” He spoke softly, slowly picking up his pace to stay at his father's side. Oh his leg was hurting now, definitely so, but he needed to keep up a facade.

“The knife is staying right here.” The man smiled crookedly. “It makes pretty good leverage, and it keeps you all moving. I think it’s got you more nervous than your wife losing her pretty, pretty wings. Maybe I’ll just keep those anyway, as a trophy for a job well done when all is through. She doesn’t need them to keep breeding.”

Toki’s magic surged under her bones, and her eyes flared greener. She took in a rough breath, and focused her magic down to where the knife was bumping against her, leaving tiny little paper cut like marks that stung like a bitch. She felt woozy as she forced her magic up to defend her in ways it felt like it didn’t have the capacity to do—so she did the one thing she wished she didn’t have to. For the safety of the babies in her belly, she reached down her connection to them, and forced it thinner—she cut off as much magic flow to them as she dared, and threw it all into her defense. When the knife glanced off her skin instead of cutting it, and the litter thrashed in protest, she knew she’d done her job correctly.

She glanced up to her children, and watched the twins cling to Tenebris and sob with stress. Her wings tensed under his hand, aching to break free—but she held back. She wasn’t bullet proof. But her belly was was knife proof—and he didn’t seem to notice it yet.

The men guided them to where her statue stood—or rather, where it had once stood. It had been toppled over, along with the grave for the baby that had been lost. All of the flowers had been trampled, and the statue and grave had been shoved roughly to the side of the inner gardens. There were a bundle of machines there now, sparking with electricity—she didn’t know what they were for.

Out one side of the four pathways that lead into the inner sanctum of what was once an almost hallowed ground, through a chain link gate that was hastily erected with barbed wire and heavy chains, every adult monster and human worker in the village was visible. They were bound and tied, and forced down on their knees- and not a single one of them was free of some form of injury.

They had not gone quietly.

Men with guns lined the walls, keeping them all down, and keeping the visibly armored, and visibly heavily sedated guards, down and out.

Down another path, the ‘gate’ was open- and inside was walls, upon walls, of children. They weren’t chained, and very, very few showed any signs of having been handled roughly- but they were crying and upset.

Thumper was there too, holding Solstice. The toddler didn’t look happy, and was visibly crackling with fussy blue flames as she chewed on her fist and babbled at her companions. The bunny holding her was roughed up, and one of his eyes was black and swollen shut. With him was his little pink love interest, Twitch, and Wolfen and Bo’s son Howl- and they were huddled together in the ‘child cages’ nearest the front entrance.

The third ‘entrance’ had all of the cabling leading to it, and heavily armored guards standing at the gate, blocking most of their view of what was down the third entrance. All they could vaguely see was Grillby in a cage- and he wasn’t moving.

“And here,” the man spoke again, his voice rising so they would all hear him over their stunned and likely angry stupor, “is where we start to separate you just a bit. See, because of your power levels, the both of you gentleman will be escorting Mrs. Nara here over to Zone A. You’re just a bit too strong to send to Zone B- the guards couldn’t keep an eye on you there. So, you’ll get to have a front row seat of the excitement. Now- your kids, they’re just innocent little gumdrops. So they go to Zone C, with all the other little ones- we don’t want them getting hurt, would we? There’s a lot of dangerous equipment in Zone A.” He soothes, voice silver-tongued like a rattlesnake.

Tenebris had stopped for only a moment when he saw the ruined memorial for the lost child, and his eyes glowed brighter as his tail rattled and lashed with pent up rage- but he had continued walking, lest they lose the rest. "And by escort, you mean we're going to walk there as you continue to threaten the unborn in what you think is your advantage of power?" Tenebris growled, but continued to walk regardless.

Papyrus turned, his gaze darkening from fear to show more anger. "Where is my brother?” He questioned. "What did you do with him?"

“Yes, Doctor Gaster, that is precisely what I mean.” The man rolls his eyes. His gaze turned to the tall Skeleton when he stopped, and the knife slid up, slicing through Toki’s shirt, baring her belly, nipples and all. “Your brother is just ahead, Mr. Gaster. You’ll get to see him shortly- he’s in one piece, I promise you.” He gave him a pleasantly sweet smile- a liar’s smile. “Physically at least. You should be proud though- during the entire roundup today, not a single life was lost. Neither human or monster. We took great care not to kill anyone here. Should everything go as planned, and you comply without a problem from here on out, we won’t have to get out the dust pans.”

Toki swallowed, and felt her stingers clench in her wrists. Her eyes burned as she stared at her husband.

“Now… Please, give us the children before we can proceed.” The man smiled pleasantly. “They’ll be just across the way from you, and no harm will come to them so long as they don’t fight.”

A guard stepped forward, motioning for Tenebris to give him the twins.
They cried harder. “No!” Honey shrieked. “No!”

And yet Tenebris did not lean down nor did he move to offer his grandchildren... Rather as soon as the guard got close enough, he turned his form and roughly bucked his leg, kicking the guard away. "You are not taking my Grandchildren!" He snarled.

There was a lot of force behind his kick- the guard went sailing backwards, and crashed head first into one of the brick walls. There was a crunch, and then they were down to three- two of which raised their guns up to point at Gaster, and clicked the safety off.

The man holding Toki tsked, but didn’t order for them to shoot. “Now, now, Doctor Gaster.” He says, setting level eyes on him. “That wasn’t very nice. I do believe you killed my guard.”

The guard wheezed just slightly.

“Oh, nope. He’s alive. He probably won’t ever walk again though.” The man hummed. “Oh well, no loss. He’s easily replaceable, as are we all that have no names among the corporation. But... is your son so easily replaced?” The man arched his brow, and glanced back at Thumper. “I would suggest behaving, Doctor Gaster. I won’t ask twice.”

“Can’t- can’t he just take them with him?” Toki asks, and shifts her hands. Her magic pulses tiredly, and she winces as the knife bites again- she could smell her own blood. It bothered her- her belly shouldn’t be bleeding. “It’ll keep them all calmer- please.”

“Hmm...” The man hummed. “I suppose so. For now, keep walking- No, no, leave him there. It’s his fault he got kicked in the first place. Just leave him alone. We’ll pick him up later.” The man waved off the woman who tried to go to the fallen man, and nudged Toki forwards towards Zone A.

Inside of Zone A were walls of ‘cages’. Reinforced custom chain link fences, with the tops sealed. Past the cages were seven tall tubes with doors that hooked to the electricity, and then a set of computers in front. People were bustling here and there, securing everything. And everywhere- absolutely everywhere- were guards with guns.

The cages that they had to go past were ‘custom’ for the people kept inside.

Grillby’s cage had a fire hose pointed at it- and he was unconscious and looked to be barely breathing. Next to his cage was Alphys, who sat trembling in the corner, her eyes flicking back and forth as if seeing things that weren’t there. Next to Alphys was Undyne, who sat slumped in a corner. She was covered in bruises- she hadn’t come quietly, and had been obviously sedated. She had a few fingers through her cage, trying to comfort Alphys before she’d lost consciousness. Muffet was the last cage at the end, and she was coughing, spattering the ground with lavender colored blood spots as routinely a can of something was sprayed into her pen.

Across the path from Grillby sat Sans- who was slumped over in his cage and trembling from time to time. Soft whines echoed from his cage, and flashes of color would illuminate his closed sockets. Next to Sans was Toriel. Toriel was peppered with darts, and had obviously been sedated for a long time. The goat woman slept deeply, unaware of the happenings around her.

In the last cage, Asgore was bound, hands and feet. One of his mighty horns had been deeply cracked, nearly broken clean through, and from time to time he would let out a soft moan. The smell of burning flesh floated from him- there were cattle prods pressed to his stomach and legs, keeping him awake and aware, despite the drugged look in his eyes. Next to him, there was a man with a gun to his skull.
“How do you like our collection?” The man hummed. “We’re only missing one boss monster-Mettaton. Unfortunately, he was too elusive to get hold of- but he’s far out of the country, so he won’t be interfering.” He beamed as he guided them past Asgore. “We caught the King first. We had to, you know- to make sure everyone else gave up. We caught the King, and then we took the skeleton and his baby- we had to use a fire extinguisher on his elemental, and he hasn’t woken up since, but he’s not dust so I’m sure he’ll be fine. Your brother put up quite a fight, until we put a gun to your nieces head and threatened to remove that cute little skull of hers. He was trembling something awful for a while in that cage, and we had to sedate him when he started to let off some interesting colors. Poor guy.”

The false sympathy made Toki feel nauseated.

Papyrus had stopped at his brother's cage while Tenebris stopped at Asgore's, his tail lashing back and forth.

"How could you do such a thing!?” Papyrus demanded furiously as he turned to face their ‘guide’ through this abhorrent scene. "Do you not realize what could happen if you were not careful!? You could have killed someone!"

Asgore’s drugged gaze slid to him, but he couldn’t speak. His mouth was muzzled shut- all he could do was utter a low, exhausted moan.

The man laughed softly. “We gave them an option to go quietly. The ones who fought back were punished. If they didn’t fight back, they weren’t punished. The ones who fought did so knowing they risked death.” He flashed Papyrus a grin, and left him and Tenebris to be guarded as he moved Toki onward. “Let that be a lesson. Fight back, and you’ll be punished.”

Toki squirmed, and he gave her a sharp poke, making her give a yelp. Her magic strained against the knife- it was very sharp. “What… What is all of this for?” She asked, her eyes sliding to the tall tubes, as that was the only place she wouldn’t have to see people suffering. She was steadily being shoved towards it, away from Papyrus and from Tenebris, though she tried to make her steps go slow so she didn’t have to go. She needed to think- she needed a plan, and she needed one now. Where- Where was Stag? Stag could help, couldn’t they?

He followed her gaze. “Those, Kindness? Well, Mrs. Nara, those are for you. We have to hope you’ll fit though… Or I might have to shave off a few inches to squeeze you in- like I had to do with that deer beast of yours when we locked him up. A real wild one, that one- but he won’t get out of your house.” His knife caressed her belly like a lover might, and he hummed as he noticed he didn’t shave off any skin like he should have. His hand tightened on her wings. “Oh my. You’re using magic to protect yourself. That simply won’t do- we need you to have all the magic you can.”

His hands tightened on her wings, and he pulled, until one of her joints popped. It dislocated, and she shrieked. He had to loop his arms around her and hold her up, cradling her close like a lover might. “Shhh, love, shhh. You didn’t listen- we said not to use magic, didn’t we? I think we did. If not, I’m saying it now. No magic, or the other wing gets dislocated.”

Toki sobbed.

It was when he made his beloved shriek that Papyrus snapped. With Tenebris protecting his children, it was up to him to protect his wife, and now the human had gone too far.

"GET YOUR FILTHY HANDS OFF OF MY WIFE!” He roared. He teleported closer and lunged off his good leg and used one hand to sock the other in the face roughly, his other hand grabbing hold of the wrist that held the knife
The man reeled back, keeping his grip on Toki with his free arm as she wailed at the jostling of her dislocated wing. He managed to keep his feet even as he spat out a tooth.

The man didn’t need to use the knife though- or even his gun.

Papyrus made one grave error- the man accosting his wife wasn’t alone.

There was one quick pop, and then the prosthetic that made up Papyrus’ leg exploded in a hail of false-bone and real bone.

Chapter End Notes

Strider Notes: And then it changed, when the fire nation attacked. MUHAHAHAHAHA. On a more serious note, we get to see how Toki handles a new conflict. Will she handle it in just one chapter- or will we have another 90 chapter arc to deal with the enemies brought about by this chapter? I suppose you’ll have to read and see how Balance Soul Toki handles things differently than Kindness Soul Toki did.

Chapter Notes

Strider notes: OOOPS LOOKS LIKE IT’S A MULTI PART CHAPTER AND THE SAGA CONTINUES.

I’m sorry, I couldn’t resist leaving you guys with a cliff hanger for good times sake.

Anyway, sorry for the belated update. Migraine had me down last night, so I had to wait until I was up and around this morning to post.

The pop and explosive hail of bone was echoed by horrified shrieks from the twins in Tenebris’ arms.

Toki’s shriek of pain turned to one of horror as she watched what she hadn’t gotten to see before because of dealing with Simmons- the destruction of her husband’s bad leg. One shot was all it took then- and one shot was all it took now, and the shrapnel peppered her hip like sharp white glass flecks.

The man holding her knew it too- and his face stretched into a grin even as the shards stuck into the thick material of his clothing.

A choked sound was torn out of Papyrus as his leg was destroyed and it was when he hit the ground that he screamed, loud and agonizing as he gripped what remained of his leg. "Fuck! Fuck! You bastards!" He howled. "My leg!" He grit his teeth, shakily attempting to put his remaining leg back under him. "You’re gonna pay for this..." He hissed.

Toki tried to drop down to him, to lunge for him, but her dislocated wing was twisted and she muffled a cry again.

“That’s what you get when you misbehave.” The man said dryly. He rubbed his tongue along the inside of his cheek. “Mmm, you knocked out one of my teeth. Should I take one of your wife’s teeth to replace it? Maybe even two teeth? I’m sure I would look fearsome with a grin like hers.”

Before he could antagonize them anymore, an annoyed voice interrupted them. “Zankoku. Behave.” A woman behind the computers glanced up- and it was the woman from the government that had been there during Asgore’s announcement, and Toki’s explanation of where she had been. She’d been the one that had pressed about the void. “You’re being rude to our guests. Let her stand on her own two feet, and just leave him there. A cripple with one leg can’t get far.” She dismisses him flatly. “Bring her here. We need to get her hooked up.”

“Fine, Susa.” He sighed, and pulled her away.

Four hands reached for Papyrus, and green eyes yearned to go to him. She didn’t understand- why was the government doing this? Why had they turned on them? Why? Why, why, why? Her magic lashed inside of her and bubbled up, burning at the back of her soul in a way she hadn’t felt in a long “You must be wondering why this is happening.” The woman- Susa- smiles.

Toki half listened to her words, consumed by the fire bubbling in her soul, and burning in the back of her skull.

“You see… We figured out a plan. You may have told us no, but we don’t answer to you. In fact, we don’t answer to anyone anymore but ourselves- we’re our own independant section of the governments.” She shifted, and lifted a little jar. Inside the jar, was the little void blob that had come through on her ring. They had raided Tenebris’ house for it. “We figured out that if we have one of each of the colors of the souls, we should be able to reach across the darkness, and make contact with the other worlds. You’re the last piece of the puzzle we need, Mrs. Nara.” Susa gave her a false motherly smile.

“All of this…” Toki rasps. “All of this… Just to reach the Void? To reach a place that I forbade you from going?” Like a child that’s told no, waited until it was time and then acted out in the worst way possible.

“Yes.” Susa smiles. “There is untold riches across the darkness- I just know it. Just because you said no means nothing, little girl. You’re one person- one soul. We have the power of six other souls behind my machine- boss hearts and anti-hearts alike. Even little Frisk is here.” She motions to the farthest machine.

When Toki focuses, she can see faces inside- they’re floating inside liquid with air-masks over their faces. The glow of their forcibly extracted souls illuminates the liquid inside.

Her rage grows. For them, for Papyrus- for everything.

“You’re Balance- whatever that means.” The woman scoffs. “You have power. And that power is going to help Mankind reach new heights today!” Susa exclaims jubilantly. The jar with the blob was set down, and connected to the electrical flow coming from the six activated tubes. The blob lit up inside of the conductor. “Just like walking on the moon was the greatest achievement of that age, this will be the greatest achievement of our time. And you- all of you- your names will go down in history for helping us. And if you die… Well, you died for your country. You showed patriotism.”

The burning feeling in her skull snapped.

Fire lit up her body, and magic rushed down her body. From head to toe, she felt it consume her, and the magic pressure grew.

Zankoku let out a cry as he was forced away from her, his hands patting at the flames that tried to consume his skin. Toki turned, and she took one of his hands- and she stung him sharply with her stinger.

She watched as he howled- he screamed and wailed, as her venom coursed through him, and she watched impassively as he burned from the inside out. He died vomiting up his own blood and entrails, and fell into a puddle that was rapidly dissolving.

Toki felt disgust and empathy for his pain, though he’d deserved it. He had just been doing his job.

The woman standing behind the computers felt nothing.

“No.” Toki said simply.
“No?” Susa arched her brow.

“I don’t think you understand.” Toki said, her voice rising in time with the flames spiraling higher from her body. Her magic flowed hot and hard, flaming like a falling star, just as hard and just as fast. “I don’t think you understand at all. Boss hearts and anti-hearts… Their power is nothing in comparison to a complete soul. Nothing at all. I try to treat everything with kindness first, because that is what I was for almost all of my life. I’m not kindness anymore.” Her arms lifted, and she braced her legs. Her power flooded the village.

Where once, it could have been considered a lake, her power was now an ocean, deep and unending. It wasn’t like the power she’d had in the other world, where she’d been so omnipotent she could have been considered damn near a god- but her power here, as Balance, was something to be feared all the same. Whatever had snapped open in her, whatever they forced awake in her, they had brought it upon themselves.

Balance had awoken, and Balance would bring the world to heel.

The heat in the air grew, and the guards began to gasp in their uniforms. The guns began to steam, and the ends melted, rendering them useless. The chains holding the gates shut melted off, followed shortly by the cages themselves as the heat of the sun, directed solely upon the humans who had drawn her wrath, melted them until they bent.

“I’m done standing idly by. I’m done trying to find the peaceful way. I’m done being backed into a corner with only one way out. I am doing what I should have done with Cruelty- I’m nipping this in the bud before this is a problem that can blossom into an infestation. I am Balance, Susa, I am the only complete soul in existence within this reality. There is no number of Boss hearts or Anti-hearts that could compare. You should have listened to me. Instead, you brought shame upon the governments you work for, upon the human race- you shamed them all.” She bore her teeth at the woman, and her fury showed no bounds. The tanks behind her creaked and cracked, and the doors began to melt. Liquid began to leak.

Susa’s confidence fled faster than a flock a birds before a cat. “Stop!” The woman shrieked, turning and trying to plug the leaks. “Stop! Stop in the name of everything! You were human once! At your core, you are human! You should be on our side, not on the side of these Monsters!” She whips back around, eyes frantic. “Stop, please! If you destroy the tanks, we’ll have to start all over!”

“That’s where you’re wrong.” Flames curled at her teeth, and bubbled from her eye sockets. Toki looked nothing like a human. Damaged and sore, pregnant and swollen, spewing flames like something not of this world, she looked like a demon come from the pits of hell to take vengeance. “I’m not Human. I’m not Monster. I am Balance. I control the tides of time, and I will protect as much of Monsterkind from the corrupt cruelty of Humanity. If I have to, I will bring the whole fucking world to heel.”

Toki’s hands came together in a loud clap, and the sky tore asunder.

She felt her magic drain, and in the sky opened a massive, monumental portal.

Sugar was big, but Clover was bigger still. And yet, what Toki called forth was even more titanic yet.

The Hell Hornet Queen that came forth dwarfed the largest plane that Toki had ever seen. Her eyes alone were the size of cars, her legs as long as the necks of construction cranes- her stinger rested in a permanently extended state brought on by her armored, gravid girth, and was larger than Asgore was tall. She was truly astronomical in size.
Following the Queen was a swarm befitting a proper hive—hundreds and hundreds, spanning the size of Sugar to Clover and larger—and they invaded the city, their buzzing deafening and rousing those drugged to stupor.

“I AM BALANCE!” Toki roared above the buzzing. “AND YOU WILL HEAR ME NOW! IF THIS EVER HAPPENS AGAIN, I WILL LAY WASTE TO EVERY LOCATION HOUSING YOUR BANNERS! I WILL TRACK YOU FROM LIFETIME TO LIFETIME, FROM MY LIFE UNTIL MY NEXT, UNTIL YOU, YOUR DESCENDANTS, AND THE DESCENDANTS OF YOUR DESCENDANTS REPENT FOR THE DEEDS YOU HAVE DONE.”

The massive Queen bee let out a shriek that shook the skies.

In the silence that followed, the humans could only stare at her in utter terror.

This was the true monster that the Monsters had feared on the battlefields hundreds of years ago, when the Monsters and Humans had once battled. This was the true beast that had plagued them, had cut their numbers down by the millions to the scant handful that they had now.

And now, the united souls of Kindness and Cruelty stood for Monsters, stood against Humanity, in a Balance that could not be contested.

And Humanity could only tremble.

“Get out.” Toki hissed. “Get out of our Village. Get out of our city, get out of our country—get out and don’t come back. Bees—Take them, take them far. Take them out to sea, dump them in the ocean—I don’t care. They made their bed—they’ll lay in it.”

There would be no mercy, no kindness this time, for people who treated innocents like this, who frightened and threatened children and unborn babies to get what they wanted. No mercy or kindness at all.

The Queen didn’t move, but as one, the collective swarm moved in.

Suddenly, there were no humans. There were no guns. There was simply a massive, massive swarm carting screaming, howling humans away towards the nearest port—listening to the order of their other Queen.

And then it was just Monsters and the melting smear on the ground. Toki’s flames guttered, and she wobbled.

To say the least, Toki's performance of power had both Tenebris and Papyrus staring in shock and fear. They were both thankful that such a terrifying monstrosity was on their side. Neither had the nerve to move as Toki made an example of her enemies, summoned a creature that was far more than a simple hornet of her capability. As the swarm of insects lifted the humans, Tenebris ducked and quickly made his way to Toki, setting down the pups to catch her. "Toki, oh my god..."

Skylar and Honey were momentarily stunned as they were quickly set down, but as quickly as they were stunned, they snapped out of it and both quickly ran for their father, who was crawling closer with strained breathing of his wife’s name.

As Toki’s legs gave out under her, she landed in Tenebris’ arms, and it jostled her wings. She let out a pained cry, and her arms instinctively curled around her bleeding belly. She hurt—she felt hurt and drained and empty. She wasn’t a powerhouse behemoth anymore. She didn’t have the omnipotent sort of power she’d had in the other world, though the power of Balance was nothing to scoff at either. She wasn’t the monster that would bring the human world to heel to keep the balance- she was just Toki, and she was hurt.

The massive Queen came down, but was unable to land. So titanic was her girth that if she were to land, she would crush the monsters that lay prisoner, or squash the houses that lay around them. Neither option appealed to the massive Queen. However, one absolutely gargantuan eye was shifted and focused on Tenebris, burning with a bright emerald color. It spoke without words for him to take care of the one who had dared to summon her.

Toki exhaled a shaky sound, eyes squinting open. “Papy… Papy… His leg…” She swallowed. “We need to help everyone… Frisk… Frisk is in the tank…”

Honey reached her Daddy first, and she got down on her hands and knees to try and help pull him closer to her Grandpapa.

Everyone was hurt- the only ones not hurt were the ones restrained in ‘Zone B’, and the children in ‘Zone C’.

Tenebris looked up at the massive hornet before he slowly spoke up. "Please... Protect us while we try to free everyone else..." He pleaded, before he turned to see Papyrus as he made it to the ground beside their feet.

The massive Queen hovered, but moved to a more central location over the general populace. Her long legs sought out open spaces, and she landed fully, towering above them as she kept watch.

"Father, give me Toki... Go and help the others... please." He was hurting. He was scared; but he knew that he was the least of their problems.

Tenebris nodded and slowly moved Toki to sit beside Papyrus, before he grabbed his tail blade in hand and took for the tanks, growling. "Frisk, protect your head!" He ordered.

Frisk couldn’t answer Tenebris. Their eyes were closed, their body limp in the draining tank- they weren’t conscious. The oxygen mask was still functioning, but there was obviously a reason the magically gifted child- and other boss and anti-hearts for that matter- weren’t fighting their confinement.

Toki was trembling as she was lowered down to her husband. She had to be curled onto her side on account of the dislocated wing, and the cuts bleeding on her belly. Sitting wasn’t safe- she was too dizzy. Laying curled on her side was the safest. Her eyes were closed by the time she was settled, her breathing shallow as she reached for her magic again. She reached for the bonds to the pups in her belly, and carefully opened the bonds again, letting her magic flow in unhindered again.

The well inside of her was draining- she couldn’t feed the pups and keep that massive hell-portal in the sky open at the same time. But after this, they needed those people as far away as possible. They needed... They needed more help than she could give.

Stress put pressure in her skull, until she felt like it would explode. She was probably bleeding from her nasal cavity…

“Papy…” She rasped, eyes opening again. “Papy…” Shaky hands reached for his own. “My babies…” The twins bundled into her chest, and she had to bite down on a choked cry at the jostling. Her arms looped around them, assuring herself that they were completely unharmed, and once she was sure, she locked exhausted and dimming eyes on her Husband’s eyes. “Are you okay…?” It’s the first thing she asks him- because of course it is.
No matter how scary and horrifying she had been, she was still his Toki at her core.

"I'm more concerned with you, Toki... you've really got to restrain your magic use otherwise you're going to bleed yourself dry." He told her as he pressed a hand to her stomach, a rough breath of air passing his teeth as he tried to offer her his own magic.

He was momentarily distracted from her by the sound of glass shattering and he turned his head to see Tenebris using the hook on his tail as a pick to break the glass of the tank and drain it.

Frisk bobbed as the water drained. Once it was past their face, their ruddy eyes opened just a crack, and they wheezed weakly to Tenebris. Whatever was in the water itself kept them immobile- it reacted to their magic, but didn’t seem to bother normal humans, or the Monster currently trying to clear the glass from the tube.

It would be best not to let Toki touch it.

Toki couldn’t even react as the sound of glass breaking sounded out across the village. She didn’t even blink as the big Queen shifted, and seemed to set down one sharp-barb covered leg right in the middle of the cluster of people who were tightly bound together. Her entire focus was on him and their children.

Toki gave a soft groan. “I know…” She whispers. “I can’t stop… If I do, they won’t be far enough away. They could come back.” There is fear in her voice- utter terror there. She is not strong enough to do that again- to fend them off like she did. Not without a break and weeks of rest. “The Queen… She protects us…” She whispers tiredly. “She keeps us safe.”

“Don’t let the bad people come back.” Honey sobs against her chest. “Momma please. Please don’t let them come back.”

“They shot Daddy, Momma. They shot Daddy, and they hurt so many people- Please don’t let them come back.”

"Stay strong, my love." Papyrus squeezed her form gently as he continued to share with her his magic.

As soon as the water drained, Tenebris roughly punched out the glass, carefully collecting Frisk in his arms before tucking them into his coat. "Child, do not try to speak..." He told them. "Focus on breathing..."

Frisk coughed, hands clawing the air mask off their face. Their hands rested on their chest, and they took deep, ragged breaths. They weren’t naked- they had on a soaked black t-shirt and shorts, and lay barefoot in his arms.

Toki kept up her magic for as long as she could- until even the help of his magic couldn’t keep up with the strain. The big Queen above them gave a low groan as her source of power and magic began to give out. She took a moment, and squashed all vehicles brought by Susa, before lifting into the air again.

She flew to the rift in space, and waited. It was only a few moments more before the hornets returned, with no humans in their grasps. They all left through the portal, and the unbearable heat died off.

Once the portal closed, Toki gave a shuddering breath, and fell unconscious.

“Momma? Momma!?"
Frisk’s hands moved against their chest after a few minutes of watching the bees leave. Their gaze was drawn to the frantic twins trying to wake their mother. ‘Free the others. I need to help Mom. She’ll wake when the darts are out. I can walk. I’m just tired. Mom can help the others.’

Papyrus held Toki close and continued to pass his magic into Toki's body. "Stay strong my beloved..." He whispered against his skull.

Tenebris nodded to Frisk's signing and he brought them to join Papyrus and Toki, leaving them in a nest made of his coat.

With that, he quickly went to Toriel's cage and he used his tail blade to finish knocking down her half-melted door. "Tori..." He came to her side and began to carefully remove the darts.

Frisk made a frustrated hand motion at the back of Tenebris’ head- because this was not what they meant! They huffed. They had meant for him to keep opening the tubes while they went to go help their Mom. They sighed though- perhaps it was for the best. As they tried to get on their hands and knees, they wobbled like a newborn lamb. They were helpless.

They glanced to the sobbing children, and to the fallen Papyrus. Frisk clicked their tongue gently to get his attention. ‘Comfort children- what?’

Their gaze was drawn away.

At the entrance, Monsters were walking in.

Royal guards were being supported by civilians, but they seemed to be on their feet. The civilians were visibly splitting forces- some were going back to the children, and the rest were coming to them.

Wolfen and Bo were leading the pack to come help them, even though their children were on the other side. “Oh dear…” Bo was more lucid than her wolfish husband. “Tenebris, sweet man… Let us help. You’ve done so much already, I’m sure.”

“The big bee let us free,” Wolfen slurred a bit, “Had s’me really sharp feet. Cut the ropes real nice, n’ we got free on our own the rest o’ the way.”

The people were flocking them now to help- civilians coming and uniting to help and try to take care of them. Several worked down the half melted doors, and got to work rousing everyone with what healing magic they had.

Monsters flocked to Papyrus and the fallen Toki, hands fluttering anxiously, awaiting his words on what they needed to do.

With Tori supported over one shoulder, Tenebris looked out with wide eyes, before he smiled weakly, "Wolfen… Bo... Thank you..." He purred, before he frowned, and looked towards Toki. "We need to give Toki magic. The humans hurt her, and she drained her magic setting us free. Please, if there's anyone who has enough magic to donate, even a little bit, please do so! We cannot let her go into magi-drain!"

“Let us take care of her.” Bo nodded.

The monsters formed a circle around her and Papyrus. There were still groups of monsters running at the edges, helping to free and rouse everyone, and working to open the remaining tubes housing the boss-hearts and Anti-hearts. For the most part, the monsters collected around the fallen pair, and anyone with magic to spare joined hands with the person in front of them, creating a linked circle.
The few at the core crouched down, and laid their hands gently upon her and Papyrus.

“We don’t have the skill to heal her wounds,” A little rabbit woman said gently to Papyrus, “But we can fuel you if you’ll heal her.”

He couldn’t set her wing, but he could heal her bleeding middle. And even if he didn’t- he could funnel magic as well.

The magic washed from the back of the crowd upwards, in small, soothing waves that carried every flavor and spark of life as they worked to breathe life back into the one they hailed as the Guardian Angel, funneling it into her and into her mate at her side. It came in waves of soothing light, pulsing comfort and well wishes with it- and it was, as anyone could describe, and awe-inspiring scene.

Papyrus smiled weakly as the magic came to them in waves and he took a deep breath before he rested his hands on Toki’s stomach, focusing the magic he was receiving from the people to heal his beloved.

Tenebris carefully brought Toriel to join the small pile of the wounded before he quickly started out to get Asgore, a worried whining picking up as he seemed to be more frantic to break the cage and binds of his beloved.

Slowly, under his hands, her stomach started to heal. The knife wounds knit themselves together carefully, and slowly sealed up without a mark.

Her wing wouldn't set itself to heal, but that was fine. The rest of the magic went to filling her stores. It felt like trying to fill an ocean with a bucket- the progress was slow, and seemed to be getting nowhere.

It was enough however for the steady stress bleed from her face to cease, and for her eyes to open just a smidge. She was awake, briefly so before her sockets slid shut again.

Toriel stirred once she was brushed over with magic. The motherly Monster wasn’t harmed or wounded in any way, and had been unconscious for a while. Her magic was at full strength- and she made her way to the center of the circle to check on her child first and foremost.

Frisk gave her a mollifying pat when she scooped them up and nearly split them in half with a hug. 'Later Mom. Others need more help. I'm just hungry and tired.'

As the healing circle continued, Tenebris put all his strength into tearing apart Asgore's binds. The prods had been the first to go, followed by him pulling off the muzzle and pulling his form close after breaking off his handcuffs. "Asgore... Asgore please speak to me." Tenebris spoke urgently, running his hands through the larger male's fur in hopes to find if he had any darts. "Please, Asgore..."

There was one lodged in the mane of the King that Tenebris dislodged quite easily. Asgore opened his eyes and groaned softly. "I'm here..." He whispers with great pain his words slurring slightly, but clear enough to be understood. "Is everyone... Okay? Sans... They tormented his mind... Alphys too... I failed them as their Ming..." He choked softly. He hadn't protected them. "Thumper... Oh gods, our son... They hit him when he fought back..."

"No... You did not fail us, my love. They made sure you were trapped too well to fight back. Thumper was strong. They did hit him, but he was strong and he didn't give in to fear and pain. He stayed strong, like you..." Tenebris stroked his love's head gently and whimpered before he turned to look out over the crowd. "There's a healing circle, my love... We just need to get you into it and you can regain your strength..." He told him. "Can you move?"
“They did so much to us in such a short time…” The King whispered. “They came not even half an hour after you left… They did so much to us… This was planned for a long time…” Asgore shifted in his arms, and his exhausted muscles strained. He lurched upright, wobbled, and half crushed Tenebris under his weight before he got his other leg under him. “I can try.” He said, determination in his wobbling voice. “I just need you to guide me. I can’t see very well- everything is waving.”

The crowd of monsters was growing as the children were brought in. Everyone crammed in, and began to haul the worst of the wounded to the center of the healing circle. There was an outcry for more healers to come forth to the center of the circle- there were only so many who knew the craft, and they could only focus on one person at a time. They needed more- everyone would help with magic, but they needed more hands to wield the craft.

“They need you.” Asgore mutters. His blurry vision focused in on Thumper, and their boy was zeroing in on them after he’d dropped off Twitch with her mother. Thumper still had Solstice, since Sans and Grillby weren’t quite up and about yet.

“Dad!” The rabbit calls, and bustles under Asgore’s other arm. He reaches out a small hand to help steady him, squinting hard to try and see out his swollen and bruised eye. “Dad, come on. We’ll get you fixed up- Both of you.”

Solstice was whimpering, but seemed to be temporarily mollified by shoving one of Thumper’s ears in her mouth and gumming on it.

Tenebris winced as he supported his beloved to the circle, "I do not need the healing. The healers need to focus more on Asgore and yourself." He told Thumper firmly. "Let's get with Toki and the others. I need to get Sans..."

“Alright.” Thumper nodded. He kept Solstice under one arm, and helped both of his parents hobble to the healing circle.

The healing circle opened up to draw them in, and it swallowed them up into the hoard. The human workers who had been kept hostage with the monsters were creating a protective barrier around them- Kon was among them, though he was sitting more to the side with Lana hovering worriedly around him.

Toki’s twinkish brother had put up a fight, and come out worse for the wear. He didn’t seem interested in getting healed, however.

Near the wall of humans, the boss hearts and anti-hearts had been brought. They were unknown variables- and for their safety, they were being kept away from the already anxious Monster population.

At the center of the healing circle, Toki had been joined by many more. Muffet was resting next to her, her smaller form laid flat as Toriel healed her. The spider woman’s breathing was ragged- whatever they had used on her was clearly toxic to her respiratory system. Next to Muffet lay Grillby, his flames dim and pale. He still hadn’t woken- at his side was Sans.

Undyne and Alphys were both awake and aware, and were leaning on each other. They were mostly alright now- though very shaken.

Toki had fallen back unconscious again, and hadn’t stirred. Her children hadn’t left her side, and her one-legged husband hadn’t either. Her wing still hadn’t been set, but there were few who were confident in setting a skeleton’s bones.
Children were being funneled into the circle and scanned over for wounds. If they were alright, they were being handed back to their parents.

Tenebris used his strength to pull to the middle the ones who most needed the healing, though it was clear now that he had calmed from his aggression that this whole event deeply shook the elder male. It was especially clear once he had finished, as he curled up tightly around Asgore, cradling his head and running his fingers through his beloved's fur as a soft whining picked up from his throat.

Sans was scarcely awake, his breathing shallow in panic as he both feared someone's touch and so horribly yearning to be held. His eyes were half-lidded, pupils barely visible as he gave shaky breaths accompanied with quiet whimpers. He wanted his daughter. He wanted his husband. Sans could hear Tenebris' mutterings as well and knew his poor father was as much a mess as he was.

Thumper spotted his adopted brother’s eyes peeking open, and shifted Solstice in his arms. He kept shaking off the hands reaching to heal him- he had a job to do first before he could have people fussing over him. He’d been entrusted with his niece, and he was going to escort her safely now that both of his parents were safe.

Someone was tending to Asgore as Tenebris held him tight- healing the King would be beneficial. While Asgore couldn’t heal, his fire magic was powerful- and he could surely help rouse Grillby.

The bunny made his way over, very, very carefully stepping around the frightfully still form of Toki, and making his way over to Sans. He crouched down, his single free fluffy ear perking. He spoke softly as he tried to peek at him through his swollen eye, and keep his niece from flailing out of his arms to crawl across her unconscious father.

“Brother?” He says softly. “Solstice is here. If… If you’re ready to take her. If not, I can keep watching her.” The bruised bunny boy mumbled. “I don’t mind. Everyone is here for you… Everyone is here for everyone.”

"P-Please... Please..." It was all he could muster. But, it was very clear what he was pleading for.

Please give me back my baby.

Tears were growing in Sans' eyes, as was the magic that pooled in his left eye, blue and yellow with frantic fear. He wanted his baby, he wanted to know she was okay. He wanted to hold her as Grillby held him when he needed him most. “Please..."

“Alright.” He nods softly. Thumper gently pulls his ear from her mouth, and he shushes her gently as she starts sooking unhappily at him. His slobber soaked ear flips behind him and out of her reach, and he bounces the blue flaming baby for a moment, before settling her against her mother’s chest. Solstice babbles for a moment, before she seemed to realize where she was. She let out a delighted crackle, and a little twinkling giggle of delight. “Ama!” She coos, her flaming skeletal hands coming up to plap against her mother’s frantic face. “Amaamamamamuuuu.”

With that, Thumper took a step back and batted away the hands reaching for him. “Nooo stop.” He huffs. He hops back towards his parents. “My Dad can heal me just fine- he’s a doctor!” Only one side of his cheeks puff up in indignant pride, the other side tender with his swollen face.

Tenebris had heard Thumper's words and for a moment was in disbelief at the sheer pride in his boy’s voice- but his purple gaze traveled to his youngest, before his lips curled into a smile that refused to fade as he reached out to him. "My son..." He spoke softly.

Thumper didn’t vault into his arms, but he settled into his father’s side, soft whiskers tickling at Tenebris’ cheek as the bunny nuzzled his stressed face. His plush fur was soothing in ways he only knew a prey-based monster could be at times. He made use of it then. “I’m here, Dad.”

Sans curled around his daughter, cradling her form as he resisted his urge to cry into her. Instead, he kept one arm around his darling child and the other, rattling with how horribly it trembled, reaching for his husband. "G-Grillbz..."

Grillby… Didn’t respond to his husband’s touch. Nor to his daughter’s babbling coos. Grillby was silent and still, save only for the soft, wheezing sound of his breathing, and the crackling of his dimmed flames. In a few spots, blackened skin was visible, where the fire extinguisher had put out his flames.

Grillby could not offer the comfort his mate needed- not any more than the warmth of his hand might have simply provided as it was. He wasn’t the only one comatose, however- the fire based skelebeast laying not far from them hadn’t stirred again from when she’d fallen unconscious.

The night had been long and stressful- but the aggressors were gone, the guards were up… and it was time to heal, and be wary of any more that may come. If they were brave enough to challenge the word of Balance, that was.
The darkness was pervasive. She had been sucked down, and down, and down so deep into the abyss that she feared she would never get out. She had been given a brief glimpse of the world outside, and she knew that her family was safe. Well… her monster family.

Thought faded from her for a time. She floated in the darkness for a time, only the faintest glimpses of sound reaching her. She felt a flash of pain across her back- a steady agony that burned even after. It was a feeling she got used to rapidly- something to hold on to.

Another thing she became aware of while floating in the darkness was the one, constant thing that never left her side. Alongside the echoes of voices she might have known if they weren’t so distorted, there was an invasive glow.

She recognized it easily.

[SAVE.]

[LOAD.]

Those were the two that stuck out to her the most. But… for the duration of her stay, of which she really wasn’t sure how long it was as time was fluent in a place like this, in the place where the broken button for [RESET] had once bloomed…

A new button was fizzling into existence.

[REBIRTH.]

Toki wasn’t stupid. She knew what it meant.

The darkness that she was floating in was a limbo then. She was floating between life and death- or she had already died, and was hearing the echoes of voices long past, and the pains her body had endured. She… She wasn’t sure, honestly. Toki had likely pushed her body too far beyond the point of saving- and she was already dead. She’d felt her magic draining as soon as she’d summoned the Queen. Toki had felt like a nuclear bomb that had gone off.

The true kicker was… a bomb only ever went off once.

Toki was hesitant in even looking at that button. She knew what it meant- if she pressed it, she, Toki that is, would die.

Toki would die- and Toki would be born as someone else.
She didn’t want that. So she didn’t touch it, she didn’t look at it- she just kept her shadowy arms to herself, encased herself in the darkness, and drifted among the haunting echoes.

Eventually though, she knew she needed to just… accept that she had died. Lingering in the darkness was doing nothing but no doubt delaying the rebirth of Balance into the world… and the world would surely need it. She needed to get back to everyone as soon as she could.

She wasn’t sure how much later it was when she turned, her hand slowly reaching out to the button.

A hand reached out through the darkness, and skeletal fingers laced with hers, before banishing the buttons from the dark plane. The hands soothed over hers, and then gently tucked her hand back to her chest.

“Rest, Toki. Rest. It’s not your time yet, you silly girl- the world doesn’t need a new Balance. Your world still needs you. But you need to rest before you can come back.”

Toki rested.

Her first real moment of awareness came with her first inhale. She inhaled, and nearly sucked in some sort of vapor. She didn’t cough- her shoulder was in too much pain to do that.

But Toki did open her eyes, just a crack. Light blinded her for only just a second before the dark blob of… something covering her chest caught her bleary attention. Her mind felt fuzzy and heavy. She wasn’t sure what was on her, but it was heavy. Gracie, maybe? The gray cat was dark enough to be there, and usually found home on her chest.

She wheezed softly to try and make her go away.

Gracie, it turns out, wasn’t on her chest. Well, she hadn’t been at the time. The blob of gray fur had been the cause of the warm sensation on one of her four hands, up until Toki wheezed- and then big green eyes were in her face as Gracie peered down at her, shoving the dark thing off her chest in the process.

Spotting Toki’s conscious state, Gracie did the only thing she knew how to do- meow loudly about how happy that made her, and proceed into turbo kneading Toki’s intensely sensitive breasts to display her joy. A purr soon followed.

Toki couldn’t stop the pained moan, and her dry-boned attempted words at telling her to get off. It sounded nothing like words. She didn’t know skeletons could get dry mouth until now- but it was a thing. How long had she not used her voice? She didn’t know.

As the cat took her rightful place upon her owner's chest, indeed the shadow that was once there was hastily chased off. It let off a displeased sound as it retreated instead to a different lap- which was the only other one in the room with her.

A skeletal hand slowly lifted to rest in the middle of the shadow, which chirred happily at the touch and condensed to form an odd-looking creature with milky white eyes that looked up to the tired soldier giving it attention.

Papyrus never looked down at the creature demanding his attention. He only sighed shakily as he continued his vigilance. Thankfully, Gracie’s yowls had caught his attention, and ever so slowly he turned from the window, gazing upon his wife with the faintest gleam of hope in his eyes.
"Toki...?"

Her head rolled with the weight of a thousand boulders, her long stiff neck giving a few cranky pops as she turned her head to look at the voice.

Bleary green eyes blinked slowly in her sockets, and then her eyes opened wider so she could try to focus further from the edge of the bed.

She wasn't in her room, obviously, but at first glance she couldn't tell where she was. Her teeth parted, and she rasped softly again, her tongue forming and magic pulsing to lubricate cords that hadn't made sound in far too long. Toki was a vocal woman- she was never silent for long.

How long had she been silent, she wondered.

"Papy..." She rasped. She was here. She was home.

It was unclear if this was truly her Papyrus. He looked so tired, as if for as long as she had slept, he had not so much as closed his sockets to blink.

"Toki..." He spoke again gently, before a faint smile came to his teeth. "You're awake... I'm so glad."

Her sweet husband looked so tired- but it was him. It had to be him.

She shifted on the bed, her primary arms coming up to gently remove the cat from her chest. Her hands bumped into wires that were connected to her chest with little sticky squares, and she let out a puzzled sound.

The more Toki moved, the more she could feel wires connected to her by small, sticky cloth squares. They gave off a faint magical pulse- and when she tried to follow them with her eyes, she was lead to a slew of machines covered with screens that meant nothing to her.

She strained to sit up, her dislocated wing feeling stiff. When she tried to twitch it, she found that it had been bound carefully to her back to let it heal as naturally as it could. One of her feet were trapped too, but that was only thanks to Gael as he napped on her.

Toki only made it to a slightly elevated position. She was so tired… her magic stores felt painfully empty, like she had nothing left to give, and her entire body ached.

There was a shift against her middle, and a sharp kick nearly stole her breath away. Good- the litter were safe. Good… She couldn’t have been asleep for too long. “Papy… How long have I been gone…?” She asks, and lets her gaze roll back to him now that she could see him better. She froze, spotting what he was sitting in. “Oh…” Oh no...

He watched her as she spoke and as she stopped, he knew she saw it.

He smiled weakly, before he sighed and his hands lowered... to the wheels that were attached to either side of the chair he sat upon.

He slowly pulled away from the window, and brought his form closer, ever so slowly as he was rusty with the wheelchair he sat in. He made it after a few jerky motions, fueled by his own lack of practice and his visible exhaustion. Once he was next to her bed, he reached out to set a hand on her cheek. "You were asleep for a week, my love... We feared you would never wake..."

Her eyes followed the wheelchair. This wasn’t a pair of crutches- this wasn’t a cane. This wasn’t him walking on his hands and one leg until he had another replacement leg… Toki wasn’t sure if it was the same for humans, but… She hadn’t seen his other leg move while he’d wheeled over.

Was her husband… Paralyzed? Had… had shrapnel hit his spine? He’d dragged himself to her-dragged himself with his hands and elbows and any part of his arms, but she hadn’t seen his legs move- when she’d been set down. Had… Was he…?

She swallowed, and her eyes burned. But her body physically didn’t have the magic to spare to allow her to well up with tears. Instead, her eye-lights quivered and were all that more telling.

Some part of her longed to pull up the load screen, and load back to the morning prior- so they could shore up and make it so this… This couldn’t have happened. But… maybe things might not have gone as well as they did.

Instead of doing anything that might have jeopardized their current fate… Toki reached up, and curled a shaky hand over his. Her next breath was rattling, and it made her soul quiver, which set the machine next to her into a fritz until her soul stabilized again. “I almost didn’t.” She admits shakily.
There is no bravado that she can summon- she can’t bring herself to say ‘you should know better, I always come back’. She can’t. Because she had been so, so close… “But I’m here now. I’m awake.”
She inhales softly.

His thumb ghosted over her cheek as Papy smiled at her. It was so hard to see the smile without the life and love in his eyes, and yet there it sat on a damaged face. "Everyone was afraid you were lost... you saved us, you know..."

Her heart broke for him, making her soul monitor give a few unsteady beats and shrieks in response, and she shifted in the bed. Toki was trying to scoot closer to him, with little success- she was too tired, too stiff- she needed help that he couldn’t give. She wanted to make that look on his face go away- her Papyrus shouldn’t be smiling like that. Her husband smiled with such life and love and ferocity that it felt like basking in the sun- this smile on his face was cold and hollow, like someone had taken his fire and doused it in water.

She nuzzled into his palm. “I know.” She whispers. “I did what needed to be done. I’m sorry… I wasn’t strong enough to hold up after it though.” Her hands trembled, and then she reached for him-for both of his hands, and what was that on his lap? Regardless, she ignored the strange thing that looked too much like blobby, and her green gaze bore deep into his, trying to find him under all of his pain and exhaustion. “Papyrus… My love… Are you okay?” She asks him, concern sliding through her voice. “Is… Is everyone okay…?”

Though her eyes searched and looked deep within his own… her gaze found nothing.

"Yes… and no.” He answered softer still, before he looked out the window again, his oh so wrong smile fading to a frown. "In your absence, decisions were made, and we have taken measures to protect our people." He spoke softer.

Toki did not like the sound of that. She didn’t like the sound of that at all.

So… she sucked in a breath, and let out a pained noise as she forced her body upright. She trembled like a shaking leaf as she moved to try and sit at the edge of the bed. The monitors pulled and tugged at her skin, including the ones at her belly, and she gave an irritated buzz before weakly yanking them off.

The machines began to scream- for obviously without her soul responding, she must have died.

Toki’s feet touched the floor, and she began straining to try to get up. “What to do you mean ‘taken measures’?” She demands shakily, fear driving her body to try and see what he was looking at. She recognized the window now- it was their dining room window, and it had a perfect view of the front part of the entrance into the village. What did he see that she couldn’t? She needed to see for herself. “What has happened? What’s going on? What did Asgore do?” She knew only the king could put into place true measures- what had he done?

The sound of her panic was only amplified by the frankly anxiety inducing screeches of the machines that had been monitoring her- and it was certainly not helping her remain calm.

He reached out and gently stopped her with his hands. "Toki... stay down... you need to recover your strength." He told her gently. "I need to turn off the machines, otherwise they will keep going off. Stay down, and I will return in a moment to answer your questions.”

Toki’s breathing didn’t slow, and her eyes flickered frantically over his hands as they held her own, caging her wrists and keeping her down. The Papyrus she knew wouldn’t have held her so impersonally- not even bound by a wheelchair. His tender touch to her face was one thing- but… There was a lack of affection. Even at his most exhausted, her husband, her mate, was never like… this. She’d gone to sleep with a loving husband, and woke up to a cold shell- the world felt turned upside down, and nothing was right.

She could only stare at him in mute, dumb silence, her soul alight in her chest with panic- and wait for him to turn off the machine.

There was the rushed pattering of feet across hard tile floor- and then Skylar poked his head around the wall.

Her usually quiet son’s expressive eyes got huge, and he turned back to the rest of the house, and cranked open his mouth. “MOMMA’S AWAKE!” He shrieked, spooking Gracie and Gael out of the room with his noise.

His announcement made, which stirred up a whole slew of noise that roused the house to life, Skylar made a bee-line for her. He tried to get past his Daddy, intending to fling himself into her arms regardless of whether she could physically hold him or not.

And yet as he made to pass Papyrus, the older skeleton reached out and stopped Skylar. "Gentle, my son. Your mother is awake, but she is still hurt. She has recovering to do. Don't jostle her.” He said firmly.

Skylar’s head ducked down almost timidly, and he nodded. His father had been a lot firmer since his mother had gone to sleep after the mean humans had been taken away. His father still smiled, but it was empty smiles, and it made him feel uncomfortable. “Okay, sir.” He mumbles softly.

Skylar waited until his dad let go, and then scrambled up onto the bed. He was careful as he sat next to her, and cuddled into her side. He tucked his face into her side, and sniffled. “I didn’t think you were gonna wake up…”

“I did though.” Toki soothes. “I woke up, baby. I’m here now. It’s okay.” She soothed softly, and held him tightly. Toki glanced to Papyrus, before looking to the door. The wailing of the machine couldn’t cover the sound of her daughter coming downstairs, nor the larger footsteps following.
The larger pair of footsteps revealed to be Sans, who looked to Toki as he entered the dining room, his daughter close to his chest and his niece clutching his fingers as she tugged him into the room. "Toki... oh my god..." He sighed with relief.

Toki exhaled a sound that bordered on near euphoric relief at seeing her daughter and brother in law. Like Skylar, she made space for Honey, and Honey squished in on her other side once she helped her father unplug the noisy screaming machines. Toki clutched her trembling children close, tired eyes searching over Sans to see if he was different like his brother. “Well… that isn’t my name, but if you want to call me that…” She manages to crack a hesitantly teasing smile, hoping to see if his humor was still in tact. “I’m up, brother. Papyrus was just… telling me about everything that’s happened.” She swallows. “I’ve heard things have changed in the week I’ve been unconscious.”

He gave a weak laugh at the lame joke, but it was when the happenings around them got mentioned did his smile fall once more. "Yeah... I’m not sure the best way to tell it to you..." Sans sighed, before he stepped over and gently hugged her tightly with one arm. "I'm just... really... really glad you're okay, Toki..."

“... hope I’m okay.” Toki lifts one arm from her son- earning a fussy whine- and hugs her brother in law back. “I hurt. I’m... exhausted. And...” She was afraid. She wasn’t sure how to say that though, when her fear felt so much lesser than theirs was. “Yeah.” She finishes lamely. She glances at the children, and drops her hand down to gently caress Solstice’s cheek. “Solstice looks okay...” Toki paused. Okay… Her gaze glanced down, and her primary arm dropped to her belly. She went silent, feeling the kicks of the tumbling litter. She swallowed thickly. “… How many did we lose?” She asks, voice heavy. She was under no illusion that her cutting off her magic to them hadn’t had consequences.

She would have lost Tenebris another child. Or two.

Guilt made her body tremble more.

The brothers paused for a moment, before the younger gained a smile that was a little more sincere

"None...” He said. “Our people refused to let them die... so many people came in every day to give you magic..." Papyrus spoke gently.

"Though...” Sans looked down as he squeezed his daughter again. "Grillbz... He's not doing so good..."

Any relief she might have gotten at the fact that she hadn’t lost any babies was swiftly squashed. She raised a hand, and set it on her brother’s arm. “Take me to him.” She pleads gently. “Please. I can… I can’t do much, but I can help. Fire elementals are the one thing I know I can help, magic or no. Please.”

She didn’t even know what was wrong- but there was a desperate part of her that needed to help with something, to help heal something. She needed something she could do, something she could fix. “I can’t… I can’t walk.” Her legs were shaking. “I need… help.” She mumbles. “But I want to help him. I... I need to do something.”

Surely they could understand her plight… She may have just awakened, but Toki was Toki- Toki would die for them, just as they would die for her. But giving him venom wouldn’t kill her. It wouldn’t take much to help him- or get him started healing at least.

Sans slowly looked at Papyrus, who sighed, before he reached out to her. "Come on, into my lap. I'll get you there. Don't have to go that far. This is the only fireproof house in Nara Village anymore...
Toki didn’t immediately leap for his lap. Her children sidled away from her as he reached for her, but she hesitated, staring at him. She didn’t even rise to his joke about it being the only fireproof house— it was fireproof for a reason. Her. “… I don’t want to hurt you.” She says softly, and shakes her head. “If… Sans can just… make sure I don’t fall… I can try to walk on my own…”

Papyrus reluctantly wheeled himself backwards to get out of the way as Sans came around to her. "I would have agreed with Pap to use his lap... If you're really feelin’ heavy..."

“It feels like there is two of Asgore hanging off of every limb, on top of looking and feeling like I’m ready to pop.” Toki says mildly with a pointed rub of her belly. She earns a giggle from her children, which was the whole point. “But…” She eyed her husband. “I don’t want to hurt you, Pap. With your leg…” And pelvis, she mused to herself. “I’m not exactly as light as one of the twins or little Solly there. Though… She’s getting pretty big too, isn’t she, Sans?”

"Mmmm... Yeah..." Sans nuzzled his daughter, before he sighed. "I think you should take Pap's offer, Toki..." He told her. "You're not gonna be a problem for him to wheel around."

With that, Papyrus slowly wheeled closer once more. "Come on, Toki..."

Toki stubbornly sat there. “I don’t want to hurt you.” She says. “If you can promise me that I won’t hurt you, not one single bit, and not lie to me, then I’ll ride with you.” But she wasn’t going to hurt someone to help someone. And not… Not after he’d lost his leg trying to save her. All because she hadn’t bucked up sooner, and her power hadn’t come out earlier…

Papyrus looked at her, before he sighed and his gaze sharpened as he looked to his brother. "Sans."

"... Yeah, okay Pap." Slowly, Sans set Solstice down nearby, where her cousins flocked to in order to keep an eye on her. Once she was occupied, he came over and pushed his arms under Toki. "Up we go.” He grunted as he hefted her up into his arms.

Toki’s initial thoughts had been ‘That’s what I thought’ when her stubborn husband had given in and called for his brother. She kicked her feet a bit as he lifted her, and felt her vision swim a bit at the sudden change in height and elevation. Her vision went dark for a moment as her body adjusted, feeling far too much like a human that had far too little blood in their body, but she remained steady in his arms. “Thank you.” She mumbled blearily.

He watched her face for a moment, as if deciding if she really could move on her own or not, and then turned and carefully lowered her into his brother’s lap. Apparently he decided not.

Papyrus wrapped one arm around her and locked her in place with the other as Sans picked Solstice back up from her cousins, before he gripped the wheelchair handle that Papyrus himself did not man as they then wheeled out to the front room, which had been a lot warmer than the rest of the home.

Her entire living room had been ripped apart. Her floor was in tatters, all of the tile peeled back to the bare cement all the way back to the hallway. Furniture was stacked in the halls itself, and there was absolutely nothing in the living room that made it a living room.

Toki was initially at half a mind to shout at them for utterly wrecking her house— the claw marks on the floor could not have been made by a human hand. However, the smell of smoke coming from the living room stopped her.

Grillby lay inside, resting on a bed of coals. They had a couple of fans turned on low facing him, keeping the coals smoldering and blowing the smoke right out the open window.
He was still, his body blackened in many places, and very dim. The fire extinguisher had done terrible things to him and it seemed to still be poisoning him.

Toki’s hands came over her mouth. “Oh Grillby…” She whispered. “Oh… Oh dear… Can you safely take me to him?” She asks, fearing them getting burned. “I can crawl if I have to. He needs venom.”

Papyrus nodded slowly, but looked over his shoulder as he heard rattling.

His brother was trembling, his sight locked on his husband as tears welled in his eyes...

All those genocide runs in the past timelines, and never once did Sans have to see Grillby in such condition. It made Pap's heart hurt to see his brother in such a state. He had done so well to ebb his anxiety before all this happened.

"Sans... Do you want to go wait with the children?"

"No... No... I-I'm okay..." No he wasn't.

And yet he stepped forward and set Solstice down beside her father, before he came back to wheel Papyrus and Toki over... When close enough, Papyrus locked his wheels and leaned back to allow Sans the room he needed to gently grab hold of Toki. He gave a soft 'one... two...' before he gave her a soft boost to the other side of Grillby. He carefully set her down, before he went around to his daughter, taking his husband's hand firmly as he peppered it with kisses. "Grillby... Are you awake?"

His breathing was raspy, mouth slightly ajar as he took slow breaths, but as Sans spoke up, his eyes stayed closed. One had to worry if the elemental could even hear his spouse's trembling voice.

"Grillbz... Toki's awake... We're... we're gonna fix you." Sans' voice was breaking as he spoke, squeezing the elemental's hand tighter.

Grillby didn’t so much as utter a crackle at his husband’s trembling.

Toki pulled herself closer, the paper gown they’d put her in igniting in the hot coals. It wasn’t long before she was shaking like a naked poodle next to him, covered in soot and probably a weeks worth of bone dust from not bathing.

Toki didn’t hesitate though- she lifted Grillby’s arm, and turned it carefully to find his wrist. When she’d located his ‘veins’, where his magmatic blood flowed slowly, she slid her stingers into his wrist, and let her venom flow.

There was more venom to give than one might think. While yes, it was tied to her magic, her body couldn’t reabsorb the venom that it had already made. While she had expended a little bit of venom in killing The Man, of whom she refused to name, her stores had remained un-depleted, and simply sitting inside her bones while waiting to be used.

Color flushed back into the arm she injected, and she smiled softly. She shifted her other hand, stretching shakily across his chest, and then shoved a stinger right into his bare chest. Her venom flowed in, hot and heavy, and color bloomed there too. It was spreading, slowly, and picking up the pace as more of his body heated.

Toki stopped before her stingers emptied though. She needed to keep some just in case he suddenly got worse. Slow treatments would be best. She sat to watch the color blossom.

It spread from his chest, where it was initially brightest. As it spread all over his body, it dimmed- but the over all color of his body itself brightened. Darkened patches of flesh that had failed to be reignited with the king’s magic were beginning to repair and relight themselves. It was progress, slow and steady.

Probably the best progress was the low groan Grillby let out, as his ember like eyes flickered open.

"Grillby!" Sans sounded too desperate in that exclamation. "Oh thank god, you're awake."

Grillby didn’t speak, but his hand tightened over his husband’s. His eyes blinked slowly, and his thumb rubbed Sans’ soothingly. His mouth panted soft, shallow breaths.

Toki wondered if it hurt to breathe. She grimaced, and leaned over to give him a bit more venom around his chest, pushing her stinger deep so it might penetrate deeper than just the surface tissues. She emptied one wrist into him, and then shuffled away. “Sans,” She says softly, “I’m going to give you some time with him, okay? Papy too. You and Solly need time with him. That should help… We’ll just have to do regulated doses until he’s better, but my venom is going to be limited.”

It was a sad sight to see the heavily pregnant woman shaking as she crawled away, attempting to go around Papyrus’ wheelchair. She needed to wash the soot off so she could rest. And… Find out what happened.

And why Asgore and Tenebris weren’t around.

"Thank you, Toki… But I can’t leave you to crawl around." He carefully set Grillby's hand in Solstice's lap before he slowly got up. "Let me help you at least get your feet back under you…”

“I can try standing, but I don’t really know how well that will go.” Toki murmured. “I’m also naked, and the window is open, and I’d really rather not flash all of those guards I can clearly see outside not far away.” She hobble-crawls until she’s at least out of view of the window, before exhaling sharply. Her back hurt crawling like this. Her wing hurt, her belly made her lower back hurt… She ached. “I need to wash the soot off before I can go rest and make some calls. I need answers.” Her stomach also growled with the need for food. She likely hadn’t eaten in a week- and that wasn’t good for her magic stores. “The lower bathroom shower will work fine… Unless…”

Stag had been trapped in that one- presumably Snuggle and Sobek too. “Are Stag, Sobek, and Snuggle okay?” She asks worriedly.

Stag felt alright- they weren’t in the village at the moment, not that she could tell. She could feel them, but they felt like they were far out, patrolling- so presumably the deer suffered no wounds that couldn’t be healed, besides a wounded pride of course.

"They were bruised from the forceful stuffing into the bathroom, but they were not as badly harmed as some..." Was Sans' answer to her question, "they didn't take long to recover afterward…"

With her question answered, Aliquam focused more on her, and spoke up quickly as opportunity arose. "I say you sit back down and take a second to regain your breath, Toki." he insisted, having watched her wobble her way around him like a drunkard. "If you fell, I wouldn't be able to catch you quickly enough and you could get hurt."

"I'm with Paps on this." Sans agreed as he carefully helped Toki up, holding her against his form to support her to the nearest seat. "I'll bring you a damp rag, but you should take a second to make sure you're not going to pass out on us."

“I’m okay as long as I’m… not…” As it happened, being helped to her feet was enough to very nearly make her pass out. Sitting was fine- crawling on her hands and knees was fine- but her body didn’t have enough in it yet to keep her stable on two legs. As Sans helped her up, her eye lights went dark for a moment, and her sooty-self slumped into him.

Grillby- who had been watching as best he could from the corner of his very tired eyes- made an alarmed crackle.

She wasn’t out for more than a few seconds in total, just enough to go completely boneless against Sans and no doubt scare the bajesus out of him and Papyrus. “I need to sit down…” She mumbles blearily, fingers shakily clutching at his soot covered coat. She needed to go lay down and rest. She wanted to rest with Papyrus- she wanted to curl up with him and their kids and have everything be okay, if only just for a little while.

Sans had freaked a little but had been ready to catch her and kept her close until she stirred again. "I've gotcha, sis..." He murmured, getting her to a nearby seat to sit her down.

Papyrus wheeled over soon after, a worried frown on his face as he reached out and set a hand on her cheek. "Take it easy." It didn’t sound like a request that time. "You are very weak right now..."

Toki leaned on the couch she’d been seated on, complaints of getting it dirty far from her mind. Sans had obviously been sleeping on it based on the sooty body prints covering the creamy leather- it was the closest place to where Grillby was after all. She leaned her head into her husband’s hand and breathed heavily. “I’m okay.” She mumbles. “I just got dizzy… Standing maybe isn’t so good right now.”

She took a moment and for once followed his obvious orders to take it easy. When she’d caught her breath, and her eyes could focus again, Toki glanced up at her husband. “I’d… like to wash the soot off, and maybe get dressed in something not made of paper before I get shipped back to bed. Please.”

Without her magic to keep her warm, Toki felt cold, even with the heat pluming from the ruined living room.

The twins had been watching everything happening silently, worry plain on their faces. But, this was something they could help with.

Honey bounced forward, and gently touched her Daddy’s arm. “I’ll get Momma a wet cloth or two from the bathroom, okay? Then you can help Momma wash up. Her wings are dirty.” She blinks up at him, and then loped up to the upstairs bathroom.

Which coincidentally let Toki know that her downstairs bathroom had indeed been ruined.

“I’ll get you clothes, Momma.” Skylar gave her a shy smile, and then moved to follow his sister.

She watched them go, and then turned to Papyrus. She eyed him quietly as the sounds of the children rummaging around upstairs echoed in the quiet house. They were all shy around him- and that wasn’t something that would have happened for no reason. Her kids were mostly quick to forgive- except for the incident with Papa when he had hurt Honey’s feelings. That had taken some time to smooth over.

What had gone on while she was asleep?

Before she could gather the gumption to demand an answer again, the kids came thumping down the stairs again. Skylar had a surprisingly well-matched pair of clothes, and Honey had several soaked cloths.
“Momma,” Skylar hummed, “Since the couch is dirty, I’m gonna put the clothes on the bed in here, okay? If…” He glanced to his father, “If Daddy can help you roll over to the bed once you’re all squeaky clean, we can get you dressed.” He dug in his pile of clothes, and pulled out a pair of socks. “I even got your favorite socks!”

“Thank you.” She gave him a warm smile. “You’re such a good boy- you’re both good kids. Thank you both so much for helping- you’re growing up so fast.” She sent him into the dining room with a happy smile, and it warmed her soul. She needed her children to be happy- that’s all she needed. With Skylar off in the temporary bedroom, she shakily took one of the wet cloths from Honey, and pressed a kiss to her little horns. “Thank you, sweetheart. I can hold them- why don’t you go help your brother while Momma washes?”

“Okay.” She nods with a quiet smile, and drapes the washcloths on her mother’s knee.

Toki exhales as she goes, and then glances to Papyrus as she tries to scrub the soot off her arms first. “You don’t have to help.” She says softly to Papyrus. “You look tired. I’ll manage.”

"I do not mind assisting if you change your mind..." He let her do as she wished while Sans returned to Grillby’s side.

Toki nodded softly. She made quick work of washing most of herself, getting the soot off her breasts and lingering a bit on washing her stomach. Her teats were tender there, and the nipples had swollen up quite a lot in the week she’d been unconscious. Toki got almost all of her clean, but her wings and back were dirty. The bindings holding her injured wing flush to her body probably needed to be changed too- they were sooty, but there wasn’t much she could do about it either.

“Can you do my back?” She asks him quietly. “I can shift to your lap to make it easier. I think I can handle that without falling.” He was level with the couch almost, and transferring would be easy if he scooted closer.

He nodded gently. "Take it easy. You can just turn your form, you do not need to move off the couch." He told her gently as he wheeled a little closer.

“The couch is covered in soot.” Toki complained softly. “Pointless to clean up when I’d just be getting gross again.” She says softly. She shifts as he wheels closer, and Toki leans forward to touch the armrests of his chair. She sucks in a soft, hesitant breath, and then pushes herself upright. A quick wash with one of the towels ensures her butt is clean from soot, before she’s turning and carefully setting down on his lap. She kept low, and to her credit, she didn’t get lightheaded in moving.

“See? Nice and easy.” She said, freezing once she was seated in his lap. She didn’t want to hurt him, to she wouldn’t move just in case she made him more uncomfortable. As it was, it was awkward sitting on a lap that only had one leg. She offered back a cloth to him, her tangled mane ruffling nervously. Her free wing twitched slightly. “I didn’t even get dizzy that time.”

He sighed gently and wrapped his arm around her to keep her on his lap as he then began to gently wipe over her back. "You still should not take the risk in the first place, my love..." He told her gently. "Please be more careful until you feel better..."

She sighed softly as he scrubbed her back. She flinched a bit as he touched tender, bruised flesh. Her dislocated wing needed time to heal. “It’s going to take time for me to heal, Pap.” She says quietly. “My magic containers are… horrifyingly empty. I feel like I’m running on fumes.” She sighs. “I’m surprised Tenebris isn’t here. Or my family- human family, that is.” She mumbles gently. “When I’m dressed and settled into bed- maybe after I get something to eat- I’d like for you to fully explain what’s happened. Or just... Call Dad or Asgore, so they can explain if you don’t know how to put it
"... It was a good thing that Toki wasn't looking at Papyrus' face, for as his father was brought up his gaze darkened considerably. " Father and I are not on good terms right now. We are not speaking."

She stiffened in his lap. “What?” She turned to look at him, her eyes wide. She spotted the dark look, and swallowed. Well. “What happened to cause bad blood between you two?” She asks quietly. While he washes her back, she leans her primary arms down and grasps his wheels. After undoing the brakes, she turns to slowly wheel them back to the dining room. Or… her bedroom now, until she could get upstairs with Papyrus.

The kids had laid out her clothes, and now were seated at a television she hadn’t seen before. It seemed they’d set up the game system in her room- perhaps so the familiar sound of the games would rouse her back to awareness. She wasn’t sure.

"He thought performing an atrocity would save your life at the cost of something he knew you would not give up." He answered tartly. “Needless to say, I grew upset at him and quickly dismissed him until he could convince himself otherwise."

Toki frowned. “An atrocity?” She asked, not sure what he had meant. When her back was clean, Toki gave a soft grunt, and wheeled herself and him closer to the bed. She reached for her clothes, and worked on getting dressed once he was done scrubbing her. “What did he suggest, Pap?” She had a sinking feeling what it was- something she’d have never condoned, particularly so far in her pregnancy- but confirmation was better than assumptions. There was that saying about what happens when you assume, after all.

Toki got her underpants and pants on, before carefully transferring to the bed. Then, she worked her shirt on, hissing softly in pain as it pressed in on her wings and sensitive teats. Her body ached- her back was cramping, and she wanted to lay down. She needed to eat though… She couldn’t subside off of nothing, and neither could the children.

"He thought sacrificing the pups would allow you to recover and awaken sooner." There was anger curling in Papyrus' voice; he wanted to snarl at the very thought, but Toki was right in front of him, so he kept his voice steady. "I told him to cast the thought from his mind, but he insisted that it didn't matter; that the world needed you more than he needed the pups..."

Toki’s breath caught in her throat, and the ache in her back escalated. She leaned forward with a soft wheeze, her eyes wide as she stared at him. “He really…" She whispered. “He was wrong.” She murmurs. “I… I am not worth more than five innocent lives. I am one soul- they are five not yet born. The price- the worth- is not even up for debate.” Her primary hands fist so hard on her knees she thought they might bruise. With how her body was right now, the bone probably would anyway.

“I would die over and over again if it meant my children would live. They’ll be his once they leave my body- but here…” Her hands slid up. “Here, I grow them, I protect them… If I had to die to bring them into the world, I would do it.” She met his gaze. “I would. For ours too. I will be reborn, Papyrus- I come back. They don’t.”

She exhaled in a soft whuff, the wind coming out of her sails rapidly, and then she moaned softly, lifting a hand to her skull and letting it drop in her palm. She could feel a stress headache starting to pound. Everything was a mess and nothing was right. “Ugh, my back… I need to have words with Tenebris, my love. He needs to know my standing point on this… But first… I need to know more.” She peeked at him. “Tell me everything. Please.”

He slowly reached out to take her hands. "Are you sure you're strong enough to hear it? I fear that telling you now will only make things worse.”

“Not telling me will only make them worse, Pap.” She says gently, her secondary hands squeezing his as firmly as she could. Which… amounted to about as hard as Honey could squeeze; so not very hard, frankly. “I’m sitting here, and not knowing is making me stress. I don’t know what’s happening- I feel like I went to sleep, and I woke up in another world. I feel like I’m in a world where just enough things are close to home to make me feel safe, but there are enough things different that it’s setting me off.” Her mane ruffled, and her pupils expanded. She was going to work herself into a right panic again. “I once told you I feared being taken away again.” She says. “I feel like it happened, and I never even knew it. Please. Tell me what’s happened. So much has changed- please, please tell me.”

He looked at her for a short time, before he sighed. "The first night, we spent in fear. We did not know if you were going to wake up in the next morning, nor if there would be a second strike to finally wipe us out... We never went back to our homes. We stayed together. When dawn came... Asgore... He... well...” Papyrus leaned back and sighed softly.

"He invoked law against humankind." It was a simple way of saying it, and yet it was the most painful words on the skeleton's tongue. "Humankind's presence in our village is now controlled, and enforced by every guard with the same lack of mercy that they showed us. We permitted the builders entry, but now they are monitored, and are given a strict schedule and curfew." He couldn't bear to look at her face, simply squeezed her hands and kept his gaze low.

It was for the best that he didn’t see her face- because he would see the steadily blooming horror growing on her face, and the stress lines deepening in her mouth. Toki couldn’t believe Asgore would do that- would police the humans. Putting up a guard, yes- because they used to have a guard force before, when Cruelty had been a menace upon society- but... But policing them, monitoring them, and putting them to a curfew? What did that mean for Todd’s human children? What did that mean for her brother, who lived with Lana? What did that mean for her family, if they ever decided to visit? What about others who had friends outside?

Her soul sped up in her chest, and she was glad the monitors weren’t on her to pick up on it. She could feel the ache increase in her body. But there was more to hear, she knew, so she said nothing, and waited until it was bare for all to hear.

"He put to use the structures left behind from the governmental assault and used them to make enforced checkpoints." He then started once more, without looking up once. "Asgore never once considered separating the innocent children from their kin. That's one thing that gives me faith that our king's heart is not forever darkened." He smiled a little at that, before he sighed.

"But... otherwise... If not monster, builder, or family, they are cast away at the gate. Even our shipments of food stop at the gate... the humans aren't allowed inside. Only the monsters move the shipments.”

"Unfortunately... This does not mean life is any easier for those who are allowed to stay." He hated that he had to say it, but he knew there was nothing worth gaining in hiding the truth from his love. "They are now monitored as well, and must abide by the curfew as well. Though... There is one place where everyone, human and monsters alike, are forbidden from entering. They both risk severe punishment if they were to are to delve past where they’re not welcome."

There was a growing pain in her back, trailing down from her skull. It was spreading along her hips, and made her feel lightheaded and breathless, like all of her muscles were pulling tight at once.

Asgore had shut them off from the world, effectively. He’d shut out visitors, he’d shut out anything that might have shined light upon the atrocity that the governments of the world had caused. He’d done exactly what the monsters had done centuries ago- he’d segregated them, with the exception for trading and families already there.

Her first lifetime as the true soul of Balance, and she feared that she was already going to fail in keeping the past from repeating itself again.

She hadn’t even gotten started on the humans living in the compound being monitored. The monitoring in itself was… Was just unacceptable. She didn’t know how it was being done, but there were innocent children, and her own blood relatives being monitored. It felt too much like the reminiscent memories of something Cruelty would have done in a past life.

She needed to talk to Asgore. She needed to talk to him, because this needed to be fixed now- this severe punishment for breaking the law, this… This… everything needed to be fixed. This shouldn’t have had to happen- if only she’d been strong enough to wake up sooner, it… it could have been prevented.

She sucked in a shaky breath, and her words came out laced with as much pain as she felt. She needed to lay down, to process this- it was too much on top of everything else, on top of all of the changes, the physical pains… Everything. But she couldn’t stop now. “Where can’t they go?” Is all she says to prompt him to continue.

Papyrus, his eyes still lowered with guilt, lowered his head to press to her hands. "The Memorial Garden..."

The image of that which he spoke of flashed in his mind and he trembled. "In the rage and the hurt... The anguish and wrath bleeding from both his heart and my Father's, Asgore summoned forth a magic none of us knew he possessed. With this magic he brought forth a crown of thorns that sealed away the garden. No one is allowed inside- not even the children."

She audibly choked. The garden that held her memorial and the gravestone for the lost baby had always, always been a place of refuge, and of peace. They walked there all the time, humans and monsters- everyone paid their respects, and everyone had always been free to admire the flowers that had bloomed and the little baby trees that had been growing.

Toki felt anger and rage blossom- rage that this had to happen, anger that it came to this, and above all, utter and total despair that Asgore had given in to those feelings and sealed away such a precious place from… From everyone.

Her breathing hitched, and everything felt like it was rolling into one compiled ball of stress. “I need to talk to Asgore- I need to talk to him right now. Right now, Papyrus. I need-“ She needed to talk to Asgore, she needed to talk to Tenebris, she had to deal with Papyrus’ issue with his Dad, with healing Grillby, and everything was mounting in to one BIG MESS-

A rippling pain crossed her abdomen, starting from her navel and feeling like it was ripping her apart from the inside out. It tore downwards, pulling at her pelvis, and she ripped her hands from her husbands as she looped her arms around her middle. She hunched around her gravid belly with a pained gasp, eyes flinching shut. Her mane bristled, her free wing lifting, as it stole her breath away. This was not like the Braxton hicks she had felt- which to her, merely felt like it had been only hours prior. The pain was fresh in her memory- where that had been a tight, squeezing cramp that had been painful, this was a crippling, rippling agony that left her unable to breathe, unable to move- she could do nothing more than curl up in a defensive ball and whimper while she prayed for it to end.

His eyes lifted as her words cut off, his eyes wide in but a moment. "Toki... What's happening? Are you alright?" He asked, hesitantly reaching for her stomach where her hands now clung.

She shook like a leaf in the wind, and whined, deep in her throat. His hands weren’t impeded from their travel, but his fingers didn’t get to touch the usual soft, semi-pliable surface of her belly. Under her shirt, and under his fingers, it had tightened and warmed, like her entire uterus had knotted up into one ball of stress. Her knees started to hinge up as best she could- she was curling completely around her belly.

Skylar, ever observant, ran to get his uncle to come help his father with their mother, while Honey saved their game and hovered anxiously near the door to the kitchen.

"Toki... this isn't just a Braxton Hicks, is it?" His voice was starting to waver, as a nervous fear sparked up in his soul.

Sans, being called to the room by Skylar, quickly looked at Toki before he tensed up. "Oh no..."

He didn’t hesitate to simply shortcut over to her, and where Papyrus had hesitated in fully touching her, Sans’ hands reached out and ghosted over her stomach, feeling how tense it was and recognizing the feel and difference between a practice contraction and a true one.

The bulky skeleton grit his teeth. "Not now... It’s too early…” He hissed between sharp clenched teeth. His cerulean gaze darted to his younger brother. "Help her focus on breathing.” He ordered. “I need to go get Dad." He left no room for discussion as he quickly moved away and fast walked out of the room to take a shortcut to find Tenebris.

Papyrus was upset about the idea of seeing Tenebris again on such short notice, but he knew that in the same his opinion didn't frankly matter right now; not when Toki, and the lives of the children growing inside of her, mattered so much more.

"E-Easy Toki." He slowly set his hands on hers, slowly stroking with his thumbs to try and soothe her. "Please... focus on breathing. Breathe and tell me what you're feeling; is there anything I can do to help?"

Her breath hitched, and she sounded as if she might cry if she could. She hurt in ways she didn't think were possible with ectoflesh. It felt like being stabbed with Honey's horns all over again while delivering, but all over her belly and back instead. She hardly noticed who's hands were coming and going, until the pain dulled away from sharp knives gutting her, to simply someone dragging them over her skin.

When she could breathe and focus on him, she cast panicked eyes up to look at him. "I... Think I need to lay down." She whispers. "It hurts... Like knives in my uterus and in my back. It felt like someone was splitting me in half from the bellybutton down." Thankfully, the litter were still kicking and moving, but it didn't mean much when they could be born far too early.

Toki shifted, and she was shaky as she tried to lie down, shifting to lay on her side. "I don't think you can help... I... I just want to be held," and told that everything would be okay even though she knew it wasn't okay, it wouldn't be okay until she could make everything better again and get it all sorted out, "but I don't think I can lift you onto the bed." And moving her onto his chair would be a no-no. Toki didn’t have the physical strength to lift him out of the chair and onto the bed.

Skylar and Honey hovered for a time, reunited after Skylar had gone to fetch his Uncle, before the twins decided on going to go watch Solstice while... While the scary things happened to their Momma. They could keep an eye on her- their Uncle Grillby was still sick and still needed to rest after all.

Skylar ushered his sister on first, and hesitated a moment so he could go to his mother’s side. He looked up at her, and to his father, who was bound to the wheelchair since he couldn’t move his leg. Without saying a word, his little eye gave a pointed flare of orange, and then he was gone from the room with a small clap of displaced air.

Toki hummed almost blearily. "I wondered when he would start doing that." She mumbled in discomfort. “He’s so much like you…”

Papyrus watched as Skylar disappeared before he looked at the bed. A shaky breath came from him before his eye lit up in the same shade of orange as his dear son and he used his magic to teleport from his chair to her bed. He landed with a sharp grunt, before he winced and gave a sigh. "Th-that worked...!"

“You seem surprised?” He had landed behind her, and Toki’s back was a mess of agony. She didn’t really want him at her back. So, she shifted, and rolled over onto her left side so she could face him. She took a moment to bundle the blankets between her legs, since he didn’t have a leg on that side, and tried to alleviate some of the pain in her pelvis. She took short, shallow breaths, and tucked her face quietly into her pillow for a moment. Hesitantly, she reached for him. She didn’t demand to scoot into his grasps- simply asked. “Why do you sound surprised? You’ve always been able to teleport- you just usually choose not to, since it was the ‘lazy way’."

"You're not the only one drained of magic, my love." He answered, moving his leg out of the way before he rolled to hug her gently. "I was worried that I would pass out when I landed, if it didn't fail and I passed out anyways..." He sighed, stroking her stomach gently.

Her brow furrowed, and she burrowed her face into his chest. She breathed in his scent. He smelled like him... if he hadn’t washed in a week. It made his smell slightly stale, a little dusty, but still him. He had truly been worried, hadn’t he? As his hand stroked her stomach, she gave a soft whine- her muscles ached, and his hands felt so nice, but also unpleasant as it made all of the stressed parts of her sting. “You were among the numbers giving me magic donations, weren’t you?” She asked him quietly, fingers lacing through his ribs as she grounded herself on him. Her mane was a little greasy from being properly unwashed, but thankfully she didn’t stink, so when it ruffled up near him she wasn’t too embarrassed. “You silly, silly man… I love you so much. You risk so much for me… Sometimes I wonder if you risk too much.” She looked up at him, and one of her secondary hands came up to stroke over his cheekbone and jaw.

Under his fingers, the litter hesitantly kicked and stirred. Every kick seemed to make her wince a bit- her womb was still tight, still tense, and it was uncomfortable.

"If it meant you would survive, I would do anything..." He spoke gently as he continued to gently stroke and knead her distressed stomach. "Keep breathing..." He then told her, kissing her head.

Toki gave a soft keen as he started to knead her stomach. "Hhhh." She made a soft and pained noise. His kneading made her belly feel like it wanted to tighten again. "Its Hard to breathe." She whispered. "Its like... Its like if someone grabbed your dick and just squeezed as tight as they could. But it's all over my belly."

It didn't take long for his massaging to trigger another contraction. The giving flesh under his hand hardened until it gave no more than the bones she clung to. Toki let out a soft cry, muffled by his shirt. "Oh god. Ow, ow, ow..." She tried to breathe through it, but she struggled to find a rhythm.

The second one came alarmingly fast- and should have been enough to frighten Papyrus. This wasn't calm like the twins had been. His wife was in pain.

It wasn't long before the front door opened and closed, and a pair of heavy footsteps quickly came into the house. It was only a few moments before the long legs of Tenebris stepped into the makeshift bedroom. "Tokiko!" His relief at her being awake was mixed with his obvious anxiety at her being in pain. He quickly made his way to her side and knelt at the side of her bed.

"Father..." Papyrus' voice was tight in his throat, as if straining against a hand that wasn't there. "Please help her. I don’t know what's happening."

"Take it easy, Papyrus. Let me help." The elder spoke gently as he set a hand on Toki's stomach. "Easy now, my daughter." He focused and began to stimulate the muscles in Toki's midsection. As painful as that sounded, to add onto what she was already enduring, he was tweaking deeper into the roots of the upset nerves to aid them in encouraging her muscles to loosen and relax and hopefully cause the contraction to end early. He needed to get them to relax for him to be able to help her. "Toki, what happened?" He asked gently.

It was incredibly painful, and Toki's teeth audibly ground as she grit them. She wasn't able to focus on answering Tenebris- she couldn't even greet him when he arrived- until her contraction began to ebb and her muscles began to ease up.

When she no longer felt like a watermelon with too many rubber-bands tightened around it, she went limp, trying to catch her breath.

"Contractions." She wheezes. "I demanded Papyrus tell me what happened while I was... In my coma." She didn't like those words. Her eyes flicked over to him, dim and exhausted. Toki didn't have the magic to survive a birth right now- and the babies were too young to survive outside of her even with support. Maybe a few weeks from now... "Stress. Everything is wrong." She stresses. "What Asgore did was wrong... Hhhhh, babies please, stop kicking." Her head dropped back down onto her pillow, and she moaned unpleasantly. "I think it all just... Caught up with me." She mumbles. "I've been stressed since I woke up. I think it...” It had triggered an early labor. "Can you stop it?"
Tenebris grit his teeth as he heard that she knew everything, and he swallowed the rough lump in his throat before he nodded gently, "I will do everything I can... and hope it is enough..." With that, the hands on her stomach slid down to her sides and he pressed delicately as he scoped out the best place to do this... it was going to take a fair bit of energy, but it would help greatly in the long run...

"Now... you may need to lift your hips a little... but this might do the trick."

She made a confused noise, and lifted her hips as much as she could. She trembled. "I'll try. I'm not... I woke up very weak... Papyrus and Sans had to help me around to check on Grillby." She explains, nervously clicking her tongue. She could feel his magic invading her body- her empty coils ached to drink it up like a dry plant suddenly thrust into an oasis. She resisted. "You may just have to move me as you need, or ask Sans for help. I don't think I can hold this position for long." On her left side with her hips lifted? Awkward indeed, and hard to hold up.

"Just for a moment was all I needed." He moved his form above hers and anchored his weight more firmly on his knees, before he reached down and took her hips into his hands. "This is perfect." He told her gently before he slowly flexed his fingers. He pressed his fingertips into her back on either side of her spine, massaging gently to find the right location as he eased her shirt up with his tail as to access her bare flesh. "This might sting a bit," he warned once he found where he needed, "but here we go..."

He slowly rubbed her magic flesh as his magic prepared, pooling in his palms before they gathered in his fingertips. Without warning, Tenebris sank his claws into her skin, releasing his magic with the concentration and speed one could compare to that of a viper releasing it's venom with a bite. The magic shot from his fingers into her body, spreading through it like lightning to ease her pains and hopefully slow her early labor to a resounding stop.

Toki let out a pained sound as his claws stabbed into the soft skin of her back. Her breath hitched, her eyes flinching closed- but her muscles began to ease. The pain began to relax in her lower back, and she eased, her breath came easier. "It's... Its not hurting." She gasped softly. "It feels so much better..." It was like someone was washing ice over inflamed muscles. It was heavenly. The spasms, the pain, was ebbing away.

The only thing that hurt was where his claws had popped clean through her skin, proving just how defenseless she was. Her ectoplasmic blood clung to his claws, but she didn't complain.

As she settled slowly, no longer in pain, Tenebris slowly withdrew his fingers and ghosted over them with healing magic. "I'm sorry, darling..." He murmured, though he smiled as she started to relax. "What do you feel?" He asked gently.

"I feel... Better." She murmurs. "Like... Like everything is calming down. There is a lingering ache, but it's not bad and it's going away. Whatever you did..." She breathes a sigh of relief, and her fingers release their death grip on her husband's ribs. "It helps. Will it... Continue to work?" She asks him quietly, her mind clear of pain finally and letting her think. "Or is this something we need to keep doing?"

"We will leave it for now, but I will probably check in on you regularly. If... this is alright with you, Papyrus?" Tenebris glanced to him hesitantly.

The other Gaster didn't immediately reply. He was too busy gasping in discomfort as his ribs were freed at last. As he steadily calmed down, he looked up at Tenebris. "If it keeps her and the children alive, fine." He hissed, half in pain, half from his still bitter feelings at his father.

His bitter hiss reminded her that she needed to have words with him. "I need to have words with you about that too." She says softly, and fixes him with a firm look. Toki rolls over, giving Papyrus an apologetic touch and pressing her pained wing against his chest as a way to say 'i didn't mean to hurt you'. Once she was facing Tenebris, she gives him an exhausted but firm stare.

"Tenebris Gaster." She uses his full name that she knows, and exhales sharply. "I'm disappointed in you. I'm not angry, not anymore, but I'm disappointed. You know me very well by now, I think. I would die for any of my children. While they're being grown in my body, they're mine to protect and give my life for- and I would have." She says firmly. "I am doomed to an eternal damnation of life, death, and rebirth. Any children I create only get one life. Lets do our best to make sure they get to live to see it and grow as old as Asgore, okay?"

She didn't yell, she didn't shout- but she spoke with the disappointment of a mother who had been extremely let down by a beloved family member. Was that worse? Probably. "For these children or any children hereafter, there is no question about the value of life. Theirs is the one you should choose to preserve and save, every time. Any mother worth their salt would tell you the same."

She then sighed. "Thank you for helping me though. For helping us." Her hand rested on her belly, and she exhaled tiredly. "I fear we may have lost them if you hadn't known what to do... And I would have had to reload to try and prevent it." She mumbles softly.

Tenebris took her words with silence, his head low as he was scolded but lifting just slightly when she thanked him... He nodded slowly in reply before he smiled weakly. "I’m sorry, Toki..." He spoke softly. "I wanted to make sure you survived. I hadn’t remembered just how omnipotent your existence is now..."

She gives him a dry smile. “I’ve told you many times just how omnipotent it is, but sometimes I wonder if you really listen to what I say. And my existence isn’t even omnipotent, really. I can quite easily die- I’m essentially a one-time use bomb. If you guys hadn’t been there, I’d have gone off and there’d have been no putting me back together again. You’d have had to wait until I was old enough to make contact with you.” She comments quietly.

Toki shakes her head and sighs. “That’s beside the point though.” She mumbles. “If I’m no longer at risk of going into labor... I need to have words with Asgore about his actions.” No, she didn’t- her body was screaming for her to consume some nourishment to replace lost magic, and for her to rest. Her mind was what was demanding her to act- before anything could get any worse. Her body’s physical demands were growing louder though, and the stubbornness of her mind wasn’t going to win over it.

She was doing too much, too soon. She had just woken up. She needed rest.

"You still are at risk."

"You're still at risk!"

Papyrus and Tenebris had spoken at the same time, and they both cast each other a look- Papyrus a surprisingly vehement one to his father, and Tenebris a guilty one at seeing his son’s temper.

His son can forgive many things, but suggesting what he had… Well, he’d crossed a line, even with his heart in the right place...

"You need to rest until you’ve built up enough magic to move without anyone's help, and from seeing Grillbert awake, I know you have gone and used your venom stores on him," Tenebris spoke sternly, now back into his doctor mode.
Toki rolled her eye lights visibly. Her venom did him more good than it did her. She didn't sass him though, knowing he meant well.

"What do you suggest I do to... Keep that risk down? I still need to be able to get up and do things. I have to cook to feed my husband, my kids, and myself. I love Sans, but I can't eat hot dogs and burgers every day until I can walk again. Or frozen pizzas." She eyed Sans, recalling the time he'd made them a frozen pizza shortly after her first heat.

Sans made a slight face as she put a jab on his cooking and he huffed. "It's not that bad anymore." He commented quietly with a huff.

Toki could only offer a slightly bemused smile to her brother in law for her jibe to his cooking. She knew he was better, but he was no chef. He had married one after all.

She sighed and then continued. "Until you and Papyrus can work out your differences peacefully... I don't foresee you being able to be here besides medical checkups." She stared at him flatly. "What do you suggest we do, Dad? I'd call on my brothers to help, but..." Her brows furrowed. "I don’t want any more of my human family to be marked and tracked. I refuse."

"I want you to take it easy," Tenebris answered. "Preventing another labor does not mean you're stuck on bed rest... simply stay down until you can get your feet under you and stay on them. At no time before do I want you straining yourself..." He then growled quietly and sighed, sitting on the floor and resting his fists on his knees. "And if it means I can take care of you as a proper doctor does, then Papyrus and I will talk out our differences here and now." He insisted.

"If it means I can take proper care of you, my sons, and my in-laws all the same..." though Tenebris then stopped, "Tokiko, your family is among the delicate exception of those we track, your family is forever welcome in the land once your own... Did..." He then looked up at Papyrus, who looked a little guilty.

It was obvious that he hadn't known that and hadn't delivered such information to Toki.

Her gaze settled on Tenebris and she nodded slowly, her brows furrowing. "So rest until I can walk under my own power, basically." She says lightly. "Avoid stress... Which is going to be pretty damn hard given the state of the village right now. And of all of you. At least I've got a Switch to entertain me." She sighs softly.

"I think it would be best if you two talked. If you can't at least be civil in each other's company, I'm going to end up stressing more because I worry for you both." She shifted on the bed, and settled onto her back, a soft pained hiss leaving her as she lay on her healing wing.

"He left that out, yes." She sighed roughly. "But it doesn't matter. My blood might not be marked, but others are. Felix. Rosie. Their grandparents from Todd and Vikki." Crazy woman she might have been, her parents were absolutely splendid people. Sometimes the apple could fall far from the tree. "It is not an okay system and I will be talking to Asgore just as soon as I am able." She closed her eyes and exhaled. "But I have to rest first. Rest, and eat so I'm not taking other's magic to fill my stores."

Tenebris had to suppose that this was agreeable enough. At least she was staying down long enough to recover some of her health. All other matters were severe indeed, but not as imperative as her health was. He gave a small nod to her demands before he looked up at Papyrus.

The younger man had since wrapped his arms around his wife, closing his eyes as he sighed and relaxed at hearing she would settle until she regained her strength.
Toki rubbed her husband’s hands gently, her fingers stroking his arms as they looped around her gravid belly. She flicked her eyes to Sans. “Sans?” She asks softly. “Could I have some cocoa, if it wouldn’t bother you too much? You’re very good at making it, and while I do need solid food to fuel my body, chocolate is food for the soul. I think your Dad and your brother could use some tea for their chat too.” She gave her husband a pointed tug on his pinky finger. She didn’t pull hard enough to yank his finger off, but she let him know that exhaustion or no, they needed to come to some form of agreement.

She glanced at them again. “Unless this is something you’d be more comfortable without me here for… if that’s the case, I’ll steal my husband’s… wheelchair…” She still couldn’t believe he was paralyzed, truly. It was… hard to swallow. “And go with Sans myself. I’ve laid in this bed for a week. Sitting in a chair with wheels won’t kill me.” And most importantly, it wasn’t standing- and they’d get privacy to have their talk.

"I suppose the use of a wheelchair counts as taking it easy while still getting around." Tenebris gave a small nod. "Very well. Go ahead. While your presence is not something we would stop if you wished to stay and rest, your utilization of the able equipment around you is commendable and we will not stop you if cocoa is what you wish."

Sans looked at Toki as she called to him and he gave a smile, straightening up to head to the kitchen. "No problem, Toki." He responded. "I'll see you in there, then."

Toki gives Sans a nod, and waits until he disappears, before shifting to sit upright. She exhales, and her limbs tremble. “I don’t think I can transfer again on my own.” She admits, feeling shame rise in her chest. “I’d like to go get cocoa though. Maybe see if I can badger your son into helping me cook something, or at least making a sandwich. He can’t burn a sandwich, after all.” She looks at her husband, and then at Tenebris. “If I come back in here to find you at each other’s throats, I will bite one of you. I’m not joking.” She clicks her teeth. “I might not bite very high, but your ankles are at risk. Omnom. Now… Help? Please?” She held out a hand and gave Tenebris a silent plea to lift her into the wheelchair. She wasn’t heavy- not for a monster of his size.

"We won’t get into it that badly, I promise." Tenebris took the opportunity to do more than just move Toki. Once she was brought into his arms, he took a good minute to hug out his emotions, giving quiet whines as he practically held her like she was a cracked china-plate. "I’m so glad you’re okay, darling Tokiko." He purred quietly after he felt better enough to let her go and be carefully put down onto the seat of the wheelchair.

She’d endured his cling with as much grace as she could, seeing as she was basically used for a pregnant-stress doll, minus the squeezing and the stress on her part. She simply patted his arm and cooed to him softly until he could let her go. Once she was situated in her husband’s chair, she gave him a warm smile. “I’m not okay.” She says softly. “Not yet. I don’t think any of us are, really. But… we’ll heal together.” She thrums soothingly to him and then rolls her way into the kitchen. It takes more energy than it did to roll her and Papyrus to the bed, and she muses that she’s doing too much once more.

Nothing to be done for it though- she was already here and moving around. Toki wheeled to the table and slumped against it as she watched Sans putter at her countertop. “So… how many hugs do I have to give you in order to beg a sandwich from you alongside that heavenly cocoa? I haven’t eaten solid food in a week. Momma-Toki is a hungry-hungry-hippo.”

He chuckled quietly. "Don’t even sweat the hugs… Just go ahead and tell me what you're craving right now, and you'll get whatever I can make of it.”

“I wasn’t joking about the hugs- shit, I’d give a blowjob for a Twinkie at this point, and I don’t even like Twinkies.” Toki stared at his back quietly. “Brother, my brother- what I’m craving, you don’t have the cooking skill for.” She assures him. “So, a middle ground. Do you wanna make me a saaandwiiiiich? It doesn’t have to be a saaandwiiiiich.” She teasingly sing-songed at him, hoping to get the desired laughs from him. They both had a dislike for the ovie, but could appreciate using the meme on each other. He needed more smiles- particularly after this week.

That got a groan from Sans, his face pressing into his palm before he began to laugh quietly. "Oh-kay, fiiiiiiine." He sang-song his reply after a few moments of some hearty chuckles.

She grinned successfully against her folded primary arms, and let her secondary arms slip down to massage her stomach while she chuckled with him. She closed her eyes, breathing softly as she rested and listened to him move around, feeling the litter shifting and kicking inside her. They weren’t happy about their almost forced-eviction notice and were letting her know. “It’s good to hear you laugh again.” She says softly. “It’s something normal.” She sighs, her breath fogging up the table. “Thank you. For the laugh- and the meal.”

"No problem, Toki." He began to collect everything he would need to make her a meal. It only took him five minutes or so- maybe six if he was really honest, before he had a plate with a sandwich and a warm mug of cocoa to set down in front of her. "Ta-da!” He hummed gently.

In the minutes that he’d taken to prepare her a meal, Toki was ashamed to say she’d ended up dozing, face down on the table. The sound of the plate and mug being set down startled her awake again, and she blearily blinked her eyes open to give him a thankful grin. "Mmm, thank you. It smells delicious." Her nose focused in on the cocoa, and she scooted the mug closer to take a slow sip. Hot chocolaty goodness slipped down her throat, tasting like the nectar of the gods itself.

“Mmm…” She sighs, pleased, and then straightens to lift her sandwich up. She takes a bite, and then blinks, pulling back to eye-ball what’s in it. “Well,” she says around a bite of bread, sauces, and what is definitely not bologna, “that’s definitely not lunch meat. It’s still good though.” Proving so, she gobbled down the first bite, and set in for another, feeling ravenous.

He gave her a soft smile. "I had a thought about what might do your cravings a favor, so I did a little bit of a meat switch. Hope you don’t mind.” He mentioned as he sat down across from Toki with his own mug in hand. From there, he could focus on her, as well as see Tenebris and Papyrus talking.

That was a good thing about his family... They could have the most ruthless of fights, and yet love for family always brought peace in the end. It was... reassuring.

Toki was too tired to pay attention to both conversations, so she had to choose the one most immediate to her needs. Besides- her husband had some serious anger over Tenebris considering attempting to abort the litter if it might save her. It wasn't something she wanted to see or really focus on hearing.

So instead, she snarfed down her sandwich like it was the only food she’d had in a week- oh ho, that’s right, it was and gave Sans her full attention. Once she’d scarfed the whole thing down and licked her finger bones completely spotless of any sauces and juices from the deliciously moist sandwich, she sat back to cradle the hot cocoa mug to her chest and sip at it.

"Good choice on the raw cutlets." She hums approvingly. "My body is going to need a lot of nutrition to stock up on what I lost. I might even need to see if eating some of my stored up honey might help.” She sighs. "I need to get back up to healthy levels before the litter decides to come though." She’d probably not make it through delivery otherwise. "Mmm..." She sips her cocoa, and inhales the fragrant steam it lets off. "So... What was that black thing that’s running around the house? Kinda looks like if a charcoal blob grew legs and misty-wispy things and started walking..."
Glad you thought so." He answered with a grin, before he looked to said creature as it began to sit in Tenebris' lap. "That’s Smudge. Pop's new pet voidling." He answered, "Turns out that’s what was whatever was in the jar... And it really likes him."

"Huh." She sips her cocoa and thumps. "So when that woman plugged blobby into the machine, blobby changed…" She mused. "I guess the whole experience was good for something then. This 'Smudge' also apparently likes to sleep on coma patients. Gracie booted him off when she needed to announce to the world how happy she was that I was awake, and then knead my boobs. She needs her claws tipped, or she’s gonna poke holes in me next time. I’m glad Dad has a pet now though. However… Why was Smudge here, and not with him since he wasn’t allowed over?"

"I ‘unno. Probably because it wasn’t Smudge in trouble." He shrugged. "He got in one day and Pap just let him stay."

"Oh." Toki hummed thoughtfully. "Well, he’s cute at least, for a little dust mote. Any idea why he’d want to stay? Hopefully not just… sitting on me the whole time." She wondered if Smudge had been what had guided her back, or at least helped her return to consciousness after Phase told her not to press the button.

"True... maybe that's why he was so quick to take vigilance over you while you slept." Sans hummed thoughtfully, "Though as to his motive, i am as clueless as you."

"Maybe?" She gives a tired shrug, and sips her cocoa. She notes with almost a sad trill that it’s nearly empty- but it’s for the best. If she takes in any more food, she’d probably make herself sick. “It would be one explanation. Mmm... Hey, Sans? Do you know where my Switch and games got to? I don’t want to have to hunt for it later. If I’m going to be mostly bed-bound until my magic is up enough for me to get around without riding in… Pap’s lap everywhere… I want to be able to do something with myself. My phone too- oh. Hm.” She frowns. “I wonder if the heat fried it…” She’d had it in her purse, and it had been in his car- but she had… well, heated the air hot enough to melt the computers.

She didn’t want to think about how many monsters’ phones she ruined.

"Ah... We got lucky. The car was far away enough that the car only got warm but it didn't cook what was inside." He explained. "We brought everything inside and set it up in your room to keep the children distracted."

She nods. “They did have two new consoles to play- but from what I saw as a quick glance over, they haven’t done much playing. They seem... very timid around Papyrus.” She frowns. “I’m going to need to work on that.” She exhales softly, and finishes her drink. “But not now.” Setting the mug down, she leans back in the wheelchair and rests her hands on her belly. Now that her stomach was full, she felt… utterly exhausted. Her mind was awake, but her body was dragging and aching for rest and sleep.

“Mm... I definitely am going to want the switch set to hand-held mode.” She wiggles her fingers against her belly, stroking over her gravid swell as it shifts under her shirt. Her swollen teats were sore, but the shirt was thankfully soft. “The kids are gonna be clingy, and want to be close most of the day- which is just fine. I really don’t want them far. Not after…” Not after those people had tried to take them. Knowing her kids were in the same house was enough for her right now. “Anyway. They’ll be taking the television most likely.”

He nodded in understanding, before he sighed. "I know why they're so, well... unsettled around Pap.
If I don’t tell you, I don’t think you’d really get an answer anywhere else..."

She tilted her head and her gaze sharpened, looking at him with the expectant and protective ferocity of a mother bear. "Tell me. Please." Her soft ‘please is the only thing that keeps it from being an outright demand. His words made her feel paranoid- and as much as she didn’t want to, her thoughts were racing to dark places for what could have happened.

"We were all in a bad place mentally while we were recovering. Pops was having some time with Pap, healing him where he could, numbing the rest where he couldn’t, y’know. From what I learned, they had done some talking that quickly went to shit..."

"There... How do you feel?" Tenebris asked him quietly.

"I cannot feel my legs... or my hips..." Papyrus sighed. He didn’t seem comfortable with it, but no feeling was better than complete agony. "Thank you, Father...."

"Of course..."

The younger skeleton didn’t say anything more, his gaze drifting away and towards his slumbering bride. "..."

"Papyrus... My son, I was thinking... About Toki "

The younger monster didn’t hesitate to butt in, intruding upon his sentence with three simple words. "She’s stable, right?"

"As stable as she can be in her condition, yes... But... I want to propose something that... it would allow her to recover faster... at a price..."

Papyrus’ gaze slid back to him finally, and he stated at him with an almost exhausted flatness. "What price do you speak of, Father?"

"I... I’ve been wondering that if Toki was to no longer be tied to the responsibility of growing the litter within her, if she would wake s-"

Tenebris had not gotten the chance to react, or even finish his sentence, before Papyrus had suddenly lunged downward, biting hard into the older male’s shoulder as bones summoned, one of them gazing his father’s head and tearing a pain filled howl from Tenebris. Quickly Papyrus was grabbed and pried off as Tenebris quickly made some distance between them.

With that distance, the doctor could see his son’s unbridled rage bubbling up where there had nothing but a blank slate almost mere moments before.

"I’ll take care of my wife without your help, but if you come close to her after you dare suggest such a thing, then I will kill you myself!"

"Papyrus! You must understand why I would suggest-!" Tenebris had barely gotten his share in before the other fired another round of bones at him, lunging out of his chair only to hit the ground hard with a snarl of pain.

"GET OUT!" Papyrus' howl was of anger and pain all wrapped in one, and he fired a final round at his father that had him quickly making a break for the door.
Tenebris dodged the final flurry of attacks before he was gone, leaving Papyrus to breath roughly and furiously as he sank his fingertips into the floor

"Daddy?"

He hadn't heard the children come in. Almost immediately Papyrus' fire went out and he looked at Honey and Skylar, who were staring on with fear "Pups... please... come help your father back to his chair..."
charcoal, ignition fluid, and ketchup. It wasn't a flattering mix. "I'm glad I'm awake too." She says softly. "So that's the plan. To help him get better, we get Grillby and me better. I have a lot of healing I need to do... My wing needs to heal, and my magic needs to recover so I can stand up without feeling faint... I also need to not feel so tired..." She sighs.

"You may need to talk to your dad about getting some syringes and vials that are immune to strong acidic venom, and then you can help with Grillby recovering. I don't think it's wise for me to be getting up and down so often, and he's gonna need multiple doses a day. So long as you move quick with the venom after I give it to you, you can help him. We just have to be careful that I don't run out too fast. I don't know how fast I'll produce it at this rate." Honestly, she wasn't sure how much magic it would drain to make venom. Her body was trying to make magic, but she had a lot of things that were draining it.

He nodded in understanding. "I'll stoke the charcoals a little hotter for him until your next batch is ready." He rumbled, before he turned as the doorbell went off. "Huh? Stay here." Sans straightened up before he started for the door.
Chapter 144

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: It’s good to be back. Thank you for being patient with us— I lost my grandma the same day I updated that chapter, so it was… rough. It didn’t help that the holidays loomed ahead, and we always did holidays at Grandma’s house. So… Thank you for being patient. I’m sorry we do hiatus so often, but I’m glad you trust us all enough to know we ALWAYS come back.

On this note, we’re back on a non-sunday because, well… Good news. Totu has finally reached it’s conclusion. Silver and I have to discuss our posting schedule, but it’s possible we may go with a two-posts a week like the way TOTU used to be.

I’d like to hear your input for our posting habits— please, leave a comment with your preference in posting. Once a week, or twice a week.

Silverwing Notes: AN: I had fun trying to come up with a traditional Asian breakfast, because my loony self kept forgetting that these guys reside in an Asian location so it’s supposed to be that rather than our western cuisine

Whee. Enjoy the chapter

Toki watched him go for the door, and then casually rolled backwards. She took her mug and plate to the sink, feeling at least somewhat useful for getting her dishes in the sink. Once she’d ‘cleaned up’ for herself, she ‘cleaned up’ his mug too, before parking at the door way to the dining room where she could see her switch case on a box.

It looked like the switch hadn’t been set up despite what Sans had said— which was fine, she didn’t have the gumption to take it apart.

She settled the portable case in her lap, and glanced up, waiting either for Sans to come back from the door- and to give her a peek at who was there- or for Papyrus and Tenebris to let her know it was alright for her to come back and get settled in bed.

It seems both Father and Son had finished their discussion as they had given a firm shake of each other’s hands before Tenebris went to the door as well.

Standing outside was Todd and his children, as well as Kon and Lana, Fuku, and Bo.

"Hey Sans, Tenebris.” Todd greeted with a smile. "We all got together to make you guys some meals, and give some magic to Toki. Has she woken up yet?” He asked.

"Heh… you guys aren’t gonna believe this..."
Toki was able to hear a commotion coming from the front door, most of which being repeated calling out of her name from multiple voices.

Toki’s interest was grabbed as the voices raised, and her name was called. She could hear a few she recognized quite well- Todd, Rosie, Felix, her brother, the wooly duo, Lana and Bo- and then many more rising up with it.

Toki rolled into what was now her room, and headed over to the bed instead of going to the door. She didn’t have the energy to pacify the masses, and she didn’t want them to excite her too much and put her at risk of labor again.

So she just rolled over to her husband's side, abandoning the two elder Gasters to keeping the mob from flooding her home. "So." She mumbles softly, settling at his side and reaching out to take his hand. She set her Switch case on the bedside table, and realized this was a heavily juxtaposed view- him on the bed, her in the chair. "It sounds like quite the party going on out there... I'd go join, but I think I'm a little tired. Got room for one more?" She asks him almost timidly. With a bit of food in her system, she was thinking maybe she could get on the bed on her own. Maybe.

But that depended on if he was in the mood for company after his talk with his father.

It was when Toki asked to join Papyrus on the bed did he grow active, cooing as he reached up to collect his dearly loved wife. "Come back to my arms, my beloved wife~" He cooed happily.

The mob at the front seemed to be well enough controlled by Tenebris. The elder beast had squared his shoulders and he spoke with a firm sharpness that kept them from trying to squirm past them. "Yes, Toki is awake, but she is JUST awakening. She's weak and she does not need more stimulation than necessary." He decreed. His glance went to the fox, his children, and then to the little green fire elemental. "Todd, you and the children may come in. Fuku, your father will do well with your fire magic until Toki recovers to properly give him venom. As for the rest of you... we do not want to overwhelm her, or Papyrus. I'm sure you understand..."

The collective of monsters seemed to nod. Multiple dishes of food and other goodies laden with magic to help replenish lost stores were placed into the arms of those granted entrance though.

Even the children- poor Rosie, with her little marker bracelet, was weighted down with trays up on trays of food to help those inside.

Those welcome slipped under Tenebris' arms, just in time for there to be a loud clatter and a soft feminine curse from the dining room turned bedroom.

In Toki's attempt to transfer to the bed on her own, she had forgotten to lock the wheels on the wheelchair, and it had rolled out from under her, preventing her from simply sitting back down. She'd made it half way onto the bed, before her legs had given out, and she'd semi-slid to the floor. She was on her knees, looking no worse for the wear besides some jostling and perhaps some bruised kneecaps and pride.

The small fox HTM had his arms full, and was a little too small to lift her off the ground, but Sans or Tenebris were not.

Hearing the crash and clatter, Tenebris turned to go see what happened. As he did, Sans respectfully bowed to the others who Tenebris had dismissed, giving them a respectful farewell before he too turned to go check on Toki.

"Fallen from your chair, dear girl? You must have forgotten to lock your wheels." The elder male teased lightly as he gently collected Toki from the floor to gently settle her beside her beloved husband on the bed.

Toki flushed as she was lifted back onto the bed. "To my credit, I've never had to use a wheelchair honestly." She says levelly as she gets comfortable on her back. She sees Todd and his kids tromping to the kitchen with armloads of food, and hums thoughtfully. Well, no one needed to cook for a while. "The only time I used one was when I was a teenager messing around at the doctors with my brothers. So... Yeah."

She settled on her back, sighing quietly as she cuddled into Papyrus' arms. "So... It looks like some of the swarm got in." She hums. Her hands find her belly, and she strokes the rotund surface gently, grunting softly as the slightly aching surface is peppered with kicks. “Mm… So long as Todd and the kids don’t mind if I get some rest, that’s fine. I’m… tired.” She admits quietly. “I ache- my wing hurts like a son of a gun- and I’m tired.” Her mane ruffled, single free wing twitching under the confines of her body. The bound one didn’t budge in its bindings, but it was throbbing painfully. Oh how she wished they had full body painkillers that pregnant monsters could use.

It was with that complaint that Todd perked up in the Kitchen. "Oh, your wing is still hurt?" Once he was free of his armful, he came over to her side and gave her a warm smile. "I took some time to learn wing anatomy and how to treat it." He told her warmly. "Might I have a go at seeing if I can heal it a little bit?"

She watches him and gives a warm nod. "Yeah. During the whole... Incident last week, one of the men handling me was a little rough. I think he was trying to tear my wing off, but it just dislocated instead." She shifts, and gives a soft grunt. "I don't mind if you give it a go. Just... Be gentle please. It hurts."

With some effort, she rolled onto her side. Her belly was tucked safely into Papyrus' abdominal cavity, and she cuddled close as her back and bound wing were offered up. "This is the best I can do right now. I'm a little too tired to try and get back in the chair."

Rosie made her way out and patted Toki's foot. "It's okay. Daddy's worked with people who can't move before." She gives her a sunny smile. "It's good to see you up again! Felix and I are gonna go play with Skylar and Honey, but we both did miss you while you were sleeping."

Toki gave the sweet girl a warm smile. "Thank you, sweetheart." Once the two kids had left the room, filing into Grillby's 'room' with the other kids and Fuku, Toki sighed softly and glanced back to Todd, letting him know he had her full attention for orders and the like.

Todd gave a considerate nod as he got to work.

Papyrus wrapped his arms around his beloved and nuzzled closer. "My beloved..." He whispered, before he sighed quietly and nuzzled her fur. It was slightly oily from not having been properly washed all week, but it was still soft and it smelled like her. The only problem was… "Oh my love... You're so cold..."

Papyrus hated it.

She said it herself, one time so long ago that it felt like an entire lifetime had gone past.

She was always warm.

But she wasn't now.

Toki's arms wrapped around him, and held him close. While her body might have been lacking in physical warmth, the emotional warmth was not. So in a way, she was still always warm- just not in the way they were expecting.

"I know." She grimaces. "It's like that time I gave myself Magi-drain... I was cold then too. But this is deeper than that- and will take longer to recover." Her mane ruffled as Todd worked on her wings, and Toki's dim green pinpricks focused on her husband. "I'll recover in time. We both will." She assures him warmly, pressing a motherly kiss to his brow.

He wanted so much to smile at her words, and yet he couldn't find it. His smile never came as he simply pressed a kiss to her chin. "Indeed we will, my dear." He murmured, though the second half of that statement went unasked.

Her secondary hands cradled his cheeks, and she gave him a warm look. He didn't smile, not even a twitch, but that was okay. She could smile for him. Her forehead came down to rest against his, her scar rubbing against his smooth brow. Toki peppered him with soft, tender kisses. "I just need you to hang on for me, okay?" She whispers. "For me, for our kids, for your brothers, your dad, for your oodles and oodles of in-laws. We'll all make strides to get better together." Her tiny, fragile thumbs massaged his cheeks. "I know we will. And- ow." Whatever else she was going to say derailed as Todd fiddled with something on her wing.

He had grown concerned when she exclaimed her pain, before he sighed and gently pressed a couple kisses to her teeth. "Y-Yes... Of course..." He murmured, before glancing over at Todd, "Hey, is everything okay?" he asked

"Yes. I believe I found what I need to set her wing properly... Though this may hurt a bit, I am going to be able to pop it more comfortably into place." The fox answered with a small smile. "What do you think, Miss Tokiko?"

"More properly into place?" She blinked, and then glanced to Tenebris. She squinted at him. "You set it without properly knowing how? Shame on you." She teases. "Alright though. Go for it. It's not like it's going to feel any better if it heals improperly." Toki’s mane tensed in preparation, and she sucked in a breath, holding it and getting ready for the sharp sting she knew would be coming. He’d have to re-dislocate it before he could fix it, after all. She only hoped he was physically strong enough to do it, or Tenebris would have to do it- and hopefully not rip it clean off.

Tenebris folded his arms. "I did what I could, but I do not often treat insect based wings. Or wings in general." He huffed.

Todd looked at Toki, before he exhaled slowly. If he did this right, it wouldn't fully dislocate the wing, but would simply jerk it slightly out of place before it immediately could sink back into place on it's own. He placed his hands in the proper places as shown by the books, and slightly squeezed, before he jerked his wrist and pushed into her back.

The following sound was a nasty crack and a pop, but the momentary pain would hopefully follow with inexpressible relief for Toki as the wing was put back into place.

The pain was indeed shocking- her mouth slid open, and she might have taken a bite of Papyrus’ shirt to muffle her sounds of pain. It didn’t last long, though it did ache even after. The relief that came was worth the pain, and she relaxed into her husband’s arms, her breath hissing through her mouthful of his shirt. She spat it out, and gave a soft groan. “Ow... but that feels much better.” She mumbles. “How long until it’ll fully heal?”

"With the occasional ice pack? Not long at all." Was Todd's answer, a smile on his face. "Way to hang in there."
“Ice pack.” That’s where Toki balked. “But that’s… cold.” She nearly whined. She was cold as it was- she didn’t want to be colder. “And yeah- it wasn’t as painful as earlier. Tenebris had to stop me from going into labor. Now that was painful.” Her belly twinged as if remembering, and she sighed, snuggling deeper into her husband and into the blankets she was under. “Would a heating pad work instead to help my wing recover?” She asks, a bit of hope in her voice, though she knew it probably wouldn’t. Heat helped pain, not swelling.

"The heat won’t help with the swelling, but it might relax your joint a little more, so… whichever you think works best." He answered. "You’ll be able to lay on it less painfully now." He explained.

“Thank you.” Toki gave him an honestly thankful smile over her shoulder. “I think I’ll stick with heat for now. I’m really… cold.” She says awkwardly. “And I’m alright on my side. Being on my back for too long makes my legs numb- the litter are too big for it. Pregnancy, y’know.” She waves one of her secondary hands idly. “It makes everything awkward.” The only thing she could use for comfort at this point would be a pillow between her thighs.

“Mmmn… A heating pad would be nice though- Or a heating blanket. I don’t think I’ve got one though- not since the magically enchanted ones from Muffet. Man, it feels like we got those a lifetime ago... I don’t know if they survived the firebombs- I wasn’t the one who packed them.” She sighs softly. “Oh well. It’s alright. I think I’ll just get some sleep, if you guys don’t mind giving me and Papy some time to rest. Unless there’s more things you need to check up on now that I’m awake and not writhing in labor-induced agony, or being stubbornly squirrely?”

"As long as your wing is comfortable, we should be good. I’ll talk to Tenebris and see if I can leave him with any instructions. As for a heated blanket, I think I have a spare in one of my closet cabinets. I can bring it over next chance I get." Todd offered kindly.

Toki nodded softly. "That would be greatly appreciated, thank you." She mumbles gently. She snuggles closer and sighs. "I don't mind if the kids come in to game, but can you ask them to keep the noise down? I need to sleep- and I'm not in a coma any more. Noise will definitely wake me up.” She gives a morose chuckle, and proceeds to practically burrow into her husband and the blankets to try and warm up and get some rest.

She was starting to shiver now that she wasn't moving much.

Her suggestion to go to sleep again had Papyrus grunting as he grew slightly more stressed. "Sleep... Are you sure?" He asked her quietly.

"Getting some rest would be very wise for Toki." Tenebris agreed, though his gaze softened as he looked towards his son and watched the worry in his gaze. "She’ll be okay, son.”

"Mhmm." She closes her sockets with a soft sigh against his chest. "I'll be okay, Papy. We both need some rest." She mumbles. "It's been a long... Long week for us all. Today we've made the first steps to recovery. Speaking of... Dad?" She called to Tenebris. "If Grillby needs venom, don't be afraid of waking me. I can put some in a..." She shivered and yawned at the same time, her bones making an eerie rattling noise, "in a vial for you. Now... Mmm... You're warm, Papy. You feel so nice..."

When she called him 'Dad' once more, Tenebris smiled in relief that their relationship wasn’t entirely ruined, before he sighed gently and gave a firm not. "Yes, of course... I will let you know if it is so needed for Grillby." He told her. "Until then, I'll go and get you something to feel comfortable.”

“Something to feel comfortable?” She made a curious buzz. That was enough to get her to come out of her ‘burrow’ and peek out at him. “… More pillows and blankets would be nice if you’re gonna raid my bedroom.” She wanted a pillow between her thighs. Normally she'd use her husband, but…
Well… He was down a leg.

"Trust me, I know just the thing." Tenebris winked at her before he stepped out.

He came back after a little while with an armful of tributes. He started getting her comfortable with a plush pillow between her legs, a soft blanket around her back, and on top of them…

"I Treated this myself, my dear. Tell me how it feels." He flipped the last of it over, before he draped over them a soft, plush blanket.

It was... fluffy?

No.

It was woolly.

"Father, is this your sheep pelt?" Papyrus asked.

Tenebris nodded at that before he smiled at them both.

Toki gave a small and wry smile, and basked in the weight of all the blankets. The pelt was heavy and fluffy, but had obviously been washed. With Tenebris’ sensitive nose, it made sense for it to be cleaned. It smelled like lavender oil, and she felt her sockets drooping as the scent forcibly relaxed her body more.

“It’s warm.” She lets out a soft, pleased moan. The pillow between her thighs was helping her comfort astronomically skyrocket, and the blankets were helping to keep what little body heat she had trapped inside. She was warming up splendidly. “Mmm.” “It’s so nice~ But we shouldn’t let Lana see it.” She mumbles sleepily, her words starting to slur as comfort won out over having a decent conversation. “’S probably offensive to sheep monsters, n’ I like Lana. She’s a good crochet teacher."

"On the contrary, my dear girl, she helped me preserve it and wash it safely with oils to make it smell nice." Tenebris laughed gently.

"Oh." Toki seems to make a surprised sort of buzz, and shivers again as she tucks more firmly against Papyrus. "Mkay. She's different then. S'good."

He is graced with a sleepy, thankful yawn, as Toki settles to sleep, her bones rattling in a muffled manner as she shivers under the covers. There was a green flush just faintly dusting her cheekbones, reminiscent of her first time having Magi-drain. It seemed now that she simply had an extreme case of it- severely extreme.

Her breathing evened out, and she went to sleep against him, exhaustion winning out against her desire to talk to her family.

Toki was aware of a few things when she woke with a start. First, was an eerie feeling of something making her bones crawl. She wasn’t sure what it was- but when she shivered, she thought perhaps it was because she was still cold when she woke up. Her awareness grew to include the three warm blobs on her feet, two of them purring and one of them making a sleepy little warbling noise. That was the warmest things she could feel, sadly.

The resting skelebest next noticed how quiet it was. She couldn’t hear anything save the animals and the breathing of her and her husband. When she focused, she could hear the rumbling snores of Sans upstairs. Her children were probably in bed.

It was probably late- or very early.

The next thing the skelebest was aware of was that she hadn't moved the entire time she slept, save soft twitches of her hands and wings. She was stiff and sore from not moving. As she nuzzled against the bones of her forearm, she noticed her face was a warm spot too.

Bones of her arm...? Wait, where was...?

Toki gave a sleepy sound, and dim green eyes opened. Her cold bones were faintly flushed a fevered green along her cheekbones. Her pin pricks spotted a figure sitting next to her in the darkness of the bedroom, just out of the reach of her hands.

She glanced up and noticed a piercing orange gaze staring at her without blinking. It unnerved her, and her mane ruffled in response. She’d found what had her bones metaphorically crawling. All she could see was orange in the dark. Her body was too dim to illuminate the room like it might have before. "Pap...?" She mumbles a whisper. "S'tha you?"

It was when she spoke, the orange light gleamed before Papyrus spoke. "Tokiko... you're awake..." His voice was rough, and drained. He was exhausted.

Had he stopped sleeping the very second she closed her eyes?

Toki had to wonder if he’d gotten any sleep at all with how exhausted he sounded. "Pap..." He never called her by her full name. "Yeah. I'm up... You're up too. S'late. Or early. Should be sleeping." She mumbles softly. "Why're ya not sleepin'? N' so far away too..."

"I can't sleep... I don’t want to... I'm so tired... but while your eyes are closed, mine stay open to ensure that you will open yours again..." He spoke quietly. "My wife must wake come the next dawn."

Her fevered brows furrowed, and she roused herself further. She shifted to scoot up some, and shivered again, using one hand to hike the sheep pelt over her shoulder. She was so cold… "Papy...” She says softly. “Not sleeping isn’t healthy.” She mumbles. “Come here.” Her free hand pats the space next to her- he’d scooted over quite some ways so he could keep watch over her. “Come here, my love. You need sleep… Let me help you sleep. I’ll be awake when you get up."

Her invitation was momentarily declined but as his body painfully reminded him of his condition, Papyrus groaned softly before he shifted to lay in her beloved embrace. "B-but... if you sleep... you might not... wake up again... I cannot sleep, my beloved..."

“Then I won’t sleep.” She says simply, and tucks him against her chest. She cradles his skull against her breasts, and exhales a soft sigh. He was so tired- she was tired and cold, but she could stay awake. She’d slept for… Who knows how long. She could do things to entertain herself. “I can’t be too loud or I’ll wake up everyone else, but do you think you could sleep if I talked to you and played a game?” She asked him quietly. “You’ll know I’m awake, and you can listen to me even in your dreams.”

Toki’s primary fingers stroked from the back of his skull down to his neck, and massaged there gently. He was a mess of stress and anxiety, and he was going to dust if he kept pushing himself so
He gave a quiet moan as his face nuzzled into her mane and his tired eyes lulled as her hands danced across his head and neck. "Ah... You feel so good..." He purred quietly. "I do not want you to stay awake... when you must rest..."

“Staying awake isn’t an issue.” She mumbles gently. Her fingers knead along his shoulder again, and she disturbs him only long enough to lean over and grab her Switch case, glad it hadn’t been moved. She settles it on the swell of her belly, and smiles as she notices that someone- likely either her children or Sans- had plugged in for her so it could charge. “I’ve slept long enough. You need rest, my love. It stresses me out to see you like this.” She admits quietly. “I want to see you healthy again. I need you healthy- just like you need me healthy. Sleep for me, okay?” Her teeth press against his forehead. “Listen to my soul, listen to my voice- listen to me move and know that I’m awake. Let this be your lullaby.”

She carefully switched out games, using her secondary hands to operate her Switch. Her primary hands were busy- one arm cradled and caressed him, and the other massaged at the swell of her belly, working out a muscle cramp that came from settling on her back. She booted up her Switch, and got Breath Of The Wild set up, before starting it up.

The music wasn’t loud- but it was loud enough for the music and voices to be heard by the both of them, and Toki hummed along softly to the new but familiar tunes.

As she had began to hope, the mix of the music as well as every soft sound from within his beloved's chest lulled the large monster, and Papyrus had quickly fallen into slumber, breathing slowly into her mane as he used it as the one anchor to keep him at peace in his sleep.

And so Toki let him sleep. The longer he slept, the better he would feel. She hummed along to the tune of the music, and kept her fingers rubbing over his skull. She would shift occasionally, stretching her limbs and shivering as she tried to keep warm, but otherwise she stayed stationary.

She made her way slowly through the breathtaking open world game of Zelda. Toki swiftly discovered that free climbing was one of the best things to ever come to Zelda, and she was climbing everywhere, trying to see everything for as far as she could zoom out. She died- a lot- but she had fun.

Toki explored too- she went everywhere but where she was supposed to, tried to climb down the cliff edge just because she could, failed at doing that, and then died trying to fight with some angry little red goblins.

By the time the corner of her Switch told her it was into early morning- past eight in the morning- Toki had finally just got started on doing the little shrine quests. She took time to explore and lollygag and see everything- and yes, she got lost too. The world was big and it looked so strange from the ground. She could find markers from the tower, but trying to get to them by the ground was harder, because everything looked different.

Toki hummed all the while, not even stopping as she heard quiet footsteps approaching the bedroom.

As the role of the doctor, Tenebris would come to check on them a soon as he had started his day- yes, even when it was at the crack of, or even before dawn.

There was soft tapping of claws on the wall as the large form entered the dining room turned bedroom, and he gave his daughter a small but startled smile. "Toki. Good morning..." He greeted gently, sitting at her bedside as he peered over her shoulder at the game while he spoke. "I'm surprised to see you awake. You weren't up all night, I hope…?"

“Good morning, Dad.” She whispered softly so she didn’t wake her husband. She pulled his blankets up some so he was kept warm, and shivered again.

Her bones were flushed green around the face, but everywhere else looked frightfully pale. Even through the copious amounts of blankets, Toki’s bones felt cold- there was no warmth radiating out to Tenebris as he sat next to her.

“No- I wasn’t up all night. I’ve only been up… Three hours, I think.” She rubs her husband’s skull gently. “Maybe four. I’m not sure. I got him to sleep on the condition that I stay awake and play games. He needs his rest too.” Her dull green pinpricks flit up to Tenebris’ face, and she tilts the screen so he can see better as she scuttles around and tries to properly place the blocks of ice inside the ice puzzle shrine. “Did you sleep well, Dad? And did the rest of yesterday go okay? I know I kinda just… slept… through most of it.”

Tenebris nodded softly. "Yes... things worked out in the end. They always do." He chuckled, before he reached down to touch her stomach soothingly, letting his magic seep into her stomach. "I slept fine... better now that you were awake, but that balanced out once more once the worry sank back in." He rumbled delicately.

Toki shivered as his magic seeped into her belly, her trembles coming harder. His magic was deep and cold feeling- it did nothing to make her feel warmer. She had to pause her Switch and set it down, because the shivering made it impossible for her to angle it properly, or safely hold it. "T-t-that’s good." Her teeth chattered slightly, clicking together and effecting her voice. "Worry happens. I’m glad you got some sleep. I don’t plan to go back into a coma again any time soon.” She shudders. "Are the pups okay?"

He nodded gently. "Yes, They're okay... all of them..." He assured her, before he realized that she was shivering harder and he slowly lifted his hand. "Ah, I’m sorry. My magic might be strong, but you haven't any strength to counteract the cooling that comes with it." He murmured.

Her shivering continued even after. "Usually I find it soothing. I'm usually so warm that the cold feels nice." She mumbles. "But I just can't get warm. Even after sleeping under the blankets and the pelt." Her free primary hand slid out from under the blankets, and icy bones slid around his fingers. She was colder than the last time he had touched her, and her body seemed to be trying to suck in his warmth, instead of the other way around. "Save your magic, Dad. If anything, I'd rather you give it to Pap, or use it for remaking his leg."

That was something indeed- she was so, so glad Sans had let it drop that her husband wasn't paralyzed. That would have devastated him. It had devastated her for the short time she thought he was.

"We’re already in the metaphorical woods for replacing what he lost.” He clarified. "Magic can only help him so far now..." He sighed. "When his new prosthetic is ready, the magic will assist with fusing it to what bones of his hips remain." He explained.

"Will he be able to walk like before?" She asks quietly. "Or... Will the cane no longer be an option?" Permanent crutches would be a blow to him as well. She felt her sockets closing into a grimace. Some part of her so badly wanted to reload- to the time before the invasion happened she wanted to get everyone up at arms, and... And prevent all of the hurt and the trauma and the pain- and yes, it would prevent Smudge, but... Some sacrifices had to be made.

Her hand shook as it clutched his thick fingers, so desperate was her need to just load back to a time when everything was okay.

"I'm afraid that I don't know the answer to such a question. It is unfortunately left up to fate, and while we can try to improve the total outcome, we can only do so much. Do you understand?" He squeezed around her hand gently. "I love my son... but we are just monsters. We cannot perform miracles in such dark times. Being able to walk as he was able to before will depend entirely on how his body takes to this implant, and to how determined he is to get better."

She exhaled softly, despite her desire to do it roughly. "I do." She says. "If... if he's unable to walk..." She says quietly. "I'll reload. I... can't say the outcome will be as good. It might even be better... Or worse... But I can reload and make sure all of this is only a bitter memory for those few of us who are cursed to remember."

Toki sets her switch back on the side table, and then takes a soft, shuddering breath. "If... if I only knew how to access healing, I could just re-grow the bone and it would be good as nee." She murmured. "It's there. It's in my soul and deep in Cruelty's corrupted memories... But I can't... I can't figure out how to do it."

It was a horrible, horrible irony. The person who would use healing for the best purposes in the world was locked away from it and only skilled in destruction and death— in things she never wanted to do.

Toki shivered and lifted a hand to her face, scrubbing it as her stomach grumbled. There was no use getting stressed and upset over it. She needed to keep Papyrus asleep so he could rest, and stressing was counterproductive for her too.

"Your soul might be balance, but your mind has still not yet unlocked it's full potential." Tenebris gently wrapped his arms around her and his son both, a tender smile on his face. "My dearest Toki, please get some rest. I will watch over you both so that your mutual rest with your husband is in peace." He told her with a deep purr that seemed to vibrate his arms around her.

Toki gave him a faint smile, and tilted her head over to press a kiss between his brows. "I've unlocked a lot of things lately." She says. "A lot more power... But at a cost. I don't think I can do a display like that again and survive." She mumbles. "Anyway... I can't sleep. I'm too cold, and I promised Papyrus. I don't want to break a promise, Dad." She nuzzles her face to his as he squishes on the bed with them.

It's telltale how tired Papyrus is that he doesn't even wake up.

"Honestly, I could really go for some breakfast. It's about that time." She gave him an awkward smile. "And your kids," she taps her secondary fingers on her belly, "are hungry. All I had to eat yesterday was a sandwich and some cocoa. Not really enough if I'm gonna work on bulking up my magic again."

"Do you think a hot bath would help you feel better short term while we work on ways to help you while meeting your demands?" He asked with a teasing smile. "I would hate to have a disgruntled Toki in a time where it is less then recommended she get out of bed, especially to fight and be a pain."

She returned his teasing smile, and gave a soft laugh. "Oh gods, a hot bath sounds divine. Like... If I had a choice between having the best sex ever and a hot bath right at this very instant, I'd take the bath without a second thought." She sighed blissfully. "But... I'd take food over a bath. And I promised your son," she brushed a finger gently over Papyrus’ skull as he drooled in a brainless sleep into her breasts and mane, “that I would be awake and here when he woke up. I want him to be able to keep sleeping- so maybe a bath once he wakes up? And I can drag him in with me? He kinda…” She fans a hand in front of her face to pantomime blowing away a stench.

Musty and unwashed bones was a stink, and she’s sure they both smelled like it.

“You don’t have to worry about me fighting though. After yesterday… Until I’m in better condition, I don’t have much in me to fight.” She shivers. “Now... I may fight you for the last cookie or something, but that’s an entirely different matter.” She teases again.

Such jokes had Tenebris chortling as he gave her a pleased smile. "It's so good to have you back, my dear. I'll go start on some breakfast... I wonder if we have any thick-cut bacon left." He was purring to himself as he got up and gave her a pat on the head as he skirted around the bed to head to the kitchen.

"It's good to be back, Dad." Toki gave him a kindly smile as he moved around the bed and went for her kitchen. "I love that you know more about what's in my kitchen than I do at this point." In good humor, her eye lights roll in their sockets and she nestles deeper into her blankets, tucking herself into Papyrus. "There's always the pre-prepared meals that everyone sent over, but I doubt they include breakfast meals."

"Well yes, though I think there might be one or two to suffice as a 'dinner for breakfast' meal." He disappeared into the kitchen for a little while, though after a few minutes came the familiar and wonderful sound of something frying on a skillet that was accompanied by the aroma of that which her father in law had hoped to seek.

Within seconds of the aroma washing over them, Papyrus took a deep breath before he groaned and slowly opened his eyes. "Mmmh..."

Three- maybe four or five as she honestly wasn't sure about the time frame- hours of sleep probably were not enough for him in the long run. She would need to lure him to sleep later today if she could- a nap during the day.

Still, Toki greeted him with a warm smile, and leaned down to nuzzle her teeth against his brow. He had drooled all over her mane and chest, a testament to how deep his sleep was. "Hey there handsome.” She mumbled tenderly. "Good morning. Did you sleep okay?" Her voice being the first thing to greet his ears would hopefully set it into his mind that he could sleep without waking up to her being in a coma.

He purred gently in reply as he leaned up to kiss her, despite the line of saliva running down his jaw. "It was a relief to have you." He purred as he gave her a squeeze. "I love you..."

She kissed him despite his sleep goobers, and lifted a hand to clean his face of his saliva once they parted. "It was a relief to see you sleep." She laughs gently. "I love you too." Toki nuzzles into him with a cold shiver. "Your Dad is here making breakfast. He was teasing me earlier with a hot bath to keep me from getting into mischief." Toki wriggles a brow at her sleepy husband. "Think I could sweet talk him into getting us both into the tub to warm up and clean off? Sponge bathing is nice, but what I reaaaaaally could use is your fingers deep massaging my mane."

"Mmmh... Let's take a shower, and I'll massage for as long as you want me to, my love." He purred, taking a deep breath of her scent before he slowly pushed himself to sit up.

As he sat up, Toki took her newfound freedom and stretched. She ended it with a grunt as her back twinged, not appreciating the stretching like the rest of her had. "A shower sounds fantastic." She chirps. "So long as it has hot water, I don't care what we do." She just wanted warmth and to be clean. "But... Food first for both of us." She sat up after him, flailing a bit as she struggled to get up. Being top heavy had its disadvantages. "How are you feeling?" Her gaze roves over him, trying to see if there was any improvement or not.

"Numb." He answered honestly. "It's still sinking in that I have you back and this time you might just stay that way." He sighed, before he smiled up at her. It was weak, very faint, but a smile. "Breakfast and a shower... as if nothing's changed."

There's a spark of hope in her dim eyes when he smiles at her. It's not one of his forced ones, or one of his bemused ones- but an honest to goodness gentle and loving Papyrus smile. "Stuff has changed, but there's no reason some things can't be the same." She kisses him softly, her sharp teeth flexing against his own as she peppers him with a tender kiss. "I'm not going anywhere, my love- not for long. Remember, I made a promise to you. Just because I'm back now doesn't invalidate that promise."

She sighs and relaxes against him with a soft sound. "Breakfast and a shower indeed though. I'm starving. And... as much as I love you, we both are in dire need of a good cleaning."

He nodded in agreement before he smiled up at her and leaned up to kiss her where he could. "Alright... I'll get my wheelchair and we can look to getting washed up." He agreed quietly.

"Well... We're gonna need help, so I was thinking after breakfast when I can heckle your Dad into helping." She looked at the chair, which was on her side of the bed. "Chair's on this side, and the only non-trashed shower, from what I can gather, is upstairs. I haven't seen the extent of the damage done to the house, but I can't imagine that Stag went quietly when they got stuffed into the bathroom with Sobek and Snuggle."

"Yeah..." That was going to... well... suck. "I suppose we will fuss about it later, we shouldn't let it ruin our meal that father is preparing..." He decided, before he sighed and laid against her.

She leaned into him with a soft sound and pressed a couple kisses against his temple. "Don't get all huffy because your Dad has to help us." She mumbles against him, looping her arms around him and flopping the bulk of her belly gently against his ribs as she did so. "We both need the help- besides. Consider it making him exercise and get into shape for his impending fatherhood. We have a hard enough time trying to wrangle the twins into the bath sometimes- he's going to have to do that with five. I pity the man just a bit." She blew a raspberry on his temple and gave him a playful smile. "When we get around to having more of our own, if you put another litter in me, I'm gonna have words at you."

Talking about the future would remind him that despite everything, they still had a future to look forward to- they had more children to anticipate, more laughs, more love. They had growing old to look forward to, to all the aches and pains that came with being an old skeleton- he just needed to be able to see it all again.

As she had hoped, the threats pulled a smile onto his face as he sighed and nuzzled her again. "I love you, but I'm going to put so many litters into you before I die." He purred as he smirked up at her.

She rolled her eye lights in good humor. "What ever happened to having just a handful of kids?" She asked in false dramatics. "I go and get pregnant with five, and now my husband wants a whole school's worth from me." She laughs, and nuzzles her face to his. "Good thing monsters live a long time- we'll have our own branch of the clan if I keep popping them out by twos and threes."
The smell of breakfast cooking made her stomach grumble, and she blushed a bit as her mane fluffed.

He laughed quietly. "Maybe just one or two litters..." He reasoned as he kissed her a few times.
Tenebris came out with a platter in one of his hands, and chuckled warmly at the sight of the two being mushy again. It just meant things were going back to normal. Toki was good at that. "It's good to see you two acting like your old selves"

Toki glanced at Tenebris and gave him a quirky grin, giving Papyrus another kiss. "And here comes big daddy Tenny, with breakfast for us sleepybones." She shifts to sit up, figuring she could balance a plate on her belly well enough. "Breakfast smells heavenly. Mmm. What all did you make besides bacon?"

"Well, among the countless meals from our neighbors, I found we have eggs, cheese, and green onions, so I went and made this clever 'cheesy tamago'." He explained. "I made some rice as well. Then the thick-cut bacon, and some toast with butter on two slices, and peanut butter and jam on the other two slices"

"Oh father, that sounds delicious." Papyrus moaned happily, making small grabby hands for the tray.

"Ooo, yummy!" She fluffed her mane and chirped at him from under the thick sheep pelt, rather like a baby bird. Toki looked a little silly covered in blankets, but it wasn't keeping her any warmer- why not keep them on and feel less cold than if she were without them? She pushed them back to make space for a plate to be balanced on her belly. She shifted better upright, and gave him an eager look. "It looks delicious, Dad. Why don't you sit down, and we can eat before you're back on kitchen duties for the kids?" She gives him a warm look. "Though- I actually wanted to talk to you about after breakfast. If we have time, do you think you can help Papy and I upstairs to shower?"

Tenebris sat down after safely depositing the tray of food with the lovers and he listened to them before he smiled and gave a soft nod. "Yes, of course. I can easily see to it that you are taken upstairs to be cleaned up. Although I might need to make two trips." He laughed gently.

Toki gave a lopsided smile and laughed heartily. "Two trips is fine." Toki settled the tray half way between her lap and his lap, and she scooped up a strip of bacon to nibble. "I definitely would like to wash though. Musty bones is a stinky smell- and I smell like musty bones and unwashed mane fur."

"No doubt your loving husband would be willing to help with just that." Tenebris chuckled, looking down at Papyrus, who was eyeing the peanut butter and jam toast something with something that was obviously hunger.

"And I intend to wash him too." She sees him eyeing the peanut butter and jam covered toast, and scoops up the piece in one of her free hands. She holds it diligently up to his teeth- he needed to eat too. "I love you to death and beyond, my love, but you... stink." She gives him a cheeky smile. He'd always prided himself on his hygiene and fitness- if she ruffled his feathers by telling him he stunk, then she'd have succeeded.
Papyrus didn't grow too upset about her comment of his scent. "If I was my father, I have a feeling that I would make some sort of comment based around the whole musk thing as beasts would." He chuckled quietly.

Though indeed THAT got a reaction, an insulted huff from the older male. "Excuse me." He huffed.

"As a pregnant woman with a sensitive nose, I can confirm there is a huge difference between stale bones and musk." She rolls her eyes. "And musk can stink, there is no doubt about that. You can get pretty ripe sometimes, Dad." Toki finishes her piece of bacon, and then boops the toast against her husband's teeth again. "Open up, you. I saw you eyeballing it. Go ahead and eat it up- babies have no desire for peanut butter right now, so it's not hurting my feelings none."

He looked up at her, before he hummed and opened his mouth, taking a hearty bite of the crunchy offering. "Mmh~" Papyrus most definitely liked it.

Toki made a soft, pleased noise, and locked her arm there so he would be able to keep eating his toast. She used her free hands and began to munch other things in earnest, setting the toast aside for him. Easily, she made him a breakfast sandwich with the buttered toast and bacon. "You've got to eat more too, my love." Toki smiled at him. "Gotta have energy for cuddling."

He eyed the breakfast sandwich and gave a soft sound. "What about you? You need to eat too..."

She motioned to the rest of the spread. "Dad made plenty, and it's not like we're out of food." Tenebris always cooked big, so there was plenty. "C'mon. Eat the sandwich, love, I know you're hungry." She scooted it to him and set his unfinished toast on top of it. Toki picked up her utensils and started to nibble the tamago, making a point that she would eat if he would eat.

"Alright..." He carefully readjusted, and then picked up the sandwich and took a small bite of it, sighing contentedly at the taste of it.

"Thank you." Toki leaned over to kiss his temple, and then resumed devouring her tamago. Honestly, tamago reminded her a whole lot of western omelets. The only thing that was hugely different was the fact that omelets had much more items in them than tamago did. Omelets had tomatoes and onions and mushrooms and all sorts of strange things that one wouldn't think taste good in cooked egg, but actually do.

Toki hummed contentedly and glanced at Tenebris. "So... what are the plans for today besides us getting clean, and maybe changing the bed-sheets?" Bed-sheets hadn’t been an initial plan, but she’d laid in these for a week- she wanted clean sheets, damn it. She was entitled to feeling clean and nice.

"I was going to defrost some of the meat in my freezer that I had hunted previously for dinner tonight, as well as see how your venom production is doing so we can aid Grillby. Good news is that he's still doing okay; Sans is sitting with him and he seems to have enough in him to speak the occasional word now."

"Sans is up?" Toki tilted her head curiously. "I could have sworn he was still asleep with the children. Huh." None of the kids were up yet- or the 'bedroom' would be full of loud kids wanting breakfast and games and all the like. "I've still got three mostly full wrists, and two full ankle stingers." She wriggles her toes under the covers and stuffs another bite of egg into her mouth. "I'm glad Grillby is doing better though."

"He's taken the habit of being up early since Grillby was hurt." Tenebris explained as he gave her a low smile. "I'll go get my bottles and we'll see about giving Grillby some injections to help him pick himself back up."
"Alright." She nods. "That gives me and Papy time to finish eating." She nuzzles into his shoulder with a content sound. "Make sure to get the ones that won't melt, Dad."

"I know~" He patted her head and got up to go get the vials.

Toki watched him go, and finished snarfing down her tamago. She hummed, took a drink of her tea, and then settled for calmly nibbling her cooling bacon. "Mmm~"

Papyrus was steadily going through his breakfast sandwich, a mellow smile on his face as it steadily fueled his weakened form with energy that he so needed. "I wager this meal tastes better now that I'm eating it with you, Toki." He soon spoke.

"Indeed." She smiled. "A meal can taste all the better based on the company that you keep." She assured him warmly. "And I do so enjoy your company. Breakfast in bed, too- I feel spoiled." She joked slightly.

Papyrus chuckled at that, kissing her cheek gently. "I love you so much..." He purred gently.

"I love you more." She grinned cheerfully and nuzzled him happily. Toki finished her tamago, and was still hungry. But... she'd get more food after a successful shower.

It wasn't long before Tenebris returned, venom vials in hand. "Alrightie, are you ready, my dear?" He asked her.

"About as ready as I'm going to be." Toki gave him a lopsided smile, and shifted the tray carefully onto Papyrus' lap. He still had toast to finish, and since she ate all her food, he had to finish his too.

"Alright. Do you want the venom from my wrists, or do you want to drain my ankles first?" She inquires, peering up at him. " Ankles will require help. I can't see my feet to hold the vials or know when they're full, so it's on you to tell me when to stop."

"I'll go ahead and start with your ankles." He answered, taking his place down by her feet. "Can you go ahead and bring forth your stingers?"

Toki shuffled the covers off her legs, and was rewarded with a body wracking shiver that rattled her bones, and jostled her husband's shoulder. "Sorry, Pap." She apologized automatically. With her feet free, she ruffled her fur, and glanced at him. She extended the stinger on her right leg, and it was lost to the mass of fur around her ankles. "Try not to poke yourself, Dad. I can avoid injecting you, but it's still gonna hurt."

"I'll be very careful." He promised as he slowly rubbed down her ankle until he found her stinger. "Here it is..." He brought the vial up before he carefully stuck it into the bottle. "Alright, go ahead."

She gave a little wiggle, and stretched out her senses to her leg. There was a rush of warmth to her foot- the freezing cold bones literally heating in Tenebris' hand- and then her venom started to flow sluggishly into the vial. Her ankles hadn't been tapped in... forever, really, so they just sat there and kept building and building, and building... "My ankles haven't been emptied since I came home. At least, not that I remember." She mumbled. "So they should be plenty stored up. One doesn't often think to go after the venom near their feet."

"Then this might be enough if this is from before this all happened. We get to save the rest for later depending on how this vial will do for him" Tenebris rumbled happily

"Most of this venom is from before." Toki chuckled. She waved one of her secondary hands. "This is the only hand I emptied completely rousing Grillby yesterday. The others still have some venom that predates all of this mess."

"Then we should be well off for a while.” He hums. “You can stop leaking now, this should be enough."

She cut off the flow as he commanded, but didn't remove her stinger until she felt the last droplets slide out. Her body acted sort of like a soda machine. You wanted to leave a little bit of space between the rim and the liquid, because there was bound to be excess that spilled out after it was done.

"I hope that helps." Toki smiles at him gently. "Small doses multiple times a day should be more beneficial than big ones less frequently."

"Indeed. Thank you for this. You two take it easy now. I'll go and treat Grillby and come back so you two can go have your shower."

She gives him a cheeky salute. "Don’t take too long, or we might get up to mischief. You never know with us kids." She jokes in good humor.

"I have my speculations about that." He teased back before he got up and started to the living room, a small smile on his face.

As he left, Papyrus chuckled quietly. "Dads know a lot more than you think, whether you like it or not."

Toki glances to Papyrus and nudges him with a lopsided smile. "I know Dads know a lot. That's one of the best things about Dads- their wisdom and answers seem bottomless. Even if the answers are just a poorly worded dad joke." She giggles. "Our kids ask you a lot of things. I think they ask you more than they ask their Grandpa."

"I grew up ambitious, I wanted to be number one in answering everyone's questions. I learned many things simply because I wanted to, and I think the children see that in their Dad." Papyrus laughed gently.

She laughed and kissed his cheek gently. "I think they do." She nuzzled his shoulder. "Now... On the topic of children..." She peeked up at him. "Can you reach out to them?" She asks him quietly. "When you feel up to it, of course- but it... It bothers me to see them so nervous around you. They're good kids, my love- but they're young, and they get scared when people get angry. Particularly after..." After last week. "If you talk with them, be warm with them like you're being with me right now, things will get better."

Papyrus sighed faintly before he gave a nod to his wife. "I owe them an apology... My poor children; I wish they did not have to see what they did..."

"Seeing anger is something that is unavoidable." She says softly. "However, you did handle it poorly. The situation was understandable, but..." Toki leans up and cups his jaw, giving him a warm look. "I don't know what the future holds, and what will happen then- so I want you to make me a promise. If something happens, don't close down on them. Don't shut down, don't grow cold- don't become the stranger that I woke up to. Hold on to your love, hold on to your hope. It is hard- god do I know how hard it is- but hold on to it, hold on to them- because through them, you have pieces of me. Just like through them, I have pieces of you. Honey has your smile and my horns, and Skylar has your smarts and my grin."

She cocks a grin at him. "They're good kids, Pap. They'll forgive you, I'm sure of it. Lets just try not to let it happen again, okay? Or at least let it sit and stew for so long."

His look softened before he nodded and nuzzled her gently. "Once we have had our shower, I’ll talk to them."

"Thank you." She nuzzled her face to his, and felt a tight coil around her soul ease up as a piece of stress she hadn’t realized was there literally melted away.

It was as Papyrus slowly sat up again that Tenebris returned with an empty vial, a small smile of satisfaction on his face, and a growing welt on his face that showed heat damage. "That old bastard.”
He seemed very satisfied.

"Ah... Father... He land a blow on you? What did you say?" Papyrus smirked at him.

"That he did," Tenebris grinned, "and nothing you need to hear, my son."

Toki blinked. "What on earth did you do to make Grillby hit you?" He was one of the most level headed monsters in the village most of the time. "... Please tell me you didn't try to give him the venom in a suppository."

That had Tenebris wheezing into his hand. "Oh wouldn't that be cruel?" He cackled.

She rolled her eye lights at him. "Daaaaaad. You're terrible. Seriously though- it's got to be given as an injection for it to be helpful. If it's taken orally, it just makes him high. I don't... Want to know what happens when it's taken anally."

Another wheeze, and Tenebris nearly staggered under the force of his restrained laughter.

Toki huffed at him, and then looked at her husband. "I broke him." She says calmly. "Do you still have the receipt? We might be able to exchange him for one that doesn't die laughing at giving a fire elemental a suppository."

Papyrus' face was hidden in his hands as he laughed as well. It would seem Tenebris wasn't the only one broken.

Toki's mane fluffed up, and she huffed at them both. "You're both horrible for laughing about that."
She decides. "You better hope you never have to take suppositories, either of you, because neither of you have butt-holes and I am a creative individual."

"I love you but I do not fear you, my love." Papyrus pulled her close and gave her some soft kisses, a smile on his face.

Warmth bloomed in her chest, and she lifted her hands to cup his face, giving him a few firmer and deeper kisses. "I hope you mean that." Her voice drops more calmly. "I really do. Particularly after what I showed off to the those people." Toki was something to be feared- there was a reason boss hearts and anti-hearts had been so terribly feared back in the war.

He gave her a warm smile. "You're my wife, not a malevolent being. I love you and I haven't got a single ounce of fear for you." He promised with a sincere tone.

She cracked a small smile. "I love you so much, y'know that? I really do." She nuzzled him again, a soft, pleased buzz bubbling from the back of her throat. Her gaze slid to Tenebris after, and she gave a smile. "So... about that shower...?

"As soon as you're ready, we'll head upstairs and get that shower started for you." Tenebris answered with a light smile.

Toki clapped her hands eagerly. "I am beyond ready to get clean. If you're ready, Papy...?" She glances to him.

There was a thundering of footsteps down the stairs, and then Skylar and Honey reached the bottom floor, both bedecked in their pajamas, and accompanied by their summons.

Skylar had the top part of Snuggle draped over his shoulders, dragging the rest of the ever-growing grub along behind him like a feather boa.

Sobek was right at Honey’s heels, his talons slipping on the tile. He didn't seem eager to leave her side, shaking out his blossoming baby feathers as he tilted his head to regard the room, and take in anything new that might have happened.

Both kids seemed to light up at seeing their mother awake- still awake, like yesterday wasn't just a dream- and they made a bee-line for the bedroom without fail. "Momma!" Skylar exclaimed in delight. "You're awake! Did you already have breakfast?"

"I am and I did." Toki smiles. "I was just about to go get a shower with your Grandpa's help. I think though, if you're very sweet about how you ask, you can go ask your Uncle Sans to warm you up some breakfast, or make you some breakfast."

"Mmmn..." The twins shared a look, and seemed to contemplate. "Okay. Maybe just warm up breakfast. He's not a good cook like Uncle Grillby." Honey's the one that answers with a soft chirp.

Toki nods, and sends them off into the living room with a gentle motion. "Alright." Her gaze slides to Tenebris. "Let's go shower." She wiggled her fingers at him and raised her hands to him in the traditional 'uppie' position that the twins usually used on him.

With the gesture for uppies, came the actual uppies. Tenebris carefully scooped Tokiko up, smiling as he put her into a comfortable carry. "Are you comfortable?" He asked gently.

She shifted some in his arms, her wings twitching. The one that had been relocated ached, but not nearly so bad as before. She was settled in a bridal carry, but his hands were a little high on her knees, and squishing her belly into her chest.

"If you can scoot your hands down my thighs just a bit, I'll be less squished." She couldn't fold over for a proper bridal carry, so they'd have to make due. "If not, I'll be okay. Upstairs isn't far."

"Mind your hands, Father."

"Unneeded warning, my son." Tenebris replied, slowly moving his hands lower to carry Toki more comfortably. "I'll be back in a moment." He then rumbled, starting upstairs with Toki.

"Mind your hands, Father." Toki mocks lightly once they're out of ear shot of her husband. She shakes her skull in good humor. "Does he really think you're going to cop a feel of these bones when you have goat booty to feel up whenever you like? Or is it just a male beast territory thing?"

They were technically two alphas of two different packs- and it was known somewhat that Toki's beast had seen Tenebris as a mate at one point.

"A fine question, though in the same one I would rather not delve very deeply into." He snorted quietly as he entered the upstairs bathroom. "Nonetheless, let's get this shower underway and I'll go grab your husband before I clean your bed."
Toki lets out a soft buzz. She motions to the toilet in her bathroom. "Go ahead and just set me there for now. I don't have shower chairs, so just sitting on the tub floor should be okay." Her gaze flits to his face. "Thank you. For helping us. I'm not... Used to being this helpless and frail. Thank you."

He nodded gently as he carefully set her down on top of the toilet lid before he picked up the shower head, undoing it from it's frame before he brought it down. "I'll bring this down for you to start on warming up the water." He rumbled.

She nods, and hums as she watched him. "Thank you, Dad." She thrummed to him warmly.

He gave her a nod and left her be for a short time until he returned with Papyrus, who was grumbling in embarrassment at being carried by his father.

Toki did her best not to laugh at him, and it helped sober her to see the single, loose leg of his pants flapping and tangling against Tenebris' legs. His grumbling might be amusing, but the cause of it... it really wasn't.

Toki shifted, and made wiggly fingers at him. "I'm wondering if you should have been brought up first." She gives him a lopsided smile. "I don't have a lap to share. Your siblings are taking up all of it." She rubs her ever blooming belly gently. "Maybe the counter top? Just until Dad gets us situated in the shower?"

"It will suffice... Father, if you'd please."

With a mute nod, Tenebris set him down on the counter top, before he went to the bathtub and tested the water. He plugged the tub. "So how much of this do you want me to help with?" He asked, turning to the duo.

"Focus more on Toki, Father." Was Papyrus' answer.

"Go ahead and leave the drain unplugged, Dad.'" Toki eyed the water, and hummed. "As for us... If you can get us both in the tub, I think we can handle washing ourselves and each other, and getting the water turned off. It’s moving on our legs that we’re unsafe with doing- not using our arms." She gives the both of them a four-handed jazz-hands to prove her point. She also clips her funnybone on the counter that her husband is seated on, and gives a sharp hiss as she cradles it. "Motherfucking."

She bites off. "It’s never a humorous time when you whack your funny-bone."

She puffs air through her teeth, and then shifts her weight, starting to wiggle her pants and underpants down over her hips so she could undress. No use in getting into the tub with clothes on, and she could get undressed while sitting. Though- getting naked was making her shiver harder, her eye lights dimming slightly as her teeth chattered with chill.

Papyrus groaned at the pun and shook his head.

Tenebris went and carefully helped her undress, hiding a bemused snort poorly at her pun. "That sounds like a plan... I'll set you two into the bath together face-to-face and give you... well let's see... an hour sound good to you?" He offered with a soft rumble.

Toki wiggled, and let him help her undress. Once she was completely bare, she folded her bare arms across her breasts for modesty's sake, though it was mostly useless with the quite obvious rows of nipples running down her belly, like a beast readying for birth. "An hour works." She nods. "If we want longer, we'll let you know when you come up to get us." Toki’s secondary hands itch at her teats, and then settle at her side, her mane ruffling upwards. "Me first, so Pap can be settled on my legs?"
"You got it." He rumbled before he gently scooped her up once more, moving her to the tub where the small inch of water sat before he promptly unplugged the water as she previously suggested. "There you go. Adjust as necessary, and I'll put Papyrus in there right with you."

Toki gives him a cheeky salute, and settles back into the tub with a soft hum. She stretched her wings, and adjusted her legs so he could settle between them, before giving her father-in-law a nod. She settled the shower head on her end of the tub, and motioned for him to bring Papyrus in- or rather, help her husband unclothe and then settle in.

She rinsed under the hot water, and shivered in something between delight at the heat of it, and the chill she constantly felt. There was also anxiety in her- she would be seeing Papyrus bare for the first time without any prosthetic on- and she had a feeling this wound was worse than the last one.

"Father, would you help me?"

"Of course."

With Papyrus leaning against his father to maintain balance, Tenebris helped him carefully undress. He was quiet and compliant for the most part, but still there were soft groans and grunts from the younger male as it came around to removing his pants.

He didn't want his beloved to see it either, but at this point, she would anyways.

His right leg, luckily, was mostly unharmed. There was bruising in his bones, but otherwise it wasn't too severe.

But his hip- and the complete lack of his left leg... a gruesome sight it was.

His left ilium was almost completely destroyed. His sacroiliac joint was barely hanging onto what remained of his sacrum. Were he not numbed by his father, one would imagine that the pain he would be in from such severe wounds would have been horrendously excruciating.

The lack of his left leg was clear now; there just wasn't anything for the leg to hold onto without being dramatically out of place.

To her credit, Toki did a tremendously good job of hiding her reaction. She didn't flinch in disgust or rage, or gasp in outrageous horror. She went quiet, her eye lights dark and ominous as she watched him.

He didn't need her pity, and he didn't need her sorrow for him. Her husband needed her support and her love.

And that is what she would give, even if the sight of his leg made her wish she hadn't made the bees carry all of the humans away.

It made some deep and dark part of her, an ugly, desperately angry part of her, wish she had brutalized them worse than they had her Monsters. She wished she had done so to make them learn their lesson not to touch what was hers ever again or to even look at them again and think about disobeying her. The dark part of her wanted to roll back time, and bathe in those people's blood before they could hurt anyone- to make the streets run crimson with her promise, her obligation, to keep her Monsters safe and the Void location unmolested.

There may have been a glimpse of that darkness that crossed her face, but she is not sure that either of them saw it before she stuffed it back down, deep inside of her where it should remain. She was Balance now in truth, and that came with managing the cruel impulses as well as the kind ones.
Kindness would always be her first answer. It had to be; or the monster she would become would be something that would raze the world to ashes just to prove her point.

She stretched her hands up to him, and gave him a tender smile, pulling on her kindness to cover the darker parts of herself that she wished no one to see. Monsters were inherently kind- they would not understand cruel impulses. "Come here, love. Lets get you settled and washed off. I'll be gentle, but you'll have to tell me where its too tender to touch."

Luckily neither her husband nor father in law saw her dark look. They simply took note of her kindness and gazed upon her with admiration and love of their own.

Carefully, Papyrus was lowered into the tub and a shaky sigh came from him as he was nestled in the lap of his beloved.

"There... that will do." Tenebris rumbled, before he smiled warmly at them both. "I'll leave you be for now."

"Thank you, Dad." Toki save him a tender smile. Her husband fit nicely in her lap- without his clothes in place, he had no abdominal cavity to prevent the swell of her belly from invading. It let them sit close, so she could clean him, and he her- and it helped that he was so much larger than her as well.

Toki's hands settled on Papyrus' remaining leg, and she gave him a firm but loving look. "Papyrus Aliquam Gaster- if you lie to me about my touch hurting you at any point, I will deny you cuddles tonight." She warns him, utter seriousness in her voice.

Her warning said, she brings the shower head over and starts to clean his remaining leg, grabbing the bar of soap so she could soap up his toes and massage the balls of his feet.

He looked up at her with a small smile. "I... I'll do the best I can." He spoke quietly. "I’m... rather used to keeping it quiet for the sake of my friends and family." His voice slowly quieted and trailed off as she started to clean him and he sighed softly, not in pain, but with great relief.

She kept careful attention of his reactions as she cleaned him. She couldn’t care for him bodily as she ached to do. But, Toki could do this for him. Bathing between husband and wife was something that could be shared- and he had no reason to hide from her here. Assisted bathing from another family member was something much less intimate.

“I know.” She says softly, and rubs her fingers between his toes to clean between them. He wore socks often enough that the fuzz liked to cling between them. Toki shivered, her body chilling more without clothes on or the hot water spray on her. “You like to keep things quiet so you don’t worry and alarm people. It’s something we’ve got in common.” She soothes quietly. “But you and I… We’re husband and wife, Papyrus. Hiding things and keeping secrets doesn’t form a good relationship, and can lead to strife. With the exception being Christmas and birthdays.” She amends, her hands moving to wash his ankle.

“I’d be a hypocrite if I said I never kept anything from you. I’m… Trying to be better about it. I’ve seen what happens when secrets are left unattended- they come back to bite you.” She says quietly. One of her secondary hands comes and touches her belly- which had been her guilty secret she’d hoped no one would ever find out. But- pregnancy wasn’t something one could hide. Sex could be hidden to a certain extent, but when it usually leads to pregnancy… no.

“And when you feel that you’re mentally able to handle what secrets I do have currently, we can talk about them. The same goes for you- when you feel ready, we can talk about any you’ve been keeping.” Her hands massaged his shin, careful of his bruises. “But pains and worries are less when shared with those you love- especially when someone can do something to help lessen them.”

When he wasn't watching her hands, he watched her face, watching every shift in her expression, her words passing through her closed teeth to try and reassure him that everything was, and was going to be okay.

Oh he wished it was that easy to believe her. But when she spoke of her own secrets, his soul sank a little bit. He sighed as he nodded. “Y-yes... I understand. It's not going to be... easy... but we'll- yeah, we'll get through it together... right?” He smiled up at her. "When things have calmed down, and we're both doing better, we'll talk it out. Everything will be put out there... Okay?” He spoke gently.

Toki lifts her head, and her closed teeth tilted up in a warm smile for him. “We’ll get through it together.” She promises. “You and me- we can handle anything if we put our minds to it.” Her hands reached his knees, and she softened her cleaning.

The bulk of his bruising seemed to be around his femur and knee, along with… well, obviously upward- so she would be gentle. Her crocodile grin slips away, and she sighs softly focusing on cleaning him as she shivers with him in her lap. “We’ve both got a lot of recovering to do, don’t we?”

"Indeed... Thankfully myself more than you..." He reached up to cup her cheek. "S-Steady there... it starts to be more sensitive the closer you go to my pelvis..." He murmured.

"Based on the amount of bruising here, I would say so.” She says softly, and eyes his pelvis gently. Her fingers are very, very gentle as she soaps his femur up and runs water over his bone. “To be honest, Pap… It kinda looks like you survived an attempt at death by Snu-Snu.” She tried to make light of it by giving him a quirky grin, and smooching his palm as she wiggled her brows at him. She didn’t venture further than his femur- the damage was clear, and soap wouldn’t do good there. Water though, might be fine.

He took that in for a moment, simply staring at her in apparent awe for the joke he’d never realized and no one had the balls to crack, and then he groaned and pressed his face into his hand as he laughed gently. "You know what, that's exactly what happened... Life tried to fuck me to death but I lived to tell the tale." He joked in reply.

She’d taken a huge risk in cracking that joke, she knew- it could have been received well, or horribly, and she was glad that the husband she knew and loved was back enough to see the humor she’d put out there. “Life does that to the best of us.” She laughs gently. “At least we’re in a place where we can help you get put back together after the worlds worst round of Snu-Snu.” Toki gave him a soft look, and then lifted a hand to touch his elbow. “Speaking of… I know you probably don’t want to, but the bone probably needs to be rinsed. Why don’t you rinse your pelvis off with the shower head while I soap up my legs?”

He nodded gently. "Alright... Then it will be my turn to wash you. I'll make sure you're glowing as much as you did when we married." He purred, taking the shower head.

She purrs at him warmly, and gives him an adoring look. Her mouth opens, and she wiggles her teeth at him in bemused humor. "I'm about as big as I was on our wedding day, aren't I?" She glanced down to her incredibly dim middle. He probably couldn't manage 'glowing', but clean and fresh smelling would work.

"We've still got our vows to renew..." She muses. "I think I want to wait until after all of... This." She waves a hand at her middle, and then starts soaping up what she can reach of her legs. She gives up on those when ultimately she realizes she can't reach far enough to touch her toes, and with Papyrus there she can't curl her legs. She instead starts to soap up her belly, massaging her fingers against the tender flesh quietly. It aches some, but there is no pain, no tightness, that warns of any episodes like the day prior.

Papyrus nodded in agreement. "Once you've weaned the pups, and once I have the ability to stand again... if I ever do..." He gave a weak chuckle, running the gentle stream of water over his beloved wife's shoulders. "Even if I don't... I'll still pull myself to the alter. I'll be your wine, your lit candle, and with a ring, ask you once more to be mine..." He promised.

She smiled at him softly as he instead rinsed her shoulder. She shivered roughly, a soft relieved sound leaving her as her body drank in the heat. She was so, so cold... There was no describing how cold she felt, and how cold she kept felt like she was getting. Cold was just a word, but it was so, so much more.

"You'll stand before you know it." She's sure of it. Toki gives him a firm and loving smile. "We'll renew our vows- though really, you should know that I've always been yours."

Toki's toes flex a little, and she rubs his hand gently, tenderly.

"Oh... I knew... I just... I can't really explain just how good it feels to hear you say it, Toki..." He chuckled quietly, his hand slowly lifting to take hers before he gave her fingers a soft squeeze. "I love you so much..." He cooed softly. "When you and I get out of the bath, we'll go to the bed and we'll lay down, and we'll wrap ourselves in all the blankets we have to our name... just to warm you up."

"That's a lot of blankets. Hopefully it's enough. I'm quite chilled." She chuckles in good humor. "And my love... Never doubt that I love you and that I'm yours." She guides his hand up her belly to her breast, to where her soul was able to be dimly seen beating below her flesh. Softly, like the mushy romantic she was, she began to sing. "My heart's a stereo; It beats for you, so listen close, hear my thoughts in every note. Make me your radio, turn me up when you feel low. This melody was meant for you, just sing along to my stereo."

There was a soft scratching of feline claws at the closed bathroom door that went unheard by Toki.

Papy hummed a few soft notes along with her before he smiled and he turned his head to the door. "Seems we have someone who wants in on the fun." He chuckled quietly. "Do you hear that?"

Toki cut off her singing rather swiftly. She tilted her head, and blinked slowly. "... That sounds like a cat who wants in." She hums. "Think it's Gael or Gracie?" She queries lightly with good humor as she lets his fingers go. She doesn't make him move them though- soapy boobs were fun to play with.

The scratching was soon accompanied by a grumpy meow, verging on a feline yell.

"Ooh... Gracie?" He laughed gently. "Who's the kitty at the door?" He cooed out gently.

A fluffy gray foot stuck under the door and swatted at nothing to demand entry- showing that yes, first time was the charm. Gracie's grumbling turned to a yowling demand.

Toki couldn't stop the soft snort of laughter. "She's going to yell until someone lets her in, and neither of us can move to do that. What a conundrum we've got, eh?"

He hummed in thought, before he leaned his head back. "Faaaaaathheeeeeeerrrr!" He called out, sounding not unlike a howling dog.
Toki cupped a hand to her skull and reached out to flick one of his ribs. Her ears were ringing. "Good lord, Pap. You forget, bathrooms have the best acoustics in the house."

His howl had made Gracie go quiet though, so there was that.

He gave a quiet 'nyeh heh heh' of victory as Tenebris soon opened the door, allowing Gracie entrance as he poked his head in. "Yes?"

"The cat wanted in." He replied with bemusement. "That's all~"

Tenebris made a face of mock insult, before he chuckled."Clever boy. Carry on." He chuckled, closing the door once more.

Gracie moved to sit on the toilet seat, and she simply loafed and stared at them in squinty smugness.

Toki rolled her eye lights hard. "You are too much sometimes." She laughs. She's glad he's got his sense of humor back though. "So... Shall I wash your ribs? Or do you want to give it a go washing something on me?" She quirks an easy going grin to him.

A soft gray paw reaches out to pat at the tub, making a soft 'plap plap plap' as Gracie purrchirps at them both.

"I would love to, though A; I don't know if it's appropriate and B; Our cat was watching us." He laughed gently.

He made her blush bright green. "I hadn't meant anything perverse!" She exclaims, bemused. "Golly-gee, you silly Skeleton." She shakes her head slightly. "Wait, wait, wait. Hold on. So we can have vigorous hot spring sex with your brother only a couple rock inlets away... But you can't wash me with the cat watching?" Toki can't stop her brows from raising at how silly it sounds.

"That's not what I meant." Papyrus chuckled in reply, before he leaned up to kiss her head. "If I start kneading your boobs, Gracie might get jealous." He teased.

She rolled her eye lights. “Gracie doesn’t own my boobs.” She snorts. “They belong to me… and you.” She cocks a brow at him. “After all, you enjoy them most, don’t you, my dear?”

"Heh... well... I suppose so~" He leaned in to give her a brisk kiss as his palms rested over her upmost set of breasts, kneading them tenderly.

Toki gave him a cheeky smile, and chuckled as his hands settled on her soapy breasts, kneading them slightly as the water from the shower head ran down between her breasts. It slid over her belly, warming soft paths as it moved. Since he was distracted, Toki set to work cleaning her arms, her sides, and her belly, content to let him cop a feel and enjoy himself.

"You're so beautiful... Thank you for letting me touch you, my beautiful wife, my elegant goddess..." He purred as he rolled her breasts in his hands, fingers gently kneading the tender ecto-skin to his hearts content.

Unlike before, where she had lactated, there was no milk to be let down. At least, not at first. The more he worked them, the more sensitive they became- and soon they budded with warmth.

"My love... I'm yours to touch however you will." She beams at him adoringly.

He gave a weak giggle before he brought an arm around to pull her into a soft, loving kiss. Oh he loved her so much, and just the time with her consent to feel her body under his palms had Papyrus showing his true colors, and just how much those colors screamed his love for his wife.

Skin to skin was good for more than just newborns. It appeared that skin to skin- or skin to bone was the better term to use- was also good for husbands and wives. Particularly husbands who’d just had their worlds and realities shaken, and for whom everything was in turmoil and upset.

Toki met his kiss tenderly, and ceased washing herself so she could instead run her soapy fingers up and over his ribs. “I love you.” She murmured, smoothing her fingers over his ribs as she cradled him close. He wasn’t overly heavy, but she did need to move his hand that held the shower head, so she could press his chest to hers, and scoot him closer. He folded over her belly nicely, and this let him rest against her chest and shoulders easily.

Her hands came to massage his back as she hugged him to her, and nuzzled her face to his. Her mane hadn’t been cleaned yet, so it was still dry as it fluffed up to pillow his scull.

He was thankful it had not yet gotten wet; her fur was so soft and her scent was so sweet he could hide himself away forever and never tire of that which his hid his face within. "I love you... I love you so much and I could never feel anything less than my upmost adoration for you, my beloved.”

Toki laughed gently, and gave him another soft kiss. “And I love you too. I love you with my everything, Papyrus…” She sighs softly against him, content and tender. She shivers under his warmth. “I think I’d like to finish showering though- or I’ll be content to cuddle you forever here.”

"I wouldn't complain!” He told her. "Sitting here for forever with you would make me so happy.” He laughed gently, before he hummed and grabbed the shower head from her. "Let's get back to it then, darling.”

She let him have it back without a fuss, and gave him a smile. “I think I got most of your back clean, but I need my wings and my mane done. Mind helping me shampoo and condition?”

"If it means I get to touch you and your wonderful body that much more." He agreed happily.

She gave a soft pleased noise, and reached out to gather her shampoo. She offered the bottle to him. “Alright, love. I’m yours then.”

He happily gathered his share of shampoo in his hands before he dug his hands into her fur, cooing happily as he began to start up the lather. "And I'm all yours~" He cooed gently as he got started into the washing process. "Such beautiful fur, I love it so much~ and I love you. I'll always love you and I'll always love... this..." his hands had withdrawn, a look of terror on his face at the green that now covered his hands...

It was...

"Fur... T-Toki...?”

Toki blinked as horror crossed his face, and looked down at his hands. Her hands automatically slid to her mane and ran through the strands- she came away with fistfuls.

Her eyes flinched closed and she sighs. "It doesn't hurt." She addresses first. "Its... Maybe it's a stress response. Or because I don't have enough magic to keep it growing and healthy."

She rinsed the soap off the handfuls, and set them draping over the side of the tub. She gave it a mournful look, and then checked her wrist fur.

With the soap, that too was coming out.
"I'm not falling." She says softly with a shiver, her voice losing some of it's luster. She had loved her mane since she had gotten it- hence never cutting it. She'd missed hair as a human and this was as close as she got. Losing it again was making her feel like it was her change into a monster all over again. "So it must just be stress. We'll just... Have to see what's left when we're done washing."

It wasn't like calling Tenebris would fix anything. He couldn't staple it back on.

He whined quietly as she listed off ideas of what the problem might be, before he nodded weakly in defeat, knowing he was unable to prevent the unpreventable. "Of course..." He still loved her, and he knew just how much she loved the mane alongside him, so thus he had nothing to say that could offer comfort.

Toki's hands slid down, and she leaned forward again, clear permission for him to finish scrubbing the shampoo through while she did her wrists, and tried for her ankles. "It'll grow back in time, Pap. It took two years and some change to get this long." Of course it had been created on her already fairly long, but nowhere near this fluffy.

"But will it grow back the same?" He asked, gently putting his hands back at her collarbone to resume scrubbing what was left of her mane.

"I don't know." She admits quietly. "It might come back curlier, it might come back straighter, or it could come back a different shade of green. It will come back though."

Under his fingers, her mane fell away, and a thin layer of soft new fur was felt. It was shorter than their cats hair, but it had likely grown in during her week of being unconscious. All wasn't lost- she wouldn't be entirely bald, but she would be even colder for a while.

With her promise of her mane returning, Papyrus stopped fussing as much, though he still looked like he was mourning her beloved fur. As he felt the layer of new fur underneath, his hands ran over that before he gave a soft sigh. It wasn't an upset sigh, just a relieved one, and a similar look came to Papyrus' face as he ran his hands through her fur, taking along the suds to clean what remained.

Not all of it came off- there were a few patches that remained long, but it looked... scraggly and mangy. She looked sick, for the better term. Toki gently tugged on the longer locks, which were dry from the shampoo. "We'll need to trim these." She sighs. "We have scissors in the bathroom cabinet. When Dad comes back, we'll ask him to get them- and you can help me trim them down flush with the rest...?"

He nodded slowly. "Of course, darling... I will do my best to save what is left." He ran his fingers through the patches again, mourning in silence but thankful at least some survived.

The patches were thin and wispy, and looked quite ready to break off if pulled on too hard. A few did so, shedding off and sticking to his fingers.

Toki gave him a wobbly smile. "Don’t worry about saving them." She says softly, and fetches the conditioner for him. "I’d rather my mane be cut down to a uniform length, and then just let it grow out again. It’ll be back to where you can braid it soon, I’m sure..."

He nodded gently. "Of course..." He rumbled. "In time it will return. I’ll cope."

Toki gives him a shaky but loving look. "I'm wondering what everyone else is going to say." She laughs weakly. "The last time all my hair fell out, I was 'dying' from my change into a monster. I'm pretty certain your brother is going to shit bricks, and your Dad may panic. He has a thing about manes, you know."
"As soon as they all know that you're not dying, I'm sure they'll settle down enough to accept the current consequences as they are." He answered. "Indeed your mane will be missed by all, but as long as you yourself are alive and well we will not be distraught." He assured with a few soft and tender kisses.

She met his kisses lovingly, and then opens up the conditioner bottle. "You're right." She agrees softly. "Alright... Well, lets make what fuzz I do have soft, yeah? Might as well make it cuddle worthy." You might not be able to hide your face in it, but it'll be soft and snuggly."

"And that's all I could ever ask for, my love." Papyrus took the bottle and gently deposited a good amount of the soap into his hand, rubbing it in his palms before he combed his fingers through her fur.

The new, virgin fur soaked it in, becoming silky and soft under his fingers in ways her long mane had never done. If cared for properly, it was possible her mane could remain this soft even when it grew out.

Toki smiled, and tilted her head forward to give him a purr, letting him comb his fingers up behind her neck, and along the top of her skull, where her mane had previously covered her scar. Now her scar was barred to the world again, and it almost felt sensitive after so long of not having seen the light. "I love your hands." Toki murmurs almost in a daze as he massages gently. "You have such nice hands. Strong hands. Gentle hands. They feel so nice in my mane..."

"They will forever stay strong for you, my love." He told her. "It will be hard... It will be painful... but forever they will stay strong to keep you safe." He told her as he stopped scrubbing and simply took what suds he had and began to slowly roll them in her fur to bring her bliss.

Toki let her sockets close, and she slightly slumped as she relaxed, a soft bubbling purr rolling from her. She leaned forward some, simply basking in his warmth. Toki shivered as she let him massage her short mane, her fur soaking in the attention that it sorely needed. She let her mind go blank, and simply purred her bliss for him to hear.
Chapter 146

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: In which falling asleep is bad, so what can a husband do... but sing and do highjinks to annoy you into awareness? Also Merry Christmas to all of you. Posted this early as a gift to you all. <:

It was cold.

It was so cold. But it was always warm in the house because of Grillby recovering in the next room, so what the hell was so fucking cold?

Papyrus gave a low groan and curled up in his covers, trying to warm up just a little. Maybe the power had gone out, or someone had left a door open? His eyes opened and he rolled onto his back, his arm reaching for where his wife laid. "Toki." He groaned. "Toki it's freezing in here... are you alright?" He spoke softly as he turned as best he could to look at her.

Her sockets were closed and dark, her neatly trimmed mane barely visible through the cluster of blankets that had been piled on top of her. She didn’t respond to him, didn’t seem to hear him, but she seemed to be making noise all the same.

A steady rattling was coming from her- she was shaking, like wind-chimes in a strong breeze. Toki was cold- so, so cold, that it seemed her body was exuding cold instead of warmth.

Her belly- warm the day prior- had dropped in heat drastically, and now felt like someone who had been soaking in cold water for too long.

The source of the chill in the room was the fire based skeleton that had sucked all the heat out of it, to no help for herself.

"Toki... Toki!" He pushed himself up to sit so he could turn his form to set his hands on hers. "Toki... holy fuck... Toki, wake up!"

Her brows furrowed as his hands set on hers, and her icy fingers snagged his hands, and tugged them to her face. "Mmmmmmnooooo..." She made a fussy noise. "It’s too cold…” He was so warm.

"Toki...." He pulled her close and immediately tried to close his warm form around her. "You're so cold…” He informed her shakily.

She tucked her face into his chest, and it was like her body was sucking out all his warmth. Where before, she had exuded warmth like a campfire and radiated heat like sunlight, Toki now sucked in heat like she was starving for it.

And, perhaps, her body was. There may have been something wrong- more than just her magic being drained.

"It’s so cold...” She whines softly. ‘”S so cold Pap… m’ so tired...” Her face nuzzled into him with a trembling sigh, and she basked in what little warmth she could glean from him.

"Don’t fall asleep, Toki... Stay awake for me.” He told her, before he growled and looked around for his phone. Damn it, where was it!? ”Toki, stay focused on my voice, don’t fall asleep.”

Toki’s sockets peeked open at him for nary a second, before she shook her head slowly, and nuzzled against his chest. She was too tired, too cold- sleep was easier. She couldn’t feel the shivers, the cold biting at her limbs and making her feel numb.

For once, Toki ignored his desperate words and soft pleas, and let the rumble of his voice lull her to sleep as she tried to savor his warmth.

... No of course that didn't work... lord Toki please forgive him.

He took a deep breath, then he began to sing in the most god awful pitch.

"ON TOP OF SPAGHEEEEETTTIIIII! ALL COVERED IN CHEEEEEESE!"

Toki’s attempt at peaceful sleep was interrupted, and she moaned pathetically into his chest. “Nooo. No meatballs. They’re not lost. Shhhh. Sleep. No cheese.”

"I LOST MY POOR MEEEEAAATBALLLLL! WHEN SOMEONE NEEDED TO GO GET MY FATHER AND HIS MAJESTTYYYYY!" He knew his caterwauling would be heard by at least one other person, so hopefully Sans was off to get said elders.

Toki wriggled a hand free of her cocoon to try and physically shush him. She failed, and all she ended up doing was stuffing her fingers in his mouth instead of muffling him. Her eyes closed again. “Shhhhh.” She moaned. “Shhh. No. Nnoooooo. No meatballs and majesty. So loud. Just sleep.”

"You'll thank me for this later." He told her as he then spat her hand out. "AND SO I'LL KEEEP SIIIIINGIIING, UNTIL FATHER COOOOOMMESSS! AND NOT IN THAT VERSION, I KNOW THAT YOU THOOOOOOOUUGHT!"

Toki let out a whiny whimpering noise, and lifted a hand to pull her blankets up. She tucked them over her face, letting it muffle his voice, and then tried to settle back down again. She was cold- why didn’t he understand that she was tired and cold? She needed sleep…

Seeing his first tactic was failing, he switched to another, more annoying song. "THIS IS THE SONG THAT NE-VER ENDS! YES IT GOES ON AND ON MY FRIENDS!” He sang as he began to pull the blankets from her hands, knowing it sounded like god awful screeching.

Toki hunched up under the blankets, but didn’t seem to have the strength to hold them to her as he pulled them from her hands. Her sockets didn’t open when he exposed her to his voice, and she seemed to be able to almost tune him out now. She was tired- why didn’t he understand that she was tired and cold? She needed sleep…

He stopped at this point, simply held her tighter. "Toki, don’t fall asleep!” He pleaded. It was a losing fight, and he wasn’t sure what else to do- before he heard the door open. He lifted his head as Tenebris entered, a little winded and in his pajamas.

"Toki...!” He gasped.

Toki let out the softest, most quietest of whines- it was the basest of sounds, from one beast to another- a sound that tried to explain everything, but couldn’t, and only left everyone more anxious.
Anxiety it did indeed induce as Tenebris came to her side. "She's nearly frozen..."

"She burnt out, Father..." Papyrus' voice was hoarse now as a result of his reckless singing, but his worry was more than evident as he spoke.

Toki shifted her head just a bit to peek up at him with a grimace. Too many people, too much noise-she couldn’t sleep. “N’less you’re here to cuddle up f’warmth, go away.” She grunts. “I’m tired. ‘S cold. I wanna sleep. You’re all being loud.”

Toki was beyond burnt out- it was becoming horribly clear that her inner fire, what all fire based monsters had, was nearly gone. She was in a severe ‘fever’ of sorts- and her delirium was understandable.

"Toki, you're basically experiencing hypothermia!" He told her sharply, carefully picking her up. "We need to get you to a fire..." He turned, intending to go to Grillby’s room, and then looked up to see his mate enter.

"Oh dear..." Asgore looked worried as he came to the younger couple's side, reaching out to set a hand on her head. "Oh dear, oh dear, she's running a fever..." His tone was soft, and a deeper rumble. He was probably still tired as he was in some clothes hastily put on in his summoning.

"I-Is there anything you can do to help?" Papyrus asked weakly.

"Indeed... I might need to take her somewhere fireproof, however... this won't be pretty, but it should do the trick..."

Toki's head lolled and she squirmed as she was pulled from the covers. The noise she let loose out of her mouth was not unlike a distressed beast.

Her eyes focused on Asgore as best she could, and her brow furrowed. "You... Gotta have words with you." Delirious by a fever or not, it seemed Toki wasn't going to forget that she had words to say with the king.

Even if she couldn't remember them. She was too cold and out of it to remember much.

"... Too cold." She complains, her legs kicking fussily as she squirmed in his arms. "Please stop." She begged softly. "Sleep... No hyoi... Hypo... Big word..."

Big words weren't usually an issue. She was clearly out of it.

"Later." He told her, slowly picking her up before he held her close, his hands starting to heat up where they touched her.

Toki squirmed and keened in delirious irritation, until she felt Asgore's palms start to heat up. Then, the heavily pregnant skeleton gave a shuddering sigh and a soft moan, and slumped into him.

"Warm..."

Her body sucked in the heat, desperate for it. Her soul pulsed brighter in her chest, trying to draw most of the heat there so it could ignite once more once it warmed enough.

He held her a little tighter as his hands continued to eat up, quickly growing warmer and warmer until they suddenly burst into flames against her.

Toki went slack as he warmed her clothes and avoided catching them on fire due to millennia of practice in safe magic uses. She curled into the king, her arms curling over her chest, and she groaned softly into his mane. “Warm...”

She didn’t have the magic to reinforce and protect herself from the fire, but her body was resistant to it regardless. All her body did was draw on the heat, and try to cover herself in it as much as she could. The bright pulsing of her soul grew, until her soul slid out of it’s own accord, approaching the flames born of magic, not unlike the time that Grillby had re-lit her fire and warned her not to let her magic get too low.

The green of her soul was a sickly color, lacking the vibrancy it usually did. It reached for his flames, desperate to latch on and devour his magic to heal her body.

Thankful that he made progress, Asgore lifted his hand and closed it around her soul delicately, before he gave another surge of magic to envelop her soul in fire.

The color of her soul began to increase as Asgore fed raw flame magic directly into her soul. As he did, Toki’s brows furrowed, and she began to squirm some. Her limbs tingled uncomfortably. It wasn’t unlike someone’s limbs thawing out from being too cold- the tingly feeling of icy needles crawling over skin. This time, it was over bone, prickling and pressing as Asgore thawed her out and warmed her body and nursed her internal fires back up from the fleeting and dying embers to the roaring blaze they should have been.

Toki gave a soft whimper, her eye lights blossoming to life in her sockets. They were clearer now, less disoriented with fever. Her head lolled to the side, and she sucked in a soft breath, her hands clenching. “It hurts...” She whispered.

She’d gotten too drained, too empty- her flame had nearly gone out. It had been going out until Asgore stopped it.

Tenebris sighed in relief.

Papyrus spoke up, partly reaching for his wife with one hand from the bed. "Wh-what happened to her?” He asked softly.

Toki reached back for him, and gave a pained keen, a soft warbling sound that was more beast than human- a plea for her mate to make the pain go away.

Asgore could do no more to help her levels of pain with his hands busy- he couldn’t rub her limbs or stimulate her joints to get his magic flowing smoothly through her, or work the chill from her bones. He could, however, bring her to her mate.

He shifted to sit down where she had once laid, cradling the pregnant skelebeast to his chest. It left her in range of her worried mate however, and left him able to explain while he tried to soothe her.

“Her fire was nearly gone...” Asgore spoke softly. “There are... There are hardly even embers left for me to nourish.” His eyes close, and he sighs, a great tremendous sigh through his nose. His hand continues to pump magic into her soul. “We were nearly too late. A few hours more... And she would have been beyond saving.” He says gravely. “I am surprised neither of you caught it. From my understanding, this is not the first time her fire has been depleted- Sans took her to Grillby once before.”

"I had not thought her condition would be this severe...” Tenebris answered softly, his gaze lowered in shame. "I was not prepared for proper treatment, I am thankful you were here, my mate..."

Papyrus lowered his head as well. “Oh Toki... I’m so sorry...” He spoke sadly.

Toki’s hand reached out, and she found her husband’s hand. Her fingers held his, and she whimpered at the sensation- like knives, jabbing into her bones. She didn’t blame him, she wasn’t upset- she hurt, so, so badly…

Asgore sighed. “Were there signs?” He asks. “Prior to this morning’s… mess.” His fingers shifted their grip on her soul, and he pumped another flood in. Her body was so empty, even he, with his great stores of magic, felt like he was filling an ocean with baby spoon. He was warming her, though. Her embers were now a small flame- and he just needed to keep it going long enough for her body to heat up again. “Shivers, fevers, chills- anything of that sort?”

"I... I don't know... She never got this cold physically. We kept her wrapped up and Sans often brought her some cocoa..." Papyrus was shaking in both body and voice as he answered Asgore. "Every time she picked up a tremble, I'd cuddle with her and she would stop trembling after enough time." He answered.

Toki’s sockets closed, though her mouth opened. “Didn’t want to worry you.” She mumbled. “You were warm… I could take comfort in your warmth...”

“Your body was craving heat.” Asgore supplied gently. “All of the measures you did, all of the heat you kept trapped in her body, it prolonged her life, or she would have died hours ago.” He answers flatly. He shakes his head with a sigh.

“F-feel like I’m dying now.” Toki groans. “Everything hurts...”

“Everything was shutting down in preparation for death- we’re lucky your belly was still warm enough to sustain the pups.” Asgore sighs. “For monsters with fire based magic, if we get cold, or feel cold, it means our fire is low. We need another fire monster or equal or greater power to simulate it. Anyone can help a child, normal monsters can help normal monsters, Bosses can help normal monsters, but only Bosses can help Bosses.” He supplies. “Fire elementals are the most fragile of the fire magic group- and require specific physical care to reignite. Or special venoms.”

Asgore glanced at Papyrus, and then at Tenebris. “Toki was dying.” He said slowly, enunciating his last word to press upon them the severity of what happened. “I understand you both were relieved when she woke… But her shivers and trembles should have tipped you off when they didn’t get better. However- now you know better. And now, you can help prevent this from happening again. I can’t be here all the time now- not with everything that’s going on. There is a chance Toki can relapse again. You’ll need to watch her and contact me to prevent it. She needs warmth- bodily warmth. Putting her near Grillby would harm them both though.”

Tenebris nodded as he took in his husband’s words before he sighed, “Grillby is still sick, too sick to keep her warm... My magic is insufficient; it would drown the heat out...” He growled quietly.

"What about Tori?" Sans then asked from where he had entered from the living room, holding Solstice in his arms. Thankfully his daughter was still asleep.

Oh his brother had a point there...

"Tori could keep her warm, right?" Papyrus asked, slowly rubbing circles into Toki's hand to comfort her.

Papyrus’ hand felt like glass shards stabbing into her hand. Toki keened, but handled it.

Asgore makes a considering sound. He still was not on the best terms with his ex-wife, and that was frankly most of the reason he very rarely got to see Frisk. “If you can convince her to be pulled away from Frisk, yes.” He nods. “The house has too much of a smokey smell from the coals for Frisk to be safe hanging out here for long. Human lungs are not monster lungs, after all.” There honestly wasn’t enough smoke to be a bother- the cats were still healthy and fine, after all, and they kept the house ventilated. But Toriel worried, he knew- and there would be no stopping her. Frisk was her first priority. Anyone else was second.

“If not,” he continues, “So long as you don’t try to give her any magic, you won’t do any harm to Toki. Physical warmth- the touch of a palm, skin to skin contact, a hot bath- it all works to help fuel a flame when the monster’s magic is low. Her flame just got too low for any of that to be more than a crutch for prolonging the inevitable.”

“So… So like… Like a family cuddle pile?” She asks, eyes flinching slightly as she feels her feet twitch reflexively. “With lots of blankets? Would that be warm if Toriel says no?”

“Yes.” Asgore supplies, and soothes her with a careful pulse of magic. “Hot cocoa,” he glances to Sans, “Is also good. Hot meals, hot packs, heated blankets- for all intents and purposes, treat her like a hypothermia victim.”

"Sounds like a plan. I'll go see if Tori's awake and see if she's willing to help us... Pops, I say you go and get your spare blankets, and I vote we set up a nest for Toki.” Sans spoke firmly.

Tenebris rumbled and gave a brief nod in agreement. "I agree... Thank you for your help, Asgore…” He rumbled, leaning over to nuzzle his mate.

Asgore nuzzled him back quietly in return and gave him a soft look. “Of course. No one is perfect, my dear. I am glad I was able to help.” He gives a soft hum, and then glances at the stairs. “In fact… I wonder if moving her upstairs would be beneficial. Heat rises.” He glances to the living room, where the hottest part of the house was, to the upstairs. Her bedroom was very nearly right above it.

“Nest would be nice.” Toki could feel Dear try to stir at the idea, rousing up just a bit before dying down due to lack of strength to keep herself surfaced. “Upstairs too… Papy and I can stay there and it’d be away from a less… Publicly accessible room. I mean… It’s not like you really go far from me, eh?” She gives him a weak look.

Really, he didn’t. They were downstairs for his ease of access, and yet he didn’t leave her side. She also would relish having a space they could talk and cuddle in that wasn’t the main walking path for everyone who came through the house.

Asgore nodded. “We need soft materials organized, and then I can carry you up. I’m afraid your father may need to carry you.” He looks at his mate’s son. “She is not stable enough yet for me to remove my hand from her soul.”

"That's okay... I know she is safe with you and Father. If we go upstairs, we can use the bathtub more often.” He mentioned softly.

“That you can.” Asgore nods quietly. He glances to Toki, watching as Tenebris and Sans take their leave, and hums quietly. “I... know we have a lot to discuss...”

“Yes.” She says. “Now that you’re not hiding from me. But... I think I’m going to wait... Until I don’t feel like I’m covered in razor blades.” Toki gives a soft grumble. “But you’re not off the hook. I’m not happy…”

“I know.” He sighs. “We’ll talk when you feel better.”

“How long will that be?”
“Not long once her flames are restored.” Asgore answers. “Once her fires are fixed, her body will be able to naturally restore magic- and not focus on trying to feed her flames.” This was mostly said to Papyrus, despite Toki having asked the question. “You just need to keep her warm, keep her body fed, and make sure she relaxes and rests. Her body will do the rest- with only the occasional need for magic donations to feed the litter.”

"We can still rely on the people." He murmured. "Our village was not excused, we have so many people willing to help us… We won’t run short of magic to feed the pups.”

“Despite being busy with preparations for the coming events, the village will step in to help.” Asgore nods.

Toki makes a soft noise. “Dare I ask what the preparations are for?” She asks- and there is the sharp edge of a warning in her tone.

Asgore’s mane ruffles, and lifts at her warning. He straightens instinctively in response to the easily irritable woman in his grasp. “Nothing bad, I assure you. It’s a joyous occasion- even in these troubling times, our people find small measures of joy. We have decided to… For lack of better terms, say ‘fuck the human rules’, and Kon and Lana are getting married.

Papyrus grew momentarily worried at their fluffing up at one another, though as it settled down and Toki was given the notice of the new to be wed, he snickered at his wife's reaction. "It took her a minute to realize!" He gave a quiet laugh. “Yes- they decided to get married. They’ve been engaged for a while, but the rules against humans and monsters, you know… They decided to say fuck the rules.”

Toki’s brows furrow, and she can’t even laugh at her husband’s joke. “Well… Then we need to fix the village before the wedding, because there’s a lot wrong with it right now.” She says firmly.

Asgore’s mane stiffens again. “We’ll discuss that, when you’re better.” His tone brokers no arguing.

“Yes, we will.” She says, and her tiny mane bristles right back at him. The tension between them could have been cut with a spork.

And then, awkward silence descends between the two of them.

Toki rolls her head back over to her husband, and she sighs quietly as she waits for Tenebris to come back with nesting supplies, and for Sans with Toriel. Maybe Toriel. “My bones hurt.” She informs him gently, with a soft sigh. “Did you know that bones can get a pins and needles feeling? Except it’s like the pins are razors, and the needles are knives.”

"Heh... Unfortunately yes..." Was Papyrus’ answer, before hearing a thump from upstairs. "What in gods name was that...?" He spoke quietly, leaning his head back, before he made a face. He couldn't call out after that god-awful singing…

Toki blinked at him, and quirked a brow. “It’s probably Tenebris. Daaaaaaaaaaad? ” She called, looking up at the upper floor.

“Grandpa…?” The kid’s voices floated down, answering for Toki.

"I wouldn't be surprised, that old man moves fast." Papyrus snickered, knowing all to well that his dear old dad would sulk at his words. "Ah, your Majesty, do you think you could give us a lift upstairs?" He asked. "I have no doubt that father's already in the works of making a nest for my beloved."

“I think so.” Asgore shifts Toki, and looks at her. He shifts his grip on her soul to just the arm holding her, and then he stands, making use of her diminutive size to cradle her like a small child in one arm. He makes his way around the bed, and leans down to do the same to Papyrus. “You’re a bit larger than your wife.” He says. “If you can, put your arms around my neck so I don’t lose my grip on you.”

Toki wasn’t going to trust him not to drop her, so her fingers slunk around his neck, and sunk into his fur, inviting her husband to join her with a shaky smile. The motion drew needles of pain up her limbs. At least she was coherent again.

He nodded once and reached up to lock his arms around Asgore’s neck. Were Sans here, Papyrus could smell a bad joke in the works, though thankfully this time it went un-smelled. "I've got a good grip... careful with my pelvis." He told the king cautiously.

Asgore nodded, and was careful to support him. Once he was sure he had a grip on both of them, he grunted and made his way to the stairs. It was still dark outside, obvious by the colors of the windows as they passed by.

Grillby gave them an odd look as they passed by, having been woken from sleep no doubt by Papyrus’ delightful caterwauling.

Asgore gave him a nod, and then tooted the duo upstairs, his fingers momentarily tightening on Toki’s soul and making her gasp in a definitely unpleasant way as he nearly lost his grip on her and dropped her. Once he fixed his grip, he plodded up to the top, and made his way to their room. He tipped his head forward, and tapped his horn against the door.

"Come on in!" Was Tenebris reply from within the bedroom, before there was the squeal of children echoing behind his words. It was no doubt the twins falling prey to their grandpapa's idea of fun by trapping them in blankets.

"His hands are full, Father." Papyrus spoke up.

"Ah! In that case..." There was a grunt before the door opened and Tenebris smiled up at them both. "Come on in."

Asgore padded in with a grateful smile for his mate, and smiled at the pile of blankets both twins were struggling to get out of. “It appears you have help.” He hums gently. He pads further in, and glances at the work in progress of a nest. “Is it completed enough for me to set them down? Or do you have a seating spot I can rest them since their bed is downstairs?”

Toki gave a soft sound through her teeth, and the twins ceased their rough housing to try and squirm out and get to her.

“Daddy?” Honey lifts her head to to look at him, the first out of the blanket. “Daddy? You were doing scary singing. Are you going crazy? Do we need to take you to the funny farm like in that silly song?”

Papyrus groaned quietly. "Honey, no. That was me trying to keep your mother awake for her own sake..." He told her.
"The nest is ready, all it needs are those who are to inhabit it." Tenebris rumbled in reply.

Toki can’t stop her quiet and tired snort at his behest. “I dunno… From what I remember, you sounded like you needed to go to the funny farm.” She says.

Gracie peeked at them from around the corner, Gael at her heels. Both cats fluffed as they heard Papyrus, and they stared at him with big eyes.

“Look at that, Daddy.” Honey points. “You traumatized the cats.”

Toki laughs.

Asgore shakes his head, and he made his way over to the most completed edge of the nest. He eased down Papyrus first as he knelt at the edge, and then worked on lowering Toki down. This room was much warmer than downstairs, and he could already feel the improvement in Toki’s bones. “In a few moments, she should be stable enough for me to go downstairs and make a hot pack for her to rest her head and help keep the heat in. If you all want to pile in with her and keep her warm, she’ll hold until I can return- or Toriel, if Sans returns with her.” He partly doubted his ex-wife would come, but one never knew.

Immediately Tenebris took his place and set up the blanket that would cover the younger couple up snugly.

Papyrus slowly climbed into place before he extended his arms to his wife. "Come on~ It's already so warm~" He purred to her.

Toki shifted awkwardly as she was set down. She didn’t move from Asgore’s side at first, looking at her soul. “Not until he lets go. I don’t want to goo.” She says awkwardly.

The King fluffed a bit, and carefully guided her soul back into her chest. “Sorry.”

Toki nodded to him, and got shakily onto her hands and knees. Her palms had warmed enough that they weren’t too bad with pain spikes now, but her legs hurt something horribly- and it was visible on her face as she took a few shaking steps deeper into the nest.

Her kids made their way to her side, and made sure she didn’t fall until she was at their father’s side. When she’d settled on her side, Skylar sat down at her knees and started rubbing her legs. “Daddy-” In his anxiety over his mother, he’d fallen back to his pre-Papyrus freak out title. “What happened?” He asks anxiously. “Why does Momma’s bond feel like she’s hurting when she moves? She’s so cold.”

Asgore looked at Tenebris. “I’ll leave her in your hands while I get a hot pack. Use your body heat, all of you.”

Honey nodded, and wiggled up to try and warm the bottom of her mother’s belly.

"Thank you, Asgore." Tenebris smiled up at Asgore, before rumbling as he nuzzled his face into his daughter in law’s shoulder with a hot snuff of air.

"Mommy is… hurting really badly after the mean humans attacked us. She's recovering as best she can but she can only do so much by herself. She needs help from all of us if she wants to recover to her best..." Papyrus explained carefully to his son, speaking with a low volume and, to the best of his ability, a mellow tone.

Skylar frowned softly and noded, accepting that he wouldn’t get more information than that.
Toki settled more firmly on her side, and shifted to nestle into her husband. She settled Skylar into her side, and rubbed his shoulder gently. “Let the adults worry, okay, baby?” She says softly to him. “I’ll be okay. Papy? Dad? I’m cold...”

Skylar puffed his cheeks and sprawled against her hip, trying to warm her as best he could. “Grandpa. You’re big- warm Mama’s back.”

Asgore chuckled, and left the elder twin to boss around his mate as he turned to go downstairs.

"As you wish, my dear Sky." He rumbled in reply, sitting up a little before he grinned and shifted around a little behind Toki. "Toki darling, put your hands above your head and don't freak out." He told her.

"Father, what are you planning?" Papyrus spoke before he turned his head and saw what he was planning. He then chuckled and shook his head. "Father you're going to spook her by wording it that way." He snorted.

Toki was indeed wary, and she tucked her head a bit. “So… Yeah, that definitely does freak out the pregnant lady in pain when you say it so ominously like that.” She says dryly. Slowly, shakily, her arms raise above her head as best she can. “I can’t hold this for long, Dad. Please be gentle with me.”

With that, there was warmth around her as he carefully pulled Toki into the turtleneck he had returned in. It was no doubt a clever move on his part to start making some warmth to offer his daughter in law. "Welcome to sweatertown, my dear." He purred, relinquishing his sleeves to let her use her upper arms as the lower pair were gently overlapped by his own arms.

She thrummed softly at the warmth, and being allowed to use her upper arms. Her hands were eaten by the ends of his sleeves, but it allowed her to reach out and cuddle her children and husband as they moved to not be squished by their grandfather.

His arms got to curl around her belly as he pinned her lower arms to her stomach in a hug. While this did put his massive hands right over her sensitive and swollen nipples, that tingled with cold pains, it also let him feel the first tentative squirms of the litter as they finally started to warm up to acceptable levels again.

A slow cramp tightened over her skin under his fingers, but it didn’t seem to pain her badly, nor did it seem to alarm the litter. It was likely just a faint tightening of her uterus in response to warming up again.

"Sweatertown is great." She decides. “Wings are a little squished, but I’ll take squished over cold.” She makes a content face, even as the neck of his turtleneck threatens to inch up over her chin and swallow her face like a warm welcoming snake. She’s tempted to burrow in and not come out, but she wants to see her family.

With the vocalized approval from Toki, Tenebris proceeded to grin like an idiot as he tightened his grip just slightly. What he was most interested in was the sudden sensation under his palms; such movement from the pups made his soul soar and for a moment he was lost to the bliss and he let a thrilled crooning howl escape him, slightly spooking Papyrus in the process.

"Oh there they are, there's my puppies!" The older male cooed happily. "My beautiful, beautiful sons and daughters to be. Every last one of you five survived; you're going to make our pack so strong~"

The look on Papyrus' face was initially surprise, but as Tenebris celebrated the strength and resilience of his future children as he cradled them, it mellowed him and he smiled happily in his enjoyment of how things went from near-tragedy to such heartwarming sweetness in the span of a half-hour.

The loud noise spooked the litter, netting more squirms for his hands to enjoy, and a few cramps for Toki, but they settled at the talking and the petting, and the large, warm hands handling their mother’s belly.

Toki hummed softly, letting him have his time feeling the shifts and squirms of the litter within. He was happy- and based on his reaction, the remaining five pups hadn’t been lost, so there was good news among the bad of the day.

Toki’s hands slid out, and the needle feeling wasn’t so bad as she took her husband’s hands in her own. “He’s exuberant.” She gives a lopsided smile to him, and tiredly lets her skull sag in the turtleneck. It’s pulled tight enough that it offers her support- she doesn’t need a pillow, even if her legs feel cold. “I’m glad the litter are okay.”

“Come closer?” She asks softly as the kids flop across her legs with a blanket and Gracie- and their summons. Snuggle is horribly warm, so she allows his invasion with a warm thrum. “He might have my belly, but I could use some husband cuddles- and I think you need some wife cuddles.”

Toki can’t stop the yawn that escapes, and she feels bad because she knows that her yawn is probably going to amp up her husband’s anxiety.

In the arms of his father, the yawn was witnessed with less fear than it would have taken any other time and Papyrus smiled as he quickly found himself a place in her embrace, a loving purr rising from him as he settled in place. "I love that I married such a strong willed woman. Fear always drags me down and yet here you sit with a smile on your face, surrounded by the people you love..." He chuckled quietly. "God I love you, Tokiko Nara Gaster." He purred, leaning up to kiss her.

“I was always thinking I married the stronger willed man,” Toki says as she meets his kiss with a soft purr, “Fear may drag you down, but it doesn’t control you.” She says warmly. Toki nuzzles into him and loops her arms behind his neck, sighing into him with a soft, almost content noise. He was warm- warmer than her at least. “I sit here with a smile on my face because I love you all, and I’m happy to be with my family. I might hurt, I might feel cold, and I might not feel all that great, but it doesn’t stop me from loving you and feeling happy.”

“Ewww.” Honey groans. “Stop being sappy. It’s so gross.” She whines at them. “I don’t wanna hear your kissy sounds.”

Toki snorts. “So we’re sappy, but your Grandpapa is not when he’s loving on my tummy?” The litter squirmed under his hands again, and she grunted at the tiny feet battering her insides. “Though the litter don’t feel like they’re loving the kneading you’re doing, Dad- and my nipples are definitely not.”

"I apologize, daughter of mine, but I simply cannot resist such a joyful reaction... To feel their paws under my hands after a whole week of fearing for your life and theirs in the same, and then the scare with you this morning... I am surprised that I am not crying already. Perhaps the chance I was given to envelop you in a life-giving warmth is all that keeps me from shedding tears." Tenebris’ voice was soft now; it wasn’t rumbling, or even purring. It was as if he was whispering his words.

She sighs softly and nods. "I understand, Dad. It was probably doubly scary with me getting so chilled with my internal fire so gone." Her secondary hands shift, and move away from his kneeling so she could rest her slightly cool palms against his hands. "I'm not saying stop kneading. Just ease up just a bit. All of me is still thawing, and that includes them, and they're very fussy. Their kicking is giving me cramps when in the right spot. They've definitely got your feet."
A solid thump along one of her ribs had her wheezing quietly. "Maybe your tail too."

He chortled at that and carefully moved his hands to a more relaxed part of her stomach. "My tail is a good asset to have. They will indeed be very well balanced with such a limb." He rumbled. "Do you think they will inherit my tail-blade? Or do you think they will end up with a feature more like your own?" He asked.

His hands resting lower on her belly makes her relax with a soft sigh. “There is perfect. Gods, your hands are warm.” She relaxes a bit between her father in law and husband, listening as her children settle down to get more sleep against her legs. “I think they might get both? Not sure. If they’re going to get anything from me, they might be venomous. If that’s the case, you’ll need to be careful of tantrums.”

They got to see what her venom did to living flesh that didn’t use her venom for healing.

He rumbled quietly. "So true. I hope it does not cause trouble later on." He agreed.

“There’s always the chance, but we’ll have to wait and see.” She hums. “You should have time to work on an antidote in either case, since my venom should work for a base.” She gives a tired yawn.

Asgore steps back into the room, his arms full of heating packs. He pads over, seeing the burrito around Toki, and gives a soft hum. “Papyrus, if you wouldn’t mind packing these in between the three of you and the children, this should help maintain her body temperature. Is she feeling any colder?”

"She doesn’t feel colder.” Toki confirms. “She can speak for herself. My feet are cold, but the rest of me is warming up steadily. The hot packs would be welcome though.” She lifts a hand eagerly for one, the other looped around Papyrus and unable to raise. “More warm is always good.”

Papyrus accepted the other two hot packs and gently placed them where they would best warm his wife, or at least aid the heating further. "You can never have enough warmth at a time like this.”

“Very true.” Asgore agrees. “I’m going to go wait for your brother- or perhaps call and see what is taking him so long.”

Toki settled the first hot pack against her neck and the inside curve of her horn. She sighs as the other packs are settled on her body. One is slid under her shirt, along the lower curve of her swollen belly, while the last is set between her thighs. The moan she lets out is a little sinful. “It’s so warm.” She mews softly, eyes closing in bliss. “I think I get Dad’s happy noises when I cover him in warm fire magic feelings.”

Papyrus gave a soft nod to Asgore as he left before he cooed and nuzzled as close as he could to his wife. "I love you." He purred happily. "I love you and I love our children and our family and our home... And I don't think anything could ruin this moment of just perfection we have right now~"

Toki smiled at him and purrs loudly, a pleased rattling sound deep in her chest. “Nothing indeed.”

Well, maybe one thing.

Perhaps a few moments later, Toki jolted with a startled and pained squawk, her legs pressing together with an uncomfortable motion as her hands slid as low on her belly as they could. “Okay maybe getting kicked in the cervix by fetal monster legs can do that. I don’t think they appreciate my legs resting together. Loose pillow? Please let there be a loose pillow, holy shit that was like a light lightning bolt up my bits. Thank god I don’t have a human woman’s bladder anymore, or we’d be in trouble.”
"Not the first lightning bolt I'll bet you've gotten up your bits~" Tenebris murmured with a chuckle.

"Oh you smooth motherfu-"

"Loose pillow!" Without warning, a plush pillow flew in through the doorway and promptly hit Toki in the face with a soft, sweet-smelling 'POMF'.

Sans entered with a grin, a smiling Toriel on his heels.

"Hello Toki, dear~" The lovable goat-mom greeted sweetly.

Any fuss Toki might have made at Tenebris ended rather quickly as she stuffed the pillow betwixt her legs and relieved some of the pressure and angry kicking that Tenebris’ litter were fussing up. “You’re an ass for hitting the sick pregnant lady.” She informs her brother in law. Then, she offers a wave to Toriel. “Hi Toriel. I’m surprised you came, honestly.”

She didn’t expect the goat mom to leave Frisk with, well, anyone besides a heavily armed battalion of guards after the events of the past week or so.

Sans gave a playful grin, not at all bothered about being called an ass.

Toriel approached. "Frisk was still asleep so I was able to move away for a moment long enough to come see you... How are you doing, Tokiko?" She asks.

Yep, it surprised her that Toriel left Frisk at home, but she chose not to say a word.

Toki sighed softly. “I’m tired.” She admits softly. “Still cold, but finally feeling like I’m getting warmer. Asgore said my flame was almost gone.” She shifts, and nestles further into the turtleneck she’s sharing. Some part of her instincts are wary, wanting her to shoo away the intruder from her nest while she’s not feeling so well. Instead of giving in to baser instincts and what her beast wanted, Toki motioned the motherly ex-queen to come closer. “You can come in the nest, Toriel. I’m sure you probably want to check progress too and make sure my flame hasn’t lost any progress.”

"Of course..." she came and gently took an open spot by Toki's legs, "You certainly look comfortable, I would hate to disturb what you’ve got going for your comfort" she laughed gently.

"It's a temporary comfort." Toki replies with a bemused smile. Toki's legs were the only mostly open spot. The twins and the summons took up most of her thighs, but her shins were open. When Asgore had said bury her in warmth, they took him literally. "I can't stay comfortable for long with as big as I am. I, ah, also don't have the magic to call out my soul for you, so..." She motions her to have at her. She glances back at her brother in law. "Are you going to go back to Grillby and my sweet Niece?"

"Yeah... I'll go soon. Asgore asked me to hold on for a moment. He said he's got a good method to help Grillby but it wasn't recommended I stick around. He mentioned it could be lethal to any non-elementals."

"Ah... At least at long last he proved his father wrong..." Toriel spoke up softly, a relieved smile on her face.

Toki made a confused buzz, and dropped her arms. She supposed Toriel didn’t need to check her soul, which was fine. She really didn’t need so many people handling her soul, frankly. “I’m a little lost, but I’m getting used to that feeling. Doesn’t mean I like it though. What does him helping Grillby have anything to do with his father? And why didn’t he do it sooner if he could have helped him?”
"It's a long story, but the shortened version of it is Asgore's father possessed a magic that many deemed 'hellfire magic'. It was a dangerous fire magic that was never seen outside the wills of the strongest fire elemental monsters. For one not of the natural element, it's severely draining on magic stores. I would bet he needed time to build up magic for the sake of not passing out after this." She sighed.

Toki nodded slowly. "That would make sense. And I see... It should restore Grillby back to full health though, correct? And not harm Asgore, beyond leaving him a fair bit tired?"

She still needed to talk to him, but she would feel bad about kicking a metaphorically dead horse- he would need time to recover, as would she, before their conversation could happen to get Nara Village back in order.

She nodded gently, "If not full health, then no more than a few scratches left... but it will do the trick." She answered. "Meanwhile, I suppose I've got some magic for you as well, my child." She hummed, holding up her hands with a smile.

Toki nodded slowly, glad Asgore wouldn’t be too harmed, and motioned to her frame. “I’m not going to turn down magic at this point. They need it.” She said, meaning the litter in her belly.

She gave a nod and sat on her knees as to reach and comfortably rest her hands on Toki's stomach. "Let's get these puppies warmed up." She hummed gently.

“Yes please. Though, you might need to dodge hands.” Toki laughs. “Tenebris is in kneading mode, and my secondary arms are stuck down there too.”

Toriel laughed gently and set her hands where she would not interrupt Tenebris, and steadily began to let her magic flow into her.

Toki sighed softly at the rich and aged fire magic flowed into her. Grillby was old, and so was Asgore, but there was something about Toriel’s magic that made her feel like it was a mother’s touch and so much more. She relaxed into the hot pads, her sockets drooping tiredly as the litter began to settle even under their father’s gentle but persistent kneading.

While she did that, Asgore came back upstairs. In one arm was little Solstice, and in the other... Well... Sans got up pretty quickly to take to the other side of his husband, "Grillby...!"

"Was it wise to disturb him from his resting place, Asgore?" Tenebris immediately spoke.

"I thought so at first indeed, though when I refused to help him, he tried to get up by himself and refused to let me touch him unless it was to get him up here..."

"You stubborn bastard..." Sans chuckled weakly as the Elemental’s arms tightly wrapped around him.

"I have better things to do than be dying on a slab in the front room." Grillby grunted firmly.

Toki glanced up as the weakened fire elemental spoke, and she made a soft, tired noise that translated in rough beast for them to join the pack in the nest if they were able to. There was space- she would allow them in her nest.

“Well spoke, Grillby. We’ve all got better things to do than be dying on a slab.” She yawns. “So come live with us in a nest, and be one with the warmth.”

"Now that neither of you are on death's door, it's certainly peritable." Asgore agreed gently.
"Come on, hot stuff." Cae smiled up at him and pulled him towards the comfortable looking nest.

Grillby gave a muted grunt and a crackle, and hobbled for the nest. He eased down onto all fours, and crawled up to settle into the spot above Toki’s head, resting against the backing of the nest with a soft, sore sigh. Healing he was, but everything ached, and he was still weak.

“lt’s good to see you looking better.” Toki murmurs to him softly, and thrums warmly, a soft pleased noise that her family was gathered close.

Sans joined him behind Tenebris and smiled as he quickly nestled up against his mate, before he reached up for Solstice. "Come to Momma, Solly~" He cooed.

Asgore chuckled and gave the skeleton the chirping skelemental. "Here you go..." He rumbled, giving a respectful nod to Toriel, who graciously gave one to him in return.

Toki made pleased chirping noises, a low buzzing bubbling up in her chest as everyone settled in. With all of the children here, with the cats slowly creeping in and the summons settled in, she was finding herself content and happy. She wasn’t in a wide open space, she didn’t have someone unknown at her back- even if it wasn’t a pack mate, they were family, and family trumped pack.

“Is she… piping?” Grillby asks, his gaze wandering to her as he cuddles up to his mate and his daughter. “I haven’t heard that pleased of a sound in a long time.”

"lt’s amazing what you can get with the power of family." Tenebris rumbled softly, leaning down to affectionately nuzzle his daught- in law. "A lovely young Queen piping her happiness for the world to hear~

Aliquam on the other hand, was celebrating his own way just how thrilled he was to hear her making such a wonderful sound. He had tightened his grasp on her, hidden his face, and was making his own version of piping, though it was deeper in tone and from the very depths of his chest. Papyrus was very happy. Very, very happy.

Toki’s pleased piping didn’t stop. She basked in the magic Toriel was giving her, and in the utter warmth she was surrounded in. She basked in the family she was surrounded in, and in the small bit of relative peace she had, even with the two here that she would instinctively rather not have close by.

Hearing the more feline version of her noise that her husband was emitting, Toki lifted her hands to pull his face flush into her bosom, and she cuddled him to her with the most content look to cross her face. She was warm, they were warm, and for a time she could let herself forget the bad things, to let the stress melt away and let her body relax enough make her almost completely complacent.

“lt’s a good noise.” Grillby agreed warmly. “Let us take our rest… I need sleep, and I would like to spend time here with my family now that I am able. Will Toki need more monitoring? Or will we be enough?”

"I have a feeling Tenebris will not waver his surveillance." Asgore assured Grillby, averting his gaze as Papyrus was rewarded with that which he would not admit was one of his favorite parts of his wife’s body.

"Pap holy crap, save some for the rest of us~" Sans teased with a muffled laugh.

Papyrus didn’t even care, he threw all restraint out the window and gave a blissful hum as he was enveloped by his wife’s perfect-sized breasts, and for a split second could be giving his prayers of thanks as his arms locked around Toki’s back, trapping her so that he could continue to use her as his
His fingers starting from where they rested to slowly crawl up and instead start to ever-so-gently to begin rubbing the bases of Toki’s wings. The soft, delicate joints were no doubt sore after the previous abuse, but he would knead in hopes to bring her relief.

Relief he did indeed bring her. She didn’t even respond to Grillby, her piping kicking up several notches. She sighed almost euphorically, and went limp in Tenebris’ turtleneck, her wings relaxing in his touch. The one that had been dislocated hurt, but his hands overrode the pain and made it damn near euphoric to have them touched.

She didn’t even mind him invading her turtleneck like so.

Asgore gave a quiet cough, and looked to Toriel. “Perhaps we should give them some time to themselves.”

"I agree. This is their time, we've done our job. I must go home anyways to go check on Frisk." Tori agreed quietly, slowly moving away from the nest to leave the bedroom. "Did you remember to open the windows after you cast hellfire?"

"Yes d-... Yes, Tori, I remembered…"

Old habits died hard, long, miserable deaths, Toki knew, and it made her soul cringe to hear Asgore nearly call Toriel ‘dear’. She remembered the Asgore and Toriel she’d grown to love in the other world, and her soul wept for the love that could have been, if not for the loss of two beautiful, amazing children and the anger that had drowned Asgore.

Toki peeked a socket over to watch them go, and then exhaled softly when they were gone. She thrummed softly, her piping quieting down as she tuckered out just a bit. “I’m glad we’re all okay.” She murmurs softly. “That we will all be okay.” She also couldn’t believe Kon was marrying Lana. Just… wow. He’d worked up the guts to ask her. “It’s been… a whirlwind of a day. Lows and highs and lows and highs…” She yawns.

"And hows and Lighs." Cae chuckled quietly where he laid.

"We're all going to be okay..." Tenebris rumbled warmly, ignoring Cae’s terrible joke. "And come the next dawn I sense we will wake up all with a sense of relief and peace upon us.”

“Mostly.” Toki yawns. “Once I’m back up and around, there is still one more task I have to handle.”

“Besides birthing your litter?” Grillby inquires, eyeballing her. “Which should be soon, I’d wager.”

“Besides that.” She agrees, not even willing to let labor anxiety take over her mind. “I have a discussion to have with Asgore, and a city to fix before I bring children into it.”

"That's going to be our concern, Toki dear." Tenebris rumbled quietly. "You are going to take it easy and recover, as well as take care of the pups when they're born." Toki sighs quietly, and her piping goes silent. “Tenebris, if you guys can’t handle it, then I'll have to.” She says. “You’ll have until I’m really up and about, but I want this done before the pups get here. I don’t want them born in what the village I love has turned into, you know?” If she had to, she’d deliver elsewhere. Digging dens wasn’t her skill, but instinct was instinct.

She rubs her fingers over her husband’s skull, which was still buried in her chest. “By what my body is telling me, it will be soon. Within the month.” She murmurs. “If you guys can handle it, and get the village back to what it was before Asgore locked it down, then that will be one more stress off my mind, and he and I can resume not being awkwardly tense with each other, and hopefully the birth will go smooth.”

Tenebris nodded slowly in understanding.

Aliquam slowly lifted his head to look up at his wife. "We will try our best..." The younger male spoke gently. "But everyone is scared... they're afraid of the humans and his majesty's invoking of law is the only reason they sleep at night..."

“I understand they’re scared.” She says quietly, and her eyes droop shut as she sighs. “Everyone was terrified when they came topside. But shutting off from humanity, and making sure that every human is recorded when they come in... It’s not the right way. We functioned for close to two years with a legal terrorist group actively hunting us, killing us and HTMS and other good humans who supported us, and we never went into lockdown on a scale like this. This was a rogue group of the government...” Toki murmurs.

She cups his jaw and opens her sockets again. Toki’s fingers gently stroke her husband’s cheek bones, and she absorbs every defining feature of him that she can, drinking him in through her gaze. “And I made it clear what would happen if they moved against the Monsters again. But drawing back, tucking in and treating every human like they’re a threat is not the way to do it, and is only showing that we have something to hide. Not to mention the grave...” She sighs. “There is a lot you’ll have to do.”

Aliquam closed his eyes when she caressed his face, and he sighed quietly, before looking up again at his father.

Tenebris was looking away, a frown on his face.

"Father... do you think you could talk to him? If he just took long enough to think this through..." Papyrus spoke slowly and with a quiet voice.

"Y-Yes... I will try." Tenebris nodded gently.

Toki sagged quietly at Tenebris’ words, and exhaled with a tired relieved sound. “Thank you.” She mumbles. “I know you’re busy with my husband’s leg, but... If you can find the time, it would mean the world to me...”

Tense muscles began to relax, and exhaustion was taking hold. She was struggling to keep her eyes open. However, Toki wasn’t shivering, so there was no threat to her not waking up.

As she began to fall asleep, Tenebris started to hum a soft tune, one that would make his very form vibrate with his tones... he wanted her to be at ease and to fall asleep quickly.... so he worked to ensure it.

The humming lulled her down, and her breathing slowed rapidly. She fell asleep with one arm looped around her husband, and the other limp below her. Toki didn't take long to lull to sleep- nor did it take her long to slip into a deep and restful sleep, her temperature slowly but steadily climbing as she lay surrounded in all sans two members of her immediate Monster family.
Chapter 147

Strider Notes: It’s good to remember now that Toki is not a natural born beast, and does not have full control over her instincts. Shenanigans abound when nesting instincts strike~

Just another day and she would be considered thirteen weeks into her pregnancy. She’d been pregnant for a little over three months- and while Toki wasn’t sick of the pregnancy, she was certainly tired of the demands her body wanted of her and her family.

She still needed to heal, so the magic demand was twofold on top of what her children needed to continue developing. Thankfully, their demands were lessening from the start of her gestation, but it didn’t make much difference when it came to refilling her magic stores.

Through her lack of enjoyment, Toki at least had company when there was no one else. Dear would sit with her in her head, having come out of her seclusion. They would converse in their own magic way of doing it, and they would ponder about their mate, their pack, as well as their children, both those within and those already born.

But with Dear's presence came a knowledge that Toki had not cared for. It brought maternal instinct that would cause her to be more aggressive and territorial, despite her current workload of the pups and trying to keep her spirits up for her mate and family.

And who else to become the victim of said territorial aggression than the family Toki knew and loved?

At least the twins were free to come and go as they had wished.

But poor Sans, who had no clue, had just started upstairs to let Toki and Papyrus know that Tenebris had shown up with what he would need to properly install Aliquam's new prosthetic hip and leg, which had been constructed over the past nearly two weeks as Tenebris' special project between managing the health of his patients.

His footsteps alerted Toki from her state of slumber at Papyrus' side and sluggishly she moved to a position to stand defensively facing the door. A growl rumbled up from the depths of her throat.

As the door swung open to reveal a seemingly excited Sans, Toki flared her barely-there fur and began to buzz threateningly.

Immediately the aggression was picked up by the rounder beta beast, and with a fast 'ohshit !' he quickly backpedaled out of the room. "Sorry! I'll come back later! Just letting you know that Pops is downstairs with Pap's new prosthetic!" He called through the door after clicking it closed to prevent her pursuit.

With that, Papyrus groaned and opened his eyes, taking a deep breath as he spoke. "Father... wha...?" He moaned out tiredly.
Toki was bound mostly on all fours, as the stress of standing upright was causing more pains to ripple through her when she tried to stand on two legs. Her short, bristling mane stood on end as she growled at the closed door for a few moments more before her mind soothed enough for her to turn back.

She swayed back to her mate, and shifted to curl into his side. Her face nuzzled against his temple, and she groomed him gently as she kept an ear out for anyone invading her nesting space.

"Tenebris has your leg done." Toki answers him with a warm sound, her soft tongue rasping over his temple and along the top of his skull. Her eye lights were blown wide with how deeply she was sunken into her instincts. "Did you get enough rest?"

The grooming spurred a pleased churr out of him as he kneaded and stretched in response, and he gave a low groan before he sighed and smiled up at her. "Indeed... I hope you did as well, my love~" He purred, leaning up to offer her a gentle kiss.

She met his kiss with a warm sound, and then gave a tiny chittering hum. “I didn’t sleep too soundly, but I’m fine.” She couldn’t settle to sound sleep- not for the past two days. Her instincts were in over drive, and they were screaming that her mate was weakened, he couldn’t protect her when she needed it, so she needed to be vigilant for them both. “I’m glad you slept well though.” She gave a soft thrumming purr, and nuzzled her face to his.

Her mane twitched and stiffened, and she looked to the door as she heard foot steps again. Her eyes squinted and she leered at it.

Aliquam peered over as well before watching the door open a crack... though he was surprised to see a white hand with a mug of steaming cocoa be the first thing to poke into their space.

Toki’s growl bubbled up, until she spotted the cocoa and the steam intruding first. She inhaled and scented it eagerly, before rising from her spot next to her mate and approaching. Her growl died off as her mouth watered at the scent of chocolate deliciousness.

Her smaller secondary arms came into play here, reaching up to grasp the door and pull it open. “Is that cocoa?” She asks, eyeing Tenebris’ hand holding the mug as she debated on if the cocoa was for her, or his drink. The set of her wings didn’t look aggressive- it looked more receptive at the idea of being presented a pacifying food item to be allowed entrance to her nesting den.

"Yes dear. Do you want it while I come and see if everything is shaped correctly on Papy's prosthetic?" Tenebris thrums softly.

She squints at him, and then nods. She pulls open the door, a clear invitation, and then waddles her way back towards the nest. She takes a seat at the edge, so she doesn’t make a mess, and rocks herself upwards so she can actually drink the cocoa like a civilized beast. She makes eager fingers at him, eye lights still blown wide, and clearly not entirely processing everything going on like she normally would be. “Please?”

He stepped into the room with a hum and offered to her the steaming cup of cocoa. "Here you are, my dear Tokiko~" He cooed warmly. "I hope you enjoy it~"

She closed her eyes as she took it with a most sated look. She raised the mug to her teeth, and took a deep inhale of the sweet, sugary chocolaty goodness, and then took a sip. Her pleased buzz spoke measures. “It’s very good.” She approves. “Thank you.” She adds, remembering her manners. Toki watches him for a moment, and then nods her head towards her mate. “Be gentle.”
"I would be nothing less for my son." He promised, coming to his son’s side.

After a moment to wake a little more, Papyrus rolled over to expose his broken hip to Tenebris. The elder knelt down beside him before he pulled out what looked to be the new prosthetic hip made for his son.

Toki relaxed as Papyrus was tended to and she drank her drink. She didn’t sip it like other people might have- she slurped it down steadily, and found her mug empty before she expected it to be.

She eyed her mug with a sad buzzing noise, and poked her tongue out to lick the last bits of marshmallow from the rim. Thankfully, by the time her mug was empty, she seemed to be more or less back to herself. “Dad,” She says, telltale of her mental state, “would it be better if I left the room so you could do this without me hovering? I can go busy myself by raiding the fridge and apologizing to Sans for scaring him.”

She felt bad about it now, but there was no telling how long she’d feel bad about it. Hormones and instincts were strong in her, particularly with a litter of five influencing her hormone balance.

"The fit was rather close so I will be putting it on him today. If you'd like to go downstairs, I say go for it. This might end up being rather..." He paused.

His pause lingered for longer than Toki would have liked. "Unpleasant to listen to..." Tenebris was making a face. He was most definitely making a face.

Toki paused, and her short mane bristled anxiously. Her worried gaze slid to her husband, and she scooted closer, lifting her fingers out to touch his gently. She’d ask her husband- it was his body and his choice if he wanted her to witness this probably painful experience. “Do you want me here for this?” She asks her husband, her gaze setting on him.

"It's... better you not be here for this. For your sake..." Papyrus responded quietly. “And theirs.” His gaze slid to her belly.

Toki’s fingers slid to her belly briefly, and she nodded in understanding. She was still a labor risk-stress needed to be a non-factor as much as they could. “Alright.” She leaned down, and pressed a kiss to his temple. “I'll be here when you’re done though, okay? I love you.”

“I love you too.” He replied back with a soft smile to her, and then ushered her on with his hands.

She kept the mug in her secondary hands, and rolled out of the nest. She swayed for the doors, her primary arms grumbling at keeping all of her weight, and she opened the door to go out.

Toki looked back at him for a moment, ground her teeth, and then left the room. She waddled for the stairs, and carefully rocked onto two legs so she could go down them. She wasn’t deft enough to go down on all fours- so she would deal with the crippling back pain that rippled through her when she forced herself upright.

When she reached the bottom, she was back down onto all fours. She padded for the kitchen, her bones making a ruckus that she knew would likely bring Sans to see what was happening. Her children were busy playing their game system in the refurbished dining room that had become a ‘bedroom’ that Grillby and Sans were using while Grillby finished recovering, and they didn’t notice her as she waddled past for the kitchen.

Though Sans did and he slowly hefted himself up to follow her. "Toki." He spoke softly as he entered the kitchen. "Is everything alright?" He asked. "Did Pops kick you out? How the hell did he go about doing that?” He then laughed quietly.

Toki’s tiny mane fluffed at him and she chuffed, straining and stretching up to put the cocoa mug on the counter top. “He didn’t kick me out, you dork.” She rolls her eye lights. “He appeased me with cocoa, and then Pap gently asked if I minded waiting down here since the stress would be bad for my health. I’m considering raiding the fridge...” Her wings flicked, and she eyed the fridge with a huff. “I’m sorry I was grumpy with you earlier. My instincts don’t want anyone near while my mate is...” She waved a hand awkwardly. “They’re in defensive overdrive since Pap and I are technically in our own pack with two pups already. I don’t mean to be a grump.”

"It's okay... Really." He assured her as he came to give her a hug. "You might not be part of our 'pack' per say, but you're still family. And family is more important any day. If you're comfortable, then I'm happy.” He rumbled as he gave her a grin. "Take it easy until you feel ready for anything life is ready to throw at you, and when you're ready, we'll be there for ya."

Toki had to strain up to give him a hug, and so she wiggled out of it as socially acceptable. Once on all fours again, her secondary hands gave a small shrug. “I know you will be.” She gives him a warm smile. “I’ll take it as easy as I can, but instincts are playing hell on my body. Like... right now, I want to go foraging for nest materials, but I’m also hungry, so the mixed feelings are making me feel hangry.” She sighs. “Hormones suck.” She nods to the only one who could sympathize.

On that note of foraging, though- her eye caught the glint of something through the slightly cracked back door, where the cats had been let out to roam a little bit. Her mane fluffed, and Toki abandoned the fridge, turning her attention away from her brother in law to move to the door.

Outside was Tenebris’ car- the incredibly, incredibly nice and expensive one that he’d bitched about her ruining his seats. There were drag marks showing it had been moved back behind her house forcibly to get it out of the way of people who needed to come in and out. The tires were ruined, and the front rims were as well, but the body was sound. And inside were seats. Soft seats that were beckoning her out there like a sirens song.

“Good nesting material.” She appraises and imparts onto her brother in law wisdom for making his own nest as her wide eye lights search along the bottom of the passenger seat to try and get it out. “Firm backing, soft and plush. Good for structural foundation. You want ones like these for your next nest.”

"So you steal it from Dad's charger?” He laughed gently. "Here here, let me help you disconnect it so it can at least be saved at the end. Okay?” He offered as he came closer.

Toki stiffened as he came closer, and she turned her head to look at him. She rattled the seat. "This is mine." She presses firmly. "I found it. It's outside. It's mine now, not 'dads'." She pointedly leans over and licks the seat, marking it as hers. "You can't have it either." Her tiny mane fluffs at him to make her point.

Once she's sure he won't take it, she shuffles to the side with a soft grumble. "Help would be nice. It won't come out." She grunts. "Too small to make a nest in thus. Too out in the open, not enough defense."

"I'm not gonna steal it, dork." He rolls his eye lights with a bemused sigh. “Now, if you want me to help you borrow it until you've had the pups, then I can do that. But no frilling at me and licking things just because you think I want it. If I want it, I'll let you know. Okay?” He chuckled lightly.

She frilled at him anyway and chuffed deeply. "Okay." Toki did understand that, and motioned her head at the seat as she scuttled around to the other passenger door to work on loosening the front seat. She needed multiple braces, if she wanted to build the walls up and work on an overhead covering to her nest. "Thank you." She adds, remembering manners. "For helping."

"Of course." He replied softly. "As long as you keep them intact and in good condition, I'll help you borrow them anytime." Sans paused, and then chuckled. "Well, just as long as Pops isn't looking, of course." He winked at her with a soft laugh.

Toki's wings buzzed at him, and she gave a bemused sound. "Not his anymore." She trills in smugly pleased happiness. Her instincts weren't quite grasping the concept of borrowing, though her logical mind knew she couldn't keep them. "Wont damage though. Need them whole for building walls."

Her hands worked under the seat, and she got the front passenger seat looser, a pleased croon escaping her. "Nest needs air coverage." She explains to her companion in car-seat thievery. The pregnant skelebeast grunts, and gives a tug, but the seat is not fully free yet. "Too open, lets the heat escape and can let invaders in easier. A cold nest is stress. One entrance lets mate guard the front, and keeps me and the pups safe inside until they can go out."

She pauses, and her mane flattens. "Mate inside." She corrects, and her wings give an agitated noise as they rub together, not unlike a crickets legs. "Have to protect mate. Mate can't keep us safe now, and there are many non-pack around our house. Friendly packs, but not pack."

It said something about loyalty though, that even though her instincts recognized her mate as lamed, that even her more beastly side was willing to simply lump him in with the pups and protect him.

It also explained to her brother in law right there as to why she had a more heightened aggression compared to other females.

He nodded quietly as she went on and on about how she wanted her den to be and as she finished he gave her a soft smile. "Hey, Papy's gonna get better... Tell you what, I bet the next time you hear from him, he's gonna be celebrating his-"

Unfortunately, Sans couldn't be more wrong.

The next sound to be heard, before he'd even finished his sentence, was a scream from the upstairs bedroom.

It was loud and agonizing with what must have been the most unimaginable pain, even muffled through the unopened windows.
Toki had finished unlatching the first seat by the time the scream rang out, and she sat bolt upright, her four arms yanking the seat out and to her chest as she lurched to attention, not unlike a Meerkat on alarm. The noise had her tiny mane frilling upwards in consternation.

She gave an alarmed bark, and twisted on her toes, her secondary arms dragging the car seat behind her as she tried to fast-skitter back for the house. Her mate was hurting! She had to help! She shouldn’t have left him alone.

"TOKI HOLY SHIT WAIT A SECOND!" Cae quickly went after her, wrapping his arms around her. "Toki wait a second!" He told her. "Take it easy! Take a second to think about this!"

Her breaths came quick as he scooped her into an upright position to keep her from skittering off. The car seat fell out of her hands, and she made an upset warbling keen as her back cramped something fierce. “He’s hurting... ” She whined, her wings twitching against his chest. “I have to go to him... Don’t I?”

"Any other time, I would say yes. But this is a very delicate procedure and I know it sounds like it hurts for him, but it’s going to do a lot of good for him as soon as the procedure is complete. You have to remember, the one doing the procedure is his own father, and after everything you've been through I know he would not disregard the circumstances out of the blue, he is doing as much as he can to reduce Pap's suffering... Okay?" Sans spoke carefully as he gently pulled Toki into the seat she had been holding moment ago. "Okay?"

Toki let out the tiniest of sad sounds as she was made to sit on the detached car seat. The position made her back hurt less, certainly, but didn't lessen the fact that she knew her mate was hurting. "Okay." She echoes, knowing he was prompting her for it.

She did understand that it was necessary- but she didn't like to hear him in pain, and it bothered her immensely. It made her upset that she couldn't help him and make it stop- and reminded her of her failure in being unable to use healing magic to restore his leg.

Toki let Sans keep her seated for a few minutes without fuss to allow the anxious tightness in her torso to go away, before she finally looked up at him and made a quiet requesting noise. Her mate in pain had taken the wind out of her proverbial sails, but she still needed something to do to keep her sane, or she would sit here and stress. “Can we... Keep collecting?” She asks softly. “Or go get something from Muffets? I need a distraction. If I can focus on something, I can ignore it. Food would work too.” Muffets was a bit of a walk, but a walk would give them distance- and she couldn’t hear the sounds.

It would appear that Toki was not the only one bothered by the noise. As it happened, Grillby hobbled out of the back door with Solstice sobbing in his arms, and the twins sniffling at his sides.

Toki’s attention perked to her children, and she didn’t need to say a word. All she did was open her arms, and they rushed to her, jostling her as they clamored into her lap. Toki clutched them close, and crooned softly to them, her mane ruffling up. She wished it was longer so they could take comfort in it- but as it was, they took comfort in the plush softness her chest had to offer, and she curled them as close as she could.

Grillby looked at his husband, and crackled quietly. “It would be good to take a walk,” He says over top his daughter's loud wailing, entirely unaware of their prior conversation, “maybe somewhere quiet, and relaxing. Or for food for the little ones. Fuku is running my bar, correct?”

Sans nodded once as he gently took Solstice in his arms, cooing softly to her as he stroked her head. "Oh sweet Solly, it's okay darling." He spoke gently as he pressed soft kisses to the flaming crown of her skull, his mouth brushing her warm little horns. "It's okay sweetie... it's okay... Mommy's here..." He spoke gently, before he looked up at Grillby. "Toki was thinking about Muffet's..." He explained.

Grillby was doing a lot better after Asgore’s help in healing him, but he seemed to droop just a little bit at the idea of a long walk like that. He took in a deep breath, exhaled, and then nodded. “Muffets works.” He says slowly, and brushes his fingers over Solstice’s head.

She hiccups, and sniffljes. “Amaa.” She whines. “Ouuud.”

“I know, my love, I know.” He soothes. “It was a scary noise.” Grillby pats his pockets, and thrums. “As luck would have it, these pants have my wallet. I don’t mind paying for us.”

“My purse is in my bedroom...” Toki murmurs softly. “I’ll pay you back.” She offers softly, and shifts. She nudges the children off her lap, and rolls onto all fours again- and then motions them to clamor on. They hesitate, but when she grunts at them, they scramble up between her wings instead of going to their uncle to hold his hands. They cuddle down into her back, and she stands on all fours with her back aching a fair bit.

It’s a good ache though- one she feels is right. “Lets go.” She says, wincing as she hears another scream. Her face says they need to go, or she’s going to turn right back around and go into the house and make the screaming stop.

Sans slowly nodded in agreement, taking a slow breath to settle his nerves as they started away from the house. "Come on..." He growled softly. "The sooner we bail, the better..."

Toki moved at his side, looking not quite unlike he was taking a very pregnant animal for a walk. “I want an apple cider or a strawberry-banana shake.” Toki decides softly, trying to change the subject. “And some of her meatloaf if she has it today.” Meat in a loaf- what could be better?

“I just want a chocolate milk.” Honey says softly, and plays with her mother’s wings. “Maybe a cookie?” That’s said while glancing to her uncles. “Please?”

“I want one of the teas with the weird boba thingies in it.” Skylar mumbles softly, despite his twin making a face and muttering about those being ‘alien eggs’.

"Of course, honey..." Sans smiled at her, before he cooed and gently kissed Solstice’s head. "Hey sweetie... Do you know what you want?" He asked her gently.

“Muhhk.” Solstice stuffs her fist in her mouth, and tucks her face into his neck. “Chomuhk.”

“Chocolate milk.” Skylar supplies the answer easily.

Toki hums, and bumps her shoulder to Cae’s leg. “And what are you getting?”

"I might just have a cheese croissant..." He answered. "Not really feeling much else of an appetite..."

“Neither am I, but I know I need food, or they’ll kick up a fuss- and then your Dad will grumble at me for not eating.” Toki sighs.

Sans gave a reluctant nod before he sighed. "Pops is so tired and yet he continues so resiliently to ensure everyone else is alright before he considers caring about himself.”

Toki’s steps hesitate long enough for Grillby to bump his knee into one of her folded wings. Then she continued after, her primary arms picking up fast enough to keep up with her brother in law. “He does.” She agrees quietly. “This whole mess has been one huge stress for everyone involved. He needs to rest. Maybe… Once this is all over, I’ll invite him into the nest and just make him sleep.” She sighs. “It seems like the only time he’s able to sleep soundly anymore with the stress he’s dealing with from talking to Asgore is when he’s draped against my belly.”

"At this point I can see why. We've already lost so much, and he's this close to having what he has truly wanted for so, so long..." Sans leaned against Grillby with a quiet sigh. "Hopefully after this, you can relax, he can relax, and we can all get some more sleep.”

“Hopefully.” She exhales softly, and her gaze slid up to Sans. “I’d say he and I could go cuddle in my living room and let my husband rest, but my living room is thrashed.”

Grillby makes a flustered crackling noise as he supports his husband. “Honestly...” He mumbles softly with a sigh. “I’ll have it replaced. Probably not until after the litter are here, but I will replace it.”

Toki nods and sighs. “I’ll talk with him when we get back.”

“We’ll play our games.” The twins chime in quietly. “It’s easier than all of the… Adulty stress.”

Toki’s mane sinks flat. “Kids… my sweet children… I’m so sorry you’re caught in the middle of this. I didn’t want this to be your first experience with me bringing more children into the world…” She sighs softly. “I’m sorry.”

Their little hands rubbed her back, and Skylar nuzzled his teeth to her wing joint. “It’s okay, Momma.”

Toki still feels terrible, but nods quietly. Her gaze slides to her brother in law, and she exhales softly. “I’d say he and I could cuddle in my nest, but I think your brother is going to need time to rest.” She hesitates, and there is obvious discomfort in asking this, in trusting someone else around her mate while he’s weakened. “Do you think you can… Help me with Papyrus? At least until the litter is here? Walking upright is painful and dizzying, and he might need the support that I can’t provide.”

"Absolutely. All you had to do was ask, Sis.” Sans gave her a smile. "Maybe when we all gather to nest together, Pops can bring over his own personal switch, so when you guys are settling down, he can play until he passes out from sheer exhaustion.”

“That would work.” She mumbles softly, and nods quietly. She pauses though, and makes a soft awkward noise. She may have to move her nest locations if they continued to gather and use her current nest for a communal one. Her instincts were demanding some place private. Dark, quiet, and secure. Some place where not everyone would constantly be barging in.

“When we get back, we can talk to him about it.” Toki nods instead of letting them lapse into silence during the duration of their slow walk to Muffet’s. “Between family and pup cuddles, I’m sure we can soothe some of the stress down.”

They spent several hours at Muffets. Once they got there, the spiders sort of drew them in, got them settled into several luxury booths, and they got food galore- with no real wait on their order. The entire trip was free of charge, as Muffet- who was still recovering- joined them for food as well.

Muffet said thanks in her own ways- and stuffing you until you felt fit to burst with sweet confections, nutritious bread, and liquid goodness was her way of saying ‘thank you for making sure
I didn’t die’. As well as actually gracing you with her company.

Toki didn’t complain- the entire trip had left her feeling more like herself, and less like the beast being trapped in the house with nothing but her instincts was making her feel like. It also might have helped her mood that she was returning home with a gallon jug full of apple cider, to which she could savor at her leisure, and her children had plates of their favorite cookies. Sans had a massive container of ketchup, and Grillby had a massive cup of cinnamon hot chocolate.

The group was content, and returning home full and more relaxed than they had been when they left.

It helped that as they arrived, there didn’t seem to be any discernible screaming going on.

Toki offered her cider container to her brother in law as her children dismounted from her back. “Can you put this in the kitchen please?” She inquires of him warmly. Her back was glad for the reprieve. She wanted to go lay down and rest it. The litter were putting on their last and final pounds, and her body was not enjoying any of it. “I want to go check on Papyrus.”

He gave a nod. "Make sure to knock before you come in. Hopefully they're done and you can hold Papy again."

Toki nods. Once he’s taken her cider, she makes her way to the stairs, and goes up. She goes slowly and methodically, hearing the children start up the video game console on the television behind her. The melody to Harvest Moon is soothing, and helps give her the courage she needs.

Courage or not, Toki still hesitates when at the door. She lifts one of her smaller secondary fists, and knocks gently below the door-knob.

When she receives no answer, Toki assumes he finished, and left Papyrus to rest and recover like anyone else might have. Toki reaches up, and opens the door.

The first to greet her was Papyrus’ muffled howling and screaming into a literal pile of pillows- which explained why they hadn’t heard a sound through the thick concrete floors and the closed doors. Yet with the door open, he so loud and so desperate that he was still very much understandable through the fabric.

"F-Father... oh god.... I-It hurts...!” His breathing was fast paced and undeniably in agony.

"I know... I know... Please hang in there, my son. We're almost done. Just one last screw and I'll be done...” Tenebris' voice was level; but it was shocking how level he sounded. "Your hip was so damaged that I need to secure the anchors properly so that your bone will heal into it..."

"P-Please.. D-Do it quickly!"

"Alright... take a deep breath."

There was a soft sound of whirring before the sharp sound of a drill being activated, closely followed by a grotesque sound and another bout of screaming that was quickly muffled once more.

Tenebris slowly looked over his work, tracing the line where the prosthetic met near his son's tailbone, before checking the coccyx connection. "Well done... Well done..." He praised gently as he worked, giving it a final pull to ensure that the new prosthetic was going nowhere, though it tore a final yelp out of Papyrus before he slumped against the bed, pushing away the pillows and blanket so that he could gasp frailly at the cooler air.

"Alright... The worst has passed, my son... I'm so proud of you..." Tenebris slowly got up from where he had knelt to be level with his project, before he sighed and slowly lowered the last of his tools to rest on the floor beside the rest.

It would be hard to see at the angle from Toki's point of vision, but there sat the high-powered drill next to a bone saw, and a small pile of bone strips shaved from the bone now covered by the metallic prosthetic.

It didn’t matter the angle, and it didn’t matter how upset and tired Tenebris looked- because Toki saw and heard every last bit of it, and by the time that he was lowering his tools, it was already too late.

She could smell the pain, smell the agony, the scent of bone dust was filling her nose, and all Toki could see was a faceless threat looming over her wounded mate- and she had to remove it. She could only hear the muffled screaming pleas of her mate, and the gasps that came after as he was left in lingering agony.

To the thing Toki had become, there no Tenebris; he was not family, he was not pack- there was only a threat that had to be handled, by any means necessary, to ensure the safety of her mate.

There was no warning, no sound, not until the door she’d shoved banged back against the wall with force enough to dent it, and her mouth gaped open in a snarl. A bellow left her mouth, and heat scorched her teeth as her wings mantled up behind her. She had no magic at her disposal, but she had her body.

Sockets devoid of light seemed to suck in every droplet of light they could absorb as her mouth clamped on to the back of his calf. Crocodile teeth snapped shut on tough flesh, searing through it and ripping at him as she snarled and shook her head. Her clawed hands braced on the floor, and she began to beat at the threat with her wings, keeping her belly carefully under her and out of his reach as she ripped and savaged at his lower leg.

Thick black blood stained her teeth as she ruined his pants.

He hadn't smelled her, hadn't heard her, and most definitely didn't see her until it was too late.

A new pain-filled scream echoed out, belonging to the older male as he tried to reach down to pry her off, his tail had quickly swung into action. In restraint, he grabbed it with a shaking hand and tried simply to grab her and pry her off. "T-TOKI!"

Papyrus heard his scream, and with that, he weakly extended a hand, gasping the name of his beloved wife before his magic blinked, with it, snaring her soul for all but a second and turning it a deep blue color as Aliquam made to stop her in any way he could.

He just wasn't strong enough.

Thankfully, where Papyrus failed, Caeruelus prevailed.

The scream had him upstairs in moments and upon seeing the gruesome scene unfolding, he snapped his fingers and grabbed Toki's soul in one hand, the other reaching between her wings to grab her by a horn and pull it upwards. "Toki, let go!" He barked.

As her horn was yanked, she gave a garbled snarl- and with the yanking came more than just a little hunk of flesh as she tried to adjust her grip and failed. She didn’t take the whole width of her bite radius, but Tenebris was now sans several ounces of flesh. The mouthful of meat disappeared down the darkness of her throat as she turned her attention elsewhere.

In the wake of the new enemy in her radius, and the heavy weight of her soul that made her want to put her chest on the floor, Toki whipped her head around in the grip of the hand restraining her horn as her wings flared up and battered at him. She gave him a snarl, teeth painted as black as her sockets, and lunged for him as quick as she could with her jaws agape and her claws out to rake at him.

Sans easily dodged her blows before he grabbed her by the primary forearms and swung his foot under her feet to pull them out from under her. With his victory, her body buckled with the lack of support and was effortlessly landed on the ground. Praying he didn't do too much damage, he teleported back before he put more weight in his magic. "TOKI!" He then snarled. “Snap out of it!”

Her hip and shoulder took the brunt of the fall, and they blossomed with bruises with the combined force of her fall and the heavy oppressive weight of his magic.

The fight was not out of her though. Her claws raked across the floor, her stingers lashing as she tried, and failed, to get to her feet again, instincts making her panic about being knocked onto her side and displaying her vulnerable belly. Her wings beat against the floor to no avail.

So much was her fight that the blood from Tenebris turned basically into a sticky, foamy froth as she snarled and roared, ruining her bedroom floor without a sane care in the world.

Seemed the whole house was going to need to be remodeled.

Sans grit his teeth as he held onto her with his magic. "You need to calm down, Toki! Think about Pap!" He told her loudly, before he heard a sound from the bed.

"Toki..." Aliquam couldn't move. He could only gasp, before giving another shaky sob as he looked to where his father had collapsed against the wall to hold his leg. "Toki...!" Was his next weak whimpers. "Toki...!" That's all he could say, all he could make out through his pleading- her name.

It wasn’t the shouting from Sans that snapped her out of it, or even her mate calling her name. Instead, it was the sobs that she could hear that sank in the deepest, and left her reeling- that calmed the rage like a flash flood over a fire, and urged her instead to comfort her mate now that the threat had been warned off.

The black abyss of her eye sockets lit up again, and the frantic thrashing faded off into sore, semi-pained panting as she went limp, submissive, under Sans magic.

Toki, as she came back to herself, was first and foremost aware of the sour almost acidic taste in her mouth. She felt like she had deep-throated the worlds biggest battery, and it had leaked all over her mouth. The second thing she was aware of was the smell of anxiety from her brother in law, and the pain and wary fear from Tenebris. Fear blanketed the room from her mate.

She sucked in a shaky breath, and keened softly. “… What happened?” She rasped. She’d last consciously been outside the door, and she’d heard things- terrible things- but it had gone dark and then she was here being restrained, and she hurt, and the room smelled horrible.

"Tokes... Toki... Toki..."

"Tokes... I... I think you snapped... All I heard was Pops screaming, I came in here and... fuck..." Sans’ voice was shaking as much as his hand was as he let her go, before he immediately went to his father's side to treat the wound that was now on his leg.

As for Tenebris...? He wasn't even looking at her... he had one hand grasping his leg tightly, the other gripping his tail for dear life as he pinned it against the wall. His leg was bleeding into a small pool under his leg. "Fuck... fuck..." His breathing was rough. He was in so much pain from that bite, though his mind also considered the irony. How long ago had it been since he had done the same to her? He felt this was appropriate... even if it was a tragic incident.

It didn’t take much for Toki to connect the dots. Particularly when she shifted at being let up, and a clump of bleeding white flesh fell from the tight clamps of her teeth.

She looked at it for a long while, and then her gaze slid to Tenebris. She felt something heavy in her stomach that shouldn’t have been there, and horror wasn’t long in settling in. She snapped- she’d gone unhinged, feral- she could see the bite marks on his leg and there was only one other monster in the village with her bite pattern, and his bite was not nearly big enough to do that.

Toki felt her stomach throb, and she skittered up onto her feet, frantically scampering into the bathroom. Toki didn’t make it to the toilet before her stomach tightened and she retched loudly. Chunky black ooze hit the floor, mixed with the green magic from their earlier feast at Muffet’s, and Toki gave a soft moan.

What had she done?
Sans could hear her getting sick. He heard it and he hated it, so what he did instead of continuing to panic was reach into his coat pocket and pull out his phone, quickly dialing Asgore to get him over as soon as possible.

It was after a few minutes that there was a gentle knock at the door and Sans slowly entered. "Toki... You... doing okay?" It was a dangerous thing to ask, but watch him ask anyways because of how he worried.

During the minutes that he’d taken to call Asgore, and in the time that it took for Asgore to get there, Toki had managed to move away from her initial collapsing point.

There was a puddle of black tainted sick a few feet into the bathroom, but it appeared that she hadn’t just continued to sit there and heave. She’d moved to the toilet finally. She had her back wedged between it and the tub, and she felt like the back of her throat was burning from... From the blackened blood she’d thrown up.

The noise that answered his question was the sound of apple cider turned to magic splashing into the toilet bowl as the usually vibrant green woman turned more into a pale green skelebeast. She covered the top of her skull with her primary arms, her secondary arms curling around her heaving belly as it cramped and tightened.

The magic block was still functioning, but the stress levels had exceeded the healthy amounts to give her some mildly annoying Braxton Hicks, which did nothing to alleviate her nausea.

Her position at the toilet spoke numbers to the amount of shame and horror she felt- as did the fact that she wouldn’t even look at him. She was literally cowered in a corner with her bruised side facing out, and hurling up the contents of her stomach over what she’d done.

Toki was not okay- she was not doing okay by a long shot, but she deserved it for going savage like that when Tenebris had only been trying to help. She was horrified by it- and surprised they hadn’t reacted with utter and complete terror at her response.

“How is Tenebris?” She croaks finally, not answering Sans question as she coughs and retches again. Less liquid slides up into the toilet than before, and for that she is thankful- there surely could not be much more of Muffet’s amazing pastries and drinks left in her system for her body to violently reject.

"He’s bleeding pretty bad. They were about to see if cauterizing the wound was the best idea. What... What the hell happened?" He asked in great concern.

The thought of them cauterizing the wound, of hearing his pain and smelling burnt flesh, made her stomach clench, and Toki learned that yes, she did indeed have more she could hurl up.

When the next wave ended, she gave a pitiful sound. “I just… I knocked, and no one answered, and I thought they were done… They weren’t.” She rasps softly between shaky breaths. “I snapped. I saw the bone shards, I heard his pain and smelled everything- and that’s all I remember until I came to with you pinning me and my body hurting and my mouth feeling like I’d sucked off a couple of batteries.”

"I guess your beasty didn't take to the idea that Tenebris is a good doctor, even if his methods are less than painless..." Cae gave a weak chuckle as he moved to kneel beside her to rub her back.
"Batteries huh?" He then snickered quietly. "You think that's what Pops tastes like, huh?" He asked softly. "Not sure that's the greatest taste on the tongue…"

At the mention of the taste, Toki found herself retching again, her sockets watering with the force of it. She spat to clear her mouth, and shifted a little bit, trying to shamefully shy away from her brother in law’s help. She didn’t deserve the back rubs after savaging his Father’s leg like that. After Tenebris had been lost for so long, he’d worn a muzzle, even after- it was unrealistic not to expect the same of her.

“It’s not the greatest taste.” She moans. “It’s batteries and acid and dark and very gross.” She makes a soft sniffing noise, and her wings hitch up on her back some. Her bruised shoulder and hip throb, and she massages her tight belly with her smaller hands. “It wasn’t even just my beast. I… wasn’t even there. I was feral.” She says shakily. “I think everything finally culminated together, and I just snapped… and I hurt someone. We’re… We’re so, so fucking lucky I didn’t use my stingers, or we’d have to reload.”

Toki’s shoulders trembles, and her breathing quickens with shame’d tears.

“We can’t keep doing this.” Her voice is high with stress and tears. “My beast is volatile and unstable, and with my instincts and hormones riding high over the fact I’m surrounded by family that’s not pack, I don’t know if it’ll happen again. I don’t want to hurt anyone again.”

For a moment, Cae's soul-rate picked up a little in stress at the mention of reloading, before he sighed and he shook his head, pushing those thoughts to the back of his mind as he made sure she didn't think for a second that his care would disappear.

"Tokes... What if you revoked your independence from Pop's pack... just for a little while? Live out your pregnancy with your pack, and diverge when all is said and done, okay?" He spoke gently after giving it enough thought. "Think about it. You wont feel unsafe around me or Pop's... or Asgore, no less... He would be able to visit more often to keep your fire going... It would also let Pops get close to Aliquam to check on his prosthetic as he gets adjusted into it..." He then smiled. "Hey... now that I think about it, it looked really, really good..."

Toki sniffled quietly, unaware of the brief panic she’d given him at the mention of a reload. “I didn’t really get to see his leg, and I don’t… Know if I can handle going out there and facing your Dad after I...” The shame was basically radiating from her. She shifted one of her hands, and rubbed her face to try and dry the tears that were dripping down to mix with the sick. “Leaving the pack was supposed to fix the issues.” She made a gross sounding sniffle, and then blindly groped along the top counter across the toilet for a dry wash cloth so she could try and clean up a little. “It doesn’t seem like I can win for losing with choices. It would make it safe for you and Tenebris and Grillby, but...”

Asgore was another story. She had issues with him outside of pack issues- issues that Tenebris was still trying to address.
“Maybe rejoining would work. But… would he even…” Take her back after she’d savaged his leg like that? Toki didn’t believe in an eye for an eye- and Tenebris hadn’t even been able to look at her.

"Of course… He might have been the victim in the attack, but he doesn't hold things like this to a grudge… how much do you want to bet he blames himself for this?" He joked, but his voice was shaking against his wishes. "I know this sounds selfish… but I'm relieved that you didn't load. It would have restarted the day... and... it would have ended up doing more harm than good.”

“Rebound.” Toki surmises with a slow nod, and looks away quietly. “It's not his fault.” She whispers softly. “I've been volatile for days now- you've all been dealing with it, and Dear is encouraging it despite what my logical thoughts are thinking.” Instincts were strong- so, so strong. She sighs, leans over to spit one more time, and then flushes the toilet. The lid is closed, and she just cowers into the corner as best she can, quietly whining as she does. "Despite what you say… I don’t know if I can handle going out to your Dad. I just… I feel ashamed, Sans. He was helping Papyrus, and I just… Went berserk.”

Toki sighs. “The only other monster I can ever recall hurting was Grillby, and I did the exact same thing- tore a massive chunk out of him with my teeth. I just… I don’t know how to go out there and apologize and expect him not to be afraid of me. When he… When he wrecked my leg with the twins and sent me into early labor, I was terrified of him. For a long, long time. I can’t expect the same thing not to happen here.”

There was a guttural shout of pain from the bedroom that had Toki flinching, and pressing her hands over her skull. The sound of fire searing flesh echoed through the wide open bathroom door, and then the smell of burning meat followed. Low groaning moans floated in.

Toki buried her face into her arms as she dropped the dried wash cloth and keened, knowing that was entirely her fault. Even Dear was feeling guilty over it- Despite what Toki had said about the beast encouraging her savagery, Dear didn’t want to see her savage her family members. The beast was just as shocked and appalled as Toki was that they had gone feral on Tenebris, and that this was the outcome.

Cae turned slowly, before he sighed and got up to push the door closed before he came over to her to collect her quickly in his arms. In the process however, he did not force her from her hiding place, but rather fell into place around her. "Hey... Hey..." He spoke softly to catch her attention onto himself.

Toki felt nauseated again as the scent invaded her nasal cavity, but she was momentarily distracted by the bodily discomfort that came from Sans literally trying to drape around her when there was perhaps one or two inches of space between her back and the bath tub thanks to her belly. She made a soft uncomfortable noise and looked at him as he asked for her attention. Her green sockets were watering with upset again. “He’s hurting...” She says. “Tenebris is... And it’s all my fault.”

He stroked her head gently as he offered her a weakened, but gentle smile. "Tokes, come on. There's no good in wallowing here by yourself. Papy needs you more than your shame needs you. Let's get you back out there so you can at least do your husband some good.” With that, he gave her no room to resist as he used his magic to very carefully move her out of her constricted corner to instead be boosted into his arms.

Toki didn’t fight him- she didn’t even squirm. She let him draw her out, her limbs going submissively limp as he pulled her forth, and then tucked her into his arms. Her belly cramped, and she grimaced a bit at the position, but she made no fuss.

“I… I know you’re right.” She whispers quietly. “I can at least do that for Pap.” Her eyes glanced down and she refused to look at him, but she still opened the door for him as they approached it.

Asgore was in the bedroom, mane ruffled from running. Based on his clothing, he was obviously previously spending time with Thumper. He was kneeling next to Tenebris, and had taken one of the soft and clean blankets from Toki’s nest, and ripped it into long strips to bind Tenebris’ leg until he could tend to it with proper bandages and padding. He glanced up as the door opened, and his brows furrowed at the pair in obvious confusion and upset.

Toki wouldn’t meet his glance either, even if her tiny mane bristled up against her brother in law’s chin in reaction to Asgore defacing her nest. Logically, she knew it was for a good reason, and thus kept quiet.

Tenebris had taken a position on the edge of the nest. Of course, it was more like he was hanging off the nest so Asgore could access his leg. His breathing rough as he bit into what appeared to be his wallet to muffle himself as his mate did what he had to in order to treat his wound. "H-Hff... Hhnnn..." That didn't mean his noises were any less than pathetic, though.

When Cae entered, his gaze lifted to his son, before his eyes pressed closed again and he turned away, kneading the edges of the nest with great stress. He hadn't once glanced at Toki.

His noises were enough- Toki didn’t need his glances on top of the sharp-eyed glances that Asgore seemed to be throwing her. She tried to focus on the soft, continual sob of her mate- it didn’t sound like he had stopped since she had retreated to be sick, and her soul hurt for having left him. He was rasping something that might have desperately been her name.

Asgore finished wrapping Tenebris’ leg, and reached up to gently rub his thigh. “Rest easy.” He murmurs. “When you have the magic, you can heal it. It is a deep wound.”

When Sans reached the nest, she gave a firm squirm to be set down. Once he set her down, she didn’t slink onto the bedding, or even walk- she belly crawled onto the nest.

Well, as much as she could belly crawl with a belly like she had. She still got down low, her belly scraping the blankets, and her head and wings were carried low so as not to attract attention as she made her way past Asgore and Tenebris, to try and make her way to her mate without upsetting either of the other two.

It was as soon as he felt first touch of her that Papyrus immediately lunged to grab hold of her, his faint sounds picking up to become an undeniable whimpering of her name. "Toki... Toki..." He was no longer as disturbed from what he had endured with his father. Now he was more shaken and looking to hide within the loving touch of his wife despite the events that had brought her the guilt.

Toki didn’t even grunt as he lunged and yanked her to him. All she did was brace so he couldn’t yank her flat down on her front, and then moved to curl around his upper half. She was still anxiously petrified of the pant-less portion of him, terrified of hurting him even though he now had a shiny new metal prosthetic where he’d used to have a bone colored one.

She cradled his head and shoulders, and tried to keep him still despite the desperate clinging he was doing. “Shh...” She croons softly. “Shh... I’m here.” She murmurs softly. Her teeth are still a bit of a mess- a dry wash cloth is not enough to fix it, but Sans hadn’t given her time to clean the smell of sick from her. “I’m here, Papy...” She whispers quietly. “I’m here... I won’t... I won’t go away again, I promise...”

Asgore looks at her quietly for a moment, and then heaves a tired sigh. He shifts, and glances between Tenebris and Sans. “Do you need me to take him home?” Him being his husband. Marital problems or not, he still loved him, and he still wanted to care for him. “Or do you need to stay here to make sure that his prosthetic settles properly?”

"I must stay..." Tenebris answered quietly, reaching down to stroke Asgore's hand in response. "I must make sure I did not fail." He carefully shifted over on his stomach before he looked over at his son and daughter-in-law, and yet it was when he went to speak that his voice hitched to silence. He wasn’t sure what he could say.

“All right.” Asgore nods quietly. “I’ll head back to Thumper then... You and I can resume our… Talk... later if you want.” Asgore sounds tired of this ‘talk’, but knows he’s resigned to hearing it anyway. That said, the king stands, and moves toward the door, casting one last glance before disappearing through it and leaving them to their own devices.

Toki nuzzles her mate again, and her mane settles back down once Asgore’s tension leaves the room. She still doesn’t look at Tenebris, but instead quietly speaks to her brother in law. “If you can just leave the mess for me in the bathroom, I would appreciate it. It’s not your problem to clean up. When Pap is feeling better enough for me to leave him to rest, I’ll do it.”

Her body was thanking her for laying down. Her bruises hurt less, and the tight feeling in her belly was lessening, making the rapid, semi-alarming pace of her breathing start to slow. The visible bruise was showing on her shoulder, given the tank top she was wearing today in lieu of all of her turtlenecks being dirty. Recovering she was, but her body was not up to the rough beating she’d put on her father in law.

Her smaller, secondary fingers kept rubbing soothing circles on her middle to keep her muscles relaxed.

It was as Asgore left that for a fraction of a second Tenebris showed the attempt to reach up to stop him, but too quickly he was already out of reach. His fist curled as he pulled it back under himself and he sighed, taking a second to clear his mind and recover.

Aliquam pressed his face into Toki's chest, his bones rattling as his remaining leg attempted to curl under him. "Toki... Toki... To..." His words faded. They turned to teeth clicking, before it quieted further as he simply settled with soft snuffles.

Toki’s words shifted into soft murmured beast speech, and she comforted him as best she could when he went entirely nonverbal. Her arms held him, and she stroked over what parts of him she knew didn’t hurt. Switching back to the non-beast common tongue, she sighed softly. “You’re okay.” She murmurs softly. “It’s going to be okay...” His good knee curled up to bump her belly, and she grunted at the sharpness of it, before dropping a hand to massage it gently and let him know on more than just an audible level that he would be okay.

Her gaze slowly, hesitantly, slid to Tenebris. If it was going to be okay, she needed to say something... She couldn’t keep the gaze there for long, but she tried. “Tenebris...” She whispered softly. Not ‘Dad’. Just Tenebris. She had lost that right by eating his leg, literally. “I’m... I’m sorry. There’s nothing else I can say but that. I’m sorry.” She wasn’t even asking forgiveness. She was just letting him know that she was sorry- she never wanted to hurt him.

"I wish I could have done better, Toki..." Was his quiet reply. "I wish I knew how to make it hurt less, how to make it so he could have easily slept through it while still getting the responses I needed to ensure I put everything on and in correctly. My inability brought forth a mother and mate's wrath, and for that I am the one who should apologize." He looked up at her, before he looked away again and sighed. "All I ask is that you stay with him until he recovers and let him remember that he can be weak as long as you are there to nurture him in his time of need."
"In that case... since she's already doing that, might I be able to discuss something important to us all?" Cae spoke up, getting Tenebris' attention.

"What is it, Caeruleus?"

"Well... Toki was wondering about how we could prevent this from ever happening again... So I was thinking, what if, even for a short while, we become one pack again, rather than sitting as two packs apart...?"

Toki swallowed quietly. “It wasn’t just a mother and a mate’s wrath. A lot of the problem with this... came because my instincts are... in over-drive, basically.” She mumbles softly. “Logically, I can see you as my family. Me, as myself, sitting here talking, knows that we’re all family and that we love each other. Dear knows this too. On a more base instinct level though, my instincts register you as... Well, not as pack, so enemy and rival pack. And with me having to stand in to protect my mate instead...” Toki’s hands tightened gently, and she nuzzled Papyrus quietly.

“This all culminated from stress building and building and building- and you were just the snapping point. I know we separated to prevent problems with Asgore, but... There already are problems with him, and we’re not pack. Being pack.. At least for a little while,” for surely he would not want her back forever, “would mean a safer work space for you. I shouldn’t... Shouldn’t be as prone to bite.”

"Then it seems all that is left is to put on a leash on your instincts. I agree. Let us become one once more, Tokiko." Tenebris agreed, slowly pushing himself a little closer. "Toki, come here..." He purred gently.

Hearing Tenebris summon Toki, Aliquam, or Sentinel- it wasn’t clear who was currently behind the wheel- tightened his grip a little before he picked up a quiet whining.

Toki shifts, and very gently strokes her fingers over her husband’s clinging fingers. “I need up, my love.” She murmurs softly. “For just a moment, no longer. I won’t leave the nest. I’m going to make it safe, okay?” She nuzzles her face to his, and tries to slowly, very slowly, ease up so she can belly crawl over to Tenebris.

Her instincts were demanding she crawl- while she’d been defending her territory, she’d savaged another alpha who had only been trying to help.

Make it safe... Make it safer... Slowly, the younger male let go and hugged himself as he listened to the happenings around him...

Slowly, Tenebris pushed himself up and as he did, his forehead grew harder as his crown slowly grew out of his head, now more beastly as he 'stood' before Toki, and yet his gaze was gentle.

He leaned down and slowly set his forehead on hers, before he exhaled a deep purr as his snout trailed down along what would be considered the hairline on a human, it went around her horn and scar and down her skull as he moved to press his jaw to her head, as if a cat rubbing it's head upon hers.

And just like that, even he seemed to settle as the scent of the entire room changed.

It had been so quick... Even Aliquam needed a second. But he stopped shaking and he stopped holding himself so tightly... And as if he hadn't been able to breathe, he collapsed against the nest, taking a breath so deep one would wonder how long he had been needing it. It was safe. Toki was safe. Papa was safe...

He was safe.
Toki wasn't sure what to make of the whole process, but it seemed to settle the restless agitated energy of the room, and made everything feel... Right. Dear rose up in the back of her skull, and there was a guiding feeling as she instinctively plumed her stubby mane, and filled the room with pheromones that would act as her half of the acceptance deal.

The alpha female drew back when it was socially acceptable- because she'd entered it as an equal, not as lesser- and then went to curl around her mate’s upper half, a grimace covering her face as her body ached and throbbed. She hurt, and Braxton hicks weren’t fun, even if they were necessary for eventual delivery.

She didn’t even need to be told that was it, that everything was okay now. It simply was- and she felt her insides easing a little bit. There was still that prickling unease of too many beasts surrounding her and her wounded mate, but it soothed slightly with the fact that they were now pack, and not considered enemy beasts.

She eases down onto her side again though, and hissed gently as she massaged her hands into her middle. The smell of her stress lessened, but her discomfort and pain did not. Nor did her guilt. She was still guilty over Tenebris’ leg. “Papy...?” She questions softly, and uses her knee to block his from bumping her belly if he moves. She’s unpleasantly sore, but not ‘labor’ sore. There is a difference. “Are you feeling better...?”

As the duo moved apart, Tenebris quietly laid down and sighed as he purred in content.

Proud of himself, Sans began out to start making some tea for everyone.

Once back in Toki's arms, Papyrus nodded slowly, and reached up to wrap his arms around her. "W-Well done, my love..." He whispered into her form.

Toki rubbed her face quietly against his, and gave him the softest rumbling purr she could. She was uncomfortable and upset by everything that had happened still, but she was glad she could comfort her mate. “I didn’t do anything ‘well’, my love.” She replied with quiet solemnity. “The one who deserves the praise is Tenebris, and you. You made it- and now we can let you begin to heal so you can walk on your own again.” The ‘hopefully’ was not implied, and left wholly unsaid verbally. She pauses as she sees Sans start to go, and gives a soft trill. “Sans... Can you get the seat for me please?”

She still wanted it, and it was a shame for it to sit outside. She wanted more than just one, but one would work for now in creating a cubby within the nest. She really needed two for effective cubby making, but one could work to start if she built between the dresser and vanity.

"You got it, Tokes, I’ll be back in a snap." He winked at her and stepped out with a hum.

As he left, Tenebris rumbled gently. "Were I any other creature, I would have been very afraid. But I am thankful indeed you used your teeth alone. Well done, Toki." The older male had a smile on his face as he looked upon the younger pair.

Toki watched Sans go, and gave Tenebris a slow thrum. "There was no well done about it, Tenebris. We're lucky I used just teeth. You're not a fire elemental, and if I'd have gotten you with my venom..." She shakes her head. "We haven't seen the effects on monsters yet, but we know what happens with beasts. I wasn't in control. I was gone moments after I opened the door, and I only came back when I was pinned on the floor."

She shifts in her husband's grasp, and makes a tiny uncomfortable noise. Her muscles were relaxing, but she was cramping and sore. Throwing up hadn't helped. "But that aside... I'm hoping we can keep it from happening again. When we left the pack, I didn't count on my instincts being this much of a problem concerning the beast pups."

"Instincts are an amazing thing... They are unpredictable and inexpiable, they simply exist within your mind and influence you from the shadows before you even realize it." He rumbled. "Your instincts told you to protect your mate, and as a human turned into a monster, I can easily see how you were lost to them..."

"Tenebris, I'm not too sure I wouldn't have bitten Papyrus if he'd have been able to physically grab me." She sighs softly. "But yeah. My instincts have been in hyper-drive. I should have had a proper secluded birthing nest weeks ago, I was, previously, surrounded by non-pack beasts, and in a weakened state alongside my mate... Everything, now that I look at it, was one huge slow building feral snap waiting to happen. Just... I'm sorry in advance if I growl at you. Hopefully we can avoid another one, and I'll try to not be so snappy, though I can’t promise I won’t. I can say that now with a clear head and mean it. I don't know if it'll stay that way."

Her feral bout had sort of exhausted the majority of her instincts, though some of them were still active. Such as the nagging need for her birthing nest. Her body was recognizing this nest as a sleeping, communal nest- but she didn’t have a birthing nest.

In all actuality, Toki would very likely build her birthing nest between the dresser and the vanity- which was just two feet or so behind the communal nest. She would only need a few more blankets and pillows, and she could connect them- and then her pack could be close, while she had her little haven to retreat to when she needed solace or when the time came for her labor to start.

There was no telling if she would actually give birth in there. Instinct said beasts only delivered with their mates but logic said she was going to be delivering five pups that were far too big for her to be doing this without assistance.

“I know you built this nest for us,” She brushes her fingers over the blankets as she changes the subject away from upsetting things, “and I really do enjoy it, but I will be adding to it. I’m thinking… Probably just behind the nest between the dresser and vanity for practical reasons instead of giving in to instinct and hiding it in one of the other rooms."

He seemed willing and able to roll with her sudden subject change, and other than nodding to show her he accepted her apology, he didn’t continue the prior conversation. "That sounds like a plan... you deserve to make it so everything is perfect, my dear..." Tenebris replied as he stretched in place, before he sighed and rested where he was, watching his son carefully. "Once I have healed up enough, I will be out of your hair and you will be free to accommodate to your heart's content..." He rumbled.

She visibly flinched in Papyrus’ arms and glanced away as he mentioned needing to heal. She’d already apologized though- so there wasn’t much more she could do besides doing a formal apology with her skull touching the floor, and she wasn’t sure she could physically do that with her belly in the way. “Well… I don’t have much hair left to be in the way of.” She says quietly. “And if you want to be here, you can. You’re family- and with everything going on, you deserve a safe spot to relax too. But I understand you still have things you have to take care of at your home before the litter arrives. And if you’d rather not… after what I did to your leg.” She mumbles quietly.

Toki’s wings shift along her back, and she rubs her fingers over her husband’s skull as he rests against her quietly. She’s not sure if he’s drifted to sleep, or if his body is just resting while he listens.

Papy seemed to be a bit of both of Toki's pondering thoughts, a weak moan rising from him as he nuzzled further into her cleavage, content on staying there.
"My leg is of no concern. The only concerns I have are for you... I do not matter nearly as much as you do right now." Was Tenebris' answer that carried his honesty. "You are pregnant and your mate is recovering, and as an alpha of our clan it is my responsibility to do everything I can to make you as comfortable as possible..."

There was a grunt of effort from outside the door and Papyrus momentarily peered out to see Caeruleus hauling something through the door.

Tenebris looked, and immediately his face fell.

"Is... That one of the seats from my car!?”

Toki had been right about to reprimand Tenebris for saying his leg was of no concern- she could smell the blood and burnt tissue from here, and it was making her stomach churn and bubble- when her brother in law brought in her prize.

She immediately perked up, and wriggled right out of her mate’s grasp, giving him a soothing smooch before moving to the end of the nest and down into the room proper to meet him half way. “You brought it!” She cheers. “Did you get the other one too? The half-loosened one?” There is a hopeful glint in her eyes as she reaches up with her secondary arms to take it, not at all perturbed by Tenebris’ forlorn sounding words.

By the scent on the seats, yes, they were most definitely his.

"Almost." Sans answered. "Grillby went to get it.."

"But... what... wha!?" Tenebris was making various noises and none of them made any sense.

Toki made a pleased trill, and nodded to him. “Please express my thanks- and maybe ask him to grab the drivers seat too.” She took the seat, and scampered carefully to the back of the nest, wedging it between the dresser and the vanity, creating a boosted out wall. Then, Toki made a soft, sad trill. “I need more blankets and pillows.” She pouts.

The seat made a massive wall though- multiple seats would give her all the wall coverage she’d need, given the size of the monsters they were created to seat comfortably.

Toki buzzes quietly, and creeps back into the nest. “Tenebris,” She chirrs softly, “What are you trying to say?”

His mouth opened slightly, before it closed, and he sighed in defeat. "It's... it's yours." He rumbled, slowly setting his face down in the blankets once more.

As he slowly sank into a face-plant of utter defeat, Toki slowly reached over her husband to gently pat the top of his head. “You left it out in the back yard to rot.” She says smugly. “So yes. It’s mine. For now.” She sniffs softly. “I’ll try not to wreck it. We were careful in pulling it out.” Toki’s words pause as her back cramps, and she sighs. She shifts, and doesn’t settle down yet. “I need to go clean the bathroom. And my face. The smell is making me nauseated.”

"Do as you wish to it, my dear.” He sighed, lifting his head. "I'll see about buying a new car I wont be afraid to use more often…”

“Buying a new car would be beneficial, since you’re going to have five kids who are definitely not going to be trained in car manners to haul around.” Toki says quietly to him, and then makes her way to the bathroom.
It takes her roughly twenty minutes to clean it—mostly because the sight and smell of the black ooze on the floor makes her sick again, and makes the process longer.

Still, she finishes, and then when she’s done, she heads back out to the nest to check on them, and see’s that Grillby had brought up the other two car seats. She gives them a slow look, but looks too fatigued to try and move them yet. So they sit by the door, and she slinks tiredly into the nest, and checks over the two alpha males resting wounded there, worrying all the while.

Papyrus was asleep, getting some much needed recovery rest, while Tenebris was laying on his back with his leg raised as he examined the score of the bite-marks... It seemed his magic was doing it’s job as the bandages looked to be the slightest bit strained. When she came back to the nest, he peered over at her, before he lowered his leg and extended a hand to her.

Toki hesitated at Tenebris’ extended hand, and then slowly moved around the nest to approach him. His makeshift bandages were stained, and she scent of his blood made her empty stomach clench with nausea. She settled slowly at his side, smaller secondary hands coming out to brush his fingers, before checking his temperature and making sure he was okay.

Even though she’d rinsed her mouth, she had little doubt he’d heard her getting sick again. “You know… You taste like battery acid and bitrex.” She says, shifting to settle sorely onto her side. Her bruised hip and shoulder face him. “Tenne didn’t taste like that.” She muses lightly. She shakes her head and sighs. “Anyway. How are you feeling?”

"Better... not the best but I'm doing better." He rumbled in reply, before he snorted. "Battery Acid and bitrex... I fear how you know the taste of said chemicals." He rumbled, though he then looked at her with an amused grin, "I suspect Tenne tasted... 'Better'?'"

Toki simply quirked a brow at him, and then chuckled. “He did taste vastly better.” She agrees. “And he thought I tasted pretty good too.” She sighs, and settles her head down against the pillows. “But that's what got us into this mess in the first place. Mnn...” Her legs kicked a little uncomfortably, as she tried to get comfortable without triggering another motion-based Braxtion Hicks. She doesn’t want to ask for his help in relaxing her muscles, not when she can’t offer help for his leg in turn, so she suffers in silence.

He looked at her with a knowing look before he hummed and slowly rolled over onto his side. He adjusted himself carefully to move to lay beside her, before reaching up to gently touch her swell and roll his thumbs over it soothingly. "An accidental miracle regardless, my dear. I'm going to be a daddy to beast pups and it's all thanks to you~" He purred.

Toki paused as his thumb rubbed over her swell, soothing the tender muscles. Then, with a glance back at her softly snoring husband, Toki scooted closer until her belly brushed against his, and she could curl closer, seeking and offering what comfort she could even though she was physically uncomfortable. “I'm glad you're still excited to be a Daddy again. Little ones are definitely a challenge.” She sighs, and leans her head forward to let it bump against his shield. He is warm, and it feels nice. “You're warm.” She announces softly. “It feels nice.”

Her response to his warmth had him smiling and he rumbled quietly, before he chuckled and wrapped his arms around her, pulling her close carefully before he rolled onto his back, a light grin on his face, "A challenge worthy of a retired scientist... though I'm still working, I assure you~" He joked lightly.

Toki made to squirm to try and free herself as he rolled onto his back, because this position left her with her stomach compressed. Surprisingly enough, her belly didn’t get squished- it compressed down, stretching his abdominal cavity wide as her girth invaded his body without permission. His turtleneck cradled her, and she made a soft surprised noise, before letting her body slowly ease down. Her breasts were uncomfortable pressed to his shield, but she blindly groped for a soft enough pillow to cushion those, and then that was that. “Soul condoms are still a thing I desire.” She says almost idly as she shuffles against him to get comfortable, before going limp.

The weight on her back vanishes as his shirt cradled her middle, and Toki felt the air rushing from her lungs in relief.

He chuckled lightly before he draped his tail over her legs to secure her in place as he laid back. “That's the next thing on my to-do list... Soul protection for all the soul merging you can perform before you're as weak as Aliquam's spaghetti noodles.” He purred.

As she adjusted to grow comfortable, he hummed in thought before he chuckled, noticing the perfection of how her swell fit in his midsection cavity. He carefully boosted her hips a little before using a claw to pull his turtleneck and underlying tank top up to the base of his shield, cushioning her further as her swell fell into the warm, open airspace of his torso.

"Oh, Toki, look at that. I'm pregnant~" He sounded so smug.

The pulling of his shirt tugged hers up too, and left them with skin to skin contact. The litter didn’t appreciate the rolling motion brought on by the shirt, and Toki got a painful kick to the outside of her womb- which she knew pressed right into where her middle was distending his abdominal cavity. However, his smug little grin made her furrow her brow at him, and she huffed, reaching up her primary arms to bat at his head.

She succeeded in gib-smacking him. “You’re a colossal dork. You’re not pregnant. You’re second-hand pregnant.” She corrects with a bemused grin, and then slumps to drape across him, and wait for his response to feeling actual movement from inside himself. Provided he could feel it, of course.

"Secondhand pregnant." He snorted, though the happiness in his eyes was unmistakable. "Aah, I felt them kick~" He cooed softly. "This feels wonderful~"

Thankfully Tenebris' happiness didn't steal from Aliquam, as the younger male was now comfortably snoring in his section of the nest.

Toki smiled slightly at him, and closed her eyes. “It does feel wonderful.” She agrees. The litter squirm at their new dangling position. He offered her more relief than Papyrus did- at least in belly hanging distance, anyway. “The weight is off my back. Though, your shield is a little uncomfortable.” She adjusts the pillow again to shield her chest, and then taps on his chest shield. “But pillows help solve that. Really though- you don’t mind the kicking? It freaks out Papyrus occasionally to feel things move against his spine. I try not to do it too often unless he initiates it. This really does feel nice though.”

Under his hands, her back was relaxing, the constantly tense muscles softening and knots trying to come undone as her instincts relaxed in the presence of her alpha. Kneading would probably help even more at this point- though he’d have to go around her wings.

"On the contrary, it excites me~" He cooed, "My spine is not as exposed, so the kicks are dulled, but I still feel them, and to know that there is such beautiful life growing within the flesh... I get so excited I just want to cry." He admitted as he nuzzled her head. His hands indeed ventured around her shoulders, tracing over her wings before settling to knead her back carefully.

As his hands settled on her back, Toki exhaled a smoky smelling breath across his chest, and her sockets closed with a soft almost sinful moan. She wasn’t going to protest his kneading now like she usually did. “I’m glad you enjoy feeling them move.” She mumbles in almost a daze, enjoying the feeling of his hands on her back and the almost weightlessness as his abdomen flexes around hers and keeps hers still and supported. It’s nice to give her teats ‘air time’ too, with no fabric scraping on them. “It’s definitely a magical feeling getting to feel your children move inside of you. This is probably the closest you’ll get- so I’m glad you’re enjoying it. A little jealous you get to enjoy it with none of the pregnancy pains though.”

Minus his leg, of course.

"First course of action, making your soul condoms... second course... Make pregnancy painkillers." He rumbled quietly.

"Pregnancy safe painkillers will be a hit. So will the condoms, but I shit you not, I will buy boxes of the damn painkillers if you can make them." She groans softly into his chest. There’s a sharp kick that makes her flinch, but she knows he’ll adore it. “Boxes, I tell you. Particularly since Pap keeps teasing me with litters. As in plural of them. I have the memory of an elephant sometimes- that’s not something I’m going to forget.”

He had to say it. He had to say it. "Toki Darling, I love you, I truly do. But your memory is not the only thing comparable to an elephant at this time." He fucking said it.

She paused, and lifted her head at him. Her tiny mane fluffed at him, and she glared at him. She shifted, and one of her bony knees caught him between the legs as she made to pull herself up slightly to adjust herself up to swat at his head. “You’re an asshole.” She huffs. “And y’know what, an alternate version of you did this to me, so by proxy, my elephant status is your fault.” She puffs at him.

He took his just deserts but as her kneecap shoved between his legs. He gasped in pain and slightly pushed his chest out. "A-aahh!" He gasped out sharply.

Toki blinked as he gasped and shoved his chest up, making her grunt as her breasts and stomach tingled at the sudden pressure, feeling warm and suddenly sticky. Was that…? Was she…? Yep. Lactiating. Again. Except this time, from all the teats. Lovely. She shifted, and tried to move her knee. “Did I hurt you?” She asks with nervous befuddlement. “You’re like a turtle. Your dick is tucked up inside. How did that work? I mean- I know freezing your slit would be unpleasant, but I didn’t think kneeing it would work.”

"O-ow...!" He gasped again, reaching down to carefully boost her hips and pull her knee from his slit. "The outer muscles are strong but if you get between them, say, with a humanoid kneecap on the other side of a pair of boxers... It would upset the inner lining a bit.

Toki blushed brightly. “I didn’t mean to… fuck, basically fist you with my goddamn kneecap, dear god.” She shifted, straightened her digigrade legs, and flexed her beastly toes. “Though, um… I ah… I think we do have another problem.” Her blush deepens, and she plants her four hands on his chest, and lifts up. “I have sprung a leak again. Which I mean- it’s good! It means I’m finally recovering and healing, and lactating normally again except this time it seems it’s coming from my stomach teats too? But um… I leaked. In your stomach cavity.”

He looked down a little, and then he chuckled and set his head down. "Ah... well... insult to injury." He hummed as he reached up to gently ruffle what little fur she has left around her neck once her knee had been moved out of the way. "Oh well... I need to shower anyhow, it's no different, you know." He purred. "It's simply I rinse my torso out as much as I would the rest of me.”

“He looked down a little, and then he chuckled and set his head down. "Ah... well... insult to injury." He hummed as he reached up to gently ruffle what little fur she has left around her neck once her knee had been moved out of the way. "Oh well... I need to shower anyhow, it's no different, you know." He purred. "It's simply I rinse my torso out as much as I would the rest of me.”

“Insult to injury upon injury, you mean. I... savaged your leg today, I kneed you in the giblets, and now I’ve leaked into your stomach. That’s a triple whammy.” Toki sighs softly, and slumps into him. “I’m too tired to move.” She whines. “I don’t want to go get the maternity leak pads. Throwing up makes me tired. Going feral makes me tired. Worrying makes me tired. I want a nap before I worry some more and finish my birthing nest.”

"Does laying on your favorite pillow make you tired? Because if so then take a nap, I’m not going anywhere~" He rumbled gently as he reached up to give her horn a soft rub around the base.

Toki gave a soft, sleepy thrum at him, and squinted her eyes slowly as she purred, her head tilting into his hand. “Mmm… I may just have to do that.” She mumbles. “You okay to just… Be laid on? And not move? Because I can’t guarantee you won’t be stuck here for the next hour. Maybe two.”

"Do you realize how heavy Asgore is? Moreover how heavily he sleeps?" He asked. "I am QUITE fortunate that my life experiences have made it that my lungs work off magic otherwise I would have been smothered quite a couple times now."

“Really?” She gave him a curious look, her sleepy eyes quirking one of her brows high at him. “Huh. Your lungs work differently than Tenne’s did then- he got choked unconscious by the Asgore there in a miscommunication induced anger fit. And, you know, when I don’t want to take a chunk out of Asgore’s arm and beat him with it for being a fool, I’m totally going to tell him you called him fat.” She yawns in his face, and seems to go from a mostly solid state to a semi-liquid state as she goes limp and just slumps into him, her body invading his. Her wings drape over his legs, creating a safe buffer around his bite mark so nothing bumps it.

As she slumped into him, she missed the new look on his face... his playful grin fell to a frown, and he sighed quietly under her, completely washing over the comment of her ratting him out to Asgore, and more how she continued to bring up his counterpart.

Toki sighs softly, and exhales against his chest. “Tenebris…?” She questions quietly, her eyes not on him to see the look on his face. “Is... Is the differences between you and Tenne because you went through the Void? Is that... why you were so terrified when I pulled it open and fell in to avoid Cruelty detonating all of those souls?"

And the question he was not sure she would ever ask.

He was quiet for a moment, but hardly able to summon a reply. He reached up and his arms wrapped around her tightly. "It destroyed me without a chance to fight. It left me to suffer and rot for centuries until it grew bored of me and spat me out again, regardless of my condition. I didn't want the same to happen to you. I... was so relieved when you came out after only six months..."

Toki shifted her skull and looked at him quietly. She sighed softly through her teeth. "I think it does that as punishment for those who cross where they shouldn’t.” She murmurs softly to him. “The Void is... vengefully omnipotent. Like... Like a god without a conscience with an unlimited multitude of ant farms to experiment with, but if the ants step out of their box to visit another farm, the ant is put through hell.”

She watches his face for a moment, before sighing. “I wasn’t in the Void for six months, Tenebris. I was in it... I want to say, maybe a grand total of five minutes at the start, where in it completely liquefied me, turned me into something else, and then spat me out to be found by your counterpart, right about the time I got hit by the worst case of Death’s Rebound known to man. The next time I went back through, it maybe half an hour, though was a much gentler process, and I know why. The reason is in both of our bellies right now.” She murmurs softly. She lifts a hand, and strokes it gently over his cheek markings. "The proof that the Void changed us is undeniable though." She murmurs quietly. “My soul can’t go too far from my body, or I destabilize, not to mention this is my third..."
body. And you’ve got changes of your own. It doesn’t mean they’re all bad. They just are.”

He pressed his face into her hand and gave a quiet purr as he took in her words, letting them soak in as much as possible. "It’s a true relief that you did not stay in such a realm for long… It’s such an awful place…”

“For some, it is.” She agrees softly, and settles against him with a soft, content sigh. There is a shift, and then she grunts as her middle is kicked. “But, without it, they wouldn’t have came to be.” She yawns again, and her ecto tongue pokes out between her teeth as she settles her chin flat on his chest with a sleepy buzz. “Everything has it’s small blessings. Mnnmn…”

"Every cloud has it's beloved Silver Lining." He agreed, combing her fur with his claws as his smile slowly returned. "I cannot thank you enough, by the by... you're doing a wonderful thing for me and Asgore…"

Toki makes a soft agreeable noise. “You’re a good dad.” She mumbles. “S’ not nice ya didn’t get t’ have more...” Her sleepy mumble fades off slowly, and she sighs into his chest, before starting to snore softly.

He smiled at that, and he sighed, curling around her as he pressed a tender kiss to her head. "At least you're giving me the chance…"

It had been roughly ten minutes since Cae had departed downstairs, and he quietly stepped into the room to ask if anyone was hungry, though the sight awaiting him had him stop and smile warmly.

Tenebris had fallen asleep with Toki in her place on his chest, and at some point in time, Aliquam had rolled over and snuggled up to his father's side, a small smile on his face to announce his growing comfort on his side... the very side that had just gotten the metal prosthetic.

Cae's smile grew a little as he saw that special little tidbit, and he used his magic to drape a blanket over them before he turned and stepped out again with a satisfied sigh.
Chapter 149

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So, Toki finally gets to have a talk here.

Papyrus was up and around within three days. Well, up and around as much as two crutches and no wheelchair was- meaning he was up and down the stairs just because he could, and he was hobbling all over the house and getting into who knows what sort of mischief just because he had his own mobility again.

Toki spent a lot of the following days constructing her nest. She cannibalized Tenebris’ car for seats, and even stole the passenger seat from Papyrus’ car as well. However, at the end of the day, and after raiding her home and several of her family member’s homes for all the spare pillows and blankets they didn't want, she had the beginnings of her birth nest done.

She spent a lot of time in there- but not nearly as much as she did simply just spending time with her family. Once it was done enough for now- there was no telling if she’d find something that she just felt needed to go in there or not- she was free enough to relax and enjoy as much as she could of her final weeks of pregnancy.

That is to say, not enjoy them very much at certain points. Lactation was horrible with two breasts, but two breasts and six teats was eight too many to be experiencing it before birth. She changed clothes often, when she leaked through her pads. No matter how good a sign it was that her body was up enough on magic that she was producing again, it was still annoyingly irritating.

She was also big and comfort was impossible, no matter where she went or what she did. However… Pain was unavoidable sometimes.

Such as Papyrus’ crutch stepping on her fingers when she was walking at his side through the back yard, when they were meant to be wandering over to Tenebris’ ‘lab’. “Ouch!”

"Ah! Sorry!" He quickly put more weight on the other crutch and lifted the crutch that squished her fingers, giving her a small apologetic smile. "I'm still getting used to that, I'm sorry..."

Such energy coming from Aliquam was indeed a surprise, given his previous condition and how lethargic it made him during his time being wheelchair-bound. He was unfortunately very skilled with crutches, but it was quite good indeed to have the skill as once given enough time to get down the stairs, he could keep up quite well with the others without aid.

When he asked his father how long the prosthetic limb would take, he was given a time to come over so they could measure out everything they would need for the new femur, Papyrus had grown after all, it was only due he be re-measured for a new prosthetic.

"I must admit, I'm a little excited..." He gave a weak laugh. "This might fix not only my current damage, but revert me to a physical state that is better than I had been when you disappeared..." He then looked up again, a growing smile on his face. "It was not easy... I know it was hard for both of us... but this new hip is wonderful. I am so thankful to have such a skilled father."
"Tenebris is skilled." Toki agrees, her wing brushing his crutch as she waddles at his side. Her back feet crunch slightly over the grass, which was drying out. April was turning out to be hotter than rainy, which meant they’d have a hell of a summer. "It was rough though. I’m glad that we’ve… avoided other such incidents, and that he’s healing up alright."

Tenebris wasn’t even limping anymore. Healing magic was an amazing thing.

The pregnant skelebeast grunts, and moves towards the re-planted clan tree, sniffing it gently. It was just a sapling now- hundreds of years gone up in a blaze. But… it would be grown anew. "Do you think he’ll have your leg done before the litter is here?" She asks curiously. "He’s working so hard, and also dealing with Asgore…"

"Knowing him he'll make the prosthetic his first priority." He chuckled lightly. "He's gonna be thrilled to see me doing so well with this prosthetic progress. Watch this, I bet he'll be hardly contained to measure out my femur for the prosthetic."

Toki laughed. "That does sound like Tenebris." She shifts, and moves around his front. "You’re wandering again, love." She reminds him. "We needed to get your leg measured. So- lets go get it measured. You’ll get plenty of walking miles on the trek to your Dad’s house. I just hope he’s not going to overwork himself. When he comes over for naps and cuddles, it seems like he passes out harder than I do most of the time anymore. Have you heard if he’s made any progress with Asgore yet?"

"I am hoping that he did talk to him, and this is your chance to talk to him as well. While I'm busy with Father, you can talk things out with Asgore... Hopefully Father has been talking to him some, so it's going to be a little less painful."

"It’s not the painful that I’m worried about.” Toki answers him honestly. “I’m more worried about him making me angry and me going feral again. As upset with him as I am- and don’t doubt that I am upset, because I am beyond upset with Asgore about how he handled it, even if I know his reasoning- I don’t want to go feral on him.”

That was a new and niggling fear that Toki had now that she knew she could go savage on someone.

Toki made a soft grumbling noise and shook one of her palms, her secondary hands picking out a piece of glass that wedged between her bones. “I need hand shoes.” She grumps. “… Gloves. I meant gloves.”

Her foot-in-mouth moment went unrecognized as Papyrus focused more on the first thing that she said.

His brows furrowed a little at that and he stopped. "Tokiko Gaster." He started sharply. He was using his scolding-tone. "No one makes you angry but yourself. Addressing important issues is more imperative than anything right now, and you will not make things any better by going in there with the assumption that things might go bad. You either go in there expecting the concerns to be resolved, or you wait with me and nothing is resolved." He told her.

Toki hadn’t expected the sudden stop, and ran right into his crutch. She ran into his crutch, and smacked the wrist of the hand that had gotten squished. She let off a muttered curse, and hobbled several steps away. They had a habit of gravitating close when they walked, and they paid for it now.

His sharp tone had her looking up at him, and she cocked her head, looking briefly startled and then alarmed. Her brow furrowed at him, and she looked a little hurt that he’d think she meant it like that.
“I’m not… I’m not going to go in there assuming I’m going to be seeking blood, Pap. I’m… I’m not like that… That’s not how I work. I’m going to be going in seeking to resolve this- but I’m not going to go in like a naive fool either. I won’t take the risk of… hurting someone again.”

She says evenly, despite how his words bothered her. “I’ve never been one to leap to anger unless pushed there, and even then I don’t like it when I am angry. I try not to give in. Hell, I didn’t think I was capable of going feral like I did, but lo and behold- your dad paid the price in blood for my assumption otherwise.” She glances away from him, and tips her head down submissively. “If I get angry, I’ll step back and calm down. I just have to hope that Asgore will as well.”

Toki shifts, and starts to walk again. “And make no mistake. Asgore has a temper. He’s just got a fuse that’s several miles longer than either of ours is.”

He was watching her as she spoke, and as she concluded he let his shoulders drop a little. Clearly, he felt a bit bad. "Ah... I'm sorry." He caught up to her and put his crutch out to stop her. Once she stopped, he reached out to pull her into a brief hug, pecking her cheek. "I love you~" He purred sweetly. "I always will~"

She makes an irritable buzz at him as he pulls her upright, but humors him long enough to give him a kiss back. But Toki doesn’t linger, pulling away quickly as the weight of her front throbbed painfully. She was rapidly growing grumpy with the number of times people were pulling her up onto two legs. If she could walk on two legs right now, she would be. Still, it was easier for her to meet his needs than it was for him to crouch down and meet hers. “I love you too.” She says softly. “Now lets get going. And if you pull me onto two feet again in the next hour, I’m going to steal the nubbins off your crutches and replace them with one of Serif’s squeaky toys.”

"Sorry~" He gave her a smile and continued on. "Come on, then…"

She let him lead on towards his dad's house, content to let him set the pace.

A short time later and Aliquam had made it to his father's house with his beloved in tow. Though rather than going for the front door, he brought her around to the garage, rapping his knuckles along the door itself until he made it around to the side entrance, "Father, are you in there?" He called gently.

The door opened quickly and Tenebris peered out with a grin. "Hello my son." He greeted warmly, before he peered over at Toki with a lighthearted look. "And the lovely Tokiko~ I've been waiting for you, come on in." He rumbled, stepping aside for them to come in.

Toki waited for Aliquam to go in first, and then followed him in, making a soft, confused noise. "You have all your lab equipment in your... Garage?" She asked. Truthfully, Toki hadn't ever been in his lab before. It had previously been up at the castle, and then it had been moved when he permanently relocated down here with Asgore, but Toki hadn't ever looked for it. His lab was his private space, sort of like her laptop.

She glanced around to see what it looked like.

It seemed after he got over the stages of grief over what had been his first vehicle, he got back into his passion and cleaned the garage up to turn it into a proper lab.

"Absolutely! Vehicles, pah. A good investment but I was fussing over the wrong one, you know what." He huffed. "An old model worth appreciation indeed but I'm a doctor dammit. I'm too busy for that fuss." He started.

The Garage- no, his Lab- was clean, and smelled clean, and partly still like a garage. But this was not unlike the area he had in the underground.

There were long tables along two of the walls covered in lab equipment, with expensive equipment that either came from his lab prior or were purchased for the sole purpose of being used in this lab itself.

On the far wall where the garage door would normally lift was a patient seating area, as well as what looked to be casting equipment.

"I've already gotten everything ready for you, Papyrus."

Naturally, Toki had to investigate everything as Papyrus went to go get seated. She sniffed here and there, and whuffled in the new scents. "Well, when you got your car, you didn’t plan on being a father to five new babies.” She says lightly. “So, it was a fine enough investment. There are human doctors who drive Lamborghini’s after all. But, as a dad, your car doesn’t work. In fact, if your son and I want more children of our own, we’ll have to upgrade and get a family car, because there simply isn’t enough room in the back for more than just one more child. I mean… If we could guarantee I’d have one, then we’d be solid- but it’s probably not going to happen, alas."

She lifted up a little bit, and shoved her nose against a set of empty beakers, sniffing them intently. "Oh my god, you utter dork. Those smell like honey. You made some venom samples into honey. You know, you can just ask, and I can make you jars of it once I’m better. Anyway… I should go inside so I’m not in your way. Is..." She glances at him. "Is Asgore inside?"

"So accusing." He stuck his tongue out at her playfully. "The venom cooled when my work was done and I just happened to enjoy the honey afterward.” He informed her with a soft laugh, before he gave a nod. "Yes, he and Thumper are cleaning up the house while I work out here. Do you want to talk to him?" He asked.

Toki gave a soft snort at his whole ‘just happened to get to enjoy the honey’. She flicked her wings slightly. "I do need to talk to him, yes. Have you made any headway with him regarding the problems...?"

"I talked with him, yes... He was working on alerting the guard about his change of heart last I heard... but he is still reluctant about releasing the garden... and... admittedly I am as well..." He murmured the last bit as he looked away.

It took Toki a moment not to instinctively bristle at him for that murmured comment. Instead, she sighed through her teeth. "I'm glad you managed to get him to change his mind about marking all humans and tightly closing the borders like they have been." She says softly. "But I will handle the garden."

She gives Tenebris a nod, and moves over to rub against his leg, sort of like a big, pregnant cat. If that cat were a bee instead of a cat. "I'll be out when we're done talking." She says, and then heads for the door.

He thrummed happily at the rubbing against his leg, and he purred to her gently as she took her leave.

She opens it, and then goes inside to track down where they were. She could hear Thumper upstairs cleaning his room, but Asgore sounded like he was downstairs. She made a soft buzzing noise, and went to find where the massive goat King was.

Asgore was working inside, humming as he mopped the kitchen quietly. Hearing her come in and the sounds of her bones across the floor, he turned and hesitated slightly, before he smiled gently. "Ah... Toki…"

Toki offered him a slow smile, and stopped in the doorway of the kitchen of the home she had lived in for quite some time in more than one world. She glanced around quietly, humming softly, before moving in to pick up a cleaning cloth and going to clean under the table for him. “Asgore.” She greets, wings buzzing faintly. “You’ve been busy, I see. The house looks great. Nesting?”

Toki had the urge to clean too- but her house was literally in too much of a shamble to do anything to, so even attempting only distressed her and made her have to sit down and have a good cry. Her floor was ruined, her living room was ruined, and she couldn’t even reach the pictures on the walls to dust them. Life was rough.

"A little bit busy, yes." He rumbled softly. "Nesting has been one of the newfound activities we have taken up, especially when Tenebris has his paternal moments." He chortled gently. "I suppose this is just a little spring cleaning.”

“It’s good to be able to clean.” She smiles quietly. “I can’t clean right now- my house is literally in shreds, which… Kind of sucks.” She had hoped she’d have had a whole home to give birth in, but she only had a safe upstairs. Toki grunts softly, and scrub a stubborn dirt stain. “Cleaning is good though- the litter will be here within a couple weeks, and they’ll be in your home before you know it.”

Her gaze slides to him from under the table, green and unintentionally ominous as she watches him while she scrubs. “Are you excited?”

He gave her a sweet smile and nodded. "Thrilled. I am looking forward to being a father again~" He admitted happily. "I'm sure that once we've all recovered, we will see to putting your home back to the way it was before, if not better.”

“I won’t be too worried about it later.” Toki shrugs, bumping her skull against the bottom of the table. “The only reason my house bothers me now is because I’ve got the need to clean, but I can’t clean. I can’t even stand upright to use the vacuum right now.” She shifts and then slips out from under the table. “All clean under here.”

She sets the dirty cloth in the sink, and then shifts to look at him. “So… Tenebris says you had a change of heart regarding some things in the city.” Her tone is not aggressive or argumentative- simply conversational.

He hesitated at the topic change, before he gave a nod. "Yes... our talk was long but indeed he was right when it came to the grit of it... I was fearful of the past repeating and jumped too quickly to the solution I did.”

Toki nods slowly, and seems pleased with his answer. “I’m glad you realized that it was wrong.” She says softly, and shifts to take a seat in one of the chairs. Being upright and sitting is not totally comfortable, but better than on the floor and so much lower than him. “Tenebris mentioned you were still unmoved on releasing the garden for everyone to have access to again.”

Toki could understand restricting human access to it- but not access from Asgore’s own people.

"I wanted to lock it away from anyone who could hurt it, or be used to hurt it.” He says quietly.
“Tenebris was so broken when both your statue and the memorial for our pup were damaged…”

“I know.” She says softly, and watches him with understanding eyes. “I understand, Asgore. I do. But… At the same time, I still don’t believe locking it away is the answer. Humans and Monsters alike used to go there for solace. It was a place of comfort and peace, of serenity and harmony.” She folds her four arms on the table in front of her, and quietly hums to him.

Toki considers him quietly, and hums softly. “What I would propose instead of simply just taking down the blood magic wall and leaving it at that, however, is make it different than before. Before, there were no guards. People and monsters could wander in as they pleased, whenever they pleased, and were unsupervised for the entire duration of their visit. Perhaps instead, have twenty four hour guard rotations on it- two on each entrance.” Toki’s fingers tap on the table. “Not only would it provide ample protection for the memorial garden and for the guards themselves, but it would open up more job openings for the guards in training up at the Castle and there in boost the village economics.”

He looked to consider her words before he smiled gently. "Yes... That is quite an idea isn’t it..." He rumbled quietly, before his smile fell. "Unfortunately, I don’t know about extending the guard past Monsterkind…"

“I didn’t say we had to, I don’t think.” She blinks slowly. “Though it would be a good idea to actually have a mix. Monsters are… fragile against humans- even if we could get some HTM’s on the guard squad, that would be perfect.” She shakes her head with a slow but curious sigh. “Though, I understand your hesitation. I know Cae can see souls, though to what extent I don’t know. He could be used to filter people, if you decide to open it up to non-Monster guards.” She shrugs. “But...” Her gaze settles on him quietly. “Whatever you decide on, I want the blood magic gone. Stag is proof enough that blood magic is bad news. Three hundred years from now, I don’t want to be dealing with it becoming sentient on it’s own.”

He gave a slow nod. "Ceasing the blood magic is... agreeable. Indeed it could get out of hand if left unattended.” He agreed softly.

Toki gave a soft, pleased thrum. “Yes, it could. Blood magic is used only in times of war and with no choices left. So that… I think solves everything. Once you’ve implemented the fixes, Nara Village will be back to the place that I love.” She leans back in her chair, and pauses as the litter kicks. She strokes her fingers over them quietly, and then looks to Asgore. “They’re kicking. Do you… want to feel?” She asks gently.

It was her way of extending a peace offering to the King. His touch hadn’t been openly welcomed in a while.

"Oh..." The offer had given him a soft exclamation of surprise, but as quickly as he had been stunned, he smiled warmly and gave a nod. "Y-Yes of course! Let me wash my hands and I would love to feel them!" He laughed happily.

Toki gave a warm smile and nodded towards the sink. She was moving towards making peace with him and within herself. Holding onto anger wasn’t worth it. “Alright.” She smiles at him quietly, glad they had resolved it. Dear seemed soothed slightly too- though Toki wasn’t sure why.

In the same, Asgore felt better as he washed his hands, and as he dried them off, he gave a thrilled hum and came back, sitting down beside her quietly. "Would you like to get comfy first, dear?” He offered gently. "If I get this chance I might not want to let go immediately.” He admitted with a quiet laugh.
Toki gave a soft snicker as he sat down next to him. “Comfortable for me involves stretching out on my side on a plush surface. I’m at the point where nothing else is comfortable.” She pauses, and then corrects herself. “Except tummy time with Tenebris. His abdominal cavity makes a great cradle for all of this weight, and I can get some sleep without as much pain. So…” She flails her four hands. “Yeah. The best we could do is give you a lap full of me on the couch.”

It would be quite awkward to find the most comfortable position without any idea of where to start, so Asgore simply nodded briefly. "I suppose if that will suit what you would enjoy." He rumbled. "I do have a rather fluffy lap, you might just like it." He then joked lightly with a soft laugh.

She snorts in bemusement and gives him a lopsided smile. “To the couch then. If all else fails, you can simply do as Tenebris does- stretch out, and I can settle near your face, and you can have a couple hours of tummy time. Or at least until my husband is done and ready to go home.”

She shifts in her chair, and climbs back down to the floor. Her swollen middle sways under her as she pads across the floor for the living room, climbing up onto the massive couch. She had plenty of space to curl up on one of the cushions and offer her middle to the king.

He was their father too- it was his turn to catch up on all of the cuddles he’d missed.

He took his spot on the floor by her stomach and he carefully lifted one of his droopy ears to drape it over her stomach while he pressed his ear canal over her stomach. "Hello my children~" He greeted warmly, reaching up to touch her stomach.

Under his ear, there was the muffled sound of little things shifting under her skin, limbs bumping together in the thick fluid cushioning their growing bodies as they began reacting to his voice as he spoke to them. It had been a long time since he had spoke to them proper, but it didn’t seem like they had forgotten him or his voice.

Toki gave a tiny wince as a sharp kick booted out and caught Asgore in the nose. Her secondary hand massaged the spot slowly. “They missed you.” She says softly, reading her bonds to them slowly. “They’re grumpy that you haven’t been around as much to talk to them. That’s what the kick was about. Ouch…”

He grunted in pain and rubbed his nose before he laughed gently against her stomach, "Darling puppies, it's okay~ Daddy's here now~" He purred, before he rumbled happily. "My word, I think I hear someone flapping around in there~"

As he tucked back against her belly from rubbing his nose, Toki lifted her fingers and quietly investigated Asgore's horns. She hummed softly. "It's entirely possible that they have wings, given that I'm their biological mother. If you do end up with some fliers, I'll teach them, no worries." She promises gently.

The kicks in her stomach worsen for a time, spreading an ache to her lower back. The flesh under his face tightened with a Braxton Hicks. "And before you panic, yes, those are normal to have when I'm this close to popping. It was just a Braxton Hicks."

"Oh, I knew. Toriel used to get them when she was pregnant." Was the king’s mellow-toned reply. "It simply means your body is strengthening itself for the sake of a proper birthing."

She nods slowly. “Yes it does.” She gives a quiet chuckle, and then sighs. “I know you know- so does my husband and your husband, but that doesn’t stop them from tensing and freaking out whenever they feel it. After the early labor scare, I think anything involving my actual due date has them a little bit...” She flails her primary hands, and makes a rude noise. “Yeah. Aliquam is just starting to sleep a little bit when I sleep, but he bolts right awake if he feels one, so it starts the whole process over again. At this point, they could probably be born and be fine, but I’d rather risk over-cooking the turkey than under-cooking it.” Toki sighs gently. “It’s nice to have someone who isn’t immediately freaking out over it. They’re uncomfortable, but not painful right now.”

"It is very understandable. Young Papyrus has been with you through thick and thin, and my darling mate is so excited to have packmates- even if they are simply the puppies he raised.”

Toki nods softly, and gives a soft laugh that has his head bouncing against her belly. “I’m excited for you guys to get your kids.” She admits. “I’m also really excited to see my feet again, and to move normally again. I ballooned huge in like, three and a half months, if that. That was probably one of my favorite parts about having the twins- all of this,” She pokes at her shirt covered pregnant belly, and grunts as one of her swollen teats tingles, “will literally just fall off once the litter is here. Well… Hopefully.”

She wasn’t sure if it would be leaving since she had teats… She hoped it would, but there was no knowing. “But yeah.” She back tracks in the conversation. “Aliquam has been with me through thick and thin… Honestly, I didn’t think he’d stay when I accidentally got pregnant. That’s usually a deal breaker for humans- but… he stayed- and our love grew. Though… Heh- him panicking over labor is nothing new. When my due date came for the twins, he was a bundle of panic then too- but a week of waiting wore him down until he was calm for the actual event.”

“The litter is a larger weight upon you, though for a tad shorter a time. A fair trade I would hope.” He rumbled before he looked up at her. "Though I cannot blame him with the anxiety. Indeed we have not been the luckiest bunch... But no matter what we have gone through, Monsters do not abandon those we love. It... takes the most unmentionable acts to be abandoned..."

He quieted a little at that last bit, obviously thinking about Toriel. He didn't linger long though, or let his thoughts dwell. Asgore’s eyes focused back on her and he continued speaking. "You've been through so much; Aliquam's thoughts about staying with you could be considered the very most last thing he ever remotely considers a possibility of not doing. Even this whole mess with otherworldly shenanigans, and you coming back carrying… His other-world-father's litter. He stayed- he loves you." There was a lot of dad-attempted emphasis on that... look at him go.

"To be honest, I think it would have been less harsh on my body if the litter would have taken longer to grow. You know- less demand for magic and all." She blinks up at him slowly as he shifted to look at her. Without his weight on her belly, the litter shifted again and seemed to settle heavily to one side, making her look visibly lopsided.

"Yeah, I guess you're right. Monsters operate a lot differently than humans. I've spent enough time with you all to have learned that by now. Not to mention the years in the other world where most everyone thought I was a monster.” She hums. "Honestly... I'm more at home around monsters than I am with humans now." Toki pauses and pats her belly. "And that's not just pregnancy hormones talking. Though dear isn't comfortable around large numbers of humans.”

Speaking of... Toki paused and blinked. "Dear isn't growling in my head about you touching my belly." She says, bewildered.

He looked at her with a briefly surprised look, focusing in on her last sentence. "Is that so?" He asked with the shared bewilderment. "That's quite a surprise. Have I finally earned her trust? If at least enough to rest against your stomach like this?" He rumbled. "I'm quite honored if so." He then gave a jolly smile up at her.

"I don't think it's trust." Toki closes her eye sockets with a curious noise, and patted Asgore's forehead. "It might be because we worked things out. I do wonder..." If Dear was pleased because Asgore had given in to the way things should be- and technically given in to Toki's orders. A roundabout way of 'submitting dominance'. She shakes her head softly and smiles again. "It's a thought for another time. Right now is belly cuddles and baby snuggles while Aliquam gets measured. Have you been thinking about names?"

"Oh indeed. We had a few ideas pass over, though... we agreed that we name one of our sons-to-be after Tenebris' father." He answered happily. "He was pleased to have my agreement on such a matter."

Toki smiles with soft mischief. "Well, here's to hoping I don't give you a litter of five girls then, huh?" She snickers. "I'm sure that would drive him absolutely batty. Though... it would be his first daughters, so maybe he'd enjoy it." She gives a belly bouncing laugh that has Asgore's head going for a ride as the litter squirm unhappily at her joy. "I could see all three of you- Tenebris, Thumper, and you, all getting dragged into doing tea parties and playing house."

"We will both fall victim to the innocent eyes of the pups who want to get their way/" He chortled. "I had my son and a wonderful flower come into my life. This will not be the first time I face the puppy-look." He assured her.

She laughs softly. "I've got you beat. Eight little brothers begging for big sister Toki to play with them, and the accompanying puppy eyes. I am more immune than Papyrus is to the twins' puppy eyes. And believe me- little miss Daddy's girl gives him puppy eyes often." She shifts, and then made a soft uncomfortable noise. "Most of them have Tenebris' legs." She says. "And they are pressing up against where my spine is. Gah. Pap used to tease me about when the twins would kick because it was unpleasant but at least 'they don't have legs like father', and damn him if he wasn't right."

Ironically, if any of their future kids had those types of legs, it would be Toki's fault and she could blame no one but herself.

"Do you think they're eager to come out? If at least for the granting of more leg space." He joked lightly.

"Probably." She gives a soft laugh at his joke. "They're probably eager for more space. I'm surprised I haven't laughed them out yet, to be honest. They're absolutely massive it feels like. I am so, so ready to be at a point where I can comfortably walk on two legs again. Though I will admit, I'm not looking forwards to delivering five. Two was hard enough as it was, but five... I'm just glad we've got doctors on hand in case I need help like last time. Did Tenebris ever tell you he had to help with Honey?"

"I heard that her horns gave you a workout and he indeed had to play a slightly greater part in her birthing." He answered. "I'm thankful that everything went right. I would hate for anything to be any less than it is now..." He nuzzled her gently before he smiled up at her. "Are you going to want a warm blanket while we wait for Tenebris to finish with Papyrus' leg?"

"I'm just hoping things go smoother for this litter and that there are no... snags." She winces at that. If they had her curling ram like horns... Yikes. The offer of a warm blanket though makes her smile and nod. "Yes please! Not going to turn down the ability to leech warmth from something. Just because I'm on the highway to recovery doesn't mean I don't get a bit chilly from time to time. Not a 'my flame is going out and I'm dying' kind of chilly, but an 'I can't move properly to warm myself up and I still don't have all of my magic' chilly." She clarifies so he doesn't panic and flood her with magic.
He rumbled at that and got up. "Always good to clarify." He chuckled lightly. "I'll be right back." He disappeared for a short time before returning with a blanket in his arms. He unfolds it and tosses it over her, covering her in the wondrous feeling of warmth.

Toki had gotten settled on her side in the time he was gone, and when the blanket settled over her, she made the most pleased of rumbling noises. “Ah~” She croons happily. “It’s so warm. Mm… I may nap while they do their measurements. Unless you and Thumper need help cleaning?”

"You nap. Thumper and I will be fine." He answered. "Get your sleep and we will continue our conversation later." He pat her head gently, and then went to go continue cleaning, leaving Tokiko to her devices.

Toki nodded, and rolled over to get comfortable again. She took a few minutes to go to sleep, simply feeling all of the shifting, the signs of life in her belly, and quietly wondering to herself if she’d have been larger, heavier, if there would have been six in there. All the same, Toki eventually fell asleep, curled at the edge of the couch.

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Sorry for the un-steady update schedule, folks. We’re not trying to be inconsistent, but it’s about the best we can do with what we’ve got time wise.

The only comment I have for this chapter is sometimes people cockblock you, sometimes it’s a situation, sometimes it's a time... and sometimes you're the one who cockblocks yourself. But that's okay too- sex ain't required for intimacy.

She was dreaming of chasing something. Something warm, and something smelling like pineapple and teriyaki. It was mouthwatering and fresh, and it was right in her mouth-

She woke with a soft snort, the thing in her mouth hard and dry, not soft and juicy pineapple scented with teriyaki. She made a half asleep confused sound, her teeth chewing lightly on the thing in her mouth. What…?

There was a dim pair of orange eye lights staring down at her.

"Toki, I love you... but please stop chewing on my arm... that hurts..."

It turns out she was chewing on her beloved husband, who had come to cuddle with her while she slept.

She made a confused buzz, her teeth moving again, before she let him go. She blinked at him with the same sleep lethargy of someone who had a really good dream interrupted. “You’re not pineapple and teriyaki.” She sounds super, super disappointed too. She makes a soft, whiny groan, and rolls over to snuggle her face into his chest to apologize for gnawing on his arm. “Mmmnnnnnoooo I almost had it.” She whines. “I can still smell it..."

"Well you're smelling it, that's for sure... it's just not yet within chewing range." He wrapped his arms around her with a mellow smile. "Though I'm sure once Asgore hears you're awake, he'll serve you a sneak peek of what's been made."

She made a tiny fussy pout at him and shifted to peek at him, her slow growing mane ruffling against his hand. “Mmm… I kinda wanna go see if he’s got any I can get in the kitchen. I just want whatever smells like pineapple and teriyaki. It smells so good…” Her teeth nibbled at his shirt just a little bit, and her stomach practically rumbled. “Mmmm. Would you mind terribly if I returned for cuddles after seeing if the kitchen has anything raid-able? I need it.”

The way she said need was definitely a ‘I have a pregnancy craving need, and I need it now’ kind of need.

"But I just got heeere." He whined quietly, before he smiled and leaned in to nuzzle her gently. "Yeah... okay... I cant move my legs that great so if you want to go ahead and just squirm yourself free, go for it.” He told her with a warm smile.

Toki went ahead to do just that, before she paused. “Wait... Legs?” She tried to sit up to see what he was talking about with legs- because they had to take measurements damn it, she hadn’t been sleeping that fucking long- but sitting up was proving fruitless with the couch eating both of their bodies. “What do you mean legs?”

He slowly rolled over and smiled at her, allowing her to sit up and have a look at his new leg; or perhaps what was the first prototype. It was a pale orange color between the natural stain of his bone and the bold orange glow of his magic.

"What do you think?" He asked, "I asked him to make it orange if it was possible without damaging the structural integrity of the bone... He said yes. so... ta-da~"

Toki blinked, and hesitated before reaching down to touch it. “… It looks like an orange creamsicle.” She informs him lightly, and smiles faintly. “I didn’t think you’d be getting a leg today though. I was under the impression that today was just for getting your leg measured out for a new prosthetic. This one is a prototype?”

The one she had seen when she came home was nearly seamless. This one… stood out. Quite a bit.

"Oh yes. It's made of plastic with some reinforcements while he smelts the new one." He answered. "But this is basically what the new one is going to look like when it's ready. Isn't it great?"

Toki nods slowly and looks it over. “I like it.” She smiles. “Will you have full sensation in the new one like the last one?” Toki rolls to sit semi-upright, and gives a soft grunt. She rubs his ribs, and then gets down on all fours, not even bothering getting up to stretch. All that would do is shoot pain through her and stretching wasn’t a good enough reason to lure her onto two legs.

The pregnant skelebeast tucks the blanket around him, but leaves her corner un-tucked. Clearly she plans to return for cuddles until he’s cleared to hobble home- but she needs her prize first.

"Oh indeed. As soon as the nerve threads properly integrate themselves into my magic I'll be able to use it like I never lost the original.” He announced with a smile.

"Good." She smiles softly to him. "I hope this prosthetic works better than the last. As dapper as you look with a cane, I can tell you and your beast aren't comfortable with one." A visible weakness was bad. Even Dear didn't like their skull scar on display.

Toki shifts, and takes an antsy step toward the kitchen. "I'll be right back, okay Pap? I'm gonna go find that smell."

"I'll be better once I can go without it..." He agreed, before he shooed her off. "Go on, sweetheart, go seek your prize~" He laughed gently. "And see about saving me a sample too, yes?"

She gave a loving smile, and leaned up to steal one more kiss. "I'll bring enough." She promises.

Toki waddles off for the kitchen, and peers in. She sniffs deeply, inhaling openly through her mouth by habit. She spots Asgore's back in the kitchen, along with Tenebris, and notes that they're both cooking. Thumper is nowhere to be found, but she can hear their shower running upstairs.

She hesitates only a moment before waddling into the kitchen proper. "Good evening." She says as she tries to locate which of the two older monsters is working on the part of dinner that has her prize.

"Good evening, Toki." Tenebris greeted warmly.

"Did you sleep well?" Asgore inquired as he gave her a friendly smile.

“"I woke up chewing on Aliquam's arm- but I did have the best dream, and he was very warm.” Toki hums softly, and offers them a hesitant smile. She sucks in a deep breath, and then pads closer.
“Something smells… Good. Really good.” She can’t bounce up high enough to see what on the counter, but it smells like Tenebris is the one handling it.

So she goes, and sits at his feet, and peers up at him. Were her eye lights big and round? Yes, yes indeed. Puppy eyes were a go. “What are you making? I smell pineapple and teriyaki.”

"Well you're not that far off. I'm making a mix of Hawaiian rice and stir fry since I know you've been craving pineapple as of late." He answered, before he smiled and picked up an uncooked strip of marinated pork, letting it drip a little before he dangled it over her head with a teasing 'hoo hoo~'.

Toki’s eyes followed the pork strip for only a moment, before she dismissed it with a soft buzz. Toki did eat raw meat, but there were two raw meats she still refused to eat, beast or not- pork and chicken. Too much of being raised that ‘it has to be cooked done or you’ll get sick and die’ for her to even attempt. “You have my attention with pineapple and some of that teriyaki smell most definitely.

She ramps up her puppy eyes, hoping he’ll part with a little bit he doesn’t need to cook with so she could sate the instant need she had.

He raised a brow at her refusal of the cooked pork, before he chuckled. "How about a slice of cooked pork and a ring of pineapple to sate you until dinner?" He offered.

“A slice of cooked pork… and two rings of pineapple?” She haggles, a hopeful perk to her mane and an extra glimmer in her eye lights. She had to have enough to share after all. “Maybe dipped in teriyaki sauce?”

"I get to see your reaction here in a second and it's a deal.” He grinned at her.

“My reaction?” She tilts her head in confusion, trilling questioningly. “But okay. Deal!”

She wanted her goddamn pineapple.

And with that, he leaned his head back and took a hearty bite of the raw pork strip, hearing it give a hearty squelch from the mix of blood and marinade.

Toki felt her stomach lurch, and she may have audibly gagged a little bit. “What the fuck, Tenebris?”
Her mane bristled. “That’s fuckin’ disgusting! Gross! It’s on your mouth and- BLEGH!” She covered her face with her secondary hands and made a thoroughly repulsed piping. “When you get trichinosis, I’m going to laugh and try to figure out how to cure your ass.”

He swallowed his pork strip and grinned at her. "As agreed, a strip of pork and two slices of pineapple." He spoke as if nothing just happened.

Though true to his word, he soon held out a bowl with said pieces of the meal.

She made a grumpy look at him for his utter disregard for being a gross mc-gross face, and took the bowl. She peeked into it, and made a pleased trilling sound, her disgust being wiped away by her pleasure at a ‘successful hunt’. “Thank you! I’ll let you cook now.” She chirps, and then waddles away, pleasantly and adorably smug about her prize.

She may have been ‘strutting’ as much as a heavily pregnant and penguin-waddling skelebee could strut as she made her way back towards the living room with Papyrus.

"I love you, Toki~" Tenebris called after her sweetly.
Papyrus was laughing quietly from where he sat, having been able to see nearly all of the interaction that just happened.

Toki made an obligatory grumbling under her breath that she didn’t really feel, and made her way back to the couch. She hauled herself up, her belly wobbling, and then flopped against her husband’s chest with a pleased croon. “I got my prize.” She says, fluffing up to match her audibly sounding intensely pleased with herself. “It was quite the battle.” She gets comfortable, and then offers the bowl to him. “Pork? Or a ring of pineapple?”

He giggled lightly as he pulled her close, petting her head. "I'll enjoy the pork if you'd like." He offered.

She makes a face at the idea of eating pork, and nods to him. “Yes please.” She scoops up a pineapple ring, and tucks it, sauce and all, into her mouth, letting it sit on her tongue so she could savor it. She only had two- and the intense rumbling purr that sprung up and filled the living room let the entire lower part of the house know just how much she enjoyed that first pineapple ring.

He had his enjoyment of the pork strip and hummed in content as he chewed it, though he occasionally glanced at his wife to admire just how cute she was.

Toki’s first pineapple bite was savored for some time, and then she swallowed it down. The second garnered the same amount of enjoyment, and she snuggled up to him with a pleased wiggle of her wings. Once her mouth was empty, she made the tiniest sounding sigh of happiness. “It tastes just like I dreamed it would.” And just like his arm had not.

Aliquam seemed to enjoy the strip of meat and he gave a content hum, smiling to Toki admirably. "I'm glad you're enjoying what you got from the kitchen... did you sneak it or had you bribed father somehow?" He asked with a soft laugh.

Toki beamed at him. "Children's puppy eyes are not the only weakness your Dad has." She smiled and nuzzled closer. "I totally won my prize."

He laughed and pat her head gently. "You can be such a mischievous delinquent sometimes." He tutted gently as he pet her head. "But you're enjoying it, so I'm happy."

"Yeeees." Toki made a pleased noise, and nuzzled him as she settled against him happily. "But you're enjoying it, so I'm happy."

"We can very much go home and have our own dinner, or we can stay with... my... parents..." Such a realization of her words had him smiling brightly. "I'm sure they would LOVE to have you."

"Well, what do you say?" He asked. "We could very much go home and have our own dinner, or we can stay with... my... parents..." Such a realization of her words had him smiling brightly. "I'm sure they would LOVE to have you."

Toki gave a warmhearted laugh. “I know they would. But, I think if you’re up to it, I’d rather go home and simply have a feast of fruit and maybe some meat strips while we snuggle in my birthing nest.” She pauses, knowing he hadn’t yet been welcomed into her nest, and that he would hear her offer. “Maybe no meat for me. Tenebris kinda grossed me out in the kitchen. I don’t think I could look at a pork strip without feeling sick tonight.” She shifts and flicks her wings slowly. “But that depends on if you can walk.”

"Father suggested I take it easy, but I can walk home if we have to... of course we could take some delicious dinner with us if we wait long enough." He answered with a smile.
Toki snickers. “I’d feel bad just dining and dashing though, Pap. Plus, I doubt they made enough to feed everyone at home- and you know the kids will want some too.” She rubs her fingers gently against his collar bone, and smiles softly. “We could ask though. But really- I just want a couple cans of pineapple and to curl up in the nest with you while the kids run amok downstairs and drive your brother batty.”

"Remember that Father and his majesty are large creatures; they could make enough to feed the village simply by making their usual ration twice.”

“Are you calling me fat?” Asgore poked his head out of the kitchen and mock squinted at his son by marriage.

Toki snickers and tucks her head into his chest. “Busted.” She wasn’t gonna bail him out at all.

"No, Father is almost ten feet tall and you surpass ten feet with your horns! You're not fat, you're both just freakin’ HUGE!” He laughed.

Asgore laughed. “You’re not wrong.” He gave a bemused grin to them both. “Dinner is done, by the way. Do you want to eat here, or shall I have Tenebris walk you both home so you can eat with everyone over there?”

Toki looked up at Papyrus and tickled her chin against his sternum. “Your call.” She was ready to go home and hole up in her nest again, but she’d stay if he wanted to.

"I say we stay long enough for first course..." Papyrus chuckled, before giving her a squeeze. "And we head home with leftovers... if there are any.”

Toki sighed very softly through her nose, having got her fill of socializing for the day already. She hadn’t even done a whole lot of it, but she wanted to go curl up in her birthing nest and not be bothered for a while. “Y’know… I might take a rain-check on dinner with the family.” She reaches up and kisses his chin. “I just kind of want my nest right now. But, you go ahead and stay for dinner, okay?”

Asgore tilts his head, and looks back at Tenebris quizzically, wondering if they’d upset Toki somehow. Pregnant women could be fickle- Toriel had gotten upset over the silliest of things.

Tenebris poked his head out as well and carefully watched Toki as she spoke, before he smiled.
"Give me five minutes and I'll be ready to help you home with your dinner." He spoke up warmly.

Toki looked up at her husband, and then at Tenebris. ‘You don’t have to,” she says awkwardly. “If you want to stay, Pap, you can. I’ll be okay walking on my own and getting something to eat there.”

There were three or four cans of pineapple with her name on them. And if they’d been eaten, well…
There would be an angry Toki rummaging in the cupboards.

"You can’t have a birthing nest without your ever vigilant mate to keep it safe from intruders, now can you?” Papyrus asked with a warm smile. "I don't have any problem with doing what you want, Toki.”

Toki blinks slowly, obviously processing what he’s saying. “You… Feel up to keeping watch?” She asks hesitantly, her small mane ruffling uncertainly. She’d gotten used to the background stress that came from having to ‘guard’ her mate, her nest, and her ‘territory’. She wasn’t sure how to react to having a mate that could… Well, do as a mate should be doing.

"Of course! Absolutely!” He gave her a smile filled with energy that he had not expressed for... god how long has it been... too freaking long that's what. "You need the final days of your carrying to be as peaceful as we can make it, so that's what I'm going to do..." He purred, kissing her head softly. "I'm gonna make it as peaceful as possible.... by taking my role once again as your guardian."

There was a soft hitch in her breath, before she began sniffing with soft, relieved sounding buzzes into his chest. Toki had been running with that low-key strain of stress constantly burning in the back of her mind for weeks now- and now her Husband could finally begin to soothe off that final twisting strand that had her snarling at everyone and everything when she got too overwhelmed.

“I don’t mean to, I’m sorry-” Toki blubbered softly, and worked to compose herself. The tears didn’t last long, thankfully- she was drying the last of them off by the time that Tenebris had gathered the dinner they were sending over, and was ready to go. She sniffed softly, and nuzzled her face against Aliquam. “I’m okay, I promise. Are you... ready to go?”

"Of course... Let's be off, my love." He kissed her head, then reached down to beside the couch to pick up his cane. Using it, he slowly got up to go collect his crutches.

Toki let him get up first in case he fell, and once he was up, she slowly shifted down onto all fours. She sighed softly, and padded at his heels, peeking over to momentarily look at Tenebris while her secondary hands continued to dry her cheeks. “Are you sure you’re alright sharing dinner?” She asks slowly. “I can just make something at home...”

“Don’t stress,” Asgore tuts, “you’ve got a hard enough job as it is right now during the last weeks of your pregnancy. We’ve been with you this far, haven’t we? We’ll see this through to the end.”

Toki dips her head slowly and nods, and then moves to the door. She hears Thumper start to come downstairs as she opens it, holding it open for Papyrus, and for Tenebris who had his hands full.

“Where’s Dad go- Ohhh. He’ll be back soon.” Thumper seemed to have answered his own question, and proceeded to thump into the kitchen.

“Wash your hands!” Asgore huffs and scuttles after him with warm amusement.

Toki shakes her head with a weary sigh. They were cute- the little gray bunny monster fit right in, oddly enough.

Tenebris gave a happy chuckle at how cute his mate and son were and he gave Toki a pleased smile. "I'm pleased that our meal is what your palette craves. It's not often we hit it on the mark.” He told her. "Sharing is our pleasure."

“I know. I still don’t want to intrude- even if what you’re making smells like heaven.” She says, closing the door behind him. She accidentally steps on his tail with her back leg, having not been able to see past the swell of her chest and belly. “Ah shoot- sorry Dad.”

Tenebris jolted for all but a second before he smiled and gently lifted his tail, hooking it into his belt-loop before he gave her an indifferent smile. "It's quite alright, my sweet... accidents happen and my tail is quite the tripping hazard...”

“I also can’t see my feet.” Toki glances directly below her and makes a face. “I haven’t seen my feet in weeks.” She sighs. She starts waddling on after Aliquam, and makes a soft grumbling noise. “Well, it’s a jaunt to home. Hopefully the kids have been behaving for Sans all day. They’re going to want to cuddle us before I retreat to the nest- but I may get spared their pouncing with you coming along. Grandpa visits are always more exciting than boring old Momma coming home.”

"I think if I go in first. You'll be able to take Papyrus upstairs before they even realize it." Tenebris suggested.

Papyrus nodded slowly before he smiled lightly. "I will at least let it be known that we are home, but if I tell them that their mother has already gone to bed, they will give her peace if Caeruleus continues his visit long enough for us to put them to bed as well."

Toki chuffs in soft amusement. "I think it’ll work just fine. I don’t mind if they come up later, but if they’re rowdy, I’d rather they wait until they burn through their energy."

Toki was wanting quiet mostly- she’d been wanting it for days, but kids didn’t allow quiet, so it wasn’t something she got often. She huffs in a soft breath, and cuts down a back alley, leading them on a bit of a short cut to the back yard. “I’m going to have to stick around long enough to get plates though- you can’t carry up dinner on crutches.” She looks to her husband with a soft thrum, wings flicking.

"True, but Father can teleport, so if we get to sneak upstairs, then he can teleport upstairs with plates when he's warded off the children." Papyrus suggested. "He could get what we need in a matter of seconds of us suggesting it to him.”

“True.” She nods in agreement, and flicks her gaze back to Tenebris. “Though that depends on if he wants to do that. Technically, he could teleport us straight upstairs- but then you’d miss out on the whole walking experience.” Which she knew her husband was drinking in now that he wasn’t wheelchair bound.

She gives a yawn as the back yard comes into view.

"Who needs to walk when I can just teleport and make everything both easier and go a fair bit faster than all else in the world?" Tenebris chuckled in counter as he pat Toki's head. "It'll help with stealthily providing everything you need."

“True that. Though this one.” She motions a wing at her husband, “doesn’t like to teleport because it’s the ‘lazy mans’ way of traveling.” She shrugs, and makes a beeline past Tenebris’ ruined car- though not necessarily ruined, so much as salvaged and taken apart to build her nest- and up towards the back door. She glances back to make sure they’re keeping up okay, since Tenebris needed to be the first one in, or she and Papyrus would be swamped.

"I could make an exception." Papy spoke quieter as he rolled his eyes innocently.

Tenebris moved ahead with an amused rumble.

"Come on then..." Papyrus hummed. “The children await..."

"Indeed they do..." Tenebris agreed before he stepped inside the home, listening carefully. It was quiet.

If one listened closely, they could hear the soft sounds of children snoring- atop the roaring rumbles of Sans grumbling in his sleep. Grillby was silent- but it was presumable that he, and Solstice, were likewise asleep in the front room.

Toki crept in and wasted no time in scuttling quietly for the stairs.

She did note, however, in her hurry, that there was no bed in the dining room. In fact- there was a table. She nearly ran into it. She scurried around it, and made a waddling beeline up the stairs, her hands and feet making very little noise on the tile as she scooted her way up, waiting for her mate to join her.

Tenebris stayed behind as Aliquam followed his mate upstairs, but came up later on when the food had been prepared on plates.

At this point, Papyrus had already taken his position, half-guarding Toki’s self-made birthing nest, half-cuddling his loving wife in said nest.

"Tokiko. Papyrus." The elder male spoke gently from the doorway of the bedroom. "I have your dinners... may I come in?"

By half-guarding, half-cuddling, that meant that Toki’s front half was out of the nest, cuddling her mate while he lay just outside the entrance to the birthing nest. She hadn’t let him in yet, knowing dinner would be coming soon, and not wanting that possible mess anywhere near her sanctuary. She also didn’t want to have to untangle herself from him and risk hurting him- if they were going to curl up, it would be all night.

As Tenebris knocked, she cocked her head, lifting it up from where she had been quietly nuzzling up to Papyrus’ shoulder. She took a whiff of scent in through her mouth, and rumbled her consent so her loving husband didn’t go on the offensive.

“Come in, Dad.” She calls, and carefully shifts to pull the rest of the way out of the birthing nest, so that she could eat her meal without risking a mess. “It smells good.” She fluffs as much as she can, pleased.

Tenebris entered with a mellow smile and he slowly made his way to the nest to offer them both their meals.

"Thank you, Father..." Was Papyrus' reply as he took his meal.

Toki sat upright, crossing her legs under the girth of her belly as she accepted her plate. She dipped her head to him with a thankful smile. “Thank you oodles.” She quietly stuffed a piece of pineapple in her mouth, savored it, and then eyed a pork strip. Hesitantly, she put one in her mouth too, found it oddly palatable even if Tenebris had utterly revolted her with the raw strip. She made a soft, pleased warbling deep in her chest, and munched another strip. Alright, maybe pork was acceptable and she may have had a craving for meat too, but she wasn’t going to tell anyone that. “Go enjoy dinner with Asgore and Thumper, Dad. We’ll be okay from here.” She gives him a cheeky salute with her secondary hands.

"I'll get out of your fur before I overstay my welcome." Tenebris gave them a warm smile. "If you need me, just give me a call and I'll drop by to help." He rumbled as he took his leave as quickly as he came.

Toki watched him go, and nodded, before shifting to lean against her husband’s ribs. She thrummed softly while they ate, a soft, pleased purr that vibrated into his side. “So...” She hums to him warmly. “How do you feel being on guard duty?”

"Like it's the beginning of something more as soon as I progress to my prosthetic..." He answered happily.

“Your permanent one, you mean?” She inquires, her eyes flicking over him as she munches through her meal. The pineapple and the pork was well received- but the peppers in her meal were not this time. Usually she wasn’t a picky eater, but her stomach detested them, so she subtly shunted them off onto her mate’s plate. “I’m excited for you to be able to walk. You were always an active man, and it’ll be good to be able to see you walking around and being more active with less pain if all goes smoothly.”

He nodded, before he sighed, and he laid on his back. "You know what I'm going to do when I get my leg?" He asked. "Like... the very first thing I'm going to do?"

Toki grunts as he rolls over and unbalances her. She very nearly spills her dinner, and shoots him a bemused look. She glanced at him, and nudged him with one of her many elbows to remind him to actually eat his dinner. “If you can stand it, I imagine you’ll be jogging laps around the court yard.” She chuckles softly. "Am I wrong?"

"No you're right. I'm going to run. I'm going to run until I fall over breathless.”

“In the theoretical sense...” He laughed gently. "I don't need to breathe, but in the sense that I do not plan on stopping until I fall over.”

Toki chuckles softly. She’s nearly finished scarfing down her dinner, and she pauses to hum at him. “Depending on when you get your leg done, I may steal you for a dance, if I can.” She smiles slowly. She may even steal one if she’s still pregnant, back pains be damned. “But, it will be most amusing to see you run until you’re just too tired to keep going. I have to wonder...” She gives a slow smile. “Has your stamina gone down any since you haven’t been running? I suppose we’ll wait and see.”

"Dance, ah yes." He gave her a bright smile. "We're going to dance. We'll dance and we'll have the most wonderful time dancing to make up for all that lost time." He promised. "It's going to be wonderful, Toki~”

“I’d like to dance.” She sighs softly, a happy sound as she shifts and finishes the last of her dinner. She moves away from him to put the plate where no one will step on it, and then shifts to stretch on the nest. “Y’know...” She looks across the room and hums while he debates his dinner. “Neither of us noticed. Grillby and Sans moved the bed upstairs.”

"I suppose it wasn't completely recognized since it's supposed to be up here... but you know what, more bedding for you, right?" He gave a soft chuckle as he took a bite of his food.

That made her rumble in thought. “You’re very right.” She blinked, and then waddled off the nest. While he ate, she completely stripped the bed, including the pillows, and toted them over to the nest. The pillows were tucked carefully into the birthing nest, with one more blanket laid over top to make it a little darker and ‘safer’ feeling inside, before the rest of the materials were used to line the nest proper and make it a soft place for the litter to be raised.

Toki hummed softly. “You know, I have no idea what we’re going to do with all of these once my nesting instincts go away.” She chirps softly, and takes a moment to primp a pillow that needed primping, before continuing to methodically tuck blankets. She wasn’t good at nesting in the woods, but she could make a hell of a blanket nest.

"Use half of them on our beds... put the other half away in the closet perhaps for a chilly day?" Which wouldn't be until fall of course but hey... watch him try.

“I'm pretty sure a good portion of these aren’t even ours.” She leans down and takes a good sniff.
“Yeah. Somehow I’ve got some of Grillby’s blankets? And your Dad’s? They’ll probably want those back.” She snorts. “But the rest, we’ll surely keep.”

Papyrus didn’t immediately reply, as he was eating his dinner with a newfound appetite, but when he swallowed his mouthful and responded, it came with a warm smile. “All in all I’d say we at least are lucky to have such generous folks to loan us their spare bedding.”

“Very.” She nods warmly. And then Toki flushes slightly with an embarrassed noise. “Though, for some it wasn’t entirely willing. If you recall, up until I lost my shit and took a bite out of your Dad’s leg, my beast and I demanded a sacrifice to enter the room. Pillows and blankets were easier than making food any time anyone wanted inside.”

He looked at her for a moment before he gave a soft chuckle and shook his head. “Oh Toki, I love you, but Dear is quite the extortionist, isn’t she?” He laughed gently.

“You’re not wrong.” She snorts a bemused laugh and settles down to watch him finish his dinner. She shifts, and tugs at her clothing, which is chafing where she had leaked through and stained the dark material. Toki shifts, and then strips into the buff, foregoes clothes for the sake of naked comfort, and lets her body stretch out as she tosses the milk stained clothes out of the nest for later washing. “Mm… Much better.”

Toki watches him for a moment, before creeping backwards into the birthing nest. While he’s still eating, she starts making soft, low crooning noises to start luring him in.

The noises caught his attention before he turned, and nearly choked on his meal. "T-Toki... holy crap~" He coughed quietly, before he smiled. "I... should finish my dinner before I help myself to dessert~" He purred sweetly.

She settled half out of the birthing nest, and crosses her secondary arms under her chest, boosting her bosom out as she leans slightly on her forearms, her backside lifting in the air. She gives him a half-lidded grin, and wiggles her eyebrows. “You have to admit, the temptation is there though. I suppose I wouldn’t want to spoil your appetite too much.” She brushes her fingers gently against her breasts, and watches him with a throaty purr. “Though I am so very, very full…”

He peered at her with a soft ‘hhhhhh’ sound coming from him before he looked away again. "A-And you think I would have something to offer for relief?" He asked semi-innocently.

Toki’s sockets brightened as she thrummed at him. “Well,” She purred, “you’ve got two of the most amazing hands I’ve ever felt on my body… or you’ve got a pretty talented mouth.” She licks her teeth, and lets out a soft, pointed moan to draw attention to all of her assets. Sans had doomed him from the moment he’d let on that his brother had a thing for her pregnant body. “I wouldn’t mind feeling that on me~ if not,” her grin turns sly, “I suppose I can sit here and pine for a talented, strong male to assist me with my problems~”

“Fuck this”, Aliquam muttered. The last few bites of his dinner was abandoned as he slowly moved to her side, trailing kisses down her chest before he pulled her close and sighed happily into her chest. "You do things to my resolve, Toki~ Such awful things.”

Toki giggled happily as he crawled right into her trap. She braced her legs, and began to slowly draw him into the birthing nest with her, crooning all the while. “Oh, do I now?” She lets him burrow right against her breasts, her body supporting his weight as she brings him in to the surprisingly spacious area. It looked cramped from outside, but there was plenty of space inside for… Things. “Well, it’s good that I can still test your resolve now. Tell me,” She purrs, “Do you like the inside of my nest? And your… accommodations~? A birthing nest is the best, but the best nest is a breast nest, breaster
He was following her beckon and was allowed himself to be pulled into the nest. Papyrus had a lulled look on his face, almost like he was in a trance—until she made that fucking pun.

He made a face, and then he groaned and proceeded to softly scream incoherently into her breasts as he lost all hope in those two seconds of petty existence.

His soft scream was muffled by her breasts, and she laughed as it made them vibrate. She got situated in her comfortable spot, which let her lay slightly on her back and slightly on her side. She had recognized the position as a true nursing position, and that let her cuddle him closer as she reached out with her leg to kick the cover closed on the nest.

“I’m sorry,” She giggled and kissed the crown of his skull. “I couldn’t resist. Let me make it up to you?” She purrs gently. “You’ve got multiple choices for once...” Toki was flowing strongly from all her teats.

He looked up at her, then sighed weakly. "Lord show me how to say no to this..." He sighed, before he purred, and smiled as he kissed her chest and neck lovingly. "I suppose I could help you just a little, we might want to invest in some bottles for storing all that milk you're generating." He chuckled quietly.

She sighed pleasantly as his mouth settled on her neck and chest. “Mmm... We can order some.” She mumbles, eyes closing as a soft, completely, and utterly relaxed purr floats from her. Pheromones follow it next. “The baby store can deliver some by tomorrow evening- maybe. We might get them next week. I’m just going to need help milking. Think you’ll be up for the task~?”

"Oh very much so, yes~" The scent of her relaxation washed over him and he gave a blissful sigh. "Oh you smell so nice~" He sighed happily as he nuzzled her wonderful cleavage, his hand coming up and slowly traveling along the tender ectoflesh until he found one of her nipples under his thumb. "So wonderful~" Oh he tried to stay focused but it was clear that his movements were slowing with her wonderful pheromones.

Toki realized as his movements tapered off that she had inadvertently cock-blocked herself.

She just shook her head instead of getting upset, and tucked her face down against the top of his skull, cuddling him close and basking with him inside of the birthing nest as she rumbled and purred, her stress melting away by the second and ripening her scent for him to enjoy. “Let’s just rest for now, Papy.” She purrs, and kisses his brow, one arm guiding his hand from her nipples to curl at her lower back, cuddling close. He didn’t have the mind to do anything else but cuddle and coo at her anyway.

"Y’sure?" He asked quietly, glancing up at her from his sedated position.

His sedated half lidded look confirmed it for her if the slight slurring of his words didn’t. She gave a warm chuckle, and pressed a kiss right between his eyes. “I’m sure.” Intimate relations didn’t always have to be sex. Cuddling with him could be intimate enough for them both. “I love you.” She coos to him.

"Oh I love you too~" He purred. "My beautiful, wonderful wife, I could get addicted to you... oh... I already am..." He giggled weakly.

She gave a warm laugh, and kissed his brow. “You, my love, are completely blitzed.” She says lightly. She smooches his brow again, and then settles down with a well deserved sigh to nap off.
their lovely dinner.
April showers definitely would bring May flowers. As April entered it’s third week, and Toki entered her fourteenth week of pregnancy, April decided that it needed to open up like a lion and roar, the air around and inside of the house chilling as April decided it needed to go out with a bang.

Thunder shook the house intermittently, drowning out the sounds of the children playing in the downstairs dining room, and the sounds of Sans and Grillby adamantly working on the house.

Moving the furniture back to their respective rooms had just been the start of things. From there, the married couple had ripped up the entire bottom floor down to the cement, and were in the process of laying down new tile. They’d gotten all of the kitchen, dining room, and front hall done, but the hall to the second bathroom and the connecting rooms down that hall, along with the living room, were unfinished. They were also going to remodel the downstairs bathroom, since Stag had thrashed it.

Honestly, she had the best family.

It also kept them close in case they needed help- and with Toki at the final cusp, it was definitely a good thing. She couldn’t keep up with the kids, so having them out from under foot let her rest as much as her body demand that she needed.

Well- rest, and stock the fridge with milk.

Asgore, as it turned out, had ordered a massive shipment of milk bottles for Toki. It was a ‘gift’, but also served him and Tenebris as well- it would let them feed and bond with their children when Toki needed a break from playing nursemaid constantly, and let them provide natural, organic food for the children.

However, getting it was an issue- Toki wasn’t able to balance on all fours, milk properly, and not drop the bottles.

But… The solution came in probably the most primitive of ways. A milk pail.

However, her usual culprit for assisting her in draining her constantly filling stores was currently laying in a pathetic pile next to her, quietly moaning into the blankets every time the thunder cracked.

Toki frowned softly at him. “You know… I can try and help with that.” She says gently.

"Are you sure about that?” Papyrus loved that she was offering him her aid but he would feel bad if she spent too much magic worrying about his short-term weather pains... Of course he would absolutely adore the warm relief that came with her magic.

Toki rolled over onto her back, scooting over to him like an incredibly pregnant cat. She reached out and rubbed her hands gently over his ribs, before slowly reaching down to stroke over his pelvis. She gathered her magic at her finger tips. She didn’t have a whole lot of magic to spare with her current milk production, but she could warm him up and spare him some pain. “I can’t heat up all of you, or this entire nest, but I can do your hip no problem. Maybe a blanket too, so you can keep something on it?” She settles warm hands on his pelvis, stroking him gently, and waits for his reply on the blanket.

He cooed quietly as the warmth spread over his pelvis and he sighed contentedly. "Aahh..." Steadily the pain faded from his still slightly raw nerve endings, and he proceeded to grow more and more saggy into the bedding of the nest as he moaned louder. "Oooohhh thaaaat's it~"

Toki flushed at his moans. “Papy!” She snickered. “Shhh! If you keep making those sounds, someone’s going to hear us, and think we’re doing something naughty up here.” She smoothed her fingers slowly over his pelvis proper, not even bothered about invading his pants to soothe his pain.
She’d get him a heated blanket later- for now, she wanted to leave as much of her magical energy in him as she safely could, so he could be… Well, not in pain.

Her fingers massaged gently, before slowly pressing her magic against his prosthetic properly, letting the warmth invade it and soothe the frazzled nerves it was slowly but surely synchronizing with.

He looked at her for a moment with a blissful look before it sharpened to a mischievous grin and he gave an absolutely blissful howl. "Oh Toki, oh TOKI, OH TOKI~ ITS SOOOOO GOOOOOD!"

There was a howl of laughter from downstairs, no doubt Caeruleus hearing his brother's voice and thinking it was priceless about how loud he was.

All of Toki fluffed at him, and she drew her hands back to put all four of them on her hips as she sat awkwardly on her knees. Her face flamed a bright emerald color. “Oh my GOD!” She exclaimed, the smaller set finally throwing themselves up into the air, before covering her face. “You’re terrible.
I don’t know you. Nope. Nope.” The flustered pregnant skelebee flopped right over in the nest, and Which meant Grillby and the children heard. Oh my god.”

If it was possible to die from embarrassment, she may have simply combusted right there.

He laughed lightly as he gave her a soft pat. "You expected anything less of me?" He asked smugly, before he leaned down and peppered her with kisses.

“Nooo!” She flailed her hands, and giggled as he rolled over to pin her down with copious amounts of kisses. “I shouldn’t have expected anything less, but still. You’re terrible.” She stills under him, pouting up at him with half lidded sockets. She wasn’t truly upset about it, but she still was flusteredand now she was flushed with giggles and kisses from him though, not just embarrassment.

He giggled as he gave her a few more kisses before he sighed contentedly as he rested his head on her chest. "Yes I am, but you love me, don't you~?" He cooed sweetly. "You adore your loving husband~"

Toki puffed her cheeks stubbornly, but nodded and leaned down to kiss her husband’s brow. “Yes, yes I do. I love your obnoxious, adorable, loving self.” She pouts at him. She does squirm though at his head on her chest, making a soft, uncomfortable noise. “Lift your head a little, Pap. I’m engorged and it hurts.”

He cooed in apology and lifted his head to kiss along her neck. "I'm sorry~"

“S’okay.” She tilted her neck up with a soft pleased croon. “I need to empty again, but trying to do it myself sucks.” She sighs softly, enjoying the tender kisses of teeth on her vertebrae.

He peered up at her before he smiled warmly. "Oh really~?" He asked in a syrupy tone. "Perhaps I could assist you~?” He purred sweetly.

Toki’s face bloomed in a bright blush again, and she sputtered. “I- I… What? I mean… You… Want to?” She sputters.

He looked at her with a slightly surprised look. “Tokiko Gaster you are my wife, what kind of husband would I be if I didn’t help you when you need it!?" He demanded, though with a more gentle tone.

“Well, I mean… Y’know… I know how you are with...” She waves a hand at her breasts. “I mean… Can you control yourself long enough to finish the job? I do recall the one and only time that you helped me with the twins, it ended up with you driving me into the couch in a frenzy.”

He pouted slightly in insult. "You wound me with your doubt, my love..." He puffed.

“Oh?” She cocks a brow at him, scrubbing her face to try and chase her stubborn flush away. “Do you want to prove me wrong?” She asks, her eye lights twinkling at him merrily as she issues her challenge.

He stared at her for a moment, and then he puffed up. "As a matter of fact, yes!"

Toki gave a slow grin and a nod. “Alright. Let me go get the stool. If you want to go get the bucket...?” She shifted and tried to pause, before realizing she’d gotten stuck on her back and she couldn’t feel her back legs. “… I need some help rolling over first, please. I’m stuck.”

He stared at her for a moment before he laughed gently and helped her roll over. "Here, does this help?"

"Thank you.” She gives him a thankful smile and manages to get onto her hands and knees. Toki stretches, feeling god-awfully swollen and full, and moves over to grab the stool for him. She carries it back, setting it at the edge of the nest, and then gave him a soft chirr. “Do you want me to get the bucket so you don’t have to use your cane?”

"On the contrary, I can use my cane instead." Rather than take the time to get up, he used his cane and hooked the bucket, easily pulling it over. Though he looked at it. "Thing is, you're not a cow... why are we using a milk bucket?” He asked.

Okay, Toki was mildly impressed at his use of the cane to grab the bucket. His question did make her pause though, and she stuck her tongue out at him. “For one, I have six leaking teats and two breasts that need to be milked. The breasts are easier to aim into a bottle, but I tried with the teats while you were down getting drinks, and that was chaos- that’s why the heating blanket had to be unplugged and washed, and why I need help.”

She flushed a bit and looked away. “I don’t necessarily like the bucket either. It’s a little humiliating, but it’s better than a mess.”

He looked at her with thought, before he smiled, and he gently touched her arms. "Hey... Sit up for a moment…”

Toki shifts and grunts. She collects a couple pillows to sit behind her back- sitting upright for long lengths of time this last week had been unpleasant- and then turns to face him with her new back brace ready. “Okay…?” She makes a quizzical buzz at him, crossing her arms over her tightly stretched borrowed turtlenecks. “What are you planning now?”

He borrowed the stool and sat on it as he faced her, their faces inches apart before he reached out and gently lifted up her shirt to expose her chest. "Here, take this off and I'll help you get comfortable." He told her.

Toki nods, and squirms out of the borrowed turtleneck. She lets off a soft, relieved noise as her poor chafed nipples are let out into the air. "Mm, before you get too comfortable and help me get comfortable, can you snag the bottle of MTT brand lotion with your cane?" She motions to it over by the bed. "My nipples are chafed and sore as hell- they’re going to need motioned after this."

"Did you have to mention the brand?" He asked with a quiet laugh, though as she asked, he reached out and collected the lotion with the handle of his cane. "A soft massage for you after I've emptied you out~"

"That sounds good to me." She sighs with a most pleased sigh. "And yes, yes I did."

"After all, MTT brand is the only brand guaranteed to work on Ghosts, Skeletons, and other ectoplasmic entities across the planet."

Did she just quote the brand at him? Yes. Yes she did.

Toki paused, and glanced down at her breasts. She was starting to leak slowly.

He smiled and stroked her head, before he coaxed her form to lean against his. He stroked her head gently, then slowly ran his hands down her chest. "Let's... do it this way..."

"Oooh." She blinked at the new position, and curled her primary arms around his shoulder. This stretched her lower back in the most delightful way she hadn’t expected. She let off a pleased purr as his fingers fumbled their way down to the soft, swollen flesh of her breasts. "I like this position." She purrs. "Can you get it into the bucket okay? Or do we need a pillow or two to balance it on and raise it up?"

"It's gonna be okay. Hang on." He found her mounds and gently rubbed them before he took hold of her nipples in the palm of his hand. He slowly began to roll his palms before giving an ever so careful downward pull to start her milk in her uppermost breasts. It took an awkward second of him leaning but he had his target after his first try and slowly began to milk her in their current angle, "How does this feel?" He asked gently.

Aliquam’s response to his question is a very soft, but delighted moan right against his neck. Her secondary hands came to settle on his legs, the one gently gripping the temporary prosthetic doing so very gently. Her fingers knead just gently. "Ohh… Oh god… Yes..."

The immediate relief in pressure was obvious, based on the strength of the streams that Papyrus got out. Her breasts weren’t designed like human ones- they were more linear, offering the ability to give straight and firm streams. The sound of her milk splashing into the bucket was satisfying in the best of ways as the pressure eased.

Oh fuck oh fuck oh fuck. A shaky breath passed Papyrus' teeth, before he sighed and smiled gently. "Say again?" He asked sweetly, making sure he didn't lose his aim with her flow despite his... excitement.

She felt a shift in his pants, and she couldn’t comment on it. Toki let out another breathless moan, warm air wafting over the vertebrae of his neck. "Ahhm..." She feels a shiver crawl up her spine, her sore and tender breasts finally getting relief. It was nearly orgasmic how good the god damned relief felt. "G-good. Please- more. Don’t s-stop."

A hot breath wafted out on her neck. Papy could feel his teeth as they ground against each other, "H-Holy fuck..” He gasped out, lowering his head to rest it on hers, "Toki... You're making such beautiful sounds~" He purred on a hot breath.

“Mmm~ Have you heard the noises you make?” She pants softly against him. “Even better than- mnnn- mine~” Her secondary hands slid higher, carefully higher, and she rubbed her thumbs against the inside of his inner thighs. With the angle and his careful but firm attentions, her breasts were rapidly emptying to more comfortable and tolerable levels. The streams were lessening in intensity, but it didn’t stop her soft noises.

After all, she frequently told him that he had amazing hands. She wasn’t a liar- she was thoroughly enjoying his hands on her.

"Do you want me to move to the next set of teats soon?" He prayed she wouldn't run into his... ahem... growing problem that pooled between his legs. "I-If it makes you feel that much better I’d be willing to…”

“Mmm… Yes,” She purrs, “They’re empty. Be gentle though. The lower ones are very… tender~” Toki’s hands were indeed wandering. Higher and higher yet they climbed- until she found the growing problem in his pants. Rather than comment on it, she slid one hand over, and teasingly stroked her fingers over the thick girth of his hidden member.

"O-Ooh!" He almost yelped out as her hands slipped into his pants and he moaned out a mangled sound as he clenched his legs around her hand, "O-Oh god~" His hands thankfully didn't squeeze her in reaction, but rather they made their grip more tender and kneading as they crawled to her second set of teats Toki would have slid her hand back, but his legs clenched, and trapped her there. The tender and kneading grip he took was a definite delight, and she felt a blush crawling across her cheeks as she turned her skull to bury it into his neck. Her teeth twitched, peppering soft, butterfly kisses against what bones she could. “A-ah~” Her teats were harder to grasp than her breasts, given that they were significantly smaller even with how engorged they were. Still, they let off slow but steady streams, emptying quickly.

Her fingers got braver as she was held captive, and she wiggled until she could palm him as best she could, stroking him slowly with her thumb. He always got excited when handling her breasts- she poor man couldn’t escape this no matter how hard he tried to deny it.

He loved his wife- he loved her so much, but her body did things to him that would put his soldier mind to shame. He moaned and whined as he rocked into her hand, and it could be felt in his hands as he twitched and resisted his inner urges to simply grope, as he knew she would most definitely be sorely sensitive.

Toki did give a tiny whine against him, her motions slowing as his fingers got a little rougher with her incredibly tender teats. “Ow, Pap.” He might not have meant to twitch so roughly, but that had definitely not been the gentle massaging flow that had been arousing her and drawing those succulent moans from her. “Gentle… Gentle… Like this...” Her fingers stroked over him gently, slowly.

"A-aah... I'm sorry." He whimpered faintly, pressing his head to hers as his hand slowly followed her lead, gently finding the pace of gentle milking from before.

Toki exhaled softly against his neck as he found his gentle pace again, a relieved sound that slid against his neck and up his skull. “Thank you,” She moaned for him. Her fingers stroked him softly, sliding up to the base of his shaft. She paused, and felt him slightly. “… You feel thicker than I remember...” She observes.

Was that eagerness in her voice?

Yes. Yes it was.

Did she let it distract her from having him empty her first? Not at all.

"I haven touched you in so long... I want you so much but I do not want to hurt the precious lives within..." He admitted quietly. "But I need you... Oh god do I need you..."

“I need you too.” She mumbled softly, and kissed her teeth gently along his neck. She sighed, shifting closer to let his hands have better reach. “Once we finish... I think we’re close enough to the buns being done in the oven that we can… Risk a little fun.” Her teeth nibbled up over his neck, and her fingers stroked over his cock again, teasing what felt like the start of… a knot?

"Oh god~" Hebreathed out, his legs opening as he rocked into her hand. "D-Do you promise~?"

“I do.” She purred, her teeth nibbling against his neck. Toki’s bare breasts pressed against his shirt, and sheexhaled a soft, pleased sigh. “But first... Before we can have fun~ We have to finish emptying me, and I need some lotion~”

"Oh god..." He breathed again, before he smiled and kissed her neck gently. "Of course, my love... Let's get you all comfortable before anything is tried~"

“Not tried.” She purred. “This,” her fingers tightened around his member and gave him a firm stroke from knot to his tip, “is going to fit inside of me. All of it.” Her teeth nipped across his neck, and she paused, moaning softly against him again as he reached a stubbornly tender teat. “Ahnnn… it’s so tender...”

There was a flurry of babble that rose from Aliquam at that moment and his hand gave a gentle knead, before a slightly firmer press to coax out the milk. "H-How's this?" He asked. "D-Does it help?"

There was the feeling of pressure building, before it sort of… ‘burst’, and the stream set off rapidly. “Ah~” The relieved sigh was nearly orgasmic, and her fingers squeezed his member oh so gently, before sliding teasingly from his pants to resume kneading his thighs. She couldn’t see that far down her belly, so she couldn’t see which ones were plugged and which ones weren’t. “God, yes~” She breathed against his shoulder.

"You're so beautiful when you moan like that, and knowing you feel such blissful relief from my hands, my touch... Oh Toki it just makes me want you more... is this your second set or your third?" He asked. No he wasn't so eager to finish to get to the next thing- what are you talking about.

“One more set left,” She moaned against him, her ecto-tongue sliding out and licking up his vertebrae. She found his shirt was starting to annoy her, and her hands started to toy with trying to get to more of him. Eventually she made a soft, frazzled buzz. “Fuck it.” She decides, and then her primary hands grip the back of his t-shirt with surprising strength- and she rips it clean down the back, so that only his arms are trapped.

Her mouth immediately seeks his collar bone and shoulder bones, devouring his taste as she teases and nips at him, stimulating him and no doubt torturing him at the same time.

It was a good test for his self control, after all. He had one more set- he had made it this far.
Holy fuck. The bulge in his pants was straining now as he shakily reached down to finish her last set of teats, "Toki... o-oh my god~" He gasped weakly. "Y-You're gonna make me... ah... before I'm even in you..."

"Well," She purrs, her hands kneading his thighs as her mouth works his collar bone. Slowly, she lets her tongue extend down until she can curl it around his upper most rib and stroke it. “It has been a while, hasn’t it? It would probably be good for you to get a little spent up spunk out, hm?” Her hand slides up his leg again, and this time she teases him through his sweatpants, stroking his heated and hard member effortlessly as he empties her last teats. She opens her mouth, and exhales hot air against his sternum, vibrating it with a moan.

"Fuck!" He bucked sharply into her hand as his legs clenched, before hissing as he released her teats to grip her shoulders. "Toki... I'm gonna burst at this rate..." He hissed, "You're driving me insane~"

Toki grinned up at him slowly as he set his hands on her shoulder. Slowly, pointedly, she leaned right back down as far as she was capable, and sucked one of his ribs right into her mouth, before sucking on it in time with the sensual thrusts of her hands.

She knew what she was doing. She was daring him to do something about it- or to just let her bring him to his first release.

"To-kiiiii eeee !" He howled out as he grabbed her tightly as he arched. "Fu-fuck! Fuck! Aaahh!" His mouth fell open as he ground against whatever point of contact he had going for himself.

Both of her secondary hands came to hold his member, while her primary hands held his shoulders stationary. She nuzzled and licked him, and began to trail her teeth over his bones in the most tortuously teasing buzzing he’d felt in a long time. “That’s it,” She purrs. Screw everyone down below- this was the noise she wanted right now. Him howling her name while he rutted against her- She hadn’t heard this in so, so long.

He choked and gasped as he rutted through his first climax, but as he came off his high, he whined weakly before he sagged. "F-Fuck..." He rasped.

Toki stroked him through it, and admired the truly large size that his knot swelled to in her waiting palms. She leaned down, and ran her tongue across his collar bone again, giving him a soothing purr. “Mmm… I enjoy watching you come undone,” She purrs heavily. “How about I help you slip out of these ruined sweats, and we continue this after you’ve helped me with my… little… issue?”

"Hhhnn..." He gave a weak whimper in reply before his trembling hands found her teats once more. "A-Almost done." He whispered, giving a tiny nod.

“Almost.” She cooed. “Nearly empty. And then lotion… And I’m all yours.” She purred. Her fingers stroked slowly over the base of his swollen knot, teasing up towards his seeping tip, massaging the shaft as she went. Her palm teased him, from hilt tip, while he worked her over relentlessly. When she ran empty, she gave him a little nip, and leaned up, her fingers drawing out of his ruined sweats. She looked at the mess staining her fingers, gave him a sly wink- and then licked her fingers clean. “Mmmmm.” She thrummed, “The most exquisite treat.”

"Oh god... You're so... you're priceless ." He gasped. "I am... S-so fucking lucky..."

Toki laughed and leaned back once her fingers were clean. Her back was aching a bit from the lack of position changes- but her breasts and teats felt fantastic, if dry. Toki slipped her fingers down to gently shoosh his fingers away from her now empty lowest set of teats. “You’re lucky? I think I’m the lucky one.” She gives him a doting smile, and then stoops down to grab the milk pale. She sets it to the side, where it won’t get bumped by anything, and then peers at him.

A slow grin crawls up her crocodile teeth. “Ready for the lotion? I think I can help with that. Though…” She peeked at his soiled pants. “You may want to change out of those before you get cold and chafe.”

"I wonder if my hands will stay still long enough to a-allow me." He whispered in reply, taking hold of her body in his hands once more to try and soothe his trembling.

Toki laughed, and fetched the lotion herself. She shifted, and reached out with her primary hands. “I could always shred them like I did your t-shirt.” Her secondary hands work to open up the lotion. “I can work with the lotion. You just rest your hands, alright? Steady yourself.”

He nodded slowly and leaned back on his hands, slightly boosting his hips as he gave a soft breath. "G-go ahead~"

Toki gave him a bemused smile. Since he’d lifted his hips up, she simply gently, but firmly, slipped his pants off instead of ripping them up like his shirt. She slid them down to his knees, and then patted him gently as his knotted member bobbed straight up into the air, angry and sore looking.

She licked her teeth a little bit, her smaller hands working on putting lotion on herself. “You look a little sore there, my love… Still up for sating our needs~?”

"Please~" He whimpered happily. His knotted cock was slick with his previous load, and twitching with the occasional hitch in his breath. "I need you~"

Toki finished her work, and leaned back with a soft, pleased purr. “I need you too.” She shifts, and rubs her fingers down her newly softened and moisturized breasts as she tosses the lotion away. “Now…” She looks at him, and her sockets settle at half mast. “How would you like me~? Your leg will support you now...” He could actually take her without support now. Or, at least, perhaps he could.

Maybe not yet…

Oh god now that was a question... He looked at her, and then he keened and slowly pulled her up and over into his lap, his hands trailing down her hips adoringly to grope her thighs.

She gave him a cheeky smile as he hefted her into his lap, and she settled against him gently, though she had to take most of her weight. She was hesitant to put weight on his leg with him sitting on a stool like this- she didn’t fully trust the temporary prosthetic.

“Mm… cowgirl might not work all that well.” She could feel him bumping against her, and she was still stuck in her pants with her shirt lifted up to her shoulders. She leans over to give him a kiss though, and teasingly rubs his shaft against the hidden treat that was her core. “Doggy style maybe? Might be less painful for us both now- though I do wish we could do this face to face...”

But with her belly like this, even with his lack of middle, there was no way to set a good pace without something getting unpleasantly pinched.

"Soon, isn't it? Soon that you'll have the pups, and it'll have you to myself~" He purred happily, kissing along her form before he chuckled. "I say we get you comfy on the nest, belly down, ass up, and sit you comfortably on our biggest pillow while I rail you like the animal I am~"

Toki sputtered at that, and her face blossomed into a bright green flush. “I- I- Oh my lord, Pap, holy shit. Yes- fuck yes, I’d say take me right now but I can’t move that fast.” She shifts on his lap and gives a little squirm. “Nest- now. Lemme up- I gotta get out of these clothes and I need you.”

Fuck her- it the idea of him raling her like the ‘animal’ he was had her womanhood trembling in excitement. She’s pretty sure he could smell it too.

Toki managed to squirm out of his lap- and then she settled down onto the nest. She shimmied herself out of her top, and then wiggled her pants off. She was left bare to him as she took a couple crawling steps onto the nest, and then piled a few loose pillows up. Toki got herself comfortable, put her ass in the air, and then wiggled it teasingly at her husband.

She shivered at the cold air rolling over her backside, and made a soft, teasing noise with her wings. “Well… I’m ready. Now it’s your turn~”

He watched her get comfortable, before he grinned and slowly pushed himself off his seat to make it into the nest. He finished shaking off his clothing, and then immediately draped his form over her and cooed as he pulled her close, kissing her neck before he groped her now drained chest as his erection found its way to press between her thighs. “You look so beautiful, and you smell so intoxicating~” He purred his low, happy tone into her ear.

His touch against her chest was not met with non-swelled flesh. Her breasts may have been reduced in size thanks to her lack of milk excess, but her pregnancy breasts were still fantastic things to see, and to feel, warm against the bones of his fingers.

Between the feeling of his member shoving between her thighs, his teeth against her neck, and the palm cupping her breast, Toki couldn’t stop the breathy gasping moan that escaped her. She rocked back against him, the hard, slick heat of him rubbing against the plush warmth of her thighs. “Keep talking like that,” She pleads softly, “hah~ I love that tone of voice. Mmm~” Her hips rock against him eagerly, almost heatedly.

“F-fuck,” She gasped, “fuck- please, please, claim me, claim me and make me yours again~! Fill me until I can’t be filled any more, and mark me until everyone knows who I belong to.”

Resolve? What resolve could she possibly have? It was crumbling by the second as she practically begged him to pound her into the pillows.

Yeah right, what was he thinking.

Securing his arms around her, Aliquam bit into the vertebrae at the back of her neck and rolled his hips until his cock found her yearning folds. His bite adjusted, and then bit a little harder as he pushed inside, no doubt resisting the urge to go rough into her body for the sake of the young.

Her wings arched up under him, her body bucking under him instinctively as his teeth latched on to the unprotected back of her neck. With no thick and curling mane there, he took the entire back of her spine into his grip, and tightly held her skull down while her back and hips squirmed against him.

The feeling of his member sliding home was alien and different with the girth of his knot- and the deepest most primordial part of Toki craved it like a dehydrated man in an oasis. Her walls clamped around him, her juices mingling with his as it helped to guide him home. The angle of her body took the weight of her uterus off of her pelvis, giving him unrestricted access for his swollen member to slide into her. His distended knot bumped against her outer lips, something he would have to put more force into getting inside of her.

Toki mewled, her mouth lolling open and tongue forming to slide out as she panted.

Her wings flaring against him had him grunt in initial surprise before he tightened his grip around her and pressed his chest down to pin her. "Get comfortable... and stay down~" He growled into her ear.
"Because I'm not going to give you any change to fight my dominance…"

That growl had her melting under him. Where once she might have fought back against Tenne just for the hell of it, she submitted under him, her wings splaying out as she slumped, her back curving to make more space for him as he pressed her down into the nest.

“No,” She whimpered a soft, pleading noise, letting him know she wasn’t going to try to fight as she bumped back against his knot with an encouraging wiggle. Not a demand- a mates plea. “Please, mate, please my alpha, take me~”

That title left his skin crawling and his cock twitching as he anchored his good knee into the soft pillows and he gave her a husky rumble as he started thrusting into Toki's body with loud, pleased growls that sent vibrations through her exposed bones.

As he set a pace that was borderline bruising, Toki found herself gasping with every thrust. His repaired hips slapped against the summoned ectoflesh of her backside, his knot ramming against her labia and slowly but surely working its way inside of her. It had been over a quarter of a year since she’d taken a knot- her body had adapted to being without it, and now she had to adjust to trying to fit an already expanded knot inside of her.

Her eager return motions showed she was more than willing to try and fit all of him in, however.

Liquid heat burned in her belly, tightening the muscles of her back and making her belly twitch with need as she warbled and gasped, her body buzzing and spurring him on with wordless pleas for more, please dear god more.

Her wordless pleas spurred incoherence from Aliquam and his distal phalanx slightly dug into her warmth as he weighed more into how much he pressed his knot against her. "I love you." He hissed.
"My beloved mate... you're so wonderful... you're so fucking hot."

His finger tips were nearly bruising as they curled into the softness of her body, and it spurred a mewl from her. Her legs splayed wider as his knot worked in, and she felt her eye lights flickering, a few droplets of condensation falling from her teeth from how fast and hot her breaths were coming out of her open mouth.

“I-” She gasped, “I love you too,” She struggled for words. “I l-love you so much, my mate, my amazing, strong, wonderfully handsome mate-”

His knot popped in before she could continue, and Toki felt her eye lights fuzz out into nothingness at the sheer girth of which it stretched her.

Her walls fluttered desperately around him as he thrust, battering her insides like an unforgiving ram as he had his way with her. Toki wouldn’t change a thing for the world- except maybe the shrill, desperately hungry noise she made as she was suddenly full, suddenly over-stuffed, with him ramming into her deepest recesses with no where else to go.

It seemed to do the trick for them both. As the knot popped into Toki’s warmth, Aliquam roared as he gave a sharp thrust to completely wedge it into her, locking her in place as his teeth found their mark in her flesh, they sank in and just as his knot had, they locked in place in her ectobody. His hands found her hips and he snarled soundly as he gave them a slight boost as to allow him a better angle to thrust into them.

Toki’s mouth opened in a feminine cry of bliss as his teeth sank into her flesh, popping past the skin with a sharp, stinging pain. As he pounded harder, she found herself at her peak, overwhelmed and unable to do anything else but submit and succumb to the whims and wishes of her body.

Her entire body tensed up under him, her filled walls tightening and clamping around his knot in waves. There was a copying cramp in her belly and back, but it was a background sensation in the absolute tsunami that was drowning her.

Toki kneaded the nest, her body going limp save where she was connected to him, at his utter mercy as she rode out wave after wave of lingering, mind-blowing orgasms, while she counted the stars exploding behind her eyes.

There was all the stars to witness exploding as Aliquam continued his rough pace, his grip on her refusing to relax as he fucked her through her mind-blowing orgasm until he was able to reach his own.

Various grunts and moans rose from him before he hissed through his teeth and gave a low, muffled snarl into her flesh as he pressed flush to her hips, trembling as he reached release and filled his beloved wife’s battered walls with his cum.

By the time he came, Toki was limp under him, completely spent and utterly exhausted. She didn’t squirm as he flooded her past the point of comfort, very, very little being able to squeeze out as his knot inflated further and fully locked him deep in her depths.

Other than the necessary brain power to keep her from collapsing completely on her belly, Papyrus had pounded her until there wasn’t a single thought in Toki’s skull. She panted slowly under him, heated breaths escaping as her sockets slowly blinked, trying to take in her surroundings again. Her limp wings were twitching under the effects of the muscles twinging from his bite mark, of which she seemed to have enjoyed thoroughly.

“Mmmnaaah~” The only word she can make is a blissful moan. Such elegance was worthy of the finest poets- particularly after such a rough round of passion.

It was a beautiful sound that brought peace to the beast mounting the pregnant monster.

With a weak moan, Papyrus slowly let go of his mouthful and he nuzzled appreciatively into Toki’s back, pecking the base of her wings lovingly. "I did not hurt you... did I, my love?"

“Mmmnnn...” Toki made the softest of moans as his teeth released, her ectoplasmic blood bubbling to the surface in thick drops. It didn’t even seem to bother her all that much- she instead shifted, and guided them both to lay on their side, one of her wings folding under them so he could remain spooned close. “No.” She nestled back into him with the positively most sated purr she’d made in a long time. His knot tugged uncomfortably, making her womanhood twinge with the abuse it had suffered, but her body practically sang in delight. “You were perfect, my love.” She purred, once she could do words again, like a civilized being.
"Mmh." He stroked her side as he settled behind her, spooning up against her. "As were you~ you're so warm... so... beautiful..." His hand ran under her stomach, caressing it delicately as he purred in delight.

Toki slumped in utterly blissful exhaustion as he spooned up behind her. Her sockets closed, and she rumbled a soft, tired purr. "Mmm..." Toki wasn’t sure what else to say to him, so she simply settled for just purring to him, loud and warm, as her body relaxed.

Her body may have relaxed- except under his caressing fingers, her belly twitched, and began to harden firmly, in time with her being tensing around him. It started at her navel, and pulled the soft, supple skin rock hard, the pups inside going still as her body clamped tight about the middle.

Toki made a soft, tiny uncomfortable noise, too momentarily gone to recognize it for anything more than a stress cramp. “C’n ya rub a little firmer...?” She mumbles with a sated thrum. “Got a cramp right under your hand.”

"Sure thing, honey." He ran his hand down a little before he pressed gently with his fingers, giving a slow but thorough massage where she asked. Though as he rubbed, he began to catch on that this may be more than a cramp. "Toki... are you feeling okay?" He asked quietly.

“Hmmmn...?” She seemed confused as to why he was asking, but roused her attention enough to take notice that the cramp was, most definitely, more than a cramp. She gave a soft hiss, her mind finally addressing the tight ache that clamped from her spine to her belly button and made her body clamp around his invading knot like a vice. Her brain clicked back on rather rapidly. “Hah... Y-yeah. Just a Braxton hicks...? How long has it been tight?” Braxton hicks for her were a little less than ten to fifteen seconds usually. They were uncomfortable given her size, but she knew false from true. True ones were thirty seconds to a minute- or more, as labor progressed.

Problem was, she didn’t know when this had started. She could count the seconds from now, but it wouldn’t mean anything long term.

“This has almost been forty seconds.” He answered briefly, still trying to knead it out lest it be just a scare.

Toki breathed softly, and tucked her chin. She counted the seconds after, and the timer ticked on- and at forty-five seconds, it started to ease off. “That... may have been a contraction. Actually... I think that was one.” She breathed easier as it eased off, and she rubbed her fingers gently over his on her belly. “Okay... it was just one. It doesn’t mean anything. If we learned anything from the twins, it means nothing.”

They were close though- they were within a week or so of her suspected due date. It could be...

"Toki... D-Do I need to call dad?” He asked worriedly, leaning back slightly before he gasped and stillled. "I... I'm stuck... oh shit...!”

Toki had let out a tiny yelp as he went to pull back, and tugged her hips right along with him. He’d locked them together, and she shot him a withering look over her shoulder, before remembering that he wasn’t used to working with a knot. “Don’t pull,” she hisses softly, “Please. That hurts. We can’t part for another half hour to forty five minutes- it’s your first knot, so we won’t know until, well, we actually know.”

She shifts against him, and parts her legs lightly, trying to get comfortable. Her muscles ache slightly, and she makes a grumbling noise. “It was... it was just one. We don’t need to call your dad. We’re still...” Her entire skull flushes. “He might be a mostly unflappable doctor, but that doesn’t mean he needs to see us like this. Just… We’ll relax. Last time they were infrequent with the twins. They came every… what, fifteen, ten minutes?"

"Sorry... Sorry..." He slowly lowered again before he sighed and wrapped his arms around her. "I'll stay here and keep count, honey..." He told her gently, slowly rubbing along the tense muscles as he tried to resist his urge to freak out at their... circumstance.

Toki took slow, measured breaths, and worked on letting her body calm down and relax. She felt overly full and stuffed, but she knew it was for the best that they didn’t try and relieve that pressure yet. She shifted, her abdomen twinging under his fingers. The litter rolled inside of her, kicking and displeased with the sudden tightness that had woken them from their nap. “Thank you, my love.
Remember… even if it is time, they’re far enough along that coming out of the oven a little early won’t hurt them.” She laced her fingers with his, and she stroked his palms firmly, trying to help him relax. “I can feel the tense trembles in your ribs, love. Relax, okay? Deep breaths. Just breathe with me, and relax.”

Labor made him very jumpy- things would never change as far as creating life went. “Would talking help?” She murmurs softly.

"I-I suppose..." He answered quietly, before he kissed her head. "How do you feel?" He asked gently.

Toki lifted a hand back and cradled his skull with a tender thrum. “I feel stuffed full. Stretched.
Sated- very sated ,” She emphasized that, “and sore. A good sort of sore.” She mused. Toki wiggled back against him with a quiet, soft noise. “So, when we’re free to move again, do you want to get my switch and go cuddle in the birthing nest?” She asks quietly, and looked back at him. Her fingers rubbed along the back of his skull, soothing him quietly as she tried to twist enough so she could look at him slightly better, while letting him cradle her belly like a lifeline. “I’m totally going to beat you next time on Mario Kart.”

He purred quietly at her touches before he smirked at her. "You beat me? You. WISH." He laughed gently. "I am unstoppable."

“You? Unstoppable?” Toki had a good laugh. Like a good couple minute laugh, and then gave him a cheeky grin and rotated her skull around to kiss him. Toki gave a soft squirm to try and get more comfortable- it also checked their status. Nope. Still firmly knotted together, and not going anywhere.
Blegh. “I hardly doubt that, mister ‘crashes his cart into all the bananas’. ”

Under his fingers, her belly gave a twitch, firming up slowly but surely around the navel and starting to spread. Perhaps ten minutes from the first.

"And I still make it in first place." He kissed her gently as he gave a shameless hum, before his hands picked up a delicate kneading motion on her belly. "Ten minutes." He murmured.

“First place in my heart.” She kisses him gently in turn, and then exhales softly across his neck as her belly fully hardens. “Ten minutes.” She repeats, eyes closing. “Okay… Maybe… I mean… I don’t really want to call your dad while we’re stuck together, love. That’s… Just because he’s had his hand up there for medical means does not mean I want him to see us being intimate. But if this is the big event...” It wouldn’t do to waste time. “What do… you think we should do?”

Toki didn’t know- so she was going to leave the choice up to him.

"Well... There's no pulling out until I deflate.” He sighed, before he kissed her cheek. "Rest a little, I suppose. There's no reaching the switch from here..." He suggested lightly.
So no calling yet. Good enough for Toki.

Toki shifted and snuggled into him with a warm and pleasant sigh. “A little nap before we play sounds good. I dunno about you, but you worked me over gooood.” She purrs. “My breasts don’t hurt, my body is relaxed—” or would be once this contraction—ah, there it went, “and I am completely content to nap here in your arms.”

"Then let’s stay here until we either come apart or things get worse, yes?” He suggested lightly, kissing along her neck before he settled and relaxed with a smile. "I love you~"

"That sounds good to me." She rubbed her wings against his ribs with a soft, pleased sound, and sighed at his kisses. Toki was relaxing in the best way, her eye lights dimming contently. "I love you too.” She purrs. Her eyes drift shut, and she relaxed as she napped a bit in his arms.

Toki didn’t nap deeply though. Her body tensed up every ten to fifteen minutes with a contraction—right up until his knot deflated enough for him to slip free.

Once he popped free, there was a gush of sticky fluids—orange mingling green—and the cramping in her lower back eased.

"Mmmn, look at that." Toki mumbles, shifting to peek at her legs. "We made a mess."

"Did I make your water break?” He asked worriedly, having looked at her hindquarters as their mixed mess spilled onto the nest. "There’s a lot of fluid here…"

Toki gave a soft laugh. “No, no. I didn’t feel a pop. This mess is all on us. Well… You, mostly.” She shifts, and gathers the blanket under them. It was soiled already, so she used it to carefully mop them both up. “But, we can have your dad come check and see now if you want— he should be able to tell if I’m dilating or not- or scent if this is actual labor. He did last time with our twins.”

“No.” He shakes his head after a moment to decide. “We’ll rest a bit more. If anything happens, we’ll give him a call. Your body was probably just telling us that it wasn’t time for… Well,” he coughs, “intimate times.”

She laughs. “Probably. I want to nap a bit more, and we’ll see how it goes. I already feel better. We can game after.”

He smooched the back of her neck, and spooned up close to her again with a pleased rumble that tickled her wings. “Sounds good to me.”
Toki got one whole week of false labor starts. They were an utter delight- an utter, and absolute delight. She’s fairly certain that Tenebris was going to have a heart attack if the litter just didn’t up and come here soon.

Despite the false scares, the house was busy. By the second of June, the entire house was put back into order. Toki had a living room again, and the entire bottom floor had been redone in tile. The bathroom was fixed, and everything was… Well, in order.

Toki was, at fifteen weeks pregnant, painfully huge, and nothing was comfortable. She was, however, happy to have her home in order again- her instincts shifted from her bedroom being the only safe haven to the whole house being included as a den and haven once more, so she was able to relax downstairs on the couch with her family.

And just her private family too- for the first time in literal weeks, the house had only her, her husband, and her two amazing children inside.

Well, and Stag of course. The deer beast was currently curled up behind her knees, and resting their head on her hip.

She was stroking their brow as the two of them watched Papyrus sitting on the floor with the twins, currently getting his rump handed to him in a game of Uno. A heavily modified game of Uno, because Honey wanted to play by Honey’s rules, instead of the official rules.

Thankfully, the men in Toki’s life were more than used to her daughter’s eccentric ways.

“Daddy,” Honey chimes smugly, “I’m gonna play a wild card. You have to draw five cards.” The card in her hand, in fact, said draw two- but what did Honey care for the rules? Absolutely nothing.

Stag made a soft noise on Toki’s hip, and a soft tongue started to groom a strip of skin that was visible where her shirt had pulled up. Toki rolled her eyes, but let them do as they would, as she watched her little family with joy in her eyes and a relaxed piping bubbling in her chest.

"Ah jeez, five whole cards? I cant believe you'd do that to your dear old dad." Aliquam put a hand over where his heart would be with mock insult. "Well, what happens if I happen to do this?" He then put down a switch card. "By Honey rules, that effect is now reverse onto you!" He laughed.

Her little mouth popped open, and she gave him an offended look, before wiggling a finger at him. “Oooo, Daddy, you’re good.” She takes five cards from the pile, and then her grin grows. One would think she was the twin that had the crocodile teeth- but no, she shared her Daddy’s amazing smile. Though it was now stretched in a grin like her Uncle Sans. “Hehehehe.”

Her high pitched giggle promised nothing good.

Skylar peeked over at his sisters cards, and he grimaced. “Oh boy.” She’d gotten three draw four Toki laughed from her spot on the couch. “You three are great to watch, you know. So, who has the most cards?”

“I do!” Honey exclaims with mischievous delight, wiggling her nine cards at her mother. “For now!”

“I’ve got five.” Skylar gave her a sheepish grin.

Aliquam held up two cards with a grin. "I'm getting close to winning."

“Are you sure about that?” Skylar is the one who snickers. “Honey’s going to nail you good, Daddy.”

“Orrr I could get you.” Honey grins. “Snitches get stitches.”

She played her cards, and ultimately, Skylar ended up with the last of the draw stack in his hands. He sighed, and obediently moved the discarded cards over, shuffling them and flopping them over to be used as drawing material. “And now I have twenty one cards- but Honey has no more draw cards.”

Was he a little smug? Yes he was.

Toki giggled. “So, what does Daddy get if he wins?”

"Some love from Momma dearest, perhaps~?” He asked sweetly as he fluttered his eyes up at her.

“Some love you’ll get.” Toki gives him a loving smile, and blows him a kiss.

Stag makes a soft noise, and bumps their face against her hip, snuffling at her intently. “Mehhhhhhh.

“You get love too, Stag, don’t worry. I’m glad you came home finally.” She soothed, and rubbed their ears tenderly, scritching around their golden glittering antlers. The content warbling noise she got was absolutely precious as the deer beast shifted, folding their legs up tighter to their belly. How such a massive beast could become such a tiny deer was beyond her, but she wasn’t going to complain. They were precious.

“Stag’s jealous that Daddy gets all the loves.” Honey giggles, as the next round of cards goes around. She loses two from the four she had, so she was down to even numbers with her Daddy.

Well when he finds an enchanted doe monster to become his mate, He’ll understand why I get more love than he does...” He announced, before he smirked at Honey. "Well, my dear daughter... you were a fine opponent... however.” He then put down his card.

A skip-a-turn card.

"No one can beat me at card games!” As the card meant her turn was skipped, he put down his last card of matching color, and put his hands up. "AND THE CROWD GOES WILD!"

Honey’s jaw dropped, and she let her cards fall. “Foiled.” She said. “I’ve been foiled… But you know what that means…?” Her teeth opened in an almost canine grin at her Daddy, and she rocked forward slightly. “SPECIAL ATTACK MODE ACTIVATED! VENGETEEEEEEEENCEEE I!”

She shrieks.

She pounced, cackling as she slammed into his chest and headbutted him soundly with the flats of her horns so she didn’t stab him.
Skylar tossed down his cards with a sigh, but indulged his sister. While she went for a head on approach, he went around the side and worked to shove his father over, giggling as he tickled his ribs.

Toki laughed, delighted, and watched the show with Stag as the children launched their surprise attack upon their father.

"Oh heck!" He laughed as he was tackled down and for a short time seemed to be losing the battle, until there was the sudden sound of the door opening.

"GREAT SCOTT, PAPYRUS!" Tenebris barked. "ITS TIME TO SCIENCE!"

As he entered, one could hear the elder of his sons losing his shit out of sight of the doorway.

Toki did that sort of half flail of one to fat to actually get off the couch, but making the effort to attempt. She craned her neck over, her wings bristling up and disturbing Stag. “What the hell, Dad?” She exclaims, ruffled about his lack of knocking, but not surprised by it. So much for a quiet day.

Stag was much less pleased, and curled their lips up. The cervidae beast had the same crocodile teeth that their mistress did, and the cute little ‘mehs’ from earlier gave way to a more beastly hiss. “Cuddles interrupted." They grumbled.

The twins, however, scattered from where they had been wrangling their Daddy into submission. Honey went up over the couch, and Skylar zoomed under it.

Tenebris gestured at Sans, who was crying in laughter as he entered. "Toki I am SO sorry but I paid him twenty bucks to say that!" He laughed.

Tenebris just rolled his eyes and walked over to Papyrus with a cloth bundle in his hand. "Anyways. Your prosthetic is ready." He announced.

That got Papyrus’ attention and he sat up, smiling at the good news.

It got Toki’s attention too. “Well, if his leg is ready, then it’s worth the interruption. Though- that was the easiest twenty bucks you’ve made in a long time, hm Dad?” She quirks a brow at him.

Stag gave a soft grumble as Toki shifted to try and get up, and turned to plop their head on her hip. “Reeeest." They plead at her, and snuffle pointedly, lipping gently at her hip.

"Stag," She rolls her eyes, “I’ve been here on the couch for the past hour. I need up.”

"Mehhhhhhh." The fussy noise is adorable, but Stag gets off the couch, and their hooves click on the tile. They tilt their head up at Tenebris, and then make a vague goat like noise, before trotting off to the kitchen. “Will get drinks.”

“Thank you, Stag!” Toki chirps to them, and flails to try and sit up. “Can I get a hand, please?”

"Does he still hate me?" Tenebris asked as he came over and carefully helped Toki up. "I feel like he still hates me..."

"It took him some time to get used to me, it's okay..." Aliquam replied to assure him.

“It also probably doesn’t help that sometimes you guys forget that Stag is a they- technically, if we go off the old stories, Stag was created through ancient blood magic, using the sacrifices of six men, six women, six children, and six elders.” She gives a soft hum, and stretches her back with her lower hands. A rippling cramp up her spine steals her breath for a moment as she winces. “For all Stag looks like, well, a stag… Stag doesn’t have any defining genitals and hasn’t chosen for themselves what they want to go by yet. Or a name, for that matter.”

“What are genitals?” Honey chimes, poking back over the couch and startling her mother.

“What defines your body’s physical sex.” Toki chimes lightly in answer. “And also a topic for later, when you’re old enough to retain and understand everything there is to know about the many genders, or the lack-there-of concerning them. Anyways!” She claps her hands together, and looks up at Tenebris as she shifts off the couch and onto all fours. “Leg? Do we need to leave for it? Or is it going to be painless? I hope it’s painless.”

“Or Momma might chew on Grandpa again.” Skylar’s voice was faintly mumbled from under the couch as he reached out to poke at Tenebris’ foot.

"It's going to tingle, but otherwise be very painless." He answered, carefully lifting his leg as he looked down at Skylar. "Careful, pup." He spoke gently, before he stepped closer to Aliquam.

Papyrus cleaned up the cards around him before he looked up at his father, trying to hide the fact that he was exceedingly excited to have the new leg delivered so soon.

“Alright.” Toki laughs. “Well, I know what he’s going to do if it works like we hope. So… kids, you’re gonna wanna stay out of trampling room.” Her back aches up along her spine, so she moves over to Caeruleus to give Tenebris space. She peeks up at him. “Heeey. Heeeey, Cae. Your hands aren’t busy. You should put them to use and rub my lower back.”

"Pregnant mama wants back-rubs, you got it.” He shuffled over and sat down behind her, rubbing his hands before he began to gently rub her back, kneading into the sore muscles tenderly as Tenebris knelt down and got to work on Papyrus.

They started by taking off his pant leg over his new hip and after a momentary inspection of the prosthetic, he revealed the new prosthetic, which was a pure white bone color. "It will stain after long enough of being used in your magic field... How does it look?"

"Oh god, it looks perfect." Aliquam's eye-lights were glowing with excitement.

Toki sat down for Sans as he massaged her lower back, leaning forwards slightly on her hands with a soft groan. Gods, it felt good and hurt at the same time. She kept her gaze on the prosthetic, and arched her brows as he unfolded a full leg from what looked like such a small package. Well- their limbs did bend in inhuman ways when they weren’t thinking like they had muscles… Also at least it wasn’t a garish orange. She was definitely happy they seemed to have gone with a more… normal color, rather than the safety-cone orange she was imagining he was going to with.

"It looks amazing.” She agrees, giving a soft grunt as she exhales, her body tensing up with her belly. Stupid false contractions, she grumbled bitterly to herself. They were annoyingly uncomfortable, and she couldn’t make them stop, or force them to become actual contractions. “It looks like it’ll hold his weight too… What are his limits going to be lifting wise? Will he be able to do everything he used to do, if it integrates properly with his magic field?”

"Hopefully, everything he used to do and more… This was tuned to his magic frequency specifically, so hopefully it won’t have any less difference than his original had.” Tenebris slid the old prosthetic from the pant leg before he lined up the new one to his middle son’s hip. "Would you like to put it in or would you like my help?" he asked
"I- I want to do it." Papyrus took the prosthetic into his hands and slowly lined up the ball-joint, slipping it in before he twisted and popped the bone into place. "A-Ah!" The sound to come from Aliquam was a mixed sound of surprise. A moment passed, and it had him snaring the leg in his magic before he slowly lifted it up, giving his new toes a slow flex. "Heh... wow... Look at this, Toki..."

"Look at that indeed!" Toki gave a slow whistle. She leaned more into her brother in law’s hands, exhalting softly as she massaged her fingers over her lower belly. “Your toes move!” She stretched her legs out and wiggled her toes at him briefly in a sort of toe-to-toe wave, because she was dorky like that. “Do your tests.” She nods to him encouragingly. “Toe check, ankle check, knee check- and once you’re cleared… I hope you’ll wait long enough for me to get outside with you to see you run.” She beams.

"Of course!" A toe wriggle confirmed the first, he slowly rolled his ankle and sighed at the good feeling, bent his knee a few times before swaying his leg back and forth, his expression growing more and more excited. He carefully put his pant leg back on, before he spoke up again, "Everything's good so far... Father, give me a boost?"

With a strong grip, Tenebris grabbed Aliquam's hand and pulled him up to his feet, letting him fix his pants before letting him go again.

Standing on his own two legs, Aliquam fixed his legs before looking at Toki, his breathing picking up in excitement. "Toki, look at me!"

“Look at you!” She exclaims, beaming. She wiggles a hand at Sans, despite wanting to stay there and keep getting back rubs, and then rolls onto all fours. She pads closer, and gives him a look around from one end to the other, beaming wider and wider. Toki moved a little stiffly, showing she wasn’t the most comfortable herself. “No pain?” She asks, looking at how he was bearing his weight.

The twins shifted, coming out from around the couch and under it. Honey peered up at him excitedly. “Daddy!” She squeals. “You're standing on your own feet!”

"No pain. No cane. I'm on my own feet!" He laughed, tears welling in his eyes.

"Try walking around, Pap, go upstairs or somethin’.

"Right right, of course!" Papy slowly turned around, and started for the stairs, each step slow and careful but gradually picking up speed. He made it to the stairs and slowly started climbing... though he only made it halfway before he suddenly took off, going to the top of the stairs before coming back down, barely able to muster words in his excitement before he eyed the door.

"You know what. Go for it, get out of here, Aliquam!" Tenebris laughed, going to help Toki into his arms, knowing it would do her better to see her husband in his times of celebration.

He was motionless for less than a second before he whooped and laughed as he ran out the door.

"And there he goes." Cae laughed, pushing Toki carefully into Tenebris' pull to help her over her swell to properly get up.

Toki didn’t protest being lifted properly into Tenebris’ arms. She looped her arms around his shoulder, sitting on the curve of one arm with her legs dangling down. She laughed, her belly bumping precariously close to Tenebris’ face with how high he’d boosted her up.

She’d be able to see over the wall though- and probably see some of the mayhem no doubt “I’m going to have to duck to get through the doorway. But lets go out back and see where he went!”

The rains from the week prior had dried up, leaving the grass green and restored, and the land lush and damp, so they’d be fine going out onto the lawn.

“I’m gonna go get the music box!” Honey grins. “Daddy’s got legs! This calls for celebration! I’m gonna plug it into the kitchen.”

Skylar nods slowly and smiles. He looks up at his Grandpa and his Mother as his sister scampers upstairs. “I’ll go help her. Sissy’s wanted to dance with Daddy since she saw a father-daughter wedding dance on you tube. She didn’t think Daddy’d be able to dance with her until she got taller though. We’ll meet you outside!” He gave them both a cheerful grin and then chased his twin upstairs.

Toki hugged Tenebris’ head, and clutched one of her hands above her heart. “They’re so sweet… Pap’s going to love getting to dance with Honey.”

Holding her securely, Tenebris stole a quick kiss to the belly as he listened for the siege of chaos. Though his breathing picked up a little and he ended up turning his head a little with a thoughtful hum. "It's going to be wonderful... though if he asks to dance with you, I might want you to consider taking it gently... your scent is different.”

“Different?” Toki blinked, and patted his head as she was sniffed. She urged him on with a soft tap of her heels against the bottom of his shield. “How is my scent different?” She questions. “Ah-y’know what, you can tell me outside. Outside first, Dad, outside!”

There was a ruckus starting up outside- the barking and howling of the wolf guards, and the maniacal laughter of Undyne echoing across the village. Aliquam’s whoops were audible too, even through the house- they were making quite the ruckus outside.

“Ouuuuuut,” She whines like a needy puppy.

“Out?” Stag queries, poking their head back in from the kitchen with tea in their hands. “Your mate ran out. Very fast. Legs work now.”

"Indeed so, Stag." Tenebris answered as he stepped outside, before he reached up to rub her stomach. "Toki, you're smelling very close to birthing. So I adore you, but don't you dare break your water on my shoulder. I love you but I swear to god."

Toki rolled her eyes, ducking under the door way just slightly to make sure she cleared it safely. “Dad, it’s not like I can control it. It’s going to break when it wants to break. If I could control it, I’d have broke it when I went into that first false one.”

Stag followed them out and left them with the tea, before shifting forms and bounding off to go see what all the ruckus was.

As Stag left, Skylar stepped out, Honey fiddling around in the kitchen to plug in the stereo. “Daddy’s making a ruckus.” He chirps, and then scrambles over to his Uncle, tugging on his shorts. “Up? I wanna see, and Grandpa’s gotta hold Momma with both hands for safety.”

Cae grinned down at his nephew, before hooking both arms onto his underarms. "Up we go." He announced, turning to face the town as he put Sky on his shoulders.

"Listen, it sounds like he's heading past the park..." Tenebris mentioned, hearing as howling picked up as well from the wolf-guards.
"Sounds like he's not the only one celebrating either." Cae agreed with a soft laugh.

Toki gave a laugh, perking up as she tried to see higher over the walled off portion of their yard. She couldn’t see anything, but she could hear- and as she listened, she could vaguely pick up the feel of Stag’s excitement. There were high pitched squeals following the crowd now. “I think Stag found them too.” She laughs. “And Undyne. I can hear her laughing. I wonder what they’re doing- but I think it’s best I don’t know. That woman’s intensity will forever intimidate me.”

“Auntie Undyne is super nice.” Skylar held onto his uncle’s skull, and tried to see too. He had less luck than his mother, but he could feel his Daddy’s excitement. “Daddy’s having a lot of fun. He feels really, really happy.”

"Can you feel the energy in his soul?" Tenebris asked. "There's no doubt in my mind that he's drowning in endorphins right now. He's so happy..."

Toki smiled to Tenebris, and leaned against the side of his head. “Yeah- he’s absolutely overjoyed. I think the only other times I’ve felt him this excited was when the twins were born, and when we got married.” She gives a soft laugh, and then curls her secondary arm on the top of his head. Her fingers press slightly, and more of her weight leans into him as she gives a sharp exhale. A contraction rolled hard over her, and it stole her breath away as she leaned to try and alleviate some of the discomfort sitting upright brought her. “He can walk again- he’s got his legs and his life back. And, once I no longer need the help, I’m sure he’ll be off to demand his job back. He was never the stay at home parent. That was more my... forte.”

"Watch him go right up to Asgore with the whole guard making puppy eyes at him... Speaking of. Tokes, do you still have his armor?" Cae asked. "Because if he does and Asgore caves, he's gonna need it."

Tenebris rumbled quietly as he felt the squeeze before he reached up and softly stroked her arms. "Easy now, sweetheart..."

Toki made a soft hum, and slid her fingers from his head down to his. She clutched them tightly, squeezing as her middle held firm, and releasing once it did. She didn't let go of his fingers though-she'd probably need them later. That gave Cae a full thirty seconds of awkward silence, before she finally turned her skull to look at him and answer him. “Sorry about that.” She hums. “Yeah. We’ve still got it. He never got rid of it, but he couldn’t look at it without getting sad, so I put it in the closet. It’s all shined up too- ready to be worn again. He may need to strength build a bit to wear it again though. Months being unable to do his usual workout routine would make his body lose strength and stamina.”

Though, he’d regain it quicker again. Muscle memory was a fantastic thing.

Skylar tilted his head and watched his mother. He caught his grandpa’s eye, and mouthed slightly ‘Is Momma okay?’. "She's close to having the pups. They're starting to get antsy, so she just needed a second to get over the ache." He explained. "She's okay... Grandpapa's got her, doesn't he?"

Skylar seems to have accepted the answer for what it was. He nodded to his grandfather, and nestled down on his uncle’s shoulders. “You’ve got her.” He nods. “And a doctor knows best.”

“Yes he does.” Toki agrees warmly, and smooshed the top of his head in thanks. There was a kick from her belly, a grumpy pup shifting, and a foot pressed against his cheek. “Anyways, yes Cae. Armor is still good to go. It’s probably just dusty. I haven’t been able to stand up long enough to
There was a click from the kitchen, and then music began to play. Honey darted out of the kitchen, and grinned. “I got the tunes!”

"She got the tunes." Cae parroted, before he turned towards the path."Oh look, here he comes."

Safe to say, Aliquam was running like hell, and thanks to the rain keeping the dust down, it was more than clear that there was a very large group of wolves running behind him that could have been the entire royal guard on his tail.

And there was no doubt of the happiness on Aliquam's face.

"Here he comes."

Behind the guards, in her full armor regalia, was Undyne, cackling manically as she thundered after him, sounding not unlike a bag full of silverware in a tornado.

Toki watched their approach with trepidation. “… Are… Are they going to stop running?” She asks hesitantly.

Honey had no such hesitation- she ran out to meet her father, throwing her arms out wide with a screech. “DADDY! DANCE WITH MEEEE!”

"They're not gonna stop- holy crap get out of the way!" Tenebris grabbed Honey with his tail and quickly moved to the side.

Cae did the same as he watched.

Aliquam grinned and stopped before he did a flip to take off the extra speed before he landed hard, only to yelp as he got tackled by the wolves, who were all barking and howling with relentless glee as they congratulated Papyrus on his new limb.

Honey pouted and squirmed in her Grandfather’s grasp, making a huffy noise. “Don’t break Daddy!” She yells at the literal dog pile that her father was consumed by.

Undyne laughed, coming to a stop behind them. She started digging through the pile, scruffing wolves and setting them aside with a playful ruffle as she searched for her quarry. “Come on you lot, let him up! If you break him, we can’t heckle him to come back and work with us!”

Toki for her part was giggling, her grip like iron as she clung to Tenebris.

"You make it sound like I had any other plans you scaly DORK!" Bony arms reached out and grabbed Undyne by the arms, before one of the hands pointed. "HEY FELLAS! SQUIRREL!" He announced.

Canine based monsters, on occasion, were not all that different from actual canines when they were sufficiently riled. And given that they had just been chasing someone made of bone- well, the mob raced off after the ‘squirrel’ with a bunch of hooting and hollering, raising a ruckus galore.

Undyne snorted and hauled him up. “That never gets old.” She grins suddenly. “And who are you calling a scaly dork, you BONY NERD?” She switched their grips around suddenly- and then suplexed him.

Toki’s eyes popped wide. “U-Undyne!”
“Aunty no!” Honey yells. “You can’t break Daddy yet! Only Momma gets to break Daddy!”

Tenebris sputtered at that before he burst out laughing into Toki’s belly. "H-Holy...!" He wheezed.

Aliquam choked at what Honey said before he cackled and rolled over, sliding out of Undyne’s grasp before he locked his legs around her, hooking them hard around Undyne to lock her in place before he squeezed.

To her credit, Undyne held out longer than most might have. He was weaker with lack of practice and walking for months- but he still had strength. She ended up tapping hard on the ground until he let her go, where in she rolled away to wheeze and make sure he hadn’t dented her armor.

Toki laughed at both Tenebris hiding his face, and at her husband and his best friend.

However… With Undyne away from him and trying to catch her breath, this left him open. After Honey got tired of it, she simply teleported right out of her Grandpa’s tail grab, and proceeded to tackle her Daddy into the grass. She sat on his chest and pouted at him.

Aliquam laughed at his victory before he caught Honey with a smile, "Hello my pup! Look at me! I just made the might Undyne tap out!" He laughed.

“You did.” She smiles at his happiness, and then reaches out to mush his cheeks in her small hands. “Daddy. You have legs. You can walk. You can run. You can squish Aunty Undyne until she makes wheezy noises like when Gael has a hairball. Daddy.” She gives him her most serious face to ever serious. “Daddy. You can dance.”

He smiled up at her. "I can dance.” He repeated... and then it clicked and he snatched her up as he got to his feet. "I can dance! And I can dance with my baby girl!” He laughed.

Honey squealed happily, and threw her arms around his neck. “Dance with me, Daddy!” She chirps. “Please? I got music and everything. I wanna dance with you!”

Toki watched with a fond smile, and lightly nudged the top of Tenebris’ head. “If you get girls out of me, you’ve got this to look forward to.”

"Then let's dance!” He laughed as he spun her around. "Skylar! Caeruleus! Can you go turn up the music?"

"Oh I don’t doubt that, though we'll teach them to Tango, and perhaps a lovely ballroom Waltz~” Tenebris purred in reply.

Honey’s laughter pierces the air, and it’s a jubilant noise that brings only joy.

Skylar guided his uncle inside with little kicks of his heels, and a few moments later, the music pumped louder.

The sound waves tickled over Toki’s wings, and she leaned down to speak with Tenebris while her husband and daughter danced. “Honestly, I can’t see you doing the Tango or a Waltz. Your tail would be such a tripping hazard.” She giggles breathlessly, riding the high of the ambient joy in the air. “Honey is finally getting to dance with her Daddy though. They’re both… Ridiculously happy.”

"I have a belt hook for a reason, silly girl... and of course they are, my son just got his full functionality back... he spent nearly a full year raising his children and recuperating with his beloved wife, and now here he goes, back to guard duty like he was meant to. I'm so proud of him.” Tenebris gave a warm sigh, smiling proudly. "And I'm proud of you too…”
“Of me?” She asks, incredulous, not sure if she heard him right over the sound of her daughter’s joyful shrieks and the ridiculous clanking of Undyne’s armor as the fish woman stole Skylar to dance with him—dragging Caeruleus into the mess too. The music was rumbling over her, and she felt her head bobbing with the beat. “I can understand being proud of Aliquam—hell, of the kids too. They’ve all been huge sports about the fact that you’ve all had to step in where I couldn’t, and take over for me pretty much when I was hurt. What on earth made you proud of me?”

She’d been a pain in the ass for a while now—growling, grumbling, the general beastly behavior… It was pesky.

He smiled and slowly lowered her to rest her against his chest, adjusting his grip to hold her in a supportive dancing pose as he carefully twirled her around. “You stayed alive. You survived the worst at least twice already...” He commented. "You came back to my son, you came back to your children, and to term you have carried a litter of children carrying the blood of the beast you know as your Papa, and yet instead of wanting them gone, you carry them so that I might have my own pups... You're so selfless...

Toki let her legs dangle as he supported her weight. It was uncomfortable on her back, but it wasn’t end of the world painful. She let herself relax in his arms, and breathed softly as her muscles tightened in warning. “I made a promise to come home.” She murmured softly. “And… Well, the children are innocent of whatever sins I may have committed. I wouldn’t have ever wished them gone.” She leaned up to give him a daughterly kiss on the cheek, and then gave him a cheeky grin. “I’m not selfless, Dad. I’m just… Me. I’m a whole box of strange looking rocks, and all of it makes up who I am. Thank you for dancing with me, by the way. You’re doing wonderfully.”

He had worried about her dancing too roughly and straining herself.

He smiled down at her. "I told you so~" He purred, pecking her head with the same admiration. "You have such little faith in me sometimes~" He teased. "I had to learn all these dances when I was younger... The tango was just my fun little side project with his majesty's past adviser."

Toki gave a soft laugh, her toes curling where they dangled. “I never learned how to dance, really. Nothing more than the usual head on the shoulders sway. Tango is a lovely dance. If I had to learn any, though, I think I’d like to learn how to Salsa dance.” She shifted, and under his fingers her back was starting to tighten up, followed by her belly hardening against his middle. She knew the signs, and dropped her voice down low. “Another contraction is coming.” She says softly, closing her eyes and breathing into him with a soft, calm tone of voice. If she was calm, they would be calm—she couldn’t panic and expect them not to panic. “Just sway with me. It’ll let it pass easier.”

"Of course, my dear." He focused on the muscles against his form and as the contraction passed over her, he slowly turned in a way that would make her sway and bend both against and away from the muscles in question, hopefully a method that would bring her some relief.

It brought her a little relief, and she sighed into his neck. Her belly was still hard and heavy like a rock, but the knots in her back eased. She let out a tiny, unbidden moan. It didn’t leave past them thanks to the music. “Thank you,” She mumbles, “Whatever you’re doing is helping the back pains tremendously.”

When it passed, she leaned up and rubbed her forehead against his shoulder. “You make a pretty good partner for helping folks through contractions when you’re not a panicked mess in the car. That’s not just a doctors skill either. Thank you.”

"Forever and always at your aid, my daughter..." He promised, "After the first time, it's always something I can handle, and you're no exception..." He purred.
He watched Aliquam dance with Honey, smiling at the look on his face. "He's been given new life... he's going to be just like he was before... energetic, happier... indescribable joy... He's going to run with his children, with you... didn't you wish for that before?"

"I did." Toki smiles slowly, almost whimsically as she watches Papyrus twirl Honey across their cement patio. Father and Daughter alike never had looked happier, she thought, than in each other’s arms and dancing like no one was watching. “I still do. And once the litter is weaned, I can work on getting back into shape, and he and I can run again.” She looked up at him with a lopsided grin. “Right now though, I struggle to waddle across the house without being winded- I doubt I could run anywhere, even if I tried.”

"You'd be surprised by the stamina of a mother." He chuckled lightly, before he hummed as he saw Aliquam come over with Honey, smiling warmly. "Care to trade, my son?"

"Yes please, Father."

"Of course." The older male nods. “Now remember, you must be careful with her; she is ready to pop any time now.”

"Fatheerrr... Give me my wife." Papyrus whined as he made grabby hands with his free hand.

"Alright alright, here you are." Tenebris knelt down and slowly set Toki down, a smile on his face as he then took Honey, pecking her head sweetly.

Toki very nearly continued to go down once she was set on her feet, her body used to and more comfortable walking on all fours. However, she instead straightened her back despite the bristling cramp that ran up her insides, and took a step over to meet her Husband as he traded off for Honey.

Honey settled nicely into her Grandpa’s arms, headbutting him with an affectionate coo.

Toki curled her arms around her husband’s shoulders to give him the first proper hug in weeks. “Hey there, handsome.” She smiles. “Did you have fun with Honey?”

Tenebris cooed as he headbutted his grandchild and went off to dance with her as Aliquam had his moment with his beloved.

"I'm going to have more fun here in a moment" He told her as he hugged her firmly around the chest. "Oh Toki this is so wonderful~" He cooed happily. "I can walk again, I'm gonna get my old job back, and I'll be able to do so much more again! No more sulking about the house because of my inability... no more missing things just because I couldn't walk or run..."

She grunted at the firm hug, but let him have his moment. She had the magic to reinforce her bones, so she wasn’t walking glass anymore. “It’s going to be good to see you back at work- and though I’ll miss you at home, I’m going to be happier knowing that you’re happy at work instead of at home where you feel so stifled. No more missing things indeed.” She agrees warmly. “Speaking of... Do you want to dance?” She grins, and moves her hips in the start of a basic swaying motion. “I don’t know how to do anything better, but... I would like to dance all the same."

"I think I'd like that very much.” He kissed her head and began to gently sway with her, much like what Tenebris had been up to when he had her.

Toki let out a soft, dreamy sigh as she leaned into him. Her eyes drifted closed as she inhaled his scent, her middle tightening in another breath stealing cramp that painfully lingered for some time. She didn’t show much in the way of visible cues beyond tension, but she did lean more into him. “Mmm... This is nice.”
She was frankly surprised he could hold still long enough to dance with her like this.

"I'm glad you think so." He kissed her again, giving her a small twirl before he giggled and lowered her into an adoring dip. "I love you so much, Toki~"

Toki was in a world of pain as he twirled and dipped her mid contraction- the intense pressure in her uterus was nearly blinding, and by the time she was upright again, it was all she could do to simply drape against him with a soft noise to let it pass. "I love y-"

Her words were interrupted. There was a popping feeling- a releasing sensation deep inside her belly- and then her water broke, drenching her legs and the patio below her with jelly like florescent green amniotic fluid as she stared at him with wide eyes.

"Oh... Oh shit."
Chapter 153

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And now the moment you’ve all been waiting for. Except broken up into many chapters because it got very long! So hope ya’ll can wait a couple more days for the best parts yet to come. When Silver and I write, we write- and in depth we go.

Oh shit indeed.

Surprise sank in, and then shock, and Papyrus froze on the spot, weakly stuttering, before he turned to the oldest monster there. "FATHER!"

Tenebris turned then he blinked, before he sighed and smiled. "I warned you, didn't I?" He chuckled and set down Honey before he came over and pat Papyrus' shoulder. "There there, Papy... it's gonna be okay, it's just her water... It should even give her some relief..." He smiled at his son then looked to Toki. "How do you feel?" he then asked.

Honey peered at the mess below her mother and then peeked up at her. "Momma?" She tilts her head. "Did you pee?"

Skylar and Cae were released by Undyne as she recognized what exactly was happening, and she backed out swiftly. "Nope, nuh-uh, don’t need to be here for this. Call me when there’s babies to see."

Skylar watched her leave, and then shook his head at Honey. "No, Honey. Momma’s having the puppies."

Toki was still frozen despite the chatter going on, still bracing as much as she could on Papyrus while he had his minor freak out. She was still dribbling and draining, and it was utterly gross. She glanced up at Tenebris once the contraction ended, and blinked slowly. "I feel sticky." She says. "And wet. And like I’d really like to get out of these clothes, but I know I’m still..." Her face twists. "Dripping."

Cae grinned at that before he turned, "Honey, Sky, you kids think you wanna stick around for this or do you want to bail to find what Solstice is up to?" He asked.

Aliquam settled down thanks to his father's influence and he sighed against Toki's stubby mane, before he pecked her head. "Father, I'll get her inside... Do you have any ideas for what to do?" He asked.

Tenebris nodded gently. "Oh of course, my son. Let's get her inside and into her nest... You can carry her upstairs while I grab some towels and some warm water."

Aliquam nodded and looked to Toki, nuzzling her warmly. "Alright... Do you want to walk upstairs with me?"

The twins listened to the conversation being had, glanced to each other with a clear decision unanimous in their eye lights, and then looked to Cae. "Can we stay? At least downstairs? We wanna know what it's like and help if we can."
Toki listened to the children and hummed softly. "Someone needs to tell Asgore and Thumper. Sans, if you and the kids want to make the trek, that'll give us time to get settled." Her gaze slid back to Aliquam. "I..."

Her brow furrowed, and her legs shifted. "I need to walk. So let's walk. Just... Watch where you step. Your feet are a lost cause, but we don't need more in the house." Her eyes slid to Tenebris. "Plastic tarps. Put them on the floor of my bedroom please. I don't want to ruin it."

Toki was getting the urge to pace, and had a feeling she'd be leaking slowly for a while. She didn't feel like leaking all over her floor. Her bedroom had carpets on it in certain places, and she wasn’t sure she could get it out of the wood-grain that wasn’t carpet.

Tenebris nodded and got the head start on the tarps, getting them and getting upstairs to put them down while Aliquam helped Toki inside.

Cae looked to the twins before he smiled. "Yeah, let's get you two inside. Then I gotta go get Asgore and Thumper..." Walking inside behind Aliquam, he hummed. "You two can stay downstairs unless Momma says it's okay to come up, if not, Thumper can keep you company..."

The twins nodded slowly. Skylar spoke first. "We can be patient. In all the movies where the Momma has babies, she’s wheeled back in a hospital and everyone waits out in the waiting room, so it won't be much different than that."

Toki gives a soft laugh, and leans into Aliquam as they pace slowly to the house. “Our kids are bright.” She smiles, and hesitates at the door. She pauses, and grimaces slowly as another ooze of slick makes her pants even more gross. She’d have preferred the human method this way- it was just water, not... Liquid like gelatin. “Though... I do hope everyone is in for the long haul. I don’t know how long this one will last, but there’s a good chance labor will take several hours.”

It wasn’t a 'water breaks and it's go time' sort of deal. The process of bearing children took time, even for monsters.

“We can wait!” Honey chimes to her Momma, and wiggles excitedly.

Toki smiles faintly and nods. “Good girl.” Taking a deep breath, she made her way across the kitchen, and headed for the stairs. She stared at them, and hesitated, unsure if she could safely climb them when she couldn’t see her feet, and she was incredibly off balance. And, y’know- she was covered in slime. “I need to wash off when we’re upstairs. Just a quick rinse with a wet towel. I don’t feel like a bath right now.”

"We can use the bathroom to wash off while Father sets up the tarps and everything else, make sure everything is ready for you... It'll give him the time he needs to cover underneath the birthing nest as well, and get the towels so we're completely prepared once the first pup starts coming.”

Toki nods slowly. She stares at the stairs for another moment, and then turns away. “Let's go to the downstairs bathroom so we don’t drip all over the bedroom floor.” She decides. Thinking of it pragmatically, it was also closer to the laundry room, so her soiled pants could be tossed away. Her turtleneck could serve as a ‘dress’ until she got upstairs. Toki waddles her way there, and eases the door open with a soft thrum. “Hm... Shit.” She looks at the cupboard and frowns. “Pap...? Can you get wash cloths please? I don’t really feel all that safe bending over. I’m not too sure I can straighten up again.”

He nodded gently as he helped her into the bathroom before he set her down on the toilet, he collected washcloths from the cupboard and brought them over to the sink to start running the hot water. "Have you had any contractions?" He asked.

"Not ye- ah, ha, ha, haaaaa... " As she got settled on the toilet, Toki tensed, her belly tightening as she went to slide her sweat pants down. Like before, contractions were intensely more painful without the cushion of her amniotic fluid there to muffle it.

Toki's hand came up to clutch the edge of the counter, and she braced with a soft groan. "You just had to ask, didn't you?" She groused, giving a soft moan. "Having one now. They were uncomfortable before. Painful now." Toki had a feeling she wasn't going to get to sleep through most of her labor this time.

He soaked the rags with the hot water and knelt down to gently wipe her legs clean, once he helped ease her out of her pants first. "That means it's just that much closer to being time. I'm not going to lie, I'm really kind of excited..." He laughed nervously.

Toki’s free primary hand slid over, and she may have clenched it on his shoulder. She tucked her head closer to her shoulders and groaned softly. “I am too.” She huffs in a shallow breath, scenting him and the pungent mess he’s helping clean off. “I’m really excited for the litter to be here. Hah… Ahhh…” Once it faded off, she could breathe properly again. There was a shift in her middle, and she grimaced as they kicked. “They’re ready to get here too. So… You’re ready to meet your little siblings? Oh- Papy, remember to clean your feet too.”

"You come first, my love. I clean you first, then I'll clean myself off, alright?" He hummed.

Toki nodded slowly and shifted her legs to let him clean. It was sticky and stubborn, so it took a little bit of scrubbing- but she insisted on cleaning her feminine parts herself. She did have some limits after all- and they were tender too, so there was that. Once Toki was clean, she shifted on the toilet, and leaned up to rinse the cloth for him, so he could work on his feet. “I’m sorry I got you messy, by the way. Though… Your face was priceless. You and your dad made the exact ‘oh shit’ face, you know- when my water with the twins broke in the car, and just now when we were dancing.”

He sat on the side of the tub before he smiled at her. "You think I care about the small mess? You're my wife and you're in the middle of labor; I don’t care about a little mess on my bare feet, which I can easily wash off."

Toki gives him a lopsided smile. “I know you don’t care about the mess. But I care about the mess- and it’s because I think of who has to clean it.” She gives a soft, shaky laugh, and stoops down to help him clean while she can. Her back doesn’t thank her, but his feet are mercifully easier to clean than her legs had been. He’d been secondhand splashed- she’d been basically in the front row seat of a water show without a poncho on.

“There we go.” She smiles as his feet sparkle cleanly- free of all the dirt he’d gotten on his run too. “I also didn’t want all that dirt in the nest. Like you said, I’m in labor- sanitary conditions are mildly necessary. Alright though- think your Dad has had enough time to get the bedroom ready for go-time?”

"I think he's had plenty of time and is now waiting on us to show up to occupy the nest." He answered. Finishing with his personal cleanup, he got up and tossed the rag to the sink. "Alright, ready to go?" He asked, holding out his hand.

She took his hand, and let him haul her to her feet. Her gaze roved over him quietly, and she was proud to say there was no awkward dripping from inside of her. At least, not with standing up. “I am, yes.” She nods. She waddles out, and makes her way to the stairs with him, where again she hesitates.
Anxious indecisiveness is plain on her face, and her fingers tighten on his arm. “… I don’t know if I can go up safely on two legs.” With how much she was leaning on him— which was a lot, if he even noticed it now that he was fully stable on his own two feet, she wasn’t sure she’d be able to safely traverse up the stairs on her legs. “I want to try. Just don’t let me fall, please.”

“I’ll be right here with you... you aren’t going to fall.” He promised. "I'm going to stay right here behind you... Or beside you, whichever you’d rather."

“Behind.” Toki decides, and shifts her grip off of him and onto the railing. Her fingers curl around it, and then she starts hauling her way up. She goes slowly, step by step, making sure she’s secure and safe.

She makes it to the very top, before another contraction rolls over her, and her knees quake. The last step is surmounted, before she leans on the wall, and groans very quietly, well aware that there were children within hearing range, and she would scare them if she started moaning in agony. She didn’t wait for it to end though, taking ginger steps into the bedroom, using the wall as a brace and her hovering husband as a safety net. She had a one track mind, Toki did.

However, stepping into the bedroom brought a new and interesting thing for Toki. From one step to the next, there was a sudden sensation of her entire sense of balance shifting— and then her belly was no longer pressing up so high. It was, in fact, hanging low. The litter had dropped down into position to let her body continue to open up.

And given her size, it was a literal drop, and if she had seen it, she was sure Tenebris and Papyrus had seen it too. It did make that specific contraction easier, though it did make her feel like she had a bowling ball in her hips. Her waddle was more pronounced as she stepped aside to let her husband in. “Um… Is everything ready?”

Aliquam entered as he saw his father bent over the nest, but he tensed up a little as the beast turned, his eyes feral with his crown protruding. A low rattle rose from the beast and Aliquam let a soft ‘Oh dear...’ pass his teeth. "It seems someone else wanted to be here a little more than Tenebris did..."

Toki hesitated at seeing the crown, and she froze like a deer in the headlights. However, ceasing all movement brought back the pain, though this time more centered towards her back, and she staggered a bit to brace on the nearest table to the door, her breath wheezing out of her with a soft, pained whine. “Oh. Okay. I was hoping to have a doctor here that was familiar with the process. Not... Hhhhhh...” Her soft distressed whine was accompanied by the flick of her wings as she braced and tried to stretch her lower back. She needed to pace, but she needed a back rub.

Indecision was strong, and she was flustered by the sudden and unplanned appearance of Papa.

Papa watched her warily but seeing her stumble from the pain had him coming over quickly and leaning up his head to rest against her side as he began to rumble and rattle worriedly.

Aliquam tensed up as he approached, but the supportive behavior had him sighing in relief.

Toki leaned her side quietly into his middle, breathing soft pained noises. It took a little while for it to end, and when it did, she straightened carefully. She let out a shuddering breath, her wings buzzing anxiously. “Ow...” She mumbles softly. “That was... That was rough.” She glances down at Papa, and swallowed. “Ah... So, hah, what made you decide to... come out? Also... I need to pace. So...” She held out her arm for Papyrus. “Ready to put those legs to use...?”

"Of course, darling." Aliquam gently took her arm in his own and helped her support herself.
Papa gave a low rumble in reply, his tail rattling behind him quietly.

Toki let Aliquam help her walk, and she set to pacing over the carefully placed plastic walk ways. The walking was unpleasant, but it seemed to help make her insides ease a little bit. She could hear a ruckus starting downstairs as the door opened and closed, and the excited yet muffled talking of people arriving at the house. She tilted her head and looked at Papa. “I know you can talk, you silly old man.” He’d done it before, when he’d successfully fooled her into thinking he was Tenebris.

Papa tilted his head and slowly opened his mouth. "I am... Excited... My children are coming..." He answered, though hearing the ruckus, he began to rattle and maneuvered around them to pace in front of the door.

“I know you are. We’re excited they’re coming too.” She says slowly, pausing as a cramp seizes her back. Her secondary hands go around to cradle her lower back, and she groans, before continuing her waddle-pacing. She watched him pace at the door, and there was a momentary worry for anyone who came through- before she decided they were on their own as far as Papa goes.

There was a moment where she rethought that though. “Papa.” She calls, deciding to put it out there lest he get overly grumbly, “If you bite one of the children, I’m going to boot you out and you won’t get to see the litter until tomorrow.”

It might have been said in a very light tone of voice, but her threat was very real. Her kids might have promised to stay downstairs, but kids were kids, and they would probably get nosy sooner or later. Thumper also made no such promises.

"Understood..." He rumbled quietly in reply, picking up on the footsteps that were steadily growing closer to the top of the stairs.

Toki’s wings perked slightly at the set of footsteps coming up the stairs. Muffled, she couldn’t tell who it was, but she knew it wasn’t one of the kids. Unless they were trampling up the stairs like a hoard of unruly elephants while chasing their summons, they were usually silent.

She looked up at Papyrus, and then startled to waddle for the nest. She needed to sit down if they were going to have visitors. Toki had no pants on and had no desire to accidentally flash Asgore, Grillby, Sans, or whoever the hell decided to visit the laboring mother.

The door opened just as she got seated at the edge.

Asgore’s fluffy white foot poked in as he peeked around the edge. “Toki? Boys? Everything going okay? Can I get you guys anything?”

But upon the confirmation that was indeed not a child, Papa snarled sharply and lunged at Asgore, snapping at his toes and sending the king stumbling backwards.

“What on earth?” The king let out a startled sounding bleat as he fell backward, landing against the opposite wall.

“Sorry, Asgore!” Toki calls. “That’s not Tenebris. We came upstairs, and Papa is out to play. He’s on guard duty right now, I think- he might not know it’s you. We’re okay. I could use something to snack on though, and maybe something to drink with electrolytes?”

She needed food now in case she got nauseated later- food made energy, and she had five she had to deliver. She had to deliver them- Papa couldn’t do an emergency c-section if she needed it.

There was a faint groan from Asgore recovering against the wall before he got up, "Do you think you want some raw meat more? Or just some fruit or something light to keep your appetite sated?” He asked as he pushed off the wall and came to the doorway, watching to keep from Papa's striking range.

Toki’s brows furrowed lightly, and pondered what she wanted to eat. “Maybe both?” She asked lightly. “If all else fails, and the meat is too heavy, Papy and Papa can eat it instead.” She gives him a smile in the doorway. “Thank you. Anyway, I don’t know if we have anything with electrolytes in it, so if we don’t, maybe just some water? Or juice. Juice would be fantastic.”

She flicks her wings, and leans into her mate, giving a soft, pleased thrum, nuzzling into him as the reclining motion gives her some relief in her discomfort- and lets her feel the shift in the litter.

"Sounds good, I'll be back upstairs in a short bit." He told her, starting downstairs again with a side glance to Papa, who rumbled quietly as he glanced back at Toki and Papyrus.

Papy glanced back at him, but as Toki leaned to him, he smiled and wrapped his arms around her. "I love you... are you doing okay?"

"My back hurts." She says softly, and relaxes into his arms. “Pretty sure another contraction will be soon. They seem to be coming… Quick.” She was anticipating a slower delivery than this was playing out to be. “Do you remember the acupressure points? Maybe that would help.” She asks him, softly peaking up at him and also peering at Papa while he stared at them. She wiggled her fingers at him in awkward greeting.

Was he just going to stare at them when he wasn’t alert to sounds in the hallway…?

He nodded slowly. "Let's sit you down so you don't buckle when I push them... okay?" He suggested. "I think Father is going to remain vigilant so hopefully he does not interfere too much when you start becoming vocal.”

Toki nodded. “Wise idea. I don’t really want to see you bit.” She shifts away from leaning on him, and rolls to lay on her side. She settles on her right side, and then makes a soft, frantic noise. “Nope. Not right side.” And then she rolls. The left side is much, much more comfortable and stream line feeling, and she exhales pleasantly. “Okay. Much better. This work?”

He nodded and took his position behind her back, his hands slowly tracing over her muscles before he gave a small press in some sore muscles. "Here, perhaps?" He purred.

She gave a soft keen, her foot kicking slightly as it sent tingles down her leg. “Ow. Yes- there. Just… acupressure. Please.” There was a shift, and then her body tensed up. Yep- a contraction steam rolled right over her, and she knotted her hands into the bed, panting softly as her toes splayed in discomfort. She warbled her discomforts out loud.

He pressed his thumb carefully into the spot she asked to press at as well as ran his hand along her midsection, cooing gently to soothe her.

Papa twitched before he slowly got up and sniffed her as he came closer.

Toki’s eye lights focused on Papa as he came closer, and she offered one of her hands to him to give him something to do- something productive. She could squeeze his hand with no problem, and not worry about breaking it. Her secondary hands worked at kneading the blanket under her while her mate attempted to soothe her, and pressed his thumb into her back. It did seem to help some, and her soft, pained sounds died off slightly.

“Pap...” She mumbles slowly through grit teeth, “When it’s over… Can you check me?”
"Check you?" He asked, before he blinked. "Ah, you mean your dilation?" He asked.

Papa sniffed the offered hand before he rumbled and laid down, delicately grooming her palm with a soft purr.

“Yes, my dilation.” She nods, and feels her pride swell. “This is why I married you. You’re the best.” She did pause however, as Papa scooted closer to the nest, laid down partially on it, and then… licked her hand. Well, groomed it would be more apt. She made a small face. “Y’know… If you want to groom something, you can groom my mane, Papa. I wouldn’t mind right now. I’ll let you know when I need my bubble space again.”

Papa smiled and nodded, slowly kneading his designated spots with a soft hum. "I love you too, Toki~"

Papa rumbled quietly at her words before he crawled a little closer and leaned up to nuzzle her forehead with a warm rumble before he started a gentle grooming of her mane, rumbling all the while to help her feel better.

Toki opens her mouth to chitter softly to Papa in beast speech, telling him he was doing a good job in keeping her comfortable and feeling better. When the contraction ended, her body relaxed, and she let herself go limp. “Mmmm…” A soft, tired noise left her. “Alright… You know how to check my dilation?” She asks Papyrus gently, not having moved.

She’d need to be on her back for it- but they needed an accurate base to go off of. She needed to be four fingers wide in order to push. She wasn’t going to risk pushing early- not with the fact these were beasts, and beasts had all kinds of ridges and other unpleasant things.

"I think so, yes." He nodded gently. "I will simply need to sit between your legs and have you relax while I give it a feel..."

Papa purred at the beastly uttered praise, and his tail began to wag quickly.

Toki nodded to him, and shifted. She rolled onto her back, which was exceedingly uncomfortable- and then she shifted, and propped herself up on Papa, putting her back against where his chest was, letting him peek over her shoulder, or keep grooming her, but more along the back of her neck. “Alright… This should do. Thankfully, I don’t have lungs.”

Toki hesitantly spread her legs. Her turtleneck had pulled up, cupping only the bottom of her belly. She was sorely getting tempted to pull it off, as it was chafing on her and she didn’t want any fabric besides the nest touching her suddenly- but she’d worry about that in a minute. Her lower half was bare to him, her nether parts a little swollen looking, and stained a darker green from the slow leaks of amniotic fluid.

Papa cooed happily at being leaned on and he leaned his head on her as he started to groom her more affectionately.

"It’s a good thing I just washed my hands, eh?" Papyrus smiled slightly as he got into position, feeling along her entrance to see if it would be slick enough to allow him to slip his fingers inside without additional lubricant.

Her legs twitched as his fingers prodded her, and she made a very clear face that said no, no it was not slick enough without additional lubricant. She thrumped a soft purr to Papa, however, to let him know his grooming was appreciated. “It is good indeed. Though— Lube up? I’ve… never felt all the textures on your fingers quite like this before.” Everything felt sensitive and tender, like her body was preparing to warn her if anything got hung up.

He nodded and gently patted her leg as he got up. "Let me get some lubricant then, I'll be right back." He got up and walked to the dressers to rummage and find a bottle of lube.

Why there?

Well, first option, he was a guy- of course he’d keep his lube there. And second… Children.

He had no doubt that Honey would use it to make a slip and slide in the hall-way.

He came back and tucked it under his arm for a moment to let it warm up. Once it was warm, he put it on his hands, quietly kicking himself as he remembered that no, there were no such things as gloves big enough for skeletons. Barehanded it was. "Alrightie, I'm all lubed up, here we go..."

Toki let out a soft, sound and nodded. “Alright. Just go slow, please. I’m tender down there.” She shifts, her legs opening wider for him, and gives him a slow smile.

"Of course, darling." He smiled gently, slowly applying some lubricant to her folds before he pushed a finger into her, going to see if he could get deep enough to feel her cervix.

One finger was stopped by the rest of his knuckles before he could get deep enough. She didn’t seem bothered by one finger though, and the lubricant seemed to help. It was cool feeling and soothed some of the ache. Her fingers shifted, and she rubbed her belly through her shirt, the litter squirming slowly inside of her. “You’re not hurting me.” She informs him warmly, knowing communication was good. “Do you feel anything?”

"No, 'm not deep enough yet, I'm gonna have to add another finger, okay?” He hummed softly.

Toki nods. “Go ahead.” She lets her head roll back into the soft grooming motions of Papa, and focuses on that. “Your hands are smaller than your Dads hands. They don’t hurt as much as I remember his did with the twins.” She informs him warmly.

A brief nod was given and steadily Aliquam pushed another finger into Toki's body. "Alright..." He gave a slight push but he smiled, and gave a nod. "I think I feel it."

Two fingers was more than enough to do what was needed. Toki made a bit of a face as his fingers had to press further in, but his fingers could touch her cervix.

She was a little less than two finger widths in in diameter for dilation- so roughly four or five centimeters.

“H-how am I doin’?” She asks, her eyes flicking to him as her fingers nervously tap on her belly.

"You're doing well... If I had to guess... Four centimeters... perhaps five if I'm generous..." He answered, before hearing a soft hum that made him look out.

"Well... not the first time I've seen it, but probably the last time I'd want to see you guys in a pose like that..."

_Oh crap..._ Aliquam groaned quietly. "Hello, Caeruleus…"

Toki’s hand shifted, and she took a firm hold on Papa’s shoulder, so he didn’t dump her flat on her back to go chase his son out of the room. Her face flushed a bright emerald. “Sans.” She greets. “Erm… Well, I suppose it’s fair. I had my hand up yours- you get to see your brother up mine..."
Worst trade off ever, but y’know. “So, uh… Looks like you have food. Food is good. Lets talk about food. Once… y’know… Papy’s out. Four centimeters you said? Close to five? We’ll go with four. Four is a good number. Eight is transition, and that gives me four centimeters of time before I could get… icky feeling.”

If it was one thing her family had learned about her, it was that Toki babbled when she was flustered.

Cae gave a small smile. "Hey there, yeah, I brought you a beef loin steak on a plate and a fruit salad in a bowl. Cross contamination, yeah?" He chuckled.

Aliquam sighed quietly before he looked up at his brother with a smile. "Thank you for bringing her some food, Caeruleus. Father chased out Asgore rather than let him even come in."

Toki nodded, and then shifted to sit up once she didn’t have a hand up inside her any more. “Cross contamination is a no-no.” She agrees. “At least cross contamination outside of my stomach.” She snorts, and then looks at Papa and wiggles her finger at him. “No biting Cae. He has food. Food is good.” Toki scoots to the edge of the nest then, and then gives him a hopeful look. “Did you manage to bring up some juice too? Hydration is important.”

She makes grabby hands for the bowl and the plate. She’d share the meat with the boys- but she definitely needed quick acting energy now, to let her body use it for what it needed it for.

Papa rumbles quietly and follows her hands before he nodded and settled down to let Cae give her the food.

"Here you are, sweet thing... Enjoy~" He chuckled. "How's labor going?" He asked.

"Well, I’m at four centimeters,” She says as she balances the fruit on her belly first. The meat is set next to her, as she sets into the fruit first. She takes her glass of juice, and sets it next to her ankle. “And labor is about what you expect. Every five to ten minutes, it feels like someone is ripping my stomach apart with knives from the inside.” She nibbles the fruit ravenously. God, it was good. “I’m also having the intense need to have no clothes on. Everything feels like it’s chafing. But, I don’t want it to be awkward, so the shirt is on while people are still coming up. How’s it going downstairs? Kids behaving? Thumper and Asgore excited?"

"Asgore's a little shaken but he's thrilled, Thumper is excited but keeping the twins company since I told them I could give the all-clear to come up if I got one.” He answered. "They're really looking forward to meeting their new aunts and uncles."

Toki hesitates, and then gives a slow nod. “I need to put a skirt on, and then the kids can come up.” She squints over at Papa. “Asgore too.” She says pointedly. “And you’ll be nice to your mate, Papa.” She shakes her head with a sigh.

Before she knows it, her bowl of fruit is empty, and she gives it a sad look, before taking a sip of juice. Toki takes a couple nibbles from the steak, but finds that’s not really what she wants. Heavy meals weren’t her forte- but, a couple bites was enough for long lasting energy. She offered the steak to either her husband or Papa, whoever wanted it, and then made a shuffle to try and get off the nest. “Let me get a skirt on, and you can give them the go ahead.”

She hefted herself up and went to go rummage in the dresser for a skirt. She got one she didn’t mind getting dirtied, and shimmied it on, leaving it loosely tied, before going to go sit back down and sip her juice.

Papa rattled as she came back, now wearing a skirt, and he rattled before he rested his head on her shoulder, rumbling to welcome her back.

Aliquam smiled at her as well. "Well, feel better now?" He asked while Cae walked out to let the other know that it was safe to come back.

“Food wise, yes.” She beamed to her husband, and hummed as Papa cuddled up to her shoulder like a particularly snuggly leech. She lifted her secondary hand to pat his face gently. “Clothes? Fuck no.
I want to be naked- but it’s not proper to be nude around everyone else while in labor.” Toki may or may not have nibbled a bit more on the steak while she was sitting there. Okay, it was good, even if it was heavy. She may have wanted to share, but sue her if she was just going to be peckish with it.

Aliquam nodded in understanding before he leaned down to kiss her head.

Papa rumbled lowly before he set his head down and huffed. "He wants out... he is yelling at me to wait my turn."

Toki glanced back at him with a quiet sound as she leaned into her husband’s kiss. “Well... This is a big deal for him, Papa. He’s the only one here with the medical training to identify if something goes wrong while I’m pushing.” He’s given a soft smile. “It’s understandable that he wants out. I know you want to be here- but maybe you can come to an agreement to come out and say hello when the first one is here?”

He looked up at her understandably, before he rumbled and closed his eyes. After a moment, he relaxed before he sighed. "Yes, thank you, Tokiko..." He murmured. "How are you feeling? How are your contractions going? Have you measured your dilation yet?"

Toki gave a soft chuckle at his rapid-fire questions. “I ache, and I want to be naked right now but I can’t because guests are coming. We did measure- Papy thinks I’m somewhere between a four and a five.” She shifts to peer at him, and pauses. She takes his hand, and holds it against her belly, which hardens as she does so. “And contraction. On schedule.” It squeezes her insides, makes her a little queasy since she just ate, but it’s not anything that she couldn’t handle. She breathes slowly but surely, and lets his hand go in order to curl her hand over Papy’s leg and squeeze.

"Good... good..." He murmured, before he hummed and gently groomed her from his spot. "Any movement from the pups?"

“They don’t like contractions, so yes. I get lots of squirming.” Toki exhaled softly, and leans faintly into the grooming. Her eyes close, and she zones out just slightly as she rides the waves. "Mm... It feels like they keep getting more intense..."

There was a knock at the door that got her attention, making her look up. Asgore poked his hand in with a flinch, and waved. "I’ve got the kids," he says from behind the door, "Can we come in?"

"S-sure.” She stammers, trying to make herself look a little more put together.

The door opens, and Asgore steps in, followed by the children. He could see how she was sitting, and his gaze sharpened. He hesitated to hurry close though, his eyes roving over Tenebris. “Can I come close?” He asks, his hands wringing anxiously with the desire to do something to help. Waiting was the worst- he’d been a mess when Asriel had been born.

“Momma!” The twins slid around him, and hustled for hey. They didn’t jump in the nest though-moving to stand by their Daddy’s knee instead. “Is Momma doing okay?”

"Hello pups. Yes your mother is doing just fine. From what I can tell she’s taking her labor exceptionally well." Tenebris rumbled in reply, before he smiled up at Asgore, "Do not be scared, silly goat. They are your children after all, are they not?"

Asgore gave a slow smile and approached as soon as he heard Tenebris speak. At his side was Thumper. “They are.” He agrees warmly. He moves to kneel down in front of Tenebris and Toki, and hums softly. “How are you feeling?”

“Contraction.” Toki gives him a faint smile. “Will be better when it ends.”

“Oh?” Honey’s eyes go wide, and she wiggles her hands at her mother. “Can I feel?”

“Oh… Sure.” Toki guides Honey’s hand to her belly, and Skylar’s as well when he edges over shyly. Her belly is hard under their fingers, and Skylar looks amazed, while Honey looks bewildered. “It feels hard, doesn’t it?” She glances at Thumper and Asgore, and hums softly. “If you want to feel too, you can.”

Honey makes more of a face, and draws her hand back. “I don’t like it.” She decides. “You’re not soft. It’s weird.”

Asgore laughs, and slips a hand over to feel only briefly. “It’s not weird, Honey. It’s natural, and beautiful, and shows just how strong a woman your mother is.” He gives her a dashing smile, and then draws back to give her space. “Do you boys need anything? Drinks, food? I imagine you’ll be with her the whole time, so I don’t mind running errands for snacks and drinks. Labor is not a fast process.”

"I am not hungry." Tenebris answered, giving a brief shake of his head.

"Nor am I. I have better things to worry about than hunger." Aliquam answered as he leaned down to gently trail kissing along her head between her horns. "I love you~" he purred gently. "You’re doing wonderful…"

Toki smiled softly and leaned into his kisses, shifting her weight to lean into him slightly. “I love you too, Papy.” The leaning made her middle shift slightly, and she made a tiny, soft noise of discomfort.

The soft noise was enough to make Skylar leap back, looking frightened that he’d hurt her.

“It’s okay, sweetheart.” Toki soothed automatically. “Having babies isn’t pleasant. You didn’t hurt me.”

He nodded hesitantly, and moved to cling to his father’s knee.

Asgore looked at Thumper, and then gently nudged the bunny closer. “We’re not going to spend much time up here, son. Do you want to say ‘hi’ to Toki and your little siblings while we’re up here?” He asked him gently. “Or do you want to keep hiding behind me and keep being shy?”

Thumper looked up at Asgore with a small twitch of his ears, before he slowly hopped closer to Toki, smiling a little. "Hi Toki... can I feel too?" He asked gently.

“Sure, sweetheart.” She smiled at him softly. She took his fluffy paw, and put it against her belly, letting him feel how tight it had grown. Under his hand, it began to soften, and the squirming kicks of the upset litter was felt as they were finally given space to move again. “They don’t like contractions. They’re always very active after.”

"I can tell... poor babies... they're gonna come out soon, right?" Thumper asked, slowly rubbing her stomach to offer comfort.
“Soon.” She nods softly, adjusting her legs slightly. “They’re sitting heavily in my pelvis right now, but my body has to open up more for them to come out.” She reaches out and rubs his head gently. “You’ll get to meet them soon. I’ll wager probably before tonight, even.” She gives him a cheeky smile. “Why don’t you and the twins play some games downstairs when you go back down? Video games always make time fly for you.”

"Ah...” He looked up at Honey and Skylar. "You guys wanna go play Mario?"

Honey nodded enthusiastically. “Yes please! Having babies is boring.”

Skylar tilted his head, and looked to his parents. They had this - they didn’t need his help. Slowly, he nodded to his technical uncle, and then offered his hands to the taller bunny boy. “Mario sounds fun.” He nods.

Asgore laughs softly, and nudge them out. “Alright, little ones. Go play. I’ll be down in a minute with Caeruleus, and then we can all race together.”

Thumper nodded, and bounced out of the room with the twins.

Once the kids were gone, Toki made a face. “Having babies is boring?” She exclaims incredulously, not at all upset but more befuddled by how her daughter’s thought process worked. “Did she expect me to be like one of those television moms? Huffing and puffing, and three pushes and bam, here’s a baby? Or maybe shooting them out rapid fire like a pitching machine?”

Asgore lifted a hand to his mouth and covered his snort.

Tenebris pressed his face into her shoulder with a low groan.

Aliquam just smiled and shook his head. "She doesn't realize that unlike on TV, the birth does not happen as soon as you start watching..." Aliquam chuckled lightly.

Toki snorts a laugh, and pats Tenebris’ head. “Sorry, Dad. I know my jokes suck. But yeah- she’s young yet, she doesn’t understand how the world works.” Toki shifts, and tries to get comfortable. She looks at Cae and Asgore, and gives them a faint smile. “If it’s okay with the both of you, could I have some privacy now? I want to get out of these clothes. They’re chafing and I doubt you want to see everything.”

“Ah, no.” Asgore snorted and shook his head. “I’d rather not. I nearly fainted seeing my son being born. Childbirth is no joke.” He pats her knee gently, and then stands. “If you need me, just call- and you can perhaps put on your silky robe instead?”

The light bulb went on for Toki, and she clapped her hands together. “Yes! That’s perfect! If anyone else comes up, I can cover up with that. Thank you for reminding me. Will you toss it to me before you go? It’s hanging by the closet.”

Asgore nods and moves to do so, grasping it and bringing it over to rest on the edge of the nest for her. He gives them all a smile, and then moves to the door. “Caeruleus? Are you ready to come down as well, or did you have a few things you wanted to say to them in private?”

"Love you a ton, Tokes, good luck with the labor, call me when a head starts showing, I'm out." Cae gave a soft wave before he walked into the open closet, closing the door behind him.

And when the door swung open again, there was no one inside.

Toki broke out into guffaws as Asgore shut their bedroom door again, heading off the cats before they could invade. She shifted, and carefully squirmed out of her skirt, and then her shirt, before laying back naked into the nest. “Aliquam.” She says lightly, a little out of breath from laughing and undressing, but enjoying basking in her nudity too much to care. “Your brother is incredibly silly. I love all of you so, so, much. I need a massage.”

Wait, what? Had she said that last bit out loud?

"Well... I'm already going to be watching you for breaching. I could rub your feet while I'm down here." Aliquam offered.

Toki blinked slowly, and peered at him quietly. “Y’know… That sounds good actually. Just… Leg massage. Yes.” She shifts, and peers at Tenebris. “… I don’t want to be too presumptuous, but could I use your lap to rest against? You won’t get too dirty from this end, I promise.”

"Consider yourself in kneading range~" Tenebris purred warmly. "You get as comfy as you want to, my dear.” He ensured her, sitting up a little bit to replace her form against his in a more comfortable position. "How’s this?” He would then ask.

Toki got as comfortable as she could, and found his legs more than comfortable to relax against. “You know,” She murmurs, “I’ve had massages from both of you before, but I don’t recall them happening at the same time. This is a good way to compare them both, and decide who is the best masseuse of them all.”

The males looked at each other, but rather than growing competitive, they shared a mutual grin before they got to work. Aliquam’s fingers danced along her legs and feet while Tenebris rubbed her shoulders and kneaded her back.

To say she was in heaven would be an understatement. Toki went limp as they handled her, her body entirely theirs to move as they massaged and rubbed. Knotted muscles and tight tendons came undone under their skilled fingers and combined assault- honestly, she really stood no chance.

Papyrus started with her toes, massaging upwards until everything tingled from the tips of her phalanges up to her tarsals. Stress she hadn’t even known she’d had there melted away, and she was at peace. His hands worked up the bones in her ankles, up to her shins, and Toki’s not sure when she stopped paying attention, but she did. The bliss was too good.

She stopped paying attention to Tenebris a lot sooner, honestly. He had more muscles to work with, including her wings and lower back and up along her sides, but he did fabulously.

The pregnant beast floated on a sea of relaxation and bliss. She was aware, and every few minutes a contraction would roll through that would make her groan softly, and she could be soothed with soft hands and gentle fingers massaging where they could. They exchanged soft words over her head, talking about how she was doing, if there was any progress they could visibly see without having to reach in and check her dilation.

Toki honestly wouldn’t have cared either way. She spent the next hour and a half- maybe two hours, frankly- floating on what amounted to a slightly painful cloud nine.

However, her mouth got dry, so she roused up enough to finally sate her thirst. She had her husband hand her the juice, and she had Tenebris boost her upright- where in she paused after she finished the glass of juice, and very nearly dropped the empty glass.

Now that she was sitting upright and gravity was trying to aid her body, there was an intense pressure in her walls, and a cramping sensation that left her clenched and nauseated. Toki tensed, and rolled the empty glass out of the nest, trying to carefully sit up enough to get onto all fours. “I- I need to go to my birthing nest. Please. Now. Right now. ”

The massage had relaxed her enough to dilate for the first one to come.
Chapter 154

Chapter Notes

Strider Note: YES. CLIFF HANGERS YOU ADORABLE FOOLS. ENJOY THEM. Also there’s a lot of birth in this chapter. Loooooots of it. Don’t like, well, skip and hope you catch the surprise, which may be in this chapter or could be in the next one.

Also, if you all get the urge to draw the pups, please, by all means, don’t hold back.

Silver and I do not have the art skills to do it ourselves XD

Anyway, I apologize for the delay in the update. I lost track of time- I meant to update a couple days ago, but eh, y’know, life.

Her sudden urgency had Tenebris carefully flipping her over onto her hands and feet before he rolled out of the way of the birthing nest.

Aliquam moved as well, but stayed closer than Tenebris. "What do you want me to do, Toki?" He asked her gently.

"In the nest, behind me like before." She grunts, moving awkwardly towards the opening. “Dad? Can you handle-’” She paused at glancing behind her, and felt her stomach drop in time with the head slowly and painfully descending down. “Fuck. Fuck, fuck, fuck. Papa. Nooo. Papa, come on-fucking shit- okay.”

There was a clearly not Tenebris waiting at the edge of the nest now- and the first pup was coming, now, and she needed to get comfortable and push. She couldn’t deal with this right now.

“Okay. Okay.” She shuffled into the nest, and got settled on her side. Her middle contracted as she strained, and one of her legs kicked briefly, before she strained and huffed. “Papy. You’re… Gonna have to play catcher.”

He nodded gently and moved between her legs."I'm ready, give it everything you got." He told her, giving her foot a palm to press into to countermeasure her straining.

The palm was a good brace, and she leaned on her arms as she strained, her middle tightening as she huffed and puffed.

Thankfully, the pup seemed smaller than Skylar or Honey had been- but only just a little bit, and surely only smaller because there were so many packed into a tightly cramped space. The head moved down, and she could feel every ridge and spine along the top. It was not smooth, it was not nice, and she felt her eyes watering by the time the first contraction ended. She knew it wasn’t horns-horns came in twos or ones. No, this pup was coming with a tiny nubbly crown of spikes.

She’d made progress though- the head was firmly lodged in her canal, and she was as uncomfortable as hell. “Hah- oh god. It’s got a crown.” She gasps softly. “Holy shit. Crown. Sharp. Ohhh, fucking, fuck, I know where it got that from.” Her gaze flicked over to Papa, and his smug face tucked under his blooming crown. His crown might have been more warped, but it was bigger than Tenne’s was, and fuck all if the pup hadn’t gotten their father’s crown.

There was a shift, and she made a tiny distressed sound. “Wings too.” She couldn’t settle into the groove- it felt like it was too fast, like she hadn’t had time to brace, to feel the child move down and get into position. In all reality, she probably had, but probably hadn’t remembered.

The next contraction had the wings coming into her canal, and she made a garbled sound, bearing down and hoping Papyrus would do something to, well… help. The wings slowed the process exponentially.

Aliquam reached up and pressed his hand ever so carefully over her waist, giving a slow rub. ”Deep breaths, Toki... Do you want me to try and compress their wings?” He asked.

“No.” She shakes her head. She didn’t want to know what ‘compress’ their wings meant, but she had a horrible inkling it meant something incredibly and horribly uncomfortable for her. She had no desire for any of that, thank you very much- delivering babies was already unpleasant enough.

Toki took a deep breath, and exhaled, wincing as a kick from one of the litter made her middle flinch. She gave a soft, primal sounding grunt, closing her eyes as she strained another push. Progress was progress, contractions or no- though the next contraction was swift in coming.

All in all, it was perhaps five minutes from when she’d scrambled up until she felt her lower lips start to bulge. Her leg jerked against his palm, the burning pressure of crowning hitting her as a tiny stubby slightly gold colored crown began to push forth. Delivering without the aid of gravity was definitely hard, and she disliked all of it. “Aaah… Wh-what can you see? Is it okay?”

"The pup is coming out, slowly but surely... they're coming... they're coming and you're doing great...” He answered, before Papa began to warble and pushed slightly to sit between Toki’s legs.

Toki’s breath hitched as Papa easily nudged his son out of the way, and seemed to be warbling at her. She bristled at him, and her bones rattled as she hissed, a low and guttural sound- she drew one line, and he would be reprimanded harshly if he crossed more than his paws into the birthing nest proper. He was not her mate- he was her alpha.

Her hiss rattled off into a moan as her body contracted again, wanting the first pup out. She pushed hard, feeling her body stretch. She whined, her mouth opening with a hard pant, as her hands groped for something more firm to anchor on to than blankets. “Hnnnhlnng... ”

The head crowned outwards, and then, with a few pained pushes from Toki, popped free, shoulders slowly working forwards after. The wings were tucked close, and seemed to be stubbly little nubs as far as first views went.

He watched her mark her territory with the line and he slowly backed up, rattling in apology as Aliquam took a gentle hold of the head, though he gave a low grumbling rattle as Aliquam used a rag to quickly wipe off the pup’s snout and allow them their first shallow gasps that they could manage from the birthing canal.

Toki was a little relieved when Papyrus took his spot again. She strained a bit more- the shoulders were wide, so wide, so horribly, horribly wide with the wings. But… ultimately, the first pup slid out of her, brushing over her thigh and lessening the pressure inside her. It gave a soft, mewling cry, squirming with tiny, soft baby claws, slippery and slimy.

She panted, slumping a little bit for a moment to rest as pangs and aches traveled up her. “Let me…
Let me see? Boy? Girl?" She rested fully on her side, trying to crane around to see the newborn pup.

Aliquam moved to check before gasping sharply as Papa tenderly stole the pup from him, carrying it to the close-by part of nest to start grooming clean with croons and coos of pure love.

"Ah... Stolen ... But I believe it was a boy." Aliquam answered.

Toki responded with an instinctive rattling hiss, her eye lights narrowing and thinning as she growled at Papa. She lifted up a bit automatically, intending to go get the pup- which every part of her screamed needed to be nestled close to a mother’s warmth with access to milk for the first long time. Her body clenched up though, her nethers making her flinch and keen and settle back down. She wouldn’t be chasing after him, no.

But her eyes watched him, her teeth flexing in and out like an irritable crab.

"Honey, honey." Aliquam quickly shuffled closer to her and wrapped his arms around her form, kissing her head and neck gently. "Toki, Toki, let Papa have his moment, darling... As soon as he's content, he's gonna give the pup right back to you, safe and sound, without hesitation." He told her. "He's probably just imprinting a little through cleaning... He is the daddy, isn't he?"

Papa ignored her look while continuing to groom the pup until it's soft gasps and whines elevated to loud, shrill cries, reassuring father and mother and brother alike that the pup was strong. It was with those howls that Papa cooed gently before he slowly picked the pup up again and brought him back to the birthing nest.

Toki was a bristly grumbling mess as Aliquam curled his arm around her and peppered her with kisses. She hissed and growled softly in his arms, but through her instinctual need to have the pup close, Toki could understand. He needed to imprint his scent upon the pup, and cleaning was something he was good at doing.

However, that didn’t mean she wasn’t a little quick at snatching the pup close when he was handed back, snuffling him softly and whuffling to him gently as she tucked him to her chest.

He definitely didn’t look like Honey or Skylar did- he looked more like a tiny, fleshy little beast, with digitigrade legs, a tiny golden crown of nubby spikes making up the back of his head, and stumpy, fleshy chicken wings slapping in distress against her arms.

He was perfect.

His cries died down as she tucked him against her belly, and he settled down, little snout rooting blindly against her as he sought out the smell of milk.

Toki settled as he did, agitation leaving her frame. Tiny stumpy paws helped him locate a teat, and she let out a soft, throaty thrum as he latched on, toothless mouth gumming at her as he tried to work out how to nurse. She relaxed with a soft, content croon, eyes at half mast as her stomach twitched and pulsed slowly to prepare her for the next one.

Aliquam kissed her head proudly while Papa took a place of vigilance at her far end, rumbling as he sniffed for now close the next pup was.

Toki’s eyes sharpened a little bit, eyeballing Papa slightly as he settled near her back legs. She rumbled softly, sighing quietly, and looked up at Aliquam. “He’s going to clean the next one, isn’t he?” She asks, her voice sounding dry and rough. The pulse in her belly turned to an ache, and her leg lifted. She gave a slow push, exhaling as she felt something move down. “Mnnn... Hah... Would be... Easier if Da- Dad was here. Could hold your hands.” Her face pressed into the padded wall of the nest as she keened slowly and softly. “Godddd, I have to do this four more times.”

"There's nothing keeping me from holding you but your instinctual distrust of father's beast in this instance... if you trust him to imprint and clean the pups before immediately returning them to you, then I can stay here where I belong and help you through it." Aliquam told her with a gentle tone, his words heavily implying his thoughts on the matter.

Toki took a deep breath, eyeing him quietly as she seemed to debate taking offense to his implications. Her breath whooshed out of her in a hard rush, and she closed her eyes. “I don’t- hah- I don’t trust him to know what to do if... If one gets stuck.” She made a soft groaning sound. “But... Tenebris can come out if that happens.” Hopefully in time. She gave a soft keening sound. “I’m sorry for growling before. Just... Instincts. They say the pup needs to be warm.”

And who was warmer than the fire oriented monster? Perhaps Asgore with his mountains of fur.

Her hands spasmed across the blankets with nothing to hold onto, and she keened. The first thing she could feel was a rough, scraping texture, she wasn’t sure how to describe it beyond that. It was like a snake, but rougher, and there were horns. She keened in soft distress, trying not to squirm and disrupt the first pup as he nursed slowly and steadily.

There was a knock at the door that Toki barely heard. She was trying to ground herself with her nesting material.

The door peeked open, and Asgore’s fingers poked in. “I heard crying.” He says softly. “Is... The first one here? I’m sorry- I should have stayed downstairs, but...” He was the father too, and he was equal parts excited and terrified to meet his children.

Papa turned to look at him before warbling loudly. It wasn’t a deterrent this time, rather an invitation to entertain the mother when she wasn't having contractions or needing to push.

Aliquam smiled up at Asgore gently while shifting up in the nest and taking both of Toki's primary hands. "Come in if you'd like, Asgore... you will be able to imprint the pups as well if you'd like. They can be groomed by Father, but you could warm them up quite well." He offered.

Asgore nodded slowly but surely, and then padded into the room. He closed the door behind him, and made his way around the nest towards his step-son’s side. His eyes caught on the first pup, staring unabashedly at the little one as it nursed frantically at her teat. He crawled closer, cupping his paws to his muzzle. “Oh my stars.” He breathed.

Toki’s primary hands clamped tight over Papyrus’ hands, her secondary hands supporting her weight as she strained some. She panted when the contraction ended, and gave a soft keen. “Ah... Hah... Y-yeah. He’s beautiful.” She rasps softly to Asgore. “Mnnn. Nnnng...” Her head lowered, her raised leg trembling. She could feel horns grating down her insides, and she keened softly, low sounds of discomfort.

“A son?” Asgore perks softly. “I’ve got a son... He’s beautiful, by the stars...” He wanted to hold him, but that could wait- he needed to have his belly full first, and then Asgore could hold him.

Papa swung his head slowly as he watched her form move, before he gave a low rumble and extended a hand. He settled it on the lump where the pup was, right behind the un-emerged pup's head, before he rolled his fingers and pushed. The pup within gave a sudden shift and as if it had been moving oddly, the presence of the horns against her walls eased a great deal.

"Head was stuck..." He rumbled as he quickly returned his paw to his personal space.
“O-oh my ghhh…” She gave a soft exclamation. The sharpness of the horns eased, though the invasion of his fingers into her personal space was not very welcome. Still, now that the pup wasn’t stuck, it practically glided out- and the head crowned and slid out with a couple pushes.

A few pushes past that, and there was a purple-scaled lump settled limply between her thighs, the long, bony tail still curled inside of her.

Toki collapsed, exhausted. Two was tiring- she’d been exhausted from two before. She had three-three more. God damn. She trembled as she held her husbands hands tightly.

“Oh my god.” Asgore murmured, eyes focusing on the flash of purple he could see. “Is it…?” It wasn’t moving. There was a fatherly anxiety cresting in his voice.

Papa picked up the pup and pulled it close as he began to groom it's face incessantly. Enough laps broke the membrane and began to clear the pup's airway before he lowered his mouth to the pup's and sharply inhaled, a loud bubble coming from its throat before he continued to groom them.

" Q-QIII! " At last, a squeal from the pup, who was now getting cold as Papa groomed them clean.

Toki’s shuddering breath eased as the pup let out a cry. She looked at the little one- took a good look at it- and then made a soft, instinctual hum. “It’s a girl.” She mutters tiredly. Her head slumps down onto Aliquam’s arms, and she does her best to ignore the cries from the pup, lest she get testy and demand her back before Papa was done.

“A girl?” Asgore perks, looking relieved at the tiny, squeaky sound.

“Mmmm.” Was the exhausted noise from the toiling mother who sorely needed a nap.

The pup seemed wholly unhappy at being cold and being thoroughly groomed, and though she was sightless and about as strong as one might expect from a newborn beast, she kept trying to wobble away on four tiny purple and white paws, making the grouchy ‘qiii’ noise the whole time. She was snuffling with her tiny nose, a soft pink tongue flicking out of a gummy mouth in search of warm food to fill her tummy.

"She's a little cold... Would you like to warm her up, my dear?" Papa purred softly, slowly offering Asgore his firstborn daughter.

Asgore fluffed, looking startled to have been included in the process. He nodded though, and took her into his hands. She was so, so tiny- she was barely as big as his palm, if that, and yet she’d looked like she’d been so hard for Toki to deliver. He cradled her to his chest, crooning softly as she took a soft snuffle from him. His magic pulsed up and warmed her gently, and he lifted her to his nose, gently inhaling her scent. She smelled… Well, of his mate, and of Toki. Primarily of Toki though.

He spooked as tiny paws grabbed his mouth, and a little mouth tried to suck on his nose.

He’s pretty sure he died and may have gone to heaven. Yep. He’s fairly sure he did.

Still, he disengaged her, and warmed her gently with his fur and his magic, before looking at his mate. The pup started picking up with the unhappy howling. “She’s hungry.” He says gently. “Why don’t you put her back? You both seem to be okay getting closer.”

“Thank you for respecting boundaries,” Toki rasps with exhaustion, her eyes trying to drift closed for a short rest. She was tired, so tired. “Mmmm… I need a nap.” She whines softly.
Papa rumbled as he took the pup before setting her beside her brother, giving Toki a respectful nod. "I'm proud of you..."

Toki was too tired to even appreciate that fully. She gave him a thankful hum though, and shifted, drawing one hand from Papyrus so she could adjust the female when she had problems latching. Once she was good to go, Toki settled down again, resting with a couple tired, soft pants.

Finally she gave a soft grunt, and then flicked a wing, motioning Papa closer. If he was going to be acting as midwife, then he may as well do it properly- nearly two feet outside the birthing nest didn’t really work that well.

He noticed her gesture, and it took him a moment to decipher what it meant. When he did, he perked up with a thrilled chirp, slowly crawling closer until he was in a much more comfortable position within the birthing nest.

Toki gave him a soft thrum, and settled down. Her sides heaved with rapid breaths, and she panted quick breaths, trying to rest while her body did what it needed to in order to prepare. She was almost half done. It wouldn’t surprise her if her body had to take a break from time to time.

Asgore watched and smiled, staying out of the nest and not minding at all. In fact, he shifted the covering for them so the nest retained more heat for the pups. “Aliquam,” he calls softly, “do you think a couple cool damp cloths would help her any? I can fetch them for you if you’d like to give her a little bit of a wipe down between resting. Thank you for letting me be in here.” He might not have been here for the first, but that was okay- he still had a son, and that’s what mattered.

"Yes, that would do very well. Thank you, Asgore." Aliquam confirmed thankfully. "We'll let you know if there's anything else, because I'm sure you're going to be very dependable in a time like this."

"Of course!" He exclaims softly. “Of course! I’m going to try and make sure that I do my best to help you all.” He shifted to get up from the nest.

“Water.” Toki croaks. “Please. I need a drink.”

Asgore nods, and stoops down to grab her juice glass. He makes haste to the bathroom. Wetting a couple cloths is easy, but he takes a moment to rinse the glass, before filling it half way. He returns to them, and crawls up carefully. “Here, boys.” He hesitates though. “Can I hand these to them?”

“Mhm.” Toki mumbles, and lets go of Aliquam’s hands. She shuffles to try and sit up for her drink.

Asgore nods. “Help her with her drink,” he says gently, “She won’t appreciate if she fumbles the glass and soaks the blankets.” He holds the wet cloths out, and the glass, just over the edge of the line for Aliquam to take. Papa could take a cloth too if he wanted- but he wasn’t sure the beast would. After all- beasts were beasts, and tongues were just as good.

Asgore had just been thinking about this, his tongue hanging from his mouth, before he grunted and reached out, taking the cloth to gently wipe Toki's thighs.

Aliquam seemed to see the gears turn in Papa's head and he chuckled quietly, though he was thankful that his father did not fall that deep into beastly tendencies.

Toki shifted, and made a grumbling sound, before simply lifting her hand to take the glass of water from him. It shook, and she was glad Asgore hadn’t filled it. She took a deep drink, ultimately draining the glass, before offering it back. She parted her legs a little bit to let Papa clean her.
Toki didn’t press for Aliquam to cool her down. By the time she went to ponder it, she got the feeling her short break was ending, and she let out a soft snuffling sound, before trying to hike herself up just a little bit. She did so without disturbing the two feeding as they were on lower teats, and let out a soft sound as she bore down. “Pap,” She wheezes, “my shoulder. Support. Please.”

He nodded and carefully scooted close to support her upper torso against his own. "Up we go."

Toki leaned into him and curled her fingers into his shirt. She took a deep inhale of his scent, and felt something in herself relax. "Don’t let me go." She whispers softly, clinging tightly to him as her belly clenched. She moaned, and bore down, one hand slipping down to instinctively comfort the litter as one of the pups gave a shrill whine at her distress.

The third seemed to be coming smoothly though, thankfully- a smaller set of horns scraped painfully, but it wasn’t anything like the second. However, there seemed to be a thick… Something around the pup’s neck, and she wasn’t sure what it was. “Papa,” She gasped softly, “Check the neck. Something on the neck. Feels thick.”

Papa nodded slowly and for a moment gave Tenebris the control they needed to feel around while knowing what to look for.

"It's very thick... but it will not be a problem..." Tenebris answered.

"Are you sure?" There was an anxious sound in her voice as her toes curled, fighting the urge to push. She didn't want to push if the pup would die via strangling from a tail or something.

"Absolutely sure?"

Tenebris, and Papa in the same, gave a nod, "I'm absolutely sure." He purred, before he grinned softly. "It's fur."

“Fur?” She blinked slowly, before giving a strangled laugh. “Of course it is. Fur. Of course. Hah… hhghhh.”

The third, once she resumed pushing, came easier. Within a few pushes, there was a golden maned, pale horned, mewling blaster beast pup slumping out against her thigh, already squirming and fighting to get free of the sack covering it.

Toki, tired, slumped into Papyrus with a soft moan. “Girl.” She guessed on a whim.

Papa had taken over once more to start grooming the pup, but it proved to be a fighter as it gave its own little war-cry as it began to breathe on it's own as soon as the sac was gone from it's face.

"Girl." He agreed.

“Nghah. Knew it. Girls steal their mother’s hair.” She makes a light joke of her own mostly hairless state. Toki slouches softly. “Two more. Jesus fuck, two more. I’m so tired.” Her gaze slid up to Papyrus. “If you ever put five in me, I’m castrating you.”

Was her threat serious? Yes. Yes it was.

He gave an innocent smile. "I wouldn't think of it, my love~" Yes he was. He was thinking about how wonderful it would be to have her that pregnant with his own children.

She could tell he was too, and the bemused stink eye he got had Asgore laughing.

“Perhaps three would be a good number, given the size of the children you give her.” Asgore advised with a smile. “Honey and Skylar were a fair bit bigger than the pups, if I do recall.”

The little female in Papa’s grasp gave something verging on an unholy shriek that interrupted anything Toki might have said to Asgore on the matter. Toki’s mane ruffled, and she lifted up. “Dear lord - give me the pup. She is having a fit.”

Papa rumbled softly before handing her over quickly.

The golden maned pup gave another howl before whining and going limp against her mother’s chest.

Toki gave a soothing croon to the pup, nuzzling her gently to soothe her soft whining. She shifted a bit, warming her against her body, before tucking her against her siblings. The golden maned one struggled a bit to latch, and Toki had to crane to help her- but soon she was suckling away, tiny, unpracticed pulls bringing forth only little drops at a time.

The skelebeast sighed. “There. Sorry, Papa. I can’t listen to the cries for long- they may be your pups, and I’m truly doing what I can to let you bond with them, but mother’s instinct says to comfort when they’re fussing.”

Asgore gave her a patient smile. “It’s alright, Toki. You’re an amazing mother. Thank you for doing this.” He shifted, and simply smiled, watching his three amazing children with loving gazes.

Toki exhaled softly and gave him a bright smile. She went to get comfortable to rest, when there was a cramp- one hell of a god honest awful cramp. Her leg jerked up, may have caught Papa in the chin, and she flinched, letting out a soft cry as she bore down.

The next pup was not going to wait- hell no. Someone had no patience and the squirming bundle wanted out right the hell now.

Papa grunted at the kick but didn’t seem too upset by it.

Asgore looked a bit startled, lifting a hand to help, and then tucked his fingers back. “The washcloths, Aliquam. Cool her forehead- she’s perspiring.”

Aliquam nodded and began to gently wipe Toki’s forehead. "Are you okay, Toki?" He asked gently as he gave her forehead a pleasantly cold wipe-down. "Is the next pup coming right now, right after the little girl?" He asked.

“No, no, not at all, I’m just pushing on air because it feels good,” She snaps. Toki’s skull rocks back, and her belly visibly tightens as she pushes. A primal groan rumbles from her, filling the birthing nest.

Asgore’s mane stands on end.

When she catches her breath, she exhales sharply. “Sorry, sorry. I didn’t mean to snap. It’s big- it’s so goddamn big. There’s horns and the shoulders are thick, and I don’t know how I’m going to get it out- it feels too big.”

Her belly rippled again, and her leg kicked faintly, a desperate pained motion as she struggled to keep still for the pups while expelling the next one, who seemed to, unlike their siblings, be moving at the pace of molasses on a cold day.

He kissed her head gently while watching her with great concern.

Papa scooted closer while rubbing his now slightly aching chin and began to warble gently, before he rested his hands on her hip, boosting her rear end slightly to straighten her spine and coax her legs open further if possible.

The position was intensely uncomfortable, but it did seem to be letting her hips open up wider. At least a little bit, given how she was on her side. Toki let out a soft grunt, and the opening of her hips seemed to give the head room to move. Slowly but surely it moved down, the nose sliding down with the horns grating as she pushed.

She tensed as the shoulders slid in, one hand sliding to her husbands chest and grabbing tightly to a rib. “Hhhh hah hh ….”

Slowly but surely, the pup moved down- and indeed, as the head crowned almost thirty minutes from the start of his descent, the pup was massive. The muzzle was nearly twice the size of the heads from earlier, and there was clear strain on her body. Her labia stretched around it, struggling to stretch without tearing- there was no room for Papa or Tenebris to slip a finger in to help ease the passage.

Toki keened all the while, her grip ever tightening on her husband.

Aliquam squawked in pain and quickly attempted to replace the ribs in his wife's hand with his hand instead, pleading quietly for her to let up and let his ribs go.

Papa thrummed softly in thought before he shifted and sat up, looping his arms around the small of her back to pull it up, making her arch as he rumbled. "Asgore." He rattled in summoning.

Toki’s fingers were hard to pry off- and every time her belly tightened, they seemed to mimic it on his ribs. But, with enough work, she soon had his hand in her grasp, and was slowly murdering his fingers instead of deepening the bruise on his poor rib.

Asgore startled, but scooted closer to Papa. “What can I do?” He asks, feeling a little bit faint at the sight of her body stretched so… so horribly like that. Women’s bodies amazed him, and yes he was weak to admit it made him faint thinking about the process of the baby coming out, but the end result was worth it. “What do you need me to do?” He corrects his statement.

"Catch." He answered in the most obvious tone, gesturing down at Toki's straining entrance as he began to softly rub the tense flesh under his thumbs.

Asgore sucked it up, and eased his hands down under her. Careful of his claws, he gently massaged her perineum like the baby books had said to do while Papa worked on opening her up using counter-pressure.

Toki couldn’t even be unhappy about the extra hands- she needed them as she gave a cry and a hard push, and very nearly tore as the horned head of the massive pup slid out.

Asgore caught the head, clearing the nose with a swipe of his thumb. He could see a thick mane of blue fur sprouting down the pups head and neck between the horns, and he felt his heart warm. “Ah-ah, the head’s out.” He eased his fingers around the neck, and cradled it gently, trying to help carefully ease it out as she pushed.

The head being out didn’t stop Toki’s pained noises- because behind the head came something even wider, and it had Asgore scrambling to stretch her safely for it. The shoulders came out one at a time, but there were a massive set of wings growing out of them. They were folded, creating the thick shoulders she seemed to be struggling with.

“Big wings,” Asgore mumbles, and works to ease them out into his hands. He gets the first one out no problem- but that’s where the trouble started. The pup took a breath through the open end of the sack, and then began to struggle. And that freed wing? Well, that began flopping and flapping everywhere like a wet plastic bag on a stick.

The wriggling caught Tenebris' attention and he rumbled. "Asgore, switch our hands' positions." He ordered quickly.

With a small nod, Asgore did his best to replicate that which Tenebris had done, and carefully the doctor brought his hands up to the pup. He groomed his face a few times while gently grabbing hold of the wing. He folded it down, then he wrapped his hands around the pup's form behind it's shoulder.

"This is going to feel... VERY unpleasant." He warned, before he slowly shifted the pup and turned it, trying to free the pup's shoulder.

There was a creak from Aliquam’s hand as her own tightened on it. Her toes splayed, and she threw her head back with a shout as he pushed the pup back and then began to twist it free. A pup that big was not meant to go backwards by any means, and everything chafed in the single most painful way she’d felt by far. This trumped Honey’s birth by miles. “Ow, ow, ow, ow fucking OW TENEBRIS FUCK !” Her leg may have kicked a bit, but all it did was bounce off Asgore’s shoulder. “ FUCK
YOU HOLY FUCK! UNPLEASANT MY MOTHER FUCKING ASS ! ”

Aliquam gasped in pain as well as the slight shock of the expletives that flew from Toki, hoping that it would be soon that his Father didn't need to do whatever he was that seemed so unpleasant.

As unpleasant as it was, as Tenebris almost had to duck under a kick, but the twist helped and it was with that that the pup's other shoulder got loose and the pup almost immediately fell into his lap, free from Toki.

Toki went limp as soon as the pup was free, panting, in pain, and tears freely leaking from her sockets. It took her a moment to gather herself, before she could pay attention to the fact that they’d jostled the three pups off her teats, and they were piled next to her whining as they tried to find food.

Her hand loosened on her husband’s hand, and she gave it an apologetic kiss, before turning back onto her side to comfort the three pups while Papa- or Tenebris, perhaps- tended to the… Frankly huge pup that had been pulled from her.

The pup seemed to flap their wings just a bit, before settling down passively in their father’s arms, exhausted from the ordeal.

Tenebris sighed in relief, before he smiled gently and stroked the head of the large pup, smiling gently. "Well hello there, little pup~" He greeted warmly. "I'm your Papa~"

The large pup gave a little squirm, and their toothless mouth opened to suckle tiredly at his finger tip.

Toki looked up at Tenebris once she’d gotten the litter calmed down and back to nursing again. She hurt, and her legs were visibly trembling with effort- she just had one more to go. Just one- thank the gods. She took a slow whuffle in, and coughed softly. “I think you’ve got another son,” She rasps lowly, before slumping tiredly into Aliquam. “Hi Dad.” She mumbles. “It’s good to see you again.
Do you want to meet your other three children…?”

Tenebris was trying so hard not to cry but you could see the tears of happiness as he looked up at her. "Y-Yes, I'd like that..."
“Then come here,” She mumbles softly, “quick, before the last one comes.” She motions for him to lay next to her, and settle his biggest son against her, so he could feed while he looked over his eldest son and two daughters. “Two girls and another boy,” She mumbles a little breathlessly. “You soooo owe me so much cocoa, Dad. So much. Like two bath tubs. No. Three. That one was worth a bath tub of cocoa on his own. Or just a hot bath. I’d take one of those too.” She mumbles tiredly.

He gave a soft laugh as he leaned down to nuzzle his new children. "Look at these beautiful puppies. Oh Toki, thank you~" He cooed happily.

Toki exhaled shakily and closed her eyes softly. “I’m glad you’re happy, Dad.” She mumbles with exhaustion heavily present in her tone. “They’re beautiful and healthy - and that’s what’s important...” She shifts, and lifts a hand to motion to her middle. “Would you like to practice settling him? I’m not going to wake up all the time, so it will be good if you can practice helping them get a latch.”

That had him perk a little before he gave a nod. "Yes. I should give it a try." He rumbled, settling near Toki’s stomach before he shifted the large pup towards one of the teats. The pup whined quietly before running his face over the nipple. He attempted to latch but looked like he was having a problem with latching on.

Toki leaned her fingers down and stroked gently over his leathery wings. She frowned gently, her brows furrowing. “He’s having trouble latching.” She mumbles gently. She gives it an attempt, manually guiding the nipple into his mouth to see if he would latch.

He squirmed and made a fussy cry, giving a few feeble attempts at nursing.

“I think he might be too big to get a proper angle to keep the nipple in his mouth. Or maybe suction.” She frowns slowly. “Asgore? Will you go warm up one of the bottles from the kitchen, please?”

"Oh yes. Of course." Asgore got up. "I'll be back in a few minutes." He told her as he quickly stood and left the nest, exiting the room and thumping down the stairs with heavy steps.

Tenebris rattled quietly before he leaned down and whined softly as he picked up the distressed pup, grooming him delicately.

The distressed pup whined again, making a soft sooking noise as he was pulled from the smell of milk that he could taste, but not consume.

Toki lifted a hand and gently rubbed her hand over Tenebris’ head. “Tuck him close to me for now. He needs to stay warm so his belly will be ready to accept milk when Asgore’s got the bottle and warmed it. Just settle close and let him know you’re here. We’ll feed him as soon as we can. He needs to dry off though- he’s already clean, but he needs to be dry and warm.” In this moment, she was the one with the most experience handling distressed infants and parental instincts. Over-grooming wouldn’t do the pup any good.

He was momentarily reluctant until he set the pup down once more and promptly laid down beside the pup, cooing to him gently.

Aliquam watched him settle down before he sighed and smiled. "How are you doing, Toki?" He asked.

Toki hummed as he settled the pup between them, and extended her magic out to keep the little one warmer. The birthing nest was designed to retain heat, so she was good to go as far as that went. The pup settled slightly between them, but was still seeking food, so she offered her pinky finger on her secondary hand to act as a pacifier of sorts.

It seemed to please the pup and quell the last of the soft whimpers.

She shifted her head, looking up from where it had come to rest in her husband’s lap. “One more to go.” She mumbles. “And I’m so, so tired already. I also feel like someone grabbed me by one leg and just pulled in the opposite direction and tried to tear me in half.” She side-eyed Tenebris for a moment, and then huffs softly. “And that, I can blame wholly on your Dad. Or at least his genetics.” She gives a soft grumbling sound, and nuzzles her face against Aliquam.

Tenebris chuckled quietly, before he sighed. "You know... He looks just like him."

"Do you mean your Father?" Aliquam asked, stroking Toki’s head tenderly.

Tenebris nodded, before he sighed and smiled. "I think I want to name him after my father as well... Memphis."

“Memphis is a good name.” Toki mumbles softly, giving the large pup a soft rub under his chin as she ends up cradling his little head. His soft attempts at suckling fade off as he settles to sleep, tiny paws twitching. “Hah… What about the others…? Had you discussed any other names with Asgore…?"

"I think we should wait for Asgore before discussing names."
Almost at the moment that he was mentioned, the Boss monster poked his head in. "I brought a bottle." He announced, before he came closer. "Wait for me for what?" He then asked, sitting down and handing the warm bottle to his mate.

Toki lifted a hand out and took the bottle from Tenebris, checking the temperature real quick out of habit. She glanced up at Asgore and gave a nod. “Good job.” She said, pleased. “I asked him about names.”

“Ohhh.” He nods, and then chuckles. “I see. And yes- I’ve handled your fresh milk enough to make the temperature close enough.”

Toki nods, and then holds the bottle out to Tenebris as she takes her finger from the pup. “Do you know how to feed a pup a bottle?” She asks him softly.

"I do, yes." Tenebris slowly re-positioned the newly named Memphis and cooed gently to him as he adjusted the bottle to coax him to take the rubber nipple.

Memphis didn’t enjoy having his makeshift pacifier taken from him, but he accepted the warm rubber nipple in it’s stead. The tip was small, like her finger, and easy for his gummy mouth to take-and when he sucked on it, it gave the same milk he’d smelled earlier!

His tiny paws kneaded the nest below him to encourage more milk, and he suckled eagerly, blindly butting against the bottle as his little wings flapped and wobbled, nearly rolling him right over.

Toki didn’t step in- this was Tenebris’ experience with his son, and he’d get the hang of it soon enough. Besides- she was busy turning her face into her husband’s lap and pretending the growing throb in her belly wasn’t happening.

The love that Tenebris was feeling for his newest had him smiling happily as he tenderly helped Memphis feed. "Look at how wonderful he is, Asgore~ He looks just like my father~" He cooed happily as he smiled up at his mate.

Asgore leaned in as much as he was able to without intruding upon the birthing nest, and his eyes watered in utter love for what he was seeing. “You’re an amazing father, my love.” He cooed softly. “I never knew your father, love… Memphis looks a lot like you.”

Toki exhales a soft warbled noise into her husband’s thigh, her leg twitching. There was a prickly feeling inside of her, and it was entirely unpleasant. “Do you want to hold one of your siblings?” She asks Papyrus with a muffled breath. She was in denial, yep. She could wait- the last one could give her a few more minutes of rest.

"Nah... I'd rather hold you while you help the children drink their first meal." He purred in reply, rubbing her head affectionately.

Toki nods softly against him, appreciating his affectionate gestures. Her mouth opens, and she tries to very quietly pant into his leg. “The first three are doing good keeping latched. They just can’t feed very fast yet. They’ll get there eventually though.” Her leg gives a twitch, and she stretches it, flexing her toes as her middle tightens again, for the final round. She kept quiet- Memphis needed to eat, and hopefully the last one would be smaller.

The sounds of suckling filled the birthing nest as Toki went quiet- perhaps a little too quiet as she tried to keep under the radar. Thankfully, Tenebris and Asgore were completely absorbed by Memphis.

"I love you, Toki." He purred gently. "I love you and I love what you have done for my family and my people alike... I could never be this happy without you where you are now, in my lap, in my arms~"

Toki caught one in every other word as her world focused in on keeping quiet while her body strained and a painful prickling sensation grew at the edge of her pelvis. Toki managed a soft sound for her husband as her shoulder trembled under his hand. “Love you too,” She rasps in a breathy tone in reply to something she’s very sure was sweet and touching, but at the moment was one of the furthest things from her mind.

The last pup was moving down- something slim and prickly pressing against the entrance to her canal.

Her shoulders twitched as her belly gave a hard contraction, and Toki had no choice but to push, as discretely as possible. Slow but steady- whatever this one was covered in felt like small needles, and she needed to go slow because lord have mercy it hurt.

Aliquam detected her sudden change in physical behavior and frowned a little, before he reached out and set a hand over her midsection. He could feel the hardness of her contraction, and that urged him into feeling around for the pup until he made out the shape of the beginning of the pup in the form of his palm. "Toki, are you okay?" He asked quietly. "Is there something wrong with the next pup coming?"

Toki felt his palm against the deflated skin of her swollen belly, and her shivers increased for a moment as he put pressure on where the pup was at- her body shifted, involuntarily and she tried to squirm away from his hand. “Hurts~” She gasps very quietly into his leg, “Hurts very bad. Very sharp- like… Like needles. Please don’t press- please , please don’t.”

There may have been something wrong when the laboring skelebeast was quite literally begging into his leg for him not to press on her middle.

Upon the first whimper, his hand was lifted and placed instead on her shoulder. "I'm sorry... what's going on?" He asked in a worried tone.

This got Tenebris' attention and he looked over. "What's going on?"

"Toki says it feels like needles when there's weight on her midsection."
Toki let out a soft shuddering breath, and her legs curled upwards, almost flinching into herself. She curled around her middle, and around the pups, almost trying to make the pain stop. She was not rough, but for their safety, she very, very gently disengaged the pups from her teats, and cuddled them up a little ways from her, so they wouldn’t get jostled or hurt if she flinched too hard.

They seemed to settle down, their bellies full enough to let them not fuss at being pulled from her so abruptly.

“It hurts,” She whispers softly, eyes flinching shut. Her leg twitched, tried to lift, and then flinched closed again as the pressure sent waves of stabbing feelings through her walls from whatever was coming out of her. “It hurts, god it hurts…”

"If it's a breach birth, then you might have a crown dragging along your walls... It's going to be very unpleasant but I cant do a lot to help until the pup starts to emerge a little...” Tenebris explained as he slowly sat up, holding Memphis carefully as he continued to help him drink his bottle of milk.

Toki keened softly and nodded. She could understand that. There was no physical way for him to reach up inside of her and turn the pup around manually, so this is how it would have to be.

Toki shifted, no longer bound on her side by her own size and by the nursing litter. She shook as she hefted up, putting a bit of gravity on her side. Her wings trembled, braced against her husband’s shoulders, both of her legs uncurling and spreading open to try and make space despite the discomfort.

Toki waited until the next contraction- and she pushed, slowly but surely firmer than before to actively work the pup down and out of her.

The noise that rose from her maw was not a cry- it was a borderline bone chilling howl of agony as the needles turned to razors slicing down her walls, carving a literal pathway out of her as her muscles forced the pup down. She felt something hot and sticky lead the way out of her, staining her thighs and the ruined blanket under her.

Tenebris stiffened before he looked up at Aliquam with a distressed rattle.

"It's okay... it's gonna be okay..." Aliquam held her firmly. "Toki, do you want me to try and help the pup come out smoothly?" He asked.

"The pup's already in the birthing canal; it's too late to try and turn them around..." Tenebris mentioned.

"Then at least I can use my hand to stop whatever is scraping her so badly…"

Papyrus didn’t get a verbal answer in words. Her primary hands tightened over the blankets under her, and her secondary’s clenched alongside them. Her mouth fell open with another pained cry as her body pushed again without her consent. The wet feeling against her legs grew more.

Asgore’s hands anxiously fluttered, and he reached out to Tenebris regardless of the line drawn. “Give me Memphis.” He says, and collects the other pups as well into his lap. They needed space to safely move and not risk squishing his babies. “Toki needs the both of you right now. I can keep them warm and feed him. Hurry please- I don’t want to lose our last pup.”

They had already lost one.

Tenebris felt a tremble pass through him and he moved to allow Aliquam the space he needed, supporting Toki’s upper half in her husband’s stead.
Aliquam tried to resist the fear that was steadily pooling from Asgore's words. While uttering his apologies, he lubricated his hand and her entrance before he slowly pushed three fingers into her body.

"It's a breach birth; I feel feet." He spoke softly, before he gasped softly in pain as his fingers were pricked. "Oh!"

"What is it?" Tenebris asked,

"I... It's quills... I think."

"Breached quills!" Tenebris repeated, as if it was all clear now. "Aliquam, what you need to do is put your palm over the largest concentration of quills, press them down with one hand, and see if you can grab the feet and pull when Toki has another contraction." He instructed Aliquam hesitated, before he sighed and nodded. "Alright... I apologize in advance if this hurts, Toki..." He told her, before doing as his father told him. He slowly pushed in his lubricated hand, carefully crawling his fingers over the quills before he pulled and flattened a good amount of the quills upon resting his hand.

"Alright. They're flattened." He announced.

"It should now be less painful to push, Toki..." Tenebris told the distressed mother.

Toki was mute through all of it. Well, mute word wise. Her mouth gaped open with ragged gasps and shaky sobs, her sockets clenching shut. His fingers were agony, and his hand? His hand was hellfire incarnate inside of her. It took everything she had not to thrash and kick at her husband.

The soft murmurs reached her just barely, and she blinked her eyes open enough to gasp and nod roughly.

The next contraction came swift, her muscles practically crushing Aliquam’s hand as she pushed, lurching the pup downward. He didn’t have all of the quills, telltale by the high pitched keening that Toki made- and that feeling was amplified by him pulling as she pushed.

The feet and the hips soon appeared however- and the pup was painted a garish green. As was Aliquam’s hand- and the blanket under Toki. The quills had sliced her good, and there were more deeper inside.

Aliquam cared little about the crushing weight on his hand, but was glad that they were now a lot closer to the pup being out.

He reached down and grabbed the pup by the ankles, holding firmly before he readjusted his grip, using his arm to keep the quills down as he reached up and felt for the pup's head. "Okay... Okay... Here we go... I've got the pup's head." He announced.

"If you have one more push in you, Toki..." Tenebris urged gently.

She didn’t, she really didn’t, but Toki would try. The head needed out, the pup needed born. Toki was a shaking, trembling mess in Tenebris’ grasp, all four arms shivering and shaking like a drug addict in need of a fix.

When her muscles tensed again, Toki gave one last hard push- and then the pain was over. Well- the ripping, tearing pain, anyway. The lingering feeling of someone having taken razor blade lined steel wool to the inside of her vagina was still something she was dealing with, but the pup was free.
The pup popped free into their brother’s hands, face screwing up into a grumpy looking pout.

Behind the pup poured a wave of green- and not amniotic fluid.

Aliquam caught the pup and wrapped them in a towel to set at Toki’s side, before he set his hands on Toki and began to work his healing magic immediately. He drove his magic up her insides, working to dissolve any quills that had gotten stuck, and to heal the deep rends in the sensitive flesh inside of her. "It's over, it's done, the pup's free." He told her quickly. “It’s over, Toki, it’s over. God, it’s over, you’re going to be okay…”

There had been a bit of damage done to her, and subsequently to her HP, with the birth of this last pup. His healing did slow the bleeding, however, and stop the cramping in her drooping stomach.

It took a long, long time to heal the cuts and the massive damage done to her womb, and stop the hard bleeding inside of her.

Toki didn’t relax until the bleeding stopped though, where in she shifted and let out a tiny soft sigh. “It’s done. I’m done…” She went briefly limp, before shifting to lay on her side. The pain was… Less. Much less. She shifted the swaddled pup closer to her, peering at the blood covered baby quietly. She was raw, healed or not, and she shifted once she was healed enough and let Aliquam know that she didn’t want his hands down there anymore for the day. “Quills.” She mumbles. “Somehow I was picturing porcupine, not… little bird feather quills. Might want to be careful grooming this one, Dad- your tongue will end up like my vagina.”

Aliquam moved out of the way so she could close her legs and he sighed as he leaned against his father, a relieved smile. "It's over. You did it... I'm so proud of you…”

Tenebris blinked at her words, before he chuckled and he began to gently rub the pup down. "Duly noted, my dear.” He rumbled, before he took a look at the pup's face, "Well, someone's already cranky, and with one hell of a set of emerald peepers." he chuckled.

“Thank you.” She mumbles tiredly. Toki let off a tired sound, curling up. She peeks her eyes open to look at the only pup to open their eyes so far. A quick sniff, now that it wasn’t covered in blood, showed that it was a little male. “He’s got my eyes,” She murmurs with exhaustion. Shakily, she makes a noise to Asgore, and reaches for the pups.

He returns them without question, tucking them up against her deflated belly without a fuss. He even helped them get latched when Toki’s fingers fumbled. “She needs to rest,” He mumbles, pausing when Memphis finishes his meal. He tucks the biggest male right up against her belly to let him bask in the warm, and then watches softly as all four of the pups there settle in. Three eating, one sleeping, and the last fifth one gets cleaned before he can do either. “Maybe a hot bath?”

“Not right now. I would like to rest first. Please. I know everyone is excited and wants to come upstairs and meet them, but… I need some time to rest.” She looks utterly drained as she looks at the three men towering above her. “And they need time to settle before they’re disturbed too much by being passed around.”

"I propose we borrow the newest in order to clean him off..." Tenebris offered from where he had sat up better beside Toki.

Toki nodded slowly. “Yeah… You’re not going to get all that blood off with a towel alone, and I think he knows it.” She motions a hand to the bathroom. “Go wash him off, please. In fact, they could all probably use a good and proper washing… But one at a time.” Her nether regions still throbbed unpleasantly, and there was a slow leak of… well, as far as she could tell, magic bleed off from where her body had been feeding it to the pups- she didn’t really want them going far. “And… can you maybe bring a towel back to put between my legs?”

Asgore offered her a smile. “The little bit of bleeding is normal.” He says, seeing the look on her face. “Skeletons are marvelous creatures- when their bodies dispel, they get to escape the bleed that other monster mothers must endure as their bodies adjust to not feeding their children magic anymore. However, since you must nurse, I imagine your body will be here for some time.”

Tenebris rumbled in agreement before he slowly moved out of the nest, taking the newest pup with him in order to go clean him off.

Toki watched him go, before her sockets drifted closed. She shuffled one of the pillows from the wall over, and tucked it under her head, breathing slowly as she settled down to try and nap.

Asgore gave a soft hum, and then looked to Papyrus. “Son,” he says softly, “Why don’t you go clean up a little bit, and let everyone downstairs know that they’re here, but that Toki needs a little while to rest before she takes visitors? I’ll keep her company until you get back.” He offers him a warm smile. “She’ll want to cuddle up with you, I’m sure, but she’s not going to want to cuddle up with her blood on your hands.”

“C’n someone get the bloodied blanket out from under me?” She mumbles. “It’s got a couple layers. I don’t wanna lay on it.”

Asgore cocked an ear at him, as if saying ‘See?’, and then he shifts, invading her space long enough to take away the dirtied layers, leaving her in clean and fresh layers to rest in.

“Thank you.” She yawns.

Aliquam slowly exited the nest and collected the soiled linen, giving Toki a smile before he started out. "I'll go put these in the laundry and see how Father is doing with the child." He announced.

As he left, Asgore sighed, before smiling at Toki. "Are you doing okay, Tokiko?" He asked gently. She peeked her eye open to look at Asgore, feeling a small tickle of annoyance budding through her. She wanted a nap, god damn it- she’d just done basically all of the work here. “I feel like someone’s fucked me raw with a cactus dildo.” She says with blunt exhaustion. Toki sucks in a deep breath, and sighs. “I’m sorry. I didn’t mean to be snarky. I’m just very, tired and sore, and I would greatly enjoy sleeping right now.”

Her teeth splay as she yawns at him.

He chuckled gently and nodded in understanding, before he inched backwards just slightly. "In that case, I'll leave you be, and you can get your rest until you have your bath.”

“My bath can wait a couple hours.” Toki muttered in exhaustion. She stretches out her arms, and Toki settles down to try and sleep. She actually settles down and starts to doze within a few minutes, and her soft snores are music to anyone’s ears.

“-oki. Toki. Come on, Toki, wake up.”

Toki made a grumbling snort, and squinted one eye open to look at Tenebris. She could feel Papyrus behind her, one arm gently draped over her shoulders as he, now clean smelling and dry, cuddled up behind her. Toki made a soft, inquiring noise, feeling like she’d just blinked asleep and was now being woken abruptly.

There were tiny paws kneading at her belly - the litter were up and nursing again, though it was slow, and starting to ebb off. They’d probably been nursing for a while.

“Mwah?” Was the intelligent answer Tenebris was given as she blinked one eye at him slowly.

"I finished with Severin... And now it's time for your bath."

Severin... no doubt the children had been named while she slumbered.

"The pups are all fed well enough for now, and all of them have been properly washed. Come bathe." Tenebris coaxed gently.

Toki squinted up at him slowly and sighed through her nose. “Mmmnn… How long have I been sleeping?” She asks, deflecting his immediate coaxing towards a hot bath. She had absolutely no desire to get up. Toki wanted to keep sleeping. “Severin…?”

"Three hours." He answered, before he smiled. "We thought about names for the pups while you slept." He explained, before he chuffed. "You’ve yet to pass your afterbirth, and that’s concerning... part of me wonders if it is because you had to be healed earlier, but a hot bath would help you loosen up at least enough to pass your afterbirth. So... Doctor’s orders. Bath time."

Three hours was not enough sleep. Her groan and attempt at burying her face in her arms told him as such. She was glad to hear about the names though. She just didn’t know which one Severin was.

“I don’t know what on earth you’re talking about. Skeletons don’t have afterbirth.” She mumbles blearily into her arms. “So I don’t need a bath. I need more sleep.”

He rolled his eyes before he leaned down and gently bit into the back of her neck, giving her scruff a pull. "Let’s go."

Toki gave a growl as he scruffed her, feeling her limbs instinctively want to go limp as the pressure points were clamped down on. Her limbs braced on the nest, and she glared up at him tiredly. “Let go.” She counters, one warning in her voice before she’d swat him.

If he was going to be pushy about it, she obviously had no choice. She could just sleep in the damn tub. But if he pulled her, she’d end up trampling over the newborns, and that wasn’t acceptable. “I need to get up so I don’t squish the pups. They also need to be tucked back into someone who can keep them warm.”

Papyrus was behind her, so she wasn’t too worried about that.

"Ah, that's my cue." Aliquam spoke gently, moving to lay on his back and pull the pups carefully into his hold. "Come to big brother." He cooed gently as he collected the pups one by one.

Toki let him take the pups, and then when the coast was clear, she slowly shifted onto all fours, her neck still in Tenebris’ teeth. Her stomach sagged, her teats pulling the empty and stretched ectoflesh down. She was stuck with postpartum mom-tummy it seemed- oh well. It wasn’t the end of the world.

However, her nether parts made her hiss, and she hunched up slightly. “Owww...” She hisses.

Tenebris watched until the last of the pups was wrapped in their brother's arms before he gave a slow pull and he lifted his head to lift Toki off the ground a little more as he started for the bathroom.

He was not tall enough to carry her completely off the ground while on all fours, and she let out a grumpy, rumbling hiss as she was forced to skitter along with her legs to keep up. Most of the weight was on him, but all the same.

Actually… Dead weight was harder to move. A glint came to her eye, and suddenly the easy weight he was moving seemed to double as she went completely limp under him.

Toki did not want to go lay in the tub- she wanted to sleep, and darn it, if she had to do something she didn’t want to do hours after giving birth, she was entitled to being a shitlord about it.

He eyed her sourly before he rolled his eyes and began to drag her dead-weight, grumbling to himself about how he was working with an overgrown child who should behave better than this.

Of course, dragging her under him made her one hell of a tripping hazard, so he had to resort to carefully walking backwards as he dragged her along the carpet.

Toki realized her mistake right about the moment she started to get rug burn on her teats. Her limbs lifted up and she huffed, hobbling along after him as he dragged her from the bedroom carpet into the bathroom tile.

“T’m not an overgrown child.” She says once he brings her to a stop. “T’m a woman who just gave birth to five pups- one of which was probably like swallowing a porcupine quills first. You’ll have to pardon me if I’m a little salty about being dragged from my nest for a bath I don’t want, regardless of ‘doctors orders’.”

Toki eyes the tub, and tries to get her legs under her. They tremble, and shooting agony spirals through her pelvis, making her drop right back down onto her knees. “Yeahhh. I’m not standing to get in that tub.”

Tenebris rolled his eyes before he sighed and gently picked Toki up. "That's fine." He huffed, before he slowly put her down into the hot water.

She growled at him crankily, right up until he set her in the water. As the hot water washed over her, she half relaxed with a sigh. Her nethers burned like a mother fucker, but the hot water felt absolutely orgasmic against all of her stressed muscles.

Toki shifted to lay on her back in the tub, and began to purr quietly, her eyes drifting closed again.

_That's what he fucking thought._ Slowly letting her go, Tenebris chuffed softly before he smirked and let her be, reveling in his small victory.

Toki rumbled once he was gone, and settled down to soak. She was in there for a good hour, just relaxing and letting the sweat and filth of the day rinse off of her. She changed out the water twice, when she’d tinged it green with her renewed leaking.

The hot water helped her muscles though, and she relaxed more than she thought she would. Toki got a bit more of a nap in between changing the water as it cooled and rejuvenated her.

It was about an hour and ten minutes into Tenebris having left her to soak and intermittently nap that Toki felt a cramp. It felt more like a menstrual cramp than anything else, and she grunted as she parted her legs. It didn’t take long, before something meaty and wet slid between her legs.

Lo and behold- Tenebris had been right. There, floating at the surface of the water between her legs, was a meaty ectoplasmic slab of multi-colored afterbirth with six broken strings on it.

“Wait… What?” She mumbled, shifting to sit up properly. “Six…?”

A cramp seized her middle, and then she let out a long, and low sounding grunt, primal by nature. She bore down by instinct, her hands clenching on the tub and tightening as her poor abused muscles screamed in agony for her to please, please not be doing this yet again.

However, despite her wishes and desires, Toki was doing this yet again. She contracted again, softer this time- and she felt something tiny, so tiny, move down inside of her. Tiny but rough- there were soft nubs scraping over raw but healed nerves, and bits of a few thick places that made pushing difficult.

It only took a few true and honest pushes where she put all of her effort behind them, before she forced the thing out. When she leaned forward to see what was up, Toki came face to face with a nearly perfect clone of her beast self floating lifelessly in the water. The only differences to the tiny form was the fact it had a long curling tail from Tenne- however it was tipped with a stinger, not a blade- and the fact the horns were tiny little nubs on the top of her head, not unlike Toki’s original horns.

Rendered mute by panic, Toki picked up the pup- who was so small she fit in Toki’s secondary hands like a doll, and she pulled it from the water. She broke the sack over it’s mouth, and began cleaning it. Her, Toki’s acute sense of scenting things told her- the pup was female. Toki’s tongue slid out, and she groomed the pup, cleaning her face and nose and opening up her air ways. Once she’d been cleaned that way, Toki scrubbed her so gently clean with the slowly bloodying water.

Still, the pup didn’t stir- and Toki was growing more frantic, letting out little whines as she set the spotless pup between her breasts and patted her back between her insect like gossamer wings. She was so tiny she could only use a her fingers.

Finally, there was a hacking cough, and the tiny being took in her first breath- and began to wail, the tiniest, weakest pathetic mewls Toki had ever heard.

Toki clutched her to her breast, looking utterly shell-shocked to have delivered the sixth pup that everyone had believed to have died.

It was not long before the mewling caught the attention of bigger beasts, and it was only seconds before Tenebris appeared in the doorway of the bathroom, Asgore close behind. The bathroom door had been slammed open hard enough for it to bounce off the wall and nearly barrel back into them and slam shut again.

Neither could find their words, eyes blown too wide and mouths open and nearly gaping at the sight before them. Slowly, very slowly, Tenebris gave a tiny and timid rattle, as if Papa was asking if what he heard was actual real, and if it was what he thought it was.

Toki gave a soft, shuddering breath, and hitched up a little bit in the tub. By far, the last pup- this little miracle baby- had been the easiest birth. She glanced to the door, the pup wailing feebly into her chest, and she gave them a deer in the headlights look. “H-HELP, please. I want t-to get out. S-She needs dried and fed.”

Was she in shock? Perhaps a little bit. A good shock, but shock all the same. She needed help though- she couldn’t dip the pup under the water, and she couldn’t get out of the slowly bloodying water by herself.
It didn't take Tenebris long at all to collect Toki out of the bath, though it was when he safely set her down in her nest did the shock sink in and he gasped weakly, before he sighed and smiled shakily. "The runt survived." He breathed in relief.

Toki had been settled on her back, the tiny, feeble pup nestled against her breasts proper. Her arms cradled her, and she let the tiny form rest and catch her breath as Toki let it sink in slowly that the sixth had survived.

“How?” Asgore murmured softly from where he’d pressed in against Tenebris’ back. “You said… There was no magic signature… Unless the runt was simply too weak to register...”

"That must have been it... The other signatures drowned her out, and I couldn't feel her."

Toki exhaled softly. “Try not to think about it.” She mumbles. “Focus on the fact she’s here. She survived… She looks exactly like I did too.” Her fingers stroke through the tiny green wisps of a mane, and she’s rewarded with the tiniest, softest mewl as the pup nuzzles against her, seeking nourishment.

Toki doesn’t hesitate to adjust her, and despite her size, the tiny being has a decent latch onto Toki’s nipple proper. The skelebeast just looks exhausted as she cradles her and lets her drink- proving the pup was wholesome and healthy, and had no health problems or issues feeding.

Tenebris looked at Toki as she spoke before he whined and rattled loudly. "She's so tiny... I almost fear I would hurt her if I touched her…"

Toki breathed slowly, tiredly, and lifted a hand. “Lay next to me, and give me your hand.” She mumbles softly. “Pap- other side for you. Settle the pups down on my belly. Might as well get them settled in. I’m not going anywhere.”

Aliquam nodded and moved to her side, ever so carefully setting his armful of pups down around their sibling before he settled down at her side.

Tenebris rumbled softly before he slowly laid down on Toki's other side, a small rattle coming from him as he looked up at the pups. "They're so wonderful... Six puppies…”

“Six little rays of hope.” Toki mumbles, and tucks a pillow behind her head.

“Hope...” Asgore murmurs softly, curling around Tenebris with a soft thrum. Wet fur presses to the back of Tenebris head, and it shows that the bigger monster had been moved to tears. “Hope is a good name for her.”

Toki grunted, and took Tenebris’ hand, gently taking one of his fingers and stroking it down the tiny back of the little pup suckling at her breast. She didn’t let his claw touch her wings- something told her that the little pup’s wings were too fragile for that yet- but she did let him feel her tiny whuffing breaths against Toki’s nipple as the little female adjusted her grip and suckled better.

She guided his finger- which was all that could really fit with how small she was- up and down her back a couple times, to assure him that he could touch, but he just had to be careful. She was tiny and fragile, but she wasn’t glass.

Tenebris' finger twitched insecurely until it came to touch the pup and he gave a shaky breath of relief. "Oh my god..." He sighed, before he cooed softly. "Our darling Hope..." He agreed.

Toki lifted her hand, and shifted to simply cradle the pup, listening to the sounds of suckling. She could feel six mouths suckling at her, though Memphis was struggling, he was doing it for simply bonding most likely. She let her eyes drift closed, tired and exhausted, and completely spent. “Hope… Hope is a good name. Hope for the future, hope for things to come…” She mumbles.

She takes a deep breath, and a slow and steady rumbling purr begins to bubble up out of her chest for the three men to hear.

It brought a smile and relief to all three of them and as Tenebris nuzzled her shoulder.

Aliquam kissed her cheek as he cooed his love for her.

After a few minutes of simply laying there, Tenebris rumbled again and spoke, "We were talking about names while you were asleep and bathing, Toki."

“Yeah?” She breathes almost airily. In the minutes that he’d taken to talk, she’d nearly drifted to sleep again until Tenebris spoke. “I know Hope, and Memphis. I know Severin is a name, but I don’t know who Severin is. Want to point them-” She pauses, yawns, and then continues, “out to me?"

Tenebris nodded slowly, and lifted his hand to set it on the back of the deep green pup, who's eyes momentarily cracked open for all but a second to glare at them as he nursed. "This one is the one we called Serevin."

“Ahhh, the one with the feather quills.” Toki observes the grumpy look Tenebris gets for interrupting the pup’s nursing, and soothes him with a couple strokes to the pressure points between his eye. It did the trick and slowly the pup's eyes rolled closed again. The hand lifted off his back and rested on the golden firstborn male, who gave a soft muffled mewl at being touched. "We're calling this one 'Orphelius.'"

“Orph- Orphelius… That’s a mouthful.” Toki laughs softly. “Pheli has a very regal name though.” He seemed to settle right back to nursing easily enough, his tiny golden mane fluffing as he suckled firmly.

"It's also Greek, a nod to my bloodline." Asgore commented happily.

Toki nods sleepily. “So, Orphelius, Severin, Hope, and Magnus… Who’re the last two?” She yawns.

Tenebris reached and touched the brown-pelted female, though unlike the others, she showed no reaction, more focused on her nursing. "We're calling her Temperance."

“And who’s this little purple lady…?” Toki hums, gently rubbing a finger across the little female who was still yet unnamed to her.

“We’re calling her Yuko.” Asgore smiles softly.

Yuko let off a tiny growl, and Toki laughed as she stroked her fingers over her, before settling down. “Yuko… Temperence, Yuko, and Hope. You’ve got three girls- I hope you’re excited.”

"I know, I'm excited." Tenebris purred. "I'm a Daddy again~" He cooed happily.

Toki gives a soft chuckle that disturbs all the pups on her belly. They whine until she soothes them, and she gives a soft, sleepy sigh. “You’re a daddy again.” She nods sleepily. “Alright… Now it’s time for this nursemaid to sleep. I’m exhausted. If you want to have the kids come in, just cover my lower half with my robe, and ask them to be quiet.” She yawns. “I won’t mind them coming in if they can keep calm and quiet.”
Tenebris nodded gently, before he thrummed and settled down again with a pleased purring to celebrate his new heirs.

Toki’s soft purring mingled with Tenebris’ own as she closed her eyes, the soft suckling of the litter lulling her to sleep as they nursed from her and bonded. Toki was content—she’d worked hard, labored hard, but it had been worth it despite all of her grumbling. They were precious—Hope was a miracle and Toki wouldn’t give it up for the world.
Chapter 156

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Welcome to Book 3! Which could alternatively be called the epilogue book, as it’s just a most likely a nice slice of life section that’s going to wrap things up nicely. Probably much less angst here than in the other books- Maybe. Slightly. Unless Silver and I decide to do more angst plot- with us, you never do really know. There might be something thrown in here that you wouldn’t expect- but remember, we’re suckers for a happy ish ending. Anyway- enjoy~

Oh yeah. it's NSFW too. Slightly anyway. :D

Four months was a long time for things to happen. Flowers could bloom, people could move, weddings could happen, children would go to school- so many things in such a short time.

The twins were now officially in pre-school given their intellect and advanced growth. They’d also pestered, and pestered, and pestered until Toki and Papyrus signed them up. Which was a big help, since Toki was busy with the litter most of the day, and Papyrus was working all day now.

The twins were enjoying school. Honey was a social butterfly, and she knew everyone and everything happening. Sometimes, even, before it had happened. Skylar on the other hand was more reclusive- but he had his niche of children he played with, and they were good friends. He played music with them too.

Han’s violin, where it looked comically huge in Papyrus’ hands, had fit Skylar surprisingly well. Skylar took the heirloom with grace, and he played it any chance he got. Out of the house, of course, so as not to disturb the pups.

Kon and Lana were now officially married- and Toki was now related to her seamstress, and through the seamstress, she was also related to Bo and Wolfen. Her monster family was growing ever constantly.

The brother she never thought would get tied down ended up doing just that- getting tied down and married to the absolutely lovely sheep woman. They were both happy- and Toki was absolutely enthused for them, even if she couldn’t attend the wedding. She got to watch it from the window upstairs though, which was good enough for her.

The wedding had been a beautiful affair- Kon and Lana had been beautiful too, and Lana had taken to being a Nara like a fish took to water.

Papyrus was also back to work officially. He was now full time guard rotation once more- and honestly, he’d never been happier.

With the conversation she’d had with Asgore, the ban on people had been lifted. Guards had been doubled up though, and security on Nara Village had been doubled. In the long run, everyone felt safer for it- and it brought in new revenue to the village by opening up a whole slew of jobs.

There were more than just wolves on the force now- there were even trained rabbit guards on the force. Believe it or not, Toki had seen them send Aliquam stumbling with a well placed kick to the jaw. Their leg muscles were not something to joke about.

Four months was also not a relatively long time to nurse babies- at least, not by human standards, or even by the standards of how long Toki had breastfed the twins. She hadn’t even fully weaned the two of them before she’d been taken- though they’d not quite been a year old before she’d been stolen from them. She was looking forward to their birthday in October- when she’d actually get to experience celebrating it with them.

However, four months rolled around, and it had been four months of one hell of a roller-coaster ride. The pups started out easy enough to feed- minus Memphis, who had to be primarily bottle fed since he struggled with proper latching through the entire time she was nursing- but that changed as soon as all six of them started getting more mobile- and getting teeth.

Yes, they got their teeth much, much earlier than the twins had. Toki felt each and every one of those tiny teeth as they popped through their tiny gums and were used to viciously gnaw on her, and on her chest.

Tenebris brought her a lot of hot cocoa to make up for her being chewed on.

The teeth honestly weren’t the worst part. All six of them had their own little personalities that were starting to develop- and they’d squabble and spat as all siblings did. Most days they’d romp and yip and squeak to their hearts content, but sometimes they’d get too rough and Toki would have to give them a reprimand in beast speech to get them to calm down.

Hope, despite being the runt, attempted to be the more dominant of the group. She was a lot like Dear in that retrospect- and she was very much clingy to Toki, much to Toki’s disgruntlement. She was trying not to get attached- and it was hard not to, when she had a tiny mini-beast of herself, cuddling her and trying to drive her siblings away so she could keep Toki to herself.

Yeah, that was a thing- beast pups operated differently than human babies. She could see how her twins were so advanced despite not being two years old yet. The beast pups were capable of understanding complete and complex sentences from a couple months old- though it was a toss up if they’d actually listen.

Most of the time they ignored Aliquam when he attempted to get them to mind. Same with Asgore, or Sans, or Grillby when he was over. Well, Grillby had the most luck of the lot- he could sort of stare them down, and they’d eventually just sit and behave and give him sad puppy looks.

The only ones they for sure listened to were Toki and Tenebris. Toki, because she was their birth mother and instinct said listen to mother, and Tenebris because he was the closest thing their tiny instincts could latch onto for their genetic birth father.

Asgore got walked over a lot- both metaphorically and literally.

But, hopefully, that would change.

It had been four months since the litter was born. It was September, it was cooling down and summer was coming to an end- and Toki’s milk had been drying up for a couple weeks, and her teats had finally disappeared that morning.

Which meant that it was time for the litter to go home with them.

Toki had a pouch on her chest, with all of the litter loaded up in it. They were settled down and napping, resting against her bones with their little limbs clinging to her. She had the entire lot- which had practically quadrupled in size since their birth- braced with both arms as she walked down the street.

Aliquam had all of the pups baby things gathered, and was walking with Toki.

“Four months feel like forever.” Toki mumbles softly, grunting as Hope shifted up and tried to mouth at her collarbone. There was no ectoflesh for her to suckle at though, and the pup gave a tiny, sad noise. “I can’t believe it’s flown by so fast… Our kids are in school, the pups are going to your dad’s home… The house is going to be so empty. Well- besides Sobek and Snuggle.”

Snuggle had been in a cocoon for the past week- so he hadn’t moved from a corner of the living room. They suspected he was finally ready to grow into a full sized bee. And they hadn’t seen much of Sobek since he’d molted. He had lost all his baby feathers, and was now a very grumpy, very flustered, naked chicken.

"It will do us some good to have the home to ourselves. Indeed I will miss the excitement of the pups, but their Papa is waiting for them so eagerly. I almost feel like it would be cruel to try and harbor them for ourselves any longer..." Aliquam answered, watching her before stepping closer and leaning down to kiss her head. "You were a miraculous nursemaid, you know..." He assured her sweetly.

"I wouldn’t dream of keeping them longer than necessary. My milk is gone- my body is saying they’re ready to go to their daddies, even if they don’t think so yet." She leaned into his kiss, her mane fluffing up. Yeah, that had grown back too. Four months, and it was almost back to full length. Toki kept it neatly trimmed instead of wild and everywhere. "I know I was a good nursemaid. They all grew well. You know... I don’t think I ever told you. Hope is literally what I looked like as a beast. Four arms and all. Though, I didn’t have a tail."

"I have no doubt that you were the most beautiful creature." He purred, though glancing at Hope as she was mentioned. He gave a soft laugh. "The way she has Father’s tail, but your stinger, it reminds me of a scorpion." He commented.

Toki laughed, and rubbed Hope’s little wings through the pouch. “I wasn’t bad to look at when I was up on my body weight. You’d have liked me- I had boobs.” She gives him a teasing elbow with her secondary arm and winks at him. “Anyway- Yeah, she’s a lot like a little scorpion. Though, she’s definitely got my teeth instead of your dad’s. I felt every one of them as she was growing them in.”

Toki glanced up and sighed. Her wings flicked lightly, and she gave Papyrus a wide smile. “I’m eager to have a moment to fly. I haven’t been able to fly since… well, before I got too heavy to fly.” She sucks in a soft breath, and cuddles into his side. “I imagine it’s going to be like when you got to walk again. Do you want to join me in the sky with Clover? I think I want to fly home once we drop the pups off.”

"It has been a long time since you've flown around. I'd love to be there when you have your first time in the sky after so long." He answered, knowing she was going to be thrilled to have him up there with her.

Toki beamed at him. “Thank you, my love. I’d like that a lot.”

Tenebris’ house loomed ahead, and she made a soft humming sound as they reached it. She reached a hand up and knocked on the door, shifting and soothing the litter as they stirred at the noise. It was better that they were mostly sleeping for this. It would make the transition smoother.

She knows Tenebris was not expecting them today, so it would be a surprise for them- a welcome
one. They were waiting patiently for the day they got to bring them home.

Surprisingly enough, it was not Tenebris nor Asgore who opened the door, but Thumper, who was rubbing his eyes before he looked up. "Hullo Toki, Aliquam, what's up?" He asked softly.

"Hey kiddo." Toki gave him an odd look. "What's got you home from school, kiddo?" She lifts a hand and feels his forehead, rubbing between his ears. "You feel a little warm, but not fever warm."

"Spent a little t'much magic practicing... Papa wanted me to stay home to recover my magic..." He answered softly.

"Aah... Magi-drain." Aliquam spoke with a small nod.

"Ahh." Toki nods softly. She lets off the tiniest, smallest curl of magic for him to absorb, if only to alleviate the start of his maybe fever, before drawing her hand back. "Do you mind letting us in, sweetie?" She asks gently. "I need to talk to both of your fathers."

"It might end up waitin' a bit... they're nappin." He hummed softly, before he pulled open the door. "But you can come in." He offered.

Toki offered a sly smile. "Alright. We'll only be a moment. Pap- why don't you go drop that off in the... room ... for them."

Aliquam took a moment, and then he grinned and gave a nod. "You got it." He whispered, starting upstairs.

Toki stepped inside, and slowly made her way to the living room, where she could hear Asgore’s rumbling snore. She made her way silently inside and over to the nest in the middle of the living room, before shifting to step silently into the nest.

She shifts, and opened the pouch. Hope didn’t unlatch immediately from her ribs, so she let her be for the moment while she gently pulled the sleeping Magnate from the cloth pouch, and settled him down against Tenebris’ stomach. Severin was tucked on Asgore’s chest, and the serious pup nestled into his mane with a sleepy sigh.

Toki worked on unloading the pups slowly, trying to be quiet while giving Hope time to let go.

Thumper slowly followed Toki to the main room. The pups quickly got comfortable in their father's arms, though Tenebris opened his eyes slightly and gave Toki a soft rumble. "Thank you." He whispered.

Toki wasn’t done yet- there was one that wasn’t wanting to let go, and Toki startled when Tenebris whispered to her. She blinked at him slowly, her fingers working to try and gently pry Hope from where the pup had a grip on her rib cage. Toki’s secondary hands were unwrapping the pouch, which would let Asgore tote the litter when he needed to move all of them at once. “… You’re welcome.” She mumbles back, equally quiet. “Help me? Hope won’t let go.”

Tenebris nodded slowly and reached up to ghost his fingers over the pup's back, chirping and rattling sweetly to coax her to let go.

Hope whimpered, stubbornly clinging with tiny claws as she resisted the soothing touch and gentle coaxing.

Toki sighed. She gently pried her fingers under the runts own, and carefully got her unhooked.
Doing so got Hope to kick up towards full blown whines, and Toki shifted her off to Tenebris swiftly before she could change her mind. “They’re all yours now, Dad.” She whispers softly to him, and backs out of the nest.

Hope whines, opening green eyes to try and fuss at Tenebris.

Toki steps back towards the main room, and wiggles her fingers gently in good-bye.

"Thank you" He whispered again, before slowly grooming Hope to hush her gently.

Thumper smiled warmly and gave a small wave. "Thank you, Toki~" He whispered.

Toki gave Thumper a warm smile and waved back. She met Aliquam in front of the door as he came down the stairs, and she exhaled softly before stepping outside.

“... That was rough.” She says softly. “But... We’re free. I don’t think we’ve been kid free in... Wow. A while. Is this what human parents feel like when their kids go off to school for the day?”

What was she going to do with herself besides writing? She hadn’t ever ordered her hives, and it was too cold to bother now... What did one do with ones self now that they were free?

Aliquam stepped to her side with a smile, wrapping his arms around her with a gentle squeeze. "I'm so proud of you, you did everything right..." He purred happily, before he smiled. "Do you want to go flying?"

“I did.” She smiles slowly. “And I do. If you still want to, that is. Unless there’s something else you’d rather do with the time we have free to ourselves today?”

"..." He looked at her with an innocent look in his eyes and steadily... lost the look.

Four months was also a long time for them to have not been intimate.

"Oh... Oh my god..." His cheeks darkened, before he took a deep breath. "Tokiko... The only reason I didn't say it is because I'm a gentleman... but now that you suggested it..." He gave her a look that screamed that he wanted exactly what she had in mind.

Toki gave a slow and innocent smile, and leaned her hips purposefully back against his, wiggling slightly before she stole away with goal-directed strides. “Oh Papy dear, I don’t know what you mean. Would you care to explain it to me~?” She teased, her hips sashaying slightly with a pep she hadn’t had to them in ages. She felt like her again- feisty, sexy, and free. “What is it that you didn’t say because you’re such a gentleman?”

"Toki oh my god. I’m not even joking- I’m ridiculously hard.” He whispered frantically, trying not to be heard by anyone else, before he took a deep breath. "Tokiko let's go home." He told her before he took another breath and he quickly took after her, muttering a soft 'oh my god, oh my god, oh my god' under his breath with every step.

She had felt a distinct hardness in his pants- but he was painfully easy to arouse sometimes. And it had been four months and a week or so since they’d been intimate. They’d had too many kids with high needs in the house to even consider intimacy- and by the end of the day, Toki was too tired to even consider giving him a blowjob to blow off his steam.

Unlike her, his sex drive was rampant. That, she suspected, was the cat beast in her amazing mate.

The same cat beast made him a pursuit predator- which made her fleeing from him a dangerous game.
to play.

She gave a cheeky grin at him over her shoulder, and flicked her wings at him, keeping just a few steps ahead of him and making sure he had to move quick to keep up. “Come along Papy dear, come along. We’ve got a bit of a jaunt home, don’t we~? Maybe we should stop at Grillby’s for some milkshakes on the way~?” She gives him a half-lidded teasing look.

She was literally poking a wild cat with a stick- and it was exciting.

True to his more feline blood, a low growl rose from him as she walked away and he began to follow with a little more speed in his pace. "Toki I love you, but you are poking a sleeping bear I’m not sure you want to mess with without being behind closed doors..." He told her, heat rising to his face.

Toki cast a glance over her shoulder again, and cocked a hip at him, almost sashaying as she walked. Bearing children twice had definitely given her the mom hips, and she made use of them as she swayed like a bell in a breeze, enticing him into watching her. “Oh? But you know how much I love to prod the sleeping bear. Though, poking the sleeping cat is so much more fun~” She purrs, and her eyes half lid at him over her shoulder. “And who says we have to be behind closed doors? We have the whole house to ourselves. Why don’t we go reclaim it~?”

Toki, she had to remind herself, Papyrus loves your boobs more- don’t make him an ass man because he’s already staring...

He stuttered a little before he took a deep breath. "Couch or counter...”

Her eyes flashed with a wicked glint, and she tensed momentarily, paws tightening their grip on the cement. “I dunno.” She trills innocently. “Why don’t you… catch me and we’ll see?”

With that, she took off at a sprint she knew he could catch up with. She didn’t want to outrun him- no, the chase was what was fun. It would rile him, and rile her, and make the whole experience that much better.

And if it let Sentinel out to mingle some with Papyrus at the same time, well, Toki wasn’t going to complain.

Now that he could run, she could run; and now that he could run...

Pupils turned to slits as his irises shone a bright golden orange. And with that, he took off after her in an absolute sprint.

Nearby, a shark monster noticed her running as well as he who chased her before she cackled. "OOOOOH GIRL YOU BETTER RUN!"

Toki made the mistake of glancing over her shoulder when the woman shouted at her- and she spooked a bit at the intense look on her mate’s face. Mayyybe not such a good idea to rile him and then run, but she’d take her lickin’s and keep on tickin’. And probably enjoy it too.

She went from a steady run to full out sprinting, because like fuck if she was gonna go down easy. He had to work for it, damn it.

Believe it or not, she made it to the house. She was huffing and puffing like she might blow the damn thing down, but she made it- and she got the door shut behind her and everything. A shut door would delay him a few seconds that it took for him to either plow it down, or see reason and open it. Either or, it would let her get to the living room, and at least get somewhat prepared.
She turned around to do just that- and ran into a heated wall of bone.

When the calling came, no man needed a door.

Now that he was unencumbered by armor or cast or cane, Aliquam instead had lunged through the open window, and rolled to a stop in the foyer before he snapped his fingers and had fully surrounded her in bones.

Toki recognized the wall of glowing bones, and she didn’t bother to reach out to touch them. She’d been caught, fair and square, and now she awaited her punishment like a bird in a cage as he caught his breath and stalked for her.

“Well,” She grins, “It looks like I’ve been had. Tell me,” her eyes half lid at him over the wall, and she buzzes to him playfully, “What are you going to do now that you’ve got your queen bee in a cage?”

He leaned his head to one side before he smirked. "I'm gonna make her hum ~" He purred, before he snapped his fingers. Bones appeared around her, before linking together and wrapping around her form, giving a slight squeeze.

Toki gasped, her hands sliding to the bones that twined around her ribs like snakes, slipping under her clothes. Her ribs tingled warmly, and she shivered, her wings buzzing. Her wings tightened as his bones slid around the joints too, stimulating them and making her tremble. “M-Make me hum, hm? Well, how are you going to d-do that from behind this wall of bones?” She gave him a sultry look, resisting the instinctual need to give him the hum that he so craved.

He grinned smugly and with a hum, a bone appeared between her legs, lifting up to rub the rounds of the end against her hidden folds as it began to vibrate.

Toki hadn’t even realized her womanhood had appeared until the bone pressed against her through her pants, and she felt her legs tremble. She couldn’t stop from resting her hands on her cage, and was relieved when the bones didn’t damage her. “Ah-hahh… That’s playing d-dirty.” She whines softly.

If he was going to play dirty, she was going to give him a show. She rocked her hips on the bone, mouth lolling open and panting teasingly to him. She let out a slow groan, and a soft piping filled the air from within her cage. She fanned her wings slowly against her bone chains, and plumed pheromones over to him.

Two could play at the dirty game, after all. She was going to make him wish it was his hands on her ribs, his member between her legs, his tongue twined with hers- oh yes. She was going to make him want her.

Oh FUCK . Aliquam choked slightly as he watched her, clearly gawking as he stumbled back into one of the nearby tables. "H-Holy shit..." He wheezed.

Toki grinned at him over the layer of bones, and lifted her fingers, running her tongue along one of them. “Oh?” She asks, thrusting her hips against the bone vibrating between her legs. Her pants were growing damp, and there was arousal blooming in her belly. She didn’t know he could literally make a vibrating bone- that would have opened up so much play in the bedroom if she’d have known that. “Got nothing to say, hot stuff? What about making me hum, hm? Your little Queen Bee in a cage~?”

It was as if his resolve was crumbling away as the bones slowly fell from around her. "Oh my god~" He whispered hungrily.
As the bones melted away, Toki let her hands strip her clothes away, revealing more and more of herself entangled with the bone chains he’d woven around her. Once she was bare, she left the pile of clothes right there in the doorway, his little vibrating bone toy tangled with the lot of them, and stepped over the last of the cage- the last of his resolve- and strutted towards him like a predator stalking her prey.

Oh how the tables had turned.

She pushed him back against the wall, her pelvis pressing against his as she purred up at him. Her mane mantled up, and she stroked a finger coyly up his chin and grinding her soaking core right against the throbbing, and heated rod that was jutting out of his too-tight pants. “God? That’s not my name, sweetheart. But, if you want to call me that, I don’t mind being your goddess tonight. Will you be a good disciple and worship at my temple?” She coos teasingly.

Toki nipped his neck, kissing up to lock her teeth with his and blow his mind with a searing kiss- and then she was gone, slipping away like the minx she was and leaving him teetering there on the wall as she giggled and sashayed to the kitchen, every ounce of her oozing ‘come get me’.

His little bone chains rattled against her bones, enticing him further.

Aliquam watched her go, before he took a slow breath and straightened himself up to follow after her. "Tokiko, you are so unbelievably addictive." He sighed as he trailed after her into the kitchen with a wide grin. "I'm going to make you reach a new plain of earthbound bliss at its finest, I swear it." He hissed happily.

Toki turned to face him in the kitchen, leaning against the counter and grinning at him. Her spine rubbed against the granite counter, and she had a moment where it felt alien- she was so, so used to having an ectobody on because of the litter, that it felt weird to be without it. Her secondary hands slid up her ribs, and she slid her primary hands along the arches of her pelvis.

She rocked her hips, and made a soft, tiny moan. “A new plain of earthbound bliss, hm? Well, I think you’ll have to touch me for that.” She purrs. “Well, more than just these.” She jingled one of the chains with her secondary hands, her eye lights watching him stalk closer.

Holy shit. Papyrus watched her simply run her hands over her exposed bones; oh it had been so long since he got to properly kiss every last fucking rib. He took a deep breath before he purred, "Oh my fucking god~" For her to hear as he came closer and reached out to set his hands on her hips, pulling her close before he ran his hands up her sides and pulled her into a kiss.

Her hands curled onto his shoulders, fingers plucking at the shirt covering his chest, and she met his kiss with a soft, heated moan. Her hips rocked into his hands, and then into his hips as she was pressed against him. Her wings buzzed behind her, vibrating against the counter. “Mmm, I don’t think we’ve claimed the kitchen yet,” She purred, eye lights twinkling at him merrily as her teeth moved against his, and one of her secondary hands stole up under his shirt to tease his lower ribs.

Toki had always loved his ribs- they were broad and strong in ways that no human set of ribs could ever be. Hers weren’t human looking anymore either, not after her Void ordeal, but he seemed to be enjoying them regardless. And, well, she was enjoying his fingers sliding up the sides, rattling the chains he’d put on her. She enjoyed that a lot.

"Well why don't we change that?" He suggested, purring a soft sound before he cooed and lifted her up onto the cleanest section of counter, kissing along her collarbone before he hummed and looked up to her, smirking. "Darling, will you put your hands together for me~?" He cooed.
"Together?" She questions, her sockets half-lidded at him. His mouth on her collarbone had been pure bliss, and she’d been putty in his hands as he hiked her up and planted her backside on the granite counter behind them. It wasn’t soft, but it didn’t need to be- her bones were tough.

She lifts her primary arms above her head, pressing her fluffy wrists together and purring at him as her legs hook over his clothed hips. Her secondary hands were now both roaming under his shirt, stroking his ribs firmly and playing with his sternum. “Like this?” She asks with a pleasant purr, wondering if he’d meant one set, or both.

He smiled and took her smaller hands in his hold to kiss them gently, though his eye lit up as her primary set of hands rested together and with a hum, another bone appeared before wrapping around her wrists to trap them together. "Juuuust like that~"

Bondage wasn’t usually their forte, but Toki couldn’t deny that it was exciting. Her arms gave a little tug against the bone holding firm, and she gave a slow grin. Her mouth slid forward, and she nipped at his shirt, giving a soft noise of impatience. She wanted to lick his ribs, since he had her smaller hands in his grasp.

Of which… they proceeded to stroke his palms, massaging and stimulating the nerve enriched bones. She had every intention of driving him wild- and he hadn’t even gotten to the really good stuff yet.

“What are you going to do now that you’ve got me right where you want me~?” She purrs to him saucily.

"The answer is very obvious, my beloved. I'm going to love you..." He purred, kissing her again before he took her secondary set of hands into his own, kissing the palms of them before pressing them together gently as his eye lit up again and another bone snared them together against her chest. As she grew trapped, he then gave her another boost and pressed her back into the cool granite as he reached down to undo his pants. "And then I'm going to fuck you until you can feel nothing but my cock inside of you~"

Her face blossomed in a brilliant flare of emerald green, cheekbones tinting almost the same color as her eye lights, and as the soul pounding behind her ribs. She squirmed, and pressed into his touch with a soft keen. With both sets of hands bound, she couldn't touch him much. Though, with the secondary set against her ribs, Toki could stretch her fingers out and ghost them over his ribs and sternum through his shirt.

Her eyes followed his hands down as they started to undo his pants, and she all but licked her teeth anticipated enthusiasm. Her brow cocked up slightly as his member slid free, and she noticed the telltale bulge at the base. "Oh?" She purred. "Pent up enough to knot me, are we?" Not that she was going to complain. His knot was a perfect fit- not too big and not too small.

Her legs were free to help him guide his pants down, and she teased the soft pads of her feet over any expanse of bare bone that she could.

He hadn't taken his shirt off enough for her to savor those delicious ribs of his, so she was just going to have to tease him in other ways while he drove her mad with desire.

"Perhaps~" He stayed just out of reach though as she tried to get clever with what limbs she had left. "Staaaaay." He told her gently before he slid out of her grasp, knowing that the bones around her would keep her trapped.

"Why don't you tell me what you want, my love? And maybe I'll indulge you~" He purred, hands sliding up from his partially removed pants, before humming as he hooked his shirt on a few fingers.
to drag it upwards, showing just a little bit of ecto-skin to his trapped wife.

Her eyes caught on that ecto-skin, which hadn’t been there a few minutes ago, and she felt herself tremble slightly as her mouth went metaphorically dry. She actively tried to move against the bones holding her hands- but lo and behold, they wouldn’t budge. When he meant stay, he actually meant stay, it seemed.

Toki keened softly at him. “Papy. My Aliquam. My love. Where did you learn to tease like this?” She questions, though figures he’s probably learned from her. Toki was as good an influence as she was a bad one sometimes. Given how much she teased him, how could he not have figured out how to drive her mad? “I… I want to see you. All of you.” Her eyes drink in the bits of musculature she can see in the glowing orange of his belly, and the muscles leading down into his pants. “I want to see you touch yourself- touch where you’d want me to touch. Where I would be touching.”

Her fingers flex with a sudden need to be on the ribs she could see.

He smirked, and with a soft hum, began to pull up his shirt. Lordie, He had gotten ripped in the four months since the litter had come, as if every waking moment was spent revitalizing muscle lost in his time of disability. "My ribs, yes… But would you want to dance your fingers along the muscle I have regrown, my darling~?" He purred. "Perhaps trace my abs, or see how long until you tickle me and make me tighten up right under your hands~?"

Her mouth watered a little bit, following the muscular trail of his abs. He never used to summon his ectobody, so now that he was sitting there teasing her with the expanses of his muscular fitness. And she couldn’t even touch it.

Toki whined softly, and reached out with her feet, wiggling her toes at him. “You’re so mean,” She whines. “I want to touch you. I want to lick you, every last inch of delicious orange ectoflesh. I want to see if you taste as good as you look. I want to stroke you, I want to hold you, I want to kiss you and sample you, and savor every bit of you. Papy, please~?"

"But I haven’t even taken off my pants~" He purred, pushing his pants down to his knees before stepping out of them. He had barely gotten to shed his shirt before there was a deep chuckle from the doorway.

"Well… I can see I’m interrupting something."

"F-FATHER!" Aliquam was surprisingly fast as he stepped back into his pants and slid them up, trying to stuff himself inside as he flushed. He at least got himself tucked back into back into his boxers, if not the zipper and button on his pants done. "W-What are you doing here?!"

Toki had no means to hide herself, or the growing puddle of arousal staining her counter top a glowing green. She squirmed, and finally settled for crossing her legs to try and hide her womanhood. A child coming out was different than her being actively aroused. Not that her bony thighs did much- yes, they were thicker since her void mutation, but not enough to cover everything. She still tried though.

“D-Dad.” She blinks awkwardly, seeing him half in the front door. She gives a strained smile. “I thought you’d be with the pups all day since it’s your first day getting to have them to just you and Asgore in your home.” Well, him, Asgore, and Thumper. Settling the children in was important. It hadn’t even been an hour yet. “Is something wrong?”

"On the contrary, I had a passing suspicion that you two would immediately partake in… celebrating your new freedom of responsibility.” Tenebris grinned, before he flicked something at Aliquam.
He quickly caught the small box before he peered inside, blinking. "Father, what is this?"

"My newest project, completed. Soul protection."
Chapter 157

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Muhahahaha. Gotta love when we split the chapter like that~ NSFW take two is a go :D

Almost in a comedic manner, Aliquam's boxers became overwhelmingly tight. "O-Oh my god~" Had he just... did he just...?

Toki’s gaze followed the box, and she blinked at it. Soul protection. “You… You made the soul condoms. You actually made soul condoms.” Her gaze flicked down to her husband’s boxers, and she blinked at the orange stain on the front. Did he… Did he just… bust a metaphorical nut over the condoms? If he did, that was so not fair. Understandable, but not fair. “… Papy? Ah… Did you just...?”

"Hhhhhhh...." His face burned in shame as he hid his face in one of his palms. "Oh my g-god..." He whispered. "Than-Thank you... Father...” He gasped.

Tenebris chuckled lowly, before he gave Toki a grin. "Well, my darling, it seems now it is time for me to take my leave... I was quite happy to get you what you needed."

Toki squirmed against the bones still holding her. “Thank you, Tenebris.” She mumbles to him. She couldn’t help her poor flustered husband- but she did try and rub her thighs together to lessen the ache. “We’ll, ah, see you later.” She squirmed again, and huffed softly. “Paaaaap, let my hands go so I can read the instructions on the box.”

He nodded and with his free hand, snapped his fingers and revoked the magic around her, the bones vanishing.

With all four hands free, Toki was free to rub her wrists and then cover herself until Tenebris left. Once he left, she looked at her younger husband and arched a brow. "Alright, mister early arrival.” She teases. "Lemme see the box."

Not like they'd need it now, she mused a little sourly, her eye on that orange stain on his boxers. Ah well. He was young, and only age and experience could lend one the control needed to hold off an orgasm after denying yourself pleasure for so long.

Toki would just need to take a cold shower.

He nodded slowly and held the box out to her. "H-Here..." He purred, before nearly collapsing against the counter with a weak moan.

Toki sighed and watched him for a moment, before she read over the box. “Well… That’s easy enough to follow. Apparently, the sheets are hard, but soften up and sort of form around the soul when they’re close enough. Then you just peel them off when you’re done. It acts like a spermicide. So… It can be worn by either party, for full pregnancy protection- unlike actual human condoms, so long as you get it fully sealed.” She smiles. “Your dad is going to make a fortune off of these with HTM sales.” She says lightly.
Hopping off the counter, Toki takes a moment to mop up the counter with a paper towel before doing the same with her thighs. She looks at her summoned parts with a soft sigh. “We’ll have to test them out later though. I think it’s about time for a cold shower.”

His dad appearing was definitely not conductive to a sexy mood. At least her poor pent up Aliquam had gotten a release though.

He looked at her with a whimper. "A-A cold shower?" He asked.

His kicked puppy look had her mane fluffing. “Well… Yeah. I mean…” She motioned to the front of his boxers, wet and orange. “Your Dad was also a bit of a… Well… mood interrupter, Papy. You’re still sputtering over there, and he’s gone now.”

"Nnnnhh..." Aliquam shakily stepped closer and pressed against her, his mouth slightly ajar as he shifted his form. He was burning up. That also wasn’t a third leg pressing against her thigh. "T-Toki... please..." Was he...? Another rock... and it pressed again hard. Oh he certainly was.

“… Papy?” The heat of his shirtless chest against her back had her wings tensing. Had he gone into heat again? It felt so soon, since the last had been while she’d been pregnant… but in all reality, it had been quite some time. She turned around to face him, and that left him rocking his clothed member against her pelvis. “… Did your heat just hit?”

She opened her mouth, and sucked in a breath of his scent, sucking in the smell of his ectobody and tasting him to discern if she could detect the musky pheromones that came with his heat.

"I-It hit this morning..." He answered on a shaky whimper. "I've been good... f-four months... I've been good." He was begging. He wasn't saying it straight but he was begging. He needed her... so badly.

“Oh Papy...” She sighed softly, and rubbed her face gently against his. She could smell the heat pheromones on him- but it was buried under a lot of his usual cologne. “I can hardly smell your pheromones. You hid the smell with your cologne this morning- and you know how I love when you use it. Of course I wouldn’t have noticed...” She says softly to him. “So... shower is necessary.”

She needed his pheromones to help trigger her body’s response to his heat- she’d need to be able to keep up with his libido.

She wasn’t telling him no, however- but that they needed to wash, so she could scent him properly as a mate should, and then she was his for the taking.

He whimpered loudly but backed off and collected his shirt. "Okay... Sh-Shower..." He breathed out, before giving her a small smile. "W-Would you like a head start?"

“Why don’t you be my guest, sweetheart?” She motions him upstairs with a smile. “You’re the one who needs to rinse the most to let those sweet pheromones of yours out. Though, that’s something we can tell your dad. Significant quantities of cologne can block out heat musk.” She gave his backside a playful swat, and ushered him out of the kitchen and towards the stairs, following him up step by step.

He cooed feebly in reply before making his way upstairs with trembling legs. "Oh Toki... I'm so thankful the children are going to stay in school for a few more hours." He joked weakly. "I worry that you and I are going to be quite busy.”

“I imagine so.” She smiles slightly, reaching up to pinch his ass cheek through his pants as he made his way slowly up. She picked up her pace, and stopped beside him, hooking herself under his shoulder and helping stabilize his legs.

This was his first heat with this prosthetic. There was no telling if it would malfunction or not while his magic was more unstable.

"A-Ahh..." He trembled and whined at the pinch to his ass but the help up the stairs did him wonders as they made it up.

“We managed last time though. We’ll manage it this time.” She had practice handling her heats over in the other world. Quinn and Kai hadn’t wanted to be apart from them long enough for her to sort herself out properly, so she’d learned on the fly. Once at the top of the stairs, Toki helped him to their room, and then motioned him to the bathroom. “Do you want me to join you in the shower?” She asks him with a lopsided grin.

“Oh yes please, I would like that very much~” He cooed in reply.

Toki smiled slowly and slyly stepped in front of him again. “Alright. Well, you need to strip first,” She let him stand on his own, trailing her hand up his muscular ectoflesh covered chest, to his neck and then up to his jaw. She rubbed her fingers gently along the edge of his jaw bone, and gave him a smug look. “I’ll go get the shower started, handsome. You get your clothes in the hamper before you come in after me, yeah?”

That said, she turned to go to the bathroom and get the shower started.

"Mmh~" He cooed at her touch before giving a small nod. "Y-Yes ma'am..." He murmured.

He let her go ahead to the bathroom as he stripped, though indeed it wasn't long before she was once more in his company, his orange ectobody alight and glowing just slightly as his erection stood tall for her to see. Lord he was needy wasn't he?

By the time he was in, Toki had the shower going, and it was steadily warming up. The box of condoms had been left on the counter top for the bathroom. She turned around to eyeball him, and she gave him a slow purr. One of her primary hands was stuck in the water, and she was clearly testing the temperature for the both of them, since neither wanted an icy shower.

That gave her a moment to peruse the goods, so to speak. She eyed him head to toe, and licked her teeth. “My, my, my… Someone is a needy boy. You already came once today, and look at you, still hard as the moment you pressed against me earlier today, aren’t you?” She teased lightly. Her eye lights trailed up to his, and hers twinkled mischievously at him. He could be such a cute little sub sometimes without even meaning to. “Don’t worry, my love. We’ll get you all taken care of. The water’s gonna warm up in just a moment.”

"Okay dear~" He purred quietly, his eyes hazed over in lust as he gave her a smile while waiting for the okay for the water, though he reached out and ran his hand under the falling water as well, "It’s nice and warm." He mentioned, "It’s going to feel nice."

His hand under the water put him very, very close to her, and Toki didn’t really have anywhere to back up. She just gave him faintly lopsided smile at his hazy lusty look, and reached her free primary hand up to ghost a touch over his chin. “It’s warm enough now,” She says, feeling the shift of the hot water kicking on, “Why don’t you hop in first? Get that first initial rinse~?” She purrs, trying to coax him in.

He sighed gently before he purred and took her by the arms, gently pulling on her as he slid around her. "Come with me~?" He purred, though he didn't give her a chance to say no as he tugged her into the shower with him. "I'm not going to do this alone, am I~?" His voice was nearly as hypnotic as his gaze was.

Toki was a little lost in his voice and in his gaze, and she didn’t fight as he tugged her into the shower. In fact, she slid it shut behind her with one hand, and then dry-swallowed as she looked up at him. “N-no, not at all.” She stuttered. Her hands slid out to get a grip on him, her fingers settling on the firm curve of his hip. His ectobody had blended seamlessly over his prosthetic, which was good. He’d look odd with a mostly full body, but one leg still skeletal. “A-ah, will you hand me the soap? I can get you started.”

… Okay, maybe she wanted to soap him up a little bit and play with his body while it was soapy and warm. So she liked muscle just as much as she liked bones? She was allowed to like multiple things.

He shivered with a soft sigh at her wandering hands before he nodded and reached out to take hold of the soap, passing it to her. "Here you are, sweetheart." He purred gently, his voice growing a little more sober sounding under the pleasantly warm water.

She took the soap, and lathered the bones of her hands up, before rubbing the bar against the muscles of his chest. She found her eyes more than a little entranced by how the suds and water slid down his body, bumping over his pectorals and down over his abs, before slipping down to his thighs.

As she washed, the scent of his cologne went away with it, and his musk began to rise up. Toki could feel the warm begin to encompass her bones, stirring her arousal deeper into her being. Her eye lights expanded as all four hands came to rest on him, and she slipped closer, his member bumping between her legs as her hands washed him.

Slowly, she was making her way around towards his back, and she seemed content to drink him in slowly- every inch of him bit by bit.

Her hands dancing along his body made him give a euphoric sigh for her efforts and he gave a sweet moan to reward her for her blissful touch, though after long enough he angled his body a bit more and pulled her into a kiss, her body quickly pinned between his own form and the wall.

Toki squeaked as he advanced on her and pinned her to the wall. She welcomed his kiss openly though, her soaked mane trying to fluff upwards as she arched herself into the heated muscle. There was temptation to let her ectobody form, to let the soapy ectoflesh rub together under the spray, but she was enjoying the feel of his bones against her. Unless he demanded, she’d keep her ectobody hidden, since she’d only just gotten her full bones back.

But… She would enjoy his body. As she leaned into his kiss, her hands wandered. Her primary hands slid down, while her secondary went up, sprawling across his shoulders and dragging soft claws along the flesh. Her primary hands, however, slid down to his backside, and she cupped him in her palms, working the sudsy and muscular backside in her palms.

He had the nicest ass- and yes, she was going to fully explore this ass and enjoy every bit of it’s bountiful surface until he simply hauled her up and fucked her senseless under her growing heat.

He cooed at her hands along his rear before he sighed happily and hugged her around the back, though he then leaned down and pressed his face into the lowest part of her mane. "Hey... Would you mind~?" He purred softly.

"Would I mind~?" She questioned. Her eye lights twinkled at him. "You mean my body? Something soft for you to hold~?" Her hands wandered lower on his backside, investigating between his cheeks. "Mmmm. I think I can do that~"
Under his hands, her flesh formed and rolled over her. She was sans her nursing teats, but her body was not the same. She had lost some of the maternity weight, but her ectobody bore marks of motherhood.

She had a small span of stretchmarks across the supple pudge of her belly, and dancing along the sides of her breasts. Ectoflesh could bear some forever marks- and hers was of motherhood.

And his mating bite along her shoulder under her damp mane, of course.

None of her differences and marks stopped him from pressing his face into her bosom and giving a low moan of happiness as he proceeded to massage and grope over her body. "Beautiful, beautiful body~" He whimpered happily, his member throbbing harder against her supple thighs. "I'm the luckiest bastard in the world to be your husband~"

She laugh gently, and more than welcomes him to enjoy himself between the water slick valley of her breasts. "Somehow I have corrupted you into enjoying all things soft and squishy and clearly non-skeleton." She teases, giving his backside an ample squeeze again. "But that's okay. I like you covered in orange too~"

Her fingers find something surprising in their exploration though. She pauses, surprised, and she gently nudges it. "Oh my goodness. You have a butt-hole . That... That is precious ." He didn't even need it, but he had one, and she hadn't ever known he had one.

The prodding against the ring of muscle between his legs had him straighten with a gasp, before he fumbled and flustered as he hid in her mane. "Why are you poking that..." He grumbled. "It just shows up..."

Toki laughed and rubbed her finger gently over it. "Because I didn't notice it the first time we played with your ectobody, and it's adorable." She kissed along his shoulder as he hid in her mane. "Do you want me to leave it alone?" She thrums, her secondary fingers massaging the tense muscles in his back.

"Mmh..." He considered his options, and then considered how Toki didn't really have nails so much as sharpened finger bones. "Well... ah... perhaps later we can e-experiment..." He stuttered softly. "Though not right now; not yet..."

Toki gave him a slow and tender grin, and slid her sharp finger bones away from his pucker. Instead she gave his buns a firm squeeze, and then cupped his lower back as she hiked a leg up over his hips.

With her back against the wall under the multiple shower heads, he had ample room to brace her. And, at this angle, it let his throbbing member press against the heat of her core, and feel the slickness that was most definitely not water. “That’s right...” She purrs, heat rumbling from her. Her body was reacting fully to his heat now, and her bones were starting to ache. “We’ve got so many other things to do right now~ and a new box to make a test run on when we’re out of the shower. Though...” She pauses... “If they don’t work, or we’ve got it on wrong... are we ready for kids yet?”

"Nnh... I... I know my seed is that good, but perhaps we can try father's protection..." He whined quietly. "So I get to have some reckless romps without fearing another litter right away. As eager as I am for more children, I have to make up for lost time with my wife first."

She laughed and pulled him in for a kiss. “Then wait we will. So, no ungloved souls yet.” She taps a finger against the orange flesh of his chest as she drags her smaller hands around to rest between them. Her breasts pressed against his pectorals, pressing the ample flesh upwards. Motherhood and nursing had it's perks- she’d never had a cup size this large before. “Shall we get out of the shower?” She grins at him coyly, and rocks her warmth against his length. “If the condoms work how I think they work, we should try them dry before we attempt to glove up in the shower. Besides...” She opened her mouth, trailing from the kiss down to taste his chest. “I can taste you- the bare, amazing taste of you. All of you. I’d say you’re clean now."

He cooed sweetly, nodding in confirmation to her words before he sighed quietly and reached out to turn off the water. "Let's... Let's go... please~"

Toki gave him a slow smile. Her leg shifted where she’d hooked it over him. “Carry me~? I'll grab the box as we go past~"

With the water off, he nodded and effortlessly hiked her up into his arms. "My perfect wife with her perfect fucking ass and her perfect body and her beautiful personality." He purred, kissing up her chest and up to her teeth to capture them in a deep kiss as he walked out of the shower, caring little that they left a trail of water in their wake.

She swept the box of condoms into her secondary hand as they stepped out. Toki couldn't stop the bubbling giggle as she looped both her legs around his waist, her teeth working against his as she kissed back earnestly. “It's been a long time since you’ve swept me off my feet like this.”

"And now that I'm back on my own two feet you bet, I'm going to make up for lost time~" He answered with confidence long missed from his composure.

She gave a hearty laugh, looping her primary arms around his neck. She hoisted herself up some, putting her breasts right in his face. “Oh yeah. We’ve got a lot of lost time to make up for.” Not that they wouldn’t have even if his prosthetic hadn’t taken properly, but she was glad that he had his confidence back. Sometimes self-confidence was everything. She was just sad these sorts of prosthetic limbs didn’t work for general humans.

“Take me to bed, handsome. Or wherever you can manage to. This rod between my legs needs some tender care, stat~” She purrs, and oh was that a twitch of her legs around him, pressing him deeper against the heat of her core? Yes, yes that was.

He cooed happily as the placement of her embrace put him in what was easily his favorite position against her body and as she suggested, he took her right to the bed, just in time for his cock to eagerly twitch against her body. "And I'm sure there's a cervix in this room in need of a thorough beating~" He hissed happily.

Toki laughed as she was laid back on the bed. She pulled him flush to her, and for once, he was able to loom over her on his own strength. She grinned at him. “I’m ready and waiting for you~ but I think we wanted to glove up first~?” She opened up the box in her secondary hands, and pulled out a sheet.

She paused, looking at it. “… I think we have a small dilemma. I’m not going to fit.”

He blinked, and then he whined quietly. "Well... I guess... but for now... wont it fit me?" He asked.

“Yes.” She nods slightly. Her smile grows again, and she tosses the box up the bed, before stroking his chest, calling her magic to coax his soul out. “Lets see if it’ll fit you.”

He leaned back and cooed quietly as her magic enveloped his soul, and he gasped only slightly as she pulled it out. "Nh~"

She purred warmly at his response, and cupped his soul in her hand. “Oh, Papy,” She cooed, “You’re already juicing for me...” Her fingers ran over the thick orange slime his soul was emitting, and she winked up at him. “I’m flattered.”

As the sheet was brought closer, it reacted, softening and allowing her to wrap it around his soul firmly. The soul and sticky juice were contained, and she hummed thoughtfully. Her fingers rubbed his soul. “Can you still feel this?”

He didn’t even answer through his immediate squealing and moaning at the wonderful touches. "O- Oh god~"

Toki laughed, and rocked her hips into his. Her soul floated free of her own accord, dwarfing his in size. “Well, don’t just sit there, big boy.” She bounced her hips under him playfully. “That knot’s going to bruise my pelvic bone if you just keep letting it sit there and throb like that.”

He gave a heavy huff of air before he hoisted her hips up and pressed the head of his cock to her entrance, barely able to hold himself back from just slamming into her, rather than sliding into her slowly like he did.

She gave a slow groan as he pressed the head of his cock into her. “Oh sweetheart,” She moaned gently. “Please- don’t hold back. I ache for you.” Her soul slid to brush against his, tendrils sliding from hers to lace around his and envelop it. Her soul practically swallowed his into her depths, and she enjoyed every bit of sensation that passed through it.

Her begging egged him on, but it was when her soul just about absorbed his did he scream out and actually follow through on his initial intentions.

It was safe to say that Aliquam was already gone to the pleasure, moaning and howling as he began to quickly rock his hips into his wife. His knot was already on the verge of swelling, so it was safe to say her trick did wonders on her poor, heat-induced husband. "O-Oh god! Oh FUCK!"

Toki was drawn along for the ride. She bounced and rocked under him, her hands clutching at the firmness of his skin as she gasped. Her mouth rested open as she panted with every rapid thrust, his swelling knot pulling at her entrance with every tug in and out of her. Gods above, he was fantastic.

Her soul beat against his, her tendrils twining with his and coaxing his out. Her juices enveloped the barrier between them, and miraculously, it held. Slowly, her soul rubbed on his, teasing him harder and riding her own heat out.

"H-hhahhh! Fuck...! Oh fuck~ Toki!” He had no filter left as he cried and moaned out for her to hear. She was doing so well, and he had missed every last bit of this.

“Aliquam~ Oh my love, my husband, my Papy, please, please~” Her soft gasps mirrored his frantic cries of pleasure. Her fingers clutched him, sharp points raking faint lines down the glowing orange flesh of his back. Her soul was beating quicker against his, their tendrils squirming together in bliss. The feedback from his end was… glorious.

On her side, she could feel the slide and push of his member inside of her, the thick split of his growing knot as it stroked inside of her with the most pleasant feeling. But from his side, she could feel every pulse and twitch of her walls, the sensation of his member brushing against her cervix and how it eased open for him, and how his knot rubbed along a few tiny scars her body had inside from delivering the litter- and how the rub and glide of the firmer, thicker strips of flesh seemed to make him pulse harder for the texture.

It was overwhelming. It was glorious. It was… ethereal in it’s bliss.
She could only clutch to him and ride it out, her breaths coming with soft gasps and pleas of his name as her mouth nipped and nibbled over his shoulder, teeth marking him with soft hickies.

Everything his wife felt, he felt, and as it was layered over by her embrace Papyrus could only moan as he returned it considerably.

Her nips on his skin sent tingles along his body and he nearly howled from the fiery sensation before he quickly returned the favor, though with much more gusto as he promptly sank his teeth into the flesh of her shoulder, pressing as deep as he could to remind the world that this woman was his wife, and he belonged to her as much as this bite meant she belonged to him. His teeth grated deep, pressing into bone and linking up with the mark that was already there.

Initially his teeth glinted off of her, pressing but not harming, as her defense was fully restored and back in place. It only took a little tweak on her part to rip it all down, and for his teeth to slide through where her ectoflesh was thinnest and sink right into the bone below. Her mating mark burned with pain, but it was a pain that fueled pleasure in the heat of the moment.

Her teeth splayed, a rough gasp leaving her as the warmth from her body doubled, and she finally dropped her head back down to his shoulder and reclaimed her mark on him just as passionately.

All the while her hips rocked into every thrust, even as his thrusts grew difficult with his thick his knot was growing. Eventually it didn't pull out, and she was left gyrating herself against him, driving them both wild with the friction and feelings shared between the linked souls.

Now knotted, Aliquam couldn't do more than rut his hips against her, whimpering and moaning loudly through his mouthful of her shoulder. His soul began to let off a fair bit more energy now, though... and in that energy came words he long reserved.

He brought his arms up and tightly wrapped them around Toki, pressing his head into her neck as he gasped and moaned.

' With this body, I will carry you in your time of need... ' His vows.

Her soul echoed the words she could feel ringing from his, finishing the next verse. ‘ Your cup will never empty if my blood will be your wine... ’ Her very essence echoed to him, the words different, but so well meaning.

The waves of pleasure were driving Toki wild- and ultimately, the heat in her belly was growing hotter and hotter, the painful urge and need growing inside of her to reach her peak, to take all he had to offer and more. The instinctive part of her was making soft urging sounds into his neck, a plea for him to breed her good.

With shaking legs he pulled his shins underneath her, slightly lifting Toki up so that gravity would further weigh his form into hers.

' With this soul... Nnh~ ' It did well to help and he trembled hard as he pulled closer. ”A-aahh...” A breathy moan momentarily interrupted him before he got a hold of himself and pressed close again. ' W-with this soul... I will be your light in the darkest night...'

Toki leaned into him as he hoisted her up, and she felt his knot hilt deeper. She felt like she was seeing stars, and that she was about to explode. Her soul pounded around him, her walls fluttering around his member as her breath came swift and fast.

She was blind to everything but the feel of him in her, around her, and the taste of him on her tongue.
‘With this love I ask you to be mine.’ Her soul caressed his deeply.

Aliquam gave an airless gasp as the pleasure from both body and soul finally overwhelmed him and he gave a weak howl as his grip tightened, pleasure finally giving way to release and he blissfully pressed his face into his wife. "T-To... Toki~!" He was barely audible, but lord that was definitely pleasure at its finest.

His second release triggered her own.

Her mouth opened, falling from his shoulder as she gasped, her neck and back arching at the lightning bolts of pleasure coming from her walls clamping around him. Her body milked him as her soul tried to do the same for his. Only, where her soul exploded in a messy burst of release, his was contained within the wrap that sealed his off and kept them from conceiving.

“Mine~” She gasps, her arms circling around him to hold him close as she trembled in his lap. “Mine~ yours. Ah~”

He savored the sensation of the blissful release he and his wife both shared, and while he wished to return the favor of being soaked in his wife’s soul-magic, he had accepted his fate to the protection of his father’s invention. It didn't stop him from getting louder of course, but hey, this was a fuck with all responsibility abandoned, wasn't it~?

Eventually, Toki slumped against him, her body going lax as the heat temporarily abated, and her orgasm faded off. She panted against him, and made soft, pleased keens for him to hear. God, it had been too long since they’d gotten to be intimate. A relationship wasn’t built on being intimate, but for two people who enjoyed the activities… Well, four months was far too long.

"Mmh..." It was a while before Aliquam could actually speak, but when he did, all he could do was offer a shaky grin and an exhausted giggle. "W're g'na need another box of those reeeaaaal soon~”

Toki laughed and smacked his shoulder gently as she cuddled up. “I’m not gonna deny it. I definitely enjoyed it~” She purred slowly. “Looks like it worked too. No goop from youuu~”

"Mmh~" He whined softly, before he pulled her securely against him and nuzzled her gently, "I love you..." he purred softly, "I love you, I love you, I love you~"

She kissed his neck gently, and then toppled over backwards, letting her soul draw back into her body as she drew him with her. She batted the paper aside as his soul returned to his chest, and then snuggled him in on top of her as they rode out his knot. "I love you too. Heh... Jeeze. I'm out of shape.” She laughs. She was tired after one romp. Toki could have napped with him buried in her and draped on her right like that.

"You might be out of shape, but you have never looked so beautiful than you look right now." He purred sweetly, trailing kisses along her collarbone as he got comfortable with her on the bed. His soul was giving off a gentle humming as it returned to his chest, a sign of just how happy he was to finally have the luxury of his wife back.

Toki looped all four arms behind his neck, and just relaxed with him. Her mane was pluming up happily as she drank him in with everything she had. She watched him, stroked her fingers gently along his skin and his bones, and drank in everything she’d been denied having for the past four months. With the kids in school and them alone… Well, they could find time for adult time between his work schedule and house chores. And bee hives. “And you… You've never looked as handsome as you do right now.” One hand slid up to cup his cheekbone and she beamed at him. “Happiness suits you, my love.”
And that smile on his face could not be happier as he leaned into her hand, a soft sigh passing through him before he rested his own hand on her cheek. "I have you back... I have my leg back... We can run... We can dance... We can love one another like nothing ever happened to us... And that would be all I could ask for." He cooed.

Toki let a slow and sly grin crawl up her face. "Not necessarily all you could ever ask for." She wiggles her hips pointedly. "I do recall something about as soon as the litter were weaned, you were going to try and put another one in me." She wiggles her brows at him playfully, and kissed him. "So I think a gaggle of kids would be something else you could ask for."

He gave a soft moan at her hips swaying and gave her a sweet sort of look. "Well that is indeed true. You said it yourself that perhaps I should not seek so quickly to impregnate you as to allow you some time to recover from the pups." He giggled. "That's the reason why I was willing to try father's new soul protection."

She snickered softly and nuzzled her face to his. "Well, I appreciate the time to have my body to myself." She smiles. "There are some things I want to get done before I'm pregnant and you and the village proper do your usual worry-hover." Her fingers massage his skull and the back of his neck, relaxing him as she enjoys his weight on top of her. "I want an apiary again. I know it's not the season for bees, but I want to order hives so I can bring in bees next spring. Writing is more lucrative as far as royalties from book sales and movies goes, but bees were my passion."

"Fluffy honeybees flying around like chubby puppies with wings." He agreed with a soft laugh, "I agree. It would be nice to have that little luxury back."

"Yeah." She smiles slowly. "My hive is one thing, but it's different when it's... y'know, non-monster bees." She sighs pleasantly. "I want to work on selling my own honey too. Not sure how to go about that though. Think it'd fall under monster goods?" She wiggles her hips against him slowly, teasingly, and enjoys the movement his knot gives inside of her.

"I would suspect it falls under such, especially since it's green." He chuckled, though a shaky one as his hips rocked in response to hers. "Ah..." He liked that~

She could tell he liked it. She continued to slowly gyrate her hips under him, reveling in the slow rock and squish of his member inside of her. "Mmm..." She breathed against him, feeding the heat that was wrecking them both with the slow, sensual movements. "Green means all organic, huh?" She teases, her eyes twinkling at him.

It was not long before he was trembling, his cock giving a weak twitch inside her. "Nnh... M-Mmhmm..." Boy she knew how to get him.

Toki knew indeed.

She shifted, and suddenly her leg lifted under them, giving her the support she needed to roll them. Her arms moved out from under him as she laid him out flat on the bed and lifted up, settling on her knees as she rolled her hips and started to very slowly bounce on him as his knot allowed her to.

She loomed over him though, her breasts bouncing for him. She’d never removed her ectobody, and now she was going to put on a show for him.

After all- what was the use of having a body like this, if one didn’t live a little and use it to drive her husband wild from time to time...?
Strider Notes: Sometimes how you phrase things can come off absolutely terrible, as Papy here figures out.

Toki had wished for a hive to pick back up at beekeping, and after Papyrus' heat wore off, the lovers had done what they had to, and ordered what they needed in order to bring Toki home new apiaries for the next season of bees. It took until the last week of September to get them shipped in, however. It was... Well, maddening, frankly, the waiting- but very, very pleasing when they finally came in.

Aliquam had just finished assembling one of the hives before he sighed a soft content sound and turned to see his wife where she was assembling another hive. While normally he would simply ask her how it went, he had something on his mind this time and he slowly turned away, taking a slow breath before addressing her. "Toki, when you get the chance, I'd like to talk to you about something... important..."

Toki glanced up at him from the half assembled hive. The end of September was proving to be very, very cold indeed- but the little cove for her hive was sheltering them from some of the chill wind, so it wasn’t too cold. She ruffled her mane, the top of it spilling out of her modified turtleneck, and offered him a smile.

"Well... we’re about as private as we can get." She finished one board on the hive, and then sat back, resting her hands. A builder she was not. Kohaku was the one who usually did her building- and for good reason. Her hive was slightly lopsided. "What did you want to talk about?" She asks, draping her arms lightly over the half finished hive.

Oh lord- it looked horrid.

With a soft sound under his breath, Aliquam came over and tried as subtlety as possible to start fixing the hive under her. "Well... I've been thinking about... well.. Us."

That bade her pause enough to make her not kick up a fuss over him fixing the hive she was building- she knew it was bad, but it wasn’t that bad, was it? Her eye lights blinked at him slowly, and she rocked back on the pads of her toes, her claws kneading the ground with a sudden anxiety. “Us?” She says slowly, uncertainly. ‘Us’ sounded very ominous, and she’s certain he heard the uncertainty in her voice.

"Yes... us.... uh..." He rubbed his neck, slowly stopping with his fiddling to lean back a little. "I was... unsure of how to go about asking. But after everything we've been through... The Humans Against Monsters... your disappearance for those six long months, and being a surrogate for the pups for Father..." His words trailed off into soft stutters, before he took a slow breath to steady himself. "Toki... Forgive me if this sounds... you know ... Unwarranted and out of the blue... but..."

Toki’s soul had been sinking, and she’d felt something akin to a cold sweat break out on her body. She’d asked him many a time if he’d regretted staying with her, telling him that he’d have had a simpler life with another monster instead of having stayed with her. And here he was- he was going to finally ask her to separate. She… She didn’t know what had triggered it. She thought they’d been in a good place, and doing just fine- but maybe, maybe there was something he was seeing that she wasn’t?

“Do you think you’re ready to try again to have children?” His orange gaze looked up at her, hoping this wasn’t going to be something he’d regret asking.

What…?

Toki blinked slowly, and she felt a flash of anger and fear and something akin to relief bounce through her. “You… You mother fucker!” She explodes, lurching around the half built hive to pound her fist into his arm and give him the worst dead arm known to man. Okay. Maybe not just his arm- she may have tackled him. You couldn’t blame her- that had been terrifying. “You utter mother fucking fucker mc’fuck face! Did you even hear what you sounded like when you asked that?” She glared at him.

Were her sockets watering? Yes, yes they were.

"OW! OW! OW!” He yelled in pain as he went down before he caught her assault with the one good arm he had left, though it was in that moment he repeated to himself what he said... and almost immediately released her, accepting his punishment but at least covering his face. "Toki, oh my god, I am so sorry!” He yelped under his arms.

She didn’t really hit hard after the initial punch- but she flailed her hands at him and eventually draped over him with a soft sniffing sound. “You’re an asshole.” She tells him softly once she’s worn herself out flailing incoherently at him. “You scared me. It sounded like you wanted to separate.” She gave him a sad doe-eyed look and wobbled her teeth at him. “Don’t do that again.”

He slowly wrapped his arm around her before he sighed. "Separate? from you? Never... Have I not told you time after time that I never once regret marrying you?” He told her sternly, before his voice softened and he sighed. "I'm so... so sorry, I didn't mean to scare you, my love…”

She buried her face in his chest and sighed. “I know you didn’t. Just… Everything that’s happened- everything you listed- is a million and one reasons why you could have and should have hit the road long ago. I don’t think I know a single human man who would have stayed.” She propped her chin up to look at him again, and dried her eyes. “I’m sorry I freaked out like that. Just… It’s something I’ve always been afraid of, I guess- that one day you’ll realize the mess you’re in, and pack your bags and leave with the kids. Another one of the secrets I’ve kept.” Her arms cross on his chest, and she peers down at him quietly. “We need to talk about those...” She murmurs to him. “Air those out- and if you still feel like kids after, we can talk about it.”

He took her words in before he sighed and smiled. "Toki... I'm not a human... I'm a Blaster Beast. Through thick and thin, Beasts mate for life... You can tell me anything, and as long as it ends in you still loving me as much as I love you, then I'm ready to hear whatever it is. No matter what it is.”

Toki nods softly to him and smiles slowly. She leans up to kiss him. “Sometimes I forget how much beast is in you. You don’t always act it… But that does explain why you stuck with me for so long. Beasts mate for life- and I suppose you chose me for your mate back when I was just a simple skeleton, hm?” She rubs his cheek gently with a soft hum, and then rolls off of him. She sits in the grass, and sighs. Secrets were hard to share. “There are two big ones off the top of my head that I can recall wanting to share with you.” She tells him gently. “One of them involves showing you something.”

"Through thick and thin, I still love you to this day." He purred, sitting up beside her. "Go on then?"
“Alright.” She nods slowly. Toki sighs. “So… You remember how I control the Save and Load buttons now…?” She mumbles gently. “And how Cruelty destroyed the Reset button?”

Memories long forgotten- or rather, tried to be forgotten- are quickly remembered and he gave a soft noise as he nodded. "Yes, I think so..." He spoke quietly. "Why do you bring them up?"

“Because, something happened all those months ago when I was in the coma.” She crosses her arms and makes a soft sound. “I wasn’t just out of it. I was... somewhere. I want to call it a limbo.” She says gently. Toki closes her eyes and sighs. “I was close to dying, Pap. If not for all of you- the whole village- I’d have died when I summoned that Queen. In limbo, I saw… the buttons. Save, Load- and Reset. But Reset was… different. Very, very different.”

"U-Uh... How different?" He asked softly.

“Well...” She summons screens, and turns them around for him to see. Save is normal, as is Load, but Reset is not Reset. Rebirth glares at them ominously. “Like this. Rebirth is apparently my option now when I’m... close to death.”

He looked up and his eyes widened slightly. So easily she could die and become reborn... and it would be that easy...? It was his turn to feel the sinking feeling in his soul. "Y-You'll... Never use it... right?" He asked quietly. "If you're close to death... you wont rebirth... you'll keep fighting... right?"

Toki watches him quietly and swallows. “Not until I’ve got no other choice but death by old age,” She promises him gently, and reaches out to take his hands in hers. “I’m cursed to a life of never dying, Pap. Not permanently. When you’re gone, and our children are gone, and our children’s children are gone, I will still be here. I may not be in this body, but I will still be here.”

As she took his hands, he looked at them, before he took a weak breath. "So... Even after my bones have disintegrated and I've died and been dead for centuries... And our children and our grandchildren... you'll be able to... just go right up to our graves..."

“Yes.” She says gently, and her fingers squeeze his. Both sets of her hands hold his. This was something she’d been trying to get him to understand since she’d came back from the void. But... finally, it seemed, he was understanding why she was so afraid of the future. “Are... Are you okay?” She asks him softly.

She’d been slowly coming to terms with her oddly omnipotent immortality. As for him... Well... He’d have to come to terms with her impending eternity without her family on his own.

"..." He pressed his teeth together, before his eyes pressed closed and his trembling hands lost what little grip they had. He wanted to talk... but... his words were in his throat. There was nothing he could say... how could he?

Where he had no grip, Toki had plenty. She took his hands, and lifted them to her teeth. She kissed his limp knuckles gently. “It's not for nothing, Papy... You’re my first love. You’re my mate. You’re going to be the one I remember for all of my lifetimes.” She smiles softly to him, letting the buttons disappear as she scooted closer to hug him and soothe him. “However, further lifetimes aren’t something we need to worry about. That’s a long time away. It'll be okay.” By the time he was gone, she wouldn’t be his worry anyway. She smooched his temple gently, and cuddled him closely. “We have our lives to live now - we have children to have, and our futures to look forward to.”

He grit his teeth a little bit, before he whined and pressed into her shoulder, his arms quivering where they hung between them. "... I-I'm sorry..." He whispered.
“It’s a hard realization to have.” She soothes, and kisses his cheeks. Toki wraps him in her arms and quietly exhales. “I have my fair share of panic attacks when I think of a future without you. So I just… don’t. I try and focus on the now. That’s the only way I get through my day- thinking of the moments I’m having with you now, or with our kids.” Her smaller hands slip up to cradle the back of his skull. “Focus on our now, Aliquam. We want to have kids- that’s a yes, by the way- and we have things we need and want. Like… a new car to fit the future children.”

He sighed quietly as her words brought his mind to a standstill. It took him a little while before he smiled up at her. "You are the most wonderful woman I could have ever asked to be my wife..." He purred, before he set his head on her chest. "I suppose the next time I go into town I can look into trading my vehicle. It's still in good condition so there might not be much of a difference to pay when all is said and done." He hummed.

She cradled his skull against the bones of her chest and sighed. "As much as I love your car, it's not good for more than two kids. You'll want to get something that’s a comfortable ride though. It's a long drive anywhere." She kisses the crown of his skull.

"Roomy, efficient, comfortable." He named off before he hummed and smiled. "Any other ideas we will want to include, my love?"

She laughs. "Why not toss in gas efficient as well?" She jokes faintly, and sighs. She leans against him, and ponders him quietly. He was too unsettled and upset by that first secret. He didn't... He didn't need to know about the dark side.

A final soft chuckle left them both in silence.

Aliquam was thankful that they changed the topic, but it continued to linger in his mind just what had been warned... And as happy as it made him to hear his beloved would never die, it also haunted him, that one day she would wake up without him at her side...

Toki peppered him in kisses and hugged him tightly. She watched his face quietly, before looking back at the mutilated bee hive. "So... Do I get to put the baby crib together this time?"

Distractions and teasing would drive it from his mind in time. And for now, she'd remind him that she said yes to more babies... And that she was horrible at carpentry.

"Nyeh heh heh heh~" With a more genuine laugh, he pulled back and pecked her cheek. "Absolutely not. I love you, but I have no faith in your carpentry~" He cooed softly.

Toki offered him an obligatory pout. “Aww, are you telling me that’s not the most amazing and well-put together bee hive that you’ve ever seen?” She wiggled her brows playfully, and ran her fingers lightly over his ribs, tickling him. “I could put a crib together~”

Her wandering fingers had him giggling before he reached down and caught her wrists. "I love you, with all my heart, but good lord, absolutely not. You put the queen catch on sideways and you've left the comb in the lock-open position; any nectar would just leak out."

Toki rocks her head back and laughs as her wrists are captured. “I didn’t realize I’d messed it up that badly.” For the type of hives she’d bought, where you just unlocked the combs and the honey ran out without disturbing the bees, that would be an absolute disaster. “So I guess I’ve got no hope of going into the house building business, huh?” She grinned cheekily, and ruffled her mane so she could lean closer and nuzzle him with the fluffiness that surrounded her.

"None at all~" He purred, before he chuckled and kissed her a few more times. "But that's fine, I can tackle that fine enough, you don't even need to worry about it 's long as I'm around~”

“Kohaku has told me the same thing since we were children” She leans into him with a laugh. “So, how about I just unbox the parts for you, and let you do the building? It’s basically big puzzles for you, isn’t it?”

"Oh yes, it's very fun." He answered happily. "If you'd like to skim the instructions while I do, simply if I have any questions." Not likely though, if he was being honest.

Toki gave him a cheeky grin, kissed him, and then crawled away to fetch the instructions. “That’s fine with me. I don’t mind skimming instructions.” She got the paper, and settled down so she could deal with reading them and talking with him. “So- how do we want to go about telling Skylar and Honey that we’re going to end up trying to give them some siblings?”

"I think they're going to be relieved that they no longer need to argue about which is the younger and older. They'll both just be the older siblings." Aliquam laughed as he sat down to pull apart and put back together the hive that Toki had practically butchered.

The poor hive would be revived under his careful hands- but he would have to do some careful prying, because there were nails where nails should not be.

“‘I agree there. But that’s not what I meant.’ She laughs. ‘I mean, do we tell them we plan to? Or do we just leave it as a surprise, and then tell them the news when my belly shows up?’”

"Something tells me they already know. Our children are frightfully observant and are somehow very skilled with intimidating methods of interrogation." He laughed lightly.

She snorts, and makes a warbling noise of amusement. “I doubt they already know, since they’re in school, but they are observant. If we don’t shut our doors before doing shenanigans, they’re most certainly going to know.”

"Heh, if the scent doesn't hit them as soon as they walk in the door.” He mentioned with an amused hum.

“‘Well, they didn’t smell when you almost boned me in the kitchen.” She gave him a cheeky grin and giggled. “Or at least they didn’t know what it was.”

"They have until puberty to be clueless." He snickered, before he stood up and adjusted the now-completed hive on it's pedestal. "Well, here we go. What do you think?" He asked.

“Ugh, don’t even make me think about our babies hitting puberty. Their first heats are going to be horribly awkward.” She groans. Her gaze slides down to the hive, and she beams. “It looks good!” She praises. Her eye lights twinkle at him. “Want some help with the next one~?” She teases.

"Yes ma'am!" He laughed. He walked over to the next package of parts and pulled it open, dumping out the parts with a hum. "Let's get started!" He announced.

Toki laughed, and flopped over to help him sort them. “This doohicky is used to unlock the hives. Y’know, every single one of them is the same. We probably only need one.”

"Yep. From what I saw on the instructions, it opens the valve systems that make the honey drainage possible.” He explained.

“Yep.” She nods. “So we keep one active one… And maybe two or three in case the rods break. Which happens. Has happened- boy, it sucks when they break.” She chuffs lightly.
"Smart thinking, lucky me to have such a clever wife." Of course he thought of that, but hey, he could be sweet to her~

She stuck her tongue out at him. “Sometimes I have my moments.” She blew a raspberry at him. “Speaking of clever… What do you want for dinner tonight, dear?”

"Well, how does pasta sound?" He asked.

“Pasta sounds good, but we need more than noodles. Or our growing kids do. So pasta and maybe steamed broccoli?” She suggests. “Vegetables are good for them.”

"That sounds delicious. Maybe have a salad as well?" He added to the idea, "A light start to a meal that might be heavy if we use a heavy sauce."

“Mmm, that would work.” She nods. “Salads are good. Particularly Caesar salads.” She grins at him cheerfully. “There’s the most irony in those when you stab them with a fork.”

He groaned at that before he laughed and shook his head before he started on building the hive. "Et tu, Brute?" He asked cheekily.

She laughed at him and flicked some grass at him. “You’re silly. So a salad, with vegetables and pasta. Sounds good.”

Well Aliquam looked satisfied with the menu for tonight as he put his focus into building the hive up for his lovely yet unskilled wife.

As Toki split off to start on dinner, Aliquam stayed with the hive parts to finish building up the apiaries. After careful construction of each part of the hives, the skilled Skeleton stacked the hives in a form he learned was called a 'Langstroth' Hive, which was two deep boxes for brood on bottom followed by a slightly more shallow box for honey on top of a queen exclusion screen. Most of the videos he watched online were from American beekeepers, but hey. If it works, it works.

It was perhaps an hour or two since Aliquam spoke with his wife that he completed the new area of Toki's courtyard designated for her passion, said view allowing Aliquam a moment to swell in pride for completing the task, as he knew and so eagerly looked forward to seeing what his wife thought about his work.

Though as he savored his small victory, he was given a lovely reminder of something quite crucial to the working man. In the process of completing what his sweet but unskilled wife was unable to, he had accumulated quite the appetite.

And that just wouldn't do, now would it?

In the time that they had split forces, the kids had gotten home from school, which ran later than human school did. They got home in time for Toki to be serving an early dinner, as she always did when they got home from school.

She'd made steamed broccoli with cauliflower, chicken Alfredo with spaghetti noodles because Honey couldn't stand actual Alfredo noodles after she'd seen Gael hurl up a tapeworm, and Toki had prepared a Caesar salad for everyone that was seated on the table.

And in the oven?
Her signature honey tarts were baking for desert. All she needed to do after was drizzle a little of her honey on them, and they'd be good to go. Truthfully, the only difference with this one, since it was made with her honey and not bee honey, was that it was tinged green.

Toki got the kids set up in the dining room with their salads, and a bowl of raw meat for Sobek as he grumpily ate next to Honey, and then she made her way to the back door to call for her husband.

"Papyrus! Dinner's done!"

Aliquam may or may not have hurried inside, and only just remembered to kiss her cheek on the way in. Oh Aliquam could have howled in delight at the beautiful feast he could see through the door to the dining room, but he settled for humming happily as he washed his hands before he scooted into the other room and sat down with his family, giving an amused look at his wife.

"Tokiko, this looks unbelievable. I have no doubt that I'm going to enjoy this and that we will have little to no leftovers by the time we're done." He announced happily, leaning over to kiss his wife admirably as she returned to join them. "Thank you for the meal~"

Toki laughed softly at his enthusiasm, and smooched him again. She scooted his plates closer to him, and finished serving dinner, before going to pull the tarts out. She’d eat in a second while they cooled on the counter with honey drizzled over top. That was the absolute best way to set the honey, after all.

Once she was done in the kitchen, she returned to the table and took her seat, setting in to sample her Alfredo. Not too bad for not using actual Alfredo noodles.

“So, how was school?” She asks the children lightly.

“Good!” Honey chirps. “I wish they’d let me take Sobek though.”

Toki glanced to the bird, who still hadn’t grown back all his feathers. He was trying, but he was at that in-between fugly stage, and he seemed to know it quite well. “I don’t think Sobek is strictly school safe. He did eat your homework yesterday.” She points out lightly.

"I made a card for Snuggles to see when he wakes up." Skylar spoke up. "I left it next to where we put him..."

"Oh son, don't be discouraged, remember what we told you about butterflies needing time in their chrysalis?" Aliquam spoke gently, having picked up on Sky's emotions through his voice.

"Mmhmm... Its just been so long..." Sky whined quietly.

"Aww, sweetie..." Toki gave her son a soft look. "Snuggle misses you just as much as you miss him. When he emerges again, you'll be able to cuddle up with him and watch movies just like you used to."

"At least he's a pretty lump and not a naked bird like Sobek." Honey poked her bird gently, and Sobek squawked at her.

"Well... All birds go through the fuglies." Toki chuckles softly.

"I would rather Snuggle go through the uglies than not even be awake." Sky whined quietly.

Honey looked at Sky with consideration of telling him to get over it, but rather than doing that, she reached out and prodded Sobek, telling him to go comfort her brother.
Sobek gave her a look that was nothing kind, but he gobbled down the last of his meal, and got up. He waddled over, and plopped his head in Skylar’s lap, looking up at him with grumpy eyes as he chittered at him.

“Well, sweetheart, it’s not that he’s not awake.” Toki says gently. Her soul ached for her son. “He can hear you, I think. If all else fails, remember…” She lifts a hand, and rubs her hand against her chest. “Remember, you can talk to him in here. He might not be able to make words, but you’re connected, bound together. You can feel him, even if you can’t cuddle him in your lap. I can talk to Clover and Sugar and Stripe, even when they’re not here.

Skylar pet over Sobek’s feathers and giggled quietly as he smiled up at the hissy bird. "Thank you, Sobek~" He cooed gently, giving the minion an appreciative nuzzle.

Sobek hissed again, but seemed to resign himself into Skylar’s attentions. He settled his patchy feathered self into his lap, eyed the orange eyed boy lightly, and then trilled at him softly. He could offer comfort this once- but he better not expect it often!

Toki cocked her head, munching another bite of her dinner as she watched their exchange. She nudged her husband so he’d watch too. Sobek was behaving for once.

Oh Aliquam got a perfect view of that, and may or may not have secretly pulled his phone out for recording such a sight.

Toki gave a soft smile, and shook her head. He liked to record things- sometimes she wasn’t sure why he did, but the memories would be treasured once the twins were older. She settled into her meal fully, watching as the twins worked on munching through theirs.

“Do we get tarts after dinner?” Honey asks hopefully.

“If you finish all your salad, yes.” Toki hums.

It’s Skylar for once who looks at it with disdain. “I don’t want all of it though.”

“It’s good for you.” She looks at Aliquam. “See? Even your daddy’s eaten all his salad. And a second helping… But see? It’s good for you.”

“Mnnnhehhh.” Skylar made a face, but worked at munching on it, grumpily dipping the lettuce into the dressing and working the leaves with his teeth. “It’s so hard to eat.”

“I know, sweetheart.” Toki cocked one of her teeth at him and wiggled it. “You’ll get the hang of it, Skylar.” Aliquam told his son gently, giving him a reassuring grin. “I believe in you.”

He sighs and cuddles Sobek closer. Sulkily, he continues to munch. “I can eat most things, but some things are harder.”

“They’re harder for me too.” Toki nods. “I’m sorry you look like me, baby.” She gave him a lopsided smile, ignoring the soft sting to her soul those words caused. She loved his little crooked grin when he was happy. “I know my teeth aren’t easy to use.”

Skylar only shrugs. “I don’t mind them, I just wish they were easier to use.”
"You'll get it before you know it, Sky." Aliquam hoped his words would encourage his son. Though it was not like he had much to offer in terms of aide. Such things would be on his own if naught his mother's assistance.

“It helps if you think of your teeth sort of like fingers. They can grab food just as easily as they can chew food.” Toki supplied lightly, and demonstrated by using her teeth to grab a fork full of noodles off her fork. It was… messy.

Skylar looked at her in bemusement. “You’re messy.”

“Messy? It’s called saving some for later.” She jokes.

"No less graceful than a crab's mandibles, my love." Aliquam laughed gently. “An attempt had been made indeed to be a good example to your son.” He stuck his tongue out at her teasingly.

Toki cleaned her teeth with a napkin, and then splayed them at Aliquam in a bemused display. "Crab mandibles? I was thinking more like Predators from Aliens Verses Predators. And what do you mean an attempt?" Her brow climbed up near her scar. "I am an exceptional example for both of our kids."

Honey had the audacity to snicker at her mother.

Toki faked looking wounded. "I feel the love."

Skylar on the other hand was at least trying to practice with his dexterous teeth, wiggling them before he tried to get the hang of plucking food from his fingers.

Toki watched him, pleased with his progress, and finished most of her plate of food. Full now, she offered her leftovers to her ravenous Husband, who she wasn't entirely certain wouldn't eat the plate if he wasn't careful.

Shamelessly, Aliquam accepted the offered plate and gave his wife a thankful smile. "Thank you~" He cooed sweetly, leaning over to give her a soft kiss before he started into the plate with great enjoyment.

Toki laughed. “I’ll go grab the honey tarts while you three finish up. You two better hurry, or your Daddy will gobble down your Alfredo too.” She teased.

Honey’s eyes got wide, and she curled her arms around her plate and pulled it closer to her. She let out a tiny baby growl at him. “No Daddy. My noodles. Momma made spaghetti noodles for me ‘cause I don’t like nasty worm noodles.”

Toki barked out a laugh, and stood to take her dishes to the sink, leaving her husband to deal with his two precocious children.

He snorted at that, before he gave her a small waggle-at with his fork. "Keep your noodles, Mommy's just giving you phooey to fuss over." He laughed. "I'm content with what I have."

Honey snarfed down another bite. “Are you sure?” She gives him a suspicious look.

Toki snickered, and decided to not help the situation at all. “How many tarts do you want to sate that appetite of yours that you worked up, my love? A quarter of a tray, or half a tray?”

Honey’s noise of utter outrage was worth it.

"Oh I have no doubt I'll easily down half the tray!" Aliquam laughed, playing along. "I absolutely love your tarts!” He answered, before he smirked over at Toki, "And all the honey you could offer me.” He purred sweetly.

Toki flushed with her back to him, but it was telltale his flirt got to her with how her mane poofed.

"Daddy." Honey gave him a serious look. "If you eat half the tray, you'll get a tummy ache. And when you get a tummy ache, I'll laugh at you cause you were a butt head and didn't share the goodies."

Skylar snorted into Sobek's mangy fluff. "She told you." He giggled.

"So maybe a quarter tray for Daddy then. With extra honey so he doesn't try to eat yours.” Toki teases, recovering her composure enough to bring in a desert plate for them all to share.

Aliquam gave quiet ‘nyeh heh heh heh’s as he accepted his dessert from his beloved and gave Honey a playful look. "I wouldn't eat them all, silly girl. I love Momma’s tarts, but you are very much right, I'd get a stomach ache and I wouldn't be able to sleep well tonight, now would I?"

“‘You’d also get big fat, like Momma was when she had grandpapa’s babies.” Honey puffed out her tummy and her cheeks, and gave him a cross eyed look, because apparently that’s how he’d look if he ate too many tarts.

Toki snorted, and sat down, guffawing into one of her hands. “Dear lord, you guys. We wouldn't want daddy to get pudgy, would we? He wouldn’t fit in his armor anymore.” She couldn't resist leaning over to poke Papyrus in the stomach, where the firmness of his invisible muscles was felt. “When we’d have to find the breastplate stretcher.” She jokes.

"Lord I'm not even going there." Aliquam gave a weak laugh. "I spent months getting my battle body back, I'm not going to lose this for anything." He announced proudly.

“Not even going there, hm?” She grins at him. “So, you want me all soft and supple, but I can’t have a soft and squishy Papy to cuddle at night~?” She grabs a tart and nibbles at it.

"And yet you wont deny when I say you like your hubby's hard muscled body. It might not make the best pillow but you get bragging rights~" He cooed.

She flushed around her honey tart and wiggles a brow at him. “Well, I ain’t gonna deny that. I’ve definitely got bragging rights to the most muscular skeleton around.”

Honey groaned. “Ugh, you two are so grossssss.”

“I think it’s sweet.” Skylar watched them with intense interest. “When will you give us more babies?”

Toki choked on her honey tart- an impressive feat for a being without a constantly physical throat.

Well that surprised Aliquam as well and he almost choked, not quite , before he looked at his son with a shocked look. "Skylar, good lord!"

“What?” He blinks at him slowly. “I want a little sibling. We’re in school now- you’ve got time to stay home when Daddy isn’t working. Do what adults do.” He wiggles a hand. “Make baby magic.”

“Make baby magic.”” Toki wheezes.

"They're more eager than I am!” Aliquam was starting to break down laughing as he pressed his head into his hand. "Oh my god...!"

Toki cleared her throat and laughed softly. “Good lord Skylar. Well. I can’t tell you we’ll give you a sibling any time soon, okay?” She leaned over to squeeze her husband’s leg gently. They’d keep it a secret until she was pregnant- and then watch the children freak out.

“So you want a baby too, Daddy?” Skylar tilts his head, and then hums. “You need to get to work sweet talking Mommy then.”

Aliquam shook his head with a wheeze of laughter, "Skylar, let me go at my own pace and you’ll get your siblings. I just cant imagine it to go well if I’m rushed by my own children."

He huffs softly at him. "But your pace is so slowww!" He complains. "Honey and I will have to move out by the time you two give us little siblings, and by then we’ll be too old to properly bond with them ’cause we'll have to go out and do adult things like get a job and find a house."

Toki blinked. "I don't think it'll take us that long. And just because you're grown doesn't mean you have to move out- you move out when you feel you're ready, and not before."

"You're missing the point." Skylar's cheeks puff more, his crocodile teeth puckering at them as he pouts.

"No no we get it, we're just giving you a hard time~" Aliquam teased sweetly, an amused grin growing on his face.

Skylar frowned at him and sighed. “You’re both mean.” He pouts. “I’m serious. I want a baby to cuddle.”

“Give it time, sweetheart.” Toki chuckles. “Babies can’t be made instantly, sweetheart.”

"You guys couldn't come fast enough, you know... I was so excited to get to cuddle with my babies and I spent a lot of nights curled up to your mother's belly." Aliquam hummed with a smile. "It'll be well worth it."

Skylar sighed and slumped in his chair. “Well I guess… I know babies take a long time to grow. Three months and then some- it’s a long, long time to wait.”

Toki choked a little bit, and shook her head. “Sweetheart, that was a special circumstance. I carried the both of you for exactly forty two weeks- and then you decided that it was time to enter the world on your daddy’s birthday. Well- start to. You arrived the day after.” She offered them a lopsided smile. “So I figure you’ll be in for a long wait for these babies too.”

“Ugh really?” Skylar looked nonplussed. “Forty two weeks? That’s… I don’t know how many months that is. Too many months.”

“That’s how we felt when waiting for you both.” Toki laughed. “We were so ready for you to come- your daddy was walking on eggshells waiting for when you’d come. He nearly panicked any time I had a contraction.”

"At least Father was there to help us keep a level head. We were, and still are, so lucky that he was there for us..." Aliquam hummed happily "And yet he was a lump of panicked anxiety the entire drive home.” Toki laughed heartily. "He was so terrified you both would arrive in the car. Your labor was a lot longer than the litter's was."

"It was long?" Honey asked, furrowing her brows. "When we made your belly hurt?"

"It did take a while longer than the Pups, but you still made it here, so it was worth the wait."
Aliquam purred gently.

"Really? How much longer?" Skylar asked.

"Well, you two decided it was time to come early in the morning. But, I didn't realize it until later in the day- and you arrived early in the next night." Toki answered her son warmly. "I half thought you'd be a birthday gift to your daddy."

"Instead you ended up a Belated birthday present." Aliquam added with a soft laugh. "But I would think it's a good thing you two get your own birthday and I still get to enjoy mines without guilt."

That had the twins cocking their heads at him. “Without feeling guilty?” Skylar blinked.

“Why would you feel guilty?”

Toki laughed softly. “That’s something for another day, children. Finish up your dinners- and why don’t we all go play some games after you’re done? If your homework is done that is.”

“Homework is all done, Momma. Can we play Uno?” Honey chirps hopefully.

“Ugh no.” Skylar makes a face. “Not Uno again. Maybe a video game?”

Toki leaned back and cast a tender look to her husband as their eldest children bickered about what to play. This was life now- dinner with her husband and their children, and listening to them bicker about what the family would play. She wouldn’t change it for anything.
Chapter 159

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: This is definitely a chapter where things happen in the foreground and background. Read carefully, my lovelies- You might not understand now. But you will. In time. Hehehehe.

Their efforts to conceive actually were not very fruitful. Two weeks of trying- putting them well into the freezing cold of the first week of October- had no visible effort shown. It was amusing that an accident could happen in an instant and result in a surprise pregnancy, but when you actually tried to do something, it never seemed to happen when you wanted it to. ‘Amusing’, though more or less frustrating for the twins who were not very patient.

Honestly, Toki didn’t mind that she wasn’t pregnant yet. She was making use of the streak of good weather to fly- but there was only so much exercise to be done when one only flew around the village for hours a day. She was itching to stretch her wings for a long distance flight, frankly. Flying around the skies was just not enough for her anymore.

Which is why she found herself on Tenebris’ doorstep, bouncing on the toes of her paws while her husband lingered not far behind her with Clover.

The massive Hell Hornet was less than pleased about the mild dusting of snow that was molesting her feet, but she was standing still regardless as Aliquam adjusted her saddle and made sure the newly made saddlebags were in order.

“Toki, if you’re sure you can manage it. Worst case, I imagine that Clover would at least be able to carry you both home... I suppose it would save gas." Tenebris gave a low thrum as he considered the offer, before he offered Toki a soft smile. "I really appreciate it..." He gave her a peck on the head. He smiled as he straightened up. "Let me go get my wallet, and I’ll cover the payment, as well as give you guys some extra money for lunch while you’re out.”

"Toki gave him a cheery two-handed salute. “Alright, Dad. Well, Papy and I aren’t going to turn down lunch on you.” She grins cheekily. “And the exercise will be good for Clover and me. We’re getting pudgy just sitting around.”

The massive Hell Hornet lifted her head and made a terse sound at her summoner, obviously offended. Pudgy? Pudgy? She was Pudgy? How dare she?

Toki only laughed, stepping down out of the doorway so she wasn’t looming while Tenebris went to fetch his things. “Okay, okay. We’re not getting pudgy. Pleasantly plump perhaps.” She grins.

"Well-Conditioned." Tenebris chuckled under his breath as he turned to head back inside, a smug smile on his face as he wondered if the hornet heard him.
She heard him indeed- and Clover made a loud grumbling hiss that was very clearly a beastly insult towards his lineage and a threat of what she could do to him with his own tail. You did not make fun of a female summon’s weight.

Toki got the gist of it, and she laughed, heartily, and padded down to go soothe her summons. “Oh Clover, you’re a riot. He’s not intimidated by you like Tenne was, you silly bee.” She moved to flop on her face, and she rubbed her fingers into the fiery fluffy mane of the massive hell beast. “Mmm, you have gotten bigger though. Not in weight, but in size. Your saddle used to fit a few rings tighter.”

Tenebris came out soon with his wallet. He smiled and patted Clover's face fearlessly as he approached the trio on his front lawn. “You're still lovely, my lady.” He cooed, showing that he indeed did not share Tenne's fear of her. "Such a pretty girl aren't you?" He cooed teasingly.

The open-mawed grin she gave him- from a mouth big enough to grasp his entire torso when fully opened- was anything but pretty. Clover rattled at him, but didn’t bite him.

“You’ve got balls of steel, Dad.” Toki snorts. “Anyway- I want to get going before you make her too moody.” She shifts, and pulls her wallet out of the fanny pack she’s got it tucked into. “Here, Dad. Put whatever you want to give us into here, and we’ll get the shoes.” She smiles at him warmly.

He smirked, before he leaned up and pecked her snout, "I still love you~" he purred, before he moved away and pulled cash from his wallet to put away into hers. "Thank you, Toki. I hope you enjoy your flight." He pecked her head as he tucked the wallet back into her fanny pack.

Toki zipped it back up and gave him a cheery salute. “I plan to. Alright- we’ll see you later, Tenebris. Give the pups a snuggle for us.” She patted Clover, who rumbled at both of them, and then stepped away from the stirrups. “You good to ride, Papy?”

Clover was a smooth ride, but if his leg was bothering him, Toki could make the flight on her own.

"I will~" Tenebris gave a small wave before he headed back inside.

"You bet I'm ready!" Was Aliquam's confident response, a grin on his face. His new prosthetic had not once acted up since its installation and man was he living it now that he no longer had to fuss about it.

Toki nodded to him, and motioned for him to mount up. She stretched and rolled her own wings, exhaling softly. “Good, good. Oh! Make sure you put your goggles on. I know it’s almost winter, but I don’t doubt we’ll run into some sort of bugs, and bugs in your eye-sockets suck.” Toki slips hers up onto her face from around her neck.

He giggled and gave a nod, pulling his goggles over his eyes before he grinned. "Ready when you are!" He announced as he pulled himself up onto Clover, running his fingers into her fluffy mane to scratch over her skin in his thanks for letting him climb up like that.

Clover let out a grumble of thanks, and lifted her bulk off the ground. She let off a rough sort of shimmy, shaking off any snow lingering on her belly, and then she spread her wings. She didn’t wait for Toki before buzzing off into the air.

Toki took off after her, and headed in the direction that she knew the city was in. Air was different than a car though- they could go faster, and avoid any curves and loops. As the crow flies, it was less of a flight than it was a drive.
And, for once, the winds high up were calm, and the skies were peaceful. Flight was easy.

The takeoff had Aliquam holding on tight, but as they leveled out, he slowly sat back and leaned his head back, taking a deep breath before he whooped loudly.

Toki laughed with him, but was wise enough to not open her mouth. Aliquam had a safety buffer in Clover to keep the worst of any wind and bugs out of his mouth, but she wasn't so lucky.

The thunder of their wings was deafening. It wasn't, frankly, unlike several helicopters in close quarters.

There was something freeing about being in the air though. Something relaxing and soothing... And joyous.

Toki eased up on her pace and slipped back to buzz above Aliquam. She entered Clover's space, and in the span of a few seconds, the connected beasts synchronized their wing beats so Toki could lean her arms down and tickle twenty gentle fingers along her husband's shoulder.

He laughed and reached up to dance his fingers along her arms, "Toki, this is amazing! To think you can do this whenever you'd like!" He laughed.

She rode her summons air stream, so Papyrus' hands weren't even jostled against her arms. She beamed at him. "I can." She laughs. "Flying is magical. Its freeing in the best possible way. I'm like a honey-bee on steroids. I can do all kinds of neat tricks. Want to see some?"

"Show me everything!" His eyes glimmered at her with the same exuberant excitement that his request proclaimed he felt.

Toki laughed, and pulled away from him.

Once she was out of danger from running into Clover, Toki began to… Well, there was no better word to describe it than to say she was dancing across the skies, like an air show pilot. She was dancing and strutting for him, showing him everything she could do as she whipped and whirled and twirled and fell across the skies in moves no actual insect could ever do.

But a beast showing off for her mate? Well, that was definitely something she would do.

He watched her with a bright smile, his eyes glowing with energy as he watched his wife fly as free as she damn well wanted to be, and for a moment, one could even consider the lucky fella was falling in love all over again.

It wasn’t completely unbelievable for him to be falling in love all over again- they were smitten with each other, and every day they always found something that made them love the other more and with deeper passion. There was no doubt that he was falling for her all over again.

Just like his laugh and smile and the warm light dancing in his sockets were dazzling her, urging her to improve her dance as Toki herself fell deeper for him.

Clover just kept flying, bemused by the lovebirds attempted flirting as she droned ever onward. She kept an eye on her mistress’ magic levels, and when she started to drag down a little bit, she moved under her to support her should she decide that she needed to catch a little rest before they hit the slower city zone.

Thankful for Clover's consideration, Aliquam rubbed through her fur again before he sighed and laid back between her wings, smiling as he stared up at the sky. This really was a gift, he hadn't imagined in the past that he would achieve this.

Toki was surprised he didn’t have his legs in the stirrups- but she supposed he trusted Clover to catch him if he rolled off, hence him riding backwards like some sort of hoodlum. “Fancy seeing you here, hm~?” She teases playfully. “Clover’s a smooth ride, isn’t she?”

"Finest ride I’ve ever gotten in these here parts, ma’am.” He winked at her as he put on a western cowboy drawl. "Care to join me~?” He then offered.

Toki did end up coming down for a rest, seamlessly settling on Clover’s back and… Well, seating herself in her husband’s lap, straddling him smoothly. She winked at him. “Well now, don’t mind if I do.” She got herself comfortable, and stretched out against his chest as her eye lights twinkled at him merrily through her goggles as she drawled right back to him and joined him.

Aliquam smiled in delight as he pulled her into his lap before he pulled her into a kiss. "I love you~" He purred happily. "This is fun~"

Toki lounged on his chest, her magic expanding over them and adding an extra cushioning layer to the bubble around them as Clover flew. She met his kiss with a warm sound. “It’s loads of fun,” She laughs against him. Her goggles glow a bright green as her eye lights brighten happily. “It’s a bit of an edge of danger to our usual cuddling~ Kissing on the back of a fast flying bee, with the chance of us falling off… heh. Too bad we can’t do more, eh~? I think Clover would toss us off though.”

There was a bounce that had Toki bracing him under her with her four arms that told them both that yes, if anything sexual in nature happened, Clover would dump them off faster than a bull in a rodeo does to a rider.

"Well the one downside to flying Air-Hornet." He teased, kissing her again gently. "Oh well, we'll just do what we did last time one of us got needy, eh~?” He teased.

She laughed, and simply draped on him. “Or we could wait until we’re home.” She grinned at him, and nuzzled her face to his. “You and your crazy libido can wait that long. I promise not to wiggle too much, eh?” She had her pelvis flush with his- and she was good at teasing him into a frenzy, if his last heat was anything to go off of.

"Oh I know I can wait~" He purred in reply. "I simply tease~" He assured her, before he patted Clover. "Besides, I don't really have a choice, do I?"

The bee buzzed in affirmative below them.

Toki chuckled and smooched him again. “If I had my muscle mass from when I was a beast, carrying you and being intimate in the air wouldn’t be an issue. I mean- I can still lift you, but I don’t think I could achieve intimacy in the air like I am now.”

"That'd be hot though~" He chuckled, leaning up to kiss her cheek lightly, "though I suppose that while we cannot get that frisky, you and I can simply cuddle while Clover flies us both to town.”

“True.” She laughs softly, and lays more comfortably against him. “Cuddling sounds good. We can also decide where to go for lunch. Your Dad gave us a fair bit for lunch- so maybe some sushi? I’m open for suggestions though.”

"Ooh, Sushi." He seemed to agree. "Or ramen~" He seemed really eager for the idea of ramen.

"Ramen works too." She gives him a lopsided grin. "I just hope you don’t mind being seen in public with me while eating it. Most places wont allow forks for easier eating use."
Toki’s teeth were not meant for slurping. More or less, she literally couldn’t slurp. She’d have to feed the noodles into her mouth like a crab does it’s food. It was messy. Spaghetti noodles were easier, since a fork could twist them into a lump and they could all be shoved into her mouth.

"..." He took a second to consider what was going to happen if they went to eat ramen and he made a face, realizing he would be setting her up for embarrassment. "I.. Realize the consequences of you attempting to eat noodles. I suppose we should go for sushi after all..."

Toki leaned up to rub her face against his, and flexed her teeth, smooching him gently. “No.” She hummed. “I don’t mind ramen, or being embarrassed. I can take a couple stares. It’s not like I don’t get them anyway.” She grins at him cheekily.

Clover slows down slightly, and gives a hard thrum. The city was looming ahead.

"Mh, If you’re sure, my love..." He smooched her a few times before he nuzzled into her warm, wonderful fluffy mane. "According to the sound Clover just made, it sounds like we're almost there.” He announced, before he hummed and nuzzled into her again, "Mmh~ Can we stay like this the rest of the way~?" He asked quietly.

“We’re almost at the city.” She corrects gently, and nestles down into him with a warm sound. Her sockets blink at him lazily behind her goggles. “I don’t mind laying on you the rest of the way. Clover’s tracking the rout from my memories, so we’re good to relax here for a while. All that showing off tired out my wings, so the rest is nice.” She melts against him happily. “Should we pick up a game for the kids while we’re here? We’re just a little bit away after all. They wouldn’t mind another harvest moon game.”

He hums happily as she gets comfy before nodding in agreement. "Perhaps another game would be fun. Maybe even get one for father?" He suggested with a soft laugh. "I can already imagine him lighting up like a child at the offering of a new game."

“I could see him doing that.” She laughs. “Though gods only know when he’d find the time to play it. The litter keep him and Asgore busy as heck. I don’t even know how he managed to come up with and finish the condoms with how busy he is. However... We could also get another game for another father I know.”

She playfully tickles her smaller fingers along his ribs, her larger hands bracing them on the saddle so even if he squirms, he won’t fall. “You’ve finished all your puzzle games again. You might actually have to branch out of puzzle games and into... Le-gasp ...” She gave him a cheeky grin, her dramatically announced words playful and silly. “Action or RPG games.”

"Oh no, how awful." He drawled dramatically before he grinned and nuzzled her. "I’ve been wanting to play Breath of the Wild for a while now! Do you realize how many puzzles are in those Shrines?!"

“Yes.” She gave him a completely deadpan look. “I know exactly how many puzzles are in those shrines. And I loathe every one of them.” She makes an obligatory grumbling noise. “I suppose... I mean, with royalties from my books and the movie deals, we could afford a second game cartridge for you to run your own Breath of the Wild game? We could technically afford a second switch if you wanted.” She nuzzled him back.

"..." He looked at her hopefully, a small smile on his face.

“...” She stared back at him. “Well how can I say no to that face? We’ll budget it in.” She promises, and smooches his cheekbone gently. “We’ll get you games too- your own Mario-kart so we don’t have to squish together to try and see on my screen, maybe?”

"What about Stardew Valley?” He then suggested hopefully.

“If you want it, we’ll get it.” She laughs. “With you working as a guard again, we’re no longer a one income household- we’re doing okay. We can afford splurges every so often.”

"Okay’? Toki you earn more than I do by simply going day to day.” He told her, before he chuckled quietly. "Splurge… we could buy new cars and barely lose a fraction…”

Toki rolled her eyelights behind her goggles, and lifted her secondary hand up to flick between his brows. “Shush.” She says. “I prefer to act as if we don’t have a plush savings to fall back on. I want our kids to value their money- not grow up throwing it away on silly things. So yes- theoretically we could buy a yacht even, but we don’t need it. We do, however, need another car if we’re going to keep having kids. Do we want to look today since your car isn’t with us?”

He took the flick with a pout, though upon mentioning vehicular options He gave her a smile. "That's actually a really good idea, great thinking Toki.” He praised.

“I have my moments.” She laughs. “Rare as they may be. Anyway- this way we can have the kids car, and then your car can be our date-night car. Because yes- date night will continue, with a whole house-load of kids or not.”

"Bless you, my love~” He purred happily. "I'm so lucky to have such a smart wife." He gave her a few more kisses before he reached down to pet Clover. "And such a powerful one too..."

Toki gave him a crooked crocodile grin after each of his kisses. "Power or not, this smart wife knows we need to get a portable garage for your car. And, this smart wife knows you probably don't want my help building it, do you?” She wiggled a brow at him cheekily, and tightened her grip as Clover began to weave.

The big bee was now in the heart of the city, weaving past buildings that scraped the sky, and over and under high-rise walkways and overpasses that had cars zipping to and fro. People were stopping and staring at the massive hellfire green Hell Hornet, several trying to follow where she was going.

"I mean, now that you are no longer burdened by pregnancy, I don't suppose you'd be willing to help, now would ya?” He asked hopefully, tightening his grip just slightly as Clover began her more delicate maneuvering around the buildings, "Steady, girl... if we need to walk or run just let us know.”

Toki glanced up and checked the clearance for Clover. “She’s good. Most of these buildings have space, and she’s going around if they don’t.” She glanced back down at him and cocked a brow. “I mean, I don’t mind helping building- but remember the bee hives?” Her grin grows mischievous. “My work of art didn’t pass your standards.”

“I have no idea what you're talking about~” He hummed innocently.

"That is bullshit, my love, and you know it." She laughs heartily and bumps her nasal ridge to his. "I'll help. If all else fails, I can hold support beams while you screw them in, ne?”

"Yes yes, that'll do~” He answered, smiling up at her, "So helpful~” he purred happily.

“I try.” She laughs warmly.

Clover gave a soft buck under them, and made Toki look up. Clover came in for a landing, neatly parking in one of the… Well, okay, two parking spots.

“You double-parked.” Toki points out to her grouchy summons- and gets thwapped off the hell-hornet’s back with a well aimed wing in response. She lands with a grunt, and then gets to her feet, dusting herself off. “Thaaanks, Clover.” She rolls her eye lights, and pulls her goggles down.

Clover just leers at her, and pointedly huddles down, settling down on the pavement, which had no snow and was blessedly dry. Clover liked the dry. It might not have been sun-warmed, but flame-warmed would make it comfortable soon enough.

Aliquam carefully dismounted before he smiled and reached up to pet Clover. "A lovely landing by a lovely hornet. Thank you, Clover~" He praised as he gently pet her head.

Clover chittered at him warmly and nuzzled him. Once she’d had her fill of attention, she nudged him off to go do his chores. She didn’t want to be here longer than necessary. There were too many people near who were gawking.

Toki chuckled. “So. Shoes first, or games first?” She asks. “Lunch has to come after. I’d say after getting a car, so we don’t have to park clover outside and make her wait. Games and shoes will be ruined if she goes back to her world.”

Clover gave them an unimpressed look.

"And she’s not willing to wait while we eat.” She eyed her hornet. “She may get into mischief. Expensive mischief.”

"And we don't need the extra attention." He agreed, before he smiled up at Clover. "We'll try to be quick." He told her, before he came to Toki's side. "I say we go and collect the shoes first." He answered.

“Shoes sounds good.” Toki nods. She offers him two bony arms to take with his own, and leans up to pluck his goggles off his face, leaving them around his neck. “Shall we?”

He nodded, and while starting for the shoe store with his arm laced with two of hers, he pulled his goggles off completely and put them away in the backpack they brought along.

Toki opened the door for them once they made their way up to it. She blinked however as they stepped inside.

The shop itself looked mostly the same. Walls of shoes, some in states of repair, some ruined beyond any hope of being salvaged, and some in various stages of being created from the bare bones of the heart of shoe-making craft.

However, what was different was the person behind the counter.

There wasn’t a little old lady behind the counter.

Aliquam had looked around the shoe store as he had a habit of doing- such lovely shoes and all custom made, he had respect for this family. Though he indeed noticed how it was not the lovely elder from the previous visits.

"Ah..." was the soft sound to rise from him, partly recognition, partly... Confusion... at the new face.

There was a green dragon HTM sitting behind the counter with head-phones over his head. He was shining shoes with the same Tenacity that Yuri did, but his shoulders were hunched over and he looked less than pleased to be out front.

Toki slowly made her way to the counter and rasped her bony knuckles on it. “Hello…?” She prompts gently.

The man jumps. “Ah…” He removes his headphones and glances up at them. He looks a lot like Hanzo, however he’s not the same color. “Hello. Welcome to Shimadas… Can I… help you…?”

"Hey there, we're here to pick up a custom order, last name Gaster.” Aliquam spoke politely as he moved up to join his wife, a smile growing on his face as etiquette kicked into play.

“Gaster…?” The man blinked slowly, and set down the pair of shoes. He straightened, and then began to thumb through the mess of papers in the back. “Gaster, Gaster… Where did she… I… Ah… I’m not used to my grandmother’s sorting system. I don’t… Usually work out front.”

“It’s okay.” Toki holds up her hands in a placating manner. Her back shifts, and she feels one of her spinal disks shift, crunching uncomfortably under her clothes. “Take your time, please. We’re in no rush.” He seemed frazzled as it was- or upset about something. Toki tilts her head, and peers at him quietly. “My father in law is quite familiar with Yuri’s work- and so am I. It’s well worth the wait. She got me outfitted with shoes three months back or so?”

After Tenebris finally pitched a fit over her squishing her beast feet into shoes entirely not meant to house them. It reminded her of the fit Tenne threw when she came home and bled on his floor from cut feet.

“I see…” His face pinched, and he flinched his shoulders closer to his head. He thumbed through the papers, and finally located their order ticket.

“Are you… Genji?” Toki prompts gently.

“Yeah.” He grunts. “And I’ve got your order right here. Let me go see if Hanzo has it done.”

Toki’s mane flattened, and she blinked as he walked away from them awkwardly. She folded her hands down at her side, her brows furrowing. “… Where’s Yuri?” She asks her husband quietly. Never once had the old lady not been here.

"I don't know... off the bat I can't smell her, so she hasn't been in for a while... But Genji's familiar... he must be the one who had been in the back..."

It was a minute before the familiar blue-scaled HTM stepped out, Hanzo looking to them both with a solemn nod. "Good afternoon." He sounded calm, with something else as an undertone. Toki picked up on the undertone, and the fact that the usually awkward but smiling HTM had come out with a flat, tired look on his face. "Hanzo,” She greets him warmly, and makes a couple steps towards him, “Good afternoon. How are you?” Her green gaze searches him keenly. Yuri hadn’t been here in a while, her nose told her. She could still smell her, but not as fresh- it had been a month, maybe a month and a half. Closer to two months almost, since Yuri had been here. But she’d worked the front so much her scent was ingrained there, in the desk and the papers. “Hanzo… I don’t want to be blunt, but… Where’s Yuri?”

It was when the elder was mentioned did the dragon seem to deflate further. "Grandma... Well, Grandma’s in the hospital. She got sick when the last cold season blew in, and it didn't ever really get better.”

Toki frowned and felt sadness bloom in her chest. Yuri was a lovely woman. “Oh no … What “hospital?” She asks. “I’d like to go see her.” They could have clover take the shoes back while they made a quick trip up to the hospital, and then spent some time walking around town. Being out and about would be good for them, instead of strictly in and out of the city.

"Ebott General Hospital." He answered. "We were going to close early to go see her, but I'm pleased that you came before we did..." He then offered a gentle smile as he held out the larger-sized box. "This was an order she was looking forward to seeing delivered... So we continued our work. She wanted us to. I hope they are to your liking."

Toki reached out to take the box, and she cradled the baby shoes to her chest. "Yeah... Baby shoes for the pups... I've got your payment here." She used one of her secondary hands to grab her purse, and fished around in her wallet once she found it. It only took her a moment before she procured the amount. And a little extra too.

She understood not being able to work and the struggles that came with it. Power bills were expensive in winter, not to mention hospital costs.

Toki and Aliquam could pay for their own lunch. As Aliquam stated, Toki made more than enough—which she usually didn't touch in case someone close to her needed help financially. Tenebris would support overpaying for shoes at this point.

It was a surprise to Hanzo but he gave a low bow in respect. "Thank you so much. This will help us greatly."

Toki gave him a smile, and offered him a comforting look as she returned his bow. "I lost my brother suddenly." She says gently as she straightened, complete sympathies in her gaze. "So I can imagine how hard it can be to work with your Grandmother in the hospital, not knowing if you'll get a call for good or bad. It's not much, but maybe take the extra and take Genji out to lunch to relax and get your Grandmother some flowers?"

"Thank you, ma'am... " Hanzo gave another bow before he turned and called out to Genji to collect him to go out.

Genji was less than pleased to be called out. He came out of the back regardless, his shoulders hunched and his long tail hanging low. He had his hands shoved in his pockets, his headphones around his neck. He shuffled over to his brother.

Toki gave them both a smile, and urged Aliquam over to the door. “Lets go get these put in the saddlebags.”

Aliquam nodded. Though as he watched Hanzo speaking to Genji, he could see for a moment a gleam of happiness in the younger man’s eyes before he glanced towards the leaving couple. Of course, nothing was said, but the look on his face was enough to make Aliquam content as he bowed his head before following Toki out the door.

Toki made her way towards Clover, cocking her head slightly.

There were several people gathered around Clover. Not around-around, so to speak, but more or less within one cars length of the dozing Hell Hornet. Clover didn’t seem concerned with them— but then and again, a lion didn’t concern itself with the opinions of the sheep.

Toki shrugged— if she was human and saw a massive bee double-parking, she would probably stare too. She just wouldn’t want to be the cop brave enough to try and give Clover a parking ticket.

She padded out towards her summons, and made her way towards the saddle bags. “So, do we want to hit the game store first, so we don’t have to back track?” She asks her husband quietly.

"I say the game store, it's right next door, isn't it?" Aliquam answered, though he noticed the crowd and he looked at Toki, "...?" He gave a loose shrug, clueless but not sure what else to really do with people staring at them.

Toki shrugged right back at him. His guess was as good as hers. It was best just to leave them be, and deal with them if they got rowdy.

She nodded to him though. “Game store then. You get a switch, and some games because you’ve been an amazing husband and father and you deserve a treat for being so good.” She gives him a cheeky grin as she tucks the shoes inside. She was trying to lighten the mood from hearing about Yuri. Teasing him gently was a surefire way to do it.

He gave a nod and hummed as he bumped her hip with his. God, it felt good to do that again. "It's quite the sight. Of all the dog guards in the village, I'm the goodest boy~" He teased with a soft laugh.

She bumped him right back, and there was something giddy in her. She would never tire of it now that he could do it again without pain. "You're the goodest good boy, and good boys deserve new toys."

"Yay!" He was so silly, but he would never tire of being happily silly with his wife.

She'd take silly and happy over the man she'd woken up to from her short coma any day.

Toki finished packing the shoes, and turned to him. She leaned up to give him a kiss, and then cheekily arched her brows at him. "So. I'm looking forward to seeing you play Stardew. I think you're going to love chickens."

"I heard something about blue chickens. Are those really a thing?" He asked hopefully. "If so I would so dearly love some of those; they sound beautiful."

"They're a thing." She nods warmly. "Same with demon chickens. They're called Void chickens. It's... Coincidentally amusing."

"I wonder how father will react when he discovers such a creature." Aliquam gave his soft, sweet 'nyeh heh heh heh~' upon thinking such a silly thought about his father.

"Probably not very well." She laughs. "I have three void chickens. Tenebris, Tenne, and Blobby. And then I have a duck I named Sir Quack. Sir Quack lays me more feathers than eggs."

"Aww!" He laughed gently at their names. "Well now I need to come up with some names for when I get them."

"You could name chickens after us?" She grins at him cheekily, and then tugs him towards the game store.

He had a good laugh at that, though he was definitely thinking about that as they entered the game store.

The clerk gave a brief, "Welcome!" from where they were currently helping another customer.

She waved at the man behind the counter, and then headed towards the section of Switch games along the wall. "If there are other games you wanna play, we can get you those too. You do have mandatory down time from work after all."

"You got it." He smiled at her, before going to scour the game selection as he hummed some random tune from an unspecific game.

As the customer who had been at the front took his leave, the cashier gave a smile and the usual spiel of 'Let me know if there's anything I can get for you'.

Toki hummed softly to the cashier as she followed Aliquam over to the games. "We'll be buying one of your switches today. But for now, we're going to browse your games and get my husband set up."

"Alright. While you look, will you want a pre-owned or a new one? And do you have a preference on the design of your switch?" He asked.

"New preferably." Toki chirps. "As for preference..." She glances to Aliquam. "Do you want a game-designed one, or just a basic switch like what I have?"

"Ooh, do they have one with a design on hand?" He asked hopefully.

"They might?" Toki glanced at the clerk. "Do you have any with designs on them?" She asks while Papyrus rifles through games.

"I just had a return of one of our 'Breath of the Wild' models." He answered, "Nothing wrong with it, but it got returned by a rather upset looking mother with a screaming little kid." The cashier answered, going to collect it. "Left it with all the games and everything."

Toki hummed, and looked to Aliquam. It was his call if he wanted a used one or a new one.

"There was a Zelda model?" He questioned, before he smiled. "May I see it?" he asked.

"Sure thing." The cashier lifted it up and set it on the counter, opening it up for the others to see.

Toki wandered over to the counter, and made a soft hum. "It's very nice. But, it's yours love. If you want it, Papy, you can get it- or if you'd rather a new one, we can get that instead."

"I don't think there's another one like that here... and this one looks to be in good condition." He mentioned.

"He's right." The cashier agreed with a smile. "They had just bought it the day before."

She nods. "Then you make the choice." She urges him gently. "If you want it, say it, and we'll get it and the games, along with the other games we want."

Papyrus gave a nod. "Then this will do nicely, the bundle will work well as a start." He decided.

"What all games does the bundle come with?" Toki asks curiously.

"Breath of the Wild, as well as the newest Splatoon, Mario kart, and this is a big purchase so I'll even throw in a game of your choice." The cashier offered.

"Stardew Valley!" Aliquam piped hopefully.

"Stardew it is." The cashier laughed.

Toki smiled. "Then it looks like I'll need to buy Splatoon to play with you and your dad." She wasn't really all that interested in it, but who knew? Maybe she'd enjoy it, and she'd give them some laughs
"Sounds like fun." Aliquam smile happily. "Does it come with a protective case?"

"No, but we have plenty of them to offer; from plain black ones to ones with designs on them." The cashier answered as he pointed to where said cases hung.

"Thank you!" And he was off to look at said cases.

Toki watched him toodle off, and then glanced to the cashier. "You've got glass screen protectors too?" She asks. "It'll most likely be played as a handheld, so the extra safety would be nice."

"Oh of course!" The cashier answered. "Since they're fragile before application, I keep them behind the counter. You said you had a couple systems back home? I could sell you extras."

"Just one system, and mine's got a cover on it already." She smiled at him. "I'm good, thanks. One of the employees here actually installed the screen protector for me." She wiggled her fingers. "Bones don't allow for accurately gripping small, slick surfaces, y'see. Getting it on straight would have been hard."

He gave a nod of understanding before he smiled. "One, then." He agreed, before he looked back towards Papyrus, who was looking at the games with a gleam in his eyes not unlike the thrill of a child.

Toki nods. "Please." She glanced to Papyrus, and scooted over. "Did you decide on a carrying case?" She tickles his ribs gently. "Or did you get distracted by all the amazing games~?"

"There's so many games!" He answered with a soft coo, before he smiled at her and held up a case. "I did find a case though. Ta-da!" It was simple, and a light brown color. But on the front was a familiar little fox-like character on the front. "Look, it's Eevee!"

She laughs. "We don't even play pokemon-go in order to get the actual Lets Go Eevee or Pikachu. We'd have to drive two hours to get poke-stops and whatever. But, it is cute." She looks it over and nods her approval. "There is a lot of games. You don't have to get them all now, Papyrus. We can just get a couple multiplayer ones- Splatoon for me since your dad has that and yours is coming with it, for instance- and we can all game."

"Sounds good." He took his prizes up to the counter and set them next to the starter package they would be buying.

"Alright, anything else you think you'll need today?" The cashier asked with a smile. "Also, do you have a rewards card with us?"

"I've got a card." Toki fished it out of her wallet, along with her debit card. She paused once she set it on the counter, and then she trundled over to the games. She snagged two more older Harvest Moon games. "These as well, please." She smiles slightly. "I intended to get something for the kids. I think this is everything. Papy?"

Her husband nodded to her, and that was that.

"Fantastic." The card was taken and- once swiped- returned. The console loaded her information swiftly, and her name popped up on the screen, "Alright, Miss Nara. Just let me get everything into the computer." Quickly and accurately, the cashier scanned and tapped everything onto the check-out screen before he smiled. "Would you like to hear what we offer for protection plans?" He asked.
"No need, we'll take the longest one you have." Aliquam answered, knowing all too well that it was better to be safe than sorry.

"Two year plan, you got it." And there it was added to the total of what they would be buying that day. "And for the games as well? We offer protection plans for those as well." The cashier glanced to Toki.

Toki blinked. "Nah. They'll be in the case, or in the system themselves. The games will be safe. And I'm not worried about our kids chewing on them." She grinned at Aliquam. "Honey tasted my Breath of The Wild cartridge when I dared her to, and she won't ever do it again." Toki offers the cashier a brilliant grin. "Thank you, though."

Papyrus gave a soft hum, before he looked at Toki. His gaze slid over to the cashier after a moment, and he gave him a sunny smile. "I'll take it on my games, it's never a bad idea, and I'll pay for it if you'd like, dear." He piped softly.

"Alright." A few taps of keys, before both men glanced at Toki.

Toki puffs a soft sigh and shakes her head. "Just put it on my card." She waves a hand. She honestly didn't care- she didn't usually run protection plans on things, because by the time you needed it, the plan was useless. But she would humor her husband, rather than start an argument over video games. "I'd rather not have to run two cards over one purchase."

"You got it... Alright, looks like your total will be..."
Strider Notes: And yes. We went there with Yuri. Let us know what you think of the Children.

With his prizes in the safety of his arms, Papyrus stepped out with a small smile. "Thank you, Toki. I'm looking forward to playing with you and the others- it's going to be so much fun!" He hummed happily.

Toki smiled. “Consider it an early birthday present, my love.” She leaned up and smooched his cheek. His birthday was on the twelfth, which was in roughly a week. The twins were the day after, on the thirteenth. “Why don’t we just carry these with us so they don’t risk getting jostled in Clover’s saddle? We need to stop after we visit Yuri and pick up some wrapping paper for the twins. These,” She wiggles the bag looped on her wrist that has the two games in it, “are for their birthday. We need to pick up a couple more things. This is the first birthday I get to spend with them. I want to make it memorable.”

She hadn’t gotten to experience their first birthday. She was damn well going to make their second birthday memorable- since they were already mentally the age of small children. Toki had a lot to make up for, damn it- she had a lot to make up for and a lot she missed, and she damn well wasn’t going to mess this one up.

The crowd of people around Clover had grown. The sleeping Hell Hornet didn’t seem to pay them any mind, rumbling snores bubbling out of her.

He nodded in agreement to her ideas of the games being for the children’s birthday presents though when he saw the larger group of people, he rose a brow, "is it just me or has that crowd around Clover grown considerably?"

"It's not just you." Toki tilted her head. She watched the crowd warily, and then strode towards her Summons fearlessly.

The crowd moved and seemed to grow more excited as they took notice of her. There was a low murmur rising through them, not quite able to be heard yet by the approaching skeletal duo.

"There's humans and HTMs in there." Toki observes quietly. That soothed a little bit of anxiety she had. HTMs usually guaranteed it wasn't about to be a violent riot. They also didn't smell angry. Over the stink of the city, Toki thought they smelled... Excited?

She reached Clover, and patted her to rouse her.

Clover yawned, and patted her to rouse her.

Aliquam glanced at the folks around them before he cleared his throat. "If we're going to be taking off soon, I would certainly hope this crowd of folks would be wiling to move out of the way. We'd hate to hit anybody with Clover's wingspan as it is." He spoke slightly louder as to try and make a point to everyone.
Toki coughed lightly. They weren't actually going to fly- but they were sending Clover home for Tenebris to unload her bags. She watched the crowd grow more excited though when Papyrus spoke to them, but she did get to see them step back. "Alright... Clover, time for you to fly home."

Clover looked at them both, and then at the crowd of people. She stood up, stretching her wings, and cocked her head. She rumbled at her riders, wanting to make sure this was what they wanted- she couldn't protect them if she wasn't here.

"We'll be okay, big girl, we're gonna get a new car and we'll drive home." Papyrus reached up and rubbed her snout gently. "Thank you for the ride."

Clover chuffed, and then mouthed at him gently with her mandibles as if to chide him and remind him to keep his guard up to protect himself and his much smaller and more fragile appearing wife. Though, they all knew if push came to shove, Toki could probably level the city if need be. Then, she lifted her wings, and took to the sky.

Toki watched her go, and then reached out to gently finger the hole Clover’s tooth had left in her husband’s shirt. “Well, at least it’s not very noticeable.” She hums very gently to him. “Alright. Off to the hospital we go.” She glanced at the hoard of people staring between her and the bee now making her way home- and being followed by a helicopter it looked like- before linking her free primary arm with her husband’s and starting off for the sidewalk at a quick pace. “Alright, lets go see Yuri and get lunch and a car. Or is it car and lunch?”

He smiled to himself as he reached and ran his finger over the new little hole before he rumbled as he saw the helicopter. "That thing better keep its distance or she'll down it.” He chuckled. Though as she spoke of plans, he followed her lead and smiled as he pecked her head. "A good question. I say we go car searching first, talk it over during lunch, and go back to collect which we decide on.” He suggested.

“I like that idea.” Toki preened at his kiss. Her gaze watched Clover, and she snorted softly. “She’s annoyed by it. Ah- there she goes.” She watched as Clover went up above the buildings, and then took off faster than the helicopter could keep up with. Toki laughed. “She wouldn’t down it- that would be bad for PR. Anyway, I like the car searching idea first. And, if all else fails and we find the one, then we don’t have to worry about walking for lunch.”

Toki guided them to the sidewalk, and then to the crosswalk. She pressed the button to cross, and then waited patiently for the light to turn. There may not have been any cars, but waiting was polite.

"Well there you go." He laughed, giving her a light squeeze as they waited, though he could feel the air on the back of his neck shift and he grunted faintly, turning slightly to eye the small group of people lingering nearby, all of which watching them.

What the hell?

Toki tilted her head as he grunted, and she spotted the mob from before slowly trailing after them along the sidewalk. She eyed the area around them and hummed. “Well, it is the closest crosswalk? They’ve got to cross too.” Toki chimes lightly, trying to soothe away the ruffled look that crossed his face. She crossed her secondary arms across her chest and rubbed his forearm soothingly. When the light turned, she guided him across, and hummed softly. “So the hospital isn’t far from here,” She says to change the subject, “what should we bring for Miss Shimada?”

"A good question... flowers and plushies are sort of cliche... Mmm... Too bad we don't have any honey..." He hummed.

“We don’t.” She nods in agreement. “And we don’t have any jars- Oh!” Toki pauses. She wonders. Could she…? She thought maybe she could. She hadn’t tried to make any since she’d been here, but if her stingers were still here, well, who’s to say her wax glands weren’t too?

She shuffles the bags into his hands, ignoring his appalled look at being suddenly turned into a pack-mule. Her hands came together, and she focused- and out of her neatly trimmed wrist fur came the familiar thick wax that she’d used to make honey jars back when she’d sold it with Tenne.

Toki made a gleeful noise, and then began to swiftly craft a jar with ease born of doing it hundreds of times a day for roughly two years. It was a bit harder with bones instead of flesh-fingers, but she worked around her bony joints. “Here we go.” She grinned. “I can just make honey.” She chirped, her wings flicking happily behind her as her mane ruffled in glee. And monster honey was better than normal bee honey by far- at least health wise.

Being momentarily disgruntled lasted exactly that long as Aliquam watched her, his eyes widening in awe as she molded a jar out of wax. "That's... That's phenomenal." He complemented.

“It’s a fun little quirk of being a bee, I guess. I discovered it the first time I went into heat in the other world. I built myself a literal hive and hid inside. Well- Dear did.” She chuckled softly. It doesn’t take her long to shape it- she actually had to use magic to keep it warm. The cold chill of early October cooled the hot wax faster than she wanted it to. But, once it was formed, it cooled it off just right- as well as the lid she crafted and fitted to it.

Once she had it fully shaped and it had cooled and hardened, Toki angled her wrist and started to fill it. Where they had to have tempered glasses for her venom normally, her hand-made jars weren’t bothered in the slightest. Toki capped it once full, and then stopped walking and stooped to pack it in snow so it would rapidly cool off.

“There we go.” She beams as she resumes walking with him, carrying along the snow-packed jar. “A perfect gift once it cools, yeah?”

"Wow..." He had to blink a few times but gave her a bright grin. "Amazing... very impressive, my dear." He praised. "Yeah, we just need to stall long enough for the honey to cool." He agreed. "Which should be enough time for us to walk to the hospital."

“I’m not just omnipotent in an impressively scary way.” Toki gave him a bright grin. “I’m good at practical gift-making. It’s not as pretty as a store-made jar, but it’s hand-made.” Toki kept the jar away from him as they walked. Even under it’s rapidly melting snow-coat, it was steaming. “It’ll be cold by the time it’s there, and Yuri can have some if she wants some. So- am I going to need to start stocking our fridge with jars like this?” She gives him a cheeky grin. “Or giving you lumps of warm wax?”

His other self, her little son, Quinn, had loved to play with wax when she made her jars.

"... I mean... if you have the wax to share I wouldn’t mind molding a few things out of wax~" He hummed in reply. "I could easily make candles out of the wax too." He considered.

Toki thought that might be the case. The little pang in her soul surprised her though, and she lifted a hand to rub her chest. It seemed she’d never stop missing the children she’d taken for hers, even if she had the adult versions with her now. “I don’t mind sharing wax.” She smiles to him gently. “You know... your smaller self used to like to play with wax too. Little Quinn- he would make little wax bees while I made my jars. Or try to make bees. They weren’t very good, but they were precious.”

She didn’t talk about Quinn often- she’d hardly told Papyrus anything about him. She wondered if he was curious at all.
"Oh really?" He seemed to be listening to her this time, a smile on his face. "A child can do their best and the best thing we can do is encourage them." He hummed.

"Indeed." She smiled warmly at him and hummed gently. "Encouragement can go a long, long ways." She smiles wisely to her husband. "Particularly to children."

"Especially children." He agreed, pecking her head with a soft hum. "Perhaps we should buy her some tea as well?" He suggested.

"I think they'd have some tea in the gift shop?" Toki inhales lightly. "What do you recall her smelling like for tea?" She asks.

"She was a very gentle scent... Though if I had to guess... a Thai mix. Very light one." He answered. "A healthy choice for someone her age."

"Very." Toki nods in agreement. "So we'll see if they have something like that in the gift shops." A gift shop that didn't have tea was not a gift shop to visit really.

He nodded in agreement, giving a soft whistle as he walked with her. It didn't take too long to get to the hospital- it was just a short jaunt, with only a few corners here and there. They arrived swiftly at the front of the hospital. "You know the way to the gift shop?" He asked.

"Bottom floor, about twenty feet from the main entrance." She nods softly. "This is the same hospital my grandparents were at a long time ago, so I got familiar with it when we visited them."

It felt like a lifetime ago that she’d lost her maternal grandparents. Her paternal grandparents- by blood, not by marriage- were the only ones left. She hadn’t gone to America to see them since before she’d become a Monster. Toki mused she probably should make a trip out to see them- they were getting up there in years, and there was no telling how they were faring.

"I see." He hummed in reply, heading into the gift shop with her before he began to search for the tea.

Toki hummed and let him search. While he searched, she took a moment to sign them in on the guest list in the lobby, and then she went back to join him.

She got a few weird looks- but y’know, a skeleton in a hospital was a morbid thing to see.

"Find any Thai tea?" She asks him warmly.

"Sadly no. I just found this light 'thigh' tea." He joked as he held up two boxes of Thai tea. Seemed that victory was his on this day. "It's not too expensive either, decent enough that I could grab two." He mentioned as he held out the boxes to her.

"Let's just settle on one for now." Toki smiles to him. "That way others can gift her some too, and not feel like they're overwhelming her with tea. Besides, we've got honey for her too." She winks. "My gift to her," she hefts up the jar as she takes the tea from him, "and your gift to her. It'll be a good combination gift, no?"

She moved her way towards the checkout stand, and smiled to the cashier who seemed to be ogling the waxy jar that was filled with green. It took humans a long time to get used to green honey in the other world too.

"I agree!" He laughed, pulling out his wallet as he gave the cashier a smile, though he then noticed and he glanced at Toki. "Has the honey cooled yet, do you know?" He asked.
Toki peeked at the jar and hummed. "Maybe?" She gently popped the top off, and then stuck the tippy tip joint of her pinky finger in it. "It's still warm, but it's passed the deadly point. The enzymes have changed from venom to honey." Toki hums softly to him in answer, capping it again and popping her pinky into her mouth to clean it. Honestly, it didn't take long to cool it to a safe point on a cold day.

"Interesting. I was going to offer some to our ogling cashier." He joked lightly.

The cashier had gone very pale when Toki mentioned it was a venom. "Ah... I'm good, thank you." She stammered. "Is that all for you today? Flowers or a get well card maybe?"

"This is good for us, thank you." Toki smiled at her.

Aliquam nodded in agreement as he pulled out his wallet. "No need for a bag either." He let the cashier know.

The woman nodded back, and rang them up. She gave them a faint smile, and offered out his receipt.

Toki cradled both of them with a soft thrum. "Alright- we need to go see what floor she's on."

Taking the receipt, Aliquam walked with Toki to the front Desk, "Pardon me, Which floor is Yuri Shimada on?" He asked.

The receptionist had already seen Toki, but Aliquam was more skeleton than Toki appeared to be and she spooked a bit at seeing him. "A-ah... Mrs. Shimada is up on the fifth floor. She's in room four-one-eight."

Toki smiled at her warmly. "Thank you. We'll be sure to sign out before we leave." She promises. Toki offers her secondary arm to Aliquam, and starts wandering towards the elevator.

"Fourth floor." He murmured as he glanced up at the directory. Hospice care. Aliquam sighed quietly and shook his head slowly.

"That's not looking good..." He murmured as he called the elevator.

"No, no it's not." Toki nods in agreement. She fell silent as they waited for the elevator and she quietly grinded her teeth. "Do you think... maybe your dad could help her?"

It was a bit of a touch and go area- magic on humans that was. When she'd been sick, there hadn't been much Tenebris could do to help her transition into a monster- all he could do was make her more comfortable, and that had been enough for Toki.

"I don't know... she's human. Healing magic can only do so much to a human... It was better on you because of your monster genetics..." Aliquam answered, before he sighed, "don't grind your teeth, my love... it's bad for them..."

"Well, there's obviously some genetics in her, or her grandsons wouldn't be like me." She says lightly. "But... I don't know. Healing magic doesn't really work all that well on humans as far as I know- or Todd would simply wipe away every cut and scrape that Rosie and Felix get when they're out romping."

Toki does stop grinding her teeth though. She simply splays them instead, wiggling them slowly. The sharp, crocodile points needed to be dulled. "I didn't mean to worry you about my teeth. It's a stress thing. They spark when given friction with each other, so I never thought they'd be... Well, damaged by my grinding."
"Well... Perhaps not... They are different than molars, after all..." He was trying, whether he was fussing out of general stress or had actually thought her teeth grinding was problematic, one could give him at least a little credit.

She intentionally sparked two together, flecking the door in harmless sparks, before settling her mouth flat again. "I don't think it's harmful, but I'll be more mindful." She promises. "Most of the time I don't even know I'm doing it. A gentle reminder to stop when you notice me doing it would be very appreciated, love."

"... Sure." He gave her a squeeze as the elevators slid open and he let her go to step inside and press the button to take them to the fourth floor.

She cuddled into him as the doors closed, sealing them in. The jolt as the elevator started moving made her laugh. "Y'know, I don't have a stomach anymore, and yet the motion of the elevator still seems to make it lurch."

"I think that has something to do in your head rather than your stomach itself..." He answered, before he chuckled. "Though this might be something father could explain better than i ever could."

Toki lifted her secondary hand and knocked her knuckles against her forehead where her scar was. It made a hollow noise. "Everything is like, ghost organs unless magic is pumped directly to them. For once, I can say there's nothing rattling around in this head of mine. But your dad probably could, yeah. He's mister science man."

He gave a soft giggle as she knocked on her skull before he leaned down and pecked her head gently with a sweet purr. "Be nice to your head, my love~" He hummed to her, holding her close on the elevator ride up... So brief, and yet it felt like forever as the doors slid open, revealing the opposite wall.

And the large number four that sat upon it.

Toki exhaled softly and kissed his cheek. "My skull is fine, love." That said, she stepped out of the elevator and began looking for Yuri's room.

A brief questioning to the clerk gave them the way and slowly the duo approached Yuri's room... Aliquam rose a hand to the door and hesitated, before he took a breath and slowly knocked, "Missus Shimada?" He called gently.

Inside, a rough hacking cough rang out. It lasted several worrying seconds, before a rough voice called to them. "Come on in."

Toki eased the door open, and was greeted to the sight of Yuri hooked up to countless monitors, with an oxygen tube hissing soft puffs of air frequently up her nose as she took rasping gasps of air to settle her lungs. Her cheeks were hollowed, her hair freshly washed, and she trembled in her seat. "Hello, Miss Shimada."

She squinted at them for a second, before her expression brightened. "Ah! Toki and Aliquam. It's been a while since I got to see you two. You've slimmed down some."

Toki laughed gently and ran a hand over her flatter middle. "Heavens yes I did. A litter of six played hell on my body." Toki gently passed the tea to her husband. "We brought you some gifts! I made you some honey."

Aliquam smiled as he stepped over to the table. "And I bought you some tea to go with the honey. I hope you like Thai." He added as he offered her the box. "How are you feeling?" He then asked.
"I've been better, I have to say. Honey and Thai tea?" Yuri rasped, pushing a button on a hand-held device. The top part of her bed raised more, and she could look at them properly. She seemed to breathe a little easier. "Oh, aren't you both sweet. I assume you both went to the shop and saw my boys?"

"We did." Toki nods, and steps closer. There was a table across Yuri's lap, covered in an empty mug and an almost full bottle of water, and she gently settled the now safely cool home-made jar of honey onto the lap table. "We picked up baby shoes for Tenebris today, and your grandsons told us you were here. We thought we'd stop by and see how you were."

"Ah, that looks lovely." Yuri looked delighted at the green honey, taking the jar and turning its murky surface over in her hands as she observed it. Her hands shook slightly, but less than she did just sitting there. A shoemakers hands, even in sickness. "My grandsons are sweet- they've been trying to keep the shop in working order for... when I go home." Her eyes listed to the side, to the sign on the door that said 'hospice'.

Toki's gaze followed hers, and she leaned down to pat her shoulder very gently.

Yuri's hand cupped Toki's skeletal one, and she exhaled a shaky noise that became a hacking cough that rattled her frail bones.

When it stopped, Yuri glanced up at them and sighed. "I'd love some tea to soothe this throat of mine. But by the time I can get one of these blasted nurses to help me, it'll 'be too late for you to have caffeine Madam Shimada'." The nasally tone of voice was obviously a mimicry of one of the nurses.

Toki laughed gently. "We can help with that. Papy? Will you open her tea for her and put one of the bags in the mug? You don't mind if we use your water bottle, do you?" Toki was primarily fire based when it came to magic. Why wait for tea when tea could be made right there?

"Not at all." Yuri blinked slowly, looking at them with tired but curious eyes.

Giving a nod to answer his wife, Aliquam came around to the other side of Yuri's bed as he opened the box of tea, dropping a bag into the mug before closing the box and setting it up on her bedside before he stepped away, a smile on his face as he sat down.

Toki took the bottle of water, and poured a generous amount into the mug. Though, enough space was left for honey, because who wouldn't want honey in their tea? Toki then gently clutched the mug in her hands, and pulsed her magic into it.

Yuri watched, amazed as the mug began to steam before her very eyes. Once it seemed to reach a certain temperature, the skeletal woman let go, and unscrewed the top. Before Toki could even ask, Yuri smiled to her. "Yes please."

Toki beamed at her warmly, and fetched the spoon leftover from the last time she'd had tea, and used it to measure out a couple spoons of the green honey. She stirred it in until it dissolved, and then she scooped another spoon, presenting it to Yuri with a cheeky smile.

The ailing elderly woman took it with a delighted grin. "The boys aren't too good with their magic," She says, popping the spoon in her mouth, "so that was a real treat to see. Mmm... This is very good! Why's it green though?"

Toki did a little four-handed jazz hands for show as the tea steeped on the table in front of the Shimada matriarch. "Maamaagic~ " She knew Papy would explain the real reason, because he was sweet like that.
Aliquam chuckled quietly, "It makes me happy to know that we can still offer you something to enjoy during these hard times, ma'am..." He spoke gently, before he gave a quiet laugh. "It's actually Toki's making. She can cool down what comes out of her stingers and it becomes safe to eat.”

"Oh really?" Yuri looked fascinated at the idea, and she shakily took the warm mug into her hands. She inhaled the smell of seeping tea, and took a drink before it even got done. "Ah~" She sighs in bliss. "It's very good. The honey is splended- you make delicious honey. Have you thought of selling it?"

"Many times," She laughs. "Working on getting it licensed for sale." People couldn't decide if it was like 'someone trying to sell breast-milk butter to the general populace', to use her handler's terminology.

"Then again it's not unwise to have it simply sold locally as you do not often have it in you to make a large amount at once." Aliquam mentioned, passing a smile to his love "It makes it more akin to an exotic treasure, or a local delicacy for those who visit, you know..."

"True." She nods with a smile. "I still have to get licensing for it to be sold to monsters still, since we do have humans that come in." She laughs gently.

Yuri doesn't laugh, but she makes a soft, savoring noise of her tea. "Mmm, I'm sure you'd sell it often~"

"But then again, does anyone actually crack down on what you do in your own village?" Aliquam then asked, pondering about it for a moment as he rested his head on his knuckles.

"Probably not, but I don't want to test it." She laughs. It wasn’t her village anyways- it belonged to the monsters. If anything, Asgore, as their King, was mayor of the village of sorts. "That's like wearing a pork-chop dress out to visit the lions den and being surprised when you're eaten alive."

Yuri blinked. "That's a lovely image." She gives a soundless laugh into her drink. "You're got a good sense for painting images, Toki."

"I'm a writer." She laughs warmly. "So of course I paint mental images."

"Vivid images indeed, of all sorts as well, Toki; who knows who you might mentally scar in the process of your artistic ways." Aliquam teased with a soft laugh.

Toki grinned. "Well, if you remember when we went camping while I was pregnant with Honey and Skylar, I scared the pants off of everyone with the story about Stag's origins." She laughed heartily.

"Oh, you're right about that. Good times." He cupped his chin, reminiscing before he gave his trademark 'nyeh heh heh heh' laugh.

His laugh startled Yuri, and she rasped a soft laugh as she finished her tea. "You're both lovely- and I can see how deeply you love each other. Thank you for coming to see me."

"We're not the only ones that'll be visiting today," Toki smiles to her warmly. "Your grandsons will be here after they have lunch."

"Oh will they...?" She looked tired but surprised and happy about that.

"They worry about you, and that tells us just how much they love you." Aliquam hummed. "Both of them with all their heart."
Yuri sighs, and something rattles deep in her chest. "Yes, I know they do. And I love them too. I'm hoping I'll have the energy to stay awake their whole visit."

Toki hesitated, and twiddled her secondary fingers. "Would you like us to leave?" She asks her gently. "So you can get your rest to see your grandsons?"

Yuri looked hesitant to answer her.

Toki glanced to Aliquam and smiled. "Lets make her one more mug of tea, and then let her rest, okay? Would you like that, Yuri?"

"I think I'd like that, yes." She sighed softly and gave Toki a grateful smile. She shakily offered out the mug to Aliquam to refill with water for Toki to heat.

He gave an understanding smile and poured water from the bottle into the mug. "It was good to see you, Yuri, I'm glad we were able to bring you something to drink."

"And I thank you both for brightening the day of a little old lady." Yuri smiled to them both warmly.

Toki took the mug once full, and changed the tea bag, before warming it and adding another spoon of honey. Once it was perfect once more, she offered it back to Yuri, and then offered her a kind bow. "Alright- rest well, miss Shimada."

"Of course. Enjoy the rest of your day, dearies." She offered them a warm smile, and leaned back some as she cradled the mug of tea, enjoying it against her bones.

"Until next time." Aliquam bowed in the same before joining at Toki's side to head out, "It was wonderful to see you, ma'am."

Toki waved at her, and then left with Aliquam. She walked quietly with him to the elevator. "She's very sick." She says quietly. "You can hear it in her lungs, and you can see it in her face. Her body is tired. I think we'll talk to your dad and see if he can help at all."

"Quickly, I hope..." Aliquam agreed, calling the elevator and holding his wife close as they waited.

"Indeed." Toki nods, and nuzzles him. Once they're in the elevator, Toki hums softly to him. "Alright- we're off to car shopping, then lunch, and then deciding on a car, and then home, yes?"

He nodded. "I'm looking forward to seeing just what vehicles are up for grabs... What do you think we'll find?" He asked.

Toki settled into his side with a soft hum. "Personally, I'm hoping they have a mini-van. As stereotypical as it is, given the fact that I gave birth to six children, and my genetics now firmly line up as something between beast and skeleton, I'd rather be prepared than be sorry if we spend a fortune on a car, and get waylaid with an army of munchkins in our next round of kids. Which isn’t going to happen," She eyes him, him and his kink for her heavily swollen belly, "But it doesn’t hurt to be prepared. So yeah- minivan, which will work for holding any more future kids. Especially if we get an eight passenger."

If all else failed, they could just get a full sized van, which ranged in sizes from ten to fifteen people, she’d heard.

"Sounds good." He agreed.

As the elevator reached the ground floor, Aliquam stepped out before his eyes narrowed and he gave a low sound as he pulled Toki closer.

The people from earlier were everywhere now. He could see at least one in every direction.

"Toki... I almost fear that we must prepare for a fight to happen extremely soon..." He warned her in a lower tone.

Toki blinked at just how full the ground floor of the hospital was. Her teeth twitched, and she tightened her fists faintly. "They're just people, my love. We're in public." She reminds him very quietly. "We'll be okay."

Toki tosses her head up, and her mane ruffles. Instead of letting them unnerve her, she takes their stares and lets it fuel her- and she struts to the main desk, checking her and Papyrus out smoothly, before turning to walk towards the exit with her head held high and her mane ruffled higher still.

Aliquam was less so, his gaze sharp as he watched around him, though it was by the time they stepped outside that he grew defensive of all the eyes watching as they seemed to multiply. His magic flared, and he wrapped his arms around Toki and gave a low snarl.

It was almost satisfying as many of the humans reacted with fear, though there were still the persistent few who shied for but a short-lasting moment.

Toki grunted as her husband snared her, crushing her to him as she found herself defended by a large white bone club. She gave a soft squirm, and stilled only when several of the humans- and HTMs- that had been following them stepped forward.

They bowed respectfully. One hit his knees, and bowed to them- no, their gaze was on Toki, completely on Toki, so that bow was to her.

The one on his knees spoke reverently. "Oh great Hive Queen, we are but humble drones upon your gracious might and splendor and it is a joyous day indeed that you have chosen to bless this city with your Holy warmth. Oh Holy Queen, highest and warmest of the earthly gods, it is our great pleasure to introduce to you we few Children of your humble Hive."

... Holy Queen? Hive? What? Toki looked flummoxed, and rightfully so, her hands tightening in Papyrus' shirt.

Aliquam made a face of confusion and pulled Toki a little closer, his right eye having lit up to pulse with orange magic as he watched those around them, feeling quite... surrounded... and now that he had his leg back, it was far more possible for him to fight to protect his wife.

"What the hell are you talking about?" He growled quietly.

Several more went down on their knees before the duo. The same man continued speaking. "Oh please, we beg your most deepest pardons and forgiveness for our blunder. We know much about you and have heard much about you, but I'm afraid there aren't many who know about us. We are the Children Of The Hive, high Holy Consort, and we beg your forgiveness for frightening you. We would never bring harm to you or our Holy Matron."

"C... Children of the hive?" Toki asked, unsure. "It's... Nice to meet you. And no offense was taken, please, don't worry. We're just understandably wary after everything that's happened."

"Holy Consort?" Aliquam questioned, sounding offended just slightly.

The slight offense was taken into consideration, and the Children Of The Hive prostrated themselves flatter on the ground. "We don't mean any offense to the Holy Queen's most beloved mate. Please, if there is a title you would prefer, simply state and it would be our honor to oblige. What keeps you happy keeps her High Holiness happy."

Toki stared at the... The cultists in something between muted horror and fascination. "We... Have a cult." She whispered very softly, so only her husband could hear her words.

"No... You have a cult. And it's a big one..." he whispered back, before he lifted his head, "so... Besides stalking us to the point where I need to emphasize the usefulness of keeping your distance, what do you guys want?"

Toki really didn't want to believe she had a cult- but lo and behold, he was basically rubbing her face into the truth. Toki had a cult- and they were big.

"We wish to worship at the feet of the most powerful and Holy, the Queen Bee, the Holy Matron whom possesses a mother's love." He whispered in complete and utter reverence. "We wish to bathe in her holy warmth, to feel her might and magic, to hear her words and obey and to protect she who lives a thousand lifetimes."

And they were fanatics apparently, Toki was realizing with a slow draw of something akin to horror.

Aliquam was extremely unsure about all of this but scowled, "Toki is too humble for all of this. If you want to revere her, praise her from where you stand on your own feet, and from at least six feet away." He warned.

"Is that true?" Another member- a woman- whispered.

"Y-yes." Toki mumbled a little louder. "Please- stand. There's no need to bow like that. No need at all."

There was a hushed murmur that went through the crowd, before those who were almost pasted to the cement began to rise. Obligingly, they moved back from the hospital entrance and gave Toki and Papyrus their personal space.

Toki swallowed. Dear lord, how much weight did her word carry with these people? She exhaled gently, and she glanced between the cultists. The Children Of The Hive were... Watching her almost eagerly. Something struck her from the previous sentence, and Toki cocked her head slightly, her mane ruffling.

"Who told you I live a thousand lifetimes?" She inquires very gently of them.

"We inquired those who experienced your presence, whether it be merciful or those who suffered your wrath. One such shamed one, a soldier who took a very unpleasant swim was close to you when you unleashed your wrath and ripped a hole in the sky." Another of the.. cultists ... answered her question.

Dear gods, that was so unnerving.

"We inquired those who experienced your presence, whether it be merciful or those who suffered your wrath. One such shamed one, a soldier who took a very unpleasant swim was close to you when you unleashed your wrath and ripped a hole in the sky." Another of the.. cultists ... answered her question.

Dear gods, that was so unnerving.

"We’ve also talked to one such woman who fell from the grace of His Darkness.” One of the first men answered her. “She knew that as a complete Holy One, you would be reborn again and again, and time and time again we would be tasked with finding you and securing your safety and true happiness and returning you to where you most long to be, and make sure that generations to come know of your holy word.”

Toki paused at that. One who fell from the grace of ‘his darkness’? Were they talking about the Void? Fuck all if they were. This could get… interesting in a bad way.

"I think they're talking about Simmons." Aliquam whispered to Toki, thankful they at least backed off enough for him to feel safe with letting go of Toki.

“I don’t think so. They said a woman.” Toki muttered. It couldn’t be Simmons- Simmons had very clearly been a man, until he decided he was more comfortable shedding the coat of cruelty and becoming bitter but gentle Sequoia. “I don’t have any of Simmon’s memories regarding them either. They’re new to me.” She says softly to her husband.

The Children shuffle restlessly, their gazes watching the duo with reverence and awe. “And… Do you have word for us, oh Holy One?” The first man asked gently, clearly trying not to sound too eager.

Word…? Oh fuck- fuckity fuck, fuck, he meant a commandment. Like a god. Because they thought she was their ‘Holy Matron’.

_Fuck._

Toki pulled on the part of her that could now bluff with the best of them at poker, when she never could before, and she nodded softly. Her eye lights sparkled with a thought- this could mark a big change in the world, perhaps. “My first holy word,” God that _skeevved_ her out so hard, but better to give good direction than to have fanatics hyper-focus on something bad and do bad things in her name, “is to always look to Kindness as the first option- be it extending a hand of kindness to someone being harsh to you, or simply helping someone in need. The world needs more kindness in it- I would not condone the acts of those who seek to spread more hate and cruelty in the world. Kindness first- always.”

Toki glanced to Aliquam, hoping he approved. Telling cultists ‘hey no, I'm no god go away’ never ended well in all stereotypical situations- but if she could make the best of it, and make them warriors of kindness and good in her name… Well, why not make the world a little better of a place?

He had a look on his face that was kinda unreadable, consisting mostly of confusion and concern, but he wasn’t sure if he could actually comment on this... so he just nodded slowly.

“Always look to kindness as the first option.” He repeated with reverence, and they all bowed as one. “Thank you for your wisdom, oh Holy One!” The whole of them chorused. “We’ll make sure to spread this between all of the other Children. Are there any other words to spread today?”

“Not today,” Toki said slowly, because fuck how was this actually a thing. “Practice the first… word… and we'll see if you all are worthy of the second word. Now… If we may? My husband and I have some things we need to get done…” They needed a car and they needed food, and fuck they needed to talk about all of this like holy shit.

Aliquam wasn't sure how to take this but on the mention of leaving, he took Toki's hand and gave a small pull. "Come on." He murmured.

The Children Of The Hive parted like butter to a hot knife, and opened the way for them to continue down the sidewalk. "Be safe, Holy One, and enjoy this most amazing and momentous day."

Toki and Papyrus were let out without any fuss, and weren't followed- that Toki could see, anyway- by any of the Children Of The Hive.

Once they were well on their way to walking to the car dealership, Toki gave her husband a confused as hell look. "I have a cult. Why on earth do I have a cult?"
"Because you're powerful, you're influential... and you're dangerous." He answered. "They believe in your power... sadly in an omnipotent manner, which means they're slightly extremist but... hopefully not in a malicious manner..."

Her soul sunk a little when he called her dangerous. She was, there was absolutely no doubt about that- Toki just didn’t like to admit it or think about it a good grand portion of the time. She liked to think herself no different than him- when in reality, the difference in their powers was like looking at a Great Dane and a Pomeranian.

“I was hoping to curb them from being malicious by giving them that... well, ‘word’. Kindness above all. The world would be a better place if people were kinder to each other.” She shakes her head, and links her arms around his waist, letting his arm rest over her shoulder. Toki shivers, her mane falling flat as they crunch over mushy half-frozen sidewalks.

"If we're lucky, they'll take your advice as you meant to deliver it." Aliquam rubbed the back of his head before he sighed gently and pulled Toki close. "Come on, let's put it off our minds... we have an important task at hand, do we not?" He hummed.

Toki took a deep inhale of his scent, and then exhaled happily and nuzzled into him. “You’re right. We can ponder it later. We do have a task at hand- a car! And lunch, before I devour you.” She playfully mouthed at his bicep. “So, what color car do you want?"

Aliquam bit back a retort that would fluster his beloved, but give an amused smile as he pondered out loud at her words. "A good question; now just what kind of color do you think we'll find? I'm thinking a mellow blue color, or if we're lucky, we could find an orange one, yes?" He suggested with a soft laugh.

She laughed and tucked her head against his shoulder. "Orange would make it easy to see and find in the parking lot, but I'm thinking something more mellow. Blue would be good, or a red."

" Ooh, red ... " He agreed happily.

"Red is lovely." She agrees. "Anything but baby poop green." She grins.

"Or baby puke yellow." He countered, "Or banana yellow."

Toki laughed. "We're going to jinx us." She tells him. "Oh god. Neon, eye searing pink. Not even the nice pink, but the kind of pink that makes people stop, stare, and go ' dear god why'."

" Dear god why !" He laughed gently as he shook his head.

The duo continued to jest and laugh until they made it to the first car dealership they could come across, Aliquam looking around as they arrived.

The dealership was... Well, loaded with cars. Most of them were high end sports cars with four seats- some of them having only two seats. They came in a rainbow of colors, from banana yellow, to valentine red.

Toki perused the colors, and found her brows arching. "Most of these are coffins on wheels. If you got in a wreck, you'd be history." She shakes her head with a sigh. "I think they've got the vans in the back."

"Fancy" Aliquam snorted, before he started towards the back lot with his wife; though his gaze panned backwards just slightly as they passed a bright red sports car. "..." Nope. Van. Van was more important. And with that thought, he turned forward again.
Toki watched his gaze get lost on the sports car, and she paused, her teeth working against each other. "We've already got a nice car, Pap." She says gently. "If you want, we can trade that in for something sportier so you can enjoy it while we've got the other one for the kids...?"

Toki wanted him to be happy too- and he liked fancy cars.

"Mmmh..." He made another face before he gave her a squeeze. "No, darling... I'll be okay." He told her sweetly.

"Are you sure?" She leaned into him and looked up at his face. "You only live once- and I want you to have everything you've dreamed of. If you want a sports car, I don't mind... well, getting one for you."

"Mmh... perhaps later on." He hummed, before he clacked her head. "Let's focus on getting a lovely vehicle for our future litters and we can fuss about my personal wants later."

Toki laughs warmly and nods. “Okay.” She leans up and changes his head-kiss into a full kiss, before tugging him back to the vans. “So, it looks like they have mini-vans and full sized vans. As much as I’d prefer to get a mini-van, I’m thinking an actual van will be better given how large our children are going to be, and how large the litters are going to probably be. Not even taking into accounting if we take your siblings out to town for anything.”

The vans came in a variety of glimmering colors- blues, greens, oranges, yellows, flesh colors, blacks and grays, and a few, rarer, glittering red colors. They had a true rainbow of colors to look at.

He nodded in agreement though his scanning gaze across the lot was stopped short as he saw something that just called to him. Letting Toki go, he ran ahead before he stopped at a large, bright red van. "Ooohh!" The sound he made was adorable, and in the same it sang just how he already found what they had been looking for.

It didn’t take Toki long to catch up, and she laughed when she spotted it. Dear lord, she’d say good-bye to ever parking close to anywhere again. But if he was happy, that would make her happy. She walked to the door and slid it open, taking a peek inside. She whistled appreciatively. “Fifteen passenger. Niiiice choice, Papy!” She praised warmly. “You giving me a hint on how many kids we’re gonna have?” She grins cheekily.

"Maybe~" He winked at her before giving a cheeky 'nyeh heh heh heh!' "It probably won’t be the most efficient, but then again if we kept my car that wouldn’t be a problem, now would it?"

Toki laughed and flushed. Good lord- of course he’d wink at her. “It’s going to be a gas guzzler for sure- but so long as I keep up work with how it is, and you keep your work, we’ll be okay.” She straightened and grinned at him. “I think this is it- it’s like trying on clothes. You’ll always go back to your first choice. So- shall we go get this started?” She inquires lightly. “And then drive to lunch instead of walking like high-schoolers?"

"Absolutely!" He agreed, going to find the nearest salesman while Toki babysat the vehicle.
Their new ride was bright red and paid in full, and after picking up some delicious lunch as well as a few little tits and tats to keep Toki's hands busy, she and Aliquam were on their way home.

"Now, this birthday is already gonna be better than the last now that you've come back, so now all that's left is how we will be able to make it great from start to finish... I was thinking we start the morning with some chocolate chip pancakes." Aliquam had started the conversation off.

“Chocolate chip pancakes?” She blinks over to him curiously. “That’s a good idea. They adore them! I’m thinking also a home-made cake for them. My Grandma- my biological dad’s mother, that is- taught me how to make the most delicious confetti vanilla cake.” She gives him a grin. “And I can make them some home-made candy too.”

She still remembered how to make candy from doing it so often with Tenne to sell at the Saturday Market.

"Oooo. Good stuff." He agreed. "Perhaps spend all morning doing what Honey wants, maybe go to Grillby's for lunch? And then spend the afternoon doing what Skylar wants, have dinner, then spend the rest of the night gaming and give them their gifts?" He suggested.

Toki nods slowly. “Perhaps all but one of their gifts?” She suggests gently. “I think everyone kind of wants to celebrate their birthday this time. Maybe have their actual birthday with us, and the day after we can do it with everyone else after-hours down at Grillby’s?”

"Ooh! A great idea!” He agreed, before he grinned. "All but one, huh? That one gift's gonna have to be killer; I'm looking forward to seeing their reactions to your amazing gift- I'm sure it’s one of those worth it's own time of giving type of gifts.”

Toki gave a soft laugh, and shifted to prop her feet up on the dash. She reclined in the seat with a delighted sigh. “It’s not really a killer. You know all the knitting I’ve done while nursing your siblings?” She hums softly. “Well, I was making scarfs- a little red one for Honey, like what you wear, and a little green one for Skylar, so it’ll match my mane.” She glances to him and twiddles her thumbs. “I know they’re young, so clothes are probably not high on their list of things they’ll like… but do you think they might like them?”

She wanted to give them something home made and meaningful- she hadn’t been there for the first one, and damn it, she wanted to make the second one count.

He smiled happily. "Oh Toki, that's a wonderful gift! I have absolutely no doubt at all that they're going to love them; they’re hand-made and from their Momma. I don't see how they could be any more perfect." He praised wholeheartedly.
Toki beamed at that. Of course they'd love them—her children were bright and sweet and kind and amazing and she loved them oh so very much...

She lifted one of her secondary hands and let her skull rest in it. Her head was starting to feel fuzzy. Kinda achy, like it got before a bad storm. Blegh, another snow-storm would probably hit soon. They'd have to go dig out the porch again.

"I'm okay saying that they're from us, you know." Toki says warmly. "Can you imagine Honey's face if she got a scarf from her daddy that looked like a hand-made version of his? I'm pretty sure she'll deafen us with her shriek."

"She always was a little daddy's girl." He cooed happily, before he glanced over at her, his hand shifting grip on the steering wheel as they coasted smoothly along the road. "Hey, are you okay?" He asked gently, concern in his tone. "You're holding your head like you just got a throbbing headache."

“I did get one.” She laughs softly. “I’m alright though, love, don’t worry. Honestly, my head’s hurt worse before from some of our shenanigans.” She cocks her head to the side, and wiggles her brow ridges at him with a wink. Let him get a flush out of that.

He gave a giggle as his cheeks darkened slightly. "Oh Toki, behave my love, lest we want to break in how well this new vehicle absorbs motion-shock." He purred as he winked back.

Toki’s grin grew wider and more mischievous as her head ached more. “I dunno,” She grinned, and her gaze slid right out the window. She watched the trees pass by for a moment. “It might be day light now, but this stretch of road looks awfully familiar, doesn’t it? Last time we were here, I think we tested out the shock absorption of the pine needles right there under those trees, didn’t we~?” She teased as she pointed out the window.

He laughed at that, going to look out the window by her, but his laugh cut short in his throat, his amused look slowly fading to a look of horror as he saw that which was happening to his beloved wife. "T-Toki...?"

His laugh cutting off cued her in to something being wrong. She turned to look at him, her eyes flicking over him with worry. “Papy?” Her voice didn’t sound right- it sounded… like a television tuned to the wrong channel. “What’s wrong?”

"Toki... you're fading out!" He whined as his foot lifted from the gas, steadily allowing the van to drift to a less lurching stop. "You're disappearing again!" He had reached out to try and grasp her, but she had disappeared right before he could lay his hand on her shoulder.

"TOKI!"

One moment, she was staring into her husband’s panicked face after having been joking with him— and the next, she was dragged through the heavy darkness that was undeniably the Void. She had no true warning, no true heads up—she wasn’t even sleeping this time. She was conscious and aware and now she was taken. Again.

Toki landed on her hands and knees on a surprisingly flat surface, on a surprisingly solid surface. The void wasn’t trying to tear her apart, or anything of that sort— but… Frankly, she wasn’t sure what she was doing here. Wasn’t she not supposed to see it again? Like… Ever?
She glanced up- and there, out of the darkness, she could vaguely see Phase.

Toki bristled. “What am I doing here?” She demands, her voice upset. “You can’t- you can’t take me again.” Not again- she couldn’t miss another birthday, another almost year of her children’s lives.

"I am afraid you were summoned by the Void." The masked creature’s reply was spoken on a quiet voice, the servant slowly coming closer before he offered a pale hand to her to help her up. "I am afraid I cannot allow you to return home until It is sated."

“Tut tut, Phase, speaking so coldly of your master. 'Until it is sated’, indeed... Do you compare me to a beast?”

"No, My master... My intentions were-GHAAHH!" A pain filled shriek came from the form standing above Toki before he promptly fell to her level, gripping his head tightly as the space around them took a sick pleasure in punishing him for his poor wording.

“Not a word... Away with you, lowly worm. I have words to exchange with our guest.”

Toki set a brief hand on Phase, but ultimately she glared up at the void. “You didn’t need to do that.” She says. “You’re being petty.” She glares at him a moment more for ruining her day with Papyrus, and then Toki feels her shoulders slump, and the air drives from her non-existent lungs. She wasn’t sure she had it in her to play the Void’s mind games. “What do you want, Void? What could you possibly want with me now?”

The Void wanted until Phase got up and disappeared before it spoke up again. “Well, dear Toki. I was bored. And I had a thought that we hadn't visited your lovely family in quite a while... So I thought about taking a peek, and realized that perhaps you missed them~ That you’d like to see how your lovely little family was doing, and so I consulted Phase and he brought you to me so that you could be here to see~” There was a catch, it was clear in the voice of the realm around her.

There was a catch, and if anything said anything about this... it wasn't a good one.

The catch would be huge, but Toki had no idea what it was. She cocks her head at him, green eyes leering warily. “I’m not omnipotent to the extent that you are, Void- I see through dreams, not through whatever it is you’re planning on trying to show me. And I’ve been with my family- I saw them just this morning.”

Unless it- it meant- oh god, did it mean to- “Unless you mean Tenne.” She continues, trying for an unflappable visage and most likely failing. “Last I saw, he and Sequoia were expecting a litter and doing just fine.”

Phase had even helped her give Quinn one of her summons.

"Ah, that was quite a while ago, no? Four years since you saw them last, if I do recall. And you think all stayed as it was before? Tut tut, so naive...” The Void was chuckling around her. "Well then, why don't we see what you've missed... Phase?"

Phase slowly reappeared before he nodded and extended a hand to Toki.

Toki didn’t immediately reach for him. She felt herself pale, her bones blanching whiter. “What?” She rasps. “Four years? But... I’ve only been home for... eight months? How could four years have passed there? I was gone from Aliquam for six months and it was only two years when I was with Tenne.

Time wasn’t fluid between the worlds, however- and she had a feeling the Void could hit ‘fast-forward’ whenever it wanted to.

Her gaze slid to Phase, hoping, a silent plea as she lifted her primary hand to take his, that the Void hadn’t let anything truly horrible happen to Tenne and Sequoia.

Phase looked down in apology as he took her hand and without warning she was pulled to a new sight.

It was Tenne, her wonderful Tenne, and her darling boys, Kai and Quinn. They were older now, starting to mature, and for a moment she yearned to reach out and cry out for them in hopes for them to hear her.

At least until she took another look.

Curled up in Tenne's arm was a small form- a fuzzy moth looking creature who's eyes were closed, her mouth occupied by an ear of what looked to be a cotton-stuffed dog plush toy. Tenne had a quiet, doleful look on his face as he looked upon a slab of stone, one that gleamed with the relative youth of it’s craftsmanship.

Toki found her gaze wandering over the clearing. She recognized it- the new slab of stone was alongside the stone that marked the one they used for her ‘memorial’ here. But… The new stone- it had more than just one name on it. Why was Tenne here alone with the boys and a baby cream and tan moth beast?

Where was Sequoia?

Toki’s soul sank in her chest, and she stepped away from Phase, moving closer to the pillar of stone to read the words.

However, her eyes locked on the first name and epitaph, and went no further.

Sequoia Gaster, loving mother and mate- died in childbirth in xx08.

Toki felt her soul squeeze with pain in her chest- the five names after were Sequoia’s children. She’d died with her babies, and Tenne and his boys had lost all but one. “He lost her.” She says, her voice tight with pain. It had been eight months since Sequoia had been in her head- and now she was gone forever. “He lost her- how could you both let this happen!? She was supposed to have a happy ending- this is not a happy ending!”

Pain filled her voice- but was that also anger? Yes that was.

Phase didn't reply. His gaze lowered quietly as his hands folded in front of him.

Toki’s chest trembled with upset, and her fists tightened with pain for Tenne- with pain she felt too. She moved, disregarding Phase, and went to Tenne.

She stood next to Tenne, opposite of his sons, and she trembled. She reached out, and her fingers ghosted through the stone. Despite everything that she’d done in her life, Sequoia hadn’t deserved to die like this- no body did, really. Sequoia was just getting to be happy- this wasn’t fair.

Toki slowly turned to look at Tenne, and lifted her secondary hand. She went to touch him, but stopped, knowing her hand would only phase through him. Instead, she ghosted it along the shape of his face. She could see the dark stains on his cheeks from tear marks. He’d spent a lot of time crying in private. “Oh Tenne...” She whispered quietly, wishing he could hear her. “I’m so sorry… I’m so sorry this happened to you and Sequoia and your sons… I’m so, so sorry. If I knew… if I knew this is what would happen when I left...”

"What, you would have stayed behind? Forsaken your own love and children for him?"

Tenne’s form wavered in place, before the vision disappeared, replaced by a shadow of a body who tilted it’s head as they leered down at her.

The form was male in shape and musculature and how he stood, just like the ethereal voice that he spoke with, but it had no visible genitalia visible on the nude body. The shape was tall- taller than her- with muscles not unlike Aliquam’s ectobody. There were eight glowing white eyes lining up and down the gray-shadowed head in place of a properly set face, and the voice seemed to exude from the entire body instead of from a mouth. It had no nose, no mouth.

Toki took only a moment to match the voice to the Void, before she glared at the Void’s revealed form. She crosses her arms, looking up at the large form that stared at her with almost quizzical amusement. “No.” She says firmly. Her mane bristled at him. “I’d have found a way, any way, to take them all home with me, damn whatever you and your ‘one soul’ rules say. I’d have made it work, and I’d have made you make it work.”

"Too bad it would have been in vain to plead and threaten, Nara. You think I would allow a breaking of my law? You’re growing gutsy." He chuckled lowly, rolling his head as he loosely shrugged his shoulders.

“You’ve already cursed me to an eternity to living without my loved ones.” She says flatly. “My curse allows me to be gutsy. There’s nothing worse you can do to me. And believe you me- it might have been in vain, but I wouldn’t have stood idly by.” She flexed her teeth angrily at him. “You might be an omnipotent force, Void, and you might have created us all… But I think, if every one of your creations, every soul in existence, were to unite… We might be able to work together to make you sit up and listen. Maybe, just maybe, that’s what you need to get you off your high horse and realize living beings don’t deserve to be used as experiments in your ant-farms.”

He chuckled lowly at that, before it grew and he threw his head back and roared in laughter. "Does an eagle not hunt and kill rabbits if they demand the bird stop!? Foolish girl, simply because you threaten means naught for your 'goals.' " He sneered.

Toki simply gives him a dark look. “A threat?” She laughs quietly. “That wasn’t a threat. That was something I was musing.” She shakes her head, and then looks at him. “Let me take Tenne and all of his remaining children home with me.” She requests. And then, just because he’d assumed it was a threat, she curled her teeth at him. “Or, I’ll make good on that, and I’ll find a way, any way, to reach every universe you’ve ever made, and we’ll make you listen. Now that was a threat, and a promise.”

He leaned down and leered at her eerily, eyes scrunching up in an unnerving and inhuman way. "I could seal you away... force you into an eternal sleep and force both sides to suffer without their beloved Toki..." He laughed in her face.

"It is against the laws of existence, Tokiko..." Phase spoke up softly. "It is why your counterpart died while you lived in that realm..."

Toki felt her soul sink at the threat. Papyrus would never understand what happened- neither would her children or her family. Tenne would be none-the-wiser to her involvement… But… her children and Papyrus would suffer the most for her pissing off a god.

“You could.” She says evenly, perhaps a tinge of uneasy fear in the glow of her eyes. “You could seal me away from my family, my children, and everything I’ve ever loved. But in an eternal sleep, I wouldn’t feel anything, I would know nothing of it - I wouldn’t suffer. And you? You’d lose any and all entertainment with me.” After all, watching someone in an eternal sleep would be eternally boring. “That’s why you brought me here, isn’t it? You’re... You’re bored. You wanted to be entertained- and shaking up my life, bringing me here, talking to me even though you said I wouldn’t see you again unless I messed up... It’s all entertainment for you. Anything to give you something new to study and to look at, right? Little ants in your ant farm...”

Toki took a deep breath and exhale, trying to steady her nerves. If she pissed him off too hard, she’d be fucked. “I know the rules. But the one who wrote them can un-write them. After all, if you’ve watched any of Honey playing games, you know that sometimes it’s more fun to toss the rules to the wind and make your own.”

What she said seemed to make him think.

The Void being twitched as he leaned back, giving a low growl before the deafening noise mellowed out into a hum. "I suppose you are right... I can only play with so many people before it gets boring... You have proven to be the most fun of your incarnations to play with." He hummed in thought, before he chuckled. "Alright... I will play along. I will bend the rules this once... but... I will not help you if your wishes go awry..." He warned.

There was a sudden sense of relief that washed over her. Play along? “You mean I can take Tenne and the children back with me? And you won’t do anything untoward towards them that’ll make bad things happen?” She asks again, hoping for a clear answer. Awry? She wasn’t even going to comment there. Nothing ever went as planned, but she dealt with it as it happened and she made it work.

"On the contrary, I will bring them to your world exactly as they are... However, I cannot promise the same could be said for you. You have such a soft body, I so greatly take pleasure in remolding it every time you cross my path, dear girl~" He chuckled lowly, before he reached out, caressing her cheek gently with a sharp hand. "You’re such an interesting little plaything... Perhaps I might just steal you after your death, turn you into a servant of my shadows so that I can keep you forever~ It would certainly give Phase a playmate, now wouldn’t it~?"

Some of the relief she had faded away into immediate anxiety as his hand brushed her cheek and made her entire body tingle with discomfort under her clothes. His words were creepy as hell, but commenting on them would do her no good, and would only provoke him more. “Thank you for keeping them in their bodies. I’m... better adept at adapting to my body changing than they would be.”

She hesitated, before offering him a thankful bow, and then turning her gaze to Phase. “You’ll be helping me, I assume...? Am I going to meet them in my world, or...?” Toki hoped she could helped coerce them to come home with her- she didn’t want to just... rip them away. She wanted to give them the choice- and if they said no, well... then she’d respect it.

Phase stepped forward as his master stepped back, and with a small wave of his hand, the scene of her loved ones re-appeared before them. He reached up with a single claw before he pressed and pulled downward.

Almost immediately Tenne took a protective stance over his children and bared his fangs as it seemed it was the portal opening in their world.

"Go first... He will attack if I do..." Phase spoke quietly.

Toki nodded softly. She didn’t even hesitate, before quietly moving to the portal. She didn’t stick her arm out first, on account of the fact she wasn’t too sure Tenne wouldn’t attack if he saw a skeletal arm coming out first anyway.

The first thing she stuck out was her face, her body breathing in a deep breath of air that wasn’t native to her world. Her mane fluffed in the breeze, and the previously dulled colors brightened into reality as she took in the headstones for Sequoia and her likely still-born children, and the monument to herself.

Toki slipped out fully, knowing she probably didn’t look entirely how Tenne remembered her looking- but she knew her mane and her scent was just as distinctive as the flashes of her scar that peeked out between her horns.

Her eyes blinked slowly down at Tenne, and the white and tan baby moth beast in his arms, before glancing over the shell shocked boys staring at her.

She spread all four arms, and stepped one step forward so Phase could join her. "Tenne, Kai, Quinn..." She murmurs softly to them, not sure what else to say beyond their names.

All pairs of eyes landed on her only for none of the owners to react simply due to the pure shock of what they saw before them.

"T-Toki...?" Tenne was the first to break the silence, his gaze not breaking from her even as Phase slowly stepped through the portal to close it behind them.

Kai's eyes were wide, as were Quinn's, but it was Quinn's that were quickly welling up in tears; tears that sent the queen bee upon his shoulder into a distressed humming as she crawled up to his neck and piped to try and bring him comfort, momentarily disregarding her old mistress.

The young moth in Tenne's arm looked up at her with intelligent and curious eyes, but showed no recognition of knowing who she was. The sole survivor of Sequoia's litter was already four years old and living for her lost kin.

Toki caught the tears in Quinn’s eyes, and she dropped down to one knee instinctively, widening her arms in welcoming as her mane plumed for him. He was ten years old by her count now- four when she first met him, six when she left him, and ten now. Gods, she’d missed so much with them- it was like Skylar and Honey all over again, and she could feel her soul weeping for the things she missed.

"It's me," She says, her voice the same motherly tone as they may have remembered it being, “It's really me...” She paused a moment, and then switched languages. She forgot- they spoke English, not her native tongue. “It’s really me. Boys, my boys... I’ve missed you all so much...”

The younger brother hesitated with a quiet whimper, before he sniffled and gave a shrill whimper. "O-Okasan..."

Mother...

Quinn had called her mother... Even after four years, his heart had never moved from where it felt about her.

He slowly stepped closer before he pressed himself into her body, barely able to believe the shocking truth that was her warmth and scent now against his body. He was soon accompanied by Kai as he joined in on the hug.

Now all that remained was Tenne, who seemed to need a moment longer to completely grasp how his mate was once more right in front of him.

Toki’s secondary arms collected both boys close, and she held them tight, even as they towered over her in her crouched position. She slowly shifted to stand, and held them firmly to her, her mane pluming out as her wings gave a soft, tender buzz. “Oh my boys…” The near perfect pronunciation of calling her mother in her native tongue had warmed her heart.

They had learned- they had learned her tongue. How, she didn’t know, but at least Quinn knew it.

“I love you so much,” Toki can’t help the soft murmur to them both in her mother-tongue as she presses closed mouthed kisses on top of their skulls, her sockets closing as she cradled them firmly to her.

Her gaze slowly slid up to Tenne, and she lifted her head to offer a hand to him hesitantly. He hadn’t come to her immediately- perhaps he had moved on… If he had… If he had, she would respect it. “Tenne… There’s much I need to talk to you about, and I don’t know how much time I have to do it…”

Tenne took a moment to snap out of it but as he locked his gaze on her hand, he slowly stepped closer and his fingers ghosted over hers. "Toki..." He breathed again, before he fell to trembling knees and quickly used his free arm to pull her close, taking in her scent as Quinn did, a scent he quickly aimed to drown himself in.

The boys moved to her side to let Tenne press himself against her middle, her shirt flexing with her invisible ecto-flesh as he inhaled her smell. Toki sighed, her primary hands rubbing softly over his head. She inhaled their smells, imprinting them to her memory just in case he would rather stay there in his world instead of going with her to her world.

As the once-family bonded, Toki took a moment to hold him tight and glance back at Phase. “How long do we have?” She asks, worried that she won’t get to ask him, before they got ripped away again.

" I will try to give you as much time as possible. " Phase answered quietly as he stepped to the side, folding his hands together as he waited.

"Toki... You were torn away so quickly... I'm so happy to see you again." Tenne spoke quietly into her belly. "It's been so long... I missed you…"

"I missed you too.” She says softly. “It’s been four years here, hasn’t it? Or four years and some change,” She glanced down to the roughly four year old pup in his arms. “It’s only been… less than a year in my world.” Her hands rubbed over his head, and then her fingers tangled in his mane, her bones cushioning so they didn’t pinch and pull his sensitive locks. “Gods, so much has happened… But… we’ll have time to catch up. Plenty of time."

He leaned back just slightly and sighed quietly. "I wouldn't be sure where to start beyond... well...” He looked to the young mothling who had reached out and hooked a few locks of green fur into her felt-covered fingers. "This is Willow…"

Toki knelt down so Willow could better hold her fur- and brought the boys down with her, leaving her face to face with Tenne in a cuddle pile almost. “Hi there, Willow…” Toki smiled at her warmly.
"It’s nice to meet you, Willow. You look so much like your Momma did- I knew her well, and you’re just as pretty as she was, if not more.” She lifted a finger, offering it to the little multi-armed mothling as Toki’s fur was gently handled by felt-lined fingers.

Willow blinked slowly before she reached up and pressed her fingers onto Toki’s mouth, her ruby eyes gleaming gently as she watched her for a moment, before she gave a small smile. "You’ve got Momma’s magic." If she didn’t have Toki’s immediate attention, her words might have ended up overheard from her speaking so quietly.

Her words were almost a whisper. Toki almost didn’t hear her, and she was directly listening to her. Toki smiled against the velvety fingers pressed to her teeth, and she offered them the tenderest of kisses. “Your Momma and I were very close, once. When you’re older and think you’re ready, your Daddy and I can tell you the story, yeah?” She smiles to her warmly.

Willow slowly nodded at Toki’s words before she gave a soft squeak and Tenne put her down to go hug her brothers’ legs as he gave Toki another embrace. "Oh Toki..." Her name was said upon a soft sigh but with many things to say dredging behind it... Tenne knew they had to talk, he knew that he was on borrowed time... but he just wanted to keep holding her.

Her emerald gaze slide to Tenne, and she leaned into his embrace as best she could with the boys not letting go, and Quinn actively weeping into her side. “Phase said he would try to give us time, but I don’t know how long that will be.” She says softly. “I need to ask you something, Tenne- something very important.” She drops a hand to gently pet Willow’s head as the little female hugs Kai’s leg and clings there.

"Ask... whatever it is... just tell me." He responded quickly, almost a plea, knowing that indeed Phase could just steal her away again and leave him with nothing.

She did as asked, lifting one hand from his body up to cup his cheek, her skeletal fingers brushing over his skin tenderly. “Do you want to come with me?” She asks. “You and the children. All three of them. All four of you can come with me to my world- you don’t have to be alone.”

He sighed softly at her touch before he slowly opened his eyes to look at her skeletal hand. She’d had flesh before. "C-come with you..." He repeated quietly, before he kissed her palm. Damn if she had flesh before- this was Toki, his Toki, his mate. He didn’t care if she had bones, flesh, feathers, or scales- she’d be her no matter what form she took. "I... I don’t know... Would we be welcome? Do you not have a lover in your own world?” He asked.

Toki nods softly, and lets her hand stroke his cheek gently. “I do have one.” She says gently. “Though he’s not a lover. Papyrus is my first mate and my husband.” She cups his cheek gently, and exhales softly. “Insectis Queen Bees take more than one mate on the norm- Dear and I consider you both our mates. You’re both dear to our heart. However... You would be more than welcome in our world and in our home.”

He watched her as she spoke, though was unsure as he considered the full scope of her words. Slowly he leaned back, away from her hand, and he turned to set his hand where her warmth sat moments ago. "... Will we change?" He asked quietly. "If we go, will our forms change like yours?"

“No.” She shakes her head. “You four will be just as you are. I secured that so you’d never have to go through what I did- but... I may change again.” She takes the hand he’d pulled away from, and rubs it quietly against her jaw. “I’m... I’m more used to the dysphoria that comes with each time the void changes me.”

"..." His gaze flitted up towards Phase, who kept his own gaze away as his head stayed low. "And we can trust him to deliver us safely?" Tenne asked in a little softer tone. "I do not want to risk the safety of my children."

Toki looked at Phase and nodded quietly. "Phase is kinder than you think." Her primary left hand lifted, and she let her wedding band glint in the light. "He got me my wedding ring back, and when he handled me prior, he's been very gentle with me. He wouldn't harm you or the children."

Toki glanced back to Tenne and then gently clasped her hands in front of her, no longer touching the children that clung to her. "Tenne..." She says quietly. "If you don't want to go... You're not... You don't have to. But this is, I think, a one time only offer. I'm not going to get to come back and ask you again."

And that clearly said she couldn't stay either.

"Dad-" Kai's grip tightened on her shirt. "Dad- Momma can't go again. Please. We lost her once, and we lost... We lost Mom too..." They'd lost both their mothers. His eldest son was pleading to not make them lose their first mother again. "Please, we can't split up again..." His tail curled low between his bent knees, almost trying to coil around his mother's leg.

He hadn't been as much a Momma's boy as Quinn had been, but she was still the first mother he imprinted on and he loved her.

Tenne never felt the silence be as heavy as it was now. Kai's voice was like a knife in his heart.

"O-Oh my darling sons..." He whispers, before he lowered his head to press it into Toki's fur, taking another deep breath of her scent before he leaned back to look at her... He looked so conflicted...

Toki lifted a hand to stroke his face tenderly. "I can't tell you everything will be alright if you go or you stay." She says quietly. "All I know is, staying is just as uncertain a future as going. But going... We can face those uncertainties together as a pack and a family."

Her husband would need to work with her on this, but... She couldn't leave them here to suffer. She knew personally what happened to a beast that had lost their mate.

Tenne had helped piece her back together again, after all.

"As a pack... and a family." He sighed quietly, before he leaned into her hand, a slow smile growing on his face, before he rested his hand over hers, holding it gently before he spoke again. "Toki... I cannot cope losing you again, nor can my sons... Please take us with you..."

"Please don't leave us, Momma..." Quinn whined gently as he held onto her.

"Okay... Okay." Toki smiled softly. She leaned her head forward and nuzzled the crown of Tenne's head, before she let loose a shaky sigh of relief. Her hands stroked her boys heads, and she even gave little Willow a gentle touch. "Okay. You're gonna come home with me. Ah..." She glances at Phase and moves to stand up, pulling everyone to their feet with her. "Can they take anything with them? Or is this a 'come as you are' situation?"

"I am afraid all must be left behind beyond the clothes on your back..." Phase answered, shortly before a shrill whine got his attention.

Quinn was hugging his pet hornet as he whined, glaring up at Phase. "I'm not gonna leave Kiko!" The bee he cradled in his hands... It was understandable that he would refuse to leave her behind.

"Ah..." Phase tilted his head before he came closer and extended his hand to Quinn. "Let me see Expectantly, Quinn hesitated as he held his beloved bee close, but a reassuring glance from his mother had him slowly offering the bee up to the unnerving being.

Very carefully, Phase collected the bee in his hands, gently wrapping his hands around her before she was sealed in a bubble. He then held it back to Quinn, "Keep her close... She will stay with you during the travel..."

"Th-Thank you." Quinn looked down at the bubbled bee as Phase rose and he turned, lifting his hand and forming another portal.

"Let us be off..."

Toki paused a moment before immediately walking off. She stooped down and gently picked up Willow, so the pup wouldn't be scrambling to keep up. Willow was so small Toki could carry her in one arm.

Toki then glanced to the gravestone for Sequoia, and felt her soul throb. "I'm sorry, my sister." She says softly. "I'm sorry this happened to you. You didn't deserve that final punishment. But you're at peace now. Rest, and let me take care of everything now. I'll keep them safe."

Having said her goodbyes, Toki gently handed Willow to Tenne, and then took his free hand in hers, before her other hands were claimed by the boys.

Having four hands had it's perks, frankly. She still had one primary arm free to give Phase a thankful motion, as she guided the group to the portal... And then through it, into the never-ending darkness.

"Don't be afraid." She says to them, knowing they likely can't see her, but can feel her. She tightened her grip. "I've got you. It'll be okay."

Tenne gave an uneasy growl as his eyes struggled to adjust to the pure darkness around them, while Willow began to whimper as she held closer to her father.

"I don't like this... it's too dark..." Kai said quietly, holding tightly onto Toki's hand.

“I know.” Toki’s voice was a soothing echo in the dark. Her body twitched, and she stuttered a step with a grimace. “But it’ll be okay. Just hold tight to me, sweet ones. I won’t let anything happen to you.”

There was a rumble from the darkness around them that didn’t sound pleasant.

Toki cocked her head. “Isn’t that right, Void?” She prompts. “Nothing will happen to them, just like you promised.”

There was silence in reply, before a low hum rose from the darkness around them.

Without warning, Phase’s grip suddenly appeared and tightened, and he pulled her hard in the direction away from the others. It took her from Kai and Tenne, but Quinn had been on the same side as Phase and had held on tight enough to be the one remainder.

Upon realizing what happened, the tween quickly made to pull Toki away from Phase, which was a success as the servant released her upon being bitten by the angry youngling. Though as Phase broke away, it came to be revealed just why he did what he did.
The shadows grew heavy around them and began to sink into Toki's feet, climbing up her body until they reached her arms... and then they spread to Quinn... But unlike Toki, Quinn did not have the defense to withstand the sudden attack.

Shadows shot from Toki to Quinn and he shrieked in pain, now unable to let go of his mother's hand as the shadows easily sank into him

"Tsk... What a rebellious little boy~ a strong hand, and a good soul... I can see why you adore him, but I needed him to let go. Sadly, because of him, I might fail to keep my promise..."

For a moment under the crippling darkness, Quinn and Toki were one, his soul racing from the pain and sending beat upon beat of adrenaline flooded magic through the veins of shadow infesting them both. He didn't need much time to flood her with magic, but was given enough time for the void to leave it's mark.

Quinn’s flood of magic was more of a trickle- but his body was overwhelmed by the magic that came from Toki’s body. The void left it’s mark indeed, stretching his magic capacity forcefully as it forcibly worked his body beyond what it was capable of.

His cry of pain wasn’t the only one though- Toki felt like her spine was breaking, and though her grip on him could not be severed, she felt her body go limp as she cried out, pain lancing up and down her back and burning into her chest.

Another scream rose through the shadows, but it was one of rage as Tenne unleashed a blast of energy from his throat, seeking to cut the darkness to find his screaming companions... Though it came to last only seconds as a light shined through a portal as Phase tore it into being "Master, you must remember your promise..."

"Tsk..." Though the sound was of reluctance, the void obliged the words of the servant and the shadows peeled away from Toki and Quinn, allowing them both to either catch themselves or fall to the ground.

Quinn ended up falling to the ground, whining in pain as he yipped and whined for his papa.

Toki hit the ground on all fours, but she scrambled up shortly, yanking Quinn into her arms with a soft rasping gasp. She whipped around, the light of the open portal letting her see Tenne, and she ignored the burning in her chest as she wrapped her hand around his arm. “Come on.” She murmurs to him, her chest burning with every breath under her clothes. It was still dark and hard to see, but she had just enough light and she imagined he could see her too. “Let's go.”

Quinn whimpered loudly while Tenne took a firm grasp of Toki. Kai quickly took hold of her other hand before they entered the portal, falling forward to hit the cold ground of a road.

The same road that Toki and Aliquam had been driving on not long before this whole mess happened.

Speaking of- lo and behold the bright red van right in front of them, with Aliquam sitting in the driver's seat, wearing a panicked look as the Portal closed behind them.

Toki hit the pavement with a grunt, stumbling with an extra weight that she wasn’t used to having there. She exhaled tiredly. “We made it.” She says softly, and then her gaze flicks up to the van. Her shoulders relaxed, and she sighed warmly. There was so much she had to explain… “Papyrus.” She gives him a wave, and stumbles towards the van. “What the…?”
She had a... tail...?

She had a tail. It was long and curling, thick but dainty bone that had tangled itself up with one of her legs. There were no decorations on the end of it—just smooth, tapering bone, ending with a rounded end. She gave a soft huff, and uncurled it with a hand, manually holding it in her hand.

Tenne was sitting near her, one arm over his eyes as he growled quietly; it was suddenly very bright and he was blinded.

"Toki!" Aliquam got out of the Van and quickly went to her side. "Are you okay?! What happened? Who are these monsters?" He asked all his questions before looking up at Tenne, who was finally lowering his hand, and looking at Aliquam with a surprised look.

Toki leaned up to meet Aliquam, gently setting Quinn on his feet before her husband took her into his arms. “I’m okay. I think.” She mumbled softly in answer. “As for what happened—well, the Void got bored I think, and called me for a visit. I’m still not sure what prompted it, but it was for the best.” Toki leaned up and gave her husband a nuzzle, before turning in his arms.

This wasn’t going to be easy to explain... But fuck, lying wasn’t going to work either way.

“Papyrus, I’d like for you to meet my second mate, Tenne, and my adopted sons, Kai, and Quinn, who were my family in the other world.” She says gently. “And then there’s little Willow, who’s new to me too. She’s Sequoia and Tenne’s remaining daughter. Sequoia... Sequoia and the rest of their litter were lost in childbirth.” She grimaces softly. “Tenne, children—this is my first mate and husband, Papyrus Aliquam Gaster.”

Little Willow offered a tiny wave from her Daddy’s arms, her fluffy antenna wiggling softly atop her head.

Aliquam didn't say anything immediately, nor did Tenne.

Quinn was the first to break the silence, giving a shrill whine as he tried to pat or pop the bubble around his beloved bee, "Kiko..." He whined quietly.

Toki's attention immediately switched gears. She pulled away from Aliquam, and leaned down to take the bubble from Quinn. Her gaze paused as she took notice of the clear talons growing out of her finger tips, before she sighed through her teeth and sank her magic infused claws into the dark bubble.

It popped with a little bit of work and the bee came fluttering out. "So, you renamed her Kiko instead of Toki, like me?" Toki observes with warm care for the boy. She pauses. "Quinn. You have a mane..."

Kiko gave a distressed buzz and nearly stung Toki until Quinn reached out and collected her in his hands, holding her close with a happy sound as he pet her into passivity. Though upon Toki's observation, he looked up at her with a soft sound. "I-I do?" He asked quietly, his free hand going up to feel his neck to discover a light layer of orange fur, more than just baby fuzz, but not yet a mane as lustrous as his Father's. "Ah... I-I do...!"

"How..." Tenne then spoke up, his own mane ruffling up as he went to Quinn's side, sniffing his neck and nuzzling him worriedly. "You're growing a mane so early on... what caused this?" He asked.

Aliquam watched quietly until his eye was caught elsewhere, specifically, Kai getting up to pat himself off before going to examine the taller skeleton.
Kai's gaze was calm as he looked up at Aliquam, before giving a quiet sound and he held up a hand, though what then came out of his mouth was not the English they spoke normally in their own world, rather a polite, albeit first-timer Japanese. "Nice to meet you."

Such politeness totally surprised Aliquam, but he smiled and slowly reached down to take the offered hand, giving it a firm shake. "Well met."

Toki had watched Kai and Papyrus interact, and she made a soft, pleased sound when her husband greeted the younger boy warmly. Everyone was doing good with language assimilation as well—though her other-world family was, well... heavily accented. They were understandable however. Her gaze then turned back to her second mate, and she reached out to run her fingers gently through Quinn's mane.

“I think his mane is my fault.” She says very gently, apology growing heavy in her voice. She’d said they wouldn’t change- and her sweet little Momma’s boy was the one who paid the price. “When we got separated, Quinn held on to me, and... Well, the Void briefly connected us.” She turned her back, and swished her new tail at them. “I think I got this from Quinn.”

Not to mention the fact that her shirt was now... fuller. Much fuller.

“I don’t mind.” Quinn chirps softly, his fingers rubbing through his mane. He blinked up at Toki, and withstood his father’s worried sniffing. “It’s a mane like Momma’s mane- fluffy and soft. I don’t mind at all. And now Momma has a tail! It’s a long tail- I think it’s pretty.”

He didn’t seem to notice the new shape to her torso, but he was little and that was his mother- why would he?

Toki smiled back at her boy. “Well, thank you.”

“Your mane is different...” Kai says quietly.

Her smile fades, and she lifts a hand to her mane. “What?”

The luscious green of her mane had been tipped in black- like the void was slowly tainting her colors and fading them darker and darker.

Aliquam stepped over to Toki and knelt to check her over, his fingers slowly delving into her fur. "Black tips.... my..." He sighed, before he stood and kissed her head. "As long as you're okay... I don't care..." He sighed quietly.

“I’m okay.” Toki assured him, leaning up to kiss his cheek. “I promise, I’m okay.”

Quinn’s gaze flicked between the two of them, and he gave a soft tug to one of her hands. “Momma?” He says softly, tucking Kiko onto his shoulder and nuzzling her softly. “This is your home?”

“Well, not my home, I don’t live in the middle of a road.” She laughs. “But my world.” She smiles at him, and rubs his hand with her thumb. She lifts her gaze, and gives Aliquam a lopsided smile. “Good thing we got a van today, huh?” She jokes, silently hoping that he wasn’t going to be completely angry with her over her bringing them to their world.

Aliquam gave a shaky chuckle in reply before he straightened up and helped Toki make sure she was completely dusted off from her trip into the void. "Yeah, good thing... Come on..." He answered quietly, before looking at Tenne. "If you'd like a lift, we've got room. We don't have any child seats though so you may want to hold onto your little one."
"That will be alright." Tenne gave a small smile before he looked to his boys. "Come along you two. We can celebrate our reunion once we make it to Toki's home." He told them.

"Yay!" Quinn beamed. "We’re gonna get to see Momma’s home!" He smooshed his mother’s hand, and then bounced towards the car, prying open the back door so his Father and brother could climb in with him.

Kai was quick to join him, working on getting comfortable in one of the back seats. "Why don’t you sit behind Mom and her Papyrus?" He chirps softly.

Toki watched the four monsters work on getting into the back of the van, and she gently took Aliquam’s hand in hers. “Hey...” She says softly, and looks at him. “I know this is a lot... But I couldn’t... I couldn’t leave him there. He lost Sequoia too- I think she died having their litter... I know what it’s like to have your soul feel like it’s lost a mate- and I couldn’t leave him there.”

Her bottomless kindness was showing again, it would seem.

He gave her hand a gentle squeeze and gave a weak sigh. "I carry no ill will... but I fear what will happen when he meets Father..." He told her quietly. "He is the father of the pups... isn't he...?"

"He is." She leaned into him with a sigh, her tail curling around his ankle without her noticing. "And... He does still love me, Aliquam. I think, anyway. I know the boys still do... But yes. He’s the father of the pups. That’s... something we’ll cross when we get home. I’ll pull him aside and talk to him- we gave them to your father, who couldn’t have pups of his own with his mate. I’m hoping he doesn’t have a problem with it, but there’s not much to be done if he does. The pups are imprinted.”

"Indeed, no matter what is said to them, they’d only know Tenebris and Asgore... I will be ready to stand between them if I end up needing to..." He felt her tail on his ankle but smiled gently, finding himself enjoying the new appendage as much as anyone else. "Heh... I like your tail..." He cooed quietly as he then let her go, giving a small gesture to start back for the car. "It reminds me of Father's, without the blade of course, but you know what I mean.

Toki hoped they didn’t have to step between Tenebris and Tenne. Tenebris would probably kill Tenne by accident given the power differences of the world...

She took his hand and led him for the car. “You really like my tail?” She had to lean on him a little. Okay, a lot. Her balance was off with the tail, and she wasn’t used to using it for keeping herself balanced. Toki would need to relearn how to walk, and likely how to fly- though Dear was trickling information into the back of her mind that would help her.

Dear had been quiet since the birth of the pups, and handing them over- but one couldn’t coax a beast to talk if she didn’t want to.

“I kinda like it too. It’s... Different. Same with the talons.” She wiggled her fingers. “I like them too. I can ‘paint my nails’ again. Though my tail feels kinda bare being as long as it is without anything on the end.” Toki casts a glance at is as they pause at the nose of the van before parting. “Maybe a ribbon on the end?”

"A big green one, perhaps." Aliquam hummed, before he snickered at her. "You're walking stiffly; try relaxing and add some sway to your walk and you should feel a little more balanced." He advised, having watched his father walk and studied the difference between his strides and Asgore's, for example.
“A green one would be nice.” She paused at his advice and huffed. “If I add any more sway to my walk, people are going to think there’s something wrong with my legs.” Still, she does as asked, and basically sashays her way to the passenger door. It’s easier like he described, but she’s going to have to practice and find that happy medium that doesn’t look like she’s seducing the world.

Toki opens her door, and goes to get in- only to knock herself silly as something on top of her head catches on the top of the door and makes her skull ring. “Oh my lord- ow!”

"Are you alright?” Aliquam asked as he looked over from his side of the Van, though he quickly seemed to realize what happened and why it happened. "Ah.... your horns… Your horns are tall again.” He observed.

“My horns?” Her hands flew to her skull and- where were her horns? What the fuck? Toki’s hands frantically slid up and- oh. Oh dear.

A quick look in the side mirror for the van confirmed it.

She had her original horns back. She’s not sure if she’s happy about it or dreading it- at least she could properly cuddle now without awkward bulges and poky points.

“Huh. My horns are like they were before I went through the void the first time.” She observes. “Cool. I like these ones. I won’t poke as many holes in shirts anymore. Though...” She sighs. “The pillows will once again be at risk. Oh well.”

Now aware of her problem, Toki was more careful in getting into the van- though sitting with a tail was incredibly uncomfortable, and she found herself squirming to get comfortable, until she found the right spot with her tail running down along her leg. At least it was slimmer and less armored than Tenne or Tenebris’ tails were.

“Well… Lets head home.” It was a good thing the house was built with a shitload of bedrooms in it for emergency cases like this. There was no telling if Tenne would want to stay with her and Aliquam permanently, or if he’d want his own little home, but until that time, her home would be open to him.

Once sure that everyone had buckled in, Aliquam put the van into drive and began once more to return home.

Kai and Quinn were occupied by looking out the windows of the van, though Willow seemed more focused on Toki, tilting her head and wiggling her antennae before she hummed and quietly tucked her thumb into her mouth as she leaned into her father's warmth.

Tenne would respond by running his fingers through her fuzz before his gaze drifted to Toki.

He had so much to say, but even though Toki had immediately revealed his identity to her husband, he still felt like a rogue in the territory of a rival pack, that his presence was merely a privilege.

Aliquam hadn't said a word once they had gotten back onto the road, though he would occasionally glance over at Toki, before peering into the rear view mirror to look at Tenne and his sons.

Two years with a man that was an alternate version of his own father, raising two boys that were no doubt his and Caeruleus’ counterparts... It made his soul ache with a fear he knew was irrelevant and unnecessary.

Both men's gazes were not unnoticed by Toki, who was keeping an eye on them both
And, of course, on little Willow. Rather than let everyone sit in awkward silence though, which would amp up the tension and only make the children uncomfortable, Toki turned on the radio and began to sing for them all the way home.

They all had a lot to talk about, but it was something best done with the children in bed when they all three had time to sit down and just... Talk.
Chapter 162

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And so it continues-- Also SNUGGLE IS BACK! And has completed his cocooning!

Toki shifted in her seat as they got closer to home, and let her songs die off. She instead took a drink to freshen her voice, and then hummed.

"Nara Village is ahead." She murmured to Tenne, knowing he'd recognize the name for her last name. "Our home is just inside of the gate. Don't worry, okay? You'll be okay here." She tilts her head back, and eyes both men. This was important for both of them to hear. "After all, I was a stranger in your world once too. You helped make it home. How could I not do the same here?"

The guards at the gate stepped forth and blocked the cars path as they got close and slowed down. "Windows down and identify yourselves."

Aliquam rolled down his and Toki's windows, giving the guard on his side a polite smile. "Aliquam and Tokiko Gaster." He answered.

"And your guests?" The guard queried.

"Monsters." Toki answers. "Not from here and will be staying for a while."

They nodded and stepped out of the way.

Toki's house loomed ahead, tall and covered in brick. The snow had fallen freshly, powdering it in the white substance. Her home was large, multi-floored with plenty of space for everyone.

"This is home." Toki says and leans against her door as she waits for Aliquam to park. "It's not big, but... There's room for everyone and there's food and toys for the little ones to play with. Speaking of... We'll need to go get Skylar and Honey from your dad." She hums to Aliquam.

"Mmhm..." Aliquam poked his head out the window and took a deep breath as he looked around the main entrance, though he noticed something as he pulled up to the house’s front parking space and he took in a slow breath. Papyrus blinked and began to look around more. "Huh... I smell Father but I do not see-"

He wasn't able to finish his sentence as there was a loud impact with the top of the van that caused it to rock on it's wheels.

Willow began to whimper in terror before the source appeared in front of the parked vehicle. It surprised Toki, frightened Tenne, and urged Aliquam to sit up straight and exclaim. "FATHER!"

Tenebris was fully bristled at them, his damaged crown on display as he puffed up and leered at them through the front of the van. His claws ghosted over the paint, aware enough to keep from damaging their new vehicle, but he was alert and obviously quite disturbed.

It occurred to Toki why he would be. She’d disappeared- which meant Clover would have been sent back without her permission. Of course he’d have been panicked. “Shh… It’s okay.” She soothed softly. “That’s our Alpha- Tenebris Gaster. He’s also my father in law, and he might be in a small panic. Just sit here for a moment, okay? I’ll go calm him down.”

“Momma no!” Quinn gasped. “He’ll hurt you!”

“No he wont, sweet one.” Toki soothed, and proceeded to open her door. She closed it behind her, her tail nearly getting caught as she forgot to compensate for it. “Papa.” She calls softly. “Dad. It’s okay- I know you got spooked, but it’ll be okay, I promise.”

For a moment, she feared that her words would not reach him fast enough as he had looked at her and momentarily failed to recognize her.

Though it seemed to have worked a little as he came around to her side of the vehicle without growling.

He lowered his face next to her neck and fluffed her luscious fur up as to try and grasp her scent, but there was a moment of pure terror as he then released a snarl that rattled her bones. But he wrapped his arms around her in a bear hug instead of biting her, taking a moment to nearly crush her to him before he mustered his voice.

"It took you again... Why did it do this to you again?" He would growl quietly, before whining... Aggressive dad aside, it was time to be worried and protective.

She had flinched a bit at his snarl, but the hug was better than him sinking his teeth into her. She looped all four of her arms around him, and held him tightly. "I don't know." She says gently. "The Void wanted to taunt me, I think. I never know what it wants or doesn't want, but... It showed me the Other World." Her hands rubbed through his sparse mane. "And what happened there. And you know me, Dad. I couldn't leave things well enough alone." She makes a weak joke. "So... Our pack is bigger now by four members."

Kai hesitated, but he leaned against the window and waved at the protective beast outside, simultaneously greeting him and letting him know he was scaring pups inside the van.

The young boy's appearance was uncanny to Tenebris' eldest son when he too had been younger.

Tenebris rumbled as he looked up but he quickly spotted the small pup in the van, and for a moment had breathed a faint 'Caeruleus?' In surprise, before he sighed and offered a gentle smile to Kai.

"Come on out, its safe." Aliquam assured the newcomers before he got out of the van.

Toki shook her head, having heard his whispered words. "Not Caeruleus. That is Kai. His little brother is Quinn, and his sister is Willow." She says softly.

It didn't take long for Quinn to scramble out, bustling around the van to come and latch onto her leg. "Momma!" He cried out, one hand holding her and the other securing Kiko. "Momma! I thought he was gonna hurt you!"

Toki slid a hand down and ran her fingers through his fluffy orange mane. "No, no, sweetheart. Tenebris wouldn't hurt me," again went left unsaid, "and he's a very nice man. He just worries. He's like a dad to me, and he got scared when the Void took me again."

"Oh..." Quinn's glittering orange eyes peered up at him and he frowned thoughtfully. "He looks like Daddy."
Tenebris felt his heart ache as he looked at these darling young children. He never got to see his own this age.

"Its.... Very nice to meet you two." He spoke gently, before glancing up at the van as Tenne stepped out with Willow.

The younger male was holding her close as he eyed the larger male nervously.

Tenebris stared back, taking note of his physical stature and the healthy mane. It was flared up, and very hard to miss. This younger version of him was petrified of him it would seem. It was ironic, but Tenebris felt that at least this alternate knew his place in pack terms.

Toki noticed Tenebris staring down Tenne, and she backed up from him, feeling her eye lights narrow into slits. Her chest rattled with a growl, and she flared her black-tipped mane in a clear, beastly warning to behave and not bully him.

He was her second mate- she’d defend him just like she’d tried to protect Papyrus when he’d been in pain while his leg was bad.

Her warning made, she let her tail swish about her ankles, hopefully drawing Tenebris’ attention off of intimidating his terrified counterpart. Toki had a lot of bodily changes made- talons, tail, who-knows what else under her clothes- if she could get his doctor and science mind working, hopefully they could get through introductions without him trying to dominate Tenne.

Tenne was an alpha too, she knew- but the power difference was large, and though she loved them both, she would be instinctively driven to protect her mate. She didn’t want to have to choose. So she swished her tail, and did her best to draw his gaze and get his mind to switch gears.

The look on Tenebris' face was nothing short of surprise as he looked down at her, though not for a second did he growl in reply... It seemed it did what she wanted as he rumbled quietly before he noticed her tail and he slowly went around her to examine her tail. "How fascinating..." He murmured.

"Indeed." She says, her mane smoothing out as he went from intimidating Tenne subtly to investigating her instead. “The Void made some changes to me and Quinn, since Quinn didn’t let go when the Void did shenanigans. Claws, my old horns back, and a tail- I don’t know what else was done to me under my clothes, but things were done I think. My chest burned a fair bit.”

Quinn ran his fingers through his mane and made a soft noise. “I got Momma’s mane.” He proclaims, turning slowly to keep his eye on the bigger male that was circling Toki- and him by proxy, since he hadn’t let go of her leg. “Where’s your mane, mister?” He cocks his head curiously. “Don’t Alphas keep their manes big and fluffy like Daddy and Momma?”

Tenebris paused as Quinn asked that question and felt like an arrow jabbed through his pride. "Well... Y’see... I got very sick when I was little, and it ended up affecting how my mane grew as I got older.” He answered. "I'm only now becoming able to grow my mane back." He explained gently.

Quinn nods slowly. “Oh, okay. I’m glad you’re better now and can grow a mane.”

“Indeed.” She says, her mane smoothing out as he went from intimidating Tenne subtly to investigating her instead. “The Void made some changes to me and Quinn, since Quinn didn’t let go when the Void did shenanigans. Claws, my old horns back, and a tail- I don’t know what else was done to me under my clothes, but things were done I think. My chest burned a fair bit.”
“Is he a good alpha?” Quinn asked, looking over at him hesitantly.

“He’s a good one.” Toki assured him with a soothing pet. She glanced back to Tenne. “Why don’t you come say hi, Tenne? Tenebris won’t hurt you. You two actually have a lot in common- and I’m going to regret everything when you finally figure it out and you two and Kai start palling around.” That makes her heave a heavy sigh.

Her house would be ruined if they did heavy science there.

Tenne eyed Tenebris nervously but did as told and came a little closer, holding Willow close to his chest as he looked up at Tenebris.

The larger male didn't say anything yet, but took a breath and closed his eyes to let his crown retract.

That seemed to at least put Tenne at ease.

"Hello." Tenebris finally greets, opening his gaze once his body was back to normal. He slowly offers a beefy hand out to the other male to shake. "It’s nice to meet you, Tenne. Toki has said quite a few things about you. I am Tenebris Gaster- Alpha of the pack. Toki seeks to bring you and your little ones into the fold, yes?"

There was no malice in his gaze as he looked down at the little moth in his arms. Tenebris didn’t see Sequoia in her- he didn’t see anything of Cruelty in the tiny child. No- he saw more similarities to his own Hope, and to Toki than he did the person who had tormented him so.

Toki gave a soft, pleased noise, and moved over to look at Aliquam. “Papy?” She chirrs. “Would you go get Honey and Skylar from Dad’s house, please? They’re going to need to meet everyone here.” She needed to mediate and help get them settled into their new home.

"Ah...” Tenne slowly reached to take the offered hand, giving a firm grip as he rumbled quietly, forcing his mane to flatten. "I-It's nice to meet you, Tenebris..." He spoke in reply. "If I am welcome, my children and I would very much like a place among your pack.” He answered respectfully.

With Tenne no longer likely to faint from fear, Aliquam nodded and started towards his father's home.

Tenebris cocked his head, giving a thoughtful hum and shaking his hand firmly. Very firmly. “It’s good to see more beasts in the world.” He says quietly. “I wouldn’t turn you and your pups away, not when you are new to the world. I know what it’s like to be new to a world. Will you need a place to stay?”

“He’s going to stay with me and Papyrus.” Toki chimes softly. “At least for now to get him acclimated to the differences in technologies in this world than his world, unless Tenne decides he wants to do something else.”

"If it's alright with you, I would very much like to stay with you, darling...” Tenne answered quietly, slowly tucking his arm underneath Willow once more as he released Tenebris' hand.

Tenebris cocked a brow at them both.

“Of course.” Toki gave him a smile. She glanced to Tenebris, and didn’t comment on his look. “I’m going to get them settled, Dad. I’ll see you later, okay?”
He nodded slowly. “Alright… I’d like to see you later for a checkup, Toki. I want to make sure the Void didn’t do anything… untoward with you.”

She nods. “Of course. I’ll come over either tonight or tomorrow. But for now…” Toki quietly summoned her bees, and sent the flock of them to carry the birthday gifts up to hers and Aliquam’s room, so the twins wouldn’t be able to see them when they came home. “Gifts for the kid’s birthday.” She explains. “No matter what’s happened now, I’m going to make it an amazing birthday for them.”

Quinn’s gaze perked up. “This is your first birthday with them, isn’t it?” Ever the insightful boy he way.

“I think so.” Kai hummed.

“It is.” She nods warmly. “I want to make it the best- just like your first birthday’s here. Once you’ve had some time to decide on what you like here, I’ll work on getting you things for your birthday’s too.”

Quinn blinked owlishly at her. “R-really…?”

“Yes.” Toki leaned down to kiss her brow. “You’re my sons too, Quinn, Kai. And little miss Willow- I’ll be whatever you want me to be, sweetheart, but you’ll get birthday gifts too.”

She couldn’t hear her reply, but that was okay.

Tenebris frowned thoughtfully, shook his head, and turned to walk home, leaving Toki with her second family there on her sidewalk.

Toki watched him go, and turned to look at Tenne, before padding up towards the door. “Come along, my dears. The twins share a room across from me and Papyrus, so you’re all welcome to choose whatever rooms you want. There are a massive quantity of them- my home was a safe-house for fleeing HTM’s at one point.”

“HTM?” Kai questioned.

“Ah- I’ll explain that later, sweetie.” She laughed softly. Oh boy- her world was going to be fun to explain.

"Thank you." He smiled at her, before he cooed to his boys and started to the front door of her home. "Let's see about making ourselves at home, okay?" He purred to them.

"Yeah!" Kai smiled slightly.

Toki opened the door for them, and let them in. She had to stoop and scoop her door dashing cat though. "This is Gracie." She says, stepping aside and slipping off her shoes so they could come in. "She's one of our two cats. Gael is around here somewhere..."

Quinn's eyes got big. "Fluffy..."

"Shoes first, sweetheart." Toki smiled at him, and then gently set down her cat, watching her skitter off. "We have two fledgling summons too. One of them is cocooned right now, and the other is a pesky bird who's feathers aren't fully grown back. The cocoon belongs to Skylar, and the bird to Honey."

“Are they full body summons, like yours?” Kai asks, slipping out of his shoes as asked.
"They are. Sobek, the bird, isn't very nice all the time, so just avoid him." She hums. She walks further in, and holds out her arms, giving a show-mans twirl to showcase her home. It's messy with toys and looks lived in, but it looks like there is love galore to be had. It's a home. "Welcome home. Feel free to explore and go pick your rooms, kids. All the rooms have multiple beds, so you can share, or we can move beds and you can have your own rooms."

Quinn was the brave one and delved first into the front room first, before he squealed. "There's a giant hornet in here!"

"Oh dear. Don't get near it and it wont sting you." Tenne called as he started for the front room.

"No, no! It's HUGE!"

Naturally, Toki had to follow Tenne in and look.

There, stretched out on the couch cushions, was a very large hellfire orange and black hornet, legs splayed and twitching occasionally in sleep. The bee’s mane was fluffed in sleep, and it seemed to be making sleepy noises.

Not far from it was a half eaten cocoon.

Toki broke out in guffaws, and strode over to the couch. She scooped up the hornet- which was heavier than he looked- and gave him a nuzzle on his sleepy face as his eyes stirred awake. "You have no idea how happy Skylar is going to be to see you." She beams at him. "Sky's been upset since you cocooned yourself. Did you see all your pictures and letters he made you?"

She got a slow blink for her efforts, and the bee went boneless against her, seeming to sigh and try to bury his face in her fluff to sleep.

Toki held him not unlike a heavily armored toddler, and she rubbed her hand down his fluffy mane and wings, and smiled to Tenne. "This is Snuggle." She says to everyone. "Until recently he’s been in a cocoon slowly progressing from a grub into this handsome hornet you see here. He’s very cuddly, I promise. Also very sleepy."

Said hornet was nearly asleep face first in her chest again.

Toki sighed, and bundled him up before setting him on the couch. She patted his face. "Snuggle- this is Tenne, Quinn, Kai, and Willow. Don’t hurt them, okay? They’re family."

Snuggle gave everyone a sleepy once over, his toxic orange eyes mellow and warm, and then gave a soft click of his mandibles to let them know he understood. He made a sleepy sound, stretched out, and got comfortable again with his armored underbelly to the sky.

She shook her head. "What a lazy bug." Toki sighed. "I wonder if he’s related to Clover."

Tenne was gawking a little- okay a lot - at how easily Toki handled that large hornet, and he gave a few baffled sounds before he simply went quiet and gave a nearly completely silent laugh. "It's... ah... it's nice to meet you, Snuggle."

"That's so cool!" Quinn cooed in awe.

Snuggle offered Tenne a faint wave and snuffled, before flopping a leg against his face and settling down to snooze.

"Well, he’s asleep." Toki laughs softly. "Lets get you into rooms- and tomorrow we can call Lana and get you fitted with clothes.”

“She’s not here.” She gives his head a little ruffle, pulling him close to kiss his noggin. “She’s my sister-in-law. She married my brother, Kon. She’s also the local seamstress, and does all of my clothes. And... is going to have to re-do all of my clothes, again.” She sighed, and looked back at the hole her tail had ripped in the seat of her pants. “Anyways. Rooms!”

Kai scrambled away with a playful growl, obviously not bothered, and he laughed softly. “Dad? How do we want to bunk?”

“Well, if they have a bunk-bed, we can all asleep in the same room” Tenne answered as he started for the stairs. "Though now I wonder... Little Lana all grown up... I bet she's wonderful, just like her mother...” He rumbled quietly.

“As for bunk-beds, I think I’ve got one- it’s the one my brothers use when I’ve got everyone here for the holidays.” Toki gave a soft laugh. “The first time I got to meet her mother was your world.” Toki says gently, and gathers the boys to follow him up. “She is just as wonderful as her mother.” She hums warmly. Her tail swishes, and she nearly trips over it, before she just gathers it close and huffs softly. “Our world is different, Tenne. There’s going to be people here you know, and people that you don’t know.”

She grinds her teeth, thinking of the immediate things he was going to notice. Asgore and Grillby were the two major ones she could think of. Grillby didn’t have Sapphire. And Asgore was mated to Tenebris, and he’d lost Chara and Asriel many, many years ago.

She doesn’t tell him that though, but she knows it must be mentioned eventually. Instead, she just leads him directly for the room with the bunk-beds, which is catty-corner to her own room. "It’s here. A bunk-bed, and a normal bed.” She chirps softly.

"Well look at that, that's just perfect." Tenne smiled happily as he peered into the room, before he gave a pleased rumble to coax his boys onward.

Kai and Quinn raced into the room before Quinn squealed and scrambled up onto the top bunk before he sat and held his head high in victory as he giggled. "Top bunk!” He announced happily, claiming it with a fluff of his sunshine orange mane.

Kai grinned, knowing from the start that his plucky little brother would want the top bunk. He trotted over to the bottom bunk, hopping into it with a soft sigh. "Bottom bunk for me, then~" He agreed, stretching out.

Tenne walked to the bed and sat down as he smiled contentedly. "Well I'm glad you two are comfortable." He rumbled gently. "Now to see how comfy this bed is..." With that, he lifted his legs onto the bed before he laid back onto the pillow.

Only for a deep sigh and a pleased groan to rise from him.

Willow stretched out on his chest, letting out a tiny, happy sound as her little wings gave a flutter.

Toki smiled, and moved to sit on the bottom corner of Tenne’s bed. “I’m glad you’re all happy.” She glanced to Willow, and made a soft chirping sound to get the relaxing moth’s attention. “Hey, sweetling? Are you going to sleep with your Daddy since this place is new and kinda scary sometimes? Or do you want me to get you a bed put in here so your silly Daddy’s snoring doesn’t blow you off his chest~?” She gives Tenne a teasing look, eye lights warm and tender.
At the chirp, Willow sat up and looked up at Toki as she spoke to her. She listened intently, before her antennae wiggled and she squeaked happily in response. She gave her small wings a flutter as she wiggled off of Tenne's chest to crawl over onto Toki's lap instead, nuzzling into her fur with a soft coo in reply.

Toki blinked at her lap-full of tiny moth beast, and gently scooped her close, supporting the multi-armed child with her secondary arms as she let her nuzzle more into Toki's black-tipped mane. “Well, that doesn’t really answer my question.” She laughs warmly. Toki glanced over to Tenne, threading her primary digits gently through the soft, baby-silk mane that Willow was sporting. “Did she rest with you at night back at your house?” She asks him gently.

It wouldn’t surprise him if he kept the last reminder of his lost mates close—beasts were peculiar creatures, and close with their family and pack. Sleeping in a family cuddle wasn’t uncommon.

"She is actually making an effort to sleep independently, since she has observed her brothers doing just that..." Tenne answered. "If you have a third bed I can fit next to mine, it would do the trick to help her gradually break away.”

Toki frowned thoughtfully. “I think we might have an old pair of beds from the twins before they decided they wanted ‘big kid’ beds. That should do the trick— we can get it set up for her before tonight.” She gave Tenne a smile, and leaned back slightly, letting Willow get comfortable in her mane. “It’s been a busy day— the kids will likely sleep early tonight, ne?”

The three adults needed to have a good, long talk.

"Aye. It will do them some good after everything we went through today..." Tenne agreed. "Though hopefully not before I can go out and find some prey to feed everyone tonight..."

Toki tilts her head. “Do you… not think I won’t provide a meal?” She asks softly. “It might not be fresh off the bone, but I was planning on cooking a big meal for dinner— but if you’d rather hunt, I can take you out and show you the flora and fauna and what you can and can’t hunt here. There’s some things here that will hunt you back.”

Bears, when they wandered over, and a few species of deadly snakes. He came from where it was mostly coyotes and cougars and rattlesnakes, all of which were smaller and came with warning noises to avoid.

Also Stag. Stag would take great pleasure in teaching Tenne that they were not prey.

Quinn pokes his head over the top bunk. His eyes positively sparkle and his mane plumes in exuberant excitement. “Momma’s cooking? We haven’t had Momma’s cooking in… forever.”

He reached up and scratched through his mane in embarrassment. "I mean… i would have not want to impose... you know... If you weren't able to, I would have been willing to go out and find our own food." He answered.

Toki reached out and gently patted his shin. “At any given time, I can have a hoard of family members invade my home.” She cocks a smile at him. “I’m prepared to throw an impromptu feast anytime, trust me. We’ll be okay tonight. Tomorrow I’ll break out the crock-pots and slow roast some vegetables to go with some roasts.”

“Oooo~” Quinn’s coo was enough to let her know she had his entire approval of that meal.

Toki laughed softly, and gently shifted her hands on Willow. “Alright, well, if I can get this sweet one to let go, I’ll go get items out for dinner- and greet the kids when they get home. You’re all welcome to take some time and rest if you’d like. If not, you can come join me downstairs, and I can put on a movie for the kids.”

Tenne gave a nod before he cooed to Willow to coax her back. It took little convincing for Willow to return to her Papa, the soft creamy moth youngling not wanting to give up the warm, plush mane of the elder Queen beast. However, the lure of her father’s embrace was enough, and soon he tucked her into the cradle of one arm as he laid back again.

"A nap does sound nice... it was on our to-do list anyhow..." Tenne chuckled gently, stroking his daughter's head gently before he reached out and ran his foot along Toki's back. "It's good to have you back, my love~ I await the first chance to hold you in my arms again~" He purred a little softer.

His touch and words made Toki's mane fluff and her face darken into a vibrant emerald blush. "Ah... I look forward to getting to snuggle up in your arms too. It's been too long." She smiles at him.

Fuck, she hadn't thought this far. How was she going to balance Tenne and Papyrus? Shit, shit, shit... Well, this was one of the things they'd need to talk about after dinner.

She gave the paw of his foot a gentle stroke with her primary arm, tickling his toes with tender affection, before she quietly got up from the bed and moved out of the room. "Rest well." She thrummed warmly.

Toki made her way downstairs, feeling a small inkling of anxiety in her stomach. They'd work it out. She knew they would. For now, Toki would busy herself in the kitchen. Whatever was delaying her husband was probably him venting his worries and frustrations, and she wasn't going to rush him.

Instead, she'd work on getting dinner going, since it would take some time to prepare and to simmer.

It turned out that Aliquam had in fact come home, but rather than go upstairs, he had gone to the kitchen to look for something to make for dinner. Though as Toki entered the kitchen, he lifted his head, giving a mellow smile in greeting. "Are they settled now?"

"They are." She nods, managing to hide her surprise at seeing him home so soon. She’d been lost in thought and hadn’t noticed them getting home. She tilts her head, covering her nervousness with a tender smile. "Where are Skylar and Honey?" She asks softly.

"Living room, Momma." Skylar poked his head out and observed her new look. "You look pretty, Momma. I like your tail. Can I put a bow on it?"

Something inside of her eased there, and she glanced back at her son and nodded. "Sure, sweetheart. We'll put one of my hair ribbons on it later, okay?"

"Okay." He nods, and tucks back into the living room. The sound of books flipping echoes after them. It was homework time it seemed, and he was very likely enjoying his time with his Summons.

Toki turned her attention to her husband as she began to move through the kitchen, only occasionally tripping on her tail as she fetched things. Dear was subconsciously helping her direct it from the back seat, preferring to stay out of it and reclusive as usual, but no less helpful.

"Are you okay?" Toki finally asked him, her back to him as she worked to get rice into the rice cooker. "I know this is a lot, and I couldn't really ask to see if you agreed with me while I was in the Void again, but..."

He didn't answer immediately, choosing instead to ponder over his words for a good few minutes as she fussed around the kitchen. He watched her, watched the sway of her tail and the movement of her wings, and soon gave a shaky sigh. "A-Am I still good enough, Toki?" He asked softly. "Are things going to change now that he's here?" He sounded uneasy.

That made her eyes pop wide, and she dropped what she was handling in the kitchen.

Toki swiveled to face him, and moved to pull him into her arms. It didn't matter that he towered over her. She had two more arms than he did, and she made up for her lack in height with pure love and boisterous short-person enthusiasm.

"Don't ever doubt that I love you, Papyrus Aliquam Gaster. I don't love you any less than Tenne, okay?" She cupped his cheeks with her secondary hands. "I fell for you first. I bore our children for forty two extremely long weeks. I walked down the isle with you, and I don't ever remove the ring you gave me at our wedding, not since I got it back. I love you- I would still love you no matter what."

She tugs him down to nuzzle her face to his. "Things will change with Tenne here." She says. "Things will change when you and I have our next litter, and things will change with the litter after that. That's just the nature of life. It's ever-changing. However, I want to sit down with you and Tenne tonight and map out what we can expect from him being here."

His arms came up and wrapped around her tightly, holding onto her with that need for reassurance, though it loosened to allow him to lean down and press his head to hers. "I just..." He slowly lowered to one knee to press into her chest, a soft vent of air leaving him. "I never expected him to actually be here. He appeals to your beastly nature a lot easier than I do... I barely know Sentinel well enough to know when he's talking to me... How am I supposed to appeal to you and Dear both?" He asked quietly. "Or even come as close to appealing as Tenne can..." Thankfully, there was no malice in his voice, which meant he bore no ill will towards Tenne or his sons; rather it appeared Papyrus feared his place now that Tenne was there.

Toki tilted her head and hummed softly. She cradled his cheeks, watching his vulnerability plain on his face as he shifted to his knees in front of her. He was afraid she wouldn't need him anymore- a half beast with a prosthetic leg and problems connecting to his beast. Toki just sighed softly, and met his gaze tenderly, peering down at him with love and understanding.

"He's not going to replace you." She says gently. "A second mate doesn't replace a first mate. You do appeal to both Dear and I. Dear loves you, loves the peace and serenity you bring her when she's at her worst, and the soft cuddles you give us both when we're nestled together. You don't have to embrace the beast to appeal to us. I wasn't a beast when we married, Papy, and I love you no less now than I did then."

She kisses his brow gently and exhales softly against him. Toki loved him. The thought of replacing him was ridiculous.

"This must be something beasts are so used to..." He murmured, "I never thought I'd have this problem... I'm sorry, darling..." He sighed gently, looking into her eyes as he tried to bring his train of thought to a start as to allow a more pleasant topic to arise. And yet he found himself silent as he gazed into her emerald gaze. Rather than saying anything, however, a deep sigh escaped him, as if his troubles all vanishing when he looked into those beautiful eyes.

"It's not even a beasts thing, my love. I'm certain Tenne is anxious about this too. This problem of sorts originates... Well, with me." She admits, and rubbed his cheeks.

"Single mate beasts would struggle with having a multi-mate beast for a mate. You don't need to apologize for anything. You haven't done anything wrong. Expressing your concerns and worries is a good thing." She assures him warmly, gazing deep into his amber depths with adoration. "I would hope you can always come to me when you're feeling unsure."

He gave a sluggish nod in reply as he kissed her chin, before he slowly made to get up again. "Thank you, my love." He sighed quietly.

Toki gave him a hand up, and then peered up at him quietly. "I love you, Papy. Never doubt that, okay? Even when I'm grumpy, even when I'm affectionate to Tenne, I love you both, and that'll never change." She gave him a smile then. "Now... want to help me blow our new family members out of the water with our dazzling cooking skills~?"

"Oh of course." That seemed to help him perk up and he smiled at her. "What were you thinking for dinner?"

"I was thinking pineapple teriyaki chicken over white rice?" Toki gave him a dazzling smile, and pulled gently on his fingers. "What do you think? Maybe make some chocolate taiyaki for dessert? Or maybe some mitarashi dango?" Toki had some chocolate spread she could put in the taiyaki, which would make it more appealing to her picky daughter- and likely their new guests.

"Ah, that sounds delicious~ Let's do that~" He agreed, knowing that it's indeed quite a tasty meal, and would prove at least a little bit that he meant no ill will towards Tenne. "What shall I start on, then?" He asked.

"Hm... Well, you didn't pick one desert, so why not do both?" She grins. "How about you start on the dango, and I'll work on dinner proper, and then we'll both do the taiyaki?" She grinned at him warmly, and moved over to start dinner.

"You got it~"
Chapter 163

Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: And now we see how the conversation between everyone goes, eh~?
Among, y'know, other things.

Toki settled the last of the dishes into the sink, so that they could wash them later. They had five children to corral to bed, however- one of which was dozing against her chest.

Willow had gotten sleepy after dinner, with all of the preparing that had happened prior to it. Their nap hadn’t been long, so they’d gotten up and they’d prepared Tenne’s room to house them better- it had been exciting all the same, and the kids had ‘helped’ with the process. After helping, they’d all been tossed into the bath and carefully scrubbed down, and then Lana had showed up to help get them fitted for clothing- it was a busy day.

A big meal after such a day, of course, only ensured the following food coma that had five children very sleepy after a long day.

Toki flicked her fingers clean, and then went back to the dining room. “Bed time, kiddos.” She smiles.

Skylar groans out a yawn. “I don’t wanna sleep.”

“And yet, you’re yawning sleepily.” She laughs softly, and goes over to his chair. She ruffles the top of his head. “Come along, son. It’s bed time. For all little ones. Willow’s already beat you all to sleep.”

The tiny moth was supported by Toki’s secondary arms, and was snoozing face first in Toki’s chest fluff. Tiny, soft snores left the sleeping moth pup.

Honey made a face. “Egh.”

“Oh don’t you ‘egh’ me.” Toki tweaks her horn, and is rewarded with a giggling snicker. “Come on, into your pajamas, all four of you.”

Skylar and Honey got up out of their chairs with reluctant sighs. Snuggle trailed at Skylar’s heels as he went upstairs- while Sobek darted out of the living room after Honey, shooting Tenne and his kids suspicious looks all the while.

Toki shook her head, and then smiled to Quinn and Kai. “I did say all four of you. Come along, boys- upstairs. Tenne? You want to help me get Willow into her pajamas?”

”Right away, darling.” Tenne purred as he caught up to her, before getting ahead of her to go and get Willow’s pajamas ready.

Quinn rubbed his eyes before he whined quietly. ”Kiko, C’mon.”

The hornet had been nestled up with Snuggle but gave a hum as she got up to follow, Snuggle reluctantly following on the promise of good cuddles.
Kai was just behind his little brother, ushering him up the stairs when he slowed or wavered sleepily.

Toki smiled lightly, and motioned to Aliquam to follow her towards the stairs last. "I'm going to be bouncing from room to room I think. Will you help Skylar make sure Honey actually puts clothes on instead of just doing it the lazy way and sleeping nude? I'll be back and forth, but I need to get Willow to bed without losing any hunks of mane."

"You got it, Toki." Aliquam answered from the rear of the group. "Anything else I should take care of before we forget?" He asked.

“I don’t think so.” Toki gave him a smile as she reached the second floor. “Alright, love. We’ll all meet downstairs once we’re done.”

That said, Toki slips into Tenne’s room, tailing him in and gently working her fingers against Willow’s fingers to loosen them from her mane. “Come on, Willow. It’s bed time now- you’ve got to sleep a little bit in your bed.”

Willow gave a quiet sound in reply before Tenne wrapped his hands around her sides and rattled gently to her, coaxing her to turn and hug him instead, where he began to get her dressed into pajamas around her stubborn sleepiness.

Toki hummed softly, letting Tenne dress his sleepy daughter, and moved to the boys. She stepped up a rung onto the top bunk, where Quinn had already scrambled and had gotten into his pajamas. Well, mostly. He had no pants- only a long night shirt. “Alright. I’m here to say my good-nights, sweet ones.”

Quinn scrambled closer, and leaned over the bunk to hook his arms around her neck. He smooched her cheek. “Night, Momma!” He exclaims warmly, his accent having improved a smidge after spending a night around native-speakers. “I’ll see you in the morning.”

She gave him a kiss on the forehead, and nuzzled him softly. “I’ll see you bright and early for breakfast.” She agrees gently. Once he settles, she drops down, and scoots over to Kai’s bed. She gives him a sly smile. “So. Are we too old for a goodnight kiss?”

He rubbed his head before he looked up at Toki. "Not really... Even if I was... I'd really want one from you anyways." He spoke quietly as he wrapped his arms around her neck in a firm hug. "I missed you so much..." He admitted quietly.

“I missed you too, sweetheart.” Toki held the young teen tightly to her, and peppered his cheeks in kisses. “I’ve missed so much... But there’ll be a lot I can still get to see.” She smiles to him, and nuzzles his face. Toki had missed so much with both sets of her kids... She felt cheated, in a way- but she knew there were still many memories she could still make with them. Toki pressed a final kiss to his forehead. “Sleep well, okay sweetheart? I’ll see you in the morning, I promise.”

"Thank you, Toki... Let me know when you're ready." Tenne answered.

“I will.” She nods to him, and then moves to Honey and Skylar’s room. She easily slips inside, and checks to see if there are sleepy little ones, or if she needs to work her mommy magic and make them sleepy.

Skylar was already nestled into bed, his darling companion Hornet already curled up around his head as a comfortable pillow.

Honey was less so, and was sitting up with Aliquam on her bed. "Papa, are Kai and Quinny gonna be my new brothers? And Willow my sister?" She asked quietly.
"Maybe..." His answer is uncertain and mumbled. "Your Momma loves them very much, and she loves them much like she loves you... She took care of them when she was missing." Aliquam answered quietly as he stroked her head.

Toki tapped her fingers slowly against her thigh, before quietly stepping into the room proper. When Honey’s gaze jerked to her, she gave her a quiet smile. "Whether or not you accept them as your brother’s and sister is up to you, sweetheart." She moves over to the bed, and sits next to Aliquam. "I love them, just like I love you. They never got to have a Momma though- I’m the first one they ever got to know, and I wouldn’t take that from them."

Skylar made a soft noise, proving he wasn’t asleep. "... Like Daddy?" He asks quietly. "Like why we don’t have a Grandma from Daddy?"

Aliquam had stopped at that, feeling his soul endure a wave of chills as he reached up and pressed a hand over it. "..." He made a face as a memory passed through his eyes, and he closed his sockets tightly. "Yes... Just like Daddy..." He spoke quietly, before he sighed and reached out to wrap his arms around Honey. "Go to sleep, my angel... You have a big day tomorrow..."

Honey nodded quietly, and gave her Daddy a big hug. "Okay, Daddy." She nuzzles him softly. "I love you both."

"I love you too, sweetheart." Toki set a hand comfortingly on Aliquam’s knee, and gave it a gentle squeeze. She couldn’t give him the mother his soul had likely once craved so, so long ago- but she could give him love. "I love you both."

"Love you too, Momma." Skylar gave a tired yawn, rubbing his eyes. "Love you too, Daddy."

"Good night, Honey... Good night Skylar... I love you both so much..." Aliquam got up, gently gripping Toki’s hand to pull her to her feet, before he started for the door.

Toki paused in following with him only long enough to give her babies good-night kisses, before she too left the room with him. She quietly closed the door behind her, and rubbed his knuckles. "... Are you okay?" She asks him gently. Skylar hadn’t meant to hurt him, she knew- her son had simply been trying to compare and understand Kai and Quinn.

"I didn't expect that question. It... hurt to hear it. But it was a question we had to answer..." He answered quietly as he lifted her hands to kiss them.

She let him kiss them, and sighed softly to him. "I know... And I wish to all the gods above that I could make your pain stop, my love. I wish I could. But that is not a void I can fill for you and soothe away. All I can do is love you unconditionally." Her secondary hands lifted to stroke his cheeks. "Speaking of conversations we need to have... We need to let Tenne know we're ready and go downstairs to the living room."

He nodded. "I'll get a head start and I'll see you there." He kissed her cheek as he passed, heading downstairs to wait for them.

She nodded, smiling at his kiss. She waited until he was downstairs, before going to Tenne's room. She didn't knock so she didn't disturb Willow. She just opened the door and poked her head in. "We're ready to meet downstairs, Tenne. All good in here?"

"Oh yes... I'll be there soon." Tenne answered from where he leaned against the wall, Willow curled up on his chest as she suckled on her thumb.

Toki paused, peeking at Willow. "Is she not wanting to be laid down?" She asks gently. "I can get one of the kids stuffed toys if that might give her some comfort."

"She is feeling a little warm... Do you happen to have any large plushies?" He asked hopefully.

"I think so." Toki worried that perhaps Willow was too young to handle the change in worlds without some complications. She’d keep an eye on her. She shifted, and padded back for the kids room, poking into the door to look for a toy.

"Momma?" Honey peeked at her. "It’s bed time, Momma." She reminds her.

"I know, sweetling." Toki nods softly. "But, Willow isn’t feeling too good- and her cuddle toy didn’t seem to make it through the trip here with us. I was hoping I could let her borrow one of your plush toys that you don’t play with anymore...?"

Honey looked ponderous, and then she clamored out of bed. She moved to her pile of toys, gently moved Sobek off the pile that he was nesting on much to his displeasure, and pulled out one of her plush-toy bees. It was a warm golden color, and had a bright smiley face on it.

"Here, Momma." Honey brought it over to her Mother, cradling it gently in both arms before handing it over. "She can have Misses Bumble. She gets lonely since I don’t play with her as much as I used to anymore, and she’d love to get cuddles again. Tell Willow I hope she feels better, okay? You’re the best Momma ever- you can make anyone feel better."

It wasn’t a large plush toy, perhaps as big as Gracie was, but it would suffice for Willow, Toki thought. Toki knelt down, and gave her daughter a warm smile, and a gentle kiss on the brow. The toy was held in her secondary arm as she pulled Honey close for a hug. "Thank you, sweetheart." She tells her warmly. "I’ll try and help her feel better. And you know what? You’re a good girl. You’ll make a good big sister eventually, won’t you?" Toki gives her a wink.

Honey’s blue eyes brighten and positively sparkle. "Really? You think I will?"

"I do." She nods. "But, big sisters set examples for their little siblings. You have to show them how to grow up- which means...?"

"Bed time on time." Honey chirps. She leaned up to kiss Toki’s cheek, and then scrambled away. "I gotta go get practice for being a big sister, Momma."

"Alright, alright." Toki laughed warmly, standing up and exiting the room again. She left her children to sleep, and went back to Tenne’s room, approaching him and holding out the fluffy, golden bumble bee toy. "Honey was kind enough to send over Misses Bumble." She smiles softly to Willow.

Willow gave a quiet coo in reply and slowly let go of her father to reach for the large bee. As she took it, Tenne gently put her down and laid her on the bed.

Toki padded closer, and gently tucked her into the blankets. "Sleep well, sweetheart." Once Willow was gently tucked in, Toki straightened and padded towards the door. She glanced at Tenne, and motioned for him to follow her and let the children sleep.

She stepped out into the hall.

Tenne was right behind her as he stepped out of the bedroom, rumbling quietly. "Thank you, my love." He purred quietly.

Toki glanced back at him, and took his fingers. She lifted them, and kissed them gently. "I’m glad I could help.” She says with a gentle tenderness that he had likely missed. “C’mon. You and I have a lot to talk about with Aliquam.”

He purred quietly at her affection before following her. "Right behind you, my love."

“Alright.” She thrummed softly.

Toki guided him down the stairs, her mane ruffling quietly. Her tail swished behind her, and she had to grip the railing to keep her balance, but she managed all the same. Once at the bottom, she moved towards the living room to find Papyrus. “There you are.” She smiles at him softly. “Do we want some tea for this talk?”

"I put the kettle on." Papyrus answered. "It'll be a little before the water's ready."

“Okay.” She nods slowly. Toki hesitated awkwardly, and then slowly moved to stand by the fire-place. She lowered all four hands, warming her palms momentarily, before turning around to look at them both. Her next words aren’t addressed to either of them, but to both of them at once. “Before we start talking, I just want you to know that I love you both, and I’ll still love you both the same no matter how our conversation goes, okay? I don’t love either of you more than the other- you’re equal in my heart.” One hand comes to rest on her chest.

Even if the love for Tenne was supposed to created from the Void, love was love, and she wouldn’t rebuke it.

Tenne and Aliquam had gone to sit on the couch when she’d moved over to the fire. Both of them sat up a little when she turned, but it seemed she had succeeded in getting both their attention. They shared a momentarily glance before looking back up at Toki.

It would seem that she had the metaphorical floor so to speak.

Toki’s teeth ground, more out of stress than anything. The shower of sparks was distracting, but not enough to calm her under their focused looks.

"Alright... Well, I'm honestly not sure where to start. I love you both. You both love me." Her hands worry at her clothing, tail flicking and coiling in obvious anxiousness for what she was saying. "What I would love to see happen is all three of us working together and finding happiness. But, I know that's difficult."

Her gaze slid to Aliquam. He’d already felt like he was being replaced, even though that was the farthest thing from what was happening. While he didn’t hate Tenne, jealousy would make it hard for him to coexist with Toki giving him affection visibly at the same time she did Aliquam.

Tenne followed her glance, before he looked away, not sure what to say... and yet it was not her to speak up the next time.

"Your sons need their mother." Tenne had immediately looked back at Aliquam, who’s hands were tightly folded in his lap as he kept his gaze down. "Six months... that's all it took for your young boys to find the love of a mother in Toki... Much like how her own adore and rely on her." Aliquam clenched his hands in his lap before he smiled a little.

"I'm still nervous about all of this, despite knowing everything is not nearly as bad as it looks... But no matter what's said, what's done... I'm never going to take Toki away from your children... And... in the same train of thought..." Aliquam's bright orange gaze shifted up to Tenne. "You ... I feared that your blood as a beast would better connect to what I thought Toki needed in a lover... But I'm looking at it wrong..."
Tenne's eyes had gone wide as Aliquam spoke, but as Aliquam quieted once more, Tenne smiled. "You're valiant. You're resilient, Aliquam... But you made your future with Toki long before I came along... Your bond with her is stronger than mine. Perhaps my blood appeals better to her beast, but you're still her husband, and that's a truly sacred bond. I love Toki, but I'd never want to take her from you."

Toki fell quiet, listening to them talk. This is what they needed most of all. She could mediate and offer reassurance all she wanted- hell, she could mediate until she was blue in the face, but peace and a tentative harmony could never be achieved if they didn't want to reach it themselves.

They needed to talk, to understand each other through communication directly, not with her acting as a third party filter.

So, Toki stood quietly, letting them talk as she watched them both, eyes flicking back and forth to watch reactions.

"I believe... what had happened was while you had been chosen by Toki, indeed I had spent more time with her beast, and... I'd wager that they are far more open about their love than publicity's norm... We can both love her, and we will both be loved in the same by Toki and Dear in the same." Tenne spoke slowly, watching Aliquam's face as he listened.

After enough time dwelling in thought where he seemed to chew on the larger male’s words, Aliquam’s stiff posture loosened some and he smiled. "You must do wonders for Dear." He chuckled quietly.

The statement was unexpected but Tenne had found himself laughing, though indeed he was right. He had so closely bonded with Dear, and had found himself smitten for Toki in the same.

"Perhaps so! Though I suspect indeed that you're the sort to completely sweep darling Toki off her feet, leave her flustered and craving every moment of your touch." He would respond to Aliquam, who grinned and laughed as well as they seemed to bond in their shared interest of loving Toki.

Toki found herself smiling slowly as she watched them. Her stiff posture relaxed, and the scent of her stress and anxiety began to fade from her corner of the room. They were joking and bonding over loving her - sweeping her off her feet, and other things. They were such... guys. It would be good for Aliquam to have another guy around to hang out with- to get into the same puzzle games that he so dearly loved. Toki would need to make them a man-cave if all continued this well.

"I'm glad you two are working things out.” She thrums warmly. “I don’t expect this to be an easy road by any means, but we’ll work through it together... All three of us. Right...?"

Maybe, just maybe, sometime in the future, her bed would have both of her mates, and she’d be surrounded in love and safety. She could just hope for that. Just maybe… A hope was a thing her heart wanted- but she wouldn’t force it.

Papyrus and Tenebris both looked at her for a few moments, seeming to process her words in a similar manner- and then they glanced at each other. Aliquam grinned first and extended his hand to Tenne. "The three of us." He agreed.

Tenne smiled happily before he firmly took the offered hand and gave an unwavering shake. "Absolutely! The three of us!" He laughed, before looking up at Toki, extending his arm to her.

Toki smiled at the both of them, and then shifted closer to them on the couch. She moved to sit between them, to equally share the cuddles, and gave them both a warm smile. Her mane fluffed, warm and pleased, and her tail twisted around her husband’s leg as she leaned into her second mate’s embrace. “I’m glad that was resolved enough for you two to get along.” She chirps to them warmly. “It’ll take some time, but hopefully nothing happens that throws a wrench into anything, yeah?”

Tenne hugged her firmly and cooed into her neck as he nuzzled her fluff, while Aliquam's hands slowly trailed down to her legs and ran up the soft fabric wrapped around them.

"You're so wonderful." Aliquam cooed, Tenne quickly rumbling in agreement as his hands planted on her arms.

The hands on her legs prompted her tail to tighten around Papyrus’ shin, and for her toes to splay. There was more sensation there than she remembered having before- and it made her curious. Her bones were sensitive, yes, but they didn’t have nearly that amount of ability to sense touch. “You’re both wonderful.” She rumbled warmly to them both, nuzzling them tenderly. Toki sighs, feeling Dear creeping into the back of her mind as they both basked in the feeling of being surrounded by their mates.

About that time though, the kettle whistled and disrupted her content thoughts, making Dear retreat again. “Do we still want tea?” Toki asks quietly, showing absolutely no desire to stand and make tea, but willingness to go and turn off the burner to make the kettle stop steaming. “Or do we want to call it a night, and get some sleep?”

"Some tea sounds wonderful." Tenne cooed. "But I don't want to let go; you're so wonderful to hold, my darling." He sighed happily. And he hadn’t gotten to hold her like this in so long…

Toki sighed softly, and gave a wave of her hand. A small pull to her magic, and Stripe and a small swarm of her bees were sent buzzing to the kitchen to turn off the stove and to prep the tea for the three of them.

“Tea would be good before sleep.” Toki smiles softly. “As much as I love being held by you two, but today has been long and exhausting- I think I’ll be turning in after tea and some cuddling. We have the rest of our lives to cuddle and to hold each other.” Her primary arms looped around both of them, holding them close as she relaxed.

As her shirt shifted, it made present two shapes that weren’t often out and about since she’d gotten rid of her permanent ectobody- two shapes that Aliquam had grown to love intimately.

What all had the void done to her under her clothes…? Toki was honestly afraid to look, terrified of the dysphoria that would come at having to adjust to a body that didn’t feel like hers anymore.

Toki didn’t comment on them though, simply glancing up when the bees toted in a tray with three perfect cups of tea balanced on them.

Aliquam gave a thoughtful hum while Tenne cooed in awe and gently clapped his hands. "How impressive, my darling~" He praised, before hugging her again with a happy sigh.

"It is good to see you have not lost anything when it comes to your magical ability." Aliquam commented. "As impressive as always." He then praised with a softer voice.

“I would have known if I’d have lost my hive.” She hums to her husband, and takes the tray from her bees before sending them off to relax in her home. She settles the tray on her lap, and offers their tea out to them. She lifts her fingers and taps them against her head. “I’d have felt their loss in here. Hive mind and all that. Anyway- my skills aren’t really anything note-worthy.” She laughs softly. “The bees are just doing the work I give them the magic for.”
Toki’s jaw cracks slightly as she’s forced into a yawn, and her mane fluffs sleepily around her skull, the plume at the top of her head fluffing up around her horns. She lifts her tea, and takes a sip of the scalding hot fluid, a soft content piping noise vibrating out from her chest as her tail rattles contently against the tile floor.

Her sweet sounds made both males rumble and coo happily into her form before they reluctantly let her go to partake in their tea, though Aliquam reached out and gently wrapped his hand around the bee that provided his own tea, running his hand over her appreciatively. “Thank you, my sweet.” He praised gently.

Aliquam had several sets of heated, fuzzy legs that clung to his fingers, and the bee gave a pleased buzz to her mistress’s first mate.

Several of the other bees moved and landed on Tenne, buzzing to him in curious greeting. They remembered him, but he’d never been friendly with them on the level that Aliquam was with them.

Toki relaxed back into the couch, breathing softly as she cradled her mug to her chest. She drank it quickly, feeling the tea soothing her nerves and relaxing her body. Her sockets began to droop tiredly, the bright green of her eyes dimming sleepily. It had been a long day- her body still had phantom pains from her change, and she’d like to sleep them off, frankly.

Aliquam kissed the bee gently before he turned and laughed at the sight of Tenne covered in all the bees, watching as he buzzed through his teeth and sent them all in a flurry of buzzing.

Toki almost choked on her tea, laughing as she watched Tenne. “You’ve got the entire swarm buzzing, Tenne, good god.” Her head was alight with a tingling sensation of her smaller swarm making happy noises. “Y-you know turkey farmers do the same thing with turkeys, right?” She laughs, slurping down another mouthful of tea. They could gobble, and the entire barn of turkeys would gobble back.

“Oh indeed. I saw something of similar nature happen with his majesty. He let out the oddest sounding bleat and it brought all the goat does’ running; it even brought over our buck, wondering why he was making noises.” Tenne chortled at the memory before he cooed and gently pressed a soft kiss to the bee nearest to his face.

She laughed. “I can see that. Your Asgore is much lighter than ours is. But, there are things you’ll find here that are a lot different. I’ll tell you tomorrow though- when you’ve had a night to settle and process everything just a little bit.”

Her next yawn comes after she finishes her tea, and it makes her eye sockets water as she squeaks out a frankly adorable and sleepy yawn.

It seemed it may not only be bedtime for the kids, but also the Momma too.

Both males cooed gently before Aliquam set his cup of tea down before he lifted himself up. "Alright... let me be the joy-killer, but it's time for bed for Mommy Dearest." He announced gently.

"Alas, sad but true. Toki is a woman of many responsibilities; it would be cruel to keep her away." Tenne agreed, sighing as he too sat up. "Off to bed with you then, my love." He purred as he delicately waved her off.

Toki set the cup on the tray, and set the tray on the coffee table. She looked at Tenne with a soft, sleepy trill. She wouldn’t be sleeping with him- his bed wouldn’t fit her, and he had three kids who needed their father close to reassure them that it would be okay. But… She could give him a parting
Toki leaned forward, and gave him a gentle and tender kiss. “G’night, sweetheart.” She mumbles softly against his lips. She doesn’t linger, knowing Aliquam is watching, but the gentle affection is a reaffirmation that she loves him and lets him know it. Standing up, Toki loops her fingers into Aliquam’s arms and yawns again. She nuzzles into his shoulder, half draping into his side like a lump of sleepiness. “I’ll wash the tea cups tomorrow.” She yawns. “For now… Bed, before you have to drag me up the stairs.”

The kiss was savored and Tenne longed to prolong it, but even with Aliquam offering a smile to show how it bothered him less than it would have initially, he knew that complete acceptance had a way to go.

Aliquam helped Toki to her feet before he kissed her cheek gently. "Of course, come on." He purred. "To bed with a sleepy mama."

"To bed with a sleepy mama!" Toki chirped, returning his kiss and then heading upstairs to get into her pajamas. She quietly worked her shirt off on the way up, happy sounds escaping her once she reached her room.

Toki stripped off his shirt as she hit upstairs, trying not to let the changes to her body bother her. Ultimately, a more beastly torso and upper legs, particularly her thighs, and a permanent ectobody weren’t too different or weird, and she found herself relaxing into her silky nightgown as she crawled into bed, tail swishing behind her. It wasn’t as bad as she feared- from her ribs and down was permanently green ectoflesh, while her chest, pelvis, and thighs seemed to be made out of the odd bone like flesh material that most beasts seemed to be made from.

Aliquam had stuck around as she changed but it was in that grace period of her nudity that he gained an awestruck expression and slowly changed into his sleepwear. Papyrus had to take a moment to ogle the sheer artwork that was his beautiful wife, before he moved to lay beside Toki, smiling happily as he wrapped his arms around her chest and nuzzled into the two mounds now attached to her front.

"They're back~ You got them back~" He cooed happily.

Toki couldn’t stop the laugh that came from her. “And they’re not even ecto anymore. You’re stuck with the real thing for the rest of forever, I’d wager. Which… I both love and don’t. Bras are terrible.” She coils her arms around him, and lets him enjoy the plush swells of the breasts motherhood had given her twice-over.

Her tail threaded around his legs as she twined her body with his, and she made a soft happy sound. Toki was… happy.

"Hhhhh~ To hell with bras, just let me hold them and I'll never let them get sore from accursed underwires~" Aliquam cooed as he cupped her breasts in his hands, giving them a soft squeeze with the happiest sounds he could make.

He was such an absolute dork- but Toki was glad that he seemed to like the changes in her body well enough. She gave a soft, sleepy laugh, and fluffed her mane. She pressed herself down, her head curling into his skull like a cat sleeping face first on a couch, and felt his skull settle into the cradle of her horns. She made a sleepy noise, and settled down to sleep as she felt their two cats wiggle their way into the bedroom and up onto the bed with them.
Toki had odd dreams that night—small, black hands reaching for her, voices telling her to remember, to speak, to stop hiding, things chasing her in the dark—and she woke up early in the morning with the deep and intense need to tell Tenne about the pups Tenebris had adopted.

She woke up with Aliquam’s head buried in her chest, and she sighed quietly. She could smell the scent of mint wafting up through the cracked door to their room though, and found it in herself to slowly stir and gently shift Gracie up so Aliquam was spooning her instead of his fluffy wife.

Thanks to the almost chinchilla like fur of their adorable gray cat, Papyrus didn’t even stir. Gael only blinked at her sleepily from his roost on the tall skeleton’s hip while she rolled out of bed.

Toki made her way downstairs, yawning as she rubbed one of her eyes. She was following the scent of mint, which led her to the back patio.

The source of the smell turned out to be Tenne, who was resting his arms against the banister of the porch, bent over it as he gently puffed at his pipe.

It wasn’t long since she showed up at the back door that he lowered his pipe from his mouth and he sighed out a mouthful of smoke. "Usually, one would be deterred by the cold. But in this instant... I fear that if I no longer feel the cold, I will wake up, and all of this will have been a dream... a wonderfully painful dream." He spoke quietly.

For a moment it seemed like he was talking to her until there was a soft rumble and a familiar beast sat up on the other side of the porch.

Papa.

There was a moment of fear in Toki's mind, but it ebbed as she realized the beast was talking to his counterpart, not bristling aggressively.

"Indeed..." Papa started, stepping around to lean against the porch beside his counterpart, his gaze looking at the pure white head among the deep black fur that was Tenne's mane. "A dream of any other name, a nightmare... You are outcast in a world not your own, yet you are meant to exist here; your threads of sanity were not cut when you passed." He rumbled lowly.

"Mmh..." Tenne puffed again from his pipe and offered it to the larger, who rumbled and turned as to allow him to exhale the cloud of smoke and steam into the face of the larger, who slowly inhaled it before sighing quietly.

Papa moved away, tapping his claws. "You exist here just as they do... Will you want to take them back?"

Tenne blinked at the question, before he peered back at Papa. "They, my counterpart?"

"The children..."

"Ah... The pups that had stayed with Toki, you mean?"

Papa had nodded slowly before Tenne smiled.

"No. I would have loved to raise them, but they were born in this world to your scent, your touch... they know you as their father. I have no benefit taking that from you, my counterpart."
Papa could be heard sighing in relief, before he returned to the railing at his counterpart's side.

"But... I would like to meet them... Willow's brothers and sisters..."

"Of course... this I can give you. You will meet them, not as your own, but family in the same."

"Thank you, Tenebris."

Papa rumbled quietly, before he chuckled. "I must go, before the pups wake to find me gone... They will not be happy to wake without their breakfast."

"Well said... I best get some sleep... Willow wakes first and I usually feed her before my sons wake..." Tenne agreed, giving one last puff of his pipe before he turned to pat out the lit leaves.

Papa leaned down to accept the exhale of the smoke and purred in thanks before he turned and leaped off the porch. He collected what looked to be a dead deer before he rumbled in farewell and started for his home.

Tenne watched him go before smiling and he looked down at the grass, before he sighed and lowered his head to rest it on his arms.

Toki took that moment to step out, having watched the whole exchange. She swallowed quietly- the light dusting of snow on the deck crunched under her the pads of her toes, and she grimaced at the cold feeling, before moving closer to him.

She lifted her primary hand and rested it on his shoulder. “So... you know.” She mumbles softly to him. “About the pups.”

She hadn’t meant for him to find out from Tenebris- but... Well, apparently she couldn’t be the one to tell him everything. Sometimes he’d learn things the hard way. She wondered if he knew that the Tenebris and Asgore in this world were lovers, not simply the best of friends.

Her mane ruffled anxiously, and she drew her hand away, moving to instead rest her palms on the icy railing next to him. “I should have told you before...” She murmurs quietly. “It... It should have been something you learned from me.”

He knew she had been there and gave a patient smile as he looked at her, his tail slowly looped around to entwine with hers. "I am not angry about it, my love... I understand how it would seem like a topic that was hard to approach. Talking to me about someone else with my name raising my children? Without context, I might have been upset now that I am on the same plain... but I have no malice for him, my dear, I promise. I've meet he who raises my young...” He chuckled gently. "And I've met his beast. He is proud- perhaps a little arrogant in his ego and his place in the hierarchy, but he's a kind father. He fathered your husband after all, and look how he came out.”

Toki smiled, and slowly leaned into his shoulder. Her head came to nuzzle against his bicep. “I'm glad you like him.” She mumbles softly. “I'm sorry I didn't keep them- but... It was hard to imagine raising our children without you.” She admits quietly. “But... Tenebris can't produce children of his own through natural means, thanks to a whole slew of things. So... The official story that the rest of the world knows, is that I was a surrogate for him and Asgore. He cried when I offered to let him and Asgore adopt the litter... He didn't get to really raise Papyrus and Sans, you see? Tenebris here has had... dealings with the void. I don't know the whole story, but I know he was gone for a long time- he missed a lot of my husband and my brother in law being young.”

The litter was a second chance for him to be a father again- to raise children on his own merit, not to come back to them already grown.
Toki knew intimately how it felt to skip through time and miss months and years of your children’s lives.

"I know. He told me." He assured her. "He couldn't take another chunk of his soul, so he hoped for a miracle. It's alright. I will love them as an uncle, but the honor of fatherhood is his... and I am fine with that."

“Are you?” She asks him quietly, peeking up at him just slightly. Her eye lights glowed in the darkness, sending twinkles of emerald light across the snow, not unlike the emerald light coming from under her silky nightgown. “I mean…” It wasn’t like she and Tenne couldn’t have more children- even Papyrus had gotten attached to the litter. Honestly, she’s pretty sure seeing her have a litter for his father essentially had kick-started his desire for another batch of babies of his own to cradle and to croon to.

But having another set didn’t replace the set that was lost- Toki felt the same when she’d adopted Kai and Quinn. It had soothed the aching hole for Honey and Skylar, but it could never replace them. The hole was still there- less painful, more hidden, but still there.

The holes were gone now though that she had all of her children and mates with her. She only had a hole for Sequoia- poor, poor Sequoia…

"I will simply wait my turn, my love... I would... so greatly... love to have more children with you... but it's not my place..." He spoke softer, his tail tightening a little tighter. "Not yet at least..."

“It will happen when it happens, my love...” She bumps her head against his arm, and her sockets close with a sigh. Some part of her eases, but some part of her tenses. “I truly do await the day,” She says quietly, “when it doesn’t matter who gives me children- because no matter who sires them, they will have two fathers and a mother who love them unequivocally.”

Her statement said so casually echoed in Tenne’s ears for a moment before he smiled and sighed gently as he hugged her to his side. "I love you... so, so much, Tokiko~" He purred.

"I love you too, Tenne." She smiled and leaned into his hug. She enjoyed his warmth quite a bit. Her magic warmed her insides, but all of this flesh she had... Well, it was drafty under the night gown.

A yawn split her jaw, the sound a tiny squeak that proclaimed the surefire fact her sleep had been interrupted, and that it was far too early for the queen bee to be up and awake. Once upon a time late nights had been her thing- and then she'd become a mom and suddenly a bedtime was the best thing ever.

"What woke you up, Tenne?” She asked him a few moments later.

"A passing thought in my dreams that dared to wake me." He answered, turning with her under his arm. "Come on, my love, let's go back to bed..."

"Weird dreams for me." She yawns, and leans into him, letting him guide her back inside. "Bed sounds good to me. I am beyond sleepy, and we have a gaggle of kids to entertain tomorrow."

He nodded in agreement. "Children's birthdays, yes~?” He purred, before he pressed a kiss to the crown of her head. "Have you already picked out a cake for them?” He asked.

"Not quite their birthdays yet." She laughs. "Another couple says. But, excitable kids are excitable, and they know the thirteenth is looming soon, so they've been a little wild when they get home from school."
Speaking of. They'd need to sign up Tenne's boys for classes.

"I was planning to bake a cake for the kids, but not yet or Honey will eat it all. She has a thing with sweets." She snorts, shutting the kitchen door behind them and locking it against the cold. "I'm not the best at cakes though."

He gave a small smile. "Ah, I actually asked because I wanted to make the cake... I was trying this new recipe for a lighter, fluffier cake before all this came about happening... I would love to see if it was as good as I hoped it is." He offered.

"Sort of like a sponge cake or an angel-food cake?" Toki blinked curiously. It might have been too sophisticated a cake for the kids to really appreciate, but they'd eat anything if you called it cake and slathered it in copious amounts of frosting.

Toki smiled. "That would be lovely." She leaned up, gently pulling him down by his mane, and pressed a kiss to his cheek. "The twins will love it. When the boys birthdays come around, we'll do something special for them too. And Willow as well. You'll have to let me know when her birthday is. I want to knit her something."

Whatever reply she'd been about to get stopped the moment that her fingers tangled into his mane and gently tugged him down to press a fang filled kiss to his cheek. He gave a hot purr and turned to meet her kiss affectionately, pulling her into it with a sweet rumble.

Toki melted against him with a soft and sleepy sigh, her sockets drifting to half mast as she gazed up at him tenderly. She returned his kiss with the sort of sleepy vigor one might expect from a half asleep bed-mate, but it had no less love than a fully conscious kiss would have.

His hands trailed down her back, ghosting over her wing joints and the soft, gossamer surfaces that allowed her flight when she so wished, and settled down on her rear. Tenne gave her posterior an appreciative squeeze before he pulled back from the kiss and purred in satisfaction. "God, I've missed that~" He purred happily, before he pecked her head gently. "Upstairs. Bedtime." He told her with a mock stern tone.

By the time he'd released her, Toki was just a little kiss drunk. Maybe a little bit exhaustion drunk too. Like the walking, talking, physical manifestation of night blogging. She giggled at his stern tone. "Yes big daddy Tenne. " Was the purr necessary? Not in the slightest.

Was her sashay up the stairs as she pulled away from him necessary in any way, shape or form? Hell yes, many times over. Exhausted she was, but she was forever a tease.

She made her way to her room, quietly slipping open the door and glancing back at him so she could wish him a sleepy and saucy good night.

Fluffing up, Tenne grinned happily as he followed Toki upstairs. "I hate seeing you go but I love watching you leave." He purred quietly before he went back to his own room. "Good night, my love."

Toki laughed very softly, and blew him a kiss, flushing at the comment of watching her go. Yes, she had 'that ass' as the memes went. "Good night, my dear." She smiled at him, and then slipped into her room.

Toki slipped back into bed with Aliquam, a pleased sigh leaving her. She moved Gracie, much to the cats' displeasure, but found herself drifting back towards sleep within a few short minutes of Aliquam settling his face back into her chest.
Days rolled onward. Between prepping for the kids birthday, and with everything that happened in getting Tenne and his children into her world, Toki had forgotten something.

She remembered to make a call as she was getting Kai, Quinn and sweet little Willow enrolled for schooling at their appropriate age and knowledge levels.

However, the days she'd wasted had been too long.

By the time Tenebris called the hospital to see about helping Yuri Shimada, he received news that simply made him wilt at recalling the frailty of human lifespans.

Yuri Shimada had passed away in her sleep when her health took a turn for the worse the day prior, leaving behind a mourning family struggling to cope.
Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: Small Montage of things we couldn’t make into full chapters before it hits the true chapter. I know it feels like we’re glossing over Yuri’s death, but… Tbh, I wrote it in a week or less before my own grandma passed, and I didn’t want to just un-write it because irl made it rough to deal with. It just meant we’d do a glossed over section for her funeral- and y’know… That was okay with us, y’know? Believe it or not, Silver isn’t actually one who likes Angst. That’s usually me tbh. Tho uh. NSFW warning for this chap. Under 18, go away.

Also, just so ya’ll ain’t blindsided, the total number of chapters has been announced.

Following the wake of devastation delivered to the Shimada family at the loss of their matriarch, Yuri, the family received a rather hefty sum of money donated anonymously into their accounts with the note to ‘Give her the best of what she would have wanted- T’.

The family was not all that certain who it was- they had many well off customer’s who’s names started with T, many of whom had grown to adore the wily elderly woman.

But, they obeyed- and thus Yuri was cremated, and placed in a silver plated urn that was engraved with a cobbler’s anvil, and placed into a glass-plated niche inside the mausoleum with several items to show the kind of woman that she was. Her picture was set in there, as well as a metal plaque with her name, birth and death year, and epitaph on it.

It was something a cobbler’s family could likely have never afforded without a little help from their mystery angel.

Oddly enough, a fresh bouquet of silk flowers showed up for Yuri the same day she was laid to rest, and they decorated the outside of her niche.

On the same day that the brothers returned to the store, they found a similar deposit into the store’s bank account, not unlike the anonymous donation that they got for helping with Yuri’s funeral. Hanzo and Genji read the note that was attached, and wondered if it was the same person, or, perhaps, two people working together.

‘I know how hard it is to lose someone, and I know how hard it is to pick back up right away and go back to work. So, take some time and mourn. This should cover a couple weeks of bereavement. T’

Many mourned her loss in the days that followed- but like all things… the world turned ever onward.

The twins birthday arrived with fanfare- and the day was spent having an absolute blast. They commandeered their mother for the day, having her play all sorts of games with them. They had her take them for a flight for a couple hours- wanting to fly all over the forest and up high into the sky.

The flight served them well- it let Tenne invade the kitchen to begin cooking while his sons took a Tenné made a strawberry shortcake- and of course, he had his faithful daughter Willow to help him make it. She had to sample the strawberries as Tenné sugared them and poured them over the cake to sit and soak. She was too precious to deny- all four of her hands would clutch one of the berries, and she’d nibble at the sugary syrup covered fruit, and make the most delighted coos as she nibbled bite after bite out of her treat.

Her little antenna waved, and her wings would flutter with every bite.

She was absolutely precious.

By the time the cake was done and in the fridge, his sweet little Willow was absolutely smeared in strawberry sauce, and she had to be taken to the bath to be washed up once more.

After all, strawberries tasted the best when they were all over your face.

By the time Toki got back with Honey and Skylar, it was time for dinner, which the whole family was involved with. Tenebris came over, and it was utter chaos making enough dinner for everyone- but that’s what family was all about.

When dinner was over, it was time for cake- and then when cake had been served and eaten, Asgore rounded most of the kids and took them to the bathroom to wash up. Seven messy beast pups, four messy skeletons, and one put upon older bunny brother trying to help his dad round them all up made the bathroom very busy.

Thankfully, Solstice was an easy clean- Grillby cleaned her up quick and easy.

When the kids came back downstairs, gifts were given- and after oodles and oodles of thanks were given, the children ran off to the living room to play for the next few hours, letting the adults get a little while to pick up the house from the tornado of little ones that had thrashed it.

And later that night, when everyone had gone home and all the kids were in bed, Toki had gotten hugged and cuddled by Skylar and Honey and told that they’d had the best birthday ever.

Toki had gone to bed after all of the children did with a warm feeling blooming in her chest- one she’d thought was love for her children. The children’s birthday had been an absolute blast, and while it hadn’t been exactly as she planned, they had enjoyed it and that was exactly all she hoped for ultimately.

However, she woke up the next morning with the same heated feeling in her chest. But it had spread, growing from her chest to all over her body. She ached from the tip of her tail to the ends of her horns- and shifting positions seemed to make it worse.

In her sleep addled mind, her first thought was, was she ill? Or was it from her husband laying over her?

Aliquam was draped over her, not unlike a blanket- he was flush with her backside, and had her wings pinned as his arms trapped her primary biceps to her sides. His face was tucked against the back of her neck, and he wasn’t movi- wait. He was moving. His hips were… rocking?
They were grinding against her backside.

"Hnnn~" He sighed into the back of her neck.

Oh... Oh...

Shit.

Toki shifted, and squirmed out from under him as she felt her body aching to arch back into him. She wanted to roll over, press into the hard bone that was rubbing against her backside, and ride him until the burning sensation in her body went away.

But she couldn’t—she couldn’t just... pick one and choose one- that wouldn’t be right, and they hadn’t… They hadn’t had long enough to be here, to stay here, for Tenne and Aliquam to even share her bed at the same time for sleeping, let alone for sex.

Toki rolled away from him and out of the bed, her legs aching and her back nearly bowing with need. It seemed it had hit while she’d slept, but the children’s birthday had worn her out too much for her to wake up for the earlier parts of it. She staggered upright with a gasp, her mane ruffling with pain, and she went to go slip into some clothes.

She needed clothes on- more clothes, the less likely she’d be to just rub up against something. She was an adult- she could handle this. She could do it- even if it felt like Toki was covered in many, many heating blankets turned on high. She could manage it.

She hoped.

Toki managed to make her walk to the dresser almost stable- almost- and she scrambled into a skirt and a loose turtleneck. She was burning up under them, but it would, hopefully, help control a little of her urges. She had to get the kids off to school- their birthday had fallen on a Sunday, which left Monday being a school day again.

She did her best not to wake Aliquam- but she felt his eyes on her as she moved. How could she have doubted he’d have woken up when she’d rolled out of his grasp. “Good morning, my love.” Toki says, trying for nonchalance and most likely failing with the amount of warmth her body is putting off. She needs a cold shower once the kids are off to school.

"Curse Mondays" He groaned into his pillow, before he sighed and smiled up at her. "Good morning, my love~" He crooned happily, sitting up and rubbing his eyes before he stretched, and rolled out of bed, no doubt to come envelop her and get high off her scent once more. "You smell enticing, you know that, right?"

Toki had managed nonchalance up until he rolled out of bed and began to stroll towards her. How he moved was nothing less than predatory, the roll of his hips, the cant of his chest, and how he held his shoulders as he looked at her. She felt Dear stirring, urging her to accept, to submit to her mate- and Toki shushed her as she felt her mane pluming upwards, arousal pooling in her belly and in her scent. She wanted him. She wanted him badly- she wanted him to ease the ache in her bones, the heat in her belly.

She felt irritation spark in her- god damn it, she couldn’t even accept the deeper affections of either mate yet, and that might take months before that’s achieved. Fuck if that wasn’t enough to drive a woman to spit fire-

Instead of spitting fire or showing the spark of irritation, Toki squeaked. “’Y’know, I actually think I stink a little and maybe might need a shower so I’m gonna go get the kids to school and then do
And then Toki fled, trying to not make it seem like she was fleeing, but oh, oh her instincts and every motion of her frame said she was. She slid out her bedroom door, knocked on the kids doors to rouse them, and then began a slow walk for the stairs to go down. Ye-gods, she wished Tenebris could invent a heat suppressant. Five days of agony was going to drive her mad, and she didn’t even have any sex toys anymore.

Aliquam gave a low rattling groan, an agonizing noise to the needy Toki, as he followed her out of their room and past the children's bedroom, past Tenna's and his children's' room, and stopped her just at the stairs. He huffed as he wrapped his arms around her and pulled her back, pressing his face into her shoulder, snuffling under the neck of her turtleneck. "Stink? Absolutely not... Oh my love you smell addictive~ " He huffed, before he ran his tongue along her shoulder to the base of her neck, "As good as you taste~"

Toki’s legs positively quivered, and she had to grip the handrail with two hands to keep herself upright or she’d have simply gone tumbling down. Her mouth opened with a soft pant, and heat plumed into the air as she gave a shamefully needy moan. “Oh gods...” She whispered roughly. Fuck. Fuck, fuck, fuckety fuck. “I- I’m glad you think I smell good.” She mumbled. “B-but ah, we can’t do- the kids are... going to come downstairs for breakfast and school soon.” She rasped.

Excuses- she needed excuses. They couldn’t mate in front of the pups, and Aliquam was supposed to work today, she thought- maybe? Hopefully. And Tenna… She could say she was going out to exercise. Exercise would be good- she could go hide in the woods for a while, leave them a note that they’re on kid-duty until it was over. Yesss that would work…

“I need to p-pack their lunches.” She mumbles, trying weakly to pull from his grasp.

"Then I will wait... just a little longer... but please be quick... you smell so wonderful...” He crooned quietly, slowly letting her go though not backing away. She had better hurry or else Tenna would open his door and catch wind of her.

Toki fled downstairs as quick as her unsteady legs would allow her, trailing the pheromones of her heat like a guiding beacon to her.

She reached the bottom of the stairs, and made her way to the kitchen, taking a deep breath to steady herself. Okay. She’d have a few minutes to compose herself and figure out something to say to her mates once the kids left the house- but for now, she’d get the kitchen all to her-

Or not.

Because there, in the kitchen, in all his pluming maned glory, was Tenna- with a gift.

"Good morning, my love." Tenna purred gently, standing proudly over his downed deer offering.

He was barely clothed, bare necessities only, with the smell of breakfast wafting from the stove.

Toki stared. There was a dead deer on her floor, a nearly naked Tenna standing above it, and breakfast on the stove. Her libido did that fun thing where it spiked upward and filled the kitchen with pheromones and desire.

“G-good morning, love.” She stammers, still focused on the deer. Well, that was a far cry better than a raccoon. But... Fuck, the children were going to scream if they saw it. It was one thing seeing meat being cooked, but it was another to see Bambi’s mom laying dead on the floor. “That’s... That’s a lovely deer.” Her scent proved how much she liked it.
She could hear the stairs squeaking, and her mane fluffed more, tail twitching with a sudden anxious feeling of being pinned in by two males. Shit- had Aliquam come downstairs? The children wouldn’t be down for a few more minutes- dragging their feet on Monday morning and all that- so it had to be him… Fuckfuckfuck…

"I’m glad you think so. It will feed you well." He purred proudly. "I made breakfast for the children, and their lunches are waiting for them." He rumbled happily.

“A-ah, I see.” She stammered. “You did a good job.”

Aliquam reached the bottom of the stairs, and approached Toki from behind. He hooked one possessive arm around her shoulders, kissing her temple lightly while at the same time inhaling her scent, and then he glanced across the kitchen. The deer didn’t surprise him- Tenne hunted, and frankly, fresh venison was very good and the children all benefited from it. However, he felt Sentinel bristling, and making himself bristle, as he noted the packed lunches, and the finished and ready breakfast- which his fantastic and amazing wife couldn’t have done.

His orange gaze settled back on Tenne, and he stiffened his shoulders subtly. He didn’t have a mane to bristle, but he could posture in other ways.

“I see breakfast lured you down.” Toki swallows dryly. “Look- Tenne got everything ready for breakfast and to send the kids off when they’re up.”

"How kind of him." Aliquam's tone is low in his throat as he watched Tenne.

The larger male beast eyed Aliquam and lightly puffed up. "Just out of bed, Aliquam?"

"And more dressed than you." Papyrus quipped back, eyes settling lowly at half mast.

Toki’s mane stiffened in awkwardness and the instinctive need to see which of her mates won her favor for the day. No, just… NO . She wasn’t going to play that game- no ma’am. She was going to have all or none- and not leave one out. They’d all suffer instead of just one. Dear gods, there was subtle sniping going on between them. She lifted a fist to lightly cough into it, and moved out from under Aliquam’s reach, moving to see what was made for breakfast.

It looked like Tenne had decided upon ‘breakfast burritos’, something he had enjoyed making from his culture. It also let her get the kids up and out of the house with a mobile breakfast. Toki cracked her knuckles, grabbed several tortillas, and began stuffing the tortillas with cheese, scrambled eggs, sausage, bacon, and grilled peppers, complete with a tiny sprinkle of hot sauce for those who enjoyed it on their burritos. An omelet in a burrito, basically.

Toki prepared and wrapped five of them in foil for the children and settled them near the kids’ lunches. She could hear feet moving upstairs- the kids were up, likely dressed, and probably about to come downstairs to collect breakfast and their lunches.

She swallowed awkwardly. “Lets not argue today, please. It’s already going to be a rough enough week as it is- lets not make it worse by sniping at each other.”

Tenne rumbled quietly. "I'll go start processing the deer. Let me know if you need anything, darling." He purred, before he dragged the deer back outside.

Aliquam watched her go before he puffed a little. "Didn't even clean the thing..." He pouted.

Toki had a momentary bit of panic as Tenne left, leaving her with just Aliquam in the kitchen with her. She took a shuddering breath, aware of the smell of masculinity and mate, and her growing desire to take one of them. Instead of doing that, she prepared breakfast for her husband and her mate, and set them on plates, ultimately deciding she was too frazzled to eat breakfast herself.

So, she moved to the sink to begin cleaning the dishes before the eggs stuck to the pan. “He didn’t.” She agrees. “But… He was thoughtful in making breakfast, so I didn’t have to. It looks like we slept in a little later than normal this morning- and I really don’t want the kids to be late to school.”

"Mmh... still..." He huffed. "I like when you cook..." He moved to rest against her back, nuzzling her as he sighed hotly into her neck. "At least he left... and I get you to myself..." He murmured, starting to nip down her shoulder.

“A-ah, Papy…” She huffs softly, neck instinctively moving to let him nibble her. Her legs got weak, and she slumped a little into him as she washed the dishes. Fuck- fuck, fuck, fuck, she was pinned to the counter. “I… Hhh… You’ve got to share, love.” She mumbles shakily, her eyes closing as she pants, heat raking over her flesh and making her nipples pebble under her shirt.

God, heat was torture.

"I was here first." Was his hissing reply as he gave a slightly sharper nip, his arms coming up to caress her sides. "I want you first..." He growled, before he turned, bristling as the door opened.

"Sorry I forgot-" Tenne was cut off by a feral, possessive growl from Aliquam, before he growled in reply. "In the kitchen, have you no decency, young man!?"

"My kitchen."

That had Tenne fluffing a little as he made a disappointed face, before he looked at Toki. Though it was at that glance that Big Daddy had a good something to say and a rough sounding growl lifted from him, which spurred a sharp hiss from Aliquam.

The rumbling growl at her back made her weak at the knees, and every fiber of Toki’s being wanted her to bend over and bare her womanhood for her first mate to ravish her as he so desired. Being caught between two rumbling beasts had her wanting to roll over and accept their advances with submissive sounding buzzes.

However...

The logical side of Toki sparked with a temper at being used as kindling between the pissing match the two males seemed to be having.

While they seemed to be growling, and bristling tighter and tighter as they stared each other down, they were ignoring the growing bristle to Toki’s mane and the threatening rattle that was coming from her tail striking the tiled floor.

The thing that tipped the scale was the thundering of feet coming down the hall towards the stairs.

She shoulder-checked Papyrus, knocking him out of a growl mid-way as it rumbled out of his chest as she sidestepped out of his grasp and away from the throbbing length pulsing possessively against her backside. She stalked to the kids lunches as she heard them heading down the stairs.

Toki took them in hand, and then whirled on her mates. A growl rumbled up her chest- a clear threat that she was not taking any advances, despite Dear crooning for her to please, please take one of them, any one. She shoved lunch bags into Aliquam’s arms, and then stalked over to Tenne and shoved the breakfast burritos into his arms for him to give to the kids.
“Take a walk.” She snarls to them both, her wings tensing on her back. “The children need to go to school. Go cool your heads out in the snow.” She snaps, and chases them out of her kitchen. She’s not going to put up with them going at each other’s throats over her. No ma’am. She will go spend her heat out in the forest, and they can have a week of being dual-dads.

Both males were chased out easily into the front room and they nursed their dented pride behind matching smiles as the children came downstairs, Tenne rattling happily in greeting. ”Morning pups!” He’d greet, while Aliquam smile made sure he had the lunches in order.

Quinn peeked around both men, and waved to Toki. “Morning Momma!” He always greeted her first- and he wasn’t disappointed when she waved back to him with the same vigor. Sated, he looked up at Tenne with a soft hum. “Breakfast burritos? Yummy!”

“We’re almost late.” Skylar notes. “So portable meals for breakfast is a good idea.”

“Daddy!” Honey latches onto Aliquam’s knee and nuzzles her horns against his pants. “You have no shirt on! Silly Daddy.”

“And you have almost nothing.” Kai blinks at his dad. “Is it naked Monday?”

“No.” Skylar makes a face. “Adults are just being weird. C’mon- lets get our food and go. Here, Willow.” Skylar was a bit taller than Willow, so he handed her the burrito made for her, and let out a soft giggle at her happy trill.

Willow unwrapped her burrito and immediately began nibbling on it. She waved at Toki, and then cradled her burrito to her chest while she worked on gobbling it down.

Kai looked up at Aliquam. “So. Lunches? We’ve gotta go to make it to the school.”

“They’re going to walk with you to school.” Toki’s sugary sweet tone doesn’t alert the kids to anything- but it would most definitely make the adults flinch. “A little cold air will do your silly father’s some good.”

Kai and Quinn exchanged a glance that Honey and Skylar also seemed to share, before they looked at the other set of siblings, and after a moment, they immediately unanimously decided to drop the topic faster than a hot coal.

"Okay Momma!" Skylar chirped.

"We'll see you after school, Momma!" Quinn announced.

"Can I at least get my coat?" Aliquam whined as he seemed to sober up the moment he stepped out into the snowy cold of mid-October.

"Likewise... I'm not wearing any pants." Tenne then whined quietly from next to Aliquam, both of them peeking back into the house.

Hearing their whines from the front door produced two reactions from inside the house. The first being a flare of magic. The second was their coats drifting out the door, carried by a set of calm looking hornets. They didn't seem to share their masters mood, thankfully enough for both men- or their clothes would surely have been singed.
Toki didn't even respond to them. Instead, she called through the house to the kids. "Have a good day at school, sweethearts!"

Yes, Papyrus and Tenne were on the shit-list.

They took the offered coats and cooed to the bees in thanks as they climbed into their provided warmth before accepting their tasks. Tenne seeming more able as his pads were already used to the cold, Aliquam giving soft groans and grumbles as he seemed to cradle his hip more than he focused on the children.

"Shall we go, then?" He piped up regardless.

The group of them nodded, and off they went.

The walk back from the school was just as miserable as the walk to the school. Their state of dress- or lack there of, in both of their cases- spoke to some sort of shenanigans going on, and the other adults were snickering at them in good humor. It also left them extremely chilly, and in no way feeling warm and fuzzy in the nearly arctic cold type of wind.

Tenne exhaled roughly as he uncomfortably trudged home with Papyrus at his elbow. His tail trailed low through the snow- he could feel the burn of heat lingering in his system, but the chill of ice and snow was enough to keep him under control. Age also helped.

He glanced to his companion, hobbling slowly and clutching at his leg. "You know..." He mumbles softly. "I think we went about courting her the wrong way." Tenne comments quietly, rubbing his arms briskly. The coat was warm, but his legs? Not so much.

"It's my fault." Aliquam soon managed in reply, his hip aching as he limped along. "You had the right idea about wooing her. However, my mind was fogged with her scent and all reason was out the window..."

"Mmm... It wasn’t all you. I didn’t have to react as I did- the fault lies with both of us there, and she let us know we were both out of bounds." Tenne sighs through his teeth. "Do you know what I meant by we went about courting her the wrong way?"

"..." Aliquam thought for a moment, pondering just what the other seemed to mean. However, he soon lifted his hand and face-palmed. "Oh god damn it!" He snarled.

Tenne fluffed and sidestepped away from Aliquam. "What?" He asks- semi demands- warily twitching his tail.

"I get what you mean." Aliquam responded as his hands fell again, a defeated look growing on his face. "Our beasts aren't completely used to polyamory. We didn't act like we were willing to share with one another... That, plus she had a responsibility with all of the children from both of us, and our behavior got us both with our asses on the curb."

"Well... You hit the nail on the head." Tenne blinked at him, his mane softening. "We both went about it the wrong way. I know we're not used to sharing with anyone bigger than your children- I'm not either. Even when I had Toki and Sequoia, it was just me with what my beast considered two females in one body- there was no sharing with a rival male. You and I are going to have to... Well, woo her together if we hope to get anywhere."
Tenne sighed, folding his arms behind his back. He straightened, popping his spine as he compressed the muscles in his arms. “To be honest, Toki told me something along that lines late at night when we were talking once a few days back. She said to me, ‘I truly do await the day when it doesn’t matter who gives me children- because no matter who sires them, they will have two fathers and a mother who love them unequivocally.’”

He lets him chew on that for a moment, before sighing softly. “She loves us both, Papyrus- she loves us both with all of her being, or she wouldn’t have chosen us to be her bonded mates. Us sparring for her attention, to have her all to just ourselves, hurts her. So… I think we need to figure out some way for us to share her love without baring teeth at each other. I’ve been without her for four years, Papyrus- I’ll do anything now to keep her happy and to stay with her.”

"Mmh...” Aliquam had to stop at a bench to get weight off his hip. He settled down, straightening his leg and pressing in on his hip at a pressure point to hopefully soothe some of the pain the cold had brought to the prosthetic limb and it’s connecting point. Then the pain abated enough for him to focus properly, he contemplated what Tenne had said to him and then looked up at the larger male. "We're going to have to apologize... But how would we go about courting her in a less competitive way?” He asked softer.

"Hm... Perhaps working together on cleaning and preparing the deer?” Tenne suggests, standing near the other as he rested on the bench. Tenne shivered, his tail rattling, and he gave a bitter glance at the snow that he loathed very much. Snow back in his world hadn’t hardly been this cold- not even in Snowdin. No wonder Toki had hurt her paws in the snow there if this was the kind of cold that she was used to. “Apologizing to females is never an easy task, and there is most definitely not a perfect way to do it. But, I think we can work together on the deer and go from there. Our cooperation will show her we’re willing to work together for her- perhaps after we can build her a nest together in the main room, if she hasn’t already constructed one herself? She’s always been fond of soft things.”

And the softer the bedding, the better her sounds were when she was fucked into them. He had to give himself a controlled shake as Big Daddy, as she had so aptly named his beast, rumbled through his mind. None of that, Tenne thought- this was a civilized conversation.

Aliquam noticed the shake that Tenne had let off and heard a mental snicker coming from Sentinel who seemed to figure what Tenne’s beast had most likely rumbled, before he gave a quiet laugh himself. "A nest sounds perfect. We have plenty of blankets, and if we prepare her a meal of fresh cut venison, she very well would have her sacrificial meal to grant us entry into her nest.” He agreed.

"Indeed she would.” He agrees warmly. When Tenne violently shivers again, he decides he can’t take waiting on the limping man anymore. Tenne offers Papyrus a hand up. “Well- it’s going to take us some time to skin and gut the deer properly. So, shall we?” His gaze slid down to Aliquam’s leg, wondering why on earth he was limping so badly. He wouldn’t ask though. It simply wasn’t proper for one alpha to ask another why they were wounded- it drew attention to it and made the other think they were having their weaknesses spied out to be taken advantage of.

He took the offered hand and smiled up at Tenne. "We best hurry then...” He agreed. "Let's go before she starts to wonder why we're gone for so long.”

"Indeed.” Tenne laughs softly, pulling Aliquam to his feet with one swift tug. Once he's steady, Tenne starts meandering down the path towards the house, his steps slightly quicker to escape the blasted cold.
The house was empty when they got home. Well, empty in a sense. Sobek and Snuggle were cuddled up on the floor by the fire, and the cats had stretched out and claimed the couch for their own- but there was no sign of Toki.

Their breakfast burritos lay cold on the counter, not even a bee to keep them warm, testament to how out of sorts Toki was.

Her scent trailed out the back door, from there, foot prints tracked her way across the snow. She had gone through her Apiary, and towards the river framing the back of their property it seemed.

Her tracks appeared again on the other side of the swollen winter river, and disappeared into the healthy foliage that had survived the firebombing from a little more than a year ago.

The tracks led deeper into the woods, where she'd clearly gone before.

But she would have to wait. There was a doe to be skinned and cleaned.

While Aliquam went to put on some proper clothing, Tenne stepped into the back. He noticed the tracks and rumbled in thought, before he waved his tail up into his grip and swung it sharply, slicing across the doe’s throat to bleed it.

It didn't take long for Aliquam to come hobbling out in clean clothing that was a little warmer than his pajama pants.

He glanced to Tenne, and then moved to help, brandishing a kitchen knife to work on helping loosen the pelt from his side.

"Tsk, A pity you did not inherit our tail." Tenne commented as he used the natural blade to carve the hide from the meat, looking to be intending to keep it intact.

"Nyeh , it's not so bad.” Papyrus shrugged. He’d long since gotten over not having a tail like his father did. It certainly made wearing armor much easier for his job. “I can lay on my back without any pinching. Toki gets a lot of that.” Aliquam comments lightly as he glides the knife under hide, separating the hide from the fatty layer along the surface of the flesh. It's less cumbersome than a tail blade, and more flexible. He works quickly, and soon his half is done, flopping loosely in the cold air. "Besides, kitchen knives work just fine." He hums.

"I can tell." Tenne grinned from his side of the carved deer before he moved to the back and stripped the hide from the spine of the deer. "All done with that, well done. I'll go ahead and start quartering. It's always my favorite part." He chortled.
Aliquam nodded. “Alright. I’ll get the storage bags for the meat before I roll the hide. And a platter for Toki’s offering.”

Despite the pain in his leg from being submitted to the freezing cold in ill-fitting clothing, Aliquam moved quick to get what he needed. He returned with a metal platter for the meat to offer their irate mate, and bags to store the roasts, streaks, and all other cuts that Tenne decided to save.

That done, Aliquam decided to roll the hide for saving. Maybe they could get Toki to cure it- but that was, alas, something Aliquam had no idea how to do. He’d never hunted with his father, so he didn’t know about storing hides. And, to his knowledge, his father hadn’t ever kept hides either.

"Good thinking." Tenne praised. It was in the time Aliquam went to pack away the hide and collect the offering platter that Tenne had almost completely stripped the body of meat, powerful shoulders, tender back-straes, chewy tenderloins, and the spine and ribs, severed at the base of the spine, set aside no doubt for his personal enjoyment if not his sacrifice for his rightfully upset mate.

Aliquam gave a bemused chuckle. "She may like her meat raw now, but Toki likes to try and have some manners. The platter will also help us cross that river without losing anything in the current." He eyes it flatly, and starts bagging whatever Tenne doesn't put on the platter. Ever conscious that this was a gift for Toki, Aliquam doesn't give in to Sentinels whims of licking his fingers clean when he's done putting everything into freezer bags for storage.

Though, he's pretty sure the desire may have crossed his face, resisting instincts is easy for him. Well... Those ones. The instincts to ravish his mate with affection and love are another story entirely.

He turned and began to scrub his hands clean in the snow.

Tenne didn't seem to carry that same care as his tongue grazed over his fingers, licking up the blood as he cleaned up, though the red of blood left faint stains along his claws and teeth that he knew would have Dear going nuts. "Once you're done, shall we seek out our beloved?" He asked Aliquam as he gave him a light grin.

Aliquam nodded. It took him a few more minutes of scrubbing- the red didn’t want to come off, and it was a little bit anxiety inducing, giving him flashbacks to the first human he’d killed- but he got most of it off.

He straightened up, and tucked the meat into the snow to cool off- it was currently colder out here than in his freezer, so why not? before scooping up the platter of meat for Toki. “You may need to help me across the river.” He glances at the swollen surface, the riptides lashing as it tried to crest the bank. He grimaced. His leg twinged in advance. Ugh.

Initially, Tenne was curious as to why he was asked such a thing, though then he thought back about how Aliquam was limping and narrowed it down to some injury.

"Oh, of course." Tenne rumbled quietly. "You have a good grip on the platter, then?" He asked.

“I do.” Aliquam nods. He hobbles towards the river, his grip on the platter never wavering. His leg was hurting something terrible- but it wasn’t anything some down time with a heating pad wouldn’t fix. Aliquam reached the edge of the river, looking down at the rapids with a hum. “Sometimes I’m envious of her ability to fly.” He admits to Tenne. “It would make following her much, much easier. So, how do we want to get over this? The stepping stones are currently covered in about a foot of water.”

"Hm...” He gave a light hum before he smirked. "Well... when in doubt." He chuckled, before he rumbled and growled as his form began to shutter and grow.

Aliquam side-eyed him and side-stepped him, giving his changing form an odd look. “If you rip your coat, Toki’s going to make me fix it for you.” He comments, watching the black-maned beast shift form.

A good note, Tenne quickly shed his sleeves as his form grew roughly to the same size as Asgore's before he rumbled and wrapped his arm around Aliquam's waist, hoisting him up almost effortlessly.

Papyrus squeaked. “Alright well, this works.” That was a large beast now holding him like a child. Shit. “Lets, uh, get across. And try not to dump the tray in the river. As much as Toki loves her cold-cuts, I don’t think she’ll see the humor in it.”

Tenne rumbled in reply as he carefully made his way across the river, slowly setting Aliquam down on the opposite side in a matter of moments.

Aliquam gave him a thankful nod. “Thank you.” He says lightly. He shakes himself off, and then pads slowly away from Tenne, picking up the location of the tracks again and following them. “Hm… I wonder… I think I know where she went.” He comments softly as they go from barren and burnt forests into lush greenery.

“Hm… I wonder… I think I know where she went.” He comments softly as they go from barren and burnt forests into lush greenery.

Without restoring his form, he rumbled and stalked ahead, his fur ruffling as he rattled and nearly bellowed out to call Toki.

He didn’t get so much as a peep in reply from Toki, letting him know just how quite upset at their squabbling and the whole situation that she really was.

The silence that followed made Aliquam wince a bit. Yep. His wife was a bit upset. He followed her scent, the cold air letting him keep his thoughts as he trailed along towards the pond she had turned into a hot spring for them on their first Valentines.

The pond had been covered in a conical structure, not unlike a beehive. There weren’t any trees that were durable enough to have held up a hanging hive, so it appeared that Toki was in the process of making a ground hive.

By process, most of the hive was built- but there was a several foot gap around the front that hadn’t been waxed in.

Toki naked, was sitting down in the apparent entrance, simply dangling her feet into the pond as she kept her back to the door. She heard her mates tromping along, but had no desire to reply when Tenne had bellowed for her. She had all intentions of sealing herself in her wax den and only coming out when it was time to do parenting duties.

Tenne approached the hive and pressed his paws against the structure as he crooned gently. "Darling~ " He cooed gently, "Let us in, my love." He then whined.

Toki stiffened as she felt and heard the thin wax structure rock under his paws. Her wings tensed against her back. “Go away, Tenne.” She says quietly. She shifts, and slides into the pool. The water steams under the force of her body heat as she enters it. “You too, Aliquam.” She turns and faces them in the pool, peering at them tiredly as she quietly placed her head on her arms. She moaned quietly, the cold making her ache that much deeper and painful. “I don’t have it in me to bounce back and forth between your affections all week, and I don’t want to hurt either of you by just choosing one. So go home.”

"We're both out here for you, darling..." Tenne slowly tapped his claws against the wall. "It's okay-please let us in... we realize our error... we're here for you. We brought you a meal fit for a needing Queen.”

She waved a dismissing hand. "I saw the deer, Tenne. I know you both wish to court mating favor with me, and I'm not going to choose, no matter what Dear says on the matter, nor how scrumptious a meal you brought." Her arms fold again, and she gives them both a tired look.

"You don't have to choose, love." Aliquam chimes gently, lowering the tray into view to get her attention. His leg throbbed, and he hid a wince. None of them had stopped to eat this morning- well, neither he nor she had eaten anything. "You've got us both. We're not making you choose, my love. We're both here to love you- if you'll have us."

She stared at them quietly, her mane bristling and smoothing as she pondered his words. Toki tilted her head. "And you're sure you both can... Manage?" She says quietly. She's not too sure she wouldn't bite one of them if they started snarling at each other once they got going.

"Of course, darling." Tenne crooned. "Please let us in. We'll show you. Monogamy is not your way, you love us both in the same way, and we were foolish to fear any less..." Tenne’s face lowered down, his amethyst gaze bright from the darkness of his mane.

Toki stared at them both quietly, and huffed very gently. She slowly shuffled over, and motioned for them to join her in her pool- which was steaming now with heat. "No fighting."

"Growling at each other will get someone bitten.” She warns flatly. Her body settles against the sunken log that still rested in the pond, and she sighs, letting her back lean against the stones. Toki can’t help but rock against the water-polished wood between her thighs, trying to relieve just a little bit of the burn coursing through every inch of her. “There’s room for all three of us, and whatever food you brought.”

Both males gave pleased sounds as they were granted entry and Tenne took the platter to climb into the hive as Aliquam had to put more attention on his leg.

"Indeed there is, it's quite lovely in here." Tenne purred as he handed her the platter.

Toki took the platter from him, since there was no real place to set it in the pool proper, and then slid it on the ledge between the pool and the waxy wall surrounding it. The water was hot, and the log was warm under her, and she watched as Tenne settled in the water, drinking in his nearly naked state almost hungrily. She then looked over the meat, and took a small sliver to nibble because she was hungry, but mostly her body ached and she could hardly think of other body functions over the burning ache of her heat.

“Mnnnh…” Toki glanced over at Aliquam while she chewed the strip of fresh venison. “Your leg hurts, doesn’t it…?” She asks him quietly. “Why don’t you strip off and come sit in the water? It’s warmer.”

Tenne glanced over at Aliquam, who gave a soft sound before he smiled happily. "I'd like that." He replied.

It took Aliquam a few moments to undress down to his boxers, before he slowly slid into the water with a sigh. "Ahh... that's nice..." He cooed, before glancing up at Toki from his half-sunken position. "Toki, I'm so sorry that I was part of your problem..." He spoke gently.

Toki watched him slide into the water, her eyes drinking in his nearly naked state, and she had to rip her gaze away to focus on getting another piece of meat to keep herself from lunging across the log to demand his touch. “Y-yeah.” She says softly. “I know. You both got out of hand, but it’s not your fault. I know how heat affects everyone- it’s probably best that I stay out here, or I’ll cause an ‘epidemic’ across the village.” She recalled her first heat having sent many, many others into heat as well. She quietly nibbles on another strip of something that looked like heart, and tries to keep herself from panting.

Her hips rocked against the log, and her fingers kneaded her knees.

He seemed to knead on his own knees as he sat there, feeling the heated water soothe his hip while he watched Tenne curl up on Toki’s other side, purring quietly as he rested his head on the soft ground saved for resting chins, arms, and other small things on.

Like the platter, for instance.

"An epidemic is an understatement." Aliquam chuckled lightly, his gaze sliding to the platter that she was picking at. "Do you at least like what we've brought you?"

Toki picked up another slice of meat, and chewed at it. She nudged the platter over more, so they could pick at it too. “I do like it.” She nods softly. “It’s very delicious. Though, the platter is a surprise.” She’d been expecting it to be brought wrapped in bloody deer hide or something beastly-and likewise, carried by Aliquam, since Tenne was the one who’d caught it.

Toki shuffled awkwardly, her gaze flicking between the two males. Her tail made noises against the wooden seat under them as she shifted against it, rocking a bit more firmly. It felt good, but it wasn’t what her body craved- and her scent, thickly blanketing the water, and the air inside the hive, told that in spades. “Hah… Please, eat up as well. There’s more than enough here for us to get a couple bites to sate our hunger.”

They didn’t get breakfast after all.

It was at that moment that Aliquam realized he was hungry and he gave Toki a gentle smile in appreciation as he started into his own strip of meat.

Tenne seemed sated and rumbled as he simply watched on Toki nibbled another strip as she quietly rocked on the log. She finished it, and stopped rocking about the same time as she felt a sharp spot on the log poke the inside of her leg. “Mnrrg.” She made a soft grumbling sound. She couldn’t even rub one out without getting genital splinters- fuck her life. “We need to invent heat suppressants.” She comments with a groan, resting her face in her hands as she gave a shaky sigh. She wanted them both so, so bad- but she couldn’t just… Give in. She worried- she always worried- that she’d do something wrong.

Tenne and Aliquam watched her quietly, before Tenne purred and sidled up behind her, nuzzling her as Aliquam pushed the platter away and inched closer to her front, smiling down to her.

She peeked through her fingers at them, aware of every creeping inch they took towards her. Toki made a soft, stuttering purring noise and her hands loosened. One of her primary hands came to rest on Tenne’s thigh, rubbing it gently, while the other primary one slid over to Aliquam’s ribs, tracing over them with a light invitation.

"B-before we go farther... Are we... Going to go all the way?” She asks. To emphasis what she means, she pushes her soul out just enough to force a green glow to illuminate the pale flesh of her breasts and sternum.

"Not yet.” Aliquam answered gently, taking her hand in his as he smiled at her. "When you're ready.” He told her. "But until then...” He pressed his lips to hers as Tenne pressed his own to the back of her neck.

It wasn't her who wasn't ready. But she feared that they weren't ready to share souls between the three of them. The glow at her chest faded, and she leaned into his kiss feverishly, her teeth and body almost burning hot to the touch. Her body arched, chest bumping against Papyrus, as Toki's tail moved to thread with Tenne's tail.

Her secondary hands moved to her husband's ribs, stroking them firmly, while her primary hands both finally settled on Tenne, stroking the base of his shield. One moved up to tug on the dark locks of his mane.

Toki's heated arousal scented the hive like a drug.

Aliquam let a low groan pass through their kiss and planted his hands on her thighs to start kneading while Tenne's hands trailed up to cup her breasts as he adjusted to press his front to her back, his tail happily twining with hers.

The hands on her thighs prompted her legs to spread, which let Tenne shift her entirely into his lap. Toki's toes curled, the soft paws hooking Aliquam and pulling him closer so she could stroke at his spine. The hands on her breasts had her panting, trembling as her wings pressed to Tenne's shield at her back. "Mmmmmmmnnn..." Her low moan echoed out of her kiss, and she couldn't stop the soft rock her pelvis did between them both.

Toki burned with a fiery need for her mates.

Aliquam's tongue slipped from his mouth and he gave a pleased huff, before he leaned in and pressed his face between her breasts, nudging Tenne's fingers away as his own hands began wandering. Tenne didn't seem to mind as he reached up and rattled as he pulled her face towards his for a slightly messier kiss, his tongue moving to press into her mouth as he rattled happily. "Rrrrr~" Not angry growling, just very, very happy noises to have what he was craving most.

Her open mouthed panting had only lasted a second before she found her mouth occupied by a long, black tongue. Which... Naturally she had to teasingly suck on as she kissed him back and twined her own green tongue with his.

Toki's hips squirmed between them both, making her breasts bounce against Aliquam's face as his hands roved over her body. Her hands stroked his ribs like a whore stroked a cock- with the skill of someone who had done it innumerable times before.

There was a soft buzzing rising up in her, a burning need that had her weak at the knees being expressed through a series of pipes to her mates.

Of course the piping was partly lost with Tenne claiming her mouth, but it was somewhat audible.

Her piping had both males growling as they began to shift and move her. She was planted in Tenne's lap and Aliquam was quickly starting to pin her there. Both males were quite excited, their boxers starting to tighten against her soft flesh.

They weren't the only ones excited. If her body was a campfire, the heat between her legs was an inferno. And there were no undergarments between her and her mates to keep them from feeling the heat of her rapidly warming up their little pool.

Toki's claws came down to the edge of the first pair of boxers she could blindly grab, and she pulled at them eagerly.
Her body however wasn't ready for the sort of onslaught. Aroused enough yes, stretched, no. Ectoflesh stretched easier than actual flesh, thankfully.

"Want you." Her voice rasped, deep and husky with desire and heat driven need. "Need you. Both. Please - touch me more ~" She arched, her hands grasping and touching where she could and whoever she could.

Tenne gave a sharp grunt as she ended up finding his boxers first and his tongue withdrew from her mouth as he released a hot breath. "Ahh~" He released a hot, heavy sound that even made Aliquam shiver a little.

"Four years..." Tenne rasped, pressing her a little into Aliquam's hold as he tactfully abandoned what little clothing remained, making sure not to ruin his boxers, and finally flesh pressed to flesh as Tenne nuzzled her back. "Four... years ... I've waited to feel you again~"

"Four years too many." Toki agreed with a heated gasp, her legs tightening around Papyrus in response to the heated flesh now bumping against the plush warmth of her backside. Her tail shifted to be better out of the way, still not releasing Tenne’s from the threaded grasp she had him in. Her fingers moved to her husband now, gently plucking at his clothing as she mewled needily.

Toki didn’t even list the short amount of time it was for her- this was like the difference between Aliquam and her, but this time she was in Aliquam’s shoes and Tenne was in hers.

“Wh-” She stammered, trying to gather her wits about her, “What are you gonna do to make up for lost time~?”

"Anything and everything I can to bring us completion." He purred in reply, before watching as Aliquam tilted Toki's head up for another kiss, though hidden behind interlocked teeth was a surprise for Toki; and it was Aliquam kissing with the confidence of Tenne, his tongue invading her mouth carefully but eagerly.

Toki couldn’t reply to Tenne, because she’d found her mouth filled with Aliquam’s tongue. Her husband had never, absolutely never, had a tongue like that before. She wasn’t sure what had spurred him on, but fucking hell she wasn’t going to complain. Toki twined her tongue with his, and pulled him closer to sandwich herself between his heat and Tenne’s. That let her anchor herself between the both of them- and then grind against them both, the water making her glide hot and heavy, even against the tight tent of her husband’s boxers.

Unlike Tenne, Aliquam felt a little more shameless as he grabbed his boxers and pulled them off, tearing them in the process as he flung them off himself and out of the hive. He then ran his hands to her breasts, affectionately squeezing and kneading them under his palms.

Tenne's hands were wandering south, his fingers delving into her folds at the first chance he got, a low purr rising from him as he nipped her neck.

Toki’s mouth muffled a moan into Papyrus’ own as his hands ravished her breasts, the sensitive mounds kneading and tingling pleasantly under his palms. Her pert nipples ached for stimulation, and she arched her chest into him about the same time that Tenne’s claws sank into her folds. Her legs splayed, and her heat hit his fingers like lava- she was moist, slick even in the water, showing just how much she wanted and needed her mates.

Her noises, eager and desperate for the agony of heat to be soothed by her beloved mates, were muffled but not entirely stifled by Aliquam’s kiss, filling the hive alongside their low purrs and pleasant growls.
Tenne growled happily as he felt her slick and tenderly played with the folds until he had enough of waiting. He boosted her up as he growled out and lined up his large cock against her entrance.

Only a few feet in height difference, and yet Tenne had such girth against what Aliquam had. He gave a slow rock against her backside, huffing a hot breath as he growled into her mane.

Aliquam had to catch Toki and gave a soft grunt. But as he held her, he got an idea and withdrew from the kiss to grin at Toki. "Have your latest changes left you your ability to breathe underwater?" He asked.

Toki panted, opened mouthed once Aliquam withdrew from the kiss. Her insides quivered, feeling almost like jelly with how much liquid desire flowed out of her and mixed with the water that they rested in.

The thick girth teasing against her entrance made her gulp. She was a full foot shorter and such equal measurements smaller in general size all around than the last time Tenne's girth had fit in her. She wasn't sure it all would fit. But she could hope.

"I duh-" she stammered, trying to gather her thoughts, "I think so. Don't always have to breathe. It's a reflex." She mumbled, and felt her body tremble in excitement at what he had planned. It was most likely a spit-roast, and her heat haze was down for it.

Her hands groped for them needily, stroking over what flesh and bone she could stimulate.

Tenne kissed along the back of her neck and cooed sweetly as he rolled his hips, the head of his girth slowly pressing against the folds of Toki's entrance with each rol until he managed to push into enough slick to pop the head of his length inside, a sharp gasp coming from him until it mellowed into an enjoyable moan as he began to roll his hips and push himself deeper.

Aliquam purred loudly at the sight before he scooted back a little and shifted to sit on his knees as he purred to Toki. "Would you like to find out, my love~?"

Toki's mind went hazy for half a second when the head of Tenne's shaft slid into her core, his heated member feeling almost cold against the inferno that was the fire of her heat. She panted, and it took her a moment of savoring the feeling of him slowly rocking into her depths before she could even gather an iota of thought.

She turned her lust-drunk gaze to her husband, panting and twitching with lightning bolts of pleasure. "Y-yes," She gasped. Yes she would. She needed something to do, something to touch, something to suck on-

Toki shifted, rolling on the log seat they were all using for their shenanigans. She shifted her stance, her legs sliding back as all her weight went onto her primary arms. This let Tenne have unrestricted access to her womanhood- and put her head about level with the glowing orange length throbbing under the water between Aliquam's legs.

She didn’t hesitate in ducking under, her wings remaining topside as she opened her mouth and blunted her teeth. Her tongue snaked out, sucking his member into her mouth, and she gave him a firm stroke from shaft to head as she enveloped him in the heat of her mouth and magic.

For a moment, Aliquam was praying to whatever god that she still had that wonderful ability, though two seconds after she dove underwater it turned to thanking the gods as he arched, a sweet moan coming out of him.

Tenne was a little irked at the sudden movement but with her rear now more properly sticking up allowed him a better angle to nudge his way in once more, purring soundly as he eventually got his cock into her once more, slowly rolling his hips to start seeing just how deep he could get after all this time.

Toki was limp between the both of them, her primary hands holding her aloft on the log as she shifted her hands to Aliquam’s femurs. Her secondary hands played with her breasts, tweaking her nipples and sending pleasure tingling through her chest. It occupied her, while her mouth lapped and suckled at his member- and while Tenne rolled into her and stretched her wide.

Her eye lights flickered in and out, lost on the waves and throngs of pleasure. His member was wide and thick, but thankfully her ectoflesh was supple enough and pliant enough to stretch under his girth as he worked his way in- until he was hilted deep, deep inside of her.

The answer to just how deep he could get was quite simple- the answer was all the way.

And blessed be, Tenne wouldn’t have it any other way.

His gentle gestures didn’t last much longer before he started to really go at it, growling and snarling with utter glee as he thrust his hips into hers, driving her into Papyrus.

Aliquam's noises weren’t any less feral, deep and nearly bellowing in his enjoyment of his beloved's mouth on his cock; though he could tell how happy Tenne was. Four years without Toki would do that to a man, and Aliquam had only suffered six months without her. He couldn’t imagine four years.

She’s honestly not sure where her mind started to go blank, lost in a sea of pleasure. The cock in her mouth was the only thing her body could focus on pleasing- her hands could only, after a point, grip Aliquam’s femurs and her breasts for dear life as Tenne pounded her forward, and Aliquam pounded her back.

Toki was like a toy tugged between two alpha dogs- and she didn’t mind any bit of it. Her mouth worked Aliquam’s shaft, while her womanhood stretched to accommodate Tenne- and for the knot that she knew would be growing at his base. Where Aliquam was the perfect fit, Tenne was that painful challenge that she just so loved to take- and she hadn’t had him in so long… She felt his member bulge deep inside her, and here eye-lights rolled up in her head.

She's not sure when she came- or if she ever stopped orgasming, to be frank.

Aliquam sighed out a harsh exhale as his hand wandered up to the back of her head, another moan passing through him before he looked down and noticed something interesting happening with her middle. "Hrmn~ Tenne." He used his unoccupied hand to get the other male’s attention. "Oi!" He barked, when the other didn’t respond. It succeeded in getting Tenne to look up, though with a bit of a peeved look. "Look~"

Tenne glanced down at Toki, only to sputter and slow down for all but a moment as he leaned back, giving a soft growl that gradually grew to a soft "Ah…".

Her body... it was different than it had been in the past. He had not thought to look down, but he didn't regret it.

Her middle was see-through, and as a result he had the most wonderful sight.

His cock, long and black, was piercing Toki’s depths and stretching her as he had done during their first mating... It was wonderful to witness.
Yet the sight had gone too fast as the momentary glimpse was all he needed as a fire ignited in his loins and he bellowed out as he sank his claws into Toki's hips, growling as he thrust and rutted until his beautiful sight was darkened as he came, filling Toki with thread upon thread of his fluids.

How long had the beast gone without a proper ejaculation, one had to wonder?

Aliquam was one to wonder such a thing, as Tenne held tightly as he filled, and filled, and filled his beloved.

Toki frankly didn’t have many wonders or cares left in the world- she was clamping around him in frequent waves as orgasm after orgasm left her reeling. The hot, black seed that was rapidly coloring her middle and bloating it outwards only made her orgasms hit harder- and she moaned under the water, hot and throaty around Aliquam’s cock.

Her middle bulged as her body’s womb was made to grow with the thick ropes of seed flooding her, and the thick knot binding her and keeping every drop inside.

Toki swallowed around Aliquam, aching to fill both sides of her. Her mouth sucked at him, her tongue stroking him, and playing with the head of his shaft as it bobbed and was massaged inside her mouth.

As Tenne shivered, slowly coming off his high.

Aliquam shivered and groaned as he pulled her head down deep on his cock, huffing out as he lost his focus. "Nnh... aah... F-fuck... Toki..." She felt so good around his member- fuck he didn’t know what to do about it. "Oh fuck..." His hand clenched around a handful of her luscious mane and he leaned his head back as he rocked his hips. "Man... I'm not that far off m-myself..." He groaned.

Papyrus received a stream of bubbled as an answer to his words, and Toki resumed suckling his member with vigor. Her secondary hands shakily came down and settled on his pelvis, remembering his hip enough to be gentle but thorough as she stroked and teased and tempted him with touches that normally drove him wild. Her fingers strayed to the insides of his hips, and to the inside curve of his pelvis proper, and she stroked everything, teasing the tips of her claws over it just enough to entice but not to hurt.

Her walls still fluttered and clamped around the tight stretch of knot that damn near had her torn wide- but there was very little thought to much of her actions. Most of it was muscle memory, her mind mostly ‘blown’ by all of the overwhelming stimulation her body had needed.

Tenne shuttered and growled while he shifted and adjusted his hips around Toki's, refusing to let a drop of his seed escape her.

Papyrus gave a soft growl and leaned forward, pressing his head into what ended up being Tenne's shoulder. Tenne gave a soft grunt and pressed his head against Aliquam's in a thoughtless affection, though it was in that moment that the younger of the two felt climax surging, and without thinking a sharp growl rose to a roar and he bit the closest flesh to his face, which ended up being Tenne's shoulder as he pulled Toki's face to his crotch, his bright colored seed releasing into Toki's mouth. It was not even close in the same amount as Tenne, but definitely with matching fever.

With the fangs suddenly piercing his shoulder, Tenne roared in the same and his sharp teeth sank into Aliquam's shoulder, not destroying Toki's own mark upon him, rather layering onto it with intent.

In the fever of the moment brought upon them by their shared lover, the two males marked each other, accepting one another in a personal, and most sacred bond.
And Toki missed the entire thing.

So lost in the haze of lust she was, the only thing she heard were their growls of and yowls of pleasure resonating above the surface of the water. And, of course- the bright orange seed that flooded down her throat. Which, she greedily guzzled, downing every last drop that slipped out and then sucking him clean and dry of anything else.

Her body was slumped between them, her limbs trembling and shaky with all of the releases she’d had. Her mind was mostly gone, only capable of a few, sputtering thoughts with the thick members still spit-roasting her.

The males came off their shared high and slowly fell apart, their shoulders bleeding just a little as Aliquam withdrew enough to let Tenne pull Toki up out of the water and pull her against his chest.

"T-Toki darling," Aliquam panted softly as he inched back over to nuzzle her, "Are you alright~?"

Toki’s gaze was unfocused, and she was quite thoroughly limp against Tenne, not unlike a drowned rat. It took her a bit, but she gathered her wits enough to give a soft giggle. “Whooo~” She coos.

Yes. Toki was alright. Absolutely exhausted, and the fire burning inside her had dampened enough to be tolerable again, but Toki was alright.

There was a soft, green pulse of light at her chest, and her soul throbbed into view.

“M’okay.” She apparently has not realized her soul is bobbing between her dripping breasts. “That was… wow. You’re both… Amazing~”

Both males had ended up gawking at her soul coming out, almost so that they missed her comment, though Tenne had fluffed up at the stroke to his ego.

Aliquam on the other hand abandoned ego for his love and he slowly brought his hands up to cradle her soul, a smile on his face. “Ah, hello again, my love.” He slowly lifted the soul to his face for a brief nuzzle.

Glowing green tendrils extended from her soul, rubbing along Aliquam’s face and tenderly caressing him in a familiar manner. His touch made her body shudder, her wings tensing slightly against Tenne as she sucked in a soft, sensitive gasp.

“Ah~” Toki’s eyes shut briefly, but the touch seemed to stir her to her senses enough to actually comprehend some of what was going on. “Soul’s out...” She mumbles. “Must’ve missed you both.” Her giggle is just as soft as the tender touches from her soul. “Mmmm... My legs are jelly...” So were her arms. Trying to lift her hands after how tightly she had held onto her mates was a lesson in futility. Toki was thoroughly exhausted between the two of them, instead of being the one exhausting her mate.

Aliquam laughed gently before he sighed and adjusted himself to rest against her once Tenne had adjusted to be more comfortable. "Darling must be content~" Aliquam cooed.

Tenne eyed the soul before he purred quietly, though his gaze was wayward.

He could still remember it flickering before Toki would speak to reply to an unheard conversation. Oh how he missed she who was once one-in-soul with Toki...

None of this would be known to the others though- he would not interrupt their happiness.
Toki exhaled softly and thrummed warmly. “Mhmm... Must be content- or longing for two certain someones.” Her gaze flicked between the two of them as Aliquam sandwiched her to Tenne. The knot between her legs made them ache, but she adored the stretch. Toki stretched, and her gaze settled on something that wasn’t there as the stickiness of them finally reached her hands and shoulders.

“Mmmhh... These aren’t my bite marks.” She observes slowly.

Both males stiffened at that... They glanced at one another, their gazes traveled down to the bite marks...

"Oh shit."

"Oh shit ."

"Heh." Toki giggles faintly. "I guess we really are a trine now, aren't we?" Her giggle leaves her breathless between them.

The glow of her soul was bright even in the daylight leaking from the door to the hive; it pulsed and sent out tendrils, grasping at Aliquam and reaching for Tenne. It couldn't go far from her body for safety sake, or she'd goop, but it could glow and look attractive from outside her chest.

"So it seems." Tenne purred quietly, before he reached over and cooed gently as he ghosted his hand over the reaching tendrils. "Ah, you're so beautiful, Toki~" He purred gently, "Such a wonderful green~"

"I'm always green," She crooned to him, her eyes fluttering shut with a soft, sleepy giggle. Her sockets opened again so she could watch as her soul intertwined threads around Tenne's fingers and around Aliquam's digits as they both cupped the core of her everything. The core that loved them with all that she was, all that she had been, and all that she would be.

Toki lifted her hand to join them, the three hands interlinking as her fingers brought theirs together. The green tendrils looped around their fingers, not unlike the threads of fate that tied them together.

Toki gave a breathless giggle, caressing their palms with their fingers. "If only my soul was red, it would make for a great pun now about the red strings of fate."

Aliquam groaned faintly at the pun, though Tenne seemed to chuckle at the joke and he purred happily as he kissed her cheek. "My darling Toki," He purred happily, "So silly, and yet so true in your words."

Her smile grew softer yet, and her soul seemed to pulse in time with those feelings. “Indeed...” She murmurs softly. “I am true in my words- or try to be. Which is why... I want you both to know... That when you're both ready for this-” Her finger brushed a tendril of her soul, “that I’m already ready, and simply just... waiting.”

Her words needed but a few moments to sink into them both to realize just what she was proposing. Aliquam summoned his soul as he gave an excited sound, seeming very eager to bond with her soul once more, though Tenne followed suit in a slightly more hesitant manner.

Toki stared quietly, and she exhaled softly. “Only if you're ready. Both of you.” She reiterates softly. “But if you’re not ready, please don’t feel pressured.” She doesn’t stop them from getting their souls close to hers though- Aliquam’s is the sun, orange and hot and bright with life like a hot summer’s day. Tenne’s is the moon, lilac and cool like a winter pond- they balance each other out, and she craves them both greatly. She won’t pressure though- it needs to be willing, completely and utterly.
"Will you be able to handle us both at once?" Tenne asked gently.

"Please god yes." Was that too needy? Toki’s not sure, but god does she not give any fucks. She needed them.

Tenne rumbled quietly as he nuzzled Toki, before he purred softly and lifted his hand. "Here, then~" He purred gently as he offered his soul to her.

Aliquam nestled close to Toki’s front and kissed her neck gently as he lifted his soul to twine his fingers in hers. "Mmh~" He sighed gently.

There was no hesitancy with her soul- it reached out and the tendrils snared their souls, pulling them flush with hers. She let out a quiet, content gasp, her eyes sliding half-closed as she went limp, utter bliss filling her. She could feel them both- they felt like they filled the void in her being that she’d had for so long… “Mmmm~” It was the single most soothing feeling she’d had in a long time, feeling two souls who loved her entirely press close. There was so much love that it was nearly overwhelming- but it was… beautiful. Amazing.

Aliquam sighed contentedly while Tenne gave a weak sound, almost unprepared for the sensation but so badly yearning for it once more.

"Oh Stars." The maned beast eventually moaned, burying his face against the back of Toki’s neck.

Aliquam gave a deeper sound and leaned into Toki happily as voices began to echo within their minds, shared from the males of the bonding.

' It's been so long.'

' Mate is healthy, mate is strong.'

The third was not spoken, but a deep snarl-like rumble soon echoed, and yet it was undeniably a happy sound.

There was no voice from Toki, no sound or echo- just the gentle pulse of love and affection, and the slowing of her breathing. In true fashion, Toki had exhausted himself between them- and in the sated buzz that followed, she had settled for a nap.

However, while the main personality slept, soft echoes of breath signaling to them that Toki trusted them enough to doze with her soul wrapped in theirs, there were faint twitches to her body and a shift in the color of her soul.

It took a few minutes for her to get used to the body, the new limbs and extensions to her fingers via the claws, but soon her eyes opened and she took a deep breath. The vertical slit pupils of Dear looked at them, and she gave a slow, deep rumble. Dear’s mane plumed outward, and alpha in all her glory, and she lifted her free primary hand back to trail it through Tenne’s locks, stroking them in ways she had missed doing. Her secondary hands came to Aliquam, and she cupped his cheeks to draw his gaze.

“lt's my turn to play now.” She purred, and gave a wicked roll of her hips to Tenne, who was still buried deep inside of her.
Chapter Notes

Strider Notes: So it may seem like it ends abruptly to some, and while to others it may seem like it’s the perfect ending. For us, the writers, it falls into the latter point.

Sometimes you reach a point in your writing where you hit a spot, and the book just… sings that it’s over. One hundred and sixty six chapters has been a long run- well over a million and two hundred something thousand words have been written and shared with you all.

It’s been a glorious journey with it’s ups and it’s downs, and I’m so, so glad that you’ve stuck with us all through it. I’m sad to say that it’s ending- for now.

As it is, TOTU has an open ending- it’s something we can revisit later if we so choose, and write some more into a sequel, and that may be in the future cards, but Silver and I are ready to move on to other stories for a little while. Such as a Breath of the Wild story we’ve been working on for the past while, since Silver finally got a Switch and getting her to write anything but BOTW has been like pulling teeth from a grizzly.

That said- the TOTU universe is everlasting. Remember, the world is massive and huge. If you ever feel like you get the urge to write into it- either in the main verse of TOTU itself, or explore into one of the many AU’s that Toki dreams of, please, by all means… Do so. There are copies upon copies of each AU- no one copy is finite. Endless possibilities are at your fingertips, if only you reach for it.

So for now… Fare well, and we’ll see you in a dream of another dream, my darlings.

Silverwing Notes: We’ll see you in our next story!

Halloween loomed quickly after five days of heat and vigorous bonding through mating. The house was decorated in fluffy cobwebs, grave-stones were set outside, The pets were decorated with costumes, and pumpkins were collected and carved. Well, some carved- some of them were gutted and frozen, some of them were baked, fried, and also stewed.

Toki had worked with Lana, and had gotten everyone a set of working costumes for what they wanted to be. It had taken a fair bit of work too- the kids had endless numbers of ideas, and it was hard to get them to settle on just one idea. Honestly, she’d probably have had an easier time getting them to pick a costume at a costume store- because at least then the costumes were actually limited. When you had a magical seamstress who could weave cloth and thread together like god of yarn and mayhem, the possibilities were endless.

Kai was going as a mad scientist- complete with crazy glasses, fake mustache, and fluffy wig. He’d borrowed a couple test tubes from Tenebris, and loaded his coat with them.

Quinn had been covered in a fluffy bee costume, and his new mane was decorated with sparkles. At the top of his head was a crown, and he had a scepter. His fake wings were bedazzled- and his companion, Kiko, had a tiny, sparkly ‘king’ robe to wear too. They were, to put it bluntly, going as a Queen and King bee.

It was actually precious- and Toki wasn’t going to enforce gendered costumes on her children.

For instance, Willow was going to be the Joker for Halloween, and Skylar and Honey were choosing to be Batman and Robin for Halloween, completing their little trio of adorableness.

Toki, Papyrus, and Tenne had costumes too. They had a trio-set of costumes for going out. Toki was going to be a sugar-plumb fairy- Tenne and Aliquam were set up to be her nutcrackers. Probably out of season, but any ultra-scary costumes that Lana had come up with had made Willow cry and Skylar hide his face, so they’d put those out of thought and out of mind.

They were having dinner before they went out trick-or-treating. Or would be, when it was done.

Toki adjusted the apron that covered her middle, dusting her hands on it to clean them, and then adjusted her shirt. She wasn’t in costume yet- it was hard to cook while in a sugar-plumb fairy dress and heels. So for now, she was in a nice pair of slacks, and a costume turtleneck that she’d bought online about a day or two after the heat had ended.

A thunder of footsteps sounded on the stairs, and she could hear Honey and Skylar chattering as she worked on stirring the spaghetti sauce on the stove.

“Honey,” Skylar whined, “I don’t want to step out there. Please, can’t we just go upstairs?”

“No!” She protested loudly. “We have to get Momma’s approval!”

“But Honey-”

“No Sky- come on, you have to admit it’s really cool and really awesome and no one else has thought of it!”

“I guess...”

Toki turned around about the time that they stepped out.

Buck naked.

Bare naked child bones greeted her stunned eyes as Honey did the jazz-hands at her, while Skylar tried to hide his face. “Look Momma!” She exclaims. “We decided on a new costume idea! We’re skeletons, so we can just go naked! Spooky scary skeletons send shivers down your spine~”

“I never should have played that song for you lot.” Toki mumbled as she lifted a hand to hide a giggle. “That is a lovely idea, Honey- but you’re not going out there like that.”

“But Momma!” She protested, voice rising into a high pitched ‘I want it now’ whine.

“No, Honey. It’s too cold outside for you to be running around in nothing but your bones. At least your batman costume has some insulation.” Toki shook her head. She motioned them back upstairs. “Go get into your clothing, both of you- dinner will be done soon, and I don’t have time to wash your costumes if you get spaghetti sauce all over yourselves.”

Honey whined at her.

Toki frowned at her. “Honey. You’re really going to hurt Willow’s feelings by changing costumes on her? When it’s you three doing a matching set of costumes?”
Honey deflated in an instant. “No...” She sighs and pouts. “Okaaay. I just thought it was really cool...”

“And it is. Maybe next year if the weather is good.” Toki hummed softly.

The twins looked at each other, sighed, one in relief and one in defeat, and then trooped back upstairs.

Toki shook her head and turned back to the stove, stirring the sauce and turning her attention to check the noodles and make sure they were softening properly. She hummed softly, finding herself stuck humming ’spooky scary skeletons’ as she cooked.

"I have finally gotten that song out of my head and yet here you are humming it once more. Is there no escape from the spooky scary skeletons?" Tenne chuckled as he walked into the kitchen with Papyrus.

"Not when you live in a house full of them." Aliquam answered with a laugh, going up behind his beloved and kissing her head as he wrapped his arms around her.

Toki leaned her back against his chest and giggled.

"Spooky scary skeletons send shivers down your spine. Shrieking skulls will shock your soul seal your doom tonight~" She sang teasingly, stirring the sauce. "I love you both, you goobers. Are you ready for dinner? Not in costume yet?" She hadn’t looked at them, so thus, had no idea if they were clothed or not.

They would never get sauce out of their nutcracker uniforms if they got them dirty. Spaghetti sauce was far, far too difficult to get out of clothing. And pans. And anything it ever touched, really.

Tenne groaned while Aliquam gave a smug 'nyeh heh heh heh~'

"No, not dressed yet." Tenne answered as he set his head on Toki's other shoulder, reaching around to pick off the nearest meat chunk in the sauce with a soft 'oooh' sound.

The spoon popped across his knuckles gently but firmly. "Ah! Use a spoon! Spaghetti sauce stains like a motherfucker, and do you really want sauce colored fingers?"

She scooped two bites, offering each one to her mates. Such dorks they were. "I'm glad you're not in costume. I'm in my secondary costume of sorts- one I can answer the door for the early trick-or-treaters in, and one I don't mind getting dirty."

Both males took their spoonful and purred as they savored the flavor before Aliquam nuzzled her. "That's a leading statement~" He teased.

"But in the same, it's clever. But we shan't tempt the universe to cause trouble" Tenne joked lightly, before he patted Toki's shoulder. "I'm off to shower, I need to have my mane ready to braid for my uniform~"

"Alright Tenne." She patted his hip with one hand, and chuckled softly. Those two, sheesh. They got along better than one might think when they weren't competing for her affections. Now she was just left with Aliquam, and she gently shifted in his arms as she slid things off the burners.

"Would you be a dear and fill glasses of milk for the table?" She needed to plate up meals for the little ones, and then for her mates.

"Mmh.. In a minute... Enjoying the view from up here~" Aliquam answered as he smiled down at her, though shortly after he sighed and moved away, "Okay I'm content. milk it is."
She lifted her fingers and bopped his forehead. "You silly perve," She laughs. Her shirt did show a little cleavage. No wonder he'd been peeking over her shoulder. He'd been sneaking a peek! No one ever said he was innocent though. "Go set the milk down and behave tonight while we're in costume, and maybe I'll sleep topless tonight." She grins.

Toki knew how to work the system.

He gave a soft 'ooooo' under his breath and patted her hip as he grabbed some glasses from the cupboard and the carton from the fridge.

Toki gave a soft giggle, and began working on setting up plates. “Kiiiiids!” She shouts. “Dinner’s almost done! Come down to the dining room please!”

"Okay Momma!"

"We're coming!" There was a small stampede of feet coming down the stairs and Aliquam smiled as he set up the glasses where the children sat.

Toki soon came in, five plates settled in her hands for the five kids. With elegance and grace, she set them in place next to the glasses of milk and silverware. “I'll get plates for us in a moment.” She laughed to Aliquam.

"Sounds good, I'll make sure the kids wont make a mess.” He agreed quietly as he went with napkins to properly shield the children’s clothing.

“Sounds good.” She smiles softly. “It'll take too much time to wash them all before we change into costume otherwise- we’d miss all the trick-or-treating!” She laughs, and moves into the kitchen to begin preparing dinner for the three of them.

It takes her a little bit- Tenne and Aliquam eat significantly more than any of the children do, and the plates are piled higher than her own. Toki soon carried out three more plates, and settled the plates for Tenne and Aliquam next to their seating location. She settled hers between them, and let a soft exhale run through her.

“Alright. Dinner’s ready~” She chirped.

As if she just gave a pack of dogs a cue, there was the sound of silverware hitting plates and noodles being slurped up with gusto as famished children and adults set into their plates.

Toki watched them set in ravenously, and could only watch for a moment in pure awe. Good gracious, one would think she starved them by how fast all of them- adults included- were eating. She simply shook her head, and then reached back to untie her apron.

“Hey Momma. The sauce tastes funny.” Honey commented mid-bite.

“Well, I decided to change it up some, so I tried making it with Prego this time.” Toki said lightly, and pulled her apron away, revealing the lower part of her shirt.

Where the emblem said ‘ Thing Two ’ in bold letters across her belly.

Aliquam paused almost immediately as she made the pun, before he gave her a side glance and had to swallow his mouthful lest he choke on it. "You're...!"

Tenne blinked at Aliquam's reaction before he swallowed his mouthful. "No way...!" He gawked up at Toki.
Toki gave a slow smirk, and sat down in her seat. Her mane plumed pleasantly. “Yes way.” She hums, and leans over to take a sip of her milk. “I am very much so.”

“Huh?” Honey blinks, looking between them with a mouthful of spaghetti dangling from her teeth.

“You’re wha?” Skylar echoes, not understanding.

Kai blinked at her shirt for a moment, and then gave a hearty giggle. “Momma’s gonna have babies.” He exclaims, excessively pleased. “Finally!”

Toki snorts into her glass of milk. That’s right- Kai had campaigned for little siblings once.

Quinn beamed. “Oh goodness! Really?”

Willow blinked, looking befuddled at their excitement.

Honey still seemed to be in shock, half a bite of spaghetti still halfway into her mouth.

Skylar however looked positively thrilled. He teleported over the table, and wrapped around her middle with an excited squeal more befitting of Honey. “I’m gonna be a big brother!”

Toki laughed. “You are!” She cradled his head, but didn’t push him away. “Just be careful not to squish the baby, yeah? You have to share cuddles with everyone.”

"Lets be honest with ourselves, my love. Babies. Babies. With an 'I, e, s'.” Aliquam purred happily.

"Oh this is wonderful!” Tenne cooed happily, his mane fluffing up as his tail rattled underneath him.

Toki laughed softly. “It is- and it’s a good chance that we will have multiples. But we’ll have to wait until Dad’s able to check and see if we can count them yet. There’s no telling how fast they’ll grow, since, y’know.” It was up in the air as to who sired them. “Unless you can check?” She directed to the still slightly starstruck Tenne. He was a scientist, but he had cared for Sapphire when she’d been pregnant with Fuku.

"Uh..! I mean… I can try!” Tenne answered, before he gave a shaky laugh. "Though... Perhaps my counterpart would do better at this; I could probably not be as accurate...”

“Sweetheart, you’ll do perfectly.” She beams at him warmly. “You took care of Sapphire- but, we can talk with Tenebris about it, and he can teach you some things about checking on them. Proper knowledge can make all the difference.” It really could- she wondered if it was the lack of knowledge, or the lack of sheer magic power that had cost Sequoia her life. But, Toki didn’t even comment on it or hint at it. She simply smiled at them and then ushered Skylar back to his dinner.

She resumed hers with a soft sound.

He gave a quiet sound before he nodded. "Alright, my love. After dinner, while Aliquam cleans the pups, I'll check your soul." He rumbled.

Toki nods. “It may be too soon, yet.” She says lightly. “But, don’t get too discouraged if it is. Practice is practice, and we’ll get you some.” She smiles. “But, perhaps not after dinner. If everyone stays clean,” She eyes the mostly clean faces of her kids, “then we’ll be going trick-or-treating, so it’s off to costumes. Maybe we can soul-check tonight before bed?”

Speaking of… She glanced to Aliquam and then to Tenne, grinding her teeth in thought, despite Aliquam telling her not to prior. Tenne hadn’t just started sleeping with them with the heat- he still stayed in his room unless it was an intimate encounter... But maybe. “Perhaps we can soul check while we all cuddle up?”

Tenne grew an excited look at that, his tail rattling just a little louder underneath him. "You mean it?" He asked hopefully.

Aliquam smiled and gave a soft laugh. "Of course she means it, Toki always means what she says... and if the litter is yours as much as it might be mine, then perhaps it's high time we finally invite you to share the nest.” He answered.

The children were all silent, watching the adults with rapt excitement as they scarfed down their meals. Their parents weren’t exactly secretive with their private life, but they didn’t scream it from the ceilings either- and it was clear the children were in cahoots for all of them to bunk together.

Mainly so they didn’t have to go to separate rooms when they needed their parents.

Toki smiled. “I did buy a bed that’s more than big enough for me and Aliquam. So please- I would love if you joined us tonight. We can go through our share of the Halloween candy via parent tax.” Toki winked at the kids.

There was a unanimous groan from them. “What did she tax from you?” Skylar asked the boys curiously.

“Hershey bars. Momma likes chocolate.” Quinn sighs. “She gave us honey-treats in return, but still.”

Honey puffed her cheeks. “Whenever there’s a candy bowl in the house, Momma eats all the chocolate. Not the ones with filling though. Only straight milk chocolate.”

“There’s a pattern.” Skylar observes lightly. “But Momma does do lots of things for us- I like the green tea kitkats more anyway, so I don’t mind giving Momma my chocolate bars. But the question is...” He turned shrewd eyes to Tenne and Aliquam. “What are Daddy and Tenne gonna want...?”

Toki snickered. Listening to her kids start to discuss what they might have to wheel and deal on candy wise was precious- and it got their attention off the adults. She turned her attention back to her mates. “I really would enjoy having both of you with me tonight. I may have promised some... specific cuddles,” Topless cuddles, “To Aliquam, and the more the merrier as far as I’m concerned.” She chirps.

Tenne gave a happy sound and smiled up at Aliquam and Toki. "I- I’m so excited for tonight~ thank you both so much..."

Toki beamed at him warmly. “You don’t need to thank me, Tenne. I wanted to make sure that you both were... well, comfortable enough with each other before I opened up the invitation. Since you’ve both gotten along awesome I’m happy to have you both in my bed for the cuddles I so have craved~ The couch is only good for so long after all, don’t you agree?”

He rattled happily and wagged his tail, before hearing a snicker from Kai, a small grin on his face as he hummed something in wingdings.

Toki shook her head, and happily resumed her meal.

Once dinner was finished, and dishes had been cleaned up, Toki sent everyone upstairs to get dressed, the elder siblings helping their younger siblings get their costumes on while the adults got dressed. Admittedly, the adults had more complex costumes.
Toki’s costume had multiple layers to it- many, many layers. She got her tights on, the specially made high heels that came with better traction than her actual shoes did. She had to layer the special frilled and ruffled sections to her dress, or it wouldn’t fluff up properly. She also had to layer it specially, since it was specially made- Tenne’s nutcracker uniform was based around black, while Aliquam’s was orange. Her sugarplum fairy dress wasn’t the traditional pink color that most people thought- it was in layers of orange and black.

So a sort of spooky take on a Christmas tale.

However, she came to a problem with the corset- her arms wouldn’t turn around to lace it up in the back. She stood topless in her room with Tenne and Aliquam, watching them lace up what Lana had called ‘breeches’, and hummed softly. “So, which of you knows how to lace a corset?”

Both males looked at one another quickly, before Aliquam cleared his throat a little. “Ah... I’m afraid I have no clue.” He admitted.

"I’m clueless myself." Tenne agreed quietly.

"Well... Shit." She sighed. "If you can't do a corset, what on earth are you doing with your pants?"

She padded closer and bent over to take a peek, her breasts swaying freely in front of her. "Seriously? You're knotting them like that? That's so... Not aesthetically pleasing! Come here, Aliquam." Toki moved to sit on the bed and patted her knees. "I'm gonna lace you up. Both of you watch- and then you can help me, okay?"

His cheeks tinged as he stammered a little before he stepped close. "Ah... yeah... okay." He spoke quietly as he turned his gaze away. "Thank you..." He spoke softer.

Tenne got an amused look as he leaned his head on his hand, giving a soft laugh.

Toki reached her fingers down to his pelvis, and undid the rats nest of a knot he had going on. She tsked, and then began lacing it properly. "Lacing a corset, and your pants, is just like lacing a shoe. You cross the laces into little 'x' shapes. If you're really fancy, you can do decorative lacing, but I'm not good at that. It's basically shoes, but on your crotch. See? Easy. You only have to do it once so you don't have to make perfect bunny ears twice." Finished, she gave his pelvis a gentle pat, and then peeked up at him and Tenne. "Think you can do yours, Tenne?"

Aliquam was red, boy was he red. Tenne was less so but had ended up leaning back to try and follow her directions to thread his pants, muttering the directions as he worked.

Aliquam couldn't even mumble out a reply, his face darkening as he eventually managed out a brief 'thank you' and moved away.

Boy there was something going on in his mind and he didn't look like he was about to share it.

Toki arched her brow at that blush her husband was sporting, and propped her chin onto her palm. Her tail rattled slowly on the floor, and reminded her that she had decorations for that too.

So, she set out threading ribbons around the smooth vertebrae of her tail. "So... What about lacing up your pants has you so red in the face, oh hubby of mine? Is it something we can play with later?"

Because yes, she'd tease him about kinks with Tenne there. Tenne was being brought into the fold, darn it. They needed to include him.

"Oh- I dont think you'll like it, it's really quite-"
"You were thinking about tailbone threading, weren't you." Tenne interrupted.

And there was nothing more from the husband, only a look of fluster and shame.

"I thought so." Tenne smirked before he straightened up, his pants finished. "Ever tried threading, Toki?" He asked her.

"I've never even heard of it until now." Toki blinked at them both. She then glanced at Tenne's tie job, and gave it a nod. It was doable, particularly for someone who was only just learning corset work, and wore single knot shoes or slip on shoes. She stood up, and looked at her bow-tie job on her tail, tsking softly. It wasn't on straight- and yes, Halloween was about fun, but she wanted to look nice- it wasn't often she got to dress up.

"Did you two want to try it?" She glances at them. "My actual tailbone isn't really accessible anymore, but my tail itself has these... I don't know. Pressure holes? No idea how to label this part of my anatomy, really. You can play with it if you want- but I do want my corset on before one of the boys barges in and gets blinded."

"Aliquam's probably is able to have his threaded if that skeletism runs through his body completely." Tenne commented.

"I have an ecto-body." Aliquam countered, before realizing as Tenne was suddenly sizing up right in front of him... and he was feeling pretty small.

"Do ya now~?" Tenne was fluffing up but that look on his face was no where near aggressive. It was almost predatory.

"He does when he bothers to summon it. I do love when he summons it- I enjoy his muscles as much as he gets to enjoy my ever present chest now." Toki arched a brow at the two of them and the passionate look Tenne was sending Aliquam. "My only concern in doing it to Aliquam is..." She closed her mouth and frowned.

His prosthetic encompassed half his pelvis almost. That included a small portion of his tailbone. There was a fine line between pain and pleasure, and though his prosthetic was nearly perfect, some things did make it hurt.

It was quickly that Tenne deflated and he looked at her before looking back at Aliquam. "Is?" He prompts.

It had Aliquam looking up at her with surprise. "A-Ah... She hadn't told you yet?"

Toki looked between the two of them. "That," she says softly, "is something personal that I felt you were more fit to tell him. If you didn't want to, it wasn't my call. Your body is not my body, love." She says softly.

"Does it have to do with why you limp in the cold sometimes?" Tenne asks softly.

Aliquam nodded briefly. "I am surprised you had not seen it when we followed Toki on her heat." He explained, reluctantly undoing what Toki had tied before he moved his pants to show Tenne.

Tenne flushed a dark color. "I was a little distracted by not having had my mate for four years. Pardon me for not having looked at your ass when hers was much more tempting." His gaze watched the removal of his fellow male’s pants.

Tenne made a surprised noise. "That is a well crafted prosthetic. If I didn't know something was amiss, I wouldn't have even seen it. Though I do see her concern." His mane slicked down. "Lacing would put pressure on where the seam is on your tailbone. We could try doing it lightly, but heavy lacing may be a bad idea."

Aliquam nodded sheepishly as he watched Tenne’s mane slick down. It was then he released a breath he didn't know he had been holding... in any other circumstance, that would have been pretty... sexy... not that he was about to admit it. That'd be giving the other beast too much power.

Tenne exhaled softly. “That’s something to try at a later date, and perhaps with a soft thread. Maybe a ribbon of silk? Something that will be soft, but painless. However... If we want, we can play with Toki’s tail tonight. She already offered.” He glanced to their shared mate, and arches his brows. “Her tail can be laced up the length- and it would look lovely to have our lacing job mark her out in public, now wouldn’t it~?”

That was a salacious purr from Tenne if Toki ever heard one.

She flushed bright green and sputtered. “H-hey now! The kids will see if you lace all the way up!”

“They’ll just think it’s a lovely decoration.” Tenne purred, eyes half-lidding. “I’m thinking we take those nice orange and black ribbons over there and inter-twine them. Show the world she’s ours, and we’re hers. What do you say, Aliquam?”

Toki sputtered, flustered.

Ali quam gave a smirk and followed his gaze to the ribbons. "A wonderful idea~" he purred happily, "Some lovely weaving and the world will realize the colors have such significance~"

Toki sputtered louder, her tail rattling. “H-hey! When did it become tease the Toki night?” She halfheartedly complains, because she most definitely doesn’t mind it when they double-team to fluster her.

“What comes around goes around.” Tenne grinned. He moved over and took a seat next to her. “Aliquam, the ribbons if you will?” He requested as he took her tail into his hands and began to undo her lopsided decorations.

Toki huffed softly, but sat patiently. “I still also need my corset on.” She chimes, wings flicking at her back.

“Not tight though. You’ve got precious, fragile pups growing in your belly.” Tenne purrs with warm love.

Aliquam grabbed the ribbons and happily came over to sit on Toki’s other side. "Heh~” He kissed her cheek sweetly as he held out the black ribbon to Tenne.

Tenne gave him a grin and took the ribbon. He tied made the top bow at the top of her tail, linking the orange and black ribbons together, and then he began lacing her tail on his side.

Toki flushed. Brightly. Her mane also plumed upwards.

"What a pretty look for you~” Aliquam teased before he kissed her cheek. "So lovely with her black, white and orange, eh, Tenne?"

“Indeed~ She looks absolutely ravishing. It’s going to be a blast to help her strip out of it tonight, isn’t it~?” Tenne grinned devilishly to Aliquam.
She sat still for Tenne and Aliquam to tend to her tail and lace it gently, and her face burned with a flush. “I hope you’re enjoying yourselves.”

“Oh unbelievably, my dear.” Tenne nuzzled the back of her head with a warm sound, and finished tying the bow for her.

Toki swished her tail across their laps, and relished the feel of soft ribbons laced up her tail. “It feels nice.” She giggles. “So... Aliquam- you need to do your pants up again. But... Since Tenne tied the bows, will you help me with my corset and making sure it’s not too tight?”

Aliquam's hands danced along the ribbons before he hummed and smiled up at her, "Of course, my darling... I will try." He purred.

Toki beamed and stood up. She straightened, and tickled her laced tail against his cheek, before moving over to grab her corset. She slid it on, tucking her breasts into it properly, making sure she had no nip slips. True to Lana fashion, the corset fit like a dream- and it made her breasts plump upwards, making them look fuller. It also framed her wings beautifully.

She loved the colors too- it was primarily black, with bright orange trimmings, and all of the frills and lace and fluffy parts were also done in the same beautiful orange. It was lovely.

She backed up, presenting Aliquam with her back as her tail rubbed over his leg.

Aliquam was totally gawking at the sight. It wasn't until Tenne laughed and pushed on his face that he snapped out of it and straightened up to help Toki with stringing her corset comfortably. "You look... Wow . And the corset's not even tied yet." He giggled happily.

"Now imagine how fun it will be to pull it off tonight~" Tenne teased, before dodging a bone as it flew past his head.

Toki laughed. “Boys, come on, come on. Lets get this tied, and then you can ogle the sights.” She wiggled her back at them.

Tenne laughed, and nudged Aliquam around her front. “You make sure it doesn’t tighten too far around her belly. I’ll tie it.” His eyes twinkled merrily at Aliquam. It would also let Aliquam watch the view, as Tenne began to cinch Toki up.

And make her chest more bountiful, growing with every tightening loop of the laces.

Nothing was said but one could tell the 'bro' moment between them as Aliquam moved to her front and gently adjusted the corset as it was tightened... but every time the threads were cinched it would boost her breasts and lord he would stare.

Toki simply arched a brow every time his gaze drew across her chest. She took a deep breath, and made a soft, pleased buzzing noise. “I like this tightness, Tenne. I can breathe. And... Most importantly...” She bounced a little on her paws.

“I have jiggling room.” She grinned. Bro she was not, but she was a wife who knew her husband’s weakness, and would pound him with it. “Now, you two need to get yourselves dressed while I get my mane done up. The kids will be getting impatient soon.”

Tenne may have been staring over her shoulder a little bit as he tied her corset almost absently.
“Huh?” Boobs may not have been his favorite, but he would be a blind fool not to enjoy that jiggle.
With every jiggle, Aliquam's jaw had dropped notch upon notch until he was promptly gawking at his beloved's propped up womanly pillows.

"Oh... oh my god..." Was just under his breath, before he gave a sharp exhale. "I'm... gonna need a moment before I suit up." He admitted quietly.

Toki laughed. She reached her hands down to his pelvis, and did up the ties on his pants again. “You precious dork. Don’t worry, you can bury your face in them before I take the corset off when we get home.” She giggles.

Then, she took a moment once he was tied up again, which would contain any beast he didn’t want to let out, and moved to go do her mane up properly.

Tenne just stared after her as she moved to her vanity, and then moved closer to Aliquam. He clapped his hand onto his shoulder. “Tell me... Do... Do they get bigger...?” He asks, keeping his voice hushed.

After a moment, Aliquam straightened and gripped Tenne's shoulder. "Tenne." he started quietly, before looking up at his fellow mate with what only could be described as having stars in his bright orange eyes.

"She gets teats ." He said simply. "And oh good lord... You have no idea how big... and how sensitive they get..." He answered honestly, shifting his gaze to his wife before he leaned close. "She lactates early on too. And she's into it ."

Tenne’s face flushed almost as black as his mane. “Oh god.” He groaned. “I can’t wait until her teats show up. I’m going to bury my face in them and just...” He rattled out a rumbling purr. “Rrrrr- ”

Motor-boating was much more fun when there was more than just two breasts bouncing on your face.

"Get in line." Aliquam said quickly. "I called dibs like... four years ago."

Tenne squinted at him, and then flicked his forehead. “Ah, you got to have her for pregnancy twice , you greedy skeleton.” And one of them hadn’t even been Papyrus’ doing and he’d reaped the rewards. “You can share the goods.”

"Not when 'the goods' are my wife's voluptuous bosom. Those are my favorite part and I don't wanna share." He pouted.

Both boys were busy with talking and Toki too busy with her mane to bother detecting the fact that Tenebris had come by to check on them, only to catch wind of their conversation.

Getting a devious idea, Tenebris then smirked and teleported in front of Toki, giving her only seconds to squeak in surprise as she ended up in a bear hug with her back pressed against her father-in-law’s chest. He turned them to have Toki facing the bickering duo before another sound escaped the pregnant monster as Tenebris properly cupped her breasts and propped them up in his palms, cradled by his sharp claws.

"A-Aah! "

"Oh boys-~" Tenebris called tauntingly to make both son and counterpart look, and promptly gawk at the sight before them. "Eat your hearts out-~"

Toki, having been mildly enlightened to the hushed conversation happening thanks to Tenebris being… Well, Tenebris, only gave an anime-worthy squeak-groan and a squirm against him. “A-ahh, Daddy be gentle! You’ll rip my corset!”

More like Tenebris eat his heart out- Toki could play all their games and come out on top.

To her credit. Tenebris wasn’t expecting that either. Lord, he didn’t expect that and even he choked before he freed her to bend over laughing, his hands on his knees as he hooted in laughter before he quickly ran out from a flurry of bone attacks and even a blaster beam from a flustered, furious Tenne.

Toki let out a rightfully infuriated noise once she was freed. “No blaster beams in the house!” She shouts, flailing her hands and scrambling to the door. “Oh! No!” Her eyes take in the damage. There was a Tenne fist sized burn mark on her wall. “My wall! Darnit, Tenne. You get to scrub the scorch marks off tomorrow.” She huffed. “Also, Papa!” She shouts down the stairs, where she could hear him laughing. “If you grab my boobs again, I’m going dull your tail blade while you’re sleeping!”

"Tell your mates to stop fighting over you and maybe I won’t!” He threatened, before a final bone sent him running with victorious laughter.

Aliquam was bristling a little before he huffed and trudged over to Toki, before he pressed his head on hers and wrapped his arms around her chest with a grumble.

Toki deflated with a sigh, and patted her husband's bare arms. "It's moments like this that I can see how he's related to your brother." She says dryly. "He's probably got the pups wrangled downstairs. Come on you two. You need to get dressed, and I need to put my tiara in. We also need to make an announcement sometime tonight too."

Tenne had sheepishly moved at her behest to go get his jacket on while Aliquam reclaimed her boobs for them. "We do?"

"Yes, dear." She chimes patiently, and pokes her husband gently in the ribs to urge him to his clothing instead of clinging to her. "Lana and Kon already know, but Cae and Grillby need to know they'll be uncles again, and Tenebris, for all his assholery, needs to know he's going to be a grandpa."

He didn't go quietly but Aliquam indeed went and collected his outfit. "I'm going to kill him."

"Now now, you cant kill him." Toki tuts to him and fixes her mane. Once it's back in order, she tops it with a tiara and gives a spin on her high heels. Her ruffles layer out, and the laced ribbons of her tail are fabulous. She feels like a sugarplum fairy gone Halloween. "Alright, my nutcrackers, how are we doing with our buttons?" She glances to them.

Aliquam had parted ways to prepare but as Toki turned to ask how things were going, it was revealed that they had given up on trying to tend to their own buttons and were now working on each other's buttons.

She shook her head with a sigh. "Well, at least you have each other." She puts her chin in one of her many palms and watches them happily. "You both look adorable and very handsome, you know that?"

Tenne fluffed a little before he smiled at her.

Papyrus looked down at himself before he sighed and smiled at her. "Glad you think so..."

"And I know you two were teasing me about stripping me down... But I fully expect a double strip..."
“show in return tonight.” She winks. "And maybe, just maybe, I'll let one of you undo my corset.” With that said, Toki flounced out of the bedroom and headed to the stairs to corral their wily family while the boys finished up.

The males exchanged looks with risen brows, before they both followed her out, like knights trailing behind their charge, or dogs chasing after their prey.

Between the cold, the rowdy kids, and the excitement of Toki’s pregnancy being announced, everyone went home utterly exhausted, even the adults.

Toki, Tenne, and Papyrus didn’t even actually get out of their costumes until they got all of the children out of their costumes, warmed up, in bed, and then undressed all the pets. Including Sobek, who hated the world for Honey putting him in a tutu.

By the time the three of them were able to amble upstairs to Toki’s room, there was little doubt that sex would not be happening.

Toki walked to her vanity, loosening her corset with her primary arms as her secondary got her mane tamed and her tiara removed. "What a night." She groaned, kicking her heels off slowly. "Remind me never to wear heels on Halloween again. Even with the soles Lana put on, my paws are sore as hell from trying to keep my balance in the snow. I had fun though.” And she had a small bowl of ‘mom tax’ chocolate bars on top of the fridge now. Definitely worth it.

Aliquam grumbled in agreement as he shed his clothes.

Tenne was doing his own undressing quietly before he sighed and landed on the bed. "I need to shower... but I want to sleep…."

"Sleep now, shower in the morning." Toki agreed. "We've all smelled worse than a little sweaty beast and stale bones. Lucky for both of you, you get two in one with me." Not really. Toki rarely stunk. Thanks to her pheromones, body odor was a thing of the past.

She stripped herself down to her panties, and then she crawled topless into bed. She had made a promise after all. She settled on her front for a moment, before finding it uncomfortable and rolling onto her back. She stretched, mane floofing sleepily, and then opened her arms to welcome her boys closer. "How's your leg, Papy? If it's bothering you, I can warm it up and ease some of the aches.”

"I stuck a few hot-packs on the joints and wrapped it in thermal fabric before I put on my costume. My leg is doing just fine." Aliquam answered as he took one of Toki’s sides for cuddling, Tenne promptly taking the other as they both picked up purring.

Toki laughed softly and let them cover her in purrs and affection. "I'm glad you're not hurting." She chirped softly. She stretched, and sucked in a deep breath before sighing. Her hand came down to rub the smooth plane of her belly. "Mmmn."

It was very quickly that her hand was accompanied by both males folding their hands over hers. Aliquam sighed happily before he nuzzled his face into Toki’s chest, giving a pleased sound as he pressed a few kisses into her soft skin.

Toki sighed pleasantly as Papyrus nuzzled her chest. She stretched, and sighed warmly. Her fingers moved and let the boys touch her.
"Hey Tenne... Why don't you take a good look in my belly?" She grins slowly. Her womb as visible which was how she had known.

Tenne blinked up at her before he nodded and slowly shifted down to look at her belly. His eyes went wide and he gave an awed sound as he moved to sit between her legs, his face pressed to her transparent skin like a child pressing against glass. "You... You can see them!"

She laughed. "Yeah!" She beams. "Isn't it amazing?" Her laugh bounced her womb and his face, so she strove to hold still so he could see better. The soft bean shape wasn't big yet, but it was there, dark green and settled in the curve of her pelvic bone. It would grow and they would be able to watch as it got bigger. "Skeletons are neat, eh?"

"Oh my goodness~" He cooed happily, "how wonderful~" He trilled as he nuzzled her stomach, "We'll get to see them grow~"

"Or at least watch me expand." She laughs. "We can't do the flashlight trick until they're a lot bigger."

"Oh the flashlight trick!" Papyrus laughed. "Good times!" He then blinked and realized that he still had something that went along with their topic of conversation. "Oh... oh, oh! Be right back!"

Aliquam rolled out of bed and practically dove into the closet to rummage around, Tenne sitting up to watch him curiously.

Toki blinked and half leaned up. "Eh? What are you looking for, Papyrus?"

"If I have them, something to make his night." He answered, before he laughed and leaned back. "I got it!" He announced.

"Noooo, you didn't." Toki gave a laugh, pleasantly surprised. She hadn't known he'd gotten them off his phone. "You printed off the pictures of when I was pregnant with Honey and Skylar?"

"Yeeeeeesss?" He gave an innocent smile as he brought the box over.

"Oh good lord." She laughed, and sat up. She wiggled her hands at him. "Gimme! I wanna see my babies again. They were so little- they grow too fast." She pouts a little. "It's also been so long since I saw my old body, I hardly remember what I looked like."

Papyrus gleefully handed her some of the photos, taking a couple to look at himself and remember.

Tenne curiously took one to look at it, his eyes first catching on the skeletal maid that the photo contained. He made a soft hum of surprise. "Mhh... is this what you looked like before you came to my world?" He asked.

"Indeed so! I've got my horns back, but the rest is still a mix of beast and bone. And, ah... I don't have any more pictures of me human, I don't think." She realized with a sudden start that the scrapbook that Tenebris had painstakingly put together for her after her initial change had been forgotten when they fled to the mountain.

The inferno that claimed the forest before she'd gone to Tenne's world had taken her album again, and with it claimed all of her old family photos that had been saved prior.

There was a flash of sorrow in her eyes and scent that she quickly buried under a smile to instead point out the shape of Skylar's body and Honey's butt curled in her old body's belly.

Tenne momentarily shifted on her 'human' comment but had caught a glimpse of her face before he looked to that which she pointed out, cooing in adoration. "How wonderful~ that's absolutely amazing~"

Glad for him having taken the distraction bait, Toki gave a coo. "Isn't it? I'm hoping we can do that this time. The pups were too tightly packed to get much of a reading last time, but if we have less then six, it should work to see individual limbs." She glances at them both with a soft smile. "Now... I want honesty. Are you both happy? I know it's fast that I got pregnant, and the three of us were working on settling, but..."

She just wanted to make sure they were happy.

They looked to one another before smiling back at her.

"Of course." Aliquam answered, giving a patient nod.

"This isn't what I expected for my future, but in all truth, very little would make me happier.” Tenne answered her honestly.

She looped her arms around the both of their necks, and pulled their faces down to hers so she could nuzzle them both. "Good.” She says. “Good. That makes me… Very, very happy. You have no idea just how happy. All three of us… This is our future now- and we're going to make the best out of every day of it.”
